LOVE SNARLS FOR PITTSBURG RICH

Millionaires of Smoky City Unluckily Married.

THE DIVORCE RECORD IS LONG

Early Days of the City Not Free of Sensations of Sort Now Becoming Common.

Pittsburg, June 28.—Pittsburg millionaires and their sons have been unfortunate in their marriages. And they can scarcely make Adam's excuse and say, "The woman thou gavest me, O Lord," for in most cases it has been the wife who has suffered wrong at the hands of the husband, or at least the evidence in the divorce cases seems to have borne out this theory. Through a long series of years there has been a string of divorce cases on trial here in the Allegheny County courts which attracted attention throughout the country.

One of the earlier Thaws, has name has been given to the divorce for the moment, started the list. That was the famous "Indian princess" trial. Glorious old "Tom" Marshall, Allegheny County's most famous criminal lawyer, made his reputation in the trial of that case. Cuba U. Quit was the Indian princess. She married a Thaw. At least the world recognized them as married, and the man never made any denial of it. She knew little of her husband or his antecedents. When he died she was advised to sue for a widow's dower of his rich estate.

Only the older people of the nation remember that trial today, but it was one of the most remarkable ever tried here. The Thaws won, although the popular verdict was in favor of the dusky Indian girl who had pledged her life and her honor to the son of the Thaws. All that remains in Pittsburg today to recall that famous trial is an alley named for the Indian princess.

It was a rich woman, while it lasted. Buried somewhere under the dust of two generations in the Allegheny County courthouse are the records of the famous "Cuba U. Quit" claims. To his dying day "Tom" Marshall maintained the Indian woman had been wronged, because of her color.

Legend of Indian's Curse.
There is a legend that when denied even the honor of wifehood, the Indian woman pronounced a curse on the name of Thaw. Whether she did or not, the family has certainly suffered from its share of tragedies and sorrows.

Old William Thaw, founder of the family, never went through the divorce courts, but he had his own troubles. He is known only as a Christian gentleman, philanthropist, business man of remarkable ability. The fact that his wife did not live with him for years, because of his fondness for the society of other women, particularly young girls, is not exploited, as some of his descendants have done, as a blot on his name. The family visited him often.

Of course, the cases of William Ellis Corey, president of the United States Steel Corporation; Harry Kendall Thaw and August Hartje, the millionaire paper manufacturer of this city, are just now crowding the newspapers. They are each sensational enough in every way. Corey, lifted from comparative poverty as clerk in a coal office at $40 a month, to a position where he presided over the business of a billion-dollar corporation, lost his head over a chorus girl. The wife he had married when she was a house servant for his father would not do for his exalted station. He wanted to be rid of her and the divorce suit recently filed by the wife in Nevada is the result.

Augustus Hartje is now endeavoring to prove his wife is a moral degenerate and has named a negro as co-respondent in his divorce case.

Blaine Junior's Trouble.
James G. Blaine, Jun., was a Pittsburg burger. His father was born and raised but a few miles outside of the city, and he met and married his wife there. She was Miss Marie Nevins, of this city. She was a pretty actress with a brilliant career ahead of her. She probably thought an alliance with the son of the first statesman of the day would bring laurels to her, and she could reach in no other way. It brought heartaches and she sued him for divorce. She married Dr. Bull, a famous surgeon of New York. Young Blaine entered the matrimonial market again and wedded Miss Martha Hise, daughter of Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock. She is now suing him for divorce.

Lawrence C. Phillips, nephew of Henry Phillips, partner of Andrew Carnegie, is another Pittsburg millionaire whose married life did not prove happy. There was much sensational testimony that could have been brought out in the trial, but it was not. The divorce was secured quietly, and now it is said the divorcees are casting sheep-eyes at each other, and if they were remarried it would not surprise anybody.

Romance of Hart-McKee.
Hart McKee, son of the millionaire glass man and traction magnate, married Lida Sutton. She stood it as long as she could and sued for divorce on the grounds of gross cruelty, negligence and non-support. He said that by paying her $30,000 and not contesting the divorce, a messenger waited here the day the decision was handed down, and the instant it was over he started with a transcript for New York. Arriving there he placed the transcript in Hart McKee's hands at 7 o'clock the next morning. That afternoon a license was granted McKee to wed the beautiful Denver widow, Mrs. Tavis. They were married and started at once for Europe, sailing that afternoon. They have not disturbed the serene pool of Pittsburg society since.

James King Clark and his "violet bride" are known wherever divorce proceedings are read. He was son and heir of the ironmaster, Charles Clark. He married Miss Edith Bartlett, and the honeymoon never ended, for the divorce suit began too soon. Mrs. Clark testified in the trial of her divorce case that her husband became repugnant to her the first time she saw him taking off his shoes, and he sat down on the floor to perform that operation. Clark sued for divorce and the jury disagreed. Then the bride tried it, and she won. She is married again and is living happily ever afterward.

Charles Clark, alias "Chic," cousin of the above named, married a girl from Atlanta, Ga. She was certainly worthy of a better man. They came upon hard times. The Clark estate was tied up in legal battles. The young man, who had never tried to work, when he attempted to become a newspaper man, was helpless to support a wife. But the girl stood the test. They had one room over in Allegheny. She cooked their meals in a chafing dish, and if ever a woman stood by a man she stood by him. The clouds rolled away. The legal entanglements were untangled. The Clark fortune depended upon fat, chubby "Chic." He was again rolling in wealth. But he immediately forgot the woman who had helped him over the rough places. She sued for divorce, finally, and got it. The next day she married a son of Charles Donnelly, another of Pittsburg's millionaires.

SWEATED PUBLIC IN CITY JOBS

How Some Toronto Roofers Got Rid of Excessive Competition.

Toronto, June 27.—Methods similar to those employed in the plumbers' combine were shown in a series of revelations at Judge Winchester's court yesterday. The inner circle of Toronto roofers for the purpose of "eliminating excessive competition," and sweating the public for the last dollar that the job would stand.

A take-off of $2,205 on St. Lawrence market contracts was distributed by a clearing house company known as the Roofers' Supply Company (Limited), to the firms participating in the benefits of the combination. Assistant Manager Brecken described a similar arrangement on the manufacturers' building in Exhibition Park, where $1,275 was to be divided among eight or ten firms, but the successful tenderer did not abide by the agreement.

Mr. A. B. Ormsby swore that the take-off was a matter of percentage of from 10 to 20 per cent. In addition to whatever profit the tendering firm calculated for themselves, the assistant manager was to receive 10 per cent on the amount of their tender to those who had consented to put up fake or dummy tenders in so-called competition.

Mr. A. E. Wheeler, of Wheeler & Bain, the chief witness, testified that in 1899 his firm was in the sheet metal business, and put in a tender on the St. Lawrence market. He was paid $600 to allow the Metallic Roofing Company to get the contract. They might have got it if other firms had not been arranged with. His firm supplied good machinery, and were manufacturers; hence, they got a larger sum than the others.

FOOLED ONLY HIMSELF.

A dinner was given in Yvette Guilbert's honor in New York, and the actress made a little speech in English. "My English is not so good," she said, "but it is not so bad, either, as the French of a New York gentleman, who went to see Mme. Bernhardt play. 'This man would laugh when it was said in the play, and he would weep when it was said. He desired, you see, to seem to know well the French, but he was stupid a little.'"

"At the first act's end a comedian, a great artist of the company, came before the curtain and said in French a few words. Whereupon all the house was silent, but the New York man, for encouragement, applauded long and loud.

"And the man replied in a manner quite brazen: 'So as to make it appear that I understand French, eh?'

"I thought so much," said the neighbor with a great frown. "And do you know what the artist who was applauding said?"

"No. What did he say?" demanded the other one.

He said, replied the first, "that the rest of his part would be taken by his understudy, because that he has just received a cable dispatch that his mother is dead in Amiens."—Buffalo News.

POETRY AT $1,875 A LINE.

The highest price ever paid for poetry was $1,875 a line—$15,000 for an eight-line poem.

It was not a good poem, either. James Smith, one of the authors of "Rejected Addresses," wrote it. Smith set one night at dinner in London. Strachan, the famous English printer, Strachan, what with old age and gout, was most infirm. Indeed, he could hardly walk. But his mind was exceedingly powerful and brilliant, and he talked so well that Smith, on his return home wrote the following doggerel about the old man:

"Your lower limbs seemed far from stout
When last I saw you walk;
The cause I presently found out
When you began to talk.
The power that props the body's length,
In due proportion spread,
In you mounts upward, and the strength
All settles in the head."

Though this was undeniably rank poetry and ranker flattery, it pleased Printer Strachan so well that he added to it a couplet giving Smith $15,000.—Exchange.

'T WAS WASHING DAY FOR THE LAMBS

Famous Ones Gather at the Larchmont Yacht Club.

DINKELSPIEL HOBART'S WOE

Comes to Grief in Horse Race in Chippy Sea—Is Rescued by De Wolf Hopper.

New York, June 28.—It was the day of the annual wash and shearing yesterday for the members of the Lambs' Club, and the Larchmont yacht folks placed their whole outfit at the disposal of the actors in which to perform the sacred rites. But it is only an empty form nowadays, and most of the Lambs were so afraid of swallowing some of the Sound that they wouldn't wash at all, but grounded on the Larchmont bar, inside the club house, and refused all offers from the commodores and able seamen for a tow. The only salvage of the day was that collected by DeWolf Hopper for rescuing Dinkelspiel Hobart from being carried to sea on a floating hobby horse.

Dinkelspiel was one of the few Lambs who had enough of the spirit of tradition in him to really venture a wash without the aid of a valet. He was tempted by a lot of barrels floating at the anchorage, with saddles painted on the staves, horses' heads nailed to one end and tails to the other. He challenged any Lamb to a horse race, and Billy Ernst, the dramatist; George Bailes, a manager, and Samuel Harburger, a philanthropist, took him up. There were only these four entries, with Dinkelspiel an odds-on favorite, wearing the green silk of borrowed swiftness. The trunks that had been made for a smaller man, jockeyed for a start, and cleared the end of the float, whereupon the others calmly climbed ashore and remarked to Hobart that they had been left at the post, but that they might go ahead and have a good time, seeing that he seemed to think such a devil of a lot of water. Dramatist, Manager and Philanthropist went back to the bar at an easy canter, Philanthropist winning by a nose. In the meantime Dinkelspiel barrel and he began to bloat for help.

"Soon he'll be but a tiny speck on the throbbing sea," chuckled Frank Doane, the only comedian with a yachting cap who owns a real yacht.

"Speak, nothing," exclaimed Stanley Hawkins, the tenor. "Long Island Sound isn't wide enough to make Dinkelspiel look like a speck. Notice how the silk is shrinking on his freeboard."

Dinkelspiel in Peril.
Joe Weber took possession of the gaze of the spectators as he rapidly rose up the mast of the floating barrel.

"He'll make Long Island with that barrel on the bit!" yelled Nell McKaye. "Ten to seven that he won't get back to the barge."

"Even money that he won't wash," said Ed Brees, offering to make a book.

Dinkelspiel was now out beyond the breakwater, and for a moment it was hard to distinguish between the choppy water of the green sea and the green silk of the jockey. There was some doubt in the paddock as to whether the rider or the barrel was on top. But DeWolf Hopper with his eye at the glass (spyglass), allayed all fears with the announcement that he could see Dinkelspiel, because the silk had split up the back.

"His trunks are carried away," shouted DeWolf Hopper, refusing to give up his place at the glass. "There goes the left leg. He's under jury rig, and if any jury catches him in that rig it's conviction. He's pulled out the horse's tail. He's wrapping the tail about him. This is shameful. He's pulled off the horse's head and is using it for an oar, trying to make that wooded point to the northward. He's a disgrace to the race. He's trying to get into the barrel. There goes the right leg of the rights. He'll be ruled out now when he weighs in."

