HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

18 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME VII, 1969

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTIETH DAY OF MARCH, 1969,
TO THE TWENTY FIFTH DAY OF APRIL, 1969, INCLUSIVE.

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER, OTTAWA, 1969

29180—436½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 20, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION MEASURE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I would like to present to the house the possibility of making a procedural decision with regard to Bill C-173 respecting the organization of the Government of Canada. We have now spent eight sitting days on the bill and it is my impression that members generally would be pleased to see it pass without delay. I wonder if there would be agreement to have it completed before we adjourn this evening.

This could be done in two possible ways, by making an order that all questions should be put at ten o'clock this evening or, alternatively, we would be perfectly agreeable to an order that the time of the sitting be extended and that all questions be put at the end of the extended period of time. I might also indicate that we would be quite agreeable, if other hon. members are, to suspend private members' hour for this purpose.

I have taken the liberty of preparing two motions, Mr. Speaker, one to have all questions put at ten o'clock, and another motion to have all questions put at a later time, if that is the preferred alternative. If one or the other is found to be acceptable to the house we could have it made an order now.

I should add that if the bill is completed before ten o'clock, in view of the fact that the house sat late last evening it would not be the intention of the government to call another item of government business later today. Perhaps we could have an indication from hon. members as to whether one or other of these two courses would be acceptable.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the portion of the reorganization bill that is left for discussion concerns the regional development department. This is possibly one of the most fundamental and important sections of the bill, and we have not yet started upon it. We certainly would like to make progress on the bill and will do everything we can to see it is brought to completion, however we do have several speakers who want to make their views known, and who have questions they want to ask of the minister.

I would prefer to wait until this evening to see what sort of progress we have made. The motion for extension of the hours could be brought between nine o'clock and ten o'clock, if at that time it is felt to be useful; but at this particular time we are not prepared to agree to either of the motions that the President of the Privy Council has suggested.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we too regard the portion of the government organization bill yet to be discussed as one of its most important aspects, but we feel it is not unreasonable that we make an effort to conclude the discussion on this bill today. Of the two proposals made by the President of the Privy Council, we believe the one that would allow extra time is preferable, so that hon. members who have contributions to make will not be cut off. We would have been prepared to reach an agreement at this point, but as it would appear this is not possible, perhaps we could discuss the matter during the day and re-open the question some time during this evening, depending upon the progress made.

We recognize that a number of days have been spent on this bill; but the President of the Privy Council will also recognize that we had to spend more time on the Post Office Department than we might otherwise have spent, for reasons which are pretty well known. We do not feel that the time we had to spend on that department should cut into the time to be spent on the important department which is before us today. Nevertheless we hope that by co-operation during the day we will make such progress as to make it possible to conclude debate on this bill tonight.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—DISCUSSIONS LEADING TO CESSATION OF HOSTILITIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can now say briefly what message he has sent to the government of Nigeria through our High Commissioner in Lagos.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our High Commissioner has not yet been able to make arrangements to see the principal officials of the Nigerian government.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the High Commissioner are not relying on the mail services for this purpose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope we will not have to start using smoke signals.

Mr. Stanfield: Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate to the house, in view of the obvious interest of other countries in co-operating in attempting to reach a settlement of the Nigerian problem, whether he, other members of the government or the government as a whole through its officials, has launched any new initiatives by way of talks with representatives of other countries such as Britain, Russia or France relating to the possibility of an effective cessation of arms shipments, and discussions leading also to a cessation of hostilities and effective negotiations.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government does not think any useful purpose would be served by taking an initiative in this regard. We have, however, discussed with a number of governments the possibility that an initiative might be taken by someone who could be fairly effective. As the hon. gentleman knows, quite a number of mediators have tried this from time to time, some of whom would I think be most suitable—such as the Emperor of Ethiopia, the Secretary General of the Commonwealth and others. I believe it would be more useful for us to support their efforts than to take a separate initiative.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate when he will be in a position to inform the house concerning the suggestions his government has made to the government of Nigeria through its High Commissioner?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Sharp: I think it would be desirable to wait until after we have the reaction of the Nigerian government.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the minister give us any idea in terms of time?

Mr. Sharp: No; that does not depend only on us, but on the Nigerian government itself.

ANGUILLA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON BRITISH ACTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the recent events which have taken place in Anguilla. In view of our membership in the Commonwealth and Canada's very friendly interest in the people of the Caribbean area can the minister give us any report on what is happening and whether he has had any information from the government of the United Kingdom regarding its intentions.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been following these events very closely. The United Kingdom government informed us in advance of the steps to be taken by Britain to establish a commissioner in Anguilla. We were not of course consulted, since the measures proposed and now put into effect are clearly within the constitutional authority of the United Kingdom government acting at the request of and in agreement with the government of St. Kitts. We recognize the difficulty of the position in which the British government found itself. From the reports we have and the statements made by the foreign minister of Britain the situation now is that they are trying to instal a commissioner in Anguilla, with the task of working out a long term solution to the problems of that island which is acceptable to all concerned, including the people of Anguilla.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if Mr. Arnold Smith, the Secretary General of the Commonwealth, is keeping in touch with the situation, and whether he is reporting and will be reporting from time to time to the Canadian government and other members of the Commonwealth regarding these developments?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question. I do not know just what action the Secretary General has taken. Of course he is not under the control of the Canadian government, but I am sure he will be reporting to all of us in due course.

VIET NAM—EASTER SUNDAY PROTEST MARCH

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am directing a question to the Prime Minister in connection with what is entitled "Viet Nam International Protest March April 6 Easter Sunday". There are quite a number of sponsors, many of them connected with the N.D.P., and holding various positions. I was not able to be here last evening because of a prior engagement, and I should therefore like to ask the Prime Minister what he has to say to suggestions contained in this pamphlet to the effect that there is shocking new evidence of the Trudeau government's complicity in Viet Nam; that Canadian troops are being trained in guerilla warfare, and that there is a standing offer by Trudeau and Sharp to send forces to Viet Nam?

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the Prime Minister think of this outrageous collection of so-called reasons for calling together a march on behalf of Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the propaganda is no more serious than that, I will tell the house that I do not plan to change my intention of not being in Ottawa on Easter Sunday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that answer was rather more frivolous than I would have thought appropriate. I ask this question in all seriousness. This demonstration is not going to take place in Ottawa. Unused as the Prime Minister is to travel, this is in Vancouver, and the salubrious atmosphere there might attract even him. Is there any foundation for the suggestions made in this statement that is being used as a propaganda means to convene a meeting, and a march against the stand of Canada regarding Viet Nam?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I of course have not read this. I do not want to answer the question frivolously at all. If there is anything serious about the document, I would like to consider any suggestions. Everything quoted by the right hon. member appears to me just pure fantasy.

An hon. Member: Just like the N.D.P. itself.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, just like the N.D.P. itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could say if it was entirely fantasy when he referred to the Liberals as idiots.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: The answer is no, of course!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PARTICIPATION BY THE PUBLIC IN PREPARATION OF LAWS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the Prime Minister's recent statement, in Toronto, concerning the insufficient participation of the people in the law-making process, could he tell the house whether he is considering the use of concrete and practical methods to improve this situation and whether recommendations will be submitted to the house to this effect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, most of the instruments or methods we are contemplating are related to the Liberal party organization. This great party has ramifications right across the country, but we want to make it a mass party and our projects are well underway.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

In view of the fact that the Canadian people belong to the party of their choice, Liberal, Progressive Conservative, New Democratic or Créditiste, would the Prime Minister tell us whether he is seriously considering using some means whereby all the people, young and old, will participate in the law-making process?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have in fact introduced several reforms in the house. One of these is intended to enable parliament to do its business more expeditiously. Another measure deals with the availability of funds to opposition parties as a means of obtaining the services of researchers that would assist them in asking better questions and finding some of the answers.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that this subject should not be pursued further.

OIL

EFFECT ON INDUSTRY OF NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Was the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources expressing government policy when he told the Canadian Petroleum Association in Calgary on Tuesday that there would be no special consideration for Canadian oil in a national energy policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will have to verify the statement, Mr. Speaker; I am not aware of it.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister if he would make available copies of his remarks in Calgary either to the house or individually to hon. members.

Mr. Orlikow: Or to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Send it by mail.

Mr. Hees: Not until after Easter, then.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have the tape of my remarks transcribed and make a copy of the transcript available to the hon. member. I appreciate his interest. I would only like to say that the particular reference to the speech he has made, and several others which I have seen, would not be verified by the transcript.

Mr. Aiken: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister provide representatives of the petroleum industry with any indication of the position that would be taken on behalf of Canadian oil by the Prime Minister in his meetings next week?

Mr. Lang: No, I did not, Mr. Speaker. I in fact explained to the representatives of the oil industry that clearly I would not be in a position to speak on that subject. I told the oil industry some pretty simple home truths about the reasonable positions they should expect, that they would have to take in Canada. I also told them quite plainly that they could expect the government of Canada to take a reasonable position in regard to them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION OF THE VATICAN

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister done anything about his undertaking to sample public opinion in regard to Canada's recognition of the Vatican?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. We have done a great deal of sampling in cabinet and in caucus. We have had a lot of opinions expressed to the government in caucus and I have, of course, received a great deal of mail myself. But there has been no so-called scientific sampling of public opinion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it scientific when you get it from your own party?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MEDICARE—PARTICIPATION BY ONTARIO

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister in a position to make any statement concerning the discussions between himself and the minister of health of Ontario with respect to the prospect of that province coming into medicare?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have nothing further to add, other than what I said about a week and a half ago subsequent to my last meeting with him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question. Can the minister indicate to the house how many other provinces, apart from those that are already in medicare, are discussing this possibility with the federal government?

Mr. Munro: My information is that three additional provinces will be coming in as of April 1 of this year, and that at least one or two others are considering coming in but have not definitely made up their minds.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL ROD SERVICE VIOLENCE IN DELIVERY SERVICE

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the violence which erupted yesterday in Montreal and in view of the fact that he will not be in the house Monday, I would like to ask the minister whether he could make a statement today regarding this situation?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The report will be a little longer than usual.

[English]

The situation in Montreal gives me cause for great concern. Public delivery has been disrupted. Much more seriously, men have been beaten up, tires have been slashed and windshields broken. This organized reign of terror is a culmination of a three year history of labour troubles and breakdowns in public service. We are seeking to resolve both the short term problem of violence and the long term problem of unsatisfactory service to the public.

On January 28, Rod Service announced it was laying off 110 drivers. Subsequently, because of labour problems, Rod Service informed us it wanted to withdraw entirely from its contract with us. For our part we are happy that it should do so. We did not seek this; it was imposed upon us. We are ready to absorb immediately Rod Service employees into the Post Office, including all but a maximum of 69 of the 110 to whom lay-off notices have been given. Of the 424 employees, 27 are already on our staff; another 254 have applied to join the department. As Post Office employees they would enjoy greater security and better fringe benefits.

The national union of Rod Service employees has insisted that the Post Office fulfil the union contract with Rod service which runs to March 30, 1970, and has demanded that we do this by creating a special Crown corporation or agency. This would mean that one year from now we would be back exactly where we started.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister when he is speaking on such an important matter. I wonder whether, if his statement is to be of some length, he would not prefer to revert to motions. Does he have the agreement of the house to complete his statement now?

Mr. Kierans: I have only another few sentences, Mr. Speaker. We are ready immediately, if the union agrees, to absorb all the employees we can into the public service. Alternatively, we are negotiating with another company to take over postal delivery in Montreal. Unhappily, no agreements have been reached. But pending such an agreement, I state flatly that we will not be intimidated, nor will we condone violence.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, could the Postmaster General tell us what seniority rights he is prepared to grant to the employees he wishes to reinstate?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, this will be a matter of negotiations between the postal union, the carriers union, the department and the employees themselves.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister must be familiar with the recent statement of the Letter Carriers' Union contradicting statements that he has made in the house and asserting that the minister has not been properly informed. However I should like to ask him whether there is any foundation for the assertion that the Post Office representatives have told the union that the statements made by the minister in the house are in no way binding upon the minister?

Mr. Kierans: I would like to know the name of the man who made the statement.

An hon. Member: There goes another unemployed.

Mr. Stanfield: I suggest that the minister had better read the recent communication by the union. Would the Postmaster General say whether during the discussions with the postal unions his department has been asked to institute mediation or arbitration proceedings, as distinct from adjudication proceedings?

Mr. Kierans: The two major unions have contracts with the Treasury Board and these contracts outline all the procedures that they may take if there are complaints and dissatisfactions, important enough to warrant filing a grievance. So far as I know, there has been no demand for mediation in these particular complaints. On the four major differences involving the single mail processing system in particular, the union and the Post Office have agreed to go directly to adjudication and, so far as I know, both parties are satisfied.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to be perfectly clear. Am I correct in understanding the Postmaster General to say that he has no knowledge of the union asking whether he and his department will institute mediation or arbitration, as distinct from adjudication proceedings?

Mr. Kierans: There has been some difficulty about the translation of the word "adjudication". The word "arbitre" applies in French to both an adjudicator and an arbitrator, to the best of my knowledge. On one occasion, as Mr. Decarie admitted to me himself, when I was talking about adjudication—and the Prime Minister also used that word one day in the house—the journalists interpreted this to Mr. Decarie as "arbitre", and Mr. Decarie explained to me that he thought we meant arbitration when all I meant was adjudication. I think this point has been cleared up between us.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): When the Postmaster General says the Post Office Department is ready for this question to be adjudicated, is he ready, first of all, to settle the question whether the department has or has not the right to institute the straight-through walk system?

Mr. Kierans: These are precisely the issues which are going before the adjudicator. I certainly would not want to say what I consider the adjudicator would or would not have the right to decide.

Mr. Orlikow: The question was this: Will the department suggest to the adjudicator that under the terms of the contract he has no right to rule on the straight-through walk?

DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the seriousness of delays in the delivery of mail in this country, to the extent that some people are beginning to wonder whether transmission by smoke signals would not be faster, would the Prime Minister, bearing in mind the truculent and defiant attitude of the Postmaster General in connection with the postal employees, turn this problem over to the Minister of Labour who seems to have some diplomatic qualification for getting labour disputes settled?

[Mr. Kierans.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am willing to look into this matter, but I feel that if we are obliged to resort to smoke signals I had better turn it over to the Minister of Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister a supplementary question.

Considering the importance and the urgency of the matter, I believe that the minister owes it to himself to supply answers, since we are seeking a better postal service.

Since the taxpayers now have to bear the burden of increased postal rates, could the minister tell us when he hopes to conclude negotiations with the union and when he expects delivery to return to normal in the Montreal area?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, we have been negotiating with the union for six or seven weeks and we are keeping in touch with the union and the C.N.T.U. Of course, the discussions will continue over the week-end; however, a week ago, the representatives of Rod Service Limited bluntly informed us that they intend to give up their operations.

[English]

CIVIL SERVICE TESTS FOR ROD SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question which might be better handled by the Secretary of State, but in his absence I would direct it to the Prime Minister. Since the Prime Minister has indicated that Rod Service employees will be taken on as employees of the Post Office Department, will it be necessary for them to sit the civil service examinations and to qualify themselves in the usual way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Secretary of State has had to leave for Paris to represent the Canadian government, but I shall draw the question to his attention.

Mr. MacInnis: The Postmaster General may be able to handle the question.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): The 27 employees we have already hired have not yet taken the examination, but they have to fulfil all the requirements of the public service, of course.

Mr. MacInnis: Will this include the provision for veterans preference?

Mr. Kierans: We observe all the regulations of the public service act.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR FLOOR PRICE EQUALLING I.G.A. MINIMUM

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I address my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker? In view of the fact that a motion has been passed unanimously in the Saskatchewan legislature urging the federal government to guarantee farmers a floor price for export wheat equal to the minimum price of the International Grains Arrangement, and the institution of a domestic price for wheat of $1 a bushel above that figure, will the minister and the government give this request immediate and active consideration?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Of course we shall, Mr. Speaker, but as I have said repeatedly, there are real hopes that we shall return to the I.G.A. price schedule, and every effort is being made toward that objective now. So I think these gentlemen are anticipating a situation which may not develop to the extent they fear.

Mr. Gleave: May I point out to the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may not point things out to the minister; he can only ask questions.

Mr. Gleave: Then may I rephrase what I have to say? In view of the fact that Wheat Board offering prices are now lower than at any time during the life of the International Grains Arrangement, will the minister give this motion careful thought?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since wheat is now being sold below the floor price quoted under the International Grains Arrangement, is it the intention of the government to make up to the Wheat Board the losses which will be incurred during this period, until such time as we are able to get back to the schedule of prices contained in the agreement?

Mr. Pepin: I apologize for having to use the formula that this would be a matter of government policy to be announced in due course.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WHEAT—PRICE DISCUSSIONS AT LONDON MEETING

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Can the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell the house what progress was made toward settling this price dispute at the meeting held in London on Monday and Tuesday of this week?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have a short report from that meeting, Mr. Speaker. The committee acknowledged that a serious price situation has developed, particularly in recent weeks, and agreed that appropriate action should be taken as soon as possible to strengthen and maintain the International Grains Arrangement. The committee concluded that the pricing problem should be dealt with initially by exporters, and agreed to adjourn its meeting and to reconvene as soon as practicable, following the exporters meeting, which is to take place early in April.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

VANCOUVER—PERMANENT EMPLOYEES TO REPLACE THOSE HAVING CASUAL STATUS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question is related to the questions asked earlier about the Post Office. Since the Postmaster General promised that with the introduction of the five-day week the need for casual employees would diminish, can he advise the house how soon we may expect that some of the 600 successful applicants for postal positions will replace casual employees, numbering over 100, in the Vancouver post office?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In Vancouver, as in many other post offices, we have to take account of our own permanent employees and provide them with new positions first. I was not aware that 600 people had filed successful applications, but given the present employment situation in the Post Office and the fact that we have to find employment for approximately 2,000 of our own people it will be some time before we engage any new or additional help.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question. The minister indicated to the house the other night that the casual workers would be gradually phased in as regular employees by April 1. Does he still feel that if some of the 600 successful applicants were casuals he will meet the April 1 deadline that he suggested?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that this is debate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TENDERS TO REPLACE ROD SERVICE

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General indicated that Rod Service were withdrawing their operation and that the government was presently negotiating with another company. Can he tell the house whether these services were put out to tender?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have simply indicated that we will be quite happy if some other private entrepreneurs or cartage companies are interested. Approximately three firms are looking at the matter, but how many will come forward with firm propositions we do not yet know. They would of course have to be satisfactory to Treasury Board as well as to the Post Office Department.

EXTERNAL AID

VIET NAM—HOUSING PROGRAM FOR REFUGEES

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is it true that the Canadian government intends to contribute to the financing of a housing project for Vietnamese refugees and, if so, how much and under what conditions?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question could be placed on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—STUDY AS TO PROFITABILITY

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

On March 12, the minister announced in the house that a study was in progress to establish the economic possibilities of the Canadian textile industry. Is he now in a position to say when he expects to report on it in the house?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. The project is likely to be carried out before the end of the year. I am seeing to it that it is completed as soon as possible.

Mr. Ricard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Would the minister tell us if representatives of the Canadian manufacturers and workers have been invited to participate in that study?

Mr. Pepin: They shall be, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ARTEC—ANNOUNCEMENT AS TO SIGNING OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT

Mr. Paul M. Gervais (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour—

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: In French.

Mr. Gervais: All right, I will speak in French. I do not mind.

Could the Minister of Labour tell the house whether there are recent developments concerning the difficulties with the C.B.C.?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to tell the house that ARTEC and the C.B.C. signed this morning a collective agreement, in order to settle the problem.

[English]

"AIR OF DEATH"—COMPETENCE OF C.R.T.C. TO ADJUDICATE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Secretary of State but in his absence perhaps it could be answered or taken as notice by the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary.

With regard to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission hearing into the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation program "Air of Death" and the allegation by counsel for the C.B.C. that only the courts and not the C.R.T.C. have the power in law to adjudicate questions of this kind, has the government sought an opinion from the law officers of the crown respecting the legal competence of the C.R.T.C. in such matters, and has such an opinion been given?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I know of no opinion being sought by the government but I am sure that such an opinion would be sought by the commission itself. I shall be glad to inquire from the commission on that subject.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In connection with the "Air of Death" program, will the parliamentary secretary ascertain and report to the house on what action was taken internally by the C.B.C. management following the report of the royal commission appointed by the Ontario government?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that the C.B.C. president appeared before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts and was questioned on this subject. He will be appearing again when the estimates of the C.B.C. are once more under consideration by the committee, and I am sure he will be glad to answer any such question at that time.

Mr. Dinsdale: A further supplementary question. In view of the hearing that is currently being held, would the parliamentary secretary not agree that it would be advisable to report directly to the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order; that is argument.

COMBINES

MERGERS, TAKE-OVERS AND CONGLOMERATES IN ONTARIO

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who has just come out from behind the curtains, where I am sure he went because he was feeling a little neglected.

Is the minister aware of any action being taken by the government of Ontario to look into the question of company mergers and take-overs in the province? If so, what action does the minister propose to take under the Combines Investigation Act, which clearly has jurisdiction over this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure that this is a question of urgency; I think it is the type of question that could be placed on the order paper.

Mr. McGrath: Then may I rephrase my question, with respect, Mr. Speaker. Reports emanating from Toronto this morning indicate that the government of Ontario has asked its Securities Commission to look into this subject. Has the minister been advised of this, because clearly it is a matter that is under the jurisdiction of the Combines Investigation Act? If so, what action is the minister contemplating?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not been advised that the Ontario government has asked the Ontario Securities Commission to look into the question of conglomerates, but I would think they are perfectly entitled to do so, as the matter does affect securities administration. I would welcome a study because this is a matter of great public interest, and the more study the subject receives, the better. I would remind the house that the question of competition policy is before the Economic Council for report, and I expect to receive it in due course. I would think that the Council itself would take a look at this question.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INVITATION TO HOLD NEXT MEETINGS IN CANADA

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he advise the house whether or not Canada has invited the Commonwealth Prime Ministers to hold their meeting in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for making a decision at the present time.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question. I asked this question one month ago, on February 19, and at that time the minister gave the same answer. Surely a decision must be made—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the question should be placed on the order paper; in that way the hon. member may have better success.

RESEARCH

AUSTERITY MEASURES IN ANIMALS PROGRAM

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement that appeared in a leading newspaper to the effect that Canada's reputation in animal research, and even the health of scientists engaged in that field, has been put in jeopardy by the government's austerity measures, would the minister of health and welfare state what measures are now being taken to correct this terrible situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that he is inviting the minister to give the kind of information which in my view should be given by way of a statement on motions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

BLACKLISTINGS BY U.S. SECURITIES COMMISSION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the fact that Canada is now at the top of the blacklist of the securities commission in the United States? If his attention has been drawn to this fact, would he indicate to the house what measures he intends to take to restore Canada's good name?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the report the hon. member refers to has not been brought to my attention but I will see that it is immediately. It is in order to maintain and protect Canada's international reputation that both the government and I are anxious to make progress in the establishment of some form of national securities administration.

[Later:]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): A moment ago in answer to the hon. member for Waterloo reference was made to a statement issued by the S.E.C. I have now had an opportunity to review that statement and I think I should place on record that this is a report from the Financial Post of March 8 which refers to 19 Canadian companies. It should not be taken as reflecting upon or in any way affecting the generally good reputation enjoyed by Canadian companies in foreign markets.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

HOUSE PROCEDURE ON LEGISLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the President of the Privy Council in his role as house leader. Is it the intention of the government to bring forward the official languages bill before we adjourn for the Easter recess, or is it the government's plan to shelve it until after the by-election, as demanded by the Liberal organizers in British Columbia?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may recall that as a result of the federal-provincial conference my colleague the Minister of Justice agreed to consult with the western premiers regarding this bill in order to bring forward certain amendments, if thought necessary. I think we should act in conformity with that request. Therefore I am not expecting that the bill will be before the house by next week.

Perhaps while I am on my feet I could make the statement of business for the coming week, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. minister does this, the Chair might be given an opportunity to recognize two or three members who are particularly anxious to ask a question.

TRADE

ONIONS—SHIPMENT TO U.K. FROM MONTREAL

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the minister taken any action to facilitate the shipment of the 5,000 or 6,000 tons of Ontario onions to the United Kingdom from the port of Montreal, as requested by the industry, to enable the complete fulfilment of this very necessary sale?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): My department has been involved in that, but if I am not mistaken the Minister of Labour took responsibility to help. I will report on the matter tomorrow anyway.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TALKS ABOUT A.B.M. SYSTEM WITH CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister relative to his trip to Washington? In view of his remarks yesterday regarding the A.B.M. system, indicating that he had not yet made up his mind he wished to deal with the matter, could he advise the house whether he will be seeing people in Washington other than the President concerning this matter? If so, will he in particular be seeing congressional leaders to discuss this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the invitation is by the President of the United States, and that is the object of my travelling to Washington. During my stay there I hope to have informal meetings with other leaders and other people in Washington, but they will not be business meetings.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

HUDSON BAY—AGREEMENT AS TO UNDERWATER RESOURCES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to approve the agreement concluded some time ago by Ontario, Manitoba and Quebec on dividing lines regarding the underwater resources of Hudson Bay?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the dividing line of those provinces on Hudson Bay has already been defined by a constitutional statute. The line follows the coast of the provinces and there has been no change. The provinces cannot on their own initiative amend the constitutional declaration.

Mr. Fortin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the federal government has not yet endorsed the agreement between those three provinces, does it intend to do so?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my answer was too complex. The answer is positively no. The dividing lines have been established and we shall never agree to such a unilateral redefinition by the provinces.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 19, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-173. The committee will begin consideration of clause 20.

On clause 20—Definitions.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak briefly today. To me and to people in disadvantaged areas in Canada, this is a very important occasion. The bill now before this house will, among other important measures, establish the new department of regional economic expansion, and give new emphasis to the government's commitment to reduce the economic disparities which exist between different regions of Canada. There are, I know, differences in detail among those of us who sit in various parts of the house. However, I think there will be general agreement when I say that the ideal toward which we must work is to ensure that Canadians have good opportunities to earn their living at roughly comparable standards wherever they live from sea to sea.

Canada as a nation can no longer live with the extremes of inequality which some people now must face simply because they are citizens of one part of Canada rather than another. Indeed, we cannot make the unity and identity of Canada secure unless we can remove the large disparities in the conditions of life in the regions of our country.

The recent constitutional conference recognized this point and clearly confirmed the importance which the federal government and the provincial governments attach to the objective of equality of opportunities for Canadians everywhere. The job of the new department, therefore, must be to get down to the roots of the problems which have produced the existing disparities between regions of Canada and help make the basic economic and social changes needed to create new employment and earning opportunities, and to make those opportunities available to the people who need them.

To put it another way, the department's goal will be to ensure that economic growth is dispersed widely enough across Canada to bring employment and earnings opportunities in the hitherto slow growth regions as close as possible to those in the rest of the country. Everyone knows that this is a difficult objective to attain. We have had a variety of programs operating independently, with too little co-ordination between them. This approach has obviously not worked. It may have stopped the gaps between regions from widening but it has not narrowed them.

This legislation will, therefore, firmly charge the new department, and myself as its first minister, with the central responsibility for federal regional development programs. This is the only way to secure the co-ordination of federal effort which is essential to the achievement of the most effective results.

With co-ordination we must have flexibility. The particular needs differ for different areas. The new department must be able to take a flexible approach, to look at the problems of an area or a region of Canada and to take action specifically designed to overcome those problems and to create new and self-sustaining expansion.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

The organization legislation, of course, merely establishes the structure. The important thing is that it is a structure which will enable us to take this kind of a new approach.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, provides for the establishment of special areas when employment opportunities are very limited in the region itself or in the territory of which that region is a part.

This will promote assistance to the growth centres where economic expansion can be realized for the greatest benefit of the whole region. Up until now, those centres have often been left out of the federal aid programs.

The global planning concept contained in FRED will be extended to regions other than rural ones and will become one of the principal instruments capable of promoting economic growth.

The department—at least in the initial stage of its operations—will give priority to industrial development projects intended primarily for growth centres. However, we aim at the same time to focus our attention on social rehabilitation measures intended for rural regions.

The department will set up development plans for special areas in cooperation with other departments and will use, wherever possible, the services and facilities of such departments.

The department will coordinate federal activities to implement development programs and to carry out these portions of the programs which other departments are unable to undertake.

Although it should not necessarily be specified in the bill, one of the first responsibilities of the department will be the creation, at the official level, of the interdepartmental structure needed for efficient coordination.

Rural development must be accomplished through a federal-provincial process, because it comprises a wide range of activities involving both levels of government. The act therefore insists on the co-operation with the provinces and the participation of local groups in the drawing up and implementation of development programs for special areas. In order to better ensure that co-operation with the provinces, I intend to move, during the debate, an amendment to clause 26 (1) so that this co-operation might become a reality.

The department will enter into agreements with the provinces for the joint implementation of the programs, including sharing of the costs incurred by the provinces to carry them out. All departmental programs will be implemented in close co-operation with the provinces, even when federal-provincial agreements are not required.

The department will be able to grant subsidies or loans to a province to help establish, expand or modernize the infrastructures required for the economic expansion of a special area, when such works are essential to the achievement of a development program. The greatest impact of these measures will be felt in the industrial centres east of Trois-Rivières.

The department will be able to provide various types of special aid, such as loans, subsidies of loan guarantees, to encourage commercial concerns to settle, expand or modernize their plants in a special area, if this is indicated for the success of a certain development program

This special assistance is a reserve measure that will apply only in those cases where the help extended to industry by the department through its main incentive programs is not sufficient to enable a particular concern to overcome the difficulties inherent in its situation in a special area.

The Area Development Incentive Act will continue to be the main instrument used by the department to encourage industrial expansion in disadvantaged areas.

Important changes to that act, to increase the efficiency of the incentives, will be announced soon, after consultations have been held with the provinces.

Mr. Chairman, before bringing these preliminary remarks to a close, I am pleased to announce to the house that professor William Smith—

[English]

Professor W. Y. Smith, head of the department of economics and political science at the University of New Brunswick, has agreed to act as the council's first chairman. He is a man who is very well known in the Maritimes. I think I consulted with all the premiers, unofficially of course, and they agreed that Mr. Smith is really the kind of man we need at this time to fill the kind of job that is open with the council.

That is all I want to say at the moment, Mr. Chairman. As I mentioned in French I intend to propose a small amendment to clause 26(1) in order to ensure that co-operation with the provinces will be of assistance all along. I am sure that hon. members after discussion will agree, if not necessarily on the policies of regional development, at least on the structure of this new department. The first thing we have to do is establish the department before we indicate to the house exactly what we intend to do.

Mr. Aiken: Could the minister outline the nature of his amendment so that we can be considering it while the debate takes place?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have no objection to that. After the words "the minister may" in clause 26(1) we intend to add the words "in co-operation with any province." This will provide that we have to co-operate with a province at that stage of the formulation of a plan.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: In referring to the council was the minister referring to the new council or to the Atlantic Development Board?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is the council which is to be created by this bill, the new Atlantic Development Council which will replace the Atlantic Development Board.

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister how northern development fits into this program?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): These are two different departments. Northern development comes under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is separate from an administrative point of view.

Mr. Gundlock: The minister mentioned all parts of Canada so I wanted to have that made clear. They are completely separate.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not say that the northern part of Canada is outside the jurisdiction of the federal government, but I do say that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is responsible for the northern part of Canada. It is not covered by my department.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to go over once again the ground I covered on second reading of the bill. I expressed at that time a number of sources of concern with regard to the bill as conceived and the apparent intentions of the minister. I am a little disappointed that the minister did not touch upon the points that were raised then, but perhaps this will be done in the course of the debate. I called attention particularly to the dangers involved in the wide discretion provided to the minister and the Governor in Council concerning the definition of areas which may be prescribed as special areas for this purpose. I also called attention to the dangers involved in the wide discretion given the minister with regard to the type of industry which can be aided and the form of aid to be granted. I emphasized the importance of as much certainty as possible being created as soon as possible so that everyone will know where they fit. I also called attention to what we consider to be the unnecessary degree of centralization involved in the concept of administration in this bill.

I deplored the abolition of the Atlantic Development Board as an administrative and co-ordinating agency and suggested that agencies comparable with the Atlantic Development Board should be considered and discussed with provinces such as the province of Quebec in relation to the great area east of Trois-Rivières which is of such concern to the minister and quite properly so. I do not propose to go over that ground again at this time except to emphasize the seriousness of these concerns with regard to the bill.

I do want to return, however, to the theme of the importance of co-ordination if any effective and adequate change is to be made in respect of regional disparity in any part of the country. I am referring to co-ordination with the provincial administrations concerned. It is clear that the efforts of the minister might very well be at cross-purposes with the aims of the government of whatever province might be concerned. It is particularly important that there be the fullest possible co-ordination among all departments of the federal government because the minister will have under his direction a relatively small number of federal governmental activities that are involved in any question of economic development and must therefore be regarded as playing a very important role in regional development.

We have had a very striking example of the importance of this point since the bill was before the house on second reading. I mentioned then the important role all departments play, for example, the Department of Finance. Within the last couple of days we had a striking example of the importance of the policies of that department and an important example of the general financial policies of the government of Canada with regard to the economic development of a province.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I am referring particularly to the province of New Brunswick and the budget which the provincial treasurer felt it necessary to bring down not for the purpose of financing any new services within that province, not, indeed, for the purpose of financing existing services on the scale that the government of that province had hoped to undertake in important areas as part of its declared policies, but merely for the purpose of trying to make ends meet. That province has had to cut back to the fullest extent possible and has found it necessary to institute tax increases involving a 10 per cent surcharge on income tax and a substantial increase in sales tax, not only the general sales tax but the special sales taxes relating to gasoline, liquor, cigarettes and so on. I emphasize that this is not for the purpose of new services but is for existing services. Of course the cost of education in that province would be an important aspect. I mention this point in connection with this bill because of the emphasis authorities on the subject of regional economic development have placed upon the importance of adequate government services relating to economic growth such as education, transportation, including highways, and public health services.

I should like to remind the committee of what the Economic Council of Canada had to say on this subject in its second annual review in 1965 when it called attention to the very striking disparity in the standard of growth-producing services in the various provinces of Canada. It pointed out the following:

> Although there is some evidence of an uneven regional incidence of federal government expenditure, on the whole, federally provided services undoubtedly moderate interregional income disparity.
> A distinctly different situation applies at the level of provincial and municipal governments. Not only are there obvious differences in service requirements, but there are also important variations in the areas and degrees of responsibility assigned to the public sector. More fundamental, however, are the disparities in regional wealth and income which form the primary basis for the support of regional services. The obvious consequence is a wide range of variation in per capita expenditures at the provincial-municipal level and commensurate disparity among the various regions in the scope and standards of the public services provided at this level.
> Interregional variations in the scope and standards of the public services are not only important because of their implications for interregional disparities in community income. They also bear directly upon the issue of regionally balanced economic growth. Although it is difficult to draw a clear line between the consumption and investment elements of public spending, particularly in the case of services to people, it is now recognized that a significant proportion of public outlays may be looked upon as investment related to long-term economic growth. This applies particularly to expenditures concerned with the extension and development of human and physical capital, the provision of services to assist private production, and the general advance of knowledge.

The report goes on to emphasize the importance of bringing up to an adequate level the growth relating to public services in the Atlantic provinces, for example, in the areas of education, transportation and public health particularly. In the following year, 1966, the Economic Council returned to this theme and stated in its report at page 258:

Notwithstanding the prolonged and substantial economic expansion across the whole country, a significant gap has persisted between the Atlantic area particularly and the rest of the country in provision for those public services most closely related to long-term growth. It is especially disturbing that disparities among the provinces in per capita expenditures on education have tended to widen, rather than contract, over the recent period.

The point I am making is not really peculiar to the Atlantic provinces, although it may be of particular significance there. It is also very significant in provinces such as Quebec in respect of its efforts to increase the incomes of the people in the area east of Trois-Rivières.

There can be no question about the importance of provincial services in relation to growth. There is no question either about the degree of disparity that now exists in respect of the level of health, education and transportation services, to mention three. One must ask very seriously how far the minister and his department will get in attempting to raise the level of incomes and opportunities for the people in these disadvantaged areas if the local level of growth related services such as education, transportation and so on remains substantially below the national average. How much success is the minister likely to have in creating dynamic centres of growth under these conditions of relatively inferior growth related services which are also associated with higher taxes?

We know, for example, that in the province of New Brunswick there is not only a discouraging picture but rather extraordinarily high taxes associated with a standard of growth related services well below the national average. This is a discouraging situation for people who need growth if they are to succeed in lifting themselves by their bootstraps or responding successfully and effectively to the minister's policy and attempt to enable them to help themselves.

What disturbs me is the apparent failure of the minister's colleagues in the cabinet to recognize the significance of this matter. The Minister of Finance rose in his place the other night and contented himself with boasting about how much the government of Canada was doing by way of transfer payments. He did this on the eve of the day the provincial treasurer of New Brunswick felt it necessary to bring down a serious budget involving substantial tax increases for the people of that province. Perhaps it was coincidental but it indicated to me how unaware the Minister of Finance appears to be of the importance of the fiscal policy of his department to the work the minister is trying to do by way of regional development. I am afraid it is an indication of what I referred to as the possible tendency on the part of other ministers to "let Jean do it" and not accept their own responsibilities. It seems to me we have also had, and this is something the minister tried to explain to the committee, a striking degree of cynicism toward the province of Prince Edward Island. Let me say briefly what I have in mind.

Having regard to the cancellation of the causeway, this is a matter in respect of which the government ought at least to have taken the trouble to present the facts to the house and the people of that province. If the facts are as the government says they are, that the cost-benefit studies show that an adequate service can be provided more economically by ferry, the government should lay those facts before the house and the people of that province. I know of no better way to alienate the people of a whole province, in this case a small one, from the rest of Canada and from Ottawa than by simply announcing the cancellation of what was a solemn promise without the slightest effort on the part of the government to explain why it was necessary or to give the figures and convince the people that the government was right in its decision. This seems to me to have been a highly cynical step on the part of the government which is likely to produce a great degree of cynicism on the part of the people of Prince Edward Island.

The government substituted for the causeway project a new regional development agreement. As I understand it, the government of Canada is undertaking to make available some $225 million over a 15-year period as a federal contribution to a $700 million economic development program. Some of us have a little trouble figuring out just how Prince Edward Island is going to produce the balance of approximately $500 million. We have difficulty in understanding how that government is going to produce approximately $2 for every $1 the government of Canada puts into the plan. Under these circumstances we may be excused for being a little sceptical about this venture which is more or less coincidental with the launching of this new department.

The minister should give us some satisfactory explanation or factual information about the cost-benefit studies in respect of the causeway versus ferries. I think we should have some explanation as to how the province of Prince Edward Island can proceed effectively with this development program when it has to find $2 for every $1 put up by the federal government.

The government of Canada must recognize the importance of and face honestly the budgetary problems of the provinces, particularly those faced with serious regional economic disparity, and I have in mind the province of Quebec and the eastern provinces. The government of Canada must honestly recognize that unless these provinces are able to provide an adequate standard of growth related services as conceived by the Economic Council of Canada, the minister is likely to have little success in making substantial progress in reducing economic disparity. I say this as plainly and bluntly to the minister as I can.

I am disturbed that other ministers, including the Minister of Finance and the minister in charge of the Treasury Board, take the attitude that by setting up this new department and putting so much in its budget we will take care of regional development, and that the government as a whole will not then have to continue to be conscious of its responsibility and will not have to act in respect of the problem I have outlined this afternoon. It is clear from the budget of the province of New Brunswick that the government of Canada must act quickly in this matter unless it is prepared to sit back and see the morale of the people of that province completely destroyed, to see its people completely submerged by their difficulty in providing services while paying possibly the highest taxes in the country out of their inadequate incomes. As I have said, the government must act quickly in this regard.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I hope that the attitude expressed by the Minister of Finance the other night does not really represent the attitude of the government. I hope that what appears to be a rather cynical attitude displayed so far toward the little province of Prince Edward Island does not really reflect the determination of the government to deal with this problem.

The minister announced this afternoon the appointment of Professor Bill Smith to the Atlantic Development Council. There is no question that he is an excellent man, well informed on this subject. I have heard rumours, quite frankly, of another excellent appointment the minister has in mind. These men, even if they are associated with others, cannot accomplish very much unless they are operating in a proper framework, unless they are operating under properly conceived plans, unless they are operating with proper financial support. This support must involve facing honestly the kind of problems the government of New Brunswick had to face the other night. If the situation continues as it has, I say again that the minister will have little success in doing very much in those areas.

The government of Canada must face up to its total responsibility. There is no sign of it doing so yet despite what I am sure is the very sincere intention of the minister who spoke just a few moments ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, fortunately the few remarks the minister made at the beginning of the debate this afternoon do not require any change in the text of the speech I have prepared. Perhaps in his remarks later today or possibly tomorrow the minister will suggest different orientations in the development programs of his department such as some of us would expect. If so, some of my criticisms may turn out to be irrelevant. I hope this is the case.

The problem of regional economic disparities in Canada is scarcely a new one. It has been with us throughout our history. What is comparatively new is the statistical documentation of these persisting disparities. Since the end of the 1920's, when the first statistical studies were made, we have seen that the growth of the Canadian economy as a whole has not in any way reduced the gap in wealth which exists between provinces and regions within provinces.

The most striking feature of regional economic comparisons throughout Canadian history is the substantial difference in per capita income between the highest and lowest provinces. In the most recent period for which meaningful statistics are available, 1962-64, personal income per capita was $2,025 in Ontario, $1,521 in Quebec, $1,302 in Nova Scotia, $1,167 in New Brunswick, $1,115 in Prince Edward Island and $1,007 in Newfoundland.

As one would expect—it does not necessarily follow, of course, but normally on an empirical basis one discusses this kind of correlation—we also have substantial differences in employment levels across the country. The Atlantic provinces in particular, as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out today and hon. members have mentioned a number of times in other debates this session, have suffered from much heavier unemployment than the country as a whole. This has been going on for a 20-year period. For example, in the 1956-60 period average unemployment in the Atlantic provinces was nearly 10 per cent of the labour force, in contrast with my own province of Ontario which averaged 4 per cent. Even today when unemployment is again becoming a major problem across the whole country, the rate is 10.1 per cent in the Atlantic provinces, 8.4 per cent in Quebec and a comparatively low—comparatively only—3.8 per cent in Ontario and 4 per cent in the prairie provinces.

What these persisting inequalities mean, of course, is that it matters a great deal where a Canadian child is born. To spend one's childhood in a richer area means to have better schools, employed parents with a sense of self-respect, adequate housing and the opportunity to pursue a variety of occupations. To grow up in a poorer region, in contrast, is to lack these advantages either completely or relatively to the rest of Canada. In many cases one might just as well grow up in an underdeveloped country. In short, the opportunity for self-realization in Canada is determined to a considerable extent not only by the parents one is blessed with but also the region of the country in which one is born.

Apart from this unfairness to individuals there are inevitable economic consequences affecting the community as a whole. An uneducated or badly educated child cannot make the contribution to his community that an educated one can. The effect of this on the already relatively poor region is that available material resources cannot be developed. The Canadian economy then operates well below its full capacity and hundreds of millions of dollars worth of productivity are lost every year. Underdeveloped regions are caught in a vicious cycle in which low income and unemployment, low capital accumulation and low productivity, lead to lower educational attainment, inadequate health and welfare services and emigration of the skilled and the young to areas where employment opportunities are better. Regional poverty, in short, reproduces itself ad infinitum.

Since confederation Canadians have believed that only by acting together in a united country can we establish equal opportunities for self-development for all our people. But persisting economic disparities, becoming more widely known with each year and, of course, with each report of the Economic Council of Canada, are causing increasing numbers to question the desirability of the Canadian union. Unless some significant changes take place in the years ahead we will witness the emergence of new, serious and justifiable threats to confederation.

I would like to say something briefly about past government programs. One of the principal reasons for the persistence of economic disparities is that in the past neither Liberal nor Conservative governments have been able to provide policies which would foster the economic growth of underdeveloped regions. The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development recently admitted that while over $1 billion had been spent in recent years on programs intended to overcome regional disparities, over half of this money has been a complete waste. We have witnessed a proliferation of programs, all well intended but nevertheless ineffective. This is the minister's own judgment.

We have had programs to build roads to resources, to develop transportation facilities, to retrain manpower, to give area industrial grants and incentives, and to provide rural adjustment and relocation of the victims of technological change. But still the same regional inequalities exist. These policies of previous Conservative and Liberal governments have lacked the over-all direction and cohesiveness that alone could render them effective, especially the allocation of substantial resources.

We have had ARDA programs and FRED programs. We have had ADA, A.D.B. and DEVCO. Some of these projects have involved co-operation with the provinces and some have not. Some have concentrated on areas of growth potential and others have simply used high levels of unemployment as the criterion of eligibility. I am pleased to see that the government is finally moving away from this outmoded approach. Most of the projects have been completely unconcerned with the social consequences of significant economic change in areas unaccustomed to it. Most have failed to consider the importance of personal involvement in the planning and execution of programs on the part of those who will be affected by them.

Now I should like to say a few words about the new department. The New Democratic Party has recommended for a number of years now that this unco-ordinated effort I have just described to overcome regional economic disparities could be remedied only by creating a department which has this goal as its sole objective. For this reason we welcome the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

However, what is also needed is the establishment of a national plan which sets down national objectives and priorities. The government has not established such objectives into which regional growth and development programs could be fitted, with appropriate adjustments made for the allocation of funds. The result of this will be the continuation of programs frequently with conflicting goals carried out by a number of competing agencies. There will be little or no indication of how the system is supposed to work, and how one region is related to another in the national context or what should be the timing of specific steps. The only difference from the past will be that this will now go on within one department instead of many.

The following example will reflect the almost impossible task of a federal minister concerned with regional economic development who is forced to work without objectives and priorities agreed upon by parliament and by cabinet. The minister has to be the spokesman in cabinet and in parliament for all the lagging regions of Canada, not only on a provincial basis but also on an area basis. His views and judgment, and the advice of his officials, bear on most of the economic policies pursued by the Canadian government. This is because many government decisions have significant regional or area implications, whether it is a decision to pay subsidies to farmers or fishermen, to assist the C.N.R. to build a railway spur to open up a northern mining area, to offer financial assistance for a power grid for the maritime provinces, or to approve an urban renewal project in Quebec city.

The prime responsibility to deal with such matters, however, rests with the appropriate department or government agency responsible for finance, agriculture, fisheries, northern development, mining, or housing, all of which report to their respective ministers. The officials of these departments and agencies would not look too kindly on officers of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion telling them what they should or should not be doing, nor would the ministers of these departments be too happy to be told by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion what their policy should be in areas of their responsibility.

It is true that some of the difficulties and irritations may be reduced through consultation both at the ministerial and departmental levels through those traditional delaying techniques of referring controversial issues to committees. But in the end somebody has to make a decision, and if the decision is made by the minister responsible the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion may disagree, and vice-versa.

When such difficulties arise they are usually resolved by a dictum of the Prime Minister or as a result of an understanding reached by the cabinet as a whole. But government decisions affecting regional economic development are so numerous and the possibility of conflict on specific programs or policies between the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and his colleagues is so great that the cabinet or even a cabinet committee would be heavily burdened with the task of acting as an arbiter rather than going on with the job of formulating policies, leaving their implementation up to the ministers responsible.

I should like to give a practical example of what in theory appears to me to be a difficulty. Canada Manpower of the Department of Manpower and Immigration has recently arranged for several thousand maritimers, unemployed coal miners and their families in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, to migrate to Alberta and eastern British Columbia over the next four years. In these two areas there is a labour shortage in the coal mining industry and a need to meet the growing Japanese demand for Canadian coal. Financial assistance is being made available to these recruited miners through the manpower mobility program which is designed to pay moving costs of unemployed workers who cannot find jobs in their own areas but who, because of their special skills, are offered employment in other regions. However, the program will develop at a modest rate initially because of associated problems of providing adequate housing for these miners in the Alberta and British Columbia mining areas. Conventional approaches to the housing problem cannot be employed as the present mortgage rates make it virtually impossible for the average employed miner to purchase a home.

The above example clearly shows that in the absence of a well defined goal or objective and a national plan agreed to by the cabinet and by parliament, the problem of tackling regional disparities is an immense one for the minister concerned. He is bound to run into all kinds of conflict with his cabinet colleagues which, I suggest, cannot be worked out on a purely ad hoc basis.

I would like now to raise a number of miscellaneous although, I hope, relevent brief points. First, the area development agency which provides incentives to designated areas experiencing low employment and low growth should be scrapped immediately in favour of developing growth potential areas in less developed regions of the country. In other words, the minister should not wait, as he is planning to do, until late in the session to bring in his new industrial incentives act to attract industry into areas of potential high growth.

Second, it is obvious from the bill that the minister will have substantial discretionary power, to which the Leader of the Opposition has referred and on which I would like to comment briefly. The minister will have substantial discretionary power which will enable him to pick the areas which should be helped by federal incentive programs. In addition, he will be able to extend loans and grants to industries and firms that he chooses. Consultation with the provinces is envisioned, and this is a good thing, but the provinces' agreement is not mandatory and the minister will only need cabinet and not parliamentary approval for his programs. Once again I think this is a good thing. Discretionary power is desirable; it is economically foolish to be boxed in by narrow and inflexible criteria. However, I think it is clear that the discretionary power provided in this bill is much too broad. It leaves open the clear possibility of abuse in the form of political favouritism, or at least accusations of such abuse.

I do not, of course, allude to the personal character of the present minister in any way. The point I am making is that with such broad discretionary powers the temptation is there for any minister to use them for political reasons and, whether or not he does so, an accusation to this effect will no doubt be made from opposition benches from time to time. Certain common criteria of a broad nature can and should be established to avoid such a situation. Specifically they should focus on the potential for economic growth. They should be stipulated in advance and the discretionary power of the minister ought to be exercised within this framework.

The minister indicated in his speech on February 20 to the Quebec Co-operative Federation that he hopes to enlist the help of big business in his new task, and that industrialists will be encouraged by means of guaranteed loans to set up shop in special areas. One of the less fortunate possibilities of this approach is that it might lead to a continuation of the old policies which perpetuated Dosco in Cape Breton instead of the mixing of the public and private use of capital in an imaginative way.

I was recently dismayed, though not entirely surprised, to hear that Dosco was sending $1 million a year to its parent firm in Britain as consultant fees. As taxpayers the Canadian people are in effect channelling this sum across the Atlantic through Dosco to a corporation in Britain. In return for this substantial fee Dosco, I understand, is receiving almost no managerial advice. It may not be a coincidence that since this corporation has been made a public enterprise it has shown a profit of $2.5 million in its first year of operation. So much for at least one kind of private enterprise in comparison with public enterprise.

The Canadian people should be under no illusion that the new department will deal with poverty throughout Canada, though some have already made this mistake. It was made by the Toronto Star, for instance, in an editorial which appeared on February 25 lauding the establishment of the department and suggesting that action was at last being taken to abolish poverty in Canada. This, of course, is absurd. The new department will have nothing to do with the substantial problems faced by many poor people who exist in our major urban centres.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. If it is the disposition of the committee that he continue—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall try to be brief. I was saying that the new department would not really deal with the problem of poverty in the urban centres. In addition, I am convinced that in the foreseeable future it will not be dealing in any meaningful way with the poverty associated with regional economic disparity. I say this because the current estimates provide an increase of only $37 million for the purpose of dealing with economic disparity. This comes to less than the price of a movie ticket for every Canadian; it is the price of 20 popsicles for every Canadian. I suggest this is a disgracefully small figure, scarcely enough to deal with poverty in one small region let alone with the poverty which exists in many regions spread across the country.

I should like to conclude by making two additional proposals. I should be glad to hear the minister's comments on the suggestion now being put forward by a number of economists that it would be desirable to introduce a variable monetary policy in Canada at this time. Is there any good economic reason why we should establish the same interest rates in British Columbia, Ontario and the maritimes? Perhaps the government should give careful consideration to instituting a variable monetary policy in line with the varied economic conditions which exist in this country.

The second suggestion I should like to make concerns community involvement. One of the encouraging aspects of recent ARDA and FRED agreements has been a recognition of the importance of community participation. I think the government is to be commended in this regard. Of course, if people are to play a meaningful role in working out their own fate there are bound to be delays in the planning and decision-making process. However, there can be no doubt that both in personal and economic terms the benefit should be greater. People gain in self-respect, and the economy gains by having men and women personally committed to work projects.

The government should extend this involvement principle beyond ARDA and FRED and make it a central aspect of all its programs aimed at overcoming regional economic differences. Ordinary people all round the world, particularly in the industrially advanced nations, are now challenging all forms of authoritarian paternalism. We should welcome this trend. Indeed, we should foster it. And one of the best places to begin is with our own government programs.

[The Chairman.]

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, first of all, as I have not yet had an opportunity to do so, may I offer my congratulations to the new Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. He has worked towards the establishment of this department and he certainly deserves our admiration.

This is, I believe, a very judicious undertaking. Of course, it will not solve all problems; it is inconceivable, in this day of very complex administrative processes, that all problems can be dealt with at once.

In any event, this will be a useful tool, an essential one for a modern government that wishes to solve the dramatic problem facing Canadians today, that is regional disparity.

Mr. Chairman, Canadians from all parts of the country should share equally in the economic expansion of the nation. One region should not benefit from this at the expense of the others, as was the case under the former concept of regional development. That is the whole problem.

Successive governments, Mr. Chairman, have favoured the economic development of certain well-defined regions, while vast areas, more or less densely populated and generally well-provided with natural resources, were deprived of financial assistance from the government or of participation in regional development programs.

To give one example of particular interest to Quebecers, I shall mention Montreal which for the people of Quebec is a marvelous and extraordinary city with almost unlimited possibilities in international, industrial, commercial and other areas. For the rest of the province, this city is an economic monster that swallows up all the initiatives other regions could possibly undertake. Montreal today represents a menace to the economic growth of central Quebec, of the Gaspé, Abitibi, Quebec City area, etc.

We do not hold it against Montreal. Far from it. The city of Montreal must expand. The economic development of the metropolitan area must be sustained and progressive.

But, Mr. Chairman, the other parts of Quebec must not be forgotten. The Ottawa region—Pontiac-Témiscamingue—could be mentioned as just another example of an area far behind economically, so we can say that in Quebec there is but one economic, financial and commercial pole formed by the Montreal metropolitan area.

Mr. Chairman, in view of those obvious regional disparities it would do no good to talk nonsense and compare one region to another. When regional comparisons are made, I think all hon. members realize that all is not perfect in Canada.

Suffice it to say that there are very rich provinces and rich provinces which are underdeveloped. Some eastern provinces are in an essentially different situation from the western or central provinces. In short, our country is such that it cannot be considered as a whole. Does it mean that it is impossible to imagine an absolutely homogeneous economy or government investments? On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, we must grant assistance adjusted to the various areas, according to their needs.

It is no longer possible, Mr. Chairman, to have a uniform policy of economic growth throughout Canada. It is inconceivable. Canada is not truly an homogeneous whole and it was a mistake in the past to believe it and to act accordingly, because if we considered Canada as an homogeneous whole, it would be impossible to prevent it from plunging into economic confusion, as it is now in danger of falling into linguistic confusion.

How does Canada look right now, Mr. Chairman? Like a country thoroughly disturbed by a revolution, a quiet one according to some, an economic one according to others. We see a nervous Quebec, puzzled, rich and poor provinces. And today a new department is established, that of Regional Economic Expansion. Even if it cannot be expected to solve every problem, I believe none the less that with the instruments mentioned by the minister in his preliminary remarks it shall certainly be possible to help Canadians provided that before setting up his department or making any grants whatever the minister gets closer to the people and tries to understand their needs instead of sticking to the Establishment, as I am afraid he will, and holding on to an administration more and more alien from the people.

The minister was talking about measures such as social rehabilitation in rural surroundings, an industrial development program, regional development programs, the establishment of an interdepartmental structure through a federal-provincial process. He was also talking of making grants or loans to provinces or municipalities as well as grants or loan guarantees under an industrial incentive program. Such measures, Mr. Chairman, can on the whole benefit regional economic expansion and contribute to the progress of Canada where injustices brought about by regional disparities will disappear.

However, Mr. Chairman, at the present stage of the debate on the establishment of this new department, I have to direct some questions to the minister.

For instance, while he speaks of making grants or loans to the provinces and the municipalities, could the minister explain clearly what the interest rates might be? I wish to remind him that at this stage of the debate, the Ralliement Créditiste is in favour of grants or loans but believes that the aid supplied by the Canadian government to foreign countries should also be available to the Canadian people, since public enterprises are involved.

Mr. Chairman, why should high finance be allowed to make profits on loans from the federal government to the provinces and the municipalities for regional economic expansion? Can the minister state precisely the terms of such loans, so that we may see whether they are the same as the ones supplied to foreign countries?

Mr. Chairman, the Speech from the Throne opening the 28th Parliament started as follows. I quote:

> Across the land there are great expectations of what this Parliament will produce.

Further on, the Speech from the Throne refers also, and I quote, to:

> —a sober awareness of reality.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while establishing that new superdepartment, as the newspapers have called it, the government intends to grapple with regional disparities.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Canada is now going through a monetary crisis which is at the heart of the problem. Economic and social problems inevitably follow, Mr. Chairman. In order to demonstrate that what I am saying is true, I shall merely point out as an example the financing of the public sector.

For a very long time, Liberal or Progressive Conservative governments have adopted a policy of borrowing billions of dollars abroad. Every year, the minister starts on a pilgrimage to foreign countries in order to collect the funds necessary to refloat our economy. Foreign countries willingly make loans to Canada since the Canadian market is all the same interesting and they know Canada will pay back.

There follows a third consequence: the government does not borrow—we can ascertain the fact—from the Bank of Canada to finance the public sector but rather from foreign countries and from high finance. This is the reason for our economic stagnation and our social unrest.

The economic consequences first reveal that, instead of obtaining money from the Bank of Canada, the government goes deeper and deeper into debt each year through borrowing from foreign countries. For the past hundred years, there has not been one single year in which the financing of the public debt of Canada has shown a decrease. The interests on our national debt and the debt itself have been continually increasing.

As another economic result of this distorted and sick monetary policy which is unadapted to a modern and rich country such as ours, the federal budgets are heavily burdened by an enormous annual reimbursement for loans.

Another consequence yet is the indebtedness incurred by the provincial and municipal governments. As a result of all this, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) now would like us to discuss with him this particular problem of regional disparities.

I wish the minister would ponder the reason why some regions are subjected to so much suffering, so many economic inequalities and why there is so much injustice in Canada. It is because the government is not in control of money in this country. This is rather the prerogative of high financial interests and foreign countries.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think this department will solve all the problems. It will only serve as a temporary solution, a buffer solution that will reduce to some extent the external ill effects, without getting at the source which is in the heart of individuals.

Mr. Chairman, as a result of these economic problems attributable to an inadequate monetary control, there are social consequences which include overtaxation contributing to a decrease in the purchasing power of individuals and to an increase in individual indebtedness, poverty, depreciation of social environment, discouragement and unemployment.

Mr. Chairman, the same logic could be applied to the housing problem and to agriculture.

[Mr. Fortin.]

The problems we are facing are the result primarily of the government's policy.

The housing problem is due to a poorly-adapted policy, for example the 11 per cent sales tax, etc. We are presented with a bill designed to solve that problem, and we wish the minister good luck.

But we wish to tell him that we are very uncertain as to the solution of the poverty problem in Canada. We are also uncertain as to whether the regional disparities will be reduced or eliminated, because it is primarily a financial problem. No matter what the ministers say, that is a fact.

The future minister of the new department, in his preliminary remarks, spoke of setting up an inter-departmental structure.

Mr. Chairman, I could make a brief comment on that statement, to the effect that it is an urgent matter and that we are happy the minister has foreseen, in creating this department, a closer coordination between the departments. In fact, we now realize that action within each of them is rather limited, spread out and broken up, which can only bring about poor results.

Mr. Chairman, in his preliminary remarks, the minister spoke of setting up an industrial development program. I have but a few brief comments on that. If we wish to promote the establishment and expansion of industry, in any part of Canada, the first thing to do, to my way of thinking, is to reduce taxation.

Why always try to dodge the problem? Let us deal with the real problem. It does not lie where the minister thinks it does, as the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) said.

According to the third annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, dated November 1966, from 1949 to 1965 indirect taxes increased more per production unit than any other major factor of the gross national product in such a way that today it accounts for about 15 per cent of the gross national product as a whole.

For instance, Mr. Chairman, let us look at the 11 per cent tax on building materials, machinery and equipment. These taxes make for higher consumer prices resulting in lack of purchasing power, and hardship and poverty.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we should facilitate financing for businesses, and in that respect it seems that the minister is considering some most interesting plans. However, I have a few brief comments to make on this. Savings should be developed by encouraging taxpayers to save. This is not possible today, as taxes take up even part of what is absolutely necessary to live. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, we should contribute to the development of productivity.

As for the department's proposal to give financial aid, in co-operation with the other departments, it could perhaps bring some hope for a solution, although Mr. Chairman, it would be enough if we did what is necessary to compete with American industries.

Because of our weak domestic market, mass production cannot be successful in Canada, and as a result it is impossible to attain parity of salaries overnight. The unions that demand such parity are doing nothing to ensure a sound Canadian economy.

The Canadian Economic Council claims and I quote:

> If parity of the nominal income was ordered for every Canadian citizen at 10 a.m., it is most likely that the processes of the foreign exchange market would abolish the real parity around 3 p.m.

As for the use of cheap wood species, one could refer to commercial agreements and to the Kennedy Round to prove that even if we want to facilitate the development of Canadian industry and regional expansion, we are exploited by American industry.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I am sorry to inform the hon. member that his time has expired. The hon. member for Gatineau.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest, if the house agrees, that the hon. member for Lotbinière be permitted to complete his speech.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I thank the house for its co-operation. I want also to thank the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) who was kind enough to ask that I be granted a few minutes more to complete my speech. I would like to say that, even if we want to facilitate the development of Canadian industry, we must implement a national policy for Canadian industry in order to check American industry and actually compete with it. In my opinion, that can be one of the important roles of that new department in order to help Canadian industry compete with American industry, which unfortunately stifles Canadian industry and threatens the domestic trade.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the establishment of that new department, a well-known editorial writer, Mr. Clément Brown, wrote an excellent article that was published on February 19 in Montréal-Matin and which I would like to quote. It reads as follows:

> The key to the success of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will lie in the spirit of its negotiations with the provinces.
> Indeed, a rapid perusal of the bill convinces us that the development policy is headed for failure is there is not, at every level and every moment, close co-operation between the federal government and the provinces.

That, Mr. Chairman, is an extremely important point which we cannot stress enough because today, in a federative system, we cannot conceive of a battle against poverty and regional disparities without, first and foremost, a serious agreement reached by the federal and provincial governments in a spirit of co-operation.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to know the terms of the amendment mentioned by the minister during his preliminary remarks. In fact, he said that he would introduce an amendment to clause 26(1) with regard to federal-provincial relations.

I think that this is one of the basic points of this discussion and I am extremely sorry not to have more time available to me to deal with it. Nevertheless the basic principle of regional economic expansion should be very close, very human and very fair co-operation between the provinces and the federal government and it should not be detrimental to the provinces nor a one-way affair. It should be carried out jointly, otherwise these programs will come to nothing and in view of the fact that they will not solve the problem they will simply widen the gap between the provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Chairman, I close with this. We are happy that the minister responsible for the new department is a man we are acquainted with since we know that he is aware of the problems of the people. In view of the fact that he now has the tools which he has longed for for a long time, namely this new Department of Regional Economic Expansion, we hope that he will make good use of it, in a human way, so as to help the Canadian people to get out of the financial and economic stagnation in which they are now.

We also hope that, when the time comes to give subsidies and loans to provinces and municipalities, in order to eradicate unemployment and economic problems in Canada, the minister will not be afraid to use the Bank of Canada as we do for foreign countries, by offering interesting terms. If it is a good thing for foreigners, we should continue it but we should do the same for our Canadian people, since misery also exists in our rich country, which should not be.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I would like to remind hon. members that the time allotted for speech is 20 minutes. It can be extended when only a few members wish to speak but in the case of such an important department, when a great number of members have expressed their intention to take the floor, I would ask them to limit their speeches to 20 or 21 minutes.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, we are now considering the setting up of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion intended to take care of the economic expansion and social upgrading of areas where there is a need for specific measures in order to bring about opportunities for productive employment and to secure access to it. With this new department, Canada is entering a new phase of regional development, the third phase, in fact. The first one, which followed World War II, saw the equalization payments which for the past twelve years, the last of which will end next March 31, have enabled the four Atlantic provinces to cash in for a little more than $1 billion and the province of Quebec to reap $835 million during the financial years running from 1961-62 to 1967-68.

During the second phase, the federal government established various programs and bodies to cope with special aspects of regional disparities such as regional development assistance programs. The Atlantic Development Board, the ARDA and FRED programs, launched by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, as well as the Cape Breton Development Corporation. These various bodies did not escape criticism but I dare say they have not been idle.

Take, for instance, the Regional Development Assistance program. It has its drawbacks but the fact remains that in May 1967, more than 700 applications for aid had been approved or considered under this program. The total cost exceeded $1.5 billion and jobs had been secured for over 44,000 workers.

As for the ARDA program, the index of the works tells us that from 1962 to 1965, 735 projects were carried out or started for a total of shared costs amounting to $63,626,470 to which the federal government contributed $34,488,198. From 1965 to 1967, 672 projects were started or completed, with shared costs amounting to $130,322,421 and the federal government contributed $56,957,139. For 1967-68, which brings us to May 31, 1968, 317 projects were completed or started with shared costs totalling $71,606,633 and the federal government contributing $30,788,693.

The over-all total shared costs for 1724 projects add up to $265,555,524 with the federal government contributing $122,234,030.

As regards the province of Quebec, with respect to the period I just mentioned, Mr. Chairman, 350 projects were carried out, the total shared costs being $51,342,244 and the federal government's share, $23,432,182.

As for the share of the province of Ontario, an hon. member claimed that it was much larger than that of the province of Quebec whereas during the same period, 114 projects were carried out in Ontario, the shared costs amounting to $60,599,394 and the federal government's share being $25,567,526.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, we also know that in 1966, a new scheme was added to ARDA, the FRED program, and up to now five agreements have been signed. The first and second agreements concerned areas in New Brunswick; the third one, a Manitoba area, the fourth was connected with the province of Quebec, and more especially the eastern part of that province and the fifth, signed recently, concerned Prince Edward Island. The over-all purpose of such programs is to promote the economic and social development of the areas concerned. It is sought to reduce the employment, income and productivity disparities existing between the areas where those programs will be carried out and the rest of Canada.

At this stage, Mr. Chairman, I must say that western Quebec—I apologize for dealing now with regional problems—of which I am one of the representatives in this house, got almost nothing out of the ARDA and FRED programs. That area comprises the provincial ridings of Gatineau, Hull, Labelle, Papineau and Pontiac and has a population of about 265,000.

Now the only two development projects I could find for this region in the ARDA list, concern the county of Papineau and a study on the La Rouge valley area.

No doubt we benefited in that area by the alternate land use, and the soil and water conservation program but as far as well-planned projects were concerned, we did not get the full benefit of them. If such schemes were carried out in western Quebec, we could derive great advantages in the planning field, for instance, with a view to attracting new industries, so as to foster the modernization and development of existing ones and provide substantial assistance in order to find customers outside of the area and ensure a well-structured transportation system likely to promote the sale of products and permit access to our tourist centres.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to open a parenthesis at this point to say that western Quebec, the areas of the valley of the Petite Nation river, of the Lièvre river and the Gatineau area are real paradises for the tourists.

We know how important the tourist industry is for Canada.

I believe that industry ranks third or fourth amongst our most important sources of revenue, after the newsprint, the wheat, and the automobile industries.

Those areas have tremendous potential for the tourist industry; they have natural and extremely varied attractions. Tourist centres and relays, camping sites, ski-lifts and snowmobile centres, which is a very popular sport nowadays, and a provincial park have already been developed. In 1966, with the co-operation of the federal government and the province of Quebec, eight provincial parks were developed in that province. In view of the powers entrusted to the minister who will preside over the destiny of that department, I trust that area will be taken into consideration in future plans.

I should also like to make a few remarks at this point on clauses 20 to 40 of Bill C-173 which deals with the establishment of that department.

I see that clause 26 grants the minister the power to enter into agreements with the provinces. The minister mentioned that he intends to amend clause 26(1). If I am not mistaken, he will add after the word "may", the words "in co-operation with the provinces". Indeed, I agree with a 100 per cent cooperation. But what does the word "co-operation" mean? Does it mean the same as it does in the case of ARDA and the FRED programs? Let me quote an excerpt from the act:

> ARDA is a federal act, but the program undertaken by virtue of it, is federal-provincial in character, each province being responsible for drawing up plans and programs, implementing them and paying half the cost.

I ask the minister if that co-operation means, as is the case for the ARDA and FRED programs, that the federal government participation will consist in supplying 50 per cent or more of the funds allocated to those programs and that their administration will be left entirely to the provinces?

I hope that such is not the case, Mr. Chairman, for I also note myself, like the previous speakers, that the bill gives the minister very wide powers.

I also note with pleasure that under the provisions of section 24 and Schedule A the areas now considered as designated will be actually recognized as special areas.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I note from sections 29, 30 and 31 that there shall be a council known as the Atlantic Development Council, the function of which will be to advise the minister on matters to which the duties and powers of the minister extend and in particular to the studies to be made.

I think that this will interest only the Maritimes. Will such a council or agency be established for the other areas of Canada? In fact I note that, in 1966, section 7 of the amendment to the ARDA Act provided for the establishment of an Advisory Council of not more than ten officials, or representatives of agencies, and so on.

We have seen, Mr. Chairman, that an identical section applies to the establishment of the FRED program.

In ending my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote from an article by Mr. Roger Champoux which appeared in La Presse on February 19 under the heading: "Operation Relief". I quote:

> The undertaking is gigantic and the tool has just been designed!
> As a response to the challenge it is facing, the federal government is establishing a super-department responsible for the solution of the country's economic disparities.
> At the same time, the government is fulfilling an election promise and this must be said seriously. But, above all, it is a last a concession to those reasonable people who are asking for strong action and ingenious ideas that will remove several Canadian regions from economic stagnation. This is an urgent and dramatic situation.

Here is another excerpt:

A quick glance at the bill intended to establish this new department illustrates one major aspect. It is not a matter of pouring tremendous sums of money into underdeveloped regions; it involves the association of responsible people for the achievement of renewal projects. There will be some money invested, surely, as loans for new industries, for guarantees involving modernization, and in the way of subsidies for specific purposes.

As the new super-department will be granted the highest appropriations among all the other departments, the Canadian government is clearly indicating its serious concern over the economic deterioration of too many areas.

There is a need for balance. Some regions cannot be left to perish and huge tracts of land deplorably eroded and on the verge of being abandoned cannot be left to their own fate. Political quarrels never produce equilibrium. Co-operation is not a humiliating factor and it is the sole successful process.

Mr. Chairman, on concluding my remarks, I wish every success to the minister responsible for this department. Considering his efforts in the past in other departments and agencies, he will contribute to the achievements of this new department.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I rise to participate in this debate with a good deal of interest even though we have had to drag out the substance of the debate off and on over the past few weeks since the bill was introduced in February. I must admit that I continue to be somewhat disappointed that the minister has not been able to shed more light on some of the relevant questions in respect of this important enterprise. I have been amazed that the minister has not been able to give us more information on this bill as a result of the questions we have asked in the last few weeks.

The minister might have shed more light this afternoon on this subject in answer to several questions relating to the substance of the legislation we are supposed to receive later this session in respect of the whole problem of industrial incentives and assistance. Two or three weeks ago I asked the minister when that legislation would be introduced in order that we might examine it in connection with the legislation before us today. He said it could not be introduced yet because it had not been drafted but he would give us some indication of what it involved. He indicated he would inform us of the general framework in order that we might understand it during our examination of this bill. Unless my hearing was not functioning the minister did not make any specific statements in respect of this important area.

The bill now before us largely centres on the whole question of industrial development in disadvantaged regions of this country. Surely we are entitled to have information in this regard from the minister. If he is not prepared to give it this afternoon, I hope that after the general roster of speakers on the first clause has been exhausted he will give us a supplementary statement. Such a statement would make our work much easier. It is not fair to the many individuals and provincial governments involved in this whole matter not to have the information necessary to co-ordinate provincial attacks on regional disparity.

Several weeks ago when introducing this bill the minister made a statement to the effect that many other interesting programs would be reviewed. It is important to us to know the specific programs to be reviewed. A number of speakers have outlined the ramifications of government intervention in terms of economic works in this country which do not fall within the responsibility of this minister. We should know what programs are to be considered with the view of possible alteration or change, especially in respect of the regulations which apply to those programs. This is particularly important to the provinces involved.

Most of the provincial legislatures are now in session. If changes are to be implemented it is important that this information be given as early as possible. The minister was unable to say previously whether or not a special effort was made to attract large scale industry to the Atlantic region. He indicated that this subject would be dealt with during the course of this debate. I hope we will have some further word in this regard.

I was interested to hear the minister indicate that he plans to introduce an amendment. While the amendment may not contain many words, I think it is fundamental. Perhaps it indicates an increasing awareness and understanding on the part of the government that consultation, co-ordination and co-operation with the provincial governments is a necessity. I am sure the effort the minister is making in respect of regional disparity will prove to be vital.

I find it difficult to understand how the minister's amendment is going to change the effect of clause 26(1) and, more importantly, the implications of clause 26(2). I am not a lawyer and I know the minister is not a lawyer, but we have many lawyers in the house who will help us. Clause 26(2) clearly states that Ottawa knows best and once the government has made its decision it will announce it from on high and the provinces are expected to follow. The minister is shaking his head indicating that is not true. I think we must have an amendment to make this clear.

I have talked to people who know more about this than I and have been assured that the effect of what is contained in clause 26(2) is to pit the pre-eminent wisdom and authority of the federal government against the full and open co-operation of the provinces. We should not disregard this concept because it is becoming increasingly important. Other bodies, particularly municipalities and regional districts, are important.

I think the intent of the minister's amendment is good. We certainly encourage him to build into this legislation that kind of co-operation we regard as fundamental to an effective program. I am still very much disappointed that the minister has been unable to answer some of the basic questions we have asked in respect of the establishment of the department.

One of the difficulties we all have in dealing with this matter is related to the broadness of the concept of this measure. Almost everything can be included. Perhaps for that reason the minister has been unwilling to give an explanation. To a very large degree this is a new venture and the minister is afraid to answer the very difficult questions involved in it.

Obviously one of the difficult questions is: how are we going to know what standards or criteria are to be adopted in order that the minister in one, two or three years from now can advise members of the opposition as to the effectiveness of this program and this new department? We must have some information at this time as to what the government thinks are the achievable or measurable goals. We are still dealing in a kind of airy-fairy fashion with this matter. We are trying a little of this and a little of that in the hope that something may result.

There is a weakness in the structure of the Atlantic Development Board. It has never really come to grips with the problem of regional disparity. It is rather ironic that the government contemplates the winding up of this board at a time when it is beginning to tackle important problems that exist in various sectors of the Atlantic region. The board is beginning to show promise in respect of the solution of problems in that area.

The minister has assured us that before the board is wound up the answers to certain questions must be found and that perhaps these answers will be forthcoming when this department gets into operation. Unfortunately the more I hear from people about this concept of regional development the more I become confused. There are many concepts of what is meant by regional development. There are more concepts in this regard than there are people who consider it a suspicious theory. It is not enough for the government to have a whole assortment of theories it may look at from time to time. Because it is committed to certain kinds of action, obviously it must commit itself to certain concepts with regard to regions. It will be crucial for the workings of this department, and for any new programs to be developed within it or other departments, to know what the provinces think about the problems. The government must begin to come to terms with that question.

In my estimation there has not been nearly enough elaboration of the structure of this department. In the comments the minister has made to date there has not been any definite elaboration of what the government plans to do by way of consultation. This has been one of the real weaknesses of all federal programs carried on in the past. Consultation, particularly with the provinces but in many cases with other agencies, has been lacking. In the setting up of this department there is, of course, an attempt to include in it at least some of the basic programs concerned with correcting the whole problem of regional inequality. If I may put this in a general way, one of my overriding concerns after studying this part of the bill is that it seems to be largely centred on industrial development. Certainly no one in the region from which I come is opposed to industrial development. It is a kind of golden word in this age. If you have problems with your economy, if you have a great deal of unemployment and underutilization of people, you immediately start talking about industrial development.

I think there has been a fairly wide consensus that the concept of the growth centre is a good one and in a general way is an advance over what the government has been doing.

But I think we really fool ourselves if we believe that regional development can be fully and completely equated with what passes for industrial development. Industrial development is one aspect of the foundation, if you like, for many other things that must happen. I hope the minister will indicate how he visualizes other questions related to the economic and social aspects of development being handled by this department.

In the few minutes I have remaining I would like to make two or three specific points with regard to this legislation. One of the basic weaknesses to be found in the bill is the effective gutting of the Atlantic Development Board. The government seems to have had a highly ambivalent feeling all the way through the piece about the Atlantic Development Board. In 1963 the government suggested it was not satisfied with what the previous government did in 1962. The government wanted more than just an advisory agency; it wanted one that had some real powers of initiation and administration. Therefore amendments were introduced in 1963. There was always a fair amount of pull and tug between what the Atlantic Development Board was set up to do and what it actually did in terms of the kind of control that Treasury Board exercised over it. But at least there was an attempt to deal with problems of the Atlantic region in a somewhat rational way through this agency.

Now we are told, in 1969, that the idea put forward in 1963 was not really such a good one. It is said that what we had before was not really better, that although it may have been said to be better, this really has not been the case. The change being made now is a variation of that theme. We are told we are to have an advisory council. The advisory council will have very little opportunity to function except as the minister desires. From a reading of the provisions in the legislation one would expect it will not function on a very active or high level. I think this is most unfortunate.

It seems to me that the federal government must establish some kind of intermediary agency through which it can meet the provinces. I feel that the Atlantic Development Board was that kind of agency. It was not perfect, obviously, but if changes had been made to give it sufficient credibility in the Atlantic region it could have become a tool functioning effectively for regional development in the Atlantic area.

What we have in this legislation is a face-saving device for a government that is reluctant to go whole hog with regard to this program. The government says: We really do not need it, but we are not wiping it completely off the books. We are not really changing things very much. We have given the new council some of the administrative and executive functions of the A.D.B. We have also given it much larger powers to look at the whole field and comment on all the other programs and agencies under the new department.

The government is in fact trying to console people on that basis. I hope no one is fooled into being consoled on that basis, because it is not true. The minister knows it is not true. If he really believed that the Atlantic Development Council would be so important to his work and that of his department, if he thought it would be of some significance, I am sure that in the legislation provision would have been made for other councils, particularly for an area close to the minister's own concern, the area east of Trois-Rivières within the boundary of Quebec. One could name other parts of Canada that should probably come within the responsibility of this department and with regard to which there is no provision in the bill. I was interested to hear the hon. member for Gatineau make somewhat similar comments.

If the Atlantic Development Council means anything, surely that concept should not be lost sight of in dealing with other areas in need of regional development for which the new department will have responsibility. I hope, and perhaps the minister will deal with this matter in his remarks later, we will be given a definite assurance that the kind of studies being worked on by the Atlantic Development Board and which are just about to see the light of day will be continued. It will be nothing short of farcical to set up new studies when we have already had a team of people working on studies for some years.

It would seem to me that if there is a genuine desire to attack the long-term problems of economic disparity in the Atlantic region a plan will have to be developed in the next few years which has the consent of the provinces of eastern Canada and in which there can be co-operation and co-ordination between the federal and provincial governments. Only in this way can the federal government and the provinces work together to alleviate what are very long-term problems.

There does not at the moment seem to be in this legislation the kind of framework necessary to encourage the provinces that this will be the case and to direct the activities of the department toward that end. I feel that unless we can elicit a very high level of active consultation and co-operation with the provinces we shall be going down another very blind alley. In concluding these remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on one other matter which I think is of great importance in the setting up of the new department. It has been commented on by others.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could interrupt the hon. member and suggest that rather than the hon. member feeling constrained at this point, we might report progress and then be in a position to waive private members' hour.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): If I had been allowed, I would have advised the hon. member that his time has expired. However, if there had been agreement I would have suggested that he continue for one or two minutes more.

Progress reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-138, an act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, without any amendment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather)—External Aid—provision of food through transfer of armament funds; the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney)—Consumer Affairs—lumber—inquiry as to task force finding; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Labour Conditions—alternative to compensate for cancelled winter works program.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house would be agreeable to waiving private members' hour for this afternoon so that we might continue with our discussion of Bill C-173?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Richard in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-173.

On clause 20—Definitions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like a minute more to conclude my remarks.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is it the wish of the committee that the hon. member have a few more minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to one specific matter before resuming my seat. It concerns the extra powers which are to be granted to the minister of this new department. If this department is to be effective in the over-all co-ordination of fiscal and monetary policies with regard to the development of the Atlantic or other regions of Canada, then quite obviously the minister must be given powers similar to those that are found in this legislation. I have no objection to such powers being granted the minister, but this creates a situation which can lead to considerable suspicion, and I think rightly so, because it is not normal for a minister to be granted the powers sought in this bill. Therefore before we have completed discussion of the bill I think hon. members will have to consider how parliament can function most effectively with respect to this new department.

If there is to be ministerial responsibility in the areas which are assigned to the minister, then obviously there must be a provision in the statute to make sure that the related parliamentary committee is given a full understanding of the activities and programs that are to be carried out by the new department. Unless we are willing to provide this kind of parliamentary responsibility, we will be irresponsible in allowing the minister to assume powers which in normal situations are not usually granted to any minister. Perhaps in our further consideration of this legislation I may be able to elaborate on this subject a little more, and if there is agreement in the house I will even be prepared to introduce an amendment in that regard.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by adding to the feeling which was expressed by my colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, and by the hon. member for Egmont as well as, may I point out to the minister, by many people in the areas of slow growth and of poverty which should get the benefit of the activities of the minister's department. In my opinion sufficient facts and details have not been given us about what the minister and his department will be doing to assure us that its establishment will make a difference to these areas. The minister is one of my favourite ministers, but too many people, myself included, have feelings of apprehension with regard to this department and the minister in charge of it similar to those we had when he was put in charge of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

Today I want to deal with one aspect of the minister's responsibility. I refer to the implementation of the agreements which he or the former minister signed with the provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Quebec. I have a good deal of sympathy for the ARDA and FRED programs under these agreements because I believe they are moving in the right direction. However, I submit that so far as they commit the federal government to the expenditure of tens of millions of dollars for education—and I approve of that particular program—they wipe out and make a mockery of all the principles which this minister and the Prime Minister have enunciated over the years that in their one Canada education, as they see it, is the sole responsibility of the provincial governments.

Since I only have a short time in which to speak I will not put on the record the dozens, if not hundreds, of statements which the Prime Minister and the minister have made about the subject in the most precise terms. I shall simply quote just a few. The first is in a book called "Federalism And The French Canadians", which is a volume of articles written by the Prime Minister. It is contained in an article entitled "Federal Grants To Universities" in which the Prime Minister quotes with approval the position taken by Mr. F. A. Angers who said:

> In general, the Canadian state is not the central government, but the central and the provincial governments taken together . . . In matters of education the Canadian state is the provincial state, and none other.

Later in the same article the Prime Minister said:

> —Consequently, if there is federal legislation to grant taxation money for provincial purposes, this legislation is illegal for the excellent reason that the federal government cannot by law have money in its coffers which it then claims should be used for provincial purposes.

I will come back to that later but let me say now that we are spending tens of millions of dollars on education under agreements with the provinces.

In a brief which the Prime Minister prepared for the Quebec Federation of Industrial Unions for submission to a Quebec royal commission in 1954 the Prime Minister spelled out his views again. He said that if Ottawa regularly provided funds for the building of schools simply because all the provinces need more money or do not care enough for education, the federal government would be violating the first principle of fiscal collaboration and, greater still, it would be attacking the very basis of the federal system. Those were the views of the Prime Minister written before he became Prime Minister.

What happened after he came to Ottawa? He was able to convince the then prime minister and the present minister who is piloting this legislation through the house that he was correct. As a result of his point of view the federal government took the decision to get out of agreements which the former government had reached with the provinces in the field of university education and of technical and vocational training. The then prime minister, Mr. Pearson, speaking on October 24, 1966, to the federal-provincial conference, said:

• (5:10 p.m.)

The federal government recognizes that education is, and must remain, within provincial jurisdiction.

He went on to make a distinction between education and manpower training. The present minister, in a statement made on October 25 to the federal-provincial conference, spelled out why the federal government had decided to get out of the technical and vocational training agreements which had been of tremendous value in upgrading education in all the provinces. In making a distinction between technical and vocational training and manpower training, he said:

The distinction we do make is quite different. It is not between kinds of education. It is a distinction between the needs of people—between, on the one hand, students in the ordinary sense and, on the other hand, men and women who are or have been earning their living but who need further training or retraining for productive employment.

In the same speech to the representatives of the provinces he said:

So unless you are prepared to argue that the federal government should have the permanent influence on your programs that shared-cost arrangements give us, I suggest you must accept the principle of our withdrawal. Otherwise the level of government which doesn't have constitutional responsibility would more and more be raising the money for it and having an increasing indirect influence on the school system. That would not be healthy. It would not make any kind of sense. We are not going to do it.

That was the position taken by the federal government as expressed by the minister. Now let us look at the agreement with Prince Edward Island signed by the same minister. The federal government agrees to make available under this agreement more than $76 million. I believe it is a good agreement. I do not think enough is being done but I believe it is a good agreement. What will this money be spent on? Bear in mind that on an earlier occasion the minister said the federal government had no business to be in the field of education. Yet section 2(1) of this agreement contains the following on page 31:

The province therefore intends as an integral part of the comprehensive plan to embark on a major restructuring of its system of education.

Remember, this is a plan which is being financed in large part by the federal government. Later, the agreement says:

The basic objectives of the province in undertaking this program are to improve the quality of education; to double the proportion of students who complete grade 12; and in general, to give the people of Prince Edward Island a flexible education system capable of overcoming short-term problems and meeting long-term needs.

This is a worth while objective, and I support it. But it makes a mockery of all the things which the Prime Minister and the minister have enunciated as basic principles which the country must observe if the constitution is to be upheld.

Let us turn to the agreement with my own province of Manitoba. Here the federal government has agreed to spend over $49 million. What will part of this money be spent for? I refer to page 13 of the agreement, part one, under the heading "Education". It says:

The purpose and intent of this part is to improve the educational facilities and opportunities in the area.

The province shall undertake as a program under this agreement to expand and modernize school facilities in the area through:

(a) the consolidation of existing school boards into one board for each of the five school divisions;

(b) the investment during the five years immediately following the signing of this agreement of an estimated $4,700,000 in school facilities in the area;

(c) the construction of a technical vocational high school for a minimum of 500 students in the area at an estimated cost of $3,000,000; and

(d) the provision of approximately $19,000,000 during the life of this agreement to meet the increase in the cost of operation and maintenance of the school program.

So the department agrees to build in the province of Manitoba in the Interlake area a technical and vocational school of the kind which in 1966 the minister said ought not to be built by the federal government. He was junking the program to build technical and vocational schools right across the country because he believed the federal government should not be involved in this kind of activity; it was illegal under the constitution and it would break down the fabric of this country, as the Prime Minister has said so often.

Look at the agreement with New Brunswick. The federal government agrees to the expenditure of some $25 million as its share. The amount which will be spent on education by the federal government is listed—$5,100,000. What will it be spent for? Talk about the federal government being involved in education—here is what we find on page 15:

(a) The extensive consolidation of schools and of school districts into new and larger districts, the centres of which shall be situated in communities jointly approved by the parties hereto;

(b) the investment during the period of five years from the date upon which this agreement becomes signed by both Canada and the province of not less than $21,600,000 with respect to schools serving the centres designated under subparagraph (a) hereof, but in any case secondary schools shall have first priority in respect of the said moneys.

An increased teacher training program. Educational development. This is the kind of agreement the Liberal government is signing but which the minister is condemning. I could go on to give other examples but my time is limited.

There is an agreement with the province of Quebec. One can look at it very carefully, one can read it word by word, one can put it under a microscope, without finding in it one word about education. I do not know whether this means that Quebec does not need the amount of money for education that the other three provinces need. Possibly the province of Quebec would not take money for education, believing, as the Prime Minister used to say before he became Prime Minister, that education is the sole responsibility of the provinces and that the federal government should not incur expenditures in this field.

On the other hand, it might be that the federal government is spending money for education in the redevelopment area of eastern Quebec but that for reasons of politics, or so as to avoid wounding anyone's susceptibilities, the funds provided for it are hidden. The point I am making, and which I think I have demonstrated conclusively, is that the government and the minister are doing things which the Prime Minister and the minister said were wrong, things which they said were illegal and which would destroy the very fabric of Canada.

The present Prime Minister might argue that he cannot be held responsible for the agreements with Manitoba, New Brunswick and Quebec because they were signed before he took office. But he is certainly responsible as Prime Minister for the agreement which was signed some ten days ago with the province of Prince Edward Island. It is possible he does not even know of the contents of that agreement, though I find this hard to believe. The minister shakes his head. Then I suggest that in fact the Prime Minister and the government have scrapped the basic principles which they espoused.

There is nothing wrong about that, Mr. Chairman. If, within less than a year of forming a government the Prime Minister has found, as so many of us have tried to point out, that you cannot operate this country on the basis of a simple constitutional division of certain responsibilities between the federal government and the provinces, then we are happy. We have to approach matters in a pragmatic manner and solve problems as they arise. If the Prime Minister and the government realize this, then we are happy. But I hope that an obvious consequence of that discovery on the part of the Prime Minister and the government will be that there will be an end to the kind of lecturing that opposition members of parliament have been given by the Prime Minister, both inside and outside the house.

This sort of thing has been done unfairly, I think, but very effectively. During the last election campaign the Prime Minister took the simplistic approach that he and his party stood for one Canada, that the Conservatives stood for something known as "deux nations", whatever that meant, that the New Democratic party stood for special status for Quebec, that the Conservatives and the New Democrats were really out to break up this country, that only the Liberals had a God-given right to power 99 per cent of the time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They are not the chosen people, are they?

Mr. Orlikow: No, and I do know who the chosen people are, although the Liberals claim to have all the answers.

The Prime Minister and the government must learn that they do not have all the answers. Perhaps they will learn that from what I suggest is a retreat in less than one year from one of the basic principles enunciated by the Prime Minister for a considerable period of time. The government must stop attacking the opposition parties by unfair and oversimplified means. Like other Canadians these parties have stated that the problems Canada faces in the fields of education, health and welfare, economic development and poverty are not simple but require a variety of techniques to solve, as well as the complete co-operation of all governments, federal, provincial and municipal. If the government has learned this, then perhaps we may begin to deal with some of the basic problems in this country.

Mr. Gendron: Mr. Chairman, we, members from the underprivileged areas, greet enthusiastically the setting up of this new department and we take this opportunity to warmly congratulate the new minister. We know how energetic, how dynamic he is and how much he is concerned over the lot of the underprivileged in our society. We therefore are confident that his work will be successful and that he will be able to meet this terrific challenge.

Some will say: But were you not among those who favoured the establishment of this department? Of course, we were, but it was the right hon. Prime Minister himself (Mr. Trudeau) who was to be at its head, because only the Prime Minister could co-ordinate the efforts of all departments in order to reach the ultimate objective, which is to re-evaluate the underprivileged areas, and to give every department and every crown corporation their share of responsibilities in reaching this goal.

I am still endorsing the same idea. I think that everybody will recognize that there is such a close relationship, such an identity of views between the present head of this department and the right hon. Prime Minister himself that this co-ordination, this work—I should say this joint effort—in order to put to use all departments, all crown corporations will be done in an harmonious way and will ensure to the responsible minister the necessary support to reach his objectives.

I endorse the opinion of a spokesman of the New Democratic Party in that I am afraid the efforts of this very department, will prove useless unless there exists an over-all planification.

Several economists, and particularly those attached to the Economic Council of Canada, will say that planning is impossible, even at the national level, unless the United States themselves co-ordinate their efforts with ours towards such objectives, so great is our economic dependence on our neighbour.

I dare hope that the Prime Minister, during his forthcoming visit to the United States, can, jointly with the president of the United States, ensure such essential co-ordination of both countries' economies, for the benefit of our business, our trade and, by way of consequence, our social status.

The spokesman for the Ralliement Créditiste dealt with the need for such a department and suggested, at the same time, a lowering of taxes. I can hardly reconcile both philosophies. Of course—and I am convinced the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) admits it—the government squeezes money out of taxpayers in order to redistribute it and restore the balance between individuals and classes through equalization payments. Between collection and redistribution there is no miraculous inflating, because the money supply would have to be increased so that more money than is collected could be distributed.

With regard to war against poverty, and undoubtedly that department will seek to carry out part of this project, there must be an all-out effort. But the public is often led to believe that in wartime the necessary money was found and that the same measures should be taken to fight poverty.

However, the hon. member should perhaps be reminded that to wage war, specially the last one, the national debt was increased fourfold, income tax was much higher, personal exemptions were only $600 for an unmarried person and $1200 for married people, income tax was levied from the rate of 33⅓, taxes were levied from $5,000, almost up to 100 per cent certain years and up to 75 per cent in others, on the income from excess profits, and there was price control, etc.

Needless to say that if the government wanted, in a democratic system and in peace time, to take such drastic measures, it would hardly be able to remain in power to attain its objectives, however worthwhile they may be.

We have to agree that nothing will be achieved in the war against poverty without a complete co-ordination of efforts. I was pleased to hear the responsible minister say that as one of his main tasks, he would have to establish new interdepartmental structures, and ensure the integration of activities because every department must provide the best management possible. As far from regional planning as he is, he can nonetheless help considerably to alleviate the distress prevailing in some areas.

For example, the Department of Justice does not as such exert an economic influence but in establishing a penitentiary in an underdeveloped region, it could make jobs available in the construction and in the operation of the institution.

And inevitably other departments, like those of Transport, Communications, Public Works, have the possibility to act much more directly to influence the economy and assist underdeveloped areas.

Because of the personality of the minister and of the co-operation he will receive, because of the understanding of the Prime Minister himself, it will be really possible to give that vocation to each department. That desire to eliminate the serious problem of poverty seems to be shown by the representatives of the people and the individuals in general.

The minister also indicated his intention to bring about a greater co-operation with the provinces. It is really necessary that at the level of every province, there should also be a department of regional development. And here again the minister of that department will have to have, as far as possible, a great deal of authority in order to ensure the co-ordination of efforts.

As to ourselves, from the province of Quebec, we can raise questions about the nature of that co-operation. The most autonomist of Quebecers will agree that regional planning cannot be successful unless there is a co-ordination of efforts between the federal and provincial governments.

One should not try, through those agreements necessary to carry out those objectives, to remake the whole constitution. If all those who live in underdeveloped areas were asked about the necessity of co-ordination and co-operation between the federal and provincial authorities, 99 per cent would urge the governments to refrain from trying indirectly to remake the constitution at the expense of the poor people of underdeveloped areas, when such co-ordination is so greatly needed in order to finally bring about programs designed to alleviate the distress which prevails in the underdeveloped areas and to restore confidence in the future among the elite and all those who fight for the common good in those areas.

We should also secure co-operation between areas, for we are growing every day more aware of the impossibility of pulling those people out of their misery unless they contribute to their own development and share in the making of the decisions which will bring about their social and economic freedom. There are three ways of securing this participation.

We should first of all set up projects. If the areas concerned reject them we may as well give up for it is impossible to achieve true development without the participation of those concerned, in the present case, the depressed areas and the very poor.

The second answer would be to have the citizens of those areas entrust their land to experts.

[Mr. Gendron.]

There is no point in trying to carry out projects, willy nilly, in an area. The sole result would be to breed feelings of frustration and futile hopes.

There is but one answer. Have the people of the area take a strong hand in their own surroundings with the help of planners, of specialists from the higher authorities.

The planners—a new breed of experts born from this theory of land planning—will have to sit around a table with the people and discuss their future with them. Father Lebret, a pioneer in this field, said we need to tackle with a humble heart the problems of the underdeveloped areas. He added:

For we have much more to learn from them than they have from us.

Planners in some way will be the architects called upon to build according to the wishes of the depressed areas, and also—and this follows—according to professional rules, the regional dwellings which the people want to suit their taste, their needs and their future plans.

In order to do that, intensive periods of information, will have to be organized as well as authentic consultations at every level and a regional framework will have to be set up in order to make a true dialogue possible in an unqualified democracy.

I can see the problem which we will have to face at the regional level: Are we going to create bodies of technocrats called upon to establish professional development rules or are we going to revitalize our municipalities which are the government level closest to the people, the third level which necessarily has to adapt its structures to twentieth century conditions, enjoy a certain authority so as to look after the planning of their territory? At the present time, on the contrary, our cities have no authority outside their territory, and yet their influence extends way beyond that. Therefore, their action or inaction has a considerable impact on the territory although they have nothing to say when regional decisions are made.

There are also county councils which have practically no authority left and which cannot really play the part of competent agents in the planning and development of an area.

Such organizations must be modernized so that the city may be represented within these same county councils and so that the jurisdiction of the latter may be extended to cover a whole region. It is very difficult, I admit, to define a region. We could perhaps say that it is an area within the limits of which a feeling of belonging prevails, where the same social and economic problems exist.

The county councillors, being elected by the people, would, in a democratic manner, look after the interests of the whole territory, of the whole region. And experts, made available by the higher authorities, both federal and provincial, could help in carrying out the projects under study. Instead of witnessing a sterile and constant opposition between rural and urban populations, which phenomena is not exclusive to Canada, we should know a more promising future.

We know that the urban phenomenon is ever increasing, and that rural municipalities left on their own cannot develop harmoniously and help their citizens.

This brings me to the question that is often brought up, that of polarization versus dissemination which is an extremely complex phenomenon. Everyone agrees that the small municipality, devoid of the necessary instruments, of the basic infrastructure to foster industrial development, cannot aspire to industrial growth.

Still, if only certain areas are designated, it gives rise to a feeling of despair, of frustration in all the other municipalities that are not designated. There is one possible compromise: we must draw up such criteria as will foster the creation of industrial infrastructures in the municipalities that are willing to regroup and which together, thanks to this union, can have the necessary strength and stature to develop industrial parks, obtain the necessary sources of energy and communications for their development; in short allow them to modernize their structures in the face of their vocation in today's world, and to encourage through their investments industry to settle there and thereby bring back economic balance throughout the country. This is an extremely important phenomenon.

Forgive me for referring to the environment that I know best. People are often blamed for speaking of themselves too much; yet, that is the subject they know best. I shall refer to the planning carried out in the St. Lawrence valley and the Gaspé region, more often known as the BAEQ (Eastern Quebec Planning Bureau Incorporated).

The planning experts who worked in that area during four years finally recommended the regrouping of resources and farms in ten provincial counties in the lower St. Lawrence area. Out of 10,000 farms, 1,500 should be kept; thus, 8,500 farmers, married, and with an average of five children per family, would leave. That means that roughly 50,000 persons would leave that traditional field of endeavour, agriculture, and invade the labour market.

The experts also advocate that dairies, of which there are 26 at the present time, be reduced to three modern ones. As for the sawmills—there are now 110—25 should be kept; the others should be closed down by the state, that is all those that produce 4 million feet of lumber or less.

Needless to say, if that program were implemented, approximately 100,000 out of 300,000 inhabitants of that area would be freed; on the other hand the situation of the 200,000 remaining would grow worse. It might even lead to a massive impoverishment of the whole experimental region.

Then there is no real solution to this serious problem, unless along with providing more economic farming units, dairy industries, saw-mills and other concerns, it is sought to provide also more advanced industrialization. Otherwise, we might as well fill the great urban centres with all those displaced persons.

Besides, there will not be any real participation from the people, unless regional government, like the ones I mentioned a while ago, are able to take in hand the future of their area. In fact, they are not more stupid than anybody else and can make vigorous and worth while decisions. Bossuet used to say: Common sense, is to be found among the people. Those who are endowed with such common sense have given many proofs of their vigour. They have worked voluntarily year after year for the development of their area, in order to bring the authorities to recognize their problems and to look after their own future.

Planning is not an easy thing. I could perhaps venture in the poetical field and say "Everybody speaks of planning, Foolish is the one who reckons on it, Nothing is as common as the name Nothing is as rare as the thing".

However, I do not think we should be as pessimistic as that.

It is true that governments have had the habit of following events instead of foreseeing them. Thus, they went from one urgency to another and the depressed areas were left with their problems. Those citizens were the ones known as the voiceless people, or the voice that cries in the wilderness.

Today, with the establishment of this department, we are getting more confident, for we realize that someone is willing to look after those serious problems. Besides, that was the general theme of the whole campaign of the right hon. Prime Minister, and his only election promise, to try to establish a just society. But we must have it, that is a sure thing.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired unless it is the disposition of the committee that he continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gendron: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On concluding my remarks, I say that we would be happy to be given a generous thought by the higher authorities. It would be in their interest to do so, because otherwise it would be just as costly, considering the fact that the ten counties I was referring to are granted $150 million yearly in subsidies and assistance of some kind or another.

I wonder whether it would not be preferable to ask the people for their participation and their investments for the creation of employment, to restore confidence and to revalorize environments instead of getting everybody into the habit of relying on welfare benefits which only result in depriving them of their self-respect.

I think that those living in underdeveloped areas, where they were the first owners, are capable of showing a great deal of generosity, of broadmindedness, of energy and to acknowledge the need for modern solutions to new problems, the need to regroup themselves, to communicate, to try to acknowledge and understand the proposed solutions and to decide through a vote.

It is also necessary to understand that, if economic balance is to be re-established in the country, we must reunite our energies, our enterprises, our community services and our municipalities. We must create some unity and sufficient powers to counterbalance any undue centralization of which we are the first victims and which is depriving our environment of its most capable human resources.

Intellectual knowledge combined to experience through love of our country as a catalyst and this natural pride in our environment will create such a strength that an irresistible trend of progress will definitely be launched in our regions.

[Mr. Gendron.]

[English]

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is one for which we have awaited for several months, and which has been given prominence by the government. Indeed, I go back to the time of the last election when at one point during the campaign the Prime Minister asserted, and I trust he still believes this, that the question of regional development, particularly Atlantic development, was as important to Canadian unity as the constitutional linguistic issue. I certainly agree with that statement.

I note that the minister was in the Atlantic provinces at the APEC meeting last October, at which time he suggested that the regional development department was a reflection of the high priority assigned by the government to this question. We accept this statement, but we on this side have certain reservations regarding this department, and I want to go into them very briefly. I do not know if I will finish before six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, but there are matters I wish to put to the minister. I hope he will reply to them before this debate concludes.

The first of these is the matter of the Atlantic Development Board, something which was referred to by my leader and also by the hon. member for Egmont. It is being replaced by the Atlantic Development Council and we will want to know more about that. Another matter which I have pursued with the minister for some time, and with his predecessor, is the ARDA report on the nine eastern counties of Nova Scotia. I do not know where it stands now. Yesterday, the minister stated that he had received a letter from the minister of agriculture of the province of Nova Scotia. He also stated that if the minister wants the report made public he will reconsider the matter at that time. I mention this now because the ARDA report took several years to prepare under the combined resources of two governments. I am afraid, and this fear is echoed in the Chronicle-Herald of Halifax for March 11, that the report may be buried that the two governments may decide not to make it public. I hope this report, which I understand covers many facets of the economy of the nine counties which I represent, will be considered by the government. The government announced that the last FRED program, which was in respect of Prince Edward Island, would be the final one. There was one in New Brunswick. Perhaps I might quote from the editorial in the Chronicle Herald for March 11.

Whatever the outcome, it is clear that Nova Scotia should be high on the new department's priority list. The disappearance of FRED before the nine-counties scheme got off the ground, and the fact that FRED plans are operating in other provinces, make such an emphasis appropriate.

Among other things which the minister will have under him is the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act which was brought in during the time when we formed the government. It was very important in that it provided funds to build transmission lines in the Atlantic area in my constituency. Also, a large addition was made to the thermal plant at Trenton. I trust that this act will be continued. It has played an important role in helping the area. In Schedule B to Bill C-173, under Area Development Incentives Act, we find the following:

"designated area" means an area that was a designated area pursuant to the Department of Industry Act immediately prior to the repeal of that act—

I am glad to see that. The area which I represent is one of these designated areas. However, in common with the hon. member for Egmont, I wonder what will happen when the new act is implemented. We will want to know more about that. The minister now will say, "You have said a few things, what other concerns have you?" What I, and I believe members from all areas are concerned about, is that these various agencies which will be incorporated in this important department may be lost. We are afraid they may be lost in the bureaucracy in Ottawa and that the bureaucracy will run the show rather than the private citizens of the Atlantic area who could give the necessary instructions and do the necessary work in this regard.

I did hear the minister mention Professor Smith today. I think it was a good move to have him appointed the head of this council. But I am wondering who else will be appointed to the council and how much power they will have. I am afraid that the final solutions, submissions and recommendations of the Atlantic Development Council, which are so important to our area will be decided finally only by the bureaucracy—I do not say that unkindly—here in Ottawa. I hope that will not be the case.

There are a few questions I have for the minister which I believe are well phrased. I shall refer again to the Chronicle-Herald of January 25 of this year in which there are a few questions. They are as follows:

Given a reduced A.D.B., and a new department with responsibility for disadvantaged areas in all parts of the country, how sensitive will federal responses be to Atlantic needs?

Will the new department judge Atlantic projects by the same standards as those applied in depressed areas elsewhere, and thus fall into the same trap which very early captured the Area Development Agency program—the industry location scheme which, in effect, discriminated against this region, and in favour of depressed areas of Quebec and Ontario?

Will it be as willing as the A.D.B. to discriminate in favour of the Atlantic Provinces, in those many cases in which the needs are different and greater, and against, say, northern Ontario? Will a program devised for, say, the Gaspé be applied to this region, whether appropriate or not?

Will Mr. Marchand, and Tom Kent, the new department's deputy minister, have the same personal commitment to Atlantic development as had the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill and Nova Scotia's Allan MacEachen, Mr. Marchand's predecessors in charge of the A.D.B., and Dr. E. P. Weeks, executive director of the board since its formation six years ago?

Perhaps more to the point will a Quebec-based minister and the civil servants assigned to the new department, few—

I hope this will not be the case.

—of whom will have—

This is what I mentioned about bureaucracy.

—any personal connection with the Atlantic region, be as sensitive to Atlantic opinion as the citizens of the four provinces who serve as A.D.B. directors?

Without the A.D.B. as a buffer, and with the new department thrust forward to deal with the provinces in regional development matters, is there not a danger that federal-provincial tensions in other fields (tax-sharing, shared-cost programs, and the like) will make their unwelcome presence felt more strongly in the war against economic disparity? Will the new department co-operate with the provinces—

The minister says it will.

—for example, as has the A.D.B., in the preparation of an overall development plan for the region?

I think this last part sums it up well.

In sum, will the new department be able to bring itself to the view, of which the A.D.B. is an expression, that the Atlantic region is a special area with special problems which require special solutions?

If it can, it will represent a great step forward. If it cannot, it will become the largest Ottawa target in Canadian history, for the accumulated economic frustrations of the Atlantic Provinces' 2,000,000 people.

With that, Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, as the saying goes, I had a go at this bill before dinner. I have now replenished myself with a good dinner but I do not intend to go on at great length. In any event, I believe I have only about ten minutes left to speak on the bill.

Just before six o'clock I was putting some questions to the minister. One thing discussed by earlier speakers this afternoon as the matter of estimates for this new department. In the days of the A.D.B., ARDA and AIDA, the normal estimates included amounts which were spent under these programs. There were amounts included in the estimates of the Department of Transport, the Department of Public Works and so on, for projects necessary in the Atlantic area, particularly public works such as wharves and breakwaters.

What I am wondering is whether under the new set up, when this bill is passed as it will be in due course, amounts will still be included in the estimates of the Department of Public Works for wharves, breakwaters and so on, and in the estimates of other departments, as well as additional estimates for this new department? In other words, I hope that all the amounts of money proposed for the Atlantic area will not be included in one basket in the estimates for this new department. I doubt if this will be the case, but it is something that occurred to me when reading the terms of the bill.

Another matter I wish to mention is the power given to the minister under clause 24 which reads:

> The Governor in Council may, by order, designate as a special area, for the period set out in the order, any area in Canada that is determined to require, by reason of the exceptional inadequacy of opportunities for productive employment of the people of that area or of the region of which that area is a part, special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment.

Those powers are very wide. They have been likened to the powers given to a former Liberal cabinet minister now long gone, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe. In this connection I would like to read from an article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. I do not have the date of the issue but it was not long ago. It is headed, "Powerful Echo of the Liberals' Past." Perhaps the minister has seen it, but if not he may be interested in it. It reads in part:

> A study of the legislation now before parliament to create a new department of regional economic expansion stirs memories of the powerful wartime and post-war economic reign of C. D. Howe, who practically wrote his own ticket in government and became known as "minister of everything."
> The former French Canadian labour union boss, Jean Marchand, who will head the department, perhaps is not given, under the bill, as broad a field for using a free industrial development rein as Mr. Howe had. But he isn't far behind. Certainly, there has been no ordinary minister in the interim who has been assigned a similar measure of sweeping authority in the economic arena.

Then the article refers to the Deputy Minister, Mr. Kent. I hope that the minister will use these powers properly. If I may put it kindly, perhaps we now have a "Pocket Rocket" C. D. Howe in this new Liberal cabinet. I have a little concern with this clause in the bill, and I repeat that I hope the minister will use these powers properly.

Earlier this afternoon the suggestion was made that with these powers a certain part of the country might be favoured over another part. However, I think the minister is a reasonable man. I have seen and heard him since he came into parliament, and I would be willing to put my money on him until something else is proven. As I say, we will keep in mind that he is a "Pocket Rocket" C. D. Howe, and we hope that he will not say, for instance, "what's a million?"

Mr. Breau: What's the picture the hon. member has in his hand?

Mr. MacEwan: It is a picture of Mr. Trudeau which appeared in the Atlantic Advocate, and I shall have something to say about it later. It was the issue of March, 1969. I told the hon. member about it when we were in the elevator coming over from suburbia in the West Block, and he thought it was great. I do not quite admit that.

Mr. Mongrain: You should send us copies of that.

Mr. MacEwan: You should get your own. It comes free to all Tory members anyway.

Now, I wish to deal with a matter concerning my constituency. It is something I took up with the minister by way of letter. It is the matter of the MacBean mine in my constituency, which is known to the Leader of the Opposition and is now known to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When the Devco Corporation was established, this mine was not included under the provisions of that legislation, although we on this side of the chamber pushed for that. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, and my friend to my right, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, pressed to get this mine included in the Devco legislation. This was not done, but as a result of submissions made the mine is now being managed by Devco.

I wrote to the minister on this matter as a result of representations I received from Local 8672 of the United Mine Workers of America, with regard to the pensions payable to the MacBean colliery miners at age 65. I hope that my Cape Breton friends will not be angry with me if I point out that these pensions are only one half of those being paid to the Cape Breton miners under the Devco legislation.

The minister wrote back and said I should get in touch with the Devco officials in Sydney, which I did. It was pointed out to me that the agreement to manage the MacBean mine is a four party agreement involving the federal government, the provincial government of Nova Scotia, the Pictou County Research and Development Commission and Devco itself. I suggested that the local of the mine workers press the Nova Scotia government and the local organization known as Picord, and now I urge the minister to have the Devco officials look into this matter again.

The amount paid to the Cape Breton miners is $2,400 for a single man and $3,000 for a married man, whereas under the MacBean agreement the amount is $1,200 for a single man, and $1,500 for a married man. I hope that under this legislation the minister will be responsible for instituting proceedings to get a new agreement made between these four parties that will give a more realistic amount in pensions to these miners who justly deserve it.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, in order to give other hon. members a chance to speak on this very important matter, I will conclude by referring to the matter on which I was prompted by the hon. member for Gloucester. As I said, this article appeared in the Atlantic Advocate. It is headed, "The Expansion of the Atlantic Economy," and it is by the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEwan: I am glad you are applauding; he is your boss, not mine. I do not say that in a derogatory way. The subheading to the article reads:

> Prime Minister Trudeau's article is exclusive to the Atlantic Advocate. In it he explains the philosophy allied to the new department of Regional Economic Expansion, and describes the working of the Marchand Plan which will give effect to the new federal policy.

During the last election campaign the Prime Minister described what he then called a Marshall plan for the Atlantic area. Now, it is the Marchand plan. Whatever the name, it is important. We hope the Minister will get on with his work on this plan. He has a great responsibility to the Atlantic area, and we will look to him to carry out the undertakings of the Prime Minister as quickly as possible. We realize that everything cannot be done overnight. As I say, the minister will have great responsibility. We will give him a chance to carry out this responsibility, but from this side of the house we will be watching him very closely.

Mr. Whiting: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments on this part of Bill C-173 which pertains to the establishment of a Department of Regional Economic Expansion. We cannot expect to have true national unity while there are regions within the country with wage levels as much as 30 per cent below the national average, and an unemployment figure which at times doubles that of the more prosperous parts of this great country.

I think the government is to be commended for its efforts to correct these grievous situations by establishing this new department. I further believe the minister who has been chosen for the portfolio is a man well qualified for the job. We trust that his ability and that of those associated with him, together with the support provided by the government, will make this department self-liquidating; in other words, we hope its need will diminish with its achievements. There have been many previous attempts by governments to shore up the economy in various areas. This is especially true so far as the maritimes are concerned. Over the years millions of dollars have been appropriated for this purpose under various government plans, projects, and programs. These efforts were all well-meaning, but unfortunately few have been effective in achieving any worth-while results.

Not only does unemployment continue at a high rate in the maritimes, but there is an exodus of people from that region of almost 20,000 per year. This exodus not only reflects the poor conditions existing in the maritimes but actually aggravates it by decreasing the markets for the products of the industries presently located in the area and for those who would seek a livelihood through agriculture. Therefore, the purpose of this department becomes more pressing and the need becomes greater each year.

However, it should in no way be regarded as a welfare department. As a matter of fact its purpose should be to eliminate welfare by being exceptionally careful in the choice of areas and industries which have the potential to respond to economic stimulus. The proper choice as to where they will extend help and co-operation should be a basic concept of this department's operation.

In the past, I think the former department's effectiveness was handicapped to some extent by not being able to assist growth centres within disadvantaged regions. The Halifax-Dartmouth area, for example, was considered a growth area and therefore did not qualify for the special federal programs but the region surrounding these cities did because it was classified as a designated area.

This, in my opinion, was not sound economic planning as it encouraged industries to locate in an area which may not have the required facilities to help insure their success. It is, therefore, a welcome change to note in this legislation that growth centres within disadvantaged regions will now be able to take advantage of these special programs.

One of the problems facing this department is that of co-ordinating the work of the various groups and bodies which are already involved. Plans now in existence such as ARDA, ADA, FRED, and so on will all come under the control of the new department. It will take some considerable diplomacy to weld them together so that they all have a clear idea of the basic concept of what is to be achieved, and why money is being expended in this particular effort. This department will be dealing with many people, including various departments of the federal government, corresponding departments of the provincial governments, and through the provinces with municipalities whose interests are involved. It will be dealing also with the private sector because we hope the private sector will co-operate fully in this program.

In the formation of plans, one of the major needs will be to encourage industries and production programs which will stimulate exports to foreign countries and to other parts of Canada. This is especially true of the maritimes because it is through exports that the supply of money in any community is increased, broadening the opportunity for employment and increasing the standard of living.

In my opinion it should not be a case of shoring up industries in submarginal areas, but rather of giving assistance to industries which have a chance to succeed through the co-operation of this department. The principle here is to bring people to the industries. This would involve the government moving people from one community to another and retraining them. This, I feel, would be money well spent because we are dealing with human resources, and human resources are the life blood of the country itself.

I was pleased to see that this was the approach used to develop the agreement recently reached between the province of Prince Edward Island and the federal government. This is a program based on self-help which is the proper basis on which to operate any such plan. The plan has established goals which involve an increase in the value of the economy of the province. It will take advantage of the present assets of the province to develop its agriculture, tourism, fishing and those industries which have a chance to succeed with proper encouragement and in a proper environment.

I am very pleased to be a member of the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion even though my own constituency of Halton will not be directly involved. But even in a prosperous constituency like Halton we, too, have our pockets of poverty, and these are of grave concern to me. Such pockets of poverty as exist in the riding of Halton unfortunately exist throughout the whole country, and this type of poverty should also be a concern of the government. It has its worst effect in housing, and I hope the new legislation on housing soon to be announced will help to alleviate this condition in my riding and throughout Canada.

However, according to D.B.S. figures, Halton is one of the more affluent areas in the country. I know the people of Halton will endorse any effort to upgrade the economic standards of those persons living in parts of Canada which are in need of assistance. We must recognize, however, that they will be sharing in the costs and together with the rest of Canada will be vitally interested in the success of any program or agreement which is put into effect.

In this respect, in my opinion, it would be most valuable to have a detailed system of achievement evaluation. In other words, if a project shows signs of success, let us encourage and push it. If it does not show signs of reasonable progress, let us scrap it and not waste money flogging a dead horse. This latter alternative may take some courage to carry through in certain instances, but nevertheless hard facts must be faced in life and failure is one of them. If we fail in an area, let us not continue to pour in more money and add to our failure.

In conclusion, there is one other thing that we must bear in mind, and that is simply that we cannot expect miracles because our objectives will not be achieved overnight. Some of the proposed programs may take years to bear fruit, and in many cases it may take considerable time to formulate these plans. It will also take patience and understanding, and it will require a large measure of tact and diplomacy.

Mr. Lundrigan: It gives me great pleasure to be able to say a few words on Bill C-173. I have been waiting now for approximately nine months for this portion of the bill on the reorganization of the government to be brought before the house to have a chance to make some observations on it.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the minister's statement this afternoon, as I did to the statements which he made on his election to office for I feel that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has one of the most demanding and important portfolios in the present administration. When I speak of the importance of his task to the whole of Canada, I admit to a certain feeling of guilt in having thought about regional disparity as a problem peculiar to the Atlantic regions. However, having heard a number of people who have participated in the debate, I realize more fully now that this problem is not one which affects only Atlantic Canada, although perhaps that is where the greatest incidence of disparity is to be found. I am certainly aware of the fact that in the whole of northern Canada, in British Columbia, in parts of Ontario, in most of Quebec and in all of the Atlantic region there are areas of slow economic growth which must be rectified by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

I consider this task to be a major challenge for the minister for another reason. The present administration and the new Prime Minister made two commitments to Canada, both of which I hope will be fulfilled. I will certainly not criticize the Prime Minister if he can achieve the two goals which he set for his administration. The first one was to create a just society, about which we have heard so much, and the second was the elimination of regional disparities in Canada. So, I consider the minister to have right in his mitt the responsibility for the execution of the greatest plan that has been enunciated by the Prime Minister, that is the elimination in large measure of regional disparities and economic inequalities which exist in Canada. This is why I feel that the minister bears the major responsibility in the cabinet. I think also that the reputation of the minister and the whole government will rest largely on the success of the government in contending with regional disparities.

I have been keenly interested in observing the government's efforts in restructuring itself as it is assuming its responsibilities in office. I remember that the Prime Minister, on introducing the bill, tried to anticipate the remarks of the members of the opposition as well as the remarks that I am making now. He referred to a Roman in ancient times, and others who have made some remarks about people who spend their time restructuring. It reminds me of the Atlantic jellyfish which is always changing shape and never takes any fixed form or assumes any definite shape. I think this is a great danger with new governments.

If I had become the prime minister of Canada on June 25 of the past year, these are some of the things I would have done. The first would be to appoint half a dozen task forces and all kinds of study groups. This would give me time to learn my role if I did not know it. One of the reasons I was not elected prime minister was that I do not know how to run a country as yet. I would have become involved in a great debate on linguistics and on the cultural and multicultural problems of Canada. I would have made that a major issue in our parliament. I would have introduced legislation on abortion and homosexuality, and I would have spoken about diplomatic recognition of the Vatican. If I did not know what to do, these are the things I would have done.

What I am really saying is that I welcome this legislation because I think it is time we got rid of a government by no comment, a government by escape hatches and a government by red herring. This is the way a government can act while it spends time learning what to do. The government has before it four years, at least this is the mandate which was given the present administration by the people of Canada. That is why it is imperative that it get on with the business of restructuring itself to enable it to deal effectively with the serious problems facing Canada. Nine months has gone by since June 25, and I think it is time we got this department off the ground because it has a mammoth task before it.

• (8:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: You forgot about Red China.

Mr. Lundrigan: I forgot about Red China, Mr. Chairman. I was glad to hear the minister say that an amendment is to be made to 25 (1) because I think there is a great need for consultation with the provinces on all matters. I do not think any of us like the idea of unilateral decisions being taken in matters which affect more than one party.

I wish to refer now to what I call the science of technocracy. I do not think this is a new phrase. I shall not deny that one of the most important things a government has to do is to decide how to use its economic resources to the best advantage. But I do quarrel with any government which uses economic criteria alone when making decisions. Other factors have to be considered—humanistic factors. When we talk about a more humane approach to the seal fishery we ought always to remember there is a need for greater humanity in the treatment of people.

Often, it seems, Members of Parliament of all parties and members of the great civil service of Canada can grow insensitive to the needs of people. This is something which bothers me. Frequently the people who feed computers and reach decisions on the basis of statistics alone are not those who will favourably affect the development of our community and make Canada a just society. I am afraid there are people in the minister's department who are statisticians first, foremost and always, people who are economists first, foremost and always, people who feed computers and base their decisions on inhuman processes without being aware of the sensitivity of people and of the importance of keeping humanistic considerations in mind.

I listened with great attention to the minister's statement on the Atlantic region last November. I listened to what he has had to say in the house and in the committee. I heard the hon. member on my immediate right talk about the mobility of people, the resettlement program and the growth centre concept. These are all good things. Nobody quarrels with the idea of resettlement or growth centres provided the concept is broad enough to encompass some of the thoughts of my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition.

However, if the government expects to reduce regional disparity effectively using Montreal as a model we can forget about Atlantic Canada because it is not possible to apply to Atlantic Canada the concept in vogue in Montreal. Atlantic Canada and northern Canada generally are different regions. Mobilization of people for the sake of doing so will not solve the problem. I listened to the Leader of the Opposition talking about the growth centre concept. I should like to see the government base its decisions about growth centres on the resources which are to be developed rather than on the mobilization of people and their transfer to areas which, it is hoped, will become productive. I think the Minister of Fisheries and the minister responsible for economic expansion will agree that tragedies have resulted from taking people from semi-productive areas to non-productive areas. Those affected lost their identity, their heritage and their whole way of life because they anticipated they would get a few cheaper services.

Any real attempt to remove these disparities will necessitate a great variety of different approaches. No single approach, even if it is a commendable one, such as that involving growth centres, will be successful.

The problem of getting co-operation from the other departments of government will be the major task facing the minister. This has been alluded to by almost every member who has spoken in the debate today. During the past nine months the people of Canada have been in double jeopardy. The government has taken nine months to get this department fit for sailing. Within 12 months it is hoped it will be activated and on the road. I have mentioned this already. Other government departments have gone on the road with their kinds of behaviour. I see the Minister of Finance has just walked into the house. Earlier this year he admitted that the government program of retrenchment and reductions had resulted in increased unemployment in the Atlantic region. I have had occasion to deal with the Minister of Transport. He is so bound up with the problems of Montreal airport, Toronto airport and Vancouver airport that he has quite forgotten about the other little airports in Canada. This is no way to deal with regional disparity.

Since the house opened, the Minister of Public Works has gone on holiday. We have received practically nothing in the whole of the Atlantic region since the session opened in September. There is practically nothing in the estimates. How can the minister charged with the mammoth task of securing regional economic expansion do his job if his colleague goes on holiday? There has been more action in Hull, Ottawa and Toronto than ever before, yet the Atlantic region gets nothing. This Department of Public Works will not do a darned thing. I do not know what it is waiting for. It has made great efforts to cut back. The minister tells us he will neither build up nor cut back because his department has not yet taken shape. Mr. Chairman, I could talk about public works. I could say a great deal about the winter works program. But I shall not bore hon. members with details of what they already know.

As I say, we have been in double jeopardy. One department is just getting on the road; we have agreed to wait until the minister gets set. Meanwhile, other departments have had the knife out ever since September, cutting expenditures right, left and centre. The Minister of Finance, in the white paper presented prior to his bombshell of last fall, admitted that these cuts have resulted in an increase in unemployment in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Benson: Read it.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister responsible for this new department will need tremendous co-operation from every other government department. If he does no more than make other departments sensitive to the need for expansion in areas other than the major metropolitan complexes he will have done his job. The funds available to him—$200 million, and I have called it peanuts—are not important. He alone will not be able to make any impact on regional economic expansion, and he is not expected to. Every government department must give priority to the need for economic expansion in various regions of Canada. The Prime Minister should say to every government department: we demand your co-operation; we want you to give priority to regional development. Every department of government must tackle this task if the commitment given to those parts of Canada where disparity exists is to be carried out.

I could tell a little story, Mr. Chairman. I shall not tell it in detail because to do so might embarrass some members of the civil service who might be sitting in the gallery. I know an area where a $2 million public wharf structure had just been completed by the Department of Public Works. The Department of Transport was giving a small subsidy to a shipping service so that the service could be carried on. The department removed this subsidy and as a result the service was discontinued. But, Mr. Chairman, the only reason for spending this $2 million was to provide shipping facilities in connection with the service. I telephoned the department about this situation and they replied. Oh, that does not concern us, that is a problem for the Department of Public Works. I said: Listen. It is my money you are talking about. It is my problem. And it ought to be your problem as well. And it all has to do with this issue of regional expansion, so it ought to be the minister's problem as well.

What I am trying to say is this. Unless the minister, with a genuine desire to benefit Atlantic Canada, gets co-operation from his colleagues then he might just as well pack up and go home right now. I will conclude in a moment, Mr. Chairman, but I want to say that my feeling is that this government is not thinking big enough in its program of regional economic expansion. We are hearing a lot of talk about elimination of regional disparities, and I fully realize we are setting up a new government department to correct these disparities. However, I do not believe that the front bench opposite, or for that matter the benches behind it, are as sincere about regional economic expansion as one would like them to be. However, perhaps the minister can persuade me otherwise.

I contend we are not thinking big enough. Let me explain: Although, there will be some $200 million in the kitty for the purpose of eliminating regional disparities in Canada, I suggest we must give some thought to major resource development. For example, one province on the east coast has spent perhaps $200 million to develop Churchill Falls, a great resource in northern Canada. The benefits of this resource will be shared by Quebec and Newfoundland. This is one area of great economic expansion.

We also have tremendous oil resources in northern Canada as well as great mineral resources. The government will have to attack regional disparities by developing our resources on a large scale. We do not want just two or three metropolis in Canada; what we want are several tremendous areas of development. Here I am thinking 20 years ahead. Several of my colleagues who are not here tonight have some great thoughts on this subject.

Transportation is also important. If you are going to develop resources on a massive scale, transportation facilities are essential. There are two reasons for this: firstly, you must get your products to the market; secondly, you must provide avenues for imports from outside markets in order to reduce the high cost of living prevalent today. So, transportation facilities are a major factor.

We must also think in terms of improving our wage structure. This might sound unbelievable, but Atlantic Canada has the lowest wage structure in Canada. In order to make an impact in the field of regional economic expansion you must put money in the pockets of the people. I am sorry the Minister of Transport is not here to listen to my remarks, but I have referred to the wage structure in his own department for those personnel employed to clear snow from airports. There is a differential of $1 per hour between personnel employed in various parts of Atlantic Canada and people doing the same work in Vancouver and Montreal. I say that before we can further regional economic expansion the minister must put money into the pockets of the people.

I am sure that the Minister of Finance is very familiar with all the theories about money and about the multiplier effect of the dollar. People in Atlantic Canada are getting wages that are 30 per cent lower than other places in Canada, even people in the employ of the government. This is the kind of thing that will have to be dealt with. There is also the matter of growth centres to which the Leader of the Opposition referred when he was talking on this bill about a month ago. Twenty years ago governments were advised that they had better start thinking about the growth centre concept. Surely, today we are far enough advanced to use the abilities of our economists and to take advantage of the computers to which the Minister of Finance referred in order to make a significant impact in the area of regional economic expansion.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I just finish my remarks, Mr. Chairman?

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: I thank the members of the committee and I will not abuse the privilege that has been given to me. I conclude by saying that I think the minister will agree with me that unless there is co-operation from all departments of government and the Prime Minister literally issues an ultimatum to every cabinet minister to give regional economic expansion top priority, then we will do little better than a patchwork job.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, if brilliant oratory displays similar to the waters at Niagara falls could settle the matter, I think that the honourable member who spoke before me would have settled the matter of regional economic expansion.

Generally speaking, I do not have much objection to what he just asserted in this house except that he gives me the impression of preaching to the converted and of suggesting to the minister measures which seem already included in the bill which was introduced by the minister.

Therefore, let us say that we agree and that we have a great deal of sympathy for the member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) but we, from the province of Quebec, feel that in Canada all the provinces are responsible for one another.

If the Maritimes enjoy prosperity, the province of Quebec will benefit from it and we shall be very happy if the wishes of our friends come true. We can assure him if our information is correct—which is not perhaps printed in black and white in the bill that the Maritimes and especially Newfoundland, will be the territories particularly selected under this legislation. Therefore, for once, we are happy.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The honourable member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I have noticed in the past that my colleague from Trois-Rivières would rise on a point of order when someone would refer to "Three Rivers" instead of "Trois-Rivières" and now I catch him confusing the Maritimes with the Atlantic provinces. There is a difference Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Corbin: The Maritime provinces consist of the provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia whereas when we talk about the Atlantic provinces we also include the new province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful indeed to my colleague for providing me with this information for, contrary to some of my friends in the opposition, I for one like to learn about things. So I thank him and tell him that I shall remember the lesson for a long time.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, and in the opinion of many, the bill under consideration comes a little late maybe since of course the parliamentary procedure must be followed. The hon. member who spoke just before me, said it took us nine months. Well, it takes nine months to give birth to a healthy child and you cannot expect it to be a premature baby. However, this is a good bill. It can be improved upon whenever new circumstances warrant it and new depressed areas appear.

The official opposition complained that the minister was given too much power and I heard others from that side say that the minister had probably not enough power to face all the needs of the provinces or of those underdeveloped areas of Canada.

There were even some to say that the minister was a "pocket C. D. Howe". On the contrary, I believe the minister needs the utmost power to find the answers to what the opposition has been complaining about for nine months, namely that there is still too much poverty in Canada and too much unemployment, that the economy in Canada is at a standstill. Of course this is not something special to Canada. Everybody knows that it is a plague that affects all of mankind.

We were glad to read in the newspapers, yesterday or the day before, that Canada is the third most successful country in the world, after Western Germany and Holland, in its fight against inflation.

Mr. Chairman, the minister must have extensive enough powers to be able to synchronize the efforts of all the departments, so that we do not run into red tape when the time comes to pass fundamental measures. That red tape requires that in addition to the minister and the deputy minister, civil servants, technocrats, task forces, members, agencies representing the regional promotion organizations, all must intervene, in addition to which the consent of the provinces must be obtained. In fact, there is no end to it. The minister must therefore be granted powers.

I have absolutely no objection to his resembling the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe who was one of the most active advocates of economic promotion we have known in a century. I am sure history will judge him differently from the way the opposition did at the time when he fought political battles here. One can pass judgment by looking at the results of his work here, because he was a realist. I only hope that the new minister of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will produce as much as the Right Hon. C. D. Howe.

Mr. Chairman, it is high time for us to be realists, to keep both feet on the ground. It is high time to stop discussing such nebulous matters as the constitution for instance.

I am sure that the Newfoundland fishermen who are now going through a critical period are far less interested in the constitution than they are in knowing what they will get next week for their take.

I am sure also that the unemployed of Ste-Rose-du-Dégelé or St-Etienne-des-Grès are far less interested in knowing whether the constitution will eventually be revised than in getting a job as soon as possible that they might earn a living.

That is why I am of those who rejoice in the introduction of this bill which will allow a minister to synchronize the efforts of all his colleagues and deal with regional economic disparities in this country to fight poverty so that we might all live in honest affluence.

Mr. Chairman, I say again it is time to stop dreaming and waiting for Santa Claus to bring something every year.

I heard fantastic things in this house, in the last few weeks. For instance, some want everyone to live well on free government allowances of a $100 a month, and at the same time, they say that we should not create too many industries which would ruin other industries. All the same, we must be realistic if we want Canadians to earn a living. Indeed, we must give them an opportunity to support themselves and allow financiers to make profits they will re-invest in the economy thus creating employment for workers who otherwise would depend on the state and would increase the financial burdens of government.

Mr. Chairman, some fundamental things must be pointed out when speaking about economic development particularly in less favored sectors. So, I would like to make some remarks to the minister.

We would be in a much better position, Mr. Chairman, to promote a strong and lasting economic expansion if, instead of exporting our natural resources to the United States at ridiculous prices, we could have them processed here, by our people and sell the products to other countries, so that Canadians could really benefit from the resources nature has given them.

I am one of those who are shocked to see in front of the city of Trois-Rivières that I represent, large boats so heavily loaded that each year, the St. Lawrence must be dredged to let them bring, as far as the Great Lakes, to American harbors, our iron ore that the United States will refine, make into tools or machines that they will sell back to us at high prices, with the result that the Americans make profits with the natural resources that we sold them, often for very little.

I do not want to blame the government for this situation, because I know it has been going on for many years. I know who is most responsible and I wonder if the federal government could not, after having concluded an agreement with the provinces, legislate so that our natural resources would be processed here, in the best interests of all Canadians.

I shall quote as an example, someone who is no more, but who earned himself much fame in Canadian politics, the Hon. Alexandre Taschereau. He said once to American capitalists: If you wish to develop our forest resources, you should build mills and manufacture paper here. As far as my area is concerned, this has always ensured our prosperity. I feel that under a well-planned economic development program, we should try to take steps in order to compel foreigners to process our natural resources here.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to make another suggestion which I think is constructive and realistic. It would be that foreign companies, either British, French or American, which come here to get into business and make profits—I am thinking especially of insurance and finance companies whose headquarters are in Canada—should be compelled, under the law, to invest a considerable proportion of their profits in Canadian industry, so that Canadians may take advantage of that money which was made here, and to prevent it from being directly or indirectly transferred abroad.

I was pleased to note in the bill under consideration, that there would be some cooperation among provinces, municipalities and all organizations concerned.

I should like to plead particularly in favour of municipalities which, in most cases, are treated like poor relatives, when negotiations are under way between the federal and provincial governments.

I would like to plead in favour of regional organizations set up by municipalities which to do so need the assistance of the federal and provincial governments.

Planning bodies, which my colleagues from Timiscouata (Mr. Gendron) referred to a while ago, and economic promotion organizations are used at times to diagnose the problems which business concerns may run into and to find some solutions.

Should the federal government be willing, in conjunction with provincial governments, to help finance such organizations whose members work benevolently and which urgently need experts, the problem of regional disparities could be solved. I should like to quote the case of La Mauricie which brings together some 85 municipalities forming a geographical entity different from the neighbouring regions. Now, the needs of these municipalities are quite alike. They have wanted for many years to set up a dynamic organization but they are unable to do so by their own means.

I recently learned through newspapers that the Quebec government was expecting a burst of economic expansion which will permit it to invest some $40 million. This is a rather important amount of money for the province. As for the department it intends to invest about $30 million.

I hope that the two governments in question will help these regional organizations establish specialized offices. These will not only serve to create new enterprises but will permit the old ones to evade difficulties, to find new markets, to develop their operations and, in case of need, to encourage people from the region to invest in the industry and contribute to the economy's revival.

Mr. Chairman, there is another factor upon which I feel I have to dwell, at the risk of being considered a heretic or a babbler.

In fact, I am convinced that governments should legislate on the right to strike which has become a curse and which indirectly undoes governments' efforts to ensure the prosperity of the country.

These days, the right to strike is shamefully misused and most union members have had enough of those recurrent strikes which in the end only increase inflation, add to the worker's burden and make matters worse.

For example, these last few days it was announced that in February alone, 137,070 work-days were lost in the country, for a loss of $2,193,120.

While we are trying to stimulate the economy, there are union leaders without any sense of responsibility who urge workers to strike, get them in debt, and moreover contribute to ruin some businesses.

I could name six businesses that had to close their doors and two or three others that will have to do the same soon because of unfair strikes.

That is reminiscent of the Middle Ages, and governments should legislate in order to correct that situation.

I could quote testimony of union leaders, who are not just anybody, and who state vigorously that it is time that governments give the workers the machinery needed to settle their disputes without having every time to resort to strike action, to run the risk of jeopardizing the economy of the country and to solve their problems at the expense of the community.

Such little time as I have left does not allow me to elaborate on the legislative priorities that should be established. In any case, others have studied this matter more thoroughly than I have. Legislation should be passed to reduce the number of strikes. Strikes contribute to economic ruin and most union members are fed up with them. After all, they only help to increase the prestige of some labour leaders.

I apologize if my remarks should reflect on the minister, who was active in labour movements in the past, but I know that the special grace pertaining to his function that inspires him today will make him understand things that the grace provided him in his former activity would not allow him to understand then. My charge is constructive, however.

Mr. Chairman, I also wish to speak on another problem. The minister might tell me whether this legislation could solve it.

I know of a French Canadian industry that manufactures snowmobiles, or skidoos, that settled in a rural area represented by a member of the Ralliement Créditiste, and which employs some 300 workers. That industry has been in operation for about four years. It sells 75 per cent of its production to the United States and, being short of capital funds—since it was established with capital invested by farmers and workers—it has been receiving attractive offers from American financiers. It might soon be sold to some American people.

Therefore, I urge the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) to try and do something and I hope that the act provides some arrangements in favour of such profitable enterprises to keep them in Canadian hands and prevent them from falling into foreign hands, American or others. We should not forget that they have been built at the cost of great sacrifices.

Mr. Chairman, mention was made a while ago of industries that can contribute to regional economic expansion. Among them we find tourism. However, there is always one point that causes difficulties, at least in my province. I mean the constitutional question. Some people are haunted by the constitutional question. Their disease is incurable—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Does the committee agree that the hon. member should continue his interesting remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am almost overwhelmed by the fact that my friends from the Ralliement Créditiste should be so unanimous in wanting me to continue my speech.

I shall be very brief because I like to be in order. I simply want to say that I hope this constitutional red tape will be done away with and that people will be given the opportunity to set up a tourist industry by creating attraction centres, by developing and promoting them.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you as well as my colleagues for their kindness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, one minister and one department to bring together all the federal economic assistance programs for a concerted attack on regional disparity may be all right in theory, but if the motivation of the minister and the department is wrong it could result in making a bad situation worse. There will be little hope for success if this newly created instrument is used in the manner that the minister's recent statement indicated it will be used, or if it is employed according to the prevailing philosophy and methods of the government.

Once more, as demonstrated time and time again, we see the trend to centralization and bigness. This government worships at the shrine of bigness—big government, big business, big bureaucracy and big concentrations of votes such as we find in the metropolitan areas from coast to coast. In its thinking, its planning, in its legislation and in its actions, we have been shown the obsession of this government with figures and theory to the exclusion of the human factor.

In this legislation, as in most of the other measures introduced by the present administration, there appears to be a total absence of human feeling. Individual Canadians rank no higher than so many digits in an economic statistical table. I believe it is time that we, as a nation, stopped catering to bigness. I believe it is time to declare a moratorium on bigness. Let us give some attention and concern to the small things and to the little people of this country. Every day, and more and more, we see evidence of the fact that the individual is rapidly losing his identity and his place in society, his rights. Perhaps this is why we live in a society of dissent, of disorder, of destruction.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, this legislation and this portfolio carry with them the absence of humanity, unless we can convince the minister to redirect the attention of the government to the individual and the small masses, those unfortunates who are unable to present their cases, the small farmers, the Indians, the Metis, the Eskimos and the low income family men. We seem to be dominated by computers, figures, percentages, dollars and per capita formulae.

I hope to see some direction in relieving the rurally depressed areas of Canada. What about the fisherman, the farmer, or the small business firms, all of whom are in a desperate position because of lack of markets for fish and grain. The result is they have low incomes while inflation and high living costs continue. If some direction is not given to provide alternative means for these people to secure a living our situation in the cities will only become worse. I think it is common sense to assume that unemployment is not solved in the rural areas by directing it to the cities.

The minister has already mentioned specific programs for a number of eastern cities. If all the effort of this department is to be placed on the centres of large population then I say, God help Canada's rural areas and her slow growth centres of low population which represent 90 per cent of this country's land area. What about these thousands of people who are in between? I would hope they would not be written off like the wheat producers of western Canada.

Are all Canadians who do not wish to live in large urban areas now to be labelled "expendable"? It is high time we took a long, close look at this bigness that seems to be the governing factor in this government's thinking. Bigness in so far as cities in this country are concerned breeds most of the major problems which face us as a nation. It not only breeds but multiplies them. Where is housing most inadequate and the most pressing problem? It is in the large cities. Where is pollution the worst? In and adjacent to the big cities. Where is transportation the most serious problem? In and around the big cities. Where is crime at its worst? In the large cities. Where is the cost of living the highest and the quality of life lowest? In the large metropolitan centres. This is inexcusable in a country like Canada where space is one of our outstanding national assets and features. There may be some excuse for urban problems in small European countries; there can be none in Canada. Yet, the government apparently plans to devote the bulk of its attention and public funds to these very same monstrosities.

I believe the whole direction and emphasis in respect of the work of this new department is wrong and should be corrected in terms of its directive. I believe we should be concentrating on building and developing the rural areas and small population centres. We should be attempting to give all Canadians a fair share of national funds and national effort rather than allowing the already big cities to grow fatter and hog the lion's share of our tax dollars and government effort. In my view, this is the only way we can hope to improve the essential quality of Canadian life. This is the only way we can answer some of our most pressing problems. It is the only way we can provide equal opportunity for all Canadians from sea to sea, as the minister pointed out in his opening remarks.

I suggest that the aid programs and all the skilled assistance should be devoted to encouraging small and middle businesses to establish and prosper in areas where that sort of industrial and commercial endeavour is needed. Let us stop feeding the large corporations and business institutions at the public trough. It is the towns and small cities of Canada which need this aid. They will most richly repay any effort put forward in respect of this type of development.

There is also a national problem of tremendous potential and great urgency facing us today which might be alleviated by application of regional economic development programs. I am speaking now of the problem of bringing our Indian, Métis and Eskimo peoples fully into the social and economic life of this nation. In the Globe and Mail of March 6 there was a story from Regina to the effect that the government of Saskatchewan is setting up a new department of government to deal with this very problem. During the debate it was described by Premier Thatcher as a time bomb with the fuse getting ever shorter, a problem that threatens to become a major social disaster.

The story noted that one of the main aspects of the problem is to find permanent employment for Indian people. Some are reluctant to leave home to obtain work elsewhere, while others take work only to leave it shortly afterward because housing away from their own areas is difficult to procure. In my riding there are a number of Indian Canadians. I speak about the Saddle Lake band. Just over a year ago the Department of Forestry and Rural Development, working in conjunction with the provincial government and the Saddle Lake band council, undertook to clear and develop 15,000 acres of prime, arable land for the production of crops. To date 3,000 acres are ready for use with an additional 5,000 targeted for next spring. The band members organized as a society under the Alberta Societies Act and assumed the responsibility of implementing this most ambitious project aimed at involving a majority of band members. This was the first time a vast field of local employment was made available to the citizens of this area.

The achievement of and the results from this project were beyond expectation. Besides providing employment for 125 citizens during the clearing operations, it will also provide permanent seasonal employment for 100 citizens who will actually be engaged in the farming operations. This project it demonstrated that these people are willing to accept responsibility and challenge. They are willing to provide for themselves and wish to become self-sustaining citizens. It demonstrated as well that they appreciate receiving a weekly cheque which they have earned. However, this must be done in a manner in which residence can be maintained on the reserve.

What are some of the results of this undertaking? The welfare list diminished to practically nothing when the clearing operation was in progress during the summer months. A saving of 75 per cent in welfare payments was estimated to have been made during the summer. Opportunity was made available for the development of new skills among the residents. Agricultural short courses have followed and there are now 10 young men attending the Vermilion School of Agriculture.

A prefab housing project has been commenced which constructs houses on the reserve. This project is staffed by Indians and the houses are for families on the reserve. The grain produced from the land this year has already been contracted to registered seed houses to be used as seed grain. Conceivably, this plan can continue. A livestock enterprise is to follow soon. Discussions are taking place regarding horticulture and poultry operations. Further discussions are taking place regarding the possibility of the shores of Saddle Lake becoming a tourist attraction.

A great step forward has been taken in an attempt to solve the social economic problems on the reserve. All participants are to be commended, particularly the members of the band, for their imagination, leadership and determination. I repeat, however, that steps must be taken immediately to provide employment for all these people on a permanent basis in order that they may help themselves. I would hope this department and this minister would not overlook the humanistic aspects relating to a group such as this when trying to pacify the masses.

As I said, we have had an encouraging beginning on this reserve. However, living conditions are grossly inadequate. I had an opportunity to conduct my own survey regarding the living conditions in late February. Of some 29 families interviewed, it was discovered all had an inadequate water supply and were either faced with the necessity of hauling drinking water for long distances or utilizing snow or slough water. In this day and age, when many people in Canada enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world, it seems to me it is a grave injustice that there are some who are unable to enjoy even an adequate water supply, one of the basic necessities of life. Similarly, housing is most inadequate. Families of 8 and 10 persons live in one room homes which measure 12 feet by 16 feet. Many of these homes lack any insulation. They are cold in winter and the roofs leak.

I am sure that this department, working in close co-operation with the Indian Affairs branch and the various band councils, together with the many industrial development bodies and chambers of commerce throughout the country, could do much to assist these people in achieving their hopes and aspirations. With the proper leadership and liaison, this department could become the most effective vehicle in Canada, if it considers people to be human beings rather than masses of voters. The native citizens are not desirous of leaving their reservations, homes and families. They are loath to move as a single family unit away from the reservations to a strange environment.

What could be more simple than to assist in the establishment of light industries, service industries and small commercial enterprises reasonably close to the reservations. In this way, the Indians would not have to leave home, family or reservations and yet would be assured of steady work at reasonable wages. Then, they would be well on the road to full participation in our Canadian national life.

Why must we crowd everything together in a country where fresh air, space and natural beauty are all around us? What excuse is there for the nightmare "megopolis" that is even now being suggested by our planners and experts, an urban monster that will stretch in an unbroken line from Montreal through Toronto to Windsor and Niagara Falls. The amount of money that will be required just to make life in that industrial slum bearable will be a thousand times greater than is required now to make rural Canada prosperous, attractive and a fully producing sector of the national economy.

Unfortunately, the pattern seems to be that when the government offers economic incentives or assistance, the major part of it is gobbled up in fierce competition between our huge metropolitan centres. In my own province of Alberta the competition is so fierce between Edmonton and Calgary in the scramble for even the smallest industry, that the small city or town is beyond consideration before any opportunity is given to hear its proposals. Big business acts in the same way, crowding out the small operator and forcing him out of business.

It is ironic that there is always lots of money for stone and mortar in the big cities, but never more than a few pennies for building in the small town. It is not enough to say that this is an irreversible economic trend. If we are looking for challenges, surely this is the greatest we can find. This is a way to reverse the trend and make a more natural, more satisfying life possible for our people.

We have recently concluded a debate on the terrible housing crisis in Canada. I listened with interest to the remarks made by members on all sides of the house outlining the lack of accomodation in the cities and the lack of recreational facilities for children to romp and play, as well as the lack of parking facilities. I can only conclude that most of these problems are man-made. Too many of our experts, too many of our planners and too many Ottawa bureaucrats tend to take European and United States experience as gospel. They continually point to the United States for reasons why we in Canada cannot do this or that, to prove that we in Canada are bound by the experience of others and subject to their lead.

Surely, in seeking to fulfil our national destiny we can do better than copy the United States, or anyone else for that matter. There is no reason under the sun why we should be bound by what has happened to others or by what others are doing in seeking to develop our own separate and distinctive national life. Let us innovate, not duplicate. We are different in history, in our economy and, above all, in our geography. Let us use the advantages these differences confer upon us. Let us do our own "thing" regardless of others. We have the land, we have the distribution of population, and we have the economic set up to make an ideal mixture of rural and urban life. All we have to do is to make up our minds to undertake the job.

I have serious misgivings about the concept of bigness in this country. I wonder where it may lead us if the trend is not averted. This is the challenge to the minister of this new department. I hope he will give consideration to some of the points which I have raised. I hope also that his department will provide the necessary leadership and incentives to give all Canadians in rural and urban areas the opportunity to share in the wealth of Canada, the results of which will make this country a healthier and happier nation for all Canadians from sea to sea.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the proceedings to move a motion to extend the sitting of this committee beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment?

The Chairman: Pursuant to paragraph (5) (a) of standing order 6 these proceedings are interrupted in order to allow the parliamentary secretary to move the extension of this day's sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I move, pursuant to paragraph (5) (a) of standing order 6:

That this sitting be continued until midnight this day for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-173.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bell: You are trying to kill our staff.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will those members who object to the motion please rise.

And more than ten having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The house will now resume, in committee, the business which was interrupted.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: It is with pleasure, Mr. Chairman, that I participate in this debate. In fact Bill C-173 is made up of several clauses and it is intended to establish a Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Chairman, it is the government's responsibility to exercise its powers in the best interests of the people.

This bill includes several good points, but the Minister will not be able to realize some of them because the Canadian sources of capital supplies will not be adequate and this will be the case for capital investments by foreign countries. This bill does not provide for the creation, by the government, of adequate capital resources to effect what is physically possible and to realize what is possible and feasible from the physical but not from the financial viewpoint. This is what the Minister will come up against.

The Minister is given a spring with only a trickle of water. He is granted a certain amount of money and when that amount is spent, the spring will have dried up.

The underdeveloped regions will remain underdeveloped because the means of development will be missing and because the spring will have been diverted from its course. Whatever little capital is left will be taken away for other purposes, as well as the few drops from the stream; this will greatly reduce the activity in the economic field.

The field of activities devolved to the Minister is the development of economically weak regions in Canada and goodness knows there is quite a bit of them.

I would like to tell him about my region, one of the first regions to be settled in Canada. At one time, it was prosperous; today, it is going bankrupt, and people are leaving in droves. What is the cause of such a situation? The present system.

It is a fact that the old political parties, the key administrators, the key economists who know it all, who have all the answers but who solve nothing, who drive us deeper into debt, are the ones to blame. The minister will not be able to achieve any economic regional development without getting us deeper into debt.

Some 410 million dollars worth of bonds have matured. That is an old debt, and we are not told when it was incurred nor whether those bonds were sold. We are told that they are payable and redeemable now and that we do not have the money for this purpose. More money must be borrowed at the new interest rate and this leads to new taxes and to new problems for the population and for the regions that are already overburdened, overtaxed and that will continue to be taxed in order to protect capital and bonds which we will have to pay for until Doomsday. We pay the interest, so those bonds could already have been reimbursed three or four times.

This bill does not make any provision whatever to deal with this problem. That is where the minister will find himself in hot water. That will hinder his efforts and his work. Apparently, he is in good health and his intentions are of the best. We have confidence in him, we know that he can do his job and this pleases us. We admire his ability but we know that he will find himself in conflict with financial interests. However, no member of the other parties wishes to solve the financial problem.

It seems all members favour this kind of debenture redemption. Some of them mature every two or three months. The increase of capital and of interests contribute to widen the gap between the wealthy and the poor. The minister wants to correct this situation. If this situation is to be corrected the other situation must also be corrected. However, the government does not intend to do so.

Those great economists of ours are not in favour of this. Since they have invested capital in debentures, they think it is a splendid idea to increase the interest rate and to create everlasting debts, while they may lead the life of Riley. Once those debentures have been issued by those institutions, interest has to be paid for 30, 40, 50 years, practically forever. Those debentures bring high profits and are renewed periodically at a higher and higher interest rate, and this brings about our economic stagnation. I do not think there are two members on the government side who could prove me wrong. Not one of them has ever stood up and denounced this system.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I shall ask the hon. member to address himself to the Bill before us. Part IV of Bill C-173 deals with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and I shall ask the hon. member to save his remarks for another bill which will be brought forward later by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, before trying to speak about economy, one must be able to finance the economy. And if we cannot speak about finance, let us not speak about economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I shall draw your attention to the fact that I have not been elected here out of charity. It is not out of charity that I am here. I have been elected by the people, I am discharging the responsibilities they entrusted to me and you will not prevent me from doing so. I hope I made it clear to you.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Latulippe: Mind my word. If I never told you before, I am telling you now.

