Fredericton Globe

A. J. MACLELLAN, Publisher and Proprietor.
FREDERICTON, N. B., MAR. 5, 1892.

A GREAT DEAL IN A NUTSHELL.

'Both sides are thoroughly organized and amply provided with the sinews of war.'

This precious scrap of paper appears in an exchange. The reference is to the Quebec elections now under way. It is no longer the independent votes of the electors, but the purchase of soul and body of the constituency. The side which has the most money is the winning horse. Upon this principle, or the want of it, what is called 'amercement'—that great boog-boo—might be brought about by Uncle Sam himself, if he so desired it, by sending money enough into the country (say $100,000) and placing it in the right hands and carry his point. The cry among his proteges would have to be independence—'not annexation'—this would cover the pill and it would go down 'slick.' In fact with such a constituency that can be bought by those who have the most money, is capable of anything. The Czar of Russia himself would stand a good chance in the market of such mercenaries. Is this then the beautiful Dominion of Canada that has a (mongrel) name among the nations reared in the lap of British institutions, and professes to be a free-born people? The question at the polls in Quebec will not be Deboucherville or Mercier—not constitutionalism, or arbitrary rule; but who has the most money to give the mercenary and slave for his vote. This alone will be the issue. And then the present state of the Republic, and come to us no longer to be regarded in the sense of the great palladium of the Englishman's liberty, but rather as the wind-mill whose sails are filled by every wind of doctrine which party generates and which the publishers are specially paid for keeping in motion. Of course these remarks do not apply to the independent manly press, but to the craven miserable party hacks on both sides.

The people under such auspices have a great deal to learn, and the first lesson in the curriculum, is to learn how to defend themselves against themselves—to stand upon their rights and exercise the power at their command, and come to learn that it is as much a sin for a man to sell his vote as for him to put his hands into another's pockets and steal his money.

DEATH OF MR. THOMAS DEBLOIS.

This gentleman who was well known in Fredericton, from his annual visits in passing to the fishing grounds at the North, has recently died in Salem, Mass., at the age of 92. One of the St. John papers says he was born on a steamer in 1800 on her way to America from England. It is needless to say that no steamer was even thought of at that early day—or one to cross the Atlantic until 1833, or thereabouts.

Four years ago, in company with a New York gentleman, Mr. Deblois and his friend tarried over night at the latter's house, so as to be ready for an early start for the fishing grounds next morning. Mr. Deblois' friend was taken sick that night and was a corpse ere the morning's dawn. His friends were notified and in a day afterwards his wife and son arrived in Fredericton from New York and took the body home. This gentleman was in the flush of health and fine spirits on his arrival here and visited many parts of the town the same evening and was greatly pleased with the place and especially the rural grandeur of the old elms which lined the streets. Alas! he was no more in twenty-four hours after, and Mr. Deblois returned to St. John after the sad occurrence which brought his fishing excursion to a close for that season. Mr. Deblois was then 88 years of age—tall and straight as a pine—and seemed as if he would have reached the centenary period of existence. No man was better known in St. John; or more highly respected than Thomas Deblois. But he too is gone.

THE MAYBRICK CASE.

A great deal of sympathy has been expressed in England and on this side of the water for Mrs. Florence Maybrick, who was sentenced to imprisonment for life in England for poisoning her husband—that is to say according to the judicial determination of the court which tried her case. The popular feeling in England was so great that within three days from the passing of sentence some 3,000 petitions were sent in against it with more than 500,000 signatures. It was under this pressure that Mr. Matthews, the secretary of state for the home department, reviewed the case, and committed Mrs. Maybrick's sentence of death to penal servitude for life. But why ask for Mrs. Maybrick's pardon if she be not guilty? Because there is no appeal for her to any court of justice. By the English law the case cannot be re-opened. English and American people, therefore, have asked the Queen to pardon her.