By this time Sam Harburger, the philanthropist, was nervous and called for a volunteer crew to rescue Dinkelspiel. DeWolf Hopper, knowing more about the seriousness of the situation than anybody else, was made commander of the crew, with Wilton Lackaye as first mate. Dinkelspiel's own clothes were stored away in a launch and the rescuing party set out to chase the barrel.

They caught it going east on the tide, and Wilton Lackaye hailed Dinkelspiel, asking him why he went away before the clambake.

Dresses Astride a Barrel.
"Come alongside, will you?" asked Hobart, rearranging his horse-tail girder.

"No, Dinkley, you are not dressed for company," said Lackaye, throwing the lever of the launch over to the full speed notch, and remarking to the man on the barrel that dinner would be ready in two hours, and also suggesting that he might find it rough going around Point Judith.

"Help," shouted the jockey. "Take me in and I'll buy!"

"You can't come aboard among gentlemen and commodores till you are dressed," said Stanley Hawkins, throwing Dinkelspiel one of his own socks. "But that on without falling off the barrel."

Hobart grabbed the sock and got it right off the barrel. Then he got it into the sock. But the rescuers declared that it was a left sock and made him take it off, balance on the other side, and put it on the other foot. A catboat with a lot of women aboard came along, and Dinkelspiel slipped off into the sea, supporting himself temporarily by holding on to the rim of the barrel. Hopper wouldn't let him emerge till the catboat had tacked over to the Long Island shore. Then the other sock was thrown to him and he got it.

"Make those hose stays taut on your booms there," sternly commanded the leader of the rescuers as Dinkelspiel reached out appealingly for his trousers. Hobart tightened up the garters and then asked if he couldn't come aboard just for a minute to rest. But his shirt was thrown to him, and he had to put that on. Then a collar and tie. He was still astride the barrel in a choppy sea with the horse's tail as a drapey when he fixed his cravat, but Hopper didn't like the knot. A vote was taken in the launch, and it was unanimously decided that Dinkelspiel must tie the cravat over again before the work of rescue could go any further.

Dinkelspiel got his trousers next, handed to him on the end of a boat-hook. He threw away the horse's tail with the air of a man who had just been rescued after seven weeks at sea. He got his right leg in very cleverly, but when he gingerly threw the left leg over, side-saddle fashion, to finish the job of putting on the garment, his barrel rolled and Dinkelspiel went into the Sound. Landrie caught him on a boat-model and pulled him in. He sat after he had promised never to go to the races again.

DEATH SUMMONS WILLIAM HENDRIE

Famous Turfman and President of the O. J. C. Passes Away.

Hamilton, June 27.—Wm. Hendrie, an historic figure on the Canadian turf, died at 2:30 this afternoon.

He has been a Canadian since his small beginnings in this country, and has lent a helping hand to raise it step by step to the high plane it now occupies.

On the formation of the Ontario Jockey Club in 1881 Mr. Hendrie was one of the directors, and on the resignation of the latter assumed the presidency of that body, and held that position continuously until 1905, when he resigned in favor of the late Sir Frank Smith.

On the death of that body, and held that position continuously until 1905, when he resigned in favor of the late Sir Frank Smith.

He has also been president of the Canadian Jockey Club since its inception.

He was at his death the owner of one of the largest racing stables in America.

Besides his many successes on the racetrack, he was, in addition to other places, he twice captured the Queen's Plate with Butter Scotch and Lyddite, and was always a formidable figure in that historic event, he was "cherry" in the 1905 two-year-old stake in America, which he captured with Martinus.

He also won the Brighton Handicap and the Spencer Handicap with the great mare Lava-rock.

Mr. Hendrie never bet on his horses, no matter how good they were, and his own, and always took a beating in the most generous spirit. He was in the game for the love of it, and was one of the old school of genuine sportsmen, who are all too few in these modern days.

This spring Mr. Hendrie was elected to membership of the English Jockey Club. It was the first time a Canadian turfman ever received this honor, and only twice before was it bestowed on Americans.

He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, November, 1831, and came to Canada in 1854. In 1885, with John Shedden, he introduced the railway carriage system into Canada. Later he made a reputation as a railway promoter and contractor.

A widow, four sons and six daughters survive. The sons are: Lieut.-Col. Hon. John S. Hendrie, M.P. for West Hamilton, chairman of the Legislature railway committee, and member without portfolio; William Hendrie, managing director of the O. J. C.; George M. Hendrie, Detroit, and Murray Hendrie. The daughters are: Mrs. J. D. Hay, Toronto; Mrs. A. D. Hendrie, New York; wife of the former manager of the Hamilton branch of the Bank of Montreal; Mrs. Eckford, High River, Alberta; Mrs. Henry Ledyard, Detroit; Miss Hendrie and Miss Phyllis Hendrie, at home.

U. S. PURE FOOD BILL
Measure to Check Adulteration and Impurity Passes Congress.

Washington, D. C., June 27.—The pure food bill was agreed upon by the conference for the Senate and House today, and was reported to the Senate just before adjournment.

The bill as agreed upon makes it a misdemeanor to manufacture, sell, or offer for sale any article of food, drugs, medicines or liquors which is adulterated or misbranded, or which contains any poisonous or deleterious substance.

It prescribes for each offense a fine not to exceed $500, one year's imprisonment, or both, and for each subsequent offense a fine of not less than $1,000 or one year's imprisonment.

Section two prohibits the introduction into any state or territory of any article adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the act under penalty not exceeding a fine of $200 for the first offense, and $500 or one year's imprisonment or both for each subsequent offense.

Concerning shipments to a foreign country it is provided that no article shall be deemed misbranded or adulterated when no substance is used in conflict of the laws of the foreign country for which it is intended.

Japan's foreign trade in 1905 broke the record, reaching more than $600,000,000, against $345,000,000 in 1904. A million men were drawn by the war from productive industry; yet those at home were able to supply army and navy and still have an increased volume of goods to export.

GEORGE WAS TOO LATE.

It was on a Sabbath morn, and George Murgatroyd had just turned over to sleep again, after making his sixth resolution to get up. But the cry, fraught with anxiety and trepidation, that came from the room below, banished sleep instantly.

It was his wife's voice—the dear girl whom he had taken from a parent's—or rather, two parents'—care.

"George! Come quick!"

What could be the matter?

"George! Why don't you come? Come! Come!"

In his frantic haste he had on his trousers had part before, and his shirt was a wreck, but what of that? Like a flash it came to him, the tale of yesterday, told by his little wife, at which he had scoffed—a tale of a dark-browed man who came to read the gas meter, and who had behaved so strangely that Maud suspected him of being a burglar's spy. The man had come again—even now, perhaps—

"George! If you don't come it'll be too late!"

What were collar studs, now that he should search for them? With one bound he overturned the rocking-chair and smashed the water jug; in another instant he had collided with the open door of the wardrobe; at the third step he tripped over his braces and came down on his elbows and countenance.

"Courage, Maud!" he cried. "I am coming!"

He was only a pale bookkeeper, and unarmed, save with nature's weapons, but not for a moment did he falter.

"You're too late," said Maud, with a pretty pout, as George dashed into the room with a fire in his eye that the blood on his nose could not dim.

"What—where is he?" he gasped, looking around, with an awful faintness at the heart.

"I wanted you to see the baby," said she, in a disappointed tone. "He had his foot in his mouth, and you've no idea how pretty the little dear looked!"—Tit-Bits.

LONDON, THURSDAY, JUNE 28.

ENTERPRISING LAW-BREAKERS.

London is sometimes reproached with being slow in the race for new industries. Some light is being thrown on the superior "enterprise" of other municipalities. The city council of Brantford is just now threatened with an injunction to prevent the granting of a fixed assessment to the Brantford Sewer Company on condition of its building a new factory. The Brantford Exporter says:

"The reason advanced for the proceedings is that bylaws of this character, under the bonus clause of the municipal act, require the consent of the ratepayers. This is undoubtedly true. On the other hand, the city council of Brantford, in common with the councils of other municipalities, has been in the habit of making concessions of this kind to new industries, or to old industries erecting new buildings, and it is hardly fair that the sewer company should be dealt with in an exceptional manner."

The law having been broken so many times, it would be unfair not to break it again in favor of a home concern. Such is the gist of the Exporter's argument. The Hamilton Times confesses that the law is a dead letter in the Ambitious City also, and has been violated many times. The Times contends that the local authorities wink at these infractions partly because they are in the direction of a right principle, namely, that improvement and industry should not be penalized. The law is the law, and a municipality has no more right to break it than an individual. Our system of taxation, which imposes a fine on all improvements, may be all wrong in theory, but that is another question. Municipalities have been engaged in bribing industries to leave other places, and some of the smaller ones were nearly bankrupted by excessive bonusing. The present law was intended to protect municipalities against themselves, and take out of the hands of municipal councils the power to pledge the city credit to any amount without consulting the people.

The city of London has scrupulously obeyed the law, though it may have suffered for doing so. Other municipalities have flouted it with impunity and may continue doing so, as it is seldom that a case occurs like that in Brantford, where a ratepayer is willing to check up the council. London will have to stir itself to meet this illegal competition, but not necessarily in an illegal way. It is generally realized that the city made a mistake in not years ago acquiring a tract of land for factory sites. Is it too late to think about it now?

NIAGARA POWER STILL REMOTE.

"Newspapers of the Province with a single exception have seen in the transmission of power from Niagara Falls an industrial revolution such as will add wealth and happiness to the whole people. With one exception, the newspapers have risen above party politics, to lend a helping hand toward the possible consummation of so tremendous an enterprise. "It is a pity that this single exception should find an existence in the home town of the man who has done more than any one other to bring magic electricity within the range of every workshop and home in Western Ontario."—London Free Press.

Presumably this is aimed at The Advertiser, because, in common with the Hamilton Times, the Brantford Exporter, the Stratford Beacon and other newspapers in Western Ontario, it has questioned whether the power legislation of the Provincial Government will be useful to the municipalities.

Either the member for London lacked the courage of his convictions, or he was overruled in the cabinet. Certainly the bill brought down fell far short of what he led the public to expect, or what the municipalities demanded.

The representatives of the cities and towns of Western Ontario, who met at Toronto, petitioned the Government to undertake the transmission, and, if need be, the development, of Niagara power, as the enterprise was beyond the resources of the municipalities. In this they were merely asking Mr. Whitney and his colleagues to implement their pledges when in Opposition. The Conservative party in the Legislature supported this resolution, moved by Mr. Macmillan, on Feb. 5, 1902.

"That the waters of the Niagara River and its tributaries, as well as the waters of other streams, where necessary, should, at the earliest moment, be utilized directly by THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT, in order that the latter may generate and develop electricity and pneumatic power for the purposes of light, heat, and power, and FURNISH THE SAME TO THE MUNICIPALITIES IN THIS PROVINCE, AT COST."

The Government now refuses to assume any financial responsibility in the matter. It has appointed a commission, which will furnish any municipality with an estimate of the cost of transmitting Niagara power, but the Government will not guarantee the commission's figures. If the actual cost should prove more than the estimated cost, the municipality must pay the shot. The Province will loan the money at 3 1/2 per cent, a rate at which it can easily borrow. It is extremely doubtful whether any municipality or group of municipalities will take the risk of building transmission lines, without more financial aid from the Government. Apparently they will, after all, have to rely upon the power companies, but the companies are not disposed to make further great expenditures with the threat of expropriation hanging over their heads. The importance of cheap power to the cities and towns of Western Ontario cannot be overestimated, and the Provincial Government might have safely done a great deal more to help the municipalities to help themselves.

NOT A CREED ISSUE.