Mr. Chairman, to come back to the bill under study, I say to the minister that we will vote for the bill although we are sure that in spite of his good intentions he will not achieve his goal.

That is the point I should like to develop. We are not against the bill. It is better for us to get that than nothing at all, but we know this will not solve the problem.

We know that the industries in my area which are supplying other manufacturers are now closing down, that 70 per cent of the farmers have left their farms in the last ten years.

I ask the minister to tell us what will he be able to do to coax them back to the farm? How will he settle the problem?

Plants with 250 employees, and others with 50 or 60 employees, are closing down. For instance, the town of Scotstown, formerly had a population of 5,000 people of which 350 worked for a local industry which went out of business about ten years ago. Today the population has dwindled to 1,500; they have been left with debts of all kinds: municipal, school, vestry-board, etc. The people are head over heels in debt because the town at one time was prosperous but has now become run-down, a dead town, a ghost-town where properties that used to be worth $25,000 are now up for sale for $2,000 and $3,000. The situation is sad indeed now. That is why I ask the minister to include our area amongst the designated areas. Ours is one of the oldest areas and also one of the less prosperous, and the most affected in the whole of Canada. It is located in the eastern townships, and yet I know other areas in Canada which are like mine.

The minister therefore has a lot to do. He knows full well that although the engineers, the scientists, the material and equipment are available for carrying out his plans materially, for lack of capital they are financially impossible.

Some hon Members: Hear, hear.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Latulippe: To operate the economy of a country, Mr. Chairman, you need resources.

If we lack money at all times, how can we expect the economy to operate properly? If you drive out in your car and then going up the hill you run out of gas, you have to get out and walk perhaps ten miles to get gas, which is hardly advantageous.

This is what happens in our present economic system. The economic, financial machine lacks the necessary fuel to make the engine run.

The purpose of the bill under consideration is to establish various industries. The purpose of the industry is to produce as much as possible with the least possible effort and not to create manpower. Today the industry wants to use to a maximum scientific, technical and mechanical means but this is not a way to create jobs. The needs of the people remain unfulfilled. It is not necessary to administer in terms of machinery and science but rather in terms of the human person who has needs within the family.

Therefore, this bill should provide a plan which would guarantee an income to every citizen who has the right to live. Canada produces enough to feed five times as many people as we have now. What every citizen needs then is a guaranteed income and an adequate purchasing power to keep industry going. They want to create industries but the purpose of this bill is to get our products to markets abroad. We are going to sell the best of what we have and we Canadians, who are not very wise, will content ourselves with what remains. Such is the purpose of the bill under consideration now.

Let the government promote the investment of foreign capital in our country, yes. We want some of that capital, but it will never contribute to the development of Canada, it will never make it possible for Canadians to own their own land, homes, industries, natural resources, in brief, they will always be nothing but tenants.

But Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell the minister that if foreign capital is to establish itself in Canada, I would like to know why our national agency should not issue the same credits on the same guarantees.

Such is, Mr. Chairman, one of the solutions we could offer. If the minister had opened his eyes a little more, he could have offered a solution similar to that provided in the bill. We could then find sources of supply and say one of these days that Canadians can own something, that they will not always be only drawers of water.

Mr. Chairman, I would have much to say on this bill but I would rather ask the minister what he intends to do to develop that tremendous economic activity. Where will he get the money to so? Will it take fifty, a hundred or two hundred years to materialize? It has been said that about $130 million were made available to the minister to get that agency going. But it is merely a drop in the ocean. We will not go far with $130 million far all Canada. The minister said that everything has to be done, and that there were lots of fields where development could take place.

We hear about the development of the tourist industry, and of all kinds of things but the tourist industry is not a solution to all our ills, to all our problems.

It may be an answer though I cannot see why, in order to attract tourists, one should borrow money at a 10 per cent rate of interest then pay it back practically every eight years in the form of interests, thus remaining indefinitely in debt and paying higher taxes.

If the tourist industry were run that way, we would get the same results as in all the other sectors of our economy.

We have to finance regional disparities. If we prove unable to appropriately combine public and private investments, we are doomed to failure. In fact, we go on borrowing capital at extravagant rates and we strangle the taxpayers for the sake of development.

A moment ago, the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) told us that the Créditistes suggest all kinds of answers and go on repeating over and over again that once war is declared everything becomes possible. He added that we forget to say that you then have to get indebted, to borrow money at frightful rates of interests which strangle the people.

As for those bonds, worth $410 million, they are war bonds, I believe. They are always renewable at current rates.

Mr. Chairman, we are not advocating war; we just say that war should not be waged for the sake of profit. Wars should be waged with capital hearing interest according to management costs only. The same should apply to the development of the public sector and the Canadian economy.

The new department should not be concerned with making money. Then, Mr. Chairman, we could get out of the ditch and do something to improve and balance our economy. The more we play with the present systems, and the more we set up bodies such as this one, the more we upset our economy. We shall never be able to balance it with the means available to us now. Those means are old-fashioned, obsolete; they are applied in every country and always lead to the same results, that is bankruptcy, new increases in taxes. They lead to disaster because the people become discouraged, because the workers no longer wants to work, their tax burden being too heavy.

We can increase the production of the country, by using Canadian capital with Canadian guarantees, the same that we give abroad. That is how we can again become the owners of our heritage, of our industries. At the present time, we can hardly operate our industries, especially the small ones. There are awful problems. Two or three accountants are needed just to keep books for the government. And the government does not pay for that.

In our economic system, the citizens are unable to pay because their taxes are too high.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time is up. Will the committee agree to allow him to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I will be brief and I want to conclude my remarks by asking all responsible members of the house and the minister responsible for the economic agency that we are dealing with, that we are launching or sinking, to choose between two alternatives: either balance our economy or unbalance it and put us in a depression. There is no middle course; we must either go right or left. We cannot follow the middle course because it is too complex. We are forced to choose one of the two paths now before us, and they both lead to slump conditions, disaster, revolution and war everywhere because the people are oppressed. They are fed up with taxes of all kinds that they are unable to pay because governments must get more and more tax revenue for their administration.

We all know that people do not want to work any longer, because it takes all they earn just to live. Those who are on welfare receive more than those who work. They pay no taxes and those who work must pay taxes for the others. In the end, what is left of their pay after taxes leaves them worse off than if they depended on welfare benefits. But how long will the unemployed benefit from social welfare? How long will we be able to cut the pay of those who work to give to those who do not work?

Mr. Chairman, some agreements should also be signed between provinces. Applications under ARDA, for example, in Quebec, in my area, must be made to the provincial government. We have asked the provincial government to develop lake shores and roads to help the tourist industry. The provincial government replied that the land was not its property and that they were not interested in investing one penny to develop land they do not own.

I ask the minister what kind of agreements he could negotiate with a provincial government that cannot do anything on land it does not own? As a result, the provincial government will develop provincial parks, invest ARDA money in provincial parks and this will be of no help to all the people, nor to the designated areas, the depressed areas. That will promote development of national parks and result in benefits for the province, but will not profit the public, the people in those regions who can hardly make both ends meet or pay their taxes.

I ask the hon. minister what he can do for the provinces. What kind of agreements can he negotiate with the provinces to develop those depressed areas?

I have already told the minister that a large section of the region where I live is annexed to the city of Sherbrooke, which is considered to be a fairly prosperous area, but the towns and regions around Sherbrooke are in a real slump, and we cannot get any assistance because that city is situated in an area considered to be economically independent, although there are thousands of unemployed in that city.

Mr. Chairman, I will not pursue my remarks further, but I would like, once again, to have the minister tell us what projects he intends proposing to the provinces so that they can promote their under-developed areas.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, I am still under the shock of my hon. friend's speech. I do not know whether to rejoice at his eloquence or shudder at the gloomy picture he has conjured up for us.

In any case, I feel I represent a "have-not" area in many ways, but rich nevertheless in the burning desire of my fellow-citizens to co-operate with the government in finding permanent solutions to their problems.

I am happy to see that the hon. minister has been given the responsibility of the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I believe he is highly qualified for the job and I want to tell him at this point that he can count on my full support and co-operation. As ill-luck would have it, I did not get to hear the minister's speech this afternoon, but I will make it a point to read his remarks in tomorrow's Hansard.

Mr. Chairman, I am not an expert in matters of regional economic expansion, yet I would like to make some comments on the subject.

I am not pessimistic by nature either, and moreover I am very patient when long term solutions have to be found in order to settle, if not for ever, at least for some time, our problems of regional disparities.

When one speaks of the plans of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, one thinks at once of the confrontation of ideologies that might occur between the federal government, on the one hand, and regional governments or a provincial government, on the other hand.

I submit that a conflict may arise in some cases between the priority needs of a given province and the solutions proposed by the federal government in order to help a province put its economy back on its feet.

I do not know who will have a right of priority in both cases but I am convinced that we must co-operate with the utmost common sense. As for me, I am satisfied with the co-operation from the Atlantic provinces in connection with the proposals made by the federal government so far.

However, one point worries me. To work out those plans, federal officials will be used and at times I doubt that some of them understand our regional problems. As a matter of principle, I find it hard to admit that someone who has always lived in the central provinces, who has studied there, who has found his theories there, may find possible solutions to problems of regional disparities and bring a valuable contribution to the solution of regional problems. However, I give them the benefit of the doubt.

But, in my opinion, what is essential is that governments make allowances for ideas and proposals from the people we want to help. For some time we have been hearing about participatory democracy.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to rise and report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Drury: I think as a consequence, Mr. Speaker, of the progress or lack of progress we have made on this bill the order of business tomorrow will be altered. We will continue with this bill, followed by the Superannuation Act and the Financial Administration Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

• (10:00 p.m.)

EXTERNAL AID—PROVISION OF FOOD THROUGH TRANSFER OF ARMAMENT FUNDS

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago on orders of the day I sought to raise the following question:

Is consideration being given to the suggestion of a national body, the Canadian Catholic Conference, that 10 per cent of Canada's armaments expenditures be spent instead on such peace efforts as the provision of food for under-developed countries?

At that time Mr. Speaker ruled the question out of order and I have taken the opportunity tonight to try to raise it again. In the few moments at my disposal, I wish to put some statistics on the record in support of the basis for the question.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, the great producing powers of the world are teetering on a balance of terror with regard to defence expenditures, without very much hope that present vast expenditures on mutual destruction can be reduced. According to the United Nations Arms Control and Disarmament Agency the current cost to the world of armaments is $182 billion a year. The United States alone spends $80 billion every 12 months. Between NATO and the Warsaw Pact countries 90 per cent of the world's armament expenditures is incurred.

The total arms bill of the world is equal to three times the world's spending on public health, and is 40 per cent more than the world's spending on education. It represents $53 for every man, woman and child in the world and, as hon. members well realize, in some countries $53 is often the difference between life and death.

As pointed out in the letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) from the Canadian Catholic Conference:

> Some members of your government have begun to compare Canada's high level of defence expenditures to the relatively low level of foreign assistance. This ratio is now nearly six to one ... One interesting suggestion, for example, proposed that for a start Canada might transfer 10 per cent from her defence budget to development projects.

In my opinion, no country in the world from the point of view of history, geography and economics is more favourably situated than Canada to give leadership to the world on this serious issue of armaments as against peace expenditures. A 10 per cent reduction would mean very little difference in Canada's defence strength in this nuclear age, but it would mean a great deal of difference in the respect of the world for Canada and the defence of the world itself, because this would be constructive spending for peace, spending on food and medicine for other countries. I urge that the government give serious consideration to this 10 per cent proposal, 10 per cent less for defence in the armements sense, and 10 per cent more for peace in the sense of spending to help the hungry and the sick people of other countries.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no way, of course, that I can undertake to the house that this government intends to transfer any specific part of its revenues from one task to another. Nor, I should say, is there necessarily anything meaningful about statistical comparisons. There are any number of methods of computing defence budgets just as there are a number of ways of calculating sums spent on economic assistance programs. Even the technique employed by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development offers suitable scope for variation among reporting countries.

[Mr. Mather.]

I welcome the opportunity, however, to reaffirm to the house the conviction of the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that one of the foremost problems in the world today is that of the spread of economic standards as between the rich nations and the poor nations. One of the priorities of this government, and the governments of all of the industrial nations of the earth, must be the raising of the standard of living of the two thirds of the human race who live in conditions of abject poverty. Should the expectations of the persons of the so-called "third world" not be fulfilled, then the latter part of this century is likely to be a most unsettled one.

The government is continuing and indeed increasing its participation in the Colombo Plan, and in a variety of other assistance programs of which the house is aware. The Government is as well taking a serious interest in the affairs of U.N.C.T.A.D., United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the belief that the long range solution to the economic difficulties of all nations, both developed and developing, is a world in which international trade plays a major role. Only when the developing countries are able to sell their goods abroad will their economies attain the self-generating stage.

In conclusion, may I say that the aim of Canada's economic assistance programs is to assist the developing countries to achieve a high degree of economic independence. They are not intended as a mere palliative or food give-away program. We help in these ways in emergencies, but much prefer to assist the countries to grow their own food, manufacture their own goods and harness their own resources. This is our aim and is one which I am sure all Canadians support.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—LUMBER

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I opened the can of worms with regard to lumber prices. Regrettably, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) was the only appropriate minister in the house at the time to which to pop the question. I had actually intended to direct the question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) in his capacity as minister primarily concerned with housing. I see that, unfortunately, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has taken the ball back in this regard. I am sorry to have imposed on either him or his minister in this regard because I do not really believe there is any reason to speculate that activities in this market area should be subjected to scrutiny by the combines investigation branch.

The fact remains, however, that price changes in the lumber industry over the past year or over the past few months have been little short of monumental. The figures which I shall quote here have been taken from actual invoices which I have obtained from contractors in Calgary whom I believe to be in a position of driving the best bargain that is available in this particular market. I shall not cite all these prices by any means. I believe a few will illustrate my point. Fir lumber in the dimensions of 2 inches by 4 inches by 16 feet was invoiced on February 20, 1968 at $124.75 a thousand board feet. On March 12, 1969 it was invoiced at $177. This is an increase of 41.8 per cent. Then, 2 inch by 6 inch by 14 foot fir was invoiced on March 27, 1968 at $118 a thousand board feet. On February 24 it was selling at $175 a thousand. This is an increase of 48.4 per cent. Fir sheathing, which is used on the sides of a house, increased in price over 20 per cent between August 1968 and March 1969. Some specific items have increased in amounts over 100 per cent. For example, grade 2 shingles have increased 135 per cent over what they were a year ago. There are many other examples.

These examples are typical of what seems to have occurred in the industry. I might quote directly from a letter from a building supply company in Calgary to its customers. Usually, they send out price lists but recently they have been sending out the following notice:

Due to present shortages and the price fluctuation of lumber and plywood, which may continue for some time, we are unable to furnish you with our normal price list.

However, we will be pleased to quote prices for immediate delivery from our stocks on hand.

The situation in the industry is little short of disastrous from the housing point of view, and certainly it is undermining the entire construction industry. The price changes in the last year have been such that there has been an increase of about $800 to $1,000 on the cost of a $20,000 house.

The feelings of the home buyer and of the contractor are not particularly alleviated by the following information published in the Financial Times issue of March 10, 1969:

The forest products companies, particularly the west coast operators, had a bountiful fourth quarter with profit increases averaging 61 per cent following a decline of 32 per cent in the previous nine months.

The whole problem is one that is really continental or world wide. I think it is attributable to the pressures of the export market. The fact is that 75 per cent of our lumber is exported from Vancouver market and 25 per cent is used domestically. Supplies have been far outstripped by demand. It is a very serious matter. As a matter of fact, yesterday the housing subcommittee of the senate committee on banking and finance in the United States, under Senator Sparkman of Alabama, commenced sittings on the lumber situation as a result of requests made by the National Association of Homebuilders.

We are in a steadily worsening crisis with regard to the prices and supply of forest products. This is having a disastrous inflationary effect on the stability of the construction industry generally. The pain is not assuaged by the knowledge that profits in the manufacturing segment of this industry have increased greatly, as did those in wholesale distribution.

We have a problem here that is of immediate concern to the nation. We want our export trade,—it is important to us—but there is a recognized crisis in housing. Somehow or other we have to achieve a balance between our export prices on the one hand and the legitimate needs and requirements of the construction industry generally and housing in particular. I respectfully submit that some very top level governmental action is indicated to investigate the current situation.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), I welcome this opportunity to reply to the question of the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney). I appreciate the concern of the hon. member about the recent increased cost of lumber in Canada which apparently is also a problem and a matter of concern in the United States. The report of the task force on housing and urban development evidently contained a statement of the problem of the cost of building materials but it did not comment specifically on the recent increase in the cost of lumber. It appears the increase in lumber prices has occurred especially in the last few months and is evident in more than one province. It should be noted that in the last year or two we have experienced in Canada, as has the United States recently, a great upsurge in house construction. There has, therefore, been an exceptional demand for all building materials, including lumber.

It should also be borne in mind that in the last decade lumber prices have been depressed in relation to the upward or inflationary trends in the price of labour, land, financing and other building costs. I assure the hon. member that the Minister of Transport in charge of housing is most concerned about this problem. It is anticipated that whatever action can be taken by all the sectors involved to deal with the rising prices of building materials, including lumber, will be taken. I also assure the hon. member that I shall bring his remarks to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) who is in charge of federal housing policies.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

FISHERIES

SEALS—DEPLETION OF HERD—OPERATIONS OF NORWEGIAN VESSELS

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement on recent developments in the seal hunt. It will answer several questions asked in recent days by hon. members and serve to bring the house up to date on the situation both in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and on the Labrador front in the North Atlantic.

There is real concern from a conservation point of view. The seal count, to date, has been small both in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and off Labrador. In the Gulf the count of adult female seals has been in the order of only 250,000. In a normal year this figure would have been between 750,000 and one million. It follows that less than one-third as many adult female seals have been observed in the Gulf of St. Lawrence as compared to normal times.

The quota set by regulation for the taking of young seals, as hon. members know, is 50,000. It is 50,000 assuming a normal year in so far as adult females are concerned. This year we terminated the hunt at 35,000, our main concern being that, if the hunt had been allowed to continue for another day, an entire year class may have been wiped out.

The main problem on the Gulf of St. Lawrence has been the absence of ice suitable to the pupping of young seals. This, together with frequent storms has resulted in many drownings. The young seals have been drowned either at birth or as a result of the breaking up of the small ice floes which have been limited mainly to the Northumberland Strait between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) has quoted local fishermen as saying that there are a large number of seals off the north coast of Prince Edward Island. I regret to advise the house that there are no more than 6,000 young seals in the entire area at the present time.

The second phase of the hunt, Mr. Speaker, is now concentrated on the front off Labrador in the North Atlantic. The main seal concentration is around the mouth of Hamilton Inlet. Six Canadian ships are taking young seals there at the present time. Fourteen Norwegian vessels are also in this same general area.

I regret to inform the house that we have encountered some difficulties with the Norwegian sealers. When the season opened on the front on March 12 several Norwegian ships were observed inside our territorial waters. One is definitely known to have been taking seals on Saturday, March 15. Warnings were immediately issued by radio to all Norwegian vessels ordering them not to take seals and instructing them to leave Canadian waters.

Due to extreme weather conditions, thick ice and heavy Arctic fog, it was impossible for our fisheries protection vessel, the Cape Freels, to get into this area. We therefore requested the Department of Transport ice-breaker, Sir Humphrey Gilbert to come up from St. John's, Newfoundland. This vessel, with a helicopter and fisheries protection officers aboard is now in Hamilton Inlet with instructions to pick up the Norwegian vessel, which was known to be taking seals on Saturday, if it is still within our 12 mile limit. Otherwise it would appear that the situation on the front is generally under control, as all the other Norwegian vessels are known to be outside of our territorial waters.

I should reiterate, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that our fisheries protection service is operating under very adverse conditions off Labrador. Lack of visibility, freezing of ships in the ice, high winds and poor radio communications have contributed to delays which have been encountered in carrying out orders which were issued some days ago.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement just recently came to my attention. I have not had a chance to study it. The members of this house were interested to hear what the minister had to say regarding the seal herd in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I believe hon. members realize the importance of the seal hunt as a supplementary source of income to the fishermen in the Atlantic provinces.

The minister referred to the fact that the herd this year is very seriously depleted. I believe he mentioned the herd was down to 250,000 from 700,000. This is a real cause for concern, Mr. Speaker; but the minister omitted to mention the fact that Canada is now a member of ICNAF, the International Convention of the North Atlantic Fisheries. I believe this matter has been under the jurisdiction of ICNAF since 1966. Steps should be taken in ICNAF to ensure proper methods of conservation of the herd off the front. I believe that proper conservation methods must be taken with the main herd off the coast of Labrador. We can talk all we want about a sanctuary in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, but it is all to no avail unless the main herd is protected.

I am sure hon. members are glad to hear that the minister at last has his facts correct regarding the infringement of our Territorial waters that took place last weekend, and is still taking place, by Norwegian vessels. I brought this to the attention of the minister and his parliamentary secretary gave a reply on Monday. The reply by the minister on Tuesday indicated there was no evidence that seals were being taken by the Norwegians. This was totally at variance with the reply given by his parliamentary secretary the previous Monday. We now find there is evidence the Norwegians were hunting seals within the three mile limit, and the department has had to request a coast-guard vessel to be dispatched from St. John's, several hundred miles distant. This highlights the inadequacy of the fleet of fisheries patrol vessels to enforce Canadian jurisdiction and conservation in our territorial waters, particularly in so far as fisheries and the seal herd are concerned.

The fleet of the Department of Fisheries patrol vessels must be substantially increased so the department can enforce our territorial jurisdiction. The seal fishery has been a subject of debate in this house for a number of years, more particularly since films produced in 1964 were shown around the world, and as a consequence of which Canada's reputation has suffered.

Canadians have been portrayed abroad as being a bunch of sadistic, barbarous people skinning baby seals alive, whereas in actual fact seals are humanely killed. The minister has in fact announced from first hand evidence that seals are humanely killed. I think he would be the first to admit that the killing of these animals is a necessary supplementary source of income for the fishermen of the Atlantic region. A request has been made in the house, and in writing to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, to have the whole matter aired before the committee, in order that the facts may be ascertained once and for all.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the announcement of the minister and to learn that the very unfortunate circumstances with regard to the seal herd in the Gulf of St. Lawrence had decreased as rapidly as they have. I had the opportunity of visiting that area with the minister. The area of ice off Prince Edward Island was very small in size and I think an accurate count was fairly easy to take. If there are only 6,000 pups left in the area, I think the minister is to be congratulated for terminating the seal hunt. The prime interest in this matter, leaving aside the ballyhoo and all the other propaganda in which certain people have been interested, should be the conservation of the sealing industry. The fact that an accurate count could be made indicates that something happened in the last year, not only because of weather and fisheries conditions but with the seals themselves, because only a quarter of a million seals came into the gulf when normally there have been a million in the area.

We must make some arrangements through ICNAF or perhaps under a bilateral agreement with Norway as to the taking of seals on the front, because this year seals, rather than coming into the gulf, stayed on the front. The loss of three-quarters of a million seals is a very serious blow to the industry and will be a serious loss if it continues in the future.

I am surprised at the comments of some hon. members who have argued the matter on economic grounds. We are concerned here with an industry and the fact that conservation is more important than this year's catch. If those involved in the industry are in difficulty, and difficulty to our economy has developed, the situation should be handled as an emergency and the government should provide financial assistance to the people involved. But we should not forfeit our right to carry on a reasonable conservation program. Our prime interest should be to maintain the seal herd at a level which will allow harvesting for years to come. The minister will have serious difficulty, and this has been pointed out by other members of the house, with regard to the 12-mile limit and the headland to headland system. There will be difficulty in drawing our boundaries in this respect. Our discussions with Norway in this regard should not only be with the fishermen in the area but at government level in order that we can arrive at a bilateral agreement and conserve seals on the front as well as in the gulf.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief in my comments on the minister's statement.

We share his views regarding seal conservation measures.

On the other hand, we find it difficult to understand the insistence of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) to put an end to what is practically a slaughter of baby seals, a matter much talked about in the house these last few weeks. We do not hold it against him but we are surprised that his colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) does not have in his omnibus bill the same pity for human babies.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In the minister's statement on motions he referred to comments of mine with respect to the size of the herd north of Prince Edward Island. Inasmuch as there might be some confusion, which there seems to be in some of the responses in the house, in the statements both by the fisheries people and the fishermen—the fishermen apparently have estimated from the air on two occasions this week that the seal herd was from 50,000 to 80,000—could the minister arrange for fishermen and officials of the department to get together and look at the herds so that they could clear up this misunderstanding?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that is not a question of privilege.

Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wish to take part in the question of privilege?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, I have another question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we leave motions, I wonder if we could have an understanding about the business of the house for today. I have in mind in particular the desire of the government to get a certain amount of business through, and I wonder if there could be an understanding at this point that the private members hour today will be suspended so that we could use that time for government business.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps, if the house is agreeable, we could make an order right now that the private members hour today be suspended.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on the matter that has just been raised. Does the minister intend to proceed in the same manner as was outlined last night by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) on the business for today, or does he propose to bring in the superannuation bill first?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The intention is to proceed with the government reorganization bill, in the expectation that by the early afternoon at the latest it would be disposed of. From there we could go on to the superannuation bill, and in the time remaining to the Financial Administration Act.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HOUSING

DELAY IN APPROVAL OF PUBLIC PROJECTS—AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport a question in connection with housing. It arises out of the statement made this week by the Premier of Ontario, that the Minister of Transport has held up approval of public housing projects in Ontario and specifically in the Ottawa area. Will the minister say how soon the country may expect a clarification of the federal government's housing policy and an end to the freeze in effect since last November?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This has already been done to a very large extent. Had the Premier of Ontario consulted his minister in charge of housing he would have found out that I recently indicated to him, in reply to a telegram, that most of the applications which had been pending have been approved. I think there are only two or three which are still the subject of further examination, and in addition one or two with design problems and where the normal criteria had not been met were sent back for clarification of these points. To a large extent all the outstanding applications have been dealt with and we are up to date, with the exception of two or three of the very large projects which do not provide the kind of family accommodation that was considered advisable by the task force and by other people who have studied this subject.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister a question specifically relating to Ottawa, where the fear has been expressed that the city may be left holding the bag with regard to a program involving 1,000 families. Has this situation been clarified and, if not, will the minister undertake to hold an early meeting with officials in Ottawa to ensure that the policy of the government is clear with respect to this project and to enable the city to proceed?

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. Hellyer: I will give the same answer. Some of the projects were approved. One or two others where the design was inadequate were referred back to the officials responsible for design improvement. Two large projects which have not been put forward firmly but which are pending are under consideration. These had not reached the stage where a decision had to be taken. I think the statement I made that everything is current applies to Ottawa as well as to the rest of the province and the country.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister say that the officials concerned with this matter in the city of Ottawa have been given an answer regarding this project, that they know exactly where things fit and that the ball is now in their court?

Mr. Hellyer: I could not answer that question, Mr. Speaker, because I am not sure of the channels of communication. I think they have to go back from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to the Ontario Housing Corporation, from the Ontario Housing Corporation to the city of Ottawa, and from the city of Ottawa to the public. If that has not happened then it is merely because of communications.

Mr. Stanfield: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I am beginning to wonder whether we are involved here in a housing program or a merry-go-round.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question. May I ask the minister in charge of housing whether he told representatives at the Canadian Conference of Mayors and Municipalities that there would be substantially less money for public housing during the next few years?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not indicate that. I indicated that there would be considerable experimentation in this field that is designed to seek better ways of meeting the needs of Canadians in all income brackets, particularly those of limited income, and that we would not close our minds to any suggestion that would improve either the quantity or the quality of accommodation available for people who need it.

Mr. Orlikow: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Keeping in mind this experimentation, will the minister tell the house whether there will be as much or more money for public housing this year than there was last year?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to give specific figures, but if my hon. friend includes the whole range of options and policies that might be tried in order to provide accommodation for people of limited income, then I think he would be pleased to know that there will be a sizeable amount available for housing, probably as much or more than was spent last year.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would get his communications speeded up so that officials both in the city of Ottawa and in the city of Edmonton could be given a clear picture as to where they stand, in view of the fact that they have proceeded bona fide with their programs and now feel they are left holding the bag, unable to tell anything to the people concerned.

MORTGAGE RATE IN LIGHT OF INCREASED PRIME LENDING RATE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport who is responsible for housing. Considering that the prime lending rate has been increased from 7 per cent to 7½ per cent and considering the high yield of Government of Canada bonds, does he anticipate that the N.H.A. mortgage rate as of April 1 will be 10 per cent or more?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that it will not be that high.

An hon. Member: It will be 9⅞ per cent instead.

Mr. Hellyer: I hope that interest rates will soon begin to decline.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which year?

Mr. Hellyer: I hope my hon. friends will exercise the restraint required of all levels of government and of all citizens, if this is to come about.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

RAISING OF PRIME LENDING RATE BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance in regard to the announcement by several chartered banks that they are now raising the prime lending rate to 7½ per cent. In view of the fact that this will increase the cost of doing business, and consequently increase prices, may I ask the minister whether he intends to use his very considerable powers of moral persuasion with the chartered banks and ask them to exercise some restraint in the matter of increasing the prime lending rate?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the reasoning behind the banks raising the prime rate is that the prime rate in the United States has gone up to 7½ per cent. Since there are the two alternative places for borrowing, bank rates in Canada have to be pretty much in line.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the profits of the chartered banks increased sharply for 1968 and for the first quarter of 1969, will the minister initiate an investigation into the activities of the chartered banks with a view to seeing whether or not parliament should consider reimposing some ceiling on the interest rates the banks may charge?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, the activities of the banks are examined on a regular basis by the inspector general of banks.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the interest rate is not responding as it was anticipated it would when the committee examined banking legislation, will the minister consider referring the Bank Act back to the committee for a complete evaluation and examination of its effects?

Mr. Benson: Not at this point, Mr. Speaker,

Mr. Saltsman: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the banks have raised their rate by half of 1 per cent to their prime borrowers but have only increased the interest rate to depositors by a quarter of 1 per cent, will the minister examine the wide discrepancy the banks have introduced and imposed on the financial system?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as I recall the figures, the deposit rate was raised to 5½ per cent and the prime rate to 7½ per cent, which gives the banks about 2 per cent margin on these funds in which to carry out their operations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Considering the very, very great increase in bank profits, does the minister consider a 2¼ per cent margin to be necessary now?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members and the minister that we are now entering the realm of debate and should turn to another subject. I see the hon. member for Broadview rising on a supplementary. I shall recognize him later.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak about a fairly well-known matter. I would have liked to ask the minister a supplementary question. So, I rely on your indulgence, for which I thank you in advance.

I have a question for the Minister of Finance, with regard to this last increase. Does he intend to recommend that the chartered banks stop increasing their interest rate, considering the cost of living and the very high rate of municipal, provincial and federal bonds?

[English]

GRAIN

WHEAT—REPRESENTATIONS FROM SASKATCHEWAN AS TO PRICING

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. What was his response to the telegram from the government of the province of Saskatchewan supporting a floor price of $1.95½ for wheat, and a two price system under which the price of No. 1 at the Lakehead until the establishment of the two price system would be $2.12?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, you have not.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, similar telegrams were sent to the Prime Minister, to me and to other ministers by other groups too. An answer is being prepared and will be sent out soon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister say whether the answer will soon be available to the Liberal government in Saskatchewan. If not, does he not think that the large delegation of 1,000 farmers which will come here may convince him of the catastrophic position of western agriculture and of the necessity for action?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure when the right hon. gentleman was prime minister of this country that once in a while he had to think for a while when similar requests were made of him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this a case, Mr. Speaker, where the matter will be considered once in a while? Our western farmers have had no consideration from this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to direct to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will he provide his cabinet colleagues with a copy of the speech he delivered to the Hamilton East Liberal Association in which he is reported to have said that there is a feeling of isolation in western Canada. Will he support a two price system for wheat, which has been advocated, to reverse the current trend in western Canada?

OUT-OF-CONDITION GRAIN ON HAND

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In order that hon. members may determine whether the matter of out of condition grain remains a national problem that must be dealt with during the next few weeks, will the minister undertake to make a full report on the volume of out of condition grain still remaining. Will he do that before the Easter recess?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Agriculture is willing to answer that.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have been attempting to obtain accurate figures about the volume of such grain and I must advise my hon. friend that there are wide variations in the estimates. We do not know how much has been fed to livestock during the months since harvest and how much has been dryed on farms. The estimates we have been receiving are widely varied.

Mr. Ed Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Before parliament adjourns for the Easter recess will the minister undertake to make as accurate a report as possible on this matter?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, during most of next week the Agricultural Congress will be held in Ottawa and I suggest to the hon. member that a large number of knowledgeable people from western Canada will attend and give us their opinions on this matter, which will be publicized.

Mr. Schreyer: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was asking for statistical information and not for policy information.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER ICEBREAKING POLICY

Mr. Thomas A. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have an interesting policy question for the Minister of Transport. Has the government changed its policy with respect to icebreaking in the St. Lawrence, as seems to be indicated by a statement made in Montreal yesterday? If it has changed its policy, in what respect has it done so?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have tried to do this as effectively as we can. We are making substantial progress, as technology improves.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I do understand from the minister that ice breaking policy as announced by this government and the previous government is exactly as it was before, and that there is to be no artificial assistance to breaking up the ice?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, we have to keep the channel open to prevent flooding, and more and more ships are using the channel for navigation. There is no sense in sparring around on this question.

Mr. Fairweather: Do not talk about flooding, then.

Mr. Hellyer: The fact that the channel has been kept open has aided navigation. I have no doubt it will be used to a considerable extent in the years ahead.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since there evidently is some sparring around on this question, will the minister make a full, straightforward and honest statement in this house on any change in policy?

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Minister of Transport whether consideration is being given to recovering costs of present operations from those shipping companies which are benefiting from this new policy?

Some hon. Members: Answer.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY INDUSTRY—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED QUOTAS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Could he tell us whether his department intends to review the policy of the Dairy Commission and to increase quotas in order to allow farmers in eastern Canada to have a progressive production?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we can call it a complete revision. There will probably be some adjustments in the new policy, beginning on April 1. I hope we will be able to announce that before April 1.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE RE-ORGANIZATION OF REGIONAL CARRIERS—AIR FARES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the government to reorganize the regional air carriers into one common carrier?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. The government has no such intention.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister. Since the United States Civil Aeronautics Board is showing determination in standing up to IATA on the question of air fares, can the minister assure the house that the Canadian government will show similar backbone?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vegreville.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

ALLEGATIONS BY MR. LUCIEN SAULNIER

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister or the government house leader. Will either minister give an assurance that the estimates of the Company of Young Canadians will be brought before the broadcasting committee to investigate the allegations of Lucien Saulnier, Montreal executive officer, that the C.Y.C. involves a red guard type of operation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that these estimates are already before the broadcasting committee. If he would like to discuss the timetable of the committee, he could make representations to the chairman or to other members of the committee.

CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED INFLATIONARY EFFECT OF C.B.C. AGREEMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. As the new wage guideline of 9 per cent increase a year, which was established yesterday by the government when it announced its agreement with the C.B.C., will create a great additional inflationary pressure on the economy, does the government intend to take any steps to counteract this upward pressure on prices?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was not a settlement of the government; it was a settlement between a Crown corporation and its employees.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the Minister of Labour engaged in it.

Mr. Benson: The Department of Labour acted as a mediator in this particular dispute, the same as it does in many disputes coming under federal jurisdiction, and I can assure my hon. friend that we have no idea of increasing inflation by increasing his salary.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Labour very proudly announced this as a government achievement yesterday, and as we know perfectly well he had a lot to do with setting this 9 per cent increase guideline, would the Minister of Finance give consideration to giving more sensible answers in the house, rather than the broken record he often substitutes for common sense?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Speaker.]

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION IN SPRING

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Can he definitely announce whether he is going to bring down a budget in April or May, or some other time, in an effort to try to combat the continuing inflation so seriously pointed out yesterday in the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that a budgetary statement, or a statement on our economic and financial position, will be made some time in May or June.

NATIONAL PARKS

GASPÉ—PROJECT AT POINTE FORILLON

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

The establishment of a national park at Pointe Forillon, in the Gaspé peninsula, was provided for in the federal-provincial agreement on the development of the Gaspé peninsula. Could the minister tell us whether there has been some development in the last few days with respect to the implementation of that plan?

Could he also tell us whether we should believe the report that from now on planning will be the responsibility of the premier of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he cannot ask a minister to confirm or to deny a rumour or a report. if there is any urgency as far as the first question is concerned, the hon. member could give notice to have it debated on adjournment.

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LUMBER—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PRICE INCREASE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, who is responsible for housing. In view of the great increase in the price of lumber in the last little while, as much as $15 per thousand board feet in the last six weeks, which has had very serious repercussions on the cost of building homes, would the minister consider setting up a task force to investigate this increase, and would he also contact the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and ask him to make a study of the matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question asked by the hon. member for Wellington has been asked within the last few days; and so far as the second part of the question is concerned, he is making a suggestion to the minister, and he has to assume that his submission will be taken into account.

HOUSING

THOMPSON, MAN.—AVAILABILITY OF MORTGAGE MONEY

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Some days ago he mentioned that it was his intention to make C.M.H.C. mortgage money available in the field of high rise apartment construction in Thompson, Manitoba. May I ask him whether this has now been accomplished, and whether the regional office in Winnipeg has been so advised?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I cannot, Mr. Speaker. There is some reluctance toward making loans for high rise apartment construction, but this is a matter which will be discussed between myself and the corporation in an attempt to achieve the ends desired by the hon. member and myself.

Mr. Simpson: Can the minister say what are the grounds for the reluctance to make these loans?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Regina East.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. AS TO NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's forthcoming visit to Washington and the discussions he will be engaged in there, would he undertake to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister the views of a former Minister of Finance, Walter Gordon, that Canada should renounce the use or possession of nuclear weapons?

A.B.M. PROGRAM—COMMUNICATION BETWEEN U.S. AND CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday the Secretary of Defence in the United States is reported to have given evidence before a Senate committee that Canada was fully advised and informed regarding the new A.B.M. plan of the Nixon administration over a period of days. Will the minister look into this question so that this house may have the truth as to what actually took place, because ministers in the government here said they had no knowledge until the day of the speech by the President of the United States? This is a very serious matter in our relations with the United States.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister indicated there had been discussions going on back and forth over many months, or even years, and if my right hon. friend has some question beyond that I will be glad to refer it to the attention of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not talking about the discussions about the Sentinel plan. I am referring to the new plan that has just been brought into being, or at least promised to be brought into being by the President—not the old plan that was going on for months. Was this new plan brought to the attention of the Government of Canada on several occasions prior to the President's announcement? I want to find out who is actually giving the true facts. Is the Secretary of Defence of the United States, doing so, or is the Government of Canada concealing the facts?

TELEVISION

TRANSACTION BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND GEOFFREY STIRLING

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is he aware that recent press reports from Toronto have indicated a great concern about the ethics of the transaction between the Minister of Transport and Geoffrey Stirling?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Egmont.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Egmont.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—PROGRAM FOR ASSISTANCE OF GROWERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he indicate whether or not the Agricultural Stabilization Board has taken a decision with regard to assisting potato growers, particularly in eastern Canada where they have had a very difficult year with low prices?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, an announcement was made last night that we are going to undertake a diversion program to starch to try to take some of the potatoes out of inventory and strengthen the market.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST THAT INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL BE RECONVENED

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of reports that the two day meeting held earlier in London, England, by representatives of major wheat exporting and importing countries on the subject of the threatening price war has not come to any conclusive determination, will the minister do all within his power to encourage the reconvening of the International Wheat Council early in April, as was suggested at the London meeting in order finally to settle this serious problem?

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the price committee met in London and decided to reconvene immediately after the meeting of exporters, which is to take place very early in April.

Mr. Southam: As a supplementary question: If it is possible would the minister accompany the Prime Minister to Washington next week, and take his colleague the Minister of Agriculture with him, so that they could discuss this serious situation with their American counterparts.

Mr. Pepin: I am not going but the subject will be on the agenda.

[Mr. Speaker.]

AIR CANADA

EFFECT ON ROUTES OF REGIONAL CARRIERS REORGANIZATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the answer he gave a few minutes ago to the hon. member for Dauphin with regard to air carrier policy, may I ask the minister whether there is any explanation for the lengthy report in the press today attributed to a highly placed source in the Department of Transport that there is to be a change in the regional air carrier policy which may affect the routes assigned to Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the question asked is partly in order. I think the question might be asked directly by the hon. member, but that he should not ask the minister to comment on some aspect of a news report.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am prepared to ask the question directly, but I also feel I have a question of privilege in that we are given statements on the floor of the house, brief though they may be, which do not jibe with statements given outside the house by people in the Department of Transport. This goes on all the time. I still think parliament is supreme.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I ask the Minister of Transport directly whether the government is considering a change of regional air policy, as a result of which five regional lines would be made a national line and given some of the routes of Air Canada.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any conflict whatsoever between what I said and any newspaper story. If I understood the question correctly, it was whether it was the policy of the government to have one regional air carrier for Canada, and I said no. That is quite correct.

In so far as the newspaper story is concerned, I have no idea what the source of it was. The policy of the government in respect of regional air carrier service is still as it was when announced two or three years ago by the former minister. That policy is in the process of being implemented now. Some routes which have been operated by the main line carriers are being given to regional carriers, and beyond that there is some change and extension of the pattern of regional services.

There is no change in policy at this time. I think the question raised in the article—and I have no idea of the source—was more of a speculative kind, relating to a much longer term, and one in respect of which not only is there no policy, but no serious policy consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the uncertainty raised by this article, and in view of the confusion still in our minds about the structure of Air Canada vis-à-vis Canadian Pacific Airlines, will the minister at an early date make one of those straightforward and honest statements about the government's whole air policy.

Mr. Hellyer: I think that is quite unnecessary. I just said the policy is as announced two years ago and is in the process of being implemented. If and when there is any change in that policy it will be announced in the house.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Will the minister give assurance to the house at this time that the Minister without Portfolio and no other member of the cabinet has the matter under study at the moment.

Mr. Hellyer: It has already been announced that the future air policy is a matter of the continuing concern of the Minister without Portfolio. This study will take a considerable period of time and will involve a great deal of consideration on the part of the department, the Canadian Transport Commission and the carriers. No change of any substantial nature is envisaged in the immediate future.

AIR TRANSPORT

JOINT U.S.-CANADA EFFORTS ON IATA SCHEDULES

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is not intended to be bantering. However, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he can say whether his department is making a systematic effort to work in concert with the United States aviation agencies in order to deal with the problem of IATA air schedules, in view of the United States agencies concerted attempt to deal with this problem.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Both the department and the Canadian Transport Commission are interested in opening up new avenues of opportunity for Canadian air carriers. To this end every effort will be made to make any changes in the rules necessary to provide those opportunities, when this can be done.

TRADE

ONIONS—SHIPMENT TO U.K. FROM MONTREAL

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the minister would give me an undertaking that he will investigate and report to the house with regard to what I consider to be very serious allegations made by the Ontario Onion Marketing Board that several thousand bags of Ontario onions were recently left on the wharves at an east coast port due to a transport problem. It is alleged that, even though the onions were at the port, two ships sailed without them because they could not be made available for loading.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): If the hon. member will give me the details of this allegation I will of course have it investigated.

FROZEN GROUNDFISH—SITUATION IN U.S. MARKET

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, since this has become a traditional fish day in the house, I wonder whether I might be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the critical situation that did exist on the U.S. market vis-à-vis Canadian frozen groundfish, can the minister bring the house up to date on the situation today?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I understand that the prices have firmed up substantially. The last time I looked they were up to 26 cents from a low of 21 cents, as a result of the policies applied by the Minister of Fisheries.

[Later:]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary answer. I was very kind to the Minister of Fisheries. I think I should be kind to my own department too. The efforts which have been made at the international level I think have been very useful also.

Mr. McGrath: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister also be kind to members of this house who have helped him in this regard?

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

SALT COD—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEDERAL PROGRAM

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister in a position to announce to the house the nature of the new federal government program in aid of the sagging salt cod industry?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I am holding discussions with the industry next week and I hope to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries. Will consideration also be given to the salt cod prices to inshore fishermen for 1968?

Mr. Speaker: I submit that the question the hon. member is asking is similar in nature to questions asked by other hon. members and will be taken into account by the minister.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR SMALL PRODUCERS POLICY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask the minister whether the small producers of milk and butterfat who cannot qualify under the present policy, which is favourable to the large producers, may expect a policy announcement from the government, the result of which might mean a boost in their income position since they cannot qualify for subsidies while the larger producers can.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is in order only to the extent that the hon. member is asking whether a statement will be made.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I repeat that a statement will be made before the first of April.

Mr. Korchinski: Will it affect the people I have mentioned?

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DRYING OPERATION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture as a follow-up of an earlier question asked today. On February 24 I asked the minister if he could provide the house with information as to the amount of grain to be dried on prairie farms at that time. He informed the house that a survey was being made and that he would be in a position to provide the information. I should like to ask him now whether he can provide this information and whether he will do so before the house recesses for Easter.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can give the house some indication of the estimates that have been made, but I would caution my hon. friend that these are estimates. It is very difficult to make an estimate of this kind with accuracy, because there is a considerable number of places where this grain has been stored, and indeed where it has been dried.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, my question was whether the minister would provide the information.

Mr. Olson: I would be very happy to send my hon. friend the estimates we have now, and he can sort them out in his own mind and decide which ones are accurate.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gleave: It is on a point of order or a point of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I am not averse to providing the house with some humour, but I am asking the minister for information. I am quite able to sort out in my mind the situation in western Canada at any time, but I am asking the minister for the result of the survey which he said was being made and the progress that is being made in this regard, because this is an urgent matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In order to help out the minister, are there 83,287,262 bushels in the province of Saskatchewan as yet undried?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; surely the minister, who has intimated to the house that a survey is being made and that he will give the information to the house, should not be allowed now merely to tell a member that he will send him some information and he can sort it out. Surely the house is entitled to the information which the minister has collected. If the minister wants to add an addendum to the effect that the figures are only estimates and he cannot guarantee their accuracy—that is done with most government statistics and is taken for granted—all right, but surely the minister has a right to say he will make a statement on motions and tell the house when he proposes to give this information.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I will attempt to put these estimates together and make a statement within the next few days which will be as helpful as possible.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the James Richardson Newsletter has provided a fairly complete summary of the situation would he consult with his colleague the Minister without Portfolio from Winnipeg South?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell us if the fact of reminding the house too often and of telling the Canadian public that we have bad wheat, mouldy wheat, proves an obstacle when the time comes to sell wheat abroad?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed from Thursday, March 20, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Thursday, March 20, clause 20 was under consideration.

On Clause 20—Definitions.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed the interesting debate on the setting up of the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Before commenting on the department I should like to spend a few minutes outlining some great economic problems facing Canada today.

We in this great country are fortunate to be living at peace with our neighbours and the world. Canada is a very rich nation and our standard of living is one of the highest in the world. Despite our great wealth, abundant resources and high standard of living, there are still many serious social problems which we have not solved. We have in our country widespread poverty, great regional disparities and a disgraceful unemployment rate. A brief outline of these problems might serve as a background for the need to set up the new department.

These problems will not all be solved by the measures contemplated in this bill to reorganize the departments of government. There is widespread poverty in Canada. The fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada outlines it very clearly. In fact, it clearly sets out the picture in a 37-page review of the problem. The leading paragraph on this subject reads as follows:

> Poverty in Canada is real. Its numbers are not in the thousands, but the millions. There is more of it than our society can tolerate, more than our economy can afford, and far more than existing measures and efforts can cope with. Its persistence, at a time when the bulk of Canadians enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world, is a disgrace.

I would like to give a few facts on the extent of poverty in our nation. The lowest 20 per cent of non-farm families received an average annual income in 1965 of $2,263, representing 6.7 per cent of the total income for that year. The average should have been 20 per cent. The next 20 per cent received an average income of $4,542, or 13.4 per cent of the total income.

An answer to a question in the house not too long ago indicated there had been a very recent survey by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which indicated that 2,753,000 wage earners earn less than $3,000 per year. In reply to the same question the information was given that 997,000 wage earners in Canada have annual incomes between $3,000 and $4,000. These figures indicate that 3,750,000 wage earners, 55 per cent of the total, earn less than $4,000 per year. I agree that income statistics do not give us the entire picture, but they are a very good criterion as to how widespread the problem of poverty is.

There are interesting facts on the problem of regional disparity, the solving of which is one of the main objectives in the new legislation. The latest records for which we have adequate statistics set out quite clearly the terrible difference which exists between various regions in Canada. This is a good time to put the figures on the record again.

In the most recent period for which statistics are available, 1962-64, personal income per capita was $2,025 in Ontario, $1,521 in Quebec, $1,302 in Nova Scotia, $1,167 in New Brunswick, $1,115 in Prince Edward Island, and $1,007 in Newfoundland. This clearly indicates the need for action on the problem of regional disparity. The people of the province with the lowest income receive less than half the per capita income of the people of the province with the best income.

The next point I would like to raise in connection with the subject of poverty is unemployment. As other speakers have pointed out, we have been made aware of this by the Economic Council of Canada. On numerous occasions the council has urged the government to set a maximum limit of not more than 3 per cent. Currently more than 6 per cent of our working force is unemployed. In areas such as the Atlantic provinces the figure is over 10 per cent. In the province of Quebec it is over 8 per cent. In my own province of British Columbia it is well over 6 per cent. This, again, is a tragedy so far as Canada is concerned.

We have three problems in this respect, over-all poverty, the extreme disparity between regions, and unemployment, upon which we are all trying to focus attention. Having briefly outlined these problems I should like to discuss one or two aspects of setting up the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Again, Mr. Chairman, I point out to hon. members and the minister in particular that just changing the name of the department will not bring success. We must be prepared to make major changes in our approach to these problems. We must make major changes in a variety of fields.

[Mr. Harding.]

This department could play a major role in solving many of the economic problems facing us at the present time, especially those involving regional disparity in areas where sufficient economic expansion has not taken place. I say again that unless the government is prepared to make drastic changes in its former plans and policies the new department will fall far short of the goals which everyone would like to see achieved.

In 1963 the government carried out a reorganization of departments. The results were not very beneficial, and now another reshuffle is to take place. For example, Bill C-173 brings industry, trade and commerce together in one department. They should never have been separated in the first instance. However, I hope that the reorganization of a number of government departments will result in more co-ordination and efficiency than we have experienced in the past.

The idea of one department being responsible for attempting to eliminate regional economic disparities is a sound one. Our party has been urging it for years. It could at least prevent the costly duplication of attempted services by a number of different agencies. The minister himself showed how costly the lack of co-ordinated action has been so far as the Canadian taxpayers are concerned. The minister pointed out that since 1963 we have spent over $1 billion on various programs, and he estimated we have wasted about half this amount.

As I said before, for years our party has called for over-all direction, co-ordination and planning in every government program so as to make them fully effective. There has never been such co-ordination, as the minister frankly admits. The federal government has never allocated sufficient financial resources to really come to grips with the problem of regional disparity. Now that one department will be in charge of and responsible for such programs, I have no hesitation in endorsing the legislation setting up the department.

The increase in departmental expenditures of approximately $37 million this year means there will not be too great a departure from past policies and programs which have attempted to deal with regional disparities. This must be apparent to everyone, because if more regions are to be brought under the plan the budget should be sharply increased in order to meet the correspondingly greater need.

I would like now to speak very generally about the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The department is to take over the designated area program and several other federal programs such as ARDA, the Atlantic Development Board, etc. We find that the total budget for 1969-70 is almost $192 million which represents an increase of $37 million over last year when we add the amounts which were allocated to the various programs being brought under the plan.

We find that under the designated area program established under the old legislation benefits were available for secondary processing or manufacturing industries but not for primary industries. Benefits under the designated area program, which I understand will be in effect for some time even under the new legislation, included capital costs amounting to one-third of those under $250,000, one-quarter of those under $1 million, and one-fifth of those over $1 million to a maximum of $5 million. They also included depreciation allowance.

Under the designated area program there was no assistance for the tourist industry. I understand this is being considered under the new legislation. I am convinced that the tourist industry should be included in any new plan because it has tremendous potential in many areas which are currently classed as regions of disparity. I urge that it be included in the regulations which will be set up under the new department.

For the new department to be successful it must avoid the obvious mistakes made in the past because of the lack of a planned and co-ordinated policy. For the new department to be successful there must be full co-ordination at three levels of government. There must be full co-ordination at the federal level. In my opinion, this entails three distinct steps. First, I believe there should be a formulation and consideration of consistent programs as they affect or are directed toward regionally balanced growth. Second, there must be communication and delegation of authority to federal regional departments. This is essential in a country as vast as ours and it will cut the red tape often found in a central office. If we do not have communication and delegation of authority to federal regional departments, we will find that the program will not be as effective as it should be.

The third point is that there must be a meshing together of specific operations by federal departments and agencies within a region. Again I repeat that this is absolutely essential for full results. Let me give one example. It does not apply to the new department which has not yet been set up. I have been dealing with a problem in the Creston area where three federal government departments were doing various jobs. On checking with the departments I found that each of them does not know what the others have been doing or what their object is in spending money in a certain area. To me this is nonsense and is one of the reasons that many of our programs have failed miserably in the past.

The second area of co-operation must be at the provincial level, and again I contend that this is another necessary ingredient for the success of the program. I feel it is absolutely essential. If there is a failure to co-ordinate the provincial and federal roles in the setting up of projects and the carrying out of programs, we will find that the result will be little short of disastrous. I suggest also that provincial agencies, especially in the regional areas affected, must also be delegated sufficient authority to deal quickly and adequately with most problems. In my view this is a lesser problem at the provincial than at the federal level.

The third area where there must be full co-operation is at the regional and municipal level. Again, to be successful the programs must have the co-operation and the backing of the various municipal and regional groups in the entire area. This includes, of course, the various organizations in these designated areas. In addition to having the support of the organizations they must have the backing of the general public.

I should like to make it clear that I feel the inescapable alternative to effective consultation and co-ordination among the federal, provincial and municipal levels is conflict, confusion, waste, frustration and the ultimate failure of the policy. There must be continous and effective liaison between the federal and provincial levels if the program outlined by the minister is to be fully successful. There are a number of other problems which I would like to raise in connection with regional development. I do not think you can just outline a series of programs unless you are prepared to take other steps. Canada needs a great deal of capital to help finance some of these projects. This is where the need for a Canada Development Corporation arises. The corporation could make sure that funds were available to help supply the needs of the various industries which may be set up in some of these areas. I am thinking particularly of some of the new growth areas which we will have to study closely.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. Is there agreement to allow the hon. member to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harding: I had some other material but I would appreciate another minute or two to complete my remarks. I was going to speak about the Canadian Council on Rural Development but I will let that go until another time. However, I would like to say a word or two about the problem in my own area of Kootenay West. Officials from that area have approached the minister and his department asking that the area be brought under the plan. Currently the area is not classed as one that needs assistance under the area incentive program. But today there is a great need for assistance and direction.

I should like to point out to the minister that it is a good growth potential area. Groups are already working in the Nelson, Trail, Creston and Castlegar areas with the hope that some assistance and direction will be given by the department. The municipalities are keenly interested in the problem. Two regional districts have been set up for several years. The have already done some surveys and planning, and I feel it is essential that the new department assist these areas in the job of planning and bringing in new industries. If this is not done, we will find that in a few years there will be other slow growth regions. This is something that we can and should avoid, and this is why I stress above all things the absolute need for complete co-operation and co-ordination among all levels of government but most of all among the various agencies of the federal government. If the program fails, it could well founder on the lack of a properly co-ordinated policy within the framework of the federal government.

I suggest to the minister that his department give utmost priority to this consideration. If we are to get a full return for the dollars spent, this is one aspect which must certainly be considered. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, for allowing me these extra few minutes.

[Mr. Harding.]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to be able to say a few words in this debate.

I was very glad that the previous speaker was given a few extra minutes because it indicates that the house is in a rather genial mood today, as it was all day yesterday when the majority of speakers from all parties were allowed a few minutes beyond their allotted time. I think this is a good thing because the legislation before us is most important.

Before proceeding with my remarks I would like to say to the minister that some weeks ago when we were discussing other legislation in the house which the minister was piloting the minister, as the result of some unkind words I said regarding his activities in connection with that legislation, became rather disturbed and irked and his blood pressure went up, as does the blood pressure of most of us at such times. However, today he looks calm and collected and does not appear to be upset. In fact he is genial and serene, and I hope he will not take anything I say too much to heart.

I do not intend to go into great detail on this legislation dealing with the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion other than to point out that if the elimination of economic disparities is desirable it is equally desirable that all the tools for that purpose be placed in the same hands. So far as the minister is concerned, this bill places the tools in his hands. It remains to be seen whether he can finish the job. Even if he only starts it, that will be something.

The bill is a perfect example of the way in which government action leads to an increasing commitment of public funds with no appreciable increase in benefits. However, no one objects to a commitment of public funds as long as we get results. The department, as would appear from the estimates for 1969-70, seems to include what formerly came under ARDA and P.F.R.A., plus a few other scattered programs, with the National Capital Commission thrown in as political makeweight, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, some remnants of the Department of Labour not quite defunct, and various powers and authorities formerly under the Department of Industry. It will also include the Atlantic Development Board which now finds itself reduced to being a mere sounding board. In pursuance of this reorganization the new department will, we are told:

1. Encourage economic expansion in regions where growth is lagging.

2. Prepare development plans and programs.

3. Recommend special areas for action to improve economic growth.

4. Enter into agreements with the provinces to provide for economic expansion.

5. Build up the economic infrastructure of areas.

6. Provide special incentives to commercial undertakings.

These various programs will cost Canadian taxpayers approximately $150 million this year—evidence of a fairly dramatic expansion. Under this government we have seen the inauguration of direct grants to industries through the area development incentives program, and in 1967 the ceiling was raised to $200 million.

The hon. member for Halton yesterday spoke about the migration of young people from the Atlantic provinces. I shall have something to say about that, but before doing so may I comment that the present government spawns new departments like mushrooms in a damp basement. Problems cannot be solved simply by changing nameplates on doors. Nothing has been done for our young people. There has been no leadership, no policy. We see a generation of young people whom we have allowed to be assaulted by narcotics, bombarded by propaganda, overcome by violence, intimidated by mobs. And we think we have done right by them. Meanwhile, the government goes on walking in its sleep.

In spite of constant reorganization and reshuffling, no attention has been paid to the challenge of youth, none to the demands for the expansion and development of natural resources. The most serious situation in this country today is that created by the lack of challenge for young people. This bill does not deal with the problem. It adds nothing new. It takes existing divisions and sections and rearranges them. This is the third or fourth government reorganization since 1963. We have seen reorganization piled upon reorganization, reshuffling on top of reshuffling. The Department of Industry came on the scene with a great fanfare of trumpets. It has apparently been a colossal failure and is to be buried within the Department of Trade and Commerce. Now we are setting up a department which is to carry on the policy of making grants to industries to enable them to establish themselves in certain areas or to stay in areas where they are already established. The news handout from the minister's office puts it this way:

> The area development incentives program is to continue, but additional assistance will be available if special circumstances make it necessary to help a commercial undertaking establish, expand, or modernize in a special area. Such additional assistance will be available only if it is essential to the implementation of a development plan.

This seems to imply that there are some reservations. The suggestion is that the area development program will go on and that grants will be made to industry though perhaps under more restrictions than formerly. In the case of a department which will be spending large amounts of public money it is well not to begin operations under reservations or without a clear idea of what is entailed, what the purposes are, and what methods are to be followed. After all, the policy behind this department is one of direct intervention in and interference with the economy. There is nothing new in this. It is being done in the form of incentives rather than by way of compulsion. If it were being done by compulsion, it would amount to straight regimentation. Instead, it may represent a kind of fiscal regimentation. Whatever the philosophy behind it is, we should be clear about the likely effects of what is proposed. This is one of the problems raised by the bill before us; there is no clear indication of how effective the procedure is likely to prove.

Let us face the fact that under the area development incentives programs brought in by the government 18 months ago the procedure proved ineffective. We know it has been ineffective because the minister said so himself. Yet this same procedure is now to be employed by the new department. The area development incentives program is to be carried on, according to the statement from the minister's office, and direct grants are to be made to industrial organizations to persuade them to do what the government thinks they should be doing. This is a situation calculated to cause some misgiving in the light of the minister's statement during the federal-provincial constitutional conference. I draw attention to the following report which appeared in the Globe and Mail of February 13, not long ago:

> The Area Development Act provides for grants to industries which establish in sections designated by the federal government as slow growth areas.

Mr. Marchand said the legislation had not worked as expected. Some industries which had benefited from the incentives would have moved to the area without them. Others had overexpanded as a result of the incentives.

The minister will no doubt remember those remarks and certainly those who witnessed his appearance on television will recall them. I continue to quote from this account in order to refresh his memory:

Mr. Marchand said the federal government's future regional development programs would concentrate on identifying regional growth centres and stress development in them.

He said the policy would mean that other small centres in the same region could not expect the same assistance and called on the provincial premiers to help him sell the program to the people.

Further, the article states—this is very interesting and I am reading it because of its importance:

We need political strength to resist pressure. All the villages, all the small towns in Canada want to have industries, want us to spend money for infrastructure, and so forth—

Previous federal efforts in regional development had often spread money too thinly and tried to cover too large a territory. It was necessary to take into account natural economic forces and concentrate efforts in a few natural growth centres.

This gives an idea of the approach being taken by the minister and his department. It is an interesting and significant one and it is of great relevance to the consideration of this bill. For two years, according to the minister, we have been following an accelerated program of handing out money to industry for the purpose of stimulating expansion in slow growth areas. The program has not worked because industries are in many cases more interested in suiting their own requirements than in participating in government economic plans. This is not entirely unexpected. In effect, the minister is saying that despite the fact his policy and programs did not achieve the desired result they are to be repeated on an even bigger scale. At least, this is what it sounds like. I hope this is not really what the minister is saying because I have too much respect for the hon. gentleman as a man of constructive ideas, and as a trade unionist, to want to see him led down the garden path.

Surely we should be able to get a clearer picture from the minister and the department. We have been told, in effect, that to a large extent industry will go its own way regardless of government incentives which may be offered. Today, it appears that the government, or its experts, or the brains behind the minister, have decided that because of the difficulties attached to getting industry to conform to patterns laid down in Ottawa, the department is to select certain areas where growth is already manifesting itself and move in there. This looks to me like following the path of least resistance. Surely it ought not to take a whole new department and the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars to decide we should go into natural growth areas, areas in which I presume growth is already taking place, to spend money.

The minister asked the premiers to help him sell the program to the people. I am asking the minister to sell the program to this house, to dispel some of the doubts engendered by his own statements and by statements emanating from his department.

I would also like to hear what the minister means by economic infrastructure. That phrase appears in his statement and in the statement issued by his department and, like charity, it seems to cover a multitude of sins. It is important that we should all be talking about the same things. I would like to know, in addition to the grants to industry, grants to provinces and arrangements with provinces, what additional undertakings are implied by the word "infrastructure". How far is the government going under this legislation? What kind of economic infrastructure is envisaged? Are we talking about facilities, transport, roads, railways? I think we should be very clear on what we are discussing, and I would ask the minister to deal with some of these points when he replies.

What we should have is a very clear picture of how these powers will be applied and how these functions will be exercised. We were able to spend very large sums in the last few years without securing the desired results, but let us not repeat that process. If we are going to simply follow the line of least resistance and go where growth already exists and industries are already established, then where is the case for this new department?

One of the dangerous and negative developments in this government has been to allow nature to take its course and simply speed up the process. That is not policy; it is simply greasing the skids, as the government is doing in the case of the eastern Canada farmer.

This is another area where the government has fallen down completely. Again we have organization and reorganization. We have had enough paper programs to ensure the prosperity of the paper industry for many years to come, but little assistance for the farmer. The way in which farmers in Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces have been written off under this government's policies is an utter scandal. In pursuit of the policy of creating an urban proletariat the government has given the eastern farmer the choice between starving or lining up in city welfare offices. We now have the most recent study of the Atlantic Development Board forecasting further declines in agriculture in the Atlantic provinces. We did not need a special study to tell us what everybody knew. This government is now specializing in the obvious. It is all right to produce study upon study, report upon report, task force after task force, reorganization after reorganization, but when are we going to have some solutions? Farming in the Atlantic provinces has been reduced by half the number of farms since 1961. Is this a record of which the government can be proud? Their whole policy is negative and destructive. It does not require genius and the expenditure of millions to tell the farmers to get off the farm. The government should be producing policies to help the farmer stay on the farm, such as the establishment of agricultural institutions and vocational training schools in rural areas, building better roads, giving assistance in marketing products and so on.

No one can tell me that a farm family is better off on welfare, adding to the total of urban poor, than on their own land. Yet the policies of this government have followed the incredibly fatuous course of thinking that the farm problem can be solved by adding to the urban poor. They have now decided that the problem of the urban poor can be solved by wiping out government housing projects. They have decided the problem of slow growth can be solved by concentrating on the fast growth areas.

This government produces high-sounding policies and programs, the net result of which is to aid and abet the destruction of our society. The government has done absolutely nothing about the rural poor, the urban poor, the homeless, the farmer on his land a prey to the high-tax, high-spending inflation spawned by a government incredibly mediocre in performance and execution. Canada cannot long stand being saddled with policies having as their aim the destruction of a whole class of people, the self-employed in this nation.

When one considers that, according to the Atlantic Development Board, the total number of maritime farms decreased from 52,600 to 24,700 in the ten years prior to 1966, then one has an idea of the scope of the problem. We have had huge, pretentious, expensive programs aimed at the eastern Canada farmer, programs that remained largely paper programs, and the best thing the government hs has been able to do is to tell the farmer to get off the farm and line up in a welfare office in the city. The same course is being followed in the Atlantic provinces with regard to the fishing industry.

It does not take massive programs and huge commitments of funds simply to follow the current; we have got to have development programs. What we need is a department and a minister to push such programs, particularly in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

Achievement will not result from simply following the line of least resistance. I say to the minister that success in this field will not come instantly. It will be a long and perhaps painful process. It can be achieved only by orienting in one administrative capacity the various authorities required to bring about profound economic transformation. The minister is being given the power; I know he will do everything he can to use it constructively and wisely.

By this bill, as I understand it, the minister is given authority over agricultural development through ARDA, P.F.R.A., Maritime marshland rehabilitation, the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, and so on. He will thus be responsible for rural development and will have the legislative power and authority to produce effective programs. He will have the power to encourage industry to go into areas where it is needed to provide employment. He will have the facilities to bring about widespread economic rehabilitation of lagging areas.

In the exercise of those powers, in the eradication of rural blight and the stimulation of economic expansion, the minister can count on the sympathy and understanding of every member of this house, particularly those from the Atlantic provinces where unfortunately regional disparity has its home. In that respect I must express my regret at the downgrading of the Atlantic Development Board and its demotion to an advisory body. I hope the minister will see fit to give every encouragement to this body to examine into and recommend solutions to the economic problems of the maritime and Atlantic region.

I should like to say to the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that I was most pleased to hear of his appointment of Professor Smith as chairman of the new board.

We have seen what can be done in the example of the way Sysco has been functioning under provincial management. To the uninitiated, Sysco is the Sydney Steel Corporation, a crown corporation set up by the Nova Scotia provincial government. If we had half a dozen Syscos in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, our economic problems would be infinitely less serious. Unfortunately, we have not. Perhaps with the full power of this legislation behind him the minister can take steps to bring that about.

At this time I should like publicly to go on record as lauding the accomplishments and being very enthused about the efforts of the steelworkers at the steel plant in Sydney, as well as the union and management. The fine work they have done since taking over and operating the steel mill at Sydney has made it, through co-operation, the success it has been.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): We know what eastern Canada and other parts of Canada went through under Dosco, the Dominion Steel and Coal Company. It nauseates me even to mention Dosco so I will say no more about it at this point.

• (12:50 p.m.)

In conclusion I should like to say to the minister that once the department is launched and commences operation I hope he and the department will not embark upon a great series of studies, because it is doubtful whether any area of the earth's surface has been studied as much as have the maritime provinces by successive federal governments. There have been studies on every aspect of flora and fauna of the Atlantic and maritime provinces. There have been oyster studies, shrimp studies, frozen groundfish studies, bloater studies, studies on coal, on the tourist industry, on family formation, on agriculture, on every aspect of social and economic life in those historic provinces. We have been practically studied to death. As a newsman stated the other day when writing about these studies, the poor lobster has been studied so many times by successive governments that this has caused the lobster when mobile to move in reverse.

It would not be accurate to say that the studies have produced nothing. They have produced mountains of paper. The maritimes would have benefited more from government action if the government had decided to bring about even a 20 per cent reduction in freight rates. We did not need all these studies. According to a return tabled the other day in answer to a question by the tireless hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North on the subject of studies, hundreds of economic and social studies have been undertaken since confederation. In the field of agriculture there have been 54, in fisheries, 38, in rural development and forestry, 22, and in trade and commerce, 4. Two transportation studies have been undertaken and we have had 13 royal commissions and other commissions. Altogether there have been 133 studies, reports, commissions and investigations of one kind or another in the Atlantic region since confederation.

Before I resume my seat may I say to the minister: for heaven's sake, do not begin another series of studies and task forces. Surely the government has enough information to be able to act. We want the minister and his new department to bring about a rejuvenation of the Atlantic provinces, and our people will assist him in his task. We want industry and we want assistance, but do not think of us as poor cousins who want to cry on the shoulders of the rest of Canada. The Atlantic provinces have contributed to confederation in a great many ways. I wish the Minister every success in his endeavours with his new department and look forward to his co-operation.

Mr. Marshall: Could Your Honour call it one o'clock?

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to speak for about five minutes and if the committee would consent to my speaking at this time I could be out of the way, so to speak.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We would not want that to happen.

Mr. McCleave: I thank the hon. member for his interjection and hope it is recorded in Hansard.

The point I wish to raise concerns the continuing smooth flow of certain operations which may be interrupted as a result of the demise of the Atlantic Development Board and the setting up of the new department. I raised this matter the other day during the oral question period and I wish to reinforce my argument at this time. It is important for the provinces to know exactly what sort of assistance is to be provided under programs that the Atlantic Development Board has carried on in the past. For example, federal sharing in the cost of highway construction has brought tremendous advantages to Nova Scotia and to other provinces as well, no doubt. The minister ought to answer immediately whether past programs are to be continued, because plans for highway construction are usually well under way by this time of year and the actual work is carried out mainly in the summer and fall.

I hope the minister will listen to the good words of advice in the swan song of the Atlantic Development Board to the effect that programs should not be allowed to grind to a halt and that there should be a quick transition in responsibilities so that the new department may carry on the work of the Atlantic Development Board. We hope that the minister will reply to this question today. Will he also indicate whether another important recommendation of the Atlantic Development Board dealing with the metropolitan water supply for Halifax and Dartmouth will be proceeded with, as the board suggested during its last meeting it ought to be? Of course, the board has made other recommendations to the government about various projects, some of which have still not been acted on. I urge the minister to say today whether those programs, carried out by the Atlantic Development Board, which have been of great assistance to Atlantic Canada are to be continued.

The Chairman: Order, please. The time being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about this bill and to commend the government for having introduced it. I think I should first state that I am quite happy to see the very wide powers which are being given to the minister. I am glad this legislation does not tie him down too much as previous legislation tied down ministers responsible for regional development.

Before getting into the burden of my remarks I would like to say a few words about the former area development agency and to indicate some of the difficulties associated with it, particularly as they affected my constituency and the region from which I come. My first criticism is that it was far too inflexible a piece of legislation. Boundaries were set by the Canada Manpower agency boundaries, and often these had little or nothing to do with the economic regions around them. Consequently a variety of situations arose in which bordering areas lost employment and manpower to areas which, through a quirk of fate, came under the area development agency.

In addition, the former A.D.A. did not take into consideration the local resources which were available in the various regions. It was a universal program. It was not really designed to seek out areas which had something to offer if only they could get a spark of help. It was reasonably successful in rural areas which happened to be designated in isolation and had no competing areas near them.

My third criticism of this program is that it was directed almost wholly to urban and industrial areas and did not really take into consideration the difficulties which rural communities have in attempting to attract some form of development to them. It is a fact that the program was most successful in those areas which were close to urban communities that had a substantial urban industrial base.

I know that when the minister took office in his new portfolio the first thing he did was to amend the A.D.A. legislation in such a way as to permit growth centres within regions to participate in the area development program. I think it is a legitimate criticism of the former program that where you had a growth centre in a particular region it was excluded from the benefits available under the area development agency. This situation has now been corrected. Now that growth centres seem to be the latest economic panacea we will see if this idea works as well as its professorial theorists seem to think it will.

I understand that new legislation will be brought down, hopefully by the end of June, to redesign the area development agency program. I hope that when this legislation does appear it will be far more flexible than the former legislation. The reason for this is simply that all parts of Canada are not equal. In the regional distinctions which must be made, or in the provincial distinctions, there are a variety of conditions with which the legislation must deal. I think one example will suffice to show this. That example would be the situation in the maritime provinces, say, Nova Scotia, where almost all of Nova Scotia with the exception of Halifax was designated under the former legislation. Now that Halifax has been included, I think the program has a chance of being some good to Nova Scotia.

But in the area of northwestern Ontario, which is part of a very large province, there was no designation at all, and because great areas in Manitoba were designated industry which might have been attracted to our area flowed to Manitoba. In addition, the province of Manitoba at that time had a particularly vigorous development fund which worked against what we considered to be our interests.

The problem in one case was that the whole province of Nova Scotia was committed to a program of regional or provincial development, whereas in the case of large provinces like Ontario and Quebec large areas were ignored, sometimes because of internal problems within the provinces. When this new legislation is brought down I hope it will have sufficient flexibility to recognize these very real problems and distinctions that are found in the various parts of our country.

In returning to the legislation before us I should like to say that I am quite pleased with the powers given the minister under clauses 25 and 26. In particular, under clause 25, subclause 2, I am happy to see that the minister not only is given permission to cooperate with the provinces but also the clause provides for the participation of persons, voluntary groups, agencies and bodies within these regions. I say that because recently in the province of Ontario the government tabled a series of 13 regional development programs. One of these programs concerns the area of northwestern Ontario. It is entitled "A Five-Year Development Program For Northwestern Ontario", and was produced by the Northwestern Ontario Development Council.

Basically the primary recommendation of this study is that there be a public corporation strongly financed by the province to spearhead a massive effort to expand the region's economy and population. This corporation, modelled somewhat, I believe, along the lines of the Atlantic Development Board, would have the power to designate growth areas, general use areas, highways and roads and would have power to provide incentives for industrial expansion. It would promote a regional consciousness and spirit and encompass other activities related to the betterment of the northwestern part of Ontario. It was suggested that the executive or board of directors would be appointed half by northwestern Ontario municipalities and half by the provincial government, with capital provided, of course, by the provincial authority and/or, I would add, the federal authority because I believe it is quite clear the federal government will have to participate in this project if it goes ahead.

In our area we are also awaiting the report of an ARDA study which was commenced about two years ago under the federal-provincial ARDA agreement. When this project is completed, we hope some time in September, we expect we will have for northwestern Ontario a basis on which we can develop a sensible regional and economic development plan. I would be the first to admit that this will not solve all our problems. Indeed, I think there must be a considerable restructuring of local government into a regional form. There must be some power which has authority to control land use and bring about proper development patterns. Something must be done about the increasing multitude of municipalities with which we have to deal and which I think tend to weaken us economically, socially and politically.

In retracing my steps a little, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read to you the goals set up for the Northwestern Ontario Development Study:

1. Northwestern Ontario should seek to increase its population as rapidly as possible.

2. This population should be concentrated as nearly as is socially and economically possible, given the requirements for new economic activity, in as few urban centres as is possible.

3. The region should achieve a level of socio-economic excellence second to none.

I might say that these goals were not created by the consulting firm which did the study but instead were the result of a series of teach-ins, if I might use that term, at the Quetico training centre and in the various communities which make up northwestern Ontario. I think these are goals to which all the people of northwestern Ontario subscribe. I believe also that the concept of a public development corporation is accepted by the people of northwestern Ontario.

It is quite clear to me that the provincial and the federal governments have not enjoyed the very close co-operation one might expect in the growth of a new and developing economic structure in a region such as northwestern Ontario. In Ontario, at the present time, we have reached the point of absurdity in that we have the federal government's area development program operating under certain guidelines, but since this program was not accepted by the people of Ontario the provincial government was constrained to bring forward its program for equal opportunity. The result is that the provincial government and the federal government are both providing subsidies to industries locating all over Ontario with the exception, I believe, of within a 50-mile radius of metropolitan Toronto. Here we have the two governments not acting in concert but operating on a different basis with the consequence that neither program really has produced the results we had hoped for.

If the northwestern Ontario five-year development program is accepted by the province, it would seem to me that there would have to be very close co-ordination between the provincial and federal governments. I hope the minister will not take the attitude that was outlined in respect of ARDA. I believe one of the great defects of the ARDA program was that the areas which needed help were those which suffered most from depopulation or which suffered from an outflow of population. To some extent these areas lack the ability to self-start by producing the kind of pressure on governments which cannot easily be ignored. In addition, the problem is intensified by the great political divisions which exist within these regions. It is impossible for members of parliament and provincial members to properly represent all aspects of the areas simply because of the built-in conflicts in the size of the ridings.

I hope the minister will be much more aggressive than his predecessor. I hope he will seek out areas which require assistance and see that they are given assistance so that this development program may help them grow and make a contribution to the whole of Canada. Up until this time this has not been the case.

I do not like to be parochial in a debate of this kind. Nevertheless there is one other aspect of this matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. I feel that the hon. member for Hull will agree with me that this is a problem in his area also. I want to speak about the situation in Kenora-Rainy River because of its location on the periphery of Ontario. We are closer in some aspects to the province of Manitoba than we are to the province of Ontario. Our economic and social connections are with Manitoba but our political connections are with the province of Ontario. To some extent this is a condition which will not be solved easily. Nevertheless it is a real factor in respect of our existence in northwestern Ontario.

An hon. Member: Separate.

Mr. Reid: I will get to that later. For example, it is easier to get to my riding from Winnipeg than it is from the Lakehead. In many ways we feel cut off and isolated. We have the feeling that it is impossible for us to do what we want to do for ourselves. When the minister is involved in developing these regional programs I hope that he, the officials of his department and the provinces concerned will look into this problem very seriously when formulating policies. One very serious defect in the Northwestern Ontario Development Council's study is that it does not take into consideration this very real fact of life in Kenora-Rainy River. It completely ignores it. This is not a reflection on the consultants who did the study; it must be pointed out that it was not part of their terms of reference and consequently they did not consider it.

One other aspect with which I should like to deal concerns the question of regional communications. It seems to me that before one can develop an economic plan for a region or even reorganize on a regional basis there must be some form of regional communication. In the case of northwestern Ontario as a whole there are none. There is not one radio link which covers all of northwestern Ontario. There is not one television link which covers all of northwestern Ontario. There is not one paper which covers all of northwestern Ontario as a basis for the people to obtain their regional information.

It seems to me that if the minister is serious about regional economic problems, he will also have to take a hand in fashioning regional development communications. I know this is an area in which the C.B.C. could play a role and in which the minister could use his good offices, if I may use that expression, to encourage regional link-ups so that communication can flow throughout the various regions. There is no sense trying to do this type of programming in a vacuum. There must be communication between all areas so that they know what is going on. If you can communicate from one area to another, you can very often break down the local parochialism which very often slows down development programs, no matter how carefully worked out. I regard this as a great priority in northwestern Ontario.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to say I am quite pleased with this bill. I am delighted with the way it has been prepared in that it has a minimum of restriction on the minister and gives him the maximum of opportunity to refashion many of our rural areas. I am delighted with the prospect of new legislation with regard to the area development program. This legislation should be flexible, taking into account the regional difficulties in this country. The minister must pursue his objectives with vigour. His programs should always work in concert with provincial ones.

If this type of regional program is successful, I am quite certain it will not be necessary for northwestern Ontario or Kenora-Rainy River to separate from the province of Ontario and establish a new province or join with Manitoba. We will be able to do the job we want to do, provided the two senior levels of government, federal and provincial, give us the tools we require.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to speak today and offer my comments on that portion of Bill C-173 dealing with the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It is not my intention to criticize the intent of the government in creating this new department. The idea is good. I have said so time and again when speaking to my constituents, but I am getting very impatient with the tardiness of the government in implementing some of the programs which they keep preaching about and the words of wisdom they expound which they say will cure the ills of regional disparity. The programs they are introducing are good. They were good programs under the Department of Forestry and Rural Development and the mere changing of the name is not suddenly, as if with a magic wand, going to accomplish the aims and objectives of these programs.

I have tried to take a serious interest in all phases of the government's policies with regard to rural development since coming to parliament because it was my sincere opinion and belief that the incentive programs under the act were of real value to the provinces in the Atlantic region, especially to the province of Newfoundland where incentive programs to lift the economy are so critically required. In the six or seven months that I have been here I have tried to gather together as much information as possible with regard to the Department of Forestry and Rural Development to determine the application of its benefits to those areas of Canada where these programs are best suited.

In the past six months I have obtained considerable information in the form of pamphlets, booklets, studies and reports, each one of them compiled or written by the supposedly greatest brains in the country, stating how to overcome regional disparity and how to develop natural resources. Almost daily I receive notices of experts, professors and scientists being brought in by the government to solve all of our problems. Mr. Chairman, the mandarins are coming! The government is stealing industrial experts from firms across the country to advise the government. Almost daily I receive copies of speeches made across the country by the Prime Minister, the minister of the department and also by those ministers who try to get into the act at every opportunity. If I quoted from all of them it would take me all day. I will quote from just a few recent ones. At the federal-provincial conference the Prime Minister stated:

> A new constitution for Canada should start by stating objectives ... and one of them should be to promote equality of opportunity for all Canadians in whatever region they may live—

Yesterday the minister amplified that statement when he said that everyone should be able to earn a living comparable in standard from sea to sea. When speaking about this new department the Prime Minister also stated:

> This will mean establishment of a department charged with the objectives of ensuring that people in all areas and regions of our country have as equal access as possible to the opportunities of Canada's economic development.

They have all the answers, Mr. Chairman. They have been preaching words of wisdom for many years. I have all the answers in my office, but they are only on paper. They are in beautifully bound pamphets which are written in the most glowing terms. I have pamphlets on regional planning for depressed areas, establishing new regional organizations, stimulants to social development in slow growth regions, the Canada land inventory, water development, the role of education in rural development, the ARDA program in relation to recreation and tourism, views on rural development in Canada special study 1, special 2 and all the numbers, the second report on regional development and many more.

I have most of the incentive programs, such as incentives for industrial location, the Canada development agency, municipal development loan boards, the Atlantic Development Board, the Industrial Development Bank, and small business loans. They also have the answers on productivity in agriculture, farming and fishing. They are all on paper, Mr. Chairman. The government has its new programs and also M.M.R.A., P.F.R.A., ARDA, ADA and FRED. They have the whole family, Mr. Chairman, all on paper and maps.

Surely by now these programs have had their day in court. Royal commissions have finished their work, task forces have covered all the ground, and this is the time for action. But the government is again changing names, dialoguing the studying. Now there is a new word. The government is now interrogating.

Before doing anything about our own regions the government has gone looking for new ones. They found one in Latin America. They have gone junketing off to look at and solve the problems of other countries, but they have not solved their own. They are going to attempt to solve the problems of Venezuela, Peru, Colombia, Chile, Argentina and Brazil. But in their own backyard they are going to conduct more studies and more reviews. The government keeps insisting there is no money available to develop the poor provinces, but they have the money for foreign countries. They have money for the needs of Latin America for telecommunications, airport construction, mining, forestry and fishing equipment, hydroelectric equipment, grain storage facilities, pulp machinery, specialized aircraft, nuclear reactors, road and railway equipment and educational equipment. The government has found $75 million for a subway in Caracas, Venezuela, but they cannot afford a causeway for Prince Edward Island. They can find money for telecommunications in Latin America when communities in Newfoundland do not even have a telephone in this day and age of satellites. They keep closing down post offices in isolated communities even through they are the only source of communication. This is done to save money.

They can find money for the government of Paraguay to finance highway feasibility studies, to lend to the government of El Salvador for the construction of major ports. They can even find money to lend to the Central American Bank for Economic Integration to finance projects in Central America for highways, industrial parks and other things.

Two hundred and eight and a half million dollars have gone to countries in foreign aid. It is referred to as the flow of financial resources to less developed countries. I wish I could find the river they are talking about so I could change the current.

I like the terms the government of the day use when they speak of involvement. I refer again to the Prime Minister's speech. He said that any plan will not work without the close involvement of the people on the spot—the minister called it participation of local areas—and that the department in Ottawa needs the full involvement of local people just as much as they need the federal government's help. These are empty words.

Where is the $305 million FRED program promised for western Newfoundland? It was supposed to start last fall, according to the premier of that province. Then it was supposed to start this spring, and then it was to be delayed because of the pending change of the name of the department. Now I find that the new department will have to look at a new plan for Newfoundland. But where is the report that was presented by the province of Newfoundland to the federal government? How can the people get involved when they do not know the first thing about the projects that are contemplated? How can they participate when no one has asked them to do so? Why the secrecy in respect of the report? Let the people know so they can become involved, if that is the advice of the minister.

So far as Newfoundland is concerned, FRED is dead. The people of Newfoundland have suffered another disappointment. I understand that the Prime Minister will be in the province in the near future. I hope he will give them the reasons for cancelling the FRED program. I am sure that he will tell them about their human rights, that they should have the same opportunities as everyone from sea to sea. He will dialogue, he will tell them to get involved, he will probe and he will interrogate. I hope they listen, because they are just a little fed up with promises.

It is not my inclination to be so critical, but the people of Newfoundland are becoming impatient. I apologize for being parochial but I just have to be. I accept the principles of this new department and suggest to the minister that in the riding of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe there is a development potential which is tailor-made for his programs. I wish to emphasize that it has resources that will not mean handing out dollars with no return. I ask the minister to take a good, hard look at the natural resources of the province and make an investment which will return a hundredfold.

The west coast of the province of Newfoundland has resources which are not realized. It has a potential that, if exploited sensibly, could revitalize the economy of that province in all phases of development. But I hope the studies have all been done; I hope all the research is completed. We have had enough procrastination. What we need now in implementing regional economic expansion is action.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that many members on this side of the house have immense respect for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I am certainly one of those. Even that great character analyst, Judy LaMarsh, has had favourable words to say about the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, the new Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and if she had something favourable to say about him I suppose that in itself is an indication of something important. However, the fact that I have admiration and respect for and confidence in the minister does not mean that I do not have some rather harsh and critical things to say to him.

In the first place, I take exception to the statement the minister made yesterday during the introduction of this part of the bill. The minister said that the introduction of this legislation to form the new department was a very important occasion for Canadians. I think the bill in itself means absolutely nothing. What will become important are the policies and actual work carried out by the government in the course of the next few years with respect to the problem of regional disparities, particularly in income.

There is no point in saying that the organization of the new department is important when we know full well, as the previous speaker has just said, that in the past few years we have had rather impressive-looking legislation on the books which has not been translated into anything particularly effective. This has happened since 1964 or 1965. We know too, that the minister's predecessor in office, Maurice Sauvé, seemed to show a great amount of enthusiasm and idealism for the task he had of implementing the provisions of ARDA and FRED in order to halt the decline and stagnation of many rural areas of the country. But nothing substantial ever occurred; there can be no mistake about that.

The minister is as determined as his predecessor to deal with the problem of regional disparities, and I hope he is prepared to take a new approach. It seems to me that the new approach should include the following. First of all, when speaking to the legislation the minister said that the concept of the new department is one of global planning. In so far as rural areas are concerned, one assumes and hopes this will include the problem of agricultural policy in Canada.

I have said on previous occasions, and I say again with all the emphasis I can muster, that nothing effective will be done in the realm of rural development and the elimination of regional disparities until the government is prepared to come forward with a meaningful agricultural income policy. Such a policy is almost completely lacking. It is true that with regard to the dairy industry there is an income policy of sorts, but with respect to western grain production there is no income stabilization policy worthy of the name. Therefore there are in western Canada many areas, districts and even regions which are suffering from low incomes. This situation has resulted from the fact that there is no agricultural income policy in Canada.

For the entire post-war period there has been one extreme in the United States, that of agricultural commodities price support without limit. In Canada there has been another extreme, that of no agricultural commodities price support. Surely between the two extremes there is a median that an enlightened government would want to endorse and implement. No matter how many programs the government implements, no matter how often it changes the name of a department or how many civil servants it hires, nothing meaningful will be done by the government to cope with rural poverty as long as farm income remains a problem. Only when the problem of low farm income is dealt with can the residue of the problem be dealt with through FRED or ARDA. Let there be no mistake about that.

I sometimes have the sinking feeling that the government—I am sure this will not be true of the minister—over the past few years has, in the introduction of new legislation setting up a department, fund or agency under a new name, sought to buy time. Civil servants are dispatched to different parts of the country to conduct surveys and studies, and when that is not enough outside consultants are hired for the same purpose. Months and years go by, and when there is no hope of any continued stalling, lo and behold a new bill appears under a new name and they start off tabula rasa. In the meantime, the people living in these areas continue to live in the same economic circumstance from which we had hoped to elevate them eight years ago.

I hope the minister will see fit to make a concerted effort to allow less money to be diverted into studies, many of which have been meaningless in every respect, and to use the money saved from these studies for projects and programs that seek tangible and concrete improvements in local districts in these special designated areas. I tried to bring to the attention of the minister's predecessor the fact that under the ARDA and FRED programs as they operate in the Interlake district of Manitoba, part of which I represent, there had been a plethora of studies. I recall one study in particular on the fertility rates among different cohorts of mothers. This study cost a few thousand dollars and resulted in the finding that the fertility ratio among mothers in the Interlake district happened to be .3 of 1 per cent higher than in the rest of the province. A big deal that was! The $6,000 or $7,000 spent on that kind of study plus equal amounts of money spent on equally useless studies could have been saved and put to use in drainage improvements and road improvements, or added to the amount of money available for technical school construction or for manpower training in rural areas. This money could have been of immediate and direct benefit to the people in the area.

There is another point which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. I find there is something inherently contradictory in the efforts of the government to deal with the problem of rural poverty and regional disparities. I refer to their attitude to the role that can be played by existing Crown corporations and government agencies. Until now the pattern followed by the government has been to do something in the less advantaged regions where it is hoped that the attraction of industry would have beneficial effects. The government, through its old ADA program as well as through ARDA and FRED, has made capital grants available to any private entrepreneur and to any industry wanting to locate in a given region or district. I suppose that in many cases this has had limited success. But we do know that there are also Crown corporations in this country that, as a matter of internal management decision, have decided to pull out of a given region. Often this has had dire consequences for that region.

The prospect which faces the government, and in particular the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, when a Crown corporation leaves a region is the provision of massive amounts of capital by way of grants to attract new industry. In either case the cost to the Canadian taxpayer is not substantially different. In fact, it can be argued that a saving might result to the taxpayer if the existing operation were maintained, even if it required a subsidy.

Let us consider two specific instances, one being Air Canada's operation in Winnipeg and the other the Canadian Forces base at Rivers, Manitoba. Neither of these two places are in my constituency so I am not speaking from a local or parochial point of view. The fact remains that if it is the intention of the Department of National Defence, as was announced, to discontinue the Canadian Forces base operations at Rivers, it will mean the wiping out of 1,100 jobs for the people of that essentially rural area of Manitoba. The prospect of losing 1,100 jobs will mean, if not death, at least a high degree of economic stagnation for that part of the country. In turn, it will mean that if the new department is to live up to its name it will have to inject massive amounts of capital by way of grants to try to attract alternative industry.

I should like to ask the minister whether the thinking of the government is sufficiently crystallized to enable him to say whether, in the case where a government department or Crown agency or corporation decides to take a step which will have an immediate and direct bearing on the economic life of a region, it is envisaged that his department will have a considerable say on whether or not the other department or agency will be allowed to take such a step. I think this is a crucial factor and an important question on which the minister should try to elaborate at the first opportunity.

There is another criticism which I should like to direct to the minister's attention. When the local representatives on the board of directors of a local co-operative, which is usually a small local industrial undertaking such as a creamery or cheese plant, decide that a particular kind of industry can operate successfully in that district—here I am speaking of areas which have been acknowledged as having less economic opportunity than designated areas in the rest of the country—I hope there will be a greater sense of urgency on the part of the officials of the new department and of the minister than was the case under the ADA program, for example. I speak from direct experience in this regard. In my area a local co-operative creamery decided that because of the changing nature of the dairy industry in Canada and in the west it would be desirable to supplement the local creamery operation with a cheese plant. After a number of local meetings in which many of the local residents involved themselves—and this type of involvement is supposed to be the essence of the whole approach—a decision was reached to go ahead with the construction of a cheese plant. It was found possible to raise between $30,000 and $40,000 locally, but a matching grant from the Department of Industry under the area incentives legislation was needed. After two years these people are still waiting for financial assistance.

I wish to emphasize that in many rural districts which are impoverished and face prospects of further decline, it takes hard thinking to come up with proposals for concrete action. It is not easy to decide what kind of industrial possibility will be feasible. But here we see an instance of local people led by their local co-operative board of directors, many of whom have a good deal of experience in business affairs. They agree on a concrete proposal involving the raising of between $30,000 and $40,000 locally and they make arrangements to provide this sum. But, when they ask the department to make use of its much publicized area incentive legislation to the extent of making a grant of a similar amount, the department refuses. One can only come away, in such a situation, with a pretty sour impression of the way in which the department handles these matters.

Only a few miles away from this community one of the largest corporations in the country has built a distillery costing about $10 million. The corporation is not impoverished, but in order to attract it to locate in this designated area capital grants of the order of 30 per cent of construction costs were made to it. The distillery gives work to upward of 100 people in the community, and that is fine. But in addition to outright capital grants provision is made for an accelerated capital cost allowance. Altogether, the amount of transfer capital from the taxpayers of Canada to this corporation comes to several million dollars. Yet when a band of local dairy producers wants to get $40,000 out of the government they meet with two years of stalling.

It cannot be said that the project was not feasible, that it was rash. I defy anyone to show me a group of people more cautious and prudent than local businessmen or directors of local co-operative boards. The department has made a gracious offer. It has said that in a year or 18 months it will reconsider the application and maybe grant moneys retroactively. Bearing in mind the kind of harvest in western Canada last year, bearing in mind the decline in farming in 1968, I believe the time for action is now, not next year after what one hopes will be a fruitful harvest.

There are many instances which one could cite without being unfair in the slightest way to show that there is something incredible about the operations of the various agencies which have been established to deal with the problem of inter-regional disparities, low rural income, and so on. When the department is presented with opportunities of concrete action in respect of concrete projects it responds by procrastination and delay.

In conclusion, I should like to say the time has come to speak with more candour than in the past about the problem of rich and poor regions. I feel that unless the government is prepared to make greater use of existing and new Crown corporations nothing substantial will be done. There are certain approaches open to it. There is something illogical about a situation where at a time of slow growth and high unemployment in certain regions the central government is pursuing a blanket policy of tight money and high interest rates. In some areas this might be logical but in others it is the height of folly. I conclude by saying there is ample opportunity for effective action by the government. I wanted to make a point about the role of fiscal and monetary policy. It would not take too long.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I am afraid the hon. member's time expired two minutes ago and unless the committee is disposed to grant him more time, he cannot continue. I could not care less personally who is speaking provided the committee wishes to listen, but I understand there are a number of other speakers who wish to take part in the debate.

Mr. Schreyer: I really require only another minute, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Drury: I think the committee would be quite agreeable to allowing another minute.

Mr. Schreyer: Yes—literally one minute.

In the United States it has been found possible in the realm of monetary policy to make allowance for regional differences in the practice of the different regional reserve banks, the United States equivalent of our central banking system. I hope the government will explore the possibility of loosening up our central banking system in such a way as to provide more opportunity for regional expression. Put so briefly and starkly this might seem an idea of the kind which the minister might wish to set aside out of hand, but I suggest there is some logic in it. For some years we have been plagued by tight money resulting in high interest rates. In certain parts of the country such a policy might be applicable, but in regions in the east and west where there is economic stagnation and slow growth the last thing needed is a tight money policy.

(3:00 p.m.)

[Transaltion]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear that under Bill C-173 which is now under study, a greater part of Quebec would be able to benefit from various types of assistance. If that is true, the Montreal area which has always attracted manufacturers and tradesmen will be advantaged more than some other areas of the province of Quebec where the exploitation of natural resources brought about the establishment of some big industries while the industrial development of the rest of the provinces slackened.

Therefore, we from the eastern area of Trois-Rivières get the feeling that we are advantaged since clause 23 gives us great hopes. In fact, under that clause the functions and powers of the minister entend to and include all matters relating to economic expansion and social adjustments in areas requiring special measures to improve opportunities for productive employment and access to those opportunities.

I presume that the minister will not overlook anything and will back the provinces concerned, as to the implementation of a real policy for industrial decentralization.

Yesterday afternoon in his statement the minister pointed out to us that the department will urge that loans and advances be granted to provinces. In our opinion, that is another piece of news that is welcome since the minister will do his best, I trust, to carry out fully the programs that have been jointly studied and approved. And in order to do so, I am convinced that he will not hesitate, once the time has come, to call on the Bank of Canada.

The Canadian public has not always been aware of all that happens in the administration of the country. There is a public administration and a semi-public administration. As far as foreign investments are concerned, some facts are ignored and banking transactions which eventually benefit those foreign countries are not always disclosed. However, I learned from reliable sources that upon his arrival here in Ottawa in the fall of 1965, the minister, requested an explanation of how the funds loaned to foreign countries were set up and finally—I could give the name of the member of this house who explained that to him, as well as the name of one witness to confirm this—he came to the conclusion that these credits for foreign countries were merely social credit provided to them.

Now that he knows how it is done, I am inclined to believe that he will make a statement in the near future, to tell us that what is good enough for foreigners is good for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that when the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) makes that statement, he will get the approval of every honest cabinet minister. I also hope that to ensure the success of those projects the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development will demand the co-operation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), since only he can evaluate at this time the damage caused to Canadian businesses by excessive imports. It is useless to think of establishing or expanding plants to produce goods to fill the needs of the Canadian family if the government does not reduce those imports. Already, the electrical appliances, clothing, and shoe industries of Canada have been greatly affected, in Ontario and particularly in Quebec, where plants established for 50 to 75 years have recently disappeared as a result of increased imports. That means we cannot think of creating employment without taking the consumers into consideration.

It must not be forgotten that Canadian consumers will purchase only in case of need, and if they have the necessary purchasing power. Now, many unemployed who have been retrained are coming on the labour market to offer their services, and thousands of youngsters are also hoping to get jobs.

In the Ottawa area alone, 50,000 students are seeking summer jobs and according to the Manpower Centre, only 3,000 to 5,000 jobs are available, which means that 40,000 students will be unemployed during the summer.

That proves, Mr. Chairman, that skilled manpower is numerous enough in the country now to meet the demand of manufacturers.

Let us be careful not to import indiscriminately. We should not forget that no country buys from Canada to do us a favour or out of gratefulness. Events of the past are a proof of it and it is quite normal that a country buys what it needs at home and only calls upon foreign countries when it lacks some product.

Mr. Chairman, another aspect of the vocational training policy should be, in my opinion, to help farmers. Indeed, one of the main tasks of government as far as designated areas are concerned is to allow access to vocational training to farmers whether or not they are fated to remain on the farm.

If a farmer must stay on the farm, he must have the technical knowledge necessary to face the problems of managing a modern farm. On the other hand, if he must leave the farm, he should not go to the city as a castaway but he should have the necessary knowledge to practice a trade.

I trust that the rules enacted under this bill will enable the greatest number of farmers to attend the schools during the coming months.

As far as the riding of Portneuf is concerned, only 40 p. 100 of the farmers interested in further training have been allowed in recent years to attend classes that are now offered to them.

In order to control the market for their products, the farmers, through proper organizations, have tried to follow up as far as they could the movement of their products. They have also tried to organize for their benefit the sale of their products, natural or processed.

[Mr. Godin.]

We have seen well organized co-operatives with a good system for the production, the preserving and the sale of fruits and vegetables. I have in mind particularly several areas of the province of Quebec, such as Rivière-du-Loup, Orléans Island, Québec-Montmorency, Portneuf and Saint-Jérôme.

We also have cold storage facilities that were built thanks to grants from the provincial and federal governments. They were filled with potatoes and strawberries for which there were no buyers and we had to empty them by burying those products in the ground, since our markets had been flooded by imports.

The same situation prevails also in the dairy field, and so much so that last year our country was importing butter from New Zealand and Australia, and this to the prejudice of the Canadian producers.

Section 28(1) (a), (b) and (c) of the bill states clearly that money will be provided to industries as capital or interests, or simply as grants, to help them defray part of the capital cost needed for the establishment, expansion, modernization or operation of the undertaking.

Such a procedure is most commendable, and I know that many businessmen are waiting for the opportunity to put their names on the long list of applications already in the minister's hands.

But whatever the projects under study, capital is needed to carry them out. We must not think, however, that this bill will regard all problems as pertaining to the so-called special areas.

Let us remember for example, the investments of some $15 million in Arvida, by the Aluminium Company. That company invested $15 million, the federal grant was $5 million, which makes a total investment of $20 millions and the creation of 100 jobs. Therefore, it is an investment of $200,000 per job.

If ALCAN keeps for itself 9 to 10 per cent of the profits, which is the average profits of Canadian companies as capital gain and which is quite normal, if the capital was borrowed at 7 per cent, ALCAN would make a profit of some $20,000,000 for each job. Those huges investments create very few jobs, but large profits and as automation gains ground, I think that the distribution should be automatic.

Automation and machinery are social capital. The yield of that capital should be distributed by means of the social dividend suggested by the Créditistes. This would help the people to purchase good and services and it would promote the growth of present business concerns and the creation of new ones.

Mr. Chairman, I conclude by pointing out to the minister that we have only two choices: either we find ourselves buried under our present production, because we do not have enough purchasing power, or we get ready for another war, which, by the way, would help us get rid of our surpluses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a correction to Hansard for March 20, 1969. At page 6907, third paragraph, left column, my words are reported as follows:

Those areas have tremendous potential for the tourist industry; they have natural and extremely varied attractions. Tourist centres, camping sites and a provincial park have already been developed. In 1966, with the co-operation of the federal government and the province of Quebec, eight provincial parks were developed in that province; lifts were installed for the skiers as well as facilities for the skidoos, a sport that is very fashionable these days.

Here is what I said, I think:

Those areas have tremendous potential for the tourist industry; they have extremely varied natural attractions. Tourist centres and relays, camping sites, ski-lifts and snowmobile centres, which is a very popular sport nowadays and a provincial park have already been developed. In 1966 with the co-operation of the federal government and the province of Quebec, eight provincial parks were developed in that province.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this government reorganization bill I shall be concerned with one area only, and that is P.F.R.A. I support the general tone of the bill and its endeavour to foster better economic growth as well as to correct regional disparities. I caution, however, that although it may be easy to set up the new department, it will not be easy for this department to deal with regional disparities. After all, regional disparities exist in any economy, be it socialist, a so called free economy or a regimented economy as they have in Russia.

It has become difficult in many highly developed countries to take care of that segment of the population that has not found security within the economy of the nation. In this country, with our huge underdeveloped natural resources, we ought to be much more successful in tackling this problem and in reaching an original solution.

May I now speak of the matter of P.F.R.A. I believe this has been one of the more rewarding government ventures and has made possible constructive developments in the rural economy of Canada. As Canadians, we owe a debt to this vehicle which has been so useful. I am sure it has contributed much to the productive capacity of our farming community. The pattern this venture has laid down ought to be followed and built on. It has created large cadres of skilled engineers and others who are able to pass judgment, based on their experience and know-how, on programs that have been undertaken. The most visible evidence of P.F.R.A. in western Canada is the larger dams that have been constructed such as the Shellmouth Dam on the Assiniboine River in my constituency. This dam is now nearing completion and will be very useful. In addition, P.F.R.A. has been involved in many similar projects to do with water; I refer to projects such as dugouts, small run-off dams and other programs that have increased the livestock carrying possibilities of our economy.

Although most of the larger P.F.R.A. projects in western Canada have been completed, many projects in other parts of Canada remain to be undertaken. I am concerned about the fact that responsibility for implementing programs under this legislation is to be transferred to the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I believe that much of the effort of the new department will be expended east of Montreal and in the Maritime provinces. I approve of that, since in those areas we seem to find the greatest economic disparities.

I now wish to add a word of warning about the relation of agriculture to P.F.R.A. The government has sent out numerous task forces that are involving themselves in various programs in this country. The task force on agriculture suggested that wheat acreage should be cut by 10 million bushels and that no dairy herd of less than 30 cows should be allowed to be operated. I do not quite agree with wholesale changes such as these that the task force recommends. I wonder if many of the premises on which these surveys were conducted were not, to some extent, falacious.

It seems to me that many rural people eventually will have to leave their farms and seek their livelihood in cities. This factor, I presume, is behind the idea of establishing central areas of regional economic focus where industries could be assembled to provide jobs for displaced people. Yet much remains to be done for those who remain on the farms. Perhaps many will not have to leave the area in which they are living; many may change their occupation from one involving farming to one involving employment in some service industry and so continue living in rural or semi-rural surroundings. By this I mean that these people could easily involve themselves in recreational industries and other services that inhabitants of larger centres would use. There is great potential for establishing recreational industries or services in rural areas, in addition to secondary industries.

I believe that P.F.R.A. has a much greater role to play now than it ever had before; in future, it will enter more fully into the economic life of our community than it has in the past. It will work more closely with provincial governments; throughout all western Canada and other areas of Canada, therefore, a survey into the condition of land and land use should be carried out. Although much has been done, much more remains to be done. We have been profligate with natural resources such as water, land and forest. Erosion has hurt our country considerably and will hurt it more in the future unless steps are taken to correct erosion. The work of preserving our natural topography has only just begun and we ought to press forward with this work with all reasonable speed. The preservation of wet lands has become a problem in North America and a particular problem on the prairies. Preserving this land will help us to preserve a better balance of nature. If man is to remain on this continent with any degree of success, he will have to be more careful about preserving his natural surroundings.

There is a great future for P.F.R.A. in this field, Mr. Chairman. Although the new minister will be engrossed in problems of regional economic expansion, I hope he will not lose sight of the productive potential of P.F.R.A. I should like to see the aims of this legislation increased. Although it does not deal directly with the welfare of the people, in the long run it is a very productive tool of government and will contribute much to the agricultural community. With these few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I conclude.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a general idea that Ontario is a prosperous province and needs no help from area development programs. In a general sense, Ontario is a prosperous province. A large proportion of the national income derives from the province of Ontario and much of our industry is established in Ontario. In that general sense, Ontario is prosperous. Nevertheless, there are underdeveloped areas of the province which do not share in the total provincial prosperity. I want to point out that fact this afternoon.

I represent an area in the Georgian Bay region of Ontario in which, as a general rule, the inhabitants have a reasonable standard of living. The people there are reasonably happy. All the same, there are several important areas with underdeveloped economies that I do not wish to be overlooked. It should not be thought that Ontario does not suffer from any problems connected with underdeveloped regions and that there are no provincial areas needing help.

• (3:20 p.m.)

In that connection, a report was prepared recently by the Georgian Bay Regional Development Council, and I would like to read part of that report as it appears in the Globe and Mail of Friday, March 7 under the headline, "Prosperity Gap Greatest in Georgian Bay region". It reads:

> The Georgian Bay area is in trouble, faced with a prosperity gap greater than any of the nine other provincial regions.
> Over-government, collapsing industries and disappearing communities in some areas, outmoded highways and irrational development policies are its major problems, according to the report of the Georgian Bay Regional Development Council.
> To remove and stabilize the 11,500 square mile area the report recommends an integrated federal-provincial development plan, a drastic reduction in the number of municipalities, a new highway development plan and the designation of urban areas as growth points—
> To support the claim, it publishes statistics showing that Georgian Bay is at, or next to, the bottom in comparisons of income, market ratings, industry ratings, retail sales, ten year growth rates and population growth.
> Collingwood and Parry Sound are in Slow decline—

Further, on its states:

> The region is perhaps a more difficult challenge than any of the problem areas of Ontario for it is not poor enough to be called an economic disaster area and, unfortunately, it is not yet in a stage of sustained, self-generating growth.

I think that fairly describes the area that I represent. It is not in any sense of the word a disaster area. In general, it has a good tourist industry. There are a number of other industries established there, yet on the west side of the district of Parry Sound, in the Georgian Bay area, there has been no benefit from the incentives that have been offered by the government in past years.

We are a designated area and the incentives that have been granted under the Area Development Agency have been used for several industries. We have been very fortunate, at least on the east side of Parry Sound and Muskoka, in establishing better economic development. However, on the west side, on the coast of the Georgian Bay, in the parts around the town of Parry Sound and north from there some 80 to 100 miles, development has fallen far behind what it ought to be.

Highly improved educational facilities and a good vocational school have been constructed in Parry Sound. In the village of Britt, which is just north of there, an excellent public school has been constructed. There has been an upgrading of the attempt to get some further economic value from the communities, but there is as yet nothing on which the young people can use their improved knowledge and special skills. The result is that those who stay there are very little better off than were their parents or grandparents. Those who leave merely increase the problems of the urban areas in housing, employment and transportation.

In most cases the offering of incentives is not sufficient in itself. There has to be an over-all joint program to meet the needs of an area. For example, several industries have given serious consideration to establishing plants in the West Parry Sound area. I would like to tell the minister, who has just come into the chamber, that I am speaking of the Georgian Bay area of Ontario.

But there are other problems which must be solved at the same time in order to bring in two or three of these industries. Natural gas is a first requirement for some industries, yet the natural gas lines were built some 40 miles further east. There is no use building the plants until the gas supply problem is met, and there is no use putting in the gas until the industries are there. This is the type of situation where a combined federal-provincial program is necessary, and I am trying to impress upon the minister that this should be a special area under the new procedures that he is going to use.

I think that the province of Ontario, which recognizes the difficulties, will be most happy to co-operate in setting up a special area in this Georgian Bay region. An expression of interest in a region by the government is a tremendous force for the better. Industry which has knowledge of sympathetic government support is usually willing to take a reasonable chance. Certainly designation as a special area of development would help.

I am glad that the minister is in the chamber so that once again I can tell him that the great need is to get started in this area, to get one major industry in there, and then the rest will come. Once we have got that incentive into the west Parry Sound area, I am sure that area will develop because it has a tremendous advantage in harbours. It is on the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes seaway. It has manpower advantages. It has advantages in living conditions. It has the fundamentals for everything that a regional economic development plan is intended to do, and I hope that the minister will consider this area seriously.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, other speakers have mentioned the influence that a particular minister can have on a particular department. A few weeks ago, shortly after the reorganization bill was introduced, I had an opportunity of discussing this subject with the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. I made the point that I was very unhappy that this particular minister had been chosen for this particular position, because if any department should have a broad federal outlook it should be this one dealing with regional problems. The department should not consider provincial boundaries, but should tackle problems on a national basis. I discussed my reasons for not wanting this particular minister to be the head of this department.

I pointed out it was my opinion that as the minister responsible for manpower he had adopted a very provincialistic attitude by placing manpower retraining in the provincial field again when it had been in the federal field. This involves similar problems, because a person trained as a plumber in British Columbia should be able to do a job as a plumber in Newfoundland under the federal manpower placement agencies. This is not possible now; there is no universality. My feeling is there would be the same problem in respect of a regional program. Since that discussion, I have had an opportunity to look at several speeches made by the minister. I listened the other evening to the remarks made by the hon. member for Huron and I am prepared to agree that if the speeches this minister has been making are representative of his opinions, perhaps this program will be a success.

I should like to mention some of the programs we have had. I know they have been gone into in detail. However, in most cases in respect of ARDA and the area development agency, we have had very competent people in those departments. Considerable leadership has been provided both in the agricultural and industrial field. Yet, there has been a very small degree of success. It is true that in some areas there has been more development than in others. The situation in Brantford is a good example. This area asked to be undesignated because there were too many industries. I should have liked to see a similar situation in respect of most of the other designated areas, but this result was not accomplished. I believe this mainly resulted from the fact both the provincial and federal governments jealously guard their own areas. Therefore, the type of co-operation provided was not very great and was provided too slowly.

In respect of one program with which I have been concerned, I phoned the official directly in charge who advised me that they had not been able to get the project through the counterpart provincial agency. After months and months, when the people who had been interested in the project were no longer interested in it, finally agreement was reached. It is my opinion that the development areas of Canada will be broken down into three particular regions. One region will be the area north of the St. Lawrence region. It is the area we call the Golden Horseshoe and stretches from Quebec and Montreal through to Windsor. This area is not likely to need a great deal of assistance in developing industry. This is an area where, in my opinion, more difficulty will be experienced because of industry than because of the lack of industry.

There is another area, which I believe is the one we are considering, which stretches from the Atlantic provinces through to the west coast. It might be called a mid-Canada area. In my part of the country, it is the area beginning about 50 miles north of Toronto and stretching to the tree line. If the information I have from other countries is correct, for a considerable period of time the tree line probably will mark the end of the area in which there can be secondary industrial development. There will, of course, be primary development beyond that. I think the area we are talking about is what one might call a resource base area rather than an industrial area. This is an area which to some extent is industrialized now because of the various natural resources in the area. This is true in my part of the country. It has also affected the main centres in the south part of the area. They seem to be in a fairly viable position. In fact, the two major centres of Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury have the highest income level in that whole area, and probably in Canada.

In these places, the secondary development has been related to the natural resources. They have been very successful in this field. Farther north, however, this has not been possible. There, there is a lack of transportation and communication facilities. The fact is that my area is 400 miles north of Toronto and it takes five days for a letter to get to Toronto. This can be very disturbing to a businessman. A doctor told me that out of 20 or 25 samples he sent to a laboratory in Toronto in his professional capacity, 15 samples were frozen and returned as unacceptable for laboratory work. This is an indication of how poor communications are.

If this reorganization is to be successful, it will be successful because the minister believes in the program. If the minister does not really believe he, as a federal member of parliament and as a federal cabinet minister, is responsible for the regional development of all Canada, then this program will not work. The program did not work in respect of ARDA, FRED and AIDA. The main reason it has not worked is that there has been a patronage arrangement either by the federal government or the provincial government. Personally, I would like to see one of the two get out of some of these fields.

The previous speaker, the hon. member who comes from Parry Sound—I doubt whether that is in northern Ontario but it is close by—made representations in respect of the tourist industry. In my area, the tourist industry has been assisted by the federal government through the area development incentive program. However, the tourist industry would seem to be much more in the provincial field since parks, reforestation, and the maintenance of stocks of fish and game are under provincial jurisdiction. Licensing also falls within the jurisdiction of the province.

I should like to see the provincial government take over the development of the tourist industry. I have no objection to the federal government providing some money in this regard, but I believe it is rather ludicrous for both governments to be vying for the opportunity to help in this regard.

One concept of ARDA was that little groups would get together and choose a community they would help. This might take the form of the reclamation of marshland, the draining of a swamp area or the conversion of a farming area from one kind of produce to another by the building of a facility to handle the new type of produce. This concept automatically brought to the minds of both the provincial and federal politicians that the program was within their jurisdiction. Except in respect of the two major programs we have, the provincial people and the federal people did not work in conjunction with each other. Therefore, the projects were superimposed on the communities. The communities had very little co-operation from the provincial people and none from the federal people because the negotiations and arrangements were not made at the community level. The arrangements were between governments rather than individuals.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Winnipeg North pointed out the change in attitude apparent in a number of publications and statements made by the government in recent months. There must be a change of attitude on the part of the minister. There should be assistance given to primary resource areas which are in need of assistance to become a secondary industrial area. If the minister stops at the borders, he is overlooking a number of points that should be considered. There is a very close relationship between northeastern Ontario and northwestern Quebec. The same situation is developing between Manitoba and northwestern Ontario, the area represented by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. The people of northwestern Quebec talk about stretching that boundary over to Newfoundland.

These areas are not governed by provincial boundary lines. They are areas in which the primary industries are mining, forestry and subsidiary plants evolving from those primary industries. The same problem exists in the maritimes and all other areas not included in the industrial belt. People who come from the maritimes to work in northern Ontario find that they are faced with the same problems. They find that in their prime they can work in the mines for fairly good wages, but there are no jobs available for women, young people, elderly or disabled persons.

The economy in that area is based entirely on the very limited strata of physically capable people working in the primary industry. They go back and forth across the provincial boundaries in that band of development. Many people have mentioned that there must be changes in the disparity of income, education, employment, job opportunities and secondary type of employment for all rather than just the most healthy male population.

The Premier of the richest province in Canada, Mr. Robarts, has demonstrated how interested provincial governments are in money. He said this province would accept medicare because there is money in it. If this is acceptable to Ontario, then other provinces will follow. If the minister can institute programs to solve economic problems on a regional basis in northeastern Ontario, those programs will apply to northwestern Quebec. The government should no longer state that this is unconstitutional. It is not unconstitutional to provide people with the means to help themselves.

For some time I, as a pseudo-socialist, have been worried about the government developing industry in an area. I suggest to the minister it is not necessary to always follow the same pattern in achieving this development. The minister should consider projects available that will make money and provide growth centres. I suggest to the minister that he should consider the Mackenzie Delta project, an undeveloped resource area. It is difficult to say what the future will be, but no major mistakes have been made.

In considering the Mackenzie Delta and the oil that will be produced in Alaska and the Northwest Territories, the minister should consider the very large expenditure to build a 36-inch pipe line from the Mackenzie Delta to Edmonton, the heart of Canada. If this were done the United States probably would not build a pipe line from Alaska to the Pacific. There would be many advantages in having this commodity partly processed in Canada and the resultant industry integrated with the whole continental oil policy. No doubt the government would recover this expenditure over a period of time. Possibly shares could be sold to the general public such as was done in the Panarctic project.

There are a large number of iron deposits in northern Ontario. Iron ore is now being shipped to Hamilton and the United States. This source of iron ore will probably last the next 100 years. I suggest a steel mill should be built in northern Ontario. A secondary industry would be developed because some processing must be done while the steel is at a certain heat. I also ask for consideration of hydro projects. This is a very important field. I suggest to the minister that these projects would be successful under the Canada Development Corporation. The minister may find that the Canadian public are willing to participate in a total national expansion program if given the opportunity to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to be brief in order to give the house the opportunity to end the debate without undue delay.

That new department has raised many hopes. As a proof, I would like to quote a journalist Mr. Roger Champoux, who wrote an article in La Presse on February 19, 1969.

The article is entitled "L'opération Secours" and Mr. Champoux wrote the following:

The project is tremendous and the instrument to implement it has just been drafted. The federal government has thus taken on a tremendous task in establishing a super-department responsible for levelling the economic disparities of this country.

Actually, and I am saying this without any attempt at irony, the federal government is fulfilling an electoral promise, but above all, in so doing, it justifies at long last those reasonable people who have been calling for strong action and ingenious ventures to raise a number of Canadian areas out of their stagnation. This is an emergency and it has all the makings of a drama.

At this stage, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that the Créditistes are among the reasonable people the journalists are speaking of. We Créditistes, feel that the editorial writer, even if he did not intend to do so, was referring to us, for ever since the beginning of our campaign to get the government to deal with the economic depression, we have been laughed at and people have been saying: it is demagogy. The country is prosperous, all is well and therefore the Créditistes were demagogues. Today, in the very paper which was abusing us, one may read that reasonable people are those who have long been raising the alarm and pointing out, because it became more and more obvious, that there was an economic depression.

We are very happy about this government initiative and we hope that even if this the real solution, is not found even if once more we do not reach to the real causes, as the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) pointed out yesterday, even if this is not the magic key to many of our problems, we will nevertheless not object to some improvement of the present system, which we reject.

[Mr. Peters.]

• (3:50 p.m.)

And the editorial writer goes on to say:

We have lived for a long time with the illusion that the country was so rich that its normal growth would continue without major problems. But lo! It is not only a question of poverty, but of large areas where the economy is at a stand still and social conditions are shameful. A rich country with a precarious economy: how irrational!

One would almost swear that the editorialist has taken his inspiration from the words of leader of the Ralliement Créditiste, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette).

—The new Department is to be called "of Expansion". This phrase tells all, but the size of the problem to be encompassed.

Mr. Chairman, the situation described here is well known to the Créditistes. They denounce it, and for several years they have been trying to find the real solution.

We hope, in the meantime, that the solutions we proposed will be seriously studied. After all, we want to help in the implementation of this very vast program.

We have a few doubts however, justified by the failure of former programs which were established. I am thinking for example, of the winter works program, which was noth ng more than an outflow of money replacing the social welfare payments.

I have in mind the failure of the ARDA project, among others. The following appeared in yesterday's issue of La Presse:

Delegation to Quebec City

The ARDA project has not done anything significant: we must consider deporting the people of the Gaspé region.

Those were the words of the reeve of the county of Bonaventure, and I quote:

The project to develop the Lower Saint Lawrence region, the Gaspé peninsula and the Magdalen Islands has not really done anything significant, and that could result in the near future in the deportation of the people of the Gaspé peninsula.

That is an example, Mr. Chairman, of a wonderful program which gave birth to many hopes and which today stirs up many illusions.

Now, if we are limited to such a program, it is too bad, because it will only emphasize the poverty of the depressed areas of the country.

Here is the example of another failure. I would not want to question the ability of the future Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but we saw during the last election campaign how he solved the problem of the dockyards in the Quebec region, about which questions obviously come to mind.

The famous designated areas, to be called special areas in the future, are they undergoing a simple change in name or a genuine change in organization? If this represents a real and serious change, we intend to participate.

How is it possible to ensure efficiency without, first, eliminating such a scattering of funds. If $1 million is invested in one area and $10 million in another, and there is no sound organization capable of setting up in a given period a true general plan likely to ensure the survival of the businesses, we are heading for disaster.

I have here a copy of a telegram which was sent to the minister on February 24 last and which, I think, illustrates what I call a scattering of money. I quote:

Vehement protest against use for publicity reasons of the Shur-Gain Co. for Farm Management courses subsidized in Matane area by our governments. Pierre-Paul Tardif, agronomist, responsible for such a policy, allows replacement of regular professor by those lecturers who are using panels for their benefit to spread their publicity during government paid periods. Stop. Those methods have no respect for our democracy, are unfair via the Statut Entreprises Libre, and cause me great prejudices at the present time. Stop.

I have no intention to bribe anybody to offset that. Stop. Insist that steps be taken so that competent authorities investigate charge. Stop.

That people who authorize degradation of our rights, Libres Entreprises, be deprived of office and replaced by others who can guarantee impartiality.

Such assistance is granted in order to promote the economy and to ensure the retraining of farmers. However if that money is only to benefit well-established companies, it is an astonishing, not to say scandalous, scattering of funds, which should be avoided. Of course, the efforts we will be making in order to favour companies by granting them loans which should be used to develop the area will be useless in an already underdevelopped area if those loans are made at extravagant rates of interest. Therefore our policy should be to maintain interest rates at the lowest possible level.

Moreover, as previous Creditiste speakers pointed out, in the case of a really underprivileged area, why not go further and make loans without any interests, or at least at a very low rate, just enough to meet their administrative costs?

As the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) said earlier, what is being done for some foreign countries should be done in our own country.

All the difficulties of the minister will stem of course from the agreements he will have to enter into with the provinces. In my opinion, the main problem he will meet and will have to solve when he works out and puts into operation the programs established under the terms of clause 5 subclause 1 is to ensure the necessary co-operation with the provinces in which special areas are located, and with the volontary groups and public authorities in those special areas.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the crux of the matter. It will be possible to develop the special areas only if there is full agreement with the provinces concerned and with the organizations in those areas.

To that end, the federal government should not stand stubbornly on its position in such a way as to force the other party, for reasons of principle, to opt out of some agreements. Therefore, a very close and cordial co-operation should be established between the Quebec Department of Industry and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, without any ulterior motives.

The difficulties are likely to crop up because of the tremendous size of those special areas. As far as Quebec is concerned and particularly the area east of Trois-Rivières, I can only rejoice, because I represent the first riding east of Trois-Rivières, that is the Champlain riding.

On account of the tremendous size of those special areas, what procedure will be followed? How will the selection be made? How will priorities be determined? What will be the over-all plan?

Naturally, I am wondering about the procedure to be followed. I trust the problem will be solved in a satisfactory manner for all those concerned who are suffering now in these special areas.

In the Champlain constituency, the only fairly large city, so to speak, is La Tuque, in the northern area. It has a population of approximately 15,000. Around it revolve some centers, mainly forest centers, and it owes its existence solely to the local major industry, the paper industry.

The alarm has been sounded already in the paper industry, since, on account of the Kennedy Round trade agreements and their use of new and more expensive species, the United States are able to produce various types of paper, especially in the field of wrapping paper, at a cost much lower than the Canadian producers can.

Our producers get little protection against United States exports of such types of paper, and this results in a slow-down in the production of paper factories.

Of course, if United States competition in that field became stronger, almost all my constituency would find itself in a critical economic situation, since one quarter of the population in Champlain is basically dependent on the paper industry.

Therefore, a way should be found to prevent the situation from deteriorating, while it is still time to act.

The city also comprises other small plants, whose management the minister has no doubt met, and this is the announcement that was made in the matter, and I quote:

—on February 12 last, the management of the Canadian Converters firm announced the temporary close-up of the shirt factory it has been operating in La Tuque since March 1966.

I think that the areas east of Trois-Rivières, particularly that of Champlain County and La Tuque, should be among the first to be looked after by the new department.

It is with real optimism that we are waiting for accomplishments and even if it is our duty to look for possible defects, I would like to assure the minister of our entire co-operation and we will all be glad to cheer at the very first concrete achievements of his department.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the minister I will be very brief but I would like to add a word or two to what has been said with regard to this bill. May I remind him of a statement which he made on March 20, as recorded at page 6895 of Hansard and which reads as follows:

The first thing we have to do is establish the department before we indicate to the house exactly what we intend to do.

I admit I do not understand the minister's words. It has always been my impression that before we can ask the people of this country to expend money in establishing a department of the government, members of the house should really know what the terms of reference and intentions of that particular department are. I, therefore, ask the minister, when he rises, to answer the questions that have been asked of him and to indicate to the house exactly what his department intends to do in the immediate future. I realize the department must be established before he can possibly speak with authority. Nevertheless, I believe members of this house are entitled to have an understanding of exactly what the department intends to do. At the same time, I believe his department faces the greatest challenge of any department that is being established under this bill. I know the minister in charge of housing has suggested that everyone in this country should have an opportunity to choose the type of home in which he would like to live. However, before this can possibly happen, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion must improve the economy of this country and make it possible for everyone to have that choice. I believe that this free choice is a great myth until disparities in different parts of Canada are corrected. We know that there is a disparity in wages throughout Canada, and this again will have to be tackled by a department of the government.

I should like to quote another portion of the minister's opening address at page 6894 of Hansard. It reads as follows:

—the department's goal will be to ensure that economic growth is dispersed widely enough across Canada to bring employment and earnings opportunities in the hitherto slow growth regions as close as possible to those in the rest of the country.

I suggest to the minister that in his attempt to bring this about he should not forget to consider the situation of areas which are steadily going down, areas which have dry rot at their roots. There are many such communities throughout Canada, and perhaps I can use Moose Jaw as an example. This is a city which has suffered severe hardship through the loss of many industries; we are close to the capital city. Even though outward appearances might indicate a prosperous community, there is a rot developing at the very core and if it is not attended to under the terms of the new legislation I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that conditions in the area will not be pleasant in the future. I ask the minister to pay attention not only to areas which are suffering today, but to the situation in areas which will suffer, and suffer deeply, if no consideration is given to their needs.

I notice the minister also says:

This bill provides for the establishment of special areas when employment opportunities are very limited in the region itself or in the territory of which that region is a part.

I should welcome an explanation of some of these terms, specifically a definition of "territory". Perhaps we could be given a definition of what will constitute growth areas or special areas, and told how this is likely to be interpreted in the regulations. We would then be able to establish whether there is any meat in the bill, because it is these regulations which will determine whether the necessary action can be taken.

I agree with my hon. friend who spoke earlier that this should be a federal matter. If this bill is to mean anything to the Canadian people as a whole, too much reliance should not be placed on the idea of co-operation between governments at federal and provincial levels. It scarcely seems likely that the two levels of government can move quickly enough to remedy the situation which this country faces.

I ask the minister not to be too much taken up with this idea of really close co-operation in carrying out this work. Everyone agrees there must be co-operation. But if we wait for co-operation before taking any action, well laid plans can go astray, for political or other reasons. I believe the hon. member for Timiskaming was correct when he said the federal government must itself accept responsibility for putting the provisions of this bill into effect.

I respectfully urge the minister to see that regulations are drawn up which will make this bill a meaningful part of our institutions. Everywhere in Canada people are looking to this new department trusting it will do something for their areas. I can appreciate the situation in which the minister finds himself, but if he works diligently to ensure that every part of our nation is taken into consideration, I am sure he will earn our congratulations. The special areas will, of course, have to be given special treatment. I wish the minister success in his new department and again suggest he urge his colleagues and every member of his staff to take the entire nation into consideration when laying plans and drawing up the regulations to make this legislation effective.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I shall only take a few moments, Mr. Chairman. I wish to refer in particular to clause 20, to which we have a consequential amendment. Since it relates to a more substantial amendment a little later on when we get to the definition of a council, in particular the Atlantic Development Council, I wonder whether I could suggest the amendment now, then stand it and perhaps come back to it later on. If the government is agreeable to accepting the later amendment which we intend to propose, we would move the following amendment to clause 20—that the following words should be added to paragraph (b): "and such other councils as may be created."

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is to be stood until we study the operative clause?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): My first words will be words of thanks to the members of the committee for their contribution to the debate. Most of the speeches were instructive. Everyone appeared conscious that this is a serious question, one with which we have had to deal as Canadians ever since confederation, and probably before.

Up to now, nobody has succeeded in solving this problem. Those who tell me that I am not likely to succeed are, of course, on safe ground. They are conservative, and I do not say they will be proved wrong, since history tells us that all those who have tried to deal with it have failed. Will it be different this time? I do not know. The only thing I can say today is that given the instruments provided by this legislation I shall try as hard as I can. After that, the house can judge whether or not I have been successful.

I thank the committee for its co-operation. As so many hon. members emphasized, this is a difficult task and it will not be accomplished overnight. I do not want those who live in underdeveloped regions to think I shall be able to perform miracles once this law is passed and that overnight they will become prosperous. I know that is not true. Many governments have been in power in Ottawa since confederation and none of them has been successful in this field. Provincially, it has been the same story. Some premiers and provincial governments have tried hard, and they have been successful to a certain extent in dealing with this problem, but it is still with us today. I know exactly what I am trying to tackle. I have no illusions, and I know the house has no illusions. But I believe that if we receive co-operation from every part of the country we can increase the pace of progress in this field and do better than in the past. If we are successful in achieving this, I shall be satisfied and could probably retire at the age of 90 or 95.

The hon. member for Egmont said he would like to know, at least in a general way, what the department intends to do. I thought this over, and found it a reasonable enough request. I shall try not to go into details of the program we are presently studying, because the cabinet is still at work on the first bill we intend to bring forward in connection with incentives to industries. However, I think I can say in broad terms in what direction we are moving.

Hon. members have emphasized the importance of consultation with the provinces. Certainly, we will have to consult. I respect the importance of consultation. Equally, I respect the authority of parliament. Until parliament has given me the powers requested in this bill, I do not think it would be right for me to enter into consultation with the provinces on detailed plans. On the one hand, I am asked to consult with the provinces; on the other hand, I am asked, before any consultation has taken place, to give the details of what we are going to do. Until I have consulted the provinces I am not going to talk publicly about particular plans; this would make a mockery of consultation.

However, I am happy to take this opportunity to describe to hon. members, and to the public, the broad outlines of the programs I propose to pursue. The first program is to improve opportunities for industrial employment. For that purpose, I will be introducing to the house in May, I hope, legislation on industrial incentives to replace the existing ADA legislation. The new program will be considerably different from the present one, and I believe will be much more effective in creating new, permanent and viable employment. This program will be especially important for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and eastern Quebec, though it will be of considerable importance to slow growth areas in all provinces.

At this point, I should like to inform hon. members that in all of the programs we are studying we do not intend to deprive any region of Canada of the benefit of the law presently in force. In other words, we are not going to give less than we are giving now. Some hon. members expressed the fear that a new program might take out some regions which then would not be in as good a position as they are today as a result of the new legislation. This is not our intention; we are trying to improve what is in existence today, not destroy what is good.

Second, I will be seeking to work out with the provinces, plans for the development of the main centres within the regions where economic growth has hitherto been slow. We will be offering federal resources to help these centres respond to growth opportunities. So far we have FRED plans for rural development, and this is important. I am proposing to extend that approach to plans for urban economic and social development.

Third, I will be proposing a series of plans to encourage and help the development of medium sized and small towns as trading centres and smaller industrial centres. That is especially important to the prairies, though of course it applies to eastern Canada too.

Fourth, I hope we can join with the provinces and local groups in formulating a series of plans for development and adjustment in rural areas of eastern Canada. We inherit the Gaspé plan, the plans for northeastern New Brunswick and for the Mactaquac area. They are not working perfectly. There are a lot of difficulties and we have to learn by experience. I will not be offering instant new plans. Quite a bit of time will be needed to perfect our programs. But we will be working as fast as it is possible to work effectively.

To those who raised this question, may I say we do not intend to set up royal commissions or task forces. We want to experiment with new programs and see how they work in each case.

Fifth, the P.E.I. plan, covering a whole province, is a special case. I shall be aiming to add another special case as soon as possible, because I think we need a distinctive plan for economic and social development to meet the particular needs of Newfoundland.

Some hon. members expressed the opinion a few minutes ago that there should be general plans throughout Canada. I do not think there should. Problems that are encountered in P.E.I. or Nova Scotia, in northern Quebec or northern Ontario, are not the same. If we want to make progress in this field we shall have to accept reality and plan specifically to meet the needs of the regions we want to help.

Sixth, there are the areas of Canada where Indian and Métis people are a large proportion of the population. They encounter particularly large obstacles to fully sharing in Canada's development. I propose to mount, again of course with provincial co-operation and local involvement, special plans to combat the problems of such areas.

Seventh, I referred a minute ago to a special plan for Newfoundland. In that plan, improved transportation must be an important element. For Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, we will need a long-range transportation plan that will include a program of federal assistance for trunk highways as well as federal action for some major port developments.

I think one point that was raised many times during the debate was some hon. members were afraid that what we were spending now, partly through the Atlantic Development Board, on infrastructures would be eliminated in future. This is not true. I hope we will spend more than we have been spending for this purpose under A.D.B., because there is no doubt in my mind that it is useless to think of economic development for certain regions or cities if the infrastructures in those regions or cities are not built or rebuilt. Therefore, we require authority to do this. It is clear from the statute that public works and facilities are available to this end. As I say, we do not intend to do less than the A.D.B. used to do in the maritimes; I hope it will be more, much more.

Eighth, there are the programs of resource development on the prairies that we inherit through P.F.R.A. and, to a considerably lesser extent, ARDA. I intend in time to develop such programs, and to co-ordinate them with social programs such as we have in the FRED plan for the interlake area of Manitoba.

As hon. members know, this bill is not going to put a term to P.F.R.A.; we are going to work with this program and I hope we can improve it. Perhaps later on we will think of something else, but let us wait and see how we progress with the present plan.

Ninth, we are also making through ARDA a contribution to rural resource development and rationalization in Ontario and British Columbia. We will be seeking to work with the provinces to make such programs more effective.

Finally, we will be working with the provinces in certain areas where tourism offers one of the main prospects for improved employment and earnings. Those are the then headings under which we will be developing our programs. A great deal of detailed planning has to be done, joint planning that takes time. A great deal of money will also have to be found.

I entirely agree with members opposite who suggested that the department is, in effect, merely a framework. There is no doubt about that. This gives us a better chance to make our programs more effective. If the programs are good, then over the next few years they will require increasing priority in terms of expenditure. However, I think it was the hon. member for Selkirk who said that this bill may turn out to be good or bad. I agree with him, and I do not think the law itself is sufficient to correct the situations we want to correct.

One of my problems will be, of course, to find the money required. The other main problem, as several hon. members have rightly pointed out, will be to get the co-operation of other ministers and departments. There is no doubt that this will be a difficult problem, and this was underlined many times both in the committee and here in this house. While some mistakes have been made, I think some hon. members, and also some members of the public at large, have assumed I have more power than actually granted by this bill. It is underlined throughout the bill that any important program to be carried out must be approved by the Governor in Council. The minister therefore has no personal power. I say that bearing in mind the late Hon. C. D. Howe. Unquestionably he had great power. I make these remarks, not because I do not have the greatest respect for the late C. D. Howe but because we do not have the same backgrounds. Surely, he was a man who had great power; but it was personal power and not derived from law.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps we should call the minister a Napoleon.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As I was saying, the other main problem will be for me to get the co-operation of other ministers and departments. You can't legislate that. I can assure you that within the framework the legislation provides, the minister and the department will be doing their utmost to secure necessary co-operation.

Keeping that in mind, I do not think I am authorized to give more details than I have given. That is because the cabinet itself has not made up its mind on the different programs we are proposing and because I do not think it would be fair to the provinces we intend to consult to discuss this afternoon all the details of programs we have in mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I have taken notes and I would have liked to answer every hon. member who honoured me with comments on the bill.

A number of particular cases have been raised. In view of the late hour, I would like to be permitted to consider again some remarks which have been recorded in Hansard and to try to give adequate answers.

For instance, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) I think, referred to the case of a dairy where a problem arose. I do not know as yet if that application was made under ARDA or the industrial incentive program, which is quite a different thing, for in the first instance the initiative must come from the province and in the second from the federal government.

Then, if I may, I will not deal with all those particular cases that I shall examine later on, and if we can do something to settle them, we will be very happy to do it.

Yet some problems were referred to, about which I would like to give some precisions. If I am allowed to, I shall start with the remarks of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who in fact is very conversant with the problem of regional disparities since he experienced them probably more than I did, and since he is fully aware of this critical situation. I totally agree with him upon the proposed solutions, yet though he is probably not better than I am at working miracles, I think he is good in his part and that he brings a very valuable contribution to this debate.

He raised problems that are perhaps irrelevant, say, in a technical way, when speaking of the "causeway".

Mr. Chairman, I hope the figures on which the government based its refusal to build the causeway will be at the disposal of the house or of the committee on transport and communications, so that all those directly involved in this debate, even if they interpret those figures differently, will understand why we took a decision as important as this one.

I think that Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself said at the time that the matter could be discussed and I hope we will have the opportunity to do so. I do not think consideration of this legislation is the right time to go into a very specific debate which might be better undertaken at some other time.

One of the points raised by the Leader of the Opposition and about which I would like to make a distinction is the FRED project for Prince Edward Island. I think he knows very well that taking the total amount of each party's contribution, meaning $500 million to be provided by Prince Edward Island as against the relatively modest contribution of $225 million from the federal government, is not a very fair way to present the problem, for either one of the parties, in fact, included in this sum of $500 million from Prince Edward Island is a large portion of its regular budget, meaning that several things that have been included in the project are part of the normal services and activities of the province, of which we pay about 60 per cent of the budget through the tax equalization program.

And so, in any case, I do not believe it is right to consider only the two figures and to say that in a joint program with a small province, the federal government contributes only $225 million, whereas the provincial government contributes $500 million.

I think that even if the figures are correct, the facts are altogether different. I do not think that any Canadian government, even if that were his ideal, could do as much for the whole of Canada as we are doing through FRED for Prince Edward Island. In fact, our contribution is the equivalent of $2,000 per capita. If the same scale were used for the province of Qubec, can you imagine what it would give for all the other provinces?

Obviously, it may not be enough, but I believe that the program deserves to be attempted honestly. However, to present the problem as it was presented is not altogether fair, for I think that our contribution is much larger than the figures seem to indicate.

The question of co-operation with the provinces was also brought up. You will have noticed in the text of the legislation—to which an amendment will be proposed—that we want co-operation. And in spite of the theories put forward by some hon. members of the New Democratic party, who want a united Canada, without taking into account jurisdictions, I maintain that it is impossible to do any economic planning in Canada without the co-operation of the provinces and that of the communities, through the provinces, or even without the co-operation of private enterprise and voluntary organizations.

It is being too optimistic to think that the federal government can, by itself, do economic planning when its spending power throughout Canada is now lower than that of the provinces and municipalities.

Therefore, it is obvious that if we work to develop an area, while the province works in an opposite direction, the results will cancel one another, because co-operation is imperative and should not remain a dead letter. I think that we all agree on that point.

Now, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) said, I think, that no consideration is given in the legislation before as to the human factor. He evidently wanted to condemn big cities, in favour of small towns or rural areas. I will not go into that, but he should consider evolution—

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: It is not fair.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the hon. member meant that under this program, we will do nothing for the big cities but that we will take care of smaller population centres and rural regions. That is not the point I am trying to make. The point is that the law must be concerned about human beings, and this we understand very well. We are talking about social adjustments, and we have those adjustments very much in mind. We are thinking of the social impact of regional economic expansion. We know that if we move people we must house them, find jobs for them, sometimes retrain them, pay for their transportation and take care of their families. All this is included in what we call social adjustment. It is important for us to take all those factors into consideration and it is therefore not fair to say that this law does not take into account human problems.

[Translation]

Now for several reasons, I should like to speak French. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) made a long speech on education. It is true that I was very pleased—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time allotted to him has expired. Unless the Committee gives unanimous consent, he cannot carry on. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I shall be brief. All I want to say is that I shall never hire him as my legal adviser on constitutional law. He mentioned the intervention of the federal government in the field of education and alluded to the Prince Edward Island, Lower St. Lawrence and Interlake programs. Those programmes have been set up jointly with the provinces which have jurisdiction in this field. The intervention of the government in the field of education could give rise to a debate a little too technical. However, I found it very funny, because the hon. member really thought that he had found a point which could not only destroy the Prime Minister and myself but also put us at variance. In any event, we shall have other opportunities to debate this matter. Let us confine ourselves to regional development.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: We thought it was a very favourable change.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There was no change, fortunately for us, but I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North does not see our point of view, because this concerns joint programs. It does not concern only education. For example, there are programs for sewage and for water supplies, which are municipal and provincial matters, but because they are joint programs we can participate. We are not involving ourself in provincial jurisdiction, and this is a distinction the hon. member has not made.

[Translation]

Well, Mr. Chairman, it is getting rather late. I was afraid when I saw that the debate was dragging on that my chances for carrying the bill through today were dwindling. Therefore, I am not going to extend the debate and kill my own bill because I should like to have it passed today.

I shall, no doubt, have the opportunity to comment on the other subjects that have been mentioned. Once again, I thank all those who have taken part in the debate and as far as knowing exactly what will be the impact of this legislation, only the future will tell. Only experience will show if we have given ourselves the proper instruments and if, later, we have had the courage to seriously tackle the problems we wish to solve.

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: I would like to ask the minister a question.

The Deputy Chairman: I wish to remind the hon. member that the minister's time has expired, so he needs the unanimous consent of the committee. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we are in committee and the minister can speak as often as he wants.

Mr. Schreyer: When a federal government department, or agency, or Crown corporation makes a decision to remove an operation from a region of the country that is already in economic difficulty, under the new legislation will the minister be in a position to exercise a countervailing decision-making power vis-à-vis that particular department or agency? Will he have a direct say?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that the answer is yes. That does not mean that I, alone, can decide not to close a base if the government decides to close it, but before the decision is made this department will be involved. We will discuss it, and we will try to protect the interests of the region.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I was very impressed with the minister until his last statement, which left me almost speechless. I am not sure whether he was clear in his statement about his attitude toward human resource development, or education, if one wants to be Joe Blunt about it. He left the impression that his department has no intention of getting involved in human resource development. I am aware of the constitutional problem, and I am also aware that the minister's colleague, the Secretary of State, has taken certain actions which are moving in the direction of involvement in human resource development.

I have recently completed reading studies by a lot of top economists, some Canadian and some United States economists, and next year the Economic Council will be saying that one of the keys to the solution of economic disparities is human resource development. For these reasons, I think the record should be set straight with respect to the minister's attitude toward human resource development.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I think that we have a few instruments to combat regional disparities. One will be industrial incentives, and I do not think this relates directly to human problems. It is related, but not directly. After that, we have plans which we will negotiate with the provinces, and there is no problem of provincial jurisdiction because when we negotiate with a province both of us have global jurisdiction. The province has its own jurisdiction, we have ours, and the result is that there is no field with which we cannot deal. I think the provinces are deeply interested in these problems and we are ready to make joint agreements covering those subjects.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will take the example of a province about which I know something. Let us say that Alberta wants to negotiate with the minister's department for federal-provincial involvement so far as education is concerned. If there were some basis of agreement whereby the federal government and that provincial government could get involved with primary, elementary and secondary education, would this be a possible area of development within the terms of this legislation and within the terms of the minister's recent statement?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is very difficult to answer such a question. I think if you read the P.E.I. agreement, you will see what we have done and to what extent we can go. I do not believe that we can make an agreement with Alberta dealing solely with education, but if we have a comprehensive plan those subjects could be dealt with in the agreement. We would have no objection to that.

Mr. Yewchuk: Since Alberta has been mentioned, I did not hear the minister make any comments pertaining to northern Alberta. Questions have been asked about the redistribution of the boundaries of designated areas. Is this too specific for the minister to deal with at this time?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think it is a little too specific, Mr. Chairman. We intend that this program should extend to the whole of Canada, and that we should take care of all depressed areas including those in Alberta. However, I think it is a little too soon to indicate how it is going to be done.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. minister, what are the repayment conditions of the loans to the provinces and the municipalities to which he referred in his preliminary remarks?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, I do not understand the question.

Mr. Fortin: In his preliminary remarks, the minister mentioned the means at his disposal to promote the development of special areas, municipalities and provinces and to check unemployment and regional disparities. He referred to loans and grants; can he now tell us about the guarantee of those loans?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, that is a matter of regulations. If the house passes the bill, we shall have the necessary powers. Thereafter, a complete set of regulations will be prepared; unfortunately, I am not in a position to say more on the subject this afternoon.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, in order to be helpful, may I give the minister notice that I want detailed information on the matter of the former designation of St. John's, Halifax and Fredericton? I refer specifically to the releases that were made on September 25 and October 7, 1968. When we come to clause 24 in respect of these special areas I hope the minister will be able to give us answers, first of all, with regard to the provisional letters of intent that are to be given to new industry and also any further details he can give in respect of the transitional arrangements. I might have some other questions in this regard. I hope the minister and his officials will be fortified with full information on these questions, because the stage has been reached in respect of these cities where one day an announcement is made that the cities are in and the next day an announcement is made that they are not. This has created a great deal of uncertainty. We appreciate to a certain extent the problems in this transitional period, but there is a great deal of uncertainty in respect of new industries knowing where they should go. I do not expect a detailed reply now, but I hope the minister will be prepared to give some information.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They are in.

Mr. McGrath: In his reply, the minister behaved as if he were concluding the debate. I refrained from speaking on clause 1 in the interest of getting to the clause by clause study, but I want the minister to know I intend to make my remarks on clause 29.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 20 carry?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I understood that until the substantial amendment proposed in respect of a later clause has been dealt with, this clause would stand.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 20 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 20 stands.

Clauses 21, 22 and 23 inclusive agreed to.

29180—443½

On clause 24—Designation of special areas

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Chairman, I wish to move an amendment to this clause. Before I do, I should like to say that the minister has supported my amendment by saying that consultation or co-operation with the provinces would be carried out. My amendment is to the effect that after the words "council may" shall be added the words "after consultation with the province or provinces". The minister has supported my argument in respect of this amendment. It is absolutely essential that the provinces be consulted so far as the Atlantic area is concerned. This may be less crucial in respect of the maritimes since the bill provides for the establishment of an Atlantic Council through which the department might carry on consultation, but in the absence of information concerning how much power this council will have I feel this amendment protects the interests of the Atlantic provinces. There are, however, other regions which are concerned such as parts of Ontario, Quebec and the western provinces. They also come under the jurisdiction of this bill.

Unless other amendments are introduced, there will be no regional councils which would be able to carry the views of these regions to Ottawa. Within these provinces there might be development plans in respect of certain areas or counties which might not be in accord with what the federal government has in mind. I suspect the provinces have priorities in respect of development. It is for this reason they must be consulted.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River:

—that in clause 24 after the words "council may" the following words be added, "after consultation with the province or provinces".

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, discussion is not easy, because, as the mover of the motion said, it is quite clear from the remarks I have made in the house that I could not oppose such consultation, since it is the very essence of the proposal now under study.

I still believe that such co-operation with the provinces is a must and that it should take place. However, Mr. Chairman, for technical reasons obvious for any person aware of the complex social and political fact in Canada, it would be inconvenient if the clause dealt with that matter.

I really feel that we would make a mistake if we failed to consult the provinces before designating any area as a special one.

However, under the present circumstances, and considering that, sooner or later, we will have to consult some provinces for the purpose of designating an area, the jurisdiction of a province might possibly extend outside its limits and some of them might wish to designate one center rather than another. Consultation will then have to take place just the same. However, if the center being discussed is not chosen, all kinds of problems might arise. Although I consider consultations as essential, I believe it would be a mistake to include a clause to that effect in the legislation.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I find the internal logic of the minister's statement to be somewhat weak and perhaps confusing. I believe, as he has already indicated, this will quite naturally be a function of his office while setting up the designated areas. It may be that obvious to the minister but I can assure him that it has not been that obvious to the government that has been in office for the last six years. This view is borne out by the fact that the minister has to make an announcement in September and October and the fact that we have still not resolved what has been a very serious setback in respect of the AIDA program when it would have been most effective. This amendment does not tie the hands of the minister. The word used is "consultation". I think it is a very reasonable word to be included.

It is highly important to the provinces that, in respect of the designations of the minister, nothing will be done to jeopardize other steps taken by the provinces or other governments to further the general economic condition of the area. I am sure the minister himself finds no difficulty in accepting this. There may be some difficulty in another area. Frankly, I do not see what it is. I would hope, in an attempt to take other necessary steps toward better co-operation and consultation, the minister would in fact accept this amendment.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the minister sure confuses me, too. I am interested in knowing what he has in mind. He indicated that he wants consultation with the provinces. I presume he means the government, but I am not sure. If the federal government is to have a program, it will have to be able to designate areas, whether that is what the provinces want or not. The minister probably is aware of the fact that the province of Ontario has designated a totally different list of places than has the federal government, and this was done with consultation. So, I am opposed to this type of consultation if it means there has to be agreement. From the minister's remarks, I would think that by consultation he really means concurrence or agreement concerning what the areas shall be.

I suggest this is the kind of philosophical difficulty we have. Those who are responsible in the federal government for designating areas should co-operate with the provinces. There must be consultation in that co-operation. The federal government sets the criterion and makes the decision about designated areas. They should have decided about Halifax. They should not have let the provincial government carry on the consultation to the stage where everyone was so confused that even the people representing that area did not know whether it was designated. What the minister decides will probably give a better indication of what he intends to do about the federal responsibility in taking the initiative on this matter. The province should know what areas are going to be designated and be in a position to make representations. If the decision is made after agreement, I am opposed to the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I cannot believe that the minister would have said that the amendment proposed by the previous speaker could be inserted elsewhere than in the place suggested since it appears that where it says in the bill, for instance:

The Governor in Council may, by order—

—that means federal government does not promise that there will necessarily be consultations with the provinces before programs are elaborated or development or special areas are designated.

As for us, we should like to be sure that the federal government will take concrete measures to reduce regional disparities in conjunction with the province. So as to be sure of it, we think it is most appropriate to add at the place suggested the following words:

—after consultation with the province or provinces.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, that is very important. It is the very heart of the matter. The minister has said it himself and I take the liberty to recall something to him in that connection. A well-known editorialist, Mr. Clément Brown, did it also in an article published in Montréal-Matin on February 19, and I quote:

It is in the delimitation of growth areas that we will find out if the federal government intends to practise with the provinces the co-operation which it considers essential.

I will refrain from reading the remainder of the sentence which is fantastic.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, it is quite important that the house be assured not only verbally but through deeds, as the minister said a while ago, that there will be a very close co-operation between the federal government and the provinces because, if not, one will will undo what the other has done.

Consequently, we find that amendment worthwhile and we cannot understand why the minister does not think so.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There is no one who does not understand, and rightly so, that there cannot be any objections as far as the principle is concerned. My own objections have nothing to do with the principle itself, since I agree with it.

However, if the mover was willing to drop the words "or provinces"—

[English]

We would keep the idea of consultation with the provinces. I think that legally the singular includes the plural, so you do not have to add the word "provinces". It may be confusing.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Comeau) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Clause as amended agreed to on division.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 25 carry?