The judge who sentenced her to death has since become insane. His mental malady was so apparent soon after the trial that his resignation was demanded on the score of mental incapacity.

English women have from time to time asked American women to interest themselves in the matter because Mrs. Maybrick was an American. A fund was raised in the United States for Mrs. Maybrick's benefit, to which a great number of leading American women have contributed handsomely.

Mr. Maybrick's grandfather, David Chandler, born in Warrenton, Ga., was an able lawyer and a most philanthropic man. He was mainly instrumental in founding Wesleyan College, the first in the world to grant a diploma to girls. His eldest son William Chandler, was the father of Mrs. Maybrick. Her mother was Miss Holbrook, a daughter of the late Darius Blake Holbrook of New York,—he was associated with Cyrus W. Field in the laying of the first Atlantic cable. Rev. John Ingraham, rector of Grace Church in St. Louis and author of 'The Prince of the House of David,' was an uncle of Mrs. Maybrick's mother.

The claim of innocence put forth upon Mrs. Maybrick's case rests mainly upon the following assertions: That Mr. Maybrick was an arsenic eater; that the poison found in his body was taken by him medicinally, and was not administered by his wife; that it was not sufficient in quantity to cause death, and that he really died from natural causes.

INSURANCE RATES.

Every year thousands of dollars are sent away from Fredericton for protection from fire and paid to insurance companies. The total losses from fire in the Dominion are very little over one thousand dollars. With our excellent system of water works a serious conflagration is almost absolutely impossible. The question then naturally arises are our insurance rates not altogether too high? Do not the companies doing business here charge a great deal higher premium on risks than they are justified in charging. When they take into consideration the great protection afforded them—greater in fact than almost any other city in the Dominion—should they not reduce their rates in comparison with the great reduction in risks which they have to take. We believe Fredericton is paying altogether too much for insurance.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The local legislature was formally opened on Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock by His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Fuller. The speech from the throne would clearly indicate a short but probably busy session. The government comes before the present house with an even stronger following than last year and with the usual business-like tact displayed by the members of the Executive the details will in all probability be short but interesting.

One-Eyed Celebrities.

Lord Wolsey lost his eye in the Crimean War, and is yet happily fitted for active duty and all the enjoyments of life; nor can it be doubted that if a big war broke out in which England was a principal, the hero of Teled-Kehir would have a chance of showing how far he resembled Hannibal, the greatest of great captains, who, like our immortal Nelson on another element, was one-eyed.

Again, the first Marquis Cornwallis, who capitulated to George Washington at Yorktown, Virginia, in 1781, and was afterwards Viceroy of Ireland and Governor-General of India, lost his eye as an Eton boy, having been blinded by Stone Barrington, who died Bishop of Durham.

With more recent times well-known men abound who, like Colonel Montague, Lord Londesborough, and Mr. Egremont, have had their eyes lost in the field, which is sometimes scarcely less dangerous than the battle-field.

A clergyman of Lincolnshire lately preached a long sermon from the text, 'Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting.'

After the congregation had listened about an hour, some began to get weary and went out; others soon followed, greatly to the annoyance of the minister. Another person started, whereupon the parson stopped his sermon, and said—'That is right, gentlemen; as fast as you are weighed pass out.'

He continued his sermon some time after that, but no one disturbed him by leaving.

LOCAL LEGISLATURE.

The Formal Opening Took Place Thursday Afternoon.

The Speech Delivered by His Honor the Lieut. Governor.

Despite the storm which prevailed, large numbers turned out Thursday afternoon to witness the opening of the local legislature. There was a fair attendance of members in the ornate chamber when His Honor the Lieutenant Governor delivered the following speech:

MR. SPEAKER AND HONORABLE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL:
MR. SPEAKER AND GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY:

I meet you with pleasure upon your again assembling for the discharge of your legislative duties, relying with confidence upon your zeal and ability in the public service.