Mr. Bourassa, Mr. Tarte, and other stormy petrels of Quebec politics, are attempting to work up feeling against the Sabbath observance bill. Mr. Tarte has been so much the victim of race and religious agitators in Ontario that it is surprising to find him using similar weapons against Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Quebec. He accuses the Premier of sanctioning Sunday legislation under pressure of the Presbyterian Church. Such a statement may not be intended as an appeal to creed prejudice, but it is language that will work mischief. The active agent of the Lord's Day Alliance, Rev. J. G. Shearer, is a Presbyterian minister, but the alliance itself embraces members of most of the Protestant denominations, the large majority being laymen. It is not entirely a Protestant movement, however, as Archbishop Bruchési, of the Roman Catholic diocese of Montreal, is in hearty accord with the main objects of the alliance, and has given his approval to the measure now before the House. No doubt, however, by making a bogey of Shearer, just as Sir Wilfrid Laurier's opponents made a bogey of Mr. Sbarrett a year or so ago, the agitators against the bill may stir up some trouble for the Government in the Province of Quebec. The labor organizations are looking at the question in a true light, and are virtually unanimous in indorsing the measure in its main outlines. The Government has shown courage and firmness in adopting the bill as its own, and shows no intention of receding.

Congress has passed a pure food bill, but the American quick lunch will see to it that indigestion holds its own as a national complaint.

The late William Hendrie, of Hamilton, the greatest horseman in Canada, never bet on a race. Mr. Hendrie was a sportsman, not a sport.

Mr. Aylesworth said no such thing. Why not consult Hansard?

The late Alexander Muir could well subscribe to the famous saying, "Let me write a nation's song, and I care not who makes its laws." The name of the author of "The Maple Leaf" will outlast that of most of our politicians.

Maine Republicans declare against a reciprocity treaty which would admit Canadian lumber and farm products. This is the sort of broad-gauge American statesmanship that has made Canada commercially independent of the United States.

THE BECK POWER BILL.

[Brantford Exporter.]

A meeting of the municipalities in Western Ontario more particularly interested in the question of Niagara power development is to be held shortly for the purpose of formulating if possible a satisfactory answer to the question, "What next?" An answer is not likely to be so easily found as some of the enthusiastic admirers of the Beck bill are wont to imagine. Save that steps have been taken to secure satisfactory rates for the delivery of power at the Falls, the measure in question has put the municipalities no further ahead than they were. In one respect, they are not in as good a position as under the old municipal power bill, because the latter gave them the management of their own enterprise, while the Beck bill hands the management over to the Government commission. Events may prove otherwise, but we are disposed to think no great progress will be made in the solution of the power problem until the Government assumes itself some share of the financial load, and does not leave the entire weight upon the municipalities.

THE REAL TEST.

[Washington Star.]

"Tain't gittin' into politics," said Uncle Eben, "dat shows a man's smartness, as much as the way he gets out."

A ROYAL IDYLL.

[Montreal Witness.]

The marriage of the King and Queen of Spain was a fairy tale of the Cinderella type. The coronation trip of the King and Queen of Norway has been an idyll as full of primitive simplicity and beauty as the other was full of gorgeousness. The progress from point to point along those stupendous shores, greeted by the farming and fisher folk in their gayest regalia, the gathering of fisher craft by the thousand, their bright colors reflected in the glassy waters of Alesund, the ceremonial on the longest day of the year at the ancient capital of the sea-roving kings at Trondhjem, quite as far north as the regions which Major Muddle and Captain Bernier have been investigating for Canada, combine to form a picture whose sublime nature-setting and whose loyal and loving cordiality the proudest monarchs on earth might envy.

GLADSTONE'S READING HABITS.

[New York Post.]

Gladstone's activity as a book collector is interestingly discussed in an article on his library in the Nineteenth Century for June. He took to reading at a very early age, and, like many another boy, was enthralled by "Pilgrim's Progress" and the "Arabian Nights." In his school days, and indeed through his whole career, he was an eager student of Homer. Late in life he confessed an enormous debt to Aristotle, Augustine, Dante, and Butler. When he was 50 years old his growing library necessitated the addition of a new wing to the castle at Hawarden. Yet he was "by no means a rabid book-buyer." For rare books, first editions, and elaborate bindings he had no special passion, though he was glad enough to get them. "Second-hand catalogues," says the writer in the Nineteenth Century, "rained in by every post, and were always carefully scanned and marked for immediate purchase." Mr. Gladstone's tastes ran strongly to religion, theology, and such kindred topics as history and philosophy. He was, in fact, sometimes accused of being more theologian than statesman. Whenever he saw a book on witchcraft, strange religious sects, and the ethics of marriage, he invariably bought it; but, as everyone is aware, he was an omnivorous reader; he enjoyed Shakespeare and Scott, and was fond of turning over the pages of the latest novel.

EN PENSION EXPENSIVE.

Those reading the Society Notes from the various summer resorts will note that certain persons are "on pension." The difference between this and "boarding" is about $8 a week.

[Kansas City Star.]

Jesse James, son of Jesse James, the outlaw, was enrolled today in the circuit court as an attorney at law. He passed the examination June 9 before the state board of examiners in Jefferson City and made the highest grade in a class of 37. His average was 91. He said today:

"In two weeks I will quit the pawn-broking business and wade into the balance of my life to the practice of the law."

[Detroit Journal.]

A story comes from the Vatican that Cardinal Merry del Val was speaking with a friend on the Storer incident, and the Roosevelt letter, when suddenly the cardinals' salutes were heard. There are three excellent ways of disseminating news—tel-ephone, tel-egraph, and tell-a-woman!

"I suppose," said the student of economics, "that your city has never taken up the subject of municipal ownership."

"Oh, yes," answered Broncho Bob. "We have to give it a little thought. Every now and then one of the boys gets to thinkin' he owns the town, but we generally manage to get him quieted an' docile before there's any real harm done."

Winston Churchill's Wonderful Memory

"T. P." in his "Books of the Week," gives some very interesting excerpts from the new volume by H. W. Lucy, on "The Balfourian Parliament," of which none are rarer than those relating to Winston Churchill. Says T. P.:

One of the most interesting passages is that which describes the maiden speech of Mr. Winston Churchill. "It was indeed," comments Mr. Lucy, "excellent alike in matter and in form, and has established the position of the young member for Oldham as a debater who will have to be reckoned with whatever Government is in office."

Mr. Lucy does not note a fact, which, is very conspicuous in his memory of this beginning of a remarkable Parliamentary career, namely, that Mr. Churchill was extremely and almost painfully nervous. I note the fact because it is supposed that this Parliamentary youngster is quite free from all human weaknesses, which is not true. There is another statement in the sketch of Mr. Lucy's which apparently was justified at the time, but, I think, is not justified now. "Winston Churchill is not likely to eclipse the fame of Randolph, who was a statesman as well as a consummate debater." As a matter of fact, I believe that the son is an abler and more agreeable speaker than the father, and that, with his wider education and better training, he is likely to have a more remarkable career. In one respect the father and the son are very much alike, and that is in the possession of a phenomenal memory, a most admirable weapon in the armory of the Parliamentarian.

Mr. Lucy gives an example of this: In delivering his speech recently he was evidently fully supplied with notes, but he did not use his manuscript for the purpose of reading a single sentence. I happened to sit next to him at dinner after his triumph in the House, and mentioned an incident in a delivery of a speech of nearly an hour's duration. Quoting from the letter his father wrote Lord Salisbury on the eve of Christmas, 1886, resigning the chancellorship of the exchequer, I noticed that when only half way through the reading he closed the book and recited the closing passages.

"Yes," he replied, "I felt it would be easier to recite the letter than to read it from a book held in my hand, so I learned it off."

He added that his speech, which, fully reported, filled three columns of close print, had all been written out. He learned it off by heart and delivered it as if it were an extemporaneous effort, a delusion artfully assisted by occasional interpolation of sparkling sentences referring to points made by speakers preceding him through the evening.

"If," he said, "I read a column of print four times over I commit it so perfectly to memory that I could forthwith recite it without an omission or error."

Lord Randolph had the same gift; he could recite full pages of Gibbon's history, and Gibbon's history is by no means an easy book to remember.

OXEN END FLIGHT OF BALLOONISTS

Anchor Catches in Yoke and They Drag Two Darius Greens Through Brush.

Port Jervis, N. Y., June 28.—Two young Darius Greens, of Fremont Center, after one experience in balloon making and sailing, are satisfied to follow the plow and do the chores about the farm hereafter.

James Gabler and Hugo Gebhardt have read about the Aero Club's heroes and have witnessed balloon ascensions at Middletown. They bought canvas, made it into a big bag, and, not having a wicker basket, used two meal sacks instead. For an anchor they tied a drag hook to a long rope.

All the work was done in secret, and it was not until Saturday, the day set for the ascension, that the neighbors knew what a treat was in store for them.

The country round about was astonished to see the balloon rise from Gabler's lot, 400 feet in the air. Then it floated along, the delight of the amateur aeronauts, and to the wonder and surprise of those who hurried to the scene.

Unfortunately the drag hook caught in the yoke of a pair of steers in an adjoining lot, and the frightened animals ran away. They broke through a fence and dragged the balloon through a brush lot. The balloonists lost nearly all their clothes and much of their cuticle before the steers ran into a tree and came to a standstill.

As is usual with aeronauts, Gabler and Gebhardt announce that the ascension was a success, though they will not try to repeat it.

IMPRISONED IN SAND PIT.

New York, June 28.—After fighting against death for more than 22 hours, Jeremiah Fisher, a plumber, was rescued alive at 6 o'clock this morning, from a sandpit in Tompkinsville, Staten Island, in which he had been imprisoned since 11 o'clock yesterday forenoon. The rescued man is in a critical condition from exhaustion, however, though his physicians say there is a chance that he may recover.

It is really more exemplary for a boat to draw three feet of water than for a bartender to draw three fingers of beer.

KING LEOPOLD A HARD WORKER

Belgian Monarch Not the Idler as Portrayed.

IS A VERSATILE RULER

Called Yankee of Kings by Subjects and is Veritable Captain of Industry.

Brussels, Belgium, June 27.—Leopold II, king of the Belgians and sovereign of the Congo Free State, may well claim to be the most versatile of continental crowned heads. There was a time when this distinction was popularly attributed to Emperor William, but the Kaiser must now "take a back seat."

The Yankee of Monarchs, as the Belgians have affectionately nicknamed their ruler, is, above all, a modern captain of industry. His daring speculations fully entitle him to the sobriquet by which he is familiarly known to his subjects. His very versatility has a transatlantic flavor, for the laudable he has won in such varied fields of human activity as finance, diplomacy, literature, art and sport appear more in the line of an American millionaire than of a European monarch.

Proves Fine Architect.

Latterly, the king seems to have been intent on proving that he might have acquired the reputation of an architect, had he been of humbler birth. He has succeeded in making Brussels one of the most beautiful, architecturally, of continental capitals.

What Baron Hausmann did for Paris under the second empire, Leopold II. has planned for Brussels. He has designed some of the most artistic public buildings recently erected in Brussels, such as the new National Bank, the lovely Flemish Theater (a gem of its kind), and the new royal palace of Brussels. This palace, of the purest, classic style, is now nearing completion and promises to be one of the most sumptuous royal abodes on the continent.

The plans for a new town hall in a Brussels suburb were submitted to him for approval. He carefully examined the drawings in every detail as is his wont. To a superficial observer they seemed beyond criticism, from the artistic facade of the most approved Flemish renaissance style to the well-proportioned interior. After inspecting the plans he sent for the architect.

"Monsieur," said he, "your town hall promises to be a most artistic building, well worthy to figure among the architectural masterpieces of Belgium. But there is a slight omission in your design as done from which, I fear, the town officials may have cause to suffer, in winter, at least. You have forgotten the chimneys in your plan."

The absent-minded architect, thinking it too good to keep, tells the story himself.

King Leopold is a keen sportsman and a capital shot. His favorite sport is chamois hunting and notwithstanding his 71 years, he still scales the Alps on his annual summer vacation in search of the chamois.

Some sovereigns work harder than their subjects. Emperor William and Emperor Francis Joseph being notable examples of the strenuous life on a throne.

Is Capital Sportsman.

King Leopold, who is supposed, outside of his realm, to be a giddy seeker after pleasure, or a persecutor of his Congo subjects is perhaps the busiest man in Belgium. He has profound contempt for idleness, is never at rest and works like a Trojan.

At Laeken, his customary residence, he gets up at 5 o'clock in summer and half an hour later in winter. Immediately after dressing he takes a brisk walk in the palace garden. By 7 o'clock he is at his desk examining his mail, which is brought from Brussels by automobile.