On clause 25—Plans for economic expansion.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, here we are defining the way in which the minister is going to be able to carry out his functions in terms of the plans for economic expansion in particular. One of the problems which concerns members in all parts of the house is not being sure that one of the critical areas of co-ordination in fact occurs effectively.

We know in the first instance a number of departments or parts of departments and agencies have been brought under this new department, and others with respect to regional development have been created. We also recognize this has been a weakness right through the piece of legislation. If programs and plans of other departments are not effectively tailored, the benefits achieved from the actions of this particular department will be minimal to say the least. The minister indicated that he presumably will have some form of veto power, with regard to the cancellation of certain kinds of programs, such as military installations or perhaps public works projects.

What we are talking about here is something much more important to the day by day workings of government administration and particularly the on-going design of fiscal and monetary policies. Under the old FRED set-up there was established a FRED board. I think that one provision relating to the FRED board was that ten senior officials would meet. It was a fairly structured affair that had application to the design and implementation of FRED plans. That board has been shelved, of course, because the FRED legislation as such is disappearing. I think what was being attempted under that program was the whole business of effectively co-ordinating under this minister and his department, policies of the federal government that would encourage rather than discourage regional development. That is the kind of business we are about.

I shall, therefore, move an amendment to add a new subclause (c) to this clause. The subclause would spell out specifically, but not so specifically that it would limit or prevent the minister doing the kind of things necessary to achieve that end, the kind of device which I think will be useful if this department is to achieve the purposes the minister has outlined. I, therefore, move the addition of a new subclause (c) to clause 25 as follows:

(c) preside over a co-ordinating council consisting of senior officials of departments or agencies which in the opinion of the Governor in Council have responsibility for policies or programs affecting economic expansion and social adjustment. This council shall endeavour to advise and co-ordinate policies and programs with a view to achieving a measure of national economic and social equality.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I am firmly opposed to this amendment. I think it is really a household matter. It would be wrong, I think, to provide in such a legislation that a minister is to chair a committee composed of officials of other departments. We would then confuse things. I am sure there will be an interdepartmental committee to study these matters; so it is a matter of internal economy. To me, it would be a mistake to introduce such a provision and it would not faster the co-operation.

The government has the responsibility to set up committees, and this is essential, if the legislation is to be efficient. Therefore, I shall always be opposed to the introduction of such a provision.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I can accept that the minister might have some objection to this particular suggestion, but I think the level of objection he has registered is more emotional, if I may put it that way, than anything that could be considered as being in the nature of logic.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The essence of what is being attempted in this amendment is to make known that there will be some definite machinery not just the good will of the minister or the occasional urging of some of his senior officials. We have learned in the past that this has not been terribly effective. The fact that the FRED board is being abandoned indicates, I suppose, that it also has not been terribly effective, although the minister has not said this. I think a government which only a little more than two years ago instituted such a board in the legislation could not have suddenly concluded that the basic ideas it had were all bad. I think both this chamber and the people of this country have a right to know in what ways a problem will be dealt with. This is a great problem and cannot be glossed over by saying the minister would not feel very comfortable. The argument used by the minister against the institution of some form of machinery, which will undoubtedly be needed, can hardly be said to be convincing.

I do not think anyone here should underestimate the importance of having such machinery clearly spelled out, even in a statute, if we are going to convince the many little empires that we know develop in a bureaucracy as large as the one which must deal with the peoples of this country, that it would be effective in overcoming a problem that is so thoroughly entrenched in our whole economic makeup. The attitude of these Empires will not in any way be altered simply because nine bits and pieces of other departments are suddenly appearing together under one department along with new bits and pieces that are being added. I think there must be, in the context of this legislation, a clearcut statement on the machinery which will be used in order not only that the minister and his department but that all departments know that the government is ultimately serious about dealing with the problems of regional disparity.

I think the minister's answer to me is not a sufficient one. I am prepared to present a counter suggestion which will really carry some weight, but I think it must be included in the legislation.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, in rising to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Egmont I cannot help but go back to some previous examples. I see here the President of the Treasury Board, and I am reminded very vividly of the difficulties which we had in the designation of Saint John, Halifax and Fredericton to which I referred a minute ago. Certain criteria were set up, I understand, and it was admitted on one or two occasions that many of the officials involved were in favour of including these cities under one of the clauses, which could have been done by stretching an interpretation. I said this in the house, and the minister knows I stood up many times and said it. I gave him credit for being straightforward about it, but I still feel that if he had not taken a rigid position against those cities there would have been time to take some action with regard to them later when it was pointed out to him and to everyone concerned that a designation was necessary.

In my opinion, this amendment will detract from the arbitrary powers of one man who, for different reasons, may become prejudiced against an area. For that reason, I think that this amendment will enable us to avoid some mistakes of this nature that were made in the past.

Mr. Schreyer: The mover of this amendment will forgive me, I am sure, if I say that it is the kind of amendment with which one can sympathize and agree while at the same time being unable to work up any strong feelings about it. It seems to me that what the hon. member is proposing is logical enough, but the responsibility for co-ordination, it must be understood, rests with the minister. How he achieves that co-ordination is up to him, up to his own sense of responsibility and his own ingenuity. It must be said also that what is proposed here is unorthodox in terms of the standing or traditional relationship between the minister and his advisers.

I find it difficult to conceive a situation in which a minister of one department is empowered by law to preside over a committee of officials coming from many departments of government. It would certainly not disappoint us if the minister were to accept the spirit of the amendment but, as I have said, it seems an amendment of the kind which could be put into effect without actually being on the statute books.

Mr. Drury: Reference has been made to the danger of a minister acquiring a prejudice against a person, or an institution or a community. I hasten to assure the committee that I have not acquired, nor do I have, any prejudice against St. John's or Halifax. The hon. gentleman suggested that by stretching the interpretation of the law his wishes could have been granted. He criticizes me, perhaps, as being prejudiced because I did not go along with that stretching. However, possibly this is irrelevant to the subject under discussion.

As the hon. member for Selkirk has just pointed out, the notion that a minister can preside over a department made up of officials from other government departments and reach conclusions which would govern those other departments really offends the whole idea of cabinet government and the structure in which we operate. A department must be responsible to and responsive to the minister of that department. Ministers can only operate in relation to other departments through the minister, not by way of a short circuit to officials. As hon. members are aware, the current system for securing co-ordination is through operational and functional committees of the cabinet where there is co-ordination between departments conducted at ministerial level. It would be a very curious arrangement indeed were a minister to preside over a committee of officials, senior or otherwise, from a number of other government departments with a view to co-ordinating the efforts of all departments concerned. As my colleague has pointed out, we already have an apparatus which functions satisfactorily. It is sufficient, I think, to overcome prejudices which might be supposed to exist in the mind of any particular minister and to achieve the co-ordination needed. I would ask the hon. member whether, in view of this, he would withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Bell: Is the minister suggesting there are no examples in the civil service at present of a minister presiding over a co-ordinating committee which is substantially advisory in nature? Has this arrangement never existed in the civil service? It strikes me there must be many examples of officials of the Department of Justice, for instance, being involved in matters affecting other departments, and there must be other instances of the same sort.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I know of some committees of ministers at which officials of various departments are asked to appear, but I do not know of any committee of officials over which a minister presides.

Clause 25 of the bill reads:

> —in co-operation with other departments, branches and agencies of the government of Canada (the minister shall) formulate plans for the economic expansion and social adjustment of special areas.

So, I have the authority to take the initiative.

Now, how is this decision going to be made? Will it be made by a committee composed of ministers, by ministers and officials, or by officials alone? I think this is a decision for the cabinet to make. The provision in the bill is too rigid. We may very well decide that a ministerial committee should handle this question and guarantee this co-operation; that might be preferable. I do not know why hon. members insist on having the committee they suggest, but if we do not have some kind of committee we cannot carry through with what is implied in clause 25.

For example, suppose we are interested in a particular transportation problem. I preside over the committee which has the minister or deputy minister of transport on it. The minister does not agree with a certain proposal of mine. What am I going to do in that event? I do not think the type of committee suggested will work.

Mr. Bell: The minister has undoubtedly given thought to this matter and probably knows more about the details than I. Just for the record, however, I should like to say that I would sooner count on the sympathy, understanding and kindness of some civil servants than of some ministers I know who in the past have taken certain arbitrary action in these matters.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I am not completely familiar with every detail of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Egmont, but undoubtedly he and other members of the committee have given it a great deal of thought. I spoke last evening on this bill, and if I said anything at all it was exactly this, that the minister will have to depend on the co-operation of other departments in dealing with problems. It is not a problem that the minister of regional economic expansion can solve himself; it is a problem for the cabinet, indeed for the whole government and the House of Commons.

Let me just give an example of what I mean. I have been pushing for the extension of runway facilities in Gander. The Minister of Transport has been hedging about this for weeks and months, which is what he wants. I have written letters both to him and to his parliamentary secretary but have received no co-operation. I have talked with the Minister of Public Works about the matter, but he does not seem to know what the problem of regional disparity is all about.

I should like to ask the minister a question. In the event that the minister is not totally in favour of this particular amendment that has been proposed, and which perhaps has not been given the required consideration, will the minister be willing to concede that some provision should be made to allow for the tying together of government departments in some co-ordinated manner in order to give the minister some leverage? If he is not willing to accept the amendment, will he agree to have it stand so that, if necessary, he can come back with an amendment basically along the same lines? This is the most important clause in the whole bill because the department will either succeed or fall on it, and it may well be where the government falls.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can stand the amendment. As I have said, I do not think we should have such a committee. I think we must have some kind of interdepartmental committee to work within the law. It may even be necessary to have a cabinet committee; I do not know about that. We have no experience on which to draw. But we do have the authority of the law, and the law induces us to do certain things. How we are to carry out certain programs

[Mr. Bell.]

I do not know. We shall have to gain experience and we shall have to consider the best type of committee to set up. That would be wise. I think the law contains all the necessary provisions. It will be necessary for us to obtain co-operation. In any event, I would not wish to be bound by an inadequate law and be forced to come back to the house after a period of months and ask for an amendment. I think the provisions of the law are adequate and I do not think the amendment will do anything. I think the appropriate structures for implementing the law exist.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay passage of the bill but it seems to me that we are now talking about one of the gut issues of this new department, to use the vernacular. I am, therefore, amazed to find the minister opposing something which would assist him. As to the argument put forward by the President of the Treasury Board on the setting up of these committees, I say to him that if what he says is correct, how is it that there has not been greater improvement in introducing the necessary kind of co-operation we envisage under this bill. As I see it, this is a lingering problem. The minister and his officials have considered this matter for nine months and have not formulated anything more specific than the vague phrase, "co-operation with other departments". There is nothing substantial in language like that. It says nothing to agencies and other departments of government that may be involved, and does not tell them they must co-operate with the minister. At least, that is my interpretation. As time goes on, I think the minister will discover that we have tried here to grapple with one of the basic issues confronting the department in its work and that we have not been successful in instituting the right kind of machinery.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not think the amendment will serve any purpose.

An hon. Member: I cannot think of a better amendment.

Another hon. Member: Five o'clock.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, may I say something—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Five o'clock.

Mr. MacInnis: Did someone on the government side call it five o'clock?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes. We did. We called it five o'clock since we will not finish this bill today.

Mr. MacInnis: I wanted to make a few remarks, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to speak for about five minutes on the potential of the committee that is to be set up. Did the minister call it five o'clock?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes. That is what I did.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The time being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave of the house to sit again.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Has the President of the Treasury Board any amendments to make on the order of business for Monday?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, on Monday I think, not having completed this bill today on its tenth day, as I understand, we will commence with the bill relating to amendments to the Superannuation Acts, Bill C-178, to be followed by item No. 62, an act respecting maritime freight rates. Following that we will take item No. 56, an act to amend the Financial Administration Act. Thereafter, the business will be as previously outlined by the President of the Privy Council for Monday. It is to be expected that Tuesday and Wednesday would be allotted days. With respect to the program for Thursday, I think the government house leader would want to consult about that again, having regard to progress made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being after five o'clock, this house stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m.

At 5.34 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

FINANCE

RAISING OF PRIME LENDING RATE BY CHARTERED BANKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the house to agree to a motion which I shall read in a moment. Perhaps I might read Standing Order 43, which is as follows:

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the house without notice having been given under Standing Order 42.

The Standing Order provides the opportunity for a short explanation. May I do so briefly, Mr. Speaker?

It is obvious to all that interest rates have been rising continuously, creating an unjust and inequitable burden for the Canadian public, culminating Thursday in a decision by the Canadian chartered banks to charge 7.5 per cent as their prime lending rate. If this trend is permitted to continue housing and public policy at the federal, provincial and municipal levels may be frustrated.

This is the result of the amendments to the Bank Act made in 1967, which removed the interest level ceiling that banks could charge for loans, and which also gave the chartered banks more flexibility to take deposits and lend money. The possibility of this situation arising was recognized by the committee at that time, and in the committee report they said as follows:

Your committee recognizes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My interpretation of Standing Order 43 is that the explanation which the hon. member may give to the house at this time should be brief and succinct. I think we will get ourselves into serious difficulties if every day, under the guise of Standing Order 43, hon. members were to make long speeches and to suggest that there might be unanimous consent and agreement of the house to discuss a grievance of some kind. I believe that for the good and orderly consideration of the house business the statement being made by the hon. member at the present time should be brief.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had concluded my introductory remarks. I was just pointing out that the committee made a recommendation that the Bank Act should be examined in the case of an emergency and I believe that such an emergency has arisen. Therefore under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be authorized to meet forthwith and proceed as quickly as possible to investigate, analyse, and hear evidence on the Bank Act, the Bank of Canada Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. house leader of the government that what we should do at this time is ask the consent of the house. If there is no unanimity the motion should not be put. I suggest to hon. members that there should not be a debate on this kind of motion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could indicate, Mr. Speaker, that there would not be unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There not being unanimous consent the motion cannot be put to the house.

UNCOLLECTIBLE STUDENT LOANS

Question No. 1,509—Mr. MacRae:

What is the total amount that has been written off as uncollectable under the Canada Student Loans Plan from its inception to December 31, 1968?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Under Section 8 of the Canada Student Loans Act, a borrower's obligation is extinguished in the event of his death whereupon it becomes payable by the government on the borrower's behalf. Since the inception of the Plan to December 31, 1968, $137,000 was paid under Section 8. This amount is not recoverable from the estates of deceased borrowers.

[Mr. Kierans.]

Under Section 9 of the Canada Student Loans Act, the government is required to reimburse a bank against loss incurred in connection with loans in default. Once a claim is paid by the government to a bank under this guarantee, the borrower's obligation is then owed to the Crown, but continues to exist. Collection action is continued to retire the debt then owing to the Crown, including certain costs chargeable to the borrower. Since the inception of the Plan to December 31, 1968, $507,090 were paid in respect of defaulted loans. This amount remains recoverable from the borrowers, and none of it has been written off. An additional $22,000 was paid during the same period for costs not recoverable from borrowers.

CANCELLATION OF MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY STANDARDS

Question No. 1,529—Mr. Mather:

Were motor vehicle safety standards formerly issued by the Canadian Government Specifications Board cancelled for: height and extension of bumpers, rear-window vision aid, ash trays and lighters, head-rests for front seas, roll bars, outside ornamentation, accessories and profusions, rear luggage compartment carrier and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): In so far as the Department of Defence Production is concerned: Yes. Due to the Canada-U.S. Automotive Agreement, the Canadian automotive industry became committed to adjusting their total production to conform to U.S. mandatory standards and it was not desirable to continue the Canadian Government Specifications Board motor vehicle standards for features that could not then be made available without undue delay and expense. Since that time the cancelled standard for Head Rests for front seats has been replaced by an improved standard. The development of replacement Canadian Government Specification Board standards for height and extension of bumpers, rear-window vision aids, ash trays and lighters, roll bars, outside ornamentation, accessories and protrusions and rear luggage compartment barrier is underway in line with parallel action in the United States.

TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDIES ON FEED GRAIN

Question No. 1,543—Mr. Dumont:

1. What were the subsidies, per ton, paid by the federal government during the 1966-67 crop year for the transportation (a) by ship (b) by rail, of feed grains from the Lakehead to the various ports on the St. Lawrence?

2. What was the cost of the subsidies paid for the transportation of such grain (a) by ship, and (b) by rail?

3. Will the government make a study of the difference between the subsidies paid for transportation by ship and the subsidies paid for transportation by rail in order to determine whether such difference would offset the cost of building warehouses on the St. Lawrence?

4. What is the role of the Board of Grain Commissioners with regard to the storage, transportation and resale of feed grains to the farmers of Eastern Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): In so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned: 1. The average subsidy per ton paid by the federal government on shipments of feed grains during the crop year 1966-67 to destinations in the Province of Ontario was $5.28, to destinations in the Province of Quebec was $7.68, and to destinations in the Atlantic Provinces was $13.17. The rates of freight assistance on feed grains under the Feed Grain Assistance Regulations of the Livestock Feed Assistance Act are the same whether the grain has been transported by rail or by ship.

2. Since the rate of assistance does not differ between water and rail movement, data on freight assistance paid on each separately are not available. During the crop year 1966-67, 2,472,524 tons of feed grains were shipped into Eastern Canada under the program, at a total cost of $18,394,712.

3. No difference exists in rates of assistance applicable to rail and ship movement.

4. The Board of Grain Commissioners is responsible for the general supervision of storage and movement of grain through the Eastern Elevators that are licensed under the Canada Grain Act. The Board's principal responsibility relates to the licensing of the elevators, the inspection and weighing of the grain, the rates permitted to be charged for storing and handling grain at the licensed elevators, the registration of documents covering the grain, and the reporting of details of stock and handlings. Official sampling and inspection service is available on request at eastern elevators.

Under the Inland Water Freight Rates Act the Board of Grain Commissioners has authority to set maximum rates that apply on Canadian lake grain cargoes.

The Board of Grain Commissioners is not involved in the actual merchandising of grain.

TAX PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,692—Mr. Caouette:

For each of the past five years, by province, what was the amount of tax paid to the federal government by Canadian citizens and by corporations?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): The information is not available in the form requested.

Question No. 1,711—Mr. Cyr:

Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation own a television relay transmitting tower on the Magdalen Islands and, if so (a) in what year was it erected (b) what was its cost (c) what is its annual maintenance cost (d) how many Canadian Broadcasting Corporation employees are engaged in its maintenance (e) which television network is the source of the signal relayed by this tower?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Yes. a) 1964; b) Capital cost of the complete installation—tower, transmitter, land and building, etc. was approximately $180,000; c) Annual operating cost is approximately $10,000; d) Two C.B.C. maintenance technicians based at C.B.C. Orders for Returns

C.B.C. NEWS, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12

Question No. 1,754—Mr. McCleave:

1. Was the commentary following the news at eight a.m. Wednesday, March 12, on the CBC delivered live or had it been prerecorded?

2. If the latter, at what time and on what date?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: The "Preview Commentary" program of March 12 was prerecorded on March 11 at 10:30 p.m.

TAX ON $50,000 GROSS INCOME

Question No. 1,757—Mr. Saltsman:

1. For the most recent year that statistics are available, were any tax returns filed with a gross income from all sources in excess of $50,000 on which, legally, no income tax was paid?

2. If so, how many?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Yes.

2. The income classes into which the tax returns of individuals are distributed are based on total income from all sources before exemptions and deductions, that is, gross income less expenses of operating a business, farm, etc. For the taxation year 1966, these statistics indicate that five tax returns filed with "total income" in excess of $50,000 on which no tax was payable because business losses of other years were applied to offset the current year's income.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

*VOLUME OF MAIL AND REVENUE THEREFROM

Question No. 1,142—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the volume of first and second class mail in Canada for the month of December, 1968, and what was the volume of first and second class mail in December for the years 1965, 1966 and 1967?

4. Of the seasonal and part-time employees taken on staff in the years 1965 to 1968 inclusive, what was the estimated period in each of those years that such employment was necessary on a per man basis and if the time period was less in 1968, what was the reason for the shortened period of employment?

5. What method was used in 1968 for the selection of seasonal or part-time employees for the Post Office Department and did this method vary in any manner from previous year and, if so, in what manner?

6. What was the estimated cost to the Post Office Department for seasonal or part-time employees for the month of December in each of the years 1965 to 1968 inclusive?

Return tabled.

Question No. 1,283—Mr. Robinson:

1. For the 1st day of each month since January 1, 1963, how many inmates of the British Columbia Penitentiary were of French-Speaking origin?

2. What category of offences were committed by such inmates and what number of inmates were in each such category?

Return tabled.

*SUB-POST OFFICES OPEN ON SATURDAY

Question No. 1,572—Mr. Rynard:

1. Are all cities of Canada being provided with sub-post offices which will remain open on Saturday?

2. What is the basis for the location of a sub-post office and what is the per capita basis?

3. What is the rental charge for (a) individual postal lock boxes, and (b) commercial postal lock boxes?

Return tabled.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I make an appeal to you to assure the house that something will be done toward affording early answers to starred questions. That was the purpose and objective of starred questions. One of my questions is No. 1683. Seventeen days have now gone by and an answer to it has not yet been provided. The matter affects the Indian population of this country to a degree that few of us in this house realize, there having been no consultation with the Indians on the course that is being followed.

Another of my questions concerns the drying of wheat. The farmers of western Canada are very anxious to know the situation with respect to the drying of wheat. On March 7 I asked the following question:

1. How many bushels of wheat are estimated to have been dried since the 7th day of February in each of the Prairie Provinces?

2. What is the estimate of damp wheat dried in the terminals (a) Pacific Coast (b) elsewhere, during the said period?

I point this out, Mr. Speaker, because starred questions were not supposed to be an excuse for the government to refuse to give answers.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the point of order to clarify the situation with regard to starred questions. As I understand it, in considering the questions the Table makes no effort to determine whether or not they can reasonably be answered within a period of three days. On that basis there can be no assurance that they can be answered in that period of time. In a particular case there may be a lack of precision or a breadth of scope such as to warrant it not being reasonably answered in three days. So the record should stand corrected, that there is no stipulation under the Standing Orders that starred questions must be answered in the period of three days or in any other period of time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I say in answer that the excuse of the minister cannot apply to starred question No. 1683, part of which is as follows:

1. Does the government propose to take over the complete management of all Indian residences and hostels across Canada outside of the Northwest Territories?

2. If so, were the Indian tribes or bands affected thereby consulted on this drastic move?

3. Will the result be that henceforth Indian children in residence, whether Anglican or Roman Catholic, will be denied being in hostels of their parents' religious faith?

Those are the questions, and no excuse or evasion on the part of the hon. gentleman can be successful. If the Department of Indian Affairs does not know where it is going and is not able to furnish full information, parliament might as well close down.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In reply to starred question No. 1608 the parliamentary secretary did not answer the second part of part 2 of the question which is as follows:

—where in Canada are they located and what are their individual functions?

The question refers to regional desks, and in his reply the parliamentary secretary did not specify the functions of these regional desks. I wonder whether it can be drawn to his attention that he might avail himself of the next opportunity to give the house this information. There have been many nasty stories to the effect that the regional desks have a political purpose.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION IN CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and ask him whether he will clarify the situation with regard to the negotiations between the government and the Public Service Alliance in the light of the charges made by the president of the alliance that the government is stalling, and in view of the threat by the unions to break off contract talks.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I think I will take the question as notice and see what information I can have tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

A.B.M. PROGRAM—AGREEMENT WITH CANADA RESPECTING DEPLOYMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question arising out of the statement made by Mr. Melvin Laird, the United States Defence Secretary, before the foreign relations committee of the United States Senate when he said the United States had an agreement with Canada regarding the deployment of the anti-ballistic missile system. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister if such an agreement does exist between the United States and Canada and, if so, whether a copy of such an agreement or an outline of its main features will be tabled in the house.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): In view of the fact that the Prime Minister is now in Washington and will be talking with the President today I think it might be desirable to leave this question until he returns, on the understanding that subsequent to his return either he or the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be willing to make a statement which would clear up the several questions which have arisen and which, I believe, revolve largely around the use of words rather than substantive matters.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Acting Prime Minister is a member of the cabinet. Surely the Prime Minister is not the sole repository of all knowledge of what goes on in cabinet. I am asking whether there has been, as Mr. Laird said, any consultation regarding the deployment of the anti-ballistic missile system and, if such discussions have taken place, how the government reconciles this fact with the statements which were made in the house last Wednesday.

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think there is any conflict, really. There was discussion of the earlier system which had been planned by the United States; those discussions had gone back over a very long period of time. But to the best of my knowledge—and I should like to have this fully documented before a statement is made—there have been no discussions regarding the most recent change in the United States system, because it would not mean any substantive change as far as the effects on Canada are concerned. I think the hon. gentleman will appreciate that it would be better to make a full statement setting out all the relevant information he would like to have.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): While we will be glad to have a statement from the Prime Minister on his return, does the minister not agree that this whole question raised by Mr. Laird is an extremely important one? I want to ask the hon. gentleman whether he accepts Mr. Laird's position, namely that Canada has no power of veto over the location of these missile bases, or, as Senator Fulbright put it, that Canada can either like it or lump it. Does the Canadian government accept this position?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubt as to whether the question as asked is in order. At the same time I recognize the importance of the matter, and will leave it at that.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In order to clarify this situation, if it is at all possible, will the minister say whether the plan which was enunciated in advance by President Johnson was accepted by the Canadian government? If so, what is the difference between that plan and the present one put before Congress by President Nixon?

Mr. Hellyer: It is for that very reason that I think it would be better, rather than deal with the question piecemeal, to have a statement prepared which will give the background of the discussions—those which took place at ministerial level and those which took place at the official level—with a definition of the words used, in such a way that they would satisfy the right hon. gentleman who, I know, is very concerned about the proper use of the English language.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not precision I am concerned with, Mr. Speaker; it is truth.

Mr. Hellyer: In this case precision is necessary in order that the truth may be known. Some words are used in different contexts by different people.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Give us the facts.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister prefers to wait before answering the question concerning the latest proposal by President Nixon, but can he say there was any agreement or any discussion between the United States government and the Canadian government concerning the earlier system proposed by President Johnson, specifically in connection with the location of A.B.M. sites to protect United States cities?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, there were indeed discussions, as indicated. I think the extent of those discussions and any inferences which can be drawn from them will become apparent in a statement that should be made in the house.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Since he is making an attempt to get on the record, possibly he could make the statement regarding what Secretary Laird has to say.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Could he tell the house whether a site has been chosen for the international airport?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no final decision has been made, but I hope it will be soon and that an announcement will be made very shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Transport replied in the negative to a question on the order paper asking whether a decision had been made. Since the decision was supposed to be announced by the end of January and we are almost at the end of March, could the minister tell us the reason for the delay?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I regret the delay very much. However, the reason for it is to make sure there is no possible chance that any information that should be considered in regard to the final decision is overlooked. I think anybody would agree that in a matter of this importance to the people of Montreal and the people of the province of Quebec, indeed to all the people of Canada, a matter involving, as it does, hundreds of millions of dollars, the decision should not be taken until all the considerations concerning air traffic safety, the effects on the people using the airport, the effects of noise and the effects on industrial development in the area, and so on, have been fully taken into account. It was for this reason that there was a few weeks delay.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I thank the minister for the information he gave us. Does he know when approximately that decision will be made public; all Quebecers are most anxious to know that. Could he tell us when approximately the studies will be completed and when he will be able to make that decision public?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated in the house a few days ago that he hoped the decision could be announced within a week or two. I share that hope, and up to this moment at least there is no reason to believe that the announcement will not be as indicated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—U.S. PRESS REPORTS RESPECTING RECOGNITION BY CANADA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, or for the acting minister in charge, whoever it may be. Has the minister attempted to identify the anonymous diplomatic sources in Washington who have been busy over the past weekend, through the medium of the New York Times, spreading reports that China has ignored for some six weeks Canada's request to open talks on recognition?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge as to who these anonymous people might be.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL—DELAY IN PARCEL DELIVERIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General in order to follow up an answer on Thursday regarding the situation in Montreal and the difficulty of moving parcels. Is the minister able to report as a result of his discussions any improvement in this situation?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, at the present time another private contractor is pursuing discussions with the union in question and I am extremely hopeful that they will reach an agreement so that the services will continue in the hands of a private group. Because as hon. members know, the government will have to take a firm decision by the end of this week if these other arrangements are not reached.

MONTREAL—ABSORPTION OF ROD SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday last the minister said the department were ready to absorb immediately Rod Service employees into the post office, including all but a maximum of 69 of the 110 to whom lay-off notices have been given. He went on to say that of the 424 employees, 27 are already on the staff and that another 254 have applied to join.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please ask his question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Comeau: Will the minister say directly how many positions, in addition to the 27 now filled, are being made available to the 254 people who have applied to join the department?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have not made any additional positions available pending the outcome of negotiations with a new contractor and the union.

FINANCE

LOAN TO COMMONWEALTH TRUST COMPANY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the importance of protecting Canada's good name abroad what action is the minister considering to investigate the financial situation in British Columbia of Commonwealth Trust Company and its associated companies?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since the minister has to be away on important public business I will take that question as notice.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the parliamentary secretary to take as notice also a related question. Has this matter been discussed with the Premier of British Columbia?

DRUGS

L.S.D.—REQUEST THAT DISTRIBUTION BE PROHIBITED

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He is not here but perhaps his parliamentary secretary might take it as notice. In view of reported suicide attempts in Edmonton and Calgary resulting from use of l.s.d. and in view of the fear that Edmonton is being used as a dumping ground for international illicit drug syndicates, will the minister place l.s.d. under an absolute restriction so far as the use of that drug by the general public is concerned?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and will bring it to the minister's attention.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What action is being taken to control this extremely dangerous substance in order to prevent further personality destruction among young Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: I think the second question seems to be more general than the first one. In his supplementary question the hon. member really is asking for a general statement. Perhaps the minister may make this when he takes note of the hon. member's question.

NATIONAL PARKS

GASPÉ—PROJECT AT POINTE FORILLON

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I wish to ask his Parliamentary Secretary a question concerning the disagreement which apparently exists regarding the establishment of a federal park at Pointe Forillon in the Gaspé peninsula.

In view of the fact that the federal government and that of the province of Quebec seem to be at odds, would the Parliamentary secretary ask the minister to make a statement on the offers the federal government has made to the province of Quebec regarding the establishment of this park and the answers it received from the authorities of the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the associate minister will be in the house tomorrow. Perhaps the hon. member could ask his question then.

GRAIN

AVAILABILITY OF BOX CARS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is either for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Agriculture. In their absence perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could take it as notice, because it is extremely urgent. Considering the fact that many delivery points on the prairies have still not received any shipping orders for grain, and that many points which have received shipping orders cannot obtain box cars for delivery, what plans has the government to deal with the resulting critical cash situation as farmers face another crop year?

[Mr. Gendron.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to refer this matter to the appropriate minister.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Transport do something—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My sentence does not finish there, although there seems to be general approval. Would the minister do something to bring to the attention of the C.P.R. the serious lack of available cars, particularly in northern Saskatchewan. I believe this shortage applies also to other northern portions of Alberta and Manitoba served by C.P.R. lines. Nothing effective is being done. In a spirit of unification, could he bring about something approaching unity between the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. with respect to these box cars?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have made representations once or twice already, and I know the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has made representations also. I will be glad to bring this latest advice to the attention of C.P.R. management and to encourage them to provide the best service possible. We are all concerned about the shortage of box cars for many purposes, and there will be discussions between all interested parties in order to see what can be done to alleviate the situation, not on a temporary basis only, but on a long term basis as well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Bring back the box cars from the United States, to begin with.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister authorize his department to bring back some of our box cars from the United States? Generally they have more of our cars than we have of theirs.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, this seems to be part of the problem and it will be considered in the context of the total shortage.

NATIONAL SECURITY

MRS. SICOTTE—ATTENDANCE OF R.C.M.P. AT CALIFORNIA TRIAL

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. Since the R.C.M.P. attended recently at the trial in California of Mrs. Sicotte, and since security considerations may have been involved, will the minister make a statement about the matter of security?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker; we have not contemplated making any such statement. If there is any desire for it we could look at the matter and consider it.

OIL

POSSIBILITY OF STUDY BY SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether, as has been reported publicly, the government is giving consideration to the appointment, following the Prime Minister's return from Washington, of a Senate committee to conduct a high level study of the problems and possible policies of the Canadian oil industry?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I have not heard that particular suggestion, Mr. Speaker, but I know that, once the Prime Minister returns, there will be discussions on this important subject because it is of increasing concern to Canadian exporters.

TRANSPORT

P.E.I.—EFFECT OF INCREASED FERRY RATES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What steps are being taken by his department or the transport commission to ascertain the possible effects on the people of Prince Edward Island of the possible 50 per cent increase in ferry rates for that province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is of very wide scope and should be answered by way of a statement.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of this matter to one of our ten provinces, is the minister prepared shortly to make a statement on the subject in the house?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such proposed increase for the people living on the island.

[Later:]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I refer, Mr. Speaker, to an earlier question I asked the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent misunderstanding that developed with the government of Prince Edward Island, which indicated that such a rate increase was being contemplated, could the minister take the appropriate steps to clear up this confusion with the government of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to take that suggestion into consideration.

HARBOURS

IMPLEMENTATION OF ADMINISTRATION PLANS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since there has been criticism of the National Harbours Board in the ports of Montreal and Saint John, has the minister early plans to implement the study on harbour administration which he laboriously read to us before Christmas?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope the parliamentary committee will soon be in a position to consider this very important subject. I hope that can be done before the end of the present session, so that any policy considerations which might follow from the committee's recommendations could be in hand during the course of this year.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SECHELT, B.C.,—ALLEGED HARRASSMENT BY R.C.M.P.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. A short time ago C.B.C. television carried an interview with three young Indian people at Sechelt, British Columbia, all of whom claimed they had been beaten by R.C.M. Police during interrogation, even though no charges were laid against them. The senior officer of the R.C.M.P. in British Columbia promised that there would be a full investigation. Has that investigation been completed? Has the minister received a report and can he give the house any information about it?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I ought to explain that these criticisms were made by an hon. member in the provincial legislature in British Columbia. The Attorney General of that province ordered an investigation, because this has to do with the functions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as the police force policing the province, under the direction of the Attorney General. That investigation is not yet completed, so perhaps I should not make further reference to it. I have been following the matter quite closely.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Canadian government is responsible for the Indian people who are affected in that particular area, is it asking for any report from the R.C.M. Police? Will the minister be able to tell us what actually took place, when he receives this report?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The minister could tell what he thinks has taken place in this whole matter. He thinks it would be improper, while the present investigation is being carried on by the Attorney General of the province, for him to superimpose another investigation on matters that may be cleared up by the first one. Therefore there will be no further action taken until the provincial Attorney General's investigation is completed.

At the time it will be analysed and a decision taken as to what further action, if any, should be taken.

HOUSING

MEASURES TO ACCELERATE BUILDING

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In order to give the priority to his development plan in the field of housing construction, could the minister tell the house if he anticipates the abolition of the 11 per cent tax on building materials and also an appropriate reduction of interest rates to give the necessary impetus to housing construction?

Mr. Speaker: I submit to the hon. member that his question is of too general a nature and that it could easily be put on the order paper.

[English]

IMPLEMENTATION OF TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Would he inform the house whether prior to the Easter recess he will be bringing forward legislation concerning the recommendations of the task force?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): It will not be prior to the Easter recess, Mr. Speaker. I hope it will not be too long a period after the Easter recess.

HOUSING

SHOWING OF FILM IN FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Transport after he had organized in this building a showing of slides with running comments in English only about the housing problem, if he intended to do the same thing in French. His reply at the time was that this was possible and that he would make the necessary arrangements. We have had no news since then, Mr. Speaker, and the French-speaking members would appreciate having this showing with running comments in their mother tongue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, I suggest to the hon. member that he could perhaps obtain the information in a different way. I doubt that the question as asked is of national urgency, but if the minister wishes to answer, I have no objection.

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This question is still under consideration. The presentation has been so well received in the places that it has been shown that serious consideration is being given to the possibility of preparing a French version.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I wish to ask the President of the Privy Council a question relating to the roster system. Will he give consideration to reviewing the system due to the fact that for today there are only 16 of 28 ministers on the roster, and only 7 are present? It is making it very very difficult for members to pursue business of an urgent nature.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): For the benefit of the hon. member and other hon. members, I would point out that in addition to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) are in Washington. I regret to say that my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen), is ill, as is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). As the hon. member probably knows, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) is representing Canada in Paris and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is participating in the first day of the agricultural conference.

Mr. Lundrigan: I hope my question has not been misinterpreted. I did not ask for an explanation of absenteeism. Rather, I asked for a revision in the roster system to clean up this mess.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF WOODS REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I keep receiving letters from anxious veterans inquiring when the Woods Commission report will be implemented. Is the minister in a position to inform us as to when this legislation will be brought in?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): As I said before, Mr. Speaker, the government at the present time is preparing a white paper on this matter. Both the white paper and the Woods Committee report will be referred to the proper House committee later in this session.

AIRPORTS

REVIEW OF RESTAURANT FACILITIES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister give consideration to reviewing restaurant facilities in a number of airports in Canada, due to the fact that curtailment of certain services has resulted in unfavourable publicity through international airline offices?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

WINNIPEG—DESIGNATION AS INTERNATIONAL GATEWAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Transport. A few moments ago he indicated that within a couple of weeks there might be a statement regarding the new airport at Toronto. I wonder if he would indicate when there might be a statement designating Winnipeg as an international gateway for airline flight fares?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): It was the Montreal international airport to which I referred a few minutes ago. I hope I will be able to say something further about Winnipeg, perhaps as soon as I can about the future airport for Toronto.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (SUPERANNUATION) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND CANADIAN FORCES, DEFENCE SERVICES, R.C.M.P. AND PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION PROVISIONS—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-178, to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That Bill C-178, to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act, be amended by deleting therefrom clauses 19, 34 and 48.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we are now at the report stage of Bill C-178 which seeks to amend a number of statutes under which pensions are provided for various categories of employees of the federal government.

As I indicated when we were at second reading of this bill, the bill for the most part is good legislation. Most of the changes are improvements that will be for the benefit of persons covered by the various statutes. I also made it clear that there was a serious deficiency in the bill because it includes no provision for increasing the pensions of civil servants already retired and it also makes no provision for escalating after retirement the pensions of persons covered under the act.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, it is in order to speak only on the subject of any amendment that has been made. I have moved this amendment which Your Honour has just read asking for the deletion from Bill C-178 of three clauses, namely, 19, 34 and 48. My reason for including these three clauses in one amendment is because they are all exactly the same. Clause 19 makes a certain amendment to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, clause 34 makes precisely the same amendment to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act and clause 48 makes the same amendment to the Public Service Superannuation Act.

As will be clear from the terms of my amendment, I think all these clauses should be removed from this bill. In other words the changes proposed by these clauses should not be made in the three statutes to which I have referred.

I think I should try to make clear, if I understand it myself, what the proposed amendments would do to each of the three statutes to which we are referring. Each of them, in respect of clauses 19, 34 and 48, makes certain technical changes in the administering of these three superannuation accounts. Probably in the course of my remarks this afternoon I will slip once in a while and say superannuation funds, but that is a misnomer. There are no funds; these are actually accounts we are talking about. The three proposed amendments would provide that the government may increase the rate of interest that it credits to these accounts on the balances that are in them.

Members are aware of the fact that people who would like to see increased pensions have been complaining about the fact that the rate of interest is only 1 per cent per quarter or slightly over 4 per cent per annum. People who have looked at this matter have suggested that the rate of interest could easily be increased to 5 per cent or even 6 per cent in the light of what money costs today and that the additional money could be used for the purpose of paying higher pensions to those who are now retired.

When that argument is put forward, why do I stand up and object to these three clauses if they would make it possible for the government to pay a higher rate of interest? The reason for my objection is that in each of these three clauses there is another provision which says in effect that none of this extra money that accrues from a higher interest rate can be used to pay higher pensions. It is made as clear as it can possibly be that the benefit of any increased interest rate shall not accrue to those who are now retired. This is done by saying that any money that is added to the fund by paying a rate of interest higher than roughly 4 per cent per year is to be deducted from the special contribution the government makes to the funds from time to time to keep them in actuarial balance.

I think I should digress for a moment to say that we were advised the other day in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs that—and it was not news to some of us—if it were not for the general increases in public service pay that take place these special contributions would not be necessary. The amounts that employees pay in, 6½ per cent for males and 5 per cent for females, plus matching contributions by the government, together with interest on the balance in the fund at 1 per cent per quarter which is roughly 4 per cent per year, provide enough money to keep the fund actuarially sound for those who are covered by it. It is because of periodic general pay increases that the fund loses its actuarial balance and it becomes necessary for the government to put in these special contributions from time to time. This is required by the various statutes which cover these pension accounts.

But the amendments that are now proposed in clauses 19, 34 and 48 say that from there on the government can pay a higher rate of interest but having done that it shall pay a lesser amount by way of government contribution, thus making it crystal clear that none of this extra money that flows from a higher rate of interest is to be used to pay increased pensions. On the face of it I think this is grossly unfair. It is almost in the nature of a trick.

There has been a considerable campaign among retired civil servants and organizations speaking on their behalf for a number of years to get the government to increase the rate of interest on the amounts in these accounts. Computations have been made concerning what a percentage point increase in the interest paid would produce by way of extra money to pay higher pensions. Now the government comes along and says it will do this, it will increase the rate of interest, but it puts a catch in the clause to make sure that none of the extra money is used for the purpose of paying increased pensions. As I say, we think this is almost in the nature of a trick and we believe we ought not to consent to it as responsible members of the House of Commons.

I should like to point out that whether we pass these three clauses or not will not make one iota—perhaps I should say one dollar, one nickel or one cent—of difference so far as the movement of cash is concerned. These three clauses relate only to accounting practices and what is done with the books. If the clauses remain as they are, or if they are changed, it will not make a particle of difference to the cash flow one way or another. The actuarial report will continue to say at periodic times what the amount in the various funds should be and the government will see to it that that amount of money is there. If these clauses are not passed the government will do it by putting in "x" number of dollars to bring the fund up to that level. If these amendments are passed the government will put in a certain number of extra dollars by way of interest but the special contributions will be minus the number of dollars represented by any increase in interest. So it will not make a particle of difference to the figures on the books. The dollar situation will be the same at the end of the year, or whenever the accounting is done, whether these amendments are passed or not.

Not only is there no difference whatsoever in the money in so far as the total figures on the books are concerned but there would also be no difference at all in the cash flow. At the present time interest is paid of roughly 4 per cent per year but no dollars are put into any bank account anywhere. These are just figures added to the books. In addition, these special funds to cover pay increases are added to the accounts but no dollars are put into any account anywhere. They are just figures added to the books. Therefore, whether it is left the way it is or done as provided in this statute there will be no change whatsoever and no dollars will flow either in or out. It will make no difference whatsoever. The only people who will be happy about this will be those who have to look after the books because there will be a certain neatness and tidiness about the books, but there will not be any difference in the flow of cash or dollars.

As a matter of fact, that is the way the public service superannuation fund itself works. I am talking about all three funds that are being dealt with by this legislation but to keep the matter simple I will discuss the public service superannuation fund. It is not a fund; it is an amount and is properly entitled the public service superannuation account. Supposedly 6½ per cent of the salaries of male public service employees and 5 per cent of the salaries of female public service employees are kept back and put into this account, but this does not represent any flow of dollars. No dollars are put anywhere. Conversely, when a pensioner gets his pension it is subtracted from the figures that are on the books, but the dollars do not come out of a fund or account or any special account at all; these things are all current operations. What happens is that public servants—let us stick to the males for the time being—get 93½ per cent of their pay while they are working and when they are retired they get 30 per cent, 40 per cent, 60 per cent or 70 per cent depending upon how many years they have worked as public servants, but no actual dollars go in or out of a fund. So to talk about moving these funds around and making these kinds of changes is a case of getting away from reality. That is why I do not like these clauses because they give the impression that somehow there is something real about these funds when there is no reality to them.

The reality is the government of Canada with its eternal credit. The reality is an ongoing economic system which pays wages and salaries to those who are working, and pensions to those who are retired. When you try to say to the people who work for the government that there is something important and sacred about this fund and then at the same time say to them that they cannot get extra money out of it, even though there is more money there and more interest paid on it, this is an attempt to fool the people. We should not countenance this manipulating of figures which gets us completely away from the reality of the whole pension situation.

Let me recapitulate what I have been trying to say. There is no such thing as a fund. In fact the statute does not say there is a fund; the statute says there is an account, in other words, figures in a book. There is no account in a chartered bank, in a trust company, in the Bank of Canada, or anywhere. There are figures in a book. When people work for the federal government for so many years they get 93½ per cent of their scheduled pay, but the balance does not go anywhere else. It is just figures on a book. When they retire they get 2 per cent per year for the number of years they have worked, multiplied by the average of their six best years so far as salary is concerned. That can be as high as 70 per cent of their salary.

Do you think those dollars come out of a trust account, a bank account, or the Bank of Canada? No. They came off the figures on the book, but the dollars themselves come out of current revenues, the current funds of the government of Canada which come out of current production.

I contend that to the extent that we try to play up, dress up and fool around with these funds we are simply fooling the people of Canada. I quite agree that when I ask for higher pensions for those who are now retired, and when I ask for a provision for those now working that their pensions shall be escalated after their retirement, I am not relying on a fund. I am not arguing that this should be done because there are so many dollars in the fund because I know there is nothing there. But what I am doing is calling for a deliberate decision. I am calling for our society to say that just as people who are working deserve decent rates of wages and salaries, so people who are retired are entitled to a pension that will enable them to live in the circumstances that obtain during their years of retirement.

When I ask that the pensions of those now retired be increased it is because I think we owe it to them as a matter of good faith, we owe it in recognition of what they have done in the past, we owe it because some of us believe that retired people have just as much right to keep up with rising standards as those who are working, and we believe that pensions should escalate in the same manner as wages and salaries escalate. But, Mr. Speaker, let us get to the reality of the situation, and let us not try to fool ourselves by a fund of this kind.

We do the same kind of thing with regard to old age security. We say to our people that they get their old age security payments out of a fund, and that so much money is put into a fund. Again it is an account, and there are taxes for it, 4 per cent, 3 per cent and 3 per cent. But if I were to get up in the House of Commons, as I have been tempted to do in the last few days, and point out that there is a credit balance in the old age security fund of $642 million, and since that money has been collected for old age security purposes it ought to be paid out in old age pensions, I would be told that the money is not in a special fund; it is just a bookkeeping proposition.

The reason that the people of Canada get old age security payments is that the government of Canada, the people of Canada and the economy of the nation are all behind the guarantee to pay these pensions. That is what pensions payments are. They are guarantees that out of current production these payments will be made. I contend that what is going on here, this attempt to fiddle around with the accounting procedures, is a case of getting away from the realities of the pension situation. Indeed, it is a case of trying to fool our retired civil servants, just as we try to fool the people on old age security generally by telling them there is a fund when no fund exists at all.

I know that there are people on the other side of the house, even people in the cabinet, who share this view that the business of funding government pensions is unreal. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), when he was minister of finance, admitted to me at one time when we were discussing the old age security question that the fund itself was only so many figures in a book, that it might as well be done away with, and that we might as well recognize the fact that we are agreeing, as a society, what pensions we will pay to our retired people out of current production. That is what the Public Service Superannuation act is all about. It is an act under which in good faith the government of Canada says to its employees, "If you work for us for 10, 20, 30 or 35 years, and if you will take less than the full amount of your pay we will undertake in the name of Canada, in the name of our people, in the name of the resources we have, that after your retirement you will have a decent standard of living."

In the past we thought we were giving effect to that promise by providing a certain formula related to salaries and wages during a certain period of time. It was a ten year period, then five years, and now it is six years. But times have changed. We are in the age of explosions. Things are moving a lot faster than they used to, and people are living a lot longer. The rates of pensions applicable at age 60 or 65 are not good enough at 75, 80 or 85. Nowadays a good many people are living in retirement for periods of 15 years, 20 years or 25 years. In such a long period of time our economy changes. It changes so much that it is not good enough to have a formula that ties pensions to a rate fixed at the time of retirement. If we go along with this type of legislation, the kind of provision in these three clauses I am speaking against, tied to a particular fund or particular account, and say, "You cannot get more no matter how high a rate of interest we pay on the fund," we are just not keeping faith with the people to whom we have said, "Work for us and we will see to it that you will have a decent retirement."

That is why I think that these three clauses, 19, 34 and 48, should not be passed. Instead of fooling the people this way with these funds and this kind of accounting, we should put this thing on a realistic basis. We should say to our people, "There is no fund. No dollars have been set aside."

Today, just to refresh myself and to make sure of what I am saying, I picked up a copy of the public accounts for last year. I found that last year the amount of money that public service employees had deducted from their pay was greater than the amount that was paid out in the same year in pensions. There are some things to add on both sides. The payments out also included transfers to other funds and things of that sort. Payments in included government contributions, matching contributions, transfers from other pensions, funds and so on. But the fact is that in the total the government does not pay in any year 100 per cent of its wage bill, even when you add the pensions to the salaries being paid. This is the reality.

I want to convert this reality into a just system, even if I have to call for a just society. I want to convert this into a society where we say to the people who work for the federal government, "If you work for us in your working years we will see to it that in retirement you will have a pension that will enable you to live in those years of retirement in a manner commensurate with the standard of living in that period of time."

I want this, and I am sure the house knows it now, not just for our retired civil servants and those who come under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, and so on, but for those who work for Canadian National Railways, Canadian Pacific Railway and all our people. I want it for the old age security pensioner as well, that is, the provision for pensions in the period of retirement to escalate not just according to the cost of living but according to rising wages and salaries, in other words, according to the increase in productivity and the increase in the affluence of our society.

But we will not get it with this kind of dead-hand bookkeeping. We will not get it with this kind of fooling around with the books that seems to add interest in which people think they have some rights because it is interest on their money. Then the government turns around and says that despite the additional interest these people should not look for any more money because it is going to pay less by way of special payments year by year. In the end the total will be precisely the same, and there is nothing in it for our retired people.

This is not the kind of legislation that we should be passing. I say again, as I said at the start and on second reading, that most of Bill C-178 is good. It provides improvements that will be for the benefit of employees of the federal government—those now working, at any rate. It does not provide anything for those already retired. It does not provide anything for those now working, because at the time of retirement they will be in the same box as those already retired.

To me this is an extremely important issue in our society and our economy, namely, what we do for our older people. We have not finished the job because we have an old age security pension, a guaranteed income supplement, a Public Service Superannuation Act and a whole host of pension schemes both public and private. We will not, in my view, finish the job until we have these pension schemes on a basis where after retirement people are able to keep up with the standard of living that improves during that period of time. Pensions have to escalate, not just according to the cost of living but according to increased productivity. This will not happen so long as you have the dead-hand kind of bookkeeping proposed in these three clauses. That is why I think the house should reject these three clauses and let the rest of the bill pass without them.

The only other comment I wish to make is that I hope this is the last time the government will bring before us a bill to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act and the acts related thereto without having in it something to provide for increased pensions for those already retired, and something to provide that those who are now working will when they retire be awarded pensions that will escalate during their period of retirement in keeping with increased wages and salaries, in keeping with the increased productivity and affluence of our society.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the house and apologize to the minister and hon. members for not being here when the debate started, but an urgent personal matter had taken me out of the house just after two o'clock. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has used the term "dead-hand bookkeeping". He says this is at the source of the problem with the superannuation fund for public civil servants and the scale of their pensions. I do not think it is dead-hand bookkeeping that is causing the problem; I think it is a dead-hand principle behind the handling of the pension fund. It is not in the matter of bookkeeping; that is mere mechanics.

Over the years we have seen more and more of Canada's population come into the public service of this country. We have seen more and more people enter the armed services and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If those people were out in what one could call non-public service, working for a corporation or individuals, they would have funded pension plans. The moneys available from the pension fund would be invested in economic productivity, in productive investment—in equities, preferred shares, any type of corporate financing plus, of course, government bonds in order to get the appropriate mix. There would also be money available for housing. Instead of that, all the money goes into the consolidated revenue fund and merely remains there for general government purposes. There is an appropriation, I suppose, to the superannuation fund but the money is not invested as such; it merely remains as a charge on the consolidated revenue fund.

That is why the hon. member is able to say there is this sort of dead-hand bookkeeping, because all it is is bookkeeping. I put it to the government that it would be far better if it introduced into the Public Service Superannuation Act orthodox funding principles whereby the money taken from people working in Canada, plus the contribution of the employer, would be invested in an appropriate plan of securities, provincial and federal, corporate equities and other debt instruments. I suggest to the government this would eliminate the need for the theory put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that pension funds should be tied into some sort of formula that goes along with productivity. The hon. member's party would like it tied to the cost of living index. This is self-defeating. Tying pensions to the cost of living index on this basis is merely self-defeating; it generates more inflation and the net result is that every year we get up over the 2 per cent and add more to pensions. I suggest that is merely generating more inflationary pressure.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

On the other hand, I would put forward the suggestion, and I think it is sound economics, that government pension plans, not only that of the federal but those of the provincial governments, should be invested in the productivity of Canada. Thereby these pension funds would reflect the increase in the value of equities, debt instruments and increasing profits due to increases in productivity. This is precisely what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been asking for. Then pensions could be adjusted if need be. In other words, our pensioners would have part of the action.

This is what we now get from mortgage companies who want "a piece of the action" because they want to share in the increase in productivity, in the increase in value. Why should our pensioners not have the same advantage? They have made their pension fund contributions, which is a forced method of saving, the employer has matched them, and the money should then be put to work. Why should not the employee, the pensioner, get the benefit of the profits that have been earned through the pension fund? I am sure that in this way we would have a much greater source of funds and the government would have a much better pension scheme. The government should set an example in this regard. We would do away with calls for Canada development corporations and all sorts of dubious proposals because we would have a very large pension fund administered properly by trustees on behalf of employees who have a real interest in the fund. At the present time they have no say with regard to the fund. Whether or not they shall be paid an increase is entirely up to the government.

I agree with my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in the same way as I agreed with my former colleague from Carleton, the Hon. Richard Bell, who times without number advanced the proposal that something must be done to reduce the disparity between the level of pensions of former public servants and that of those who are now entering their pension life. The gap in pension levels is far too wide, as there are great disparities in salary levels. One has only to go through the whole scale of salaries in the public service as against those in industry to see that there are horrible gaps and disparities. But the most glaring one is the result of a comparison between a public servant who retired 10 or 12 years ago and one who retires now.

If I recall correctly, the last time any change was made was in 1958 or 1959 when the then minister of finance upgraded minimum pensions of those who had retired prior to 1953. The formula was complicated but the measure was only a palliative and did not go far enough. In 1958 and 1959, however, there were other problems of financing, and this was something that came out of the consolidated revenue fund. Hon. members must remember that a pension that is once effected must remain that way; it can never be downgraded.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But those pensioners are dying off.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but the present administration has taken on almost 75,000 new employees since 1963. I admit there was an increase in the years prior to that, but not to the same extent. The public service has grown fantastically large. It is my belief that the functions of the government have expanded too much; it always seems that we have to build on another layer as we go along. It seems to me that far more could be gained for the country by concentrating more persons in productive occupations rather than removing thousands upon thousands more persons from the working force and concentrating them in the public service. This applies not only to the federal government but to the provincial and municipal levels. The funds are being removed, with minor exceptions, because I believe many of the municipal pension funds will be invested in corporate securities and so forth. But certainly I would like to see the superannuation fund invested in the way I outlined earlier.

I cannot agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that these clauses should be deleted, and it is with great reluctance that I have come to this conclusion, because I believe that it is only by increasing the pension fund through this additional interest—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It does not increase it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It provides a camouflage for an increase.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The total will be the same after the operation is over—more of "x" and less of "y".

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That may be. I suggest there is more of an appearance of an increase, and therefore this may give us the possibility of arguing that the government will have to take some action with regard to retired public servants. I do not know how we are going to dynamite or galvanize them into action. Certainly this government cannot be galvanized, but it may be dynamited or blasted into action on this problem. It is a national scandal, for instance, in the case of the pensions of former N.C.O.'s in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In this day and age, if one can use a current term, they do not even get beer money, not that they want money for beer. Gracious me, in the last few years I have spoken to corporals who gave good service, men whom I knew when I was much younger, who today draw a mere $68 a month in superannuation pension. It is almost cruel to give them such a pension. It would be kinder if we told them we would not give them anything because in my opinion $68 a month under present circumstances is contemptuous of them as well.

I will limit myself to those few brief remarks at this point. At third reading I will want to say something about the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, but since there is no amendment with regard to that act I will limit myself to the remarks I have made at this stage.

Mr. Drury: There is an amendment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But no amendment at this stage, which is the report stage. I will have something to say about it on third reading.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in introducing this amendment the mover said that he thought he was bringing the argument one step further toward reality. I regret I cannot subscribe to this point of view after listening to the debate. As nearly as I can understand it, the mover of the amendment believes that this fund is a publicly supported one and he does not distinguish it from the old age security fund or the type of fund which we set up for the Canada Pension Plan.

The second speaker took a totally different point of view. He suggested a totally funded approach in line with conventional methods and with all the requirements of the actuaries. He even went as far as to say that a similar approach should be taken with municipal and provincial funds and that out of the earnings of a fully developed type of plan additional pensions could be paid.

I think it is most unfortunate that this debate has taken place because I believe it is totally beside the point. As far as I can determine the purpose of the amendment is to strike out the provisions by which the government is attempting to bring the interest rates that are to be paid, in line with current interest rates. At the same time the government is calling attention to the fact that, as the result of the revisions of pay that have taken place, around $200 million a year in respect of arrears to compensate for these pay adjustments is being paid in the current fiscal year. If one were to increase the fund's interest yield by something like 3 per cent, no more than $100 million would be gained by way of additional interest. In my opinion the government is trying to do certain things to introduce a measure of reality into what has become a most unfortunate discussion.

I have supported the principle of increasing the pensions of superannuated civil servants as consistently and as forcibly as any member in the period that I have been in this house. But I do take violent exception to a debate which leads to a grave misconception on the part of pensioners. A debate took place in the house on second reading on March 14. Subsequent to that debate I have received a substantial volume of mail because I took part in it and I said I was in favour of increasing pensions, as did a number of other hon. members. The kind of letters we are getting will increase in frequency as a result of this debate. Many old age pensioners, after listening to what I consider to be arguments that are completely beside the point, have come to the conclusion that the government has stolen the fund and that there is something grossly irregular about it. They suspect irregular management and they think the Auditor General should be called in. They are giving a totally erroneous interpretation to what has taken place.

I said before and I repeat that the case for the adjustment of pensions is a moral case. I believe the government of Canada should set an example in respect of those who have worked for it and are now in retirement, and do the things we would like other good employers to do. But I have to adopt some consistency about this approach. A private employer who sets up a pension plan in this country is required by law in most of the provinces, certainly in the larger ones—in some provinces the jurisdiction is not as tight as it should be, nor is the supervision as effective as it should be—to make certain provisions to guarantee the solvency of the fund. He must protect as far as possible those who have claims on it.

In my opinion the government, in its capacity as employer, should set a model, and I expect that role to apply not only in connection with pensions but in connection with general levels of remuneration, the standards applied to collective bargaining and a broad range of legislative policy. What we do in respect of those who work for us should be a model upon the basis of which we are able to say to other employers in Canada: Please follow this example.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Francis: I deplore this debate. I deplore the very fact it has had to take place, because I know I shall get another wave of letters. I shall put one or two of them on record in Hansard if I may—those portions which are printable; some parts of them may not be written in parliamentary language and, if so, I might be called to account. I quote from a letter dated March 18 which I received signed by E. P. Gray:

Lloyd Francis:

On an Open Line show over CKOY a lady civil servant superannuate read for the benefit of listeners correspondence between the lady and you concerning the cold-blooded manner in which the Liberal government is handling the requests for an increase in their pensions from their own money.

And, Mr. Speaker, "their own" is underlined.

I knew you were a revolting, thieving, shifty-bastard, Francis, and am pleased that now a great many more are aware of your sickening character.

After that, Mr. Speaker, it really gets abusive.

That is not the only letter to which I shall refer, Mr. Speaker. Another one, dated March 16, said: "This money belongs to us superannuates; what has the government done with it?" The kind of thing which is being said is somehow being spread from sources which should know better. Someone is deliberately giving misinformation to a broad range of retired superannuates concerning the management of the fund.

I fail to see what anyone could gain by prolonging a debate of this nature. I fail to see what the mover of the motion hopes to gain by striking out this provision to bring interest rates up to current standards of interest rates. We are saying to the employers of this country: this is what we want you to do as employers, but it is totally different for us because we have a public fund and we can do things as we wish; it does not matter whether or not we pay the current interest rate, though you, as private employers, must do all these things. For this reason I cannot support the amendment. I do not see what useful purpose is being served.

I personally believe that the government has a moral obligation, one to which I hope it will respond at the earliest possible date, to raise the pensions of its retired employees. This argument is lost if one tries to become an amateur actuary, if one tries to say: this year the fund paid out so much and took in so much. No person can pass judgment on the state of such a fund by looking at income and expenditure in a one-year period or a two-year period or a three-year period. The fund can only be appraised by those who know the extent of the claims made upon it, or likely to be made upon it, and of the resources available to meet them. We should not try to set ourselves up as experts of that kind, because we are not. We are not actuaries. We are not competent to pass judgment on the extent of the solvency of the fund. In my opinion it serves no useful purpose for us to say: this is what a private employer must do, but the government can violate all the rules and everything is O.K. This, I cannot accept, and for this reason I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Francis: Gladly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the hon. member's desire that we keep things as straight as we can, may I ask him this question? Does he think it is fair to describe clauses 19, 34 and 48, as I believe he does, as providing for an increased rate of interest to be paid to the fund without at the same time pointing out that the same clauses provide for a reduction in the other amounts added to the fund, so that in the end there is no difference, no extra money at all?

Mr. Francis: I pointed out that in the present year $200 million had been contributed by the government of Canada in respect of arrears because of salary increases. I also pointed out that an increase of 3 per cent on current interest payments to the fund, which is approximately of the order of magnitude required to take account of current rates, would yield only half that sum—about $100 million. I further pointed out—and I certainly have no desire to conceal it—that all the government was trying to do was to tidy up its operation a little. But this is simply making it clear for all to see that even if interest is brought up to full current rates the government of Canada would still have to contribute a substantial amount to keep the fund within the kind of rules we expect every good employer to follow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it not a case of more "x" and less "y" but the same total in the end?

Mr. Francis: If the hon. member feels he is serving any useful purpose by pursuing this kind of argument, leading to a long debate on funding, that is on his conscience. I know that some people are misinterpreting this kind of approach.

Mr. J.-T. Richard (Ottawa East): I spoke on the second reading stage of this bill, Mr. Speaker. Now we are on the report stage and I wish to add a few words.

I do not think the situation in which we find ourselves is very fortunate. Today, while we are talking about superannuation, we are still working on old principles. The contents of this bill are good, as was mentioned a few minutes ago, for civil servants who are still working, but they mean nothing to those who have retired and little to those who will retire in the future because they will ultimately be in the same position as public servants who retired some years ago.

I must differ from my hon. friend, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), in at least one respect. He says the obligation we have to retired public servants is a moral one. In my opinion it is not a moral one; it is a matter of justice and equity. It is up to the government to decide that what was done in the past was not necessarily best.

I can speak clearly and openly on this issue. I was chairman of the committee which recommended amendments to the superannuation legislation and considered the plight of retired public servants. We thoroughly considered the questions of funding, the payment of higher interest credits to the fund, and so on. I am not an accountant nor an economist and perhaps this is why I am more interested in the welfare and well-being of the people who are actually involved in this question today.

I am still bothered by the thought that far too many former civil servants have no way of getting an income that is in any way reasonable except through an increase in their pensions. In my opinion the means employed to bring this about are secondary. I am not interested in whether this fund is being operated in a manner similar to that in which other funds are legally operating at the present time. I am interested, rather, in what the government intends to do to make it possible for those who have retired on pensions now shown to be inadequate to receive suitable increases. We have been talking about a guaranteed income in the future to provide people with enough to live on properly. Surely if we start by doing something for our retired public servants we will at least have closed the gap to some extent and we will not have to look after these people under some other scheme.

Surely this fund should be credited with a rate of interest that is more up to date. The old rate of 4 per cent is certainly an antique. It reminds that other money is being lent at a low rate of interest to the provinces through the Canada Pension Plan. Perhaps this money should also have been invested in some other way. There is no reason why money which will later be credited to pensions for the people of Canada should receive a lower rate of interest than the current rate simply because it is used to finance the municipalities and provinces of this country. However, that is another matter.

I just wanted to say that I have nothing particularly against the provisions of this bill because I do not think anyone will be harmed. I should have liked to see some provision made for higher interest rates for funds that are used for a definite purpose at the present time. In the same way that many funds of corporations are now making provision for raising the pensions of their retired employees, in a very few years we shall have to change the method we use to provide for pensions of public servants. I am sure this will be done fairly soon when some of the people who have been blocking progress in this regard have retired.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief comments on this bill. There is no doubt whatever that many retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, retired civil servants and former members of our armed forces are among the main victims of inflation. Many of these people live in my constituency and elsewhere in British Columbia. We are supposed to enjoy a fairly good measure of affluence in the province of British Columbia, yet 25 per cent of the people of that prosperous province live on less than $3,000 a year. These include families. Among the people living under difficult circumstances are many in the category to which this amendment is addressed.

[Mr. Richard.]

Together with other members of the house I support increases for the superannuates in the categories referred to. However, apart from the consideration of amendments of this kind, I think provision should be made for an escalation device as a hedge against the future erosion of superannuates' purchasing power. Surely we should be working toward achieving price stability in this country for all people, superannuates and others.

At the same time, we should have special regard for former employees of the public service. We should be the first in this country to make sure that they are indemnified in terms of their purchasing power and not merely in terms of the face value of the dollar bills they receive by way of pension. When former members of the R.C.M.P. and the public service retire, surely they have earned the right to live with dignity.

I have in my hand a copy of a letter I received from a former R.C.M.P. sergeant who is living in my constituency of Burnaby-Seymour. He says in part:

> We have made a canvas among a good number of our senior members who served full time in the service of their country and who are receiving pensions that hardly look after their rent. Some of them are in destitute circumstances. The last increase in R.C.M.P. pensions was in 1959. There are a number of us who are gainfully employed and who do not have to fully depend on a pension (thank God). I had 24 years of service, being pensioned in 1956 as a sergeant. My pension is approximately $2,700 per annum. My salary when pensioned was $4,980 per annum, whereas a sergeant today receives $9,074 and if leaving on pension at 24 years under Part Three of the R.C.M.P. Act, would receive approximately $425 per month in comparison to my pension of approximately $225, so you can see that in 12 years the pension has been almost doubled, and this has been brought on by the cost of living index rising every year with the resultant raises in salaries. The pensioners' income should rise along with the raises in pay and cost of living index, but they remain stagnant.

I agree with what this retired R.C.M.P. sergeant has to say. We have to set an example in this country by proving that those who establish a career with the government, whether they be members of the R.C.M.P., civil servants or members of the armed forces, enjoy fair treatment on the part of the federal government and are given the right to live with dignity. We owe it to these people to make sure that they are able to enjoy a reasonable degree of security in today's inflationary environment. We have to think not only in terms of helping those who are former members of the R.C.M.P. and the civil service but also those who have fought the good fight in the past, have served loyally and faithfully and today are among the chief victims of inflation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

• (4:10 p.m.)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Bill C-178, to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Drury moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say about the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. I should like to draw the attention of the house to some things which have been happening in respect of the Canadian forces. This matter has been raised on a number of occasions by members on this side of the house and I know that a great number of members on the government side have also become aware of it. The Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the interpretation thereof is, frankly, being used as a blackjack to keep men in the armed services. It is also being used to exercise discriminatory ways of handling men who decide they wish to withdraw from the services for different reasons. I am aware of many cases concerning particularly men in the non-officer category. What happens sometimes is that the serviceman applies to get out of the service because he does not like it. Frankly, this may still be the result of unification. They have very much in mind the words of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) when he was minister of national defence, that no man would be penalized as a result of his written request to get out.

I say that never was anything so false said or words so turned around, because scores and scores of cases have now come to my attention, and I know my colleagues have many other cases, in respect of which the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act has been used deliberately to keep men within the services. We know now that the morale among the members of the armed services has admittedly been bad and is worse. There are great gaps at the various levels within the services.

I have a particular case which I drew to the attention of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) who is looking into it. There are cases involving two men who worked alongside one another. One man states that he wants to get out; he does not want to re-engage. He is a long-service man who has had 22 years and 132 days' service. He was subjected to a penalty of 10 per cent. He had to pay back a portion of his re-enlistment bonus of $600. Since he left the service he met his former pal who had worked at the same place. This man had refused a transfer to another base. He was near the end of his engagement. It was decided to release him under some other provision. He was not penalized the 10 per cent nor did he have to repay his enlistment bonus or a portion thereof. Why the different treatment? There are numerous cases of this kind.

I have spoken to the Minister of National Defence, and all the while he exhibits the best of good will in cases of this kind and I know he is embarrassed by the situation. I wish to point out clearly to his senior military advisers that what they have been doing in these cases represents a breach of faith with the men and officers of the armed services as a result of unification. There have been far too many complaints and, shall we say, far too many instances of discrimination. Sometimes a man commits a minor offence which is just short of serious trouble and he is discharged for the good of the service. Often the person involved does not want to re-engage; he wants out. This man is simply told that he is being discharged. These men are happy to get out in any event regardless of the nature of the discharge.

It seems also that there have been some very friendly arrangements in respect of some discharges concerning whether or not the re-enlistment bonus should be returned. It is like the case of the old golden bowler. There was dishonesty with regard to some men who applied for this retirement bonus. Yet everything was done on an alleged up and up basis.

That is all I intend to say on this matter, but I wish it clearly understood that I know of scores and scores of cases of discrimination in discharges. The minister himself cannot look into all of these individual cases, but I suggest he should really step down hard on a number of types of cases. I do not know how he will manage this—I am not in the armed services—but this situation must be remedied. In many cases those who are affected are corporals and sergeants, the men who have considerable service. These are the persons who have been the experienced backbone of the services and have from 10 to 20 years service. Sometimes these people find that a person serving with them is given preferential treatment. If anything will hurt morale in the services this is it.

I say with all seriousness that I have a great admiration for the Canadian Armed Forces and a great love for them. What has been done is a matter of record. I grieve for these people. Finally, on the basis of an ex gratia payment an error is admitted and things are corrected. This is all I have to say on this occasion but I hope we will see some amelioration in the handling of superannuation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I did not take part in the debate on second reading and my remarks now will be short but I hope they will be to the point. I am concerned about this legislation in so far as it affects retired public servants, retired members of the R.C.M..P and retired members of the armed forces, but I particularly wish to deal with the question of the superannuated public servants.

I cannot forget the fact that in reply to questions placed on the order paper by my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre last December, information was received to the effect that 7,201 public servants were receiving pensions of less than $60 a month. That means that one-fifth of all the retired public servants are being asked to exist on less than $60 a month. In addition, some 8,000 widows of retired public servants receive less than $60 a month. That means that half of the widows of deceased public servants receive less than $60 a month.

We are dealing here with human beings and not just figures in a book. With today's prices no one can live on $60 a month. These people are not retired, they are rejected, they are neglected, they are thrown on the scrap heap, they are despised by the government that deals with them.

In May, 1967, a joint committee of the House and Senate made a unanimous recommendation that the pensions of these three groups of people should be raised. Whenever the question has been raised in the house since that time we have been given the runaround. We have been told that the matter is under consideration. We have been told it is being looked at. We have been told to wait until this report or that finding is brought in. And all the time these people are expected to exist on $60 a month; all the time the cost of living has been escalating. Last year alone it went up by 4 per cent.

In my view this is a gross betrayal of people who have given the best years of their service to their country. I do not think this betrayal should be obscured by the kind of talk we have had this afternoon. These are not just bookkeeping entries. The cost of living has gone up and these pensions should contain an escalator clause.

It is all very well for members on the government side to applaud these retired public servants. I noted one member from my own province whose heart fairly dripped blood and whose eyes were washed with tears at the plight of our retired public servants. Yet he got up and voted for this legislation under which the government will pay a higher rate of interest on superannuation fund accounts, but none of this extra money is to be used to pay higher pensions. What kind of honesty and integrity can people expect with that sort of thing?

This legislation provides for the payment by the government of higher rates of interest on superannuation funds for retired public servants, retired members of the R.C.M.P. and of the armed forces, but it also provides that no extra money will be paid in pensions. This is simply showing contempt for the people in these three categories who have worked for this country. I feel it is a great tragedy that the amendment moved by my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre has been defeated.

Once again we shall have letters flowing on to our desks from people who desperately watch the cost of living rise and try to live on pensions of $60 a month or less. A great many of these pensions are only $20 a month. This is an impossible injustice. I feel sure the people of this country will not remain quiescent when they realize what the government has done today. Its action is definitely giving the no to the unanimous recommendation two years ago of the Senate and House of Commons joint committee. It is giving a definite no to the people who had hoped that recognition would be given to the principle that retirement allowances should keep up with the cost of living. These people have asked for bread; they have been given the stone of neglect and complete rejection.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, once more I want to share in the battle on behalf of those superannuates in the three categories mentioned in this legislation. I was a member of the joint committee of the House and Senate referred to by the previous speaker. We presented a unanimous recommendation, and we have been waiting for a long time for action upon it.

Every weekend without fail I have had a call from at least one person, and sometimes more than one, asking when we are going to do something for these older people who retired some years ago. For some six months or so I have answered that I thought the government had many problems to wrestle with, but I was sure its instincts lay in the direction of doing something for these people. I can no longer justify the government's abysmal neglect, and if I get more such calls I will give the most political of answers, that the only possible solution is to throw out the present gang on the treasury benches and replace them with people who will have a heart for those now retired and in need.

One of the acts passed in 1959, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, being chapter 21 of the statutes of that year, required that an actuarial report be presented every five years on the Canadian Forces superannuation account. A report was presented on December 31, 1960. I gather that the second report was not presented in 1965. Perhaps it was commissioned in 1965 but it was not presented to this chamber until some time in the fall, and I am surprised at the number of service people who say they are unable to find out any information about this actuarial report.

I realize it is a public document, but apparently these people's attempts to find out what is in it through the normal channel—that would be the Department of National Defence—have not proven successful. Furthermore, I am surprised to learn that requests for information sent to the department by top military people on both the east and west coasts of Canada have not been favoured even with the courtesy of an acknowledgement. This I know to be a fact. It is something that is absolutely baffling to the officers and other ranks serving in the Maritime Command, and I presume the same situation exists on the west coast.

They are confronted with the clause in the legislation calling for an increase from 6 per cent to 6½ per cent. They knew last fall this would come about, when the pay increases were announced. But nobody has come along since to explain to them in dollars and cents why there should be an increase from 6 per cent to 6½ per cent. They are all contributors to it and in this sense one may call them shareholders. It is for their protection, their well-being and that of their families; yet they are unable to obtain information and answers to fairly basic questions. This is just about as good a way of destroying the morale of people who work in an important part of the government service as any that one could find.

I do not know why they are not given the information. I do not know why the letters from the senior people on the east and west coasts are not answered by Ottawa. Surely somebody could sit down and give these commanders information which could be passed round their commands. But this simply has not been done. So the service people look at the figures, they look at their contributions and at the interest earned by the fund, and almost invariably they stumble on the fact that the income of the fund is more than the outgo, at least on the figures that are available. Then they say: If this is not actuarial soundness, where does the actuarial unsoundness lie, because the money keeps piling up rather than diminishing? They are not given answers to that sort of question.

Two of the questions out of the many that servicemen have asked are: Why cannot the fund be evaluated and updated annually to establish current actuarial soundness? They argue, I think soundly, that in this computer age this should not be difficult if the computer is properly programmed. They would also like to know the value of the account as at the end of last year. They have not received the answer to that question.

So there has been a complete breakdown of communication. I am referring specifically to the Canadian forces superannuation fund. I am not dealing with the other categories. Perhaps the situation is as bad there; perhaps it is better—I do not know. But with regard to the Canadian forces superannuation fund there has been a breakdown of communication between the commands and Ottawa resulting in a great deal of unrest and unhappiness and a pretty human feeling that the increase from 6 per cent to 6½ per cent might be an attempt by the government to raise more money with which to help itself out of monetary difficulties. Perhaps the minister can set their minds at ease and tell them the amount in the fund, and also point out wherein lies the so-called actuarial unsoundness that is supposed to exist in the fund and for which the increase of one-half per cent is said to be the remedy.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has made points about the circumstances under which people can be kept in the services by using the superannuation account as a very powerful inducement. This is a complaint that a good number of senior officers are also making. I think it should be known, and perhaps not enough stress is put on this, that while the serviceman may have an advantage in retiring early it is a rather mixed blessing. For one thing there is a difference between the public service superannuation fund and the forces superannuation fund. The public civil servant has a great deal more portability or transferability of his contributions to the fund. He may move about freely within government departments and carry them with him. He may move from federal to provincial employ, or vice-versa, and carry them with him. He may move to most large civic governments and carry them with him. He may move to approximately 500 business firms and the portability is there.

But the serviceman who will probably be retiring at the age of 45 or upwards can transfer that fund only to other federal government departments. If he comes from another federal government department into the services, apparently he obtains no superannuation advantage, or at least the time spent in other government departments is not counted as qualifying time. I think this is a very serious disability to the men and women of the Canadian Armed Forces. I hope that when another look is taken at all these funds basic remedies to cover the points I have mentioned will be brought before us.

Finally, dealing specifically with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police portion of the act, and perhaps with some of the others, I point out that from time to time grievances are presented not only to myself but to other members involving the operations of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation fund. One person in my riding has had correspondence on his grievance for some 15 years now. Apparently he made a wrong election—somewhere along the way he was given poor advice—and has never been able to overcome the disability that he suffered.

This problem was taken originally to the St. Laurent government, so hon. members can appreciate that it did not arise just yesterday. Then it went to all the governments in turn, because this fellow is pretty vocal and is not going to stop writing to some M.P. about his problem until he is no longer able to write. The answer has been almost invariably the same. I think there is only one answer to his case, and that is to have some kind of appeal board dealing with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police portion of the fund to which the may may go, present his grievance and receive an ombudsman-like type of remedy. I do not think that under the way the fund has been operated the possibility of making an effective appeal is very likely. I believe the chances are that there will be the same turndown time after time. I know the man's file is a thick one. Every time he has reinforced his case the Department of Justice or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have reinforced their answer. I think he has introduced some rather compelling new points of grievance which have been simply shuffled aside.

These are the points I would like to make about these three funds. I hope more information will be available. As I say, I do not know about the kind of information available to public servants and the R.C.M.P., but I do know from talking to senior officers in the armed forces that they feel they are receiving no information at all and that there has been a real breakdown in communications. When letters written to Ottawa by senior people are not even acknowledged, let alone the important points raised in them answered, I think the Department of National Defence has brought a good deal of trouble on itself that it could very easily have avoided.

I do not want to heap that kind of criticism on the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) who is piloting this legislation through the house this afternoon. But I do suggest to him seriously that he should urge the Department of National Defence to inform these service people of what is going on with respect to their fund, and to answer the questions that have been raised and the correspondence from important people on both the east and west coasts in the last six months.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say before we give third reading to this bill. First, may I say that all the pleas by government members that they are just as sympathetic to the cause of retired civil servants as we on this side are, all the arguments about people not understanding the intricacies of pension funding versus non-funding, and all the complaints about a debate of this kind producing too many letters for some hon. members to deal with, do not set aside the fundamental fact that it is almost two years since a joint committee of both houses recommended action on behalf of retired civil servants, and nothing has been done. This is to the discredit of parliament and of the government for not providing an opportunity for dealing with this important measure.

I fully understand how the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) feels about this matter for he was the Commons chairman of the joint committee. He did a good job and all of us who were on that committee feel that faith was not kept. We feel that we had a right to believe that the recommendations we made would be acted upon, and for the government, now nearly two years later, to be amending these various superannuation acts without providing the increases that were recommended and in fact promised, is a crying shame.

So far as this bill is concerned, as has been said on several occasions, we believe there are a number of good things in it. I think particularly of provisions for widows who will have their pensions reinstated if a second marriage results in a divorce. I think of the provisions for children who stay in school or at university to have their pensions continued until age 25. I also think of certain adjustments that have been made between these plans and the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan. All these things are good, and that is why we are prepared to vote for this legislation.

I still regret that by virtue of a vote taken earlier this afternoon the bill contains clauses which provide for the government to pay a higher rate of interest on the money in the funds but on the strict understanding that none of that additional money is to be used to pay higher pensions to those who are now retired. I think that is a trick that is unworthy of the government. However, even with that in it the bill has other measures that are good, and therefore we feel it should receive the support of the house. But I plead as earnestly as I can that the next time the government brings in a bill to amend these various superannuation acts it deal with the matters that we have been talking about.

I give the government three things to do. First, I propose that the government provide for an increase in the pensions of those who are now retired. Second, I propose that it build into the act an automatic clause that will escalate after retirement—and here I am referring to those who are now working—the pensions of retired civil servants and I propose that that escalation be in line with increases in wages and salaries. Third, I propose that the government change the rate of the widow's pension. Leaving it at only 50 per cent of the late husband's pension is quite unfair, particularly when in our own Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act the rate for a widow's pension is 60 per cent. As a matter of fact, I think the rate for widows of civil servants should be higher than that; I would say 75 per cent.

I hope there will be another bill amending the Public Service Superannuation Act soon—I hope it will come this session. Let it do the three things I mentioned: raise the pensions of those now retired, build in an automatic escalation clause, and increase the rate of pensions paid to widows.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could announce a change in the order of business which has been agreed to by all sides. The maritime freight rates bill be not proceeded with now. I believe there is agreement to proceeding with government order No. 56, the report stage of Bill C-172, to amend the Financial Administration Act, and also a further understanding that this evening we will deal with government order No. 57, the government reorganization bill, in the hope of finishing it this evening.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS DEFINING VARIOUS TERMS AND AUTHORIZING THE EXERCISE OF POWERS—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-172, to amend the Financial Administration Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (for Mr. Hales) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act to amend the Financial Administration Act, be amended by deleting from clause 7 at line 4, page 5, the words "five thousand" and substituting therefor the words "one thousand".

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the present time section 23 of the Financial Administration Act reads as follows, and I think I should put the whole section on record:

23 (1) The Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, may, if he considers it in the public interest, delete from the accounts, in whole or in part, any obligation or debt due to Her Majesty or any claim by Her Majesty that does not exceed one thousand dollars.

(1a) The Treasury Board may make regulations authorizing the deletion from the accounts of any obligation or debt due to Her Majesty or any claim by Her Majesty that does not exceed one hundred dollars.

(2) The obligations, debts and claims deleted from the public accounts under this section during any year shall be reported in the public accounts for that year.

The proposed amendment in Bill C-172 raises the regulatory right of the Treasury Board up to $5,000. It is my impression that at the present time—the minister may correct me if I am wrong—anything over $1,000 must be handled in a different way. In which way I am not sure at the moment except that it must be covered by an item in the estimates, particularly if it deals with taxes for which an assessment has been made or with a customs entry which has been made and has been incorporated into the revenue and there are figures on one side of the consolidated revenue accounts ledger which must be taken care of if it is then written off.

My hon. friend from Wellington has proposed that notwithstanding the effects of inflation, and some so-called desire for administrative convenience, the ceiling remains at $1,000. The government wants to make it $5,000, and that is the difference between us.

Nothing is said about claims which do not exceed $100. The bill is lumping the two classes together, and frankly I do not see the purpose of doing so. Publication will, of course, continue to be made in the public accounts but I suggest parliament should have still greater control. I do not like this idea that the Treasury Board itself should have power to act. This is why we are proposing the amendment. If hon. members would like to refer to the evidence given before the committee I would draw their attention to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence Nos. 10 and 11 and 12 where they may find a record of the discussion which took place. Having said this, I move that the amendment be accepted by the house. It does not involve a question of principle; it is a question of the amount. We would like to maintain the status quo as to the ceiling of the amount that can be written off under the act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment, please say aye.

Some hon. Members: Aye.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those against the amendment, please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Mr. Francis (for Mr. Leblanc (Laurier)) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act to amend the Financial Administration Act be amended by deleting from clause 13 thereof, section 35, as amended in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and substituting therefor the following section:

"35. The balance of an appropriation granted for a fiscal year that remains unexpended at the end of the fiscal year shall lapse, except that during the thirty days immediately following the end of the fiscal year a payment may be made under the appropriation for the purpose of discharging a debt payable for work performed, goods received or services rendered prior to the end of the fiscal year or payable under any other contractual arrangement prior to the end of that year, and such payment may be charged in the accounts for the fiscal year."

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say a word about this amendment. The current language of the act, which is set forth on page 9 of the bill, does not, unfortunately, provide for payments contracted for prior to the end of the fiscal year in respect of which there may have been no work performed, goods received or services rendered. The case cited before the committee was that of an author commissioned to write a book or an artist commissioned to paint or reproduce a work of art. It is the practice of the trade, if I may call it so, for a payment to be made on the signing of such a contract even though no work may have been done or no service rendered.

In order to cover this kind of eventuality it was proposed to amend the section so that it would read "for the purpose of discharging a debt that became due prior to the end of the fiscal year". In committee there was some opinion that the relationship of the debt to services should be made a little more explicit, as a consequence of which the amendment now proposed by my hon. friend was introduced. It has the effect of elaborating on the words "a debt that became due".

The section now refers to a debt "payable for work performed, goods received or services rendered prior to the end of the fiscal year", to which the following words are now added: "or payable under any other contractual arrangement prior to the end of that year". This covers the additional circumstances I have mentioned, to reflect current methods of doing business. I commend the amendment to the house.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the minister has correctly stated that the government has accepted a restoration of all the words which existed in the previous section together with an addition. I think the minister made a case for the addition; the wording of the act did not cover the situation he described adequately.

I wish the minister had answered my question in the context of the proposals I put forward earlier and had explained why the government insisted on retaining the ceiling of $5,000, instead of putting the matter immediately to a vote. But we may be able to discuss this matter further on third reading. We on this side are in agreement with the amendment now put forward.

Amendment (Mr. Francis, for Mr. Leblanc, Laurier) agreed to.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Bill C-172, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on Monday, March 17, 1969, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drury moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Pursuant to standing order 40, it is my duty to inform the house that the following question will be raised tonight at the time of adjournment: the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc)—National Parks—Gaspé—Project at Pointe Forillon.

[English]

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

POWER

MINAS BASIN—SUGGESTED EXPEDITING OF STUDY AND DECISION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of taking immediate steps in consultation with the proper provincial authorities to bring to a conclusion within the next twelve months, the feasibility study of Minas Basin tidal power and on the basis of the study make a decision to proceed, or otherwise, within six months of receiving the study.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this subject could be very extensive or they could be brief. I intend to make them brief and to content myself with some four or five observations in connection with the study which is currently going on. I intend to relate my remarks to the development of the study which has taken place since the placing of this notice of motion on the order paper some six months ago, but before doing so I express the hope that the decision to provide more money for the study is a good omen for the province, bearing in mind the economic advantage which would flow from the development referred to in the motion.

The background to this on-going study which will culminate in June with a report to the government can very briefly be summed up in this way. In August, 1966, the federal authority and the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick agreed to launch what became known as feasibility studies by the Atlantic tidal power programming board. The programming board was made responsible for studying not only the physical but also the economic potential of the development of electric power from the massive tides in the Bay of Fundy and adjoining areas. Implicit also in the terms of reference of the committee was the very difficult and continuing task of studying and determining whether or not it would be feasible, assuming from an engineering point of view that it was, to transmit massive amounts of power to a ready and willing market.

These studies and their economic and physical or mechanical aspects have preoccupied the committee for some three years now. Indeed, so intensive did its work become that last year the board had to come back to its joint authority and seek additional funds. At that time about $1 million was requested, and it is in the fact it was granted that I find the first glimmer of hope. There was no hesitation whatever on the part of the federal government or the provinces willingly to underwrite the additional amount of money required to complete the studies.

When these studies are completed—I think this must be understood by hon. members—it will be recommended to the three governments concerned that detailed studies should either be made or not made with a view to proceeding or not proceeding with such development. Indeed, in the terms of reference set down for the board was a very explicit and clear direction that the board should in its report include not only the details but the cost of additional studies. I assume those studies would relate to preliminary engineering work-ups, information about where the massive amounts of money required to finance this development could be found and at what cost. Perhaps because I am an optimist and believe that the report will be a positive one in all aspects, with the possible exception of that part of the report that deals with the cost of the money required, I hope that the three governments involved, but principally the senior government in Ottawa, will not in any way hesitate to extend these studies so that the question may be gone into in more depth, if only to determine at what stage this development could be proceeded with.

As I say, I believe the report will be a positive one. I do not think anybody questions the massive amount of electrical energy potentially contained in the tides of the Minas Basin, the Annapolis Basin and St. Mary's Basin, which were also included in these studies, as was Chignecto Bay. I think the report will indicate that it is possible from an engineering point of view to proceed, that the tidal regime itself is compatible with harnessing, that sedimentation—control over deposits on the floor of these basins—will not pose any real problem, that the massive amount of potential energy in the tides can be harnessed and transmitted economically, that there will be no detrimental effect on the fisheries or on transportation, for example, in these three specific areas and that the chief concern will be with regard to the cost of the capital required. If the report that is brought down is favourable in the directions I have indicated, I hope the government will not hesitate to authorize on-going studies to determine where the money required can be borrowed, at what cost, and to what extent the federal authority may, if the cost of the money is too expensive, subsidize such cost.

The benefits of this development to the Atlantic provinces are sufficient to excite the hearts and souls of anyone who has had to live, work and struggle industrially in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. At last year's federal-provincial constitutional conference the premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. G. I. Smith, among other points made a very real and continuing one. It was he who sounded the call to arms, so to speak, for all Canadians to act in the national sense in order to reduce the incidence and magnitude of regional disparity. Indeed, so clear was the premier's plea in this regard that the government responded positively. I am not giving all the credit to our premier but it was he who first spoke out publicly and most forcefully. As I say, the government responded in a positive sense, and as a result the house is now considering the proposal to establish a regional desk, the department of regional affairs.

One premise to which the premier is dedicated is implicit in his urgent call, and I suppose it is a key segment of any plan to reorganize our economy with federal help. It is that Canada is only as strong as its provinces. You cannot have national unity as long as you have disparity of the magnitude that exists in Canada today. It exists most notably, of course, in the rural parts of Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces. One way, indeed the only real way, to overcome it within a reasonable period of time and without massive subsidies for programs fulfilling varied requirements would be by reacting positively to the report of the tidal programming board and for the government to become involved in the capital expenditures required for the building of dams and hydroelectric generating systems.

If the cost of money will make the carrying out of this program prohibitive I suggest we could subsidize the cost. There is nothing inconsistent about that. If that is not done the people of Canada for a long time will pour money on a massive scale into various programs for the Atlantic region until, accidentally, one is found that works. That is not good enough. The hydroelectric power potential of the Minas Basin and the Bay of Fundy in general is unmatched. If we could tap it the electrical power produced would exceed by an almost immeasurable margin all the electric power produced in Canada in 1969.

The project would produce more power than is generated in all of North America.

So fantastic and so encouraging are preliminary reports that that statement stands, I think, without contradiction. In practical terms it means that with such power available reduction industries which need massive amounts of power could be set up in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to employ our people, not in groups of five or ten but in thousands. That is what we require. We have hundreds of industries in the Atlantic provinces but each employs only a handful of people. We need large industries employing thousands of people so that we can build up our markets and so that the port of Halifax will have a viable reason to continue as a port. The port is on deep water, and a spin-off effect of these huge new industries would be the revitalization of one of our most viable industries at present, the port of Halifax.

I reiterate that it is necessary for the government to react favourably to the report which, to judge from what I know, will be a favourable one. I therefore suggest that the government ought to react positively by making clear at an early date that if the cost of money is the only serious impediment to carrying out the program it will consider subsidizing that cost and will involve itself in this development.

The final part of my notice of motion calls on the government to make a decision to proceed or otherwise with this project within six months of receiving the study. I have included that wording because the passage of time concerns us. We do not want to wait 15 or 20 years for someone to say that the money market is favourable and if the program is begun then it will be finished within seven or eight years. If the study is positive the project should not be shelved but proceeded with as soon as the government has had an opportunity to look into all its implications. I make this suggestion because I know it will take a certain amount of time before a final decision can be taken. In any event, I hope that by January 1, 1970, the government will be deeply involved in the on-going studies that will result if the terms of reference of the feasibility study have been met. I invite hon. members to support this notice of motion.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) for bringing this matter to the attention of the house during private members' hour. It is an important subject and has been debated at least twice during the time I have been in the house. I was happy to speak on it on previous occasions.

As was pointed out, in August, 1966, the government of Canada entered into an agreement with the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to study the feasibility of power development in the Minas Basin area and Shepody Basin. The present notice of motion asks the government to consider the advisability of taking immediate steps in consultation with the proper provincial authorities to bring to a conclusion within the next 12 months the feasibility study regarding tidal power development which has been mentioned previously and to make a decision on that project.

The agreement signed in August, 1966, indicated that the feasibility study probably would be finished by June 30. Perhaps it will not be possible for that to be done. Nevertheless, up to now it has been understood that the study will be completed by June 30. Once it has been completed the government of Canada, in conjunction with the provinces involved, will have to decide if the report is positive and favourable. The government of Canada will then have to decide how it will help the provinces to finance the project. Should the report be positive it will mean that the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia will have a great potential opportunity to sell power to the United States. It will also show how important the Bay of Fundy area is to the development of tidal power.

If the report is positive and favourable we should consider not only the development of electric power but also the opportunities for employment that will be opened up in the Atlantic region. Employment opportunities will be created in the building of these power installations as well as after they have been finished.

The government has committed itself to the idea of reducing regional disparities in this country. Before the present house there is a bill setting up the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The minister who will be in charge of this department has already said that economic expansion by itself does not mean much without the co-operation and co-ordination of all government programs. This fact has been brought before the house many times during the debate on the reorganization bill. It has also been brought to the attention of the Standing Committee on Regional Development. As mentioned by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the employment created by such a project would be as good and possibly better than subsidizing 10 or 15 industries in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia.

This is an area where the government by its planning and co-ordination of programs can assist the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The decision to finance this project and to assist the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia will have to take into account the good these projects can do to the economy. The rate for power will be reduced enormously and it will help our balance of payments. The government will have to be consistent because this is one way to help the economy of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. We had a example in New Brunswick in the last three or four years in the Mactaquac power project which assisted the payroll of New Brunswick enormously. The fact that many people were employed on that project for three or four years will have to be taken into consideration.

I would like to say a few words with regard to the power aspect. The Bay of Fundy is one of the few places in the world where tides range up to 52 feet. The bay is about 50 miles wide at its mouth and is about 180 miles long ending in two arms, Minas Basin and Chignecto Bay. It is because of these enormous tides that the subject of power development was raised. The question has been raised as to how important tidal waves are in power development.

An enormous amount of energy is contained in the daily movement of tides throughout the world. Tidal power dissipated by friction and eddies alone has been estimated as being roughly comparable to all of the economically exploitable power potential of the rivers of the world. A power development project seems to be feasible in the Bay of Fundy.

I hope that in presenting this motion the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East was not suggesting that the study should be stopped within 12 months. The Atlantic Tidal Power Development Board may require more time than that. I think the hon. member's point is that the project should not be forgotten with the conclusion of the study. If the report is positive, I will support the building of this project as soon as possible. However, it would be subject to priorities. As I stated, the government will have to study it from an economic expansion point of view. If the report is positive I will ask the government to help the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to finance the project.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) for having again brought this matter to the attention of the house. The hon. member has implied that the study begun several years ago is progressing well. The motion asks that the study be brought to a conclusion within 12 months and a decision made on whether the project will be proceeded with.

I have always been impressed with the amount of power estimated to be contained in the tides of the Bay of Fundy. It has been the source of engineering inspiration for many years. I am surprised that the study has now reached a cost of $1 million without any indication to the people of this country of what is being achieved. If $1½ million is to be spent on a study of this great natural resource, it is time for the people involved in the study to put forth some information as to their findings and the findings of other countries in this regard. I understand that considerable work has been done in this field in at least two other countries, in Holland where power was generated from a similar source and in Madagascar where a large experiment was sponsored by the French government. The French have also experimented in their own country.

I was interested to hear of the potential that this project has for this area. I disagree with the hon. member on the government side who suggested that this project should be proceeded with soon in order that the power may be sold elsewhere. This is a typical solution to power development in the normal sense. At Hamilton Falls, where there really is no industry, we talk about establishing and expanding our national grid by permitting the sale of that power. Surely that is not what we want in the maritimes. In the maritimes the development of this natural resource should provide a source of inspiration for the development of industry.

Unless the study reaches a decision with regard to developing secondary industry in that area, the quantity of power produced will only mean cheaper power for cities such as Toronto, Montreal, Boston and New York. It really will not assist in the development of the maritimes. I hope the study will take into consideration the aspiration of the people of the maritime provinces not to sell power but to develop industry.

I believe it will be found that we are much too late in developing just another cheap power resource. I think of a number of statements that were made when the Saskatchewan River project was being developed. I sat in on a meeting when the former premier of that province had a discussion with his finance minister about the cost of developing power on the Saskatchewan River. He pointed out at that time that power could be developed from a thermal plant probably two mills cheaper than by the hydro plants on the Saskatchewan River. The decision to go ahead with the Saskatchewan River project did not hinge on the power development but on the total change in the economy of the whole area this project would bring about. That again raises the point of whether or not this project was 50 years too late. The irrigation part of the project was a dream of the people on the prairies in the dust bowl days because it would have perhaps alleviated the depression in that area which was probably worse than in any other part of Canada.

For many years the people of the maritimes have been working very hard to develop the economy of their area. I hope that this power development, if it takes place and when it takes place, will not be a power development for the sake of power but that it will be for the sake of the natural resource around which a totally new and vibrant economy could be created. If we are only to become involved in establishing grids, I feel quite strongly the people of the maritimes will get absolutely nothing out of the expenditure except the labour force that is involved in producing it. My area has probably the only large power developments that are taking place in Ontario or which will take place in the future. We are putting that power into the major cities, thereby defeating the problem we are trying to solve which is to bring industry into the area. We are doing this because the project which is worth $40 million will employ 2,000 or 3,000 people on a temporary basis. When the plant is in operation it will employ 30 or 40 people. It will be a cheap source of electricity for the industrial area of Ontario and the United States.

I hope the house will agree to accept the motion of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), and in doing so will be cognizant of the particular value this development could have in relation to the total economy of the maritime provinces. I strongly urge hon. members who are interested to remember that if the only purpose of the project is the production of cheap power, that probably could be produced in a much better way in other areas. If the purpose of the federal government and provincial governments, in co-operation with the minister of regional development, is the development of a secondary industry which would rely on the hydro-electric resource being developed by this project, then the project will be worthy of the support of every member in this house. If it is to be only a cheap source of power for export purposes, I for one think we should only consider the engineering feasibility of the project and not the practicality of developing electricity. If this project will produce a resource which will be able to solve many of the problems of the maritimes, it will be of benefit to this area. However, if it is only for the purpose of providing cheap electric power, it will provide very little revenue for that area.

At the same time the power produced will be of value to the areas which will be in competition with this area.

Mr. G. A. Percy Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I welcome an opportunity to say something on this very important subject. I congratulate the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) for bringing forward this notice of motion. The question is of interest to me and the residents of my riding of Northumberland-Miramichi. Although we live about 150 miles distant from Minas Basin and in another province, it is important to everyone living in the maritime provinces. Any measure or any project which tends to increase the supply of electric power or to lessen the cost of the same should be supported by all maritimers. The province of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are linked in a power grid and projects of this nature would be mutually beneficial. The importance of an adequate supply of power at reasonable rates to the growth of our economy cannot be over-emphasized.

I feel sure the minister who will head the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion is aware of this. It must not be forgotten, however, that two of the main factors to be considered by any industry which might be interested in establishing in the maritimes are first, the one I have just mentioned, and second, transportation. I should like to speak a little about an adjoining power project which involves the harnessing of the tremendous tides of the Bay of Fundy. This is a project which has been studied in greater detail, and I believe is more feasible than the Minas Basin project. I am referring to the harnessing of the tides of Shepody Bay and Cumberland Basin. This latter project is usually associated with the Chignecto Canal in one giant package. The canal would open up shipping on the East Coast and the Northeast Coast of New Brunswick and make even more necessary and urgent the dredging of Miramichi Bay to a depth of 26 feet, a project that we have been seeking for many years.

As to the amount of power that could be produced, the so-called Robichaud Report of January, 1962 stated—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I would invite him to deal specifically with the notice of motion. The notice of motion deals with the Minas Basin Tidal Power Project and I would invite him to direct his remarks specifically to that subject.

Mr. Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): We do not have as detailed figures in respect of the Minas Basin project as we do in respect of the adjoining project which as I say, would utilize the same tremendous tides. Incidentally, I would concede to the hon. member who brought forward the motion that the project in respect of which we have some figures is insignificant in comparison to the tremendous power that could be produced by harnessing the tides in the Minas Basin.

However, the report to which I referred, of January 1962, stated that the tides in Shepody offered a minimum potential of 5½ billion kilowatts per year. From a later estimate, arising out of studies made by the Foundation of Canada Engineering Corporation, the figure of 10 billions has been suggested as the bare minimum. At that time, in 1962, the cost was estimated to be in the vicinity of $325 million for 100 units, 50 on each bay, Shepody and Cumberland. This would be exclusive of the cost of interest during construction. At the same time the cost of the canal itself was estimated at $142 million.

It should be noted that at that time New 10 billion cubic feet of merchantable timber. Brunswick industrialist K. C. Irving unilaterally promised to establish new industry in the vicinity of the canal and power project to a capital cost of $100 million. In 1961, when Mr. Walker, the then minister of public works, spoke unfavourably about this canal project that offer was withdrawn, but I understand it has lately been renewed.

I would like to quote from an editorial by Michael Wardell, in the Atlantic Advocate, on this subject. He has been secretary of the Chignecto Canal Committee and has studied this project from its very beginning. He wrote:

> The tidal power of Chignecto Bay is likely to be for all time the cheapest power, inexhaustible, and once established becoming ever cheaper in terms of real values that rise in relation to money.
> It should be used for providing the peaks of power integrated by means of a grid with firm power supplied from thermal, hydro or atomic generators.

While I do not wish to take anything away from the importance of the Minas Basin tidal project, and while I do support the hon. member in his appeal for a study, I would point out that it is a much larger undertaking than the one nearby that has been studied in great detail.

Writing in an editorial in the Atlantic Advocate of December, 1964, Brigadier Wardell said as follows:

> Alongside is Minas Basin, another tidal project so huge that it daunts the hearts of our planners even to think of it. It has the attractive by-product of a road which might be laid across the dam to connect the area of Cumberland county to the Annapolis valley.

It is known that it is feasible to produce electric power by harnessing these tremendous tides of the Bay of Fundy. A joint United States-Canada study was made of the Quoddy project near the border of Maine and New Brunswick on the same Bay of Fundy. In the report of the International Joint Commission dated April, 1961, a similar project there was declared to be fully feasible.

There is no doubt that the impact of the development of one of these projects on the economy of the Maritime provinces would be immense. Much additional employment would be created during the period of construction. But it is the permanent prosperity following the completion of the plan that would raise the standards of the region for all time. There is a general belief that it would contribute tremendously to the development of the Maritime provinces.

The provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have vast wealth in natural resources. Nova Scotia has rich deposits of gypsum and coal in great quantity. It also has more than 10 million acres of forest land and New Brunswick has over 15 million acres of forest land and 17 billion cubic feet of merchantable timber. A recent report of the government of New Brunswick stated that annual utilization of forest products could and should be doubled. In addition, New Brunswick has large mineral deposits to be developed.

These regional resources, wood, minerals, chemicals and salt deposits which Nova Scotia has in abundance, are all dependent upon an ample supply of cheap power for processing. The Maritimes should be the resource base for Britain and Europe, and with cheap power could develop in processed products an important export trade served by its winter ports.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I see there are only a few minutes left and I know the house would want to bring this matter to a vote. I merely want to indicate my support for the motion of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), and I certainly was pleased to hear my colleagues from New Brunswick, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith) speak in favour of it, although they did have some reservations.

This project has an interesting history and I want to take just a moment to go back to 1962 when action was taken which brought about this report. It was, I think in all fairness, the result of a committee that was formed under Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick with respect to the Chignecto canal and most of us on both sides of the house from the Maritime provinces were on that committee. We held many meetings. They were very constructive. We urgently recommended that consulting firms, three very highly qualified firms, H. G. Acres and Company, Foundation of Canada Engineering Corporation, and LaSalle Hydraulic Laboratory Limited, be commissioned to conduct a survey into the Chignecto canal project, and from information in that study we made our decisions.

We decided that there were large quantities of low cost electric power that could be generated by using the tremendous tides of the Bay of Fundy, and that a new approach should be made to the federal government for the construction of the Chignecto canal. The report, and I quote, covered:

> —the possible effects which the development of tidal power at the head of the Bay of Fundy might have on the Chignecto canal.

There was an assessment of the kilowatt power available, and I might say at that time it compared quite favourably with the development in Labrador which is now in existence. However, this is the main recommendation that came out of that committee:

> For a number of years we have been interested in the improved transportation facilities for the Maritime provinces which would result from the construction of the Chignecto canal. The joint preliminary report from the three consulting firms states that the construction of a dam across the entrance of the Cumberland Basin, required for the development of tidal power and for keeping the water in this basin at a higher level, would have a beneficial effect on the cost and operation of the approach to the Chignecto canal by reducing the initial cost of dredging, as well as its future maintenance costs. It would also reduce tidal currents now prevailing in the Cumberland Basin, thus improving the navigation.

This is one of the main reasons I rose at this late hour to support the development. I think the Minas Basin tidal power project has a tremendous future. I hope the feasibility report will come forward and we will undertake any later studies that are necessary. We, in the house, have been talking in a very derogatory way about the various reports and studies made for many years regarding the Atlantic provinces. I agree that there have been too many. But this is one future project, with all its ancillary benefits, that I think every member would like to see considered in detail and afforded the fullest study which will result in recommendations and definite action.

The project has been likened, as I say, to the one in Labrador of the magnitude of nine kilowatts. In this day and age the project stands on its own two feet as far as costs are concerned. But let us not lose sight of the great benefits that would accrue to the Bay of Fundy area if we saw our way clear to move in this regard. The problem of regional disparity is a current one. I think this project would fit very well into our plans in dealing with that problem. It would bring to the port of Saint John, in which I am interested, a vibrant and healthy future. We would have the benefits of the cheap transportation that the Chignecto Canal would bring. This would, of course, be made possible by the development of tidal power in the Minas Basin-Shepody Bay-Chignecto area.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the house of the support this project has received through the years. I have quoted from Premier Robichaud's statement of 1962, when he was more interested in this matter than he is now. I know that his province now has horrible financial troubles. I know that New Brunswick is on the verge of bankruptcy, and we hope something can be done to assist the province. At the same time, we must recognize that while the support of Premier Robichaud has waned a bit lately because of all his other troubles, his support is indelibly written into this report of May 31, 1962. I commend it to the house, together with the support of those who have already spoken about this project. I hope we shall not talk this measure out but will take a vote on it before six o'clock.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) for providing a few minutes in which I may speak on this motion. I agree generally with speakers on both sides of the house who have supported the objects of the study and have indicated the necessity and importance of getting ahead with it as quickly as possible.

It seems to me that if any useful purpose would be served it would, indeed, be a good thing to let the matter come to a vote tonight. I gather from what has been said in the debate in the 57 minutes or so up to now that there will be general support for the motion. However, in the two minutes left to me I should like to consider with the house the motion we are debating, which was put on the order paper by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

As he indicated in his remarks when introducing the motion, it was filed on September 18 and at that time the hon. member did not anticipate—I think he indicated his delight that this action had been taken—that subsequently in December of 1968 an amending agreement would be made among the two provinces concerned and the government of Canada. As a result, changes were made to the original agreement. My hon. friend of course had no way of knowing at the time he put his motion on the order paper that this would be done.

Dealing with the first part of the motion, Mr. Speaker, asking that the study be brought to a conclusion within the next 12 months, this of course is provided for in the amending agreement. I have here a copy of the agreement among the two provinces and the government of Canada. It is dated December, 1968. Paragraph 2 of the amending agreement, under a subsection called Phase II, which amends section 4 of the original agreement, provides as follows:

> The preliminary engineering design of one or more tidal schemes including preliminary marketing and transmission studies. The objective is to complete these studies by June 30, 1969.

That is in fact the objective, and hopefully it will be completed before the timetable set out by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. I should like to read the second part of the hon. member's motion, which is as follows:

> —the feasibility study of Minas Basin tidal power and on the basis of the study make a decision to proceed, or otherwise, within six months of receiving the study.

It seems to me it would not be in the best interests of this house, or indeed of parliament, if we were to recommend to the government anything that would tie its hands in considering the study. Of course, this would be only a recommendation, but I believe that in view of the amount of time, money, the very great importance of this matter and the ramifications which flow from it—these have been very ably described by all speakers this afternoon—we would not want to tie the hands of the government as a result of this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair and will resume the same at 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed from Friday, March 21, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-173. When the committee rose on Friday clause 20 had been allowed to stand, and clause 25 was under consideration together with an amendment proposed thereto by the hon. member for Egmont.

On clause 25—Plans for Economic Expansion.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, with the unanimous consent of the committee I should like to revert to clause 24 because I found a technical mistake in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Egmont. According to the way in which the amendment was drafted, the government of Canada would consult a province on the designation of any area in Canada. In fact, this would mean that I may be consulting Nova Scotia on the designation of an area in Alberta. So, the amended clause should be corrected to read that the consultation is in relation to the designation of an area in the province with which consultations are held, not anywhere in Canada.

Therefore, if the committee has no objection, I should like to make this correction.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee agreed to reverting to clause 24?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 24—Designation of Special Areas.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will circulate copies of the amended clause which reads as follows:

The Governor in Council, after consultation with the government of any province, may by order designate as a special area, for the period set out in the order, any area in that province that is determined to require, by reason of the exceptional inadequacy of opportunities for productive employment of the people of that area or of the region of which that area is a part, special measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That amendment is agreeable to us because it makes clear the intent of the original amendment made on Friday.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there agreement to the clause as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I suggest there might be general agreement to progress being reported, following which we can arrive at an order to deal with the bill for the balance of the evening. If we had the order made now, we may be in a better position to plan our work through the course of the evening.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Baldwin: This would be agreeable to us.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit later today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

AGREEMENT TO EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, following certain discussions I think there might be a disposition to continue the sitting of the house beyond the normal time of adjournment, that is until eleven o'clock this evening, for the purpose of putting all the remaining questions necessary to dispose of the bill. If there is such a general disposition, an order could be made to extend the sitting of the house and also another order that if the bill has not been passed sooner all questions may be put at eleven o'clock for the purpose of disposing of the bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree to that, Mr. Speaker, but we would like it understood that if we finish with the bill before ten o'clock we will call it a day.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I agree to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating and incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

On clause 25—Plans for Economic Expansion.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Now that the minister and members of the government have had the week end to consider the problem I posed with this amendment, may I remind the minister what he said to me. Although he was not happy with the way in which the amendment was drawn up, he said he could assure us that this obviously was the intent of the government in reorganizing the department and appointing him as minister. However, I think it would be necessary, in view of what I and the minister in fact have termed the failures of the government in the past to grapple adequately with problems of regional disparity in this country, to set up some clearcut machinery in the statute. This was obviously felt to be one of the important needs in the establishment of the FRED program, which was the last phase in an attempt to deal with problems of regional disparity. Although the FRED board might have been inadequate, at least it was an attempt to put into the statute some form of machinery which would in effect get beyond the separate empires or the kind of ghetto mentality that often operates in various government departments as opposed to a co-ordinated monetary and fiscal policy. If the minister is not prepared to accept this amendment, as seemed to be the case on Friday, I hope he has arrived in the chamber with some concrete alternative proposal. If he has such a proposal, I would be happy to withdraw this amendment in its favour.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is clear in clause 25 of the bill that there has to be co-operation between the departments of government and the agencies involved. If we read the clause, we find it says this:

> In exercising his powers and carrying out his duties and functions under section 23, the minister shall, in co-operation with other departments, branches and agencies of the Government of Canada, formulate plans for the economic expansion and social adjustment of special areas.

This means I have no choice. If I carry out this provision I shall be bound to co-operate with all these other departments and agencies. As to the means by which I shall do so, I believe it is impossible to say at this stage. What the house appears to want—and I think it is quite right to do so—is to ensure the existence of some kind of mechanism to facilitate this kind of co-operation.

I do not know how I can carry out this provision in the absence of a structure of some kind. The only thing which embarrasses me is that the method suggested by the hon. member for Egmont does not appear to be a good one. After a week, or after a month or two, it would become evident that it would not work, and this bill would have to be amended. Some kind of structure to ensure co-operation will have to be set up, but it is not likely we shall ever be in a position to write into the law the structure to ensure that this co-operation will take place. If we fail to create this structure, it means we are not carrying out the purpose of the law and, of course, we intend to do so. It would not be wise to make compulsory the setting up of any particular structure at this moment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I find it surprising to hear the minister suggest that some formula cannot be devised at this point to ensure that co-operation is achieved. After all, this deals with one of the most long standing difficulties in the field of government administration. The problem was admitted when the FRED board was set up two years ago. So, the department has been aware of its existence for a long time.

When the minister told us that under the terms of clause 25 he was obliged to co-operate with other departments, he missed one of the points inherent in this amendment. What we are really concerned about is not that he will fail to co-operate with other ministers, but that other ministers will fail to co-operate with his department.

The hon. gentleman found it difficult to make a clear cut statement this evening. If this amendment is defeated, I wonder if he would agree to report to the house later on the nature of the mechanism which will eventually be set up to deal with this problem. It is important to the effective working of this whole program that the house be appraised in the not too distant future as to the exact nature of the machinery which the department, or the government, or the Governor in Council have devised to ensure that this basic issue of co-operation is dealt with.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I would have no objection, Mr. Chairman, except that if we were to set up a cabinet committee I do not believe I could give the house a list of the ministers appointed to it. This is not done in the case of existing committees.

Under the FRED plan, membership of committees and so on, and the functions of those appointed, can be made known. To this, I would have no objection.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I assume that if a committee is to be effective it will have to comprise more than cabinet ministers. We are all realistic enough to know that if policy decisions are to be carried out, the structure to be set up must include people at the senior level of government service. For this reason, I think it ought to be easy for the minister to give an assurance that he will outline the system which the government will use.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I should like to call attention to a statement which the hon. member made a few moments ago. He said that he and his hon. friends were afraid not so much that the minister of the new department might fail to co-operate, but that ministers representing other departments might fail to do so. The hon. member ought not to forget that the duty set out in the legislation is the duty of the government as a whole. This is a law which binds the government, so the government as a whole, the Prime Minister and the cabinet, will have to implement it.

In these circumstances, I do not think the individual departments will have a choice. As far as the organization of these matters is concerned, I see no reason why the house should not know how we are arranging for the implementation of this section, provided nothing of a confidential nature is involved.

Amendment (Mr. MacDonald (Egmont)) negatived; yeas, 12; nays, 33.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 26—General agreements with the provinces.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I indicated in my preliminary remarks, Mr. Chairman, that I intended to present an amendment to clause 26. It will be moved by my colleague the Postmaster General.

Mr. Kierans: I move:

That Bill C-173 be amended by striking out lines 24 to 30 on page 9 and substituting the following:

26(1) The Minister may, in co-operation with any province formulate a plan of economic expansion and social adjustment in a special area and, with the approval of the Governor in Council and subject to the regulations, enter into an agreement with that province for the joint carrying out of such plan.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to see the minister introduce this amendment; I think it is a step in the right direction. Again, it emphasizes one of the points we have been concerned with in this legislation, which is that a province or provinces shall be involved at all stages in the devising of policies and programs for regional development.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

The original clause 26(1), as may be noticed, omitted at the very important stage of formulating plans, the involvement of the province. I am very glad to see the minister and the government introduce this amendment, and I hope they may have another amendment or two in this regard as we go along.

Amendment (Mr. Kierans) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 26 as amended carry?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 26 (2) it seems to us that here we are faced with an even more important part of this particular clause. It struck the committee that the failure to include some provision for negotiation with the provinces prior to the ratification of an agreement by the two governments in question is quite a sizeable omission. I refer in particular to the second line of subclause (2), the subclause reading as follows:

Nothwithstanding subsection (1), detailed negotiation of any draft agreement under this section shall not be undertaken by or on behalf of the minister unless the plan to which the draft agreement relates has first been approved by the Governor in Council.

It seems to me that if sufficient discussion and conversations could not be held with the provinces before the agreement of the Governor in Council is obtained, then we are in fact greatly limiting the participation of the provinces in the devising of the actual plans that will go into effect and which have implications for the provinces.

Therefore, I am going to propose an amendment. While it may not be quite the answer that it was prior to the moving of the minister's own amendment to clause 26 (1) does close what I consider to be a very dangerous gap in this particular clause. Therefore, I move that clause 26 (2) be amended by inserting after the words "Governor in Council" the following:

—provided such agreement has been generally accepted by the participating province.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Egmont moves that clause 26 (2) be amended by adding after the words "Governor in Council" the following:

"—provided such agreement has been generally accepted by the participating province or other responsible authority."

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): No, Mr. Chairman, I have deleted those last four words.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment would serve any purpose at all. Clause 26 (1) provides that in the formulation or elaboration of any plan the government must negotiate with the province concerned; that is the substance of the clause. We have to negotiate with the provinces. The second paragraph does not relate at all to the provinces but merely provides the conditions upon which the minister himself, representing the federal government, shall negotiate an agreement which has to be authorized first of all by the Governor in Council.

I see no reason for providing that any such agreement must be accepted by the province concerned. Unless an agreement is accepted by the province, the province will not sign it. Indeed, the province itself may well have this regulation. It may well say to the responsible minister that he is not to sign any agreement with the federal government unless it is first approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That would be up to the province to decide and is an internal procedure. Therefore, I do not know why the hon. member puts forward this amendment.

Provision is made for reaching an agreement in subclause (1). If an agreement is reached with a province, we would not need such an amendment. We do not want to compel a province to accept what has been negotiated. As I say, I do not see the purpose of this amendment.

Subclause (2) deals with the powers of the minister. I cannot sign an agreement unless it is first approved by the Governor in Council. That is all the subclause provides. It does not impose anything upon the provinces. Some provinces may decide that three of its ministers have to sign an agreement; it is a matter for them, not for us. That is why I think the amendment would be useless and serve no purpose.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I should just like to ask one question here, one that initially raised this whole subject in my mind. The opening words of clause 26 (2) are: "Notwithstanding subsection (1)". Then, the subclause goes on to talk about detailed negotiation. The inference I draw from that, though I may be misreading this particular clause, is that it puts the province in the unhappy position really of having to buy something sight unseen. If that is not what the clause implies, I will be happy to withdraw this particular amendment.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Since provision is made for consultation with the provinces, I see no point in the amendment because it does not add anything. I think it would only confuse.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the hon. member has leave to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. MacDonald, Egmont) withdrawn.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 26 as amended carry?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have one other question on clause 26 (3) (c) which refers to Canada and a province procuring the incorporation of one or more agencies. I am wondering whether there is provision in this particular clause for the establishment by the government of Canada and one or more province of an incorporated body. In other words, if I may use this as an example, is it possible for an incorporated body to be set up by the government of Canada and, say, three or four provinces in the Atlantic area?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes. Well, not under 26.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Where then?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Does the hon. member have in mind the setting up of a corporation like Devco, for example, in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): No, I am thinking of an incorporated body that might be set up in conjunction with government of Prince Edward Island to administer the comprehensive development plan in that area. Is it possible that as the department moves in and devises plans, there may be plans that relate to more than one province and some kind of incorporated agency may be required in which both the federal government and the provincial governments must participate.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think there is provision in the bill, Mr. Chairman, for the setting up in any province a corporation similar to the Devco Corporation of Nova Scotia.

As far as other councils or bodies are concerned, the province and the federal government may set up such bodies under an agreement, as was the case with the Prince Edward Island agency. We can already do that. We do not need any addition to the law to permit us to set up that type of agency. As I say, we did that with the Prince Edward Island plan. We have comparable structures in the lower St. Lawrence agreement where we have, de facto, recognized the local council as the regional economic council. I think we have sufficient powers and we do not need anything else in the law.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I do not think the minister is getting my point. It is not difficult to comtemplate that under the kinds of structures which have been devised to date affecting the government of Canada and one province specifically, other provinces may wish to participate in some form of incorporated body set up under clause 26(3)(c). At present it seems that participation with respect to such incorporated body is limited to one province, but I submit it would be more desirable if two or three provinces participated with the federal government.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As the minister knows, I am prepared to move an amendment adding the words in the fourth line from the end of the subclause "or provinces". I think that such an amendment would give greater flexibility.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have seen the amendment, Mr. Chairman. The law officers of the Crown inform us that when we use the word "province" in the singular, that also includes provinces in the plural.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 26 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 26 as amended carried.

Clause 27 and 28 carried.

On clause 29—Council established.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, this clause attempts to deal with the scant remaining bones of the Atlantic Development Board. One wonders why the government introduced this clause, because the Atlantic Development Board seems to have been stripped of a great deal of authority. Under this clause, a group of men is to meet once or twice a year, in Ottawa presumably; they may offer advice to the minister which he may accept if it is worth his while to, and that about sums up their activities. Introducing this clause will, in retrospect I think, turn out to be a mistake. Since the early 1960's we have attempted, in trying to deal with regions suffering from economic disparity, to develop some kind of instrument to bring about effective co-operation between the provinces, the federal authority, local bodies and municipal bodies. Hon. members in all parties of this house applauded the idea of the Atlantic Development Board dealing with these problems. It is therefore ironic that the party that was in power in 1963—that is the party in power today—and which decided the Atlantic Development Board needed more power, more independence, and more opportunity to take the kinds of action it has been taking since 1962, has decided in 1969 it was wrong. Today we have a complete about face. Actually, the government is saying, "We do not need the Board anymore. We will not kill the child completely but keep its ghost alive." That is tragic and the minister will discover, when he is dealing with some of the problems in which the Board was involved, that a major mistake has been made in downgrading the Atlantic Development Board.

In that connection, may I suggest an amendment to clause 29. I feel there must be some consistency in this bill. All regions ought to have an equal opportunity to become involved in regional economic expansion and to participate in expansion programs. If the concept of the kind of council represented by an Atlantic development council is valid, I suggest there is equal validity for establishing similar councils to deal with the problems, say, of parts of Quebec, northern Ontario or parts of the west. Considering where the minister's home is, I am surprised that he has denied other regions the opportunity of being served by the kind of council we envisage here. I therefore suggest, Mr. Chairman, the addition of subclause 2 to clause 29, which would read as follows:

> The Minister shall, in consultation with the province or provinces concerned and such other persons or organizations as the Minister or the province or provinces consider appropriate, establish similar development councils for other regions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I have to oppose this amendment because I question the reasons behind it.

It may seem odd indeed, Mr. Chairman, that the law should provide a special board for the Maritimes while we provide none for the rest of Canada. The reason is that this area is a special problem. Besides, the Atlantic Development Board we had before was of great help. Since the structures were there and the four provinces had problems in common, we felt it was not in the interest of the Maritimes to dispense entirely with this Board.

Now, since the four provinces involved have accepted the Atlantic Development Board, we take it for granted that it should be included as a council in the new legislation.

But we cannot predict, Mr. Chairman, what kind of council will be acceptable to the other provinces and what will be the structure of these councils which we do not know yet.

For example, will it be sufficient to have a council like the others to meet the needs of the lower St. Lawrence, of the Interlake area of Manitoba? Nobody can tell. However, in the case of the Atlantic provinces we know exactly how the agency did function. We know its structures and certain voluntary organizations have supported the Atlantic Development Board. This is why its establishment is provided in the legislation but nothing prevents us from acknowledging a council that would be formed especially for the lower St. Lawrence and nothing will prevent us, later on, to adopt a special legislation purporting to give legal status to a council whose structure and jurisdiction cannot be predicted to-day.

Now, when we say that we have downgraded the Atlantic Development Board, its particular role should obviously be emphasized, not because of the Atlantic Board but because of the new department of Regional economic expansion whose aim is precisely to coordinate all these activities.

I think that it is the honourable leader of the opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who said, in his brief: there is not enough coordination in all the efforts towards an adequate regional expansion, but I would answer that it is the very rationale of this new department. So, it is certain that if we aim at coordination we cannot have, within the department, Mr. Chairman, three, four or five semi-independent bodies which will ensure regional planning outside the Department. It would be running counter to our very intentions.

It is not that we are dissatisfied with the Atlantic Development Board. On the contrary, we will be happy to use the work it has accomplished because we wish precisely to ensure not the centralization, but the co-ordination of all the department's activities related to regional development.

Now this new Atlantic Development Council will not have a greater executive power than the former one, because we are taking away from it a great part of that power. On the other hand, it will be able to advise the minister and his department on all matters under its jurisdiction. Indeed, it will be able to give advice not only on basic policies in the Maritime provinces but also on ARDA, FRED and all other programs related to the industrial incentive agency. This will give the new Council an overall view of the problems in the Maritime provinces as well as a certain responsibility.

However, as regards the executive power that Board had, we cannot maintain it, Mr. Chairman, unless we accept not to ensure real co-ordination.

That is why, that Atlantic Board is a council of a special type with a history. It was an extremely valuable experience, and we wish people who participated in that Board's activities to take part as much as possible in the activities of the new council. That is why we can sanction its creation through a provision in the legislation even if we are not able at the present time to provide exactly for the type of agencies other provinces will want to establish, in order to implement our programs.

It must be remembered that we consulted the premiers of the four provinces concerned. They agreed not only on the appointment of Mr. Smith but also on the maintenance of a body for the Maritime provinces.

As regards the other provinces, Mr. Chairman, we are not sure. Some of them may say: we will have nothing to do with such councils or, if we want one, it should not be similar to the Atlantic Development Council.

Mr. Chairman, that is why, on the one hand, we created this council that will succeed the Atlantic Development Board, but on the other hand, we are not going further now, not before we have had the opportunity of discussing the matter with the provinces and of making certain experiments.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to prolong the discussion because it is clear the government has made up its mind what to do with the Atlantic Development Board. It has the troops to do what it wants. I hope that in four or five years' time the government of that day is not going to decide the government of this day was as wrong in several respects as the government this day is saying the government was in 1963. The government is now rejecting, pulling out root and branch almost, the very basis of the concept of regional development in the Atlantic provinces which the government launched with great fanfare in 1963 when it established the Atlantic Development Board as an administrative agency. The government of the present day is saying that was a mistake.

The government of that day was also against the concept of growth centres. Indeed, it adopted policies which did not encourage growth centres to grow, but directly worked against growth centres in the Atlantic provinces. I am not sure of the basis of confidence of the minister that he is so right now. I agree with him with regard to the growth centres, but I disagree with regard to the emasculation of the Atlantic Development Board. I find it a little difficult to understand why the government is so confident when the minister concedes that his department has not really worked out its policies. It will take some time to work out these policies. In other words, Mr. Chairman, we are being asked to take this on faith.

I do not want to take up the time of the house because the government has obviously made up its mind. Anything I say or have said obviously is not going to have any effect. At least, my words as to how the Atlantic Development Council should be established have not had any effect.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, it will not be necessary for a government five years hence to decide that the government today was just as wrong as they are saying the government was five years ago. I hope we do not lose four or five years more time in eliminating regional disparity as we apparently have during the past four or five years, not just on the basis of statistics, but on the basis of the judgment of the present government as to the policy decisions made by the government in 1963 and 1964.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the amendment being proposed is certainly in order at this particular time. It seems strange indeed that the minister would object to changing the wording of the clause to include this amendment. It is very apparent the Atlantic Development Council will continue to serve a useful purpose, as it has in the past.

I can assure the minister, Mr. Chairman, if the wheat economy of the west remains as it is today, there could well be a need for a prairie development council. There could also be a Pacific development council if the situation warranted it in that particular area.

I do not understand why the minister objects to the adding of this particular amendment to this clause. It is permissive to the extent that the provinces would have to consult with the federal government and the minister. It does not say "that they will establish". It states, "they shall in consultation with the provinces if they so desire". I certainly believe that at this time specific words should be put into this bill which would be of benefit to all concerned.

If the amendment demanded that the government establish other development councils at this time, I would not support it. The amendment does not make any demands upon the government whatsoever. I see no reason why this amendment cannot be approved at this time.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, as for us, we support the amendment proposed to clause 29, the object of which is to guarantee to the house, by including it in the statute, that there is close co-operation between the federal government and the provinces concerned with regard to the various programs or particular plans which might be implemented to promote the expansion or development of an area.

Our reason for supporting this amendment, which we find most acceptable and logical, is very simple. We already have a constitution, the British North America Act which delineates, very evasively, very vaguely, the powers of the provinces and the federal government. We are aware of the problems the evasiveness in the constitution leads to between the provinces and the federal government; in many cases, the powers are not defined.

The same could be said about many other fields where provincial and federal jurisdictions overlap.

I noticed that during the debate on several occasions the minister repeated that it was of the utmost importance that there be close co-operation between the federal government and the province or provinces concerned in the preparation of such programs as might meet their needs, instead of always imposing plans or rataplans upon them. As for us, that is what we fear.

For instance, we recently had an example when a federal park was created in the Gaspe area. Quite a few things are going on which lead us to believe that conflicts of jurisdiction will crop up between the provinces and federal government. What results shall we get if the programs cannot be implemented. Indeed, if the provinces cannot participate in the drawing of those programs, millions of dollars will have been spent which will bring nothing in return to the Canadian people.

It might therefore be most advisable to add a provision to the act ensuring that before planning, before drumming up our plans the provinces will consulted and everything will be done hand in hand, jointly, by the two levels of government.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a few questions on this clause before it passes. In doing so, however, I should like to re-echo the sentiments of my leader and, in fact, lament the passing of the Atlantic Development Board. In my view, the board did an excellent job in the development of the Atlantic provinces. I know there are a number of very important projects indeed in the Atlantic provinces which probably would not have materialized today had it not been for the good work of the Atlantic Development Board. I can think of a number of very important projects which were undertaken because of the initiative of the board in my own province of Newfoundland.

I am particularly concerned about some of the urgent matters the board had under consideration, because experience has proven that when these councils are set up under legislative authority there seems to be quite a period of time when the new department is getting established. I am wondering what will become of the really urgent problems in which the Atlantic Development Board was heavily involved and with which it was trying to cope. I think now particularly of a very pressing situation in my own constituency with regard to the former mining town of Bell Island. I know this matter has been dealt with rather thoroughly in the committee and that questions were put to the minister the other day in the course of the introduction of his estimates. The committee on regional development as well heard a delegation from Bell Island which was here to plead with the government for some immediate action to solve the problems that existed on this island and in this community as a result of the rather abrupt phasing out in 1966 of the iron ore mines on the island. These mines were operated for a number of years by Dosco and prior to that by the predecessors of Dosco for a period in excess of 65 to 70 years.

The problem is an urgent one in that today in this community there are almost 7,000 people without employment opportunities. I regret to say that the majority of them depend on relief measures of one kind or another. Of course, the consequences of continued relief to the people in this community are morally crippling. Very often this means there will be a serious problem involved in rehabilitating the people and getting them to be self-sufficient again. The Atlantic Development Board was very heavily involved in this matter. In consultation with the government of Newfoundland, the board devised a plan whereby people would be encouraged to leave because the government would pay for the homes of those people who were prepared to leave. Each resident was entitled to sell his home for $1500. The idea of course was to get the working force to leave the island.

The Atlantic Development Board and its well-qualified general director, Dr. Weeks, who I am pleased to see has an important role in the new department, would be the first to admit this plan did not succeed. The objective was to get the working force to move elsewhere. Today there are almost 7,000 people living there. My worry is, during the interim period while this new department is undergoing its growing pains, while the Atlantic Development Board is going out of existence and while the government is considering new appointments to the Atlantic Development Council, what will become of the urgent situation which exists on Bell Island. I hope the minister will be able to assure the house that these matters will not be swept under the administrative table and will be given the urgent consideration they deserve. I hope also he will assure us that the department, in the interim period, will continue to treat these urgent matters with the same amount of concern with which they were treated by the Atlantic Development Board.

That is my main worry. There are other areas as well which perhaps have pressing problems, but certainly no more important than those which exist on Bell Island. The minister knows this. He knows the matter has been mentioned before on a number of occasions. As I have already stated the matter has been studied by the committee. I hope before this session ends, the minister will give us an assurance that these urgent problems will continue to receive consideration during the interim period while the new department is being set up.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think I can give that assurance to the hon. member for St. John's East right away. We have already in the department all the recommendations of the Atlantic Development Board. That does not mean we will necessarily agree to them all. However, this is not new. In the past they had to be approved by treasury board and the department. We will consider all of them, however, and there will be no delay between the passing of this bill and the disappearance of the old Atlantic Development Board.

We will have more power under this bill than the Atlantic Development Board had or even the department had, because we can spend on the infra-structure after agreement with the province. We will take into consideration immediately all the plans that were in existence and with which the Atlantic Development Board was dealing. So, I can give the assurance to the hon. gentleman that we do not intend to wait until an agreement is signed before dealing with the problem that has been transmitted by the board.

Now, the hon. member for Egmont said the law provides that this council will sit only two times a year. Under the old law it was provided that the Atlantic Development Board must sit at least once. The fact that the new council must sit at least twice does not mean that it must sit only twice. It has to sit at least two times, but it can sit more than that. It may sit twice a month or as many times as it desires.

I am sure the council will sit much more often than two times. The hon. Leader of the Opposition mentioned that a mistake was made in 1963. I do not know whether it was a mistake. I was not a part of that decision and therefore would not attempt to make an assessment in respect of the responsibility for that decision. Knowing what I know now, I do not believe it was necessarily a mistake because at that time there was no department with responsibility for economic expansion. No department was responsible for regional development. We are creating a new set-up and it is quite normal that we revise the old structures which were in existence.

Maybe the government was justified in doing it that way at that time. I will not make a fight on that. I am not ready, either, to say that what we are doing now will be good forever; that it is the eternal truth and that we will never need to change it. It may be that in a few years we will agree to change what we are doing today if it does not work out the way we think it should.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I am rather surprised at the stand taken by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) because the amendment is quite the opposite of what he wishes.

If you read the amendment carefully, you see that the federal government must—I only have here the English version—"that the minister shall"—in consultation with the provinces and so on, establish or set up a council. This is an infringement upon the freedom of the provinces which are not mentioned in the legislation.

What we are saying under the legislation to the province of Quebec or the province of Manitoba or Saskatchewan, is this: you have to accept a council. This is precisely because we respect that freedom, that provincial autonomy that we do not want to do what was done with the Atlantic Council. In that case it is a fact, it has been accepted and we can put it in the statutes. But for the other provinces, it is precisely the opposite that would happen, if the amendment were passed.

We want to remain perfectly free to negotiate with the provinces.

For instance the province of Quebec can consider the matter, then state that it is not interested in a council similar to that of the Atlantic areas. If we accepted the amendment, then we would have to tell the Quebec authorities: this is the council, and the law says that you have to accept it as it is. Besides, the council should be similar as provided in the legislation, and I quote:

[English]

It must establish similar development councils for other regions.

The hon. member was anxious lest we should threaten the freedom or the autonomy of the provinces, but that is precisely what he is doing by supporting the amendment of the opposition.

As for me, I want us to be able to discuss with each and every province, to try and find the best way of co-operating. If a new council has to be set up, after we had experienced it for some time, here in the house maybe we would agree, to give it a legal status or to indicate in the law which councils should be set up so as to achieve the purposes of the law.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the hon. minister and all the trouble he took to express his views. I think it is already something to be thankful for when ministers take the trouble of explaining the situation to us.

However, we are afraid that the proposed amendment will not achieve very much. In any case the Conservatives have never achieved much in the past, and I do not think that their amendment will work marvels either.

It is persistently being said that this legislation is a minor one, but the fact remains that we want the best possible guarantee that there will not be any overlapping of jurisdictions between the provinces and the federal government with respect to regional development, for this legislation does not seem to be too promising if both sides start being stubborn once again, as the minister said last week.

Actually, if the federal government were to act one way and the provinces another and then a council is established and an agreement is reached, or if the federal government were to establish a council and the provinces were to establish another one in turn, with discussions taking place for three days and then each side going its own way, I think the minister himself would be the first to be disappointed, because he would not have attained his goal.

All we wish, Mr. Chairman, and I remind the minister of it—is to get the best possible guarantee that the needs of Canadians will be taken care of and that regional development will not be just empty words, but a reality.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, if one were trying to sum up the first and second messages of the minister with regard to this clause one could do so in three words, "Ottawa knows best." The impact of such a statement must be felt in areas that have greatly suffered at the hands of the federal government which in times past has devised policies in direct contradiction to the condition of those areas. It is queer that on the one hand the minister should say that this is being put in the legislation because in the past we had the Atlantic Development Board, which contributed something. Now, we are going to have less than we had before, and on the other hand, the minister justifies this by saying we are going to have a whole department charged with this responsibility.

However, there is something dangerous behind the argument that Ottawa knows best. Somebody suggests, "Uncle Ottawa knows best." That is not the kind of uncle with whom I would want to be associated. I find it really incredible that the minister and the government would urge this idea in view of the recent conference in the Confederation Room in the West Block, at which one of the main issues discussed was the need for some kind of meaningful consultation and co-operation with the provinces. If there were certain weaknesses in the Atlantic Development Board it may have been that it was not an agency which formed a bridge between what the provinces were devising and the initiatives that were open to the federal government. But now that bridge is being eliminated to the point where it will carry no meaningful traffic.

It is also passing queer that the minister would want to engage in the kind of discussion he has had with the hon. member for Lotbinière. I know that they are both from the same province, and perhaps they are working the same side of the street. I am surprised that the minister has not received a number of communications from the provinces resenting the fact that nothing but a council will be established under the terms of this legislation.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You are surprised?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Yes, I am. Our communications system cannot be as good as it should be, because it strikes me that a number of the provinces should be disturbed about the fact that once the Atlantic Development Board goes there will be a transfer of decision making to Ottawa, away from the Atlantic region. There will be an elimination of a similar kind of participation for other areas very much in need of participating effectively in programs of economic expansion. I would think that people in those parts of Quebec that are going to be affected by this program would resent the fact that no provision is made in this legislation for that kind of participation. I think the same will apply to areas in Northern Ontario.

The minister has referred to programs that will be devised and planned for the Indian and Metis people of western Canada, but again under the terms of this legislation there is no provision for an equitable kind of participation by those people. I do not think the legislation is at all restrictive or even mandatory. It is permissive legislation, and that should certainly suit the government. I am really quite surprised that the minister finds this suggested amendment unacceptable in terms of achieving the aims which the government is trying to spell out in the establishment of this department. I am not going to say anything further on this at the moment, but I think this suggestion would offer the minister more flexibility and not less.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 30—Constitution of membership.

Mr. McGrath: Can the minister say what is meant by, "after consultation with—such other persons or organizations as the minister considers appropriate"? Can he give the chamber an assurance that political partisan considerations are not what are meant by this phrase, and that the only consideration will be the people who can do the best job for the region? I see no reason for having these words in there. Why not just confine it to the governments of the provinces?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. gentleman for raising that point. I thought he would congratulate the government for having introduced this obligation to consult with the provinces. This obligation did not exist before in the law; it is new. But I think it is normal that we consult with the provinces.

What does the other sentence mean exactly? It means that in certain regions, and maybe in the Atlantic region, you have some very important organizations that are not governmental organizations but which are probably organizations that deserve to be consulted. I am thinking of APEC, for example, in the maritimes. This is a private organization, and I think it would be worth while to consult with it. This is the reason the provision was included in the bill. It was not included in order to consult with the Liberal association of the riding.

Mr. McGrath: That will happen.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member who had asked him what he meant by such other person or organization, the minister explained what he meant by organization. May I ask him the same question with regard to "such other person"?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is simply, Mr. Chairman, that organizations are not the whole answer. Consultations may sometimes take place with some very important persons who play an important part in a particular region, and not necessarily at the political level. We want consultations to be as broad as possible.

In certain regions of the province of Quebec, some people, as the house knows, play a very important part, and we want to be free to consult them before creating the board.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, does this mean that, as far as Quebec and more particularly the Eastern Townships are concerned, the minister would consult with hon. members of the Ralliement Créditiste?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I do not need any provisions in the act to force me to do so. If some hon. members of the Ralliement Créditiste truly represent the opinion of the population as a whole, I shall be glad to ask for their advice.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 30 carry?

Clause 30 agreed to.

On clause 31—Function of Council.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, it would be useful, but I will not take the time to do so, to compare the functions of the Atlantic Development Council with the soon to be lamented Atlantic Development Board. The interpretation of the responsibilities of this Council is extremely narrow and is, in fact, limited only to suggestions in certain circumstances, which it might offer to the minister for the carrying out of his responsibilities. I will not repeat all the arguments that have been put forward about how this really waters down the functions of the council almost to the point of non-existence.

However, Mr. Chairman, I would like to put forward a couple of amendments. In order to have both of them before us before completing our consideration of clause 31, I will put them both at the same time. In this way the committee may get the sense of what I feel is important here in respect of some of the responsibilities, at least, to be exercised by the Atlantic Development Council. To clause 31 we propose the addition of new clause (c), to read as follows:

(c) appropriate opportunities for the co-ordination of policies and programs of the government of Canada, the provinces and other responsible bodies.

Subclause (c) would now become subclause (d) and would have the following words added:

or as in the opinion of the Council should be considered by it.

The sense of these two amendments is this. In the original subclauses (a), (b) and (c) the council is asked to make reports and recommendations to the minister on plans, programs and proposals, and the feasibility of particular programs. I think this is all well and good, and I do not think anyone can disagree with the sense of what this clause sets out in terms of what the responsibilities of the council should be. But I think we are getting into an area not covered by this legislation, that is, providing some opportunity for effective co-ordination of the various programs being attempted by the federal government, the provinces, major regions or municipalities.

It seems rather strange that this principle should be omitted, because in fact a great deal of energy has been wasted because contradictory programs have been operated by the federal government. This practice should now be eliminated, because the minister has told us so, with regard to programs operated by the federal government or the provinces. It would, therefore, seem very necessary that there be in the legislation some direct commission to this Council so that it will at all times consider how the various policies and programs being devised by one or other of the respective parties will mesh; and where they are not going to mesh, to say so. Unfortunately, the Council will be limited to saying this to the minister in the hope that he or his officials will communicate with other federal departments, perhaps other provinces or responsible bodies, in order to arrive at the best possible program.

Without some responsibility for considering the question of co-ordination, a great deal of useful effort and initiative that might be taken by the council will surely be lost. The sense of the last amendment is merely to give the council some flexibility in its operations. If it were limited to the terms spelled out in this clause, we would restrict very largely, in its setting up and operations, the relationship of the council to the government of Canada, when surely it should not be restricted from considering very many items on its agenda which it considers important.

If the minister is as busy as I know he will be, and should be, in his function as minister responsible for this department, he will not always have time to refer matters to the council for consideration. If the council is given an opportunity to meet with regularity and to have support staff, it will be vitally important that there be provision in this bill that the council be enabled even occasionally to discuss questions or look into matters that under normal circumstances would be covered by their interest but would not be covered by the way in which the criteria are elaborated in this clause as it stands.

For these reasons, I think the amendments are important. If they are adopted, even if the Atlantic Development Council is to be much less a creature than the Atlantic Development Board, it will not be limited in its basic terms of reference in the kind of questions it must pursue if it is to carry out the kind of job necessary to any re-tailored structure.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely in principle with all the hon. member has said, but I think it is all there in the bill as it is. What are the responsibilities and duties of the minister? They are to elaborate plans, to ensure that there is co-ordination with the departments, to negotiate with the provinces, to approve projects, to consult with the provinces with regard to the functions of the Council, and so forth. These are the duties of the minister. The responsibility of the council is to give advice to the minister on all the matters within his jurisdiction. What do you want to add to that? I think it is all in clause 31, which reads:

—and make reports and recommendations to the minister on,

(a) plans, programs and proposals for fostering the economic expansion and social adjustment of the Atlantic region;

• (9:20 p.m.)

(b) the feasibility of particular programs and projects and the contribution those programs and projects will make to the economic expansion and social adjustment of the Atlantic region; and

(c) such other matters, relating to the duties and functions of the Minister under this Part in respect of the Atlantic region, as the Minister may refer to the Council for its consideration.

This means that the council will advise the minister on all those subjects. His duty will be to ensure that there is collaboration and co-operation, while the council will provide him with advice.

My next comment is on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Egmont which reads:

—or as in the opinion of the council should be considered by it.

That would give the council wider jurisdiction than that of the minister, and this is not acceptable. I do not think the council can give advice on such things as permits to be granted to Canadian Pacific Airlines between Vancouver and Tokyo, for instance. This is not within its jurisdiction. I think the responsibility of the council must be more limited than that of the minister. So, even though I agree with all that the hon. gentleman said, I do not think his amendment is necessary. If we implement the law as it should be implemented, I do not think the hon. gentleman will have any grievance.

Mr. Marshall: I should like to ask the minister a fundamental question having to do with the municipal or community councils. In submitting a project, through what channels would they have to go to have the project considered? Would they have to go to the Atlantic Economic Council or to the province?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course, their project could be studied by the council. However, we would have to have an agreement with the provinces if they were to consult what we call the infra-structure of the municipalities. We would have to have some agreement with the provinces and negotiate with them what course should be taken by the councils. I do not think there is anything in the law which would prevent them from doing it one way or another.

Mr. Bell: How about regional desks?

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister advise the committee on whether a budget will be appropriated to the council under the departmental estimates to provide for staff to perform the administrative functions of the council, and if not, will somebody within the department be assigned to carry on the executive functions of the people who now form the executive staff of the Atlantic Development Board?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The law makes provision for a small staff which would be at the service of the council. The council will not have a research staff such as the old Atlantic Development Board had. All the executive functions will be assumed by the department. However, I think the council will need a staff to carry on their work, to help them at their meetings and with their recommendations to the department.

Mr. McGrath: I have a question for clarification, Mr. Chairman. Will the staff be separate from the department and will it function under the authority of the chairman of the council, or will it be staffed from within the department?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They will be de facto under the authority of the council but they will be integrated in the civil service and will be under the general jurisdiction of the department. However, let me point out that we are referring here to a stenographer and one or two secretaries. I think it would be preferable for this staff to be in the civil service.

Mr. McGrath: I referred to senior personnel, the executive staff. We realize the council would have to have stenographic and secretarial staff, but I meant personnel who would be considered to be at the executive level.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think it should be made perfectly clear that it is no longer necessary for the board to have this type of staff. The department will be happy to provide them with the executive staff they need for a short period of time. However, this staff would be under the jurisdiction of the department. Otherwise, we would be rebuilding the old Atlantic Development Board, which is not the intention of this legislation.

Mr. McCleave: May I ask the minister how much time the chairman and the vice-chairman of the council have indicated they will make available for the performance of their duties?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I cannot answer this question. We have not communicated with the chairman. The vice-chairman has not yet been nominated, so it is difficult to say how much time he will devote to his duties. So far as Mr. Smith is concerned, we have not put the question to him but he accepted the duties which are outlined in the legislation. I do not know how much time he is prepared to devote to this work.

Mr. McCleave: I understand Mr. Smith is leaving his position at the University of New Brunswick, probably in anticipation of spending a great deal of time on work for the council.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I cannot give the hon. member an answer to his question. If Mr. Smith resigned for the purpose of giving much of his time to the council, I will be very satisfied, but I was not made aware of this fact.

Mr. McCleave: I hope he will be paid accordingly.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am glad to learn that the minister agrees with at least the intent of the amendment, even though he does not agree with its necessity or substance. One of the things that has disturbed me that has not been referred to in the discussion, and which I might raise as a result of questions put by the hon. member for St. John's East, relates to the important studies that are being prepared and printed by the Atlantic Development Board. The third one has just been printed, or will be very shortly. I understand there were a dozen of them at one time or another and the board has been working on them for some years.

I think that one of the great losses, together with other things on the demise of the Atlantic Development Board, would be the failure to complete these particular studies. Would the minister indicate what procedure has been devised or what machinery has been brought into effect to make sure that these studies are completed within a reasonable period of time?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not think anything will be lost. So far as the completed studies are concerned, we will look into them, and we will be happy to implement all those recommendations that we think should be implemented. If there are any studies which have not been completed and we think should be completed, we will be happy to do it directly through the department. We certainly do not intend to lose any of the work done by the Atlantic Development Board.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): You have already done that.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 32 to 35 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 36—Meetings.

[Translation]

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Chairman, I find clause 36 reads as follows:

> The Council shall meet at least twice a year at such place in the Atlantic region as the Council considers appropriate or in the City of Ottawa,—

Since during the study of the bill, several departments accepted, in the framework of the reorganization, to replace the word "Ottawa" by "national capital area", and since the expression is defined in the schedule to the National Capital Act, I ask whether the hon. minister is willing to take this into consideration or whether we shall be obliged one of these days, to amend the legislation once again?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member is quite right in his remark. However, a great number of statutes would have to be amended, if we consider the national capital area as that of Hull-Ottawa. When federal buildings are built in Hull, it could be legal to meet in Hull as well as in Ottawa. At that time, perhaps it would be advisable to amend all statutes which mention the city of Ottawa, but I do not think it is necessary right now.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, could the minister give us at least the guarantee, when he says it is not necessary to do so now and that it could and will be done later, that it will not be put off indefinitely?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, it will not be put off indefinitely, because everyone knows that we are now considering the problems of the national capital.

When we consider the estimates, there will undoubtedly be a discussion on what constitutes the national capital area and then, we shall all have the opportunity to state our views. It will be the best opportunity to correct what we want to correct.

On clause 38—Staff

Mr. McGrath: Before this clause carries, would the minister tell the committee what salary the government has in mind for the official who is to be designated as secretary to the council?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Unfortunately, I cannot. Perhaps tomorrow or some other day, I can indicate the salary range. I referred a few minutes ago to a secretary, but I believe the council will have the services of a senior executive officer. I do not know what the salary will be, but I shall be happy to give the information to the hon. member as soon as I am able to do so.

Mr. McGrath: This brings up an interesting question. I understand the Director General of the Atlantic Development Board is now the assistant deputy minister of the department. Will Dr. Weeks have any particular responsibilities with regard to the operations of the council?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): He will surely have a general responsibility as assistant deputy minister. In fact, I think Dr. Weeks will always have a special responsibility as far as the maritimes are concerned because he knows the region very well. I know he is well regarded in the region, and rightly so, and I think it is our intention to use his services as much as we can.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Will the minister indicate whether the position of secretary will be full time or whether it is to be considered only a part time responsibility?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I see it as a full time position.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 39—Regulations

Mr. Horner: I have remained silent throughout the most controversial parts of this piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: I have remained silent for a number of reasons. First, I wanted to learn the exact intent of the legislation. Second, I wanted to hear evidence which would prove to me beyond a shadow of a doubt that my fears with regard to this bill were groundless. I can only say that having sat through a good deal of this debate, and having read those parts of it which took place during my absence, many of those fears have still to be set at rest.

Clause 39, which we are now considering, says the Governor in Council may make regulations defining the expression "work or facility for the economic expansion of a special area." Mr. Chairman, I live in the province of Alberta where there are two special areas. They have existed ever since 1935. Since that time parliament has passed legislation dealing with designated areas, specific areas in need of development, yet the areas of which I speak, singled out as special areas as far back as 1935, have not been able to qualify for one reason or another for the benefits provided under the legislation. There has been a great deal of discussion about FRED, ARDA and APEC. ARDA was held out to the special areas of Alberta as being the answer to the whole problem. Now, we find ARDA and the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, which has been of tremendous benefit to the region concerned, gobbled up by this powerful minister who is to be in charge of everything to do with special areas.

I want the hon. gentleman to take a special look at the areas designated in the Province of Alberta since 1935. These are areas where there is a high birthrate and long life expectancy, areas which satisfy many of the criteria outlined under the ARDA scheme, but where there is a slow rate of growth and few opportunities for productive employment. These areas might well be described as the desert of Alberta. Many hon. members will be surprised to learn this. Special area No. 2 was designated because of the arid conditions which exist there. As long ago as the early 'twenties, the federal government paid the fares of settlers moving out because there was no opportunity to find employment there. Settlers were moved out from 1921 to 1939; the area of which I speak is roughly rectangular in shape, about 100 miles by 180 miles in the east central part of Alberta between Calgary and the Saskatchewan border, well within the Palliser triangle. P.F.R.A. has played a prominent part in helping people to live in this region.