The untimely death of the Duke of Clarence, heir-presumptive to the throne, a few weeks ago, created a feeling of profound sorrow throughout the empire, to which of the people of this Province, I cannot be considered to be an exception. I am proud to be able to congratulate you upon the abundant harvest of the past year.

I have much satisfaction in informing you that the commission appointed two years ago to enquire into the report upon the general management of our Crown timber lands have concluded their labors, and their conclusions, to which I have received a most gracious acknowledgment in reply. I regret to say that the lumber industry of the Province has not yet emerged from the depression with which it has been afflicted, nor do I see any immediate prospect of improvement. I am, however, happy in being able to congratulate you upon the abundant harvest of the past year.

I am gratified at being able to inform you that the Mining Law enacted last year, and which has been therefore less than twelve months in operation, has already given a marked impetus to the licensing of mining areas to mining exploration generally. I look with some confidence for a substantial development in this direction during the season upon which we are now entering.

The disappointing results of the census, from which it had been confidently expected that a large addition to the Dominion would have resulted, has been a subject of much consideration by my government. While recognizing the importance of maintaining permanently the equilibrium between income and expenditure, it has been deemed by my government none the less important that additional means be found to further assist the depleting and limited agricultural interests, so as to diminish if possible the outflow of our farming population. To this end a session has been prepared, and will be laid before you for augmenting the revenue from sources hitherto undrawn upon, to which I invite your careful attention.

The claim against the government of the Dominion in connection with the Eastern Extension matter, so called, is, I regret to say, a very serious one, and my government has been obliged to press its payment upon the government at Ottawa, but so far without success.

The obligation resting upon the state to provide for the education of the blind and deaf and dumb has already been recognized by the government of the people of the Province, but not, I am led to believe, to the extent demanded by the growing needs of these unfortunate classes.

MR. SPEAKER AND GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY:
Under the authority conferred at the last session of the Legislature, a very extensive investigation was made of the various standard breeds was made from the sister Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The quality of the animals imported is admitted to have been a very high order, and their distribution throughout the Province cannot fail to be of general benefit.

I have directed the accounts of the income and expenditure of the past year, as well as a statement of the receipts and payments of the current year, up to the opening of the present session, to be laid before you.

MR. SPEAKER AND GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY:
Bills have been prepared—
To declare the rights of the Crown, as respects certain public lands and property.

NOTES AND NOTIONS.

Running Comments on Passing Events.

Sundry Ebulitions in Prose and Rhyme.

Now the Domestic, Social and Literary World is Wagging.

'Henry,' cried Mrs. Von Tordles, grasping her somewhat husband by the arm. 'Henry, there are burglars in the house. Get up and go down.' 'Utter nonsense, my dear,' returned Henry. 'You wouldn't have a man of my social position associating with burglars, would you? You as a townswoman!'

The young Barber: 'But a fellow can't talk politics with out fear of offending some one he don't know.'

'Well, congratulate me, old fellow. I am a father!'

'Good! Boy or girl?'

'By Jove! So excited I forgot to ask.' By the aid of old manuscripts at Paris, Vienna, Venice and Munich, M. Bertelot maintains that the invention of gunboats and armor-protected guns is as old as the fifteenth century.

Brown: 'Did you take any holidays last year Jones?'

Jones: 'Yes of course.'

Brown: How did you manage your business while you were away?'

Jones: 'Oh, I just took my advertisement out of the papers until I returned, so there was no business to manage. Capital idea, wasn't it?'

POOR DOCUMENT

KATE VALLIANT.

With --the-- Circus!

"That is being too exacting on behalf of your sister," she said, faintly coloring. "You let her go to a place I abominate, and then want me to accompany her, and so on to mention that of which I thoroughly disapprove."

"But you disapprove on such impossible grounds," he urged.

"Impossible, are they? 'Kate has been in love with riding, all her life,' you told me once. I now tell you she's in love with a rider—who has been your stable-boy."