He breakfasts at 8 o'clock then goes back to his office and works until 11, when he takes a ride before luncheon. Early in the afternoon he drives to the Brussels palace, where the audiences begin at 1 o'clock and as a rule last until 3.

He returns to Laeken for 5 o'clock tea, and later devotes himself to affairs of state.

At 6 o'clock he dines with the Princess Clementine, his only unmarried daughter.

In the evening he resumes work and reads the latest state dispatches from Brussels.

His robust health and his energy, remarkable for a man of his age, he owes to active and regular habits.

CANADA'S AWAKENING

A Change in the Spirit of Manufacturing.

Not so many years ago it was the general opinion that articles made in Canada could not compete in beauty of design and finish with the products of the United States. There was a basis for such an idea, too. Fortunately, however, owing in some regard to the propaganda of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, but perhaps more to the progress of the country and the increasing enterprise of individual manufacturers, there is no occasion to blush for the product of this country. For instance, the firm of Gourlay, Winter & Leeming, Toronto, has just placed on the market a new Gourlay piano model, which will compare favorably in gracefulness of design and beauty of finish with any upright piano on the market, either here or in the United States. The new Gourlay has, of course, all the fine tone quality which has distinguished this make of piano, and given it so high a standing in the market as a model of graceful design and beauty of finish.

The curves are very graceful and harmonious, and the ornamentation of the music desk exceptionally beautiful, yet not gaudy. The finish is in mahogany, polished after the millimetre of a palace. This new instrument will be an acquisition to the most artistic drawing-room.

INSURANCE COMMISSION

Nothing Novel or Sensational Produced at Yesterday's Probing.

Toronto, June 27.—Revelations of interesting methods of finance which have been features of the insurance investigations were entirely lacking this morning.

Mr. A. H. Hoover, the president, and Mr. W. H. Gould, the actuary of the Foreign Life, were on the witness stand, their testimony dealing with the organization of the company in 1902.

It was stated that in the early days of the company the regulation requiring that at least ten per cent of the stock subscribed should be paid up, had not been observed. The initial payments on stock by Mr. Hoover himself and others were partially made by notes.

The commission has finished its sitting in Toronto temporarily and goes to London tonight to investigate the London Life and Northern companies.

WHEN BERNHARDT SHOT THE CHUTES

"Divine" Sarah Had the Time of Her Life at Giddy
Coney Island.

London, June 27.—Mme. Sarah Bernhardt went to Coney Island recently. Coney Island is what in America is called "hot stuff." Blackpool is a graveyard in comparison, and Margate a gloomy desert. It is two miles of delirium on the sea shore, says the London Express correspondent.

To this abode of cheap music halls, penny gaffs, balloons, beer halls, dance halls, sausage booths, chutes, toboggans, shooting galleries, and merry-go-rounds, Mme. Bernhardt went by train accompanied by twenty reporters.

The first scene arose at the terminus, where 200 cabmen fought for the honor of carrying the actress. The winner succeeded only after knocking half a dozen rivals down. Then came an army of "barkers" or agents for sideshows. They were kept at arm's length by the reporters, who had formed themselves into a bodyguard. In spite of Mme. Bernhardt's announced intention to visit the places impartially it was obvious that she could not see one-quarter in an evening, and so the "barkers" fought fiercely for the prestige of her presence. All the representatives claimed to speak French, but not one of them was understood.

The manager of Luna Park, the wonderful electric display show, won over his rival of Dreamland by a trick. He had arranged a long string of motor cars to run alongside Mme. Bernhardt's carriage on the side towards Dreamland, so that it was impossible for her carriage to turn in there, and she was forced to proceed to Luna Park, leaving the other rival agents fighting desperately in the roadway. Every dance hall was empty of its strange specimens of humanity streetward, where they cheered, and the bands played the "Marseillaise."

When Madame drank a "high ball," which is U. S. A. for Scotch whisky and soda with ice in it, the crowd shrieked frantically, and when she shot the chutes the mobs fought for the vacant seats in the same boat.

At one show, "The Great Train Robbery," where the hero is greeted with an appropriate tune, the band played half of it to the "Marseillaise," and finished with "Yankee Doodle."

When Bernhardt left Luna Park she shook hands with as many as could reach her in the crush; after which she drove off to the American salutation: "What's the Matter with Sarah? She's all right!"

ARMOUR DEFENDS PACKERS

Head of the Big Industry Says It Has Been Slandered.

New York, June 28.—L. Ogden Armour, who has been abroad for two months, returned yesterday to this country. He has handed the following statement to the press:

In summing up what has been said about the packers and what has been done to the packing industry, one naturally inquires, What has become of our boasted American fair play? One of the largest American industries has been attacked, and attacked without reason, in a way that has discredited American goods of all kinds abroad. All over Europe there is open agitation for a boycott on American products. The entire export trade of this country has been badly damaged. To estimate the total loss now would be merely guesswork. It may run into hundreds of millions.

"When American industries are slandered by persons who pretend to speak as Americans it is to be expected that foreign competitors will take advantage of it. But the American meat industry cannot be destroyed by socialist agitators, political revolutionists, stump speeches or sensational journalism running amuck."

The inspection now in force in all the larger packing houses makes the sale of diseased meats from such houses impossible. The Government, which is responsible for the inspection, has failed to state the facts about it. The large packers believe in Government inspection. They asked for it in the first place. They want it continued and improved, if it can be improved.

"The business of Armour & Co. and the other large packing concerns never could have been built on the poor business methods and bad practices now attributed to us."

GOES TO STRATHROY.

Woodstock, June 27.—Mr. C. S. Kerr, B.A., for the past seventeen years a member of the teaching staff of the Woodstock Collegiate Institute, has been appointed principal of the Strathroy Collegiate Institute. He enters upon his duties on Sept. 1, succeeding J. E. Wetherall. He is a most efficient teacher, and his departure is generally regretted here.

There are 1,250 rural libraries in North Carolina.

THE WAR IN GUATEMALA

Rebels Meeting With Little Resistance—
Government Troops Desert.

Mexico City, June 27.—News from Salvador relating to the revolution in Guatemala is that Gen. Toledo has advanced into the country without encountering resistance during a three days' march. It is believed that he is now near or at the city of Guatemala. Many Government troops have deserted him. The Government commander sort of the severest measures to prevent his troops from disbanding, and shot a group of deserters. All news from Guatemala is censored so that nothing is allowed to pass which is not friendly to the Government.

The capture of Ayutla in Northern Guatemala is confirmed, though it is not known if they are still in possession.

A CANINE HERO; SAVES BABY'S LIFE

Just an Ornerly Pup, But He's Grit Clear
Through.

Windsor, June 27.—Canine intelligence has been portrayed so frequently of late that only special feats are given deserved attention.

Dan Dalton, a Wabash engineer, residing in St. Louis, Mo., relates a story that is almost beyond acceptance. Yet, anyone who knows Dalton will admit that he is not given to exaggeration, and he is regarded as a man of veracity.

"I was coming west this week with an immigrant special," said Mr. Dalton, in telling of the incident. "Between Ekfrid and Glencoe I noticed a large dog on the track. We whistled, but did not think of stopping. My attention was attracted by the peculiar actions of the animal. He jumped around and kept looking straight at the oncoming train. The next time I looked, I was horrified to see a little child on the track."

"We closed off steam, put on the brakes, but I knew that the train could not stop in time. It looked just like murder, but there was absolutely no way of avoiding an accident unless the little tot got out of the way."

"The wheels were jarring, and the cars were bumping under the brake pressure when we neared the spot. I wanted to turn my head away, but I kept my eyes glued on the dog in front of the child. That noble beast never faltered. He stood like the dumb hero that he is, although in his inferior intelligence the dog must have been warned by instinct to jump out of the way for his own safety. As true as I eat in that engine, the dog remained in front of the baby, who was standing near one rail, perhaps unconscious of danger, and perhaps confident of safety in the dog's company."

"Well, we struck the dog first, but by doing so the dog knocked the child out of harm's way. Neither was injured to any extent, because we were almost stopped at the time. The dog was wild with joy when we picked up the babe and carried the babe off the track."

It was learned that the father of the child was a man named Graham, living two miles from Glencoe.

Hermits Who Go Back to Nature Seeking
Health and Happiness

London, June 27.—The strange colonies of hermits who have taken up their abode in the neighborhood of Locarno, Ronco, and Orelina, in the Italian tyrol, are increasing in numbers. One group, which occupies the wooded plateau known as Monte Verita, is 125 strong, and counts in its members six German professors, three military officers, one of whom is married to a countess, who also belongs to the sect, two doctors and a priest. The majority are well-to-do, and some are wealthy. As these pay well for anything they buy, and do not trouble about making money, the inhabitants are on friendly terms with them.

They sleep in caves, are vegetarians, and do not wear ordinary clothing. A linen hood and a shroud of the same material are the only garments they wear. Their feet, legs, arms and neck are uncovered, and the hair is never cut, though the men trim their beards in a patriarchal way. The women allow their tresses to float in the air.

The motto of all is "Back to nature."

"The height of wisdom and philosophy," they say, "is to understand nature, that alone brings peace and happiness."

They rise at dawn and go to sleep with the setting of the sun; they eat only fruit and vegetables and drink only water. In the summer they have daily sun baths, and in the winter snow baths.

Some of them have extraordinary theories, which they carry out with great perseverance. One beautiful woman of 30 years, who was formerly a well-known singer at the Berlin Opera, refuses to touch money, which she says is the root of all evil. Her theory often lands her in difficulties, from which she occasionally extricates herself by singing to her debtors.

Another member only eats vegetables that ripen underground. A third confines himself strictly to raw eggs and potatoes.

A fourth spends $5 a week among the poor villagers, and keeps the doctor busy by bringing to their notice cases for which he pays.

All the colony are in the best of health, and always appear perfectly happy, amiable, and polite.

These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effective, are to be found in Mother "Graves" Worm Exterminator. Children like it.

TANGLED THREADS

She fed him all that he had strength to take, whereupon he immediately dropped asleep again.

She then laid another blanket over him, after which she wrapped a fleecy shawl about herself and sank back in her chair with a soft sigh of relief, and feeling that it would be safe to relax her vigilance for awhile and snatch some much needed rest. Three lines after that she gave him nourishment, which he seemed to eagerly crave; then as he sank into a sounder, more natural slumber just as day was beginning to dawn, Mrs. Ellsworth gently awakened Mr. Lancaster and drew him out of the room, for she would not speak a word there to disturb Rob.

"What is it?" the man tremblingly inquired. "Oh! why have you allowed me to sleep the whole night through? Is—Is he gone?"

"Hush!" she said, laying her hand upon his arm, "you must be calm. Rob is better; he has aroused several times since midnight, and taken considerable nourishment."

"Better! Oh, are you sure?" Mr. Lancaster gasped, with something like a sob.

"Yes, I am sure; and he will get well if we continue to give him the right care," Mrs. Ellsworth replied, and then told him how and when the change for the better had occurred.

Mr. Lancaster clasped the hand that still rested upon his arm and raised it to his lips.

"God bless you! You have saved him," he said gratefully. "But you should have awakened me and allowed me to share your joy. I have been very selfish and inconsiderate."

She smiled almost fondly into his face.

"You needed the rest; a man can never endure watching like a woman," she said. "I did not arouse you because it was not necessary, and besides, it would have disturbed Rob to have had any movement in the room—he is too weak to bear any confusion. But now if you are refreshed, I will leave you with him and go for a nap."

"Indeed, you must, you dear woman! You are worn out; you are white as a ghost from your ceaseless watching of the last forty-eight hours," returned her companion, with a pitiful glance at her wan face, yet thinking that he had never seen her so lovely.

"And at that moment, in the sublimity of the early dawn, in her spotless dress and pretty lace cap, and with that grave, serene look on her face, she seemed to him, in the first flush of his gratitude, almost like a saint, for she had saved his boy."