Development in these two special areas has fallen behind. Now, we are giving this benevolent god, one might say, who is going to bring about great regional development, extensive powers under the proposed legislation. I have grave doubts about even his great capacity for promoting such development. In fact, I have grave doubts about the ability of the government to do anything which benefits individuals. Having been around here for 11 years, I suspect that government only does those things which benefit government. Here is a huge land mass in the province of Alberta, a wealthy province in the eyes of the federal government, one which does not receive equalization payments. Here is a large area which fully qualifies to be a special area under the terms of clause 39. Indeed, it is already named as a special area. There is not a municipal government in the whole region of which I speak. The ratepayers cannot vote for a reeve or for councillors. Since it has been designated as a special area, the government of Alberta appoints an administrator with special powers to encourage economic development.

Let me tell the minister that economic development has not taken place in special area No. 2 or special area No. 3. Adequate opportunities for employment have not been forthcoming. People who remain in those areas have provided for themselves and their families because they have had the initiative and the will to do so. But the areas have not grown or participated to any degree in the general growth of the province of Alberta or the country as a whole.

In administering the act, the minister should pay particular attention to special areas No. 2 and No. 3. The minister might ask me how he does this. I could cite a number of industries that attempted to set up operation in those very areas. For example, I was enticed into joining a manufacturing company which my financial knowledge and all the rest told me was a bad venture. Since I was a representative and must show some faith in the area, I invested some money, though not a great deal. This particular manufacturing plant has existed for four years now in the town of Hanna and has not received one red cent of assistance from the federal government, though it could have done with some. Even a request for a loan from the Industrial Development Bank was turned down.

Huge grants have been given to United States subsidiaries in the province of Ontario, subsidiaries that no more needed those grants than the minister needs to fly to the moon, though there may well be good cause for him to fly to the moon. U.S. subsidiaries have also received grants in the province of Quebec as well as U.S. oil refineries that were built in Newfoundland. Contrast that with the situation in Alberta which has to contribute dearly by way of equalization grants to the provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec.

In view of this, why has not this whole area to which I refer in what you might call the central or east central part of Alberta received some attention from the federal government in the form of loans, let alone grants? These special areas have received no assistance because the people in the area have fairly good incomes and either own or lease from the provincial government huge tracts of land.

This clause provides for the making of regulations respecting factors relating to the inadequacy of opportunities for productive employment. I emphasize the words "opportunities for productive employment". Opportunities for productive employment have not been provided in special area No. 2 or special area No. 3. Since the federal government feels it should subsidize U.S. subsidiaries in Ontario, a wealthy province, and in Quebec, another wealthy province, as well as in the maritimes to enable them to compete with the very industry that allows Alberta to contribute money to equalization grants, surely the minister should pay some attention to areas in western Canada that are in need of opportunities for productive employment.

Hundreds of people have left this area of which I speak during the last 20 to 30 years. Between 1940, when times in Canada were considered relatively good owing to the second world war, and 1969, a period of 29 years, special areas No. 2 and No. 3 in the province of Alberta have seen large numbers of people leave because of the lack of employment opportunities. The province decreed these districts designated areas some 34 years ago. Yet, under the designated area legislation this parliament passed some four years ago no attention was paid to them.

Under this legislation the minister is given huge powers to allow him to develop areas in any part of Canada. Surely, he can pay some attention to a part of western Canada that has not kept pace with the economic growth of Canada as a whole. I urge the minister to correct this situation after this bill is passed. Let him not set up nine criteria as was done under ARDA. ARDA was first of all set up to develop resources in order to enable people to provide for themselves. Actually, all Albertans want is an opportunity to provide for themselves. That is all that the people in special areas No. 2 and No. 3 want. They do not want handouts.

According to Time magazine for February 28, if the money required to build a causeway were distributed among the population of Prince Edward Island each person would receive something like $6,700. This reminds me of an Indian reservation on the prairies which was given to a once proud race of people about 100 years ago. They were told there would not be any causeway that would take them off the reservation; they were to be fenced in and the federal government would provide for them. But what happened? Subsequent governments in the late 1800's debased that once proud race of people to the point that today they really do not want to participate in our society. Let the minister not do this under this legislation. Let him not create an Indian reservation out of the province of Prince Edward Island. Build a causeway there and let the people provide for themselves.

Let not special areas No. 2 and No. 3 in the province of Alberta become a desert in a proud and wealthy province such as Alberta. Let the minister contribute to the development of the area and create the employment opportunities referred to in clause 39. Let the minister be prepared to participate. Let him give a grant, if necessary, to local Canadians to develop industry in those areas, instead of giving R.C.A. Victor $5 million to establish a subsidiary in a wealthy town in Ontario.

I urge the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, to pay particular regard to the responsibility that is placed on his shoulders of allowing people to provide for themselves. Let him not create Indian reservations on Prince Edward Island. Let him not establish Indian reservations anywhere in Canada; we have had enough of them. If the minister is to shoulder his heavy responsibilities adequately he must examine every nook and cranny of Canada and develop opportunities for Canadians in all parts of Canada.

About three weeks ago I returned from a trip to the maritimes. We had been studying Maritime transportation problems. As a westerner, I could not help being impressed with the opportunity that exists for the people down there. That struck me as odd. Ever since the Gordon report came out saying we must move people from the Maritimes, the federal government has moved them out. I say to the minister, stand back and look at the forest because if you are too close you will not see the trees. There is lots of opportunity in the Maritimes. A little initiative on the part of our people is needed if those opportunities are to be realized, but they do exist. If only one quarter of the people who left the Maritimes as a result of the Gordon report would return, I am sure the area would flourish. The federal government moved the people out of special areas No. 2 and 3; that took place between 1921 and 1939. If a quarter of those who left that area were to return, the area in question would receive a tremendous boost. If the government created employment opportunities in those areas those people would return to the affected regions of Alberta and other prairie provinces.

I say to the minister, take your job seriously and shoulder your heavy responsibilities. Look into every nook and cranny of Canada to see where employment opportunities might be created. If you do not, you will not have fulfilled the obligations you took on under this legislation and you will not be worthy of the ministry and the department which will play a big part in the development of Canada.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 40—Annual report.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, as hon. members know, this clause deals with the annual report. I wish to move an amendment that is related to the annual report. While this bill has been debated fear has been expressed in this house, by members of the public and in the press, that the minister is being given too much power under this legislation. The minister has been given more power than is normally entrusted to a minister heading a department. His power takes three forms. First, he has power to designate areas. He will be able to say what kind of industry shall be established in areas in order to correct regional disparities. Second, he can decide what kinds of grants are to be made to industries in their first three years of operation and whether there will be grants or loans. Perhaps because the house respects the minister, this point has not been raised tonight. As hon. members know, this power might be used for purposes of political patronage however, hon. members in this house have too high a regard for the minister to even suggest that he would use this power in that way. The third point, and this was discussed at some length, is the power the minister has to co-ordinate or to conscript the co-operation of other government departments.

We have tried to assist the minister in making sure that he can carry out his duties successfully. Although we support these measures, we must be realistic. We have entrusted the minister with a great deal of responsibility. That responsibility is greater than other ministers bear. If we are to be responsible members of the house we must, in our turn, examine on a regular basis the minister's stewardship. If the house has no assurance that it will examine on a regular basis the way the minister has discharged his duties it will have failed in its responsibility of ensuring that the department achieves the objectives which have been set out. For that reason, I propose to move an amendment to clause 40. I hope the minister will accept it. If he does not, perhaps he may move a similar amendment of his own. I think the minister and his officials would be on weak ground if they refuse to set up any adequate or necessary machinery which would examine how the minister has discharged his powers under this legislation. I, therefore, move to have the following words added to the end of clause 40:

Such report shall then be immediately referred to Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Economic Growth and Regional Disparity which shall be constituted as soon as possible after the commencement of the first session of each parliament, in any event not more than 20 days after the commencement of the said session, and presided over by a member of the opposition.

Three things are significant about this amendment. First, it refers specifically to a committee that is to be established regularly under the standing orders of the House of Commons. It will discharge certain responsibilities that are related to this department. The present committee most closely approximating the proposed committee is called the Committee on Regional Development. I think the minister will agree that that designation is much too vague. Clearly the minister thought it vague because the new department is to be called the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The proposed committee would examine matters related to economic growth, which is of paramount importance to the whole country, and questions concerning regional disparity. It is important to have such activity clearly spelled out in the designation of the committee. If the minister, his staff or the people of the country consider the department the only agency responsible for lifting up regions across the country and enabling them to join the main stream of economic viability, then of course the department and its programs will flounder. On the other hand, if it is clear that the continued economic health of the nation depends on a realistic attack on the problems of areas suffering from regional economic disparity it will also be clear that the proposed committee will have some responsibility in dealing with this problem.

Therefore, I think it is important that the committee be designated as a committee on economic growth and regional disparity. Second, I think it is important that this committee, by statute, be charged to meet on a regular basis. We do not foresee any problem at the present time with this minister, but one never knows the developments which will occur in years hence. It may be the government, for reasons of its own, may not want the committee to meet. This would militate against the proper responsibilities, interests and privileges enjoyed by members of this house.

This amendment suggests quite specifically that the committee shall meet as soon as possible after the commencement of the first session of each parliament or at least no later than 20 days after the commencement of the said session. That is important if we are to be ensured parliament is going to live up to its responsibilities in entrusting these powers to the minister.

Third, I suggest this committee be presided over by a member of the opposition to give it the kind of impartiality and credibility that is important for major committees of this kind. I hear a member to my far right "phoo-fawing" that idea. I do not think he is serious because I am sure he realizes how important it is for committees such as Public Accounts to be chaired by a member of the opposition in order to have a full, free, frank inquiry into the circumstances that relate to its own area of jurisdiction. It would be important, not only for members of this house but for the general public whom we seek to serve as well as to a degree the provinces that will not from time to time share all the views of the minister, to know that full and open discussions are being held on a regular basis of all activities related to the particular responsibilities exercised by the minister. If the minister suggests this is not an acceptable amendment, he is then denying to this house the kind of responsibility it should exercise, while freely accepting a number of responsibilities being entrusted to him under this legislation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I feel there is some confusion in all this. Many times I have heard it said in this house that this legislation will give huge powers to the minister and that the house must be protected, not necessarily against the present minister, but anyone who can abuse those powers. Anyone who reads the bill carefully will notice the powers are not given to the minister, but to the Governor in Council. This is where the powers lie. Every decision must be ratified by the Governor in Council.

All the arguments which are based on having something accepted because of special powers of the ministers, I do not think are good arguments because the minister does not have those special powers. I think under the present rules the estimates have to be referred to a committee and the type of discussion mentioned by the hon. member for Egmont could take place there. Therefore, the problem is not to try to hide anything from the house, because the house already has all the means to control what is going on in this department. First, there is the control of the Governor in Council and then there is the control of the house. My main argument is that I do not like the idea of having a standing committee of the house created to deal with a particular piece of departmental legislation. I believe it is the function of the house itself, in accordance with the rules, to establish such a committee if the house feels such a committee should be established. I do not believe this should be done through a piece of departmental legislation. I think that would be bad procedure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I still agree in principle with what has been said. I think this department must be controlled like all others. I believe members of this house at least at the beginning will have to be careful, but we have everything under control in the department. I do not think the house is in danger of being cheated by the minister or even by the department. I am entirely in agreement with the objectives. If the house is not satisfied with the discussions when the estimates are referred to the committee, then the house can always create a committee of the nature and kind suggested in the motion. This is the reason I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, one of the most important reasons perhaps for considering this important committee, along with the arguments I advanced, lies in the importance of the subject matter with which the Committee would deal. While the minister might suggest that normally a standing committee is not established in legislation setting up a department, that course may be necessary if we are to have this problem settled. If the government and the house are not prepared to do this, then we should pack it up now and go back to what we had because it is likely that it will be as good as anything we will see in the next four or five years. I think there must be engagement at all levels in the government structure if we are to get at the problem which has been so chronic that no amount of goodwill has been able to settle it.

The minister suggested it is the function of the house to set up a committee which it feels it needs. That is all well and good. We all know that committees are or are not set up at the wishes of the government in power. When the government sees fit, and sees no great problem for itself in having a matter fully aired, it will allow the committee to go ahead with its responsibilities. When, however, there are questions which it would not like to see raised it can use the device employed by all governments and not refer the estimates or not establish the committee. Despite what the minister said to the effect that he is not engaged with any special powers, we would certainly hope he is being given some special responsibility or else we will not really get beyond what has existed with previous ministers.

I do not see how, on the one hand, he can say he is not to be given any special responsibility and, on the other hand, say this attempt will go farther than the previous ones. I do not think he can have it both ways. The minister is going to make many decisions that will be important. If the house expects him to exercise these special kinds of responsibilities through his department, then, if I may say so, it is a little bit fraudulent not to believe that the house itself has some responsibility. I do not deny the good will of the minister. I do not deny that he agrees with my suggestion, with the exception of the way it is stated. I do not think that his good will is sufficient when it is important to this house that the committee meet, even if the concurrence of the government of the day is not given to such a meeting.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could set the hon. member straight on the business of standing committees. By Standing Order 65, concurred in earlier in this session we did set up a Standing Committee on Regional Development. I also suggest that the hon. member might look at some of the other changes that we made in the rules on December 20 last.

He would then find that his assertion is mistaken that the government can prevent the committee meeting and considering estimates. The government has no choice over whether estimates are referred to a standing committee. It is under an obligation to refer estimates and each year, until the rules may be changed by the house, the estimates will automatically be referred, and the opportunity will exist for the committee to meet and to consider the particular questions that may be of relevance to it.

May I make another point with respect to the observation of the hon. member about putting into legislation essentially matters which surely should be the prerogative of the House of Commons only. The procedure of the house is determined by the house itself. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre very often says that the rules here should be determined by parliament, but he does not really mean that because parliament means the Senate, the House of Commons and the Queen. I do not think that we, under this legislation, or under any other legislation—

Mr. Peters: Do you want this by eleven o'clock?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My friend, we will have it by eleven o'clock and not even you will be able to prevent it. There was an order to that effect earlier today. May I also point out to the hon. member for Egmont that if we fall into the practice of putting this kind of amendment into statutes, then anytime we in the House of Commons wanted to change our rules in the house with respect to the manner in which we handle our business, the type of committee that we have, or the process of legislation, we would have to ask the permission of the Senate, and the Queen to do so. I think it is appropriate and reasonable to make procedural changes with respect to the business of the house within the context of the standing orders, and not to shackle the house's right to deal with its own procedures by including procedural limitations in statutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago I was prepared to get up and say that even though it hurt me to do so I had to support the position taken by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. I hope that his case has not been spoiled by the intervention of the President of the Privy Council, but as a matter of fact I am afraid he has provoked my hon. friend from Timiskaming to keep this going until eleven o'clock. I had hoped we would finish it by 10.30.

If I may revert to the case made by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, I suggest that it is an unwise policy to write rules for this House of Commons into statutes. I think we should make our own rules. I believe we have made some improvements, and things are getting along reasonably well.

I also ask the hon. member for Egmont, even if his amendment were to carry, where would he be? All he would have is a requirement that a committee be constituted, that its chairman be a member of the opposition, and that the report be referred thereto—period.

There is no requirement in this amendment that the report be dealt with, that there be a report back to the house, and that it be dealt with here. Maybe I have saved my hon. friend from Timiskaming the trouble of making the speech that is probably up his sleeve, but may I point out that a more serious problem which faces us is what we do with the reports of committees. We have too many committees that meet—not the ones on estimates and bills—but on investigations and so on, and they report back to the house, and those reports do not get dealt with. In any case, I think it would be a mistake to write into our statutes, which have to go to the other place, the rules under which we carry on our proceedings in this house.

I think it would be better to leave it to the house to exercise its responsibility over this department by seeing that when the estimates of the department are referred to the committee, as they must be, all its operations are thoroughly scrutinized.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, having listened to these two house leaders, both somewhat recognized with regard to house procedure, I suppose I am really putting my head in the lion's mouth in disagreeing with them. However, I think they themselves put part of the argument when they suggested it is really the responsibility of the house to establish particular committees to deal with this question or that.

Under normal circumstances their suggestion is correct. But the very fact that the house from time to time must make that kind of decision means there may well be many occasions when the importance of questions raised with regard to the operations of this department should be considered by a special committee. It may be, and I apologize to the house for insufficient draftsmanship at this point, that I should have added another sentence at the end, namely, that in all other respects it would function as a regular standing committee of the House of Commons. If that would satisfy hon. members to my left and those on the other side of the house, I would be happy to add those words. I gather, however, the nature of the objection is more than that.

While the house leader was anxious to jump into the discussion and give the house his views on the matter I am sorry that he did not express, nor did the minister, their views on the importance of a member of the opposition functioning as Chairman of the committee. I do not know whether he thought this was not an important question to be resolved in the context of this amendment, but it is one of the questions that should be looked at very seriously. If there is to be the degree of impartiality and the breadth of discussion necessary in order that all facts are known on a regular basis, some such arrangement should obviously be very seriously considered. That, of course, is all that is included—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question? What exactly is the reason he would give why a member of the opposition would be less partial in this political body than a member supporting the government?

Mr. Baldwin: Experience!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I would think the answer to that question is obvious. But if the minister needs an answer, it is of course the fact that the government has on this committee and on any other, of course, a majority of members. I am trying to balance off what are the particular partisan positions of members. No one is denying, least of all me, that every member who functions on a committee represents to some degree his own party and his own position in the house. But I think we must try and create—this is the closest I can come to it—a committee that allows for enough balance so that it can make the full and frank inquiry that is necessary. Otherwise, I presume there will be some movement on the government side to do away with having a member of the opposition chair the Public Accounts Committee.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I was referring to a previous chairman of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We have the situation wherein a majority of government members give the government security in committees with respect to votes, provided there is not two great a number of government absentees. But even if the government majority is not so overwhelming, as often occurs in the present set-up of standing committees, the government majority shows up in the reports of committees to the house. Under this practice, a committee is nothing more than a sounding board of what the government is about. I think that if House of Commons committees, and this one in particular, are to be more credible to the house and the country, some measure of impartiality through balance has to be achieved. That is the reason for the suggestion that a member of the opposition act as chairman.

I might conclude my remarks by putting this question to the minister. Since he suggested that such a provision does not need to be included in the statute, I wonder whether he would give an undertaking to the house that a measure similar to this one would be introduced by the government benches so that we could have an inquiry into this department on a regular basis.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not think it would be proper for me at the present time to make a commitment of this kind in the name of the government.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: The amendment is negatived, on division.

Amendment (Mr. MacDonald, Egmont) negatived.

Mr. Baldwin: After listening to the debate, in which I did not participate much as I was tempted to, I am sorry to hear the President of the Privy Council and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicate they cannot support this idea because it is new. I would have thought that in matters of this kind the fact that something had not been done before should not be the basis of an objection to it being tried at this time. I am amazed at the company which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is keeping at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't rub it in, please.

Mr. Baldwin: The amendment was defeated, of course, and is not subject to discussion. Despite what the minister and the President of the Privy Council said, there is nothing in the bill that will make it essential that the report be referred to a committee dealing with the operations of the department. Let me point out that we have passed clause 39, which will presumably be passed by the other place, and will become part of the law under which we give to the government the right to legislate. The Governor-in-Council is empowered to make regulations for carrying out the purposes and the provisions of this bill. These are very wide powers indeed; they virtually constitute the right to legislate. For that reason, the operations of the minister and his department under this report should certainly be the subject of discussion and consideration by the appropriate committee. Will the minister undertake that so long as he is minister he will ensure that this report will be given to the appropriate committee for its consideration each year?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the power to make regulations which is contained in clause 39 is not more extensive than the power given to other departments.

Mr. Baldwin: But it is still objectionable.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is nothing special. Perhaps the whole bill will have to be revised some day, but this is the only way to proceed.

To answer the hon. member's question, if there is a good reason for referring the report of the department to a special committee, I will be ready to discuss it and accept it. I do not see the difference between discussing it now or at some other time when the problem is before the house. What my reaction will be at that time I do not know because it will depend on the importance of the report. I do not think it is fair to expect me to commit myself on a problem that has not yet arisen, and on something that I know nothing about right now.

Mr. Baldwin: Will he place any obstacle in the path of the committee considering and receiving this report? I put it to the minister in this way: Despite what he said, under clause 39 this government is securing extraordinary powers to make regulations and to carry out the purposes and provisions of the bill. These powers have been specifically spelled out; they have been debated, they have been the subject of amendment and they were passed.

Now, we have reached a situation where the minister can be given by the Governor-in-Council wide and extraordinary powers. Much of what will be done will be done by regulation. If the minister is not prepared to give an undertaking that the report will be given to the appropriate committee for consideration by that committee, will he at least indicate that he is prepared to facilitate the committee being given the opportunity to consider the report and that he will place no obstacles in the path of it doing so?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If this is something reasonable, I am sure I will support it. If it is a manoeuvre, I will oppose it. The hon. member tells me that a majority government may abuse its power. I think that is true. The only remedy for that, as far as I can see, is an election and nothing else. But if I think the proposal is reasonable, then as far as I am concerned I will surely support it. I cannot go further than that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I should simply like to make a few remarks following those of my colleague of Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

When the anti-dumping legislation was being studied, we were able to insert in it a provision stipulating that all regulations passed by the governor in council will be tabled in the house and referred to the appropriate committee.

The minister knows as well as I do that under the regulations act, any regulation enacted in accordance with section 39 should at least be published in the Canada Gazette.

But there is an exception and the minister will recall our discussion with his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Olson) during the consideration of Bills C-154, C-156 and C-157. At that time, the Minister of Agriculture refused to incorporate any regulation into the act but promised that any regulation would be published and actually tabled in the house for the consideration of the committee.

I raise that point because my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, said, and rightly so, that we were thereby giving the governor in council unlimited powers to draw up a second bill.

In fact, what does clause 39 contain? Only some patching up. Perhaps the number of paragraphs in that clause is no greater than in other acts, but the essential can be found in them.

The minister can say that the same provisions appear in the other bills, but I still maintain that it only amounts to some patching up. However, the fact is that the principle is quite dangerous and that we shall insist more and more to have any regulation published and submitted for consideration, since everyone knows that he who gets unlimited powers can misuse the privilege.

Even if there is good will, one is inclined to abuse power when one has it. Therefore, I ask the minister if he can assure us that all regulations made under clause 39 will be presented to the house so that the appropriate committee may have the opportunity to examine them.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, maybe there is some misunderstanding—and perhaps also a lack of precision on my part.

Once this legislation is passed, I hope that we will be able to bring down in May, as I announced it, a bill respecting industrial incentives, which will be the real legislation that will enable us to help industry.

That legislation will provide the criteria for designation, the amounts of money, etc. In other words, the legislation will spell out everything the house needs to know in order to make up its mind and pass judgment on the general activity of the government in this field. The bill before us is only intended to establish the department and nothing more.

As soon as we start studying the field of industrial incentives, a special legislation will be brought before the house.

As to the regulations which will allow the department to take some steps, they could only fall within the public domain and perhaps be discussed in the house, should hon. members not agree on them.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes consideration of Bill C-173.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) (for Mr. Trudeau) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I shall just take a minute, Mr. Speaker. The bill has now proceeded through the house. With regard to what is, perhaps in many ways, a most important section of the bill, namely the part of the bill we have been discussing these past several days relating to regional economic development, I do not wish to add anything to what I said previously when I made some suggestions and expressed some reservations about the manner in which the department is constituted and its approach.

Actually, I am disappointed that it has taken the government 10 or 11 months to prepare this bill for the house. Perhaps the house has not done too badly by dealing with it in 10 or 11 days. But the point I want to make is that the bill has now been passed and the various departments finally established.

Mr. Drury: No—what about the Senate?

Mr. Stanfield: The bill has passed as far as this house is concerned. This measure is obviously one of the most important measures the government is undertaking. The activities of the various departments will be watched with great interest and scrutiny. As I say, it has taken the government 10 months to get the bill before the house; in God's name, let the government now go ahead with its work and get the job done.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, although we can commend a great deal of Bill C-173, there is one serious gap in it. No provision has been made to set up a department of housing and urban affairs. The federal cabinet should include in the bill a minister responsible for housing and urban development who would occupy his portfolio on a full time basis and have the assistance of a staff in carrying out important policy decisions. The activities of the new department would embrace research, review in this field and the generating of policy. It would not replace or compete with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Bill C-173 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of amending it to provide for a department of housing and urban affairs.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Chair has serious doubts as to the validity of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) and if an hon. member would like to make some comments, the Chair would be happy to hear them.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is wrong with it, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I think this amendment is not relevant to the bill. It is beyond the scope of the actual bill. I refer hon. members to citation 418 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

The question for the third reading is put immediately after the report from the Committee of the Whole. All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill—

When a motion is made 'that the Bill be now read a third time', the same kind of amendments are permissible as on the second reading, i.e., amendments postponing it for three or six months.

The amendment must be relevant to the bill at third reading. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the main motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The time being after ten o'clock, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10.40 the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

DISCUSSION UPON THE CALLING OF THE ORDER FOR A MOTION TO CONCUR IN FIFTH REPORT

On the order:

March 21, 1969—Mr. Lessard (LaSalle) (Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications):

That the Fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Presenting reports from standing and special committees. The hon. member for LaSalle—

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before calling this motion in the name of my hon. friend from LaSalle I wonder if it would be possible for me to raise a question of order concerning a recommendation in the report. In doing so, I take no exception to the preamble of the report and the analysis arrived at by the transportation committee as a result of its travels.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Obviously, I take no exception to the first recommendation.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has risen on a point of order. My understanding is that the President of the Privy Council has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the minister has risen on a point of order, I would suggest to Your Honour that in all propriety he ought to state his point of order. I take it from the remarks he has made so far that he is objecting to certain statements in the report. That is not a point of order. If the minister has a point of order, the house should hear it and Your Honour should rule on it.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest I should hear the point of order before I can rule on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am directing myself, as I indicated, to the final recommendation of the report and wish to raise a question of order with respect to that.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I trust I might be heard before others participate in the discussion of this matter.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But don't get into the heart of the report.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I raise a point of order with respect to that part of the report which deals with the passenger train service in Newfoundland. That part reads as follows:

Your committee recommends that the order of the Canadian Transport Commission, authorizing the Canadian National Railways to suspend rail passenger service in Newfoundland on April 5, 1969, be left in abeyance, until your committee tables its complete report in respect to this question.

Incidentally I believe the correct date is April 15 and not April 5, 1969, as stated in the report. My question of order is whether it is in order for a standing committee to make recommendations that this house itself could not make. I would like to submit two considerations in this regard. The first is that the standing committee cannot by resolution in effect purport to repeal what is already an act of this parliament. I would like to make reference to the provisions of the Railway Act in this regard.

Mr. MacEwan: Then what is the point of committees?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With respect, I submit that the President of the Privy Council is debating the substance of the report. The motion has not been moved. He has no right to violate the rules of the house in this way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, one wonders why hon. members are so anxious to prevent my stating my point of order. I have not at all got to the substance of the report. I trust that I might be heard on my point of order so that Your Honour will be in a position to rule on it. My point of order is on a twofold basis. I indicated in the first place that in effect the report attempts to do something which neither the house nor any of its committees could do, that is, by itself repeal an act of parliament without a bill.

The second point is that the subject matter referred to in the report is sub judice. Perhaps I could point out the basis for raising the point of order. I hope I will be heard in this regard. Under the Railway Act provision was made for an appeal from the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada to the government—

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Albert on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to have the privilege of rewriting that with which he does not agree? First, there is the suggestion that certain committees are directed by Liberal members and that they should carry out the wishes of the government. Now we have a recommendation from a committee, and the minister does not accept it. In other words, it is further evidence of how far removed from actuality and reality is the committee system when a minister starts to rewrite that which he does not like.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of the minister and of all hon. members that the Chair is in a difficult position. Actually I do not know at this point exactly what is the point of order of the minister. In point of fact the only matter with which the Chair is faced at the present time is the motion by the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard) that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be concurred in. I have some serious doubts, as other hon. members appear to have, as to whether we can go behind this motion to question certain procedural aspects of the report at this time. This seems to be what worries a number of hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

Perhaps the minister might come to the point quickly and I will hear other hon. members on this subject. In view of the uncertainty of the situation I might be allowed to take the matter under advisement. But for the purpose of order, the minister might be allowed a few moments to indicate what exactly is the point of order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity and will repeat that my point of order is founded on two bases. The first is that if it was out of order for the committee to make that report, it would be out of order for this house to be asked to concur in it, because it is in essence beyond the power of parliament to act by way of resolution rather than by bill. The second reason is that the matter in question in the report is in fact sub judice before what is declared by law to be a court of record, and I should like to refer to certain provisions in Beauchesne and in May's seventeenth edition which, I maintain, support the point of order that I am making. So I wonder if I might be heard in this regard.

As I indicated, the Board of the Transport Commissioners of Canada was declared to be a court of record for the purposes of the law, and under the National Transportation Act which was passed by this house on February 9, 1967, that status was continued in relation to the Canadian Transport Commission. I should like to refer Your Honour to the Railway Act which is in the revised statutes, 1952, section 53 (1). I will not set out in full the provisions of that section, but will point out in other words that parliament has already dealt with the matter of appeals from the Canadian Transport Commission and has indicated that appeals are to be made by way of applications to the Governor in Council, and not by application to this house or any committee of this house. In short I submit that it is not in order for a standing committee to try by resolution to repeal a decision of parliament taken by bill.

The second base for my point of order is that I submit that the matter in question in the report is already under judicial consideration, that it is in fact sub judice, and as such the well established principles both in this house and at Westminster are operative here. I refer to the fact that section 9(2) of the Railway Act in effect constitutes the Canadian Transport Commission as a court of record.

I should like to refer Your Honour to page 127 of Beauchesne where the following is said:

—it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking must not...refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending.

I should like to refer Your Honour to page 454 of May's seventeenth edition where the same principle is outlined, and also to page 396 where the following statement is made:

A matter, awaiting or under adjudication by a court of law, should not be brought before the House by a motion or otherwise.

When we examine the order relating to rail passenger service in Newfoundland we see it was made on July 3, 1968, by the commission and that in fact the commission had not yet made its final determination on this question, —in other words that the matter is still before the commission. The interim order made on July 3, 1968, says:

If, prior to April 15, 1969, Canadian National Railways fails or is unable to perform any of the conditions enumerated above, or if at any time before that date the Committee (i.e. the committee of the commission) is not satisfied that the bus service is at least as good as the present passenger train service, it may, upon notice to Canadian National and to all parties who appeared before it in December, 1967, reconvene the hearing—

In other words, it is perfectly clear that no final order has been made in this matter and that it is still before the Canadian Transport Commission. That commission is a court of record and therefore the long and well established practice of the house that such matters, being sub judice, are not to be dealt with on motions of the house, applies in this case, and I suggest that a motion for concurrence in this report should not be received at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that everything the President of the Privy Council says is correct. It may well be there are defects in this report. But with all due respect, it seems to me the minister should not be able to introduce at this time statements with regard to proceedings before the Canadian Transport Commission, and that such statements ought not to be taken into consideration here.

I suggest with deference, Mr. Speaker, that what the minister could well do is this: Once the matter has come before the house on the substantive motion of the hon. member, he can introduce a subsequent motion to amend it or to send it back to the committee. The way in which the minister is attempting to deal with it now is, in my submission, not the proper way. Of course, once the motion has been put and the debate commenced it will be open to the minister or to anyone else to move an amendment or raise a point of order. The motion cannot be disposed of now by the action of the minister in drawing attention to certain proceedings, not yet completed, which are before the Canadian Transport Commission, and of which this house has not been apprised. Those proceedings were certainly not part of the work of the committee.

If, in the course of the debate, after an appropriate motion to amend put forward by the minister, Your Honour were to reach the conclusion that there were difficulties in connection with the wording of this motion, then Your Honour would have the right to rule accordingly. But in my view the matter should be allowed to proceed. It would then be incumbent upon the minister or upon any other hon. member to make a motion at the time we are debating the substance of the issue.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that I have no desire to prevent the President of the Privy Council from speaking on this matter, but I do feel very strongly that he should speak at the proper time.

Your Honour had called on the hon. member for LaSalle to proceed with his motion which reads:

That the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the house on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in.

Before the hon. member for LaSalle was able to get to his feet, the President of the Privy Council raised a point of order. I submit that it is a spurious point of order and that it violates citation 318 (3) of Beauchesne...

A member will not be permitted in presenting a report to make any remarks on the subject matter; he can only properly do so on a motion in reference to the report.

I suggest that if this limitation is placed on the member of the house who has the moving of the motion in his care, it applies to everyone else. The minister should have waited until the motion had been made, at which point he could speak and argue against the report to his heart's content.

Mr. Bell: And vote against it if he likes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are other citations which state what can be done with a report from a committee. Citation 323 (2) states:

A report from a committee cannot be amended by the house but it must be referred back to the committee.

Paragraph (3) states:

On the consideration of a report, motions have been made expressing the agreement or the disagreement of the house therewith, or motions are made which are founded upon, or which enforce the resolutions of the committee.

My point is that it is perfectly in order for the President of the Privy Council to take objection to the contents of the report, and it is even open to him to argue, when it is before us, that it is an improper report—that it violates the constitution, or what have you. To have done it in this way however, and bring in a debate before the motion is before us is, I submit, highly irregular.

• (2:20 p.m.)

In my view, whatever views the President of the Privy Council has, Your Honour should give the hon. member for LaSalle the opportunity to move concurrence in this report, his motion being already on the order paper. Having been instructed to do so by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, I submit he has the right to move the motion, and that other members of that committee as well as members of this house have the right to speak on it pro or con, including the President of the Privy Council. I think he should have waited till the proper time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be quite short and similar to those of the previous speakers.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

This situation seems to repeat itself. In fact, this is the second time that objections are made to a committee report being concurred in and if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) does not accept the report in which concurrence has been moved today, it will become customary from now on to reject certain committee reports as a result of a minister's objection.

The minister can perhaps object to it, but the authority of the house is such that it can refuse to concur in a report and defer it again to the said committee instructing it to consider it more thoroughly.

If we refuse to consider this report today, we will set a precedent and we can ask ourselves which reports will be concurred in, since ministers may object to some of them. I feel that no hon. member can accept or reject the report of a committee which has been empowered to present a formal report to the house.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as leader of the government in this house the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) should exhibit a superior knowledge of the rules. This afternoon he has fallen into a lamentable lapse. I would point out to him that this house is not his servant in any way at any time, notwithstanding the fact that this is perhaps the first time that a leader of the house has been given a cabinet position that entitles him to devote his attentions exclusively to the leadership of the house.

This house has passed certain rules as a result of which certain authorities or competences have, with a great fanfare of trumpets, been passed on to committees; but every time a committee dares show one iota of independence, like an overnight mushroom the President of the Privy Council is bound to pop up.

Like my colleague on this side of the house, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and also the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I say that the President of the Privy Council has lamentably jumped the gun. In arguing the substance of the matter before Your Honour he could not recognize the difference between a point of order and a point of substance. I put it to you that, as in the case of other motions that hae appeared before Your Honour, the President of the Privy Council has been most precipitate in rising to his feet to argue, not a point of order to the effect that the report was improperly on the order paper, but a point of substance. This is where the President of the Privy Council has shown, shall I say, his lapse in failing to distinguish between a point of order and a point of substance.

He and the government can argue all they want about the contents of the report. They are as free to do so as hon. members are free to argue in favour or against, as their opinions dictate. But let him not confuse these two points. I put it to Your Honour that in so rising the President of the Privy Council himself is out of order, and that he should not be heard to continue his point. At the appropriate time the motion may be argued, but certainly not in this way. Certainly, the President of the Privy Council cannot presume upon his position as government leader in this house.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the house to a point that has not been considered. The President of the Privy Council objected to the motion before the house, contending that in some way the committee's fifth report was not worded correctly. That, really is not the point we ought to be concerned about.

I submit that in drafting the fifth report of the committee the chairman of the committee did an excellent job in trying to overcome a difficult situation. There is what amounts to a court order emanating from the C.T.C. which orders rail passenger service in Newfoundland to be suspended as of April 15. The Canadian National has taken the position that it will continue its passenger service beyond that date. Service is to be continued throughout the summer. In other words, Canadian National will not obey the C.T.C. order. In the last paragraph of the fifth report the chairman was trying to bring relief with respect to the very embarrassing position in which the C.T.C. finds itself. The order it has made prohibiting continuation of passenger service in Newfoundland is not to be enforced. Canadian National wishes to continue operating that passenger service and the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications is asking this house to come to the aid of the C.T.C. and rescue it from an embarrassing position.

The committee does not say that the order should never be complied with; we say it ought to be left in abeyance until the committee has had ample opportunity to study the entire question of rail passenger service in Newfoundland. I sincerely hope that Your Honour will not rule us out of order on this motion. Our idea was to rescue the C.T.C. from an embarrassing position. I urge hon. members of the house to concur in this fifth report.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see three hon. members who are anxious to contribute to the debate. I will, of course, hear them. But I suggest to hon. members that we are perhaps getting into the consideration of the substance of the matter. I agree with the views hon. members have expressed on this point of order up to now. The President of the Privy Council, to some extent at least, is considering the substance of the report, and I am not at all convinced that this is the time to raise a point of order. I shall not render a decision at this stage. I therefore invite hon. members who wish to enlighten the Chair to do so as briefly as possible.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. The President of the Privy Council suggested we have no power to amend or change a decision of the Transport Commission. Most of his argument was based on that point. He suggested we were wrong in bringing this recommendation before parliament. May I refer him to section 18 of the National Transportation Act which says in no uncertain terms that an appeal from the decision of the commission may be made to the minister. The Minister of Transport is in this chamber; he has the power to make this change. I therefore submit we were perfectly right in bringing forward this recommendation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it ought to be understood that this report was unanimously agreed to by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. To suggest therefore that it cannot be brought forward at this time is to slight the chairman. He has been directed by the committee to move the concurrence of this report in this house. I think he is therefore obligated to do so. I suggest that section 53(1) of the Railway Act provides for the Governor in Council to set aside a recommendation of the Canadian Transport Commission. The report of our standing committee in effect recommends that the minister should do that.

It recommended to the house that this action be taken, until the committee set up to investigate all transportation had an opportunity to hear those witnesses. This was concluded only a short while ago. I would respectfully ask, Mr. Speaker, that the motion now before us be put after which time I am sure many members will take part in the discussion.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, basically the point I wanted to make has been made. Perhaps the specific reference has not been drawn to the reason for the report being made, in committee, in the first place. The reason for the standing committee making a report was that a creature of the government had made a decision to abandon the rail service. The only appeal from that decision is through parliament and the Governor in Council.

Section 53 of the Railway Act specifically indicates that the Governor in Council may vary or rescind a decision of that body. I think, Mr. Speaker, there has been a tremendous misrepresentation here today as to exactly how the decision was made. There has been no decision made by parliament: The decision was made by a creature of parliament. We as a committee are asking parliament to exercise its right to rescind this kind of decision, and to act in its supreme capacity as being representative of all peoples of Canada. The only appeal is to parliament, and this is the reason for the almost unanimous recommendation from the railway committee.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we have already experienced a similar situation—and I want to point it out very briefly—with regard to the same committee on transport and communications and an objection raised by same minister, namely the President of the Privy Council and the government house leader (Mr. Macdonald).

The matter had then be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. Here is what it was about. According to some, a recommendation which should have been in the committee report was not there. There followed a storm in a tea-cup and the question was referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

There were long hours of discussion; time was wasted and it was stated afterwards: The chairman of the committee on transport and communications is an excellent member of parliament; he did a fine job and he is not at all guilty.

I want at the outset to pay him this tribute, Mr. Speaker.

Today, the opposite is happening. I remember that when we discussed the recommendation missing in the report of the committee on transport and communications, the President of the Privy Council rose and expressed the point of view of the government. He even took a decision, assuming a right that was not his. As a result, the members of the committee on privileges and elections were much embarrassed by the statements made earlier in the house by the President of the Privy Council.

I believe the situation is similar today, and we cannot stand for it, since the President of the Privy Council would like the house to reject a report that is not even before the house.

I think the President of the Privy Council is once more assuming a right he does not have, in order to undermine the independence of committees, to impede their work and, in short, to deprive them of the possibility of studying a matter in depth. He tends to dictate his opinions to them.

Mr. Speaker, I say this is sheer intervention from the government and I think the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) raised this point earlier in a very able manner.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think we should discuss the matter, and then the report of the committee should be tabled so that we could finally examine it. In my opinion, the President of the Privy Council should not be allowed to dictate to the house his interventionist and autocratic rules.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Hon. members in the course of this procedural debate have referred to May and to other authorities, and have quoted sections of a number of statutes, which of course are not before the Chair at the present time.

As I had indicated in the first instance, it would be my intention to study Hansard, and the contributions made to the debate. Later on, at the first opportunity, I will express an opinion and make a ruling in connection with the several points raised by hon. members. I would feel in any event it might not be appropriate at this time to put the motion for debate. In view of the fact that today is an allotted day, I think it will be the will and intention of the house that we should devote our work this afternoon to the consideration of the motion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) rather than debate the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Transport and Communications. In any event, I will study the contributions made by hon. members and give a decision.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW DELIVERY CONTRACT WITH LAPALME TRANSFER

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement on the order for motions. I regret I was not able to provide hon. members opposite with copies, but I was only in the position to make this statement before entering the house.

I am glad to be able to inform the house that shortly before one o'clock this morning a settlement was reached in the dispute which has disrupted postal delivery in Montreal for the past four weeks. The Post Office has terminated the delivery contract held by Rod Services Limited and transferred the contract to a new company, LaPalme Transfer Ltd. of Montreal. The union has signed a new contract with LaPalme Transfer Ltd. and all employees returned to work this morning.

As hon. members know, the breakdown in postal delivery in Montreal arose out of a labour dispute between Rod Services Limited and the C.N.T.U., representing the company's employees. This dispute, which last week degenerated into violence, was the culmination of three years of disruptions in service to the public, brought about by management-union differences.

During the past four weeks, when a number of Rod Service employees failed to turn up for work, postal delivery in Montreal was seriously disrupted, and this in turn affected deliveries throughout the country. The situation would have been a good deal worse but for the extra effort put out by Montreal letter carriers and postal clerks, and by the co-operation of the public.

The present contract with LaPalme Transfer runs to March 31, 1970. At that time, the Post Office will review the situation, depending upon the performance of the company and its employees, and in the light of the studies being conducted by the task force. I do not want to prejudge the future but I may say I am greatly heartened by the approach LaPalme Transfer has taken to the key problem of employee working conditions. I therefore believe that this solution will prove to be the best one from the viewpoint of the employees, the company, the Post Office, and the public.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, I rejoice in any diminution in the troubles in the Post Office, and in the troubles of the minister. I am very happy that some settlement has been achieved, and I hope it will be a lasting one. I regret that in the long interval of disputation aroused by the President of the Privy Council the minister could not have found time to send a copy over to some of us.

There are many facts that we would like to explore. For instance, I am interested in the expiry date of the new contract. I understand Rod Services had a contract which would expire the same date. I am interested in some of the phasing out formalities in relation to the Rod Services people. But, looking at this a priori, I am delighted that this very upsetting situation, where thousands and thousands and thousands of parcels have been held up in one of the most important distributing centres in the country, has reached some kind of settlement.

I might say to the minister that I note his optimism. I have noticed over the months that he is always optimistic. Sometimes it might be the better part of caution if he occasionally admitted that he does have troubles in the Post Office Department. We do hope however that this settlement will be lasting, and that the mails will go through.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the difficulties the minister and the department seem to be having in all parts of the country, and in light of reports which come in daily to members of parliament about the tremendous drop in the morale of postal employees from one end of the country to the other, it is good to note that one of the immediate and most pressing problems has been settled.

I am sorry the minister could not give us a little more notice of this settlement. Let me say to him that at the proper time we will be interested in finding out the arrangements which were made with Rod Services after the minister, in a somewhat precipitous and unilateral way, decided to cancel their contract. Were Rod Services reimbursed or recompensed in any way? Was their equipment purchased? If that was done, Mr. Speaker, then a most important question has to be asked. When the minister proposed to cancel the contract with Rod Services, and if he proposed and agreed to recompense them, did he make any provision, before these new arrangements with the new company were completed, under which former employees of Rod Services will be employed by the new company, and did he make any arrangements or give consideration to compensating the employees of Rod Services who would be laid off?

Surely that is an important question, Mr. Speaker. How did the minister propose to deal with the company whose contract was cancelled, and how did he propose to deal with its employees? Was he proposing to deal with them on an equally equitable basis at the same time?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we are glad that this problem has been settled, and we hope that we will not see the minister on his feet in the next few days discussing another problem in another city.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, on account of the incredible mess in which the Post Office Department finds itself since the beginning of that dispute, we remain somewhat puzzled while the minister announces that he has at last solved the problem in part. If that is true, however, we can only rejoice. We would like to be sure that the new agreement will not mark the beginning of another messy situation.

The house has probably learned that the Ralliement Créditiste met in Montreal Sunday night and that its members heard about the mess now to be found in the Post Office Department, especially in Canada's metropolis.

We were told that the official report of the House of Commons Debates for Tuesday—that was the Ralliement Créditiste's field-day—had not yet reached Montreal, whereas that for Wednesday had been received. We are anxious to know the reason for the delay.

In any case, we are only too happy if that settlement can help the minister find some solutions. For instance, we might suggest, if the trucks of Rod Services Ltd. have been bought, that they could be used as mobile post offices, since the department intends to close a very large number of post offices.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY MEETINGS

TABLING OF REPORT OF CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as deputy co-president of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group, I am pleased to present, in English and in French, the report of the said committee. I beg unanimous consent of the house to have the proceedings of the meetings printed in Appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BIAFRA—DESTRUCTION OF CANAIRELIEF MERCY AIRCRAFT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he is aware of a telegram received by the Secretary of State for External Affairs from Canairelief charging that Nigerian jets have been directed to destroy Canairelief mercy planes and suggesting that Nigeria is opposing construction of an airport for use exclusively by relief planes? Will he say specifically what representations Canada intends to make, with a view to protecting Canadians now engaged in mercy flights in Nigeria-Biafra?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. gentleman for giving notice of his intention to ask this question. Unfortunately I did not have sufficient time before two o'clock to go into it as fully as I would like. Under the circumstances I would suggest that I take it as notice and ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to deal with it tomorrow, when I expect he will be back in the house.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister, in drawing this matter to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, would be prepared to suggest that the government take the very unique opportunity offered by the visit of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to Lagos to make representations to General Gowon on what Canadians feel about the abhorrent practice of attempting to destroy relief planes?

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that this suggestion will be brought to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C. STATISTICAL REPORT—POSSIBLE UPWARD REVISION OF TARGET

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as the minister in charge of housing, with reference to the statistical report on Canadian housing issued yesterday by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In view of their suggestion that even the construction of 250,000 units per year for the next five years would not eliminate the backlog, and in view of the fact that this figure is 25 per cent higher than the 200,000 units per year for the next five years recommended by the task force chaired by the minister, I want to ask the minister if in the light of this report he and his officials intend to revise upward the target for housing units for the next five years, and do they propose to ask parliament for the necessary funds to implement such a recommendation?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I prefer to deal in realistic figures. The figure of one million units in five years mentioned by the task force was described as a minimum target. I personally hope it will be exceeded by a substantial margin. However my hon. friend will realize from the report to which he refers that 200,000 units will improve the housing situation for Canadians very substantially, and anything beyond 200,000 units a year that we can do will improve it that much more substantially.

Beyond that you have to have access to information which has never been adequately codified. In other words, you have to know how many people live in doubled up accommodation because they prefer to do so, and we know there are some. We have to know the exact condition of several hundred thousand units that are described as poor in the housing stock statistics. I hope that we will be able to get more substantial, more precise information on these two matters in the course of the next few months, so that we will know precisely just what is required. In the meantime I can assure my hon. friend that the figures that have been suggested, if they are achieved, will make a substantial inroad into the problem and improve housing conditions for Canadians very materially. We will make every effort possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation seems to have had in mind a higher and probably just as realistic a target as the task force may I ask the Minister whether there was any exchange of material between the task force and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; were they asked to make any recommendations or provide any research material? Would the Minister be prepared to table the exchanges of correspondence regarding desirable targets which may have passed between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the task force?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think there was any exchange of correspondence on desirable targets. We did have access to the material on their projects, and some others which we asked for. I think our main target would not have been too different from what would have been set by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, if it had set one. The figure of 250,000 at the moment is beyond the capability of either the country or industry to produce. As soon as we have the capability to produce that amount I hope it will be national policy to do so.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Minister whether Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was asked to suggest a target, and if so what was it.

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot remember precisely, but I know there is no substantial disagreement in respect of the figures we have discussed.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister, in respect of the estimate of the number of housing units which will be required, whether the task force has taken into its calculation the large influx of people who will be driven off the farms of the country into the cities by the failure of the government to provide adequate agricultural policies?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Defence Production who is responsible for supplies—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Some of us have supplementaries on the question of housing which we would like to get at.

Mr. Speaker: I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that we have already spent quite a bit of time on that subject. There are a number of hon. members who are anxious to ask questions. As the hon. member knows supplementaries are at the discretion of the Chair and an attempt is made from day to day to bring on as many subjects as possible. I believe this is the general wish of all hon. members. If there is an opportunity we might return to this subject later on during the question period.

OFFICIAL REPORT

PRINTING OF FRENCH EDITION ON POOR QUALITY PAPER

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production, who is responsible for supplies and who incidentally has been a perfect host during my recent trip in his province two weeks ago.

Could the minister tell us whether the paper on which the French Hansard is printed comes from the province of Newfoundland, and if he intends to improve the service by ordering a better grade of paper from the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order, I must point out to the hon. member that his question is one relating to a problem which comes actually under the jurisdiction of the Speaker. I would suggest to the hon. member to send his question in writing to the Speaker.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

C.M.H.C.—CRITERIA APPLICABLE IN PROJECTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport in his housing capacity. Arising from his statement that public housing would be continued in an "amended, improved form" to use his words, would he indicate what notice he has given municipalities or provinces of the sociological and other criteria which now must be met before C.M.H.C. will enter into public housing partnerships.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in discussions with some of the provinces and with some representatives of the municipalities that within a few days I would hope to be in a position to give them, in guideline form, the criteria which will be applied in making judgments in respect of these matters.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister whether this would be in written form, so that every province and municipality could share the wealth.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in both French and English—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The patience of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has been rewarded.

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR ACTION ON RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is for the Minister. In view of the recent urgent appeal from the city of Vancouver that Ottawa take decisive action on two urban renewal projects will the minister permit Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to conclude an agreement with the city to proceed with at least one of the two projects in limbo?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): They will have to be looked at very closely, Mr. Speaker. The city of Vancouver has already demolished quite a few houses which have not been replaced, and this at a considerable expense both to the taxpayers of Canada and the people whose lives were disrupted. If it can be proven that going ahead with additional renewal projects at this time is the best use of the money available to provide better housing and better conditions for Canadian citizens, then of course it will be considered sympathetically.

IMMIGRATION

JERRY RUBIN—ORDER DENYING ENTRANCE TO CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I should like to ask the Minister whether or not an order or direction was made by his department that the self-styled revolutionary Jerry Rubin is not to be admitted to Canada, and if so did he find it understandable that the C.B.C. last evening by telephone to this fellow in the United States gave him four or five minutes on the C.B.C. to expound his revolutionary philosophy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker; the department has sent a notice to all officials at the border to the effect that Mr. Rubin is a prohibited person and that his entry into Canada will not be permitted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I would ask the Minister whether he would communicate with the C.B.C. to ascertain why this individual should have been given the privilege, at Canadian expense, of speaking over the C.B.C., and why some of these petty Caesars in the C.B.C. can flout the authority of the government. I believe they should be made to realize that parliament does not intend to permit them to break the law of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I asked a supplementary question and I am awaiting an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: The action taken by the Department of Immigration with regard to Mr. Rubin speaks for itself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The C.B.C. is not speaking that way. We pay for these revolutionaries to speak to Canadians.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CANADIAN AVIATION AND ELECTRONICS—TRANSFER OF CONTRACT TO ONTARIO

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Defence Production. In view of the fact that the employees of Canadian Aviation Electronics at Winnipeg were informed this morning that certain contracts on which they had been working are to be transferred to a plant in Ontario, what steps will the Minister take to make sure that 100 or 150 of these workers at Winnipeg do not lose their jobs.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the circumstances to which the hon. member refers. We are holding discussions between C.A.E. and the successful tenderer on this contract in order to try to alleviate as much as possible the effect of the transfer of this business. Talks are now under way.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EFFECT OF INCREASED RATES ON PRINTING INDUSTRY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General, and it is not in Latin this time. In the light of the important and urgent representation made to the government by the Graphic Arts Industries Association on behalf of the printing industry of this country, will the Minister say what consideration he is giving to the measures advocated by this important body to diminish the very serious effects of the impending increased rates on the printing industry?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): The objective of the Post Office is to take the Post Office out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayer. We have introduced a number of measures, in two ways. We have attempted to improve service, to increase productivity internally, and also to ask those who use the services of the Post Office to pay for them, and not to make them a charge on the general taxpayer. It is in this light that I have regarded most of the submissions that have been made to me.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister also assure us that in taking the Post Office out of the pockets of Canadian citizens we will have mail service?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Later:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. The minister has told us of his concern for the service. Will he advise the house why the passport division of the Department of External Affairs will no longer guarantee delivery of passports within four days by registered mail?

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

I wish to ask the minister whether he has reached a final agreement with the province of Quebec in connection with the establishment of a second Montreal international airport, and if Sainte-Thérèse is the site which has been finally chosen?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's question is one which was asked yesterday during the question period.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I believe the minister stated yesterday that he was expecting to make a statement very soon to the house. And I am asking him if he is ready to make it today.

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Not today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: When?

Mr. Hellyer: Soon.

FISHERIES

SEALS—DISPOSAL OF NORWEGIAN SHIP UNDER SEIZURE

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister report to the house the latest developments in connection with the Norwegian ship which was taken into custody by officials of his department yesterday as the result of its seal hunting activities?

Mr. MacInnis: Even the C.B.C. has got that one.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the Norwegian ship has been brought into St. John's, Newfoundland, and the Department of Justice has been asked to proceed in the usual way under the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister prepared to tell the house the reason for the investigation and dismissal of Mr. H. S. Homans, who was suspended as the marine regional inspector of the Department of Fisheries in connection with the seal hunt?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether this is a supplementary question. If there is urgency to the hon. member's question, it seems to me it is the type of question that should be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked the question is the situation surrounding the dismissal of this gentleman as a result of his involvement in the seal fishery. This is why I posed the question as a supplementary.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this is a purely internal, departmental matter. But I can assure the hon. member that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the seal fishery.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister and/or the Department of Justice, when they embark upon the prosecution of this case, not to be quite as generous as they were with the Japanese boat that was seized off the west coast a short while ago. I ask that they be a little more severe in this respect.

SEALS—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the questions on this matter by the hon. member for St. John's East. Has the minister come to a decision with regard to having these various questions relating to the seal fishery and the propaganda that has been shown abroad, as well as the issue of the fishery itself, placed before the fisheries committee for exhaustive consideration?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I understand that the house Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will be meeting on Thursday evening. I intend to make a recommendation to the committee to that effect at that time.

GRAIN

ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WHEAT POOLS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that he advised us on February 21 that he is personally supervising the activities of the transportation committee and the allocation of freight cars for grain movement, and in view of the fact that 5,000 fewer cars have been loaded so far this year compared with the same period last year, can the minister advise the house as to the result of the discussions held on Sunday with the heads of the two major Canadian railways? Will he also advise us what action is being taken to prevent discrimination against the prairie wheat pools in the allocation of box cars?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know of nothing which can be done now to bring more wheat to the different ports than what is being done at the moment. If the hon. member has more specific cases to submit to me, I will be glad to listen to them and bring them to the attention of the Wheat Board and the transportation committee.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool requires 1,500 to 2,000 box cars to fill the space they now have available in their terminals at the Lakehead, will the minister advise what action is being taken to provide these additional cars at the country elevators of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I had a report just this morning from the Wheat Board. I will read part of it:

> Stocks at the Lakehead this morning amounted to 65.6 million bushels. Cars in transit and on track were 5,808, roughly 12 million bushels. If the terminals can handle 78 million then sufficient grain has now been loaded to fill the terminals by the opening of navigation.

I could go on.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has completely avoided my question. I am perfectly aware that the terminals he is talking about are full. I have just said that it is a fact that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool terminals are not full. They require 1,500 cars to fill them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a matter of debate and not a point of order.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a supplementary question for the Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the C.P.R. given any concrete evidence that it is trying to maintain at least the same type of service as the C.N.R., which is poor at best?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the performance of both railways in recent weeks has been excellent.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether it is a fact that 5,000 more box cars were loaded last year than this year. If so, would it not be helpful if the minister would remove himself from the position of special supervisor of this activity so that the delivery of grain might be improved?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF YUGOSLAV DIPLOMATS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I mention the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of Mr. Vasil Grivcev, Yugoslavia's foreign trade secretary. With him are the other members of the delegation and His Excellency Mr. Tode Curuvija, Yugoslavia's ambassador to Canada.

Mr. Grivcev and myself have just concluded some very useful consultations on the subject of trade between our two countries. The minister will now be going to Toronto where he will meet with representatives of the Ontario government and businessmen of that province. Then, he will be going to Montreal for talks with representatives of the Quebec government and Montreal businessmen.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the house will wish to join me in extending to them a very cordial welcome.

OIL

PARTICIPATION OF ACTING MINISTER IN WASHINGTON TALKS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with reference to the petroleum industry, in light of the national anxiety at the present time in this respect. As the minister has said that western Canada is not going to get any special consideration as to the oil market and the demand for Canadian crude, is he intending to join the Prime Minister in the petroleum discussions taking place at the present time with the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior of that country?

Mr. Horner: I hope not.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, without wanting to associate myself with the introductory portion of the hon. member's remarks, I would assure the hon. member that I for one am confident of the Prime Minister's ability to handle that matter with the President at this time.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister said the other day in the House of Commons that a special task force had been set up. Are members of that task force with the Prime Minister advising him in his discussions with regard to petroleum with the President and the Secretary of the Interior, the former governor of Alaska and oil king of the United States?

Mr. Lang: Again, Mr. Speaker, without wanting to associate myself with a good deal of the remarks of the hon. member, I am happy to tell him that at least one member of the task force is in fact with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the minister would associate himself with the Canadian problem so far as petroleum is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: You need not all be shy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether he is aware that on one occasion when one of his colleagues reported him to be in Toronto he was actually in his office and not in attendance in the house?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Certainly the question as asked is not in order.

Mr. MacInnis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has, I hope, another question rather than a supplementary to one which was not in order.

Mr. MacInnis: If my question is not in order, may I rise on a point of order and ask the house leader to explain why situations develop such as the one in which the Minister without Portfolio reported that the Minister of Transport was in Toronto while he was actually in his office. This matter was raised as a question of privilege on another occasion. Why did the house leader report yesterday that the Minister of National Defence was accompanying the Prime Minister to Washington when that was not the case, as the presence of the Minister of National Defence here today makes evident?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that the minister was accompanying the Prime Minister. If I was wrong, I apologize.

With regard to the earlier incident, my understanding was that the minister was on his way. It is as simple as that.

Mr. MacInnis: It seems to me that a few other ministers now owe us apologies. Does the fact that the minister is now apologizing mean he will get off free or drop his arrogant attitude?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BRINGING OF JERRY RUBIN TO CANADA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State. Would he seek an explanation from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as to why Mr. Rubin, who was prohibited from coming into Canada by the immigration authorities, was brought into Canada by that powerful creator of instantaneous electronic folklore, the C.B.C.?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is repeating in different terms a question which was asked on precisely this subject a moment ago by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I say with deference, Mr. Speaker, that the reason I am asking the question is that I heard the parliamentary secretary indicate that the first question had been directed to the wrong person. I am taking the opportunity now to ask for a reply from the right source.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will give the hon. member another opportunity tomorrow, which will be the next allotted day for directing questions to the Secretary of State.

GRAIN

CESSATION OF DAMP GRAIN DELIVERIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the provincial co-ordinating committee on grain drying was told in Regina that all major line elevator companies are expected to cut off deliveries of damp grain before April 1, will the minister endeavour to have the elevator companies change this decision since, according to the same source, there are five million to ten million bushels of damp grain still to be delivered?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport.

With regard to the announcement made on March 21 of the appointment of Mr. Frank Lafferty of Ottawa, but a native of Quebec, would the minister tell the house whether this gentleman is a French Canadian or an English Canadian?

[English]

INDUSTRY

NOVA SCOTIA PULP LIMITED NEWSPRINT MILL

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question has a note of urgency and it is addressed to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development or his parliamentary secretary. Can the minister tell the house whether negotiations have been completed with Nova Scotia Pulp Limited for a large extension of its operations at the Strait of Canso and the establishment of a new newsprint mill? If so, can the minister indicate the extent of the government's involvement through Devco and other federal agencies and programs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member indicated in his preamble that there was an element of urgency. This was not apparent in his question. Perhaps he might consider the possibility of discussing the matter at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, may I point out with all due respect that the note of urgency is very subtle.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION IN CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Acting Prime Minister whether he could clarify the situation with regard to negotiations between the government and the Public Service Alliance. He took the question as notice. Perhaps he or the President of the Treasury Board may be able to answer my question today.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board is prepared to answer the question.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the question was asked whether or not the Treasury Board was engaged in stalling in relation to the conduct of negotiations with bargaining units represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada. I should like to say that there is neither the intention to stall nor the practice of stalling on the part of the government. We are most anxious to negotiate and conclude agreements with all bargaining agents, including the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

I am sure that hon. members will understand that the government as the employer cannot agree to everything that the bargaining units are asking for. We are meeting on a continuous basis with them and we continue to meet with them with a view to negotiating agreements which are acceptable to both sides. This is what collective bargaining is all about. In fact, an agreement was signed just yesterday with the printing operations group. I should like to reiterate that we are not stalling, but rather are putting forth every effort to reach agreements.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Perhaps I should tell the house that we are meeting again with representatives of the Public Service Alliance of Canada this afternoon with a view to resolving our differences in respect of the two groups to which the president of the P.S.A.C. made reference, namely the administrative and foreign service category and the administrative support category. I understand that it is planned to have a meeting with representatives of the P.S.A.C. on Friday in a different kind of setting in order to sign an agreement covering a group for which the P.S.A.C. is the bargaining agent.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question which I hope will not provoke another lecture on bargaining. Will the minister say whether in these negotiations the government is seeking complete freedom to require employees to work scheduled hours of shift work, as is charged, and is also seeking freedom to make changes unilaterally in working conditions, as is also charged?

Mr. Drury: The matter of the scheduling of work hours is under discussion and endeavors are being made to reach agreed schedules. In so far as rescheduling is concerned, this also is under negotiation.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Can he tell us whether the class of civil servants working in the old age security pension and family allowances services has received particular attention during the present negotiations or whether it will be studied later?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that old age security pensions are my department's responsibility.

[English]

Mr. Valade: Then I will direct my question to the minister responsible or, in his absence, to the house leader. Will he inform the house tomorrow whether employees whose old age pension or family allowances are affected will receive an adjustment in pay in the early future?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a question of a very general nature.

[Translation]

This question should normally be answered by a statement on motions.

[Mr. Drury.]

[English]

NATIONAL ANTHEM

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF "O CANADA"

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that many people across the nation are concerned about what is our national anthem and that "O Canada", an anthem that has never received royal assent, is being used almost exclusively, does the Acting Prime Minister consider "God Save the Queen" to be our official national anthem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is not in order. He is asking for an expression of opinion on the part of the minister, so this question is not acceptable.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, may I say with all deference that I think people across the nation would like to have an answer to this question.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that a reply at this time to the hon. member's question would resolve the situation.

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): My question is directed to the leader of the house, Mr. Speaker. Does the government plan to bring in legislation regarding our national anthem, as recommended by the committee which made a unanimous report on this subject and, if so, when?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is hoped we shall be able to bring in a proposed resolution on this subject later this session. The remaining question to be determined concerns the copyright, and as soon as this has been cleared up we shall feel free to put forward a resolution for consideration by the house to place both the national anthem and the royal anthem, in both languages, on an official basis.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR SOLUTION OF PROBLEMS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member for Port Arthur in his capacity as Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In the light of the long delay in the introduction of the Indian claims commission legislation, in view of the refusal to make up even a precis of the Stanbury-Fields taxation report, and in the light of the refusal so far to table certain correspondence with the provinces about the education of Indian children, as well as in the light of the delay—I could go on at some length, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I could go on—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will not be able to go on throughout the question period.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I did not intend to; the list is tremendous. I should like to ask the minister this question. Now that a certain obstacle has been removed from his way, could he proceed to clear up some of these long-standing questions before the other minister returns?

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the constant increase in the interest rate and of the fact that the recent report of the task force suggested the establishment of co-operatives which later would become an investment bank for housing, could the minister tell the house whether discussions aiming to establish such co-operatives are being held?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's question should be put on the order paper.

[English]

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

RAIL FARE TO MANPOWER UPGRADING STUDENTS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. Will the hon. gentleman reconsider his department's decision not to pay students attending manpower upgrading courses their return fares to go home at Easter, in view of the fact that these students were given to understand, until this week, that such payments would be made, as they had been made at Christmas?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question he is asking now relates to a matter which will be under debate in a few minutes.

COMMUNICATIONS

STUDY OF MEDIA OWNERSHIP BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to refer the question of media ownership and operation to an appropriate house committee, similar to the Davey committee in the other place?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): There is no intention to do so at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I think it might be a duplication of effort at this stage. We shall follow with interest the investigation being carried out in the other place, and if the report of that committee indicates that any action is necessary, consideration will be given to it at that time.

Mr. Paproski: Will the policy of awarding cable television licences to publishing firms be reviewed, either by the appropriate committee of the house or by the government, in view of recent awards in this field by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Perhaps I can remind the hon. member that, unless I am mistaken, the appropriate estimates are still under consideration by the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. If he and other members wish to bring this question before that committee they might well consult the chairman and their colleagues on the committee.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INTELSAT DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General in his capacity as minister in charge of communications. Can he say whether it is his intention to make a statement on motions outlining progress made at the Intelsat meeting which has just ended and outlining in particular the position Canada took with regard to regional satellite systems?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Intelsat conference was fairly well covered by the press. The major outcome—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member and to the minister that the only sense in which this question could be accepted now is that the hon. member is asking whether a statement will be made. A statement should not be made at this time.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION AS TO QUOTA

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. In his recent talks with the industry and the grain trade, did the hon. gentleman receive an assurance that a six bushel quota would be reached by the end of the crop year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this was the position the Wheat Board took a number of weeks ago and I am not aware of any declaration changing it since then.

DELIVERY OF OUT-OF-CONDITION GRAIN

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Can the minister assure the house that he will make representations to the Wheat Board in an effort to get it to rescind its instruction on country elevator agents not to accept for delivery any out-of-condition grain after April 1?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Sometimes members on the other side want the Wheat Board to take action to control shipments. At other times they do not. I wish they would make up their minds.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, this is a question of privilege as well as a point of order. At no time did I suggest to the minister that I wanted changes in the quota system. I am simply asking whether any steps are being taken by his office in an effort to see that all farmers have an opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

MOVEMENT OF BOX CARS TO LAKEHEAD

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, since there is now no appreciable backlog of cars to be unloaded at the Lakehead or on the west coast, may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to advise the house whether the railway companies have placed an embargo on the movement of box cars to the Lakehead from certain delivery points and, if so, whether his department was informed before such action was taken? If the minister was told about this proposal, what action has he taken with regard to it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already read the first four lines of a letter I received from the Wheat Board. It continues as follows:

> The railways are, therefore, cutting back on the number of loads for the Lakehead so that there should not be an excessive number of cars under load. The grain which will be loaded for the Lakehead in the next two or three weeks will be from the Red River Valley, barley from Alberta which is required for sales commitments, and a limited quantity of high moisture grain.

The agencies involved are trying to bring to the Lakehead the quantities and kinds of grain needed in order to market and to keep the drying facilities operating. This is the kind of control the house has been asking for the last four or five months. Now that weather is helping it is being exercised and I hope there will not be too much complaint. In the Red River Valley there is a flood possibility, so the Wheat Board and the railways are anticipating this possibility.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—DEVELOPMENT AND RETENTION OF MANPOWER RESOURCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

> That this house regrets that the government has not provided for the development and retention of manpower resources in Canada and, in particular, of student manpower resources.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are literally dozens of subjects we could have chosen to bring forward on this day, one of those allotted to the Official Opposition, but we chose to discuss the development and retention of manpower resources in Canada and, in particular, of student manpower resources, not because we on this side have any dramatic new solutions to suggest nor because we expect any miracles from the government but because it is vitally important to make it clear to Canadians, and especially to young Canadians, that the parliament of Canada at least cares enough about this problem to devote a day to its consideration. Second, we have chosen this subject because we believe it is important to draw public attention to what we consider to be a failure of concern and a lack of commitment on the part of the government in connection with an extremely important national problem. Third, we have done so because it is important to force the government through one of its ministers to make a statement of its policies and plans to develop and maintain manpower resources, especially student manpower resources, in Canada.

As I said in connection with a previous opposition motion this session, if we can succeed only in shaking the government out of its lethargy this allotted day will have been very well spent. Perhaps we may bring home to the public the urgency of the problem and in turn create sufficient pressure on the government so that a real manpower policy will attain the priority it ought to have in Canada.

In a country with Canada's population, at our stage of economic growth and in our competitive position, there is nothing more basic than the development and retention of manpower resources. This is the key to economic progress and to creative excellence, as well as the availability of the highest standard of professional services of all kinds.

The so-called brain drain is, of course, an old problem, but its present dimensions reflect the failure of this country to achieve potential growth—economic, technological and scientific. At the same time it deprives us of people who it must be assumed would have made a significant contribution to our growth and development. To the United States alone we have lost more than 214,000 Canadians in the past five years, and this despite certain job restrictions imposed by the United States government in 1965 and despite the selective service and draft laws of the United States. On the other hand, I am the first to recognize that there is a brain gain on the other side of the coin and that Canada is one of the chief beneficiaries. I could cite the percentages of doctors, engineers, architects and so on in Canada today who came here from other countries. The percentages are strikingly high in some cases, and I invite hon. members to look them up in Economic Council reports and other sources.

We in Canada have relied to some extent upon immigration for professional people, but there is nobody in this house, I trust, who would suggest for a moment that Canada can afford to lose young people in the numbers that have been emigrating from this country. Neither would anybody suggest, for example, that it is acceptable that some 30 per cent of our Ph.D.'s trained here leave for the United States. Indeed, the government itself has adopted the initiative undertaken privately several years ago by the Association of Universities and Colleges and is pursuing what is called "Operation Retrieval", designed to try to retrieve as many as possible of the 15,000 Canadians now studying abroad. Nobody will deny that this is a noble cause, but where are the careers in our own country for these people? In a month or so the government will be standing by watching how many of this year's graduating classes leave the country.

I should like to know whether the government has any idea how many have left. Have any studies been made of how many of this year's graduating classes are likely to be absorbed in Canada? If so, what policy conclusions have been drawn as a result of such studies? What are the projections for the next three to five years? Is there anyone in the government who knows or even cares?

I need not quote any authorities on the relationship between education and the development of our country; that vital connection is accepted by every member of this house. Surely the house is entitled to hear from the government what approach it is taking and how seriously and urgently it regards the problem facing us in the spring of 1969 and indeed in subsequent years.

I understand that some 88,000 students will be graduating from colleges and universities within the next month or so. On one campus after another in this country the story seems to be the same—fewer companies, fewer governments and fewer government agencies recruiting fewer people than last year. I am not going to go into the details; the situation seems to be clear. At Memorial university in St. John's there is a 10 per cent decrease in the number of companies recruiting their labour requirements; there are 15 per cent fewer at McMaster. And so it goes. There are fewer jobs available this year than last, with more students looking for them.

The size of the 1969 graduating class is apparently 20 per cent larger than last year—88,000 compared with 59,000. The number of post-graduate degrees being granted this year is increasing at an even faster rate than undergraduate degrees—7,800 last year compared with 6,500 the year before. These figures are continuing to increase from year to year. The magnitude of our losses will, therefore, increase from year to year unless some action is taken.

These people want to stay in Canada, and they are people Canada needs. Enrolments at our colleges and universities continue to grow. In the present academic year, 1968-69, I believe there are over 250,000 students enrolled at universities and colleges and another 178,000 enrolled at various other post-secondary institutions in the country.

I cannot conceive of any failure more glaring than our failure to use the services of Canadians whom we educate. We are failing to provide an opportunity for these people to remain in Canada to contribute to Canada's growth and development. In such circumstances we must be very dissatisfied with the course of our economic and scientific development. There must be something seriously wrong when a country like Canada, which is trying to develop rapidly and is borrowing large amounts of capital to assist it to do so, nevertheless appears to be unable to utilize the services of a very substantial proportion of the people we are training and educating in Canada. I suggest this indicates that there is something seriously out of whack in our country.

A related problem is the really bleak and depressing situation so far as summer jobs for students are concerned. It is difficult to get accurate information as to the number of students seeking summer employment. One hears figures ranging from 400,000 to 600,000 and higher. Certainly the figures for those who were not successful last summer are grim enough.

Unemployment generally in this country has risen since then and opportunities for students have been adversely affected. A couple of weeks ago the situation in Ontario was summed up in a news article in this way:

> An estimated 357,000 Ontario students will be competing for summer jobs with more than 100,000 other unemployed people this year.

The government of Ontario has, of course, appealed to employers throughout the province to make an extra effort. The federal Department of Manpower and Immigration is conducting, rather belatedly I must say, an advertising and promotional campaign. Despite the experience of last summer the problem has been allowed to lie until the eve of the closing down of schools without any attempt being made to develop a program to meet it. One of the basic root causes goes unattended, the lagging rate of economic growth which apparently is not even acknowledged—in fact, it seems to be denied—by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who continue to say: "Everything is going according to plan; our policies are working well."

The fact about summer employment for students is that there are many families and students to whom the failure to obtain a summer job means the difference between these students continuing or interrupting their education. It is nothing short of tragic that the education of young Canadians should be allowed to terminate for this reason. Unfortunately, that seems to be happening. It is happening especially with many young married couples where either one or both partners are trying to continue their university education.

I suggest it is not enough for the department to buy advertising space in the newspapers a few weeks before the summer recess. There will be a drastic shortage of summer jobs for students for the second summer in a row, and the lack of jobs is bound to affect the educational careers of many young Canadians. The problem is likely to grow in severity. Therefore I and other hon. members want to know today what the government intends to do about the matter. What plans are being considered to increase or strengthen programs of student aid in the country to overcome difficulties which are likely to increase in severity? Has the government considered any changes? Has it any plans to meet with the provinces to discuss possible changes? These are questions to which hon. members are entitled to hear answers. Surely this is an area in which the federal government could obtain the views of the provinces and give them leadership.

The situation in Ontario, because of its size, is serious enough, but the problem is extremely intense in areas of the country with slower growth which can less afford supplementary programs to encourage summer employment of students. In those areas jobs are likely to fall particularly short of requirements. There, many of the students come from families earning lower than average incomes.

I need not dwell on the fact that Canada cannot afford to lose these people. In an open economy like Canada's we must export. We know that technologically based industries are accounting for an increasingly large share of world trade. We ought to know that in Canada we are still not developing a technology-based economy and the people to develop it rapidly enough. This point was made very directly in an article last Thursday in the Globe and Mail by Fraser Robertson in which he said:

> —more and more our exports are increased by the development of our human resources rather than of our natural resources. Increased technology has played a large part in this. Even more important than the know-how is knowing what to do, that faculty of entrepreneurial creativity which has had so much to do with U.S. business success.

Quite apart from the question of economic growth, God knows this country needs all the ability, talent and dedication we can summon from our young people. We have in this country a host of social and human problems that require the attention, the ability and the work of young men and women whose training is in the humanities and social sciences and whose dedication is to the solutions of those problems. We need scientists and engineers who, hopefully, are concerned about the environment in which these problems may best be solved.

I wonder seriously what role the Department of Manpower and Immigration and its minister play in the formulation of government policies and in the consideration of problems of the kind I have been discussing. For example, and I think it is a very serious example, would the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and his department be consulted and have an important part to play in the decision to cut back the grants that were intended to build medical schools and train the medical and paramedical personnel the country will need to catch up with the present shortage and to meet projected requirements over the next few years? Were the minister and his department consulted? This, surely, is the type of decision which, while the matter is under the direct jurisdiction of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, should be subject to important and perhaps decisive advice from the Department of Manpower if that department is doing the proper job it is being asked to do.

I wonder whether the Department of Manpower is at all concerned or was ever consulted about the cut-backs in scientific projects supported by the government of Canada. Was the Department of Manpower in a position to advise the government as to the probable loss of scientists because of the cancellation of the ING project or the Queen Elizabeth observatory? More generally, and I think this is more important in the long run, is the department in a position to assess the effects in terms of scientific manpower of the uncertainty and confusion surrounding the federal government's science policy generally? To me this is the proper concept of a manpower department. The Department of Manpower ought to cut across every department of government and every policy of every department of government. Having made its own assessment of the manpower requirements of the country in the various fields, projected over a period of five, ten or more years, the department should have an opportunity to advise cabinet as to how every important policy of government or of any department is apt to affect our manpower resources and their potential. I regret to say that it appears that under this government the Department of Manpower is given a back seat. It appears that the minister is given an inferior status and that in the main he is accepting it.

What is of most concern is not that a problem exists. Rather, it is that there appears to be almost no awareness and almost no concern on the part of the government about our problems or the urgency of our problems which show every sign of growing more severe. What is most depressing about all this is that there is not a shred of evidence that any thinking about this problem is being done by the government. No thinking seems to be devoted to it; there is no planning and no real concern.

It is almost unbelievable that this government came to power last June with the support of so many young people in Canada. It is certainly astonishing that these urgent problems should have such a low priority with a government elected on the slogan of involvement and participation. What amazes me is that the hopes of our younger people and their genuine desire to do something meaningful in their country were cast aside so cynically by the government once it was safely back in power. Not only is the employment situation extremely difficult this spring, but nobody in the hierarchy of the just society seems to be interested any more. The government has not come up with any new programs to deal with this emergency. It has not even fully enacted or implemented the old programs.

On November 13, 1967, the parliament of Canada passed Bill C-150 entitled, "an act to establish a Canada Manpower and Immigration Council". That council was to consist of a chairman and not more than 15 members appointed by order in council. Among other things, the duties of that council were to advise the minister on all matters pertaining to the effective utilization and development of manpower resources in Canada. Under that legislation the minister was also to establish four advisory boards, the chairmen of which were to be members of the Canada Manpower and Immigration Council. Those advisory boards were on adult occupational training, adjustment of immigrants, co-ordination of rehabilitation services for disabled persons, and manpower and immigration research. When he introduced the bill and commended it to the House of Commons for support the then minister of manpower and immigration, who is the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, said:

The hon. members will note that the role of the council is in no way restricted or limited. Its job will consist in advising the minister on all matters pertaining to the efficient use and development of manpower resources in Canada, including immigrants and their integration into Canadian life. I consider myself fortunate in that I can bank—and the same goes for the officials of the department—on the wise counsels of those Canadians who act outside the department. It will facilitate the drawing up of an efficient program to develop an ever greater awareness in management of the ceaseless transformations in manpower needs across the country.

Indeed, the former minister of manpower and immigration told the house that he regarded it as a matter of urgency that the bill establishing the Canadian Manpower and Immigration Council be enacted. The bill became law in 1967 but to date not one appointment has been made so far as we are aware. Last November 14, when the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) appeared before the standing committee of the house. the following exchange took place:

Mr. Caccia: In December 1967 the Canada Manpower and Immigration Council Act was given assent. Has the minister any intention of implementing that act by appointments to the various councils proposed in that act?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We in the department have spent considerable time recently considering how best these councils could operate and be of maximum benefit to the department and to the country. I think we have it pretty clearly in our minds how we think they ought to operate. We have already canvassed major organizations in the country for suggestions as to possible persons to fill these council positions and we hope soon to be able to get it in operation. So we are getting ahead with it.

There is just no excuse for the delay in setting up this council. The concept of such a council is a good one. It would, as the former minister said:

—facilitate the drawing up of an efficient program to develop an even greater awareness in management in the essential transformation in manpower needs across the country.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Such a council, if the minister ever gets around to appointing it, will help to involve concerned and interested people in all sectors of Canadian society. It would keep the minister, the department and the government in touch with developing needs and opportunities. In short, it would do something to improve communications between the department and the people of Canada. It is high time the government and the minister roused themselves from their lethargy and set about to implement this piece of legislation passed by the previous parliament in December, 1967. No public announcement has been made in this regard. In this day and age I am sure it will seem absurd to many Canadians and many hon. members, as it seems absurd to me, to have to say that on a subject as vital as this the policy-making apparatus in this country suffers from a lack of information.

No one disputes the importance of keeping qualified young Canadians in the educational stream. This, one would think, is something of a national priority. In this age of computerized information retrieval systems, can anyone in this house tolerate the statement put out under the name the Minister of Manpower and Immigration last December 9 in answer to a written question under the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North? Allow me to refer to page 3647 of Hansard. It is clear that the minister said that the department keeps a record of their successes but not their failures. I quote:

A record of student placements was maintained separately from other placements of a temporary nature from July 25 to September 11, 1968. During this period 13,131 students were placed in employment.

The minister did not give any information as to how many students were unemployed. This is not proper statistical reporting. This is propaganda. I do not believe that the Minister of Manpower is really to blame in the sense that he instructed the department to maintain only sufficient statistical information to form a half truth, to maintain statistical information which for all practical policy-making purposes is useless to the government and the house. I do not believe that the Minister of Manpower contrived it that way. At least I prefer to think that he would not and did not. He does have constitutional responsibility as the minister responsible for that department. I tell him quite bluntly that if he has to knock some heads together in order to come up with valid statistical information he should do so without delay.

We have enough problems with some of the statistics fed to us by other ministers without having the Minister of Manpower, who heads a relatively new department and is alleged to have some professional competence in the field, getting into the bad habits of some of his colleagues. I hope that one of the important purposes this debate may serve will be to receive from the government authoritative information that the government is willing to stand by.

Does the government accept the figures put forward as to the seriousness of the summer employment situation? Does the government accept the figures put forward with regard to the recruiting taking place on campus for permanent jobs? What figures can the department put forward as to the number of students who can be placed this summer? How many graduates does the government project can be placed in permanent jobs? Has the department any statistical information as to the number of students who, without summer employment, will not be in a position to continue their education? Is there any attempt to give some priority to these more needy individuals in placing applicants for summer employment?

Based on the projected number of graduates for the next five years and the anticipated rate of economic growth in Canada, what does the government expect in terms of percentage of graduates who can be absorbed within Canada? Based on these projections, what changes, if any, are planned in the student aid programs? What consultations are being held between the federal government and the provinces? These are questions that require serious answers and I hope a spokesman for the government will obtain and provide these answers later today.

The outlook, Mr. Speaker, is one causing increasing concern. There is a serious failure of policy in a developing country like Canada when we are unable to utilize effectively students graduating from our universities, colleges and technical institutes. This is a serious symptom which indicates something is seriously wrong with our development policies and programs. We must be seriously concerned about the loss of talent. It is a serious situation when students whom we wish to encourage to remain in school to continue their education and training find it necessary to drop out for economic reasons. This represents a failure of policy and a great cost to Canada. It is completely unacceptable that we in this country at this stage of our economic, social and scientific development should turn out record numbers of students for whom there appears to be no adequate use in Canada. That, I suggest, is unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition for interrupting him but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has unanimous consent of the house to resume his remarks.

Mr. Stanfield: I thank you and the house for this courtesy. Mr. Speaker, I will simply terminate my remarks by saying that this situation is unacceptable. So too is the failure of any policy that results in capable young Canadians having to interrupt or end their education because of economic circumstances.

I am sure the house and the country will listen with great interest to the views of the appropriate minister on this important subject. I trust the minister will inform the house as to the information available, as to the efforts the government is making to get the necessary information, and as to the steps the government is taking with regard to measures of consultation with the provinces. Unless the minister can indicate that plans are going forward and unless he can give some satisfactory explanation with regard to the failure to establish consultation, then having regard to the government's failure to take satisfactory and urgent measures to meet the problems I have outlined I would ask the house to vote in favour of the motion:

That this house regrets that the government has not provided for the development and retention of manpower resources in Canada and, in particular, of student manpower resources.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there seems to have been a most abject failure, and we await an explanation from the minister.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I am going to approach the subject raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) from a somewhat different tack. Before doing so I would like to remind the house that the problem of full utilization of our manpower resources is scarcely new, even to this session of the house. It has been raised a number of times by spokesmen for the New Democratic Party, most recently by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) who moved on March 13 that the house adjourn under Standing Order 26 to discuss the high level of unemployment. At that time he referred to the national disgrace that is the case in Canada when we maintain a national average level of 6 per cent unemployment, which reaches as high as 10.5 per cent in the Maritimes. As I say, the point is not a new one to parliament, but we in this party welcome the opportunity provided by the Leader of the Opposition to discuss it in a very serious way today.

There are a number of causes for unemployment in Canada both in general and in its seasonal aspects. First of all, we have had regional poverty in terms of human skills and geographic factors which have existed for a number of years. These are contributing factors to the problem right now, and neither Conservative nor Liberal governments in the past did anything in a serious way to deal with regional unemployment and poverty. Now, however, there are some encouraging signs that the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion may try to come to grips with the problem.

The second important factor is the dominant role in the Canadian economy played by unregulated, unrestricted private enterprise, not simply traditional private enterprise but one characterized in the consumer production sector by foreign ownership. Incidentally, I would pause at this point to wonder out loud what the Leader of the Opposition would propose to do with this sector of the economy.

The Leader of the Opposition very appropriately referred to the serious situation in Canada where, for example, we lose highly trained Ph.D. students to the United States. But what he did not mention was that one of the important reasons for this is that most of the really serious research and development work in the North American economy is done by firms in the United States which, to a considerable extent, have branch plants in this country but do their major research in the United States, and therefore our competent, ambitious, serious research-oriented students end up with the parent firms. The obvious solution, and it is not an easy one, is to break away from the branch plant economy which we have established in Canada. This means taking very seriously the Canada Development Corporation and a number of proposals put forward in the Watkins report. But the Leader of the Opposition and his party have given no more encouragement to this kind of development than has the Liberal party.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Government policies themselves are a third important factor in the maintenance of high levels of unemployment. For a period of some 15 years we have had extraordinarily high levels of unemployment, particularly since it must be remembered that we are one of the advanced industrial countries of the world. One of the main reasons for this, agreed to not only by economists supporting my political party but by economists found within government departments, is that governments in this country, whether Liberal or Conservative, have usually dealt with inflation by having policies deliberately intended to create unemployment. We are, of course, experiencing that kind of situation today, and during the past few months a number of speakers from this party have made serious comments on it.

I wish to refer now to students and to the factors causing some of the immediate problems faced by students whether they are in universities or in other post-secondary institutions in Canada. One of the causes is that there are certain long-run technological trends at work. Automation is now doing many jobs in institutions which were formerly left by the companies to be done by students during the summer months.

A second reason is that there has been a fortunate expansion of the trade union movement into new areas, and trade unions quite rightly and understandably want to give preference to unemployed workers in industries where unions have a footing. This means that if a student is looking for a job and a worker is looking for a job the trade unions will certainly give preference, in terms of their contract negotiations, to the unemployed worker. This is both understandable and justifiable.

Another factor contributing to student unemployment is the post-war baby boom to which the Leader of the Opposition referred. Canada is in a unique position right now in the industrial world in having the highest annual percentage increase in young people entering universities and the labour market, and therefore the government is confronted with a serious temporary fact which is not likely to recur in the future. This is not to say that the government is coping with it in any adequate way. In this respect it is interesting to note that the D.B.S. statistics for January reveal the fact that 13 per cent of the unemployed in Canada are between the ages of 14 and 19.

What, then, are the solutions or at least what is the program which would contribute to a solution? First of all, I should like to suggest something that might be done in the very near future. I refer to the establishment of what might be called a young Canadian service program or, to follow current government practice of describing by letters, we could call it the Y.C.S.P. Apart from the name, which of course has no real importance, what I and my party have in mind in respect of such a program is the mobilization for public service significant numbers of university students during the summer months for needed social, educational and other like kinds of work both in Canada and abroad. There are many kinds of work that could be performed in underdeveloped countries and in the poverty-ridden areas of our own country by the highly motivated and highly talented young people in the universities.

In this regard my party would favour that students volunteering for such a program should have their tuition paid by the federal government at whatever post-secondary institution they may be attending and, second, that the federal government would provide for such students a modest monthly living allowance both during the summer months when they are working either at home or abroad and during the school term. This would mean, of course, that the amount paid by the government would vary from university to university depending on the fees in the particular case and from province to province depending on the living standard. I emphasize that there are two important aspects of this. We suggest to the government that it is important to promote among our young people the kind of activity while they are still students which would involve a genuine public service both in respect of the Canadian public and the public in those countries which are undergoing economic development. This would be done not by escalated or exaggerated salaries but by modest ones. Canadian and American experience in this field shows there are thousands of young people who would readily make themselves available if the government would show some serious initiative.

What we need in order to deal with unemployment, whether student unemployment or unemployment in general, is a policy the long run effect of which is intended to remove the persisting 5 per cent or 6 per cent level of unemployment. To say the same thing in different words, we need a program which is intended to maintain high levels of employment throughout the year.

One of the central requirements of such a long-run solution is to remove the dominant power in our economy possessed by the modern corporation. We must, in short, broaden the role of the government; we must expand the public sector. I am not suggesting we should make the public sector or the government sector all-pervasive or completely dominant. What I and my party suggest is that the government sector must be significantly expanded.

Let me say something briefly about the nature of the modern corporation and explicitly about some of the myths concerning private enterprise which are still believed by leading spokesmen of the other two parties. First of all, the modern corporation does not function in a classical laissez-faire economy at all. Every economist, whether in the western or communist world, now recognizes the oligopolistic nature of our economy. There is no significant price competition whatsoever. Second, the modern corporation generates from within itself its own capital. It is no longer dependent in the main on the money market to obtain capital.

It has been estimated that 70 per cent of all the investment capital in Canada comes directly from within the enterprises themselves. They do not have to go outside. What does this mean for an industry operating in, as I say, an oligopolistically oriented economy? This means in effect that industry in this kind of economy obtains its investment funds directly from the people who buy their products. This means, of course, that Canadians pay corporations in a sense what has been called by Professor Taylor of McGill University "development taxes". But it is important to note that Canadians in this respect have no say whatsoever concerning the level at which these taxes should be. That is to say, they have no effective say concerning what the prices should be because they are regulated by the companies themselves. Nor do they have anything to say concerning how the profits are to be used by the corporations. We have in effect, then a system of taxation without representation.

What are the corporate purposes and practices? The main purpose, of course, is to maximize their profits over a number of years. They no longer plan their profits in respect of one or two years but rather in respect of ten or 15 years. They have no real interest in overcoming regional economic disparity or high levels of unemployment and other things in which the public would like to see them take a general interest. To achieve their purpose they spend billions of dollars to encourage an economy almost completely based on private consumption for its economic viability and, of course, they spend billions to try to develop the idea through advertising that the infinite consumer is likely to be an infinitely happy man, which is psychologically damaging for people.

What I believe is most relevant to the debate this afternoon is that these corporations through all their contacts and power discourage public spending, government spending of any sort. Any increase in the government power is discouraged. This is done, of course, because it would follow that if more of our capital is influenced or guided by government decision-making the dominant role of the corporations in the economy necessarily would diminish. It is worth pointing out some of the areas in which they do not want any public say. They do not want anything to be said about pricing, about investment, about buying and, of course, about any increases in taxes. At the same time the corporations are very eager to have special tax holidays, quicker write-off policies and, of course, lucrative research and development contracts especially if they are in defence-oriented industry because they do not have to repay them.

What are some of the effects of this kind of economy? First, social goods as opposed to consumer goods receive almost no attention in terms of capital investment. This means we have fewer schools, hospitals, urban renewal projects and social security schemes. A second item which is more relevant to the debate this afternoon is the serious effect of the government's counter-cyclical policies. Right now we are cutting back on expenditures in every government department instead of increasing them as we should be with our high levels of unemployment. We are doing this in the public sector only because of the pervasive influence of the corporations.

I believe a very meaningful question to ask would be why we should be discriminating in favour of the private corporation. If there comes a time—not the present—when a cutting back in investment is required, what is necessary from a socially equitable point of view is to have a government that would make important decisions about priorities. The government should have some say whether we need more gas stations at a particular time, more office buildings, investment that will produce a new multi-coloured television set, and so on. If we are going to cut back, the government should have the right, and indeed should assume the moral responsibility to cut back on what may be regarded at a particular time as unneeded additions and developments in the private sector. It follows from this that it should have the right and moral responsibility to say we will not cut back in certain important public sectors. Indeed, even if it is a time of inflation we may want to expand seriously certain public programs because there is a serious public need for them.

It is for this reason that the New Democratic Party recommends the kind of shift in governmental orientation that neither the Conservative nor the Liberal parties as they are currently constituted could possibly support. We want meaningful implementation of the Carter report. We do not believe, as is often suggested, that we can provide all kinds of programs and get the money out of the air in some mystical fashion. We say we could start making a meaningful shift in the investment of money. We could start shifting it in a serious way from certain private sectors into the public sector. This is not making money out of nothing. It means also that where there is a needed increase in taxation we should take seriously the proposals made by able and knowledgeable people such as those who produced the Carter report.

It also means that if we want to shift away from the branch plant kind of economy to encourage our own research and development and the employment of Canadian graduate students in Canada, we should take very seriously the recommendations of the Watkins report. This, again, is something that neither of the other two parties seems at all interested in doing. It also means that we should set up a prices review board which will deal in a meaningful way with the corporate power structure and will not allow corporations which are not at all responsive to market demands to, in effect, tax the Canadian people year after year by increasing prices at will.

Finally, the New Democratic Party is firmly convinced that it is necessary to start guiding the investment funds collected by our insurance companies. This means either indirect controls by stipulating in advance that a certain percentage of their funds must go into housing or other socially desirable objectives or at certain times must not go anywhere if we are dealing with inflation, or if the insurance companies will not co-operate and cannot be dealt with in any way it may mean that the complete responsibility for insurance funds should be taken over by the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must draw his attention to the fact that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree that the hon. member should continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall conclude very quickly. I am suggesting that we need a totally new reorientation of our priorities to deal meaningfully with unemployment. We must shift from an overwhelmingly privately owned and controlled consumer-oriented economy toward one which is concerned with important public priorities. Only by obtaining this kind of leading influence over investment policies can we achieve a program of year-round, full employment which is really essential and is the most meaningful way of dealing with student unemployment which occurs in the summer.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"because of its reliance on the unplanned private sector and its failure to emphasize the role of the public sector in promoting the full utilization of all our manpower resources".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is therefore on the amendment. Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I listened with attention to the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in support of his motion and to the speech and subamendment of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. I welcome the interest in the manpower activities of the government, and especially this opportunity to outline some of the activities of the Department of Manpower and Immigration in this field.

I have in my hand a report prepared in 1965 by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development on manpower policies and programs in Canada. In that year the O.E.C.D. conducted an intensive study of manpower policy and programs in Canada. The conclusions of that independent body were extremely complimentary to the role Canada had played in the development of manpower policies. Of course, since that report was prepared the new Department of Manpower and Immigration has been established, existing programs have been strengthened and expanded, and some new programs have been undertaken.

The motion of the Leader of the Opposition expresses non-confidence in the government because it has failed to provide for the development of manpower resources in general in Canada and has failed to provide for the development and retention especially of student manpower resources. I must say that I am somewhat surprised at the motion and the selection of this subject matter as a basis of seeking non-confidence in the government. It seems to me that this government and its immediate predecessor have been more heavily committed to the development and potential of Canada's manpower resources—

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Orlikow: This is just talk.

Mr. MacEachen: —than any previous governments since confederation. The commitment is clear, pervasive, substantial and expensive. It is not a new dedication or a new commitment. It was outlined by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, in 1965 and 1966 and it has resulted in programs, in legislation and in expenditures that have been approved by parliament that make Canada one of the leading nations in the world in the development of our manpower resources. To suggest that we have been reluctant and hesitant, that we have been lethargic and indifferent in this field, is to fly in the face of facts in view of the very heavy expenditures that are being carried by the taxpayers of Canada in support of the substantial manpower programs.

It is inevitable that any modern government would take this attitude because we realize, as does this motion, that the development of the human and manpower resources of any country is closely linked not only to the satisfaction of the individual but to the growth of the national economy, the increase in productivity and, of course, the reduction in unemployment that is caused by lack of skills.

I am surprised at the condemnation inherent in the motion. I welcome the recognition in the motion of the importance of the development of human resources to Canada's future. I doubt that one could find in Canada today a sizeable group of people who would contest the theory that the development of manpower resources is one of the keys to national development. We acknowledge its importance and value, and we have presented programs. We welcome this opportunity to have the programs criticized and to have ideas brought forward on how these programs can be improved.

At the same time we should recognize that there is something the Leader of the Opposition failed to mention, at least to any extent, while he dealt almost exclusively with the student aspect of manpower resources, which is an important aspect but not the only one. The Leader of the Opposition spent almost his full time talking about the necessity of development in this field which is under provincial rather than federal jurisdiction. We are being constantly reminded in this house, and frequently elsewhere, that education is a provincial responsibility and that schools and universities are under provincial jurisdiction. We recognize this, which is something that the Leader of the Opposition failed to mention, and we do not take the view that the federal government has no interest in the results produced in the provinces, nor are we unwilling to help the provinces carry out responsibilities in this field.

With regard to the student aspect of manpower development, it might be a good idea to consider exactly what the federal government is doing and what the parliament of Canada has been asked to do from time to time. One of the most important ways in which the federal government contributes to the development of our manpower resources, particularly for youth, is through fiscal transfers that it makes to the provinces of behalf of their costs of post-secondary and university education. As hon. members realize, federal support of universities has been a continuing feature of Canadian policy in the post-war period. All of us recall the difficulties of the former method of assisting the provinces or the universities and how frequently the amounts provided were criticized.

In 1967 new legislation was introduced which broadened, vastly expanded and changed the nature of the federal contribution to post-secondary education. As hon. members know, that contribution now takes the form of a fiscal transfer to the provinces on a basis that is intended to recognize the escalating cost of post-secondary education and at the same time preserve the independence of the provinces in the field of education. Just last year the federal expenditure on this account was $400 million. This fiscal year it amounts to about half a billion dollars, and next fiscal year it may exceed $600 million. That seems to me to be a rather substantial provision made by the parliament of Canada for the development of manpower resources in the country, especially of the young people.

I wish to say a word also about the Canada student loan plan which is also part of the general program of development. This plan makes it possible for an increasing number of young Canadians to have access to post-secondary education. When the plan was first introduced in 1964 it was by far the largest single source of student aid in Canada. Since then provinces have added to the sources of student aid, but nevertheless the Canada student loan plan still provides a very substantial portion of the student aid available in Canada. In 1964-65, $27 million was authorized under the Canada student loan plan, and this figure has grown to $58 million in the last academic year. It is expected that $70 million will be authorized in 1968-69. In fact, to meet the rapidly growing demand for loans the federal government is asking parliament to increase the allocation of the amount which provinces may authorize under the plan.

The importance of the Canada student loan plan may be seen not only from the over-all funds authorized but also from the number of students it assisted. In 1964-65 loans were authorized to some 40,000 students, and during the present academic year the number of students assisted may reach 100,000 in Canada.

The cost of this program to the federal government consists mostly of interest paid on behalf of students and also of the payments made to the province of Quebec as an alternative to the student aid program. The federal cost this year will be about $10 million and may rise to $15 million in two years' time.

Federal-provincial co-operation has been excellent in this field and it has provided very effective job aid throughout Canada to students who want to go to university. So in the field of post-secondary education and in the field of student aid we have very substantial programs to assist the development of Canada's youth.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The Leader of the Opposition spoke a good deal about the problem of student unemployment. Of course it is a problem which is evident. It arises from two sources. It arises from the post-war baby boom as a result of which students are now entering universities in large numbers. It arises also from the larger numbers of students who are going to universities in this day and age. It was serious last summer and it may be as serious, or more serious, this summer. We were aware of it last summer when we took special steps to meet it. As a matter of fact, the Canada manpower centres have been making special provision for student employment all along. They were engaged in special programs when they were known as national employment service offices.

Last year, when the number of students looking for summer employment exceeded the normal seasonal growth of job opportunities, the department moved quickly to co-ordinate and intensify all its activities on behalf of students. This was done by launching a jobs for students campaign. It was a modest start at a cost of $75,000, but it produced encouraging results. The campaign was designed to encourage Canadian businessmen, trade unions, government authorities, mass communications media, community organizations and householders to give all the assistance they could to help students find jobs.

It should be evident to hon. members that it is not within the capacity of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to create jobs. The work of the department is to gauge the number of jobs which exist in the labour market and to bring the greatest possible information to bear on the situation. The purpose of the advertising program last summer was to get students to use the facilities of the manpower centres and to induce employers to use those centres and take on additional students where possible. In an effort to assist, my department last summer hired 100 students to help the regular staff in the manpower centres in their effort to match students looking for work with available opportunities. I think they did a good job. It was a short campaign and it was over quickly. It enjoyed wide support. Provincial youth departments and agencies, chambers of commerce, service organizations, merchants and construction associations all aided in varying degrees.

During the period of the campaign between July 25 and September 30, more than 13,000 student placements were made. We do not know how many would have been placed in the absence of our campaign, because this is information which it is impossible to obtain, but during the period of the campaign we did place the number I have mentioned and this has encouraged us to believe that a similar campaign this spring and summer will be of value. It is not easy to determine the number of students who will be looking for work this summer but our estimate at present is around 367,000, some 10,000 more than last year.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to our advertising campaign for summer student employment and said it was begun too late. Well, if I remember correctly, it was begun early in February, and surely if it started any earlier its effect would have been dissipated long before the summer season arrived. As a result of our experience we have tried to make this year's campaign larger and more effective. We have undertaken an extended program of national, local and regional publicity, using all media and aiming primarily at potential student employers. The campaign started some time ago and will continue during the summer. We have budgeted about $250,000 this year for this advertising program. I think that is a substantial sum to put out for such a definite and specific purpose. We are seeking to encourage potential employers to identify the summer jobs which they have available, or can create, for students, and make sure that these jobs are brought to the attention of our manpower centres so that we can refer students to them. In addition, we hope to employ some 335 students in the department across Canada to assist in this program.

The Canadian manpower centres are, thus, actively searching for job opportunities and making a special effort to urge as many employers as possible to find jobs for students. In addition, we are taking steps to ensure that students looking for work are registered with the manpower centres. In this way we hope to make sure that the centres are the focal points for both students and employers. Moreover, the departmental officers in each of the five regions have been appointed to act as regional co-ordinators in connection with summer student employment. All in all, this represents a large task force, especially when one considers that there are over 300 Canada manpower centres or offices from coast to coast.

As I have already mentioned, the department itself will be hiring some 335 students to help organize and run the campaign. We have also been active in attempts to enlist the co-operation of other agencies which are concerned with this question. My officials have been meeting, for instance, with the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada which is urging its members to create local committees to help improve student employment possibilities. A number of these committees have been established in various parts of the country and we welcome the self-help efforts made by the students themselves. It is my hope that through working with these committees and other bodies more will be learned about student employment. Through surveys and the analysis of our own records we hope to find out more about the student experience on the labour market.

Statistics about placements are useful, but it is my view that students do not want just a job. They want work which is socially useful and challenging. I have discovered through my meetings with students that it is not just jobs they want but work which has some social meaning to it—tasks which are related, somehow, to the development of the country or the provision of some social service. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) referred to this aspect of student employment when he suggested we might embark on a program to enlist students in socially useful activities. This is something we have under consideration as a means not only of providing jobs and incomes for students, but also the kind of work which has a socially meaningful content.

For example, some time ago an hon. member referred to the fact that the department had authorized, as it has for some years, the bringing in of labour from the Caribbean under the agricultural program. It is true that we have authorized this seasonal movement of agricultural workers into Ontario. If the same number is reached as in former years there will be about 1,200 black workers from the Caribbean coming to work in the province of Ontario.

The question has been asked: Why do you not retain these jobs for students? Aside from the fact that these jobs are important to the economy of the Caribbean as well as important to the growers who want a segment of the labour force that is experienced, this summer about 160,000 persons will be required for the agricultural labour force in the province of Ontario. Thus there will be ample opportunity for students who want to take on this kind of work. In our manpower centres we are going to make it a point to give students first chance to take on these jobs in the agricultural areas of Ontario. We believe this will provide large numbers of students with the opportunity of adding to their income as well as taking part in this industry in the course of the summer months.

Aside from possibilities along these lines there is still a demand among the young people of this country for jobs that are socially meaningful. It is difficult for employers, both in government and in private organizations, to provide meaningful jobs on a short term basis during the summer months when such activities usually require supervision over a period of time. However, because it is difficult is no reason for not attempting to do so.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister permit a question on bringing in help from other countries? Does he not think that Canadian students should be given the first opportunity to fill these positions? Rather than bringing in people from other countries for these jobs, could they not be made available to Canadian students?

Mr. MacEachen: I have been trying to deal with that question. There are quite a number of interests involved here. As I recollect the situation there will be a requirement for about 160,000 seasonal workers in agriculture this summer in Ontario. The movement of workers from the Caribbean will likely reach about 1,200 workers. So the opportunities that can be made available to Canadian students will not be seriously reduced by workers from the Caribbean, and we must also bear in mind the importance of this movement to the governments of these countries.

In concluding this aspect of my remarks about summer employment for students I should like to say we are very concerned about the problem. We have undertaken a very intensive publicity and organizational campaign. We have encouraged other government departments to hire as many students as possible this summer, and we are urging the private sector of our economy to review their priorities and to make a special effort to create jobs for Canadian students. It may be a very long and hot summer in Canada.

I believe a successful solution to the unemployment problem as far as the students are concerned does not rest exclusively with the Department of Manpower or the federal government but requires the co-operation of both the federal and provincial governments. In this regard I am delighted to see that the province of Ontario is undertaking a special campaign along these lines. I hope other provinces will do likewise and that private employers will co-operate so that we will be able to create the largest possible number of openings this summer. This will enable all young Canadians who want to work to do so before returning to their university careers in the fall.

I want to say a few words about the question of retrieval or retention. The Leader of the Opposition gave the impression that Canada was doing badly in regard to the brain drain. I should like to begin my comments on this subject by mentioning what must be evident to all of us, namely, that we are living in a world of great mobility. National boundaries are becoming, so far as people are concerned, less and less important. Young people in Canada who want a career in the United States, or who want a university education either in the United States or in some other country, cannot be kept here by force of law. They can be kept here, it seems to me, only as a result of freely deciding to remain as they calculate the attractions that the future in this country has for them.

This is not to say that the department or the government should not take an active interest in this field; we have been doing so, as I want to point out. Nevertheless, if Canada does lose people from time to time, as the Leader of the Opposition mentioned, it is also the beneficiary of persons coming to Canada from other countries. If I recollect correctly, last year Canada brought within its boundaries about 1,200 trained medical practitioners; at least, 1,200 persons came to Canada who will find a place in the medical profession either immediately or later.

Mr. Hales: How many are still here?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not have any figures showing how many have left. But more than 10,000, perhaps close to 12,000, refugees were brought to Canada from Czechoslovakia, a high proportion of whom were professionally skilled. While Canada was moved by humanitarian reasons, we certainly gained in the acquisition of skills and education by welcoming these people. It is not a one-way street in this regard. It so happens that Canada is losing on the one side and gaining on the other.

I think Canada is improving on its performance in this respect. In the Department of Manpower and Immigration there is a special program in effect which has been described as "Operation Retrieval".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I realize the minister has limited time but would he do me the honour of dealing with some of the questions I raised before he concludes his remarks?

Mr. MacEachen: I hope I have been demonstrating to the hon. gentleman that the policies of the government have already anticipated his amendment. All the programs I have been mentioning are really efforts in the public sector to develop manpower resources. I have also referred to the hon. gentleman's proposal having to do with a special corps of young people. Before I finish I hope to speak about other subjects. If the hon. member wishes to ask questions at the end of my remarks, I will do my best to answer them.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the minister care to comment on the central thrust of my argument, which is that we need to shift the balance of investment? We need to invest much more in the public, productive sector of our economy, and the shift must be away from the private sector.

Mr. Jamieson: Is the hon. member referring to the automobile industry?

Mr. MacEachen: If I had statistics with me here I am sure they would demonstrate to my hon. friend that this shift has been going on and undoubtedly will continue to do so. We are concerned not only about developing resources in Canada. We also want to retain in Canada the resources we have and we want to stem the drain of highly qualified workers to the United States in particular.

With this in mind we have, since 1966, taken over the organizing and full financing of a continuing program internationally known as "Operation Retrieval", the specific purpose of which is to help Canada to retain her educated young people. The operation has two objectives which are, first, to keep Canadians studying at universities abroad informed about economic developments at home and job opportunities open to them here and, second, to ensure that they are as actively considered for these openings as they would be if they were resident in Canada. In carrying out this program the department has worked closely with the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the Public Service Commission, industry, and other interested organizations.

Prior to the program Canadians studying at foreign universities were not actively recruited for employment in Canada. Canadian business, universities and government showed little interest in them. But that has changed. As the Financial Post reported on March 16, 1968:

> Because of the Department of Manpower's "Operation Retrieval", many of these students are likely to get job offers from Canadian employers.

In a nutshell, "Operation Retrieval" functions as an honest broker between Canadians studying abroad and employers in Canada who need highly trained manpower. It is a bridge which permits employers in Canada and Canadian scholars abroad to communicate with each other to their mutual benefit. For example, early in 1967, at a cost of about $60,000 it set the pattern for its subsequent annual operations by sending six teams made up of academics and other professionals to 35 universities in the United States, Britain and Europe to speak with some 900 Canadian students who attended the scheduled meetings. It distributed to students abroad some 7,000 copies of a directory of employers and job opportunities available in Canada and provided prospective employers with some 4,000 resumés listing the names and individual qualifications of Canadian scholars abroad who had asked "Operation Retrieval" to help them find jobs in Canada. As a result, Canada manpower centres made some 6,000 referrals to employers.

Since then the program has continued and expanded. In the 1967-68 academic year 742 Canadians studying abroad asked "Operation Retrieval" to distribute their resumés to 2,500 employers who were then participating in the program. During the current academic year the teams completed their visits to United States universities last fall. As a result some 1,000 students have asked the department to distribute their resumés to some 2,700 employers currently involved in the scheme.

Canada does well and has recently been doing much better both in retraining Canadians at home and in attracting educated and skilled foreigners from other countries. Traditionally our brain influx from other countries has much more than made up for our brain drain to the United States. Recently we have also been doing much better with respect to the United States. Emigration from Canada to the United States fell from about 50,000 in 1962-63 to 35,000 in 1966-67. Immigration from the United States to Canada rose from 12,000 in 1963 to 19,000 in 1967 and to 20,000 in 1968. Our net deficit with the United States has thus fallen from about 39,000 in 1963 to about 16,000 in 1967. I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that this result is entirely due to "Operation Retrieval". Nevertheless, I think hon. members will be pleased to know that our performance in this respect generally has been improving.

Mr. MacInnis: You are admitting a lot of draft-dodgers.

Mr. MacEachen: I doubt very much that the source my hon. friend has alluded to is a major one. I have been talking for quite a long time, Mr. Speaker, and have devoted myself entirely to the student aspect. I have talked about post-secondary education aspects affecting students, approvals with respect to the student loan fund, the summer employment problem and "Operation Retrieval". I would not wish to conclude my remarks without referring to the development of our manpower resources in the adult labour force. I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition did not pay some attention to our adult labour force. I know our students are important—we all understand they are important—but the adult Canadian labour force is also important, especially since it is made up to some extent of persons who have been passed by in earlier educational opportunities that may have been available and who in their later life have had to pick up the threads again. They are taking up the threads again either by taking upgrading courses or educational training.

Mr. Valade: Will the minister permit a question? Before leaving the subject of student employment could he inform the house of the number of students in each province who will be seeking employment this summer? I believe he gave up a total figure of 360,000 students seeking employment all across Canada. Could we have this figure broken down, province by province. Also, is there any provision under which needy students coming to the department for assistance will be given preference over students from wealthy families in seeking employment?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not have the statistics or the breakdown for our provinces, but I will try to obtain them. To reply to the hon. member's second question, C.M.C. does not conduct means tests to determine in any job placement whether a student comes from a needy or a wealthy family. We do not have instruments at our disposal. The suggestion has been made that in job referrals we ought to consider needy students first. It has been suggested that students coming from well to do or influential families find it easier to get jobs than those coming from poorer families. We have not considered in the department whether it would even be possible to take this factor into account.

Mr. Schreyer: Will the minister permit a question? He has just said that in his department there is no administrative machinery to conduct means tests and to determine whether students come from poor or wealthy families. Does the minister not agree that under the student loans program the administrative authority may determine whether a student is needy?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I agree this may be possible under the student loan program. This is one of the suggestions that has been made. A person, for example, with an obligation under a student loan might be given preference. We have this under consideration. It is a fact that it is some indication of need from a student point of view.

I want to say a few words about occupational training for adults. The federal manpower training program had in 1968-69 the best year in its history. In the fiscal year which is coming to a close the program enrolled some 430,000 adults, 301,000 of them on a full-time basis. Relating these enrolments to the population, the Canadian program, apart from the retraining program of Sweden, is the largest program of its kind in the world.

The program started from very modest beginnings only a few years ago. In 1961-62, under the federal Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, the program enrolled only 26,000 unemployed persons. The numbers of unemployed receiving training have been growing steadily. In 1967-68, the first year of the occupational training for adults program, the enrolment of the unemployed rose to 196,000, and in the current fiscal year the program will serve some 246,000 unemployed workers. In addition, the program caters to many thousands of apprentices as well as employed workers taking full-time training in industry or part-time training in the evening.

The increased effort of the federal government in the development of our skilled manpower in the last few years is dramatically expressed in financial terms. In 1961-62 the federal government spent a mere $18 million on all training programs combined, many of them catering to young people of school age. In the current year the federal government expects to spend $197 million, all of it for the benefit of adult workers. This is 11 times as much as eight years ago.

I wanted to make this point because I think we ought to maintain a certain balance in the development of our manpower programs. There has to be a balance between the young people and the adult members of the labour force. We believe that this additional expenditure not only indicates that the proper emphasis is being given to the adult training course but that the money is being more effectively spent and is yielding even greater benefits than ever before. We tried to gear our training to the unemployment situation this winter. In January of this current year there were about 30,000 unemployed persons in training. That is rather good from my point of view.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask the minister a question with regard to the retraining of unemployed? Are instructions or policy directives sent to the staff in the manpower offices regarding those who wish training for an occupation in which it is felt there are no job opportunities? Do they refuse to accept such applications?

Mr. MacEachen: We try to provide training for job opportunities. We do not see much point in spending a lot of money to train a person for a non-existing trade or occupation. We try to gear our training to job openings that are current or near-current.

The Leader of the Opposition made one or two comments. He referred to the manpower and immigration advisory council. I certainly think it was appropriate for him to mention the fact we have not yet appointed a general advisory council. Nor have we appointed the four subsidiary bodies or boards that operate in conjunction with the advisory council. I could have taken action on this series of appointments, but I wanted a full representation of all organizations on these boards. I am still waiting for one very important organization to make its nominations. I hope when that is done this council and advisory body will come into operation.

I think that all I have had to say, Mr. Speaker, has demonstrated rather clearly that the government of Canada has provided for the development of manpower resources in this country. Our program of manpower resources stands up well in comparison with that of any other country in the world. We have shown interest and attention to the problems of our youth and have provided aid to the students themselves. Their employment problems are real and significant. Upon consideration, the opposition house leader, acting for the absent Leader of the Opposition, might agree to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister will need a much more convincing argument than he has given us today.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate on the motion introduced by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Before proceeding may I say how pleased I am to see the minister in the house, fully recovered from his illness. I wish him well in the future so far as his health is concerned. It is good to know that he is alive and well.

I have always admired the minister's facility with words. To use an old expression, he can charm a bird out of a tree. Unfortunately, Canada's critical unemployment situation requires more than honeyed words, and the minister's responsibility is to find jobs for Canadians, not for the birds. I was amused to hear him say a few moments ago it is not a federal responsibility but a joint responsibility. How he has changed! I can recall that when he sat in a certain section of this chamber he and his colleagues always insisted that unemployment was the responsibility of the federal government.

The minister has been very wordy. However, no matter how many words are employed to slough off responsibility or to cover up the Department of Manpower's obvious inability to cope with current unemployment problems, the hard and brutal fact remains that there are close to half a million Canadians out of work today. Much has been made by the government of the fact that this year's mid-February unemployment figure of 6 per cent is below last year's figure of 6.4 per cent for the same period. But this sort of thing will not impress the 473,000 Canadians who are unemployed. Nor will it impress many Canadians who wonder why this country should tolerate a high rate of unemployment in the midst of affluence and plenty.

It would be interesting to hear further from the minister's own lips the reason that his new and modernized department has been so unsuccessful in coping with the problem of providing jobs for Canadians. When this department was set up we were assured that it would make Canada's labour force mobile, skilled, and flexible enough to overcome the old difficulties created by seasonal unemployment and regional recessions. So far the department and the minister have been indistinguishable from the old Department of Labour and the minister's predecessors in office.

It is good, Mr. Speaker, to see that the minister is alive and well. This house has seldom had the pleasure of seeing or hearing the minister since the last general election gave us a new Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and a reshuffled cabinet. In the old days scarcely a day went by but the minister was on his feet, spreading wisdom and reassurance on the troubled waters of the house. Indeed, he spoke on almost every conceivable subject and seldom felt confined by his own particular portfolio.

How things have changed! Today we hardly ever see him and almost never hear him. His name is absent from the press that once knew it so well. The air waves are silent in regard to him and his department, despite all that happened at the leadership convention of the Liberal party. Perhaps it is the new system of rotation of ministers that has clipped his wings. Or perhaps it is the new system of cabinet discipline that has been imposed by the iron hand of the Prime Minister. Some hon. members across the way laugh at that, but it is not unusual to hear certain individuals on the government side say, "Boy, he is the boss, and that is it. You must not step out of line or you may lose your portfolio." At the moment I am not looking at the Minister of Manpower and Immigration when I say that. Whatever the fact may be I hope that before we come to the end of this debate the minister will give us the benefit of his views. He has already spoken for a long time but, frankly, his speech was nothing more than a lot of words with some statistics. I hope he will give us the benefit of his views frankly and honestly, bereft of propaganda.

I believe that the most important thing this motion does is to focus attention not only on the government's failure to provide jobs for Canadians but on the obvious lack of co-ordination in the workings and policies of various governmental departments, and on the daily economic havoc being wrought by this lack of organization and purpose. I have in mind in particular the dramatic widening of the economic gulf between various regions in Canada. We have just been debating the setting up of a new department to deal with this very problem of regional disparity, but even while we have been doing so the problem has been allowed to grow unchecked to mamoth proportions. That is what I meant when I referred to the lack of co-ordination between departments and the lack of organization and purpose.

The unemployment figure with which we are all most familiar is 6 per cent. But we should remember that this figure is the national average for the whole country. The real picture escapes us until we break it down into its regional components. For instance, while the national unemployment figure stands at 6 per cent of the labour force, in the Atlantic region, an area that comprises four of Canada's ten provinces, it is an appalling high of 10.5 per cent, and I dare say it is away above that in the province of Newfoundland. The figure for the province of Quebec stands at 8.4 per cent. Yet in Ontario and on the prairies unemployment is moderate, standing at 3.9 per cent for each area. In British Columbia it is 6.6 per cent.

These figures give a more stark and shocking picture of what unemployment means to Canada than does the national one of 6 per cent. These figures indicate that to those who have more will be given, and from those who have not more will be taken away. This is the very essence of the grave national problem of regional disparity, a subject which was introduced at the recent federal-provincial conference by the Premier of Nova Scotia and which had not even been thought of prior to that by the federal government.

Until the Minister of Manpower can translate his theories into fact and provide the training and mobility for Canadian workers promised by the government of which he is a member, regional disparity will continue to sap our national strength. Regional unemployment, which is tangible proof of regional injustice and regional inequalities, is a cancer furtively eating away at the economic body of Canada. We cannot be an entirely healthy nation in an economic sense until we can do better than to have 66,000 out of 626,000, better than one-tenth, of the Atlantic labour force unemployed.

If such conditions were general it might be a different story. But while the Atlantic region, Quebec, and to a lesser extent British Columbia, are staggering along with a tremendous burden of unemployment, Ontario and the prairies are relatively well off in this regard. The disparity between regional unemployment rates is like a hurricane or a holocaust of fire that creates a tremendous suction, drawing everything into the centre and exaggerating an already bad situation. If this disparity continues, skilled workers and highly trained graduates from the Atlantic region and from Quebec will continue to be sucked into the central areas of greater opportunity at an ever-increasing rate and in ever-increasing numbers. This may be excused on the ground of the working of immutable laws of economics, but it can never be excused from the point of view of national development, national unity or national prosperity.

When we consider that the majority of our gravest problems are direct outgrowths of regional disparity we can see plainly the absolute necessity to develop a balanced economy and a balanced national life. Regional disparity is a curse in many ways. It is the mother of strained federal-provincial relations, of a whole series of financial problems, and contributes in no small way to our difficulties in relation to national unity and national progress. To achieve this balance ways must be found to check the flow of bodies, brains and brawn from the have-not to the have regions. Somehow we must make the far pastures of Ontario and the prairies appear less green. By this I do not mean that we should deceive anyone. I mean we must make it economically more attractive to stay in our own backyard. Certainly we can never demonstrate this with unemployment figures as they stand today. No amount of words such as we heard from the minister this afternoon, no amount of eyewash, can persuade anyone from the Atlantic region, where the unemployment rate is 10 per cent, that it is a better spot economically than Ontario where the rate is only 3.9 per cent.

In this regard one of my particular concerns is for our student population, both those who will be graduating this year and those who hopefully will be returning to university in the fall. This group embraces many thousands who depend on the few dollars they can earn during the summer months to enable them to go back in the fall. At the rate we are going at present a great many students will not be returning in the fall because they will not have the money.

This year's graduates are trained and ready to find permanent places in Canada's labour force. But by all indications from university placement officials, industry, and even the Department of Manpower the outlook for them is bleak this year. As far as I can perceive nothing has been done by the minister or his department to prepare adequately to meet this problem. They have shown no awareness that I can see that these young people, highly trained, highly skilled, enthusiastic and dynamic are one of the country's richest natural resources. If they cannot find a place in our national scheme of things they will look elsewhere. Who shall blame them? The gain of the United States or of Europe will be Canada's loss. Last but by no means least, we have students who depend upon summer employment in order to continue their studies. Literally many thousands depend upon summer employment to further their career. I am speaking now particularly of university students, but this also includes many at the secondary school level. I believe this area of employment for graduates and students should have priority within the department of manpower at this time. If nothing is done within a few short weeks the damage done as a result of student unemployment will be irreparable.

It is for the reasons on which I have touched in my remarks that I support this motion with fervour and conviction. I believe it can be truly said that this government has failed utterly to capitalize on our national manpower resources and has irresponsibly endangered the careers of countless young Canadians who would normally have every right to expect a smooth transition from the long years of learning to the laying of a career foundation.

This government has failed to discharge its responsibilities to the older generations of Canadian workers and most particularly to the people of Canada's "have-not" regions. The minister of manpower comes from, I would suggest, the most depressed rural area, a county which was used for the purpose of a study by the commission which studied poverty in Canada. He, above anyone else, should know how serious and how terrible unemployment is in the Atlantic region. I hope he will take his responsibilities seriously and not change his song or theme from what it was a few short years ago when he said that unemployment was the responsibility of the federal government.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys).]

Mr. Charles L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today is broad in scope. Speakers from the other side of the house who have expressed their views so far have proceeded to make a series of criticisms in respect of things the government has failed to do. At the same time, they have outlined the problems. The problems have been defined by various speakers, yet in the course of the debate so far members opposite have produced very few suggestions in the way of solutions. I always thought the function of any opposition to be to demonstrate to the government and the people of Canada that it has better solutions, better ideas and better means to arrive at certain goals in our society.

The Leader of the Opposition, who drafted the motion, included in his motion a reference to students and concentrated his remarks on students for almost the entirety of his speech, as if the manpower of the country consisted of students alone. Where are the labourers, where are the semi-skilled, where are those who have a skill which is becoming obsolete; are they not important? Where are the migrants and immigrants and those who need rehabilitation and need mobility programs; are they not important? They have not been mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition.

Whatever suggestions the Leader of the Opposition has put forward can be indicated in two points. First, the department ought to cut across every federal department in order to co-ordinate and play a greater role whenever there are cut-backs or changes in governmental policies which affect manpower and employment. In other words, he is telling the department to intervene every time another department wishes to reduce certain programs in an attempt to reduce government spending. If this is what the Leader of the Opposition means, how does he reconcile this with his concern about inflation and the speeches he has made concerning increasing governmental spending? Surely, there is a contradiction in terms here. Secondly, he was critical in respect of the failure to create an advisory board according to the legislation which was introduced in 1967. Well, we certainly need advice. As the Minister has indicated, the consultations are now coming to a conclusion. Apart from these two points, however, there is nothing which has come from the benches across the way which has added to the knowledge, experience or the policies which exist at present and which are being carried out in this country.

It is interesting to note that after the speeches are made and the criticism is levelled, those who have made the speeches disappear from the house. This would not seem to indicate any interest on their part in knowing perhaps what the position might be of the government responsible for the present state of affairs. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) took an entirely different position. I wonder how realistic he is about the present shortage of employment opportunities in suggesting a shift in governmental orientation. Our Minister has already indicated that this shift is in existence. If he wants an acceleration whereby the government would intervene, carry out and direct more of the activities of private enterprise, then apparently so far the Canadian people have not indicated they share the same opinion and his views are not realistic in terms of providing a solution during the life of this parliament.

The other solution the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby put forward was the creation of a young Canadian service program. While this perhaps is something which has a future, the question which might be asked is, how many students could and would take advantage of a scheme of this particular type? Here again, the member of the New Democratic Party completes his statement about Manpower policies without making any mention of whether within Manpower policies there is a need for a program relating not only to students but also to the many other segments of the Canadian population which are immediately in very acute need of assistance because of increasing automation in our society.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) developed certain generalities. He has also disappeared immediately afterwards. He produced a certain number of well-known clichés on the subject. He spoke about the lack of co-ordination between departments which is something that is as old as the existence of any government. He spoke about unemployment statistics which we all know. He spoke about regional disparities which are also quite familiar to us and about housing on which there has been a comprehensive debates for the past ten days. But where are the alternatives, where are the proposals which would reflect the half hour of concern and criticism of the policies of the government as expressed by the Leader of the Opposition? It would seem that the opposition has no alternatives to propose. It would seem that the opposition is in a position to describe problems but is not in a position to improve upon existing policies. This seems to me to be a state of bankruptcy of ideas.

If we look at the present and see what we have, I submit that we are a most fortunate country to have a manpower department. Not many countries of the western world have such a department. We are fortunate that we do have a policy and specific plans and programs such as the mobility program which is endeavouring to bring Canadians to jobs. We are fortunate in that we have programs such as O.T.A. which is endeavouring to keep people up to date with the changing industrial environment and enable people to develop necessary skills.

This is what we have at present. In my opinion, it reflects a great deal of foresight on the part of those who in past years took the initiative and produced the legislation we have on the statute books. This was not the result of the efforts of hon. members opposite. While we find comfort in the fact that we have worth while programs for the Canadian people in this respect, let us look to the future and see what can be expected then. At least those of us on this side of the house look to the future to see whether we can further improve the programs we have, whether we can perhaps one day arrive at a time when Canadians will not only be brought to jobs but when jobs will be brought to Canadians whether they are living near the sea coast or in the mountains of this country. This would be a highly desirable ultimate goal to achieve one day in order to maintain an even spread of the Canadian population from coast to coast. While it is not possible today, we all hope it will be possible in a few years.

We look forward to several things which will improve our ever-changing industrial requirements. We look forward, for instance, to the development of manpower resources which one day, perhaps before the turn of the century, may even be called the development of human resources, because this is what it is all about. "Manpower" is perhaps a rather narrow term. It refers to man as an economic and productive unit. But with the reduction of the number of working hours in the week it is quite possible that the next generation in this house will not only be speaking about manpower resources but about Canadian human resources. This will be for the good, I submit.

We also look forward to better resolving some difficult areas in relation to manpower. For instance, there is the question of rehabilitation of those who have been injured at work, the whole question of the services to be made available to people who have to learn a new skill because of an accident at work. These men who are usually middle aged, who have a modest education or perhaps none at all, are at a stage in life when they must adjust to a new physical condition, a new environment and again become the breadwinner of the family. This is a question which probably affects several thousand Canadians from coast to coast.

I cite another example, Mr. Speaker. We look forward to the development of new techniques in the training of immigrant tradesmen, immigrant technicians and professionals in order that they may make a more rapid adjustment to Canadian methods so their abilities may be absorbed into our industrial environment at a faster pace without the loss of talent, without underemployment and so forth.

We look forward to amendments to the Adult Educational Training Act. Amendments may be necessary as we gain experience through the years, as we realize certain weaknesses and can see that certain improvements can be introduced; for instance, with reference in particular to the three-year waiting period required to become eligible for training after having left school unless one has dependants to support. Other amendments may also be necessary.

We look forward to the role of Canada manpower centres in large urban communities. This is a role which perhaps can be expanded, made broader than it is at present, in which these manpower centres would reach out into the neighbourhood. A number of services could be generated from these centres. We have over 300 centres from coast to coast and their potential is substantial. They could be made the focal centre of the communities when it comes to searching for jobs, obtaining guidance counselling and other services.

We look forward to new pilot projects. One was completed just recently in the city of Toronto for the training of labourers during the winter in order to make them more flexible and adaptable to the requirements of their industry. This was a very successful training scheme and it might set the pattern for future ones. We look forward to experimenting in the field of tradesmen training, particularly those who come from overseas and for whom there is a very great demand. These people have to adapt to provincial laws and requirements.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we also look forward to learning from those countries which have progressed even further than we have. We look forward to gaining from them experience and techniques which may be adapted to Canadian conditions. These are the things we would like to add to the context of this debate. We would like to hear proposals and suggestions as to how this program can be improved. Where are the ideas from members of the opposition? They have criticized. Let them not limit themselves to outlining the problems. That is the easiest approach. Let us hear from them what they would do if the responsibility were theirs.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has challenged us on this side of the house to propose some concrete ideas and suggestions to the minister and the department. I intend to do just that. I do not regard it as a particularly difficult assignment inasmuch as the Department of Manpower and Immigration has been in operation now for a few years and in my opinion has made mistakes in the administration of the legislation passed by this house. I also believe there are serious flaws in the existing manpower legislation. I have in mind in particular the Occupational Training for Adults Act, to which I shall refer in some detail in a few minutes.

By way of introduction, I say that Canada is fortunate in not being one of those countries which faces a crisis in the sense that it has a serious problem of underutilization of manpower. There are some countries, even in the so-called western industrialized world, that have facing them imminent prospects of almost a civil insurrection because there exists in the ghettos of their bigger cities a large pool of unused, unemployed and underemployed manpower allowed to waste away with each passing year. Canada does not have this kind of problem in those dimensions. That does not mean that we are being over critical or are in any way exaggerating when we say that the problem of rising unemployment in this country is becoming serious and that the minister must show more initiative in grappling with it.

As other hon. members have pointed out, the rate of unemployment in this country has increased over the past several months and this is reflected in particular in terms of the projected unemployment rate for students during the coming summer months. It may be that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) got some satisfaction out of twitting the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for showing a preoccupation in his speech with the particular aspect of unemployment facing students this summer. Whether or not it gave the minister any satisfaction, the fact remains that even last summer the problem manifested itself in that a large number of young people were very concerned. We understand that this summer the problem will be worse.

But in the interval between last summer and now, the minister gave no indication of any specific new ideas as to what to do to cope with the problem. I cannot accept the minister's suggestion, which he made about half an hour ago or so, that the idea advanced that certain students should be given assistance in job placement on the basis of priority according to need is not feasible because his department does not have the administrative machinery to do it. I suggest that that argument is very weak because my understanding is that there exists at the present time at the federal level administrative machinery for assessing student needs with respect to applications for student loans, and it has worked. Why cannot that machinery simply be made available to the Department of Manpower and Immigration to assist students in finding jobs this summer, the next summer or whenever the need arises? That is one specific suggestion which I put forward in response to the challenge from the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

The second suggestion concerns the matter of the educational training of adults. I think the government should admit now that it made a mistake at the time of the passage of the bill and ask this house to pass amending legislation to remove those clauses in the act which are a serious obstacle to all young people who, upon leaving high school and enrolling in different courses of manpower training, find they are not eligible for manpower training allowances. The transitional period of three years specified in the act is entirely too long and entirely unjustified. I can recall so well the words uttered in the house, at the time the act was passed, by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). He said that this was a most unwarranted section which would cause much difficulty and unhappiness to many young people. This is also my experience as a member of parliament trying to deal with case problems brought to me by young people having difficulty in qualifying for manpower training allowances.

I have another suggestion which I should like to put forward, and I invite the hon. member for Davenport to help me in making representations to the minister and to other members of the cabinet to get rid of that obnoxious section in the act which provides for the occupational training of adults. This would be another small, concrete and tangible step toward helping to ease the problem of unemployment and of manpower training in this country.

I also think the minister is well aware of the fact that under the present provisions of the act a hardship is experienced by people enrolled in manpower training courses in that when their instructors go on holiday no matter when that may be, no matter what the financial circumstances of the trainee may be and no matter how many dependents he may have, the person in training has his allowance discontinued. It can happen at the most unexpected time and in the most inopportune circumstances. I believe some action should be taken by the minister to change this. This is a second section of the manpower training policy and of the legislation that should be changed in my opinion.

The third suggestion I should like to make is that, as may be expected, when some people choose the courses that are offered under manpower training which make them eligible for a training allowance, they find that the range of courses is limited or does not suit them. They may then enroll in courses that go beyond 40 or 44 weeks or that are of 52 weeks duration. They may find that it is better for them, in the long range, to enroll in a course that may be of two years duration at an institute of applied arts or an institute of technology, but the moment they enroll in a course that is of a longer duration than one year, which is effectively 44 weeks, they cease to be eligible for manpower training allowance. I suggest this is an outmoded restriction of provision in the act.

Mr. Speaker, before you rise I suggest that I will be able to conclude my comments on this motion in three minutes, unless some hon. members object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Schreyer: I suggest this is an outmoded section in the existing act having to do with occupational training of adults and should be revised.

I also want to suggest to the minister that upon analysing some of the manpower training courses that are being offered, and watching them as they are operated and administered in the field, I find there is an unacceptably high ratio of administrative costs to the total cost of the program. It seems to me that the department would be well advised in helping people to learn jobs in a context that is meaningful, that is on the job. The department should give more emphasis and should promote greater utilization of manpower training funds for on the job or in the plant or on site training programs. There has not been too much success over the past two or three years in promoting this kind of training program.

I want to say also that I agreed with the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) when he suggested that the present manpower and immigration policy did not seem to take adequately into account the regional discrepancies that exist in this country. The department should be prepared to show a greater regional bias in order to help in the process of reducing regional disparity.

I am reminded, for example, of the fact that our Canadian immigration policy is administered under regulations which do not take any account of regional differences in demand for labour. Often, one finds the department applying these regulations in a strict way, even though in a particular region such as the prairies there may be a strong demand for labour. People from other countries may have made application to go to the region which is short of labour, but as far as the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned one would never know the situation in that particular region was different from that existing in central Canada, for example.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

In conclusion may I say this: as I understand the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the suggestion is that the government has failed to provide not only for the adequate development of manpower resources but also for their retention. If the Leader of the Opposition is referring to the so-called brain drain, I suggest that one reason for the existence of this phenomenon is this: the government has demonstrated in recent weeks that it has no co-ordinated policy in connection with science research.

It is not hard to understand why so many of our young graduates in science and in engineering find it frustrating to remain in this country when there are so many more opportunities available for them in the United States. Until the minister can persuade his colleagues to take a more co-ordinated view of science research policy many more young people will migrate to take up employment elsewhere, finding that Canada does not offer them sufficient opportunities in this regard.

It is not difficult to support the intention of the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition, or, for that matter, the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Like my hon. friend, I believe that if unemployment is on the increase it stems from the lack of an adequate rate of growth in the economy. The government must involve itself to take up the slack in areas where private enterprise is failing to sustain the desired rate of growth.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill C-155, an Act to provide compensation to farmers whose agricultural products are contaminated by pesticide residue, and to provide for appeals from compensation awards, with an amendment to which the concurrence of this house is desired;

Also, a message informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill C-157, an Act to regulate products used for the control of pests and the organic functions of plants and animals, with an amendment to which the concurrence of this house is desired.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—DEVELOPMENT AND RETENTION OF MANPOWER RESOURCES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stanfield and the amendment thereto of Mr. Broadbent.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the medical manpower shortage in Canada today. There are two sources of supply for Canadian doctors; first, the Canadian medical schools, and secondly, immigration. Canadian medical schools have been graduating the same number of doctors yearly for about 20 years. There has been an increase in the population of Canada during that time of over four million, roughly 25 per cent. This fact alone means that the shortage of doctors has increased to the same degree.

Immigration registration statistics in Canada show that we were registering up to 600 doctors per year who were trained elsewhere than in Canada. Nearly 100 per cent of these doctors registered were from countries that were financially poorer than Canada. Some of them came from countries themselves desperately short of doctors, such as India and Pakistan where the average is one doctor for every 7,000 people. I wonder about the moral principle involved in taking doctors from countries where they are woefully short and where their earning capacity in one year is much less than the monthly salary here. Some of these countries are poor in resources of nearly all kinds, and I wonder whether this is a good way to extend foreign aid. India and Pakistan are scraping and saving and saving in order to educate one Doctor out of every 7,000 through medical school, which is the pitiful few that they can finance.

The Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) thought that we were fortunate in having the assistance of 1,200 immigrant doctors every year. I suppose, carrying that idea to its logical conclusion, that we should get all these doctors to emigrate by sending them the money, because they are trained a lot cheaper in India than in Canada. In that event there would be no need to keep increasing medical school registration to keep up with the demand for doctors.

I noticed that the minister conveniently omitted from his address any mention of how many of these immigrant doctors were licensed to practise. I observe the minister looking at me now and perhaps he can answer that question for me. He might have it at his fingertips, I do not know. As far as I can see the greatest number in any one year has been under 600, but if the minister has the answer I shall be very glad to hear it.

Again, I am given cause to wonder whether it is morally right to take doctors from underdeveloped countries. According to Dr. John Hinchey, one of our very brilliant surgeons and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Montreal, in an address given to the committee on health of the Senate and House of Commons, we gain 400 to 600 doctors each year from foreign sources. However, the quality of what we gain does not match the quality of what we lose, and for obvious reasons. I think that is an answer to the minister. Dr. Hinchey said we lose, on average, 200 doctors a year to the United States simply because we will not provide in large measure the facilities for research. It is general knowledge that the United States spends 10 times per capita what we spend on research.

The minister may argue that it is not necessary to have a realistic financial commitment on the part of government to medical research in Canada because, as I have heard it argued, with the rapid transmission of information we benefit from new developments and discoveries in the United States. I think it is a little ridiculous to expect a Canadian surgeon to read a paper that describes heart transplants and artificial heart valves, and then to carry out an operation involving such techniques.

Over and over again, Mr. Justice Hall is quoted on medicare. He pointed out that there cannot be and that there must not be any question of conflict or priority between the needs of better education and good health. The costs involved in providing an enlightened program of medical care and supporting the educational needs of Canadians cannot be thought of as a burden. This money is an investment, and the yield is remarkably high. We must not fall down on the provision of medical care to the Canadian people.

It may not be well known that Canada lost one hundred million man days of labour through illness two years ago. This is the latest figure I have. This cost the economy over $1,630 million. How much would an adequate medical care program have saved our economy by making available medical assistance in the early stages of such illness? I have heard experts state perhaps one half.

A most significant fact is that only 8 per cent of personal incomes go to support education at all levels. If my memory serves me correctly the former minister of finance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), promised that federal aid to higher education would be increased, and then he walked out on the scholarship program. Now, the government is backing up and cutting the health resources program. Dr. Hinchey said that there is an acute shortage of doctors in Canada at the present time. There are thirteen medical schools in Canada with three more being established. We should be spending $1,200 million each year on research and development in science, engineering, business industry and medicine. We now spend $71 million.

It is a fact that many people are dying in Canada because of inadequate medical care. You can have all the money in the world but if you are bleeding to death from a stomach ulcer, it is of no avail. You must have a good doctor and proper hospital facilities.

I think we have proved beyond doubt that the minister's statement that the shortage of doctors is a myth is completely wrong. His statement that 1,200 immigrant doctors are coming into Canada every year may be misleading. My information is that only 600 or fewer enter the mainstream of practice, less than one half of those entering the country. It is generally well known that doctors from Great Britain, Ireland, Australia—

Mr. Caccia: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Davenport on a point of order.

Mr. Caccia: Would the hon. member permit a question. Will he indicate what efforts are presently being made by the medical profession and medical societies to recognize the degrees of immigrant doctors.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that it is generally well known that doctors from Great Britain, Ireland, New Zealand and the British West Indies are accepted as being well trained. They have little trouble becoming licensed. God knows, we welcome them. Without them, our medical care program would be in complete chaos. I think that answers the hon. member's question.

The government was obviously interested in providing every citizen of our country with the very best medical care possible, to the tune of about $1 billion which was to be spent. Then they turned around and cut the very fund, the health resources fund, that was to provide resources under which required doctors would be trained. According to experts, the fund was cut when it was already 10 per cent deficient. That was penny wise and pound foolish. You cannot buy doctors or make them. You have to educate them. Does the government not know this or does it not care?

Not only did the government cut back on the health resources program but, in spite of our weak position with regard to doctors per capita of our population, it offers no direct leadership in stepping up the training of doctors. No financial assistance has been held out to help the medical schools operate during the summer semester. The government could increase the production of doctors by 50 per cent, at small additional cost. The buildings and equipment are there.

I ask the government, has it approached the provinces with the idea of implementing again the scheme that was carried out so well during the last war? According to the experts, the quality of doctors turned out under the scheme was not lowered at all. In the medical schools across Canada there are roughly 5,000 medical students. Of these, about 800 will be in their final year and working in hospitals if they can afford to do so. That means that about 4,000 students must find jobs, and students are having a difficult time finding employment. A great many of them will not find work. I ask the government, what is so difficult about applying manpower training concepts to these students and paying them for attending medical school during the summer semester. That would certainly be in the category of upgrading training. Interest bearing loans should be provided to students; they should be repayable after graduation and the payments should be deducted from income tax.

I should like to see more applications accepted from students of average ability, as opposed to applications from students scoring high marks. More stress, in my opinion, should be placed on dedication and less on high marks. There should be more stress on character and responsibility, and less stress merely on high marks. It has never been proven to my satisfaction that in the practice of medicine the average student suffers in any way when his performance is compared with that of the better than average student. Admitting average calibre students would qualify many more students to enter the medical field.

The third point I wish to raise about the shortage of medical manpower has to do with the statement the minister made about the uneven distribution of doctors. For example, the Minister of Health and Welfare said that if you had a sore throat in Vancouver three specialists would be waiting for you. It is true that the proportion of specialists to general practitioners in this country has been increasing during the last few years. Thirty years ago the ratio was one specialist to every ten general practitioners. Today, the ratio is one specialist to every general practitioner. We must remember that in the medical field we are now doing highly specialized work not even thought of 20 years ago which needs highly trained doctors to carry it out. Has the minister even thought of consulting with his provincial counterparts? Has he thought of discussing this problem with the universities? Would a doctor be a better specialist if he put in five years as a general practitioner?

The government criticizes but co-operates little in working out our problems. Instead, it cuts back health resources programs which were passed by this house in a supposed effort to help cure the medical manpower shortage. I ask the government to get off its criticizing pedestal. It ought to help us solve some of our medical manpower problems and not help to create them.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, this motion which blames the government for being unable to develop and to retain manpower resources in Canada deals with one of the most important problems of our country and, more particularly, of Quebec.

This province holds a record that is not enviable in the field of unemployment. It has a manpower surplus while it would now need a maximum of development. Indeed, it is paradoxical to discuss the manpower problem when one knows, of course, that our new country owns natural wealth that is practically undeveloped.

This is an unhappy situation. However, no really serious step is taken in order to meet it.

We have been denouncing, for a very long time, a system that leads to such a state of things. If there are people who do understand the problem, it is we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, and like the sponsor of the motion, we regret that the situation is so deplorable.

The manpower centres which I know, those of Quebec and particularly those which serve my area, are almost useless except that they give employment to a few civil servants. This seems to be the only aim of these centres.

When one knows the sometimes detached way in which the manpower counselors welcome the workers in some areas, one might wonder whether they really care to provide with jobs the unemployed or, still, those who do not get any unemployment insurance benefits, which is even worse since they do not receive anything.

I do not blame the civil servants altogether, because it is not they who can create jobs. But I blame them for not reporting unemployment cases or for not putting pressure on senior officials in order to induce them to bring at least partial solutions to this problem.

This leads us to try and determine the cause of unemployment. Of course, it would take too much time to elaborate further on this subject but we can still point out some highlights, namely the employment of student manpower which is still of some significance.

If we consider the tremendous number of students who, as soon as the holidays start, would like to find work so as to make a little money and thus participate in the development of the country, then it is not just a matter of money but also a matter of participation.

It is obvious that no one has any intention of giving work just for the sake of giving work because many people receive money without providing any service or any work in return. We have now come to the point where work is often considered degrading. Work should be upgraded and we should find the best means to give some to everyone, and especially to the young, since the real problems which we face now and which we will have to face within a few years stem from there. We are dealing here with one of the most important problems in our history.

If we cannot instil into our young people the love of work, what are we coming to? If we cannot create a sound emulation as to work, enterprise and initiative, we are going the wrong way.

It is surely possible to achieve such aims but not the way it is being done at the present time. We do not help concerns to employ young people. Even in the case of those who hold degrees, whenever they enter the labour market, people are afraid to give them work claiming that they have no experience. If they have no experience, how do you want them to learn anything? Thus, people in the constituency of Champlain could have said on June 25 last: "He never was a member of parliament, he has no experience; so let us not elect him."

Therefore, there is something wrong. We are in a vicious circle. One cannot acquire experience if one cannot get work. One has to begin somewhere.

Even through artificial means of creating employment, we shall be able to develop our resources.

But the most serious aspect of it all is that our young people are not learning to love work. Unfortunately, the young are saying to themselves: Since we are not provided with work, with anything, it means that work in itself is not a good thing. We have created such a state of mind whereas we live in an era of progress, at a time where everybody is looking for comfort.

But in spite of the lack of work and income, young people want to make use of the advantages brought about by progress. It follows that they try, in all kinds of ways, more or less honest, to enjoy the same advantages in life.

That could explain, in part, the relaxed morals in our country, the growing number of crimes committed every where. Of course, when there is no work, there is no money. As money is essential to them, they manage to get some anyway.

And so, when we study the employment problem, and particularly that of the students, we touch upon a colossal problem, that of the new generation, that of the training of our youth which we would have wholesome so that our country can benefit from them in the future. We realize that it is high time to find the real causes, and to stop cataloguing opinions according to their source. Little does it matter where the solutions come from; we must pause and study them and, if needs be, forget partisanship to see them objectively, and adopt those that stand a chance of solving the serious problem which the student manpower confronts.

[Mr. Matte.]

[English]

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that while it was not possible for me to listen to all of the speeches this afternoon, I have appreciated those to which I have listened. I feel that a great deal of thought has been put into them, not only by members of my own party but all opposition parties. We all realize as members of this house that the subject of this motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is one which worries not only we who sit here as elected members of this honourable house, but also all people of Canada.

Perhaps some hon. members have strayed slightly from the subject. As a matter of fact, this is something that I do very often myself. To bring the mood of the house back to what we are discussing, I will restate the motion as it stands:

• (8:30 p.m.)

That this house regrets the government has not provided for the development and retention of manpower resources in Canada and, in particular, of student manpower resources.

I had the opportunity of listening to the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon, and as a member of the government party I must say quite frankly that he made many good points. He spoke of many things that are worrisome to us as citizens of Canada. On the other hand, I must respectfully say to him that he did not offer any solutions.

All of us know that we as a country really have not provided for the development and retention of our manpower resources but, on the other hand, the solution is not as easy as the placing of this motion on the order paper. The Leader of the Opposition pointed out that there are approximately 250,000 students in Canadian universities, and I point out that this represents the investment of a fantastic amount of money, I know that the government of Ontario alone this year is spending over $1 billion of taxpayers' money on the education of children in primary and secondary schools, and this does not take into account universities.

Education is a fantastic expense. It is an investment not only in the present but in the future. One thing that has annoyed me is that in spite of this huge investment by the people of Canada in our young people, once these young people finish their education and get a certificate, many of them pack up and leave for what in their opinion are greener fields. May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that one third of all the doctors who graduated in Canada last year did not practise for one single day in this country, but left immediately for the United States where they could secure better returns for their services. I do not think this is fair.

I am not going to pick solely on the medical profession. I am also talking about engineers, dentists, architects and lawyers, all the people in what we call the professional class. We have a fantastic investment in these people.

A young man or a young lady leaving high school today, and deciding to buy a shoe store, a dairy, a bakery, a grocery store, or whatever it may be, must have the necessary money or must borrow it from somebody else. If they borrow the money, it must be paid back. One of the great segments of our society is the agricultural industry. Many young farmers must buy their way into it. Perhaps they take over family farms. If they do not have the money themselves, they must get it from the Farm Credit Corporation, private mortgage companies or banks. They borrow money in order to buy a farm, cattle, equipment and all the things necessary for farming. And sooner or later, they have to pay back that money.

I ask where is there a segment of our population that gets things more easily in the financial sense than those people who go through primary school, as all of us did, and through secondary school, completely at the cost of the state, then go on to university? Many of us did not reach university but quite a number did. This year there will be 250,000 students attending university, and two thirds of the cost of university education will be borne by the state, whether it be the province of Ontario, Quebec, or any of the other provinces. A student's father pays the other one third of the cost if the student does not get a scholarship.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, governments over the years have not provided for the development and retention of manpower resources in Canada. I ask, does a student who gets free primary schooling, free high school schooling, and has two thirds of his university education paid for, have a responsibility to Canada? Has he a responsibility not only to his parents but to the other people in Canada who paid the taxes that paid for his education? I say he has. The young man or young lady who gets a qualifying certificate, be he or she a dentist, a lawyer, a doctor or an architect, has really got it made in what we call the western world. I say that many thousands of students who graduate from our universities have an obligation to pay back something to Canada.

Do we need these young men and women whom we have educated with our money? When I talk about "our money", I am not talking about the money of the average member of parliament who sits in this chamber. I am talking about our older citizens who have worked hard throughout their lives, who have raised their families and who are now living in retirement. Unfortunately, many of these people do not have the financial resources that we would wish them to have, yet they are still striving to pay their way and to help build up the society that we want in Canada.

I have pointed out that one third of the medical doctors who graduated from Canadian universities last year left this country. I do not want to take anything away from them. They worked hard in order to get their degrees, but they left this country without paying back in services or in taxes one nickel of the huge sum of money that we invested in them. Do we need these young doctors? Ask any member of this house who comes from a rural area. If there is an exception I am willing to apologize, but I do know that in the rural areas of Ontario there is a shocking lack of medical doctors.

Do we need dentists in Canada? I have been told, even by dentists themselves, that tomorrow morning the dental profession could place 5,000 new dentists in positions across Canada without hurting economically one single presently practising dentist. We would not be taking one nickel away from any other dentist. We need these people. Do they have an obligation to us? I say they do. Now, I shall come to the crux of the situation. We often talk about such things as democracy, freedom of speech and freedom of everything else here in Canada. Particularly, we discuss these things in the House of Commons. But unfortunately sometimes it is necessary to give up a little bit of freedom for the over-all good. If a young farmer is to buy a farm or a young businessman is to buy a dairy or a bakery, he must pay back the amount of money he borrrows in order to buy the business. So, I say that our students who graduate from our universities also have something to pay back to the taxpayers of Canada. I say they have an obligation to remain here to give us not only their services for which we are crying in rural Canada but also to pay back some of the tax money we have invested in them. If we were to ask the Minister of Finance or any treasurer of any province across Canada, we would be told that they, too, are crying for money.