"I forbid her going—if I disappoint the child—will you take it as evidence of my belief in what you say?"

"Undoubtedly I shall—and so will everyone else," she said defiantly.

"Then Kate and I will go together; it shall never be thought that her own brother wronged her by degrading suggestions."

"He spoke so hotly and turned away so abruptly, to conceal his indignation, that he did not catch the quick, triumphant glance which flashed from Blanche's eyes across the room to Godfrey."

"In justice to Godfrey, it must be told that he did not flash back a similar one. On the contrary, he lowered his eyes, and though the blood rushed to his forehead, it was rather the search of shame which he felt, than a glow of triumph or satisfaction."

"Now the question arises, dear, how shall we all go to the circus, this afternoon?"

Philip addressed his sister cheerfully and politely, with a conviction that he had been goaded into his line of action by Kate's mind.

"Supposing we give it up, Phil? If the other don't care about going, I'll give it up, and explain away our absence pleasantly to Ralph," she said eagerly, and Miss Carroll's comment on Kate's surrender of her desire to go, settled Philip in his determination.

"We none of us doubt that you could soothe Ralph's outraged feelings, but why take the office of comforter upon yourself, Kate? Philip is willing to go with you to-day; why disarrange this plan, and make a new one, which will give you the trouble of privately interviewing the sensitive circus-rider?"

"How curiously you twist what I say, about 'Kate expostulated,' and 'we will go no more dear, we go!' Philip said firmly. 'Aunt Laurence, will Mrs. Carroll and you, go in the landau? Kate, Godfrey and I will go in the dog-cart.'"

"I have to see a man this afternoon about the site for the proposed new church school at Straceyleigh," Godfrey interrupted. "Lord Marple has promised a site, and—"

"Oh, of course, business before pleasure! Oh, I'll go with you, if you like. I can do please the Straceyleighs about the school site. The schools have been hanging fire for years through the half-faulty, half-functious conduct of the old chap who was vicar there formerly. I'll let you have five feet deep of that red marble quarry for the benefit of the little church Lord Marple is going to build."

"In fact, you'll do all you can to better my position," Godfrey cried, hilariously trying to cover under the veil of gaiety something like real emotion which his cousin's generous words had called forth.

"Make the most of your opportunities and get through all the business you can this afternoon, Godfrey. Fred struck it sarcastically. 'If I had not, as in social duty bound, agreed to my host's disposal of my afternoon hours, I'd have offered to help you to interview the man about the school site and the quarry for the church.'"

"Women are in the way at business interviews between agents and builders."

"Are they, Godfrey? Then I won't suggest that Blanche should help you with her advice instead of me."

"If Blanche takes my advice, she will spend the whole of this afternoon resting," Mrs. Carroll spoke with nervous solemnity, the cause of which was quite apparent to keen-eyed Fred.

"Oh, Mrs. Carroll! Shame! shame! Would you encourage young people in habits of indolence? Blanche is quite well and strong, why shouldn't she improve the shining hours of this lovely August day in helping my brother to look at sites and marble?"

"I think we had all better go to luncheon, and then get ourselves off to the Circus," Mrs. Beaufort said, appealing to Kate. "Let us set an example of energy, Kate; we'll rearrange your brother's programme. Let the Admiral go in the landau with mamma and your aunt, and you and I will go in the dog-cart with the groom. Phil can then stay and amuse Blanche."

"Blanche must excuse me for once. I am going with my sister."

Mrs. Beaufort heaved an impatient, angry sigh.

"These people are wilfully blinding themselves," she thought angrily; "that dear, trustworthy girl is being made the scapegoat of Miss Blanche's machinations. What a fool Philip is, and what a fine glorious fellow! And what a greater fool Godfrey! She'll never sacrifice a jot for him, but she'll wring honore and manliness and gratitude out of his being and she will pride herself on keeping her head all the time, and sit in the seat of the scornful above him. Poor Philip!"

CHAPTER VIII.

