A TIMBROPHILIC BUBBLE BURST!

STAMP COLLECTORS BEWARE!!

$\checkmark$ AN Expose!!!

Baldwins Railroad Postage: "an obsolete local of considerable rarity "-as it is impudently termed by dealers interested in its sale-is attracting some attention at present in Philatelic Circles. Of course the venders of these stamps affirm stoutly that they are genuine; but we beg to assure buyers that this is not the case. The "Baldwin" is a forgery and the Boston dealer who now advertises it as genuine knows that it was made to sell only. For the information of our readers we submit a brief historical sketch-gleaned from authentic sources-of this stamp.

In the month of May last two young gentlemen belonging to this city entered into co-partnership-which for distinction sake we shall call Messrs "A. and B., Stamp and Coin dealers." They had been in business but a short time when it occurred to them that they might "get up" a stamp. Others had done so with some degree of success, why could not they? Only represent it to their correspondents as a genuine "local" issued and used in the province of New Brunswick, and by its sale they might easily replenish the:r coffers, and increase their business many fold. Having hit upon this "happy thought" the next thing wanted was a name and date. The latter was easily settled; it should be an obsolete local, for this would sell best and be least liable to detection. But the name,-what should it be? This was a puzzler,! It could not be "Turner's"-or the "Eastern" Express, for both of these companies had agents in almost every city, town and village of the Union, as well as in the British Provinces, an application to cither of whom might "spoil their lectle game." After much grave thought and consideration it was remembered that a Mr. H. Baldwin had had some years before, an express office on the European and North American Railway, which runs fromSt.John to the Shediac oyster beds. Why not therefore call the "obsolete local" Baldwin's Railroad Postage.

Nothing could be more favourable and the name was at once adopted. After sketching a rough design of the projected "obsolete," the honourable firm went next in search of an engraver whom they soon found in the person of a Mr. Gregory of this city. Mr. Gregory being an adept in his art soon furnished a block or cut of the new stamp, which was taken to the printing establishment of Messrs J. & A. McM...... of St. John, and shortly after our enterprising young gents had the s" isfaction of gazing upon the fruit of their own :genuity-or in other words upon fifteen hundred of the "BaLDwin's Railhoad Posiage rabels" in the following colours : viz, red on white, blue on ditto, black on ditto., red on grey, blue on ditto, black on ditto, red on green, blue on ditto, black on ditto, red on yellow, blue on ditto, black on ditto, red on blue, blue on ditto., black on ditto. That such stamps should be rare-very rare in-deed-no one can doubt, for they could only be had from the makers. We do not know that the manufacturers are to blame altogether for saying that these stamps were of "considerable rarity"-seeing they could only be obtained from themselves,-but every honest man will say that they were very much to blame for stating that they were NewBrunswick Locals. But further, we have it on good authority, that of these "gems," four hundred were sold to $S$. Allan Taylor of Boston-as stamps that never existeä, but were issued to sell only. Mr. Taylor knows all this, but does he denounce the inposition? oh nol On the contrary, he tries to bolster it up by "a change of base," and mendaciously says in his paper, "that the New Brunswick to which these bogus "obsolete locals"' belong is New Brunswick - New Jersey!!! Could anything be more audacious? Can he tell us or his readers when these Two penny locals were issucd and used in New Jersey? and why it is that no mention is made in any of the New York Price Lists or American Catalogues of the U. S. local stamps? We hope that our readers will make a note of what we have said and avoid the Bogus "Baldrin's."

Labies' wigs were found in abundance in the dead letter office in Washington U. S. A.