Who earns the money in this country unless it is the professional men who have graduated from our universities? Is there any reason they should not try to pay back in the form of taxes some of the money the taxpayers and citizens have invested in them? One of the hon. members who spoke this afternoon mentioned the fact that perhaps something is owing, but he did not know what to do about it. He did not have any solution. I understand that if a young man in the armed forces of Canada today has passed what at the moment in Ontario we call grade 13, he can go to university at the expense of the Department of National Defence. However, there is one thing he must do before he can get this education. He must sign a paper stating that he will remain in the armed forces for a period of 5 years. Most sincerely, I ask this question. If the people in the armed forces who receive university training must sign a document stating they will remain in the same forces for a period of "X" number of years, why should we not ask those who are attending university to become doctors, dentists, architects, lawyers or whatever the profession may be to sign a paper stating they will remain in Canada for a certain period?

I know there will be some people who may be surprised that a Liberal member would say something like this. I want to say that I never have been more serious in my life. Not only do I feel that this is a good idea, I consider that in Canada it is an absolute necessity. For the past few months we have been talking about the surplus of fish on the east coast and the west coast. We have talked about the surplus of wheat in the West. Tonight, at the Chateau Laurier, those attending the agricultural congress are talking about the surplus of turkeys, the surplus of potatoes and the surplus of food generally wherever it may be. We fail to appreciate, however, that in the long run what we need in Canada is more people. Our neighbour to the south, whose population is ten times ours, probably grows about twice as much wheat and consumes about 80 per cent of it. Here, in Canada, where we have millions of bushels of wheat we consume only about 15 per cent of it and must export the remainder. Surely, we must appreciate the fact that the way to overcome this problem is to have more people here in Canada.

There is no market in the world like a home market. This has been proven by our neighbour to the south. I am one of those who would advocate that we bring in many people from other parts of the world. But with all due respect to my friends who come from other continents, I say there is no citizen in Canada who is a better citizen than that person who has been born and bred right here and who has been educated in our way of life; yet we are letting many of them get away. We need these people. We need the doctors and the dentists much more than we need their taxes. After what I have said, there might be some among my friends in the opposition parties who might ask how I could vote against such a resolution as this which has been introduced sincerely I am sure by the Leader of the Opposition. My answer is that I do not believe that any solution has been given by the opposition. I am willing to listen. I know how serious a problem this is. I also know how serious a problem it is to the Minister concerned, and how serious it has been for previous ministers and governments. But what are we going to do about it? Are we willing to give away a little of our liberty?

Are we willing to take away a little liberty from our sons and daughters and say to them that if Canada educates them they have an obligation to remain here for a certain period, not only because of the tax dollars we have invested in them but also because their services are needed across this country? Members who come from Vancouver, Montreal or Toronto probably represent areas which do not need more doctors or dentists. However, in rural Canada people must travel many miles in order to obtain these services which others take for granted. This is the reason I say the government should sit down and consult with the provinces concerned in order to work out a plan to enable us to partake of the services of these people who have received the precious asset of education.

I have nothing else to add to this debate, Mr. Speaker. I believe it was the Leader of the Opposition who said some heads should be knocked together. Certainly, they should be. When we remember how sparsely populated this country is, we should realize that whether it is fifty years from now or 100 years from now, the people in countries like China which has a population of 750 million, Japan which has a population of about 100 million and India which has a population of about 450 million, will break out of their shirts and trousers to come here.

If we do not do something about the situation, this is what will happen. My suggestion is that we keep some of our boys and girls right here. If ever a country needed these people it is this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to commend the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher)—

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but I wonder whether I might have permission to direct a question to the hon. member who just finished speaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member's time has expired, unless there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the hon. member a question. I believe I heard him correctly. I thought he said you had to be born in Canada to be the best class of citizen in the country. Is that what the hon. member said?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): That was Pickersgill.

Mr. Whicher: I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. That sort of remark would come from the people on my left. I did not say that at all. I said that if I had my way I would open the doors and bring in a lot of people; that there were no better citizens than those born, bred and educated right here in Canada.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member because there are in my own family, including my wife, as good citizens as I am or any other Canadian that I know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Whicher: In that particular instance, I would say she would be a lot better, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) for a very thought-provoking and worth-while contribution, much more so than some I have heard him deliver in the past. I sometimes become concerned about the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I am less concerned, having listened to the hon. member, because I know that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) realizes, as some of us have already, that perhaps the time has come for a new minister of manpower and immigration, he will also realize that he has a good resource of people from which to draw.

I suggest to the hon. member for Bruce that he should get the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) in a corner some time and teach him something about the problem we are trying to deal with tonight. I have to agree with him somewhat as I did not have the opportunity of being born in our great country, but whether we are talking about those born here or those who have chosen to come here, Canada is a great nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: The situation that exists today as far as opportunities—

Mr. Whelan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) on a point of order.

Mr. Whelan: I object to what the hon. member just said. In my own family I have as in-laws a Rumanian brother-in-law, a Hungarian sister-in-law and a Finnish sister-in-law, and my wife is of German descent. Nobody has to take me aside and teach me anything about immigrants. I know what kind of great Canadians these people are, and I know also that they are as great Canadians as those who were born in this country.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to get into an argument with the hon. member for Essex. He is a good friend of mine and I can understand that once in a while he has to blow off a little steam. But there is no real argument here.

I commend the motion before the house to the hon. member for Essex and the hon. member for Bruce, because I think it points out a problem that is very real in our country at this time. I remind the hon. member for Bruce that with regard to the problem of manpower which is pointed out in the motion before us—the hon. member is very much aware of the problem; his words have demonstrated this—it is the responsibility of the government to find an answer. This is part of the responsibility of being charged with the administration of government. We do not see these answers coming forth and for this reason some of us are extremely concerned. I am sure this concern is shared not only by those who sit in the opposition benches at the present time.

Canadian manpower development, in other words the development of Canada's human resources, is the most important single factor in the economic growth of this country and, above that, in the entire well being of our Canadian way of life. So, in this special debate today I believe we are dealing with the most vital problem that we face. The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) has pointed out the problem as it relates to taking care of our sick people and the inadequate resource of properly trained medical people to do this work. But this is just one area of the need that exists. I draw this to the attention of the house once again.

I come back to the reply of the minister this afternoon to the remarks of my leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), when he said he was surprised the Leader of the Opposition should bring forward a motion on the subject of manpower resources and student manpower in particular. Perhaps he thinks a little differently now, having listened to what the hon. member for Bruce has said. Twice in the course of his speech the minister expressed his surprise at the action taken by the official opposition. He has had the audacity to suggest that perhaps the motion should be withdrawn. I fail to understand the thinking of the minister in this regard. That the minister should be surprised is a clear indication of what little importance he attaches to some of the problems raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

It is clear that the surprised minister does not regard this problem as being very current, and certainly not very urgent, or he would not have spoken as he did. The request to withdraw the motion is evidence of this. Twice in the course of his speech the minister by inference was critical of the Leader of the Opposition for dealing with the problems of student and graduate manpower resources rather than with the adult labour force. If the minister were following the affairs of the house with any regularity, he would know that the motion brought forward some weeks ago on the first day allotted to the official opposition dealt with the lagging rate of growth and the problem of unemployment. Consequently, the minister will realize that had we tried to continue that debate today on the problems of the adult labour force it would quite probably have been contrary to the rules of the house.

Perhaps the minister, in commenting on how much the government was doing in providing job opportunities, was referring to the Prime Minister. I have not seen any other reports to justify the minister speaking as he did. I refer to a news report of not too long ago which pointed out that the personal staff of the Prime Minister has been increased by 77 to 288. The number of people employed in the Privy Council office, which serves the Prime Minister and the cabinet, is expected to increase by nearly one-third in this fiscal year, in spite of the widespread freeze on the civil service.

I come back to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. What was the context of those remarks? There are just two facts that need to be stated. First, some 88,000 students will be graduating from our colleges and universities this year. This graduation is just a few weeks hence. Although there is a 20 per cent increase over last year in the number of graduates, there is a drastic reduction in the number of jobs available to those graduates. In the long run, Canada simply cannot afford to lose them. Again, I refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Bruce. This fact relates to the ability of the Canadian economy to absorb those who will be graduating from universities and colleges within the next few weeks and seeking permanent careers. This is the crux of the first point made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition.

The second fact concerns summer employment for students. There will be more than 360,000 students seeking work. This is quite apart from the number who will be graduating. To some of them, obtaining a job or failure to do so, will make the difference between continuing their education or interrupting it. Already across my desk—and I am sure this is true of every member of the house—there is beginning to flow a stream of letters from students and parents requesting help in this very serious situation. The minister seems to completely miss the point made by the Leader of the Opposition.

The minister referred to the support given by the federal government to post secondary education. He spoke of the Canada student loan plan and of other similar programs. It is obvious from the way he spoke that he recognizes the problem, but recognizing it is just not enough. I agree with the minister that there have been many platitudinous remarks made without any evidence that the problem has been deal with. We have had enough talk. A good example of that is the minister's remarks regarding the size of the student loan project. I agree that the Canada student loan plan has been a worthwhile project and has proved its worth. But what have student loans to do with student employment? What students in ever increasing numbers require is a summer work opportunity for those who are continuing their education, and for those who have completed it the opportunity to find gainful employment where they can use the skills and the training which has been provided for them. Yes, 300 students are to be absorbed in the Department of Manpower and Immigration for summer work. That is good, but how many jobs are going to be found for students across the nation? As the minister indicated, 367,000 young people will be looking for jobs this summer. His description of his department's plan sounds good, but if the record of the department in regard to manpower in general is any example of its ability to deal with this problem, there is not much hope. I say that words are not enough, neither is concern by itself. There must be action and there must be relevant planning. This is what the government faces so far as its responsibility in concerned simply because it is the government.

The very point made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition, and ignored by the minister, was that we in this country are turning out a record number of graduates from all kinds of post secondary educational institutions, and that we have no use for thousands of them in this country. This is a disgrace and this is the key problem that faces us. Presumably, the federal government will go on giving support to post secondary education by means of student loan programs and other plans, and year after year enrolments will increase as well as the size of the graduating classes. But where is the opportunity for careers for these young people? This is not just something to be theoretically projected into the future; it is now upon us. This is why the question that is posed today in this motion is of the utmost importance to the house.

With this year's graduating class 20 per cent higher than last year's and the number of jobs available this year perhaps 20 per cent fewer than last year, this is becoming a crisis situation which requires the priority attention of the national government. Twice this afternoon the minister emphasized the point that education was a provincial responsibility. I hope the minister is not attempting to convey the impression that the federal government does not have primary responsibility for the development of policies which will provide career opportunities for young Canadians leaving our colleges and universities, while at the same time it faces the responsibility of making sure that our economy is expanding in such a way that opportunities are made available to students who must work to pay part of the cost of their education.

I quite agree that with regard to summer employment the provinces have a role to play. This role should be shared by local governments as well. The minister made the point but I think the house is entitled to know whether the minister has made any effort to meet representatives of the provinces to discuss the problems of summer employment for students. After all, the minister has admitted that the problem was serious last summer and is likely to be worse this summer. I presume he has known that this would be the case. Under these circumstances, not to have initiated a meeting with the provinces to discuss this very serious problem indicates a regrettable apathy and lethargy on the part of the minister.

Even at this late date there are considerations which should be discussed between the federal government and the provinces, late as it may be. Under the present circumstances, with the prospect of scores of thousands of students being unable to find summer jobs, urgent consideration may have to be given to strengthening the present programs of student aid. This may be the only alternative to ending the educational careers of a large number of our young people who are hoping to complete their university education. The danger is even more serious by reason of the fact that this is the second year in a row that there has been a serious shortage of summer jobs for students. We, in the opposition, would like to know whether the minister has had any discussions whatever with the provinces about whether it would be necessary to strengthen or add to the student aid programs, and if not, whether he contemplates any such meetings.

The whole purpose of the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon was to find out how much importance the government attaches to this problem, and to find out whether the government is working on any policies, either alone or in conjunction with the provinces, that might help meet a problem that is extremely serious now and that is bound to become even more grave over the next three or four years. I regret more than I can say that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) and the government are seemingly completely unaware or unconcerned about the wastage of our manpower resources.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition asked whether any studies had been made by the government as to how many members of this year's graduating class are likely to be absorbed in the labour force. That question was not answered by the minister. If this is so, what policy conclusions have been drawn as the result of such studies? What are the projections over the next three to five years?

The Leader of the Opposition also asked the minister to what extent the Department of Manpower and Immigration is involved in such problems as the shortage of medical and para-medical personnel in Canada, a question which was so ably asked again tonight by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)? He asked to what extent the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned about the loss of scientists to this country? Far from attempting to answer any of these questions, the minister this afternoon ignored them completely. This is why I am compelled to speak as I am speaking now.

Nobody is asking for miracles. What we are asking is for some evidence that there is some thinking and planning taking place in the department which is primarily responsible for the utilization and retention of our young manpower resources, particularly the growing graduating classes each spring. The evidence given this afternoon by the minister indicates that no such planning is taking place in his department. If there is, we have not heard about it.

It must be a bitter and disillusioning experience for many young Canadians—and I speak to my fellow members in this house because I am sure we are all in contact with this problem—to find that the first people to be betrayed in the just society are the young people, many of whom gave it such support a few months ago. It appears as if the Prime Minister and his colleagues are telling their young supporters "Don't call us, we'll call you, at the next election". The government is in for a rude shock.

If this government and this country is willing to tolerate a situation in which more and more young people are being trained and educated and cannot find careers in Canada, this country is bound to have an increase in the incidence of conflict and violence. Perhaps more than any other minister, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and his department have the responsibility for developing the policies, providing the leadership, and showing a concern to make words like "involvement" and "participation" in the development of the Canadian society a reality.

We have an amendment to the motion. It is moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I want to make a few remarks with regard to it. The amendment criticises the government because of its failure to emphasize the role of the public sector. A few days ago I returned from Great Britain. We have seen what has happened in a country where a socialist government adhering to the principles that are advocated by the New Democratic Party has failed because of its emphasis on the role of the public sector. As we were saying here tonight, we have a problem in Canada, but the problem that Great Britain has as a result of placing the major bulk of the responsibility on the public sector makes our problem almost insignificant. I emphasize that this is not the answer to the problem at all, and therefore this amendment is completely irrelevant to the need and to the problem which we face.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the hon. member permit a question?

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Thompson: My time is limited, Mr. Speaker, and I am trying to finish. The hon. member can ask his questions later, if he wishes.

A free enterprise economy in which all individuals have an opportunity to participate is more desirable than a state regimented economy. For this reason, the amendment is not in my opinion relevant to the real problem. They have had an opportunity in Britain to proceed on the lines suggested by this amendment and we can see the results of their doing so all too clearly.

An hon. Member: What about Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands?

Mr. Thompson: We have been in all those countries as well, and if it were not for the private sector doing what it has done for those countries, they would not be there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: Hon. members in that corner continually hold up Sweden as their example, yet 95 per cent of all industry in Sweden is in the private sector.

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Broadbent: On a question of privilege, the hon. member implied I said that private enterprise should be abolished. In fact, I was suggesting that the mixture of public and private enterprise as it exists in Sweden would be highly desirable in Canada at this point.

An hon. Member: Where is the point of order?

Another hon. Member: Where is the question of privilege?

Mr. Thompson: I do not see any question of privilege. The point I am emphasizing is that the development of Canada's human resources is the most important single factor in the economic growth of Canada.

In this connection I would refer the minister to a document with which I am sure he is familiar, the white paper on human resources produced by the Alberta government a year or so ago. This document recommends a new approach to human resource development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, I have only a few remarks left to make. I simply say that the present fragmented approach being followed by the government is not good enough. There were four basic principles enunciated in this white paper and I would draw them to the minister's attention. The first is that there must be a new priority for human resource development. Second, there must be new emphasis placed on the individual in this development—not on the public sector but on the individual so as to give him a chance to use his initiative and his ability. The third point is that there must be a broader purpose and objective in connection with physical resource development. The fourth recommendation is that there must be new emphasis on the integration and co-ordination of both the human and the physical aspects of resource development.

If this were done there would appear to be some hope of meeting the problem which faces not only our students today, whether they are looking for summer work or beginning their careers, but the entire problem of effectively using our vital human resources. This is a great challenge and it is to be regretted that the minister this afternoon failed so miserably to respond to the opportunity provided and the initiative taken by the Leader of the Opposition in enunciating some of the programs which the government should be initiating to deal with these circumstances. In the absence of better assurance from the government, the only alternative left to us is to support this motion tonight expressing lack of confidence in the administration for its failure to meet this challenge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, we heard opposition parties blame the government and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) for not having provided students with summer jobs and not having developed manpower resources in Canada.

I can say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister knows the problems and that officials in the various Manpower Centres are more than ever aware of the work they have to do this year to find employment for the always increasing number of students. Their task is complicated by the fact that the economic situation is not improving at the same rate the number of students is increasing. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has put a motion of censure against the government, while the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has amplified it by stating that the government relies on the private and unorganized sector.

In my opinion, it would not have been possible to find a better way than this non-confidence motion to waste the time of the house.

We know that the government and the minister are aware that there is much to do in the manpower field. They try by all possible means to improve conditions. They recognize that conditions are not perfect, but they are endeavouring to improve them.

We are the first to deplore those conditions and we wish that instead of always condemning the government hon. members opposite would sometimes make positive and specific suggestions and not merely put forward programs which would entail further expenditures.

It must also be recognized that when the government is compelled to raise taxes to find the necessary funds to carry out certain projects suggested by the hon. members opposite, the latter are the first to criticize and condemn it.

This is why members of the opposition should once in a while, put in good suggestions and realize that if they ever came to power, they would be facing the same problems.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Was the hon. member not in the house when I moved the amendment and, if so, did he not hear the arguments I put forward and the proposals I offered?

Mr. Loiselle: Yes, and I will deal later with some of the points made by the hon. member. I was asserting that some hon. members who continually criticize and push the government into undertaking more responsibilities in different fields are the first to protest when it is necessary for the administration to raise money by way of taxes to cover the additional expenditures incurred. As I say, I will answer some of the questions raised in the hon. member's speech later on.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the hon. member not agree that I tried to make it clear in my speech that we were not opposed to new taxation, that we were very much in favour of implementing certain sections of the Carter Report which would result in certain tax increases for some sections of the population? That was one part of the argument. We are in favour of a selective increase in taxes in certain areas.

The other argument was that it does not necessarily involve an increase in expenditure but rather a shifting of emphasis from the private to the public sector.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to use up my time by giving a lengthy reply to a speech. The hon. member had his time this afternoon. However, in answer to what he said I should like to see whether the government does bring forward new ways of raising taxes in other fields. What then will be the stand of the hon. member's party in this house? We will have to wait and see.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to go on with my comments if the honourable members allow me to. I have been very good and I let them babble all afternoon against the government and the department. I should like to continue my speech and explain what the government is doing and what it intends to do in that field.

I said a moment ago that we did not think the situation was ideal; fortunately, we do not think either that it is hopeless. I could tell the honourable member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) who claimed just now that the government was not looking after the problem of employment for young people that the department is investigating every year on employment possibilities for university students, and so forth.

Now, the investigation conducted by the department for this year is not yet completed; however its shows that more jobs than in past years will be available to graduates in engineering, business and business administration and science. That is concrete evidence that the department has taken steps in that direction and the facts are consistent with the publicity made by the department and the work performed by our officials, as I was saying a while ago.

From July 1968 to September 1968, the department engaged in an advertising campaign which—directly or indirectly it is hard to say—provided 13,000 jobs for students. This was achieved thanks to the work done by the officials of the Department of Manpower, within its 250 or 300 offices in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, last week, I travelled outside the province on departmental business. I spoke with the officials of our Manpower office in the locality where I happened to be and they too assured me that they were stepping up more the publicity and were more active than last year. I was told that the Manpower office in that place was contacting private enterprises to secure summer employment for young people.

Another group of employees in our Manpower centers was visiting some areas and met the workers personally in order to hear about their ideas and their suggestions on manpower in the area or in the country at large. These officials set up a file for every individual in order to determine in which field they could give him a start.

Those are new methods used by the Department of Manpower to promote the use of manpower.

It has been mentioned this afternoon that the responsibility of the Manpower and Immigration Department is not to create jobs, but rather to see that the manpower is adapted to modern equipment and technology. And, it is exactly what is being done today, through a whole gamut of vocational training.

Mr. Speaker, in that field, the co-operation of private enterprise, of industry, as well as that of the members of Parliament is required. In their ridings, the members of Parliament must find ways to promote employment in industries and, if necessary, to make suggestions to the department.

We are trying to establish new methods, but it is necessary, in some areas in particular, that the member of parliament who is concerned with the welfare of his people, and especially that of the students, let the department know if there are any possibilities of creating new jobs that the officials may have overlooked.

The member of parliament may, on his own initiative, meet the responsible people in the Manpower centres and co-operate with them, in order to find the most efficient way of securing jobs.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) suggested this afternoon—another opportunity for spending more money—to grant additional travelling allowances to persons taking vocational training, so that they may be able to go and visit their families during the Easter holidays.

Mr. Speaker, this is definitely in contradiction with the present regulations made two years ago. He said that if the school is closed during the period where the government is paying an allowance to someone eligible, the latter will not get travelling expenses. However if, for some reason, the school must close during the period where allowances are being paid, a travelling indemnity will be paid. The minister will never be able at any time to take it upon himself to change the regulations in order to defray supplementary expenses.

In reply to the questions of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer), I shall say that all his suggestions would only involve additional expenses for the department. I realize that for a certain category of people, this could enable the person entitled to an allowance to attend a longer course at the government's expenses. However, when the hon. member mentioned this afternoon that the 52-week period of training provided under the terms of the Manpower Act was in fact reduced to 44 weeks, I believe he was including in his calculation the two summer months during which courses are suspended.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that the hon. member for Selkirk was wrong to make such a statement.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, when we say that a person eligible to courses paid by the Department of Manpower is entitled to a 52-week course, it is really 52 weeks, and not 44 weeks of courses and 8 weeks of holiday, with an allowance. A person accepted for a given course receives a living allowance only while attending courses.

We were asked the same thing during the Christmas and New Year period. In my own riding, some people attending courses paid by our manpower office asked for the same allowance during that period, claiming that the courses were suspended. We must make it clear that the legislation authorizes allowances for 52 weeks of courses, and not for 44 weeks of courses and 8 of holiday.

The hon. member mentioned also that the Department of Immigration was not looking after the less favoured areas. I have to tell him that he surely does not try to find out what is the true situation.

In fact, I could quote some figures which show that the government is looking after its business and attending to those things even before hon. members bring them to its attention.

I could mention that in 1961-62, through its training programs, the government paid $29 in Canadian money to every unemployed citizen of the Atlantic provinces; the average for every unemployed amounted to $44. I will not give figures for all those years, but only for 1968-69, in order to show that the government did something about that problem. In the Atlantic provinces, $560 per unemployed was paid out for training and retraining and $516 across Canada.

That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that in 1961, when a Conservative government was in power, $29 was paid out, whereas today, the Liberal government disburses $560 per unemployed.

In 1961-62, $44 per unemployed was allocated and this year $516 is contributed.

The hon. members we have heard today have said that the government does not bother with that section of the population. It does, but I could not find anyone in this house who could solve the unemployment problem overnight or say that the 360,000 students, presently enrolled in our universities and postgraduate institutions, could find employment overnight.

It would be too good to be true. If that were the case, we might not need the hon. members of the opposition, because the situation would be perfect. We would not have to listen to the condemnation of hon. members who, right or wrong, are always saying that the department is not concerned with that problem.

As concerns adult vocational training, Mr. Speaker, from a budget of $400 million for 1968-69, it is expected that about $197 million will be spent. It is fine to think of the students, but the adults must not be forgotten. $197 million will be spent for adults and students. Some of them will become part of the staff of our Manpower Centers. This year, it is expected that $100 million will be spent in grants for the construction of technical schools.

Mr. Speaker, if those expenditures do not represent for the government a preventive measure for future years, I wonder what it is. I think that the government is doing its best. We have this year a $400 million budget, and next year it will reach $500 million or $550 million. From one year to another, the government wants to accelerate and improve its methods of training.

One hon. member was blaming the government this afternoon for giving its vocational training courses in subsidized technical schools. Mr. Speaker, all these courses are being taken, and I have witnessed it on several occasions. The hon. member who spoke against this procedure was suggesting that those eligible for the courses should apply to industry.

How could a private industry accept to hire somebody who does not know his trade? Would the government be able to pay this private business to enable the students to continue their schooling there?

In technical schools, all courses given are excellent. I have visited such schools. Courses are being given by qualified people and it should not be allowed that those students who take these courses to learn a trade be hired by private industry, unless—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member in the middle of his interesting remarks, but his time has expired.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have left—

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the time of the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, but I would like to point out to the house that since the beginning of the debate on the motion introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), only one member of our party has been able to speak, while several members of the other parties had ample opportunity to be heard.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind that there are fourteen of us and that we would also like to take part in the debate, which we could do in a much more constructive and sensible manner that the member for Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The remarks of the hon. member will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes remaining to me, and though I must do without some notes I had prepared, I shall inform the minister of my views and sum up very briefly some remarks that I wanted to make.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, as time does not allow me to do so, I would not want to look fully into this very important matter of summer jobs for students. Obviously there exists a glaring contradiction between the minister's statements and those of his parliamentary secretary as far as their stand and the statistics given are concerned.

However, I should like to refer to one of the arguments put forward and which in my opinion, is completely ludicrous. It reflects indeed the confusion that prevails not only within the Department of Manpower and Immigration, but also within the Liberal party, since the parliamentary secretary is, I think, empowered by the minister to speak on behalf of his department.

He told us, among other things, that the department and the minister were fully aware of every thing with regard to student manpower in Canada.

Then, if this is true, I wonder why the minister could not answer my question this afternoon, when I inquired about the number of students seeking employment next summer.

The minister made it quite clear that he did know and that he did not have the information at hand, which proves therefore that there is some conflict with regard to the information given and a certain lack of communication between the minister and his parliamentary secretary.

After having found fault with the opposition for not making any suggestions, the hon. member continued his speech and a few minutes later, he said that the suggestions of the opposition would prove costly for the government. And so, he blames the opposition for suggesting concrete solutions to do away with unemployment, but later he praises the minister for having increased from $80 million to $197 million the money earmarked for adult technical training. This proves once again that there is flagrant contradiction since, on the one hand, he blames the opposition for wanting to suggest solutions that will cost the government a lot of money while, on the other hand, lauding the minister later for having increased by $100 million the amounts earmarked for technical training.

• (9:40 p.m.)

So. I am trying to understand that jumble of contradictions—

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on a point of order.

Mr. Loiselle: If I understand correctly, the member for Sainte-Marie blames me for asking the minister to spend a $100 million. I am afraid the hon. member did not understand me correctly. What I said a while ago was this: this year, the Department of Manpower will spend $197 million on vocational training and $100 million on the construction of technical schools.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Valade: I am sorry the member for Saint-Henri still does not understand. I shall explain later.

Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I should dwell on the matter of student employment, of which my colleagues have spoken at length during this debate. Still, I shall touch upon the substance of the amendment which really deals with unemployment in a very general sense.

I am sorry to note, Mr. Speaker, that unemployment has now reached an extremely dangerous point for the Canadian economy, and especially that of the province of Quebec.

The government has not shown that it intends to do anything at all to alleviate this plague which affects the province of Quebec more particularly. According to today's newspapers, the port of Montreal may be forced to suspend its operations during this current season; this would surely means that thousands of dock workers, labourers and other employees would be unemployed.

For the past few weeks, here in this house, we have repeatedly asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) to tell us what steps he intended to take in order to avoid this economic disaster threatening the Canadian metropolis.

Considering the unemployment prevailing now in the province of Quebec, I dare say that their responsible statements made by some ministers are of bad omen for the economy of the province of Quebec.

I would now like to refer to the most irresponsible and harmful statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) I saw him a moment ago in the house and he was probably making apologies while trying to clear the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the government of their failure to take action about unemployment in Canada and to put the blame for this catastrophic situation on the separatist movement in Quebec.

The member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) said: If the rates of unemployment is now so high in Quebec, it is due to the Quebec separatists. If I ever wished to deny a statement, this is it.

I reject the minister's statement because it endangers the atmosphere of security and of confidence which the industrialists necessarily look for when they try to establish in this province industries that can provide the unemployed with work.

Mr. Speaker,—unfortunately, I see that time is running out and that I must hurry. I must draw to the attention of the government that they did not take into account some of their responsibilities.

In the field of secondary industry, which is the basis of Canadian economy, this government has been totally powerless and inefficient. We are still awaiting an early announcement of a legislation to stimulate the development of secondary industry in Canada, which is threatened by a host of finished products from abroad.

In fact, our market is now invaded by finished products, imported at prices lower than those found on the Canadian market but the government has presented no legislation that could protect our manufacturers.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I realize that my time is up and I hope I will have the opportunity to get back to this matter.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It being 9:45 o'clock p.m. pursuant to section 9 of Standing Order 58 it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the said proceeding.

APPENDIX

REPORT OF THE ELEVENTH MEETING OF THE CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

The Eleventh Annual Meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group was held from March 20-24, 1968, in Washington and New Orleans.

During the month preceding these meetings, the Canadian delegation held several briefing sessions. Our Inter-Parliamentary Relations Branch and the Department of External Affairs organized the briefing of our delegates and the preparation of background papers on the various agenda topics. Officials from the Departments of External Affairs, Finance, Trade and Commerce, National Defence, External Aid, and Energy, Mines and Resources participated in the briefings. We were also fortunate in having the Minister of Defence and the Minister of Trade and Commerce devote an afternoon to discussing items on the Agenda with members of our delegation.

The Canadian delegation, led by the Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, P.C., Q.C., arrived in Washington on March 20th at 2.30 P.M., aboard a Canadian Forces Yukon. Mr. Speaker Sydney J. Smith of the Senate, a participant in all previous meetings of the Group, was unable to attend due to illness. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux was also unable to take part as the House of Commons was in session. Their places were taken by two former Speakers, Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, P.C., Q.C., of the Senate and the Honourable Marcel Lambert, P.C., M.P., of the Commons. The delegation comprised, in addition, the following parliamentarians: from the Senate, Hon. Donald Cameron (Alberta), Hon. L. P. Gélinas (Quebec), Hon. D. A. Lang (Ontario), Hon. H. A. Willis (Ontario), Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary (Ontario), and, from the House of Commons: Mr. James Byrne (British Columbia), Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Quebec), Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (Ontario), Mr. Herb Gray (Ontario), Mr. G. Roy McWilliam (New Brunswick), Mr. H. A. Olson (Alberta), Mr. Gaston Clermont (Quebec), Mr. J. R. Comtois (Quebec), Hon. Alvin Hamilton, P.C. (Saskatchewan), Mr. Wallace Nesbitt (Ontario), Mr. Robert Coates (Nova Scotia), Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Prince Edward Island), Mr. Heward Grafftey (Quebec), Mr. Roger Régimbal (Quebec), Mr. Andrew Brewin (Ontario), Mr. David Lewis (Ontario), Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Quebec) and Mr. Howard Johnston (British Columbia).

The United States delegation was led jointly by Senator George D. Aiken (Vermont) and Congressman Cornelius E. Gallagher (New Jersey). Other delegates from the United States Congress were: Senators Allen J. Ellender (Louisiana), Michael J. Mansfield (Montana), Russell B. Long (Louisiana), William B. Spong Jr. (Virginia), Quentin Burdick (North Dakota), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa), John Sherman Cooper (Kentucky), Len B. Jordan (Idaho), Hirman L. Fong (Hawaii), Robert P. Griffen (Michigan); and from the House of Representatives: Mrs. Edna F. Kelly (New York), and Congressmen William T. Murphy (Illinois), Harold T. Johnson (California), Fernand J. St. Germain (Rhode Island), John M. Slack (West Virginia), James Kee (West Virginia), Mark Andrews (North Dakota), Robert T. Stafford (Vermont), Vernon W. Thomson (Wisconsin), John J. Duncan (Tennessee), and William S. Broomfield (Michigan).

Representative Thomas E. Morgan (Pennsylvania), Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, served as an official observer.

Agenda and Proceedings

The Eleventh Meeting was formally opened in the Old Supreme Court Chamber of the U.S. Capitol with a Welcome to the delegates from Secretary of State Dean Rusk. Following the opening plenary session the delegates divided themselves into two working committees—one on Trade and Economic Matters and the other on Defence and Security Matters. Each Committee met three times.

Committee I

The Committee on Trade and Economic Matters met under the joint chairmanship of Senator Aiken and Senator Macnaughton. Representing the United States Congress were Senators Mansfield, Jordan, Ellender and Burdick and Representatives Andrews, Kelly, St. Germain, Thomson, Johnson, Duncan and Kee. Representing Canada were Senators Gélinas, Lang and Willis, and from the House of Commons, Hon. Alvin Hamilton, Hon. Marcel Lambert and Messrs. Byrne, Laflamme, Gray, Olson, Clermont, Comtois, Grafftey, Régimbal, Lewis and Gauthier.

The Committee considered the following items on its Agenda:

1) Canada-United States balance of payments.
2) Post Kennedy round developments.
3) Foreign Investment and related Government policies.
4) Resource development matters (with particular reference to oil and gas).
5) Automative agreement.
6) Aid to developing countries.
7) Trade and Economic relations with Communist countries.
8) International Grains Agreement.

ELEVENTH MEETING CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP REPORT OF COMMITTEE I: TRADE AND ECONOMIC MATTERS

1. Canada-United States Balance of Payments

A United States delegate opened the discussion by stating the interdependence of Canada and the United States on trade and monetary matters. He pointed out that agreement had been reached earlier this month exempting Canada from new U.S. restrictions on investment abroad designed to ease the U.S. balance of payments problem, and expressed the hope that the cooperation between the two countries on monetary problems would continue and be effective. A Canadian delegate replied that Canada had a $1.3 billion deficit with the United States and welcomed the U.S. government's action, also expressing the hope that this type of cooperation would continue.

There was considerable discussion about labor-management problems in the two countries. A Canadian delegate expressed the view that the biggest worry for each country is over the possibility of inflationary wage settlements. Members of the U.S. delegation stressed that labor costs in both countries are rising faster than productivity. Canadian delegates pointed out that the lower productivity rate in Canada—due in part to the narrower market base—would create more serious difficulties as the two countries move closer to freer trade relationships. They referred to the recently announced intention of Canadian ministers to inaugurate measures of voluntary restraint and indicated that these would receive full support by the Canadian public. There was discussion by members of both delegations over the indirect impact on Canada of certain U.S. trade and monetary restrictions, such as the interest equalization tax. Canadian delegates expressed appreciation of the special measures adopted by the United States to mitigate the effects of these policies on the Canadian economy, but pointed out that in return Canada has had to adopt certain restraints which may affect its ability to respond flexibly to future international pressures. They stressed that the United States should therefore consider very carefully before it acts how such measures would affect Canada. It was also pointed out by another Canadian delegate that Canada finances a substantial portion of its deficit with the United States through its trade surplus with the rest of the world and not entirely with inflows of U.S. capital. The consensus of both delegations appeared to be that because of the inter-relationship of Canadian-U.S. economic affairs there should continue to be close consultation and cooperation on all matters affecting both countries' balance of payment positions.

2. Post-Kennedy Round Developments

Members of both delegations devoted considerable attention to foreign trade problems, giving particular attention to agricultural trade problems. Several Canadian delegates discussed the impact on Canada of the decline in U.S. farm prices, emphasizing the need for working out arrangements which will protect Canadian farmers from repercussions due to U.S. price declines. It was also pointed out that the U.S. Public Law 480 program has had an impact on Canadian export markets.

A United States delegate stated that it was not clear at this point what direction U.S. trade policy will take now that the Kennedy Round has been concluded but that trade liberalization remains the basic U.S. policy. A comprehensive study of trade policy is now under way in the Executive Branch, he said, and this study will cover exploration of possible special trade arrangements with Canada, such as a North Atlantic Free Trade Area or a Canada-U.S. Customs union. There was considerable discussion by members of both delegations over possible rise of protectionist sentiment in the United States. Members of the Canadian delegation expressed their hope that the free trade movement would continue uninterrupted and expressed fears that passage of protectionist type measures could have a severe adverse effect on this trend. Several U.S. delegates expressed the opinion that protectionist measures are not likely to become law, pointing out that the President has stated publicly that he will veto such bills.

A U.S. delegate said that American agriculture is in a very depressed state and that farmers are quite concerned about trade agreements which seem to be working to their disadvantage. There was general agreement that, contrary to previous hopes, the Kennedy Round had not resulted in freer access to European markets for U.S. and Canadian farmers.

A member of the Canadian delegation in discussing the outlook for wheat pointed out that there will be great pressure on world wheat supplies in the next few years and that the United States and Canada have a responsibility to work together to try to stabilize wheat prices, since the United States and Canada are the only producers with adequate storage facilities. Talks for this purpose are going on between the two countries now, he stated. A U.S. delegate pointed out that the United States had an unsatisfactory, inefficient arrangement for selling wheat abroad which was neither governmental nor private. To make the system work better, he said, the government should either get more in or more out of the picture. There was also discussion of a number of common agricultural problems, such as those affecting the dairy and beef industries.

A member of the Canadian delegation pointed out that the Canadian government has stated that it would take retaliatory action if the United States imposed border taxes or imposed similar measures and expressed the hope that nothing would develop along these lines. In reply, a U.S. delegate said he could not conceive any such action coming to pass. There was general agreement that movement in this direction would have a very harmful effect on both countries.

3. Foreign Investment and Related Government Policies

A United States delegate opened the discussion by stating that it is understandable there should be concern in Canada over U.S. investments. He suggested that discussion on the recent report of the Canadian Task Force on Foreign Ownership and the Structure of Canadian Industry might prove helpful to both countries in clarifying the issues and problems involved. He added that he also appreciated the concern felt by many Canadians over the issue of the extra territorial application of U.S. laws so far as Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. firms are concerned. The basic law governing trade with Communist countries is not likely to be changed as long as the Vietnam war continues.

The most serious aspect of the foreign investment problem for Canada is the extra-territorial application of U.S. laws to U.S. subsidiaries in Canada, a Canadian delegate stated. The measures taken to ameliorate the U.S. balance of payments problem have shown that the U.S. can take steps to remedy its own situation which have unintentional repercussions on Canada. The U.S. should not be surprised if Canada should take steps to remedy Canadian situations which may have repercussions in the U.S.

A U.S. delegate pointed out that large U.S. corporations these days are in effect international or multinational. He said that they often are better received abroad than U.S. Government policies propounded by U.S. diplomats. There followed some general discussion of the growth of large international corporations which it was agreed creates serious problems of control for governments.

Several Canadian delegates indicated that they are not opposed to U.S. investment in Canada and cited beneficial results in specific cases. Canadians accept the need for and value foreign investments.

4. Resource Development

A Canadian delegate referred to the agreement reached in 1959 that Canada would continue to import oil, chiefly Venezuelan, but would expect a roughly equivalent export market in the Northwest United States. This situation of parity has not yet been reached but progress is satisfactory. In view of the presently developing exports of Alaskan oil into the Northwest, Canada will hope for expanded markets in the Northeast. He expressed confidence in the competitive machinery for price determination on natural gas but suggested that the two governments should formulate guidelines on this point within which the Federal Power Commission and the National Energy Board could operate.

Members of both delegations discussed new approaches for distribution of natural gas in the Northeast part of the United States. There was also some discussion of new methods being explored in both countries for expanding power production.

5. Automotive Agreement

A United States delegate opened the discussion by describing the benefits that have accrued to both countries as a result of the automotive agreement.

A Canadian spokesman also stressed the benefits to both countries. It has enlarged the market for U.S. producers and thus protected thousands of U.S. job-holders. If there had not been such an agreement, Canada would probably have had to move to higher tariffs, quotas and other devices which would have had bad effects in the U.S.A. He suggested that during the review which is now under way in accordance with the terms of the agreement, some of his U.S. colleagues might be tempted to suggest that the safeguards for Canadian production incorporated in the agreement are now unnecessary or should at any rate be modified. He gave three reasons why they are still necessary: (a) U.S. purchasing agents are still not adjusted to taking full advantage of Canadian production; (b) there is still a 20-30% productivity-gap in Canada's disfavor; (c) Canadian producers still have not adjusted completely to different U.S. procedures for inspection, etc.

The U.S. spokesman replied that he was not aware of serious pressure for removal or modification of these safeguards, although it is under consideration whether modification would be desirable.

There followed a discussion of motor vehicle and highway safety standards. A Canadian delegate pointed out that since motor vehicle design is centered in the U.S., Canada is dependent upon U.S. standards in this field. He said that the 1966 Act is a good beginning but that there is still a long way to go. A U.S. delegate replied that the 1966 Act is only the first step. There will have to be a two-pronged attack on motor vehicle safety and on highway safety as well. The second is a complicated issue involving more than one level of government and including problems both of high design and law enforcement. He expressed confidence that progress is being made in all approaches.

6. Aid to Developing Countries

A Canadian delegate opened the discussion by saying that in Canada there is a review of the external aid machinery to determine whether Canadian aid is going where it will do the most good. Secretary McNamara's speech in Montreal two years ago wisely stressed the connection between external aid and defense in the broad sense. In Canada there is concern that the global level of aid has gone down at the same time as the GNP in the donor countries has gone up. Since 1960 Canada has stressed soft loans rather than grants and has coordinated its aid with other countries and through the World Bank. The Canadian aid target for 1970 is 1% of the gross national income. At present the aid level is .6%.

In the discussion of the U.S. foreign aid program, it was agreed by the U.S. delegates that the President's aid request for next year would meet considerable opposition in Congress due in part to the heavy costs of the Vietnam war. Though one U.S. delegate feared that the entire aid bill might be rejected, the consensus was that the authorization would be passed at a substantially reduced level.

A Canadian delegate introduced the idea that the time has come to adopt a "multilateral pool" approach to aid. It was suggested that under the bilateral system the donors reap ill-will rather than good and that in a multilateral system it would be possible to blur the distinction between donor and donee since all would contribute something and aid would become in a sense anonymous. The group displayed considerable interest in this idea. U.S. delegates pointed out that much of the opposition to further aid efforts now expressed in the U.S. arises from sensitivity at the seeming ingratitude of the recipients. They agreed that the multilateral approach, probably through agencies of the United Nations, would be helped in this regard. A Canadian delegate described the successful implementation of the World Food Program by the FAO and suggested that a tough international administrator can often take a stronger stand against local peculation or incompetence than is possible for national officials. He suggested that the U.S. and Canada could cooperate in pressing for a multilaterally organized program of international aid.

7. Trade and Economic Relations with Communist Countries

Opening the discussion on trade and economic relations with Communist countries, a U.S. delegate stated that Canada and the U.S. pursue different policies. Canada favors increasing trade with all countries but the United States takes a very selective approach to trading with the Communist world. The President has proposed legislation to remove certain restrictions on trade with Communist countries but no positive action by Congress can be expected in this direction as long as the war in Vietnam continues. He said that he appreciated Canadian concern over the impact of U.S. trade restrictions on Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. firms. Another U.S. delegate said that the attitude of Congress on this issue only reflects the thinking of their constituents.

A Canadian delegate said that the Battle Act did not bother Canadians so much as the Cuban control regulations. He was unable to understand why the U.S. should control the actions of long-time Canadian residents.

There was considerable discussion about trade with Communist China. A U.S. delegate said he had not heard of any U.S. protests over Canadian wheat sales to China and pointed out that U.S. wheat exports increased after Canada began selling to China. A Canadian delegate said that they had found their traders very effective in their relationships with the Chinese. Another referred to the effect of subsidized U.S. flour exports in making inroads on traditional Canadian markets expressing the hope that the grains agreement will result in solving this problem.

Members of the Canadian delegation stressed that trade with the Communist world was in the political interests of both the U.S. and Canada. Some members of the U.S. delegation expressed their agreement with this view, stating that one of the most effective means to combat Communism is to encourage growth of consumer demand in the Communist world and a general expansion of trade between East and West. It was said by one U.S. delegate that our trade policy toward China since the Communists gained control had been very ill-advised. As to getting restrictions on trade with Communist countries removed, U.S. delegates agreed that although the President had requested Congress to Act, there was little chance that the Congress would move in this direction so long as the Vietnam war goes on.

A U.S. delegate cited the 50-50 restriction on shipping grain as a factor limiting any wheat sales to the Soviet Union, and said that the longshoremen's unions are very powerful in preventing easing of East-West trade restrictions.

Several Canadian delegates referred to the extra-territorial effect of U.S. trade restrictions on Canadian firms seeking to expand commercial markets with Communist countries. Canadian managers of many subsidiaries of U.S. concerns are reluctant to risk running afoul of U.S. trade regulations. Canadians, they said, believe that commercial decisions should not be influenced by the political policies of the country of the parent. U.S. delegates agreed that U.S. policy should not control actions of Canadian firms.

There was general agreement among members of both delegations that expansion of East-West trade worked to the political and economic advantage of both countries, but that the Vietnam war was a severely limiting factor at present.

8. International Grains Agreement

A Canadian delegate opened the discussion by saying that the principal question as Canada sees it is what action will be taken by the United States before July 1 when the new price range for wheat under the IGA comes into effect. Present prices in the U.S. are about 22¢ below the new floor price and Canada is interested to know how the U.S. will approach the problem of getting its prices up to the agreed level.

A U.S. delegate replied that the Senate hearing on the IGA begin next week. There seemed to be general agreement among the U.S. delegates that farm opinion in the U.S. is in favour of the IGA and that it will consequently be ratified. The view was, however, expressed by one U.S. delegate that during the past 18 months world wheat marketing had not been working as far as the U.S. was concerned. He thought that the importance of the IGA had perhaps been exaggerated.

Another U.S. delegate asked whether an increase of 22¢ per bushel in the wheat price would be likely to lead to larger production in other countries such as France and the Argentine. Canadian delegates pointed out that this did not happen some years ago when wheat prices were considerably higher than they are now. In their view, if the United States and Canada stand together it is unlikely to happen at the present time.

Committee II

The Committee on Defense and Security was co-chaired by Congressman Gallagher and Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, M.P. Representing the United States Congress were Senators Hickenlooper, Cooper, Long, Griffin, Fong and Spong and Representatives Broomfield, Murphy, Slack, Stafford and Morgan. Representing Canada were Senators Cameron and O'Leary and from the House of Commons, Messrs. Cameron, McWilliam, Coates, Macquarrie, Brewin and Johnston.

The Committee considered the following items on its Agenda:

1) State of the NATO Alliance (with particular reference to the Harmel study)
2) Co-operation for continental defense
3) Policies toward Communist China
4) Vietnam
5) Non-proliferation Treaty

ELEVENTH MEETING CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP REPORT OF COMMITTEE II: DEFENSE AND SECURITY MATTERS

The U.S. Chairman opened the first session of the Committee on Defense and Security Matters by emphasizing that 1968 was a year for stock-taking and reassessment. He noted the current and forthcoming changes in political leadership in both countries, the urgent public demands by the population for re-examination of policies and the worldwide phonomenon of challenge to the past. He also noted that in 1968 it was necessary to consider the fact that the NATO treaty allowed for reassessment of its existence after 20 years and that the NORAD treaty between the U.S. and Canada was expiring on May 12, 1968. He then suggested that the Committee give its first attention to NATO, to an examination of the changing Soviet threat, the consequences of this changing threat to NATO itself, the demands for a reduction in troop levels, the effects of the non-proliferation treaty and the recommendations of the Harmel Report.

The majority of Canadian delegates supported the view that a new approach to the NATO Alliance was required and had been recommended by, among other things, the Harmel Report which called for positive action of NATO in the economic and political fields in addition to its traditional military role. It was pointed out that the Harmel Report emphasized that one of NATO'S major roles was to coordinate plans for promoting a detente and the question was asked as to whether or not NATO as it exists today can be used for such a purpose.

A Canadian delegate pointed out that although the official Canadian Government position on NATO had not changed, NATO had become an alliance leading to considerable moral questioning on the part of the Canadian people.

The U.S. delegation noted the increased Soviet military threat in the Mediterranean; particularly that the Soviet Union had increased the number of submarines in that area and was looking to NATO's defense in southern Europe as the soft part of the world. Italy particularly was reported to be very fearful of the possibility of a Soviet threat. The Soviet submarine fleet had developed greatly increased strength on a worldwide basis and was now able to extend its operations to long distances from its European home base. The Soviets are developing ship-borne surface-to-surface missiles and these could be a threat to surface ships of the U.S., U.K. and Canada.

The Soviet Union was beginning to use naval bases in the United Arab Republic and Syria, and there was a real possibility that it might be able to use bases in Algeria. Soviet technological developments enabled Soviet submarines to transit the exit from the Black Sea without technically violating the Soviet-Turkish agreement concerning the use of the Straits.

There was an interesting review of the apparent Soviet desire to control Middle Eastern oil resources if not for its own use then to deny it to the prime purchasers in Western Europe. One member of the U.S. delegation felt that while the Harmel report's recommendations for a detente were helpful, the new ingredient of an increased Soviet threat in the Mediterranean was so important that it could not be ignored.

Some concern was expressed by the Canadian delegation as to the consequences of control by the Soviet Union over the Middle East oil resources. An agreement seemed to have been reached that such control would create a very significant threat to the economies of Western Europe.

Another member of the U.S. delegation emphasized that the nature of the Soviet threat must also be evaluated in terms of the failure of the Soviet Union to give any indication of a willingness to seek a mutual troop reduction in central Europe despite proposals on this matter. In this connection, members of the U.S. delegation indicated that an assessment of possible U.S. troop reductions was currently in progress and would be discussed during the next few weeks.

One U.S. delegate noted that as far as U.S. troops in Europe are concerned, the recent development of large transport aircraft may make it possible for the U.S. to withdraw some of these troops from Europe and airlift them very rapidly to that continent should they be needed.

A Canadian delegate expressed deep concern about the attitude of the West German Government at this time. It seemed to be moving towards an attitude with respect to NATO similar to that of France.

One member of the U.S. delegation emphasized that when NATO was established, it had not been envisaged that the U.S. would supply the bulk of the ground forces but rather that the U.S. would provide strategic air and naval power with the European countries supplying the bulk of the ground troops. This has not worked out in practice.

It was emphasized that NATO was part of the total defense against the worldwide Soviet threat and the U.S. is required to maintain its strength not only in NATO but elsewhere. The NATO countries have been interested in arms reduction to bring about a detente and in weaning away some of the eastern European countries from central Communist domination. This was all to the good and NATO should be used to lessen global tensions. The U.S. interest in this was not only the interest in lessening global tension but to free U.S. military forces to accept responsibility elsewhere.

The U.S. delegation emphasized that while more could be done by NATO in the political field, the NATO countries should not be lulled into an unwarranted sense of security.

A member of the Canadian delegation mentioned that because of the nuclear stalemate existing in the world today the Soviet Union had shifted its approach and had concentrated on political and economic strategy. It was felt that if NATO remained exclusively military it would not be in a position to respond to much political or economic activity from the Soviet Union.

In closing this discussion, one member of the U.S. delegation said that a reduction of U.S. troop strength in Europe, which would be useful to the U.S. in carrying its worldwide responsibilities, might also be a meaningful gesture in the direction of a detente.

The U.S. Chairman opened the second session by suggesting a discussion of the North American Air Defense Agreement (NORAD). He recalled that the agreement expires on May 12, 1968 and that it was desirable that there be an evaluation of the threat and the weapons available to meet that threat.

A Canadian delegate said that the Government of Canada made clear its intention to renew the Agreement but also made clear that it does not wish to participate in the ABM system.

A Canadian delegate mentioned that he was not opposed in principle to an anti-bomber defense system but questioned whether or not an active anti-bomber defense is warranted in terms of its financial cost. Quoting a recent speech by Secretary of Defense McNamara which mentioned that anti-bomber defense alone could not significantly reduce destruction if an attack occurred, it was mentioned that if such were the case Canada did not think that it could afford the continuation of such an anti-bomber defense system.

It was also pointed out by a Canadian delegate that the major defense of the American Continent was not any of the purely defense measures that are taken but rather the tremendous offensive power of the U.S. and that therefore an anti-bomber defense system might be quite obsolete in fact.

The members of the U.S. and Canadian delegations reiterated the view that the bomber threat from the Soviet Union continues to be an active threat against the North American continent and that a defense against this threat is as vital as defense against more sophisticated weaponry. Indeed, the U.S. had learned the lesson that a defense against more conventional weapons, in this case the manned bomber, was as important as a defense against more advanced threats.

In this discussion, the members of the U.S. delegation repeatedly emphasized that the U.S. would want Canada to exercise complete sovereignty over its territory; and that it would not wish in any way to impose on that sovereignty if Canada should choose to deny the use of its territory to the joint defense of the continent.

One Canadian delegate mentioned that the East Coast of Canada had no defense system to protect it against Soviet submarines and suggested that the NORAD Agreement might be modified to encompass not only air defense systems but also measures against sea and underwater threats. It was pointed out that although there have been in the recent past seven penetrations into Canadian controlled air space from Soviet bombers there was also evidence that Soviet submarines were positioned around the coast of Canada, perhaps even in the Hudson Bay. This, in the opinion of the Canadian delegate was a much greater threat to Canada than bombers.

In the field of anti-submarine warfare, a member of the U.S. delegation emphasized, U.S.-Canadian cooperation was also essential. There needed to be a true joint effort in the anti-submarine warfare field particularly in light of the increasing Soviet submarine threat.

The members of the U.S. delegation then reviewed the air and space threat to the North American continent as they saw it. They were convinced, and informed by the U.S. military establishment, that the Soviet bomber threat would continue to exist at least into the mid-70's. In addition to this, the Soviet Union would always have an effective ICBM threat. While members of the U.S. delegation had serious reservations about an ABM system, particularly because of its high cost they recognized that the U.S. had to maintain its research and development in this field as well as in offensive weaponry and considered that the deployment of the so-called thin ABM system was primarily designed to continue effective U.S. development of this weapon. Otherwise, the Soviet Union would have an opportunity to be far ahead of the U.S. in this field. In this connection, the members of the U.S. delegation emphasized that the Soviet Union had refused on repeated occasions to discuss the U.S. proposed mutual limitation on the further development of ABM/ICBM systems.

In his opening statement a Canadian delegate mentioned that sooner or later the West will have to normalize its relations with mainland China. Who will initiate this move and when was the main question. It was suggested that Canada, because it already has a toe in China because of its commercial relations, could be helpful to the Western world in taking the initiative. The Canadian delegation was unanimous in recommending that formal recognition of mainland China should be arrived at as soon as practicable. Although some members of the Canadian delegation mentioned that Communist China should also be admitted to the United Nations, the majority thought that admission to the United Nations of Peking at this time would be highly disruptive.

A member of the U.S. delegation indicated that hearings on the subject of the future U.S. role in Asia are now in progress and offered to make the record of these hearings available to the Canadian delegation. While the U.S. does not recognize Communist China and has no present intentions to do so, there have been a continuing series of diplomatic contacts between the two countries first at Geneva and most recently in Warsaw. The U.S. has used this channel to indicate to the Communist Chinese that it does not contemplate any military action against them and does not intend to intervene in their internal affairs. The U.S. has attempted to further these contacts by establishing relations in the cultural and journalistic fields but these have so far not met with any positive Communist Chinese response.

The members of the U.S. delegation held that the issue of seating Communist China was presently inappropriate, and untimely, particularly since the efforts to seat Communist China at the United Nations were losing support from other quarters including from some of the African nations. It was also necessary to explore what the effects of recognition would be on China's more immediate neighbors such as India and Burma.

It was emphasized several times that there was no visible indication on the part of China of a desire to establish relations with the U.S. and indeed Communist China had made numerous demands before it would be willing to enter the United Nations. Finally, it was emphasized that in the minds of the American people, any future steps toward recognition of Communist China were intimately coupled with the events in Vietnam and there was not likely to be any change until the problems of Vietnam were settled.

There was also some discussion of a possible Canadian recognition of Communist China and of the effects that such a step would have in the United States.

During the discussion on Communist China, one of the members of the Canadian delegation suggested that the Committee seek the knowledge and experience of one of the members of the Canadian delegation who was not present at the time at the meeting. Later in opening a discussion on the Vietnam question the Co-chairman from the American delegation mentioned that the crux of the matter regarding Vietnam was that there existed a number of alternatives or courses of action that could be taken by the United States Government, namely withdrawal of forces, a continuation of the present effort, or further escalation. The Co-chairman called in the Canadian expert to relate his experiences with China and try to combine this discussion with the Vietnam problem. The Canadian delegate mentioned that he was first in touch with the Chinese authorities in 1960 in connection with the cash sale of wheat which was finally ratified in January 1961. He mentioned that Chinese authorities at the time were eager to move out of their self-isolationism and expand commercial relations with other parts of the world. This was viewed by the Canadian delegate as an opportunity for the American Government to come in with the Canadian Government on the grain sales to Communist China. The Canadian delegate at the time visited with President Kennedy who was impressed by the proposal but later said that the American Government would be aggreeable to give China all the grain they wanted if they only asked for it. This was felt unacceptable by the Chinese authorities and the deal never came through.

The Canadian delegate stressed the considerable difference in China between the "politicians" and the "trade people." The politicians were idealists, believing that the nature of a whole generation could be changed by political action and measures. They were considered very dogmatic whereas the trade people were much more practical and down to earth in their beliefs and dealings.

During a visit to Peking, the Canadian delegate was called in by the Prime Minister, Chou En-Lai, who exposed what were the three main points in Communist China's foreign policy. The first and most important one was the recovery of all territories that China possessed before 1900, namely, territories now held by Korea, Taiwan, and the Soviet Union.

Another objective in their foreign policy was to modify the relationship existing between the major powers and the countries on which they exerted their influence. This applied to both the Soviet Union and the United States of America. The third objective of Peking's foreign policy was to take over the lead in the world Communist movement. Chou En-Lai felt that they were best suited to take that lead because he believed that no white man could understand what it is to be a colored man.

On the Taiwan question Chou En-Lai was reported to have said that the crucial problem was that Taiwan was inhabited by 10 million original Taiwanese in addition to 2 million or so refugees from mainland China. Chou En-Lai accepted the principle of self-determination and mentioned that these 10 million original Taiwanese should eventually have the opportunity to express their views on the question.

The Canadian representative mentioned that mainland China at the moment is getting ready for a big confrontation with the Soviet Union. It was not contemplating any confrontation with the United States at this time but feared it and was willing to fight if need be. It was a significant fact, the Canadian delegate said, that the majority of young Chinese children learned as their second language the English language and also that Chinese have never attacked the Americans, but rather the ruling class of America which they considered imperialistic. The Canadian delegate mentioned that the main difference between Communist China and the great powers stems from the fact that China traditionally has considered itself the greatest culture and the centre of the world and that it resents deeply the cultural superiority of the other great powers.

The Canadian delegate also mentioned and in this also concurred with Americans and other Canadian delegates who spoke earlier, that the cultural revolution had been a failure and that the managerial class seemed to be progressively taking over from the politicians.

The discussion then turned to Vietnam and the U.S. delegation inquired of the Canadian delegate who had related his experience in China whether he had any views that might be helpful to the U.S. in arriving at a termination of the struggle in Vietnam. The Canadian delegate responded by indicating that he thought that the U.S. must establish a dialogue with Communist China and that if China thought that it could obtain what it desired in Taiwan even if this was many years away, it might then put pressure on Hanoi by reducing military supplies to that government and thereby helping to end the war in Vietnam.

One of the Canadian delegates asked the U.S. side to define the current U.S. objectives in Vietnam. A U.S. delegate indicated that it was the objective of the U.S. to find a way of terminating the conflict but we have found no set way of accomplishing this aim. In response to a suggestion as to the possibility of a Korean-type settlement, the U.S. delegate indicated that a Korean-type settlement was entirely acceptable.

U.S. policy was then reviewed and a U.S. delegate pointed out that the policy of the U.S. in Vietnam to resist the aggression from the north had not changed.

A Canadian delegate asked why the U.S. could not accept the suggestion of U.N. Secretary General U Thant that the bombing be terminated and assume that the U.N. Secretary General was correct in his report that discussions would follow within two weeks thereafter. The U.S. delegate reviewed the results of previous bombing pauses and the frustration which these had meant for U.S. efforts to obtain a peaceful solution. In all cases, North Vietnam had taken advantage of the bombing pauses to resupply its own people and the long bombing pause in early 1966 had failed to lead to any meaningful discussions in spite of the fact that all possible intermediaries had been urged to seek a solution. One U.S. delegate pointed out that peace was difficult to obtain with the Communist world. Even in Korea there was no negotiated peace 15 years after the war had ended. Every proposal which had been made had been flatly rejected. One member of the U.S. delegation wanted to clarify that in spite of the dissent and debate currently in progress in the U.S. and particularly in the U.S. Congress, not a single U.S. Presidential candidate was advocating unilateral U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam. This U.S. delegate recapitulated the positions of the two Democratic candidates for the Presidency who are opposed to President Johnson's Vietnam policy and showed that the positions of Senators Kennedy and McCarthy did not involve a unilateral withdrawal but only a reduction in the conflict and a call for greater activity by the South Vietnamese forces. It was pointed out that the major thrust of the Administration's policy in Vietnam was also a reduction in the conflict and a phasing out of the war. So far Hanoi has not responded to this desire.

One U.S. delegate clarified the cause of the frustration of the American people and pointed out that millions of people were involved both with the soldiers in Vietnam and the potential draftees but in spite of these frustrations, it seemed clear to the members of the U.S. delegation that there has to be a meaningful response from North Vietnam before the bombing could simply be stopped. The U.S., it was pointed out, cannot take the initiative if the other side does not respond. The suggestion that Canada could act as an intermediary if through her contacts she was able to bring about discussions with the North Vietnamese was again reiterated. One member of the U.S. delegation also informed the Committee of the plan suggested by a number of Members of the U.S. Congress for a phased de-escalation of the bombing provided there were verifiable reciprocal responses on the part of the North Vietnamese.

In conclusion, it was recognized that there were no easy, ready solutions to be offered, that it would be necessary to explore every avenue of a possible termination to the conflict and that there was recognition of the desirability, as suggested by one member of the Canadian delegation, of reaching and communicating directly with the Communist Chinese government in Peking.

There was a consensus in the Committee on the part of the U.S. delegation that the U.S. has certainly the will to end the war in Vietnam. So far we have not summoned a way.

The majority of the Canadian delegates indicated great sympathy with the difficulties of the U.S. in Vietnam and indicated that if Canada could be helpful in any way it would be glad to do so.

Visit to the United States Senate

The following is an excerpt from the Congressional Record of the Senate of the United States of America, March 21, 1968.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY CANADIAN MEMBERS OF THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Aiken: Mr. President, today the Senate is signally favored with a visit from our neighbours to the north—the best neighbours any country could possibly have.

Certainly our long record of an unfortified frontier, our cooperation with Canada in rendering assistance to less fortunate peoples, and the freedom with which we travel each other's country, should be an example in democracy which all nations could well observe and emulate.

While I am not going to call upon each one of them to make a speech to the U.S. Senate, I am going to read the names of our distinguished guests from the Canadian Parliament so that they will appear in our Congressional Record.

Before escorting them into the Chamber, I assured them that they would be able to see at least three or four Senators. I am very proud to say that they have seen 81 out of 100, which is something of a record and most appropriate to tie in with their visit.

(Here Senator Aiken read into the Record the names of the Canadian delegation.)

Senators will note that I have read the names of several Canadian political parties. They have more than we do. They also have more candidates for Prime Minister of Canada than we have for President of the United States. I believe they have 14 candidates for Prime Minister, and we have four or five candidates for President. So they are ahead of us there.

Mr. President, we are very proud to have our Canadian friends visit us here today. They are attending the 11th meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group. We are discussing problems which, in most cases, turn out to be of mutual concern. Our visitors will be in Washington today and tomorrow, and I hope that every Senator will have the opportunity to meet them.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Aiken: I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Dirksen), and myself, I wish to say, on behalf of the Senate, that we join in the welcome which the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont has just extended to our Canadian colleagues of the House of Commons and the Senate. It is good to have such neighbors among us. We learn more from them, I am sure, than they learn from us. We always find their advice and counsel is valuable. We know that we can expect that in a hard and fast manner and on a bedrock basis. We feel we are the recipients of a basically sound and enduring friendship.

So, Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Vermont, the distinguished minority leader, myself, and all the Senate, and as a mark of respect and affection on the part of our colleagues, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for 5 minutes for the purpose of having Members of the Senate greet our Canadian colleagues. (Applause, Senators rising.)

The Presiding Officer: Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon, at (2 o'clock and 31 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess.

Ladies Program

While their husbands participated in the meetings, the wives of the Canadian delegates were escorted on a sight-seeing tour by their American counterparts. After a tour of the Capitol, the ladies visited Mount Vernon before lunch at the Old Club Restaurant. During the afternoon they visited Old Alexandria, including such interesting spots as the Old Apothecary Shop, Ramsay House, Gadsby's Tavern and Christ Church.

On Friday morning the ladies toured the White House and visited Arlington National Cemetery and the Grave of President Kennedy before joining their husbands at Andrews Air Force Base for the flight to New Orleans.

Social Program

The Canadian Delegation were met by their United States colleagues and the Canadian Ambassador at Andrews Air Force Base on arrival in Washington. In the evening a reception was given by the Canadian Ambassador and Mrs. A. E. Ritchie, after which American delegates hosted small dinner parties for their Canadian colleagues at some of the choice eating places in Washington.

On Thursday a luncheon was given at the Capitol by the United States Co-Chairmen, Senator Aiken and Congressman Gallagher. That evening a reception and dinner was given by the United States Delegation at the museum of History and Technology of the Smithsonian Institution. All those present were able to tour the Museum and take advantage of the opportunity to see these renowned exhibits and collections of Americana.

On Friday afternoon both delegations departed for New Orleans. That evening the delegations were guests at a reception given by the Canadian Consul General in New Orleans and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. R. G. MacNeill. After this reception the delegations split into two groups for dinner at two of New Orleans' most famed restaurants—Antoine's and Arnaud's.

The following day the delegations were conducted on an interesting and informative guided tour of the Michoud Facility of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. That evening the United States Delegation hosted a dinner at the Plimsoll Club in the International Trade Mart.

On Sunday a tour was provided of the many historic and interesting places in New Orleans and vicinity. In the late afternoon both delegations returned to Washington where the Canadian Delegation boarded a Canadian Forces Yukon for the return flight to Ottawa.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

Fifth report of Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence—Mr. Wahn.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER AS TO DISCUSSIONS IN WASHINGTON WITH PRESIDENT NIXON

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to report briefly to the house on my recent meeting with the President of the United States.

If I were asked what has been the most significant result of the events of the last two days, I would say without hesitation that it is the fact that the groundwork has been laid for co-operation and consultation between our two governments, which will allow for the holding of consultations at all levels, the official level, the ministerial one and that of the leaders of governments.

[English]

I should report as well the significance, in my view, of the fact that President Nixon set aside some time so early in his new administration to receive the Prime Minister of Canada. No other country is as important to Canada as the United States; it is therefore reassuring to know that we have at this early date established the contacts and fortified the channels of communication so necessary to the effective conduct of our relations.

A number of matters were discussed by the President and myself, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his counterpart Mr. Rogers, and by other officials. These discussions led to a confirmation of the Canadian-United States commitment to the continued expansion and freedom of world trade, to agreement with respect to our community of interest in the expansion of energy movements across our border, and a confirmation of the importance of an early solution to the current wheat marketing problems.

I wish to add that we were given a very full explanation of the reasons which led President Nixon to initiate the Safeguard anti-ballistic missile program, and these I intend to convey to cabinet at the earliest opportunity so that Canada's attitude may be determined.

It was further agreed that a meeting of the joint cabinet committee on trade and economic policy will be held on June 25, 26 and 27.

I do not wish to sit down without saying that I found in President Nixon a warm and understanding friend of Canada, a man with whom I shall be able to speak on behalf of Canadians in a frank yet genial fashion. For this I am very thankful. To further this good beginning I extended to the President and to Mrs. Nixon a warm invitation to visit Canada at their earliest convenience.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I am happy to note that we all look forward to that event and that the house welcomes it.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): My first words are to extend to the right hon. Prime Minister a very warm welcome back to the country and to parliament. This was the first meeting between the Prime Minister and the new President of the United States. In the space of two days, and from their initial encounter it would probably be unrealistic to expect much more than that the leaders of the two governments should exhange views on important subjects that are of mutual concern to the countries, and that they would establish a relationship as leaders of governments which could easily be drawn upon in the future to our mutual advantage. I think it is quite apparent from what has been said that the Prime Minister and Mr. Nixon have begun to establish this kind of relationship. This is a very constructive development.

At least two serious economic problems were discussed, oil and wheat. It was apparently agreed to hold meetings at the official level between the two countries to discuss the oil policy. Certainly there is more insecurity and apparently there is a greater danger to the Canadian oil industry today than there has been for ten years or more. The importance of the decision to hold meetings between officials of the Canadian and U.S. governments on this question is obvious enough. I assume that no other consensus was reached by the Prime Minister and the President, and I hope that at some stage we may have some further enlightenment from the Prime Minister as to what proposals, if any, were put forward on behalf of Canada. I suggest that in recent times there has been far too much secrecy about the oil policy. We need to know where we stand. Indeed, I think it would be useful for this house to contribute to the position that the government of Canada should take concerning our petroleum industry.

No serious consideration has been given by the government to the development of a national oil policy and this has certainly caused great concern in western Canada and elsewhere, where the importance of a strong Canadian oil policy is recognized. I hope it will be possible for one of our standing committees to inquire publicly into the requirements of an up to date national oil policy and to call in for consultation representatives of the industry.

On the question of wheat, it was agreed, I gather, that our two countries would press for a meeting of the major exporting countries. Again, this was the obvious decision for Prime Minister and President to take. There is of course a grave situation confronting Canada and our western wheat growers, and I wonder whether as a result of the meetings between the President and the Prime Minister we have in fact agreed on an approach to be taken at such a meeting of exporters and, if not, whether we contemplate coming to some agreement in this regard before the meeting takes place. Our grain exporters and farmers need to know what approach is to be taken, with a view to restoring our position in the world markets. Farmers have experienced a difficult year and they are now trying to make their plans.

The fact that the A.B.M. decision and the meetings in Washington came so close together served to focus attention on the uncertainty which still exists as to the nature of relations between Canada and the United States, particularly in connection with defence. I suggest the Prime Minister has done nothing so far to reduce this uncertainty. He did not indicate when parliament or the country could expect a definite statement with regard to the decision of President Nixon to proceed with the so-called Safeguard A.B.M. system. I suggest to the Prime Minister that he is really running out of excuses to hide behind.

During the discussions in this house on the subject last week, the right hon. gentleman indicated that he wished to remain silent on the question of Canada's stake in this matter, so that he could feel free to condemn the whole policy in the name of humanity and world peace. He also left the impression that the President's decision had been practically sprung upon us and that Canada had been taken almost unaware. I hope we shall be told in due course whether the Prime Minister made it clear to the President of the United States that we expect to be consulted well in advance of such decisions being taken. The fact is, I suggest, that the explanation given by the Prime Minister and the government so far to avoid taking up a position on the question of consultation and on the question of our attitude toward this decision by the United States is really not very convincing. We are entitled to know when the country will be informed as to the government's decision.

A source of disappointment to me also is the absence of any reference to the Nigerian problem. The concern of President Nixon is well known. Statements during his election campaign, money support given to relief efforts since his inauguration, and especially the making available to church relief agencies of government planes at nominal prices—a policy we urged on this government six months ago—are all concrete evidence of the President's concern that the suffering should end. In addition, the President's personal representative has just returned from that part of Africa to report on the relief situation in Biafra and, incidentally, to condemn Nigerian attacks on non-military targets.

I express the hope that the Prime Minister will use the good rapport he has established with President Nixon to ensure frequent contact with him in connection with this grave problem. I submit that plans should be made jointly to see that the airstrip to be built by Canairelief is in fact made operational. Planning should start now at government level to ensure that the most effective use possible is made of this strip, and joint Canada-United States initiative taken to slow down or halt the flow of arms.

It is our suggestion that the Prime Minister now make up for lost time in this area and use his newly forged links with President Nixon in a constructive way. But above all, I hope that the government of this country will work closely and press forward keenly on the two great sources of economic concern in this country, the restoration of some stability with regard to the international wheat agreement, and the achievement of a satisfactory continental oil policy between our two nations.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all welcome the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back to Canada and to this house. We are all glad that he has established a friendly rapport with the President of the United States, though he probably regrets that the White House had no banisters for the Prime Minister to demonstrate his skills in the art of making a backward descent, without hurting himself. However, we are pleased he made such a favourable impression both on the President and on the people of the United States.

Former President John F. Kennedy once said of Canada and the United States that geography has made us neighbours and history has made us friends, and we all want it to continue that way. However, if friends are to treat each other on the basis of equality rather than of master and servant, then it is absolutely essential that there be the utmost frankness in exchanges of views, and also independence on the part of both parties.

The Prime Minister's statement today disappoints me, since he has said very little about some of the matters that were under discussion in Washington. On Monday last, when I asked the Acting Prime Minister about the evidence given by Mr. Melvin Laird, Defence Secretary of the United States, before the foreign relations committee of the United States Senate, the Acting Prime Minister said that a statement would be made shortly. I do not know whether the Prime Minister's statement today is supposed to be that statement, but if that is so it gives us no information whatsoever.

The fact is that the government has been less than frank with this parliament and the Canadian people with respect to the construction of an A.B.M. system in the United States. In the evidence that Mr. Laird gave before the foreign relations committee, he said in answer to a question about whether or not the Sentinel and Safeguard systems had been cleared with Canada:

> —we did not think it was necessary to clear the change in locations, once we had the agreement on the use of the Sentinel system.

Further on in his evidence, in reply to Senator Fulbright, he said:

> —I can assure you that we have a working agreement with our friends in Canada and I do know that this was cleared.

It seems to me that the Prime Minister has a responsibility to tell this parliament whether or not there was an agreement between Canada and the United States with respect to the Sentinel system.

I see the Prime Minister shaking his head. Am I to assume, then, that Defence Secretary Laird does not know what he is talking about?

• (2:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Now he is nodding his head.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Now the Prime Minister is nodding his head. I want to know if he told the President of the United States that the President's Defence Secretary was making statements before a Congressional committee that are not in accordance with facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I am sure he knows the limitations imposed on his comments at this time under the provisions of Standing Order 15. That Standing Order allows a spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government to comment briefly, subject to certain limitations, one of those being that the comments should not be designed to provoke debate at this stage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was not desirous of provoking debate but merely of eliciting information which this house is entitled to have. When the Prime Minister comes back from Washington, telling us nothing about the commitments if any which Canada has made with respect to the A.B.M. system and, in order to obtain information, we have to read the transcript of evidence taken before a Congressional committee, we face a very sad state of affairs. It is not good enough for us to depend on the Prime Minister's moving his head from left to right or up and down in our efforts to obtain information.

Prime Minister's Meeting in Washington

On the question of the A.B.M. system the Prime Minister said these words during a press conference in Washington:

I have more information, but the moral and political questions are no closer to being settled than a week ago.

The question of whether the construction of an A.B.M. system will trigger a nuclear arms race is of vital importance to the people of this country and of the world, and I hope the Prime Minister will be prepared to make a statement fairly soon on this matter. The matter is being discussed in the United States Congress and I think the people who are making decisions in this momentous field have a right to know where the Canadian government stands.

To turn to other matters, we have not had much information yet about any oil policy that was discussed. I notice that Senator William Proxmire of the United States referred to a secret agreement. As far as we are concerned, it was secret until a short time ago. We need to know more about this oil policy. Our present oil policy means that we are completely at the mercy of the whims of the United States and the United States oil industry. I hope we will have a full scale debate on oil policy and that the government will give us some idea of where it stands.

I am sorry the Prime Minister was not able to give us some assurance with respect to the International Grains Arrangement and tell us whether the President of the United States is prepared to give an undertaking that the United States will observe the price ranges set out in the International Grains Arrangement, and whether the United States will join with Canada in exercising all the influence it can upon other wheat exporting countries to try to make sure that they, too, will abide by the terms and conditions of that arrangement.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by expressing the hope that as a result of these discussions in Washington, Canada and the United States will be able to resolve some of these problems, and to work out harmonious relations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I trust there have been no under-the-table deals and that we will not get concessions on our oil policy and wheat marketing policy by agreeing to the establishment of an antiballistic missile system on this continent.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is back from his trip to the United States where he met the President of the neighbouring republic. We are also happy to note that he has acquired some experience from that trip.

From the little he told the house today, I believe that this exchange of views with the President of the United States has been as fruitful as we could hope.

We venture to think that the Prime Minister has expressed the desire of all Canadians to become more and more economically self-sufficient, while keeping friendly political and trading relations with that nation, the political, economic and military power of which cannot be ignored.

We also believe that the meetings of these last two days must have dealt with commercial and defence matters, defence not only of the United States, but of the whole North American continent.

The Prime Minister told us that relations had been strongly initiated and that in a few days, after he has reported to his Cabinet—the logical way to proceed I would say—we will get the chance to discuss the matter openly in this house.

I hope the Prime Minister was determined and confident enough to make that Southern giant understand that we would reluctantly accept that such a highly civilized country use its power to impose its views.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that any action of the American government aimed at defending its territory should be taken with Canada in mind, because it has its own importance for the United States.

• (2:30 p.m.)

We have often heard, but more so in recent years, some flamboyant statements at the United Nations, NATO or at interparliamentary meetings, that a country should not interfere with another country's business.

The United States are just one of those who made such statements, but unfortunately they often interfere in other countries' business without consulting them in advance.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a long speech on the results of the discussions which took place these last few days, as the Prime Minister's statement was rather brief. When the time comes, we should have the opportunity to express our views on the subjects discussed with President Nixon.

However, we hope that this arms race undertaken by the two great powers and other countries will come to an end, so that Europe and America will no longer be under threat of destruction.

I believe that the means of defence contemplated will protect us from such a disaster, and if Canada could be useful in contributing to defensive measures in order to avoid a conflict, we should do so. Above all, it would be very useful, I think, if Canada could be one of the first countries to start negotiations with a view to preserving peace and allowing us to keep on developing means for a decent living, instead of means of destruction.

FINANCE

TABLING OF REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1968

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have tabled today copies in English and in French of the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968. As the house is aware, the Financial Administration Act requires that the report of the Auditor General be laid before the house on or before the 31st day of December or, if parliament is then not in session, within 15 days after the commencement of the next ensuing session. The Auditor General has asked me to express his apologies to members of the house for the delay.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TABLING OF WOODS REPORT

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I would like to table copies in English and in French of the report of the task force on labour relations. I would also point out to the house that I prefer not to make a detailed statement at the same time in view of the fact that the opposition parties, and in particular their labour critics, have not had an ample opportunity to study this report in depth. However, I would like to take advantage of Standing Order 41(2) to table along with the report a very short and non-controversial statement which does not deal with the recommendations of the Woods report.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. My understanding is that the Minister of Labour was not making a statement. I am not sure whether he presented a non-statement to the house, but if my interpretation is correct, under our Standing Orders there should be no statement by any member of other parties.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Speaker, I will not trespass on your ruling, except to point out that I did receive a copy of the report and that I was ready to reply to the minister today. However I shall reserve that for a later date.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CENTENNIAL ENTERTAINERS

Question No. 639—Mr. McCleave:

1. Which Canadian groups of classical and popular entertainers were sponsored by the Centennial Commission on national tours during 1967?

2. Which of these paid their way, in gate receipts, and which were subsidized by the Treasury, and in what amounts?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. Les Feux Follets, Anne of Green Gables, Holiday Theatre, Don Messer Jubilee, National Ballet, National Youth Orchestra, Neptune Theatre, Théâtre du Nouveau Monde, Théâtre du Rideau Vert, Stratford Festival, Best of Barkerville, Ian and Sylvia, Monique Leyrac, Gordon Lightfoot, 100 Year of Musical Comedy, Les Chansonniers, Jean-Pierre Ferland, Ginette Reno and Donald Lautrec, The Travellers.

2. The Centennial Commission, through its Festival Canada Agency, paid travelling expenses, productions costs and a portion of the ticket subsidy for groups and individuals on national tour during 1967. The ticket subsidy was shared with the provinces and was intended to provide this entertainment to as many people as possible at popular prices. As the ticket prices were much lower than the normal commercial rates for each performance, no off-setting revenue was expected or received.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT SITE

Question No. 1,507—Mr. Robinson:

1. Has a committee been appointed to study the locations available for an additional site for the Toronto International Airport?

2. If so, have any meetings been held?

3. When will the Department of Transport be able to advise as to the selection of the additional site and the anticipated construction schedule?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. No committee has been appointed but an informal working group has been established with the Province of Ontario to identify areas of primary interest and responsibilities.

2. Yes.

3. The substantial research and analysis of all aspects of the subject may require a year or more before a site can be selected and construction scheduled.

WINNIPEG—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION POSITIONS

Question No. 1,540—Mr. Paproski:

1. Are there a number of positions in the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices in Winnipeg which have been or are about to be declared redundant?

2. If so, how many positions are involved?

3. How many of those affected have had (a) over five years' service in the Public Service (b) over ten years' service (c) over fifteen years' service?

4. What is the general reason attributed for the redundancy of the positions and will alternative employment be found for each of those affected?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The Unemployment Insurance Commission advises: 1. Yes.

2. As of February 24, 1969, there was a total of 23 employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Winnipeg who were being declared redundant. Four were at the Prairie Regional Office and 19 at the Winnipeg Area Office.

3. In the Regional Office, one of the four redundant employees has over five years of service. In the Area Office, (a) two; (b) eight; (c) six.

4. Six employees in the Area Office are redundant because the functions of Limited Authority Officer and Special Interviewer have been discontinued. The remaining 17 employees are redundant because of new methods and procedures which have been instituted and the decentralization to area offices of the Adjudication, Audit, and Investigations functions.

The Commission is making every effort to locate suitable alternate employment. A Job Search Program has been established at each Region and contacts are made regularly with prospective employers, the Public Service Commission, the provincial Civil Service, the Canada Manpower Centres, and other government departments concerning possible employment opportunities.

A number of positions within the Unemployment Insurance Commission are available or will be available to redundant staff if the employees are willing either to transfer to some other location (with the usual relocation expenses being provided) or, in some cases, accept a lower grade position. While it cannot be guaranteed that all 23 redundant employees will be placed in other employment, the placement results of the past several months would give reason for some optimism in this regard.

QUEBEC—ST. LAWRENCE RIVER CABLES

Question No. 1,544—Mr. Dumont:

1. Since 1965, have telephone cables between the North and South shores of the St. Lawrence River in the Port of Quebec been damaged by ships and, if so, on what occasions?

2. For the years 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968, does the National Harbours Board have any record of the claims by the Bell Telephone Company against the owners of these vessels and, if so, what amounts has the Company claimed?

3. Does the National Harbours Board consider that such communication cables between Lévis and Quebec City are a serious obstacle to vessels mooring or manoeuvring in the harbour, particularly in the bad ice conditions and strong westerly winds prevailing in spring and fall and, if so, what steps will the Board take to have these cables removed?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, on two occasions. On December 3, 1966 by the vessel Texaco Oregon, and on December 11, 1968 by the vessel Salamina.

2. No.

3. No. Chart 1321 of the Canadian Hydrographic Service indicates the location of submarine cables and the prohibited anchorage area over the cables. The official anchorage area is located southwest of the cables, and when correctly attended there should be no accidents between ships and submarine cables.

3. What is the age, length, beam, vehicle capacity, passenger capacity, speed and power of this vessel?

4. What type of power plant does this vessel have?

5. How many propellers does she have, and does she have any special equipment for manoeuvering and docking?

6. What is the estimated cost of modifications and/or installation of special equipment, if any, to be installed in this vessel before it goes into service?

7. Is this vessel capable of carrying railway cars?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport):

1. Purchase price $3.972 million.

2. No.

3. Built in 1965, 261 ft. 9 ins. long, beam of 53 ft. 2 ins., vehicle capacity of 100 autos, and a passenger capacity of 500. Service speed of the vessel is 17½ knots and the engines develop 6,000 brake horse power.

4. Deutz diesel engines with direct drive.

5. Two controllable pitch propellors and a bow thruster for manoeuvering.

6. $300,000.

7. No.

MRS. SICOTTE—DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT AIRCRAFT

1. Was Mrs. Giles Sicotte a passenger on any trip on a Department of Transport plane between September, 1963 to the present?

2. Was a Department of Transport aircraft provided for Mrs. Sicotte alone at any time during this period?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport):

1. Flight records of the Department of Transport, which are only retained for a three-year period, indicate that Mrs. Gilles Sicotte was a passenger, on a "space available" basis, on the following three flights since April 1, 1965: November 14, 1967, Ottawa to New York; May 25, 1968, Ottawa to Montreal; September 21, 1968, Ottawa to St. Hubert.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ADJUSTMENT PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,583—Mr. Anderson:

For the years 1967-68, 1968-69 and 1969-70, what are the estimated costs associated with basic fiscal transfer and adjustment payments made to each province for post-secondary education, under terms of Part II of Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1967?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State):

The accompanying table shows present estimated costs associated with payments to the provinces under terms of Part II of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1967.

The Act, which became effective with the 1967-68 fiscal year, provides for federal transfers of fiscal resources to assist the provinces in meeting the rising costs of post-secondary education. It made provision for a province to receive for 1967-68 the higher of $15 per capita of population or 50% of eligible operating expenditures for post-secondary education incurred in the province. The Act also provided that, for the years 1968-69 to 1971-72 inclusive, each province originally on the per capita basis (Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick) would have its basic (i.e. 1967-68) transfer increased from year to year at the national rate of increase in eligible post-secondary education operating costs until the 50 per cent basis became more advantageous. Any province on the 50 per cent basis continues on that arrangement and cannot switch to the per capita (escalated) formula.

The total of the transfer of fiscal resources is made up of three elements: (i) tax abatements of 4 per cent of the individual income tax and 1 per cent of corporation taxable income; (ii) that portion of the general revenue equalization payments which is related to the special tax abatements for the post-secondary education program; and (iii) a cash adjustment payment.

Thus, the total of (i), (ii) and (iii) is equal to a province's entitlement under either the 50 per cent or the per capita (escalated) formula. Note that (ii) is applicable only in those cases where provinces receive payments under the general revenue equalization formula authorized in Part I of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

As final figures for eligible provincial post-secondary education operating expenditures will not be available before April, 1969 for 1967-68, before 1970 for 1968-69, and before 1971 for 1969-70, the figures in Column 1 are based on provincial estimates as noted in footnote 1.

Periodic estimates of the value of income tax abatement and equalization payments are made by the Department of Finance and the totals shown for them in the table (Column 6) are the latest available. Further changes in these estimates would, of course, alter the value of the adjustment payments which are made by the Department of the Secretary of State (Column 7). Final payment adjustments for all years will be made when final eligible post-secondary education operating expenditure and fiscal transfer figures are available.

[1]Eligible post-secondary education operating expenditure estimates for 1967–68 and 1968–69 were submitted by most provinces in 1968. For the initial 1969–70 estimates shown, which will be revised shortly when more precise provincial estimates are available, the 1968–69 figures were increased by 25 per cent.

[2]For 1967–68: $15 multiplied by 1967 population. For 1968–69, the total transfer for each of the three original $15 per capita provinces was increased in proportion to the national increase in estimated expenditures from 1967–68 to 1968–69 (i.e. by just over 25 per cent). For the 1969–70 estimates, a 25 per cent increase over 1968–69 was used.

[3]The figures for 1967–68 include final Department of Finance estimates of the tax abatements (made in March 1969) and preliminary estimates of equalization payments (made in July 1967). The 1968–69 values shown are March 1969 preliminary estimates made by the Department of Finance. The 1969–70 preliminary estimates were made by the Department of Finance in December 1968.

[4]These are not provincially-submitted estimates.

[5]$108 million was paid during the 1967–68 fiscal year. An estimate of the balance required for 1967–68 is included in the 1968–69 Estimates and is expected to be paid before the end of the 1968–69 fiscal year.

*GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES IN EACH PROVINCE

Question No. 1,596—Mr. Woolliams:

1. How much money was paid by the federal government to each of the provinces of Canada by way of grants to the universities situated in those said provinces?

2. In 1968, did any province refuse to accept federal grants to universities?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): 1. By the terms of part II of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1967, the federal government began in the 1967-68 fiscal year to transfer fiscal resources to the provincial governments to assist them in meeting the rising costs of post-secondary education generally. These transfers replace the University Grants program which was terminated after 1966-67.

The latest estimated values of these transfers (consisting of tax abatements of 4 per cent of individual income tax and 1 per cent of corporation taxable income, and cash adjustment payments) for the 1968-69 year are: Newfoundland, $9,398,000; Prince Edward Island, $2,049,000; Nova Scotia, $19,673,000; New Brunswick, $11,634,000; Quebec, $133,050,000; Ontario, $195,700,000; Manitoba, $21,953,000; Saskatchewan, $21,354,000; Alberta, $45,984,000; British Columbia, $41,466,000; Total, $502,261,000.

The extent to which these transferred resources are used by the provinces for the support of universities is, of course, a matter for provincial authorities to decide.

2. In 1968-69 all provinces received these transferred resources.

PRINTING OF "SENTINEL"

Question No. 1,599—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many copies of the March 1969 issue of "Sentinel", the Canadian Forces magazine, Volume 5, Number 3, were printed?

2. How many paid subscriptions were in effect as at publication date (a) inside North America at $2.50 per year (b) outside of North America at $3.50 per year?

3. How many copies of that issue were distributed free of charge?

4. What were the costs of production of that issue as to (a) editorial content (b) paper (c) printing (d) other?

5. What category of mail is "Sentinel" classed as, by the Post Office and what was the total charge levied by the Post Office for mailing that issue (a) in North America and (b) outside of North America?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. 56,500.

2. (a) 1,708; (b) 80.

3. 52,268. The Canadian Forces' magazine "Sentinel", and its French counterpart "La Sentinelle", is an internal information medium and the majority of these free copies are distributed to bases, stations and to units wherever Canadian Forces personnel are stationed. Approximately 22,000 copies go by mail, the balance being shipped through Canadian Forces distribution channels.

4. (a) The editorial staff of these magazines consists of: two majors, one captain, one lieutenant, one master warrant officer, two civilian clerks, and one typist.

Some copy is contributed by others than the staff. As the content for a particular issue is prepared well in advance of its publication at the same time as other material is being prepared, it is not possible to provide a cost for the editorial content of the March issue with any degree of accuracy.

(b), (c) and (d) Commercial printers do not detail costs regarding paper, composition, printing, etc., on their invoices. Total cost of production was $12,220.63. This figure includes the cost of paper, printing and other manufacturing costs.

5. The "Sentinel" is in the "second class mail" category. Postage for all publications mailed from Public Printing and Stationery Department is paid for quarterly, in bulk. The cost of postage for an individual issue is therefore not available.

FURNITURE RETAILER BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 1,630—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs intend to take steps to determine the reason for the number of bankruptcies among furniture retailers during the first nine months of 1968?

[Translation]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Bankruptcy Act requires that a bankrupt be examined under oath by the official receiver in order to determine, among other things, the causes of the bankruptcy. Also, the trustee is required to file a confidential report with the Superintendent of Bankruptcy informing him of the causes of the bankruptcy and if, in his opinion, the deficiency between the assets and liabilities of the bankrupt has been satisfactorily accounted for.

If, as a result of the examination of the debtor by the official receiver, or the trustee's report, or again complaints received from creditors, the Superintendent of Bankruptcy has reasonable grounds to believe that an offence was committed to the Bankruptcy Act or to any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, an investigation is immediately initiated to determine if there is sufficient evidence to warrant the laying of charges before the courts.

1. How many NATO students have been trained during the following years: 1964-65, 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 at all Canadian Forces Bases in Canada?

2. Has this training program been cancelled and, if so, for what reason?

3. Are countries that formerly used Canadian Bases for training NATO students now sending their students to the United States for training?

4. What did Canada charge for the training of each NATO student for each of the following years: 1964-65, 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): "NATO students" are assumed to mean members of the armed forces of NATO member countries except Britain and the United States who have separate reciprocal agreements with Canada concerning training. 1. By Calendar Year: 1964, 98; 1965, 81; 1966, 66; 1967, 61; 1968, 55. In addition, a few vacancies for foreign officers to attend the Staff College at Kingston were offered to NATO countries. Pay and allowances, clothing, transportation to Canada and other personal expenses of a similar character were borne by the home country, with Canada providing transportation within Canada, normal hospital and medical services, as well as the cost of training. The numbers involved were: 1963-65, 2; 1965-66, 2; 1966-67, 3; 1967-68, 4.

2. The agreements concluded in July, 1964, providing for training of aircrew personnel from Denmark and Norway, expired on 30 June, 1968, and have not been renewed. The reasons are a matter for the Danish and Norwegian governments.

3. Not known.

ELLIOT LAKE—C.M.H.C. SALES

Question No. 1,638—Mr. Foster:

1. How many single family houses have been sold by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Elliot Lake in each of the past six years?

2. What was the average initial cost of the houses sold in each year?

3. What was the average cost of rehabilitating the houses sold in each year and what was the average selling price of the houses sold each year?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. 1963, 2; 1964, 2; 1965, 63; 1966, 162; 1967, 342; 1968, 273.

2. These houses were financed under the National Housing Act and were subsequently acquired by reason of mortgage default. Corporation records do not show initial cost of the houses. However, before a loan was granted a valuation was placed by the Corporation on each house specifically for setting of the loan amount. This value is considered to be a fair approximation of initial cost. The average original lending value for the houses sold in each year follows: 1963, $11,750; 1964, $11,925; 1965, $12,681; 1966, $12,405; 1967, $12,559; 1968, $12,377.

3. As Corporation records for Elliot Lake are maintained on a project basis, it is not possible to accurately relate rehabilitation costs to a specific house. It is, however, estimated that rehabilitation costs for the houses sold in each year averages as follows: 1963, $200; 1964, $200; 1965, $200; 1966, $500; 1967, $2,100; 1968, $3,900.

The progressive increase in costs is due to the fact that the units in the best condition were sold first and those which had been vacant for prolonged periods, or those which required extensive repairs were held from sale until the later years.

The average selling price of the houses sold each year is as follows: 1963, $10,125; 1964, $10,125; 1965, $11,000; 1966, $10,590; 1967, $10,840; 1968, $11,470.

KENT, ONTARIO, POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 1,641—Mr. McCutcheon:

Under the government's reorganization plan involving the closing of small post offices, what post offices are scheduled for closing in the County of Kent, Ontario, and on what dates?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office is concerned: The following Post Offices are being studied for possible closing: Bear Line, Becher, Croton, Dover Centre, Duart, Kent Bridge, Mitchells Bay, Muirkirk, Mull, Northwood, Walpole Island, Wilkesport.

No decision has been made on any case as yet.

Records are not maintained in such a way as to be readily available by County, therefore, the above list is for the constituency of Lambton-Kent rather than the County of Kent.

MRS. SICOTTE—INDEBTEDNESS FROM CUSTOMS DUTIES

Question No. 1,643—Mr. Lewis:

1. (a) Does Mrs. Gilles Sicotte or Stoa Galleries Limited, of which she was President, owe the Department of National Revenue a sum of money for customs duties or other charges (b) if so, how much does the said Mrs. Sicotte or Stoa Galleries Limited owe and since what date (c) what steps have been taken to collect such debt?

2. (a) Is the government aware of any outstanding criminal charge or charges against Mrs. Gilles Sicotte laid in Switzerland (b) if so, what was the nature of such charge or charges (c) were extradition proceedings commenced arising out of such charge or charges and, if so, what was the disposition of such proceedings?

3. (a) Is there any information available about charges laid against Mrs. Gilles Sicotte in Middleburg, N.Y. (b) if so, what were the nature and disposition of such charges?

4. (a) Was Mrs. Gilles Sicotte threatened with deportation from Mexico in 1954 and did she leave that country under such threat (b) was Mrs. Gilles Sicotte deported from Mexico in 1956 and, if so, what were the grounds for such deportation (c) did Mrs. Gilles Sicotte return to Mexico between 1954 and 1956 and were any representations made to the Mexican authorities by any officer in the External Affairs Department or any other department of the Canadian government with respect to her return to that country (d) if such representations were made, who was the officer who made them (e) was any inquiry or investigation made into Mrs. Gilles Sicotte's activities in, and the reasons for her deportation from Mexico and, particularly, were inquiries made of Mr. Arcadio Ojeda, Chief of Mexican Immigration at the time?

5. What steps has Air Canada taken to enforce the court order obtained on or about May 13, 1968 against Mrs. Gilles Sicotte with respect to a debt of some three thousand dollars owed by her to Air Canada?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) and (b) An aggregate net amount of $711.86 is owed to the Department of National Revenue by Stoa Galleries Limited for customs duties and excise taxes; (c) Normal collection procedure was followed up to the time Stoa Galleries Limited was declared bankrupt on November 28, 1966. Proof of claim was filed on January 12, 1967 with the Trustee in Bankruptcy. No funds were available to reimburse the Department of National Revenue.

2. (a) and (b) Available information indicates that Mrs. Sicotte was charged in Switzerland in late 1966 or early 1967 with alleged fraud involving the issuance of a cheque for the purchase of certain antique articles; (c) The Swiss authorities have not instituted extradition proceedings, but information received in late 1968 indicates that Mrs. Sicotte is still the subject of an inquiry for fraud committed in Geneva and that the case remains open.

3. The government has no information about charges laid against Mrs. Gilles Sicotte in Middleburg, N.Y. Available information indicates that Mrs. Gilles Sicotte was indicted by the June 1967 Term of Grand Jury of Herkimer County, N.Y. "for the issuance of a fraudulent cheque and grand larceny in the second degree". Full restitution was made on behalf of the defendant to an antique shop in Middleville, New York. The indictment was dismissed.

4. (a) Mrs. Sicotte was asked by the Mexican authorities on or about May 17, 1954 to leave Mexico because she was in the country illegally. She agreed to leave. No deportation order was issued against her. According to oral information subsequently received by the Canadian Embassy in Mexico, the basis for declaring her to be in the country illegally was that she had violated immigration rules by working as a nurse; (b) Mrs. Sicotte was asked by the Mexican authorities in 1956 to leave Mexico. She agreed to leave. The Canadian Embassy in Mexico was orally informed at that time that a deportation order had been issued against her on July 27, 1956. She was escorted to the border by Mexican officials, and entered the United States on July 30, 1956. The Canadian Embassy was subsequently informed orally that, although the official grounds for deportation were violations of Mexican immigration and labour laws, action to deport Mrs. Sicotte was also based in part on allegations that she had been trafficking illegally in drugs and smuggling medical instruments; (c) and (d) No official representations were made to the Mexican authorities by any officer of the Department of External Affairs or any other Department of the Canadian Government with respect to Mrs. Sicotte's return to that country. In March of 1954 Mr. Gilles Sicotte, then an officer of the Department of External Affairs, wrote a personal letter to a Mexican immigration official seeking clarification of Mrs. Sicotte's status as a visitor to Mexico. Some months later Mr. Sicotte telephoned the same official, again in a personal capacity, requesting permission for Mrs. Sicotte to re-enter Mexico for continued medical treatment in that country; (e) Yes. Investigations were made into Mrs. Gilles Sicotte's activities in and the reasons for her leaving Mexico. In particular, inquiries were made of Mr. Arcadio Ojeda.

5. The following information has been provided by Air Canada. "On June 19, 1968 Air Canada's legal agents in Ottawa were instructed to initiate judgment debtor proceedings against Mrs. Sicotte. They were not successful in serving her. Again on October 7, 1968 our legal agents in Ottawa were given further instructions to serve Mrs. Sicotte with the process. Although they have not yet been successful, the amount of the judgment has been reduced, through partial payment, to a total of $2,411.88 plus $78.00 costs and interest. Legal proceedings are continuing."

Question No. 1,650—Mr. Caouette:

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Amounts paid to the chartered banks to cover the cost of cashing interest coupons from Canada Savings Bonds are not recorded separately from these amounts in respect of all Government of Canada issues. Payments to chartered banks to cover the cost of redeeming Canada Savings Bonds are made quarterly in arrears and the amounts paid in 1967 and 1968 for this purpose were $1,050,-253.88 and $1,111,921.70 respectively. It has not been the practice nor is it considered appropriate to detail these amounts for each chartered bank.

HUNGARIAN IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 1,674—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many Hungarians were allowed to immigrate to Canada after the Hungarian revolt?

2. In what provinces and what large cities did they locate?

3. Was there any screening of the immigrants to determine previous criminal records?

4. How many have been convicted of criminal offenses in Canada and what were the offenses for which convictions were registered and what was the penalty meted out in each case?

5. How many have been convicted of criminal offenses in (a) Toronto (b) Montreal?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. From November 1956, when the first of these people began to arrive in Canada, up to May 31, 1959 when the Department ceased to identify them separately in its statistical records, 37,096 Hungarian refugees were granted landed immigrant status in this country.

2. The distribution by province of intended destination of these refugees was as follows: Newfoundland, four; Prince Edward Island, 11; Nova Scotia 1,315; New Brunswick, 988; Quebec, 9,634; Ontario, 12,245; Manitoba, 3,467; Saskatchewan, 989; Alberta, 3,635; British Columbia, 4,806 and the Yukon and Northwest Territories, two. No figures are available showing the city of intended destination of these refugees.

3. Initially, Hungarian refugees were subject to full immigration screening. However as the flood of refugees increased, the situation became acute and the Canadian Government decided to waive its normal immigrant security checks for these refugees except where the examining officer abroad had reason to suspect that such checks should be carried out. This was done in order to speed up their arrival in Canada since the task of caring for them was far beyond the capacity of the countries in which they sought haven.

4 and 5. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no statistics concerning the incidence of crime amongst these people in Canada.

However, the Philatelic Service makes every effort to ensure that all collectors have an equitable opportunity to obtain each new issue stamp through its facilities and the Philatelic Service would not knowingly allow one collector to obtain excessive quantities of any new issue stamp before the stamp has been available to all collectors for a reasonable period of time.

2. (a) 1,497; (b) none; (c) 2,951.

Selection of candidates is based on proficiency tests. Men are selected prior to non-commissioned officer training and officers prior to attendance at Staff School; (c) two 24 week Formal French Language courses a year for English speaking officers and non-commissioned officers. This training is voluntary and candidates are normally selected prior to being appointed to a position requiring a bilingual capability or where future employment indicates the need; and (d) occasional special French and English language terminology and/or refresher courses to meet particular needs and specialized requirements.

6. The cost of the bilingual program in the Canadian Forces cannot be accurately determined at this time as records are not maintained in a manner which would provide this data.

Return tabled.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, how long do we have to wait for answers to questions placed on the order paper? My question No. 1,054 has been on the order paper since last December, and I just wonder how long it takes to get an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's wonderment is not a question of privilege.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am past wondering but I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to see whether my question, No. 1,298, tabled on January 31, could not be answered soon, since the information is easily within the availability of members of his department?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask what happened with respect to starred question No. 1687 in the name of the right hon. member for Prince Albert? It would appear to be very easy to answer. It was listed to be answered today, and I think it should be answered today.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I notice that this question calls for an estimate, and I presume the estimating is still under way.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. There is a very easy question in my name, No. 1200, which has been on the Order Paper since January 20. To this date I have not received an answer.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 83, 85 and 87? I ask that the other notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Motions for Papers

MOUNTAINEER MOTEL COMPANY AGREEMENT

Motion No. 83—Mr. Woolliams:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the agreement (lease agreement) between the Mountaineer Motel Company Limited and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which said agreement was disclosed in and referred to in answer to Question No. 1,271.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), I wish to state as follows:

As mentioned in the Minister's answer to Question No. 1271, tabling this lease agreement without written consent of the lessee would constitute a breach of confidence between landlord and tenant. If the hon. member can obtain such written consent from the Mountaineer Motel Company Limited, then he will be pleased to tabled the document. Otherwise it must be treated as a privileged document.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I think this will need to be transferred for debate because the liberal patronage of the Liberals is certainly not going to give me consent in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate pursuant to Standing Order 48.

DISCONTINUANCE OF CHURCH AND OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Motion No. 85—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General from churches, professional organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and private organizations, indicating that as a result of the increase in postal rates they intend to discontinue or curtail their publications.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion asks for a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General from churches, professional organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and private organizations that indicate that as a result of the increase in postal rates they intend to discontinue or curtail their publications. If this motion were adopted, it would be necessary to make a review of hundreds of files because letters were not segregated on the basis of whether or not they suggested that an increase in postal rates would result in either the discontinuance or curtailment of the publication. Such a review would be costly. In view of this fact, perhaps the hon. gentleman would be willing to withdraw his motion.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that newspapers have been filled with reports of various organizations which have announced they have told the Postmaster General they will have to curtail their publication, I am sure, if the minister cannot find the information, I can do it when we discuss the matter at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking that the matter be transferred for debate?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate according to Standing Order 48.

APPLIANCE INDUSTRY REPORT

Motion No. 87—Mr. Howe:

That, an Order of the House, do issue for a copy of the document entitled "Report on the Canadian Appliance Industry in Comparison with the American and European Appliance Industries" prepared by the Departments of Industry and Trade and Commerce and dated December 30, 1968.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that discussions have been held with the hon. member for Wellington-Grey in regard to this motion. The document referred to is not a departmental report but a compilation of information which is the property of the appliance industry, and therefore cannot be made public by the Department. The motion is not acceptable to the government and the minister hopes that the hon. member for Wellington-Grey will withdraw his motion.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to understand how this report, although marked confidential, was made available to the trade. However, in view of the circumstances the parliamentary secretary has stated I will be willing to drop the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, Notice of Motion No. 88 in my name asks for the tabling of all telegrams, correspondence and other documents with regard to the proposal that Canada extend diplomatic recognition to the Vatican. I wonder whether Your Honour would call this so that we might determine whether there is any real good reason not to proceed with the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member inviting the Chair to call the notice of motion?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I would enjoy that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this notice of motion be allowed to stand. It requires inquiry from all aspects of government and obviously this is not yet completed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

A.B.M. PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON ACCEPTANCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and give him an opportunity to make some of the answers he is anxious to give to the house. I would ask him whether there was an agreement between the government of Canada and the United States regarding the Sentinel A.B.M. system. If there was not an agreement, was there in fact acceptance by Canada of the United States going ahead with the Sentinel system or was any protest filed with the United States regarding the Sentinel system.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was neither agreement nor acceptance by the government of Canada concerning the Sentinel system. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) and I have all stated in this house on different occasions, the United States has a working arrangement under which it does keep us informed in a general way of its progress in continental defence.

The United States government has from time to time given us information regarding the Sentinel system. They at no time sought our agreement to their intention to pursue the implementation of that system nor did we give them any such agreement.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister to answer the latter part of my question. Did Canada at any time protest against the United States planning to proceed with the Sentinel system.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker; we did not at any time protest against the plan of the United States to progress with that system. It was entirely within their own territory and within their own jurisdiction.

Mr. Stanfield: Could the Prime Minister tell the house and the country when we may expect a definite statement of position by his government either in acceptance of or the taking of a position against the decision of the President of the United States to proceed with the Safeguard A.B.M. system.

Mr. Trudeau: Not immediately, Mr. Speaker. It will now be part of the input into our review of defence and foreign policy. We will still proceed with our plan to take a position on NATO and other aspects of foreign policy. When we reach the point where we will want to make an announcement of a policy in respect of NORAD we will then go on to state our position on the A.B.M. system. I do not think it will be a matter of days or even weeks. I do not think the urgency for the government to take a position on it can be stated in terms of days or weeks. I believe the Leader of the Opposition knows that the plan as announced by the United States with regard to two sites will only become operational, if it ever does, around 1973. This gives us, as I say, more than a few days or weeks to take our position.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it rather sounds as if the Prime Minister is hoping everybody in Canada will forget about this matter. Will the Prime Minister say what attitude he took in Washington concerning Canada's right to be consulted on a matter such as the Safeguard A.B.M. system. Did the Prime Minister insist upon the right of Canada to be consulted, or did he take the stand he took in this house last week that Canada has no right to expect to be consulted unless it is prepared to participate in the A.B.M. system.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the matter of continental defence I repeat what I said in the answer to the first question: there is a continued consultation for the imparting of information to Canada on what the United States is proceeding with in general terms. Whether the United States should consult with Canada before deciding to proceed with a particular form of continental defence within its own territory is a question I did not raise with the President.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister says there is no agreement between Canada and the United States with regard to the Sentinel A.B.M. system may I ask whether the discussions which took place were merely the passing on of information between the United States government and the Canadian government, and whether this constitutes, to use Mr. Laird's words, an agreement cleared with the Canadian government? Were we merely informed, or was Canada consulted and asked to approve.

Mr. Trudeau: As I stated in reply to the Leader of the Opposition, we were not consulted in the sense that we were asked to agree or disagree. Certain information was conveyed to us and we were told of developments within the United States. We were not asked whether we agreed or disagreed with it, nor did we state whether we agreed or disagreed with it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister. Did the government of Canada express any opinion with respect to the advisability of proceeding in this regard, or the danger that such a step might escalate the nuclear arms race?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In discussion with the President, the Secretary of Defence and other officials we did express our deep concern as to the consequence and effect of the decision announced by the President. This was very much along the same lines that the two ministers and I pursued in this house a few days ago.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Canada apparently was only informed and not consulted, does this mean that we accept the position which Mr. Laird took, to the effect that he did not think the United States should give Canada any veto power or, as Senator Fulbright summed it up, the Canadians could either like it or lump it?

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously the United States does not consider that we should have a power of veto over its decision to proceed or not with an A.B.M. system. Before the government takes a further position in this respect we will, of course, be welcoming any input from the house on these questions. When the parliamentary committee makes a report on this subject there will be occasion, I am sure, for parliament to take a position on this question and many others. We will be looking forward to hearing the position of the opposition parties on this precise point.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Does he consider that the statement by the Secretary of Defence of the United States, Mr. Laird, is correct, when he says that Canada has been kept informed of all decisions taken in connection with the setting up of an ABM system on the American territory?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is asking a question that was put a few moments ago.

[English]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he was informed where the intercepts by the projected A.B.M. sites in the western United States would take place. For the interception of incoming missiles, would the intercepts be over western Canada or over American territory?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, according to the information we received, this system will employ two types of A.B.M.'s, the Spartan and the Sprint. In the case of the Spartan the interceptions will occur outside the atmosphere of the earth. They will not be in our air space. They will be in the outer atmosphere. In the case of the Sprints, because of the location of these two sites in the midwest and because of the short range of the Sprints, it appears that the interceptions would be entirely over United States territory.

Mr. Harkness: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the intercept, as far as the Spartan is concerned, be in the outer atmosphere immediately above Canadian territory?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that it would be outside the earth's atmosphere. It would be in that part of the universe which belongs to no one, except perhaps the angels.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has "heavenly" avoided my question.

Would it be horizontally, straight up from Canadian territory—I mean vertically?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question concerning the North American defence system. I would like to ask him whether Canada is committed or has agreed to allow the American government to use the Canadian bases located in the Canadian Far North, in order to establish an emergency airborne system? Did the government pledge itself to supply those bases or to allow the United States to use such bases on our territory?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to look into the matter. I might ask the Minister of National Defence to answer some day.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Following the cabinet meeting announced for this weekend, will the government's position on this subject and on the other matters of defence be announced whilst the house is sitting, or will this be done during the adjournment period when the house will not be able to comment on such a decision?

Mr. Trudeau: That depends, I suppose, on the agreement which will be reached among the leaders of the various parties as to when the house will adjourn. But it is obvious that if the announcement can be made while parliament is still sitting, we will do it. If not, if it has to be announced during the Easter recess, the house will certainly be given an opportunity to discuss this whole matter at a later date.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. A week ago the Prime Minister told the house that he did not have sufficient information, or the government did not have sufficient information to reach a decision whether to approve or disapprove the position of the United States on the A.B.M. program. Since his visit to Washington, has the Prime Minister acquired sufficient information to make up his mind on this vital issue?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we do have more facts in our possession. It will make any deliberations we have in cabinet more informed. I have more information; cabinet will have more information. I repeat, however, that we are not yet in a position to announce the policy which will flow from this recent acquisition of information.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the apparent difference of viewpoint between the Prime Minister and the United States Secretary of Defence, has the Prime Minister made any inquiries as to whether any of our senior, or junior for that matter, diplomatic or military people in Washington have given any assurances to senior United States officials which will lead to a settlement of this difference of viewpoint?

Mr. Trudeau: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker. But I believe I could repeat what the Acting Prime Minister said on Monday, I think it was, when he said that if there is any difference it is more a matter of semantics than of substance. We have repeated constantly the same position. Secretary of Defence Laird, I believe, stated publicly on television a position which was compatible or in conformity with ours, in which he explained in greater detail what he meant when he had talked about agreement with Canada in his testimony before the senate committee. He was referring, as I understand it, to this ongoing arrangement of continental defence whereby the United States does give Canada information. He was not referring to any agreement under which we might have said: O.K., you can proceed with the Sentinel system.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question for the Prime Minister is this: Why should the cabinet hold any deliberations on the A.B.M. system, if it becomes operational, when the Prime Minister's answer to the hon. member for Calgary Centre a few moments ago indicated that under no conditions would Canadian air space be involved?

Mr. Trudeau: Because we believe that the Canadian government should have a policy with regard not only to its own interests but the interests of humanity at large.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Since this question involves Canada's policy, will the Prime Minister give to the Canadian people that to which he says they are entitled, and announce that policy, which is what everybody is asking for?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will announce that policy. I indicated in reply to a question asked by the hon. member's leader that this would be done as part of the various stages of our review. But I added that we would be very happy to know, of course, the Conservative policy on the A.B.M. system.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I too have a supplementary question which I would like to put to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether any discussion took place between him and President Nixon as to additional sites in northern Canada for the protection of the Canadian people?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, there was no discussion on that particular aspect of defence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the house would agree that we might have one last supplementary question, and then go to another subject.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it arises from the minister's answer in this house on March 19, as recorded at page 6814 of Hansard. The minister said it would be accurate to state that discussions had been held between Canada and the United States relative to the A.B.M. question. My question is: In the light of the Prime Minister's statement today that, although Canada was never consulted in this regard it was informed about the decision, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs look carefully at his answer to see whether he may not wish to correct the mistaken impression that he left with the house on March 19.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will do so, Mr. Speaker, but I see no reason to go back and look at anything I said before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: The Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence and I have all said the same thing. There have been consultations between the United States and Canada in which the United States did not ask us to agree, nor did we take any position. This is very simple and there is nothing more to be said.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind hon. members that there appeared to be agreement in the house that there should be one more supplementary question. However, if the house agrees perhaps the hon. member for Selkirk might be allowed a further supplementary question.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I pose this supplementary question only because the minister has responded facetiously to the question I put to him. My question is: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs look very carefully at his answer at page 6814 of Hansard, which gives the wrong impression.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the further supplementary question is very much like the original supplementary.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO LESS FAVOURED PROVINCES

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister and it is on another subject. It arises from the statement made by Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick that the Prime Minister would be making a statement in the house Thursday or Friday concerning financial assistance to the poorer provinces. Will the Prime Minister say whether any such statement is planned, and whether the government is working on any new policy announcement with regard to the poorer provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of this announcement by Premier Robichaud, but the answer is yes, we are working on regional development along new lines. I believe the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development has spoken extensively of the government's plans in this area. Of course, they will be important for the less developed and less favoured regions of Canada, including New Brunswick.

Mr. Flemming: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister of Finance aware of any negotiations between the premier of New Brunswick and his department concerning special federal assistance?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I did not see the statement of Mr. Robichaud, and I would not like to comment on it until I have seen it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): King Louis is in trouble.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have any approaches been made in recent days to the Minister of Finance or to the government on behalf of the province of New Brunswick concerning the dire possibility of that province's immediate financial bankruptcy?

Mr. Benson: I think that my hon. friend is seriously exaggerating the position of the province of New Brunswick. Continuous consultation is going on at both the official and ministerial levels between the government and the various provinces in Canada.

Mr. Bell: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister himself been approached within the last few days about the particular problem resulting from the recent budget in New Brunswick?

Mr. Benson: If my hon. friend asks whether I spoke to the premier of New Brunswick or to the provincial minister, then my answer is that I have not.

Mr. Stanfield: Finally, the minister gave a straight answer.

OIL

DISCUSSIONS WITH PRESIDENT NIXON AS TO EXPORTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In his discussions with the President of the United States during the last two days, did he ask for and receive an assurance from President Nixon that Canadian exports of oil to the United States would be allowed to increase progressively year by year, as was guaranteed in the first national oil policy established in 1961?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): What the President and I agreed upon was that the across-border movement of energy between Canada and the United States should be discussed at full length at the meeting which will be held in a couple of weeks time, on April 2. All aspects of our oil policy and of the oil policy of the United States will be considered at that joint meeting.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will those conducting the discussions at the time of the meeting press for the same kind of progressively increasing allocation of oil exports to the United States as was agreed to in the original oil policy, an assurance which is so necessary to Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: We will impress upon the United States the importance to them of buying as much good, secure Canadian oil as is possible.

IMPORTS FROM VENEZUELA—CANADIAN MARKET IN NORTHWESTERN UNITED STATES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I, through you, ask the Prime Minister a question. He said everything went very well, yet today there is no firm agreement between Canada and the United States on a settled continental oil policy, on the grounds that we continue to permit Venezuelan oil to come in as far as the western Ottawa valley. At the same time, Canada does not have a guaranteed market in the northwestern United States, in Chicago or Toledo.

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This question has been dealt with at various times by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. At this time, I merely want to say that the President and I reviewed the existing arrangements under which the policy of the United States and Canada with regard to oil and to other forms of energy are devised for the mutual benefit of both countries. We did realize that there was a necessity to review these policies and to improve them if necessary.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Speaking metaphorically in this regard, and having listened to his statement, may I ask the Prime Minister what kind of elephant he was sleeping with in the United States.

An hon. Member: It was not an oily one.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AMENDMENTS TO INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES STATUTE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Is his department preparing any legislation to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and, if so, when might such amendments be expected to be presented to the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have been preparing amendments for some time but we have been holding them in abeyance until we have an opportunity to digest properly the Woods report. The tabling of the Woods report does not mean that these amendments will be brought forward in the very near future. In fact I see no possibility of these amendments being brought before the house in this session.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question. I hope that digesting the Woods report will not do the minister any harm. I should like to ask him whether his answer means that the amendments which are being prepared by his department are not related to the Woods report, do not stem from it or do derive from the suggestions made in the report.

Mr. Mackasey: The report was authorized by the prime minister of the time to provide the department with some guidance and with the observations of the task force which, as hon. members know, is basically and essentially comprised of experienced intellectuals in the field of labour. The legislation proposed may or may not reflect the view of the task force. Certainly, in view of their exhaustive report, their findings should at least be taken into consideration.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

DAVIE SHIPBUILDING LTD., LAUZON—BUILDING OF DESTROYERS

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can he assure the house that the building, by 1970 as announced, of two destroyers by the Davie Shipbuilding Ltd., in Lauzon, will not be postponed?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Dumont: The question is urgent, Mr. Speaker. Ten o'clock.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—AUTHORITY FOR SEARCHES

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, after listening to all the questions on guided missiles today, I have a question for the Solicitor General on certain misguided missiles. Can the minister say on what authority and on whose orders members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are conducting detailed house-to-house searches in the communities of Freshwater, Dunneville and Placentia, three Newfoundland communities adjacent to the U.S. naval base in Argentia.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member might not agree that his question should be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Carter: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter of great urgency and importance to the people of these three Newfoundland communities. They are being subjected to R.C.M.P. searches and their homes are being entered by members of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that there is no point in debating this matter. If there is urgency, which is not apparent to the Chair, perhaps the minister will reply to the question.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Not having received notice of this question, I have no information about the searches to which the hon. member is referring, but I will be glad to inquire into the matter. I would remind the hon. member that in addition to their duties as a federal police force, the R.C.M.P. also perform on a contract basis the police functions which are the responsibility of the provincial government. However I will be glad to look into the matter and see whether I can bring forward an answer. I would appreciate it if the hon. member would give me any information he has on the subject.

Mr. Carter: Can the minister inform the house whether it is the policy of the government to utilize general search warrants and, in this case United States servicemen, in connection with the enforcement of customs excise regulations, and whether the government approves placing Canadian citizens in the position of having to prove their innocence when a police search turns up goods of United States manufacture for which no bill of sale is available?

BANKRUPTCY

FINANCIAL POSITION OF COMMONWEALTH TRUST AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, I directed two questions to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. At that time the parliamentary secretary took them as notice. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to answer them now? The first question was as follows:

In view of the importance of protecting Canada's good name abroad, what action is the minister considering to investigate the financial situation in British Columbia of Commonwealth Trust Company and its associated companies?

And this was the second question:

Has this matter been discussed with the premier of British Columbia?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Three of the companies in what is known as the Commonwealth group have become bankrupt, thereby falling within the jurisdiction of the Bankruptcy Act and of my department. They are: Commonwealth Savings Plan Limited; Commonwealth Acceptance Corporation Limited; and Commonwealth Investors Syndicate Limited.

A meeting of creditors of Commonwealth Savings Plan Limited was held in Vancouver on Monday last to affirm the appointment of a trustee, to appoint inspectors and to give the trustee instructions in connection with the liquidation of the assets. Meetings of creditors of the other two companies will be arranged as soon as possible.

Some two weeks ago, I met personally with the Official Receiver in Vancouver, who is an officer of my department. These bankruptcies are receiving the close attention of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, and should he have any reason to suspect that any offences have been committed either under the Bankruptcy Act or under any statute, the situation will be thoroughly investigated. I am sorry to take so long, Mr. Speaker, but this is an important matter. There have also been discussions between officials of the provincial government of British Columbia and officials of the Department of Finance with regard to the Canadian deposit insurance scheme, any questions about which should be directed to the Minister of Finance.

As to the second question, whether I have discussed this matter with the premier of British Columbia, the answer is, no.

GRAIN

UNITED ACTION OF CANADA AND U.S. AT I.G.A. MEETING

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of his meetings with the President of the United States and having to do with wheat sales and our trading picture generally. Would the right hon. gentleman say that, as a result of the talks, the United States and Canada are prepared to present a united front at the April meeting to discuss the maintaining of the International Grains Arrangement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We did reach agreement to seek respect for the International Grains Arrangement in every way possible, and we agreed to ask whatever friends we have to take this position, too. We want to work as far as at all possible within the framework of that agreement. The Prime Minister of Australia will be in the United States next week and he will also be coming to Canada; both the president and myself intend to bend his ear on this subject.

Mr. Horner: We can assume, then, that the positions taken by this government and by the United States government at this April meeting will be identical?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Since the United States is a signatory to the International Grains Arrangement may I ask the Prime Minister whether the President of the United States indicated to him that the United States would immediately adhere to the conditions set out in that agreement and decline to sell at prices below those set out therein.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Obviously, one cannot answer yes or no to a question of that kind. Perhaps, I should say that it would be unreasonable to ask the United States to adhere to the terms of an agreement, when we ourselves have said we would not do so. The hon. member is aware of the situation in which other countries began to break the letter and the spirit of that agreement, thus obliging nations such as ourselves to follow suit in order to preserve our competitive position. It is this whole problem that the President discussed with me, and which we indicated we would try to solve within the framework of the International Grains Arrangement.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MEDICARE—EFFECT OF PARTICIPATION BY MANITOBA

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that Manitoba will be entering the medicare plan on April 1—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Simpson: They will be sorry.

—can the minister assure the house that medical services available to the Indian people of that province will in no way be adversely affected?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was surprised to hear the comment made by the hon. member in view of the fact that his party voted for the legislation. I would hope that the medical services available to the Indians would be improved.

Mr. Simpson: Bearing in mind the fact that a number of doctors in that province have indicated they will be practising outside the medicare plan, will the Indian people have the services of these doctors available to them, in addition to the services of those who are within the plan?

Mr. Munro: I should like to check into that situation a little further. However I can assure the hon. member that as a result of the tremendous improvements which have taken place in Manitoba, improvements of which I am sure he is well aware, including the participation of the medical school of the University of Manitoba and so on, it seems that the future holds great promise for vastly improved medical care for the Indian people of that province.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time and I wonder whether we might return to the hon. member for Mackenzie who has a supplementary question on the subject about which questions were asked a few moments ago.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POINT ROBERTS—DISCUSSIONS AS TO INTERNATIONAL ASPECTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I wonder if I might address a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as senior minister from beautiful British Columbia. Can he tell us the situation at this time with respect to the talks between the United States and Canada on the subject of the internationalization of the United States area of Point Roberts?

[Mr. Simpson.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a statement which should be made on motions.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Surrey and is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was the question of Point Roberts, and a special treaty between Canada and the United States to resolve some of the problems connected with that subject, a matter for discussion with United States officials yesterday, especially in view of the meeting of the House of Representatives in Washington and members of the legislature of British Columbia in the west?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, there was no specific mention of this in any of the discussions I had with the secretary of state. The Prime Minister, of course, had a general talk about certain areas, such as fishing zones and territorial waters, but did not specifically raise that point.

[Translation]

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT NIXON CONCERNING QUEBEC INDEPENDENCE

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us if, during his visit with President Nixon, any reference was made to the constitutional problems of Canada, and, in particular, to the possibility of independence in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, we had other fish to fry.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE

Mr. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Could he advise us whether he intends to bring in amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act during the present session, which are not tied to the Woods report?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The estimates of the Unemployment Insurance Commission will be before the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration tomorrow. I am sure the hon. gentleman could satisfy his curiosity there.

Mr. MacEwen: Can't wait.

Mr. Mackasey: However, it is not my intention to bring in amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act this session. When I do bring them in, I intend to make them all-embracing and, perhaps, to change the policy of the commission entirely.

TRADE

WHEAT—STORAGE FACILITIES IN IMPORTING COUNTRIES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): This is another question to the Prime Minister on the subject of wheat. Having regard to the problem which Canadian producers seem to be experiencing in selling wheat for export at a reasonable price, and realizing the value of providing service to customers, would the government consider setting up Canadian storage facilities inside the borders of importing countries so that wheat could be readily available whenever such countries decided to buy some.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—DESTRUCTION OF CANAIRELIEF MERCY AIRCRAFT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether the minister will answer the questions asked yesterday by my leader, and also my supplementary question, taken as notice by the Acting Prime Minister and concerning attempts by Nigeria to destroy Canairelief aircraft?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I returned this morning my attention was drawn to these questions. The position is as follows:

The Nigerian government has often made it clear that such flights would be entirely at the risk of those who made them, since arms deliveries continue from Sao Tome into the same airstrip at the same time as the relief aircraft. It is to avoid these risks and to permit an effective relief operation that the government hopes Colonel Ojukwu will agree to daylight relief flights into Uli and Obilago. In the circumstances, it would not be possible to justify a protest on their behalf to the Nigerian government.

Concerning the second part of the question, we have received expressions of concern from the Nigerian government as to the reported intention of Canairelief to establish an airstrip in rebel territory which, according to its promoters, is to be used exclusively for relief flights. With three known airstrips at least—Uli, Obilago and one near Uli/Ihiala—in the rebel area or a few miles away, none of which are now being used by day for relief deliveries, the Nigerian government obviously finds it difficult to see the justification for yet another airstrip to be built at great cost while present alternatives are ignored by the rebels.

DISCUSSION OF INITIATIVES AT TALKS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister regarding some of the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can inform the house if conversations were held with President Nixon about initiatives that the United States government has taken regarding relief shipments, and possible initiatives that the Canadian government might take with regard to relief.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of Nigeria was discussed by the President and myself but in rather general terms. As regards the United States position, I do not think I am in a position to make any comment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question. With regard to the second part of my question, could the Prime Minister indicate whether the President expressed to the Prime Minister any particular steps that our government might take with regard to assisting in the relief effort?

Mr. Trudeau: No, there was no such suggestion of any such steps.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he still plans to live up to his assurance that the prices commission will be appointed before the end of March, or has he decided that April 1 would be a more appropriate date for such an announcement?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be in Ottawa on April 1, so I will not be making any appointments on that date. I am trying to have the commission appointed as quickly as I can, but whether we meet the end of March deadline or not remains to be seen.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MUIR (CAPE BRETON-THE SYDNEYS)—ALLEGED INACCURACY IN STATEMENT OF HON. MEMBER FOR DAVENPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to raise a matter that has just come to my attention. Yesterday I made a speech in this house and was followed by the hon. member for Davenport. As reported at page 7093 the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said:

> The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) developed certain generalities. He has also disappeared immediately afterwards.

I should like to state that I was called to the telephone on constituency business and was absent from the house for about four minutes. I returned and listened to the hon. member, and then the hon. member for Selkirk. The hon. member's statement is completely erroneous. At five minutes after six I discussed with the Solicitor General a matter regarding my constituency. This is a deliberate distortion of the facts by the hon. member for Davenport. In other words, he has been most careless with the truth.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON MOTION TO CONCUR

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for St. John's East rising on a point of order?

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had hoped to put this in the form of a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government house leader.

My point of order is this. In view of the very serious difference that exists between the government house leader and the hon. member for LaSalle, who is a very successful and outstanding chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and in view of the very serious consequential effects this difference is having on the work of the committees of this house, would the government house leader agree to call government order No. 54, which is the third report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections? Then this whole matter could be debated in the house and the future work of committees of the house cleared up once and for all?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that there is no difference between the hon. member for LaSalle and myself. I am glad to hear that the hon. member is supporting the very able work of my colleague, rather than attacking the chairman, as has happened in the past.

With regard to changing the order of the business of the house, I take it that the hon. member for St. John's East does not think very highly of the subject chosen by the hon. member for Peace River in his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for St. John's East that his intervention is not a proper point of order. Actually, he has used the device of a point of order to ask a question of the President of the Privy Council. It seems to me that if we were to allow the matter to go further we might spend the afternoon on this very touchy subject. I understand a motion will be moved by the hon. member for Peace River about which the house is very anxious to hear, so I suggest that at this point we go on with government orders.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—BROADCASTING OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS BY TELEVISION AND RADIO

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

> That this house should give consideration to television and radio broadcasting of the proceedings of the house and/or its committees.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order before I commence the remarks I have to make. In view of the time, and the fact that a number of members have indicated an interest in this subject and would like an opportunity to make their contribution, I would be prepared to propose a self-denying ordinance, of which I would be the first victim. I suggest that we might well limit our speeches during the course of this debate to 15 minutes. This would then permit a larger number of members to contribute to the debate. Since the subject is of great interest and concern, we might do well to limit ourselves to 15 minutes in order to bring in other members, with no extension being granted on either side.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Then, Mr. Speaker, perhaps that could be made a special order of the house right now.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable to adopting the order suggested by the hon. member for Peace River?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Baldwin: The house will note the terms of the motion:

That this house should give consideration to television and radio broadcasting of the proceedings of the house and/or its committees.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The wording of the motion is the time honoured wording used when this house has discovered a problem with which it has not yet determined how to deal but feels that the subject matter should be dealt with, debated and discussed. For that reason when the opportunity arose to move the motion it was introduced as a motion not involving confidence. Nor was it put in more positive terms which would indicate that the members of this party specifically are in favour of having in this house radio and television broadcasting. Unquestionably, we are all concerned, we are all involved and we are all interested. I have every reason to believe that there run through the house a variety of opinions on this matter. Some believe radio and television to be necessary here; many are convinced it is not necessary and others are convinced it may be harmful. Variations of those views are entertained in varying degrees on all sides of the house. For that reason, I took the opportunity of putting down this motion and having it debated today, the idea being that hon. members following me can make their contribution.

My position is very simple. Until 18 months ago I was categorically opposed to any suggestion that radio or television ought to be brought into the house. There was no hesitation on that point in my mind. However, circumstances which developed during the last 18 months, and particularly during the last 12 or 15 months, have brought me to adopt, with some measure of reluctance I might say, a different point of view. I wish to give the house the benefit of my views so that hon. members may debate the matter after I have finished.

One particular instance which drove me to change my mind was that which occurred about one year ago last February when, after the government had been defeated on a measure which in all other commonwealth legislative bodies would be considered a matter of confidence, the Prime Minister of the day, utilizing the time which had been granted to him to consider his position, left this chamber, and over the radio and television facilities which were available, made a statement which completely distorted and misrepresented what had taken place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: After all, Mr. Speaker, so long as our parliamentary system continues, the Prime Minister holds his position by virtue of being the leader of the largest party in this house to whom the Governor General will entrust confidence. In short, the Prime Minister enjoys the largest measure of support within the house. Until we have adopted a presidential system, something I will never accept, it is to this house that the Prime Minister and members of the government must come for support. Reports must be made to this house, because this house is the source of power which the government exercises. Consequently, since what happened previously has in varying degrees been repeated over and over again, I have been persuaded to change my mind. Subsequent events that have occurred in and around the House of Commons have convinced me, and other hon. members as well, that an attempt is being made to diminish the role played here by the representatives of the people of Canada.

I was not sent here to participate in liquidating or weakening the processes of democracy as constituted in this parliament and in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: I am, of course, referring to the fact that immediately outside this chamber are microphones and television cameras which, I would hazard, are being used at this moment by certain hon. members of the house and members of the government.

An hon. Member: They are.

Mr. Baldwin: The Prime Minister is probably supplementing the very meagre report he made to this house. He completely omitted any reasonable explanation with respect to two economic problems that the people of the country and hon. members of the house are deeply concerned about, the question of oil policy and its ramifications vis-à-vis the United States, and our participation in the international wheat agreement. We obtained from the Prime Minister nothing at all; yet I would hazard that he and some of his colleagues are at this moment outside this chamber busily engaged in expanding, varying and changing what was said and saying what was not said but ought to have been said in this house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baldwin: From our mass media we obtain too often only an abridged, distorted and frequently illusory version of the proceedings of this chamber. In saying that I am not faulting the members of the media, who must carry out their work. We have been dragged into our present position through our failure to come to grips with a serious and difficult problem. I think it is about time we looked at it, decided to debate it and, as civilized people, decided what to do about it. Although some of us may want to, we cannot abolish radio and television. They are here and we must learn to live with them. The chamber may have to learn to live with them. For that reason, I am glad to have had the opportunity to initiate the discussion on this matter and to obtain the views of other hon. members.

Other countries have met and overcome similar problems, Mr. Speaker. One problem of course has to do with physical conditions. There is the question of placing cameras and lights, but I have every reason to believe that those technical difficulties can be overcome. It has also been suggested that there will be too much grandstanding, and that the people here will feel they are always on display. Well, we are always on display, even now. During the question period the press galleries and public galleries are filled. I suppose no man in public life ever took great exception to a little grandstanding. If I may be pardoned for using unparliamentary language, it is part of the nature of the animal.

An hon. Member: You mean, we are all hams.

Mr. Baldwin: Another problem is connected with all the empty seats in this chamber. Many hon. members are not present in the chamber. I think it is about time the people of this country learned that hon. members work diligently in committees of this house. Yesterday we had 11 committees. If those committees are to function hon. members must attend them. My motion is wide enough to consider the possibility of televising the procedures of our committees, or of broadcasting over the radio what happens. Our people ought to know that a great deal of detailed work, such as the studying of estimates and legislation, now takes place in committee rooms outside this house. The fact that from time to time the house is not filled, as I hoped it would be filled today with hon. members eager to hear me speak—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: —is not of great consequence.

I wish to conclude by placing on the record the remarks of Mr. Speaker McLeay of Australia, contained in the "Report of a Conference of Commonwealth Speakers". This problem has arisen in other jurisdictions and has been considered to some extent in Australia. Mr. Speaker McLeay says:

• (3:40 p.m.)

Parliamentary debates are broadcast daily in Australia and the broadcasting arrangements are not under government control. The matter is controlled by a joint committee of the two Houses, which makes the final decisions as to what debates will be broadcast and how the broadcasting time will be divided between the two houses. In all cases the committee ensures that the Opposition receives equal coverage with the government. There is continuous broadcasting of debates on Thursday from 10.30 in the morning until 11.30 at night, and at 11.30 broadcasting is cut off.

In other words, debates are broadcast all day Thursday and during the week as decided upon. I continue quoting:

According to the experts parliamentary debates command the widest listening public in the whole of Australia From time to time we hear objections being registered, but the majority of the people want the broadcasts and there is no chance that they will ever be discontinued. The broadcasting of debates has become a very important factor in keeping Australians informed of what is going on in parliament. The broadcasts are made over the national network and the debates are broadcast live from the floor of parliament. The listener hears the proceedings as they are taking place—they hear the news as it is being made.

In response to a question to Mr. Speaker as to how the members of the press gallery were affected, Sir John McLeay made the following statement:

The press are there to report good headline material. They do not report a complete account of what takes place in parliament but only those parts which have the required news value, or which can be used to promote the editorial opinions of the newspaper concerned. In my experience the greater part of the proceedings of parliament do not seem to reach the ears of the press gallery, and if a system could be devised for assuring authentic press coverage, I should like to hear of it.

Mr. Jamieson: Is that just radio?

Mr. Baldwin: No, it is radio and television. What takes place in this house is not always of major importance, but it is essential that we be here as a mirror to reflect the aims and aspirations of the people we represent. We must consider ways and means of entering into a complete dialogue so that the people of Canada know what is happening. They can then tell us what they think about it and what they wish done.

For that reason, I am glad to make this final suggestion that this house should give some thought to this matter. There will be many debates and some time will elapse before a decision is made, but we might consider some experimentation by improvising with committees. An excellent choice would have been the justice committee which was dealing with a very important subject of great value, concern and interest to many Canadians. I read the transcript of the proceedings of the justice committee and I feel television and radio broadcasting of the proceedings of that committee would have been most useful.

The public would also be very interested to know what is going on in the public accounts committee. This committee receives very good press coverage, but I think this would be an excellent committee for radio and television broadcasting. Having done that with the aid of experts, consideration could be given to bringing into the house on an experimental basis, cameras and microphones to see what needed to be done technically and the degree of inconvenience that would be caused. Possibly a committee should be set up to study this matter.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I have some reluctance about this position but while I am sorry I had to change my mind, I have done so. In my opinion, this house can no longer afford not to deal with the problem facing us at the present time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see the hon. member for York South and the President of the Privy Council. I might point out the practice has been to recognize first the speakers of the opposition parties on allotted days. I recognize the hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I am not sure my contribution will be as entertaining as that of the President of the Privy Council, Mr. Speaker.

On behalf of my colleagues, I want to say we unequivocally support the idea that this parliament be brought up to date. I am a little disappointed at the degree of caution which the hon. member for Peace River exhibited in making his suggestion. He seemed anxious that we go through some experimental period of introducing radio and television into the chamber. I think we are out of date in our caution on this point. Obviously, radio and television are as important a media of information as is the printed word.

A primary media of information such as television should not be excluded from this chamber. Every day we are chased out to the rotunda by representatives of radio and television networks and asked to say something in 30 or 45 seconds, which is then edited to 15 or 20 seconds. A practice such as that is not useful and is not representative of parliament As the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, we have had experiences with members of the government saying something to the house which was not very clear, often a non-answer, and then in the rotunda they make their position clear to the people of Canada. I do not blame them for doing that. If the people can get clarity from some of the remarks which are made, they are much better at it than I am. The people of Canada should have an opportunity of hearing what these ministers say in the House of Commons, not outside in the rotunda. The cameras and radio receivers should be in this chamber to record what is said.

We are all amateurs in this area, Mr. Speaker. But I think there are three areas of concern with regard to the use of television or electronic media to report the events of this house. What is sent across the air waves and recorded by the camera screens should be important and relevant information. It is easy for the camera to pick out members who have closed their eyes because they are in profound contemplation to give the impression outside that there is another reason for their eyes being closed. It is easy for the camera to catch members, who because of their seniority in this house have developed a capacity for reading a newspaper, listening to the speaker and following what they read in the newspaper without one interfering in the slightest with the other. It is also easy to pick out members writing something, although this may be the only opportunity to draft a letter; but these are not the things in which the people of Canada would be interested. These are not the details that should be sent across the networks. The people of Canada are interested in what we say, how we say it, the behaviour of the house, the relationship and the seriousness of our work. That is the first concern, that what goes over the air and on to the screen be relevant and important information, not the kind of titillating detail that a smart cameramen or a smart reporter might consider it clever to get across.

The second concern we would have with the system is that what goes across the air and goes on the screen be fairly representative of this chamber. Not only the government's views should be reported to the people of Canada, as in some instances is too often the case, and not only one party's views should go over the air, but all the various views represented in this chamber should be presented through the media of television and radio to the people of Canada.

The third matter that concerns us is that every broadcast ought to have some entertainment value—

An hon. Member: No problem there.

Mr. Lewis: You know, Mr. Speaker, I was a member of a committee that pranced all over Europe having its brains washed about NATO. My brain was washed so thoroughly I was afraid I could not find what was left of it when I came back home, but I did find what was left. Since we came back, we have been sitting in camera writing a report with which I thoroughly and violently disagree. But since I learned about this motion today, I have been wracking my brains to find out how we can give the broadcasts some entertainment value. The only thing I could think of was to get the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson) to sing some songs which I once heard him sing—those that would not get the networks into trouble, I might add. Perhaps we can find other things that could be done by some members of the house with acting and entertaining capacities to make the presentation a little lighter than it might otherwise be.

Seriously, however, I speak of the entertainment value in the sense that what is presented on the screen and over the airwaves about the issues have some dramatic impact. This means the right choice of issues to get the full dramatic impact from an exchange of views; it means the right choice of spokesmen exchanging those views. That is part of the entertainment value of these things.

One is concerned about these three aspects of the problem, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious that the House of Commons, indeed any part of parliament, should not set itself up as a censor. Therefore, we have to take it for granted that the choice of whether or not something is of news value, including the information and entertainment value as I have called it, must be left to the media. We do not want to set ourselves up as censors of what they do.

We do not want the people of Canada to get the impression that the members of parliament are so worried about what they say, and how they say it, that they are going to make sure they pick every word and every image that goes across. But, Mr. Speaker, I think that the question of the propriety in which this job is done, the way in which it is imposed upon our debates, and the way in which spokesmen are chosen for presentation to the people so that there is a fair reflection of the various representative views in this house, justifies the establishment of a small committee of spokesmen for the parties under the leadership and direction of Mr. Speaker. In this way, the broadcasting which can be done from the chamber can be organized. We can order where the cameras and radio receivers are to be located, at what hour they are to be used and what debates are to be used for the purpose of broadcasting. We can make sure that what goes across the air is fair, just, and representative of this house.

I, therefore conclude, Mr. Speaker, well within my 15 minutes, by saying that I am not quite satisfied with the suggestion that we discuss this matter and that we be cautious about it. I would like to urge parliament, to urge Mr. Speaker, to urge representatives of all the parties to get going on this thing right away. I urge the setting up of the necessary committee to discuss the details of doing it, to decide as quickly as possible that this will be done, and as quickly as possible set up the machinery for having it done always—and I emphasize this—always so far as the fairness of distribution is concerned under the aegis, direction and control of Mr. Speaker, with the assistance of a committee representative of all parties in the house. This to make sure that what does go across the air is not merely a matter of entertainment in the lowest sense of the term, not merely a matter of titillating the people of Canada, of poking fun at parliament which can easily be done as all of us know, but a matter of giving the people proper information, a sense of the real debates that take place, a sense of the issues with which we have to grapple, a sense of the urgency with which we grapple with matters that are urgent, and a sense of the real way in which their representatives in parliament and the institution of parliament itself, serve them, so that if they form an opinion it is not based on something unrepresentative but on something that is truly representative of parliament.

They may then tell us to do our job a great deal better than we do it now, and I hope they will; but at least they will be doing it based on an accurate and representative presentation. We support the idea, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we agree in principle with the motion asking the house to study the possibility of televising and broadcasting the debates of the house; but when we try to figure out how this can be achieved, a whole series of questions come to mind.

In theory, of course, this might be one way of upgrading the role of the member of parliament, because unfortunately, as we know, at the present time the people often have a very distorted view of his work and his role in the House of Commons. The people have often been given the impression that the member of parliament comes here to sit, wait, and leave when all is done. Most of the time he is absent, which is really quite improper in view of his role as a legislator.

Fortunately, since I have come to this house, I have noticed that this is not really the case; the members take their role as seriously as possible, and really serious and at times efficient work is done here. I say at times, because it is not always so, due to the system which is inadequate.

This makes one wonder what will happen if we try to realize this project. To do so, certain factors will have to be taken into account. The first on which will depend the efficiency of the programs will be the necessity of being objective which cannot be achieved merely by focussing the cameras on all the parties in the house. But how can the role of each one be determined? How are the essential parts of a debate, which should be made known to the public, to be chosen? That is the initial difficulty we run into at the very start.

In addition, who will decide what interventions deserve the attention of the Canadian people and what criteria will be used?

If we succeeded in doing that, it would be a very good thing, of course, since the people could see that members are playing their part in the best way they can. But I believe it is impossible, on account of our parliamentary system.

I assume that should such a project materialize, the party that would get the worst of the bargain would precisely be the party in power since—this is another thing we have noted—most of the government members are scarcely allowed to express their opinions and should the broadcasting reflect their work, it would not be a good omen for the next election campaigns. I cannot stand up beyond measure for the party in power, but the fact remains that this is what would happen.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder how the government party could approve of such a thing since its role, considering the present parliamentary system, is limited as we noticed last evening, to that of a voting machine. There would not be anything spectacular in showing the people how the voting machine is working. I believe it would be a disaster for the party in power, considering the great regard we have for all members.

We expect to be in power also one of these days and we would be pleased with such a system since it would give everyone greater freedom of speech and would enable the people to note how objective we strive to be.

Mr. Speaker, how could we also avoid discrimination? How could we avoid the star system? The broadcast time would therefore have to be divided evenly.

Perhaps I forgot to point out, Mr. Speaker, that should such a project materialize, there would have to be a half-hour or an hour of television broadcasting per day, which would give a summary of a day's debates.

The producers will then have to draw objectively from the debates their very essence and to illustrate it with the contributions of the members. This is the way I see it in view of the fact that otherwise what is said in the House of Commons can sometimes lead to utter boredom. In fact, it would be unthinkable to impose such torture all day long to the Canadian viewing public.

That is why I think that we should rather present a program which would summarize what has happened during one sitting of the house; but how to distinguish what is important, how to determine who has made a real contribution to the debate, and how to illustrate it through television or radio? The question certainly calls for consideration but I do know that the solution will be a very difficult one.

The party in power, perhaps in view of the fact that it already has quite an unusual star in the person of the Prime Minister (Mr Trudeau), might think that it would be advisable. However, the program should be divided into parts. One part of the program would be devoted to the young people, another probably to the space travel on which the leader of the Progressive Conservative party (Mr. Stanfield) would appear.

In fact, the most popular portion of the program and which would certainly have the highest rating, would be that reserved for the remarks of the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette). Then we are sure that other members would be discriminated against since the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste would get the highest rating.

So, taking all this into account, it is very difficult to say what we can do at the moment. It is worth considering so as to do justice to all hon. members.

As I said earlier, we are all doing our best according to the limitations set by the rules.

Just imagine, for instance, television cameras covering the house at this very moment. The people would say: Where are all the members? What are they doing? The television public would suspect the members of taking it easy, whereas some of them are working in their office or attending committee hearings. In fact, the day is by far too short for us to complete our task.

So, when we come to think of all these details, I suggest we should seriously consider the possibility of having the debates of the house on television. Everybody seems to agree. However, we would not want to remain under the spotlights all the time of the broadcasting period.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would have congratulated the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) more unqualifiedly in bringing forward this motion were it not for the narrow, petty partisanship with which he began his remarks. I will say only that I do not think anyone, even the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), seriously thinks that by bringing the television cameras in here we will prevent members both of the government and opposition appearing on television or radio outside the house. He sounded like a latterday Luddite who wanted to destroy the machines and the methods that are being used. I do not think we should try to put any kind of gag on the press.

An hon. Member: They will be a little more careful outside.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) knows—

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would like the courtesy of being permitted to continue my speech.

Mr. Lundrigan: I do not know if there is any courtesy but—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) referred to the fact that ministers go outside and make remarks. But so do opposition members who state their own version of events. This has happened before and will happen again even if television is brought into the house.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I was going to address a remark to the hon. minister but he cut me off absolutely. I do not think he would be in favour of television in the house because—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suppose if one were to televise a kindergarten, the hon. member would be a prime candidate for it.

It seems to me that the proposal brought forward by the hon. member for Peace River is quite reasonable. Broadcasting, by television and radio, of our proceedings is a possibility that frankly we ought not ignore. It would be my view that this is a question which can and should be discussed by the new standing committee on procedure and organization. I think the hon. member for Peace River would agree, however, that there are and have been other matters of greater priority for consideration by that committee, particularly the matter dealing with the procedures of the house. It must be the first concern of the house, and the committee on procedure and organization, to ensure that our procedures are enabling us to do our work as well as possible. Thereafter, I expect that the house will want to ask the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to make a preliminary study of the question of working out appropriate procedures for broadcasting in the house. I repeat, however, that I believe we should let the committee complete the work we have given it. This debate provides a good opportunity to place before the house a number of problems which arise from the proposal to televise the proceedings of the house. I think we all agree that televising the proceedings would have a very strong influence on the way the house works.

Dr. Marshall McLuhan has indicated that house proceedings now are essentially a linear medium. Of course, if television comes into the chamber it will very much change the manner of our proceedings. Indeed, presenting our proceedings on television will make as much change in the proceedings of the house as was made to the procedures of the British house when Mr. Hansard first commenced his work of reporting its proceedings.

I share the concern of the hon. member for Peace River, and will not repeat his observations, with regard to the misunderstanding that could take place on the part of the public as to the work being done by the house, particularly with regard to the question of all hon. members not being present at all times. All hon. members are not present at all times, just as all the members of the press gallery are not present at all times because they are engaged in other activities elsewhere in the house with respect to their responsibilities. So are members of the house engaged in other activities elsewhere. We will have to make it perfectly clear, if and when television comes into this chamber, that there are many and multifarious activities in which hon. members engage. This was referred to by the hon. member for Peace River. We will have to make it clear that the business is being carried out effectively and carefully.

There are a number of purely technical questions which arise. For example, there is the question of the clutter of wires, cables and equipment necessary to televise the proceedings in the chamber. Much of this equipment will be located in the chamber. The discomfort created by the glare of lights and the great heat from them at the start of this session will be recalled. These technical problems would have to be solved.

Probably the most serious question is the one already touched upon by hon. members. I refer to the question as to what would be televised and what would be broadcast. First, who would direct the cameras? Who would decide what member and what view of the member would be selected? Second, who would decide what part of the film would be broadcast? The second of these two questions, namely, who would decide what things on film would be broadcast, could be answered if we broadcast all of the proceedings of the house all of the day. However, I think there would be general agreement that such non-selective treatment of the proceedings of the house would be favourable neither to the house nor necessarily favourable to the viewer. There would be, of course, the matter of the extra cost involved if we had, for example, an educational television channel and the proceedings of the house were carried on it.

Mr. Baldwin: You could get a sponsor.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am afraid I did not hear the hon. member's remark. I think we could draw some interesting conclusions from the examinations made of this question by the two houses of parliament in Westminster. The select committee on broadcasting the proceedings of the House of Lords, in June, 1968, recommended that both the actual act of televising and the selection of the material to be broadcast should be left to the broadcasters themselves. In this way, as the Lords pointed out, it would not be necessary for the house to maintain its own staff and it would be left entirely to the broadcasters as to what they presented on the air.

I think it is interesting to contrast this with the view set out by the select committee on broadcasting the proceedings of the House of Commons at Westminster. I quote from its first report:

> In the view of your committee, the most interesting, informative and shapely programs would consist of edited extracts from the proceedings of the house. For this purpose a recording of the whole of the proceedings should be made available to the broadcasting organizations. Many different types of program, making use of such material, could be produced—

The report goes on to suggest the kind of material that could be used. On the question of control, the British Commons' committee, unlike the Lords' committee, was not prepared to let the broadcasters decide. I quote again from the report of the British House of Commons committee:

> Your committee consider that the house should retain control of the preparation of the full television and sound transmission which would be "piped" from the house.

At a further stage the report reads:

Your committee are of the opinion that the task of providing the full television and sound "feed" should be in the hands of a special unit to be known as the House of Commons Broadcasting Unit.

The committee of the British house was quite prepared then to let the broadcasters decide what parts of the material fed to them should be broadcast. On that point they commented in this way:

—the broadcasting organizations are under an obligation to present political matters with accuracy and with due balance and impartiality

I am sure that every effort would be made by the media here to do the same. This drives us to the question, with regard to broadcasting our proceedings: Is the house ready to undertake, first, to produce the tape or film and, second to prepare the programs from the tape or film? If the answer to that question is in the affirmative, this house would then be deeply involved in the business of broadcasting.

I would like to refer to another matter en passant. Serious thought would have to be given to this question. I refer to the effect of broadcasting our proceedings on civil and criminal liability, due to the fact that in effect what we broadcast would be privileged material. Hon. members no doubt would have parliamentary privilege regarding what they said in the house. But with the current state of the law, I think it is likely that the broadcasters would not. We might have to introduce legislation like the Australian legislation, giving the broadcasters some form of immunity from suit arising out of such broadcasts.