She gave him directions regarding feeding Rob if he awakened again, but cautioned him not to talk—not even to speak a word to him, until he was better.

"Let him rest," she said, "he must make no effort, even to think, until he is stronger."

Then, nodding a smiling adieu to him, she glided away and sought her own room, where she sank, weary and exhausted, and to tell her the good news, while they ate their morning meal together. The report was like a bracing tonic to the weak woman, who had suffered keenly in her mind during the trials of the last few weeks, and because of her inability to share the heavy responsibilities of her companions.

After breakfast Mrs. Ellsworth went back to bed and slept restfully until noon.

When she returned to the sick room again Rob was awake and smiled a feeble welcome at her, then took with evident relish the glass of warm milk which she had brought him.

From that time he improved rapidly, for he grew hungry as a young bear with returning strength, and at the end of a week was able to be bolstered up in bed.

Still another seven days and he was up, walking feebly about the house, while it was thought that by the end of one more week it would be safe for him to resume his journey, when they would all go straight through to California, by easy stages, and rejoin their party, who would arrive there early in March and remain for a couple of weeks, or, rather, they would make their headquarters there while they visited other points of interest in the vicinity of that "City of Palaces."

The good news of Rob's rapid convalescence, as well as Mrs. Ellsworth's full recovery, had already been telegraphed to them, and when word was received regarding when and where they would all meet again, everybody became elated and happy once more.

During all this time Mrs. Ellsworth had continued to carry herself in the most delightful and exemplary manner. She petted Rob during the tedious weeks of his recovery in the most motherly way imaginable; she prepared him the most appetizing and dainty dishes; read to him hour after hour, told him charming stories and incidents, and was a perfect sunbeam in the house—a veritable oasis in the desert of that weary waiting.

Mr. Lancaster declared that there was no one like her for patience, inventive genius, and sweetness of disposition. He firmly believed that Rob would have died but for her tender care and devotion, her tireless watching, and, consequently, his gratitude knew no bounds; while, besides all this, she had added many dainty touches to the comparatively rude house they were in—though it was one of the best in the place—thus contributing much to the comfort and enjoyment of the other members of the family.

To Mrs. Ellsworth the woman was a marvel, for she had been a perfect beauty, and in her life, floating hither and thither, wherever she could find sunshine and pleasure, and she had not believed her capable of rising to such heights of self-abnegation as she had manifested during those trying weeks.

She felt sure that there must be some selfish motive behind it all, and she thought she knew what that motive was; and yet, in spite of that, she was amazed in view of her powers of endurance, both mental and physical, and at the invincible cheerfulness and sweetness which she manifested.

"I would not detract one iota from the merit of all that she has done," she said to herself, while thinking these things over, "for whatever purpose has actuated her, there is no question that she has achieved wonders—she has wrought a good work in saving Rob, and she has been very good to me as well. All the same, she has a long head, and I believe she is playing a clever and desperate game to win Hal Lancaster. I wonder if—"

But what she wondered was cut short by the entrance of Mrs. Ellsworth herself, and so remained a secret in her own breast.

The journey, when they were once more en route, instead of taxing Rob's strength, as his uncle had feared, seemed to do him good; he continued to improve every day, and, by the time they rejoined their party in California, he was as well as ever.

He was still rather thin, and looked a trifle delicate, he appeared almost like himself again. He said, indeed, that he "felt like a new creature, as if he had been entirely made over."

During these festivities, Mrs. Ellsworth was general rejoicing upon the evening of their reunion, in honor of which great preparations had been made. The party had taken rooms in one of the finest hotels of the city, and a grand dinner was served them in a private dining-room, where toasts and speeches were made, and champagne drunk, and their joy over being all together again.

Marjorie bloomed out into brighter beauty than usual. She had had a new and very fetching costume made for the occasion, and seemed supremely happy and light-hearted.

Rob, however, was careful not to encourage any tender sentiments in connection with himself. He greeted her cordially, as he did every one else in the party, and when, after dinner, they all repaired to the ballroom, where a brilliant hop was being given his attentions were divided among the various young ladies whom he knew.

During these festivities, Mrs. Ellsworth stole out upon a balcony from one of the lower windows of the dance hall, and which commanded a fine view of the brilliantly-lighted city. She was anxious and harassed, for she had four eyes awaiting her from her executor, who informed her that the investments, to which reference had previously been made in other letters, had all collapsed, and she would never be able to realize five per cent of their face value.

This was a severe blow to her, although, excepting Mrs. Sturdyvant, she kept the matter to herself, for reasons of her own, for it would so deplete her income that she would be obliged to exercise the strictest economy in order to exist, unless her sister-in-law would give her and Marjorie a home, or she could achieve the matrimonial project for which she had been scheming.

Time was flying, and she seemed to neared the goal of her fond aspirations than when she had left Mariestad, where she had formed the resolution to win Halberton Lancaster.

The man had been as kind as could be to her, anticipating every need and wish, and showing her every possible attention; but he had shown not the slightest disposition to yield himself a slave to her charms in the way she most desired, and she was anxious to have her future settled before the party sailed for the United States.

She was becoming weary of travel, for the first time in her life. The five or six weeks at El Arish had been a tremendous strain upon her, for in spite of her "sweetness," she had hated her duties, and it was only by the exercise of all her will-power, backed by the determination to win Mr. Lancaster, that she had been able to undergo that trying ordeal.

Now she was determined to bring matters to a crisis, if possible. If she was successful, she felt that she could go on with the party with a good grace, and fling care and worry to the winds; if she failed, she would leave them immediately, and go directly to America, for she still had a little money, which she would risk in one desperate venture to retrieve her fortunes.

She was thinking of these things now, as she sat upon the balcony—in fact, she had come out to be by herself, and reflect upon them. There could not be observed with a twinge, now fifteen or twenty minutes, however, when Marjorie and Mr. Lancaster came and stood in the window behind her, although they could not see her, for she was sitting in a shadow of a pillar that supported the roof of the balcony.

The girl had immediately resumed her friendly relations with the man upon his arrival, and now was telling him something about her trip during their separation.

"Of course, it has all been nice and interesting," she observed, "and Mrs. Welling have been almost like father and mother to me; but I could not help feeling very anxious about mamma, and R—and the rest of you, you know."

"That was but natural, my child," returned Mr. Lancaster, "but with a twinge as she cut Rob's name short. I know it must have been very trying to have been separated from your friends so long, and to know that they were in that fever-stricken country. But, I am sure, I do not know what we would have done without your mother; she has been a perfect wonder to us all! I cannot understand how she managed to keep up her own strength, for she is not a rugged-looking woman, and she did not spare herself. I know next to nothing about sickness, and I felt as helpless as a child at my rough Rob's fearful illness, except when she took the helm, and gave her orders."

"Mama seems well, though I think she does look a little thin and worn," responded Marjorie, reflectively. "I am surprised, too, at what you have told me, for I did not imagine that she would be equal to anything of the kind."

"Ha! Ha! Marjorie, my dear, you perceive you have not appreciated your mother's abilities," Mrs. Ellsworth here laughingly interposed, for she did not care to sit there and listen to their discussion of her.

She leaned forward in the light as she spoke, and made a lovely picture of herself, for the colored lanterns hanging above her cast a rose-hued glow upon her that was very effective.

She was beautifully dressed, in rich white satin, with a delicate black lace over-dress, and Mr. Lancaster having sent her a box of beautiful flowers before dinner, she had planned some bright red roses upon her corsage, and they made a vivid spot of color against the dead black and white of her costume.

"Why, mama! Are you cut there?" exclaimed Marjorie, in surprise, while she bent forward to get a better view of her.

"Yes; I felt a little tired and heated, and thought I would like to get away from the confusion and glare of the crowded room. Will you come out? The night is lovely."

"No, I believe not," Marjorie returned. "For I have promised Will Welling the next waltz, and he will be looking for me."

The three chatted together for a few minutes, then, the young man coming for her, Marjorie left her companions, and went upon the floor.

"If you will not regard me as an intruder, I shall be glad to join you out there, Mrs. Ellsworth," Mr. Lancaster observed, as the girl disappeared.

The woman's heart bounded as a thing of life at his words.

"No, indeed, I shall be glad of your company," she cordially replied, "for, with a soft sigh, 'I believe I was getting a trifle low-spirited out here alone with my thoughts.'"

Mr. Lancaster stepped out upon the balcony, drew a chair to her side, and sat down.

"I hope you are not feeling ill," he remarked, with a note of concern in his tone that thrilled her again.

"Oh, no, I am perfectly well, but—I found some letters here, from my business, they are rather depressing. There have been some losses, which—make the future somewhat doubtful for me," she explained, hoping to work upon his sympathies and lead him on.

"Ah! I am sorry to hear that," he remarked, with kindly interest. "Perhaps, when we get back to New York, you will allow me to investigate matters for you, and see if I cannot straighten them out."

"You are very kind," Mrs. Ellsworth murmured in a low tone.

"Why should I not be? What do I not owe you?" said Mr. Lancaster, with a quiver of earnest gratitude in his voice. "Why, my friend, you have but to ask what you will of me, and it shall be granted you, even—as in the words of one of old—to half of my kingdom."

To be Continued.

According to statistics of Alpine accidents, during 1905, the number of English who have lost their lives by foolishness on the Alps is surpassed by several other nations. The total number of accidents was 165, of which no fewer than 65 were fatal, and of these the greater number of accidents happened to Swiss and German climbers.

OLD SYSTEM TIES UP THE COMMONS

Cumbersome Method Is Used to Harass Government.

MAY ADOPT CANADIAN PLAN

The Work of Winston Churchill, Which Is Taking High Place.

London, June 27.—The House of Commons never does much work in the days which immediately succeed the holidays. The Government accordingly always puts down for those days what is called "supply." It often happens that as a consequence the Government is able to get through a lot of work very rapidly. Supply is one of the peculiarities of the House of Commons in the part which it has to play in the economy of the place. Every day, of course, which is spent, has to be put down; and in theory is the right of every member of parliament to discuss every item in the hundreds of pages of which the accounts consist. Among the items you see such a grotesque one as the rate-catcher in Buckingham Palace, and the charwomen in the other public offices. It is obvious that of these items were indefinitely discussed the House of Commons would have to sit for years before it could pass the accounts for even one year. This is the great weapon which Parnell and Biggar discovered years ago when they were starting the present modern Irish movement, and by using it they were able to practically paralyze the House of Commons, and in that way to bring from it concession to the Irish demands. That was the way in which to use the phrase of Wendell Phillips—Parnell was able to make England stop, look and listen.

Debaters Cut Off.

In recent years the rules of the House have been so changed that there is no longer the possibility of obstructing the progress of the Government. Only a certain number of days is given to the House for supply; if any votes be unpassed when that period is reached, they are brought under the operation of that is called the "guillotine," and are passed on without a word of debate. But in spite of all this, supply is still used for wasting the time of the Government.

It is the very essence of parliamentary tactics with that time is a Government's life blood, and that every moment of time you occupy is a shedding of governmental blood, wastage of its strength, an embarrassment and a postponement of its programme. And this will account for the insistence with which members discuss the most simple items year after year. They don't care a farthing about the accounts, but they do care about embarrassing the ministry to which they are opposed.

All this is somewhat a primordial form of governing a nation and an empire, and people who observe are preparing some means of reforming the present House of Commons. It is all a part of that tendency toward decentralization and devolution of which the demand of Ireland for home rule is only a segment. The committee system which the French have in their chambers is coming into notice here as a good deal recently, and there is actually a proposal before the House at this moment which is to make the system the same with us. I don't know whether it will pass or not, but I note the proposal as one of the many signs that home rule—or devolution, to call it by the new name—is in the air.

Policy Brought Up.