MRS. BEAUFORT INTERVENING.

"May I stay at home with you, Blanche? I'm sure you're not well."

It was just as they were about to start for the afternoon performance at Straceyleigh that Mrs. Beaufort said this to her sister, coming into the latter's room and finding her lying on the sofa, with the room well darkened.

"Thank you, Lou, but if you can believe it I can endure my own thoughts and society for two or three hours."

pleasant to her that both the sisters should remain behind, leaving the field open to her. It was also pleasant to her that Blanche should be contented.

The landau drove off followed by the dog-cart, and Mrs. Beaufort retraced her steps into the house. Now that they were gone, now that Godfrey had ridden off and Blanche remained secluded in her room, the married sister began to experience the sensation of having done something foolish and uncalculated-for.

After all, the packing up for Godfrey, which she had assigned as a reason for remaining behind, could not be done by her until he came back to direct her; she had promised not to come back till the others returned from the circus. "I believe, too, that he'll keep his promise," she thought, and she began to hope that her sister would not hear that she had stayed at home.

Blanche, meanwhile, who had not been able to witness the departure of the party who had gone to the circus, and who was consequently ignorant of the fact of her sister having stayed at home, drew off all semblance of fatigue and desire for rest, and the sword of the carriage wheels died away in the distance. She rose from the sofa walked swiftly to the window, ran up the curtained blind, and looked out eagerly in the direction of a small copse known as the Wilderness, to the left of the lawn.

"After a slight pause she looked at the green impatient and muttering something about 'men being such idiots, they always made a bundle of the smallest matters that had to be settled in the end, she went and stood for another minute before the glass, rearranging her hair, and placing a hat upon it becomingly. Then she slipped off her engagement ring, laughing as she did it.

"'I'll appeal to him, this little suggestion,' she thought, 'but I must have his feelings by the sight of it, when it's possible to spare him,' she thought. Then, with a parting glance at the beautiful face that overlooked the porch of giving exquisite pleasure and exquisite pain to men who were much nobler than herself, she walked slowly and gracefully down the stairs and then out of the house through the conservatory.

In passing, she had brushed against the fronds of a gigantic fern, on the other side of which Mrs. Beaufort was sitting reading. But Blanche was so preoccupied that she did not see the figure of her aunt, and she did not think it worth the kindly fern, and so she went on her way unimpeded.

In a moment Mrs. Beaufort's indignation and alarm, feelings which had been seething for a quarter of an hour, rose up strengthened by this apparent confirmation of the justice of them. (They had planned to meet for a moment in the hall—'they're both deceiving me,' she thought. 'His riding away was only a ruse; he has only ridden to some other of the ways to meet her.')

She rose up, and followed scarcely knowing what she should do or say if she came upon the pair, and yet never hesitating for a moment to baffle them if she could. Her wrath rose high against them both, as she skinned the back of her hand with the power she should have had of arranging another secret meeting, of that she was determined. She would run undisciplined as her lioness could be rather than let Blanche gain the shelter of the Wilderness, and elude her.

"The distance between them was lessening at that moment, and she had been looking up Godfrey up to this very day," Mrs. Beaufort allowed herself to get angry as she questioned this.

Blanche remained maddeningly cool as she answered.

"None but a fool would ever have supposed for a moment that it could possibly be any one but Philip, as Philip owns Hasseton."

"Ah, Blanche don't say that, it's too heartless. I'm sure poor Godfrey Wyndham believed to-day that you were ready to break with Philip for his sake."

"Then he was a fool, a mistaken fool. I am sorry to say; but he thought so who didn't let me put me to the test, and keep his appointment?"

"Can you ask why? He remembered his honor."

"When he was reminded of it by you," Blanche interrupted. "Well, all's well that ends well. Godfrey has loved—and still loves you, and I can assure you very truly and with the most perfect equanimity that it is Philip whom I intend to marry. You need not do duenna for me any more."