I have not dealt specifically with the broadcasting of the proceedings of the standing committees, but it seems to me that very much the same considerations would arise. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would not like to give the impression of dwelling too much on the difficulties. I believe it would be a positive step if we could find some judicious and generally acceptable way of presenting the proceedings of the chamber through broadcast by radio and over television. I hope that when the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization has dealt with the proceedings of the house and its committees to the satisfaction of hon. members, we might proceed to the question of broadcasting the proceedings of the house. Then, we could ascertain the view of the committee and the house on this question and what specific arrangements we should make.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the proposals regarding the use of television and radio in connection with the House of Commons are not new in Canada. Discussion in this respect has certainly not been restricted to Canada. I suppose the arguments for and against the proposal really have been pretty thoroughly made, although not in the house. Therefore, I think it is an excellent idea to have an opportunity today to talk among ourselves about the pros and cons of this question.

I agree with the house leader—I am happy to find myself in agreement with him from time to time—that it is clear that the use of radio or television in this chamber would certainly effect some changes in parliament. I think it would be misleading to pretend anything else.

The use of these media here would bring about substantial changes. I suggest that our discussion today has to be on the assumption that there would be such changes, and any decision we make must be based upon a consideration of the nature of these changes and their exact effect upon parliament. Some of the effects of these changes have already been discussed.

I have personal reservations in this respect, in so far as I am a member of the House of Commons, where my own comfort is concerned and choice of working conditions. I would far sooner continue the way we are and not be subjected to the glare of lights, which would be the case if this proposal were put into effect. I appreciate the concern of other members about the effect these changes would have upon us workers, as people doing a day's work. I appreciate their concern about the effect that the introduction of television or radio would have upon the kind of chamber this is.

As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said, there is certainly a wide difference of opinion among Progressive Conservatives on this whole subject. I think this also applies to members of other parties.

I approach the question from this point of view, and this is why I am speaking in this debate. I think it is important that we recognize the effect that radio and television are already having upon this institution. It is just as important, and indeed very urgent, that we consider the consequences that would probably ensue for this institution if we continue to go on as we do in our present circumstances.

One of the important facts about our debate today is that, for all intents and purposes, we are already being televised in a certain sense. Of course, the television cameras are kept outside the doors of the chamber or they are in studios downtown. I am certainly not suggesting for a moment that the use of radio or television for the purpose of interviewing members outside the house should be restricted in any way. I want to make that very clear. I do not suggest that, even if we had television and radio in here, this should prevent the members of the house from appearing before the television cameras outside the house, nor would it be desirable to try to prevent them from doing so.

My point is that we should consider whether there would not be a more accurate representation of what goes on here if radio and television were allowed into the house, because sometimes, of course, radio and television outside convey the opinions of hon. members of unquestioned probity and judgment like myself and at other times a minister is televised giving a different answer than the one he gave in the house. I have no intention of criticizing anyone when I suggest that, in the corridors of the house, television and radio interviews are often so condensed and selective that they convey perhaps a false impression or a caricature of what goes on here. This is perhaps in one sense an abuse of television as a medium of communication because of the special capacity that television has to convey an event rather than to convey a report of an event. As a result of what is going on, parliament is made to seem more hectic and more partisan than it actually is.

I am participating in this debate because I am concerned about what is happening to parliament. I am concerned about the fact that in the minds of the people of Canada the discussions they know about, and the discussions that have their impact on them, are not those that take place in the House of Commons or in parliament but those that they see or hear on television or on radio. In other words, I am concerned about the fact that what is going on now is downgrading parliament. I think that parliament has been downgraded in other ways, but I also think that the way in which radio and television is being used now is downgrading parliament. I think that we, as members of parliament, have to recognize that if this continues, parliament will become less and less important to the people of this country. All the members of my party agree and are concerned about parliament being downgraded for this or other reasons. We are certainly not all agreed on the solution, but I am convinced that if what is going on now is allowed to continue, it will kill parliament as an effective deliberative institution in this country.

I say with all the emphasis I can that, although I recognize that there may well be differences of opinion as to what is the proper solution, we have to find a solution because it is essential to the continuing vigour of this institution.

The question we are discussing now also involves to some extent the right of the public to know and to follow, in as direct a way as possible, the conduct of public business. We should at least consider the prospect that, with proper safeguards, radio and television might well improve public understanding of our Canadian institutions and our political processes and might very well allow Canadians to be better informed about the public business. It will encourage them to become more involved in public life and in the discussion of public questions. I like to think at least that parliament would become more respected if it were better known. I suggest that there might very well be less criticism of parliamentary debates if there were more opportunity to hear this house debate important measures. We might very well reduce the suspicion that parliament is isolated from the country if there were a better opportunity for citizens to hear their representatives speaking in parliament.

We have in this medium a potentially great instrument of education and information, a medium which has to be treated with great respect because of its great impact. I emphasize that this is not a matter into which we would want to rush. Other hon. members have referred to some of the matters that would have to be considered, and I certainly do not propose that we should suddenly open all of parliament to television. However, I suggest that we should begin experimenting, either by using radio or television in a committee or in some other way. I think also the whole house would certainly want to consider very carefully, perhaps through a committee, the best way to begin. We are having this discussion today to give hon. members an opportunity to express their concern.

I will not take more of the time of the house because I really have only one major point to make, which is that if we allow radio and television to be used outside the house only, parliament will be diminished and eventually killed. I do not want to see parliament further downgraded. Therefore, I think it is very urgent that each member of the house consider very carefully whether the danger is great, as I think it is, and what is the most appropriate solution. I agree that this is a matter that has to be approached with considerable care. I am not suggesting that we should go from the frying pan into the fire, but I would very much like to help the house get out of the frying pan which, I am afraid, will cook parliament to death unless we do something about it.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this debate today and I am glad to have the company of so many more members in proposing a study of the broadcasting of parliamentary proceedings since the opposition members have joined our ranks. I have been in favour of the broadcasting of parliamentary proceedings since I came to this chamber more than three years ago.

I beg to differ respectfully with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he says that there is a danger that television will kill parliament or even downgrade it. I believe only those who sit in this chamber can do that. What people generally lack is an insight into the processes of parliament. I was happy to see the advent of television into parliament on September 12 last on the occasion of the opening of parliament. People were able to get a glimpse, at least, of the process.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was not suggesting that television in the house would kill it. I was suggesting that what is going on now would do so. I do not want the hon. member to misunderstand what I said.

Mr. Stanbury: I think I understood the hon. gentleman. I am suggesting that television coverage either inside the house or outside parliament will not kill parliament; if it is killed it will be the fault of those who sit in it, not the fault of the news media, electronic or print. As an experiment, the televising of the opening of parliament was not, in my opinion, an unalloyed success. Members of Parliament perspired and squinted under the extra illumination which brought more of both heat and light to the house than the members had ever been able to generate. Sunglasses sprouted from parliamentary brows, eyes smarted, heads ached and shirts dampened. The relief was unconfined when those lights finally went out.

But the walls of parliament did not fall; the institution was not noticeably undermined; its members survived the experience unscathed except for a few scorched retinas. It was a quiet, tentative step, but in the parliamentary context it was a precedent of almost monumental proportions. It may have been accepted calmly by the viewing and listening public, who now take for granted that everything, or almost everything is televised. It may have looked like a modest gap in the electronic barrier around parliament, but I believe it was an historic step in the campaign which some of us have been waging to give democracy new visibility in Canada.

The party conventions of the past two years, brought as they were into the living rooms and even the taverns of the nation by radio and television, gave millions of Canadians their first real insight into the political process. With the help of a few fresh and fascinating personalities, the electronic media ignited a popular interest in politics and gave them a new relevance for the average Canadian. He was there at those conventions and he probably saw more of them than we who were physically present. Where does he go from here? He has chosen his leaders; he has picked his parliament. Now, he wants to see and hear them and it in action.

Will he be able to do so? I am sure we shall have to do something about those lights, but I have a feeling that broadcast coverage of parliamentary committees at least cannot be held back.

An hon. Member: There would have to be a quorum.

Mr. Stanbury: After that, it is surely only a matter of time before parliament recognizes radio and television fully as information media, with all the rights and privileges of the other, older media.

Some parliamentarians shudder at the thought of television or broadcasting. I have heard some of them today express feelings of this kind, though they have not yet got up to speak. I think the introduction of television would encourage a more responsible approach to debate. Why should not the most modern media be used to strengthen communication between parliament and the people? If we want mass involvement in our politics, what better means could there be? More than ever our democratic institutions are important to us. We crave involvement and we need it. But television has involved us in the events of our times—wars, riots, disasters—without involving us equally in the processes by which our problems must be resolved. We are more than ever aware of the problems of our society, but we seem little involved in their solution. In an age of total information not many of us know much about the way in which our own federal and provincial parliaments work. Even after the events of the past two years, most of us recognize that a wide gulf remains between our political institutions and the people they are supposed to serve. Yet, on these institutions rests the future form, even the very existence of our country.

The electronic media offer the means to help bridge the gap between parliament and the people, to give democracy a new visibility in Canada. A television drama, "Quentin Durgens," has stimulated public interest and perhaps led to a better understanding of our work. We have seen how exciting a leadership convention can be. Why not expose the parliamentary process itself to public view? It is true that a few hundred people each day can watch parliament in action from the galleries, but what a fragmentary view that is at best, and what a pitifully small number of Canadians ever take the opportunity. They can, of course, get reports from newspapers and newscasts, but why should they get them at second hand? They can subscribe to Hansard, but how many bother to do so, or wade through it if it is delivered to them? Radio and television are ideally suited to bringing the parliamentary process home to the people.

There are various views on this subject, Mr. Speaker. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has suggested that the whole matter be considered by the committee on procedure. I believe this is a reasonable suggestion, although I would hope that some experimentation at least could proceed in the meantime. I see no reason why a start could not be made in at least one committee of the house; I think we could afford a certain daring in this regard. My own view is that parliament should permit broadcast coverage of all its proceedings with the same freedom as is accorded to the traditional press, subject only to the practical physical limitations and the usual restraints of parliamentary privilege. As at the United Nations, "live feed" or tape could be made available to any network or station under the supervision of a non-partisan person, in our case, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that radio and television editors, no less than newspaper and magazine editors, should be able to exercise their journalistic judgment in selecting what they wish to use subject, of course, to parliament's historic but barely used power to punish those responsible for breaches of parliamentary privilege.

I do not expect this perfectly logical development to come tomorrow. Fear is a formidable barrier to this kind of parliamentary development. But fear of cameras and microphones is no more well founded in my opinion than the fear which prevented the dreaded pencil being used in the reporting of parliamentary proceedings in the mother of parliaments until the last century. Parliamentary secrecy which had originated as a defence mechanism of the Crown and been preserved a defence against Crown control, continued as a guard against public interference. The struggle between parliament and the Crown became a struggle between parliament and the people. Eighteenth century parliamentarians accepted the theory that they were representing the people, but refused to acknowledge that they were responsible to the people. Why then should they inform the public of their proceedings? A party system was developing as a more practical method of changing governments than revolution or civil war, but opposition to the King's government was considered disloyal, harmful, fractious and therefore as something to be suppressed.

The issue of parliamentary reporting, which had been going on for some time as a kind of bootleg operation, came to a head in April, 1738, as a result of crusading publisher Edward Cave having published a speech before it had been delivered. It marked a setback for parliamentary journalism, as may well be imagined. The debate on the incident ended, with the following resolution:

• (4:40 p.m.)

That it is a high Indignity to, and a notorious Breach of the Privilege of his House, for any News-Writer, in Letters or other Papers, (as Minutes, or under any other Denomination) or for any Printer or Publisher, of any printed NewsPaper of any Denomination, to presume to insert in the said Letters or Papers, or to give therein any Account of the Debates, or other Proceedings of this House, or any Committee thereof, as well during the Recess, as the Sitting of Parliament; and that this House will proceed with the utmost Severity against such Offenders

Some of the arguments of the hon. members then have a familiar echoing ring today. Sir William Yonge said:

I have observed, Sir, that not only an Account of what you do, but of what you say, is regularly printed and circulated through all Parts, both of the Town and Country ... if you do not either punish them, or take some effectual Method of checking them, you may soon expect to see your Votes, your Proceedings, and your Speeches, printed and hawked about the Streets, while we are sitting in this House.

Thomas Winnington, Esquire, said:

—if we do not put a speedy Stop to this Practice, it will be looked upon without Doors, that we have no Power to do it, for the public will very justly think that if we had such a Power, we would exercise it. And then, Sir, what will be the Consequence; why Sir, you will have every word that is spoken here by Gentlemen, misrepresented by Fellows who thrust themselves into our Gallery. You will have the Speeches of this House every Day printed, even during your Session. And we shall be looked upon as the most contemptible Assembly on the Face of the Earth.

Sir Robert Walpole made this contribution:

I have read some Debates of this House, Sir, in which I have been made to speak the very reverse of what I meant...had I been a Stranger to the Proceedings and to the Nature of the Arguments themselves, I must have thought this to have been one of the most contemptible Assemblies on the Face of the Earth. What Notion then, Sir, can the Public, who have no other Means of being informed of the Debates of this House than what they have from these Papers, entertain of the Wisdom, and Abilities of an Assembly, who are represented therein to carry almost every Point against the strongest and the plainest Argument and Appearances.

A crack of light appeared, though, in the remarks of Sir William Windham, the leader of the opposition:

I don't know but they may have a Right to know somewhat more of the Proceedings of this House than what appears upon your Votes; and if I were sure that the Sentiments of Gentlemen were not misrepresented, I should be against our coming to any Resolution that could deprive them of a Knowledge that is so necessary for their being able to judge of the Merits of their Representatives within Doors.

Before the end of the 18th century that view, so gingerly advanced in 1738, was to prevail. Although the rule of secrecy was never formally rescinded, reports came to be tolerated. In 1803 reporters were assigned the back row in the Strangers' Gallery, and a special press gallery was built in 1831 at Westminster. Parliament, now opened to wider public view and criticism, was forced increasingly to recognize its responsibility to the electorate.

Today parliament's resistance to the modern, electronic news media seems as difficult to budge as was the bar against the dangerous print media of centuries past. And the need to sweep it away seems to me as great. Once again parliament needs to be more effectively exposed to its electorate; our means of democratic choice needs to be broadened by the freedom which knowledge gives.

To my colleagues who are fearful of this exposure I would refer the great parliamentarian, Edmund Burke, who said this:

It ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest communication with his constituents.

Since democracy began the key to its success has been participation. In the Greek city state, the people could see their government being carried on. In our burgeoning societies since, this has become increasingly difficult and government increasingly remote from those who choose it and whom it serves.

In my view, the electronic media offer the golden means to bring the people back into intimate contact with their institutions and their leaders, stimulating an awareness and a crackling circuitry between them which will ensure that our institutions are responsive to our needs and wants. That may be, indeed, the only way to save, or even justify saving, the institutions on which rests the future form, even the existence, of our country—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house appreciates this opportunity to discuss the subject of televising or broadcasting over the radio the proceedings of this house. It is only natural we should have this opportunity because this question has been discussed outside the house in many places across Canada, and I think this is the forum where it should be discussed.

It is high time we had the opportunity to air some views on this very important question in view of the fact that the New Zealand parliament has been broadcasting, either by radio or by television, its proceedings since 1936. The first broadcast of the proceedings in any Canadian parliament was in the legislative assembly of Saskatchewan in 1946. The Australian parliament has been broadcasting and televising its proceedings since 1946. On October 15, 1958 the opening of the parliament of Canada by the Queen was broadcast for the first time. So, as time moves on it seems only natural we should come to this point in our history and discuss this important subject.

When you go back in history, Mr. Speaker, you find debates were held in the British House on the subject of even allowing the press to come into the House of Commons and report. There was a debate on whether any of the happenings in the house, the debates or arguments, should even be published. There was a great and fiery debate on that subject. There was another great debate in the United Kingdom about whether to have Hansard in the House of Commons. We now come to the use of the news media of television and radio in our own Canadian Parliament.

There is little doubt, from the individual point of view and more particularly from the point of view of individuals in political life, that an opportunity to appear on television is attractive. We are all human in this regard. One of the dangers of the question we are now debating is that this attractiveness makes it very difficult for members to look at this proposition objectively. It is all too easy to accept the argument that televising the proceedings of this house will bring parliament to the people raw and unedited, thus overcoming the distorted picture of us that some members claim is given out daily by newspaper, radio and television commentators.

It is natural for any member to see himself as the continuing star of a national television show with a captive audience of millions. Despite its attractions and despite all the ready arguments in favour of televising house business on a daily basis, I must confess that I personally have begun to have second thoughts about this question. As I speak I cannot say that I have definitely made up my mind on this matter. However, this is the sort of airing that will give each and every member of the house an opportunity to make up his mind. I do not think for one moment that all of the members of my party are going to say that they are in favour of television, or likewise on the other side of the house.

I have no criticism of the principle of televising our proceedings. I am wholeheartedly in favour of the principle of the voters' right to know, to see and to hear all aspects of public business. For that reason I ignore the arguments advanced in an earlier day in the United Kingdom and here in Canada regarding coverage of house business by the daily press. Those arguments centred largely on quite another point. They were mainly concerned with the basic question of the public's right to be informed and, conversely, the right of elected representatives to keep secret the manner in which they did the taxpayers' business.

How things have changed since then. This point is no longer relevant. The right of the public to be informed about our business was conceded long ago. What we are concerned about here is an amplification of the means by which our proceedings are brought to the public and whether providing for additional coverage of house business by an additional information medium will confer more benefits than drawbacks it might create. It is in this area of discussions that I have reservations. As I have said, I uphold the principle of television coverage of the house but have serious misgiving as to whether it can achieve all or any of the things its proponents promise for it. I wonder whether it will not actually damage the quality of parliamentary business.

For instance, it has been argued that television coverage of the house itself is necessary if we are to do away with the daily interviews before television cameras in the rotunda. If hon. members look outside the chamber they will see three or four television cameras, floodlights and all kinds of equipment. That degrades the dignity of the rotunda and of parliament. If we are to televise house proceedings, let us do it properly and give the public the original viewpoint instead of the second hand version they obtain from the media in the rotunda. If we are to have television here I think the public is entitled to see the actual proceedings taking place in the house. For instance, if television had been present in the house today the Prime Minister would have made a much longer, more explanatory and more informative report on his trip to Washington. I think that other hon. members who spoke after the Prime Minister, including the Leader of the Opposition, would have been listened to throughout the country with great interest and the public would have been delighted.

We face tremendous technical questions in this field if we agree to permit house business to be televised. We should all ask, on what basis will we permit television? Will proceedings in their entirety every day be televised? Will they be televised on a selective "great occasion" basis, or on a limited every day basis. For example, would each day's question period be televised? Would budget night be covered or would supply days be covered? On what basis would there be coverage?

Then, too, we face the problem of what programs to bring to the public. Who is to say how much will be given to the public, and at what times of day and on what television stations? A great variety of schemes have been advanced. One is that television cameras should be installed in the house and roll continuously throughout all sittings of the House of Commons. This, it is argued, would provide a sort of videotape Hansard that television editors and reporters could resort to for the particular bits and pieces they might find of interest to their own small areas. Another suggestion is that only one restricted period of each sitting, such as the question period, should be televised. Yet another idea is that only grand occasions such as budgets, etc., should be televised.

There are simply a few suggestions. Yet another suggestion is to have a continuous telecast of house business carried on a special channel that would be free of other programs. All these ideas, I believe, have merit; the advantages of each can be persuasively argued, but all of them carry within them great problems.

For instance, just as soon as we introduce any element of selection to any method of telecasting parliamentary procedures we will raise the very difficult question of who will be authorized to make that selection. The main problem in this regard will concern the chief officer of the house, Mr. Speaker, and those who operate the television networks and stations. Beyond that is the question of selection as between the government and opposition, as between the various political parties represented in the house and, last but not least, the problem of selecting performers from the same party. All these questions will involve problems. For instance, if the question period only were to be televised, party leaders and members of the so-called shadow cabinet would quite naturally appear on television a disproportionate number of times. If we were to seek to overcome this difficulty we would run the risk of making such appearances appear contrived and unnatural. If a continuous videotape record were kept of proceedings, television editors and reporters undoubtedly would secure clippings of the performance of the member representing their locality to be used in local television stations. But, I ask what about the many hon. members in whose riding there is no television facility or only one station that is enmeshed in network programming commitments? Consider the number of homes without T.V. sets. It may be that under the present system a third or less of hon. members in this house will obtain extensive television coverage in their own ridings; all other hon. members will not appear on television in their home ridings.

It is argued that parliament has fallen into disrepute with the public in recent years and that people tend to ignore and belittle this time honoured institution. Those who advance this argument say that whether you like it or not television is the modern method of communication and parliament must adapt to it if it is to survive as a meaningful institution. I must admit that I agree with a great deal of this argument. My reservations are based more on the apparent impossibility in the present state of things of making television coverage of the house do what we expect it to do. I have no wish to labour either my agreement with the principle of television or my reservations with regard to the actual practice of televising house proceedings. I simply wish to close my remarks by advising the house how important it is to consult responsible television people about every phase of televising our proceedings. In my limited discussions with responsible television people I have discovered that their objectives in securing television coverage of parliament are not necessarily the same as those of hon. members of the House of Commons. In fact, in some cases those objectives are diametrically opposed to ours. Yet, these television people would be the most important single element in any beneficial scheme of television coverage. I think the most important thing to be borne in mind is that under most of the schemes suggested for televising house business those in the television medium will retain the right of selection and editing. This presents a problem for those of us who see in the televising of house affairs a means of bringing the true picture to the public free of distortions resulting from selection and editing.

I wish to say a word about the cost factor involved, because we will be putting the burden on the taxpayer and he must be kept in mind. It is a major factor. It appears obvious that the televising of the house can not and will not be undertaken on a strictly commercial basis. This means there would be subsidized coverage, and subsidized coverage means expenditures of great amounts of tax dollars. We shall have to consider the question of whether the benefits of television coverage are worth the money required to sustain that coverage.

The only figures I have on the cost factor were submitted to the British house. A study of this matter was undertaken in Great Britain and the British Broadcasting Corporation as well as independent television authorities provided some cost figures. They showed that one day's coverage would cost approximately $33,000; two days would cost $42,000 and three days, $51,000. I took the average of three days, which works out to about $17,000 a day. During the present session the house has been sitting for 121 days. If house proceedings this session had been televised for the entire period so far the cost of that coverage would have been slightly more than $2 million. Clearly, we are looking at a very costly operation when we consider televising the proceedings of this house.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it might well be worth our while to ask Your Honour to set up a special committee to look into this entire matter before we debate it further in this house. It is a highly technical and highly controversial matter. If you could set up a small committee that would include principal operating executives of various television networks and independent television stations I am sure we could obtain a much clearer view of what is possible and what is impossible with regard to this question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Hales: I have just one more sentence and I shall be finished, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It was understood there would be no extensions.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: I just have one more sentence, Mr. Speaker, and I will be through. I am sure we would be able to get a clearer view of just what is possible and what is impossible with regard to this question. We would also get a clearer view as to just what it is we seek to achieve through television coverage of the house and what it is that the television people are looking to attain. We could start our discussion of this problem on much surer ground if we had some hard facts before us. Having those facts, I am sure hon. members would be in a position to take a stand and vote on this very important matter.

In conclusion, I would again say that I think it is wonderful that we in this house have had the opportunity to give our views on this subject. I hope consideration of the subject will continue through the formation of a committee. In the meantime I would like to see committees televised. We can continue from there when all the facts are available.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with members opposite when they say this has been a most useful discussion. It has been doubly so because we have all recognized that this is not in any sense a partisan issue. There are many different points of view in all parties as to whether we should proceed along the lines some suggest, namely to televise parliament. To me that is a very grave over-simplification.

What we have really been talking about today, Mr. Speaker, and what will become more obvious as time goes by is that we are talking about an explosion in communications and the difficulty at present, despite the new means of communication, that we have in getting the full story of developments within our country, and indeed within the world, across to the general public. Because of this fact, those who advocate wrack and ruin if television is not brought in are probably overstating the case. By the same token, I think those who anticipate enormous improvements and benefits if it is brought in are probably being a little too sanguine about the likely results of this development.

Perhaps it will be accepted by hon. members that I have some experience in this field. With that background, I say hon. members should be aware that nothing which goes on outside this chamber will be changed significantly by televising proceedings inside the chamber. I am quite satisfied that what we are discussing here is the addition of another dimension. I suppose we could pass regulations prohibiting the jungle of microphones and television cameras in the rotunda, but it is well beyond our competence to prohibit members from going to television studios or being interviewed in their offices and other places. We must accept the fact of the multiplicity of sources outside. This will go on and probably expand if the proceedings inside the house are televised.

There is a very good reason why that will happen, apart from those raised this afternoon. That is each medium wishes to be as distinctive as possible. If we simply made one record of events in this house available, it would mean that each station or outlet would appear to be precisely the same in so far as the viewer is concerned. I feel quite certain we can anticipate in the event that station "A" or network "A" choose to take the taping, filming or whatever the process is in the house of a particular speaker that station "B" or network "B" will be anxious to get him so that they will be able to get a different point of view and different point of presentation. I re-emphasize this point because members should not be under any illusions that televising the house will in any sense cut down on the so-called confused state that many of us deplore on the outside.

We are embarking on a very complex kind of operation. I do not say this in any negative fashion, but merely to let hon. members see the complexity of what we are approaching. Ideally, we ought to have a television hookup through a series of stations from coast to coast in Canada that would carry the proceedings of this house from beginning to end. This in itself is not a very satisfactory way of ensuring that the so-called fairness doctrine is maintained. In other words, if a Canadian citizen wants to be sure of getting all points and is satisfied to sit for approximately 27 hours per week, then he might be able to get a comprehensive assessment of parliament. That would be theoretically ideal; however it would be too expensive for this country to contemplate at this time. It would require, in effect, the duplication of every existing station now in the C.B.C. network which covers most of the country. It would be necessary to parallel those services. I, therefore, think it is an unreasonable expectation.

I studied this matter as a broadcaster and as a member of an earlier committee of this house a season or so ago. We discussed this informally on a number of other occasions. The real nub of the problem is, how does one ensure that the end result of our efforts is a better informed public? How do we ensure that it will not add to the distortion? The difficulty of course comes in the editing process. I wish there were more time to speak on this subject because it is a most intriguing development.

With regard to the whole concept of the role of a documentary, we are hearing some of the best and most qualified producers in Canadian television arguing it is not their responsibility to present a balanced viewpoint in a particular program.

Mr. MacLean: Like seal hunting.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Jamieson: Like seal hunting, if my friend wishes to use that example, or on pollution, as recently occurred in Toronto. This house would have to be quite prepared to assume that out of the plurality of sources which would be using this material, the end result would be a balanced presentation and not result in major distortions.

Newsmen being what they are, I haven't the slightest doubt that if access to this house were granted to the media, the news which would get the most attention would not be the sober and dispassionate speeches which make up a very substantial part, albeit a dull part in terms of public interest, of the proceedings of this house. What would happen would be that the highlights of the question period would be presented. Is this in fact comparable to a written Hansard? It is an over-simplification to say that it is necessary because there are no other elements which are introduced. As Marshall McLuhan said, "The medium is the message".

There is so much that can be conveyed that it would be up to members to decide whether, over the long haul, what came out of the chosen excerpts would be representative of a fair presentation. Would it add to the totality of news available to the public?

Having said all these things which may appear to hon. members to be negative, let me say that my own conviction is that you cannot turn back the tide in this matter. Radio and television are here to stay, and it would be very wise for this house at the appropriate time to refer this matter to a committee, as has been suggested. But I think that when that is done we ought not to be under any illusions that there is any simple or short answer.

We should realize too, that certainly the control of the mechanism within this house ought to be under the direction of the Speaker, that is, that the media themselves should not be permitted to put their own cameras, microphones and the like into the chamber, and that the actual taping of what takes place in the Chamber should be done by staff of the House of Commons, staff of parliament under the control of the Speaker. That is a fairly simple thing to determine and one on which I think we could all agree.

The second matter is the one to which I referred just a few moments ago. Is it then simply a question of any representative of any medium coming in and saying, "I want that particular segment. I want what the Minister of Defence Production said about this, and I don't want anything else." Is that going to be adequate and in fact satisfactory to us in terms of the fairness doctrine? This, I suggest, is the thing to which we ought to apply ourselves.

Let there be no doubt about it, Mr. Speaker, unless broadcasting our proceedings gets the respectability which Hansard now has, which is something we all accept because through trial and error we now know that this is a good and accurate report of our proceedings—we ought not to forget that this was not always the case, and that in the early days there were many arguments about the printed record of this chamber and of many other parliaments throughout the free world—then it will not be satisfactory.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other hon. members that this will be the real question to which we will have to apply ourselves. I do not doubt we can find solutions, but I think we would also have to bring the media people in to ask them for their ideas. But in the last analysis, if we can get past that hurdle of ensuring that we are not just simply providing partisan, if you like, or a very limited kind of partial coverage, we will overcome that kind of confused situation to which the Leader of the Opposition referred earlier this afternoon. But I do suggest and agree totally that the answer lies in appointing a committee, and there let us see if we could resolve some of these serious matters because television is not going to go away. I hope we can employ it in a manner which will achieve the results that we want for the people of Canada.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have been very pleased to listen to the hon. members who have participated so far in the debate on this subject. I am sure anyone sitting in the galleries would come to the conclusion that we are going to put in television right away, and that nobody in the chamber is opposed to it. However, obviously there are still some objections to it, and some decisions will have to be made.

It is interesting to note that when the province of Ontario tried television for the first time this year in the provincial legislature it was a total disaster so far as that parliament was concerned. It was a total disaster for those who participated in it. Instead of the budget message being only a few minutes long, as has been usual, the provincial minister of finance had to engage in a long discourse on how to collect taxes, what they were for, the ultimate goal of taxation, and how the government would go about achieving it.

The viewers very quickly became bored. The extent of their interest was that which is satisfied by the newspapers with the information that cigarettes were going up two cents, tobacco up four cents a pound, whisky up seven cents, and income tax to be increased. Once the public received information on seven or eight points like that, their interest was satisfied.

As has been mentioned, experiments have been conducted with television in parliament. The first experiment was during the Queen's visit when some of the news media were allowed to enter the Senate chamber and televise the proceedings. Anyone who watched that operation must have been struck by the crudeness of it, by the total lack of decorum on the part of the people who were involved.

This, of course, is not displayed to the viewing audience. I remember the first time I went to a television studio in Timmins and saw the backdrops for two shows, papier-mâché settings. I was shocked because I thought that these were big programs. In my opinion, television in this place could be a disaster in an esthetic sense.

On the other hand, the televising of our proceedings could be conducted with a certain amount of decorum. I endorse the remarks of the previous speaker that Mr. Speaker should be in total control of the mechanism. That is a nice word to use, mechanism, meaning all kinds of machinery. I first learned it when studying French. The mechanism in parliament will have to be under the Speaker and he will have to hire the people who operate it. We will have to supply the film. The film used in this chamber may have to be a special type because we do not want to increase the lighting capacity here by more than double. For that reason, a specific type of film could be used for continuous filming in this chamber, without depending on the temporary type of lighting required to make normal film useful indoors.

I remember when we first talked about installing simultaneous translation in the chamber. When I first became a member of this house wires were stretched across the chamber with microphones dangling from them. One got used to them after a while, but I must say I am very pleased that the Speakers of the day provided us with the type of equipment that we have for our simultaneous translation service.

I am sure many new members do not notice the facilities for our simultaneous translation. I remember when there were no rooms or booths at the end of the chamber, but now these have been fitted in to suit the décor of this place, and are taken for granted. We are not affected by them at all.

I was interested in the remarks of the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, who discussed how much broadcasting our proceedings would cost. Somebody must consider the cost, but it is my opinion that if we instal the best, up to date television equipment, all automatically remote controlled, and placed at four fixed locations in this chamber in surroundings that will fit in with the décor of the room, we will be able to carry out television operations without any visible disruption of our proceedings.

I have never seen people so ignorant as cameramen who have to get into the middle of a celebration to take pictures. I realize that they have to do this, but the way they do it leaves a great deal to be desired. Under no circumstances, even on a temporary basis should we allow the television outlets, whether it be C.T.V., C.B.C., or some other private agency, to come in and set up television facilities. If a committee can be established to consider this matter and it reaches the decision that television facilities be installed, then I suggest that these facilities must be under the control of the Speaker. He must control them. We must hire our own officials to operate our television programming. A room should be provided where they can screen the film, where they can cut it, and where the agencies can buy it from us, or we can give it to them. It really does not make much difference. In that room prints can be made, and the original film should remain under control of the House of Commons.

If we really think it out and make a decision to do this, then I suggest we must consider two other things that have been mentioned. I would like to see some television stations asked to carry a separate channel, possibly in conjunction with the C.B.C. in every area, but particularly in the more remote areas, which would carry full daily coverage of the happenings of parliament. I would think this would be an excellent method to make people aware of some of the things which happen here. I do not know what other members think of the question period, and I should like to know what the government thinks of it. I do not consider the question period to be representative of the workings of parliament. I do not consider the new media do a very good job in covering parliament because during the question period the press gallery will be jammed, and then as soon as the question period is over out they go. There are many other happenings in parliament which have a great effect on the lives of people and which have nothing to do with the question period. I would hope that it would not be the intention to televise only the question period. As one who does not ask too many questions during the question period I am sure that if I knew there would be an opportunity to appear on camera while asking a question I would ask one, even if it should be one given to me by a newspaper man. I am sure I would do this as I am sure would many others who, like myself, normally are not too interested in asking questions.

If we had the opportunity to grandstand, I believe we would grandstand. I believe we could do better than use the question period as a forum for television. I should like to thank the Speaker for finally having made a decision in respect of the wiring in the rotunda outside the chamber, so that now we are not so likely to trip on wires which are running along the floor into member's offices. Although I do not consider this to be the proper type of facility, in my opinion the public should not be deprived of it entirely. I believe there would be interest in having this in a controlled environment such as a room set aside where interviews could be conducted in a much more formal way, with better acoustics and better camera work than is now possible out in the rotunda.

My opinion is that if television is to be installed in this house it should be of a permanent nature and disguised in such a manner that it would not destroy the décor of the house. I am not so much of a conservative that that really bothers me, but I do not particularly want to know that I am being televised anymore than I am particularly interested in knowing that my words are being translated. I do not think about it anymore. It does not bother me, but I do not want to be inhibited by the fact that something I may say is violent enough, wild enough or crude enough that it would be covered on television, because it would certainly have an effect on me as I am sure it would have an effect on other members.

I hope that Mr. Speaker would take control of the televising of the debates of the house, the same as he now has control over the Journals, Hansard and other facilities which affect this chamber. I hope that the type of media we provide for the public will help them regain their lost ability to participate. I believe it is desirable that the public be able to see what is going on in parliament on a continuous basis rather than be fed, as we are now through the news media, fragments and sections which do not seem to have any beginning or end. Mr. Speaker, I believe, would be the agency best able to protect our rights as individual members and also our rights as a parliament, as well as the right of the public to make a fair evaluation of what was said.

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am in a position to make any great contribution to this debate. The subject has been kicked around for some time. Many different views have been expressed. I believe it is a good idea to air this subject in this chamber today without any great amount of party discipline or any great amount of acrimony. It is a subject which at this point can be freely and openly debated. Some people have suggested it is not an important subject at this time. I disagree. I believe it is an important subject, indeed a very important one.

Television I suppose has become the most powerful single effective means of communication today. This is the parliament of Canada and a few hours spent in determining the relationship between parliament and television, in my opinion, should be a few hours well spent. At this point I believe I should say that with very few exceptions, I personally would be opposed to allowing a television camera or television cameras in this chamber. The exceptions to my mind should be confined to such events as the delivery of the budget speech and perhaps other noteworthy and newsworthy events.

Television has many possibilities in the field of education; but at the moment I regard it primarily as a source of entertainment, although up to a point it is also a source of information and education. I speak for myself, although I believe many hon. members feel the same way. We are not here as entertainers, and the majority of us did not come here as educators. Here again, I speak for myself. I certainly did not come here to make like an Ed Sullivan or end up as a national exhibit of some kind. I do not think this should be one of the prerequisites of becoming a member of parliament. Undoubtedly it will be if television eventually is allowed in the chamber. I think it would naturally follow that the greatest television performers in many cases would probably end up as members of parliament. I do not think television can necessarily be considered an honest media. As an example of what I mean I might refer to the occasion a few years ago when the late John F. Kennedy, who was campaigning for election, engaged in a great television debate with Mr. Nixon. I think it is conceded all over the world that it was not what the gentlemen had to say but their appearance on television which was the winning factor in the campaign. I do not think that should necessarily be the situation. I do not think the best material is necessarily selected in that manner.

I had a little parliamentary experience in a provincial legislature, and in the short time I have been here I have watched what I would refer to as the fragmentation of this parliament; it has been chopped up in little pieces. An example of this was seen the other morning when four very important committee meetings were scheduled for the same time, 9:30 in the morning. We all remember the house leader saying that we would have plenty of opportunity in committee to voice our opinions on matters. Where are the opportunities? And now the suggestion is that we televise this fragmentation, that we televise what is left of this parliament. I might have been a little more kindly disposed six months ago when this parliament was in fact a parliament and when the business of the country was conducted right here in this chamber. I could very well have been more kindly disposed then, but I am certainly not kindly disposed toward giving television coverage to the fragments that are left.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I would not for a moment recommend the closing of the galleries any more than I would recommend the closing of the galleries in our courts of law and Supreme Court. By the same token, I would not agree to allowing television into our Supreme Court. They are separate matters, and I do not think one has anything to do with the other.

The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) gave some pretty alarming estimates of the cost of covering our procedures by television. Every time I have had occasion to approach the C.B.C.—and no doubt the C.B.C. would be the ones who would cover the proceedings if we had television in the chamber—and ask them to provide very basic coverage for part of my riding, the answer has been that they could not do it because their budget did not allow them to do so. In one instance a large area of my riding could not be supplied with the local news for the simple reason the C.B.C. could not provide the 30 cents a minute it would cost. It was not in the budget and the C.B.C. could not transmit this news to the Labrador part of my riding. Therefore, the very thought of spending hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars to televise the proceedings in this chamber is alarming to me, when so many parts of Canada do not have even the basic radio and television services. Under no circumstances could I agree to this proposal until such time as those areas lacking radio and television facilities have been serviced.

We must remember that we have 264 members in this house. They were sent here at very great expense to the Canadian taxpayer. Hansard is produced, again at very great expense to the taxpayer. We have newspapermen sitting up in the gallery—a bevy of them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do you call that a bevy?

Mr. Peddle: Let us not kid ourselves, they are here at the expense of the taxpayer because they work for newspapers. Newspapers are supported by advertisers, and advertisers are supported by their customers. So, eventually again, it is the taxpayer who pays. We have television and radio coverage of parliament at the present time. They broadcast newsworthy items, and so on, or what these gentlemen regard as newsworthy items. Even the private stations are supported at the expense of the taxpayer. In my humble opinion, before we give any further thought to increasing the burden on our taxpayers, television and radio coverage should be universal in this country.

I suppose it is only natural that politicians should be conscious of their image. I know some politicians who spend most of their waking hours devising means to get before the bright lights. There are others who cringe at the very thought of it. I think I come somewhere in between; I could live with it or without it. But I do not think it would do this parliament or the people of the country any good if our proceedings were televised. I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that these are just initial reactions. I like the idea of a study in this field if it would not cost too much. My opinions are subject to revision and change. However, at the moment this is how I feel.

When I think about television, I always think in terms of sponsors. A few amusing things come to mind in this respect. In order to offset the cost of televising our proceedings, perhaps we could have sponsors who would sponsor different speakers on different days. For instance, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is responsible for housing, might be sponsored by the Ottawa Valley Lumber Company which would give a special discount of 11 per cent this week on all building materials. This would offset the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) stubbornly refuses to remove.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) might be sponsored by Belvedere cigarettes—"I smoke them because I like them". This is the type of thing we might encourage. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) might be sponsored by Flower Shops Incorporated—"Flowers around the corner or around the world". On alternate days perhaps he might be sponsored by Max Factor, the kiss-proof lipstick people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peddle: I do not want to make light of this matter, Mr. Chairman, but I cannot restrain myself. These are the sort of things that come to my mind. I think the suggestion at this point in time is rather ridiculous.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this is an important and purposeful debate. I have listened to all hon. members who have spoken and it seems to me that the consensus of the house is that television and radio should be allowed in the house, with certain restrictions. I particularly noted the fact that virtually every speaker who supported our eventually allowing television into the house insisted that certain restrictions be placed on it; that is, that the office of the Speaker or some other office would determine what would be allowed to be shown to the viewers of the country. In my opinion, televising the proceedings of the house would be of lasting and significant benefit to parliamentary democracy in Canada. Indeed, it might be the very life blood of parliamentary democracy in Canada.

There is throughout the country a growing dissatisfaction with parliament and politicians. I suppose we could generalize and say that the people of the country do not appreciate the work of parliament, they do not understand the work of parliament. I suppose that we as parliamentarians have failed in educating the people in this regard. I think it is high time parliament was called upon to assist in this educational process. The people of Canada want to feel involved in government at all levels. If we had television in the house I am sure they would have this vicarious involvement. In establishing this sense of involvement, television would contribute to the strength of parliamentary democracy in Canada.

I am concerned about this aspect of the question. Some hon. members do not wish television in the house, and those who do ask that there be some sort of censorship in regard to it. They were really suggesting a censorship, no matter what you wish to call it. I am of the opinion that we have in Canada a responsible press. Our television and radio media are responsible. We must not forget that we in this house have the ultimate power, if we allow these media into the chamber and they do not conduct themselves in a responsible manner, to refuse further privileges to television and radio in the house. It would be simple for us to do this.

The motion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) deals with allowing televison into the House of Commons and includes the televising and broadcasting of committee meetings. This is important, because in my opinion committee meetings are to a great extent stripped of the politics which take place in this chamber. I refer to the type of thing which leads to great cynicism on the part of the people of Canada with regard to parliament and politics in general Also, it happens that sometimes questions raised in committees are more serious than those which are raised in the House of Commons and members of parliament tend to be much less verbose than they are here. It is important that the cynicism toward parliament be not increased and, in my opinion, the best way to do that would be to allow television into the house, regardless of whether it is controlled by the office of the Speaker or uncontrolled except by the sense of responsibility of the media. It is important to convey to the people of Canada the type of work that is being performed in the house, the idea that democracy lives here in this chamber, and that through their members of parliament they are involved in the democratic process.

I am concerned about the possibility that there may be some grandstanders among us and the impression which this will create on television, but at the same time I am also sure that the radio and television people have a sufficient sense of responsibility to minimize this effect. I am sure that those people who have a tendency to become grandstanders here will not add to our debates as they are televised.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty to inform the house that pursuant to paragraph 10 of Standing Order 58 the proceedings on the motion are now considered to have expired.

The house will now proceed to the next order of business, which is the consideration of the motion to concur in interim supply.

INTERIM SUPPLY FOR PERIOD APRIL 1 TO JUNE 30, 1969

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved that this house concur in interim supply for the period, April 1 to June 30, 1969, as follows:

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBERTS—REFUSAL TO PAY TERMINAL GRATUITY WHEN LEAVING PUBLIC SERVICE —REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Roberts (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It relates to the refusal of the government, upon my election to the House of Commons, to pay to me the terminal gratuity provided as a normal practice to those leaving the public service.

I received a letter from the government informing me of the refusal yesterday afternoon. I am therefore raising the matter at the earliest opportunity. It is one which affects not only myself but also several other members of the house. The facts are, basically, these. Members of the public service are normally given a termination payment upon leaving the public service equivalent to their accumulated vacation leave. To the best of my knowledge my predecessors as executive or special assistants at the Department of Forestry and Rural Development all received this payment.

The technique for payment normally used is a device, or what I would call a fiction. The former public servant is kept on the books even though he may be working on a full time basis for another employer. The government contends that to provide me with the usual payment could lead to a challenge to my right to hold a seat in the house, under section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act. I dispute that such would be the effect of section 16 to which I have referred. The government, though it admits that as a matter of justice I am fully entitled to the payment, has therefore refused to make payment to me.

I should emphasize that since the payment is discretionary on the part of the government I have no redress through court action, and no forum other than the House of Commons in which to raise this question.

Bourinot's fourth edition states in a relevent citation that the questions of privilege have a wide range and that they——refer to all matters affecting the rights and immunities of the house collectively, or to the position and conduct of members in their representative character.

And they include:

—motions touching the seat or election of members.

I submit this is a matter touching upon the seat or election of a member, for if the payment were made it is conceivable that my right to hold my seat would be challenged, in which case such a challenge would be dealt with by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Here we have a question—a mixed one of law and privilege it may be—in which the legal aspect is not foremost, for it cannot be determined until the question of privilege has been decided. Moreover, it is well accepted that on questions concerning the application of section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, final authority as to the eligibility of members to sit rests with the House of Commons.

I contend that since this matter would be considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections if the payment were made, the germane facts are not changed by the government's refusal to make payment. To assert otherwise would be to argue that the government can, in effect, pre-empt the judgment of the house by refusing to meet an obligation to which it admits I am entitled.

Bourinot goes on to say that for a member to be entitled to bring up a question of privilege he must show that it affects him since he became a member of the house and consequently in his character of a member. It is admitted that had I not been elected to the House of Commons I would have received the payment. It is clear that refusal to pay stems from the fact that I have become a member. This conforms to Bourinot's description.

The fact is that I have not received the customary termination payment for my government service. That is a fact. This payment is a normal condition, though not legally protected, which stems from government service entirely prior to my election. There is therefore a divergence from the ordinary procedure, a divergence entirely attributable to my becoming a member of parliament. This divergence of treatment, therefore, constitutes a disability, indeed a penalization, placed upon a member of the House of Commons for becoming a member.

I suggest, with respect, that I have established a prima facie case of privilege, and I am prepared to make a motion.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether any hon. member would like to offer comments for the guidance of the Chair on the question of privilege that has been raised by the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Pay!

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the remedy suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is within the power of the Chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I didn't say a word!

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the hon. member for York-Simcoe who had given me advance notice of the question of privilege, thus affording the Chair an opportunity to study the matter. This, of course, is the intention and purpose of the standing order that provides for advance notice of questions of privilege.

At first blush I would incline to the view that it is the hon. member's rights as a former civil servant which are at issue. He has, perhaps, a grievance against the government in that capacity rather than in his capacity as a member of parliament. On the other hand, hon. members know that the house has always exercised great care in attempting to protect the rights and privileges of all its members. Since there is some doubt about the interpretation of the precedents in this situation, I would be inclined to resolve that doubt in favour of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roberts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson):

That the subject matter of my question of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

DISCUSSION UPON THE CALLING OF THE ORDER FOR A MOTION TO CONCUR IN FIFTH REPORT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Motions. The hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard).

On March 25 when the notice of motion to which I have just referred standing in the name of the hon. member for LaSalle was called the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) rose on a point of order. During the discussion of this point of order a number of hon. members took the position that the President of the Privy Council was not raising his point of order at the appropriate time in our proceedings. In particular the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) drew the attention of the Chair to citation 318, subsection (3), of Beauchesne. That citation says:

A member will not be permitted in presenting a report to make any remarks on the subject-matter; he can only properly do so on a motion in reference to the report.

The hon. member said that if this limitation is placed on an hon. member who has the moving of the motion in his care, it applies as well to other hon. members.

The question I have to decide therefore is whether or not the point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council came too early in our proceedings; in other words, whether or not the motion should have been put first and then the question as to the regularity of the report brought into issue by the house leader.

It should be recalled that hon. members who took part in the discussion on the point of order, more particularly the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), dealt exclusively with the very limited point to which I have referred. Since, according to the submission, the minister's procedural objection could not be raised at that point they obviously did not consider it proper to argue the substance of the minister's arguments. For the moment I will therefore limit my comments to the objection raised by hon. members to the timing of the minister's objection.

In my opinion it was not improper for the President of the Privy Council to seek to question the form of the committee report at the stage he chose to select. In this regard I bring the attention of the house to citation 323 (1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, where it is stated:

> A committee report may be ruled out of order though it has been received by the House, and a motion to concur therein cannot then be entertained.

It seems to me this citation is directly on point and justifies the minister's submission that the procedural points should be considered and should be determined before the motion is put.

This having been said I would suggest that hon. members interested in this extremely complex situation should be given an opportunity to express their views in relation to the substance of the points raised by the President of the Privy Council.

After giving much thought to the complex procedural aspects of the matter I am concerned mostly about three specific points. First, it must be determined whether the sub judice doctrine is applicable here. Hon. members may wish to consult citation 152 (2) of Beauchesne's fourth edition on this point. Second, I am concerned with the form of the committee recommendation. Normally these recommendations propose that parliament or the government take into consideration the advisability of introducing legislation for a specified purpose. One might well wonder whether the form of the present report does not constitute a direction rather than a mere recommendation. A further point is whether the report is within the terms of the committee order of reference.

Of course, there may be other points of procedure that hon. members may want to raise, either in support of or in opposition to the presentation of the motion at this time. Because of the importance and complexity of the matter I would think that hon. members would want an opportunity to give some thought to the procedural point I have raised and, at their convenience, submit arguments for consideration by the Chair. The hon. house leaders may want to consult one another or with the Chair in this regard. In view of the circumstances I suggest that the motion should stand.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER MARKING FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to draw to the attention of the house the fact that one of the pioneer intergovernmental organizations, the International Labour Organization, is shortly to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary. The I.L.O. was one of the happier outcomes of world war I. It was established under the League of Nations as part of mankind's attempt to create a form of international order.

[Translation]

It is particularly appropriate that we in Canada should recognize this anniversary because of our longstanding association with I.L.O.

Canada has been a member since its outset and during world war II when the organization fled Europe before the Nazi invasion, the Canadian government invited the I.L.O. to come to this country. That invitation was accepted and the organization established its headquarters on the campus of McGill University.

In addition, several distinguished Canadians, some of whom are in the gallery this afternoon, have sat on I.L.O.'s board of directors.

• (2:20 p.m.)

[English]

A feature of the International Labour Organization which sets it apart from most bodies of its kind is the tripartite participation of governments, workers and employers. This organization, perhaps more accurately than any other, reflects the needs of that part of the international community which it serves. Partly as a result, the I.L.O. has to its credit an impressive list of accomplishments. It was the first international organization to regard social and economic rights as basic human rights. It was the first international organization to declare, to codify and to implement protection for human rights. It has adopted 128 draft treaties, known as International Labour Conventions and has secured more than 3,000 ratifications of these conventions by member countries.

Nor, happily, is there any diminishing of I.L.O. activity. In recent years there has been a heavy involvement in operational programs of technical assistance to the developing countries. It has now launched a world employment program aimed at the formation of skills and the creation of jobs throughout the world.

[Translation]

The Canadian government, Mr. Speaker, is happy to join with the provincial governments, and the labour and employer organizations in celebrating this important anniversary.

Canada is about to issue a commemorative stamp to mark this anniversary of I.L.O. The Public Archives will soon hold an exhibition of documents relating to Canada's participation in I.L.O., and later this year a tripartite conference will be held in Ottawa.

[English]

We take pride in this organization which commands the support of Canadian workers and employers and extend to it our greetings on its anniversary and our best wishes for its continued leadership in its worldwide struggle for social justice.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that the Prime Minister today should make a statement relating to the fiftieth anniversary of an international labour movement in which Canada, as a founding member, has played a significant part.

The statement was both adequate and appropriate, stressing Canada's continuing interest in and contribution to the International Labour Organization. We should bear in mind however, as I think the Prime Minister has, that we should deal with this International Labour Organization on this occasion as more than a set of international initials, another of those bodies to which Canada contributes from a sense of duty and in order to discharge international obligations. This organization is an outstanding and enduring result of a contribution arising from the Treaty of Versailles. This organization survived the demise of the League of Nations and became associated with the United Nations. This was the first organization to form such a relationship as that with UNESCO.

This organization is above all an organization dealing with people. The fact that the government is commemorating this event, as it intends to, indicates the involvement with I.L.O. which is felt in this country. This involvement is felt all over the world. The human rights conventions of the I.L.O. have brought new hope and courage to the people in Tanzania where the new apprenticeship program is being designed, and to people in many other countries.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I commend the government for the effort that is being made in this anniversary year to secure ratification by Canada of some of the conventions relating to human rights and working conditions. It has been a tragic feature, a depressing feature of our I.L.O. experience that owing to our structure in Canada so many vital and essential I.L.O. conventions have not been ratified, removing therefrom the powerful support that ratification by Canada would have marshalled.

It is rather ironical that this relationship with the International Labour Organization should expose our inadequate constitutional development, when it is remembered that the birth of the I.L.O. was so intimately associated with the development of Canada as a sovereign state. Hon. members will recall that it was in connection with the Treaty of Versailles and the related conventions that the Prime Minister of the day, Sir Robert Borden, asserted the independent position of Canada, and Canada signed the agreement and became a member of this organization as an independent country and not simply as part of the British Empire.

This anniversary therefore reminds us of our international development over the 50 year period. It also reminds us of our own constitutional imperfections, and Canadians cannot be happy that, even though we were a founding participant of this organization, we have not been able to ratify as many of its conventions as we would like.

An aspect of the I.L.O. that gives considerable satisfaction and adds to its pre-eminence in the field of dealing with the needs of people is the close working relationship now being developed between the I.L.O. and the Canadian International Development Agency. This co-operation ought to be very fruitful, bringing to the foreign aid program of Canada the valuable world wide contacts of the I.L.O. organization at the level of working men and women in many nations.

Foreign aid, of course, has many aspects. It consists of a great deal more than handing out food, money or materials. It consists of more than making available technological experience. It consists also—and this is the emergent structure and most vital fact—of providing the organizational structure and mechanism for putting the technology to work. This is the heart of the whole foreign aid program and it is in this area that the I.L.O. will be particularly useful.

So, sir, I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) upon his comments today and upon the measures his government is taking to commemorate this anniversary in Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that it has fallen to me to say a few words on behalf of the New Democratic party on this important occasion. We welcome the initiative of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in providing the opportunity for this country to pay tribute to the 50 years of service to mankind that have been rendered by the International Labour Organization. It is indeed one of the oldest intergovernmental organizations and it is a matter of pride for us in Canada that we have been associated with it from its beginning in 1919.

The Prime Minister referred to the fact that many distinguished Canadians have made contributions to the work of the I.L.O. and he drew attention to some of those who are in the gallery today. I would like to suggest names such as those of Tom Moore, Paddy Draper and Claude Jodoin, and I think also of the former colleagues of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) who have gone over to Geneva from time to time in an associate capacity.

I might also mention the name of Kalmen Kaplansky who, for a number of years, was a member of the governing body and is now director of the Canada branch, which has its office here in Ottawa. We also have the honour of knowing that the head office at Geneva assigned to Mr. Kaplansky the task of co-ordinating internationally the celebration of this 50th anniversary.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, both the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition have indicated some things that are unique about the I.L.O. Perhaps I might add in my own words that I think there are about three reasons for the success of this organization. In the first place, from the beginning it has been an organization concerned with people, and not in an ivory tower or academic sense but in terms of their conditions of work, which are the conditions under which they live the major part of their lives. In the second place, this organization has succeeded because it has been genuinely a tripartite organization representative of government, workers and employers, and comprised so that the independence of each from the other two has been clearly established and clearly maintained.

I can speak with some certainty on this point because in 1959, 1960 and 1961 I had the very great honour of being the workers' delegate for Canada at the annual conference held in Geneva. I learned there how useful it is to have this world body with these three groups, government, employers and workers, with equal voice, trying to work out solutions to the problems of the working people of the world. In the third place this organization has been successful because it has pioneered in the proclamation of principles of social and economic justice and has seen to it that those principles were implemented in as much of the world as possible.

I think it might also be said of the I.L.O. that it has shown a tremendous capacity for adapting to new conditions and to the needs of an ongoing world. In its earlier years it concentrated on the adopting of conventions and recommendations. This is still an important part of its work, but it realizes now that, if it is to improve in a substantial way the conditions under which people work and live, it must concentrate on training. Therefore the major work of the I.L.O. today is in the field of technical assistance. It has made great strides which have already helped to raise living standards the world around.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we welcome this opportunity to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the International Labour Organization. We are glad that things are being done such as those to which the Prime Minister referred, including the issuing of a commemorative postage stamp. We think there are at least two other things which might be done. We urge that we put real effort into getting more of the conventions and recommendations of the I.L.O. ratified, and if that means doing something to our constitution in Canada so that we can ratify these conventions in our federal state, I hope this will be done. The other course we urge is to increase our contribution to the I.L.O.'s technical assistance program and thus play a really active part in helping do the job the I.L.O. is trying to carry on, namely to improve the conditions under which people the world around work and live.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I received this morning the text of the statement just made by the Prime Minister with regard to the 50th anniversary of the International Labour Organization.

The Prime Minister may not be aware—but I wish to point it out to him—that I received the English copy only. Someone forgot to send me the French copy. The document is addressed as follows:

M. Réal Caouette, M.P.

That is in French. Then the message:

The Prime Minister will make this statement in the house this afternoon. Ivan L. Head.

That is in English as is the whole text.

Mr. Speaker, it is not that I do not understand it; I know English.

However, as the Prime Minister often makes statements to the effect that both languages are truly official in Canada, the fact that I received a text in English from his office would certainly be reason enough to raise the question of privilege. I see the Prime Minister shaking his head to the effect that I am right in complaining about that.

If the statement had been received the way it was made in the house a moment ago, that is one paragraph in English, one in French, and so on, I would have had nothing to quarrel about. However, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister would have been forced to translate the French paragraphs for the benefit of the house.

Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: It is spontaneous translation.

Mr. Caouette: It is really spontaneous and not simultaneous translation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the International Labour Organization, founded in 1919, brings together governments, employers and workers in a joint action aimed towards the advancement of social justice and the improvement of living and working conditions in every part of the world. This is an intergovernmental institution, but the principle of tripartite representation is respected in all its meetings.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

At the present time 117 countries are members of the I.L.O. This organization commemorates its 50th anniversary this year.

My colleagues and myself are very happy to join with the Prime Minister and the previous members who spoke about the 50th anniversary of the International Labour Organization whose aim is to serve the interests of workers the world over.

Today, the effect of the standardizing work of the I.L.O. is being felt in all parts of the world and its practical activity is world-wide.

Mr. Speaker, the aims of the International Labour Organization are praiseworthy since it is doing useful work for working people, as well as for governments and employers.

However, in spite of those praiseworthy goals, we still see a very high level of unemployment, at home in Canada and in most Western countries.

Therefore, after the 50th anniversary of the I.L.O., could not another organization be instituted to help the latter promote effectively the development of natural resources in Canada or elsewhere, so as to create jobs and to guarantee to man both the security and the freedom which we are attempting to protect through organizations such as the I.L.O.?

AIRPORTS

ANNOUNCEMENT LOCATING NEW MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT NEAR SAINT JÉRÔME

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a new international airport is to be built north of Montreal.

An intensive review of the airport requirements of the Montreal region was begun in December 1966. Following that review the cabinet agreed in July 1968 that the present airport at Dorval could not be expanded economically to accommodate the forecast growth in air traffic and that a new international airport was therefore required.

Officials of the Department of Transport then met with officials of the Quebec government to review some 20 possible sites in the light of the technical criteria developed in preliminary studies. These discussions led to a substantial reduction in the number of acceptable sites. A task force was then created, drawn from the federal departments of Transport and Regional Economic Expansion, four Quebec government departments and the City of Montreal, to examine these sites from the point of view of their different economic impacts. The aim was to assess the stimulus that would be given to regional development, taking into account Canadian, Quebec and regional priorities.

After a careful assessment of the technical, cost and developmental factors identified by these studies, the cabinet has concluded that the new Montreal International Airport will be built north of Montreal, near the City of Saint-Jérôme. This site, 26 miles north of the centre of Montreal and 17 miles from Dorval airport, will meet the changing patterns in air traffic and technology, including jumbo jets and supersonic aircraft, for the foreseeable future. It fits with regional development strategies and will provide the greatest benefits for the growth of the Montreal region and of the Quebec economy generally.

The location will provide for safe flight operations without interfering with activity at Dorval. It suffers from no restrictions because of natural or man-made obstacles. The runways can be oriented in the most favourable directions for the prevailing winds, without bad effects on adjoining urban areas. The incidence of fog and freezing rain are less than at other points in the Montreal region.

The site is well located to serve the majority of the users, who will largely be drawn from the centre, west and north of the Montreal metropolis. It is well integrated with existing and proposed ground transportation networks and it will be possible to provide easy access to Dorval Airport. This will facilitate cargo and passenger connections, and thus ensure continued optimum utilization of the present airport.

From the economic point of view, the northern site will maximize the essential close interaction between the Montreal area itself and the new International airport. Easy access to the scientific, cultural and other amenities of Montreal, and to the leisure centres of the Laurentians, will offer good inducements for the location of technologically advanced industries and their staffs. The site will thus foster the most desirable forms of development for Jesus Island and the corridor between the airport and Montreal. With planning, it will be possible to accelerate the spill-over of these developments along an east-west axis toward Trois Rivières and Quebec City. Accordingly the location of the airport will make an important contribution to the prosperity of both the Montreal region and Quebec as a whole.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the statement we have just heard the Minister of Transport has not told us anything that we did not already know, but has merely confirmed a rumour that has been growing for some time.

As a matter of fact, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) yesterday whether he could give us the assurance that the new airport would be located in the Sainte-Thérèse area. Unfortunately, Your Honour decided that my question was out of order and the minister did not give me any answer. I suggest that if he refused to answer, it may have been because he wanted to make a statement today and to tell us himself something that we knew already.

Mr. Speaker, this lengthy statement reveals that it took the government three years to choose a site for the new airport. Indeed, the minister stated clearly that studies began in 1966, and we are now in 1969. Only three years later do we finally get to know the decision of the present government.

I am happy about the chosen site, but I deplore that all this shuffling has kept us waiting so long for a decision. However, it is becoming more and more typical of the present government and we hope, Mr. Speaker, that it will not take as long to get the construction of the airport under way as it did to come to a decision about the site.

I know that this decision will not please all the areas which sent delegates to make representations to the federal government, but I take this opportunity to congratulate the representatives of the municipalities of various areas who worked eagerly for the establishment of the airport in their own area. However, I think that a decision had to be taken and following the arguments stated by the minister concerning the security of flights, the weather, the land, the proximity of Dorval, all those factors make the decision quite acceptable.

I would also say that the Quebec government behaved wisely also when it accepted that choice, even if the airport is to be located in the constituency of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux). I think there is nothing against it since that fact does not affect the value of the decision.

Mr. Speaker, let us hope that a decision will be made without delay about the early construction of that second airport and that Montreal will benefit shortly from the advantages involved.

Saint Jérôme Suggested Airport Site

[English]

I would also like to say a few words in English and ask the minister, now that he has settled one problem, to let the house know and clarify for us the negotiations he has undertaken, or will undertake, with the provincial authorities of Ontario or the municipalities concerning a second airport to be built in Toronto.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should remind the hon. member that this is not yet the question period. Regulations allow him only to comment at this time on the statement that has been made.

The hon. member will have an opportunity later on to ask any questions that come to his mind now.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that the decision is quite acceptable and that we are happy that the government has finally made its mind up. It is the first decision taken so far by the Minister of Transport and we are happy about it.

[English]

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made today by the Minister of Transport is a long awaited one. The reasons the minister gave for making this particular choice seem, on the surface at least, to be plausible enough. But I think it must be said that simply because we were not privy to many of the representations and arguments presented to the minister, we really have no way of knowing whether the reasons the minister put forward today are genuine and profound or are superficial. I think the minister must appreciate that this is the position in which we find ourselves.

[Translation]

For instance, Mr. Speaker, we would like to know whether the federal government has given enough consideration to the advice given and to the views of the province of Quebec, before a final decision was taken.

I have a similar question, and I ask if there was the same type of consultation with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

[English]

The minister has not taken the opportunity to give the house a full and detailed account as to why this particular site was chosen in preference to others. Anyone who has been following closely the stories in La Presse and other newspapers in Quebec can easily see that many alternative sites and locations were being put forward. I recall, for example, that about two months ago there was a lead story in Montreal La Presse to the effect that a decision could not be taken in February because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was out of the country. It was said that no decision could be taken relative to the location of the airport until the minister returned to this country. One can obviously see that the Minister of National Defence was not out of Canada in recent weeks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Schreyer: It would be helpful and useful to the house and parliament generally if the minister would indicate precisely what was the relationship between himself, his department and the Transport Commission, for example, relative to all the negotiations and studies made with regard to the question of choosing this site. One should assume—I say "should assume"—that the Canadian Transport Commission was consulted very closely with regard to this question.

Now that the Minister of Transport has got rid of one problem that was facing him in recent months, now that he has made the choice, is he prepared to give equal effort and time to arriving at a decision relative to the International Airport in Winnipeg?

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we know at last where the new international airport will be located: at St. Jérôme 26 miles from Montreal.

The minister stated that a task force made up of representatives of the federal Departments of Transport and Regional Economic Expansion, four Quebec departments and the city of Montreal, decided on the exact site where the new airport is to be built.

In his statement the minister said also that this will stimulate the economic development of that area.

Therefore, I wonder why the minister did not contemplate building the international airport at Rouyn, for instance, if he really wants to facilitate regional development.

For if we consider that the new airport will contribute to the economic development of Montreal, instead of decentralizing, we centralize even more.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I took a stand, several months ago, in favour of the construction of the new airport on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. As I had proposed Drummondville, I thought I could depend on the support of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) since he had discussed the matter with the authorities there, and everything seemed to indicate that the authorities would take our proposal into consideration.

That does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that we are dissatisfied with the choice made by the people concerned, namely the provincial government and the Department of Transport. We rejoice about this happy event which will promote the economic development of the St. Jérôme area and the vicinity.

But I believe more attention could have been given to the possibility of selecting the area on the south shore of the river, for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would have been more satisfied.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, we know we are going to have an international airport in the St. Jérôme area, that will serve Montreal and the province of Quebec, as well as the Canadian people of other areas who will have to use it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXCHANGE OF CORRESPONDENCE EXCHANGED BETWEEN QUEBEC AND FRANCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table two copies of the letters exchanged between Mr. Jean-Guy Cardinal, vice-president of the Quebec Council of Ministers, and Mr. Michel Debré, French Foreign Affairs Minister.

ORAL QUESTIONS

FINANCE

REPORT OF THE AUDITOR GENERAL—FAILURE TO PERMIT RECRUITMENT OF PROFESSIONAL STAFF

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister which arises from the repeated statement, which has become almost an annual feature of the Auditor General's report, that the failure of the government to give the Auditor General freedom to recruit the professional staff he needs, in the same independent manner as other officers of parliament, imposes a severe handicap on his work. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that the government is not dragging its feet deliberately in order to limit the activities of the Auditor General and, if not, will the Prime Minister say when the house may expect a decision on this matter, which the Auditor General has raised in his report in successive years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my answer is yes to the first part of the question, and soon to the second.

Mr. Stanfield: We will get an answer eventually, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the fact that the Public Accounts Committee in 1966 recommended that the office of the Auditor General should be governed by a separate act of parliament, and in view of the statement by the Auditor General that he submitted a draft act to the government over two years ago, will the Prime Minister say whether the government is opposed to having a separate act of parliament for the office of the Auditor General, or whether it is preparing to submit such a measure to parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have not considered the possibility of putting forward such an act imminently, in parliament. Our program is full, with other things, and I can only answer the Leader of the Opposition that I will consider this matter at a later date.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition has raised this subject twice in debate during the current session of parliament, without ever receiving the courtesy of an acknowledgement from the government, will the Prime Minister arrange to give, or have one of his colleagues give, an early statement of policy concerning the attitude of the government toward the position of the Auditor General?

Mr. Trudeau: Many subjects have been raised in debate which the government either has not had time to consider or has felt it was inopportune to consider at this time. The house knows that we announced in the speech from the throne measures to be introduced in this session, and that we have a very full parliamentary program. The house would not expect me to announce measures which will be included in the next speech from the throne. I can tell the house, however, that the general subject will be taken under advisement by the government.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister say whether it is the intention of the government to implement the recommendation of the Auditor General to set up an independent management study to root out causes for the continuance of wasteful and extravagant government spending?

Mr. Trudeau: We had such a study in the form of the Glassco Commission report a few years ago, and I must say that the government's record of implementing the overwhelming majority of the recommendations of the commission is very good.

Mr. Baldwin: The seven year itch.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it is supplementary to questions asked in the last few days regarding the United States A.B.M. program. In view of reports that the Governor General is to make a tour of the northern part of Canada to assert our sovereignty there, will the government consider shooting the Governor General into outer space so that we can assert our sovereignty out there as well?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must correct part of the hon. member's question in the sense that the purpose of the visit of the Governor General is not to assert our sovereignty there. Our sovereignty in the northern part of Canada is very well established.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: As to asking the Governor General to go into outer space, I am afraid he will only find members of the New Democratic party there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is right, Mr. Speaker, we are everywhere.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY ABOUT U.S. MISSILE POLICY

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, recently the Secretary of State said that the missile policy, to which reference is made at the present time, was an escalation policy and a threat to peace. Does the Prime Minister share the view expressed in Paris by the Secretary of State?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without being rude I would suggest to the hon. member that when he puts a question to a minister, he should say at the outset what minister he is addressing. I did not get the question and he simply mentioned my name at the end. I would therefore ask him to repeat it.

Mr. Dumont: I apologize to the Prime Minister. I had put a question to him but in view of the ovation he received, he probably did not hear it.

I am referring to the statement of the Secretary of State to the effect that the present missile policy of the Washington government is a threat to world peace; I was asking the Prime Minister whether he agreed with the statement of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the Secretary of State made such a statement. He will be back in Ottawa today and I shall ask him what he said in this regard.

AIRPORTS

COMMENCEMENT OF WORK ON MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Further to the statement he made at the beginning of the sitting, I should like to ask him whether construction plans for the new airport are now under way and when the work is scheduled to start?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Just as soon as possible. The usual critical path will obviously have to be followed, beginning today with the expropriation of the land, followed by soil testing, the designing of the runways and the terminal facilities, and all the things which have to be done on a thorough and methodical basis with the least possible delay consistent with the best possible results in the use of the taxpayers' money.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

POSSIBILITY OF PROJECTS IN CENTRAL QUEBEC

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

Now that the site of the future international airport is known, and that the citizens of the south shore are obviously somewhat disappointed, can he tell us whether money will be invested in or something done for that whole central area of Quebec, and more particularly the south shore, to help its economic development?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question is of a very general nature and therefore may not be put at this time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SECRET DISCUSSIONS ABOUT FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister held any secret talks with the premier of New Brunswick several times during the past few weeks, or even a few times, concerning the financial plight of the Atlantic provinces, as stated by the premier of New Brunswick within the last few days?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know whether I would describe them as secret talks. I have met with the premier of New Brunswick on matters of mutual concern—once in the last few weeks, I believe.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance but in his deliberate absence this afternoon I will direct it to the Prime Minister. At the time of his discussions with the premier of New Brunswick and in the light of the budgetary situation of that province, was any suggestion made by the premier that a hurry-up or advance payment be made under one of the joint or shared cost programs to tide the province over?

Mr. Trudeau: Before and after the federal-provincial conference held in February, an important part of the agenda of which was devoted to the question of shared-cost programs and so on, there were discussions with the provinces about ways in which the federal spending power could be altered or improved or modified in some way. Naturally, by way of exploring these questions some such items did come up for consideration.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But did this one actually come up?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): In view of the statements being made in Fredericton about the matter of increased moneys from Ottawa, is the Prime Minister ready to make a statement filling us in on the discussions he had with Premier Robichaud about possible moneys for New Brunswick? Does the Prime Minister acknowledge that there were discussions between Premier Robichaud and himself and, if so, when will we be told what took place at those discussions?

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY AS TO CONCENTRATION OF OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Are officials of his department investigating and analysing the report just released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on the interlocking corporate structure in Canada, which showed a tremendous concentration of ownership and control of industry in Canada, with a view to introducing necessary legislation to regulate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question asked by the hon. member refers to a matter which is very general in scope and I would think it could not be asked at this time.

STUDENT UNREST

McGILL UNIVERSITY—ASSISTANCE IN THE EVENT OF DISTURBANCE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Can he tell us if the provincial authorities have already requested the R.C.M.P. to help keep things under control at tomorrow night's expected demonstration at McGill University?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Attorney General of Canada received a telephone call from the Deputy Attorney General of Quebec asking him for the potential aid of the R.C.M.P. and the Canadian Armed Forces, in the event that violence at McGill University were to get out of the control of the provincial and municipal authorities. The situation is now being negotiated between the Department of the Attorney General of Quebec and the R.C.M.P., and the Canadian Armed Forces.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the minister intend to advise the R.C.M.P. to extend its help to the Quebec provincial police?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this matter is strictly the R.C.M.P.'s concern and comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Solicitor General of Canada, whereas the other matter is the responsibility of the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a further supplementary question.

Since several other ministers are concerned, does he intend, in his capacity as Attorney General and Minister of Justice, to request the R.C.M.P. to second the Quebec provincial police tomorrow night at McGill University?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are always available, Mr. Speaker.

OIL

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with reference to petroleum. In view of the appointment by President Nixon of a task force headed by one of his ministers to conduct an extensive review of all United States oil import arrangements, will the minister say what special arrangements, if any, are being made for the consideration of Canadian policy and, specifically, will the government now act on the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that a standing committee of this house inquire publicly into the need for a new and expansive oil policy and call in representatives of the petroleum industry of Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe hon. members are well aware of the steps under way with regard to our oil policy as it affects the United States, and in particular that a meeting will take place on April 2 in this connection. We shall of course follow with great interest the development in the United States—the appointment of the committee referred to by the hon. member. I have noted the further representation by the hon. member concerning the possible use of a standing committee of this house, and I will take this under advisement.

Mr. Woolliams: The government always seems to talk about taking matters under advisement. Having regard to the minister's inert words and the innuendo contained in them, may I ask whether he believes in government by secrecy and inaction?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—VIEWS EXPRESSED BY HON. MEMBER FOR YORK-SIMCOE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it should be directed to the Prime Minister. Do the much publicized and widely promoted views of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) concerning Canada's attitude toward the North Atlantic Treaty Organization represent the views of the government with respect to Canada's relationship with that organization?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not in order. The hon. member cannot ask in this way for the opinion of the government about statements made by members other than members of the government.

Mr. Nesbitt: With great respect, I would ordinarily agree with Your Honour's ruling, but in this case so much advance publicity has been given to the hon. member's remarks at a time when the question of Canada's relationship to NATO—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF CONTINUOUS MOVEMENT

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the Minister assure the house and the country that every effort will be made to ensure a continuous flow of grain from the terminals to the ships? A couple of months ago there was a pile-up of ships at Vancouver, yet today there are no ships at all waiting at that port. Can we have some assurance that this whole question is being examined very closely?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid there will be a slowdown of ships coming into Vancouver for loading in the next couple of weeks.

Mr. Woolliams: That will help the government.

Mr. Pepin: I am afraid the Japanese and the Chinese importers have been listening to the opposition in this matter rather than to me. The tie-up that existed in the port of Vancouver a few weeks ago has been cleared more rapidly than the opposition expected it would.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After seven weeks.

Mr. Pepin: I understood the right hon. member for Prince Albert had said it would not be cleared till the end of May or June, but in any event it has been cleared now. The Wheat Board and the trade are doing their best to see that ships from Japan and China are made available for loading. There is no lack of sales on the west coast at this time.

Mr. McKinley: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Horner: I have a supplementary question which I will direct—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Huron is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McKinley: I suggest that the port of Vancouver has been cleared of ships because of the action of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order. The hon. member for Crowfoot on a supplementary.

Mr. Horner: People all across Canada will be pleased to hear that there is no shortage of ships, but we are very discouraged that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We should not have a debate at this time. If hon. members are allowed to ask questions and ministers to—

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member, but he knows perfectly well that only a few minutes are allocated to the house every day for the consideration of questions asked by hon. members.

Mr. Horner: Forgive me for adding one word of introduction to my question, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the minister's reply I could not help but do so. My question is this: There is no shortage of ships, the minister says, but is enough being done? There is a widespread belief that there will not be a boat into Vancouver until April 25—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Horner: —one month from today. Surely with no shortage of ships, somebody—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is obviously argument.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister, or possibly for the Minister of Transport. In view of the very alarming and disastrous situation in northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan in regard to damp grain and the inability to move this grain, with the possibility that by spring it will have deteriorated and be badly damaged, will the Minister or the Minister of Transport give special and very urgent consideration to discussing with the railways the provision of box cars in these areas?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is being done. If the hon. member has some specific cases in mind I will gladly take note of them.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister is in such a fine mood for answering questions today, may I ask him what is the projection until April 25 of the expected number of ships that will arrive in Vancouver to move wheat? He must have that before him at this very moment.

Mr. Pepin: I do not have the precise number but I will try to get it, if possible, for the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the minister not receive that information yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Regina East on a supplementary.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): In view of reports from the terminals in Vancouver that no ships are coming in, and since there are some 4,000 box cars on their way to Vancouver, have steps been taken to redirect the flow of grain traffic to those places where it is needed?

Mr. Pepin: Such as where?

Mr. Burton: The Lakehead.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that empty ships have been leaving Vancouver, what steps has the department taken in order to keep shippers informed as to the progress being made in filling the terminal facilities so that the ships will return?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge—and I think I am well informed on this subject—only two ships left unloaded at the time of the tie-up and they were supposed to come back later. I have information from the Wheat Board that they and the grain trade are making all necessary efforts to bring the ships back to Vancouver to be filled with grain for delivery to western clients.

Mr. Korchinski: A further supplementary question. Is it a fact that grain dryers will not be operating at the Vancouver terminals because of congestion?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot ask the minister to confirm or deny a matter. He is making an allegation.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he has ordered an investigation into allegations made in the past two months that line elevator companies and one of the pool elevators have been ignoring Canadian Wheat Board orders with impunity?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As I am in the habit of saying to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, that is a debatable point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now that the minister has had an opportunity of reading the memorandum, will he give the information asked for?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee there is no information here about the number of ships expected.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Schreyer: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was replying to my question or to the question of the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Pepin: Both, in succession.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): A supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister going on record officially as blaming the opposition for the inefficiency and bungling that has surrounded the handling of the wheat crop?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether hon. members feel we should go on to another subject now?

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question regarding the whole problem of moving wheat and I direct it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the negative statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday afternoon to the Agricultural Congress relative to the sale of Canadian wheat, will the minister and his department take a far more positive approach to the whole question of surplus wheat?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I suggest to hon. members that we pass on to another subject after this supplementary.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. I should like to ask whether he or the government are making provision, in view of what happened in Vancouver regarding ships and surplus grain, to ensure that the same situation does not develop at the Lakehead where the elevators are now half empty?

Mr. Pepin: I will do my best, Mr. Speaker, but that is not the case now.

Mr. Horner: Your best is not good enough.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FLOOR PRICE

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Now that the Congress on Agriculture has concluded, how soon may we expect a government decision to implement a $1.95½ floor price for wheat?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have avoided answering this question because I thought it better first to assess what the damage is, and no one yet knows what it will be.

FISHERIES

CANADA-U.S. DISCUSSIONS ON 12-MILE ZONE

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to know whether, in the wide-ranging discussions which took place in Washington earlier this week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed his United States opposite number of the date on which the Canadian government will be giving the United States charts that clearly show Canada's exclusive 12-mile shipping zone on the west coast?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not undertake to do this with the Secretary of State, but I did tell him that this was a matter that I felt would shortly engage the attention of our two countries.

Mr. Anderson: A supplementary question. I should like to know whether this will result in a meeting very soon of officials of the Canadian and United States governments on this question?

Mr. Sharp: This matter is shortly to be discussed in cabinet when a decision will be made on that very point.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether similar discussions are now taking place with the government of France regarding our 12-mile territorial limit off the Atlantic coast?

Mr. Sharp: I have not recently had any such discussions but there have been discussions over quite some time with France on the whole subject of territorial waters, the position of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and so on.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—DISPUTE BETWEEN SHIPOWNERS AND LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

In view of the problems which the minister had to tackle recently in relation to the Montreal Longshoremen's Union, can he tell the house whether the dispute has been solved or is about to be solved?

[English]

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the conciliation board charged with the problem of the port of Montreal has been meeting daily, and progress is being made. We can only hope that by March 31 or April 7 a collective agreement will have been reached. Of course it is really a matter of opinion when one says that progress is being made.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—PLANS FOR NO. 20 COLLIERY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Because of continuing concern about this matter, is the minister in a position to make a statement on Devco's plans for No. 20 colliery in the area concerned?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, not at this moment.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Because of the serious concern in the community involved, would the minister undertake to make a statement on the matter as soon as possible?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As soon as we have studied the plan and agree on it I will make an announcement about it.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is one thing for the minister to study a plan. Does he not know that Devco has certain plans and certain intentions with respect to No. 20 colliery? It is simply a question of ascertaining Devco's intentions in the community and letting us know about them.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the excellent decision taken by the government about the site of the new airport and since this choice seems to me to respect the interests of Quebec, could the minister tell us if it was immediately accepted by that province? I dare hope so?

[English]

SHIPBUILDING

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since he seems to be an authority on shipping today, may I ask him if a committee consisting of representatives of the shipbuilding industry and members of the government has been set up to look into shipbuilding in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, after a visit by a group from the industry we were supposed to get a committee going. Two attempts were made to bring the other side along with us in forming this committee. This has been done now.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have the terms of reference of that committee been agreed on?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it should be a rapid study if it is to advise on what might be done at this time.

HOUSING

TASK FORCE—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since early February the minister has been announcing that he will be placing recommendations emanating from the task force on housing before his cabinet colleagues and has repeatedly said that there will be an announcement of government policy in this field soon. Will he tell the house how soon is soon? Will we have an announcement before the Easter recess?

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that question has already been asked and answered in the house. My hon. friend will have to show some patience. As he knows was the case with the Montreal international airport, Rome was not built in one day. It takes time to work out the details. As soon as a decision has been taken an announcement will be made.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

STATUS OF ARCTIC ISLANDS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising from an answer he gave some time ago to the right hon. member for Prince Albert and from another answer he gave today to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I think the matter ought to be cleared up. The Prime Minister told the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that there was no question about Canada's sovereignty in the north. May I ask whether that includes all the northern Arctic islands? Also, was the Prime Minister considering inland seas and 12-mile limits when he made his statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave a few weeks ago, which I repeat today, is that our sovereignty over all Arctic islands is not challenged in any way. I do not think the question of sovereignty has been disputed. I said before that the question of the status of the seas was not established in a way which entailed the recognition of the international community. This matter still has to be dealt with and will be the object of a policy statement by the government.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Prime Minister impart this opinion to the President of the United States recently, or did he discuss these points when he saw him earlier this week?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I communicated to the President the fact that the question of territorial seas and especially of fishing rights was of grave concern to us and we hoped to take a position on it soon which will be respected by all the international community.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LUMBER—ACTION TO CONTROL INCREASE IN PRICES

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would he indicate whether he has yet had the opportunity to take any action in the light of the continuing upward spiral in lumber prices?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government shares the hon. member's concern. Partly as a result of the very forceful and independent representations the hon. member has made—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member surely cannot be bought off like that.

Mr. Basford: —officers of my department, the Department of Forestry and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce met, together with the ministers responsible for those departments, and contemplated action that might be taken. I think that my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who has been so communicative today, will have something to say in a day or two.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to direct to the Minister of Transport. It is on a theme similar to the one covered by the previous question. Will he advise the house whether he has ordered an inquiry into lumber prices and their effect on housing costs? Have he or his officials told the Canadian Lumbermen's Association that such action has been taken?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I noted that this matter was referred to yesterday. It must be connected with some remarks I made in Toronto on Thursday last. As my colleague indicated, officials of four departments have met on this matter. More recently, the officials consulted with the ministers. Among ourselves we have decided on a plan of action based on such inquiries as have been made. As has just been indicated I hope that one of us, probably the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will be in a position to make a statement very shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OPENING OF ADDITIONAL PASSPORT OFFICES

Mr. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which he may want to take as notice. When will additional passport offices be opened in Canadian cities? I ask that question because of the severe strain imposed on a most competent and efficient branch of our public service which is now overwhelmed with passport applications.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this is the type of question which lends itself to debate at the time of adjournment.

DELIVERY OF PASSPORTS BY REGISTERED MAIL

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he say whether it is the policy of his department not to guarantee delivery of passports within four days by registered mail?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking the minister to give information on policy or to make a policy statement. I do not think the question can be accepted in its present form.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—DISCUSSIONS WITH CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the widespread concern of the medical profession about the future of our health services, will the Prime Minister say whether he has now changed his mind about meeting the Canadian Medical Association? Will he accede to the renewed request for a meeting made by the association's president?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave a few days ago.

GRAIN

REFUSAL OF ELEVATOR COMPANIES TO ACCEPT DAMP WHEAT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will he check on the reported intention of line elevator companies not to take any damp wheat after April 1? Much damp wheat still remains to be handled.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a representation to the minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS OF HIGH COMMISSIONER TO NIGERIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since our High Commissioner in Nigeria was asked almost two weeks ago to make representations to the federal government of Nigeria, will the minister tell the house whether those representations have been made to that government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, some of the representations have been made, but the High Commissioner has not yet completed his mission. I should like to wait until it is completed before making a report.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When were such representations made and when may we expect a report to the house?

Mr. Sharp: As the Minister of Transport so often says, soon.

OIL

MOVEMENT FROM PRUDHOE BAY THROUGH CANADIAN CARRIERS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This seems to be his day in the house. In view of the government's interest in Panarctic Oils Limited, has the government made any representations to United States interests with a view to establishing a joint consortium to transport oil from Prudhoe Bay through Canadian carriers in the Yukon and British Columbia?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This would come under the jurisdiction of either the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

[Later:]

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the government's interest in Panarctic Oils Limited, has the government made any representations to United States interests with a view to establishing a joint consortium to transfer oil from Prudhoe Bay through Canadian carriers in the Yukon and British Columbia?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, because of our interest in Arctic oil and oil generally, the government has had discussions with interested persons, including companies involved in various discoveries, as to the best means of transferring the oil already found and the oil expected to be found as well.

Mr. Paproski: Has the government had any conversations or discussions on this subject or any aspect of the Prudhoe Bay development with United States interests? If not, why not?

Mr. Lang: The answer is yes.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): I wished to put my question to the Prime Minister but since he is absent, I will wait until tomorrow.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. It concerns Your Honour's ruling today on the point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council in the house a couple of days ago. In the light of Your Honour's ruling, I ask the President of the Privy Council to give this house an assurance in view of the time limitation in the recommendations of the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I am referring specifically to the April 15 date. In view of the fact the house will adjourn in a day or two for the Easter recess, will the minister give an assurance that he will bring this matter forward at the earliest possible moment for debate?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this matter involves a question of order as to the acceptability of the report. I intend to follow Your Honour's advice to consult with the Chair as to an appropriate time in the near future to raise this question.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND—APPROVAL OF RESOLUTION TO DEFER ABANDONMENT

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Transport but as he has left the chamber I will direct it to the President of the Privy Council. Is he aware of the fact that the Newfoundland legislature has unanimously approved a resolution to defer the abandonment of C.N.R. passenger service in Newfoundland?

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORT OF URANIUM DISCOVERY IN QUEBEC

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Secretary of State but since he is absent, I will put it to his parliamentary secretary to whom I gave notice of it.

[English]

Would the Parliamentary Secretary obtain a report and make it available to the house with respect to the activities of the C.B.C. resulting in its report of uranium discoveries in Québec?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have made inquiries about the report to which I believe the hon. member has referred. I am informed by the C.B.C. that they believe their employees exercised proper journalistic judgment in presenting this report on March 21. Consideration was given to the ample opportunity there would be for comment or clarification of the matter by the parties concerned between the time the report was broadcast and the re-opening of the stock market. In fact, a statement made on behalf of the companies was carried on the C.B.C.'s early evening national newscast on March 23. I am informed by the C.B.C. that the company did not contradict the report but only the tonnage figure used in the report.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT—MARITIME FREIGHT RATES ACT—ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): May I ask the government house leader about the business for this week and that part of next week that we will still be here? Could the minister when replying confirm the date members will be free to depart for the Easter recess in order that they may dialogue earnestly with their constituents on the large mass of still unsolved problems?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before making that statement perhaps I could give the second report of the inter-party committee on parliamentary hockey. I wish to confirm that the House of Commons once again triumphed in eking out a defensive victory over the press gallery by a score of four to four. In view of the fact we only got a tie, no stars are being awarded.

With regard to the business for the coming week, as hon. members know the first item of business today will be No. 36, Bill S-15, to amend the Food and Drugs Act. This will be followed by item 13, the report stage of Bill C-102, with regard to drug prices. It is anticipated that tomorrow the drug prices bill will be called again to be followed by Bill S-26 with regard to hazardous products.

On Monday next the first item of business will be No. 23, Bill S-5 with regard to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation Act for report stage and third reading. This will be followed by No. 53, Bill S-28 with regard to the Co-operative Credit Associations Act. Following that will be No. 55, Bill C-171 with respect to the National Library.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of next week it is proposed to call item 7, Bill C-112 with regard to the Farm Machinery Syndicates Act. This will be followed by items 18, 19 and 43 with regard to agricultural Bills C-154, C-155 and C-157.

With respect to the question by my hon. friend, it is the government's intention that the house will sit until April 2. If, however, it is possible to deal effectively with this timetable before that date, it might be possible for it to rise sooner.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I noticed that in the house leader's observations concerning the business there was no reference to Bill C-182, to amend the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I rise on this question of privilege for the reason that an undertaking was made to the house privately and publicly. There was an agreement to deal with this matter because the freeze on maritime freight rates expired on March 23. There is great concern, worry and misunderstanding in the Atlantic provinces. If the government makes no effort to deal with this matter before the house rises, it can only be taken as a further indication of the attitude of the government toward the people of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If I may deal with that particular point, Mr. Speaker, I understand from my colleague the Minister of Transport, who was here earlier today, that the principal consideration is whether there will be a change in rail rates during the period until the bill is brought into law and that the railways have undertaken not to bring about any change. My understanding is that various groups have sought to make representations in this regard. It was thought desirable to hear those representations before the bill was called forward for further action.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should refer to the question of privilege by the hon. member for Oxford. I would think it was not a question of privilege. It seems to me that, a statement having been made by the President of the Privy Council, the hon. member had a very legitimate question. I suggest to him it was not necessary to raise it as a question of privilege.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I wish to ask a question before oral questions are completed. I raise it as a question of privilege or a point of order. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development and nine or ten other ministers are violating the Prime Minister's roster system. It is impossible for me to get answers to questions regarding the very serious economic problems in Cape Breton. The house leader rises and talks about awarding stars for hockey games. I remind the house leader there can be no stars awarded for the attendance of ministers in the house.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Groos: They had been in the house for an hour and 35 minutes when they left.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made his point and I wonder whether we could not go on to the business of the house now.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I would like to deal with the interjection of the hon. member for Victoria—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really do not think the hon. member should deal with the interjection. I suggest to the hon. member who made the interjection that the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond had the floor, and his were the only remarks that the Chair heard.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. MacInnis: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, it was the hon. member for Victoria who made the interjection.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT—NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT—CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTRACEPTIVE DEVICES, RESTRICTED DRUGS, ETC.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill S-15, to amend the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act and to make a consequential amendment to the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of Bill S-15 I would like to give a short explanation of its background. Bill S-15 is a consolidation of two bills which were introduced in the last parliament and not completed at the time of dissolution. One of them, Bill S-21 in that parliament, was designed to create a new category of drugs within the Food and Drugs Act known as restricted drugs. The other, the former Bill S-22, was an omnibus bill whose major component was the creation of a hazardous substances act. This portion of that bill was subsequently shifted to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs where it formed the basis of the hazardous products bill now before parliament. The balance of the former Bill S-22 was combined with the former Bill S-21 to become the present Bill S-15.

This bill adds a new Part IV to the Food and Drugs Act, called restricted drugs. It also makes certain amendments to the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act which are designed to bring into uniformity certain provisions already in those measures.

This bill further amends the Food and Drugs Act in accordance with the very important recommendation of the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare of the previous parliament by adding provisions that will bring within that act the regulation of the sale and advertising of contraceptive devices. At the same time it amends the Criminal Code by removing from it the long-standing prohibition of such sale or advertising. Having set out something of the history and scope of this ominibus measure I would now like to deal with its specific provisions.

The Criminal Code of Canada has for many years contained a prohibition on the sale or advertisement of any drug or article intended or represented as a method of preventing conception. This prohibition, which is contained in section 150(2) (c) of the Code, has seldom been the subject of prosecution. Moreover, in recent years it has been strongly criticized by many individuals and organizations as being in conflict with contemporary thinking in the field of family planning and thus socially deleterious.

In 1966 no less than four private members' bills were introduced in this connection, and the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare took under consideration the subject matter of those bills. The committee held, in all, some 15 meetings and in the course of its proceedings heard statements and recorded expert evidence from a great many organizations and individuals. These included representatives of church organizations, the medical profession, family planning agencies, the Canadian Welfare Council, the Consumers' Association of Canada and a lengthy and diverse list of others.

Under date of December 5, 1966, the committee presented its report to the house, recommending that the matter of birth control be removed from the Criminal Code and that the subject of distribution and advertising of contraceptives be dealt with under the Food and Drugs Act.

The standing committee also recommended that the Food and Drugs Act be amended in order to make clear that the definition of "device" includes contraceptive devices. Accordingly the present bill specifically defines a contraceptive device and at the same time broadens the definition of "device" in the Food and Drugs Act to include matters which, from a practical point of view, would be regarded as therapeutic devices but which, it might be argued, do not fall within the precise language of the present definition. The purpose of the amendment, therefore, is to put this situation beyond question. Accordingly, the Food and Drugs Act will include contraceptive devices, and authority is given to provide, within the regulations, for the advertising of such devices.

The type of advertising which will be the subject of regulation will be direct advertising by manufacturers and retailers of contraceptive devices. The regulations will be designed to permit advertising by agencies concerned with birth control and family planning.

We are very anxious to free these organizations from the fetters under which they have been obliged to function in the past, when their activities might well have constituted a breach of the Criminal Code and their actions were severely circumscribed by this possibility. Information regarding family planning has had far easier entry into the milieu of the well educated and the well to do than into that of those unreached by the information explosion. The result is evidenced in such statistics as the average number of children in a public assistance family in Canada being almost double that of the Canadian average. When the dissemination of information is impeded it is the least educated and least articulate members of our society that it is least likely to reach.

Therefore the first group of amendments flows from the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare. They comprise clauses 1, 2 and 3 of this bill amending the Food and Drugs Act, and clause 13 amending the Criminal Code. The next few clauses deal with what may be regarded as technical or administrative amendments, and I will cover briefly what is involved in these.

In the administration of the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act certificates of analysis have traditionally been employed. There has, however, been some variation in the language used in the respective sections of the legislation making provision for these certificates. It was therefore thought appropriate that some uniformity be established in this connection, and provision is now being made for this in the Narcotic Control Act and the three areas of the Food and Drugs Act where such certificates of analysis are called for. Complete protection is given to the person against whom the certificate will be produced, and with the leave of the court that person may call the analyst for cross-examination. He can of course, if he wishes, call the analyst as his own witness without leave of the court.

A further amendment of a rather technical kind deals with a provision of the act which, in effect, exempts from it any food or drug that is manufactured for export to another country. This exemption does not, however, apply to controlled drugs, and by this amendment will not apply to the new category of restricted drugs either.

A further technical amendment deals with the authority to control a substance which is not in itself a drug but which may be used in connection with the manufacture of a controlled drug or a restricted drug. To do this it is necessary to add the words "or other substance" to the definition of what may be listed in the schedule.

• (3:50 p.m.)

There is one further amendment to Part III of the Food and Drugs Act. This relates to the offence of possession for the purpose of trafficking in a controlled drug. The present section provides as an absolute defence that the individual legally acquired possession of the drug, regardless of whether that possession was for the purpose of trafficking. This bill proposes to amend that provision by making this no longer an absolute defence. A court may or may not, on the facts of the particular case, find the circumstances under which the drug was obtained sufficient to satisfy it that the possession was not for purposes of trafficking, but the manner in which the drug was obtained will no longer foreclose the court from examining the purpose for which it was obtained.

The balance of this bill deals with the creation of a new Part IV of the Food and Drugs Act entitled "Restricted Drugs". These restricted drugs are listed in Schedule J which appears as part of the bill. I would like to set out some of the background leading to this measure.

In 1962, following the thalidomide tragedy, the Food and Drugs Act was amended to create a new schedule of drugs, the sale or distribution of which was prohibited. The only drugs contained in that schedule at that time were thalidomide and the drug popularly known as l.s.d. This prohibition of sale and distribution was considered at that time to be quite sufficient as there was no evidence of an illicit manufacture or distribution of either of them. Arrangements were made to ensure that this prohibition did not affect the scientific research which was being carried out, especially with respect to l.s.d. This research is still going on but the results to the present time have not established its place in therapy.

Within the last three years, this drug has achieved a certain unfortunate popularity with a number of young people, both here in Canada and in a number of other countries. Its unsupervised and non-medical use has resulted in many tragedies including chromosome damage, mental breakdown and even several deaths. Notwithstanding the dangers, it has continued to enjoy some popularity among certain groups of young people, although the widespread publicity given to the results of its use have had a substantial deterrent effect.

The police, in their enforcement activities with respect to narcotics and controlled drugs, frequently encounter supplies of this drug that have been illicitly manufactured or illicitly smuggled into Canada. There is no evidence of any diversion of this drug from legal supplies for clinical and scientific use which are strictly controlled. The drug, however, is one that can be manufactured relatively easily by a competent chemist with adequate laboratory facilities.

Because unauthorized possession is not an offence under the Food and Drugs Act, the police have been helpless in dealing with this drug and frequently have been required to return it to the persons in whose possession it was found. It was therefore proposed that a special part should be added to the Food and Drugs Act to deal with what are referred to as "restricted drugs". This proposal appeared in Bill S-21 of last year which died on the order paper with dissolution. At that time the only drug listed in the proposed schedule of restricted drugs was l.s.d.

More recently, three other powerful and dangerous substances have made their appearance on the illicit market and gained a more limited but nonetheless substantial currency. Consequently, the proposed Schedule J, which is the appropriate schedule to this new part in the bill, in addition to l.s.d. also lists these substances. The substances I am directing attention to are things like s.t.p. These three substances, in the interim, had been added to the prohibited drug list in Schedule H under the Food and Drugs Act, but with the enactment of Part IV they will be transferred along with l.s.d. from Schedule H to the proposed Schedule J, the restricted drug class.

This legislation will permit additional substances to be added to Schedule J in the future if this is required. These substances would be newly emergent hallucinogenic substances of sudden currency. We can see how frequently they crop up. There are a great number of such drugs known but not widely used at present. If the need arises these can be added to the schedule in order that maximum protection to the public health can be achieved with legitimate research and experimentation still permitted.

I mentioned earlier that the provisions of this bill go back two years when they began as parts of two predecessor bills. A great deal has happened in the field of drug abuse in that time and this has been reflected in the enormous increase in the number of prosecutions under both the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act.

The numbers of prosecutions for possession of a drug listed under paragraph 3 of the Schedule to the Narcotic Control Act increased between 1966 and 1968 from 493 to 1,727. But in spite of the enormous variety of individual situations involved in that number of cases, the relevant section of that act provides very little scope for flexibility, either on the part of Crown prosecutors or presiding judges or magistrates. There is no provision for the Crown to choose to proceed summarily; it is obliged to proceed by way of indictment. There is no provision for a judge or magistrate to impose a fine as the penalty; they are obliged to impose a penal sentence, though they can, of course, suspend it.

This rigidity has been the subject of increasing criticism from a wide variety of sources such as the addiction research agencies of several provinces, the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society, the United Church, university-sponsored conferences, and judges and magistrates themselves. Clearly there is need for the introduction of scope for flexibility into this section. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I propose that a further amendment to the Narcotic Control Act be included in this bill and I intend to move at committee stage as follows:

That Bill S-15 be amended by striking out line 29 on page 8 and substituting the following:

"(2) Every person who violates subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and is liable

(a) upon summary conviction for a first offence, to a fine of one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for six months or to both fine and imprisonment, and for a subsequent offence, to a fine of two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year or to both fine and imprisonment; or

(b) upon conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for seven years."

Section 2 of the amendment will read, "Section 9 of the said Act". The amendment will be passed around to hon. members.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that provision remains for the Crown to choose to proceed by way of indictment and for the court, in such a case, to impose a penalty to the extent of the present maximum. But provision will also now exist, if this amendment becomes law, for the Crown to proceed summarily, in which case the maximum penalties, both for first and subsequent offences, will be the same as the maximums set out for possession of a restricted drug under the section being created by this bill in the Food and Drugs Act.

This bill covers a number of areas in the health field. I hope its provisions and the amendment I have proposed will commend themselves to hon. members.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak very long at this stage. I know that the bill is to be referred to the standing committee. By and large I think the minister has given a very complete explanation of the provisions of the bill. He mentioned a further amendment which he proposes to move when we get to the committee. Of course at that time we will be in a position to study the matter completely.

I was interested in the evidence given by Mr. Curran, general counsel for the department, before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the other place when they were studying this bill. The minister in his remarks made a statement concerning the advertising of contraceptives. I believe that such advertising is to be limited to a degree. I think the minister said that associations might be permitted so to advertise but probably only in professional magazines, or that type of thing, rather than through the general media of television, radio, newspapers, and so on. Personally I am in favour of all the amendments proposed in the bill. One or two members of my party wish to say a few words on the details, but generally speaking I believe we are in favour of it. We will, of course, be looking forward to giving it closer study in committee.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I think a great many people across the country feel that this is an occasion which ought to be welcomed and of which special notice should be taken because it is the end of a very long road and a long campaign to legalize the dissemination of birth control information and the sale of contraceptives. The minister introduced the bill in a very clear way. He explained its genesis and how it is composed of the remains of two other bills. Birth control legislation has had some very strange bedfellows.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mrs. MacInnis: In the last parliament it appeared in a measure to deal with hazardous substances, Bill S-22. Barbara Cadbury, a pioneer in planned parenthood in Canada, referred in an article in Canadian Welfare to the debate on the bill which took place in the other place. She told how one of the legislators there described the need for that legislation to deal with the following:

> Toy chickens with poison-contaminated feathers, blankets contaminated with dieldrin, poisonous beads and poisonous canape picks and ice-balls that might leak poisons into cocktails, about the hazards of silver polish and of "that family of commodities commonly used for cleaning pipes and drains". At the very end (of the bill) came a proposal to move contraceptives, both drugs and appliances, out of the Criminal Code and into the hazardous substances section of the Food and Drugs Act.

Mrs. Cadbury commented that supporters of birth control had never imagined that their cause would be dealt with in a composite bill along with the hazards of silver polish, but they were nonetheless thankful that with the passage of that bill birth control would be removed from the Criminal Code. Bill S-22 was set aside, as the minister said, at the end of the last parliament. Now we have birth control back in Bill S-15, teamed up with narcotics control. As I say, birth control has had strange bedfellows, but I hope the strange bedfellows are at an end and that birth control is now being made into an honest woman or an honest man, or probably both.

I shall now deal with some of the amendments contained in the bill. I intend to confine my remarks to those clauses which deal with the birth control issue. In general, we are tremendously concerned about the narcotics issue, but I hope someone else from my party will deal with that question. The amendments in this bill concerning birth control will make it possible for Canadians, for the first time in history, to plan and space their families legally. We hear a great deal about the need for a bill of rights. This bill defines and protects some of the most basic and fundamental rights the people of any country can have, the right of parents to decide how many and at what intervals they will have children, and the right of children to be loved and wanted once they arrive.

While talking about pioneers I would like to mention our colleague in this group, the former member for Burnaby-Richmond, now the mayor of Burnaby, who from 1963 onward in almost every session introduced a bill to legalize birth control. So did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). He did not start quite as early, but his acceleration was very good once he got going on it. The minister introduced a very fine bill in the 1966 session.

This has not been an easy matter. Certain members of this house took a great deal of converting. Quite a while ago one hon. member in an earlier session—I am quoting from Hansard—said:

> In my opinion this is a diabolical scheme straight from hell itself—

Another member said:

> —such a measure would pave the way for the most damaging abuse and the most awful immorality.

But things have moved in this respect and today I believe this matter is seen in the light in which it is now regarded all over the world, that is, one of enlightened planning of our human resources.

I want to say something about our experience on the Health and Welfare Committee, on which this party was represented by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself. From February, 1966, to November of that year we studied briefs on this subject from representatives of many types of organizations, medical, legal, social work professions, all the major churches, women's organizations, and many others across Canada. Almost all the evidence favoured removing birth control from the Criminal Code, so much so that one of our members made the following remark:

> Maybe we could find a way to get briefs from people who are against birth control.

The result was a report that was favoured by all but one body which came before us. Every body that came before us, except one, which was one of the smaller churches, favoured our report. All but one committee member favoured the report. I refer to that very colourful member from Toronto who is no longer with us and who was referred to at one time as "the implacable foe of the 20th century". That hon. member registered his vote against the report but the rest of us voted in favour of it. I shall be as brief as I can, Mr. Speaker, but I think this is a pretty historic occasion for a great many people in this country who have worked for many years on this matter. Part of that 1966 report reads as follows:

> Your committee feels that the dissemination of family planning knowledge should be completely available and free from any fear of illegality, as a matter of personal choice.

On the following page of the report we find these words:

> Medical knowledge and technique are at a level today where intelligent family planning can be carried out relatively easily. The present laws of Canada have made this impossible in its fullest sense. It is the feeling of your committee that family planning is a personal decision of a married couple and the state should not interfere with action or laws in any way to influence such a personal decision.

That is a little longer-winded way of saying what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has put in very pungent language, that the state has no business in the bedrooms of the nation. I am glad to see that the result is this legislation.

In the bill now before us the government has embodied all the recommendations of our committee report. As the minister pointed out, these are three in number. One was that section 150 of the Criminal Code be amended by taking out those three little words which are pregnant with misery, "preventing conception or". By taking those three words out of the Criminal Code we are taking birth control out of the category of crime. The second was that the Food and Drugs Act be amended so that the word "device" is broadened to include contraceptives, which now come under the aegis of the Food and Drug Directorate. The third was that the Food and Drugs Act be amended to control the advertising of contraceptives.

I notice that the minister stated that the advertising of contraceptives was, in his opinion, if I understood him correctly, to be limited only to those organizations concerned with family planning and information in connection with it. I am a little worried for fear this may be interpreted too narrowly in the regulations. For this reason I should like to quote the position which was put on paper on September 27, 1968, by the Family Planning Federation when they wrote to all of us concerning what they would like to see in the regulations governing advertising. The Family Planning Federation, which has its French language counterpart in La Fédération Pour la Planification Familiale, said the following regarding the advertising of family planning devices:

> Our position is that the innate good taste of the general public will dictate what they will accept in the way of advertisement of any product.

Then they quote the following:

> The medical committee of the F.P.F.C. feels strongly that no distinction needs to be drawn between regulations concerning contraceptive products and regulations already applicable to controlled drugs, to patent medicines, cosmetics, beauty aids, tampons, toilet paper, suppositories for feminine hygiene, deodorants, and the like.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member is coughing, perhaps I might answer the question she asked me. She wondered what advertising would be permitted. Our understanding is that in the committee, of which the hon. member was a member some concern was indicated with regard to widespread advertising and a desire was expressed for some type of control. We propose to do it by regulation and not to restrict it in respect of the various responsible agencies that are concerned with birth control and family planning. What we are really talking about here is the prevention of direct advertising by the manufacturers themselves.

Mrs. MacInnis: The quotation continues:

> We therefore recommend that contraceptive products should be considered on precisely the same terms as other products for which regulation of controlled drugs or hazardous substances is necessary.

Mr. Munro: From her coughing, I think the hon. member is smoking too much.

Mrs. MacInnis: That is one temptation I have not had. It is the only minor vice I do not have.

I just wanted to put that opinion on the record. This legislation will do a number of very desirable things, and I want to summarize them briefly. First, it will bring our law into line with the way we live. Birth control is being widely practised across Canada. The figures of birth in Canada show this to be the case, not without exception in the Canadian provinces but certainly it is so in those provinces where one might expect not to find declines in the birth rate.

Second, it will provide rules that can be respected and will create respect for the law as a whole. Several witnesses appearing before our committee impressed on us the fact that birth control legislation under the Criminal Code was not good legislation because it could not be enforced. They said it would bring the whole of the law into disrespect. Among these organizations was the Canadian Catholic Conference of Bishops who emphasized very strongly that it was a bad law and should not be continued. They said:

> In the light of these conditions we consider Article 150, which forbids giving information about contraception as well as the sale or distribution of contraceptives, an inadequate law today. We consider it so quite independently of the morality or immorality of various methods of birth prevention. We believe it a deficient law because it does not meet all the conditions outlined above.
> The law is not in fact enforced—

The minister said that there have been very few prosecutions.

> —and the good of public peace might well be lost by attempts to enforce it. A large number of our fellow citizens believe that this law violates their rights to be informed and helped towards responsible parenthood in accordance with their personal beliefs.
> It is our clear understanding, of course, that the modification of the law in question is not to extend to that part of it which has to do with abortion.

That was the stand of the Catholic Conference of Bishops at that time.

In the third place, this legislation will give people the knowledge they need. From a pioneer in birth control education comes the following comment:

> Canada cannot raise enough money to support all dependent people in comfort; and it is about time that the increasing demands were checked through birth control which would be welcomed. There has been a definite drop in Canada's birth rate and Quebec province rate in 1967 was slightly less than Ontario. People who can help themselves do so . . . Birth rates on the average vary inversely with the earning capacity of the parents.

From the Canadian Welfare Council's brief comes the following:

> There is no evidence that the poor are basically less willing and anxious to plan their families than are the economically well off. Most often they simply do not know how.

[Translation]

Here is the opinion of Dr. Serge Mongeau, director of the family planning centre, in Montreal, and I quote:

> For the population in general, would repealing the law bring demographic growth to a standstill? In this connection, perhaps it is time for Canada to examine its conscience a little. We leave it to the have nots, who often are the least prepared for it, to bring into the world and to educate our citizens of tomorrow.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will give low-income people, as well as those who are better off financially, the necessary information and the right that will enable them to plan their family according to their means.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

[English]

Finally, the fourth point is that in a world where so many people are suffering the tragedy and disaster of populations far greater than they can support, it ill behooves us in Canada to lecture them on the need for population control when at the same time we have neglected to take the steps necessary to legalize such measures ourselves. I may say that it strains their credibility to the breaking point. The passage of this measure will be an important step along the road to speaking to other countries not by our words but by our example. With the spectre of a world with diminishing resources whose population will double between now and the year 2000, any contribution we can make in this direction will be of some value.

We in this party commend the government for this bill which we shall support wholeheartedly.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support this bill in a general way. But in dealing with the contraceptive portion of the bill may I say that this legislation is far behind what has been the custom and a part of the social mores of this country for many years. So this is a case of catching up with what has been practised by society for a long time.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I would say that though variations in birth rates are caused by a combination of many factors, some of them fairly obscure, there is no doubt that the ease with which contraceptive devices can be obtained has some effect, though perhaps not as great an effect as many people believe. I suppose that in Canada knowledge about birth control is available to most students and it is practiced as personally deemed fit. I should like to point out, however, that this measure would allow officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare in their dealings with the native populations to establish family planning. Our attention is focused upon the problem in this regard when we consider that the birth rate among native peoples is almost 44 per 1,000, some three times the national average. So this part of the bill brings us up to date and falls into line with what has been the practice for a long time.

The second part of the bill is concerned, among other things, with l.s.d. which constitutes a continuing problem. As one familiar with controlled drugs for many years, I am amazed by the great problem they have become. The difficulty about l.s.d. and the other drugs mentioned here is that they are hallucogenic and their effect on those who take them is unpredictable. While the effects of alcohol can usually be predicted, the effects of l.s.d. cannot. There is not much evidence that these drugs produce addiction in the accepted sense that heroin and morphine do, but their unpredictability makes those who deal with these people quite wary. One trip a person might take might seem normal or not unusual, but on the following one he might attempt to defy the law of gravity. So I think it is wise to include these drugs in the schedule.

This action only scratches the surface, however. The real problem is what we shall have to do as a society about the use of marijuana and other euphorics, which seem to be in a different category. I, personally, would not say at this time what we ought to do about the drug problem, but I would ask the minister and his department to investigate the subject with all reasonable speed, because I think that we as a society and we as a parliament will eventually have to deal with it.

Having made these few remarks, let me conclude by saying I look forward to examining this bill more closely in committee and I commend the minister for bringing it forward at this time.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask for a little elucidation in connection with this bill. I want to commend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) who sits in the same row as myself and who has been such a doughty warrior over the years in this field. She used the word "bedfellows", and I note the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), has said we must not invade the bedrooms of the nation. So if I am confused, Mr. Speaker, you will know why.

The subject on which I need some elucidation concerns the sale and the advertising of contraceptive devices. I believe the minister said advertisements would not be allowed to be placed and paid for by the commercial firms which make these contraceptives. If I am wrong or if I misheard him, I hope he will correct me. Are the social service workers going to pay for these advertisements? Who will check them? Are they to be checked by public health officials or by the welfare agencies before they appear in magazines or other printed media? Who will scrutinize the journals or other papers in which they are advertised?

There is another matter about which I am a little concerned. I notice that the senator who introduced this bill in the other house, one who is a member of my own profession, spoke about "devices" and in doing so roamed over a wide field. As I understood his remarks, they covered hearing aids and eye glasses. I find myself wondering whether the purport of this bill is to include all devices which may be used in the treatment of medical illness or in the course of medical welfare.

I should also like to know whether springs and loops are included in these devices. Will these loops be inserted by persons other than doctors in the welfare agencies which may be carrying out birth control measures or running family planning units across the country? Who will say whether these devices should be used or not? Who will pay for them? I think this is an important consideration. Will they be recommended to people who are in receipt of welfare grants? Who will look after them?

I was interested, too, in the provision concerning the analysis of drugs and chemicals. I note that the analyst can analyse each chemical mentioned and sign a certificate which may be brought into court as evidence. He does this on the basis of a sample. But is part of this sample given to the accused so that he may check it and produce his own evidence in court if he wishes to do so?

The other matter which drew my attention arises in connection with clause 8 having to do with the possession of controlled drugs for trafficking. All the barbiturates are included here, and they cover a wide field. Does this provision mean that if a doctor writes a prescription for barbiturates his patient, if found in possession of it, is liable to be hauled into court for trafficking, though the doctor who wrote it goes scot-free?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Rynard: Somebody says no. But I am not sure about that.

Is the number of barbiturates on a doctor's prescription limited? Surely a doctor is not going to write a prescription for a lot of barbiturates. If he writes a prescription for a small number he may repeat it, if necessary. Some prescriptions have to be repeated at certain intervals. The patient has to go to the doctor, pay for an office call, which would usually amount to $5, and then pay the price of the prescription plus the cost of the drug.

This would make it expensive and not conducive to trafficking, and I am wondering what is the purpose of relieving the medical doctor of complete responsibility for the writing of that prescription. Maybe it is a good thing, maybe it is necessary, but that is something I should like to find out about from the minister.

I note that the question of l.s.d. comes up in connection with prescriptions and I find myself wondering whether doctors have ever written prescriptions for l.s.d. I wonder whether a doctor could write a prescription for l.s.d. and get it filled. Why is it mentioned? I understand from the research people that l.s.d. is difficult to obtain through legal channels even for research. I do not know what drugstore or agency could fill a prescription for it. These are the questions I should like to have the minister elucidate if he can do so.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, If I made an adequate note of the questions put by the hon. member for Simcoe North—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Munro: Then I will wait.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the desire of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) to speak so that he can answer some of the points that have been raised, but I think he will get that opportunity very shortly. It looks as though this debate is not going to last very long and that we can get the bill through before five o'clock.

As a matter of fact, I think it is rather significant that a bill of this kind is going through so quickly. When one thinks of the many years that it took to establish the propriety of disseminating birth control information, years in which one could hardly mention the subject, it is interesting to contemplate that this bit of progress has at least been achieved. I wish merely to support the position that has already been taken on behalf of this party by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). We welcome the change that is being made, and in the main it is a very simple one: any law respecting birth control or contraception is being taken out of the Criminal Code and put under the authority of the Department of National Health and Welfare, where it ought to be.

[Mr. Rynard.]

We appreciate the statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in regard to regulations for advertising. I do not think we need press him any further; I gather it is pretty clear that he is not going to be too prudish about this sort of thing or take a line that would make it possible for certain people to make undue profits or for certain people to be put to heavy expense in this connection.

With regard to the legislation on drugs, it appears to us that the government is moving in a sensible direction. We notice the distinction between restricted drugs and controlled drugs, and the distinction between mere possession and possession for trafficking. We also notice the authority that the government is asking parliament to give the minister's department so it can exercise a certain amount of flexibility in this matter. In other words, we recognize that society is still trying to sort itself out in this field. This is an area where the government has to act, yet where it has to have a certain amount of flexibility. Therefore we welcome both parts of this bill, the part having to do with birth control and the part having to do with the control of drugs, and we are happy to give the bill our support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, if there are no further speakers may I answer a few of the questions that have been raised. I want to indicate to the house that this legislation has received input from members of all parties; we acknowledge that. My colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) has been a champion of such action, along with many members of the official opposition, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and others. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated, the bill is going through the house very rapidly and this is obviously due to the fact that the law is catching up with what society has condoned for many years.

To answer some specific questions that have been asked, particularly by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), I think the definition of devices would now include many of the examples the hon. member referred to, if not all of them.

With regard to his question about barbiturates, what clause 8 actually provides is that if somebody is found with an undue or excessive amount of barbiturates, the mere fact he obtained them on prescription in an otherwise legal manner will no longer be an automatic defence to a charge of possession for purposes of trafficking. Previously, if a person was able to show they were legally obtained that was a sufficient defence and the Crown's case was dismissed.

In this regard I think some protection is also given the medical profession, pharmacists and so on. It is possible to go to many different sources with prescriptions and get them filled, and to go to many different doctors for prescriptions, thus obtaining an excessive quantity of such drugs. So there is merit in this type of provision we are now suggesting the house pass. It does deal with that particular situation.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to ask a question on that point when the minister is through.

Mr. Munro: If I may go to the other points, it is not possible to get l.s.d. on prescription now. In order to control the situation we put it in the prohibited category, but it will now go into the new restricted class and it can be used for research purposes only with special authority. Other than that it will be prohibited and possession will constitute an offence, which it is not at the present time.

The hon. member also asked about drug analysis and physical possession of the actual substance itself. I am not certain about that matter and will check before the bill goes to the standing committee. I have some doubt whether that would be permissible. As I indicated, defence counsel with the leave of the court can require the analyst to be present in court and can subject him to cross-examination. Or he could himself call the analyst as a defence witness without leave of the court. This gives the defence considerable legal protection because it can subject the analyst to vigorous cross-examination. Undoubtedly counsel would be able to demand production of the actual substance itself for the purpose of making it an exhibit in the court, but whether he would be able to take it away and have his own analysis done I am not certain. However, I will check that.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, there was one other point that I think the minister missed concerning intra-uterine devices, the fitting of which would require the services of professionally trained people. Is there any provision in the bill that this has to be done under the supervision of a doctor or on doctor's orders?

Mr. Munro: I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member probably knows more about this than I do. It seems that very few people would acquire these devices and try to use them without professional help.

Mr. Rynard: Would the minister check into that point and inform us whether these devices will be under the control of doctors? There are certain risks attached to them, and I believe that there should be such protection in the bill.

The other point concerned prescriptions for barbiturates. If a person is convicted of having possession of barbiturates, is there any way of notifying his doctor that he had better not prescribe them for him in future, or is the whole process to be repeated again? Is there some provision along that line?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, there is no provision in the bill that makes it incumbent upon the Crown or the police to inform the medical profession or pharmacists about people who are convicted of offences of this kind. That suggestion may have great merit but I am not sure it is the type of thing you put in legislation.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO GRANT LICENCES—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Friday, March 14, consideration of Bill C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Richmond.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Since the hon. member is not here the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Lotbinière.

Patent Act—Trade Marks Act

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we had not expected this bill to be called so early today. We therefore beg the house to excuse the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) who is in his office right now.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, in order to accommodate the hon. member who wishes to move the first amendment may I suggest that, if hon. members agree, we should allow that amendment to stand and proceed with the amendment that immediately follows it, as listed at the back of today's order paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed that the first amendment shall stand and that we proceed with the second amendment listed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Basford: The understanding is, of course, that we shall return to the first amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting in clause 1 after the word "Commissioner" on line 15, page 2, the following words:

"on advice of a tribunal comprising the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce."

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this proposed amendment to the bill may I say that certain fundamental principles have been disregarded. Dr. Harley, a most able man, was chairman of a commission that examined the question of drug prices. He has since left the house and gone to other fields. I think there are only a few of us here now who sat on the Harley commission from its inception. I may be wrong, but that is my recollection. That commission did a tremendous amount of work. It heard approximately 100 witnesses, sought legal and accounting advice and heard representations from the medical profession, drug manufacturers and others. As hon. members know, the commission was instructed to inquire into ways in which drug prices could be reduced, a worthy aim for it to pursue. I believe the commission's legal adviser is now the patent commissioner. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey (Mr. Howe) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) were also members of that commission.

After studying for many months the question of whether drug prices could be brought down in this country the commission brought down a report. I will not go into details except to say that the fundamental part of the report or its core, if you like, was that drug prices might be brought down if that could be done without interfering with the clinical effectiveness of the drugs concerned and without harming the public good in any way.

The government that preceded this one introduced Bill C-190. Fortunately, it later agreed to abandon part of that bill. The Conservative opposition of that time deserves credit for fighting some of the clauses in that bill to the point where it was withdrawn. Fundamental changes were made in it and a similar bill has now been introduced in the house by this government.

I commend the minister for introducing a changed bill. It ought to be understood that the previous bill has been changed, that the changes were for the good and that it was the Conservative party that insisted on those changes being made. I commend the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), then the minister of consumer and corporate affairs, for having had the wisdom to examine the previous bill, recognize that it needed changing and co-operate with the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) in bringing about the changes. Nevertheless, the present minister did not go far enough in order to make it a good bill.

Mr. Basford: It is an excellent bill.

Mr. Rynard: The minister says it is an excellent bill. That is what the government said about a year ago. They said, "This is a perfect bill. You should not object to it." Despite what was said, the minister's predecessor saw the light of day and I hope the present minister will also see the light of day.

I remember the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) saying that Bill C-102, introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, was designed to bring down drug prices. As a matter of fact, the present minister attended almost all the meetings of the committee, and I commend him for his courtesy and for his manner of answering the questions that were asked. I think he did a good job on the subject of drug prices. What annoyed me was that after the commission brought down its report the government introduced the present Bill C-102 and said there would be no changes, come hell or high water, and that was all there was to it. In view of what happened ultimately the Committee's sittings were nothing but exercises in futility. As I say, there were to be no amendments. Any amendments that were moved were not accepted. The government would not permit any witnesses other than the officials it chose to call to be heard. We wanted to hear the evidence of certain witnesses to clear up certain matters. We did not know how far the Food and Drug Directorate was to go in determining the clinical efficiency of drugs or the therapeutic effectiveness of equivalent or substitute drugs.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Basford: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to do so because I enjoy listening to the hon. member for Simcoe North who always has a great many important things to say. As I understand the new rules as they are being enforced, the rule of relevancy is being enforced rather stringently at this stage by Mr. Speaker. We are dealing with an amendment proposing that compulsory licences be granted by a tribunal. I think the hon. member for Simcoe North is wandering somewhat from that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I thank the minister, but I think the hon. member for Simcoe North is coming to the amendment.

Mr. Rynard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know the minister did not mean exactly what he said. He is pretty good natured. I know that what I say hurts him and I realize he is on the spur. He knows this as well as I do. If he did not, he would not be jumping up from his seat.

I want to say there was not one witness heard. They were invited but their invitations almost told them "Don't come here because you haven't anything to say". Telegrams were sent all the way from Vancouver stating that they had something to contribute to this very important measure. The minister knows how important it is because he has said many times that he must have the co-operation of the doctors in order for it to be successful—either that or force them to use drugs they would not otherwise prescribe.

In the committee the minister stood up and said "Oh no, the hon. member for Simcoe North is completely wrong. I would never do that. It is a complete distortion of facts". The minister has either one of two choices. I would like him to state if there is any other course for him to follow. The minister did not receive the valuable co-operation of the Canadian Medical Association. It is the doctors who will be writing the prescriptions. This could have been done very easily. I also believe that the operation of this bill should be reviewed after the legislation has been in force for a while because we will want to know how it is working out. We can then study it in order to determine that the Canadian public is being protected in the way it should.

In the committee meeting somebody asked that one drug be named that had the quality and same constituents but did not have therapeutic equivalency. The drug named was chloromycetin. I think it was Goddard—I will refer to my notes to make sure this is correct—yes, Goddard stated that there were approximately 20 drugs and not one was as we were led to believe. I refer to page 301 of the Canadian Medical Association Journal, volume 100, which states:

> Official standards by themselves do not necessarily assure therapeutic effectiveness. They do not provide biological performance tests. The generic name applies only to the drug entity and hence so-called generic equivalence may vary widely depending on the particular manufacturer. Despite the minister's statement that "lack of therapeutic equivalency among drugs meeting all official standards has been grossly exaggerated as a major hazard to public health", there is an impressive list of treatment failures, drug recalls and reformulations.

I think this indicates to the minister what thin ice he is skating on. This is the authority. Goddard stated that "there may be in reality more than two dozen types of drugs to be implicated as generically equivalent but therapeutically non-equivalent." The minister did not follow the premise that safety in clinical equivalence must be foremost or whether that could be consistent with price reduction.

The article continues:

> These include chloramphenicol, erythromycin, tetracycline, corticosteroids, anticonvulsants, griseofulvin, tolbutamide, bishydroxycoumarin, penicillin, etc. This danger is directly compounded by the number of manufacturers and different sources of supply.

I am trying to be kindly when I state that the minister is skating on very thin ice and that he should have tried to get the co-operation of the medical profession as a whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I will kindly tell the hon. member I was mistaken when I thought he was coming to the point.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I am coming to the point.

Private Bills

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Labour Conditions—alternative to compensate for cancelled winter works program; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Post Office Department—effect of increased rates on Printing industry; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard)—Fisheries—seals—disposal of Norwegian ship under seizure.

The time being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Weatherhead for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-13, An Act respecting The Excelsior Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Forest: Stand.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to stand an order to resume a debate. The hon. gentleman behind me is prepared to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Forest: I understand that the member who sponsored this bill is away on government business overseas. We would be ready to proceed with order No. 4, Bill S-27, in the name of the hon. member for Lévis.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, there has been no communication of that sort that I know of. We were prepared to proceed with the first item in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, which has been stood at the request of the government. In anticipation of the next item being called, resuming debate on second reading of the bill respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, we are prepared to proceed with that bill. For that reason it is not possible to give unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In the absence of unanimous consent we will proceed with order No. 2.

The house resumed, from Friday, January 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Weatherhead that Bill S-13, respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I hope that during this debate someone will tell us more about this company. I am a farmer and I buy insurance. I was hoping that someone on the government benches would try to sell this insurance company to us a little so that we could learn more about it. In times past government members have frequently been reluctant to tell us very much about such bills, and since this bill does not say very much about the particular company concerned it would be a little awkward for a backbencher to debate it without doing some research on it, which is what I did.

I thought I had better have a look at this great Canadian insurance company which was founded on August 7, 1889. I wonder why it has been a subsidiary of the Aetna Life Insurance Company since 1960 and why it is no longer a Canadian company. If it was such a great Canadian institution, why did that happen?

If we look at the company's balance sheet we discover that its premium income in 1967 was some $34 million and its total income was some $49 million. Total assets of this great Canadian company were $204 million and it had a surplus of $11,792,000, with net reserves of some $166 million. In the period from 1908 to 1956 it averaged 8 per cent on paid-up capital. To me that sounds fairly affluent. If I had earned a rate of 8 per cent over the 26 years I have been farming I would have a lot more money than I have now.

The other day we had a nice lecture from the government benches to the effect that we in this party have no idea how business is run. Maybe I am in the wrong business. Instead of being a farmer possibly I should be in the insurance business. But, as I say, I am a buyer of insurance, not a seller, and to me an average earning of 8 per cent seems a little too high, particularly when one takes into account all the sinking funds and other incidentals previously deducted by the company. I wonder whether this company, by overcharging for insurance, is not contributing to inflation. As a farmer I feel it is charging too much and that I am not getting value for the dollar I invest in insurance.

If government member say that we know nothing about insurance, let me point out what happens on a farm in Saskatchewan. I have accident and casualty insurance, automotive insurance for two trucks and a car, fire and wind insurance on farm buildings, and I contribute to crop insurance. In addition, as an individual I have a life insurance policy. As a buyer of this product, insurance, I suggest that the charges are too high. I suggest that it is in the interests of this particular businessman to get insurance at a cheaper rate, and that insurance companies should provide better service for the money they charge. In effect I say to them, "Your rates are too high. If you want to go into business in Canada you should give a more reasonable return."

I would like to ask some questions about this company. I am aware it is licensed in all the provinces of Canada, but where is the bulk of its cutomers? What special services is it offering to the Canadian people when it wishes to sell insurance to them? Does this company have any particular business with the government of Canada? This is one question in particular that should be answered. I know that I am covered by a health insurance policy, but I would like to know whether I am contributing as a member of parliament to this company. We are entitled to know whether this company does any business with the government of Canada.

What reason would an American company have for buying a Canadian subsidiary in the insurance field other than to make money? I can see this being done by American companies in the automobile or tractor businesses where larger markets help to increase profits, but is it necessary in the insurance field?

I would like to look now at the operations of the American big daddy in this case, the Aetna Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut. Just what does this company do? What service does it perform? What is its financial position? I have here a few figures taken from Moody's Bank and Finance Manual which show that in 1967 the total income of this big daddy was $1,638 million. The increase in its reserves in 1967 was $310 million, policy holder dividends were $28 million, and federal income taxes, that is, American income taxes, totalled $29 million. The net left after federal income tax was $38 million, and its surplus account as of January 1 was $335 million. Its net capital gain that year was $12 million, making a total surplus account of $393 million, almost $400 million. I suggest that this is pretty adequate and I wonder whether it is necessary that we as Canadians should contribute to the welfare of American policy holders by paying dividends to an American Caesar.

Years ago it used to be the case that Roman armies marched into a country and as a result its inhabitants had to pay tribute to Caesar. Now a different type of invasion takes place, the invasion of capital investment, but the country's inhabitants pay tribute just the same. Perhaps it is more dignified, and some of the people in the invaded country even think it is a good thing. That seems to be the case with the government.

To return to my original argument, as a consumer of insurance I object to paying such high rates to Canadian insurance companies. It hurts me even more to pay these high rates to an American company, particularly when that company ultimately pays taxes to the United States government rather than to the Canadian government. I challenge hon. members on the government benches to say whether this company receives any business from the Canadian federal government or its employees. This is a question that bothers me when I see a government sponsoring a bill of this nature. As there are other members who wish to contribute to the debate, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to for go any further comments on this occasion.

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member asked me to answer several questions. With regard to the province in which the company is registered I presume, although this would be subject to check, it is registered in the provinces in which it carried on business. As I think I indicated when I introduced the bill the present company, the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company has claims offices located in Quebec City, Ottawa, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. The new company, of course, could not be registered in any province until it is actually incorporated and ready to carry on business.

I presume the question with regard to whether there are contracts with the government is directed also to the existing company, the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company. I would be glad to obtain that information for the hon. member. I should say, however, that answers to all the questions he and others might have could be given most conveniently if he and his colleagues would permit this bill in the normal course to go to the committee where we would have before the committee the executive officers of the company to give complete answers to any questions any member of the house might have.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate this afternoon I should like to refer to the comments made in the other place with regard to Bill S-13, regarding the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, which is before us at this time. I should like to review some of the statements which have been made in this regard and really bring us up to date concerning what is actually happening and the reason I have some doubts at this time in respect of the passage of this bill. I am sure many members of the house realize that the purpose of Bill S-13 is to convert the Excelsior Life Insurance Company from the status of a company with provincial incorporation to that of a company with federal incorporation. As such the purpose of the bill is exactly the same as that of many bills which have come before the committee of the other place in recent years. The main difference here is that this bill proposes a somewhat different procedure from that which has been traditional. This difference was referred to by the Superintendent of Insurance when he spoke to the committee of the other place. I should like to quote from page 1 of the evidence of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce of the Senate for Wednesday, June 7, 1967. The Superintendent of Insurance said:

> Honourable senators will recall that the usual practice in cases such as this is to incorporate a new company by special act and empower that company to take over the assets and the liabilities of the provincial company by agreement. That system works very well in small companies and we have used it very often. This case, however, is somewhat different, since Excelsior is a well established company with a large volume of business in force and a large volume of assets. The traditional method that we have used, involving a transfer from one corporate entity to another, would require a transfer of assets with the expense and difficulty of re-registering mortgages and securities and also involving the problem of transferring the contractual liabilities of the many thousands of policies outstanding, from one corporate entity to another.
> Therefore, this bill proposes a different procedure, one whereby Parliament would declare that the company is continued as a corporation in the same sense as if it had been a corporation incorporated by special act of Parliament; it would be clothed with all the powers of a federal company and subject to all the restrictions and obligations.

In dealing with this statement it should be recognized—and this information is available—that in the case of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company it is now a provincially incorporated company and is not subject to the provisions put in the Canadian and British Insurance Company's Act in 1965 to restrict the sale of shares to non-residents. Even if it becomes a federal company subject in all respects to that act, it will still have an exemption from this provision by virtue of the fact that more than 50 per cent of the shares are now held by one non-resident.

In dealing with the situation in respect of the incorporation of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company I should like to refer briefly to a statement made by the president of the Royal Bank of Canada. I believe it bears directly on the situation as we find it in this case. I shall quote from the Globe and Mail of Friday, March 21, 1969. The article refers to the comments of Mr. W. Earle McLaughlin, president of the Royal Bank of Canada, and states:

> In a speech prepared for the American Club in Paris, Mr. McLaughlin said any effort to "buy Canada back" from U.S. investors would be self-defeating.

The article continues:

> However, "there is at present a real danger that foreign-owned Canadian corporations may become subject to foreign laws or regulations that reach across the national boundary."

I suggest in respect of the first statement that the president of the Royal Bank of Canada is really suggesting that we should not be concerned about buying back Canada from other countries because it would be self-defeating. In his second statement he is suggesting there is a real danger that our friends across the line may impose their laws upon corporations which are doing business in Canada. I say with due respect that the president of the Royal Bank of Canada has most certainly been very evasive in his statements. Personally I do not find the two statements to be very meaningful in respect of what we are trying to bring about in Canada at this time. The article goes on to say:

> The U.S. government may try to force Canadian subsidiaries of domestic companies to obey U.S.

regulations. "The subsidiary may then be denied the right to do something that is perfectly legal, even encouraged, by Canadian law and policy." This problem, he added, should be solved through inter-government consultation rather than restrictive legislation.

We have seen various areas—I might refer to the International Grains Arrangement—where we thought we had international governmental control and regulation but found that regulations really mean very little if those who are signatories to the document are not prepared to be honest and forthright in their dealings. I am frightened that the same thing could happen with insurance companies under our present system unless there are strong laws to govern them completely because the fact is they are not too concerned about regulations.

If another country were to enforce its regulations upon companies within our boundaries then I suggest that the intent of the president of the Royal Bank of Canada will never be fulfilled. I certainly appreciate his sincerity in this article when he says that the over-all situation might be improved through intergovernmental consultation rather than restrictive legislation. To date, however, we have not seen this type of intergovernmental regulation in the insurance field, particularly since the majority of the money is controlled across the line, and we really become subservient to that control in our society today.

Another matter which comes to my mind is related particularly to the article in the Globe and Mail of March 21 where Mr. McLaughlin is reported to have said:

> The case against the Buy Back Canada scheme is therefore overwhelming.

He is referring to the buying back of Canada about which we have read so much in various editorials and well documented articles. But here we have the president of the Royal Bank of Canada suggesting that there really is no case to present for our stand that we should buy back Canada or at least invest in Canada so that we can control our own destiny. The article continues:

> —all discriminatory Canadian legislation should be repealed; and, most important of all, foreign law and regulation should stop at the border.

This point is very well taken, but we know that in actual practice many of these situations do not really materialize in the way in which all of us here in Canada would like. I have another article which I should like to refer to briefly. I believe we all realize that in respect of the investigations that are going on by various Canadian corporations, labour unions, and so on it never happens that information is not reported in the papers. This is an article written by David Crane, a Globe and Mail reporter. It is headed, "Report Unravels Corporate Ties From 4,333 Holding Companies." I believe this is a fact that many members of the house have forgotten. These corporate ties have put this country in the position in which it is today. If we had the so-called free enterprise system about which so many hon. members speak, we would not have the corporate ties that are being unravelled at this time. This is demonstrated by the article in the Globe and Mail, which reads in part:

• (5:20 p.m.)

> Important new information on the ownership of Canadian corporations—including the intriguing role of private investment trusts—is contained in a special report on inter-corporate ownership in Canada by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

The article continues:

> The 834-page report contains details of 4,333 holding complexes, which have interests in more than 15,000 Canadian corporations. It is called Inter-Corporate Ownership and sells for $8.50.

I mention that in case anybody is interested in obtaining a copy. The article continues:

> Although the web of interlocking holdings and the investment positions of the various private trusts and financial institutions are based on 1965 information collected by the Corporation and Labour Union Returns Act group, the report nonetheless sheds new light on the structure of ownership in Canada, and reveals to some extent who owns what.

The position has always been taken by our party that we are concerned about who owns what. I would like to refer to the bill now before us and indicate the situation as we find it. With regard to the bill immediately preceding Bill S-13, I understand its sponsor and the company officers have agreed that the company shall become Canadian-owned in ten years. Surely this is the least anyone in Canada can expect. I say this with due respect for the corporate enterprises we have in this country. The least we can expect is that they become Canadian-owned in a set number of years. To suggest that anyone in this house is out of order, in effect, in asking that such a provision be included in the bill is, I believe, losing touch with what Canada is all about.

This is the end result of the one-nation concept. We should be completely involved in this question and determined that we will buy Canada back. In my opinion it does not really matter what the president of the Royal Bank of Canada has said in this regard, because I believe the case for buying Canada back has been well made. We can do this by the simple method of requiring these companies to become Canadian-owned in a set number of years. I could refer to various situations where this requirement has been very effective.

To confirm what I have just said I should like to refer to the committee report. There you will find set out the various transactions that took place, the various conversations and documented statements. The report refers in particular to what I have just mentioned. It suggests that the special feature of the bill is to be found in the clause in which the company undertakes that within five years at least 25 per cent of the stock will be made available to Canadian shareholders, and within ten years another 24 per cent will be available to them. So at the end of ten years the ownership of this corporation will be 49 per cent in the hands of Canadians. Surely everyone in this house would agree that this is a step in the right direction. I should like to read just one sentence of an article in the Globe and Mail of March 26:

> Rarely heard names crop up frequently in the special report by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on inter-corporate relationships in Canada.

This refers to what I mentioned a short while ago. Perhaps I might read further from this article:

> The report contains many surprise connections in the corporate world, along with much information that has been made public previously.

I suggest that with what we have before us, together with the information anyone may obtain in any of Moody's banking and financial manuals, we know exactly where the corporate power lies. I think this house will be very remiss in its responsibility if it does not take action such as that taken with regard to Bill S-16 which has been stood. The bill before us concerns the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, but I must refer to the previous bill to substantiate what I am attempting to prove to the house. In the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee it was said:

> We are quite conscious of the feeling of the Department of Insurance that shares should not go to the public until the company has been seasoned and has been established as being a success, if you will, a solid, stable, going organization, and I think we would be most reluctant to take shares to the public until we felt we had demonstrated that the company was a solid, going and well established organization. However, once that time is reached, certainly the public issue is one possibility.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

I am sure we agree with that statement. We have heard of many cases of our senior people being fleeced by corporate enterprises in this country. We know of cases where widows who have accumulated a small amount of money have had the money taken from them without hesitation by these people. They go out and sell our people a bill of goods without being well seasoned, if I might use that expression. They have been able to sell these people a bill of goods and take away their entire earnings. The committee report continues in these words, and I quote them because I believe they are important:

> Our hope, sir, would be that the public offering would be available. We feel that this best meets our objectives of providing the company with a true Canadian ownership.

That sentence indicates that without doubt we have in this country enterprises which will agree to becoming Canadian-owned. Only through the viligance of individual members of the House of Commons can we provide for this very essence of Canadian ownership if we so desire. I am sure that if the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, with which we are dealing under Bill S-13, were to give an undertaking to the house that it, too, would agree to what we think is right so far as Canadian ownership is concerned, there would be very little hesitation in passing the bill on the part of the members of the party to which I have the privilege of belonging. The committee report continues as follows:

> My only reservation is that you just cannot predict a public market five or ten years in advance, and if the market were thin or down and if people were not interested in buying securities, then I would think an investment banking house might well want to take them and hold them for a few years before it took them to the public. Certainly, ultimately the public should have these shares.

I believe this indicates some of the concern that has been expressed in many cases. This principle should be adopted by hon. members who have chosen to sponsor this type of bill. It is amazing that individuals are subjected to the whims of corporate power and come before this house and sponsor bills when they have not received from those who asked them to sponsor the bills an undertaking as to the company becoming Canadian-owned.

I believe the onus lies on people sponsoring these bills to ask that question before they become pawns in the system in which we find ourselves at this time. Surely, this question must have been asked before the Excelsior Life Insurance Company was sponsored. I am sure that the answer was right. If the answer was in such language that the house could understand it and there was no hesitation on the part of the company in saying that they would become Canadian owned, then there would be very little debate on many of these bills.

I should like to continue with another section of this report. I have here a vast number of figures to show the corporate tie up of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company with other life and casualty, insurance companies. However, I will quote directly what was said in the committee:

> We feel that the growth of the Canadian business, particularly in terms of numbers of people serviced through our group contracts, sir, warrant Canadian participation initially in and, ultimately, ownership of this company.

Once again, he comes directly back to the point, which is ownership of this company, which will ultimately be in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): I do not often take part in a debate such as this, but the more I look at the order paper the more I am convinced I will do this more often. I do it without any apology. Some months ago I spoke during this hour on a bill concerning a company in an entirely different field from this one. I said at that time I felt quite sure that all members of my party in the house and most, if not all members and supporters of my party in this country, insist that we should not do anything in this house that will give aid, comfort or support to the continuation or extension of U.S. control of the Canadian economy; that we should under no circumstances, no matter how minor the bills may appear on the surface, pass any measures that will make more firm the present control of our economy by foreign corporations.

This bill has been before this house and the other place on previous occasions as well as in this session. The reasons for this bill being presented have remained the same. I want to say that the sponsor, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead), is a good member and a nice fellow. He is doing what he feels to be his public duty and in sponsoring this bill he feels he is performing his duty as a member of parliament. He has no intimate relationship with this company. So, the things I may say about this bill or this company are no reflection upon the sponsor of the bill. But may I urge upon him and upon every other hon. member that, from here on, no member of this house should ever again sponsor a private bill for a private company if the bill in any way contributes to the strengthening of U.S. ownership and control of the Canadian economy unless it is the belief of the sponsor that there is nothing wrong with the present level of U.S. control and ownership of our country. It seems to me that only a member who feels that way could feel free to sponsor such a bill. Any other hon. member would feel that he could not sponsor a measure of that nature in the best interest of our country.

The bill seeks to provide retroactively the federal incorporation of the company. We are told by the Superintendent of Insurance that the present situation has caused a great deal of difficulty and inconvenience to the company. All I can say is, isn't that just too bad! This company is 71 per cent owned and controlled by the Aetna Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, which in turn is owned and controlled by the Aetna Life and Casualty Company of Hartford, Connecticut. May I say as an aside that I wonder if a quick way of regaining a great deal of the economic control of our country would not be by negotiating with the United States for the purchase of the entire state of Connecticut, or at least of the city of Hartford, which seems to harbour most if not all the insurance companies which hold great interests in Canada. Perhaps in this manner we could simply and quickly return ownership and control of a large section of our economy, particularly in the financial field, to Canadian hands. I say this facetiously, but it is a little distressing when one sees bill after bill presented to the house year after year and always the address of Hartford, Connecticut crops up. It must be a place greatly liked by insurance companies in particular.

As I was saying, this bill is a measure to provide some convenience for the Excelsior Life Insurance Company. The Superintendent of Insurance has told the committee of the other place that this method is different from the one usually practised for the federal incorporation of such companies as opposed to provincial incorporation. The implication in this procedure is that it will save the company a great deal of expense and trouble to which they would have to go if they went about the corporate change in the normal way. I must say that I am not particularly interested in saving this kind of company any difficulty or expense. It could be said that my attitude might cost the shareholders and the owners of this company some interest or some dividends. However, I suspect that most of the dividends are paid to the owners in the United States, and here again I cannot have too much sympathy if these people should happen, through my action, to receive a smaller amount of dividends or interest.

Bills such as this would be received with a great deal more sympathy in the house if these companies would present in writing or incorporate in bills which are presented to the house—although I would prefer it to be in the legislation—an irrevocable guarantee that the company would divest itself of at least 22 per cent of the present U.S. ownership and turn it over to Canadians.

Assuming 29 per cent is owned in Canada, and that this company could guarantee that within a few years it would divest itself of 22 per cent of ownership so that majority control would rest in Canadian hands, this bill might be received with greater sympathy than it is being received now, at least in this quarter of the house. However, I have yet to be assured that part at least of the 29 per cent I have mentioned is not owned in some other country, for example, in Europe. The company would then require to divest itself of a higher percentage than 22 per cent in order that the corporation might become owned and controlled by Canadians at least to the extent of 51 per cent. I, personally, feel that control to the extent of 51 per cent of a financial institution is not great enough, but it would certainly be better than the present 29-71 ratio.

Another thing which bothers me in connection with legislation of the kind we are considering is this: I have personal doubts about the quality of the Canadian corporate citizenship of such a corporation. I think it is a little much to expect that the directors and owners of this corporation in the United States would place Canadian public interest ahead of the corporate interest of Aetna Life Insurance, Aetna Life and Casualty and, thus, of Excelsior Life and Casualty. I could not blame them for not doing so. It would be quite proper for them to place the interest of their private company before any public interest of the country in which it was operating. Again, if this corporation, or its sponsor, either in writing or in the body of this legislation could guarantee that from here on its investment policies would place the Canadian public interest on a level with, or higher than the private interests of the corporation, this bill would be received with a great deal more sympathy.

For example, if investment moneys in the mortgage field are available, as they are year round from such a corporation, and if the company could guarantee that its investment policy would have some relation to public and social needs and that housing, for example, would take priority over the building of fancy service stations or fancy hotels, it would be much more deserving of consideration when it sought legislation either in this house or in the other place.

I hope hon. members in all parts of the house feel that the question of the extent of foreign ownership and control of Canada's economy is a serious one and that it should be dealt with without delay. I am sure most hon. members feel this to be the case. Some of them are reluctant to say so, possibly because of the corner of the house in which they sit, but I do not think there can be any question about their concern. I trust that before this parliament goes on much longer other members in other parts of the house will express their views about the dangers to Canada's sovereignty and independence because of the extent of foreign ownership and control.

I hope, too, they will agree that any legislation presented to the house in connection with the incorporation of insurance companies, particularly of the size and magnitude of the one we are considering, should not only be in the best interests of Canada but should be designed in such a way as to lessen the extent of foreign ownership and control of our economy. Surely, it is not too much to expect that these corporations should respect the opinion and feeling of this house and of the people of this country and be prepared gradually to make it possible for Canadians to take over a larger share and eventually total ownership of such corporations?

I hope all we have heard during the past year from members of all parties during and after the election campaign about the independence of our country and about its future was more than just election talk, more than just political talk, more than just partisan talk. I hope it is something about which we all feel deeply and that hon. members are all anxious to see something take place to reverse what has been happening to us.

The passing of legislation to make it more convenient for a private company, most of which is owned outside Canada, to operate more easily in this country is not in my opinion in the best interests of this nation.

May I now put forward a personal opinion, one which I hold strongly; I do not know that our party has expressed any firm policy with regard to it. I note that a few years back this company went into the field of health and accident insurance in addition to life insurance. It is my personal opinion, and I do not know whether anyone in this house agrees with me, that any private company or corporation which would make a profit from the misfortunes of others is immoral. I do not believe this is a proper field for private enterprise. I am sure that neither this company nor any other is in business in order to break even, or to lose their money. These companies are in business to make profits and for no other reason. It seems to me this is an area in which the public as a whole should be engaged through their governments. And again, I find it difficult to support legislation which would aid and abet private corporations in selling accident and health insurance.

I must confess my feelings are strong on this issue, probably because I have seen private corporations in the insurance field extend the most vicious kind of opposition to medicare and hospitalization plans in my own province. In view of what has been said so far, and partly, I hope, in view of what I have just said, I wish now to move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by my hon. friend from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave):

That this bill S-8 be not now read the second time but that it be read this day six months hence.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): It is not very often in this house that we see very much interest shown in Canadianism or any indication given that there is or should be strong concern—

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I believe the motion referred to Bill S-8, whereas the bill now being dealt with is Bill S-13. Therefore, I presume the present motion is out of order. Since I believe there are no further speakers available on the other side, perhaps the question on Bill S-13 should be put to a vote.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That may well be the case, Mr. Speaker. I have just checked with my hon. friend for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and it is evident that the lad picked up the wrong piece of paper. I have the proper amendment here, which reads, "That this Bill", without the number of the bill. That is the proper motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It is true that the motion refers to Bill S-8, but under the circumstances I think the house understood that it referred to the bill under study, which is Bill S-13.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I think my hon. friend for Regina-Lake Centre wanted to apologize for the error that was made, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, it is not very often that we find people in this house who are really concerned about the pride we should have in our own nation, in trying to become economically independent, in trying to exercise our political activities and jurisdiction to the point where we become masters in our own house.

I do not wish to be unkind to the hon. gentleman who just raised the point of order, but it is a fact that he has probably as many marks on his record of political activity in this house as anyone has when it comes to sponsoring bills promoting foreign-owned companies. I do not think that should be looked upon as any credit, though I do not say that unkindly of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn).

What we should have, as the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre pointed out, is a little more concern for what we as Canadians hope we can do to preserve our own economic and policital integrity. We have heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talk rather gloatingly about our sovereignty as a nation, our sovereignty in the Arctic, about being masters in our own house and the like. Yet, we see his own members year after year coming before this house pleading and begging that we give some favoured consideration to United States—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Would the hon. member kindly talk about Bill S-13.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I had just reached that stage. This bill is sponsored by a United States-owned company. It is regrettable that we have to go through this procedure time and time again because hon. members—I do not say this unkindly of them—are sponsoring bills that fall into this category and which are not Canadian in the full sense of the word.

This particular bill really seeks to do something that, I think, distorts history. It is asking this parliament to make a declaration that would rewrite the facts of the case. It is asking this parliament to say that this company shall be deemed to have been a federally incorporated company since May 4, 1910. Excelsior Life Insurance Company is asking us to reach into the past almost 60 years and rewrite the record. It is asking us to erase the situation that existed at that time and to say that, to all intents and purposes, this company shall be deemed to have existed as a federally incorporated company since May 4, 1910.

Throughout the bill there are references to an intention to continue just as if the period between had not intervened, which I think is stretching things quite a bit. I know similar provisions have been included in other bills and will probably appear in bills to come before us in the future. But I do not think the parliament of Canada should try to undo what has already been done and attempt to rewrite history as we know it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed the following bills without amendment: Bill C-173, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto; Bill C-178, an act to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume the same at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO GRANT LICENCES—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, to summarize the points I was making with regard to the amendment, I say that before any compulsory licence for the manufacture of drugs is granted, the commissioner ought to consult the tribunal mentioned in the amendment. I submit also that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) ought to be a member of that tribunal since it seems that international patent rights are being arbitrarily abrogated. If that minister is on the tribunal, physicians will be encouraged to use, and patients will ask for, cheaper imported drugs. Therefore, the granting of a compulsory licence must be subject to the approval of the Food and Drug Directorate which ought to determine whether the product in question is the pharmaceutical and clinical equivalent of a drug that is established and produced in Canada. Only if there is such approval on the part of the Food and Drug Directorate can we expect doctors to prescribe new drugs. The minister has said over and over again that co-operation between his department and the directorate is essential if this legislation is to work. That co-operation would be in keeping with one of the first recommendations of the Harley report.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) must also be on the tribunal to advise the patent commissioner whether a new drug is good for the public. He must also advise whether admitting a new drug will stop research or slow it down. Will drug firms stop conducting research in this country, or will they conduct some of their research elsewhere? In short, what will be the economic effect on the public of introducing new drugs? I believe the Harley report touched on some of these points also.