On questions in supply the whole policy of a minister is frequently debated. When the salary, say, of the Colonial Secretary, comes to be voted, it is the rule that the policy of the colonial office is debated, or at least that portion of its policy which at the moment is chiefly attracting public attention. Winston Churchill has had frequent and excellent opportunities for revealing his very brilliant abilities. If he had been left free to choose the office which would have given him the best chance, he could not have selected one better than that which he holds. Lord Elgin, the Colonial Secretary, is in the House of Lords, and therefore Winston, as under secretary, has the chief responsibility for answering for the department in the House of Commons. He has revealed gifts far higher than those with which he was credited. A hot, merciless, a scathing speech—everybody knew he could do that; and his unpopularity with his political opponents was thereby merely augmented. But few expected that he would have made speeches as an official such as he has made, in which there was the mingling of literary taste, constant interest, and yet the prudent self-restraint of the official. I hold that he is a more remarkable man even than his father. They say that he holds the same opinion; and one of the many impudent sayings attributed to him is that the day will come when Lord Randolph Churchill will chiefly be remembered as having been the father of Winston Churchill.

Has Great Ability.

The boy had several great advantages over his father. He got a better education to begin with. It used to be said of Lord Randolph that he thanked Irving once for having instructed him to the study of Shakespeare when he played Hamlet before the Oxford students. And then Winston has traveled almost over the world. He began as a soldier, then was a journalist, and wrote admirable articles with glow and fire and quick perception. The father spent his youth in fox-hunting and the usual pursuits of the typical country gentleman; the son was laboriously training himself for the career of politics by travel, by reading and by the exercise of his pen.

The one doubtful factor in the future of this boy is his health. The reddish hair brings out in even greater relief the deadly pallor of the cheeks. The features are almost tiny; there isn't a trace of hair on the chin, and with his figure slight, almost to transparency, he still seems the young boy escaped from the big playground of a school to the abodes of men. He takes a good deal of care of himself. Biting with me the other night, he told me that he had been out polo playing for five days during the preceding fortnight.

Suppose you do like the tea you are using. How do you know it is the best tea you can get for the money?

LITERARY NOTES.

The four quarters of the globe are covered by articles in the July Canadian Magazine, under the title, "The Fascination of the Uttermost South."

C. Reginald Ford writes of his visit to the Antarctic regions. Beatrice Grimshaw describes the geysers of New Zealand; George D. Abraham, a noted climber, gives some thrilling experiences in the Alps. A humorous poetical composition celebrates Sherrington's victory at Athens. Julia W. Henshaw has an article, "A Fisherman in the Rockies." McCready's reminiscences of the first Federal Parliament at Ottawa, describe a duel between Messrs. Howe and Tupper, and an oratorical fight by Thomas D'Arcy McGee. Judge Savary has an interesting paper on the Acadadians. The illustrations in this number are notably good.

McClure's Magazine for July is a thoroughly readable number, instructive and entertaining, and made still more attractive by its excellent illustrations. Ray Stannard Baker's "New Music for an Old World," describes Dr. Thaddeus Cahill's wonderful instrument, the dynamophone, which produces music by electricity. Henry Anderson Lafter's record of experiences and the impressions in "My Sixty Sleepless Hours" written from the spot, and at the time of the San Francisco fire, is an article of deeply absorbing interest. Recent insurance scandals are further dealt with by Burton J. Hendrick in the third installment of the "Story of Life Insurance," in which he tells the career of Henry Baldwin Hyde, the founder of the Equitable. The July McClure also contains a good share of short stories.

The July Red Book gives first place to Henry Louis Menck's Fourth of July story, "The King and Tommy Cripps." Tommy's patriotic attempt to celebrate his nation's natal day in a foreign land was marked by ill-luck for Tommy, but all came right in the end.

For the King, William Hamilton Osborne's story, "The Wicked Waste at Wilkinson's," is concerned with a girl's extraordinary management of a cotton mill in the face of strikes and trusts. Other contributors include Campbell McCulloch, Herbert Quick, Isabel McDougall, Marjorie Benton Cooke and a dozen more. The magazine opens with 28 finely printed portraits of as many beautiful women.

The July Century Magazine may well be called a fiction number, containing as it does the second installment of Anne Warner's very funny "Seeing France with Uncle John," and short stories by Alice Hegan Rice, Anthony Hope, Harry Stillwell Edwards, Lawrence Mott, Annie C. Mulhearn, and other popular writers. Mrs. Rice's story is called "The Wild Oats of a Spinster," and is as good as its title. Harry Stillwell Edwards' "The Funeral of Rat Brooks" is in the vein of the inimitable "Two Runaways," and Lawrence Mott's "Wilkinson's Chance" will carry the reader back to his "Jules of the Great Heart." The illustrations in this number are of special interest.

But the coat doesn't make the man—not even a coat of fur and feathers. A man never realizes how unpopular he is until he begins to acquire fame. An evil doer is one who believes in doing others before they attempt to do him.

The Girl That's Never Strong.

You see her everywhere; behind the counter, in the office—how hard her lot; weak, unstrung, easily tired. It's the girl that's never strong keeps her in the race. She wants to be strong, but doesn't know how.

Let her try Ferrozone. It ironizes the blood, fills it with nourishment and force that imparts vitality to every part of the body. No tonic, so strengthening and appetizing, no results surer than the steady rebuilding Ferrozone produces.

"I was all run down, and an apt subject for pneumonia," writes Mrs. A. B. Charters, of Burlington, I tried Ferrozone, but didn't believe it could build me up so quickly. In a few days my appetite improved, color came into my cheeks and I felt stronger. I gained eight pounds and regained all my old-time vigor.

Ferrozone will do as much for you. Sold by all druggists or N. C. Fulton & Company, Kingston, Ont., and Hartford, Conn. Fifty cents per box.

REMARKABLE TEST

Hymel Has Been Known for Years and is Guaranteed to Cure Catarrh

We have given Hymel a most thorough and remarkable test. The remedy has made so many cures that we have urged its use in the most chronic cases of catarrh.

Breathed for a few minutes four times a day, through an inhaler that comes with every outfit, it soothes the irritated mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, kills the catarrhal germs, and restores complete health. Its healing, anesthetic fragrance penetrates to the most remote air passages, as no medicine taken into the stomach can possibly do. Immediate relief almost always follows the use of Hymel, and great benefit is seen after a few days' treatment.

The complete Hymel outfit costs only $1, and consists of an inhaler that can be carried in the pocket or purse, and will last a lifetime, a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hymel. If this is not sufficient for a complete cure, additional bottles of Hymel can be obtained for 50 cents.

Compare this small expense with the fees charged by specialists. If you cannot obtain Hymel of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Write today for consultation blank that will entitle you to services of our medical department, without charge. The R. T. Booth Company, Hymel Building, Ithaca, N. Y.

The Approach of Bright's Disease

Bright's disease as well as the other dreadfully painful forms of kidney disease can usually be prevented and cured by giving some attention to the diet and to the activity of the liver and kidneys.

Excesses in eating and the use of alcoholic drinks must be avoided, and the filtering organs can best be kept in good working order by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

The derangements which lead to Bright's disease usually have their beginning in a torpid liver, and there is suffering from headaches, biliousness and indigestion before the kidneys fail and such symptoms appear as backache, scanty, highly-colored urine, painful, scalding urination, deposits in the urine, etc.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills succeed where, ordinary kidney medicines fail, because of their direct and combined action on the liver and kidneys.

This has been proven in thousands of cases of serious and complicated diseases of the kidneys. Send a pill a dose, in a box, at all dealers, or Ed. Johnson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

SNAP-SHOTS AT VARIOUS SPORTS

E. Barrow signed two more players yesterday. This makes the number 3,411 since 1905.

The local bowlers are practicing hard for the big tournament in July, and will make a big strong endeavor to keep some of the crockery at home.

Mandy Clement, a beautiful South Dakota maiden, is a baseball umpire. She has the regular wealth of dark brown hair, a comely figure, drooping lashes, throat like a swan, and pearly teeth. She claims the right to change her mind and the privilege of the last word.

Richard Canfield, in defending his profession, declares that everything in life is a gamble. He is quite right, too. The only trouble is that a few people want to make a cinch game of it.

Possibly we'll get free alcohol with automobiles, but where the horses run they will continue to dispense fuel oil at the regular rate of one drink for the price of two.

The amateur spirit than Hon. President Allen planted in the breasts of the C. L. A. intermediates last season seems to be bearing excellent fruit. Take Aurora, for instance. Herb Lennox's town has a team that boasts one home-brew on its lineup. Newmarket has more than one, but her importations have a majority vote, while Orillia has reached out and gathered its players from all the surrounding towns, including Fergus, from whence comes "Paddy" Romore. These are only three examples. But they serve to show the benefit that comes from the reign of a great and good man. Anybody who would suggest that any of these players traveled so far from home for anything but love of the game should be examined by a doctor.—Telegram.

Some up in this country. Tourists are as plentiful as peek-a-boo waists.

Now they are going to brighten cricket! Must intend to play it nights, too, under the calcium glare.

Horsemen everywhere will be sorry to hear of Havers James' accident yesterday at Listowel. James is a smooth driver, and a gentleman. But while you are talking, it is a wonder there are not more accidents with those hobbies, especially when the fields are large.

John Drew and Percy Millman had a merry bowling match last night at the Thistle Club in the singles competition. The pair had it out neck and neck until the last end. Drew was lying two shots, when Millman with his last bowl took them out, lay a shot and won the match 21 to 20. It was a beautiful match.

Westervelt and Jack Gillespie won two good games in the Thistle Club tournament last night, and play Sifton and Keith for the championship. Westervelt was in fine form last night, his bowling being exceptionally fine.

The citizens are still talking of Frank Love's great win over John Stevenson last week in the singles competition at the London Rowing Club. One afternoon John had Frank 20 to 14, when the most beautiful shower ever came up, and the game had to be postponed. The next afternoon the pair met, and Frank rolled up seven and beat John out. Some very unfeeling persons have remarked that for luck his worship has Rip Van Winkle clean shaven, but it was good work, nevertheless. He also beat Bert Heaman, and is now well up towards the finals in the singles competition.

Commenting on the cause of his team's slump, Captain Collins had the following to say to a St. Louis man: "The catcher really runs the whole game nowadays, and unless a club is fortified behind the bat with a strong, active, good-throwing catcher, the opposing team will run wild on the base lines, and soon break up the game. We have been breaking in some new backstops all season, and it has been quite a handicap on our pitchers. They are compelled to pitch to the catcher instead of to the batter when runners threaten to piff bases. This gives the man at the plate a decided advantage over the pitcher. To be more explicit, the pitcher is compelled to ignore the batsman and lay the ball off to one side, so that his catcher can get it clean for a throw."

Of course, I liked the game of ball
As it is played today,
When the pitcher throws,
And the batter bats,
In a scientific way;
But it don't make me dance around,
And laugh and leap and shout
As it did back when I was a boy
And over the fence was out.

We used to go out in the lot,
Where the grass was soft and green,
And lay out the prettiest diamond
That man has ever seen.
And that's surely win the game,
There wasn't any doubt,
By either side in th' happy days,
When over th' fence was out.

Th' catcher stood there like a man,
With nuthin' on but clothes,
There wasn't no pillers on his hands,
No wires across his nose.
He wasn't afraid of bein' hit,
With the "shoots" they talk about,
Sence th' days when th' pitcher tossed
th' ball,
And over th' fence was out.

We used to have flat stuns for bases;
The home plate was a hole;
And the players tried to reach it
With all their heart and soul.
There wasn't no skippy scores then;
'Twas forty or thereabout,
'T twenty-five or thirty,
When over th' fence was out.
—Thomas Holmes.

LACROSSE.

ROUGH GAME AT COLLINGWOOD. Collingwood, June 27.—Orillia defeated Collingwood 5 to 4 in a fast game of intermediate C. L. A. here today. The play was rough at times. Referee Rose had poor control of the players, both teams doing about as they wished. The superior combination work of the Orillia team won out.

VICTORY FOR BRADFORD. Aurora, June 27.—The Intermediate C. L. A. match played here today between Bradford and Aurora was a victory for Bradford, 8 to 2.

ANOTHER FOR LITTLE. Wimbledon, Eng., June 27.—In the fourth round of the singles in the lawn tennis championship games here today, Raymond D. Little (American), beat T. D. Stoward in three straight sets. He took the first set easily, but the second was a close tussle. The sets were: 6-0, 8-6, 6-4.