Several hon. members were concerned about the fact, which was alluded to in committee when the bill was being studied, that no feasibility study in this entire area was undertaken. We have not had any report in this area from the Economic Council. That report, unfortunately, will not be available until the fall. As a matter of fact, after an hon. member sitting on the minister's side of the house asked whether a feasibility study in this entire area had been undertaken, the claim was made that such a study could be undertaken and that the report would be accurate to within 2 or 3 per cent.

The other point I wish to raise is, will not the budget of the Food and Drug Directorate be increased by millions of dollars as a result of setting up offices in Europe, employing inspectors and other personnel in Canada to carry out all the additional work that will be necessary. May the ultimate effect of this not be to increase instead of to decrease drug prices? When confronted with this question the patent commissioner was not certain how to answer; neither was the former minister.

The amendment directs that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) be a member of the tribunal. Clearly, he must be on the tribunal since it is his responsibility to protect the consumer and to advise the patent commissioner.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this amendment I urge the minister to accept the idea of a tribunal granting compulsory licences for the manufacture of drugs. It seems to me that a tribunal composed of the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Basford), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) would be ideal to take care of all phases affecting the manufacture of drugs in Canada.

First of all, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would have a great deal to consider. This bill, in fact, wipes out all patent protection for drugs sold in Canada. This, of course, is an extension of what already was in force in that, while a compulsory licence could be issued for the manufacture of a drug in Canada, it could not be imported from abroad. Under this bill, it will be possible to import all drugs upon obtaining a compulsory licence, regardless of where they are manufactured, providing they meet the standards of the Food and Drug Directorate.

The abrogation of the right of patent protection, Mr. Speaker, is a serious step that has much wider implications than just the drug industry. It perhaps is foolish for a drug patent to last 17½ years. It is not very practical for drugs to have protection this long, as the average drug is only on the market for approximately five years. The granting of compulsory licences on a large scale will cause considerable change in the industry and in the manufacture of drugs.

The drug industry is international in scope. Most major drug companies operating in Canada have manufacturing facilities in many countries. If competition is intense, the large companies will manufacture drugs in countries where labour costs are lower. The various drug manufacturing companies in Canada have large research facilities. It may be these research facilities would be phased out, which would be detrimental. It would be the duty of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to ascertain if the granting of compulsory licences would do substantial damage to those segments of the industry that would be advantageous for our country to retain.

I am sure the minister will make every effort to maintain in Canada a high level of employment and research facilities in the interests of the community at large. Drug safety is the responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his officials. All reports concerning this phase of the drug industry have stressed that competitive drugs be either manufactured in Canada or imported. The overriding factor in all cases, however, would be the safety factor.

The clinical efficacy of the drugs should be established in Canada so that physicians, pharmacists and patients would know that the quality of drugs was being maintained and that no sub-standard or relatively unsafe drugs would be allowed on the market. The Department of National Health and Welfare has greatly expanded in anticipation of an increase in varieties of drugs. This will cost some millions of dollars.

The department may find the cost of policing and insuring safety of a proposed drug might be greater than the savings effected. This would be a factor in their decision. This department has a good record with regard to drug safety. If the expected large volume of compulsory licencing materializes, the department will have a much greater duty.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should be a member of the proposed tribunal. It would be his duty to provide Canadians with drugs at the lowest possible price. I am sure the minister and his department would carry out this obligation in a worthy and dedicated manner.

This tribunal will be a very useful mechanism by which the various conflicting interests of Canadians in the drug industry and drug prices will be balanced. This will be a good mechanism to carry out compulsory licencing and all phases of the drug industry will be considered.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I wish to state for the record, Mr. Speaker, that I oppose this amendment. It was very carefully considered in previous debates and was moved by the opposition during the debate on Bill C-190. The Harley committee did not recommend that compulsory licences be granted on the basis of advice by a tribunal.

Granting of compulsory licences involves issues which should be determined by the Patent Commissioner. This will continue to be the situation after this bill carries. The Patent Commissioner is responsible for the administration of this act. He knows the act. He has been appointed on the basis of his knowledge and ability to administer the act. The patent commissioner is in as good a position as a tribunal to make a decision whether a compulsory licence should be granted.

The second reason such an amendment should be opposed is that it confuses the jurisdiction between the Commissioner of Patents, who is responsible for the administration of the Patent Act, and the administration of the Food and Drug Directorate which is responsible for the safety of drugs, licencing of drugs and enforcement of all regulations of the Food and Drugs Act. It would be unwise to confuse the functions of the Commissioner of Patents in the granting of patents and the director of the Food and Drug Directorate in policing the safety of drugs.

The third reason suggested as to why this amendment should be accepted would cause unnecessary and undesirable delays in the granting of compulsory licences. The Harley committee recommended that under no circumstances should the general policy be eliminated with respect to permitting compulsory licence applications for patents relating to foods and medicines. They recommended ways of avoiding delays.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

To establish a tribunal consisting of three ministers would result in a great deal of delay. The commissioner recently heard one application. It involved four days. It would be extremely difficult to get three cabinet ministers together to sit as a panel for three or four days to deal with one application for a compulsory licence. It would be extremely difficult to get the tribunal together, with the result that very few licences would be issued.

In considering this bill and the granting of licences, the opposition continuously overlook the fact that the procedure before the Commissioner of Patents on an application for granting a compulsory licence is what is called in law an adversary procedure. Involved would be the applicant for the compulsory licence, the person referred to as "the copier", and the owner of the patent opposing the application. While I am a young man, I have some experience in the law. I think it can be taken for granted that the patent owner and the person opposing the granting of this compulsory licence would bring before the commissioner every possible scintilla of evidence and argument to oppose the granting of the compulsory licence.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that when hearing an application for granting of a compulsory licence the Commissioner of Patents would have all of the facts and considerations before him. There will be those in front of him arguing against the granting of that application. I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that under the act if he feels he requires some advice, technical advice or any other kind of advice, the commissioner has the full authority under section 5 of the Patent Act to commission that advice or evidence.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me rather inappropriate that three ministers act as a panel exercising what really is a judicial function and whose decision could be appealed to the courts. It seems to me that the duty of ministers is an administrative and not a judicial one, and it would be rather unwise to confuse those two functions. The Commissioner of Patents is selected on his ability to conduct a judicial or quasi judicial type of hearing, and his decisions are appealable to the courts. It would seem to me unwise to interpose a tribunal of three ministers exercising not an administrative but a judicial function. For these reasons, I feel I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I ask the minister one question, Mr. Speaker. Take the case of a patent holder who is appearing before the commissioner to resist the application that has been made by the "copier"—and I put that in quotation marks. If the application fails, are costs awarded to the patent holder, or is this to be an ordinary expense of business to defend his patent against any and all comers? I do not think it would be fair that a man who has worked for something, who has a patent for it and has a proprietary right should be, shall we say, assaulted from all sides and have to bear the cost of defending his patent.

Mr. Basford: Subject to whatever advice I may receive, and I am not an expert on the particular matter that the hon. member raises, I point out that the Patent Act establishes private rights of ownersship. It is the duty of the owner of those rights, to protect them at his cost. This is true of the Patent Act, the copyright Act and the Industrial Design Act. The government, or our society if you wish, provides the machinery for registering the ownership of patents, copyrights or industrial designs, and it is up to the owner to protect them at his cost.

The hon. member has a much greater knowledge of the Income Tax Act than I do, but I believe that the patent holder in such a case would be entitled to deduct that cost as an expense of doing business.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But at no point in any of our legislation do we extend an overt invitation to the public to attack a patent, as we do in the principle of these amendments.

Mr. Basford: The overt invitation that the hon. member speaks of has been in the act since 1923.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Ritchie: I would like to ask the minister how many compulsory licences for drugs have been refused?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member asked that question during the committee hearings and received an answer. I forget the answer myself, as perhaps does the hon. member.

Mr. Rynard: As I understood the minister, he said that the Patent Commissioner can ask the Food and Drug Directorate for directions. All we are seeking is that this be made statutory. Why would the minister object to that? I do not think there would be any difficulty with communications because they are all working here on Parliament Hill, and in any case a compulsory licence usually is not granted for months. What we are asking here is that what is done in principle be made statutory.

Mr. Basford: The amendment that I am introducing provides that the commissioner shall give notice to the Department of National Health and Welfare of an application for the granting of a compulsory licence. Therefore, if the Department of National Health and Welfare or its specific agency, the Food and Drug Directorate, feels it should make some observations, comments or arguments to the Commissioner of Patents, it has notice of the application and is free to make the arguments or comments it wishes.

Second, and I think this is the main reason, is the fact that the Food and Drug Directorate is concerned with the safety of drugs, all drugs whether they be patented or not. Therefore, this is where their jurisdiction is; it is over all drugs and the hon. member, who is a doctor, knows that there are all sorts of drugs on the market, some of which are patented and some of which are not patented, but both of which classes are within the full jurisdiction of the Food and Drug Directorate to assure the safety of the drugs and to assure the protection of the Canadian public. The Food and Drug Directorate should not be involved in the granting of patents. It should be involved, as at present, in the sale of those drugs, or in the importation of those drugs, and should be unrelated to the patenting thereof.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I will not press my point further except to say that I think it would be a little more definite if it were made statutory. Then, we would know that the Food and Drug Directorate would have to get in touch with the Patent Commissioner and there would be no slip up. That is all I am asking, but I am not going to press the point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment defeated—

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Monteith) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, the house will now revert to the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin).

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That Bill C-102, An Act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting in Clause 1 (4) after the word "medicine" on line 2, page 1, the following words:

"but valid for only five years or more after the granting of such patent."

Mr. Speaker, this amendment should apply to patents granted five years ago or more.

Here is what the Harley committee of 1966-67 reports, and I quote:

There is no doubt whatsoever that the manufacturer who introduces a new drug should be allowed certain time to promote the drug and establish his position in the market following appropriate clinical testing and satisfying the requirements of the Food and Drug Directorate, so that for a period of time at least he retains his monopoly position. There is no doubt also that the introducer of the drug had need of recouping research expenses not incurred by his licensee competitor. What length of time a patentee should be allowed to retain his monopoly is arbitrary. The committee had considered a length of time dating from the time of application for the patent of the particular drug involved, or a term of years following the date the patent issues. In either case, difficulties can be anticipated from artificial delays that may be introduced by the patentee during the course of prosecution of the application which could lengthen enormously the period between date of application and the date the patent issues. The monetary rewards to a patentee as a result of delaying a compulsory licence application can be substantial.

After full considertion, your committee is of the opinion that under the present system, the patentee has ample time to establish and consolidate his position in the market (and thereby recoup his research costs) by virtue of the fact that it takes some 4 to 5 years for the drug to lose its "new drug" status as determined by the Food and Drug Directorate. As explained earlier it is most unlikely that a compulsory licence will be sought prior to the date that the drug loses its status as a "new drug".

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker, under section 67 of the old legislation, the patent holders must establish manufactures in Canada under penalty of losing their exclusive rights. After the passing of this legislation, parliament will have to see to the protection of the companies which have established manufactures in our country. This drastic change in government policy affects the group that was the most co-operative when the old legislation was in effect by making it impossible for it to compete with the importers because of the higher salaries paid to Canadians and because of the manufactures which were built in Canada with complete confidence.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise to register my opposition to this amendment. I have received a good many representations over the past eight months since I have been in the ministry to the effect that this five year moratorium under the act should be allowed. I have not accepted the representations made to me. It is the position of the government that, in effect, due to the new drug regulations there is under the Food and Drug Directorate on average an effective five year period of protection. However, we do not feel this should be provided as a statutory right. I have explained that this just happens to be the result of the new drug regulations and is likely to continue for the forseeable future. The fact is that the new drug regulations provide to manufacturers of new inventions and new patented processes an effective, on the average, five year protection period. This is like the tariff; it is simply another remaining element of protection the industry has.

In fact, the full impact of this bill would seem to provide a moratorium for this period. However, I believe the acceptance of this amendment would have an adverse effect on the program of the government and on this bill, which is to change the industry in such a way as to result in lower drug prices for the people of Canada who buy prescription drugs. In the third place, it seems to me it would be contrary to what the hon. member says concerning what has gone on since 1923. This amendment would be really a very, very substantial departure from the principle which has been embodied in the Patent Act since 1923 relating to patents on food and drug processes. The present provisions in the bill relating to domestic manufacture really make no change in the substantive law. They are designed solely to clarify the present powers of the Commissioner of Patents and, to some extent, to provide an extension of those powers within the existing principles of compulsory licensing which have existed in the act since 1923.

The amendment to provide a positive five year period would be, as I say, a very substantial departure from that principle which we put in our law in 1923. Finally, in registering my opposition, I might point out, that the Economic Council of Canada, at the request of the government, is studying the whole question of patents. Should this bill with which we are dealing now prove to be damaging to the industry in the way in which the hon. member has suggested, I think I can say we can expect that the Economic Council would comment on it. The report of the Economic Council when received will result in my introducing a complete revision of the Patent Act. Therefore, if the fears of the hon. member are real fears, which I suspect they are not, we will have an opportunity at that time to correct the situation. For those reasons, therefore, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly in favour of this amendment. Although I should like to see a provision that it be mandatory that a new drug should remain under the protection of the Food and Drug Directorate for a period of five years, this is an acceptable alternative. I have some doubt of fear that this legislation may well prevent the introduction of new drugs in Canada. Since most of the new drugs are likely to be manufactured in other parts of the world by international drug companies, I think it is of some importance to us that these new drugs be introduced to the Canadian market within a reasonable period of time. Therefore, I believe there must be some incentive for these drug manufacturing companies to introduce their drugs. The Minister has stated quite rightly that most of these drugs would remain under the protection of the Food and Drug Directorate for five years. Indeed, a drug that was not widely used could remain there much longer. If it were to remain there by statute, I feel this would be an incentive for the company to market the drug and promote it energetically, because they would know that for five years they would have a monopoly control over this drug. This would repay them for their research and effort.

If these companies do not have that protection, they could ensure that a new drug would remain under the control of the Food and Drug Directorate by reporting it to the Food and Drug Directorate as being a drug that has serious side effects. They could also reduce the promotion so that the drug would not be widely used, and therefore would not be of interest to other concerns which might be interested in compulsory licensing. I feel that if this amendment were to be adopted there would be much more likelihood of new drugs coming along and being widely disseminated in the market. Otherwise, it is almost certain that the introduction of new drugs might be, to some extent, slow.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the concern of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) about providing an incentive, I think he said, for the companies to develop new drugs. I would suggest to the hon. member that he read an article written by James Goddard, former director of the Food and Drug Administration of the United States. This article appeared in Esquire magazine of March 1969. Dr. Goddard gives some very interesting figures which, if the hon. member for Dauhin really wants to see the facts, will demonstrate completely that he does not have to worry at all about the incentives for these international drug companies about whom he is so concerned. The fact is that they are doing very well. Dr. Goddard puts the figures on the record. He starts at one point by discussing a drug that is quite widely used, a relatively new drug called prednisone. Senator Nelson was discussing with the president of Schering Corporation, which puts out this drug, their product Meticorten. He asked the president of Schering Corporation why that company charged $170 per thousand for the drug when another reputable brand name company, Upjohn, charged only $4.53 per thousand. Schering is charging 40 times as much.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The government of the United States, and New York city, are buying this drug for $4.58 a thousand. They are using it in government hospitals, veterans' hospitals and hospitals run by the city of New York, in the tens of thousands of doses. There is not the slightest evidence that the product they are using is any less effective than the one which Schering sells for $170 a thousand.

Dr. Goddard goes on to talk about those companies about which the hon. member for Dauphin is concerned because they may not have any incentive if we do not give them these five extra years to make a killing. I bring these facts to the attention of the hon. member for Dauphin. If he does not want to listen to me now, he can read them in Hansard tomorrow. This is what Dr. Goddard says about drug companies, and I quote just one paragraph:

> The climate is healthy enough;—

He is talking about the economic climate in these companies.

> The climate is healthy enough; no one will dispute that. Annual reports for 1967 for just a few Establishment companies reveal the state of the industry's health: Merck & Co. had sales of $528 million, a net profit of $89 million on an investment of $25.4 per cent; Smith Kline & French had sales of $260 million, a net profit of $42 million and a return of 26.9 per cent; Eli Lilly & Co. had sales of $408 million, a net profit of $54 million, and a return of 19.2 per cent; and G. D. Searle had sales of $133 million, a net profit of $27 million, and a return of 28.5 per cent.

That was on invested capital. These figures indicate, just as the studies carried out in Canada by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Royal Commission on Health Services and all the accountants hired by the drug committee of which some of us were members indicated, that the drug companies are making a profit on their investment of twice as much as most other manufacturing companies in this country. This is true of the United States and everywhere in the world where you have the so-called free enterprise system. It is time we stopped worrying about the drug companies; they are doing very well for themselves and do not need the untoward concern which seems to be expressed by some members of this house.

Mr. Nowlan: We need a lot of drugs after you speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my view the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost, on division.

Amendment (Mr. Beaudoin) negatived.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (for the hon. member for Bellechasse): I move:

> That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting in clause 1 (4) after the word "licence" on line 19, page 2, the following words:
>
> "and, in the case of an import licence, such licence shall be declared by the Commissioner to be in the public interest and the foreign manufacturing plants shall be opened for inspection".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), who will be in the hospital for a few days only, due to a slight indisposition, has been replaced by the hon. member for Frontenac. Therefore, I shall take the liberty of explaining the amendment which was read earlier.

While I take part in the debate on Bill C-102 entitled "An act to amend the Patent Act, the Trademarks Act and the Food and Drugs Act", I just want to express the viewpoint shared by a good number of low income people who are obliged to buy drugs because of their health.

It is generally recognized that the price of drugs in Canada is much too high and therefore that the public cannot always afford them, especially those who sometimes need them most. I am thinking in particular of the old people whose only income is the old age pension and all the other people who simply get a social welfare allowance or some other kind of allowance, and also the low wage earners and the farmers who often get starvation wages.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act has conducted an inquiry the findings of which clearly indicate that the price of drugs in Canada seems unaccountably high.

One of them was to the effect that the prices of drugs in Canada are among the highest in the world. Moreover, the special committee of the house, responsible for studying the price and cost of drugs confirms the results already attained by other public inquiries.

It comes to the conclusion that the prices of drugs in Canada are indeed very high and that some appropriate steps should be taken to bring them down. I quote from the report of the committee, at page 17:

> The physician is the person who has most control over the purchase of drugs, in an indirect but absolute way. The doctor writes his prescription for the drug and the pharmacist has no choice but to fill this prescription as written (except in Alberta where substitution is allowed). In the hospital the doctor still has this role and in addition may play a large part as a member of the pharmacy committee in the purchase of drugs for hospital use. In addition to this, the rural practitioner whose practice is in a remote area, often serves as the pharmacist and is involved in the direct purchase and re-sale of drugs to his patient.

The members of the committee believe that this report would be helpful, in the first place, to the doctors, but they realize that very few doctors will actually read it. The doctor's time is scarce. Useful as part of the publicity material of drug firms may be, a fair amount of this information goes unnoticed and is therefore sheer waste.

Advertisements in periodicals are not read—

[English]

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening to the hon. member's speech for the past few minutes, and I do not see how the remarks he is making are relative to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might make an observation at this point. I was following the remarks made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont) very closely and I must say that I have the same misgivings as the Parliamentary Secretary. The Standing Order relative to the proceedings of the house at the report stage provides that the debate should be strictly relevant to the amendment. I, therefore, ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks specifically to the amendment. Unless I misunderstood what he attempted to say—and I would not like to prejudge his remarks—I make this suggestion to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to it.

What I meant a while ago is that if there is no control by means of a license granted after an examination, it will surely be difficult to make the price of products go down. I was precisely saying that the druggist has no alternative when a customer comes in with a prescription specifying a special type of drug.

If, through the amendment under consideration, we hope to be able to provide the necessary inspection, this should have been specified in the detailed way I just mentioned.

Besides, the Harley report recommends that section 41(3) of the Patent Act be amended to include applications for compulsory licenses to import drug products in all forms, subject to inspection of manufacturing facilities by the Food and Drug Directorate and provided such importation is in the public interest as may be determined by the Commissioner. And to this end, the committee recommends that the rules under the Patent Act be amended to permit the Commissioner to seek and receive outside independent expert advice in the determination of this question.

In its fifth report, the committee states that it studied thoroughly the question of granting licences or of registration, in order to determine whether this procedure should be applied.

The main concern of the committee is to provide the safest drugs to Canadians. It feels that licences or registration should be granted only if they result in increasing the safety of drugs.

Always according to the same committee, the Commissioner should only exert its discretionary powers, in the case of compulsory importation licences, when the interests of the public are at stake. "Public interest" means that the necessity to lower the price of the drug for consumers is weighted against the effect the importation licence could have on the Canadian manufacturer involved.

The distinction between the two types of compulsory licences should be maintained. "Unless he sees good reason to the contrary" carries only a discretionary power on the part of the Commissioner and, in that case, "public interest" may or may not be taken in consideration. When a compulsory importation licence is in question, "public interest" is the one and only consideration.

The committee considers that safety must be of paramount importance. The compulsory importation licence should not be granted unless the Food and Drug Directorate has inspected at leisure the manufacturing plants in the exporting country, and has applied the same regulations in force for the Canadian manufacturers of pharmaceuticals.

The committee remained fully conscious of the fact that his responsibilities extend beyond those of the Commissions, because its conclusions must be such that if one of its recommendations were adopted, appropriate balance should be maintained between industry and consumer, and the importance of a continued increase in scientific research in Canada should be considered.

Therefore, it is in the public interest, as defined in the Harley committee, that the objective should be good quality medicine, but at a price which our less fortunate people can afford.

Consequently, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That clause 1 (4) be amended by inserting after the word "licence", on line 19, page 2, the following words:

"and, in the case of an import licence, such licence shall be declared by the Commissioner to be in the public interest and the foreign manufacturing plants shall be opened for inspection.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the mover of this amendment is in hospital, and I am sure that all members of the house join with me in wishing him a speedy recovery. I hope that his condition is not serious. I would have hoped also that before he went to the hospital this bill could have become law so that during his stay in the hospital he could have received his drugs at a cheaper price than he gets them now.

I am in complete agreement with the hon. member who spoke in support of this amendment that the paramount consideration must be the safety of drugs that are available to the Canadian public. This has been the position of this government ever since we introduced this legislation. However, while I am in agreement on that paramount consideration, I must say that this amendment is directed toward ensuring that the manufacturing plants of the imported drugs are inspected by the Food and Drug Directorate.

I consider that this amendment is quite unnecessary because of the powers given to the Food and Drug Directorate under clause 5 of this bill, part of which reads as follows:

—the Governor in Council may make such regulations governing, regulating or prohibiting

(a) the importation into Canada of any drug or class of drugs manufactured outside Canada, or

(b) the distribution or sale in Canada or the offering, exposing or having in possession for sale in Canada, of any drug or class of drugs manufactured outside Canada,

I also refer the hon. member to the existing regulations which were passed by the Governor in Council in May of 1968, namely regulations C-01055 and C-01056 governing the importation of drugs and the inspection of manufacturing plants abroad.

[Mr. Dumont.]

So, while I am in complete agreement with the hon. member that the safety of these drugs is paramount and that the authority and power of the Food Drug Directorate to control the importation must be complete, I think the amendment is unnecessary because this power is already contained in the Food and Drugs Act as amended by this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion? All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my view the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost, on division.

Amendment (Mr. Lambert, Bellechasse) negatived.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), I move:

That Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act be amended by inserting in clause 1 (4), after the word "licence" on line 19, page 2, the following words:

"and subject to a report from the Food and Drugs Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare that the applicant has complied with all the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act and that the medicine manufactured under such patent has the therapeutic and pharmaceutical equivalence of the standard product accepted in Canada".

Mr. Speaker, I moved that amendment to Bill C-102 in order to make manufacturers of pharmaceutical products, in Canada and abroad, supply quality products the safety of which could be the therapeutic and pharmaceutical equivalence of the standard products accepted in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would not like to waste the time of the house but I do wish to direct some very simple and important remarks to my hon. colleagues on that particular point.

Several commissions have investigated the problem of food and drugs in Canada. Those commissions were set up by the government and the industry in order to draft a food and drugs legislation the regulations of which could cope with modern society and ensure that the food consumed by Canadians is really safe and will not harm them.

Mr. Speaker, I have already told the house that the problem was very simple. During our lifetime, however rich or poor we may be, we must at a given time, and because we are not in good health, see a qualified doctor, who of course recommends this or that pharmaceutical product.

The patient who very often does not know anything about the quality and safety of those drugs, simply goes to the drugstore and pays prohibitive prices for drugs without being sure of their quality and their safety. He pays for his drugs and returns home.

Here is where the problem lies, Mr. Speaker. First, we are not sure of the quality of those drugs.

Secondly, their cost is too high, even prohibitive, and I know many people in my constituency and in other Liberal constituencies, whose members refrain from speaking on this matter, who cannot afford some expensive drugs that could cure their illness in a very short time.

Bill C-102 is specifically designed to provide a solution to that problem. The government passed some pieces of legislation. For instance, it has done away with the 11 per cent sales tax in order to reduce the price of drugs. The excise tax on imported drugs has also been removed. However, those two measures have proved inadequate.

As a result, we are still in the same situation, and we are still hoping for lower drug prices.

Mr. Speaker, when the committee on health, welfare and social affairs was considering bill C-102, I had the privilege of asking the minister general questions about the possible economic impact of the enactment of Bill C-102.

Among other things, I asked him what would be the economic impact of his bill. The hon. minister simply answered: I must tell the hon. member that we do not know.

I also asked him if studies had been made with a view to ensuring that the measures he proposed would actually bring about a reduction in drug prices. The minister answered: We do not know, studies have not yet been made. But we do hope so.

Mr. Speaker, I feel we are about to take a step that we will regret later on, if we pass this bill without amendment.

That is what happened in the committee because of the dictatorial system of this government. In fact, we have not been able to move any amendment to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, at the report stage, more than 13 amendments have been moved by hon. members since the committee itself was unable to make any amendment, because proceedings were conducted in a dictatorial manner.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to stress the most is the necessity to protect Canadian enterprise as far as the cost of manufacturing drugs is concerned. Moreover, we are not at all certain that this bill will bring about the benefits expected by the minister since he told me himself that no study had been made in that field, that no effort had been made to forecast the economic consequences of the bill, and determine whether it would benefit the Canadian industry or the foreign industry. That is our greatest apprehension.

We are told about compulsory licences for the manufacture of products and of a lot of other factors to be taken into consideration. I, for one, Mr. Speaker, am extremely pessimistic, not only about the future of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada, but also about the quality of the products which will be imported. Mr. Speaker, when I realized that the dictatorial attitude of the present government made it impossible for us to bring forward amendments liable to be accepted by the committee, I told myself that if we could not do more to protect the Canadian industry, we should at least make sure that imported products are similar in quality to the Canadian products and that the safety of drugs is guaranteed on the Canadian market in order to protect the interests of consumers.

That is why I dealt with that aspect of the question, since I felt it was impossible, due to certain measures and to the procedure, to protect the Canadian industry to a greater extent. After having studied the problem of quality of products, I moved the amendment that was read a minute ago and from which I shall quote an extract:

—the Food and Drug Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare—

This body must make a report on all applications from foreign industries after consideration.

I continue to read further:

—that the applicant—

that is, the foreign industry, be it American, European or otherwise.

—has complied with all the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act—

Needless to say that I am referring to the Canadian act. The medicine being offerred us and which will enter into competition with the Canadian product must comply —with all the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act—

—and even compare with the Canadian medicine patented in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, that is the reason why I believe that such an amendment is most acceptable to the house, since it has only an economic impact and, above all, is designed to protect the Canadian consumer as regards the quality of the product.

I take the liberty, at this stage, to quote a recommendation from the Boyd Committee, that bears out my contention. Besides, I drew my inspiration from it while preparing my motion, a very acceptable one, I believe.

Therefore, I shall quote the said recommendation from the Boyd Committee:

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

In Canada, the majority of these drugs are no longer subject to the "new drug" regulations and there is no obvious way that this essential evidence for therapeutic equivalency can be required. The Boyd Committee, therefore, recommended "... that when a new drug is manufactured and sold by a manufacturer other than the original manufacturer whose new drug submission has been processed in the usual way, the products of the second and subsequent manufacturer should each be considered as new drugs and should each be required to meet the regulations on new drugs." Without implementation of the recommendations of the Boyd and Hilliard Committees, Canadian physicians will lack the assurance that the "licensed" products will produce the desired clinical effects.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to say more about such an important matter. I could quote throughout the evening and tomorrow the recommendations of the Boyd committee, the Harley committee and those of other committees which have dealt with the food and drugs question.

In my opinion, this is a basic point in the debate on Bill C-102. We must make sure—and the minister will agree—that the quality of imported products will be equivalent to that of the products already on the Canadian market.

[Mr. Fortin.]

I think that this is the least we can demand from foreign industry. It must assure us that the products it will put on the Canadian market will be of the highest quality or at least of equivalent quality to the ones already on the market.

Mr. Speaker, if we cannot prevent foreign competition from destroying Canadian pharmaceutical companies, since the minister is friendly with foreigners and the opponent of Canadians, let us ensure at least the quality and the safety of the product in order to protect the Canadian consumer.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I act as the spokesman of Canadians who cannot afford to buy expensive drug and who will have to be content with the first drug they find at the drugstore.

Mr. Speaker, we have to make sure that Canadian consumers will be protected and will be in a position to buy quality products.

For that purpose, the bill must clearly state that imported drugs have the same therapeutic properties as similar Canadian drugs.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to extend the debate unduly, because I would like to enable other members the opportunity to state their views. But I would really be pleased if the minister would look favourably upon this motion, not only to make sure that Canadians will be protected, but also that the products themselves will be of a good quality. In fact, the bill does not guarantee that imported products will have the same therapeutic properties as similar Canadian products.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, before the question is put to the house, I would like to point out how serious is the matter which the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) has just raised.

In my opinion, such questions should not be taken lightly, and I think the house would act in earnest by giving special consideration to the proposed amendment.

I would feel extremely disappointed if it were disposed of hastily as other previous amendments have been, and if the government, relying on its majority, simply decided not to accept it.

I believe the remarks of the hon. member about the Canadian drug industry and everything that is involved should prompt the house to give serious consideration to the possibility of passing this amendment.

[English]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words on the subject of clinical equivalency in support of this amendment. First of all, the minister has ignored entirely the Hilliard and Boyd committee reports and also the report by the Harley committee. Notwithstanding that, this is a very important point. When the federal department of consumer affairs proposed this legislation there was well documented evidence that this sort of thing could have a serious impact on the practise of medicine. A physician's primary concern is always with the quality of the product he is using and its clinical efficiency, or its clinical equivalency which is the same thing. This is especially true of new drug discoveries.

It seems to me that in this bill the minister has ignored entirely or has strangely discounted therapeutic equivalency. He has ignored the publications of the Food and Drug Directorate scientific staff, as well as the recommendations of the Hilliard and Boyd committees.

Even though a drug may have quality and safety, it may not have clinical equivalency. That point was brought out in the committee. In this regard one drug that was referred to was chloromycetin, but there are many others. Dr. Goddard, of whom mention was made tonight by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), put on the record the fact that there are something like 24 drugs which are quite similar in quality and safety. But the Food and Drug Directorate has informed us it does not propose to make any additional tests over and above a chemical analysis. Many of these 24 drugs are antibiotics. I put some of them on the record this afternoon and I am not going to repeat them, but it does appear to me that the minister has brushed off the importance of this matter.

The minister indicated that lack of therapeutic equivalency among certain types of drugs was grossly exaggerated, but when somebody's life is at stake gross exaggeration can get you into a lot of trouble. Some of these drugs are used in cases where time is of the essence and you have to be sure the drug you are using will maintain proper blood levels and possesses the therapeutic equivalency that you expect of it. Physicians are being encouraged by Bill C-102 to use cheaper drugs, and without this assurance I fail to see where we are making progress. The public will be asking for cheaper drugs and how in the world are physicians to be sure those drugs are safe? That is the crux of my point. Any bulletin that shows merely the results of the chemical analysis of a drug will not show whether that drug is clinically effective and fulfils all necessary requirements. Therefore, I submit that the amendment before the house is a good amendment and ought to be accepted.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us is more important than some may believe. It does not deserve to be passed in a hurry, for a very important reason: we must realize that an imported product is not necessarily one of quality even if it bears the same number or the same name as the similar product made in Canada.

The amendment of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) simply asks for a serious investigation on drugs to determine whether a product made under a patent has the same therapeutic and pharmaceutical properties as the standard product approved in Canada.

In my opinion, we must insist—and that is why I support the amendment—without reservation—before approving the import of a product, that it is carefully analysed to ascertain that in every respect it is the equivalent of the similar Canadian product.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I moved for the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who will, we hope, be given good brand name drugs in order to return Monday in good health, has been defeated. I believe the minister should give careful consideration to the amendment moved by the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) who was a member of the committee and who stated that all amendments moved in the committee had been defeated by most of the members of an intransigent government. I cannot believe that in this house tonight the Creditiste members and the Conservative member who just spoke are the only ones in favour of this amendment.

Here is the wording of the amendment, and I quote:

"and subject to a report from the Food and Drugs Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare that the applicant has complied with all the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act and that the medicine manufactured under such patent has the therapeutic and pharmaceutical equivalence of the standard product accepted in Canada;"

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that such an amendment deserves the full attention of the minister and an expression of his opinion.

The amendment I moved earlier on behalf of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), and which I had requested, is authorized under the law. I would like at least the minister to give us a good reason for refusing an amendment which I find so reasonable.

Therefore I ask members of the opposition to consider this amendment seriously, express their opinion and support the stand taken by the Ralliement créditiste.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief in dealing with this very important subject. Everyone of us has been ill at one time in his life. Everyone wants to be in good health but from time to time, we have to resort to medicine to regain health.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is perfectly logical since the hon. member demands that imported medicine be equal in quality to Canadian products.

This amendment speaks by itself, as it is my opinion, and the reports and briefs which have already been tabled in Parliament will testify to this, the federal government has always been too generous in this field.

The complaints we have received indicate that this sector of industry has been poorly supervised. In fact, when a similar product is introduced under a different name, the regulations do not apply any longer.

The same situation prevails in the field of food. For instance, very often the container will bear an inscription that says the minimum weight of the product must at least be mentioned.

The federal government does not control strictly enough imported drugs or food.

Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière should pass and all the more so since we can read in the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, Proceedings No. 39, dated March 21, 1967, at page 3313, in a brief presented on February 7, 1967 to the Prairie Provinces Commission on cost prices by Mrs. Florence Elgaard, President of the Provincial Association of Alberta, affiliated with the Consumers Association of Canada, the following recommendation made to the Consumer Credit Committee: protect the consumers. This is our role as members of parliament. We should, therefore, begin by protecting the Canadian manufacturers, so that they do not have to meet the competition of other products that are not of the same quality and do not offer the same protection to the consumer.

Speaking of the consumer's rights, in this brief presented on February 7, it says that the consumer is entitled to: First, security when he buys a product; then, that he must be informed on the quality of the products. He has the right to choose the quality of various products.

And here we find the following recommendations: That the consumer has the right to have proper labelling on different drugs concerning toxic substances that these drugs, imported or not contain; that the consumer has the right to demand clearer indications about the quantity of the ingredients contained in the various drugs imported or made in Canada; that the consumer has the right to know the source of these products; that he also has the right to be protected as far as to the future use of the drugs he must buy and the weight and other measures that are put on the various containers.

Later on, on page 3133, in the same submission, are quoted instances of the conditions that the committee could or could not ascertain at various stages of its enquiry and in different provinces concerning some products. The articles in question are mostly food products, and I quote from the said submission:

> We refer also to Nabisco Shredded Wheat. It happens to be a timely and available example of a common practice by industries, and we review it in some detail. This product has been around for a long, long time, and packaged in quantities of 12 and 18 one-ounce biscuits. The price of this package was 43 cents, purchased in 1967. The previous 18 biscuit package was also 43 cents. However, this latest purchase contains 15¾ ounces, while the previous 18 biscuits package held 18 ounces. In the 18-oz. package the product cost 2.38 cents per ounce, in the 15¾ package the product costs 2.73 cents per ounce. At the earlier price rate of 2.38 cents per ounce, 15¾ ounces should cost 38.64 cents or 39 cents.
> What does the customer receive for this 4 cents price differential? There is, on the new package, information that the customer can obtain a handy "Space Saver" for $2.00 and 2 boxtops, mailed to a Toronto address.

Now, all along that submission, it was demonstrated that still the Canadian consumer is not protected for quality, identification, weight and quantity of the product, and that is the reason why the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is perfectly in order considering that we have been elected to protect the Canadian consumer rather than the importers or the Canadian or foreign manufacturers.

We should first protect the Canadian consumer, and next, the Canadian manufacturer. Given that protection we owe to the Canadian people, we must see to it that the drugs imported have the therapeutic and pharmaceutical equivalence of the standard products accepted in Canada.

I would finally ask the minister to pass legislation as was done in England in 1968 as reported by "the Foreign Trade" of April 27, 1968. In fact, Great Britain has voted regulations similar to the ones proposed to-night by the member for Lotbinière and I quote from "the Foreign Trade":

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Misleading claims and descriptions of composition and additives. In this field the main instrument is the Food and Drugs Act 1955. This deals broadly with prohibition of the use of any injurious additives and the sale of unsound food and gives local inspectors powers to prosecute sellers or packers of food "which is not of the nature, substance or quality demanded".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, England has voted on food and drugs regulations quite similar to the ones suggested by the honourable member for Lotbinière in order to protect Canadian consumers and manufacturers and to make sure that the imported products will be of the same quality as the Canadian products.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity to ask a little more justice for Canadians.

Having studied the documentation available on food and drugs, I think that such a matter deserves consideration and that we must stand up for the Canadian consumer.

I think that the increase in the volume of imported food and drugs and the reduction of their quality authorize us to state our views and compel us to assume our responsibilities.

In my opinion, the Canadian citizens are insufficiently protected, but the government seems reluctant to take the necessary steps.

We must admit that the situation is of the utmost importance and that the amendment of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is not only logical but should be adopted because not only would it not do any harm to anyone but it would also protect somewhat the Canadian consumer who has not enough purchasing power to buy the products.

Moreover, the consumer is the victim of the price increases and loss in product quality. The minister concerned should help us get the amendment adopted.

Not one of the amendments proposed until now has been adopted because we are under the government's dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker, those in the house who say they are anxious to help society should support the amendment which would serve the interests of all Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

Is the house ready to accept this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Amendment (Mr. Fortin) negatived.

Mr. Monteith: I move:

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by deleting in Clause 1 the words "invention and for such other factors as may be prescribed." On lines 28 and 29 on page 2 of the bill and substituting therefor:

"invention with due regard for the cost of information to the professions by the patentee; with due regard to the cost of new drug submissions to the Food and Drug directorate by the patentee; with due regard for the expense of drug systems recall and continuing information to the professions and for such other factors as may be determined."

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ritchie: There has long been considerable dispute with respect to royalties awarded for a compulsory licence. It was argued that the royalties awarded by the Commissioner of Patents bore no real relation to the cost of research, promotion and other factors affecting the sale of drugs. I would like to point out that there will be no desire by any drug copier to seek a compulsory licence for a drug unless it has already received wide acceptance and it is profitable for him to do so.

In addition to the matter of research, the cost factor of information to physicians, new drug submissions to the Food and Drug Directorate and drug system recall should all be considered in the matter of royalties. The bill makes provision in the royalty award for research. However, this will be very difficult to arrive at with any degree of fairness because most of this drug research is international, and because a drug company investigates many thousands of compounds. The claim of the industry is that only one in every 7,000 compounds yields a useful drug. As about 90 per cent of the new drugs come from laboratories of the pharmaceutical industry it is very important that research be rewarded in some way and this, as I say, will be very difficult.

On my second point of drug information to physicians, pharmacists and the general public, there is an idea abroad in lay circles, and I am afraid sometimes in the Department of National Health and Welfare, that all drugs are immediately picked up by physicians and immediately gain wide use when their therapeutic value is ascertained. However, for nearly all drugs this is not so. It requires a great deal of promotion, effort and expense for a new drug to be accepted by the physician and the public.

Unless this promotion is to a level that gains the drug a wide acceptance, there will be no requests for a compulsory licence because the copy houses will have no reason or wish to invest any money in promotion on their own. Therefore, in any rewarding royalty, particularly in a country like Canada where we have very little original research, I think that the cost of this promotion should be carefully assessed.

There has been a great deal of discussion about the cost of promotion and advertising of drugs, and there is widespread feeling this cost is too high. Here again I think the minister will agree that it is wise not to generalize, and that each case will have to be taken on its own merits.

Pravda, in an article concerning information on new drugs, has said:

> Meanwhile, the few new drugs on the market are not widely used because either the workers in the medical field and the doctors do not even know of their existence, or have only a very faint knowledge of their possible uses.

So, we can see that even in Russia, where the pharmaceutical industry cannot be accused of being profit minded, they find it necessary to promote drugs. With this in mind, I believe that each individual drug will have to carry a different degree of importance.

In the area of the cost of submission of a new drug to the Food and Drug Directorate, this also should be considered, particularly if a new drug has just been removed from this classification. It seems to me in that case the copier should pay something towards the cost that was necessary for the drug to be inspected by the Food and Drug Directorate, as otherwise the copier will not have this expense.

As is probably well known and recognized, new drugs are carefully "vetted" by the Food and Drug Directorate as to their safety, but the onus to prove that a drug is safe is on the manufacturing company. This involves an enormous amount of effort on the part of the drug company, more of course for some drugs than for others. It takes years of animal and clinical research on the part of a drug manufacturing company to prove that its drug is safe and useful. Indeed, the scientific information on a single drug may fill many books the size of large telephone directories.

Even if a drug has been O.K.'ed by the Food and Drug Directorate, the directorate requires a careful and continuous reporting of its side effects because many drugs that seem to be quite safe are in time found to be not quite so safe. Most of the expense of this falls on the drug companies, and therefore I feel this could well be considered in the royalty set out by the Patent Commission.

Finally, I wish to mention the matter of the drug recall systems that must be set up by a company in order to make certain that if any drug is found deficient it can be immediately recalled with some degree of accuracy. The Company must make sure that even two dozen pills found in a physician's desk in the far corners of our country or in a remote drug store will be returned on short notice. Unfortunately, this is expensive. It is a problem that has existed and which has been a considerable disadvantage to small drug companies having limited resources.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the minister's attention to the Manual of Office Practice Patents published by the Patent Office of Great Britain. Section 3737 gives a suggested course for making up the royalty. I believe that the points outlined would be useful, and would make a royalty on a compulsory licence fairer. The British experience with compulsory licences is that the royalty has been set very much higher than in Canada, and this actually encourages competition between drug companies to a greater extent than setting a royalty at almost a give-away point as seems to be the case in Canada at present. I would commend this to the minister as a directive to the Patent Commissioner in the setting of a royalty for the compulsory licensing of drugs.

Mr. Saltsman: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he suggesting that all expenditures on the cost of information, regardless of how extravagant and unnecessary they may be, be reimbursed?

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, the answer is that I feel each drug has to, shall we say, carry its own weight. If it is felt that the promotion is over expensive, then the Commissioner would cut back the amount allowed. I think we have to take into account and give some weight to this factor in awarding the royalty.

Mr. Saltsman: As a further question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking questions. I wonder if the hon. member for Dauphin is prepared to receive questions after he has completed his contribution to the debate.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, I will answer this question also, if I can.

Mr. Saltsman: I wonder if the hon. member has some suggestion for the establishment of criteria of what constitutes a fair selling price and a fair cost of providing information?

Mr. Ritchie: I have no real percentage formula. As I say again, it will have to depend on the individual case, but I bring this forward as I think promotion is necessary. I think the hon. gentleman would agree with this, and it should be given some weight in the awarding of this royalty.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment? All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost.

Amendment (Mr. Monteith) negatived.

Patent Act—Trade Marks Act

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford) I move:

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act be amended by inserting in Clause 1 (4) after the word "prescribed" on line 29, page 2, the following words:

"that the Commissioner may at any time revoke such a licence, where the terms specified in the application are not complied with."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the amendment is very important. In fact, it is predicated upon the same principle, that is the protection of the consumer.

It reads as follows:

—that the Commissioner may at any time revoke such a licence, where the terms specified in the application are not complied with.

The same problem always arises. We have read numerous briefs presented to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) and there is not yet a code to protect the consumers.

A code should have been adopted under which rules would have been clearly defined so that consumers could be properly protected. At present, many companies delight in putting on the market toxic chemicals that are health hazards.

Many companies are happy to sell "scrap" and I am shocked to see tonight that the government wants those products to remain on the shelves. Perhaps we asked ourselves: Do we have a "scrap" government?

We should like the Canadian consumer, who must pay high prices for his drugs, to be able to get quality products, and so be able to differentiate between quality products and "scrap" products by means of a code or regulations established in his favour.

A few years back, that is in 1967, an important committee has studied all the aspects of the manufacturing and sale of different products. Briefs were submitted by consumers associations from all the provinces. Some manufacturers complained that they had to meet the unfair competition from other unscrupulous companies which would put anything on the market and use packaging system designed to deceive the public. Prices were not correct considering the weight, the measure, the quantity, and the quality indicated on the label.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of order. While undoubtedly the hon.

member's remarks are of great interest, I question their relevancy to the amendment before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I will listen a little more carefully to the hon. member and I will be able to determine if he remains within the ambit of the amendment under consideration.

Mr. Rondeau: I am very grateful, Mr. Speaker, but in my opinion, the minister misunderstood me if he thinks that I am not dealing with the subject. Indeed, if we want the licence of a manufacturer to be subject to cancellation, and that could be done quickly, we should establish a quality code and regulations providing for cancellation if he does not comply with this or that condition.

We have no quality standards. The honourable Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) has not established any which would compel the companies to abide by some regulations rather than others.

Anything and everything is being written on the labels, anything and everything is being sold. It would take too much time and it would be too difficult to quote in this House all recommendations made to the Committee dealing with consumer credit. I would like the minister to tell me what recommendations he or others have accepted to deal with those companies that have made complaints.

As for packaging, prices, labelling of dangerous products, Mr. Speaker, there are dozens of complaints mentioned in this report.

In order to protect the consumers of Canada and even the honourable members who have voted for junk instead of quality, I wish we had some legislation allowing the minister, when the need arises, to revoke the licenses of those who do not follow the regulations.

I shall have other opportunities, during other debates perhaps, to give proof of the abuses not to say the thefts perpetrated by certain companies against the consumer. It is unfortunate that the honourable minister has not made any regulations allowing him to revoke the licenses of those manufacturers and protect us against such abuses.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of order really because it is a few minutes to ten o'clock and I wish to rise before it is ten o'clock. There have been some discussions. I am not quite sure of the nature of those discussions, but we are making very good progress on this bill and I am wondering whether it is the feeling of the house that we should sit until eleven o'clock to deal with these amendments.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think we have had enough of these late nights. If for no reason other than the sake of the staff, I would say no.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the minister would like to speed up the House's business by having this bill passed tonight; personally I would like us to make some progress after the bill has been adopted. Whether we pass it tonight or not, does not make much difference. That is why I moved this amendment. I wish the minister would sleep on it, and on these words, may I draw your attention to the fact that it is now 10 o'clock.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, since it is ten o'clock, may I ask the acting house leader whether it would be the intention of the government to return to this bill tomorrow in the hope that, after he has had a good night's sleep, he might be more amenable toward the amendments, or are we to go on to the item in respect of the hazardous products.

Mr. Basford: We will be proceeding with this bill tomorrow, which I would hope we could complete, and also the bill in respect of hazardous products.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—ALTERNATIVE TO COMPENSATE FOR CANCELLED WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be necessary for me to take my full time tonight. I wish to allow the minister time for a complete answer. I do not see him here, but perhaps his parliamentary secretary is here and ready to reply.

I should like briefly to review the history of my question for the house. First, I asked a question on March 12 and Your Honour at that time ruled my question out of order as being more appropriate for a statement on motions. I therefore spoke on the matter again during the adjournment debate on March 17 and much to my surprise there was no one present on the government side to reply to my question. Neither the Minister nor his parliamentary secretary were present at that time. Accordingly, I rose the next day, Tuesday March 18, on a question of privilege and protested as vigorously as I could about the spurned fate of my question. At this point there was still no notice by the government. All remained calm and serene, so again I found myself unrequited. It has been said that hell has no fury like a lover spurned, so I was furious on Tuesday and remained so on Wednesday the 19th, whereupon I rose during the question period and asked the identical question I had on March 12. I was therefore not surprised, because of the consistency shown by Your Honour toward this type of question, to be ruled out of order again.

Again, I posted the question for debate for last Thursday night. The question then became, at least to me, a "cause célèbre", but before I could "célèbre" my cause I received a call from the Minister's office explaining the Minister was hors de combat and would I please postpone my question in order to allow the Minister to prepare what was termed at the time of the phone call to be a good answer. I really do not know what that means, but I am looking forward to hearing it. This I readily agreed to do and that is the reason I am here tonight. I should like to read my original question, which was asked on March 12:

> Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with the critical unemployment situation, and recent reports to the government by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. Has the government any alternatives to recommend in respect of the unilateral cancellation of winter works projects in order to assist municipalities in the area of water utility pollution control and housing projects?

During the debate which followed on March 17, I cited the following matters: various protests from the municipalities that I represent over the unilateral cancellation of the winter works program; mounting welfare rolles in the municipality in which I live, Coquitlam; severe unemployment in British Columbia of 6.6 per cent, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures of March 13, and the apparent contradiction between the cancellation of the winter works program and the recommendations of the task force on housing for municipal servicing of land. It seemed to me a contradiction that we would cancel the program that would provide the very things which the task force recommended.

I shall not elaborate on these matters, because I have done so on earlier occasions. But I would like the minister to consider a further matter. We know there is high unemployment generally. We are aware of the problem facing university students with regard to summer jobs. We know that university students compete for job opportunities with the regular work force in the summertime, even though there are then expanded job opportunities. The situation will probably be of increasing concern as we proceed through the years.

Therefore, I ask the minister whether he has considered consulting the provinces with a view to providing some kind of assistance with regard to the fee structure and living and travel allowances of university students, so they will not be required to compete with heads of families. This situation should not be allowed to exist, because of the very nature of our economic forces. I believe the first priority of students is to study. As long as this situation persists, we will have this constant conflict.

I think we all agree that because of dissent, and all the rest of it, the image of university students is not at its highest point. I think we are moving into the situation where we shall have to provide free tuition and other amenities for university students so they will not need to compete with the regular work force, especially during times of high unemployment. I ask the government to outline with all possible speed, either this evening or later in a statement on motions, specifically what program it has in mind to assist municipalities with capital works in order to overcome the current crisis in Canadian employment.

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to offer an apology to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) for the fact that he did not receive an immediate reply the first time he raised his question on the adjournment debate of March 17. The reason he did not receive a reply at that time was that the question was referred to the wrong department, and it was not noticed until afterwards that his question was addressed to this department. I think the hon. member will agree that after someone from the department spoke to him it was decided that we should give an answer, but then he had to go to his riding. Only since that time have we had an opportunity to consider this matter. The hon. member may consider himself very lucky in that he has raised this subject four times. That is quite a record.

I hope to make amends by convincing the hon. member and the house of the wisdom of the government's decision not to renew the municipal winter works program in 1968-69. The program was becoming less and less effective and inevitably inefficient, and even abuses, were cropping up. The many examples of abuse quoted by both provincial and federal auditors are well known to the public. During the last few years, attempts were made to salvage the program as an effective economic tool. The last attempt was made in the fall of 1967 at the federal-provincial meeting of the ministers concerned. The provinces were invited to suggest viable alternatives but none came forward.

It also became quite evident that municipalities had fewer useful projects to propose for federal assistance under the program. If the hon. member has any doubts about this trend, I would remind him that last winter, 1967-68, only 6,532 workers were hired for winter works in the hon. member's own province of British Columbia. This was almost exactly half the 12,944 workers so employed in 1963-64.

The hon. member referred to his home municipality, the district of Coquitlam. Our records indicate that in 1964-65, approved winter works projects resulted in 590 additional jobs. Last winter, that is in 1967-68, the comparable figure was 170 jobs. For the city of Port Coquitlam, the corresponding figures were 189 in 1964-65, and 23 in 1967-68. It is quite clear, therefore, that the municipal winter works incentive program was no longer as effective as it might be.

When the municipal winter works program was introduced in 1958, there was no other national program of any significance designed to cope with seasonal unemployment. In that year, the federal government subsidized the training of only 3,500 unemployed persons, with a total expenditure of half a million dollars. Since that time, the retraining of adult members of the labour force has become a major economic tool of the federal government. In the current fiscal year, the federal government will finance the training and retraining of some 300,000 adult workers, the great majority of them during the winter months, with a cost to the federal treasury of $200 million.

In the winter or 1967-68 the federal government spent some $25 million on the municipal winter works program. This amount is not forthcoming to the provinces and municipalities during the current winter. But in its place, the federal government is spending $50 million more on training of adult workers, a substantial proportion of them being unemployed in the winter months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but the time allotted to him has expired.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—EFFECT OF INCREASED RATES ON PRINTING INDUSTRY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question was based on the submission by the Graphic Arts Industries Association, an organization representing 525 producing companies. This is the most serious analysis of some of the damaging fallout from the Postmaster General's (Mr. Keirans) actions and decisions. It is also a warning, and a cry for help. It sets out a painful litany of the economic and social damage consequent upon the stiff hikes in postal rates and the processes of reclassification. This is a statement from people in the industry, people who should know.

For a long time, the minister told us how happy the letter carriers were with the new sorting procedures. Even when their spokesmen were proclaiming publicly that they were not satisfied, we were told that the measures really were popular. It appears now that the minister knows that not all is rosy in the garden. We have been told for a long time how slight the effects on publications will be. The minister told us this. But those in the publishing business have an entirely different story. Again I say, perhaps they might know. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is interested in the encouragement of industrial growth and the preservation of existing industry. What will happen to all sorts of allied industries, from pulp to machine parts, if there is a decline in the important printing industry? There is little use in the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) setting up new job hunting offices if, through the actions of the Postmaster General many skilled workers are thrown out of employment. The minister, of course, has responsibility for his department. He seeks to make it efficient, and so he should, but he cannot disassociate himself from his collegiate responsibility as a member of a government which should have the economic well being of all Canadians on its mind.

There seems to be a growing development of administrative separatism in this government. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) rightly suggests that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials should be removed. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has different ideas. The printing trade goes to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for redress from a situation resultant from actions of the minister's colleague, the Postmaster General. It is my hope that both ministers will heed this call for help and that we will not have to produce a lengthy casualty list of extinct publications at some future date to convince the minister that he did not in fact give sufficient thought to the consequences of his drive to make the Post Office patrons put that department in the black. He should have listened to these people. Printers should have been given a chance to air their views and present their information before a house committee.

Things are so serious that the spokesmen for the industry should still be called before a committee before it is too late. The Post Office has been running into trouble for months. Large and important sectors of society are fearful of the results of the new rate. The communication of ideas from Canadians to Canadians is in real jeopardy. The threat from United States competition, always great, has vastly increased. The whole problem should be thoroughly reviewed before it is too late. It is not enough for the minister to say he knows better. The dismal facts are given in this brief. Publications will die. Unemployment has already been caused across the country, and more will follow. Some trade unions have already indicated their intention to mail from the United States, to Canadian addresses meaning that the Canadian Post Office would have to deliver their publications without a cent of postage revenue. We have the story now from various places in the country and the record is not a very happy one. One medium-sized company reports its postage costs up by 257 per cent. Three magazines have been eliminated and three others cut down; there have been staff reductions.

The United Church Publishing House reports postage costs up from $40,000 to $170,000, a loss of advertising revenue, and lay-offs affecting staff. We find that in British Columbia a small printer reports postage costs up from $5,613 to $18,547. Two publications have been killed and employees laid off. The War Amputations Association of Canada, a most wonderful organization well known for its key tag service, reports an estimated increase of $90,000. The future of 42 war amputees is jeopardized.

So, it goes on down the line. I read in the Globe and Mail of March 26 that a magazine established in 1935 and having a circulation of 4,600 is folding up because of the massive increase in the postal rate. Another article carried the heading: "Canadian Journals forced into U.S.?" This is a serious situation, and in this context the document to which I have referred is a most valuable one. It is not a happy document but it is one to which heed should be paid very soon before we get into real trouble.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I always enjoy the Cassandra-like remarks of the hon. gentleman. I think the members of the Graphic Arts Industries Association, the printers, the artists, the designers who are all part of that organization, charge all their costs to their clients. They charge even more than their costs; they add an amount for a profit. But apparently they are not ready to admit that the letter carriers, the sorters, all those 48,000 people who work in the Post Office, should also be paid for their work and should be paid in accordance with the cost of carrying out their duties, and not be a burden upon the general taxpayer.

All these people claim they have a particular right to dig into the pockets of the Canadian taxpayer. They are unwilling to concede that the costs of the Post Office can be legitimately charged for and legitimately priced. They prefer that these subsidies should be hidden, that the taxpayer should pay. And the taxpayer himself is the vulnerable person here. He has no organization as have the members of the Graphic Arts Industries Association or the publishing industry, all of whom I have been prepared to see, and have seen. I have listened to them and talked to them. I have read the report, although, as the hon. gentleman suggested, it was sent not to me but directly to my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). I recall that litany and say it is greatly exaggerated but the hon. gentleman this evening has exaggerated it even more.

I might remind the hon. member that the direct mail printing industry, having repeated all these complaints last October and November, now admit they foresee a 10 per cent increase in direct mail usage next year, not a decline. Perhaps people in the direct mail industry will go out of business, perhaps there will be a reorganization, I do not know; but as I say, the industry foresees a 10 per cent increase in printed material sent by direct mail despite increased costs.

The hon. member is really asking me to accept an increase in the deficit of the post office of $20 million, $30 million or $40 million. When he asks me to do that, I suggest he should also make clear his position on whether we should reduce by a similar amount equalization payments to the provinces, subsidies to farmers, aid to Prince Edward Island, or aid to education, to health or to welfare. Because the same $20 million will not cover all these fields.

FISHERIES—SEALS—DISPOSAL OF NORWEGIAN SHIP UNDER SEIZURE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, when I set this question down for an adjournment conversation I did not realize that the fisheries and forestry committee were scheduled to meet this evening, otherwise I might have been able to deal with the matter there. However, the other day, in inquiring about the seizure or arrest of a Norwegian sealer, I asked in a supplemental way whether the government would be a bit more severe in prosecuting this case than it was in the case of the Japanese fishing vessel arrested off the west coast a short while ago.

In the case of this Japanese fishing vessel, I am given to understand that there were two ways of proceeding against the owners. One was by way of indictment, which carried with it a maximum fine on conviction of $25,000. The other way was by summary conviction, which carried with it on conviction a maximum fine of $5,000 plus the possible seizure of the vessel, its gear and the like. I am told the proceedings were by way of summary conviction, and that the prosecutor on behalf of the Crown indicated to the court it was sufficient simply to ask for a $1,000 fine, the boat having been found inside the 12-mile fishing zone some two and a half miles.

[Mr. Kierans.]

The magistrate did not agree with that and levied a fine of $2,500, but even so I think this amounted to nothing more than the charging of what might be called a licence fee to a foreign fishing vessel to poach in our waters. Everybody on the west coast has heard of many cases of fisheries officers proceeding against native Indian people fishing for food by way of taking possession of and actually cutting up and burning their nets, by seizing their boats and by restricting them to fishing at certain periods of time. In other words, the penalty imposed upon our own Canadian people is far greater in severity when compared with that imposed upon this massive Japanese fishing company.

I am sure many west coast fishermen will have communicated to the department the fact that certain foreign fishing vessels on the west coast, both from Japan and the Soviet Union, do follow the practice of moving in to within a mile or a mile and a half of our shores at night, without running lights or any lights whatsoever, dropping their gear and dragging it out beyond the 12-mile limit. In other words, they are deliberately and consciously fishing inside our fishing zone, indeed, inside our territorial seas. They are doing so contrary to standard safety practices at sea by running at night without any lights visible, and so on. These boats have been seen engaging in this sort of practice by trawlers on the west coast. I submit that we should prosecute the Japanese fishing vessel and the Norwegian sealer that was apprehended to the fullest extent of the law, to indicate to other nations and captains of foreign fishing vessels in our waters that we intend to assert our economic rights. The penalty ought to be severe enough to deter others from indulging in similar practices.

• (10:20 p.m.)

In this regard our fisheries protection vessels, either because the ships are too small or because of the temerity of their captains, are not doing an adequate job. Perhaps we ought to use the navy to enforce our rights; the navy seems to be doing little that is useful, and it might be wise to use naval ships to protect our fisheries. We must enforce our fisheries regulations with the greatest severity in an effort, hopefully, to deter others have no right to be there from fishing in our waters.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) will recognize that we are now taking a much tougher line in enforcing fishing regulations, not only within Canada but also with regard to our exclusive fishing zones and the operations of foreign fishing vessels within those zones. As the hon. member knows, in the case of the Japanese fishing vessel he mentioned, this is the first time that vessel has been encountered by one of our fisheries protection vessels. In fact, this is the first instance of a Japanese fishing vessel ever having been apprehended by one of our fisheries protection vessels. This is, therefore, a first case. It is not a case where vessels, even Japanese fishing vessels, have been warned on previous occasions by our fisheries protection service. He can rest assured that if we run into a series of incidents involving warnings or apprehensions, the penalty will escalate in ratio with the provocation.

I have heard of instances, as undoubtedly the hon. member has—fortunately they are not all that numerous—where foreign fishing vessels have been within our territorial waters and it has not been possible for our fisheries protection service to go out to the vessel in question and apprehend it. Although the number of such incidents has been exaggerated, undoubtedly they have occurred. Undoubtedly, our fishermen have had reasons to be provoked.

Our fisheries protection service now is better equipped than it ever was before. The Canadian fisheries vessel Tanu, which intercepted the Japanese ship, was launched only last September and is one of the first fishery vessels on the west coast capable of going out any distance in any kind of weather. We have lacked such capability in the past.

As the hon. member knows, the air force is assisting with over-flight surveillance. We have also been assisted by the coast-guard and the navy. In fact, it was a coast guard icebreaker that picked up the Norwegian vessel. Our fisheries ship could not go out to her because of ice conditions.

We are taking a tougher line and to enforce the law we need more equipment. I contest the hon. member's statement that our captains or officers of our fishery ships lack the orders or the courage to pick up foreign vessels inside our fishing limits. I think our men are dying to show their mettle and to show their determination, as recently demonstrated, to protect our fishing zones more adequately than was possible in the past.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

WHEAT—FINAL PAYMENT FOR CROP YEAR ENDING JULY 31, 1968

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding the final payment on wheat for the crop year ending July 31, 1968.

Producers delivered 464,608,153 bushels of wheat to the Canadian Wheat Board in the 1967-68 crop year, including 17,974,914 bushels of Durum wheat. The pool account for wheat was closed on February 28.

The amount of the final payment to be distributed to producers is $60,087,183, including $4,426,853 to be distributed to producers who delivered Durum wheat. This is not a payment by the government of Canada but represents the net returns of the Canadian Wheat Board in the marketing of western Canadian wheat for the 1967-68 crop year. It is additional to the initial payments for wheat which were increased at the beginning of the 1967-68 crop year, in the case of No. 1 Manitoba Northern, for example, by 20 cents per bushel from $1.50 to $1.70.

• (11:10 a.m.)

The average final payment for wheat other than Durum is 12.462 cents per bushel. The average final payment for Durum wheat is 24.628 cents per bushel. The Canadian Wheat Board will begin mailing the final payment cheques on March 28, today.

I wish to inform the house of the total prices realized by producers, prior to the deduction of the 1 per cent Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy, on their deliveries of some of the more important grades of wheat. Farmers will receive a total per bushel, basis in store at the Lakehead or Vancouver, of $1.81317 for No. 1 Northern; $1.78548 for No. 2 Northern, $1.76283 for No. 3 Northern, $1.71155 for No. 4 Northern and $1.68181 for No. 5 Wheat. The prices realized on the Durum grades total $1.92261 for No. 1 C.W. Amber Durum; $1.90211 for No. 2 and $1.87096 for No. 3.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, as the minister announced, the government will make to farmers a final payment for their wheat. In effect, the government will be returning to our farmers their own money. I am sure that the minister's statement will be read with shock and dismay by farmers in western Canada. Our grain handling system was in a complete mess during this past year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: Now the government is to make a final payment which will represent a reduction to the farmers of 17 cents per bushel for wheat sales ending in July, 1968. We must compare these payments with previous payments which were at least 20 cents higher than the present payments are to be. In previous years final payments have been 37 to 38 cents and 48 to 49 cents greater per bushel.

The reduction of 17 cents a bushel has been brought about, despite the government's announcement previously of the interim selling price guarantee. It has been estimated that it would cost $15 million to maintain even the interim selling price guarantee that was suggested. The minister shakes his head. We have seen no final figures. It seems that the $15 million was in the estimates and is included in the over-all sum to be paid to farmers. Despite that, they will suffer a loss of 17 cents a bushel.

I ask the minister, have these reductions been brought about because of high demurrage charges on ships at Vancouver? We asked the government to pay these demurrage charges, because bad weather and other emergency situations prevented the movement of wheat to that port. The government refused that. Western farmers are now afraid that the government will not be able to maintain initial payments at $1.70 a bushel. If there is to be a drop of 17 cents a bushel this year, even with the internal subsidy that has been applied, the farmers wonder whether the price may not drop, say, another 10 cents next year, because of no guarantee this year. They wonder what the initial payment for the coming year will be with respect to wheat. If the mess of the past year in wheat handling is to continue into the coming year, there will be no guarantee as to what the initial asking price for wheat may be. We, on this side of the house, urge the government immediately to put back into force its interim selling price guarantee, because that guarantee is needed if the confidence of western farmers is to be maintained.

The lowering of the final price will work great hardships on our farmers who already have difficulty in meeting their financial obligations because of poor wheat sales, and low prices for the wheat that has been sold.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for sending us notice of his statement. I think the real significance of the statement is that it shows that the drop in gross income with respect to this one product of farmers for the last crop year was approximately 9 per cent. This is what the task force that has been meeting in the Chateau Laurier for the past three or four days is all about. This morning we have the actual figures before us. We have a situation in this economy where inflation is continuing, wage rates and profits are going up and the farmer's gross income, and inevitably his net income, is going down.

This government cannot fail to discharge its responsibility to the grain farmers and the farm sector of this country. It was this government which negotiated the GATT agreement under the Kennedy round. They also negotiated the International Grains Arrangement. When other signatories undercut the price, we held an umbrella over the price arrangements for many months in the last crop year.

A significant factor not mentioned in this statement is the drop in the volume of sales which has occurred as a result of negotiations with respect to this agreement. Surely the government can do no less than discharge its responsibility by immediately setting a floor price to the Canadian producer at the minimum.

The government should seriously consider the representations of farm organizations, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union which made representations to it suggesting a floor price minimum of $2.12 and stating the need of domestic prices for wheat. If we are to avoid bankruptcy and real financial pressure in our farm economy, immediate steps must be taken in this field. This government cannot avoid taking the full responsibility which is theirs in the international trade policies of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I must follow in the footsteps of the other members and congratulate the minister on the announcement he has just made concerning western producers.

This announcement, which we expected as a matter of fact, is merely a repetition of his statement to the effect that he would soon be settling the question of final payments.

He is merely telling the western farmers that the Canadian Wheat Board will start mailing the cheques on March 28.

He said himself, a short while ago, that such a statement does not call for congratulations. But I suggest that it does to a certain extent, since a small payment is better than none. I can see that the western farmers are a little disappointed about the 9 per cent reduction which affects their product.

In his last statement in the house, the minister was saying that owing to the invasion of the market by the American government, farmers in the West would have to accept a reduction in the price of wheat. It already underwent a reduction last year.

I realize that the more the price of the production goes down, the more that of consumption increases. When the price paid to the producer goes down by 2 or 3 per cent, the business-man as he sends the product to the consumer must very often increase its price by 10 or 12 per cent.

There lies the paradox which is always obvious, and we wonder whether this year the producer in the West will once more be the loser.

• (11:20 a.m.)

But the winner is still the businessman. In fact, in the province of Quebec, we shall pay even more than last year for the wheat that is already selling at a good price, and certainly it is not the producer who will get a profit but indeed finance.

Therefore, I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), to make the overdue inquiry into the trade of agricultural products.

The cause of the evil does not lie in production, or the weather, but indeed in high finance, that may, at its convenience, "swindle" the consumer, in selling at exaggerated prices, compared with those which are paid to the producer.

I know that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is full of good will, is at last going, as we have been asking him for six years, to make a probe into high finance. I believe that if he corrects the evil today, he will be in a position next year to announce a rise in the prices paid to the producer.

CRIMINAL CODE—CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENT EXPUNGING CRIMINAL RECORDS OF MINOR OFFENDERS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-186, to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act (Expunging of Criminal Records).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to expunge the criminal records of persons who have committed a minor offence three years after the serving of a sentence or the payment of the fine, and to do likewise after a period of five years for a more serious offence. The expungement will not be automatic. The power to expunge a criminal record would be vested in a Board of Corrections Review which would determine whether there has been reformation and rehabilitation of the applicant in determining the application for expungement.

A short time ago I introduced a bill for the abolition of corporal punishment. This bill for the expungement of criminal records is another step in fully restoring the social status of reformed offenders, and to move more closely to the development of a civilized society.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the hon. member that his explanation should be brief at this time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN BUSINESS RECORDS PROTECTION ACT

REMOVAL OF RECORDS PURSUANT TO FOREIGN COURT ORDER

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-187, respecting the protection of records of Canadian business concerns.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is set forth in the brief explanatory note, from which I shall quote:

> One of the recommendations of the Watkins Report was that the Parliament of Canada enact legislation to prohibit removal of commercial records and data from business concerns within federal jurisdiction by reason of a foreign court order.

This bill with its four clauses would provide such legislation and to that extent enable firms in Canada to be free from foreign court orders.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—ALLEGED LEAK PRECEDING ANNOUNCEMENT CONCERNING MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct this question to the Minister of Transport, because even though I do not agree with the procedure, it is his day to be in the house, according to the roster. In view of the fact that he is not here and it is such a serious question I would direct it to the Prime Minister.

Did the Minister of Transport pre-tape the announcement concerning the site of the new Montreal International Airport at a certain Ottawa TV studio or anywhere else Saturday, March 22 or any other date prior to his announcement of the same in the house yesterday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sorry I do not know the answer to that question, Mr. Speaker. The minister will be glad to answer it when he is here.

Mr. Woolliams: He was supposed to be here today.

An hon. Member: Many of your people are not here today.

Mr. Woolliams: In a few years we will be the government; don't worry. May I put this question to the Prime Minister. Did the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development pre-tape the announcement concerning the site of the new Montreal International Airport at a certain Ottawa TV studio or anywhere else on Sunday March 23 or any other date prior to the announcement yesterday in the house.

[Mr. Mather.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that minister is not supposed to be here today; but where is the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I respectfully suggest to hon. members that we never achieve very much by referring to our respective attendances and absences.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very serious question of privilege. My question of privilege arises at this moment as a result of questions I put to the Prime Minister and as a result of questions I was prepared to ask ministers, one of whom even according to the Prime Minister was supposed to be here. The answer I received with reference to those questions is nothing. My question of privilege is based on the information I did not get from the ministers or from the Prime Minister. I might mention that a news release this morning over CKGM Montreal and CKEY Toronto said in brief that the Ottawa bureau has learned that information concerning the exact location of the new Montreal International Airport near or at St. Jérôme was leaked by cabinet sources five days before the announcement was made to the Commons.

The Minister of Transport stated in the house yesterday that this was a carefully guarded secret. Yet, says the news release, a studio and four technicians knew of the information and were not sworn to any secrecy, although they were closely guarded by two R.C.M.P. officers. This is a most serious matter so far as government and cabinet secrets are concerned and I suggest, if this news release is true, this is as serious a matter as a budget leak and, if the facts are correct, would call for the resignations of those ministers involved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: They laugh, Mr. Speaker, but I will read some precedents. They may laugh today but they will cry tomorrow.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: They do not know how to cry.

Mr. Woolliams: It is my intention at the end of my comments on this important and serious question of privilege to move a motion. The question of privilege is based on two propositions: First, that if in fact secret cabinet information was placed on a video tape and recorded by radio personnel prior to the announcement it could lead to land speculation and a possible enrichment of people who are "in the know", at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer. This affects the responsibility and obligations of every member of parliament and is at the very root of the oath of office taken by Privy Councillors. Therefore it calls for close investigation.

This first fact establishes a reasonable prima facie case for examination and review. It arises because this matter was dealt with in the house yesterday and questions were put to the Prime Minister today.

Second, there has been a breach of the privileges of this house in that cabinet secrets have been divulged in a video production centre contrary to the rules governing parliament. I will say at this point that I have information that this news was video taped and that the tapes were carried by a Montreal commercial enterprise. So there was no chance of keeping this information secret, if these people wanted to use that information. This method of disseminating news is a breach of the privileges of the house and of every hon. member here, and indeed is contrary to all the fundamental principles of a democratic Cabinet government.

Therefore parliament, which is the highest court of the land, is entitled to know by examination and review whether this method of disseminating the news was used by any members of the government. One must be fair in these matters, and that is why I call for an examination and review. Proof of the leak of information can only be determined by an inquiry at which ministers and witnesses can be examined and tapes and documents can be checked. I hope they will not be destroyed, as they were on one other occasion. Documents can be checked, and if it is determined immediately that there is no foundation to the allegation that this method of disseminating the news has been used, we will all be happy that truth has prevailed. However, if on the other hand such an inquiry should disclose other facts, then proper steps will have to be taken by the government and by those involved.

My question of privilege is that if this information has been put on video tapes which were carried across the nation by a commercial enterprise, and if the people who made those tapes were not put under an oath of secrecy, then this is what I would call a cabinet leak and it is equal to a budget leak. I need not bring to Your Honour's attention the two famous cases in the history of political science. One was of the Hon. Mr. Thomas, Colonial Secretary in Great Britain, who made a statement to another member of parliament, Mr. Butt, with reference to the price of beer being affected by the budget. He resigned because of this indiscretion. That was in 1936. Then we also have the famous Dalton case in which the Hon. Sir Hugh Dalton, on entering the chamber with a budget speech, spoke to John Carvel, correspondent of a newspaper called the "Star". Apparently the news release went out prior to the completion of the budgetary speech by Sir Hugh Dalton. He resigned because of his indiscretion.

We tried to solicit information from the cabinet today and particularly from a minister who, according to the roster, should be here today. This is the news that went across the land this morning:

> CKCM's and CKEY's Ottawa bureau has learned that information concerning the exact location of Montreal's new international airport was leaked by cabinet sources five days before the announcement was made in the House of Commons.
> Montreal's new international airport is to be located 26 miles north of the city near St. Jérôme. Transport Minister Paul Hellyer made that announcement yesterday following months of intense secrecy.
>
> What kind of secrecy?
> The project is worth hundreds of millions of dollars. Newsradio has learned that both Mr. Hellyer and Regional Expansion Minister, Mr. Marchand, last Saturday and Sunday went to an Ottawa TV studio to pre-tape the announcement. The audio and video tapes were to be released to radio and TV stations as the announcement was being made in the Commons. It has further been learned that the ministers did not take the precaution of swearing the studio technicians to secrecy even though they did have two R.C.M.P. officers guarding the studio. Nor were the technicians sworn not to make attempts to use the valuable information for personal gain. Oddly enough, however, most other members of the studio staff were given the impression oaths of secrecy had been signed.

Even if the oaths of secrecy had been taken, which was not the case according to my information, this would not remedy the situation and the question of privilege would still exist.

So I say that we have a prima facie case. In view of the fact that this leak is as serious as a budget leak, I say that the time has now come for the Prime Minister and his government to measure up to their responsibility and to take parliament into their confidence. This is one breach of privilege. Another breach of privilege is against every member of the House of Commons, that is the leak. We speak for the people and we speak for the Canadian taxpayers. How many more leaks, how much land speculation and what kind of nonsense will we allow to go on if this continues?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that I made out a prima facie case if there ever was a prima facie case set out in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I hear these barks in the distance, but you will be howling soon.

I make the following motion:

That the question of information of the announcement of the new Montreal international airport at or near St. Jérôme, Quebec, having been given prior to the said announcement by the government in the House of Commons and including all the circumstances under which the allegation is made, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the house, so that a full inquiry and investigation may be made, and that the said committee be empowered to examine all persons and papers material to the matter in question.

Mr. Speaker: The decision which the Chair has to make before putting the motion proposed by the hon. member is to determine whether there is a prima facie case. However, before doing so it would be normal for the house to hear the ministers to whom the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) referred. It is obviously impossible for the Chair to make this kind of decision without hearing the views and comments of the ministers to whom the hon. member referred in his statement.

I doubt very much whether there is any point in pursuing the matter further at this time. I realize that the Prime Minister might want to take part in the discussion, but if we have a debate at this time I would still be unable to make a decision now. So if hon. members agree with my suggestion, we should hold the matter in abeyance because I cannot be placed in the position of ruling on the question of a prima facie aspect of the allegation now.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I can well appreciate the position in which Your Honour finds yourself, in that you cannot give a decision on the prima facie aspect of the question of privilege in the absence of the ministers. May I respectfully suggest that Your Honour consider requesting that those ministers come into the chamber, assuming that they are in town, so that the matter can be dealt with now instead of awaiting their convenience.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Trudeau: I should like to speak on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I feel I may be able to say a few things which might assist you in deciding whether or not there is a prima facie case. Some of the facts are relevant to this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Prime Minister should address himself to the point of order raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself to this point of order. I should like to say first that it is impossible for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) to be here because he is in Toronto now. The other minister could be here, but I can tell the house the facts which he would state. This may help you in the decision concerning the airport which was announced yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister that although he feels he should make a statement which might help to clarify the situation I feel very strongly that the matter should be held in abeyance until statements can be made which might assist the Chair in making a final decision on the prima facie aspect of the proposed motion.

• (11:40 a.m.)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for York South, could this matter be suspended until after the noon recess, so that every effort could be made to not only bring the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development back here, but also the Minister of Transport?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: This is the weekend. This matter is very important, and I assume it is also important to the ministers concerned. Surely its importance justifies every effort being made to bring them back. It may well be that by two o'clock Your Honour may have heard from the Prime Minister that the ministers will be back here this afternoon in order that Your Honour may deal with the preliminary matter of a prima facie case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, concerning the point of order raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), we contend that if we wait too long before reaching a decision in that respect, it will allow some ministers who would foresee that controversial matters could be raised to be absent from the house, thus preventing hon. members from discussing the question.

But in the opinion of the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, the proposal of the hon. member for York South to have the minister back in the house as soon as possible is an excellent one, and we support it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are obviously going to get into a debate over the matter. I suggest that it would be very unfair and unwise to proceed in this way. It is certainly not within the responsibility of the Chair to call for the attendance of individual members in the circumstances. If hon. members agree between themselves, and if there is agreement among the house leaders, that we resume discussion of the proposed motion of the hon. member for Calgary North, of course the Speaker is the servant of the house and I will be here at that time, every moment of the day, to hear the matter if it is taken up later in the day.

Mr. Horner: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary North asked two pertinent questions. He asked whether this matter was pre-taped on television; whether a video tape was made.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: If the ministers were brought in—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have made my ruling. The hon. member is obviously trying to have a debate. I have just said there cannot be a debate at this time. The hon. member says that questions have been asked. The hon. member may wish to have the right to ask questions. If the hon. member, outside of this question of privilege, wants to ask supplementary questions of the Prime Minister, that of course is a different matter. But in so far as the proposed motion and question of privilege is concerned, the matter has been allowed to stand.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the pertinent fact is that we do not know whether there was a cabinet leak. But if the Prime Minister would bring his ministers here—

An hon. Member: Ask him.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Calgary North did ask the Prime Minister. He said he did not know. If the Prime Minister would bring his ministers into the house later this day, the whole question may be cleared up immediately. Therefore I think it is very important that we have these ministers before us today.

Mr. Trudeau: Ask me.

Mr. Horner: We did.

Mr. Baldwin: None of you know anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

STUDENT UNREST

MCGILL UNIVERSITY—ASSISTANCE IN THE EVENT OF DISTURBANCE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I gather that you have ruled that the subject we have been dealing with has ended. May I now direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the denial reportedly made by the Prime Minister of Quebec that any authority of that government had requested assistance from any federal authority in connection with the widely publicized march on McGill University today, would the Solicitor General inform the house what the situation is with respect to this matter, particularly as it concerns the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member really to be asking me whether a request for assistance was made by the authorities in Quebec, the Attorney General or the Prime Minister. No such request has been made.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for clarification. I was unfortunately out of the house yesterday, in another city. However, I understand that the Minister of Justice said that such a request had been made. Is the Solicitor General saying it was not made to his department, or was not made to any authority in the federal government?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the question and answer given in the House of Commons yesterday appear in Hansard. I do not think they should be paraphrased in the way it has been done by the hon. member. I do not interpret the answer of the Minister of Justice as saying there was a request.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of what the Solicitor General has said this morning in reply to my question, may I ask him this: When the Minister of Justice yesterday said that the Deputy Attorney General of Canada received a telephone call from the Deputy Attorney General of Quebec asking him for the potential aid of the R.C.M.P. and the Canadian Armed Forces in connection with the event to which I have referred, was the Minister of Justice in error; was that not the case?

Mr. McIlraith: The Minister of Justice was not in error. There was—

Mr. Lewis: You said there was no request.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to question me, I am perfectly prepared to seek to answer with great accuracy to the best of my ability. But I prefer not to be interrupted when giving an answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like you to silence those Grits for me, George; especially that one with the long sideburns. You are doing a good job.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not wish to pass judgment on the quality of the answers of any colleague of mine in the House of Commons. I have been here too long for that.

Mr. Baldwin: So have we.

Mr. McIlraith: But the minister's answer is not contrary to the fact. There was a telephone call between officials, the usual type of thing that passes between officials—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Every day.

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. McIlraith: —in the nature of asking for certain information in the event that it might be necessary to make such a request of the R.C.M.P. That was the nature of the call.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister inform the house whether he is aware of any request, by any official or authority in Quebec, of any official or authority in Ottawa for the assistance of troops in connection with the matter; and would he assure the house that such assistance, in a case of this sort, would not be contemplated by him or his department?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, there has been no request to have services available from the armed forces. The second part of the question of the hon. member I would qualify as hypothetical.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Is the federal government satisfied, as far as they are concerned, that appropriate measures have been taken to defend the integrity and freedom of Canada's leading institution of higher learning?

Mr. Benson: After Queen's!

Mr. McIlraith: There is very close working co-operation between the police forces of the various provinces and federal peace forces. That applies in this case as it does with other provinces.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fanatical agitation in Quebec, does the Prime Minister expect to have support for his languages bill in the rest of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Since there is disagreement with the Quebec government, can he tell us whether the provincial authorities approved the choice of the site for the proposed international airport as announced yesterday by the Minister of Transport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the decision has been reached after lengthy consultations between federal, provincial and municipal authorities. There has even been a report—the Higgins report—in which the three levels of government have participated and which proposes the site which we have actually chosen. Of course the choice was ours because the matter was under our jurisdiction, but the consultations lasted several months, and I think that the facts are such that the site which has been selected is the best in all respects.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question

Was the government of Quebec opposed to the decision of the federal government or did it accept the report as the federal government did?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak in the name of the provincial government nor can I say how far removed its decision was from ours. I know that within the provincial government, as well as within the federal government, opinions were much divided on the choice of the best site. We have chosen the best one, not only for Canada, but also for the province and the metropolitan area. In my opinion this is an excellent choice and everybody will agree.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister.

Considering the announcement by the Minister of Transport of the choice of a site for the second international airport of Montreal, were representations made to him by citizens or groups of citizens of the north of Montreal with respect of the establishment of an eleventh Canadian province since provincial authorities seem to believe that the territory north of Montreal does not belong to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Considering the importance of an adequate road system for the new airport, would the Prime Minister tell us if agreements have been concluded to that effect with the Quebec government and, if so, could he indicate what is their nature?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the decision was only taken yesterday at the cabinet meeting and was announced afterwards, it would have been impossible to conclude specific agreements with the provincial authorities for the works required by the establishment of the airport. We have obviously agreed that wherever the airport were located, we would take our decisions in agreement with the provincial authorities. Evidently, if the province does not want to have an airport in the Montreal area, every aspect of international transport could be dealt with in Toronto.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us who is right in the present dispute, since the officials of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development told us that the airlines were asking a transfer—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel that this is an argumentative question and I do not think that the question as put is in order.

FINANCE

REPORT OF THE AUDITOR GENERAL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Acting President of the Treasury Board. In the light of the somewhat startling contents of the report of the Auditor General for 1968 and in the face of the admission that at least 50 recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee dealing with previous reports have been pigeon-holed or ignored, will the President of the Treasury Board undertake to make a statement before the Easter recess dealing specifically with these recommendations and assuring the house that these illustrations of waste, incompetence and slovenly spending habits will be corrected?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): We shall, of course, take the hon. member's question under consideration. We have done our best to avoid the slovenly habits which existed under the previous government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The previous government was headed by Mr. Lester Pearson.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: The government from 1957 to 1962.

Mr. Fairweather: You did not say that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

APPOINTMENT OF OMBUDSMAN IN QUEBEC

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): This is a question on a different subject. Bearing in mind the announcement today of the appointment of an ombudsman in the Province of Quebec—the third province to establish such an office—may I ask the Prime Minister whether any consideration is being given by the federal government to establishing such a post?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know that consideration has been given to this matter in the Department of Justice, but I do not know whether it is under active consideration at the present time or not. However I will consult with the Minister of Justice and try to reply later.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO WESTERN FARMERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. In view of his announcement today, which means that western farmers will get about $80 million less than last year for the same amount of wheat, and the serious situation in the western provinces by reason particularly of climatic conditions and failure to sell wheat, is the government now giving consideration to something in the nature of assistance to western farmers to meet a situation created in large measure by the schemozzle by the government?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have already answered this question on a number of occasions. I repeat that at the moment we are concentrating on trying to return as fast as possible to the I.G.A. price schedule and to make as many sales of wheat as possible. This is why we have allowed the wheat board to become fully competitive, breaking the I.G.A. pricing schedule if necessary.

Yesterday, a lot of unnecessary gloom was spread by the opposition. One had the feeling, listening to them, that grain movement at Vancouver had stopped.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nobody said that, except the Minister.

Mr. Pepin: I got the facts this morning. I declined to give them yesterday for the very good reason that I did not have them before me. The right hon. member for Prince Albert kept insisting that he had read my mail, which I did not like very much.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot allow that. On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I know that the minister gets a daily report. That has been the course through the years. The only thing he doesn't do is read what he gets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Could not the minister simply answer the question?

Mr. Pepin: Gladly, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

It was mentioned yesterday that "there are no vessels in Vancouver" and that "none are expected before April 25". I should like to put the facts on record. There is no truth whatsoever in those statements. Four vessels were loading yesterday, three more are due in March—today is the 28th—and to date eight vessels have been nominated for arrival prior to April 25. The Chief Commissioner of the Wheat Board tells me that during the month of April 16 vessels are due to arrive and that he hopes others will be nominated in the coming days. So the situation is far from being as bad as was described yesterday by hon. members on the other side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the Minister has the information today which he had yesterday but did not read.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was asking the Minister a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I thought the hon. member was rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pepin: I did not have the information yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

I find I am in the habit of pointing, like the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You get the point, then.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pepin: Both Emily Post and my mother say that is a bad thing to do.

I did not have the information yesterday, and it is not the habit of the Wheat Board to give such information. If I insisted on getting it today it is because I wanted to put an end to the kind of questioning which was carried on yesterday and which is not in the best interest of the producers of the west.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, having received that motherly advice from the hon. gentleman I should like to ask him what he is going to do to help the western farmers, in view of their loss of $80 million income?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister has just made the statement that the opposition has been spreading false rumours. I think he should withdraw it. The opposition has never spread false rumours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is inviting me to ask the minister to withdraw the use of unparliamentary language. It is not unparliamentary to say that false rumours are being spread. It is only if it is said that false rumours are being spread deliberately that a question of privilege arises that such words are unparliamentary.

Mr. McIntosh: On the same question of privilege, there was an occasion previously in the house when objection was taken to a statement made about bums and idiots. The minister is speaking for the government and he has just stated that the opposition is spreading false rumours. He knows that this statement is false and I ask him to withdraw it. The facts speak for themselves.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Horner: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the hon. member has a different question of privilege. I have made a ruling on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I also wish to bring to the attention of hon. members that there are only a few minutes left before the end of the question period. If these minutes are to be spent on questions of privilege I shall recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce deliberately implied that the opposition had misled the public and created a picture of gloom and doom in regard to the grain trade. Yesterday I led off the questioning on that subject. At that time I stated there was not going to be a boat into Vancouver until April 25. I read that in three different newspapers.

Mr. Loiselle: Newspapers!

Mr. Horner: Yes, newspapers. I want the government to clear up this issue. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: It is the government's duty to clear it up.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Horner: It is also the duty of the opposition to solicit the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to try to compete with the hon. member, but I also have to rule on his question of privilege that this matter cannot be entertained further. I do not think the Chair should be placed in the position where it has to ask the minister to withdraw his statement or withdraw words that in my view are not unparliamentary. Every day I hear from hon. members accusations that one side is preaching gloom and doom while the other side is not. To my way of thinking this is merely debate. Perhaps it may not be the impeccable dignity to which I referred earlier when introducing my colleagues, the provincial Speakers, who are in the gallery, but I am sure they will be pleased to return to their houses realizing that their lot is much easier than that of the federal Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I believe a few minutes ago the hon. member for Selkirk had a supplementary question.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will take my question as one that is not against the interests of the western producers. I should like to return to the substance of the question asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Can the minister say whether the government is giving active consideration at the present time to the proposition that there ought to be price support somewhat along the line of the Robert Winters formula, if I may call it that, of two years ago?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I specifically answered this question yesterday when I said that we were studying the whole situation. I said that before doing what is being requested by members, on this side too, and by members on the other side we wanted to assess the situation fully. We wanted to know the real possibilities of returning to the I.G.A. price schedule. We wanted to know how many sales the Wheat Board could make—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): A further supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. May we hope that this decision will not be too long delayed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask questions but not express hopes.

[Later:]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who was responsible for answering my question, stated that he had replied to the very same question yesterday. This is exactly what he did not do. I want to say to the minister that the time for assessment was some four months ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again that is not a question of privilege.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Whereas the steady increase in interest rates is detrimental to many Canadian businesses, would the minister advise the house if he intends to find means to improve that situation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the minister to make a general statement. I do not think his question is in order.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSOLIDATION OF MILITARY COLLEGES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence to inform the house whether his department is now planning the consolidation of military colleges on one site in the Ottawa area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I fail to see the urgency of the question asked by the hon. member. Perhaps it is the type of question that might be placed on the order paper.

INCOME TAX

COLLECTION OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT TAX BEFORE APPROVAL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the government house leader in his statement yesterday of the business we will deal with before we rise for the Easter recess made no mention of any legislation to amend the Income Tax Act, and in view of the fact that there is no legislation of this sort on the order paper, may I ask the minister how long the government intends to collect the 2 per cent social development tax without parliamentary approval?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize—I do not think I am wrong about this—that this question has been asked before. I am not sure whether it should be allowed again today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Months are going by and this tax is being collected without parliamentary approval. I think the country has a right to know for how much longer this situation is going to exist.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO GRANT LICENCES—REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 27, consideration of Bill C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

• (12:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, since we are resuming consideration of the bill discussed yesterday and of my amendment, I think the minister could give an answer about that amendment especially requesting standards of protection for the consumers.

We have an international Bill of Rights as well as a Canadian Bill of Rights which has been in force for a few years now. It is therefore time, I think, to introduce in the house legislation providing for a charter regarding the protection of the consumers.

I have in hand briefs and reports already submitted to the consumer credit committee which contain sensible recommendations favouring consumers' rights.

Here, I wish to remind the minister of the main points which have already been made the subject of recommendations in committee and which, I believe, are still sound. However, the minister appeared to turn a deaf ear to them.

Since on page 3313 of the proceedings, mention is made of the consumer's rights, I thought I was justified in moving such an amendment to protect the consumers.

If some manufacturer failed to comply with the rules under the future Canadian consumer's bill of rights, his licence could be revoked at any time.

On page 3313 of the report appear the basic criteria that prompted the recommendations on the safety of drugs. There is also the suggestion that the consumer be informed on the quality of the various food products or drugs offered on the market.

Another need is supplying the consumer with the required information. The federal government has now in stock some valuable pamphlets unfortunately unavailable to the public. It should make use of that literature to inform the public on the food products and drugs now selling in this country.

Another recommendation was made in committee. It concerns the labelling of toxic substances, for the manufacturers can indicate the contents of some pharmaceutical or food products more or less clearly on the container.

It also appears necessary to define more clearly what quality means as applied to food or drugs. In addition, the source of such products should be identified.

Today, the source of various products on the market remains obscure and the Canadian consumer does not really know whether he is buying a Canadian or a foreign product.

On the other hand, some standards or regulations should be established to prevent the use of fractions of weights and measures.

Mr. Speaker, many other suggestions have already been made to the consumer credit committee, in respect of relevant subjects which are not dealt with in the bill. It would be interesting for the consumers to benefit from a bill of rights, to ensure them more protection.

On page 3310 of the same report, another suggestion is made concerning the protection of the consumers' rights. It is a more simple designation of various qualities of food products. Another recommendation is to the effect that labels should be printed with warnings about the handling and use of dangerous substances.

Another recommendation tends to forbid the inscription on the labels of fractions of ounces. I made the same recommendation a few minutes ago.

A standardization of net weights, over four ounces, should be established.

In my opinion, all these recommendations are logical, intelligent and plausible. On the other hand, I do not mean to say that all recommendations contained in the briefs should be accepted today or tomorrow by the minister in order to protect the consumer. There are, however, some essential recommendations that should immediately be considered. For instance, the public is taken in by false advertising. As a matter of fact, the public is led to believe that it will save money if it uses certain packages, when that is false. The public should be informed on the choice of simple or sophisticated packaging and on the quality of products. We should identify the source of all products made in Canada.

A little further, the same report recommends a better dissemination of information to the consumer, so that he will be better informed on the quality of the various products that are available on the market.

There are three government publications dealing with the quality of drugs. They deal with inscriptions on labels and with drugs that should be found in every home. Perhaps the committee could recommend general distribution of government publications, instead of waiting for people to request them. Are not consumers getting a great many publications from industry, without having requested them?

It seems to me that nowadays the government could better inform consumers through a larger distribution of those publications. I know that the department is presently publishing a few pamphlets for the information of consumers; unfortunately the public does not know that they are available. There is on the market presently products which are more or less manufactured with a view to fool the public as far as quantity and quality are concerned.

For instance, we are sold a kind of javel water which is 94.6 per cent water and yet the label bears the inscription "Javel water".

I could also speak about certain kinds of soap for which instructions are provided, but which do not give any information to the housewife as to the value they get for their money.

This is why I think the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs must take his responsibilities and consider the recommendations already made by the committee on consumer credit with a view to establishing standards of protection for the consumer. This would enable consumers to make a judgment on the quality of the products introduced on the market and would prevent the public from being fooled by advertising.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should, first of all, look after the interests of consumers and set up as soon as possible a consumer safety code.

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks must be to thank the hon. member for his intervention in this debate. In his speech he surveyed the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I appreciate his interest in my department and its various programs. If I were to comment specifically on all the points he raised I should probably be out of order. We are dealing here with the report stage of this bill and with an amendment to clause 1, subclause 4.

The hon. member read the recommendations of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Prices. I remind him that I was the co-chairman of that committee, that I am familiar with the work of the committee and participated in the writing of the committee report and recommendations. I can assure him that the recommendations affecting the work of my department are very much in my mind. Many of the matters he has mentioned my department is now working on. I am not at liberty to make announcements today on all these subjects, but I assure the hon. member that they are very much in my mind and are involved in the work of the department. I share the concern he expressed regarding labelling, packaging and advertising. I assure him that I and my officials have these matters in mind.

I have already introduced the hazardous products bill which will be dealt with following this bill. It is an extremely strong piece of consumer protection legislation. It will allow us to deal with a great many products now on the market over which there is at present no control. The hazardous products bill will deal with labelling and packaging.

I suggested to the Consumer Advisory Council, which I appointed last November, that they draw up a consumer charter. I asked in early December that they devote some effort to this matter. I made it very clear last fall that there should be a consumers' charter in Canada, a declaration of consumer rights. In this connection the hon. member and I are in complete agreement.

I will now deal with the amendment before the house. I wish to assure hon. members of the Creditiste party that each of their proposed amendments has received very careful consideration by myself and my officials. I welcome their interest in this bill and their participation in the debate. I share with them their concern for the safety of the public. That is a consideration which must be paramount in the minds of the government and officials.

Knowing the concern and interest of the hon. members, each of their amendments was examined very carefully as to whether it should be accepted. On the question of whether I could accept the last amendment moved, I was invited last night to sleep on it. I have done this, Mr. Speaker, and I must advise that I am unable to accept the amendment because the bill already provides what the hon. members are concerned about in their amendment.

Any compulsory licence granted on stated terms or conditions will be ineffective if those terms are not complied with. If authority is granted to do something in stated terms, the general law is that authority under the compulsory licence automatically lapses if the terms are not complied with. That is the law of the Patent Act and of this country. Any licensee not complying with the terms of the compulsory licence would be subject to an infringement of patent action by the patent owner. What the hon. member is concerned about in moving this amendment is already provided for in the general law of the land. For this reason I cannot accept the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, may I put another question?

As the number of licences revoked as a result of the enaction of regulations which have not being complied with, is insignificant, would it not have been possible for the minister to amend the present legislation so that the Commissioner could revoke licences at his discretion, when regulations are not complied with?

Nobody keeps a watch on the companies which are not complying with the regulations, and no licence has been revoked.

The minister says that licences have been revoked because the regulations have not been complied with but, according to the statistics, no licence has been revoked. This act seems to be applicable but it has never been enforced. The minister should apply it in the case of companies who have not complied with the regulations and still have their licence. I know several companies like that.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, if the holder of the compulsory licence does not comply with its terms he is open to an infringement action by the owner of the patent. It is a self-policing action and in our view is sufficient for the purpose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost, on division.

Amendment (Mr. Rondeau) negatived.

• (12:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Bill C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting in clause 1 (10) (b) after the word "effect" on line 6, page 4, the following words:

"or immediately where the quality or safety of the product has been the cause of the rejection, and all persons who have acquired such product under a patent shall have their licences revoked."

Mr. Speaker, even the slightest error cannot be tolerated, and that must be brought home to drug manufacturers.

It is not after a number of deaths will have been caused by poor quality products or a few people's health will have been affected by a product of dubious quality, that it will be time to act. We cannot allow such manufacturers to retain their licence, be it only for a short period of time.

If the manufacturer were aware that his licence can be revoked if he sells a product of poor quality, it would help to further protect the consumer. That is the object of the amendment I am moving.

We would also have to make sure that the dosage directions are properly indicated so that the buyer will not run any kind of risk.

There is a peculiar situation in this country, because it is a bilingual country, and many products are labelled in both languages. But, as the minister knows, it sometimes happens that on a bottle, the instructions for use in English will specify two tablets a day, and the instructions in French will indicate only one every four hours. There is certainly something wrong here.

It may be a quality product, but the instructions are ambiguous, and I would call this a case of criminal negligence.

In such cases, the manufacturer should have his license revoked, and knowing that this can be done, he will be most careful.

It also happens sometimes that sales promotion of some products is pushed too far by advertising, when their excessive use could have adverse effects on people's health.

For instance, when I see advertisements for products claiming to improve the scalp, I remain a little sceptical, because science is not far enough advanced in this field to give any weight to such advertising claims.

Yet, some of those products are still to be found on the market.

So, taking all this into account, the quality of the product must be such, and it must be guaranteed in such a way, that one can be sure, beyond a doubt, that it will not endanger one's health, one's life. The manufacturer or the licence holder must be so conscious of this, that the thalidomide tragedy for instance, of a few years ago, cannot be repeated.

It is obvious that the regulations must be strict, specific, so that such disastrous situations can be avoided. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The act says that the licences will be revoked but I feel that this is not specific enough. Even if certain business concerns were taken to court—we know about those delays which unfortunately are ever increasing in length—it can happen that in the meantime those who violated the regulations continue to sell their products. Will they cease to distribute and advertise them?

That is one more reason why the act should be more specific. When a product has been shelved because it is dangerous, those who sell it, under a patent, will lose their licences. If that were stated in so many words in the act I feel that the people would be better protected.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the minister for dealing again with the same subject which remains in our opinion very important namely pharmaceutical drugs and according to the same legislation, foodstuffs.

At the present time, the public is under the impression that anyone can very easily get a license allowing him to manufacture anything and that none of these products are controlled on the market. Therefore, people are afraid because accidents have happened.

A few years ago, in my riding, a child died because he had swallowed soap. At the present time, no provision in the legislation obliges the companies to mention on the labels that the consumption of a certain quantity of soap can kill a child.

The minister had performed a tremendous task in this field because today so-called pills and drugs are manufactured.

Bottles are filled with water, colouring is added, the product is put on the market and the public is fooled. Why? Because consumers are not protected and the legislation is not specific enough.

I heard the hon. member for Champlain say that certain products were damaging for the scalp, and that is true. However, some products are very good for the scalp while others are toxic. There are chemical products and natural products. In the present legislation no provision obliges the manufacturer of toxic products to identify them as such by saying to what extent they could be good or bad for people.

However, natural products have been holding good in England since 1886. If a person has white hair for instance, by the simple virtue of nature, his hair will regain its original colour and the products are unadulterated. In the case of a person who had dark hair when he was young, his hair will become dark again.

On the other hand, there are other products on the market that are supposed to change hair colouring but they are harmful and lead to falling hair, broken hair and dry hair. For instance some beauty products such as hair sprays harm women's scalp. Others, however, are efficient and do have the qualities advertised in their case. But there is no provision in the present legislation to protect the consumer. Good as well as bad products are sold indiscriminately on the market. The advertising pattern tends to make bad products sell more easily than good ones.

We would like the minister to tell us what he intends to do in the case of the recommendations included in the consumer charter he has just talked about, instead of merely telling us he has been studying the problem for months, as he was the co-chairman of the committee concerned. Receiving briefs is not all that matters; the recommendations they contain have to be put into practice.

If we have created a Department of Consumer Affairs, it is time, I think, to implement these important recommendations. This is why, I believe, the hon. Minister told us that he was very favourable to the amendments which we have introduced since last night. He studied them seriously and they will certainly be written into the statutes.

Unfortunately, there have been in the past, in the pharmaceutical field, scandals about products which had reportedly caused death or disabilities. However, we are still facing the same problem. Will the minister wait much longer still before putting these recommendations into practice? We do not want to give him the impression that we want to split hairs but, on the other hand, we want him to make serious recommendations and to put into practice, as soon as possible, those made by experts and by responsible organizations across the country, a few months ago.

They are still waiting for the minister—and I congratulate him on his appointment—to establish a charter of consumer rights in order to protect the manufacturers who want to put quality products on the market and to take the necessary steps to eliminate "scrap" manufacturers and the dangerous products they make.

• (12:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, again I concur with the hon. member in his concern about safety; it is also our concern. I have tried on a number of occasions to explain that in dealing with this bill I think it is vitally important for the safety of the Canadian public that the functions of the Commissioner of Patents and the Director General of the Food and Drug Directorate not be confused and that there be no overlapping of their functions. The Commissioner of Patents will grant a compulsory licence under the existing law or under this amending bill unless he sees good reason for not granting it. But if, in fact, a product produced pursuant to an interim or compulsory licence or patent process generally is not of the same quality or with satisfactory safety levels, this does not mean that the determination in respect of quality or safety will be made by the Commissioner of Patents. It will be made by the Food and Drug Directorate and the product, pursuant to the regulations we now have, will be taken off the market.

While such a finding by the Food and Drug Directorate would undoubtedly, I think, be taken into account by the Commissioner of Patents in deciding if he has good reason for not granting an application or interim licence, he cannot and should not be expected to make that finding himself. If he did he would be usurping the judgment of the Food and Drug Directorate and confusing the functions of the Commissioner of Patents and the Food and Drug Directorate.

I agree completely, and it is the position of the government, that drugs of improper quality or ones which do not measure up to safety standards should not be on the market. It is our position, however, that that decision must be made by the Food and Drug Directorate. Under the existing law they have the power to control all drugs which are on the market. If a drug is unsafe or not of proper quality it can be taken off the market. Just to ensure that the Food and Drug Directorate has this authority we have clause 5 in this bill which removes any shadow of doubt that they have the power to deal with drugs of improper quality or which do not meet safety regulations.

I think it would be quite improper for me to attempt to draw a law that would confuse the functions of the Commissioner of Patents and the Food and Drug Directorate. I think this amendment would create such confusion and that it is a confusion which should not be allowed.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to explain how it is that drugs are found on the market which, in fact, are nothing but coloured dust? How can the minister argue that the regulations can automatically revoke the licences of manufacturers who, for years, have been cheating the public and pouring trash on the market? On the other hand how is it that, in spite of allegedly specific regulations, certain products are now polluting our water to the extent that the federal government will have to spend, within a few years, millions of dollars to fight it, and that the Minister of Consumer Affairs has failed to enforce any regulations whatsoever to forbid the manufacture of products likely to directly pollute the waters.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I guess the honourable member was rising to ask a question but since it appears to be somewhat lengthy, I should remind him that he is only allowed to speak once under the rules.

Mr. Rondeau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for reminding me of the rules. My question, was a little lengthy maybe, but it is nevertheless important.

How is it that trash should be sold as pills and that products likely to directly pollute the waters are being manufactured under licences which allow manufacturers to operate?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the Food and Drug Directorate is not within the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as the hon. member will appreciate. It falls under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). Therefore, as I have said several times in this debate, I hesitate to give answers or make statements on behalf of the Food and Drug Directorate. I do not know exactly to what product the hon. member is referring. If there are pills on the market which contain nothing but dust, I am sure this can be dealt with under the existing regulations of the Food and Drug Directorate. If the hon. member would privately, outside the house, bring to my attention the particular product of which he is speaking I would be happy to bring it to the attention of the Food and Drug Directorate.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to answer the question I asked earlier in the course of my statement. Is he aware of the fact that drugs are now being sold on the market the dosage of which is not the same in French and in English?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I must again mention that the Food and Drug Directorate does not come under my jurisdiction. Again I am hesitant to give answers on their behalf. They do have a regulation, the precise nature of which I am not sure about, dealing with bilingual labelling of drug products. As I say, I am not sure of the precise nature of the regulation, except that I know it exists. Again, if the hon. member would like to bring this case to my attention privately outside the house I would be happy to see that my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare receives the information and brings it to the attention of the Food and Drug Directorate.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would make inquiries so that he could provide the answer this afternoon, because this is an important point.

Mr. Basford: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is here. I will ask him to make the inquiry. He may have something to say this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Basford.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I declare the amendment lost on division.

Amendment (Mr. Matte) negatived.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth) moved:

That Bill C-102, An Act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by deleting in Clause 3 the words "to be sufficiently different in its composition from" in lines 12 and 13 on page 7 and substituting therefor the following words: "if it is not identical in its composition to".

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the reason for this amendment is to narrow the field within which the Food and Drug Directorate will be able to say that a product made in one country and a product made in another country, both bearing the same trade mark, are the same. It is well known that here are no international trade mark agreements and that drugs with similar trade marks, although they are not numerous, can be very different in different countries. Under this bill the Food and Drug Directorate has the authority to say that a drug with such a trade mark, manufactured in any foreign country and imported into Canada, is the same as the drug manufactured in Canada if, in the opinion of the Food and Drug Directorate, the difference is not likely to result in a hazard to health.

It is well known that there are wide variations in the effects of drugs and chemicals when they are used in the human body and, indeed, if there is any variation in the chemical potency of the drug, it cannot be called safe unless elaborate tests to prove its clinical efficacy are carried out. The Food and Drug Directorate does not have the resources nor would it be economically feasible for it to carry out the elaborate tests necessary to prove that imported drugs and drugs manufactured in Canada are the same. Under the terms of the bill the Food and Drug Directorate may declare two products with the same trade mark equal if they do not think the imported drug to be sufficiently different to constitute a hazard to health. I feel that this is open to a very wide interpretation. For instance, the formulation of vitamin preparations with some rare trace metals in them can allow for such differences that although they might not be injurious to health and might have the same effect on many patients, they might have no effect whatsoever on some patients. In such cases both the physician and the patient might be under the false impression that two similar trade mark drugs were the same.

May I remind the minister that the success of this bill in lowering the price of drugs will depend on the number of drugs that will be transferred out of the established pharmaceutical houses to copy houses. It will also depend to a large extent on the assurance of physicians that the tests carried out by the Food and Drug Directorate as to the safety of drugs are sound. In the final analysis it is the physician who is always responsible for the effect of drugs on his patients. The Food and Drug Directorate cannot assume the responsibility in any specific case; they can only generalize and say that they have done what they can to ensure the safety of drugs.

According to the information we received in the committee, any drug manufactured in a foreign country will have a label on its package containing information regarding the place of manufacture of the drug. However, I should like to point out that neither the physician who prescribes the drug nor the patient who receives it will have knowledge of this. Again, I should like to point out that confidence on the part of physicians and patients in the safety and effectiveness of drugs is most important.

I urge the minister to accept this amendment as I feel it is most important that when a physician prescribes a drug by its trade mark name—and approximately 85 per cent of drugs are so prescribed—the patient who receives it will be assured that the drug does not differ from any other drug with the same trade mark regardless of its place of manufacture. I point out to the minister that this amendment will apply to only a few products and therefore should not have any great effect on the price of drugs. It is a measure to ensure greater safety, and it is based on information which we received in the committee.

I am quite certain that the present director of the Food and Drug Directorate will interpret the clause in the bill before us very narrowly and that there will probably be no hazard to health as a result. However, he will not be in that position forever, and the definition of a hazard to health is open to a very wide interpretation. I venture to say that ten people speaking as experts concerning one particular chemical can have ten different viewpoints.

I urge the minister to consider at least narrowing the definition if he thinks he cannot accept the amendment. If in time experience shows us that it can be widened, we would then have the resulting benefit. I do not think a sufficient number of drugs would be involved to affect the price of drugs in general, and the trade in these drugs would not be great. This amendment, if accepted, would give an assurance to those people who prescribe drugs that the Food and Drug Directorate is doing all it can to ascertain that products with the same trade marks are of equal efficacy regardless of their place of manufacture.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to change "substantial variation" to "any variation". If this amendment were enacted, it might completely nullify the effect of the proposed section 49A of the act. It would mean that extremely minor variations would result in the section being totally inapplicable, and in this way the amendment would deny the protection of the section for the importer of trade mark drugs. This would have a frustrating influence on price competition and would impair the effects of the bill.

I share the hon. member's concern for safety, but I am advised by the Food and Drug Directorate that the proposed amendment is unnecessary from the standpoint of safety. Minor variations can take place, such as the addition of small amounts of colour to a trade mark drug, with no hazards to health. In any case where a variation may amount to a significant hazard to health the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), under a provision in the bill which I propose, can issue a certificate removing the protection afforded under this clause. Under clause 5 of the bill he has full power to control the importation of any drug, particularly of dosage drugs. As a result of the amendment proposed by the hon. member there would be a temptation to create minor differences. The existing proliferation of dosage forms already creates difficulties which would be compounded by the creation of these minor differences. This would cause additional confusion in the drug market, which is already confusing enough. Therefore, for these several reasons the amendment should not be accepted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost, on division.

Amendment (Mr. Monteith) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Saltsman (for the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting immediately after clause 5 (b) the following new subparagraph:

"(c) the regulation of drug manufacturing, importing, and distribution so that only drugs having a generic name be allowed to be sold in Canada,"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment having been put, may I say that I have some reservations about the relevancy of this amendment and some subsequent ones. I would be prepared to make a ruling now but I would not want in any way to prejudge the issue. If hon. members have comments to make about this amendment, I would be prepared to hear them now. Otherwise I could make a ruling.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the difficulty that some of the amendments create. In view of the fact that I intend to speak very briefly on several of the amendments, I wonder whether I might be permitted to accomplish two things, that is, say a few words on the validity of the amendment as well as deal with the matter contained in the amendment.

The reason for introducing this amendment is to strengthen the bill beyond its present provisions. It is to recognize that the bill needs a greater measure of strength than it now possesses. This has been admitted by the minister, who has pointed out that the bill seeks to do some rather limited things and he is prepared to go beyond them if necessary.

One matter the minister has indicated he is prepared to consider and is in the process of examining is the question of an information bulletin that would indicate to physicians and pharmacists the generic names of the various chemicals on the market, their equivalents and their relationship to each other. In the long run, it seems to us that unless the emphasis is placed on generic names no really substantial savings can take place with regard to the cost of drugs.

At one time brand names probably served a very useful purpose. At the time of the cracker barrel it was important that there be some kind of national standard that was recognized everywhere. That was in the days of a rather permanent society before governments had departments which checked into safety, before there was a Consumer Affairs Department and before there were organizations concerned about national standards. Whatever the argument may have been initially for having national brands, and whatever the advantages may have been initially for having national brand names, today they have become a very serious liability in many industries, particularly the drug industry. For this reason I think the time has come when drugs should be sold on the basis of their intrinsic definition rather than on the basis of an artificially created name.

It has been said that if we in Canada were to move to generic drugs the people who buy them would save $50 million a year in total. I believe this to be the fact. I think the safety of drugs would be guaranteed by the inspection of drug companies and the very adequate resources of the Food and Drug Directorate. It is for these reasons that we are introducing this amendment. We hope the government will consider the importance of the suggestion we are making.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Having listened to the hon. member, I still have the doubts that I expressed originally about this amendment. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would like to make a contribution on the relevancy of the amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since you seem to have some doubt I regard that as an invitation to me to try to remove your doubt. I do not know how thoroughly ingrained it is, but may I make the effort. We are, of course, at the report stage when, according to our rules, it is permitted to give notice of any motion to amend, delete, insert or restore any clause in a bill. I was reading from Standing Order 75, paragraph 5.

I recognize, of course, that this does not mean one can move an amendment about elephants in a bill that deals with apples and oranges; one still has to be relevant to the bill that is before us. The explanatory note to clause 5 of the bill with which we are dealing reads:

> The purpose of this amendment is to authorize the making of regulations under the Food and Drugs Act for the protection of the public in relation to the safety and quality of drugs manufactured outside Canada.

It seems to me that the amendment my colleague the hon. member for Waterloo has proposed is within that general framework and on that basis should meet the test of relevancy. I do not wish to argue by comparison, but it strikes me that it is at least as relevant to the bill before us as most of the amendments that have been considered to this point. That is why I think Your Honour should see it as in order.

In the case of one or two of the amendments yet to be proposed today, I confess to seeing some difficulty. But it would seem to me that this amendment and the next one, at any rate, are within the general terms of "regulations . . . for the protection of the public in relation to the safety and quality of drugs".

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have listened to the views of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre but I confess that my doubts remain.

It is suggested that the proposed amendment must be read and considered in the light of the wording of the last two lines of new subsection (1a) in clause 5 of the bill so that we would have a construction reading as follows:

> 1a.—the Governor in Council may make such regulations governing, regulating or prohibiting—
> (c) the regulation of drug manufacturing, importing and distribution—

And so on. It is suggested that in tacking on the amendment to the clause it purports to amend, its inconsistency becomes apparent. It is suggested also that the amendment is not entirely relevant to new subsection 1a in clause 5 of the bill. That clause relates to the making of regulations respecting imported drugs.

The amendment, it is suggested, seeks to give the Governor in Council authority to make regulations in respect of the manufacture of drugs. If the amendment relates to the manufacture of drugs in Canada it is not relevant to clause 5 (1a).

In May's 17th edition, page 551, paragraph 7 states:

> If an amendment would make the clause which it is proposed to amend unintelligible or ungrammatical, or if it is incoherent and inconsistent with the context of the bill, it is out of order.

The same author states, as found on page 549:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter, or beyond the scope of the bill, or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

Reference may also be made to page 567 where the same author states:

> —the rules of order respecting the admissibility of amendments in committee . . . are generally applicable to amendments moved on consideration—

This is the stage in which we are engaged at present. I must therefore rule that the amendment cannot be accepted.

Mr. Saltsman (for Mrs. MacInnis): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting immediately after Clause 5 (b) the following new subparagraph:
> "(c) the permitting of hospital pharmacies, under the direction of a licensed pharmacist, to provide narcotics and control drugs on prescription under the Food and Drug Act and the Narcotic Control Act,".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again I must say I have reservations about this proposed motion. I do not want to prejudge the issue, though, and if the hon. member would like to make a contribution he may do so.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of this amendment is to urge upon the government the implementation of a recommendation contained in the report of the Royal Commission on Health Services, the Hall Report, which would permit licensed pharmacists to provide narcotics and control drugs on prescription. It goes beyond the specific question of control drugs to the general question whether hospital pharmacies should be permitted to dispense to the general public.

It is our feeling that wherever it is possible within the federal jurisdiction to encourage hospital pharmacies to dispense to the general public this should be done as a way of providing more competition in the retail market and as a way of giving people an opportunity to buy drugs at the lowest possible price. It has been the experience of many people who have been able to get drugs at hospitals, when they were outpatients, for instance, that they could do so at about one-third of the normal cost. And the hospital was able to recover its cost. We believe that if this method of competition were encouraged the price of drugs to the general population could be substantially reduced.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might make some comment about this amendment. It appears to be irregular on much the same grounds as the previous amendment.

It is inconsistent in form and meaning with clause 5 (1a) which it purports to amend. Furthermore, it is suggested that it too goes beyond the bill now before the house since it also purports to amend the Narcotic Control Act. It would seem that one of its effects would be to modify or regulate a provision or provisions in the latter act, and if it were adopted it is suggested that the title of the bill now before the house should be amended to indicate that the bill also amends the Narcotic Control Act. For these reasons the amendment cannot be accepted by the Chair.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Bill C-102, An Act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting immediately after Clause 5 (b) the following new subparagraph:

"(c) the establishment of a Crown Corporation on behalf of Her Majesty which shall be empowered to manufacture, sell, distribute and promote drugs offered for sale in Canada,"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again I confess to certain misgivings about this amendment but I am prepared to hear the hon. member for Waterloo briefly on the question.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe this amendment is relevant to the bill because it involves one of the principal means by which competition can be injected into the drug market. A number of questions were raised regarding this amendment when it was put forward in the committee and perhaps I might take a moment to deal with them.

First, let it be clearly noted that this is not a proposal for the nationalization of the drug industry. What we are calling for is the establishment of a competitor, a proprietary drug corporation which would provide competition in the drug field, one which is obviously becoming monopolistic, as a result of which prices are far too high. It is not important that this crown corporation take a very large share of the market. All it needs to do is to take a relatively small portion, as was done by some of the Swedish co-operatives, to indicate to the others concerned that they will have to lower their prices. A corporation of this type would be run very much like any other business. The chief advantage flowing from it would be the provision of real and effective competition.

The question of what would happen to the drug industry as a result of the passage of this bill has been raised and it has been said by some that imports will destroy the Canadian industry. I do not believe that will actually happen, but I urge those concerned about the maintenance of an indigenous Canadian drug industry to support our proposal for the establishment of a crown corporation because in a way this would obviate the necessity of importing drugs.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The government has indicated some measure of support and encouragement of some of the smaller drug companies in Canada in order to develop some competitive forces in the drug market. This would seem to be the aim of some government measures. This crown corporation could act as a useful marketing agency for new drug companies. Much of our drug marketing at the moment is done under national brand names. A crown corporation such as we propose would receive instant credibility and acceptability on the part of the public. It could establish its name in the marketplace and market on behalf of smaller companies products that might be more worthy but at the same time not readily accepted by the public or against which propaganda might be waged by the larger companies.

There has been increasing evidence that one of the great difficulties facing the small manufacturer in Canada is the vicious whispering campaign that has been conducted by the major drug companies against their competitors. These competitors, the smaller manufacturers, have been very effective in reducing drug prices. This proposed Crown corporation could assist these small companies to compete against the larger companies, and would receive the assistance of government credibility. For that reason I suggest such a corporation would be of great value to Canadians in their fight for lower drug prices.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might point out to the hon. member for Selkirk that I was listening with some patience to the hon. member for Waterloo. The point at issue at this stage is not the substance of the amendment but whether the amendment is admissible. I am prepared to rule now on the admissibility of the amendment.

Clause 5(1a) of Bill C-102 deals only with the making of regulations respecting imported drugs. The amendment, if adopted, would necessitate the setting up of a crown corporation for the purpose, among other things, of manufacturing drugs in Canada, and in doing so goes well beyond the purpose of the bill and would have the effect of creating a public charge.

Reference may be made to paragraph 13 of May's 17th edition, page 551, where it is stated:

> Amendments or new clauses creating public charges cannot be proposed, if no money resolution or ways and means resolution has been passed, or if the amendment or clause is not covered by the terms of the resolution.

Furthermore, as stated in paragraph 1 on page 549 of May's 17th edition:

> An amendment is out of order . . . if it is irrelevant to the subject matter, or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

For the reasons stated I regret to say that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by inserting immediately after clause 5 (b) the following new subparagraph:
> "(c) the prohibition of distribution of drug samples by drug manufacturers for purposes of advertising and promotion, except when a physician or the pharmacist makes a separate specific written request for samples of the particular drug or drugs in which he may be interested,"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again I confess certain misgivings about this amendment but I am prepared to hear the hon. member for Waterloo briefly.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must remark on your great constancy and patience. In view of the apparent difficulty that has been created in attempting to amend this clause in the particular way we have outlined and in the interests of expediting the work on this bill and the desire of almost all of us to see the bill become law, we would be prepared to withdraw this amendment as well as the next amendment. We will indicate our position in the debate on third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Saltsman) withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand that the hon. member for Waterloo proposes to withdraw amendment No. 13 as well as No. 12?

Mr. Saltsman: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now turn to amendment No. 14 in the name of the hon. member for Perth.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by adding clause 6, as follows:
> "6. Within two years of the coming into force of this act, the Minister of National Health and Welfare shall prepare and table in Parliament a report reviewing the operation and the effect of the act and all regulations enacted thereunder and the said report shall be considered by parliament and its appropriate committees."

I do not intend to speak at length on this amendment, but the principle of it was first introduced this session by the members of the other place when they proposed an amendment to the hazardous substances bill somewhat along these lines. Despite the rather strong criticism of the industry by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), I feel that it is an important one. Incidentally, I am surprised that we have not heard, either yesterday or today, from the hon. members for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), Lachine (Mr. Rock) and Vaudreuil (Mr. Emard) who were so vehement in their remarks in committee. I would have liked to see them here today to present their case and to support me in mine.

However, as the evidence indicates, this industry employs some 10,000 workers, about 2,500 of them university graduates. I think there is a responsibility to let the house know just what is going to happen to this industry and what has happened to it in the past. I am not holding a brief for the industry as such, but I think it has been proven that as a result of certain policies of this government other industries have suffered.

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), I believe on second reading, as reported at page 4408 of Hansard related what had happened to the footwear industry in Quebec. I raised a question in the house not long ago in connection with what is happening to the textile industry, and only this morning I received the progress report for March, 1969 of the Stratford Industrial Commission which points out that Cluett-Peabody of Canada has closed a factory in Stratford that employed 160 people. This is undoubtedly the result of imports, primarily from low-wage countries. This may happen with other industries, and it is what frightens me.

I feel there should be some reporting back to the House of Commons on the results of this bill. If we do not insist upon a report back to the house by the minister, then we are going to be governed by the civil service with no report made to the people. We are the people who must know what is happening as a result of this legislation. I will not say anything more, but I do feel we are entitled to know what happens as a result of legislation passed by this house.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word about the amendment that has just been moved. The matter presents me with some difficulties. The bill before the house seeks to amend three acts of parliament and it would be very difficult, if the amendment were adopted, to bring in a report dealing with those three acts in the way that has been suggested. This bill seeks to amend the Patent Act. The Commissioner of Patents is already required under that act to report to parliament. The activities of the Trade Marks Office pursuant to the amendments to the Trade Marks Act and the activities of the Food and Drug Directorate pursuant to the amendments to the Food and Drugs Act will be reported on annually. My department reports on matters pertaining to the Trade Marks Office and my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, reports on the activities of the Food and Drug Directorate. I therefore think that there are already adequate provisions within the law for reporting to parliament.

May I point out that under our new rules the estimates of each department, including the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, are examined in committee. Each year the members of the appropriate standing committees of this house will be able to examine the activities of the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce, National Health and Welfare and Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and determine how those departments have been affected by the amendments now being brought in. There is already adequate provision for parliament to examine continuously the operation of these amendments. I do not think anything further is required.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment? All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost on division.

Amendment (Mr. Monteith) negatived.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

An hon. Member: By leave, now.

Mr. Basford moved the third reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in beginning the debate on third reading I plan to be brief. I should like again to remind the house that there are five points to the government program to reduce drug prices. I discussed these at length when I spoke on second reading and in the committee.

The first of these points was the removal of the sales tax on prescription drugs, the reduction of customs duty on these products from 20 per cent to 15 per cent and the narrowing of the application of dumping duty to drug imports. The second point was the introduction of this bill. The third was the development of a drug information service for doctors, a recommendation of the Harley committee, which is now being developed by the Food and Drug Directorate. The fourth point, or step, was the Pharmaceutical Industries Development Assistance program known as PIDA. This is now in operation and is designed to strenghten and improve the efficiency of that sector of the pharmaceutical industry which manufactures and sells prescription drugs at lower prices. The fifth and final step in this program involves discussions with the provinces and is designed to tackle the problem of the high cost of retail distribution of drugs which, of course, is primarily of provincial concern. These discussions will commence after this bill has been passed. My view was that I ought to devote my energies at this time to piloting this legislation through parliament.

It is the government's expectation, as well as mine, that the effect of Bill C-102 will be substantially to increase price competition in the Canadian drug industry. We anticipate this increased competition will occur in three ways. In the first place we anticipate that at least some of the larger drug companies which operate on an international scale will themselves be seeking compulsory licences pursuant to the provisions of this bill to supply drugs in competition with present patent owners. We know of at least one large drug company which intends to take advantage of the provisions of this legislation.

In the second place we expect that compulsory licences will be sought by the smaller Canadian-owned companies which are being strengthened by the PIDA program. I refer to companies with marketing strategies involving a low price policy. The extent to which these smaller companies will have an impact on the general level of prices depends primarily upon how much confidence physicians have in their products. This emphasizes the importance of the information service being developed by the Food and Drug Directorate. In the third place, where drugs in dosage form are available in other markets at substantially lower prices than they are in Canada, the amendment to the Trade Marks Act will permit the importation from abroad of such drugs properly trade marked by the parent companies of Canadian subsidiaries.

In the committee stage there was a good deal of discussion of the effects this bill might have on the structure of the industry. The Harley committee had before it ample statistical and factual evidence concerning the drug industry in Canada, as is apparent from their report. They also had before them a statement of the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act concerning the fundamental issues which required a consideration of the social costs and benefits of alternative arrangements for supplying drugs to the Canadian market. One such fundamental issue so suggested is whether the drug manufacturing industry ought to be preserved in Canada in exactly its present form, which would require the continuation of present protective devices the industry considers necessary but which deny Canadians access to a less costly supply of drugs. It was also pointed out that to remove significant elements of that protection by extending compulsory licensing to imports should lower the prices of drugs reaching the Canadian market but may well shift some sources of supply to plants abroad.

The committee were clearly conscious of their responsibility in dealing with the fundamental issues, as appears in their report. I quote what they said at page 6:

> —the Committee's conclusions must be such that any of its recommendations, if adopted, should continue to maintain a proper balance between industry and consumer and take into consideration the importance of continued and increased scientific research in Canada. No recommendations could be considered, which, although designed to lower drug prices in Canada, might produce drugs of questionable safety or have a detrimental effect upon other aspects of the Canadian economy. How such a balance between consumer interest in price and continued pharmaceutical research (one of the professed causes of high drug prices) may be maintained, and the resulting effect on the drug industry will be discussed as this report proceeds.

It must be remembered that the committee made its recommendations in the light of the basic principles thus expressed and these recommendations include the principles of compulsory licensing for imports and reduction of trade mark protection which are the essentials of Bill C-102. It is obvious that the Harley committee, the recommendations of which were unanimous, had weighed the social costs and gains resulting from their recommendations and had, in so doing, decided that the recommendations should be made.

Before concluding, I want to say a word about safety, which has been dealt with at length on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare both in this house and before the standing committee. I would like during this third reading debate simply to refer to the four provisions in Bill C-102 which relate to the question of safety.

The first provision is subclause 13 on page 4 under which notices of an application for a compulsory licence or an interim licence must be given by the Commissioner of Patents to the Department of National Health and Welfare and possibly other departments. The main purpose of this is to allow the Food and Drug Directorate to become aware of the application and to take any steps it deems necessary to prepare, to scrutinize or control the importation of the drug under the licence.

The second provision relating to the program of safety and quality control is to be found in subclause 16 on page 5 which is inserted out of an abundance of caution to make it clear that nothing in a licence or interim licence granted by the Commissioner of Patents shall be construed as conferring upon any person authority to do anything that is contrary to the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act and regulations. This provision was not in Bill C-190.

The third provision relating to safety and quality control is in subsection 2 of new section 49A on page 7 which permits the Minister of National Health and Welfare to control a situation, if it should develop, where a trade marked drug imported into Canada differs from a Canadian drug similarly trade marked, and is therefore liable to cause confusion, and where the difference in composition between the two is such as to be likely to result in a hazard to health. No such situation has been brought to our attention in any significant, actual case, but as we would not wish such a possibility to occur we have placed this safeguard in the bill, and this differs from Bill C-190.

The fourth provision relating to safety and quality control is the new clause five on page 8 which has been added since Bill C-190. This will give the Governor in Council power to make regulations, to be administered by the Food and Drug Directorate, regulating or prohibiting the import of drugs into Canada and the distribution and sale of those drugs in Canada. These regulations may be such as are deemed necessary for the protection of the public in relation to the safety and quality of any imported drugs. The intention is to place beyond doubt, if this were needed, that the Food and Drug Directorate has complete and flexible control, through its regulations, over all imported drugs, including of course drugs imported by the established companies.

[Mr. Basford.]

May I conclude by saying that in view of the long period of time during which the high cost of drugs has been examined in this house and elsewhere, and in view of the importance of the matter, I urge the house to give speedy passage to this bill. I thank the house for its co-operation last night and today in dealing with the amendments on the report stage.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the minister for piloting this bill through the committee stage and the house. I wish to thank him particularly for his courtesy during the committee stage. I will be brief as this subject has already been discussed.

I believe that the approach of this bill meets with general acceptance by Canadians. It results from the Harley report and others before it. The Harley report adopted the attitude that if we do not prevent or reduce the incidence of propagation of new drugs there will be price reductions. I think this is quite true.

In the committee we asked for some indication as to what effect this bill would have on the industry. The answer always was that no one knew and only time would tell. I think this is correct. Much will depend on how many import or export licences and compulsory licences are issued. It is time this bill was made law as the minister has been in a state of suspended animation for some months or years. He will now be able to decide what attack he will pursue.

The industry is international in scope and I feel it will likely remain this way in the foreseeable future. It is unfortunate that the Canadian industry did not attempt to institute a giant chemical or pharmaceutical company that could compete in world markets. In this way we could get back some of the money that has been sent out of this country.

I hope the industry will not be subjected immediately to too much distortion and that the price of drugs will be reduced. The introduction of new drugs or companies brings with it a safety factor. Drugs are not like mousetraps and similar items which can be easily appraised by the public.

The safety factor costs the taxpayers money. The food and drug estimates this year are approximately $12 million. Forty to 50 per cent of this amount will be spent on safety. This represents $5 or $6 million, which is considerably more than previously budgeted. The directorate is of the opinion that there will be a host of new drugs or copies on the market which they will be compelled to examine. Consideration will have to be given to some substantial reduction in the manufacturing cost of drugs to pay for what the government is spending to have the Food and Drug Directorate police this operation.

I hope research will not suffer. Canada carries out a small but significant amount of research in this field involving the employment of a considerable number of our university graduates. We were informed in the debate last Tuesday that university graduates are looking for employment opportunities in this field. It would be unfortunate if this research was phased out and carried on elsewhere.

The supplying of drug information or promotion is a sore point but unfortunately this activity is necessary to some degree. The Russian drug industry complains bitterly that there is not sufficient promotion and physicians and institutions use the drugs the pharmaceutical industry of that country promotes. The government is going to get into the field of promotion by providing a drug information chart. One wonders how effective this information will be in view of the fact that the average physician receives 20 or 30 sheets of drug information per day. I hope it will be of some value inasmuch as initially $400,000 or $500,000 is being spent in this connection.

I wish to comment on drugs for elderly persons. Much has been said about this bill lowering the prices of drugs which will assist the elderly and infirm. Unfortunately it will be of little value to these people. Even if the profits of the drug manufacturing companies were reduced to zero, the saving would only be a few dollars now to those chronically ill elderly persons who spend from $10 to $40 per month. Our society will have to look for some other way to provide for these people. A great deal is expected of this bill that will not be forthcoming. Consideration should be given to a drug subsidy for chronically ill people. Many provinces are already doing this.

The statement of the minister emphasized that the probable effect of this drug bill could well be the importation of drugs from outside Canada. The manufacturing of drugs in this country is almost completely concentrated in Toronto and Montreal. If this bill does what is suggested, then the fact that more drugs will be imported from overseas will create a better trading balance for those parts of the country that are far away from the manufacturing centres of Toronto and Montreal. I speak particularly of western Canada with its resources-based economy, exporting its products to Japan and western Europe. In turn we can now expect that drugs imported from outside Canada will be manufactured in Japan, one of our Pacific rim trading partners, and in the countries of western Europe such as England, Germany, France and Switzerland. As a result this bill may encourage better drug manufacturing facilities all over the world and benefit us all materially in that way.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I express the hope just as earnestly as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) that the passage of Bill C-102 will be of immediate tangible benefit to the drug consumers of Canada. While I share this hope I am not as optimistic as the minister that the bill in fact will have that kind of result. It is my sincere belief that the bill once passed will have a marginal beneficial effect.

I do not intend to say anything at all about the issue of quality control and its implications so far as the bill is concerned. My colleagues spoke at length about it during the committee hearings, and last night my colleague from Winnipeg North put considerable evidence on the record to show that there is considerable disagreement among the top experts in the field on this matter. Quite a number of experts in the industry made very plausible arguments that the bill's effect would be to cast serious doubt upon our ability to maintain quality control at the same high level as in the past. On the other hand, the former commissioner of the United States food and drug directorate said we should not take too seriously much of what was said by spokesmen for the industry in connection with quality control and generic drugs.

With respect to the price of drugs it seems to me that Bill C-102 will go part way toward reaching the goal we have in mind. It would be far more effective had the government seen fit to cast aside its ideological bias and accept the kind of thinking implicit in one of the amendments that my colleague from Waterloo wanted to move earlier today. I refer to the amendment calling on the government to establish a crown-owned drug manufacturing corporation. I urge that this be done if for no other reason than that it would have a beneficial effect by serving as a yardstick with which to compare the operations and the pricing policies of the private drug manufacturing corporations.

I know that traditions in this country and in the United States are not quite parallel with respect to the important questions of public ownership and public regulation and deciding which of these can more expeditiously serve the public interest.

In Canada in the past, although perhaps not frequently enough, we have not hesitated to resort to public ownership in the form of crown corporations. I need not take the time of the house to cite examples, but it seems logical to me that serious thought should be given to the establishment of a crown corporation in the drug industry.

As my colleague took pains to point out, we in this party do not have a gigantic crown corporation in mind, one that would serve as a monopoly or an oligopoly, but one that would undertake a significant percentage of the industry's production, say 10 per cent, 15 per cent or something like that. It would serve as a useful yardstick by which to compare the rest of the industry.

Experience in the post-war period has shown that we make a mistake when we put too much reliance and confidence in public regulation of private industry as a means of protecting the public interest. Just a few days ago I had the privilege of having dinner and a long conversation with a man who was a chief economist with the Federal Communications Commission in the United States, a man intimately connected with the function of public regulation of privately owned corporations, in this case communications carriers. After years of work and responsibility his experience was that it is a very costly, painful, bureaucratic, red tape ridden and largely ineffective system, and that often, one could make a very logical and ideologically unbiased argument for public ownership, not public ownership in the sense of monopolizing an entire industry but in the sense of having a corporate presence under public ownership large enough that it could compare favourably in size with those under private ownership.

When one looks at the experience that the public has had in the past decade in Canada and the United States with the large corporate giants in the field of drug manufacturing, one cannot help but conclude that these are indeed corporate monsters.

Several months ago some state and local governments filed suit in the United States against five American drug manufacturing corporations charging that they had overcharged their customers, in this case state and local government purchasers, to the extent of $120 million over a period of a few years. This does not take into account the many billions of dollars spent by individuals for drugs, so that one has only a small inkling of the order of magnitude of the problem. The firms prosecuted were Charles Pfizer and Company, American Cyanamid Company, Bristol-Myers Company, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corporation, and the Upjohn Company. The case was heard before the New York district court of appeal and a decision was rendered sustaining the plaintiff, the state of New York. The drug companies were found guilty and restitution was ordered by the court.

It seems to me when we face a problem of this magnitude we should be prepared to give serious consideration to any logical method of attack on the problem. I am not saying the introduction of regulations, the introduction of compulsory licensing, or the changing of the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act or the Food and Drugs Act are not helpful. However, one can sum up what the minister is hoping to accomplish by this bill. The hope is that by opening up the door a little and allowing the winds of international competition to blow into the industry there will be beneficial effects. I certainly hope so. But, in itself, that is not enough. I suggest that rather than holding committee hearings to decide whether this bill is of any value, we should be holding studies and investigations into the advisability of establishing a publicly owned drug manufacturing corporation with a view to providing competition and a yardstick by which to measure other firms engaged in this industry. I think this is a very sensible suggestion.

It would not surprise me if someone were to say that I am making this proposal simply because of my ideological bias as a social democrat. I suggest that failure to give this proposal serious consideration would indicate a doctrinaire attitude or ideological bias on the part of those on the other side even more pronounced than that on this side.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, six members of our party at least had yesterday the opportunity to stress the points that seemed to be the most vulnerable in that bill and I will not dwell on them any longer. The minister said a while ago that he had thoroughly considered those amendments and that he intended to apply the legislation so as to avoid all the mistakes which were detected. That is why we moved our amendments.

It is unfortunate that we sometimes have to take drugs. We therefore wanted at all costs to obtain the assurance that the drugs would comply with certain standards of quality.

The problem affects everyone today, particularly in our North American society where life is so hectic that, much too often, we use drugs.

Publicity must not encourage the use of those products, as some amendments seemed to suggest, and they should be used only under doctors' prescriptions.

If the minister is serious in his intention to have the legislation fully enforced, and to favor the consumer, we hope that the bill will help solve the problem of exorbitant drug prices.

As this is an area where mediocrity cannot be tolerated, the quality of the products is of the utmost importance and it must be on a par with reasonable prices, for that is the purpose of the bill, and we hope that the minister will succeed in this endeavour.

It must also be ascertained that the importance of the Canadian drug industry is not impaired in favour of foreign manufacturers.

[English]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I think this debate is an indication that there is a great interest on the part of members in all parts of this house in this bill. My colleagues have said over and over during this debate that we support Bill C-102. We congratulate the minister for bringing it forward. We believe, however, that it is a timid piece of legislation and that ultimately it will not do a great deal to limit the scope of the extortionist tactics carried on by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. Many Canadians, and I refer specifically to the poor and the elderly, can scarcely afford drugs at cost let alone at the excessive rates imposed on them because of the monopoly position enjoyed by the brand name drug manufacturers or, as they prefer to be known, the ethical drug manufacturers.

These so-called ethical drug companies imply by their employment of that term that any drug manufacturer that does not belong to their chummy little international club is by exclusion unethical. To the P.M.A.C., "unethical" usually means price cutting and they maintain a constant vigilance for any threat to their society which would involve price cutting as it relates to the patent companies. We maintain that to be sick is tragedy enough, but that to be robbed in addition is a crime against which our government should protect us.

I, and others, have said that this bill will do very little to bring down the cost of prescription drugs to the Canadian public. But Canada is not the only country which has had to face this issue. It might be well to note some of the problems other countries have had and the steps they are contemplating to fight the drug cartel.

On August 30, 1968 the U.S. task force on prescription drugs published its second report in which it calls for a drastic overhaul of the existing system of drug merchandising and prescription dispensing. The report scored the molecular manipulation of existing drugs—the "me too" drugs—which is called research but which in reality is an elaborate, wasteful exercise undertaken in order to win a new patent or a renewed patent. The task force refuted the allegation by the industry that prescription drug costs had been dropping and noted that this industry is skilled in introducing new costly products to replace cheap ones.

Finally, the United States report goes to the social nub of the problem, the elderly segment of society, and recommends the following:

> We find therefore, that the requirements for appropriate prescription drug therapy by the elderly are very great—far greater, in fact, than those of any other group—and that many elderly men and women are now unable to meet these needs with their limited incomes, savings or present insurance coverage. Their inability to afford the drugs they require may well be reflected in needless sickness and disability, unemployability and costly hospitalization which could have been prevented by adequate out-of-hospital treatment.

• (3:10 p.m.)

If this is a true reflection of the drug scene in the United States and reflects their concern, we in Canada should be equally or more concerned since we have a similar proportion of elderly citizens who are affected, and, if anything, our drug prices are reputed to be higher.

What is the story in Britain? I am afraid it is the old one of a privileged manufacturing position and high level gouging of the public for needed prescriptions of brand name drugs. A government probe into the drug industry there, under a commission headed by Lord Sainsbury, proposed drastic controls on drug prices and profit margins. The British commission wants also to limit promotion and advertising and to abolish all brand names for new drugs.

In a report on the problem in Business Week of October 7, 1967, Lord Sainsbury charged that the national health service had been the victim of "excessive prices" to the extent of several million pounds over a period of three years. The commission also severely criticized the drug industry's annual promotion expenditures of $42 million per year, half of which went to the company's detail men.

Here is what the British commission proposes should be done to bring down the cost of drugs: First, the abandonment of brand names for all new drugs and the use of generic names instead. This was proposed, I suggest, because brand names tend to extend the monopoly position since they are well known long after the protection of the patent expires. Second, the British Commission proposed the filing of a cost report for all new drugs and all existing drugs with sales over $700,000 a year, including anticipated sales, proposed selling prices and proposed profit margins. Presumably this recommendation is a result of the commission's discovery—incidentally confirmed in Canada—that these show little relationship between the cost of production and the ultimate selling price of prescription drugs.

The third point that the British commission made was that they would like to see established a medicines commission to licence drugs on the basis of safety and effectiveness, to control advertising and to approve generic names. Certainly some of the debate here has emphasized the need for safety, and for biological and chemical equivalency. We in this part of the house can do nothing but applaud efforts in Canada to increase the government testing staff to better ensure that the public is protected. However, we must never conclude that generic drugs are unsafe nor that brand names have some heaven sent monopoly on safety, for it must be remembered that both Thalidomyde and Cutler Salk polio vaccine were either brand name or ethical drugs, not generics at all.

The Swedes have not pussy-footed around this drug price problem either. The government of Sweden is threatening to nationalize the drug industry if drug prices do not come down. A Swedish drug lobbyist, Mr. R. Westerling, as reported in the Toronto Star of July 29, 1968, said: "American prices of eight popular drugs are 76 per cent above those in Sweden". Drug prices appear to be about 10 per cent higher in Canada, so that would make the cost of our drugs 86 per cent higher than the cost in Sweden.

The same article concludes as follows:

> Isn't it time the Canadian pharmaceutical manufacturers stopped howling as if ruin and outrage were about to descend on the drug industry? Isn't it time that the P.M.A.C. stopped affronting parliament with phoney and specious excuses for soaking the sick.

A layman might be forgiven for asking how all this came about. How could one industry insinuate itself so intimately into the medical profession and government agencies that country after country contemplates steps or has taken them to prevent its citizens from being "rooked" by the drug industry? How do they get away with it?

I think it is necessary to realize that the patent medicine and prescription drug industry has proceeded on a broad front to solidify its position over a long period of time. Here are some of the ways this industry has been allowed to go about it.

One of the most damnable reasons is the myth held by free enterprise parties that competition between manufacturers is enough to ensure fair and equitable prices, and that the government let industries and professions police themselves. The procedure, of course, whether we talk about the drug industry, the electrical industry or the insurance industry, is that the big fish first of all eat all the little fish. Then, in turn, they get together and agree on a fixed price, which defeats the concept of free enterprise and free competition.

To give one example of this, as was mentioned by my colleague, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer), on December 29, 1960, a federal court in New York city convicted three leading firms of criminal anti-trust violations involving the antibiotic tetracycline and two chemically related, broad spectrum "wonder drugs". These firms were Charles Pfizer, American Cyanamid, and Bristol Myers and Company, the conspirators named by the court. E. R. Squibb and the Upjohn Company were ruled guilty and the court fined the firms $50,000 each for conspiring to fix prices.

During the prosecution it was revealed that American Cyanamid's cost of production for one hundred 250 milligram capsules was $1.50. However, the cost to the pharmacist charged by all five firms was $30.60 for the same number of pills. So much for price fixing. Undoubtedly, other examples could be cited. So much for the free rein of competition as it exists in the drug industry and, I assume, in many other industries as well.

The second point I should like to make is that the medical profession cannot escape its share of responsibility in the matter of high drug costs. It has been far too uncritical of the claims of detail men, the drug financed medical journals and the letters of correction forced upon the companies by the action of the food and drug administration.

Morton Mintz, a Washington Post reporter, who has made a specialty of ferreting out the sins of the drug industry had this to say in the New Republic of July 6:

> In few areas of our mass-marketing technological economy is the medieval doctrine of "caveat emptor" less relevant than for prescription drugs.

The late Senator Estes Kefauver described it in this way:

> He who orders does not buy, and he who buys does not order. For a patient the issue is more than economic; a potent medicine that is ineffective or less effective or safe than other preparations, may injure or even kill . . . It is, therefore, of high importance to the public health that the physician not be misled about the proper uses of the drugs that can be sold only if he prescribes them.

Since the 1962 Kefauver-Harris amendments to the U.S. food and drug act which required prescription drug advertising to carry a true statement, in brief summary, the F.D.A. has taken 33 formal actions against 26 manufacturers, including the largest and most prestigeous in the prescription field, and forced them to retract in the Physicians' Desk Reference and in letters of correction.

In 1967, the F.D.A. invited comments on new regulations to tighten up deceptions brought to light in corrective letters. Not one U.S. medical group or practitioner responded in support of the F.D.A. This suggests to me either an apathy or an outright complicity. The physicians seem to enjoy being fooled, and so deception of physicians continues to be a profitable pursuit.

Third, the responsibility for deception rests with advertising of one kind or another. It has been reported that in excess of $3,000 spent on advertising and promotion per doctor per year adds between $600 million and $850 million annually to U.S. prescription costs. With so much at stake it is little wonder that the U.S. news media give little prominence to charges brought by the F.D.A. in an attempt to eliminate deceptive advertising. This is a lucrative bread and butter item for newspapers, radio, magazines and TV. Therefore, we cannot depend on these media to kill the goose that lays the golden egg any more than we can depend on the industry to police itself.

That spurious advertising is widespread may be underlined by the results of an exhaustive two year review of the efficacy of 3,640 pharmaceutical products marketed in the U.S. between 1938 and 1962. A preliminary report released by the National Academy of Sciences and the National Research Council provides further ammunition for the critics of the drug industry. According to the report, only 10 per cent of the drugs wholly live up to the claims made for them by their makers. About 10 per cent will probably be denied market privileges for lacking the therapeutic value claimed for them. This leaves 80 per cent of the drug products which are deceptively advertised beyond the limits of their usefulness. These statistics are contained in "Fortune" of July, 1968. So let the buyer beware all right, and the physician and governments too, Mr. Speaker.

It seems to me that an irrefutable case has been made by previous speakers over the past few days of this debate. I think few will disagree that the evidence is damning. I do not think this little bill by itself will do much to lower drug prices far enough, and neither do my colleagues. It might frighten some companies into making some temporary price adjustments. The bill is really only a sabre-rattling exercise. Two or three years from now, when the evidence proves inescapably that we should apply further corrective measures, please let us not hear a plea to substantiate further moves by more studies. We have already studied this matter to death, and so have other countries. Further studies will be just another stall, an excuse for not taking action.

We have had the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission study of 1963, the Hall Commission study of 1964, and the study undertaken by a parliamentary committee whose report resulted in the siring of this bill. We have the United States studies, the British commission and the Swedish experience at our disposal. They all say the same thing, that is, that the cost of prescription drugs is too damn high; and we have listened to the reasons ad nauseam.

So, let us get tough, if we have to. Let us get on with the job of protecting the patient, because he cannot do it himself. But whatever happens, Mr. Speaker, in the next three or five years, in order to get on with the job one thing we do not need is more studies.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the minister on his cool.

Mr. Basford: On what?

Mr. Rynard: On your cool. Actually, the minister was so cool that we never got him to the point where we could thaw him out. Not an amendment was agreed to by the minister. He was so nice about refusing them all that we could not even just get up and walk out. I also congratulate hon. members who have contributed to this debate. I am sure this is a matter of great concern to everybody in the house. I am sure it is also of great concern to the minister. All hon. members have tried to do the best they can in presenting their views in this respect. Parliament must accept responsibility for passing this bill. We are responsible for seeing that it is a bill that does some good for the people of Canada, who are paying the shot.

We are also responsible for seeing that the bill does no harm. This is what bothers me, because certain fundamental principles have been forgotten. In fact, the very principle that drug safety must be paramount, as emphasized by the Harley Committee, was negated when this bill was brought forward by the minister. I have a high regard for him, but here we have a food and drugs bill that is concerned with clinical equivalency and safety and it is brought in by the department of consumer affairs. I do not blame the minister for this. However, the No. 1 priority is to make sure that the drugs we are using are safe.

I shall not dwell on those matters which have been so ably dealt with by my confrere, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith). He spoke about the harm that might occur to the pharmacological industry, the people who would find themselves out of a job and the research people who would be going south of the border. The hon. member spoke about all the other things that might happen as a result of the passage of this bill.

I think the minister will remember that some friends from his own party pointed out the unfortunate economic effects of such legislation. This question was argued in committee. The minister will remember that very well. Members of his own party argued these things in the committee. I compliment them for putting up such a good fight in this respect. As a matter of fact, they put up as good a fight as any of us. I wonder what has happened to those boys.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rynard: What has happened to them would make an interesting story. There was the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Rock), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto), who challenged his own minister's statement that the economic effects cannot be measured. The minister will recall the statement that it is possible to project the economic effects of such legislation on drug prices and manufacturing in Canada. It is to the government's discredit that this has not been done.

I asked the minister about the economic report. He was quite frank and honest, as I think he has tried to be throughout this debate, and told me that the economic report would not be available until the fall. We are being asked to buy a pig-in-a-poke, because the minister does not know the answer. He could not answer the hon. member for York East when he said he could get a feasibility report that would be accurate within 2 per cent. However, Mr. Speaker, I will leave that aspect of this matter.

The minister says that the industry will look after itself. He did not agree to having a tribunal of the industry consider this question. He did not agree to having a tribunal of the Food and Drug Directorate consider it. He said that if the question had to be referred to a tribunal, he would not put in the legislation a provision to cover it. In other words, as the provision is now, the Patent Commissioner could send a note to the Food and Drug Directorate and it could be forgotten there, left lying on his desk.

There is nothing mandatory in this respect. I wonder why not. The minister said that he has slept on the question. I think he did, because we have not had any answer. But I did not sleep on it; I thought about it. I thought: What in heck is wrong with this minister, that he cannot make a concession on a procedure he said is going to occur anyway? Is this arrogance? Is it stubbornness? I cannot imagine the minister being arrogant or stubborn, but he said he slept on it and did not come up with the answer.

I shall now deal with a few other points, Mr. Speaker. The point that concerns us most, the one with regard to which we see the most danger, is simply that of the clinical equivalency of drugs. This point has not been covered. Many citations have been put forward in the debate on this point. We have heard this, that and the other thing. All the citations were good. I should like to put on the record what was said by Dr. Goddard in this respect. He was quoted last night by N.D.P. members. Dr. Goddard, when speaking to the American College of Clinical Pharmacology in Atlantic City, New Jersey, said:

> The U.S. pharmacopia and the national formulary provide no biological performance test from which we can conclude whether a particular dosage form of a particular drug will perform as it is supposed to perform in the human.