THE OLD BOYS OF ST. THOMAS WERE NOT GOOD TO CHAMPIONS

Stole Bases Like a Bunch of Pirates, and That's How They Won.

The Saints of St. Thomas, under the leadership of one Daddy Lyons, the man that invented baseball, took a fall out of Manager Smith's Champions at Tecumseh Park yesterday afternoon in a well-played game by a score of 4 to 1. There was only a fair crowd present. There should have been more. There were just nine good reasons why the Champions did not win, and they will be found in the line-up of the Saints. These Old Boys from various climes had it on the Champions in the fine points of the game, and that was what won for them. They did not hit so very hard; in fact, Walter Gibson kept them off the bases in fine style despite the fact that one gaby artist of the Saints said he was pie. But when they did get on, they just cantered around at their own sweet will. They scored two runs on one hit. Talk about your pirate crews, but that bunch would steal bases from his Satan's Majesty.

Walter Gibson was the tosst for the Champions, and Walter pitched a beautiful game. He snuffed them out in a well style when he smoked them over. He kept the hits off separate until the ninth, when the industrious Saints clustered a few, but he would have got out of that nicely had his support not gone to the aid.

Now John Jay Millen was finger for the Saints, and the above-mentioned John was out to the merry. He should have had a shut-out. Pete McDonald's heavenly holst and Cadman's bad toss to first allowed the Champs' only run to trickle in. Mr. Millen was absolutely unhittable when his meat runs. No, John was not good to us.

Wallace at third put up a beautiful game. He covered several acres. Cadman is a nice catcher, and Killingsworth got them all in right field. Stewart and Old Sol got into an argument, and in the shuffle Stewart lost a couple of flies that should have been easy outs.

Costello put up some gilt-edged stuff at the short station, and McHugh also played a magnificent first base. Walter Gibson fielded his position in swell style.

DEAD HEAT AT MATINEE---DR. JACK AND PANDORA PUT UP GREAT RACE

Best Event in History of the Road—Both Horses Steady as Clocks.

The matinee races yesterday were not bad at all after they got well started. The classes were about as large as they might have been, owing to scratches. The track was lightning fast, and good time was made in most of the races. There was a fair crowd present.

The sensational race of the day—in fact the sensational race of the club's history—was furnished by Dr. Jack and Pandora. The pair went four heats, the third being a dead heat. It was as pretty a race as ever was seen at Queen's Park. The pair went away together and raced neck and neck to the wire. Both were as steady as clocks, and covered the distance without a skip. The time, 1:12, was very fast for the class.

Class two did not furnish the horse race expected. Neither Bobby T. nor Golden Text was right, and both heats were marred by bad breaks. Text had enough to win each heat. This makes a race apiece, and there ought to be something doing when the pair hook up again.

Walter S. made his debut in class three and won the race, after losing the first heat by a bad break. He had the speed of the party.

Perfection repeated her success of the last week and won class five, showing good speed.

There was not a starter in class one. The time made in the several classes was highly satisfactory.

TWENTY-SEVENTH TAKES LAYBORN

Camp Corps Show Good Form at Cove Ranges.

THIRTIETH HOLDS THE GOWAN

March Through Streets Leaves Fine Impression—Gen. Otter Visits—The "Cook's Parade."

Yesterday was a busy day for the infantry regiments at the camp. At an early hour in the morning the Twenty-Ninth, Thirtieth, Thirty-Second and the Thirty-Third regiments, with their brass and bugle bands, marched through the city streets, and thence to the cove service ranges, where they spent the day competing for the Layborn and the Gowan cups. The universal opinion of the men and officers is that the more beneficial results from the standpoint of instruction and practice, were gained at yesterday's competition than at any other event during the camp. Not only were the scores which were made good, but the marching and form throughout the long parade both to and from the ranges were exceedingly good. When the target was fired, the men were in position, the targets were in view three times. The score was taken on the targets by the umpires and recorded, the highest score winning.

Won by the Twenty-Seventh. The Twenty-Seventh Regiment carried away the Layborn cup. The following scores were made by the different regiments:

Points.
27th Regiment 2180
28th Regiment 2137
29th Regiment 2135
30th Regiment 2130
31st Regiment 2125
32nd Regiment 2120
33rd Regiment 2115

Then came the competition for the Gowan cup, which the Thirtieth Regiment won. They are from this military district. The ultimate winner of this cup cannot be determined until after the militia camps throughout the Dominion are over and the scores sent in, at which time the militia department will give out the results.

The following are the rules under which the Gowan cup is competed for:

The cup will be competed for annually by company teams from military districts Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, during annual training.

2.—It will be held for a year by the regiment possessing the company team which scores the highest number of marks, under the following regulations:

(a) Team—To consist of one officer, two sergeants, one bugler and twelve rank and file. Rank and file only fire.

(b) Shooting—Twenty-one rounds per man.

(c) Position—Any.

(d) Distance—Three volleys at 500 yards, and three rounds each of six cartridges from 500 to 100 yards.

(e) Advance—To be conducted quietly, no rush to exceed 50 yards.

(f) Time—The time occupied in firing the first three volleys and in advance from 500 yards firing point, until last shot is fired, not to exceed twenty minutes. At the end of twenty minutes the "cease fire" will be sounded, when shooting must cease.

(g) Allotment of marks—To be made as follows: 28th Regiment 28x12=336
29th Regiment 28x12=336
30th Regiment 28x12=336
31st Regiment 28x12=336
32nd Regiment 28x12=336
33rd Regiment 28x12=336

(h) There will be a chief umpire and two assistants detailed to superintend the carrying out of the practice by the D. O. C. at each camp. The detail of their report will be confidential, but the relative order of merit of the competing teams will be promulgated in camp orders on the day succeeding the competition.

General Otter visited the camp yesterday. No special arrangements have been made for the general's visit, and the routine work will be continued.

Weather permitting, there will be a lively time in camp tonight and tomorrow night. The "cook's parade," and all the other exercises in connection with the breaking up of camp will take place, and there will be any amount of amusement for the public.

THE INSURANCE INVESTIGATION

could be secured elsewhere?" Mr. Tilley asked.

"Certainly," Mr. Richter replied. "There would be no great hardship in legislating that a company shall not lend to its directors?"

"There would be no particular harm in doing this."

Policiesholders Protected.
Asked if he did not consider the company bound more by clause 50 of the insurance act than by anything in the private acts of the company, Mr. Richter repeated the affirmative, except as regards where the company is given special rights.

"Do you think the bylaws are sufficient to protect the policyholders?" Mr. Tilley asked him.

"Yes," Mr. Richter answered, "so far as the existing policyholders are concerned."

Reverting to the impairment of the company's capital years ago, Mr. Richter said that through various causes the capital had run down by about $20,000, and that it had been made up, however, through the issuing of the preferred stock referred to. The move had been approved by the majority of the policyholders.

Mr. Richter said that it was just at this time that the company went into the industrial insurance business, and it needed more money.

"Did you find the industrial business very costly?"

"No, I can't say that I did," Mr. Richter said. "One man we met told us that he spent as much as $200,000 to get the business established. Do you think it was necessary to spend this amount?"

"No, I do not. Our experience was that after the third year the industrial business paid."

Progressed Cautiously.
Continuing, Mr. Richter said that it is reaching out for business in all directions that eats up the money. His company had proceeded slowly.

His company insures children between the ages of 1 and 2 and upwards. The amount of insurance on the child is limited by the Ontario act. There is no Dominion legislation on the subject.

This act had been passed because of an agitation against the insuring of very young children, as it was thought that greed for the money was leading to child murder.

Industrial insurance costs about 50 per cent more, principally in the cost of the cost of the insurance. Not many well-to-do people insure their children. It is mostly the poorer class who take advantage of the policies. They understand pretty well what they are doing, especially if they are old enough to be insured.

The only agreement the company has with the Metropolitan Life is in regard to the hiring of agents.

Very Few Lapses.
Not many policies are allowed to lapse without the policyholder taking advantage of a fully paid-up policy, in lieu of what has been paid in. The company's annual receipts from lapses do not reach 10 per cent of the business done.

He would not admit that his company made a feature of endowment rather than whole life insurance. But Mr. Richter said that about 75 or 80 per cent of the company's industrial business was endowment.

Very Few Complaints.
Very few complaints of misrepresentation by agents came under his notice. All that were made to the company were investigated.

The cost of securing industrial business was with his company about 65 times the weekly debit. He could not agree with Mr. Harvey, the American expert, who had stated that the cost was about 130 times the weekly debit. If this was the case the company must have been after a gilt-edged class of insurance. An agent can make from the first $100 to $120 per week, and a little loss from agents working a little and then leaving with small weekly debits on their books.

There has been no difference made in providing for the reserve as between whole life and endowment policies.

Mr. Richter said his company has not invested largely in local company debentures. He has nothing against the debentures other than the fact that they are not very good paying investments as compared with other investments.

The Investments.
The company's investments are largely in real estate in Ontario, with some in Manitoba. Manitoba mortgages pay an average of about 6 1/2 per cent, while Ontario pay 5 1/2. As high as 7 per cent can be secured in Manitoba. The company had only lost in all its experience the sum of $34 on its western investments.

Replying as to how western mortgages are made, Mr. Richter said that the company has a representative in Winnipeg. He is given a basis rate of 6 per cent for mortgage. He is given half on any higher percentage than the amount mentioned which he is able to secure. The company does not make a point to loan well up to the real value so as to get a high rate of interest. All loans are made through the head office and men are frequently sent west to overlook the securities before mortgages are entered into.

In speaking further of the company's investments, Mr. Richter said that the London Life at one time had invested in a saving and loan company's stock and had sold it at a loss of $7,000. It was afterwards shown that good judgment was exercised in getting rid of the stock, as it had dropped below 50 cents at the time the London Life sold it.

All real estate securities are entered in the books at below their real value, possible depreciation being provided for in this way.

"Have any of your directors or shareholders stock in the Ontario Loan?"

"No," Mr. Richter said.

"Have any of your directors or shareholders stock in the Ontario Loan?"

"No," Mr. Richter said.

"Have any of your directors or shareholders stock in the Ontario Loan?"

Whether or not they own stock in the Ontario Loan, they have not enough stock to control the concern."

"Are they interested in any other?"

"Yes. In the Agricultural Loan and Savings, and others."

An adjournment was then made until 2 o'clock.

WORDY BATTLE OF DOCTORS

sonally within 24 hours after the death of the patient.

Dr. Hutchinson was subjected to a severe cross-examination by J. M. McEvoy, counsel for Dr. Stevenson. The first demand was for the record of cases in Victoria Hospital of diphtheria.

Mr. Fisher objected to this, insisting that they were not investigating Dr. Hutchinson or his conduct as a medical health officer, and that the record had nothing to do with this particular case.

"I am going to investigate Dr. Hutchinson from stem to gudgeon, if I get a chance," sharply retorted Mr. McEvoy.

The Record.
The record was produced, and there recorded was the case of Dr. Stevenson.

"Do cases have to be discharged by you?" was asked.

"Yes,"

"How often do you go to the hospital?"

"Two or three times a week, or when necessary. I go when I am called by telephone."

"Did you call on June 14?"

"I do not remember."

Mr. Fisher objected to this line of questioning, saying that the conduct of Dr. Hutchinson was not being investigated. Mr. McEvoy insisted that the line of questioning was perfectly legitimate.

"I want to show that Dr. Hutchinson knew that the child was dead and there was no reason to report the fact."

The question was not allowed. Dr. Hutchinson visited the hospital as little as once a week.

"When there are infectious cases there?"

"Yes."

"Have you any record of the visits you make?"

"No."

"Do you visit the wards?"

"Sometimes and sometimes not."

There was a great deal of cross-firing between the counsel on these matters, as Mr. Fisher objected to Dr. Hutchinson's conduct being brought into the case.