Over and over again, we have been told by the Food and Drug Directorate that they have the answers. The minister has assured us that they have all the answers, and that these drugs can be tested. Dr. Goddard, Commissioner of the Food and Drug Directorate of the United States, whose formulas we use over and over again, went on to say in that address that there is no test from which we can conclude whether a particular dosage form of a particular drug will perform as it is supposed to perform in the human. He went on to say:

> This has not been a wilful omisson. Until recently, it just was not considered necessary.

We just cannot fool the people in this regard. Why cannot we be honest and say there is a risk here? Dr. Goddard went on to say:

> There are two reasons we can think of which explain this attitude of blissful ignorance which all of us—let me repeat, all of us—have enjoyed thus far. To begin with, there was an assumption that different specimens of a dosage form containing the same concentration of the same active ingredient will behave the same way—

They just do not. Then Dr. Goddard said:

> I think it is fair to say that most of us in clinical work now know that such an assumption may be valid for many drugs, but is not valid for all drugs. Considering the vigorous activity in clinical pharmacology and chemotherapy which you and your colleagues carry on, and considering the alleged vast number of checkpoints in our drug distribution system, I have to say I am more than disappointed.

• (3:30 p.m.)

This is the awesome thing which the Minister has hanging over his head. The address goes on:

> I am deeply disturbed at our situation today.
>
> I am taking this opportunity, I am using this particular form, to express my misgivings to you and, through you, to all our colleagues in medicine.
>
> What, then, are the elements of this issue which must be vigorously and immediately explored? We know that different drug products which are generically equivalent have been shown to perform differently in vivo. How widespread is this phenomenon? How many different drug classes are involved? How serious is this phenomenon in the public health field? And what does the FDA intend to do about it?

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Rynard: Yes, if Mr. Speaker will permit.

Mr. Schreyer: Even agreeing that perhaps the bill is not precise enough in relation to the question of clinical equivalency, would he not admit that the effects of two drugs of the same kind and of the same clinical equivalency would vary in accordance with the receptivity of individual patients?

Mr. Rynard: Given the same clinical equivalency, drugs working on the same person would work in exactly the same way.

This writer goes on to say:

> Science has been accumulating a great deal of observable information about drugs over the past 100 years. In the recent past we have sought through good law, reasonable legislation and good science to document this information particularly as to safety and effectiveness. But our documentation falls far short of what we need.

There is the story. We were led to believe in the committee that they had the answers—that they could test a product and arrive at the therapeutic equivalency. The writer goes on to tell us that new kinds of experimental data are needed. I am not saying this in order to be critical or to be smart about it. I am saying it in the hope that the minister will pay heed. I hope, he will, because he is a bright young man. I trust he will act accordingly, because this is our last recourse. The address states:

> We need new kinds of experimental data to tell us the minimum concentration of a drug in the blood and urine from which we can deduce that there is enough of the drug available to be viable and to do the job it is supposed to do.

I shall not continue to take up the time of the house on this aspect. But this makes clear the awesome task which the minister has assumed. I am sure he has not thought much about it or he would have shown more responsibility about bringing some of the professors from the pharmacology departments of the Universities before the committee to give evidence. But not one was called.

I want to ask the Minister what he intends to do now. He can go into any city in Canada and find drugs sold at half a dozen different prices. This has been documented by responsible people. He has power to act without recourse to this legislation at all. If he had taken action before on the basis of legislation already in existence he could have brought down the price of drugs. This bill is window dressing.

Now, I want to ask the minister whether he proposes to set up designated areas in which companies he intends to help locate—companies which might otherwise decide they would have to move across the border. Is he willing to lose these companies? He says he intends to give money to the firms which are already operating in Canada and let them go ahead. But these firms are doing all right. Some of them are not brand name companies but generic name companies. I could name two in my own area. Empire Laboratories and Paul Maney Laboratories. They are both doing well. One of these firms wrote to the minister asking: What are you trying to do to us? They are small firms, comparatively speaking.

Next, what does the Minister intend to do about those poor people who are living on old age pensions? This legislation was supposed to bring drug prices down. He even said he was prepared to go further. He told us that if it should turn out that the measures proposed did not have the desired effect he would be prepared to take further measures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: What will the Minister do about the 18 per cent of our people who are taking drugs in Canada though they cannot really afford them? That is the big question. That is the social question. Not one word has been said about these people. It is just window dressing for the government to say: We are reducing drug prices. This phrase catches the headlines. They have completely forgotten about the old age pensioners and those on social services. They brought in the medicare legislation under which a doctor can write prescriptions for them. But who pays for them to be filled? If old age pensioners do not have the money, what will they do? These are the social questions which are bothering us, not the window dressing which has been put on for show. And this applies to 18 per cent of the people across Canada who have to buy drugs, the people on limited incomes on social services.

[Mr. Rynard.]

I know the Minister is an intelligent fellow and a kind hearted fellow. I ask him this: will the government's next move be in favour of these underprivileged people, these people who are living on or below the poverty line and who cannot afford these drugs? The government has brought in the medicare legislation under which a doctor can write the prescription. The doctor is paid for doing so, but nothing is paid in respect of the drugs to be purchased with it. We are concerned, here, with the forgotten people.

I propose to read, now, from a comment by the Canadian Medical Association.

"Bill C-102 places an extremely heavy responsibility on the Department of National Health and Welfare and on the food and drug directorate.

This is of special significance in the light of what I have put on record today, and I suggest the Minister had better move slowly in the light of some of these considerations. The hon. member from Dauphin says this has already cost the people of Canada $4 million—before they have received any benefit whatsoever.

The statement continues:

What will happen? We doubt that anyone really knows. However, our knowledge of the doctor—and his concern about the efficacy and safety of what the prescribes—of the fact that the majority of drugs prescribed in Canada will not be affected by this legislation at all (new drug classification), of the food and drug administration—and the probable action it will take following consideration of its responsibility in this area, leads us to believe that relatively little will happen. The cost of drugs will not be markedly reduced and Mr. Basford and his colleagues will introduce additional legislation to make good his naked threat.

And that will be compulsion. Maybe the minister can tell us what his intentions are. One thing I do not want him to forget is the story of clinical equivalency I have put on record this afternoon. And I do not want him to forget the underprivileged people, the 18 per cent who cannot afford to buy drugs on the basis of the prescriptions given to them.

The government has brought in a bill designed, they say, to bring down drug prices. It has brought in medicare legislation which gives people the means of securing drugs. But not one thing has been done to make sure they can purchase the prescriptions they require. In conclusion, I want to say again that I have a high regard for the minister, his coolness, and the other qualities which go with it. However, I hope he will not sleep as soundly as he slept last night, and will be able to come up with some answers to this problem.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, judging from the look of the minister he intends to sleep very soundly tonight in expectation of this bill's receiving third reading. I have only a few things to say about the bill; much has already been said in the course of the debate. I do not believe this bill is really going to lower drug prices to any large extent, yet having said that I still feel it is one of the most significant bills ever brought before the House of Commons. At least, it has proceeded this far; hopefully it will be passed.

I think its significance lies in one particular feature. What we saw here was a confrontation between one of the most powerful economic interests in this country and the government on behalf of the people. There is no doubt that the people won hands down. The powerful P.M.A.C., that great tiger that made and broke members of parliament, turns out to be made of paper. I think it is true that in any confrontation, not only a confrontation between the government and organizations like the P.M.A.C. but with any great economic interest in this country, if the government or its ministers are willing to say that the interests of the people shall be paramount, then the particular interest loses out.

I hope that the victory that appears to be won will not be a Pyrrhic victory. I said to begin with that I do not see how prices will be lowered significantly as a result of the passage of this bill. I think they will be lowered to the extent that they reach the level in the United States, plus whatever tariff applies.

My colleagues in this party have put on record and demonstrated that even if the prices went down to those prevailing in the United States, they would still be much, much too high. Evidence has been placed on the record indicating that these drug companies are being prosecuted in the United States for colluding against the public interest. They have been forced to pay massive fines because of their behaviour in the marketplace. There is little that this bill can do or will do about that particular situation.

I believe the minister is aware of this problem. He has indicated that he is prepared to go beyond the measures contained in this particular bill, and perhaps the very fact that he has said this publicly will be enough to force the drug companies to re-examine their pricing policies.

However, even if the drug companies wish to make changes, I do not think they are going to be able to do so unless other measures are brought to bear in the marketplace in which they operate. They have all put themselves in the position where they spend 20 to 30 per cent of the selling price of their products on advertising and promotion. They are going to continue to do this in an effort to take business away from each other; they are going to continue the kind of competition that really has almost no effect on lowering prices. Quite the contrary, it has the effect of raising prices and is really not worth while in any sense of the word "competition".

In some ways we would be better off with a monopoly in the drug industry in this country if that monopoly would eliminate the high cost of selling and pass on the savings to the people of this country. A monopoly is probably unacceptable for a number of reasons, but one thing we must consider most seriously is the injection of significant competition into the market place. We can get this competition in two ways. One is the encouragement of small manufacturers to compete pricewise as generic drug manufacturers. To do this, the government has introduced the P.I.D.A. program.

Let there be no mistake about it: it is not enough to introduce the P.I.D.A. program. As the situation now stands, there is every indication that the manufacturers of brand name drugs are going to do everything within their power, as they have in the past, to discredit the manufacturers of generic drugs. The government will, of course, do everything within its power to counteract this and to ensure that the small drug companies are policed for safety reasons, and that the information is available to the public. But the government's action may not be the complete answer.

Therefore, a second possibility has to be explored. It is the one I mentioned earlier, namely the creation of a crown corporation to provide competition in the market place as well as to provide marketing services, if necessary, such as inspection and handling on behalf of some smaller companies that choose to market their products in this way. Some may feel they want to market their own products, and that is fine. But some may feel they need the services of a Crown corporation to market their drugs. Such a Crown corporation could rationalize much of the industry. It could buy certain generics or act as agent for certain manufacturers of generics who may be limited in the number of products they can produce. These drugs could be combined with the products of other companies, and in that way a complete line of drugs could be marketed.

One hon. member raised the question, and I think it is a valid one, of the possibility of exporting drugs. He expressed the hope that one day Canada might produce efficiently enough to export drugs into world markets. I think that though this might be possible in the future it would not be under the present system where our drug industry is dominated by United States branch plants. Under the U.S. branch plant system markets are allocated. Companies are told where to go and where not to go. Under such a system, I do not think that drug exports can be anything more than a pious hope as far as we are concerned.

Were we to have a crown corporation of the type I envisage, exports would become a real possibility for Canada. A crown corporation would have credibility, being backed by the government of Canada. It would not have to hide its books from the government of Canada. Safety of its products would be assured by inspection services provided by the government of Canada. Again, it could act as an international marketing agency on behalf of some of our smaller generic drug manufacturers. It would be an example of where private industry and public enterprise could work together to the benefit of all. Perhaps it would not work to the benefit of that handful of companies that dominate the drug market and have abused the privilege; but in a situation of this kind somebody must suffer, and if the choice has to be between a few drug companies and the entire population of Canada, I think sympathy has to lie with the people of this country.

We have been told that there is some danger that research will be eliminated in Canada. When I hear statements like that I find it hard not to laugh out loud, especially since an examination of the figures will reveal that the amount of research carried out in this country is infinitesimal. On the other hand, if a crown corporation such as we have been suggesting were set up, we might get a great deal of research here. The crown corporation would have the facilities and the incentives to carry out research and to create a drug industry that would be indigenous to this country. It could absorb the scientists and bright young people coming from our universities and technical schools.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

During the committee hearings we heard the threat that if this bill were passed the big drug companies may move out of this country across the border. Some think that such a move on the part of the drug companies would be something to worry about. My reaction to that threat is, "I will make you a sandwich. When are you leaving?" The drug companies seem to think that only they can make drugs. Well, Mr. Speaker, 21 million people in this country need drugs and if the international drug companies now competing in Canada will not make our drugs, others will. If private investors are not willing to undertake the manufacture of drugs, a public corporation will be willing to do so. The point is that the people employed in the industry will remain employed in that industry. As a matter of fact perhaps more will be employed in research; less copying of the work of others will take place and this country may become important as a centre of drug manufacturing. There is no reason for Canadians to pay the kind of prices that prevail in the drug field now. As I pointed out, our drug prices are among the highest in the world. That situation is intolerable and passage of this legislation will indicate to those responsible for our high prices that we will no longer tolerate those high prices.

Although I could say a great deal more, I wish to stress again the importance of this legislation. As a party we have fought hard for it, harder than some members of the government have. Passage of this bill will show the world that our people, instead of being content to be dominated by economically powerful and monopolistic industries, wish to have the right to decide their own future, to make their own choices and to make their own value judgments. With passage of this bill, our people have won a great victory and set a new precedent.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to mention one or two points related to this bill. The defenders of the drug industry and the people within the drug industry have called the bill half baked; the group to which I belong call it a half measure. The minister says that it will do the job of lowering drug prices. Time and experience will tell whether he is right. I hope the minister and his colleagues will not take too long before deciding whether the legislation is doing its intended work.

Although I do not support this legislation as wholeheartedly as the hon. member for Waterloo does, I support it being not at all convinced that it will do the job the minister expects of it. If events prove me wrong I shall be glad to be wrong. I am not so naïve as to think that, following this legislation, the drug industry in this country will quietly and co-operatively work towards the attainment of the objectives of this bill. The industry will go to great lengths to show that the legislation cannot work. I point out that the amendments hon. members of this group proposed that were ruled out of order are on the record. The minister may adopt them at any time. He may use them one year from now or sooner if it becomes evident that drug prices in this country have not been reduced significantly. I submit that the five main proposals we brought before the minister and the house on second reading are still valid and relevant if this legislation is to control drug prices and the drug industry effectively.

It seems that international drug companies are now manufacturing many of our drugs. For years we have been told by Canadian and United States drug manufacturers that "foreign" drug manufacturers are dangerous because the quality of their drugs is inferior to ours. The public was warned not to use "foreign" drugs. Yet less than a year ago, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada went to Europe to hold meetings with European manufacturers. I believe the meetings took place in Stockholm a few months ago. The two sets of manufacturers formed themselves into an international association. Mr. Speaker, I am gazing into a crystal ball; it may be clouded, but I can see this international association going to great lengths to achieve co-operation between companies in Canada, the United States, Europe and, possibly, Japan.

It will all be very subtle. There will be understandings between various companies, and the Government of Canada alone will find it impossible to oversee the activities of such an association. What has happened within the drug industry in North America will spread to other countries, and no one government alone will be able to properly police the activities of such an organization. I suggest that the minister ought to talk to the Solicitor General and suggest to him that instead of having R.C.M.P. officers spending a great deal of time in plain clothes trying to find a few grains of marijuana in some kids' pocket, it might be wise to set up an underground network so the R.C.M.P. can secure information to enable us to control in this country the activities of such an international association.

May I also ask the minister to persuade his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), not to be overly generous with non-Canadian owned drug manufacturing companies in the dispensing of loans under the pharmaceutical industry development assistance program. If anyone is worried about the welfare of our own companies and about their inability to survive, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce can give our companies financial assistance to enable them to compete on an equal basis with international companies.

Under this legislation, the minister will not be able to do much with respect to patents on new drugs until five years have elapsed. That provision has been introduced allegedly to allow the inventors of new drugs to recover their costs of development. It seems to me that if a manufacturer is given a five year monopoly to recover the costs of research and development, he ought to be required by law to file complete information on those costs which are to be recovered. This would serve as a check on the price he wishes to charge. It would enable the government to check him if he seeks to engage in unreasonable and unconscionable pricing within that five year period which he has to recover these costs. Giving manufacturers a blanket five years without knowing what is involved in the makeup of these prices certainly leaves the door ajar, if not wide open, to the manufacturer to, I won't say cook the books, but to exaggerate the so-called costs of research development and promotion in an effort to get the maximum profit.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Basford: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I am not clear precisely as to what agreements there were. I do not know how long the hon. member intends to speak. I believe there was discussion and an agreement that we would stop now and deal with private members business, namely, the Quebec Savings Bank bill. I believe there was substantial agreement we would then come back to the drug bill in order to give it third reading before 4.30.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point the minister raised, I believe the member who has the floor is the concluding speaker in the debate. This debate could be over in a few minutes and that would leave enough time for the bill referred to before proceeding to royal assent.

Mr. Basford: I rose because I did not know how long the hon. member was going to be. If it is a few minutes, I would be in agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude in a few minutes. It is my understanding there was agreement we would go to a few minutes past four o'clock, and then deal with the private members' bill. I shall conclude in a few moments.

The government of Canada must, in concert with governments of other countries, conduct a thorough and continuing scrutiny of the drug industry. In concert with these other countries, the government of Canada must carry on the fullest exchange of information in order to protect our citizens, particularly in the matter of drug costs and safety. When action is needed to penalize drug manufacturers or scrutinize drugs, Mr. Speaker, the countries must act together. In other words, we need an international cartel of governments to protect people from high cost and unsafe drugs.

May I say to the minister that I hope I am wrong in my predictions for this bill. I hope the measures he proposes prove to be completely effective in substantially lowering the cost of drugs, controlling the quality of drugs and placing some severe limitation on the promotion and advertising of them.

Many hon. members of this house and many people across the country will watch the effects of this legislation as well as the activities of the minister, his department and the Food and Drug Directorate for the next several months. I feel a year and a half would be sufficient time for these results to materialize. If the results are not there and the minister does not take the initiative to bring about additional measures, there will be others in this house and other places attempting to start those measures.

Mr. Basford: May I, as a matter of privilege, express my thoughts to the hon. members of this house. This bill is now leaving this house to go to the Senate.

May I express my thanks to hon. members of all parties for their contributions to the deliberations on this bill, to those members who served on the Harley committee and the committee of health and welfare. I thank them for their attention to this very pressing problem.

As Dr. Harley is no longer a member of this house, may I record the thanks of this house to him for his services as chairman of the special committee on drug prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Basford: This bill arises from the Harley committee report. It is a very fitting tribute to his years in parliament.

Although people are usually not named in this house, may I take the unusual step of recording those officials who assisted me in my department and in the Department of Health and Welfare. They have acted beyond the call of duty in serving their minister in working on this program to lower drug prices; Mr. McLeod, Mr. Davidson, Mr. Henry, Mr. Laidlaw, and Dr. Chapman.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being four o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANK

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-27, An Act respecting The Quebec Savings Bank.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I might intervene. If the house would make an order, it would be easier. The understanding of the house at this time is to consider item 3, namely second reading of an act respecting The Quebec Savings Bank Act, and upon conclusion of consideration of that bill that we then adjourn. In other words, private members hour would be confined to considering one bill only, namely S-27.

Mr. Basford: We on this side are in agreement. I would suggest an order to deal with item 3 on private bills, and then revert back to government business rather than adjourn. This would be useful. I have had wonderful co-operation from the house today. I suggest that we revert to the hazardous products bill and deal with a very minor amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I make this one rider, the two previous private members' bills will retain their precedence. I don't think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) mentioned that.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laflamme (for Mr. Guay, Lévis) moved that Bill S-27, respecting The Quebec Savings Bank, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, the main objectives of this bill, which has been passed unanimously in the Senate, are to authorize the Banque d'Économie du Québec, in operation since 1948 under the terms of a special legislation of a Canadian province and which since April 21, 1871 has pursued its activities under the terms of a special legislation similar to the Bank Act, to purely and simply become a bank like any other bank, subject to the general regulations applicable to charter banks in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I shall only say a few words to draw your attention to the fact that, following a meeting of about 500 shareholders of the Banque d'Économie du Québec, it has been agreed and resolved to bring forward this bill in order to allow this chartered bank, which has been in operation for many years and has 27 branches in Metropolitan Quebec and whose deposits amount to over $60 million, to meet its obligations and compete with other financial institutions. In fact, the main purposes which the savings bank had set for itself at the beginning are now carried out by other financial institutions, especially the credit unions and the "caisses populaires".

The aims pursued by the savings bank formerly must be amended, and though this new direction has some disadvantages for the Quebec savings bank, especially with regard to its reserves, which are of 5 per cent, and which it is empowered to deposit to the bank to receive interest, it will have to comply with section 72 of the bank act, that is deposit in the Bank of Canada 4 per cent of its reserves in term deposits, and 12 per cent of its reserves in demand deposits.

This bill is being introduced, on the whole, not to create a new bank but to enable a particular bank in existence for many years to extend its activities.

I submit that hon. members might suggest to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, to assign the directors and the principal employees of the bank who will then be able to provide all the information and details concerning its operations.

Mr. Speaker, if the savings bank becomes a chartered bank, it is not really a matter of creating a new bank, because as far as its capital and reserves are concerned, it already falls under the jurisdiction of the general inspector of banks.

As I say, all its shareholders are Canadian citizens, and more especially, Quebecers

The object of the bill is to enable the bank to avail itself of powers granted to banks generally, which will enable it to compete with other financial institutions, to enter on the business market and engage in a new activity.

At the present time, it can grant mortgage loans, since 1954 only, and it can also grant personal loans.

I would like to go over a few points discussed by the inspector general of banks in his testimony before the Senate committee which studied this bill. He declared that to compensate for the inconveniences, which I enumerated a while ago, and for the losses of revenue which the savings bank will undergo because its reserves will be deposited with the Bank of Canada, it will have to move into the industrial and economic fields.

That is why the Quebec Savings Bank which is unable to expand today wants to become a financial institution like the others, in order to become competitive and to meet its engagements.

Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I respectfully suggest that the bill be referred to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for examination.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we are somewhat pleased to be able to cooperate with the hon. member in "deseparatising" this bank, making it more of a national structure than a provincial one. However, we do so with a certain amount of wonderment, in particular about the Quebec Savings Bank but also about the general banking structure and the banking fraternity in Canada, of which presumably this bank will become a part. We know that within recent years our banks have been perhaps the greatest single contributing factor to the pressures of inflation.

This is partly because of revisions to the Bank Act, partly because of the removal of the interest rate ceiling, partly because the banks themselves participate in advertising, as it were, to push their wares and services upon us, and partly because our banking institutions in effect create money out of nothing. Each time this is done they pump into the economy additional millions and millions of dollars that are used to buy the goods and the services that we produce. They are doing this at a faster rate than the Department of Finance or federal government can cope with.

On the one hand, we have had the government, by tax increases and the like, trying to dampen the so-called fires of inflation and, on the other hand, permitting the banking fraternity and the banking institutions to add to the fires of inflation. As I have said, they are able to do so at a much greater pace than the government can keep up with.

The mere fact that we have seen the profits of banks jump somewhere in the neighbourhood of 40 per cent in the last year is indicative of the additional activity that they are pursuing in the money market, and indicative of the pressures that the banks are putting on the inflationary spiral. We know that the more the banks engage in advertising, the more they attract the general public to borrow greater and greater amounts of money, and the greater the desire of banks to get into the consumer credit field, the greater will be these pressures on inflation and the greater the devaluation of the dollar itself. So it is with a certain amount of reluctance that we endorse what is being asked of us at the moment. Probably one result will be the addition of one more point of pressure on inflation. There will be the addition of one more banking institution to create more money and create more inflationary pressure by urging people into greater debt. This is a picture which, on balance, we do not think is good for the nation.

But when this bill goes to committee it will permit us to explore these things in a great deal more detail than is possible at this point. Those of our members who are on that committee, and who have some expertise in this particular field, will be interested in going into those details at that time.

We know that other banks have on their boards of directors, those who are also senators. We know from past experience that certain senators, were on the boards of directors of certain banks. In view of their financial interests in certain banks they interfered with the normal parliamentary procedures a few years ago when there was a desire to establish more banks. One of the saving features we might put into this bill at committee stage, and hopefully the same idea might be incorporated into the Bank Act, is that senators and members of parliament be excluded from participating in the boards of directors of these banks. After all, by permitting this activity we have placed members of the other house in the position of having to try to serve two masters, their financial one and the public interest. We should try to correct that situation, and we look forward to an explanation in committee about these and many other points.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the motion to refer this bill to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, for study.

I am naturally in favor of this bill, because its object is to allow this old Quebec bank to operate as if it had been incorporated for a long time. I find it rather surprising that it has not been encouraged before now, and that it has not been treated like the other banks.

Some hon. members may be surprised to hear a member of the Ralliement Créditiste support the establishment of a new chartered bank. We once supported the establishment of a new bank in Canada, but we did not get anywhere. As concerns this one, we are happy that the bill was unanimously adopted in the Senate, because I find that given the system we live in, we have to accept the will of the majority, even if we do not always agree with it.

We are not against banks, because they should play their role fully in the private sector, as the Bank of Canada must do in the public sector.

At present, it is the opposite, because chartered banks have much more influence than the Bank of Canada. Experts tell us that the Bank of Canada's role is only secondary, but we are fighting so that it can play its true role.

I was glad to hear the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) say so earlier, and I saw government members with a startled looks on their faces when he said that chartered banks create credit.

It is precisely on that point that we disagree with capitalists and the supporters of the present system, because we want the Bank of Canada to be the only one to create and control credit.

At present, such control is in the hands of chartered banks and if a Quebec bank is authorized to compete with other banks, it will be able to create credit. When the inspector general of chartered banks says that it will incur losses because of its 5 per cent reserve, I believe those losses will be easily compensated by the fact that it will be authorized to operate across Canada, by extending its field of activity and by multiplying its reserves by 14.

We are glad because it is a Quebec bank. We have a right to have within this sytem our own French-Canadian banks, because when we get to studying banks, we find that English-Canadian banks are worth ten to twenty times our small French-Canadian banks. I trust that the people of Quebec will support this bank's endeavours. One can be sure that if parliament and the committee approve the creation of that Quebec bank, they will have shown their will to contribute to the unity of the country, in making it possible for the bill to be passed in the near future.

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. members and I thank them for their excellent co-operation and consensus, which I think will enable that bill to get through an important stage and to be passed soon. I suggest that we must congratulate the directors and shareholders of the Quebec Savings Bank which from now on will carry on its operations under the name of "The People's Bank", which shows the confidence the bank has in the economic future and the democratic institutions of Canada, as well as its sharp sense of progress.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Richard): Does the house agree to adopt the said motion?

Some Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PROHIBITION OF ADVERTISING, SALE AND IMPORTATION—REPORT STAGE

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-26, to prohibit the advertising, sale and importation of hazardous products, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra) moved:

That Bill S-26, An Act to prohibit the advertising, sale and importation of hazardous products be amended by deleting subclauses (3), (4) and (5) of Clause 8 and substituting the following:

"(3) Every order adding a product or substance to Part I or Part II of the Schedule shall be laid before the Senate and the House of Commons not later than fifteen days after it is made or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

(4) If both Houses of Parliament resolve that an order or any part thereof should be revoked, that order or that part thereof is thereupon revoked."

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there will be Royal Assent in a few minutes. I am not sure it is worth going on with another matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in respect of what the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) had to say, although Black Rod will be arriving in a few minutes I think we might as well use this time to deal with the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) and make some progress on it.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, when this bill came to us from the Senate the wording in respect of this clause was as it appears on page 6. This was subsequently amended by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs and submitted to the House in its fifth report. I should like to read this amendment which appears at page 779 of Votes and Proceedings of March 10. I refer particularly to the amendment in respect of subclause (4) which reads as follows:

Where an order is laid before Parliament pursuant to subsection (3), a notice of motion in either

House signed by twenty-five members thereof and made in accordance with the rules of that House within ten days of the day the order was laid before Parliament, praying that the order or any part thereof be revoked, shall be debated in that House at the first convenient opportunity.

The point I want to make is that the way in which the amendment is put interferes with the procedures of this House. I think we could effect the same purpose and allow the House to remain in possession of its own procedures if the bill were amended in the rather simple manner I have proposed. This is a simple procedure which would accomplish the same things that were sought to be done by the committee, but the House would still remain in possession of its own procedures.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question before he sits down? In view of what seems to be reasonable logic in what he has said, can he tell the House how it happened that in the Standing Committee this provision for 25 members putting down their signatures became part of the amendment?

Mr. Deachman: I am sorry, I do not know since I was not a member of that standing committee. However, the records of the standing committee will have the story in full.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask another question since we seem to have time. What is the position of the government in respect of this matter? Did the government support the amendment in committee and then change its mind or has there been some hanky-panky going on?

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deachman: I do not know whether or not there has been hanky-panky, but I put to the house a very simple amendment which would return to the House of Commons its procedures. I hope that hon. members would like to remain in possession of their own procedures rather than having them within the terms of the act. This is why I seek agreement for this amendment.

Mr. Basford: In answer to the questions that have been asked, I might indicate that the government supports both amendments, the one that was made in committee and the one which is before us now. It is an improvement on the one put forward by the committee.

[Mr. Deachman.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where does that leave the rest of us? It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) makes sense since it leaves the matter in the hands of the house rather than trying to write house procedures into a statute. But I think I deserve to be forgiven for wondering what has been going on.

The minister did not make things any easier to understand when he said that the government supports both propositions. The government cannot do that—it is either one or the other.

Mr. Fairweather: They have been doing it for years.

Mr. Basford: The history of the matter is that an amendment was put forward in the Senate committee which was unacceptable to me as the minister responsible for the bill. Then, an amendment was made in the committee of the house, which was acceptable to me, but it transpired that there should have been further consultations on the amendment that was made in the committee to avoid the problem of which the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra spoke, that is that there was not sufficient consultation on the committee's amendment regarding the matter of the house controlling its own business. Therefore, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra put forward an amendment which I regard as an improvement over the one proposed in the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister has won me over by telling me that what we are doing here is an improvement on what was done in the other place.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I ask the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra a question, Mr. Speaker?

First of all, I should like to congratulate the minister on the way in which he has piloted previous legislation. I am really not too clear on the nature of the amendment before us. I am sure the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra would like to elaborate on it and give us some more details of the amendment which he has proposed. I believe that other hon. members may also have questions about it, as do I. Perhaps we could begin by asking him what he had in mind, because he spoke about the amendment in a great hurry and certain questions were left in my mind.

Mr. Deachman: The purpose of the amendment is very simple. It does not really relate to the bill as much as to the way in which procedures are to be handled in parliament. Provision is made in the bill for additions to the schedule of hazardous substances from time to time. If hon. members turn to the Votes and Proceedings of March 10, they will see at page 779 the way in which this was to be put into the act by an amendment proposed by the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The committee proposed a series of procedures in parliament which would take away from parliament the right to handle its own affairs. These procedures would be set forth in the act. What I propose to do by the simple amendment is to effect the same purpose so far as the bill is concerned, while leaving the matter of how it is to be proceeded with in the House of Commons in the hands of parliament itself. To put it in exact words, the amendment to subclause (4) reads as follows:

> If both Houses of Parliament resolve that an order or any part thereof should be revoked, that order or that part thereof is thereupon revoked.

It does not, for instance, tell them what procedures they should employ in order to do that. It is a simple technical amendment which concerns this house rather than the bill itself.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am taking the chance of running into some heavy weather with some experts in the house, especially members from out west such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), but I did get the impression from the minister's remarks that he was not satisfied with the amendment. The only thing that worries me is the fact that the principle involved is more important than the amendment itself. Of course we have run into this problem in various other committees, such as in the committee on fisheries. About a month ago we attempted to make certain amendments in the committee which were later not accepted in the house.

I would like to believe that there is a possibility of proposing amendments in standing committees that can receive approval in the house. For example, I should like to ask the minister whether, if a standing committee of the house makes an amendment of which he does not approve, he can automatically prevent the amendment from coming to the house. Do the regulations of the house which we adopted recently allow such a situation? The matter which I bring to the attention of the house is related directly to the powers of standing committees and the possibility of the legislative process being thwarted if the minister is not in favour of an amendment proposed in the committee. I wonder whether, as was said recently by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), we have a dictatorship instead of a parliamentary system in that ministers of the cabinet can determine the exact nature of the legislation to be presented to the house, especially now that there is a majority government in control. This is a lengthy question which is not directly related to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, but I should like to hear the minister's reaction to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I might make an observation at this point. I do not want to interfere with the debate, but I feel that this line of questioning is out of order. I understand the hon. member's concern, and perhaps it may be in the best interest of the house for the minister to answer, but I want to add that caveat. I have misgivings as to this type of questioning on such an amendment.

Mr. Basford: The plain fact is that any committee that has a piece of legislation in front of it can amend it, and the bill comes to this house as amended by the committee. That is the case with Bill S-26 before us now which went into committee in one form and came out of it in an amended form. This amendment, which was placed on the order paper and moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, is an improvement over the amendment made in the committee. It does not nullify the amendment made in the committee.

Both amendments involve the same principle, namely, that orders made under the act be laid before parliament, and the new amendment deals only with procedure. I want to emphasize that if a standing committee has a bill before it, it can amend it. The bill then comes to the House of Commons as amended, and the minister cannot throw those amendments out.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say, with your indulgence, that if you consider my previous interventions to have been questions, I should now like to ask for the floor to say that in the light of the explanations we have heard I should like to withdraw my suggestion that there might have been some hanky-panky. I am sure I can be forgiven for suspecting it because it does happen sometimes around here. However, in this case it seems to me that the picture is now quite clear. The other place altered the bill in a way which the government did not like. The government was successful in getting an amendment through the standing committee which overcame whatever Their Honours did to the bill, and it was in that amended form that it came back to us from the committee.

It was perfectly proper for an hon. member to have thought afterwards that what was done in the committee could be improved upon further. I see that that is what the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra seeks to do, and I think it is an improvement. It achieves the same result, but it leaves us in charge of our own procedures. I commend the minister on winning his battle with the Senate. I commend the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) for improving on what was done in the committee. Perhaps on that note we could pass the amendment.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I was concerned about the discussion of this matter and am inclined to agree with what has been said. But I think it points up the fact that more homework needs to be done in committees by the government. That is the point I make. I have made it twice already. We are breaking new ground; we are in a transformation stage; we are all trying to co-operate with regard to the work of committees. I add the addendum that this difficulty might have been avoided. If someone in the government had been closer to the problem, it could have been handled in the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Amendment (Mr. Deachman) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Basford, seconded by—

Mr. Danforth: There is no minister to second it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —seconded by Mr. Jamieson—

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where is he?

Mr. Danforth: He isn't here.

Mr. Comeau: Change the roster.

Mr. Danforth: That roster is getting pretty slim.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Send for the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Benjamin: Send him to the Senate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Meanwhile I might read a message from the Senate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 31, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

THE LATE GENERAL DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, all members of this house, I know, share today with the government and people of the United States of America a sense of loss at the departure of an honoured and highly respected friend. The death of General Dwight D. Eisenhower permits us to pause to recall the many reasons why Canadians have long regarded General Eisenhower with such warmth.

His leadership as Supreme Allied Commander in Europe in the critical years of World War II acquired for General Eisenhower a lasting reputation in the hearts of the tens of thousands of Canadian servicemen who served under him. His distinguished tour as Commander of the NATO forces and his later occupancy of the highest elective office that his country could offer to him gave all of us numerous opportunities to view his many qualities of leadership and his traits of kindness, understanding and humanity which so endeared him to us all.

Canada long ago marked for all time its indebtedness to General Eisenhower by renaming a mountain in Banff National Park in his honour.

We pause today to think of this friend of Canada. The Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are present in Washington today to convey to the American people our sense of grief.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I concur in the remarks made by the Acting Prime Minister. He stated the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are in Washington. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who was prime minister at the time the late General Eisenhower was president of his country and came to visit Canada, is also present. This, in addition to the thousands of messages from all ranks of life in all parts of this country, indicates the respect, love and affection held for General Eisenhower.

I limit my comments to remarking that while I was not during the course of the conflict of 1939-45, close to General Eisenhower, I was not too far away when he visited France. The respect and admiration held for him by all members of the armed forces bears testimony to his accomplishments. When called upon to make a momentous decision which no one else could make, he made it wisely. We hope that in the future, when such momentous decisions have to be made, there will be men of the calibre of General Eisenhower to make these decisions.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I join in the expression of sorrow to the family of the late General Eisenhower and to the people of the United States of America. General Eisenhower made his mark as a great military commander and as a president of his country, during which presidency he accomplished many things, not the least of which was the end of the war in Korea. He was obviously a sincere man with deep convictions about human welfare and we join all Canadians in mourning his passing.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, in the name of my party, I wish to join with the other hon. members to deplore the death of that eminent personality who has left his mark on several years of this century.

He was above all a great soldier, of which the United States are very proud. During the war all the allies admired his achievements.

We mourn his death and we wish to express our feelings of deep sympathy to his family and to the American people.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—ALLEGED LEAK PRECEDING ANNOUNCEMENT CONCERNING MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in my absence from the house on Friday a question of privilege was raised and I thought it would be useful at this time to give some of the background in respect to the alleged question of privilege.

Alleged Leak re New Airport Site

The final decision on the site of the new Montreal International Airport was based on exhaustive technical studies made over a two and a half year period, consultation with other levels of government and other federal departments since August, 1968, and review of the many presentations from numerous local interest groups. In July, 1968, the decision was taken that a new international airport was required. The Government of Canada decided at that time that the government of the province of Quebec should be consulted in aiding in the final determination of the site for the new airport. This consultation took the form of two inter-governmental committees: From August, 1968, until December, 1968, a federal-provincial technical committee involving the federal government and four departments of the province of Quebec; and from December, 1968, until February, 1969, a federal, provincial and municipal committee involving my department and that of my colleague, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand), four departments of the province of Quebec and the Planning Department of the City of Montreal.

These committees discussed, reviewed and evaluated the possible sites that had been identified during the technical studies from December, 1966, to April 1968. These evaluations were made on the basis of the pertinent criteria which included the following:

1. Air space safety—separation from other important airports, meteorological conditions, obstacles.

2. Information in relation to urbanized areas.

3. Accessibility to the users.

4. Accessibility to Dorval.

5. Transportation network required.

6. Economic potential of airport at the respective sites.

7. Promotion of the economic development of other regions.

8. Cost benefit ratios.

During this process the government of Quebec made known its preferences to the federal government. The discussions with the province continued up until the last moment prior to the final decision by the cabinet. In fact a meeting with Dr. Lussier, Minister of Municipal Affairs of the province of Quebec, for a final review of the several sites was contemplated to be held as late as Thursday morning before the decision was taken. The decision of the federal government was forwarded to the province in a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Premier Bertrand just prior to the public announcement of the site.

It is obvious from the numerous levels of government involved and people within each level of government that this process, which is the only process which could lead to a fair and objective decision, resulted in many people being aware of the exact location of the more favourable sites. Every possible precaution was taken by all those involved that ensured that no one individual in any other level of government or agency knew the final cabinet decision before the decision was stated in the house.

In such a situation involving numerous levels of government with differing specific interests, and where such decision must be based on the technical criteria, it is unlikely that every participating party will be completely satisfied. The federal government recognized that if there were five sites that received intensive examination, four regions would be disappointed following the selection of one of the sites.

It was clearly important when the government announced the choice of the site, that there should be a complete factual briefing for the Canadian people and particularly for the residents of Quebec. Because our decision took into account very important technical considerations the cabinet decided on December 13, that certain advance preparation of material including video taping should be undertaken on a contingency basis.

Because the government does not have available complete facilities within the government service to carry out the necessary preparations, it was necessary to engage a private public relations firm, Agence Canadienne de Publicité Limitée, and to have them make arrangements with a local TV station for advance video recording and video taping. These private firms who collaborated with the government understood that no final decision had been taken by cabinet but that their participation in these advance contingency preparations was subject to the normal discretion and security which is involved in any professional contract. Moreover, as the house is probably aware, the Official Secrets Act has general application in cases of this kind.

Accordingly, the number of people in the publicity firm and at the television stations involved in these preparations was kept to an essential minimum. The advance video recordings were made on Saturday and Sunday, March 22 and 23, because studio time was available and because this was also the most convenient time for ministers to carry out the recordings.

While the government took an advance decision to make certain contingency preparations for the release of information, a firm decision on the site of the airport was not reached until the cabinet meeting on March 27. Prior to that meeting, there had been a request on the part of the Quebec government for further meetings, and the federal government indicated its willingness to enter into such discussions, noting that the matter was to be discussed at the cabinet meeting on Thursday, March 27. As it turned out it was not possible to arrange a mutually convenient time.

During the cabinet meeting on March 27 there was a special technical briefing regarding the relative merits of the various sites under consideration, and later in the morning a decision to select a site was taken. Following this the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) communicated with Prime Minister Bertrand to let him know that a decision had been taken and asking him to receive a special courier carrying a letter which set out in detail the consideration which had prompted the federal government's decision.

As members are aware, the government's decision was announced to the house shortly after its opening Thursday, March 27. As soon as this was done expropriation papers were filed in the province of Quebec. Once again, as a contingency measure, it had been essential to have these papers in the hands of our own local representatives so that notice of expropriation could be filed immediately after the government's decision had been announced.

In order to ensure that the government was prepared to act on an expropriation immediately upon the public announcement of the sites, expropriations were made ready well in advance of the final decision. Plans were prepared for the more favourable contenders for the final selection. This obviously represents enormous duplication of effort. However, this duplication of effort in advance of the decision led directly to time saved following the decision. We were prepared to act on the basis of a cabinet decision for any of the more favourable sites.

Notwithstanding all precautions and secrecy one might still insist that a leak was possible during the final few days prior to the submission of the expropriation documents. I was advised however that even if a leak of this nature should occur, it would not affect the price of land. The price on expropriation is established on the basis of sales, over a period, of equivalent land in the area. It is not determined by isolated transactions shortly before the expropriation. Therefore a speculator could not make any profit from a last minute purchase. Accordingly, while on principle we took every reasonable precaution to preserve secrecy right to the last moment, no possibility of last minute speculative profits existed in any event.

In general I am satisfied that all possible security measures were taken and that in no sense has there been a breach of cabinet secrecy. While certain advance preparations were undertaken so that the public could be fully informed on a matter of such great importance and where technical considerations were paramount, those involved in these advance preparations were fully aware that no final decision would be taken by the cabinet until immediately prior to the government's announcement. Thus it was always possible that the advance material would not have been used had the government for one reason or another decided not to go ahead on the basis of the recommendations made to it which were based essentially on technical rather than political considerations.

• (2:20 p.m.)

In summary, Mr. Speaker:

1. The consultative process, essential for an objective decision, by necessity involves great numbers of people from many levels of governments and federal government departments.

2. All practicable secrecy and precaution was maintained during this process.

3. The government had to prepare in advance its plans for action to follow the site announcement. The expropriation notices were in fact filed within minutes of my announcement in the house.

4. Even if a leak had taken place in the final few days it would have been virtually impossible for anyone to realize speculative profits.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as minister responsible for regional development, I wish to point out that my department had a special part to play in the discussions and studies that have lead to the selection of the site of the future Montreal airport.

Since many people were interested in having this airport within their areas, it was important to inform them quickly of the various reasons why the government had taken a particular decision. That is why I agreed, at the request of the Department of Transport, to put on tape on Sunday night, March 23, two television and one radio broadcasts in French on the probable site of the airport.

I understood that the Department of Transport, whose responsibility it was to prepare the publicity concerning the announcement of this site, had done its preparatory work on the assumption that the airport would be located at St. Scholastique, west of St. Jérôme. Actually, the cabinet's decision was only taken on Thursday, March 27.

Without being aware of the security measures the Department of Transport had taken, I understood that those advance recordings would be used only upon confirmation by the cabinet of the site located north west of Montreal. Otherwise, they were to be destroyed.

Under such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I was not and I am still not aware of having committed any indiscretion, since the cabinet had not yet reached a final decision as to the site.

As for other details pertaining to the incident, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) has given them to the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I notice that the hon. member for Calgary North wishes to take part in this discussion. I am not sure whether this is the wish of the house, in view of the fact that the hon. member made a rather full presentation on Friday last. However, in a matter such as this the Chair likes the house to determine what procedure should be followed. If it is the unanimous wish of hon. members that the hon. member for Calgary North be allowed to make a further statement I would have no objection.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would limit his comments at this time to the procedural aspects of the matter.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunities given to me by the house to answer some of the points which have been made today. I may say at the outset that since my question of privilege was raised on Friday last much new evidence has come to light. It seems to me that a very unusual defence has been raised. By referring to some of the authorities and to some of the evidence I believe I can still convince Your Honour that there is a prima facie case here. This does not mean of course that the ministers are guilty. It simply means that the facts would justify an investigation and inquiry. This was my submission on Friday, and it is my submission today. I hope hon. members will be permitted to express their views, and I wish to be allowed to express mine.

It is no defence to maintain, as I understood both ministers to do, that we are living in a tuned-in, turned-on world in the new telecommunication political arena and that the pretaping of information must be undertaken in order to communicate information to the public. This is the using of a well known Liberal, public relations, planned package. They say, of course, that it is done in order to communicate information to the public. This is their defence. I say it is no defence at all. That is why we have a press gallery. That is why in the press gallery there are members of the television, radio and newspaper media who carry the news as soon as it is delivered in this institution of parliament.

I am sure that all the radio and T.V. media will agree that the newspapers of Canada have an equal opportunity to disseminate news across the nation, although their methods and timing are different. The public of Canada are not so interested in seeing and hearing ministers speak; they are interested in having the news. With the greatest respect, this news can be disseminated by T.V. and radio without pre-taping news and without hiring fancy advisers to print the package in this form long before the decision is announced.

This question should have been answered earlier, and I am shocked that it was not. The excuse of the government is that they made a tape and set up this very expensive, colourful package because they had not yet made a decision, and if the money of the taxpayers' was to be set aside, the tape would be destroyed and the famous package would be burned. I ask, Mr. Speaker: Was more than one tape made in reference to the various sites the government had under consideration? Is it not a strange thing—and this is part of my prima facie case—that the only tape it would appear was made, and the only package that was disseminated to various places, was in relation to the decision that the cabinet finally arrived at. It is said it was arrived at, if you accept the Prime Minister's word, in the morning or the afternoon, depending whether you read Hansard or the newspapers.

The pre-taping and the using of the advertising agency in Montreal were solely to give publicity to the ministers and not to disseminate the message. Commentators can flash this over radio and television instantly, and the words need not flow from the mouths of ministers. A minister can have a silent picture, while the man trained and skilled in the field can give the message after an announcement such as that regarding the $645 million airport is made. This defence—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for interrupting him. I suggested he might be allowed to make further comments, but only on the procedural point. It seems to me we are now debating the issue itself. It seems to me that we have to this point received arguments from the hon. member for Calgary North and arguments in opposition from ministers, and we should not go into the substance of the situation. In my view we should at this time direct ourselves to the consideration of purely procedural matters. I assure the hon. member for Calgary North and all hon. members that I intend to make my decision strictly upon procedural considerations and not in respect of allegations of fact on this question.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker; but the minister raised this defence. That was the first defence. I am merely answering it. I assume it was the minister's answer to the prima facie case. To say now that the Expropriation Act of 1896 is a protection in the tuned-in-turned-on age is, in my respectful submission, perfectly ridiculous. I know of no law that de facto freezes land values. Let us for a few moments consider—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: I hear hon. members opposite saying "Order". I know you are most fair in these matters, Mr. Speaker; you are always fair. If his argument is admissible in the chamber, the argument with reference to expropriation must also be admissible.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I can allow the hon. member to make his argument because he has already started. I am sure he realizes that what he is doing now is to reply to the minister's answer. The hon. member said that I am fair. If that is the case, it means I will have to allow the minister to reply to the hon. member's reply, and I wonder where this is all going to end. In any event I recognize that he has already started making the argument. I will hear him; but after this argument is made I suggest to all hon. members that the only thing that can be taken into account by the Chair is the procedural aspect, and not the facts of the matter.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, and also I appreciate the fact that you have given me the opportunity to answer the minister. He said that the law with reference to expropriation—and I know where he gets that from—may take account of the sales spread over a period of time to arrive at land values.

What does the Supreme Court of Canada have to say about this? The answer may be that this is one method that is used by appraisers. In the last case which I had, Lake Louise Ski Lodge v. The Crown, that was the method used by our appraisers. I say, with great respect to the minister, that the method used by the Crown appraisers in that case was an economic formula which was arrived at by certain organizations which could have made money from the use of the land. What does the law say in this regard?

This is what it said in the case of Fraser v. The Crown:

> The effective date for valuation of this property was the date of expropriation and the reality of the matter was that the Crown was expropriating tons of rock in the ground rather than acres of land in the rough. So that the value of the special adaptability of these lands was to be determined on the basis of the value that a willing vendor might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing but not anxious purchaser for the rock in situ at the date of expropriation.

But they come back to the formula and say that the land is valued at the time of taking. The fact is that if someone comes in and buys up land, there is a great deal of litigation and it costs the Crown much money to hire lawyers. If the land is not properly valued, the Crown has to pay the costs of the claimant. All this comes out of the pocket of the taxpayer. The fact is that there is land speculation, and various formulas can be used to appraise land. On this ground, that sort of leak and that kind of action by the government is wrong. This in itself constitutes a prima facie case.

It is wrong to make a statement concerning the budget and government decisions which affect increases and decreases in taxes. I submit, with the greatest respect, that it is just as wrong to hire a group of people in the advertising companies, to hire technicians from television and radio stations and then to make a statement which is disseminated in this way across the nation at the expense of the taxpayers, so that some people may enrich themselves. It is wrong for cabinet ministers and Privy Councillors to do this. It is contrary to their oath to make a disclosure on a matter dealing with money and property.

The results of these wrongs is not what we are considering here. We are considering the wrong itself, and that is the point of privilege. The motion, if it is accepted, will give us the facts and will determine whether this breach of political ethics amounted to a violation of the Privy Councillors' oath. We are entitled on this kind of motion to determine whether such a breach occurred. We can only find this out by conducting an examination in committee to find out all the facts in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member does not feel that the fact he has had two runs at convincing the Chair that he has a prima facie case is sufficient and that he should now reach his conclusion.

Mr. Woolliams: I can finish up very quickly, Mr. Speaker. I report, sir, with the greatest respect to you, that if the ministers had a right to make such a statement in the house, surely I have the right to answer it. It is not easy to make a case when one has to limit oneself to procedure. Why did the ministers not limit themselves to an argument on procedure? They came here to exonerate their consciences.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member could make his argument.

Mr. Woolliams: With your permission, sir, I will proceed with my argument.

An hon. Member: You should have taped this is advance.

Mr. Woolliams: That was the leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia about whom the Prime Minister asked "Who the hell is he?"—and he still does not know.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if this procedural discussion might not be kept on a higher plane.

Mr. Woolliams: I was only repeating some of the adjectives used by the Prime Minister.

If speculation had taken place as a result of the leak, I submit it would have cost the Crown thousands of dollars in litigation and court costs. Land owners with money can afford the luxury of litigation so as to enrich themselves at the expense of the state. This is the reason behind the rule of impropriety.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to read a quotation into the record, but since you have asked me to limit my remarks I will not read it. I will only say that it is to be found in a book called "The British Cabinet System", 1830-1938 by A. B. Keith in which the author points out the reason for the rule of secrecy. Any decision made at the cabinet level that affects taxpayers must be kept secret, and the same is true of the budget. There is no exception to that rule. The exception which my two friends are trying to make is that they wanted to pre-tape the announcement so as to appear on television to show what they are doing in a particular area of the country. This is no excuse and it is no defence.

There are facts to show that the booking to make the tapes was done on March 15 and was postponed several times until the recordings were made on March 22 and 23. If the 14 minute tape in English and the 10 minute tape in French were made, as seems to be admitted by one of the ministers, then the dubbing of the tape must have been done, which meant making more cuts for the various media. The taping and the dubbing must have required about a hundred people, who would all have been in the know.

A matter of such national importance and potential is bound to give rise to many speculative stories, and I am not being critical in that regard. But I submit that this parliament is entitled to know the facts, and they are not going to get the facts from the nicely worded and planned little statement of the minister.

This will certainly mean that some rules have to be spelled out because this government appears to prefer the public relations method, the advertisers, the pre-taping and the use of all propaganda art possible. If this method is allowed to flourish, then we might as well forget about the swearing in of ministers of the Crown because the oath of office will become a farce.

I should like to make one last point. It is ridiculous to say that no harm was done, and that they tried to keep this quiet even though a hundred people knew about it. It is just as ridiculous as if one were to say in defence of a man who was drunk and drove up the hill on the wrong side of the road that he did not kill anyone. This will explode in their faces. The ministers must remember that they admitted in the house that they pre-taped the announcement, they used public relations, and that there may be as many as a hundred people in the know. They said this would not affect the price of land and the expropriation proceedings. Such a law stated by such ministers is hogwash. This is no defence.

I submit that there is a prima facie case that both the ministers are guilty of impropriety, and this should be investigated.

I suggest to you, sir, with reference to the procedure, that the motion was moved and that the point of privilege was raised on the floor of the house. It had to be made without notice at the time. I ask you to take that into consideration, and in the light of the minister's startling admissions it is high time that this and other matters which may be occurring in the cabinet be investigated by a standing committee of the house. If this is not done, it will not be long before a judicial inquiry is started to put these men under oath so that the Canadian people may know the facts.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I intend to limit myself entirely to the procedural question which you placed before us. The other day I listened to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), not knowing anything about the subject matter which he raised. I therefore held my judgment on the prima facie aspect of the case in abeyance, but I earnestly suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the statements made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) establish a clear prima facie case for the motion which was moved.

What are we concerned with? We are concerned with two basic questions: first, was there advance information to people who are not in the public service about the likely choice of an airport, and second, was that advance information provided to such people outside the public service by the ministers concerned or under and with their authority.

• (2:40 p.m.)

You are not concerned, Mr. Speaker—your insistence that this matter be dealt with as a matter of procedure surely underlines this—and neither are the members of this chamber concerned with whether or not there were or could have been improper consequences as a result of this disclosure. That is a matter that the committee to which this question is to be referred will have an opportunity to decide. For the purpose of a prima facie case only, I submit that all you need to know is what were the admissions, made in a rather arrogant way, in a way which suggested—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: Hold it a minute—in a way which suggested that the ministers did not in the least feel there was any question about the propriety of their actions. That is why I say it is arrogance. I submit to Your Honour that any objective look at the situation must suggest that there was at least some question about the judgment and propriety of what they did.

It is in connection with the procedural question that I must refer to some of the things said by the ministers. I do so, not to argue the merits of what they said but to indicate the irrelevance of what they said to the issue that is now before Your Honour.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) has said that there were discussions over a number of months in which various levels of government were involved. Precisely there lies the difference between people in the civil service of Canada, or the public service of the province of Quebec, or the public service of the city of Montreal, civil servants who, under law, by the oath that they take and the functions they perform, are expected to and in fact do observe the secrecy required, and that class of persons represented by a public relations agency, or people working for television stations, or people producing a booklet or pre-taping material.

To contend otherwise is, I suggest, a specious kind of argument that seeks to confuse rather than to illuminate, and this applies to the minister's reference to public servants being in on the discussions. For example, civil servants are engaged in the preparation of every budget that is presented in Canada. If there are budgetary discussions between officials of the federal and provincial governments, then provincial civil servants engage in them. Nobody suggests that is an improper situation. But what is improper is for a public relations agency, a private agency, private television people, private radio people and the like to be brought into a discussion about a decision that should have been kept secret until the last moment. That is what is in issue on the prima facie case aspect of this matter.

The ministers also say that the decision was not made until Thursday, March 27, and that all of this was done on a contingency basis. There is a limit, Mr. Speaker, to the hogwash to which members of this house as well as members of the public should be subjected. Nobody can persuade any reasonable person that the ministers responsible—especially a minister as important as the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) in this cabinet—would go to the trouble of having a booklet produced, of pre-taping information, without having at least a 99.99 per cent certainty that what they were proposing was going to be accepted.

To suggest that all of this was done on a contingency basis, and that therefore it did not matter, is utter hogwash and again underlines, in my submission, the fact that the ministers themselves are now uneasy and are trying to argue the merits of the case, which as you have stated, Mr. Speaker, is not what is before us today.

In order to support their insupportable position, they also refer to the fact that their lawyers had expropriation papers ready. I expect, from what the Minister of Transport has said, that they probably had expropriation papers ready for all of the sites that were under contemplation. This can easily be done. The lawyers have the form all ready, and after the announcement is made in Ottawa a telephone call is made to them and they put the appropriate name and location on the form, and away it goes. What kind of nonsense is it to suggest that because the lawyers had to have the form ready this had anything to do with making the matter public! The form need not have contained either the name or the location in question, or anything relevant thereto.

Neither is it a defence on this point, the question of whether there is a prima facie case, to say that nobody could have gained from speculating in this matter. I want to make clear—and I think the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) did so last Friday—that I am not suggesting that these ministers did anything deliberately to hurt the Canadian people. I am not suggesting that at all. Nor, as I understood it, did the hon. member for Calgary North suggest that. All that I am suggesting is that these gentlemen are human and that, as the last number of months have shown, they are quite easily prone to bad judgment.

There is a full prima facie case to the effect that in this particular instance their judgment was bad; that a committee of this house should inquire into it and declare whether or not their judgment was bad. The committee must decide whether there was the kind of urgency about preparing these statements as to justify taking the extraordinary and undesirable step of making something public before it was officially announced in the house. The committee should determine whether all of these steps that were taken were demanded by the public interest, or were demanded either by a desire for publicity or, more likely, by a desire, and I say a perfectly proper desire, to make sure that the people in the province of Quebec who were disappointed by the particular decision would be given the kind of explanation that would assuage their disappointment, if that were at all possible.

However, Mr. Speaker, all of this might have been done after the announcement was made. It is for the committee to ascertain whether the urgency was so great as to permit of the possibility of a leak that could have—I do not say did have or would have, but could have—been of great disadvantage to the Canadian people and could have resulted in a large increase in cost for this airport, as well as in entirely improper gains, not only for the people who might be expropriated to make way for the airport, but for people in the area around the airport which would also be affected in the matter of price.

For all of these reasons I urge Your Honour to hold that there is a prima facie case here that ought to go to the committee.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise to deal with the procedure of this house that is involved here, and I speak about that only. My two colleagues have spoken on the facts of the matter and obviously they are in a better position than I to talk of the facts. I should like to make a brief submission about the nature of our parliamentary privilege; the question Your Honour has to decide is whether, prima facie, the facts indicate that there was a breach of the privilege of this house.

I should like to commence my remarks by referring to May's 17th edition, page 42, where the author states:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each house collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each house individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

The burden of this definition is that parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights without which the houses, and the members of the houses in particular, could not discharge their functions.

May goes on to comment on various particular privileges which illustrate the nature of parliamentary privilege. There is, for example, the special right of a member that what he says to the house may not be brought up against him in an ordinary court of law. There is the special right of the House of Commons——to settle its own code of procedure.

Then there is the special right of the House of Commons to protect its members from threats, intimidation and misrepresentation. But I submit very strongly that there is nothing in all the authorities that shows that a statement made outside the house and not containing a distorted description of a debate is a breach of the privileges of the house. Privileges are the special rights required by the houses, and their members, if they are to do their work.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Redlich has defined "privilege" as—

—the sum of the fundamental rights of the house and its individual members as against the prerogatives of the Crown, the authority of the ordinary courts of law and the special rights of the House of Lords."

The above is quoted from page 46 of volume I. You will note, Mr. Speaker, he poses the privileges of the House of Commons over against the prerogatives of the Crown. This juxtaposition is particularly helpful in this instance because the fact complained of by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) as a "breach of privilege" is an alleged "cabinet leak".

Surely, it is a matter of prerogative that the councils of the Crown are secret. The oath taken by a person being sworn on the Privy Council is not prescribed by statute; rather it is founded in prerogative. Section 11 of the British North America Act confirms this.

It may be that the House of Commons will not tolerate the continuation in ministerial office of a person who has breached the prerogative rights of the Crown by authorizing a cabinet leak. The house may not wish to continue such a person in office. That is not a matter to be considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to which a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been sent, but rather by the whole house acting in its own free discretion on a non-confidence motion.

The hon. member for Calgary North mentioned two cases of what he called indiscretion relating to budget information in Britain. The ministers guilty of those indiscretions resigned, not because they had breached the privileges of the House of Commons, but because their indiscretions were regarded as so serious in principle that they could not expect to survive a vote in the house.

My submission, sir, is that if the hon. member for Calgary North has any basis whatsoever for a grievance, that basis cannot be that the privilege of this house has been breached.

The other day the hon. member appeared to make the second argument that the privileges of the house had been offended against because the statement had been made outside the house, rather than inside the house. It is quite true it has become a custom, a habit, to make major government announcements in the House of Commons, if the house is sitting at the time. I would inform the hon. member that this is a matter of courtesy to the house, not a matter of formal obligation, just as there is no formal obligation on members opposite to give notice of a question of privilege, or of a question on the Orders of the Day.

I believe the reason for that is obvious. To hold otherwise would be to bring to a virtual halt the operations of Her Majesty's civil and military service. It would engulf parliament in a sea of announcements. The government in all its aspects makes literally thousands of decisions every day. If it is to be under an obligation to announce all of these in the house, there would be little time to do anything else.

As I have said, it has become the habit of ministers to make these announcements out of courtesy to hon. members. The practice is not founded on any dictate of the law, any standing order, or any constitutional convention. It is not in particular founded upon any of the privileges of this chamber and therefore cannot be the subject matter of a motion founded upon a claim of breach of privilege.

I would submit from the facts put forward to the house today by my colleagues, that there is a clear indication the privileges of the house or individual members have not in any way been affected. For that reason I submit that Your Honour should find there is no prima facie case of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) obligingly presented us in his remarks with many arguments which we had not put forward before.

His statement to the effect that a minister shows courtesy when giving information to the house seems to me an arrogant attitude towards the house, because I think that all the ministers, including the Prime Minister, must first tell the house of the new policies which the government plans.

If the ministers can now "only out of courtesy" inform the house of changes in the government policy, why ask hon. members to be present in the house?

Of what use will be the press, radio and television, whose function is now to make known the policy of the federal government, if, in the future, the latter deems it advisable to make its policy known through private and business agencies instead of informing the house?

The matter under study is very important and, for this reason, I would support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) with regard to the events that have taken place Thursday morning, Thursday afternoon and later, when the Minister of Transport stated that the Quebec government and the city of Montreal had both been consulted while four provincial ministers denied that this had happened. Since that announcement was made public, we can see that those bodies are displeased, insulted and they claim that they were not consulted by the federal government.

However, we have not only the feeling that a secret of the house was betrayed, we have also evidence of it or something that amounts to evidence. Who is telling us the truth? Is it the Minister of Transport? Is it the government of the province that says it was not consulted?

I believe that for some time now, the federal government has had the knack of running counter to federal-provincial relations, especially as concerns the province of Quebec.

It is difficult to believe that the Minister of Transport came to a decision with the cabinet only Thursday morning, since the publicity, including documents in color and of superior quality, had been printed, something which cannot be done in ten minutes.

Now, I feel justified to doubt the statement of the Prime Minister. Not only is it unlikely that the decision as only taken on Thursday, but it seems that the provincial government was not consulted, contrary to what he stated in the house on Thursday afternoon.

That is why we approve the motion of the hon. member for Calgary North.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: On Friday last the hon. member for Calgary North rose on a question of privilege concerning the alleged taping of an announcement dealing with the selection of a choice for the new Montreal airport. In closing his remarks, the hon. member proposed to move a motion as follows:

I move that the question of information of the announcement of the new Montreal International Airport at or near St. Jerome, Quebec, having been given prior to the said announcement by the government in the House of Commons and including all the circumstances under which the allegation is made, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the house, so that a full inquiry investigation may be made and that the said committee be empowered to examine all persons and papers material to the matter in question.

Mainly because two of the members more directly concerned with the matter were not in the house at that moment I felt it might be fair and proper to wait until they were in the house and had an opportunity to make a statement, before a ruling could be made or might be made on the procedural aspect of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

The Chair of course is grateful to all hon. members who have taken part in the discussion. The particular point at issue at this time is whether there exists a prima facie case of privilege.

The hon. member for Calgary North raised the point as to whether this matter had been raised at the first opportunity, and I would think it was raised at the first opportunity. When the hon. member brought the question up on Friday without prior notice, I had some doubt for a moment as to whether he might not have been required to give the usual notice. At the same time I gathered that the question was being raised as a result of a question or questions asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which to some extent at least made it proper and procedurally correct for the hon. member to move the motion. In any event I assumed that the hour's notice would have expired rather quickly and the motion could have been put at a later hour in the afternoon and taking this aspect and other aspects into consideration I felt that the hon. member should be heard then.

Hon. members who are interested in the procedural aspects of this matter raised by the hon. member will be reassured to know that the Chair has not taken this matter lightly indeed, and that many hours have been devoted since Friday to the consideration of the many complex aspects of parliamentary law and procedure as they apply to privilege. It is on the strength of this analysis, as well as on the basis of opinions expressed during the discussion in the house on Friday, and of course today, that I am prepared to make a ruling now.

I should say once again, as I indicated earlier today, that my ruling deals only with the technical and procedural aspects of the matter and not in any way with the merits of the situation or the allegations. As the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) stated earlier today, the question before the house is not whether there were leaks—as he called them—or not. I add that the question is not whether or not in fact there was ministerial impropriety but whether the situation or allegations should be considered as a matter of privilege and be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has given the standard definition of privilege as defined in May's 17th edition at page 42. Later on the learned author adds:

> The privileges of parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual members, because the house cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members; and by each house for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

These definitions are very general; it is perhaps on purpose that a clear and logical definition has never been given of parliamentary privilege. However, authorities on the subject argue that privilege includes freedom of speech, in the sense of immunity against suits in defamation; freedom from arrest in certain very limited circumstances; exemption from court duty as a witness or as a juror; protection against undue influence, and reflection on members.

There are also the collective privileges of the house dealing with the control of its proceedings and publications; the calling and protection of witnesses; reflections and indignities affecting the house as a body or as an institution; the right to set up its own rules, and the traditional privileges claimed by the Speaker on behalf of the house at the opening of parliament.

It will be seen, thus, that parliamentary privilege is concerned with the special rights of members, not in their capacity as ministers or as party leaders, or whips, or parliamentary secretaries but strictly in their capacity as members. Allegations of misjudgment, or mismanagement, or maladministration on the part of a minister in the performance of his ministerial duties, does not come within the purview of parliamentary privilege.

A thorough study of each and every one of the cases of privilege raised in the British house during a period of 20 years shows clearly that each and every one of the cases reported deal with situations where members felt they had been adversely affected in their right to participate in parliamentary work without undue pressure, influence or accusations either from inside or outside the house. In fact nowhere in the British or Canadian precedents can there be found authority for the proposition that administrative "misdeeds" as such can be raised by way of questions of privilege.

The hon. member for Calgary North made reference to two cases in the British house and it may be helpful if I were to summarize these two precedents.

The first one relates to what is known as the Thomas case, and that summary is as follows:

In this case Mr. Thomas resigned from the government over a budget leak in the budget of 1936. There was no question of privilege, but on May 5, 1936, Mr. Chamberlain on behalf of the government moved:

> That it is expedient that a tribunal be established for inquiring into an urgent matter of public importance, that is to say, whether, and if so, in what circumstances and by what persons, any unauthorized disclosure was made of information relating to the budget for the present year or any use made of any such information for the purposes of private gain.

This motion was made under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921, and after debate the motion was carried, and it is known that the tribunal was set up and made a report because of June 11, 1936, a further motion was made by the Prime Minister, Mr. Baldwin, as follows:

> That the report of the tribunal appointed under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921, be now considered.

After debate on that motion it was resolved on the main question that the report be accepted, and this occurred on June 11, 1936. In parenthesis, before the motion was moved Mr. Thomas resigned his seat having previously resigned from the cabinet.

The point here I suggest that is relevant to our discussion was that the matter was not considered at any moment by way of question of privilege.

The second case referred to by the hon. member for Calgary North relates to the Dalton case, and here again I summarize the proceedings in relation to that case.

On November 13, 1947, Mr. Dalton as Chancellor of the Exchequer was asked a question concerning the forecast of budget proposals in a newspaper. Mr. Dalton stated that in reply to questions put to him by the correspondent of the Star newspaper he had indicated to that correspondent a subject matter contained in the publication in question. He said that this was a grave indiscretion on his part and offered his apologies to the house.

The next step occurred when Mr. Churchill put a notice of motion down for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the circumstances of the disclosures of the budget information. Mr. Churchill raised this on November 17, and in the meantime the Chancellor of the Exchequer had resigned.

On November 20 the question was proposed on Mr. Churchill's motion and it was agreed to. That motion reads:

> That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances relating to or associated with the disclosure of budget information by Mr. Dalton, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, on Wednesday 12th November:
>
> That Messrs.—

Then follows the names of committee members.

> That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records—

And there is also reference to the quorum.

It is of interest of course to note, and again I suggest to hon. members that this is the important point of these two cases which were quoted by the hon. member for Calgary North, that although there were substantive motions made to the house for the consideration of alleged improprieties on the part of cabinet ministers the consideration which took place was not by way of reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections—was not founded on a question of privilege but rather on substantive motions.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In the time at my disposal I have been able to find but one case in our own house in over 100 years of proceedings where the conduct of a minister has been subject to review by means of question of privilege.

On May 22, 1924, an hon. member raised a question with regard to the conduct of the then minister of labour and stated that he was credibly informed and that he believed he was able to establish by satisfactory evidence that the then minister did withdraw from the Home Bank thousands of dollars on deposit therein to his credit, using certain information he had received, as such minister, of the likely immediate failure of said bank, and had received advantage and profit to himself to the extent of such withdrawals, contrary to his obligations as such minister in derogation of his office and the honour, dignity and traditions of parliament.

This precedent, I suggest, was outside the administrative responsibility of the minister in that he used cabinet information to his own personal advantage. It was not a matter of administration but a question of his personal honesty, integrity and conduct. This is the one instance we have in all the precedents. In this instance the matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

• (3:10 p.m.)

In closing I could do no better than refer the house to the decision of Mr. Speaker Michener on June 19, 1959 in which he stated:

> In finding that a question of the privileges of the House is not prima facie involved in this motion, I am making a procedural decision the effect of which will not prevent the further discussion by the House of the matters in issue. The effect is to refuse precedence to this discussion but not to prevent it. No barrier is raised to the presentation of this matter under different circumstances on another occasion. For example, the subject matter could be brought before the House as an amendment to the next motion to go into Supply. I should add too that the debate on the point of order on Wednesday and the discussion of the same matter on the estimates of the Minister of Transport were so broad that there would be little left to be said if the motion itself were to be debated this morning.

Hon. members have now or will have within the next few days or next few weeks an opportunity if they so wish as members of the opposition to bring this matter back, perhaps as a matter of no confidence. I suggest to hon. members that if they wish this matter to be considered further it should be dealt with in this way either by substantive motion or by a motion of no confidence in the government.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

DISCUSSION UPON THE CALLING OF THE ORDER FOR A MOTION TO CONCUR IN FIFTH REPORT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

On the order:

March 21, 1969—Mr. Lessard (LaSalle) (Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications):

That the Fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: I remind hon. members that when this motion was raised last week the Chair suggested that hon. members interested in the procedural aspects of the motion might be given an opportunity to think over the matter of their arguments. From the conversation I had with hon. members shortly before the opening of the house this afternoon I understand there is now a disposition to proceed with the procedural argument. If this is the case I should like to hear hon. members.

I might add if I may at this time that the Speakers mind has been occupied for some time now with questions of privilege. Therefore, I should like, with the approval of hon. members, to suggest that if they will present their arguments now, I would have a look at the blues and give an opinion later this afternoon after I have had an opportunity to look at the learned arguments which I know will be submitted for the guidance of the Chair.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the circumstances surrounding this matter it might be well very briefly to refresh the memory of members of the house. I have always found this to be a useful exercise especially in respect of those members sitting to Your Honour's right; their memories frequently need refreshing.

This matter arises out of a rather peculiar set of facts. Last fall the Committee on Transport and Communications brought into the house a series of recommendations. Hon. members of the opposition on this side took exception to this report on the ground that it did not contain a very vital recommendation which was founded on a motion presented before the committee. As a result the matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Following that a reasoned settlement was made and on January 17 the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered to consider and report upon the problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces, and that, for the purposes of its inquiry, the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada and the Clerk and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to accompany the Committee.

Following that the committee reported. The gist of its report, which is the subject we are considering outside of the formal and introductory measure is contained in two very brief paragraphs which if I may I should like to place on the record.

Your Committee recommends that Subsection 4 of Section 335 of the Railway Act be amended and the freeze extended to December 31, 1969.

And again:

Your Committee recommends that the Order of the Canadian Transport Commission, authorizing the Canadian National Railways to suspend rail passenger service in Newfoundland—

This as hon. members know has reference to the passenger train known in Newfoundland as the Bullet.

—on April 5, 1969, be left in abeyance, until your Committee tables its complete report in respect to this question.

As I understand the matter there are two or three particular suggestions contained in the argument made by the President of the Privy Council and referred to by Your Honour when you summed up on the 27th of this month, as it appears in Hansard. The first suggestion is that the report goes beyond the terms of reference by which this house authorized this committee to make certain inquiries. Let me deal with that. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that cannot be regarded as a very serious argument. If so, then over the course of the years I have been here the hundreds of committee reports which have been made based upon terms of reference no wider than this are all out of order.

The terms of reference were that the committee be empowered to consider and report upon the problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces. I think we can all see that both the recommendations touch upon problems of communication and transportation in the Atlantic provinces. If such is the case then surely the committee is entitled to examine upon them and report upon them. I do not think this is an argument which will be seriously pursued.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I did not make it.

Mr. Baldwin: It is in issue. I think probably this is a good time to touch upon it for enlightenment in respect of the future. The other argument made by the President of the Privy Council was that the matter referred to in the second part of the recommendations is sub judice, on the basis that the Canadian Transport Commission has considered the question of railway service in Newfoundland and has made a report which has been filed and which probably is in process of being acted upon. The President of the Privy Council pointed out that this report was an interim report.

This matter was also touched upon by Your Honour. With the greatest respect I say it is the most transparent argument. We have had a lot of transparent arguments made by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues opposite during the course of this session.

I should like to refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 152, paragraphs (1) and (2). Paragraph (2) reads as follows:

The Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record and therefore may not be attacked except by way of impeachment.

Now I should like to read paragraph (3) of citation 152 because I think this is germane.

Matters which have been adjudicated upon by the Railway Commissioners—

We may substitute the Canadian Transport Commission.

—and taken in appeal to the Governor-in-Council cannot be considered sub-judice while the appeal is pending, because the Governor-in-Council then acts in an administrative and not a judicial capacity.

The President of the Privy Council last week in making his argument said that this parliament had in past years, and quite truthfully so, set out an appeal procedure for matters dealt with by the Board of Transport Commissioners which now we call the Canadian Transport Commission. But there are two aspects of this appeal procedure. There is appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada in respect of certain aspects and there is an appeal to the Governor in Council.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Surely, neither a committee of this house nor the house itself can be disqualified from dealing with an order made by the Canadian Transport Commission which to our knowledge has not been appealed to the Governor in Council or the Supreme Court of Canada, although this is a possibility which can be held out.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

I ask Your Honour to take judicial notice of the procedure set out. The Governor in Council may at any time at his discretion upon the petition of any person, party or company interested, or on his own motion without any petition or application being made, vary or rescind any order, decision or regulation of the commission. In other words, any order made by the commission is always subject to review by the Governor in Council in an administrative capacity. In an attempt to persuade the Governor in Council, any person, any party or any company may petition the Governor in Council and ask him to vary or rescind an order. Surely the government is not suggesting that a committee of this house is prohibited in any way from doing what other people can do? Yet this is the essence of the argument made by the President of the Privy Council.

I suggest that a careful reading of this appeal clause will show beyond any shadow of doubt that any person, company or party may at any time go to the Governor in Council, despite the form in which an order is made or despite the stage to which it may have progressed. There is no evidence before the committee or before this house that the question is before the Supreme Court of Canada and I am convinced the hon. gentleman would assure me if I were to ask him that the Supreme Court of Canada is not seized with jurisdiction at this time. In these circumstances I strongly submit it is unthinkable that a member or Committee of this house should be deprived of a privilege or right to make recommendations and suggestions to the Governor in Council, which is open to him as an individual or to it, particularly when this house saw fit to instruct the committee by its terms of reference to examine this issue and bring in recommendations. On this ground alone I suggest the argument used by the President of the Privy Council must fail.

We come now to one point on which a question might be raised. Reading what Your Honour had to say on March 27, I noticed that you, too, had it in mind, and I will admit that at first it caused me some concern. It was the suggestion that the wording of the committee report, by the use of the word "recommends" constituted in effect a direction to the government to do a certain thing, in other words to appeal, amend or vary an act of parliament. This was never the intention. I am making my argument reasonably expansive here, Mr. Speaker, because I think this debate will affect the practice we follow in this house. It is true that when a private member puts down a private member's motion he must be very careful about the wording he uses. This arises from the inhibitions placed upon private members when it comes to proposing motions which in any way touch on the financial prerogative of the Crown. Constitutionally these rest exclusively on the shoulders of the government. This I suggest is the only reason for the limitation.

I did not have much time this morning, Mr. Speaker, but I happen to have copies in my office of several reports of previous committees. I have here the report of the joint committee on Indian affairs, 1960-61. Listen to the recommendations made at that time.

> The Indian Act should be amended to formally recognize lawful possession of land held by an Indian for twenty years and also to permit band councils to allocate land on a conditional basis.

Again:

> As the present provisions of Section 88 of the Act bar many Indians from ordinary sources of credit, the section should be amended to permit individual Indians to waive the protection afforded as regards their personal property; and band revenue funds should be subject to attachment in respect of judgments for damages—

And so on. Further:

> Sections 32 and 33 of the Indian Act relating to the sale or barter of produce from reserves in the three prairie provinces should be deleted.

I have also found a report of the Special Committee on Food and Drugs which dealt with certain questions in 1963. Here is one of the recommendations which were made:

> That the Pest Control Act be amended to prevent the importation of pesticides not registered under the Act, from a country outside of Canada.

Here, in the first two books I looked at, are four specific recommendations of committees of this house concerning amendments to existing statutes, and they are set out in far more specific and definite terms than is the report of the committee on transport which is the subject matter of this debate. A detailed examination of committee reports would disclose many more. In the case we are considering, the wording used is simply "Your committee recommends..."

The word "recommends" may mean a lot of things to different people, Mr. Speaker, but I have had a chance to look at the dictionary and I think a fairly common understanding of it would be "to commend to the favourable attention of, or to counsel as a course of action." The words are used in the report in the context of this meaning. It does not constitute a direction to the government. It is, rather, a suggestion that it take into account the recommendations of the committee with regard to a serious and particular matter.

In this context I ask whether committees are to be prohibited in the future from making reports containing a recommendation to the house and to the government that certain statutes be changed? I am not speaking about a direction, or about any integral part of the proposal to amend or repeal legislation, but of a proposal by way of counsel or advice that the government should do so.

I submit with deference that no case has been made for the contention put forward from the other side of the house. I shall sum up on one further issue, this time going somewhat beyond the terms of the objections raised by the President of the Privy Council. We are now engaged in this house in dealing with a new set of rules. We have placed on the shoulders of committees the burden of doing a geat deal of the work which was formerly done in the house, the house no longer having time to deal in detail with a great many complex and difficult subjects. This system will fail, as it is failing now, if the government takes the course of raising shoddy and petty points of order and obstruction to prevent committees from doing the kind of work they should be doing, if the new system is to succeed.

Merely because hon. gentlemen opposite are refugees from the stone age who clutter up the treasury benches, masquerading as Liberals, and who are not prepared to go along with the rest of us in accomplishing the work of reform and progress needed to be done if this house is to carry out the business assigned to it, does not mean that Your Honour should agree with them. If committees are to function, then this continual placing of obstacles in their path merely because they have not done what the government wanted them to do will reduce the whole thing to rubble and waste. I suggest that Your Honour should take judicial notice of that fact when you come to a decision on the point of order which has been raised by the President of the Privy Council.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, one cannot expect that the debate on this point of order will sustain the same amount of interest that was shown in the debate on the earlier question of privilege, but I submit that this one might be just as important, if not more so.

What is involved in this point of order is not a contest between the government and the opposition but rather the whole question of the relationship of our standing committees to parliament itself. If there is a contest, as I say, it is not between the government and the opposition; it is not even between parliament and one of its committees; it is a contest between the government and a standing committee. I think, therefore, that the issue is a very important one.

Last Tuesday, March 25, we had a bit of debate on the matter. On that occasion the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) went into the substance of the issue, as he may do further today; but the rest of us confined ourselves to our contention that that was not the point at which to raise this question of order. We felt that it should not have been raised until after the motion of the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard) had been put. I still have my doubts on that, but Your Honour has ruled that this is the place where we can have this discussion; therefore we shall abide by your ruling.

In your remarks to the house on Thursday of last week, Mr. Speaker, if I may be so bold as to make a synopsis of what you said, you first of all cited Beauchesne's citation 323, paragraph 1, as a basis for its being possible to rule a committee report out of order. Then you went on to state three questions to which you would like us to address ourselves. I should like to organize my remarks around the framework that Your Honour gave us last Thursday.

First may I read citation 323, paragraph 1, which Your Honour drew to our attention. It is as follows:

> A committee report may be ruled out of order though it has been received by the House, and a motion to concur therein cannot then be entertained.

In parenthesis, after that citation, there is an indication as to the basis upon which this dictum was written into Beauchesne's fourth edition. It arises from an incident that took place in the House of Commons as recorded at page 216 in volume 8 of the Journals of the House of Commons. I went to the library and got the Journals, volume 8, and this takes us back to the year 1874. That is even before any of us were in this house, or anywhere else, for that matter.

I found it very interesting to follow through the incident on which this citation is based. Incidentally, I sought also to study it by reference to Hansard but found that the printing of Hansard did not get started until 1875; so for 1874 one has to consult a scrapbook of newspaper clippings to find out what went on in parliament. Mind you the newspaper clippings were not just reports by reporters; they were verbatim accounts of what was said.

It appears that on April 8, 1874, as recorded at page 25 of the Journals, a select committee was appointed and given a very specific task. The task was to inquire into the then tariff, in the interests of agriculture and commerce in British Columbia, and report to the house the way in which the Canadian tariff of that day affected the agricultural and commercial interests of the province, and so on. The instruction was quite clear. This select committee was to report upon the way in which the then Canadian tariff affected agriculture and commerce in the then new province of British Columbia; and that was all.

The committee made its report on April 30, 1874. It appears at pages 141 and 142 of the Journals. It is a very interesting report. I do not think anyone can deny that it goes far beyond the terms of reference, the gist of which I read a moment ago. It takes about a page and a half, it has 14 paragraphs, and goes over all the grievances which British Columbia then had against the rest of Canada. It sounds almost as though they wanted to separate before they really got into the family. The report ended with this recommendation:

> That an act imposing a special tariff be enacted.

There is no question but this was far removed from the instruction that they should report on the ways in which the Canadian tariff was affecting agriculture and commerce in the province of British Columbia. Accordingly, when on May 11, 1874, as noted in the Journals at page 216, the chairman of the committee, whose name was Mr. Bunster, moved that this report be concurred in, objection was taken to the motion on the ground that it asked for concurrence in a report which ought not to have been received by the house. It was on this point that I was anxious to consult Hansard but had to settle for newspaper clippings that are to be found in interesting scrapbooks in the library. I found the argument was that the committee was asking the house to enact a bill involving a financial provision, which can only be proposed on the initiative of a minister of the Crown.

After listening at some length to the debate, Mr. Speaker expressed the opinion that it did go beyond the terms of reference; that it did ask for something that only a minister could propose. While he did not make a precise ruling that the report was out of order, he suggested to Mr. Bunster that the motion to adopt the report might be withdrawn. Mr. Bunster agreed and that seems to be the end of the story.

But I submit that we have changed things a bit since 1874. I think I could make a case that there is quite a difference between that report of 1874 and the report that is now before us. That report was made by a committee that was asked to consider ways in which the Canadian tariff was affecting things in British Columbia, but instead of doing that the committee came back and recommended a special tariff for that province. In our case a committee has been asked to study the whole transportation problem in the Atlantic provinces and it has come back with two specific recommendations.

But the main point I want to make about this is in line with something the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has already said. This is the reason I presume to take a bit of time on this issue. My point is that not only have there been changes because of the passing of time, the normal kind of changes that take place, but we in this parliament have deliberately set about to upgrade our committees system. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may now draw your attention to a paragraph of the third report of the Special Committee on Procedure of the House which was presented by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) on Friday, December 6, 1968.

I should like to read this paragraph. It is paragraph 12 at page 434 of the Votes and Proceedings for that day:

> It will be apparent from the recommendations already made in relation to supply and the legislative process that your Committee envisages a significant extension of the functions of the Standing Committees and in consequence a substantial strengthening of their importance and influence. They would become the forums in which the details of expenditure and legislation would be closely considered. They would investigate the operations and continuing programs of government departments and would develop areas of subject specialisation. We would expect debate in the Standing Committees to be well-informed and pertinent; their members to become influential in the areas of their specialized experience; and their reports to the House to assume a critical significance related more closely to the national interest as a whole than to simple political differences. We also anticipate that the business of the House would be greatly expedited and handled more efficiently through exploiting the potential of the committee system of the House to the full.

This is a report that was made in parliament. Hon. members are aware that what we are trying to do is to upgrade our committee system to give more importance to our committees. I know that we still impose upon them certain limitations and we still have a system of responsible government, but we have moved a long way from 1874. We do want our committees to be constructive, critical, significant, pertinent and all the other things that were spelled out in the paragraph which I read. I think, therefore, that it is unfortunate that when this committee comes in with some specific recommendations a member of the government objects to that report being made. You do not upgrade a committee by slapping it down when it makes a recommendation the government does not like.

I should like to speak now on the three particular questions that Your Honour asked us to consider when you spoke on this matter last Thursday. They were, first of all, the sub judice question, second, the form in which the report is drafted, and third, the question as to whether or not the report goes beyond the terms of reference given to the committee.

Dealing first of all with the sub judice question, there is not much I need to add to what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has already said, but again I would like to read the citation that you drew to our attention on Thursday, namely citation 152 (2) in Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> The Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record and therefore may not be attacked except by way of impeachment.

We accept the fact that whatever applied to the Board of Railway Commissioners in this book applies now to the Canadian Transport Commission. But I submit that in no sense and by no stretch of the imagination can it be said that the committee report is attacking the Canadian Transport Commission. I think there are times when this sub judice doctrine is really pressed too far. As I understand it, it means that people should not be allowed to express opinions that interfere with the making of a judicial decision. What is involved in this? The Canadian Transport Commission has already given the Canadian National Railways until April 15 to see whether its bus service is as good as the train service was. It has not yet made a decision, but a committee of this house has come along and suggested—and after all that is what the recommendation means—that that trial period be extended, and that no final order be made until the committee has completed its discussion of the matter.

I suggest that there is no interference with a judicial decision involved in that kind of a recommendation, that there is no attack on the Canadian Transport Commission, and that it is really not an argument of any weight to say that this report must not be allowed because somehow or other it offends the sub judice doctrine.

I come now to your second question, namely as to the form of the report. Like the hon. member for Peace River I recognize that the language of the report is not the language that we usually employ. Usually, to be on the safe side, we say in reports or in private members notices of motion that we ask the government to consider the advisability of doing such and such. In this case the committee shortened its language and simply said "we recommend". It recommends two things: first of all, that the freeze on the maritime freight rates be extended to December 31, 1969, and second, that the trial period, so far as the Canadian National Railways operation of certain trains in Newfoundland is concerned, be extended beyond April 15.

Your Honour is concerned lest by our dealing with such a report, and perhaps passing it, we put these things into effect. I submit that this is not the case at all. Granted that it is different language than we usually employ, surely what Your Honour has to consider is what the effect would be if we were to concur in this report. I submit that the effect is very clear. We would simply say the same thing that the committee said. We, the House of Commons, would not be passing a bill and would not be putting a statute into effect; we would be doing exactly what the committee did, that is to recommend, with the weight of the House of Commons, that subsection 4 of section 335 of the Railway Act be amended and the freeze extended to December 31, 1969, and that the trial period with regard to bus versus the railway service in Newfoundland be continued beyond April 15 until the committee has discussed the matter in full.

I see in this something analogous to what we do at the report stage of bills. When a committee reports a bill, we go through a procedure at the report stage. If an amendment is put down, we have a debate; if there is no amendment, we do not have a debate, but in either case in the end the house passes a motion concurring in the bill. It does not pass the bill and it does not put it into effect. That has to be done in the way that is provided, namely by a motion for its third reading. Not only that, it also has to go to the other place and in due course it must receive royal assent. So, to suggest that there is anything mandatory about this, I think is unfair to the committee. The committee has recommended to us that two things be done, and the chairman, by moving the motion for concurrence, is asking us to say the same thing: to recommend that those two things be done. If we pass this report, it will be making that same recommendation to the government. The third question that Your Honour raised had to do with the terms of reference and with whether or not the committee report goes beyond the terms of reference that were given to it. I find that hard to credit when one looks at those terms of reference. They were given to the committee on January 17. I believe the hon. member for Peace River read the terms of reference, but let me repeat them. I will read from the Votes and Proceedings, of January 17, 1969, page 599. They read as follows:

> On motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), seconded by Mr. Hellyer, it was ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered to consider and report upon the problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces,—

There is no limitation of any kind there.

> —and that, for the purposes of its inquiry, the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada and the Clerk and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to accompany the Committee.

Surely those terms of reference are wide enough to include recommendations by the committee that something be done about two things that seemed to the committee to be relevant to the problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces. Because the recommendations are within the terms of reference, I feel that Your Honour should allow this report.

As I said earlier, the case in 1874 on which Beauchesne's citation is based was one which was resolved by the Speaker asking the member to withdraw the motion. It was not specifically ruled out of order. In this case, I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that the wording of the report is not the wording that is usually employed, but if there is any doubt I implore Your Honour to resolve that doubt in favour of the committee. If the house does not accept that, or if the government wants by an amendment, once the report has been moved, to ask the house to refer it back, then it may do so. But I submit that if that decision is to be made and if this committee is to have its report sent back to it, that is a decision for the house itself to make. It should not be done by the government asking Your Honour to rule the report itself out of order.

Therefore, though there may be arguments on both sides, I feel that on balance the arguments are on the side of the committee, that Your Honour should give the benefit of the doubt to the committee and let us proceed with the motion for the adoption of this report.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall a few general principles concerning that matter.

With the new procedure adopted at the beginning of this session, the role of the committees was upgraded; they were given greater importance, and it was thought that it would expedite the business of the house.

According to our parliamentary system, the representation within committees ensures a majority of government members. If the government will not accept the report of that committee, it is, in fact, disowning its own members on the said committee.

Here the following question of principle claims our attention: Has the cabinet exclusive control over committee reports? In the affirmative, this is a breach of parliamentary freedom. The question is whether the committees exist or not. The quality of the work and efficiency of the role of committees are here put in question, and I believe that for the sake of the committee principle, this report must be accepted, even if, as some previous speakers have suggested, the House should refer it again to a committee.

To summarize these general principles, there is first of all parliamentary freedom. There is the question of possible disapproval by the government to the work done in a committee. I think that this cannot be condoned in the house, and accordingly, in order to follow this principle, this motion should be withdrawn.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to put my views before the house on Tuesday last. They are to be found at page 7058 of Hansard and following. At that time the question, which was dealt with later in my favour, was with respect to my right to raise the point at that stage. I can only say that the extensive argument, made today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) might have been directed to the question whether or not I should raise the point at that stage; but the fact is that the Chair already has made a decision against him in that regard. Therefore, his reference to the 1874—I think it was—precedent is really irrelevant.

I would point out to him and also to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that while it is true that we have given a greater role to the committees, it is especially important, because of that greater role, that they act within the well established rules of procedure that are followed by this house. For this reason on Tuesday last I raised two points with respect to the particular committee report.

Your Honour has asked that we direct ourselves to three questions: the question whether or not the matter is sub judice; the question whether this is a direction rather than a recommendation; and also the question regarding the terms of reference. I should like to emphasize that at no time on Tuesday last did I take any exception to the report as going beyond the terms of reference. I think if the hon. member for Peace River looks that up he will find I made no objection in that regard.

I should like to refer to the sub judice question first, the question as to what extent the sub judice doctrine applies here. In this regard I should like to put on the record again the actual details of the order that was made. The fact is that on July 3, 1968 the Canadian Transport Commission made an order dealing with rail passenger service in Newfoundland. This order was an interim order and concluded with the following words—and I quote them because I think they are important when deciding whether or not the matter is still before the commission:

> If, prior to April 15, 1969, Canadian National Railways fails or is unable to perform any of the conditions enumerated above, or if at any time before that date the Committee is not satisfied that the bus service is at least as good as the present passenger train service, it may upon notice to the applicants and to all parties who appeared before it in December 1967, reconvene the hearing to consider whether in the exercise of its general powers under the Railway Act, it should impose further conditions to be met prior to the discontinuance of the passenger train service or direct the adoption of such measures as may be necessary to ensure the adequacy of the bus service.

The intent and the effect of that part of the order was to keep the matter before the commission. I take this to be acknowledged by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his argument. Therefore, the commission had not completed its adjudication. In effect, the order is analogous—referring to another legal proceeding—to an order nisi. Moreover, I understand that the standing committee was given evidence showing that the commission is still active in deciding what order it should make.

Perhaps it will be contended that the Canadian Transport Commission is not a body to which the sub judice doctrine is relevant. I should like to refer, as Your Honour did, to citation 152 (2) of Beauchesne and the fact that the status of the Board of Railway Commissioners has been carried on by the Canadian Transport Commission. Citation 152 (3) of Beauchesne has been referred to because reference is made there to matters before the railway commissioners. It was for this reason that I referred last Tuesday to section 53 (1) of the Railway Act, which provides:

The Governor in Council may at any time, in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the Board, whether such order or decision is made inter pares or otherwise, and whether such regulation is general or limited in its scope and application; and any order that the Governor in Council may make with respect thereto is binding upon the Board and upon all parties.

From a reading of citation 152 (3) and section 53 (1) of the Railway Act, it appears that matters still under adjudication by the Canadian Transport Commission are in fact sub judice; but once an appeal on a matter has been taken to the Governor in Council, as provided for, the matter is no longer sub judice. In this instance although those opposed to the interim order of July 13, 1968 could have done so, nobody made an appeal to the Governor in Council. Therefore, the 1923—I think it was—precedent referred to in that case does not apply in this particular instance. Since the matter has not been determined finally by the Canadian Transport Commission and since it has not been removed from the Commission by way of an appeal, I submit that the matter is still sub judice and as such should not be discussed in this house or in the committee.

Secondly, an inquiry has been made as to the form of the recommendation in the report. I am referring to the recommendation with regard to the Newfoundland railway. To whom is the recommendation addressed? The hon. member for Peace River referred at length to other precedents in which the recommendations were addressed to the government; but in this case—

Mr. Baldwin: No, I did not.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, the nature of those particular recommendations is a matter of opinion. But it is perfectly clear in this case that that is not to whom this recommendation is addressed. The house itself could not leave the order of the commission in abeyance. No attempt has been made to use the procedure of appeal to the Governor in Council as I have already indicated.

Therefore, the conclusion must be that this recommendation is in truth an attempt by the committee either to give a direction to the Canadian Transport Commission or to the Canadian National Railways, two bodies which have been given specific responsibilities by a statute made by Parliament. It is my submission that it is no more appropriate for the committee to give a recommendation to either of those two bodies than it is for the committee to give a recommendation to the Supreme Court of Canada or any other court in respect to a matter that is before it.

If the house generally decides it wants to make a change in the law with regard to a particular matter, then the course of action is quite clear. It can proceed by passing a bill. My submission is that the House of Commons ought not to be asked either to concur or refuse to concur in a directive that in any case should not issue.

As to whether the committee's report is within the terms of reference, I indicated I have no objection to the report in that regard and therefore make no further comment on this point. Some mention has been made, Mr. Speaker, about the new committee procedure. In the order made by the house to establish the new committees, it was assumed that the reports made by the committees would comply with the general rules of order.

I want to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that I appreciate the careful attention you have given to this matter previously. What is important is not the political scuffling in this particular case, but rather that whatever is done must be done in order, and be a sound precedent. Your ruling in this case will be of considerable importance in regulating committee procedures hereafter.

Mr. Speaker: I would not like to limit discussion on the point, but I have listened to the arguments raised by the President of the Privy Council and the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). It may help hon. members in their decision as to whether they should pursue the matter further if I say I am rather impressed by the arguments of the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. At the same time I know this is a matter of interest to hon. members who are members of the committee.

I wonder whether any useful purpose would be served by pursuing the matter on procedural grounds. I already heard the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) when he expressed his views last week.

I am not sure there is any point in pursuing the matter further.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to make a few remarks in relation to this matter. I am more constrained now to do so, having heard the remarks of the President of the Privy Council. I will be brief.

I beg your indulgence to bear with me for a moment in order that I may refer to the fact that it is appropriate that we are discussing this matter today. The point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council is an objection to the contents of the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. It objects to that part of the report which deals with the committee's recommendation asking that the decision of the C.T.C. with regard to rail passenger service in Newfoundland be held in abeyance until after April 15. This would enable the committee to make its final recommendation to the house. It is appropriate, Mr. Speaker, because today is the twentieth anniversary of Newfoundland entering Confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: I thank hon. members for their very kind response to that remark. Once again I extend to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and his colleagues a general invitation to come to Newfoundland and enjoy the benefits and comforts of a ride across that province, on the Newfie Bullet. When reminding the President of the Privy Council that today is the twentieth anniversary of Newfoundland entering Confederation, I also remind him that tomorrow is April Fool's Day. It is probably true he needs no reminder of that fact.

Since last fall the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has been very involved in discussions with regard to this matter. The second report of the committee, which has already been referred to, was the subject matter of some dispute in this house. On December 10 last I raised a question of privilege in relation thereto and Your Honour ruled that there was a prima facie case, and this was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The third report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections is still on the order paper and the subject matter of debate in this house.

If the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as house leader had acceded to our request to bring this matter forward for debate, we would not be in this position today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member and ask him to follow the fine example of other hon. members who have taken part in the debate up until now, and have limited their contributions to the procedural aspect of the question, in order that the Chair may give a decision.

The hon. member must realize the report is not before the house at the present time. The motion has not been moved. The only point at issue is whether the Chair will allow the motion to be put. There is no reason why we should go into the historical background of this report. I would think the hon. member should refer to the three points which I asked hon. members to consider, and advise the Chair. If he will do this I will be in a better position to give a judgment later this afternoon.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to deal with the first part of your ruling. At no time was there a suggestion during the course of the committee hearings that this matter was sub judice. It was not suggested during the discussion leading up to the second report of the transport committee when the subject matter of the C.T.C.'s decision regarding Newfoundland rail transportation was discussed. There was no suggestion of this during the course of the deliberations of the Committee on Privileges and Elections or during the deliberations under the present reference of the Transport Committee from the house. No suggestion was made as to whether this matter was not clearly defined as being a legitimate subject for study by the committee in carrying out its reference from the house, to study transportation in the Atlantic provinces.

There was extensive examination of witnesses in connection with this matter. The President of the Transport Commission, some senior officials of this commission and officials of the Canadian National Railways were examined and gave evidence in this regard. At no time was there any suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that this matter was sub judice. I will not deal with the other argument. As Your Honour said, they have been dealt with very extensively by the hon. member for Peace River, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and other hon. members of this house.

I remind Your Honour it is not entirely inappropriate to discuss this matter today because the terms of union deal with the matter of rail transportation in Newfoundland, and the disposal of the Newfoundland Railway, one of the assets of the Newfoundland government when it became a province of Canada. The commission at that time felt obliged to make reference to it. They referred to term 31(a) of the Terms of Union with Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member and remind him that at the present time he is not dealing with the point of order before the house.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: Well, Mr. Speaker, I may not be an expert on the rules but I would point out to Your Honour that I have some interest in this matter as a member of the committee. You have not heard any members of the Transport Committee today. You have heard those with an established reputation in the house as experts on the rules, but I say to you with great respect that there are other hon. members of the house who have a vital interest in this matter and who have every right to make a comment upon it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the hon. member that hon. members ordinarily have a right, according to our rules, to make a comment on what is before the house. However the report is not before the house. When the report is before the house the hon. member, as he says, as an interested member in this matter, will have the right to make extensive remarks, but at the present time the only thing before the house is a very limited procedural point, and thus I took the liberty of inviting the hon. member to restrict his remarks to this limited aspect of the matter.

Mr. McGrath: Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with just two points that were raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). First of all he suggested that parliament has no jurisdiction over this matter because it is still rightly before the Canadian Transport Commission. I would submit that the Canadian Transport Commission is a commission that operates under authority delegated from parliament, and in my humble submission parliament always has jurisdiction because parliament in essence is the final authority.

The second point I would like to deal with is that the President of the Privy Council stated that in his view the matter was sub judice because no appeal had been made to the Governor in Council under section 53 of the Railway Act. I would like to correct him on that, and I suggest he check with his colleague, the Minister of Transport, because an appeal was submitted to the Governor in Council on March 28 by the six Progressive Conservative members of parliament who sit on this side of the house. We felt constrained and obliged to make that appeal because the people of Newfoundland, by unanimous resolution of the Legislature of Newfoundland on February 28, recommended that the implementation of the C.T.C. decision be delayed for two years.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their advice, forebearance and co-operation with the Chair when I suggested that we might limit ourselves this afternoon to a very limited aspect of the very important matter now before the house.

I have listened with attention to the arguments advanced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), which were essentially a restatement of the interesting points made when the matter was initially raised last week. I have also heard the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the other hon. members who took part in the debate. They referred to the three points which I had mentioned when the matter was first brought up in the house namely 1, whether the committee report goes beyond the committee's terms of reference; 2, whether the report offends the sub judice rule or doctrine, and 3, possible objection with the form of the report.

First, dealing specifically with the terms of reference of the committee I would remind hon. members that that argument was not made seriously by any hon. member, and indeed the President of the Privy Council said that he was not putting forth a view in this regard, and so I will not consider that aspect of the matter in any way.

The second important point is whether the report offends the sub judice doctrine, and in the cource of the discussion many clauses in the Railway Act have been referred to me for consideration. I doubt very much whether it is the duty of the Chair to take the Railway Act or any other statute to see whether or not the report submitted by the committee offends in any way some of the clauses of any statute.

It has been said that the House of Commons might inform the government of its opinion on the matter since, according to section 53 of the Railway Act, the Governor in Council may vary or rescind an order or decision of the Canadian Transport Commission. That is the kind of argument that has been submitted to the Chair, and in my submission it is not the kind that the Chair should be asked to review. The Chair, as I have said, should not be invited to go into the constitutional aspects, the jurisdictional aspects of a statute or of a clause of a statute which has been considered by a committee. These considerations, I suggest, should not be adjudged by the Speaker. These matters may be adjudged by the house itself and the way to proceed is by means of a motion. On the motion for concurrence it may be that the report be not now concurred in and that it be referred back to the committee for further consideration or for the purpose of deleting the paragraph which recommended that the order of the Transport Commission be left in abeyance.

My suggestion to hon. members is that none of those considerations should be decided upon by the Chair at this time.

A similar question was raised in this house on July 1, 1919. I am sorry that I have to refer so far back, but at the same time I am comforted in the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in support of his case referred back to 1874. That report can be found at page 498 of the Journals of 1919, when, on the motion for concurrence in a Committee report a point of order was raised, to the effect:

> —that as certain proceedings in the committee were irregular, the house should refuse to entertain the report of the committee, but that it should be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

On that occasion Mr. Speaker ruled:

> —that the point of order was not well taken inasmuch as the alleged irregular proceeding complained of took place in the committee and the house is only seized of the proceedings of the committee from the report presented to the house. There is no reference in the report whatever to any question having been raised in the committee and, therefore, my ruling is that it is not competent for this house to go back of the report which is now in its possession.

I must make the same ruling in the present case.

Dealing with the third specific point, the form of the report, I might say that this was the aspect which gave me great difficulty, and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) mentioned that he had little doubt that the form of the report was acceptable.

My own understanding is that the established form of a committee recommendation dealing with legislative proposals is that the government take into consideration the advisability of introducing legislation for a specified purpose. The wording of this committee's recommendation is a departure from the established practice in that the words "take into consideration the advisability of" are not included.

Both the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Peace River suggested that this should not be considered as a serious objection or an obstacle in that the words used were tantamount to the words normally used in a report from a committee. If indeed I felt that the omission of these words would result in the recommendation being interpreted as a direction rather than a mere recommendation, it is doubtful that the report could be accepted. On the other hand, I have some doubt as to the advisability of referring the report back to the committee for the sole purpose of effecting a purely formal modification.

At the same time I should caution hon. members that committee reports should be drafted according to procedurally acceptable forms. There are countless precedents to which hon. members could be referred in that regard. As I have indicated the form of the report should not and cannot, directly or by implication, direct the government to introduce or parliament to enact legislation. The accepted form of a committee's recommendation dealing with proposed legislation is "that the government give consideration to the advisability of introducing the necessary legislation."

I recognize the very valid point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and by other hon. members, and it is my belief that the new rules have upgraded the committees. Perhaps we should depart from the long established procedures and allow committees to make reports which do not necessarily follow the rules which have been accepted, as far as their form is concerned. However, I would doubt very much that the Chair is empowered to accept these changes. That is the type of question, which in my view might well be considered by the Committee on Procedure. That committee might submit a report to the house indicating whether the form of committee reports should be changed to take into account a new status of the committees in the legislative process.

• (4:20 p.m.)

This having been said and with the reservations outlined the Chair is disposed to allow the question now to be put to the house.

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H.-Pit Lessard (LaSalle) moved that the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it now being 4.25 and since there is the prospect of some debate on this matter I wonder if it would be agreeable to let it stand until tomorrow so that we might get on with the routine proceedings today.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, we are agreeable if the house leader will give his assurance that this matter will be brought forward for debate tomorrow.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As you know, there is no way I could prevent its being brought forward tomorrow.

Mr. McGrath: You have been known to try.

Motion stands.

Question No. 1,531—Mr. Paproski:

1. Were groups of news media representatives at the Federal-Provincial Conference given private or "background" briefings by federal public servants and, if so (a) who authorized these briefings (b) how many such briefings occurred?

2. In each case, which departments were involved and which officials?

3. In each case, what was the specific purpose of the briefing?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1, 2 and 3. During the Constitutional Conference, February 10-12, 1969, three background briefings were provided by federal officials for all news reporters accredited to the Conference. The briefings were authorized by the Prime Minister and their purpose was to provide answers to reporters' questions concerning positions taken by the Government of Canada at the Conference. Because of the nature of background briefings, it is not customary to identify Government spokesmen who take part.

MOUNTAINEER MOTEL COMPANY LIMITED

Question No. 1,598—Mr. Woolliams:

With reference to answers given to Question No. 1,271 (a) who are the officers of the Mountaineer Motel Company Limited (b) is this a private company and, if so, who are the main shareholders in the Mountaineer Motel Company Limited (c) what percentage of rent is charged against the gross receipts of the lessee by the Department in question and called for in the agreement between the Mountaineer Motel Company Limited and the said Department (d) does the agreement call for any other consideration other than a percentage of the gross receipts from the enterprise in question?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) President, Louis Biro; Vice-president, Alex Szakal; Secretary, Vencel Jakab. (b) Yes, Mountaineer Motel Company is a private company, limited to a maximum of 50 shareholders. As our lease is with the Company as a corporate entity rather than with the individual shareholders, we do not attempt to maintain a record of shareholders. We only require the names of the Company officers. Specific information on the Company Shareholders may be obtainable from the Registrar of Companies for the Province of Alberta. (c) As stated previously in the answer to Question No. 1271, lease agreements constitute a confidential landlord-tenant relationship. To divulge the terms of such an agreement without the express written consent of the lessee would be a breach of that confidence. (d) See answer to (c) above.

SHOTGUN SHELLS COMPOSITION

Question No. 1,612—Mr. Anderson:

Has the Canadian Wildlife Service begun discussions with the manufacturers and distributors of shotgun shells in Canada with a view to substituting iron or nickel for the lead shot presently in use?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No. Canadian ammunition manufacturers belong to the Small Arms and Ammunition Manufacturers Institute (SAAMI) which has been cooperating in a study involving the testing of alternate materials for lead shot. Recent tests have shown that shot made from soft iron has the highest potential as the alternate material to lead. However, the cost of producing soft iron shot is very high and studies are underway to develop an economic process.

UNCOLLECTABLE STUDENT LOANS

Question No. 1,675—Mr. Hales:

1. How many student loans have been returned to the federal government from chartered banks as uncollectable from the inception of the Canada Student Loans Plan?

2. For what amounts are these loans?

3. Did the government use the services of a professional collection agency in attempting to collect those loans listed as uncollectable?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Under section 8 of the Canada Student Loans Act, a borrower's obligation is extinguished in the event of his death whereupon it becomes payable by the government on the borrower's behalf. Since the inception of the Plan to December 31, 1968, 246 claims were paid under section 8. These claims are not recoverable from the estates of deceased borrowers.

Under section 9 of the Act the government is required to reimburse a bank against loss incurred in connection with loans in default. Since inception to December 31, 1968, 861 claims were paid under this provision, including 321 in respect of costs not chargeable to the borrowers.

2. Death Claims, $137,358; Costs Only Claims; $21,633; Principal Claims, $567,138; Total, $726,129.

3. Where a claim is paid to a lender under section 9 in respect of principal and interest, the borrower's obligations are then owed to the Crown. Where the borrower's address is known, the lender which made the loan continues to make collection efforts on behalf of the government. In cases where borrowers cannot be located by the lenders (some 250 cases), the accounts have been given to a professional collection agency on an experimental basis.

*INDIANS—GOVERNMENT TAKE OVER OF HOSTELS

Question No. 1,683—Mr. Diefenbaker:

3. Will the result be that henceforth Indian children in residence, whether Anglican or Roman Catholic, will be denied being in hostels of their parents' religious faith?

4. What provision is being made for the continuance in office of the staff members of these institutions following the takeover?

5. Is it intended that such staff members shall be civil servants?

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I am answering this question on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The answer to the first part of the question is that the employees of the Indian Student Residences are being brought under the Public Service Employment Act following instructions of Treasury Board in order to give employees collective bargaining rights. The administrators and child care workers are being exempted from the Public Service Employment Act and will continue to be nominated by the various church denominations.

The answer to the second part is, since the hostels will continue to be administered in precisely the same manner as before, with the full support of the churches, and with no change in program or policy, there was no reason to raise the matter for discussion.

The answer to the third part is that the residences will continue to operate under denominational auspices. Parents will continue to have the right to have their children assigned to the residences on the basis of religious preferences.

The answer to the fourth part is that all employees who are on staff on March 31 are being offered continued employment.

The answer to the fifth part is: Yes, effective April 1, 1969.

*INDIANS—REQUEST FOR TREATY RATIFICATION

Question No. 1,770—Mr. Diefenbaker:

Will the government give favourable consideration to placing before Parliament a Bill to confirm the terms of all Indian treaties made prior to Confederation and in particular the Jay Treaty?

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am also answering this question on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The answer is as follows:

A general study of all Indian treaties is now being carried out and it would be premature to make any comment at this time. This matter was also discussed during the Indian Act consultation meetings and will be discussed at future meetings.

The government will do all it can to abide by the provisions of the treaties bearing in mind the terms of the Canadian law.

The Indian Claims Commission, when it is established, will provide the Indian people with a means to have their claims heard.

The question of the Jay Treaty is under active consideration by the responsible department of government. A decision will be reached soon.

TRACKED VEHICLES IMPORTS

Question No. 1,788—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many tracked vehicles of the snowmobile "Skidoo" type have been imported into Canada in each of the following years: 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968?

2. What is the amount of tariff charged on such vehicles and has there been any change in the tariff charge since 1964?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. No statistics on the volume of snowmobile imports are available.

2. Tariff item 43868-1 provides for free entry under the British Preferential and Most-Favoured-Nation tariffs of snowmobiles equipped with tracks, runners, skis or combinations thereof, except snowmobiles equipped to perform special services or functions or snowmobiles designed to function primarily as tractors. This tariff item came into effect on February 2, 1967. However, duty was remitted on snowmobiles imported during the period November 1, 1966 to February 2, 1967. These measures were taken to give effect to a duty-free arrangement with the United States, which grants free entry to Canadian snowmobiles.

Prior to February 2, 1967, snowmobiles were free of duty under the British Preferential Tariff but subject to a 17½ per cent duty under the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff, pursuant to the provisions of tariff item 43803-1.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a), (b) (c) The government is presently reviewing all social welfare programs for which it has responsibility. In the course of this review attention will be given to the needs of the blind. When a decision is made the House will be informed in the usual way.

MUNICIPAL USE OF E.M.O.

Question No. 1,828—Mr. Skoberg:

What is the position of the Department of National Defence in the use of E.M.O. by municipal authorities or the use of federal monies allocated to the municipalities for E.M.O. as it concerns expenditures on filling job vacancies when a legal withdrawal of service has occurred in any labour dispute?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): The Department of National Defence, through the Canada Emergency Measures Organization, does not allocate federal monies to municipalities. Federal moneys are allocated and committed to the appropriate provincial authority on a reimbursement basis of moneys spent by provincial and municipal authorities on agreed civil emergency planning activities. Federal moneys subsequently allocated by provinces to municipalities may be used only to meet, among other civil emergency planning activities, 75 per cent of the salaries of those persons specifically employed in support of civil emergency planning projects as agreed each year between the Provincial Ministers responsible for civil emergency planning and the Minister of National Defence.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE FOR MANUFACTURING MILK

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that the support price for manufacturing milk for the year commencing April 1, 1969 has been set at $4.85 per hundred pounds of milk testing 3.5 per cent butterfat. This is the same level as that established on April 1, 1968.

As hon. members are aware, the returns received by manufacturing milk and cream shippers come mainly from the market price and partly from subsidy. The market price, in turn, is related to the support prices established by the Canadian Dairy Commission for the major dairy products. The federal government of course cannot fix prices to be paid for milk and cream within a province, but the support price for milk is based on the calculated market value of milk in relation to product support prices under normally efficient operations.

The Canadian Dairy Commission is announcing today that its support price on skim milk powder will remain at 20 cents per pound and that on butter will continue at the 65 cent level set last September. This butter price is two cents higher than that in effect on April 1, 1968, with a corresponding increase in the market value of milk and cream as compared to a year ago. To supplement the market value, and provide the $4.85 support level, the rate of direct subsidy for manufacturing milk and cream will be $1.25 per hundred pounds of milk, with an equivalent rate for cream.

The dairy stabilization program is based on the principle of providing an equitable return to efficient producers for the amount of manufacturing milk and cream required for dairy products for the Canadian market. This is the basis of the dairy products for the Canadian market. This is the basis of the Dairy Commission's subsidy quota system. There is, however, concern over the present volume of surplus products and indications of a further increase.

There is a serious surplus of skim milk powder. Butter production since last October has been 10 per cent above a year ago. In 1968 the Commission had to purchase eight million pounds of surplus cheddar cheese to support the market price on that product and British authorities are considering restraints on cheese imports into that country. These surpluses are occurring at a time when international prices for dairy products are seriously depressed as a result of world over-production.

Representations have been made to the government by producer organizations for an increase in the milk support price for the coming year. I feel sure they will appreciate, however, that in light of the market situation any further increase in product prices at this time would not be warranted. However, the government will undertake to provide sufficient funds to ensure that any changes in producers' net incomes are not the result of a lower support level, but rather are because of inceases in the cost of moving surplus dairy products into export.

[Mr. Olson.]

The cost of disposing of surpluses must be financed by the Canadian Dairy Commission out of the funds provided to it for subsidies. This is in accord with the policy, previously enunciated by the government and which is well understood by producers, and their representatives, that the cost of such disposal must be a charge against the industry.

• (4:30 p.m.)

For this purpose the commission makes a holdback against subsidy payments. The present rate of holdback on milk is 21 cents per hundred pounds. Effective with deliveries on and after April 1 the commission will require an average holdback from milk subsidies of 29 cents.

The holdback on cream will continue for the present at the existing level of one cent per pound of butterfat. However, should the present trend of increasing supplies of butterfat continue, an adjustment in the holdback on both cream and milk may be necessary. On the other hand, if the supply or the international market price situation for dairy products were to improve significantly, it could be possible that the Dairy Commission would be in a position to refund a portion of the holdback to producers.

Since the cost of disposal of excess production is a charge against producers which reduces their net returns, it is important to the position of the industry that every available means be used to ensure against unmanageable surpluses. We have already had some discussions with organizations on this subject and I have instructed the commission to pursue it actively with the organizations.

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): The main feature of the announcement just made—in fact, I would say, almost its only feature—is the indication that the amount of subsidy paid to shippers of manufacturing milk is not to be changed. We gather, too, that producers face increased costs in connection with the export program. This leaves dairy farmers in the same position as they were in last year, but saddled with increased operating costs. In fact, their position is worse, because the extra holdback will result in less take-home pay. I should also like to point out that this being the last day of the dairy year the minister's announcement comes rather late to allow for any adjustment in the operations of those concerned.

Never in the history of farming have farmers had more reason for concern, and never has the government seemed to show less concern. Dairy farmers encounter the same difficulties as do other farmers. They suffer from lack of markets for their products. Selling is partly the job of the government. In spite of what we hear, dairy farmers also suffer from the failure of the government to check rising production costs.

There is certainly no lack of efficiency on the part of our farmers. No one can tell me farmers are not efficient, because I know better. In times like these, they have to be efficient in order to operate. The truth is that they have proven themselves to be more efficient than almost any other business or industry. One handicap is the lack of research into new methods of purchasing and packaging—something which the federal government could and should be doing.

It is obvious that the policy of the government has been to eliminate the small, and—in their language—the inefficient farmer. The government and its various spokesmen talk about uneconomic units. What right have they to judge a farmer's efficiency, from here on Parliament Hill? Is it not a farmer's right to adhere to his way of life whether or not the Department of Agriculture or the Dairy Commission, or the government feels his unit is uneconomic?

I might also ask: Who benefits from a farmer's efficiency? Certainly it is not the farmer himself. Yet there are people who feel he should be moved to our already overcrowded cities where he would risk becoming a real burden to taxpayers in general. We should remember that when we discuss the problems of dairy farmers we are also dealing with many related industries whose operations depend upon the prosperity of the dairy industry. I am amazed by the kind of remarks I hear about subsidies being paid to dairy farmers or, for that matter, to any farmers. When will people realize that if farmers do not get a reasonable return for their labour they must either get out of business or be subsidized. They do not like being in this position. They are forced into it by circumstances beyond their control. How else do people suppose that food remains cheaper in relation to income on this continent than anywhere in the world? If small farmers are phased out and corporations take over, food prices will skyrocket.

Small farmers are going out of business at an alarming rate today and few young men are replacing them. Under the dairy policy for 1968-69 new farmers could not get a subsidy quota unless they bought one along with a herd. Few young men can afford to do this. I ask this question, Mr. Speaker: Is there anything wrong with mixed farming? Should a farmer not be able to start on a small scale and ship cream, which fits in with hog and poultry raising, and possibly with a beef and grain operation as well?

What about the position of fluid milk shippers operating on a small fluid quota? It is agreed that a dairyman must now get between $4 and $5 per hundredweight in order to operate. Today the minister quoted a price of $4.85. Many of these people are averaging less than $4 per hundredweight. They have huge sums invested and they produce high grade milk. Where do they turn? Not to shipping manufacturing milk; they cannot get a subsidy quota. What about fluid milk shippers who might be forced out of business when processing plants close down? Where can they turn?

Subsidies are paid to some fluid shippers—this surprised me when I heard it—on certain amounts over 125 per cent of fluid quota here in Ontario and in British Columbia. I realize that the milk is pooled, but this procedure was not spelled out in the dairy policy statement this year, or in the previous one, as far as I can recall. This is creating an acute problem in the minister's own area. Fluid shippers have large sums invested. How does the action now being taken fit in with the policy of eliminating small farmers? I am referring, now, not to small shippers but to the top producers.

Never before in history has there been such confusion and dissatisfaction among dairymen respecting subsidies. This is borne out by the great number of letters received by all hon. members who have dairymen in their constituencies. They have many causes for complaint. For example, a young dairyman just starting out shipped more than the minimum 420 pounds of butterfat. The head office of the plant concerned mistakenly submitted a figure below that amount and he was automatically phased out. No recourse was open to him even though the mistake was not his. This is not the fault of the Dairy Commission. They have always been most helpful and reasonable, Mr. Speaker. But, after all, the commission is responsible to the department.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I might mention that farmers, and especially dairy farmers who work long, hard hours every day of the year, are not a burden on the economy, but an asset. These are not people who should be robbed of their incentive and even of their way of life, then forced into overcrowded cities to start over again in a new, and, to them, strange and unsatisfactory environment.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): The difference in actual support level, according to the minister's statement today, is not great. The statement recognizes many of the facts of life in the dairy industry of Canada.

• (4:40 p.m.)

What really concerns me is that through the action of the Dairy Commission and the policy of the Department of Agriculture, coupled with what is happening in agriculture, we are in a period of transition in this industry. I do not suppose we can change that fact, but the important thing to me and to our party is that in this time of change the hardships on those producers who are being forced to accept change should be minimized.

What also concerns me is that in this type of change the greater part of the weight of the adjustment is falling on the small producer; it is falling on the individual in the dairy business who is least able to absorb it; it is falling on the individual who has the least resources and the least cushion. As the previous speaker said, we on our side of the house receive letters from people with small herds who are being threatened with closing up. The minimum amount of income they are obtaining from their dairy herds, which is absolutely essential to the maintenance of their families and the maintenance of their livelihood, is going to literally disappear.

The Dairy Commission is in the forefront of operating a supply-management program in this country by virtue of subsidies and the administration of the money it receives through the producer. I say to the minister that if in the first nationwide experience with this type of program we find the burden falls more heavily on certain segments of the industry or certain parts of Canada, the program will fall into disrepute. The Saskatchewan department of agriculture, in its submission to the Canadian Agricultural Congress, complained that the Dairy Commission was not recognizing the fact that the small-scale cream producer, with little alternative use for the few resources he devotes to dairying, is really a low-cost cream producer. Saskatchewan said that the commission has not recognized this important point and has ruled out the low-volume cream shipper on the assumption that he is inefficient and not worthy of public support.

This is a pretty serious statement, coming from a department of agriculture of one of our provinces. They went on to once again make the point that while many small producers in Saskatchewan have lost their quotas, these have been re-allocated to producers in other provinces who are producing manufacturing milk, thus adding to the already huge surplus in this area. They they said:

> We believe it is most unfortunate when policy gives producers of a product in one region of Canada an advantage over producers of the same product in another region and the advantage is related simply to differences in organization of the enterprise. In this instance, the policy discourages the production of cream in favour of manufacturing milk when the latter is by far the greatest surplus problem.

These are pretty serious allegations. I do not want particularly to associate myself with a regional argument, but I do say that a great deal more concern has to be shown for the small producer than has been shown up to now. More flexibility in this period of adjustment has to be shown than has been shown up to now. When administering a nationwide policy that affects the very existence and livelihood of people, you cannot use a strait-jacket. The department and the commission have to take into consideration what they are doing to the individual living on the farm and whose livelihood is at stake. From my information and observation, I am not sure they are doing it. I urge, therefore, that this problem be given very careful consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, listening to the minister earlier, I was looking for an opportunity to congratulate him and it has presented itself because he announced today his dairy policy which was not to be announced before early April.

I must congratulate him for this early announcement because the farmers, particularly those in my area feared that once again this year that statement was going to be delayed which fortunately has not been the case.

On the other hand, I think that many will be surprised because they expected an increase in the subsidies but the department decided not to grant any. It certainly has its reasons for doing so, because if we consider the situation as a whole, we notice that in the last few years due to livestock diseases, in Quebec in particular—indeed my knowledge extends mainly to the Quebec dairy industry—and because also of the decrease in milk production due to bad weather, we have not enjoyed our usual prosperity.

We have produced about 18,350 million pounds of milk a year for the past two or three years. But last year, our dairy output increased by 1 per cent and, as the farmers who had to slaughter their cattle get back on the market, we expect a new increase of 1 to 1½ per cent.

In my opinion, those responsible for the Canadian Dairy Commission will have a lot to do. I think their problems are not over. I must congratulate these responsible people and in particular two of them, Messrs. Williams and Thibodeau, with whom we communicate often by letters or otherwise. They do their best but I think that difficulties do not occur at that level; in our areas, they are probably due to a poor distribution of the subsidies.

As was mentioned by hon. members who spoke before me, we tend increasingly to encourage the large producer, the farm industrialist, and we neglect those who tomorrow will enable agriculture to make progress.

When I refer to the small producer, I think of two kinds of producers. The small producer who is starting out, the young one, and the one who had bad luck in previous years, and is getting back to a normal production.

Unless the Commission or the department make an effort in 1969 to give greater encouragement to our small producers, I am afraid we will miss the boat. In our areas especially, there is another problem: a national subsidy is used as a basis instead of a regional one. Indeed, as long as there is a national subsidy, the problem will not be solved in my area.

Even if $1.25 was granted, the price the processor pays could not be controlled. If the processor in Quebec pays 20 or 25¢. more than the processor in Ontario, he is being treated unfairly.

In short, I merely point out the situation to the minister. As long as subsidies are not regional, there will be injustice.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—APPLICATION OF UNITED KINGDOM TARIFF

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the ministers who are involved, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister the following question. In view of the impending report of the textile council of the United Kingdom in which it is recommended that Canadian textiles brought into the United Kingdom be subject to a 15 per cent tariff, will the government make strong representations to the government of the United Kingdom pointing out the serious effect this will have on our textile industry in Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will certainly be glad to bring this to the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RESEARCH ACTIVITIES IN CONNECTION WITH UNITED STATES A.B.M. SYSTEM

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, according to the roster, should be here today and who was here earlier.

Here he comes.

I want to ask the minister to inform the house as to whether the Canadian armament research and development section of the Defence Research Board has been and is now engaged in research in connection with the U.S. anti-missile system and, if so, under what arrangements, agreement or agreements this research is being done in Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member gave me notice of this question, otherwise I might have been tempted to turn it over to my colleague, the Minister of National Defence. But since there is an element of external affairs involved, I will undertake to answer it.

Research teams from Canada's Defence Research Board and the U.S. department of defence advanced research projects agency joined forces in 1958 to carry out a long-term program of re-entry phenomena studies at upper levels of the earth's atmosphere, under an informal agreement between the heads of the two agencies, because of the proficiency and the unique facilities then developed at the Canadian armament research and development establishment. The results of the work have been equally available to Canada and to the United States. I might mention that the details were made public in October, 1968, in the Defence Research Board presentation to the Committee on Science Policy of the other place, and it was also reported in the annual reports of the Defence Research Board which were classified until 1966, but which since then have been unclassified.

I should add that the Canadian armament research and development establishment at Valcartier has not participated in any program for the interception of ballistic missiles.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house, whether, as a result of the research done in Canada, the Canadian authorities and the government were informed of the range of the Spartan anti-ballistic missile and the range of the Sprint anti-ballistic missile in order that this government be made aware of the facts concerning the present A.B.M. system which has been proposed by the President of the United States?

Mr. Sharp: I understand that the research had to do with the re-entry phenomenon of the missiles which would be attacking Canada or the United States, and that it was concerned only with their paths and the problems of intercepting them, not with the development of the anti-ballistic missiles themselves.

ACTIVITIES OF U.S.S.R. NAVAL UNITS IN NORTH ATLANTIC

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the absence of the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister say whether Canada was informed by the U.S.S.R. of the purposes of the reportedly extensive exercise of some sort, by Russian naval units, that is taking place in the north Atlantic. If this is not the case, has the government been kept informed by any of its allies of the purpose of these movements, as well as they can be learned, and are these units of the Russian navy under surveillance by Canadian forces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take notice of the question and refer it to the Minister of National Defence.

AIR CANADA

EMPLOYMENT OF PART-TIME STAFF

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us whether Air Canada has advised him of its intention to hire 150 part-time employees, that is 50 persons at each of its airports in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the question could be put on the order paper or taken up on adjournment this evening or tomorrow.

Mr. Godin: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—CRITERIA APPLICABLE IN PROJECTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport and results partially from his visit in Hamilton where, I understand, he spent some 37 minutes reviewing some 328 acres of urban renewal, costing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Alexander: My question is: Is the minister now prepared to give the guidelines regarding public housing which he had indicated to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants would be forthcoming? I believe the hon. member asked on March 25 whether this information would be given in writing and the minister said that it would be in the hands of the house within two or three days.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I do not recall saying that this information would be in the hands of the house within two or three days. It is in the course of preparation and I hope will be available in due course.

Mr. Alexander: I wish to rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry if I misled the minister but according to Hansard of March 25, in answer to the question of the hon. member—if Your Honour will allow me—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my hope that we will not go into this. It is rather bad practice to read from Hansard a question that has been asked. Perhaps the minister might be given an opportunity to give a supplementary answer.

Mr. Alexander: May I ask a supplementary question? Will the minister inform us whether it is his intention now to visit all the urban renewal areas in Canada before he comes to a decision on the plans of the government for urban renewal schemes.

Mr. Hellyer: Regrettably I will not be able to visit them all, but I do hope to visit the eight or ten most urgent projects, to see exactly what is involved, in order to reach some judgment in respect of the total program so that, having taken a decision in respect of one or two, the precedent will hold in respect of the others that are outstanding.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that we have reached the period which is normally assigned to private members business. I wonder what the desire of the house is in this regard.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I wonder if there would be a disposition on the part of hon. members generally, and particularly the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who would have had an opportunity today to speak in the private member's hour, to suspend the private members business and to continue with routine proceedings.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask that we do not waive private members hour, because under private members business for today is notices of motions, and today is the fortieth and last day for most of them to be discussed. If we waive private members business today I will lose my place and my right to speak.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 39A to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack), public buildings—Bath-Millhaven federal prison complex; the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), grain—allocation of box cars—discrimination against wheat pools; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), industry—inquiry as to concentration of ownership and control.

• (5:00 p.m.)

It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is to ask the house leader whether he intends, as I understand he agreed with the house leaders of the other parties, to ask the house for permission to move an order relative to the transport committee, giving that committee power to call witnesses in regard to a certain matter. I understand the house leader agreed to ask permission to move this order, and I ask him whether he intends to do so now or some time later this day.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, some considerable time ago I delivered copies of the order to the house leaders opposite with the suggestion that they confer and advise me whether the order was agreeable to them. I have not heard from them yet. I do not have a copy of the order with me today, and I should like to hear from all house leaders whether they are agreeable before I take further action.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I told the minister Saturday night that it was acceptable.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I was told a lot of things on Saturday night, but I would sooner wait till I hear from all house leaders.

Animal Treatment Study

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

RESEARCH

STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF CARE, UTILIZATION AND TREATMENT OF ANIMALS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the following matters should be referred to a standing committee, designated by the Prime Minister, with authority to call for persons and papers and report its deliberations with recommendations (a) the use of animals for medical research purposes, their care and utilization, and procedures for government licensing and inspection of, and control over, all premises using animals for laboratory research or medical training (b) the treatment of animals as pets and, as far as federal jurisdiction permits, recommendations regarding legislation providing penalties for those abusing animals, and any persons making a business of raising or catching animals for sale to research individuals or centres and not keeping same in a humane manner (c) the most humane method of trapping fur-bearing animals (d) consideration of the entire Canadian picture relative to the maintenance of fish, bird and animal wildlife and the regulations required for conservation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to invite all hon. members of the house to support motion No. 29 standing in my name on today's order paper. I do not feel it necessary to speak at great length on this motion because it is written in a way that is self-explanatory. However, I should like to say that I moved a somewhat similar motion in this house on December 20, 1967. On that occasion every hon. member who rose in his place to speak to the motion completely agreed in principle with it, but raised two objections to it. This was the reason it was talked out on that occasion.

The first objection raised was to the effect I had recommended that all matters affecting the trapping and killing of fur-bearing animals, the treatment of animals, cruelty to animals, their use in research and also the entire question of the conservation of the wildlife of our country be referred to the agricultural committee for study and consideration, the hearing of witnesses and the making of recommendations to this House of Commons. Objection was taken to my suggestion that the matter be referred to the agricultural committee. I did this because during my intensive study of these matters over the years I had found, almost without exception, that every country of the world that recommended studies of this nature always referred the question to their agricultural committee.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

In addition, any legislation dealing with the matter was always placed under the jurisdiction of the department of agriculture. Therefore, this is my reason for phrasing my motion today in this way, hon. members having failed to pass my motion on the previous occasion. My motion today does not name any committee. I have done what I anticipate will be agreeable to hon. members, in particular to hon. members on the government side, namely asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), should the motion carry, to designate to which committee the matter should be referred.

The other objection that was raised in 1967 was this. I made reference on that occasion to the seal kill that takes place every year in this country, and objection was raised that the matter of seal killing was one for the Department of Fisheries, not the Department of Agriculture. As a result of that little excuse, my motion was not accepted.

This time I have also met that objection. I have not mentioned the seal hunt at all. This is included in the entire study of the trapping and killing of fur-bearing animals. In view of the fact that I moved the motion on December 20, 1967 and everybody endorsed it in principle, and since I have now removed those picayune objections which were taken, I trust hon. members will consider the matter to be strictly one of the principle and will endorse my motion as it stands.

There are two main principles of major importance here, in my estimation. It is rather remarkable that we in this country, who regard ourselves as civilized and humane to animals, have never made a study of cruelty to animals. We have never made a study of the use of animals in scientific and medical laboratories. Many members have read the evidence that has been given over the years, particularly the last five years, such as the evidence that was placed before the Lyttleton royal commission in the United Kingdom as well as a congressional study that was made in the United States. Sworn evidence given before those commissions amply demonstrates a situation that is in need of correction.

I am sure we can take it for granted there is not much difference between the use of animals in Canada for scientific and medical research and use of animals for this purpose in other countries of the world, particularly in the United Kingdom and the United States. Surely, this is a matter in which we should be interested, especially when I give the house instances of cruelty, and I shall give but a few. For example, dogs are being placed in small cages for seven years without being let out in order to study certain reactions. There is sworn evidence and photographs describing dogs that for 24 hours a day for a period of months were given intermittent electric shocks so as to bring them to a state of exhaustion, hysteria and terror in order to study them. Sworn evidence was given before a commission that dogs—400 in one instance—had all their legs smashed in a press and died 24 hours later, no anaesthetic having been administered.

I use those illustrations of what has being going on to indicate not only that we have made no study in Canada in this regard but that we do not have what every civilized country of the world has, namely legislation regulating the licensing of organizations or institutions that require to use animals for medical and scientific research. Such legislation gives the right of entry to such institutions to ascertain what is going on and to ensure there is no unnecessary abuse of or cruelty to animals, with power to enforce regulations.

I am sure all hon. members who have read my motion realize I am not being dogmatic. I have made no recommendations. Because of the importance of the matter I have merely asked that it be referred to a committee, to be designated by the Prime Minister, for study and consideration, for the hearing of representations by all who are interested, in order to decide whether or not to make specific recommendations to the House of Commons and to the government of this country. Surely, such a suggestion is a reasonable one.

That is all I am going to say on this particular phase of the motion, but there is another phase in which I am keenly interested. I refer to the conservation of our wildlife, whether animal, bird or fish. There is no international boundary when it comes to animal, bird and fish conservation on this continent. I have been interested in this subject for many years. I had visited interested organizations in this country, the United States, Europe and the United Kingdom.

I was somewhat amazed to find that until two years ago the government of the United States had no interest in conservation. In the fall of 1967 they introduced the endangered wildlife research program. With the exception of the O.D.A. in Canada, the moves on the prairies and the latest move in British Columbia to set aside thousands of acres, this country has not shown an interest in the conservation of wild life. This move was brought about in British Columbia because several species of the bighorn sheep were practically extinct.

Scientific organizations interested in this matter have stated that in the past 150 years, 60 species of animals and birds have been completely exterminated on this continent. The latest scientific information I have been able to obtain states that since the turn of this century 23 species of birds have disappeared in this country and the northern part of the United States. They are gone; nothing can be done about that now. There is evidence available to show that birds and animals, not only in my province of British Columbia but other parts of Canada now face extinction unless something is done about the situation.

I have already mentioned two species of the bighorn sheep in British Columbia. Grizzly bears are now becoming very scarce in this country. According to a wildlife survey recently completed, there are approximately 12,000 polar bears left in the world. These are being killed at the rate of 1,200 a year.

I ask hon. members to take an interest in this most vital matter and refer it to a committee for study. This committee should hear representations and bring in recommendations as a result of their accumulated knowledge. The United States has finally established the endangered wildlife research program. It is just as essential that there should no longer be a delay in Canada taking action on this matter.

I was raised by parents who did not believe in killing. I have never shot at a bird or animal in my life, nor at a man. I was taught that one should only kill in self-defence or for food requirements. At the same time, I have never been narrow minded on the question of sportsmanship and killing of birds and animals. How they call it sportsmanship, I do not know, but I am not narrow minded. As a matter of fact, I am an honorary member of a rod and gun club in Vancouver. The reason I am a member is because of their interest in conservation. This organization recognizes that we have the responsibility of seeing that the wonderful wild life in this beautiful country continues to exist. Those who come after us should also be able to enjoy the wildlife in this country.

It is not often that I quote from Reader's Digest. However, when reading this magazine last night, I came across a fine article which was condensed from National Wildlife, the title of which is "From the Brink of Extinction". In this article, the director of the National Wildlife Research program makes reference to a letter received from a boy. I quote:

"Not always those you'd expect—"

This refers to people writing letters.

"The majority of support comes not from the birdwatcher, camper, fisherman, hunter, but from people in cities." He handed me a typical letter. It was from Harlem, and the first sentence read: "I may never see a whooping crane, or any wild thing, but I hope you save them. I want to know they are there." So do millions of other people who look with concern as species after species, each a part of the miracle of life on earth, is threatened with extinction.

I ask the support of hon. members to refer these matters of vital concern to a committee of the House of Commons for study, consideration and recommendation.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark and Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member opposite that one of the paramount concerns of all politicians is the possibility of becoming extinct. Although some people might treat this subject in a light way, it deserves to be treated seriously.

I rise to participate in this debate for several reasons. I wish to compliment the hon. member opposite in whose name today's private members' notice of motion stands. He is not the only member who has serious concern about what can, and sometimes does, happen to animals.

This notice of motion, Mr. Speaker, has four parts. I propose to address myself to each in turn. Before doing so, I wish to draw the attention of this house to a bill bearing on this subject which was given first reading December 19 last, Bill C-150 an act to amend the Criminal Code. This motion today stands under the date of September 18, just over three months prior to the introduction of Bill C-150.

• (5:20 p.m.)

By the way, I understand that Bill C-150 has just completed clause by clause study in the Justice Committee of this house. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-150 covers many of the very concerns which are paramount in this motion, especially in section (c). Since there exists considerable evidence to suggest to hon. members that Bill C-150 will in fact become the law of the land in the near future I wish to take the liberty to remind the house once more just what clause 23 of Bill C-150 does state. Then, its bearing on this motion may be fully appreciated.

The explanatory note to clause 23 reads:

The proposed subsection (3) would provide that evidence of failure to exercise reasonable care and supervision of an animal or bird resulting in pain, suffering, damage or injury is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof of the commission of an offence—

The amendment would also provide for an order prohibiting a person convicted on two or more occasions under subsection (1) from owning or having custody or control of a domestic animal or bird for a period of up to two years.

I want to draw the attention of the house to the fact that I understand the Justice Committee has made an amendment to the bill, broadening its terms of reference. This provision with no longer be restricted to domestic animals but will cover wildlife and game birds as well.

Mr. Winch: But it does not cover research animals.

Mr. McBride: I will come to that in a moment. Clause 23 refers to:

—evidence that a person failed to exercise reasonable care or supervision of an animal or bird thereby causing it pain, suffering, damage or injury—

Obviously, this means animals that are kept domestically, and does include animals that are kept for research, as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) has just pointed out.

Now, coming to paragraph (a) in the notice of motion, I wish to point out it is obvious that animals must be used for medical research purposes. This is self-evident to all hon. members. The point is a very simple one, that all reasonable care should be taken to prevent, to as large a degree as possible, unnecessary suffering of research animals. However, it must be noted that the first aim of research is to prevent human suffering. The second aim of research is to realize reliable data for a high quality of research. The third aim of research is to do scientific investigation which does result in high quality and reliable data, with the highest possible degree of efficiency. By efficiency, I mean the least expenditure of moneys and the least possible unnecessary suffering of the animals concerned. I propose to refer to paragraph (a) again in my concluding remarks, so I will now proceed to paragraph (b) which reads:

—the treatment of animals as pets and, as far as federal jurisdiction permits, recommendations regarding legislation providing penalties for those abusing animals, and any persons making a business of raising or catching animals for sale to research individuals or centres and not keeping same in a humane manner—

As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, the bulk of this paragraph is covered in Bill C-150. In fact, Bill C-150 is an improvement on paragraph (b) because although the original draft referred only to domestic animals and birds it has now been broadened to include all types of animals.

Paragraph (c) refers to:

—the most humane method of trapping fur bearing animals—

This raises a very difficult problem.

How can one raise animals and live on the proceeds from the sale of their skin and fur, yet at the same time to be considered by society as a humane person? It seems to me that so long as society lives on animal meat, animal skins and animal products we are faced with a very serious problem. The hon. member for Vancouver East has already referred to the seal hunt, which has been much in the news. Most of us know fur farmers. Indeed, there are some very successful ones in my constituency.

I would go one step further and draw attention to the fact that animals kept for research are really very little different from any type of domestic livestock because they are all maintained in order to realize a profit to their owners. Indeed, livestock and poultry maintenance involved certain practices which are not so much inhumane as they are part of life's realities.

I refer to the need for slaughter houses, if we are to be carnivores, to the need to perform certain procedures on animals which might be deemed by some to be inhumane but which are accepted by the agricultural industry as necessary to good livestock management. For example, dairy cows throughout Canada are tied into stalls in late October or early November and never released until April or May. During that time they are not allowed to take two steps forwards or backwards. Hackney horses have their tails held in special holding devices that eventually distort and bend the backbone upwards at the base of the tail to provide for a so-called more flowing beauty, but certainly with no little agony to the animal at some point along the way.

You, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. members who are familiar with the agricultural industry, will be aware that young calves, have caustic soda applied to their horn buds or, if not, are dehorned with saws or large levered cutters, which is certainly a painful procedure. I have seen this done both ways and it is indeed painful. Lambs' tails are docked. Their tails are simply cut off, as are the tails of many horses, in both instances without benefit of anaesthesia. Boar piglets, bull calves, ram lambs and male colts are castrated without benefit of any type of anaesthetic, and all as a necessary part of livestock management.

I therefore, submit that it is necessary to keep all of this in focus when we discuss a motion such as the one now before us, because it is easy to get into the position of saying that people exist to serve animals. I hope I do not sound too callous when I state very firmly that in my opinion the precise opposite is true, that animals exist to serve people.

Being aware that other hon. members wish to participate in this debate this afternoon I shall sum up my remarks at this point. I conclude by saying that I have great sympathy for animals. We have a dog at our house called Zippy, that is almost a member of the family and sometimes rates much higher than I do. However, Mr. Speaker, let us keep first things first. People are more important than animals. We must protect research animals, that is true; but we must use them to help make people well, not idolize or worship them. Too often, dogs are more protected than refugees and other casualties of war.

I must confess very bluntly that I am more concerned about child brutality, some startling examples of which have recently come to public view, than I am about the agonies of dogs, cats, monkies, guinea pigs and spruce bud worms, the latter being a subject upon which I was permitted to work for a whole summer one time in Northern Ontario. I feel that no one can quarrel with the final section of this notice of motion. I felt the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), made a very good point when he listed some of the species of animals about which he was concerned such as bighorns, grizzly bears and so on. I feel all of us must certainly take steps to support the action taken by governments, individuals or voluntary organizations in this regard. Just as we must be against pollution or anything else that diminishes the features of the world in which we live, so also we must be for conservation.

• (5:30 p.m.)

In conclusion, I should like to commend the hon. member for Vancouver East. I think he has placed before us a motion which is very important though very wide in scope. It is sort of an omnibus motion which involves many areas of concern and therefore will be of much interest to many members.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on that notice of motion.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for taking the defence of animals, which, incidentally are not represented directly in the house. However, a few thoughts come to my mind on that subject.

It is very praiseworthy to care a lot for animals. Indeed, everybody likes animals. If certain individuals are led to mistreat animals, we can conclude that they are abnormal, for an instinction feeling leads man to like them.

But we should not make a major discussion out of the question. It seems to me it would be displacing the human values, for if life was made so that animals can serve man, be it in the field of food, or research, or sports, it follows that if we push the protection of animals too far, we would have to give up eating meat, hunting or fishing, as well as pursuing scientific research.

I do not think that conscientious scientists, hunters or consumers enjoy ill-treating animals for the fun of it. There may be cases of cruelty but they are already provided for in the law.

But when such a question is raised, I think of how little importance we attach sometimes to this superior animal which is man himself, especially at a time when the house is considering the famous omnibus bill which has for object to legalize killing the foetus. In my opinion, it is a confusion of values.

How is it that so little respect is shown for the embryo of the human being, and so great a concern for the protection of animals?

The comparison perhaps is odious, but still these are facts. Is it possible that we have no scruples about passing a legislation which will make abortion legal while at the same time we are discussing the protection of animals?

I think it is high time that we awake to the necessity of protecting the most perfect animal of all creation, which is man. He must be ensured the respect which is owed to every human being because of his intelligence as well as because of his body. I believe proper legislation to ensure protection to this kind of animal, man, has not yet been passed.

Before discussing further this legislation which we are asked to pass, I think we should tarry a little to consider the real problem of the human animal. This is what strikes me in this advice of motion, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think it would be a bad thing to stop a moment and think this over. We should not go too far. We all agree that animals have to be protected adequately, as is proposed in the notice of motion; we should not think, however, as they do in India, that some cows are sacred. We know what was the result there of such a belief.

We have to follow the scale of values set by God. However, animals which are there to serve man, must be given some measure of respect. But, most important of all, the human being has to be respected.

I think there would be no reason not to endorse that legislation, but I simply want to emphasize the fact that we have every reason to protect the human being.

I wish to point out in particular the relation between this bill and the other one on abortion, which, as far as I am concerned, pays no attention to the human being and to life.

We do not object to that motion, but I think every effort should be made to protect the most perfect animal of the whole created world, that is, man.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this motion of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) envisages the establishment of one of the standing committees of the House of Commons as a committee to inquire into practically every facet of the treatment of animals in Canada, including not only our domestic animals and household pets but also wild animals, birds and fish. It might be well to include the much maligned creature homo sapiens.

Mr. Winch: He can look after himself; the animals cannot.

Mr. Foster: As the hon. member has suggested, when he orginally introduced this motion in 1966 or 1967 there was some discussion concerning the committee to which this matter should be referred. Should it be the Committee on Agriculture? Should it be the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry? Should it be the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs or should it be the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs?

So far as our domestic food producing animals are concerned, the Committee on Agriculture would be ideal. But when we think of fish, seals and the wild animals of our forests, we naturally think of the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. With regard to research animals for laboratories and medical student training as well as household pets, it would seem that this aspect could well be handled by the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs Committee.

As the hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew (Mr. McBride) has already mentioned, when we think of the cruelty to animals aspect of this motion and the Criminal Code application, the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs may well appear to be the best standing committee.

I believe the subject of humane treatment of animals is of increasing concern to more Canadians. I suppose this is natural since our country has moved from a pioneer frontier society, first to an agricultural society and, finally to an urban society. Indeed, I heard recently that within a very few years some 80 per cent of our population will be living in an urban type society. At the same time, the number of fishermen and trappers decreases every year in Canada because this is a very difficult occupation.

The great interest taken in the seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is a good example of the amount of public interest which can be generated in this subject by extensive publicity in the press and television. I visited the Gulf of St. Lawrence a couple of weeks ago with the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) to view the over-all scene and we saw a good example of what happens there each year. The activities in the gulf are only a relatively small part of the total seal hunt, much of which takes place in the area known as "The Font", nearer Newfoundland and Labrador. We found the regulations established by the Department of Fisheries were being followed as closely as humanly possible by the seal hunters. If we relate seal hunting standards to accepted standards when killing other kinds of fur-bearing or food-producing animals, the techniques are humane. Comparable measures are used in slaughter houses, and to kill other fur-bearing animals across our land. The animal is stunned to unconsciousness, then bled so that it never regains consciousness. But can we really justify the seal hunt because it compares favourably in certain respects with techniques used to slaughter food-producing animals?

The age of electronics changes all this. When the slaughter of young seals is shown in the nation's living rooms on colour television right after dinner, the spectacle appears repulsive. Is it all the fault of the press? Should we ban the press? A free press is the cornerstone of our democratic process in Canada. One of my hon. friends suggests we use the same techniques on the press as on the seals, but I do not think that would be practicable, Mr. Speaker.

One of our problems is that society in Canada is changing. The main question the hon. member's proposed committee would have to study is this: what are our accepted norms of humane treatment of animals in Canada in 1969? Where do we draw the line between what is acceptable to the urbane, sophisticated city-dweller and the trapper in the northern regions of Canada or the seal hunter on "The Front" off the coast of Newfoundland?

With regard to the treatment of pets and animals used for research, much of the work which the motion envisages a committee might do has already been carried out by the Canadian Council on Animal Care. This council was established in January, 1968 in line with a recommendation of a report on the care of animals used for experiments drawn up by a special committee of the National Research Council. The report was published in June of 1966 and the Canadian Council on Animal Care is attempting to implement the recommendations contained in the National Research Council report. The council is made up of representatives from the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges and of the granting bodies supporting research which utilizes animals, as well as government departments and the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies. I believe these people are well qualified to look into questions which the hon. member's motion suggests are suitable subject for inquiry by a committee of the House of Commons.

The objective of the Canadian Council on Animal Care has been to develop guiding principles for the care of animals used in experiments. I have in my hand a publication put out by the Canadian Council on Animal Care, entitled "Care of Experimental Animals, A guide for Canada". In addition to setting out standards of housing and care for animals used in experiments it establishes responsibility for their proper care and treatment. One need only open this booklet to realize that a great deal of work in this area has already been done. Under the heading "A Philosophy for the Care and Use of Experimental Animals" the three items listed are: (1) to provide humane care and treatment; (2) to minimize pain and discomfort; (3) to avoid unnecessary abuse. The book gives us a complete outline of the type of environment in which the animals should be housed and cared for, noting such factors as temperature, humidity, ventilation, light, noise, odour control, type of structure, walls, floor and windows, ceiling and corridors, which are necessary to ensure proper care and treatment of laboratory animals.

Under "General Husbandry" we read about the type of identification, record-keeping and caging which are recommended for the general wellbeing of the animals kept. Attention is paid to food and water, varmint control, waste disposal and disease control, safety procedures, anaesthesia and euthenasia. There is also a general outline of procurement and transportation procedures, together with an outline for responsibility for animal care and notes on the responsibilities of animal attendants, technicians, directors and investigators. I believe this booklet is a complete though concise outline dealing with many factors which relate to the care and control of laboratory animals.

In January of this year, assessment panels were appointed by the council and began an inspection of animal facilities and procedures at universities across Canada. Every university in Canada using animals for experiments is being visited by a team of three to five individuals experienced in animal care and experimentation. Membership of these panels includes representatives from the technical advisory committee of the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies. I am told that in addition to their concern with animal care facilities these panels review the safeguards attached to animal experimentation so as to ensure that humane and ethical treatment of experimental animals is enforced and that proper use is made of our animal resources.

Some of the matters which the hon. member suggests should be reviewed by a House of Commons standing committee are really the responsibility of the provinces. For instance, the province of Ontario has recently introduced a very controversial bill, number 73, concerned with the procuring of laboratory animals from the municipal and S.P.C.A. dog pounds. Other provinces, namely Saskatchewan in 1953 and Alberta in 1966, have passed laws concerning pound procurement of unclaimed stray dogs. These provincial laws fulfill the recommendations of the report of the special N.R.C. committee on the care of experimental animals.

Thus, for a standing committee of the House of Commons to study this matter might draw attention to the problem in other provinces, but the committee would be spending time studying matters which are essentially of provincial concern. I would, therefore, suggest that some of the subject matter of this motion could be referred to a standing committee of the House of Commons. Some of it is within provincial jurisdiction, and some of these items have already been studied and reported on by competent investigatory groups.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a few words on this motion. Like a great many hon. members, I have been interested in this matter for a number of years. One of the main features of the motion is that there should be a national study by a House of Commons committee on the general well-being of animals. Because time is short, I shall deal with only that section of the motion which has received a good deal of attention from the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

The hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew (Mr. McBride) referred to the fact that in his opinion this problem would be adequately covered by the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code. I do not believe this is so. The difficulty with respect to experimental animals is not that there are not very good regulations put out by the Canadian Council on Animal Care, to which the hon. member for Algoma referred, but that in spite of their having laid out all these good regulations and ideas there is no legislation in Canada to enforce such regulations and standards.