M. H. O. Visits the Hospital.
Dr. Hutchinson admitted, however, that he was at the hospital when the child died, but had not visited the ward. He did not know the child, nor had he ever seen it. When asked what he did when he went into the office and signed discharged cards, he said so without ever seeing the patients, he said, but merely took the word of those in charge.

Mr. McEvoy was trying to get the doctor to admit that he knew that the child was dead and he knew all about it.

"Did you ever get a notice of the child's death?"

"Yes, on the 15th."

"That notice was within 24 hours after the child's death?"

"I do not know for certain. It might have been."

"In all probability it might have been within 24 hours?"

"I don't know."

"What time did you get that notice?"

"Before 1 o'clock at my office."

"Did it come through the mail?"

"Yes."

"By whom was it signed?"

"By Dr. Stevenson."

The card was produced and was signed in Dr. Stevenson's name by the young lady in the office at Victoria Hospital. This, he admitted, was the usual practice. This was done because as every physician gives in like cases.

The Doctor's Notice.
Mr. McEvoy insisted on Dr. Hutchinson declaring at what hour the notice was received, and got him to admit that the notice was received within the 24-hour limit as far as he knew. He also admitted that he did not always get a notice from the doctor in addition to the notice sent out by the hospital. He also admitted that as a usual thing, when the hospital authorities informed him, the doctor in charge did not do so. Dr. Hutchinson also admitted a conversation with Dr. Stevenson, at Mr. Jewell's funeral, at which the whole case was explained in detail to Dr. Hutchinson.

The medical health officer insisted that the notice given was not a notice, within the meaning of the act, as he did not know who sent it.

Mr. Albert McNamara, the father of the child, was called. He swore to the fact that the child was taken to Victoria Hospital, and that she was being treated for tonsillitis and quinsy. The case was given to Dr. Stevenson on Monday night and the child died on Thursday.

Dr. Chester McGuffin, head surgeon of Victoria Hospital, and Dr. C. Whitaker, one of the house surgeons, were called. But Mr. McEvoy objected to their giving expert evidence in the case, as they were not qualified physicians, but only students.

Expert Evidence Ruled Out.
P. M. Love ruled out all expert evidence, merely allowing witnesses to testify on the matters of instruction given them by Dr. Stevenson. They told of the administering of anti-toxin, explained that it was given often as a precautionary measure. They gave stimulants and other medicines.

Dr. George Wilson was the next witness for the plaintiff. He was chiefly occupied in telling when a doctor should know diphtheria. Evidences of the disease should be present at least 24 hours before death. His experience was exercised in getting rid of the belief that the disease could be detected at that time before death.

Mr. McEvoy objected, adding, however, that he made no difference what Dr. Wilson swore on the matter, as the medical authorities say that it is impossible to detect diphtheria without a culture.

The Defense.
Mr. McEvoy contended that there was no necessity of offering a defense, but P. M. Love ordered him to continue.

Dr. H. A. McCallum was the first witness called for the defense, and swore that it was impossible often to detect diphtheria without a culture. He would say that as a practitioner it was his moral duty to make a culture the first day that symptoms of the disease appeared. These cultures could be developed within 12 to 14 hours normally, but at present they had to be sent to Toronto, and 48 hours were consumed in finding the results of such an experiment. There were no bacteriological institute here, this difficulty would be obviated to a great degree.

Dr. Burdon and Dr. Drake corroborated Dr. McCallum's testimony.

Dr. W. J. Stevenson was the last witness called, and his evidence is outlined above.

NOW IT'S "CLEAN-UP!"

House to House Inspection Has Been Completed.

The inspection of city yards was completed last night and now the duty of the local health inspector is to go over the reports and issue orders to citizens to clean up, where necessary.

The half-dozen inspectors spent a total of 107 1/2 days in making the inspection. This was four days more than were consumed in the inspection a year ago, but this is not to be wondered at when it is remembered that at least 30 more yards were examined this year than in 1905.

COLONEL DIDN'T INTERFERE

Had Nothing to Do With Seventh's Loss of Picnic Engagement.

"I don't want to become involved in any controversy over the matter, but I would like to deny the statement made that Col. Little did anything whatever to prevent the Seventh Regiment Band being engaged for the school children's picnic."

These were the words of Secretary McElhenn, of the Board of Education, to The Advertiser today.

"The statement is absolutely untrue," added Mr. McElhenn. "The engagement of a band was postponed until the day after tomorrow, because of the trouble brewing in the Seventh, and when it was assured that all chances of the difficulty being settled had passed, the only thing left for the school board's committee to do was to engage the Twenty-Sixth."

It can be said that Col. Little did not interfere in this matter."

IS GO BETWEEN A STALLION?

New York, June 28.—Francis N. Hitchcock, owner of Dandelion, which ran second in the Suburban handicap, last Thursday, has filed with the stewards of Coney Island Jockey Club a protest in which he says that Alexander Shields' Go Between, the winning horse, is not a gelding, but a stallion.

When a man puts his foot in it he is a long way from getting there with both feet.

STOCK MARKETS.

H. C. Becker, stockbroker, next Free Press building, received the following private wire from Bartlett, Frazier & Carrington today:

New York, June 28.—Although the market is by no means a satisfactory one, it shows more resistance to pressure than it did yesterday, and the buying seems to be of a rather better character. The traders were encouraged to work for higher prices by the evidence of support in Copper, around 91. On the other hand, the sharp breaks which took place in the Steel stocks and in St. Paul created for awhile an unfavorable impression, but later on St. Paul rallied easily on what appeared to be covering of shorts. No doubt the short interest was extended yesterday, and this, of course, constitutes a buying power which has been recently so obviously lacking. As expected, rates for call money showed a tendency to advance. Call money at 3 1/2, after which as high as 4 1/2 was paid. Operations by London houses have been on a small scale and without any effect upon prices here. Commission houses are not inclined to advise their customers to buy stocks in view of the difficulty of securing accommodations. Sales to noon were $50,000 shares.

LOCAL MARKET.

Thursday, June 28, 1906.

There was a fairly large attendance at the market this morning. The number of buyers, who were seeking to purchase strawberries, was small. They were greatly disappointed at the small number of loads that were offered. One well-known buyer gives as a reason for the scarcity of strawberries the fact that a couple of years ago the growers lost money, as they sold their berries at 3 to 4 cents per box. They then declared the acreage under cultivation would be reduced, hence the small crop this season. There was not much change in price in the various lines represented.

Grain—Oats were higher today, selling at $1.20 to $1.25 per cwt. Hay and straw—Owing to the rain, they did not sell well today. Prices were lower at $8 to $9.50 per ton. Straw was dull at $3 per load.

Butter and Eggs—Butter was in good demand; sales were made at 17 to 18c for crocks, and 19c to 20c for pound rolls. Eggs sold at 15 to 16c and 17c per dozen, wholesale, and 18c to 19c, retail, the latter price being paid for strictly fresh laid.

Vegetables and Roots—One load of old potatoes was offered, which was reported as sold at $1.25 per bag. Beets were lower in price, at 30c per dozen. Green peas, in good demand, at 25c per quart (shelled).

Poultry—There was a very small supply offered. Prices were unchanged.

Dressed Hogs—The few that were offered sold at $9.75 per cwt. Butchers' Meat—Although the supply was small, sales were slow. Beef sold at $6 to $7.50 per cwt. Veal, $7 to $9 per cwt, most of the supply selling at $7.50 and $8. Lamb was scarce, at $6 to $7 each.

Wool—About half a dozen small lots were offered, which brought 28 to 30c per pound for washed.

CITY STANDS BY THE OLD COMPANY

Insurance on Firemen Is Again Awarded to the Ontario Accident.

No. 3 committee of the city council met last night, with Chairman Matthews, Alds. Armstrong and Booth, Secretary Bell, Fire Chief Clark, Inspector McCallum and Market Clerk Maker present.

The Ontario Accident Insurance Company was again given the insurance on the firemen at the old rate, no other tenders having been presented. The committee expressed the belief that unless a very substantial decrease in the premium could be secured, it would not be fair to place the insurance with another company. Within the past few years the Ontario Accident Company has paid out some thousands of dollars for claims of local firemen who were killed or injured.

The risk on all the firemen carried by the company amounts to $77,500. The premium is the same as that charged last year.

Fire Chief Clark informed the committee that the street-watering contractors are not placing the caps on the hydrants after taking water from them, with the result that mischievous boys are dropping stones into the valves. The engineer will be instructed to warn the contractors to take care of the hydrants or suffer the consequences. According to the street-watering specifications, the contractors must replace the caps each time the hydrants are tapped.

The London Electric Company offered to place lights in Queen's Park at $6 per month, providing the city would agree to pay the company the cost of $108 toward the cost of construction of poles, wires, etc. Or the company would agree to accept the ordinary city rate of 23 cents a night for the lamps, with nothing to be paid toward the cost of construction of poles, etc.

The committee thought this was a matter for No. 2 to deal with, as the latter committee has charge of the parks, and it was referred to that body.

A petition from the people of Elmwood avenue for the removal of a light at the corner of that avenue and the Wortley road to a point further west, was laid over. The matter will come up in the council.

It was decided to have each member of the committee furnished with a copy of the different license fees of London, with a view to a revision of the fees at an early date. The memo from the council re the securing of swimming pools in the river, was laid over. Ald. Armstrong offered a resolution to the effect that the city have no money to pay men to watch the swimming places.

"If we ever establish bathing places, and some one is drowned, we'll never hear the end of it," Chairman Matthews said. The matter was allowed to stand over.

FISHING IS GOOD

Anglers Taking Big Strings at Port Stanley These Days.

Fishing at Port Stanley is said to be better this season than it has been in years.

"Of course, I don't like to talk about Port Stanley," said Traveling Passenger Agent Keane, to The Advertiser today, "when fish stories are going the rounds, but I must say that the man who enjoys a good day's fishing should go to the Port."

"Almost every day the sport is good. On any train bound for London, men and boys with big strings of fish are to be seen. Oldtimers at the lake tell me that fishing at the port is better than it has been for 25 years."

THE MOST POPULAR PILL. The pill is the most popular of all forms of medicine, and of pills the most popular are Fumelle's Vegetable Pills, because they do what it is asserted they can, and are not put forward on any flimsy claims. They are easily taken, and give relief in the most stubborn cases.

MILLER, RADTKE PREMIER RIDERS

Little Jockeys Are Doing the Best Work on American Tracks This Year.

New York, June 27.—The premier race riders of this season are Walter Miller and Herman Radtke.

These lads weigh 90 and 103 pounds respectively, but in spite of their small size they possess the strength of men when in the saddle and can control race-mad thoroughbreds better than many gentlemen jockeys who are taller and weigh nearly twice as much.

These little boys have completely eclipsed the older and stronger riders of other seasons, such as Shaw, Burns and Redfern. Between them they win the majority of the races each day, and it is only occasionally that Shaw and Burns, favorites of other years, ride a winner.

An intense rivalry exists between Miller and Radtke. The latter won more races than Miller, but it has been the other way about since racing began in the east.

As jockeys they are far above the average. They are alert at all the tricks of race track riding. Miller excels Radtke in alertness at the post, but the latter is much stronger, and can ride rings around him in a finish. They are about equal in rating a horse over a distance of ground.

Miller's prominence in the winning list is due to the fact that he had ridden more times than Radtke. The latter has been frequently suspended, both by the starter and the stewards. This absence from the saddle robbed him of many victories.

Radtke's one fault is a bad temper. He has time and again aroused the wrath of Starter Mars Cassidy by his persistent efforts to beat the barrier. Miller, suave and mild-mannered, makes friends instead of enemies and beats the gate.

Both jockeys have an immense following and it is common to hear racegoers say, "I'm betting on Miller, or I'm playing Radtke's mount."

Detectives Lynch and Blumel, of the East Eighty-eighth street station, who made the arrests, admitted that they paid no money to see the game, but said there was a contribution box placed at the entrance gate. They also said that no one was compelled to contribute, it being entirely a matter of freewill offering.

Magistrate Steinert said that no crime had been committed, and discharged the prisoners.