LAWRENCE DANTON，

the man of recling．

$Y$ MY W．  ［conclusion．］

It was quite late in the evening when I arrived at the hotel with Gordon after our delightful walk，and as we had some moments at our disposal befors the usual hour of retire－ ing for the night，I lit my favourite meerchaum， and indulged quietly in the smoker＇s reverie． Gordon sat opposite to me，and beguiled the time with reading the Stamp Gazette．All at once I heard a noise in the hall，and immediately descended the stairs to ascertain the cause； when，on reaching the bottom，to my great surprise I found Danton and Charlton engaged in a violent altercation．Miss Vernon，pale，tremb－ ling，and excited，was endeavouring to pacify the two gentlemen；but the rage of Charlton would not be appeased，while with clenched hands and violent demeanour he hurled the foulest epithets on Danton，and accused him of disturbing his peace of mind and estranging her from the society of him，when informed at the same，time of her engasement with him． ＂Why，＂said Charlton his face burning with anger，jealousy，and hatred，＂why have you thus betrayed the confidence $I$ ，since my stay here，have imposed in you，？Yon knew of the intimacy which existed between Miss Vernon and myself，and the engagement which has sub－ sisted from the years of childhood，you were arare of all this，and yet like the evil Genius of a hopeless passion，would step between me and the one I love．I，demand reparation for the evil you have done me；as a man $I$ despise and loathe you．＂Saying this，he seized him by the throat，but Danton，with admirable dexteri－ ty and skill，hurled him to the ground．The noise of the fall brought Gordon to the seene of this little drama，which now reached the high－ est state of excitement．Miss Vernon，at the commencement of the scene，was cool and self－ possessed，and entreated them both to settle this dispute at some place where strangers could not hear their language，and condemned Charlton in an carnest and emphatic manner，for bringing so unjust and foul an accusation against Mr． Danton at such a time，and in the hall of an hotel．But when Chirrton stood up violently and indignantly abusing his opponent，while at the same time Danton calmly surveyed him with scorn and contempt，a patient listener of the unmerited abuse heaped upon him, her admiration for his manner was plainly visible to myself and Gordon. But now, with Charlton on the floor, and Danton's hand clenched firmly on the collar of his victim's throat, she trembled violently, and seizing him by the arm, requested him to desist, and conduct her to her room. Looking up, his whole frame shaken with emotions of pride, anger, and contempt, he beheld those eyes gazing with mute astonishment and surprise on hiim, and understanding at once the expression they conveyed, desisted from any further attempt at injury to his rival. Charlton rose to his feet the very personification of shame, cowardice, and self-reproach. During this little scene which had been enacted, I said nothing, but calmly waited to see what further event might take place. Danton looked disdainfully on his rival; his face pale from conflicting emotions, but with determination and pride stamped in every feature. "Why is it,", said he, "you have used me thus? I never did you wrong. Nothing but the respect and esteem I have for Miss Vernon-a witness of your passion and folly-prevents me from demanding satisfaction and apology for the insult received at your hands. But go, base calumniator, you are unworthy of her for whom you profess so much affection and esteen; your conduct belies your station and character, and shows not what you pretend to be, but what you yeally are. Your ignorance of what is due between man and man, the passion and folly you have displayed, have degraded you, not in your eyes only, but in the eyes of her whose affection you have turned into disgust and hatred, and whose confidence in you has been so foully outraged." "Danton talks like a moralist," whispered Gordon to me, "this affair must be settled to-morrow before we depart for St. John. Pistols and coffee at half past five. Such a denourment to our evening's walk I did not expect; but there is no use in talking, he did behave nobly, and it but requires a good exhibition of diplomacy on his part now to enable him to settie the affair amicably, and win the prize. What is the use of talking of long standing engagements between the sexes after the scene we have witnessed, Danton has succeeded before now in winning her love, which, to my mind, could be easily obtaincd. Oh woman! inconstant woman!
"Nature made then blinder motions
"It does not answer "" I remarked, "to make such an assertion."" "By jove, I can prove it,", replied Gordon. "Her love for Charlton may have been assumed, and you know women, like men bow to many idols. We are all the dupe of our own feeling, and passion lures where reason doth betray," This conversation took place in the room to which we had ascended, leaving our friends to settle their dispute in their own way. In a moment Danton entered followed by Miss Vernon and Charlton. The lateness of the hour prevented all further conversation. In reply to some remark which Miss Vernon made, Churlton replied, addressing the lady " permit me, before I depart from you for the last time, to say, that what I have witnessed to-night, ought to bring the blush of shame and self-reproach to your cheek; to think that you, whons I have known so long, and at one time loved so ardently, betrothed by all vows saered uuder heaven, should be guilty of an improper intimacy with one who a few days ago was to you a perfect stranger. But the lesson I have received to-night is one I shall never forget, I desire not to throw any reproaches on your name and character, but will banish from my memory all recollection of the past. "As for you, sir," addressing Danton, "I can only say, that by you I have been most foully de. ceived, aud, as a stranger in the couutry, did not expect such treatment and violation of honour and respect from one who pretended to be my friend." Saying this, he turned and left the room.
The next morning found us on board the steamboat on the way to St. John. Charlton remained in F -, intending to return to the States by another route. We passed through scenes of luxuriance and beauty, through broad meadows of bright waving grain, and grass, where the tann'd haymakers stood in groups beneath the glowing heat of a parting summer's day. Miss Vernon sat with Danton at her side gazing with rapt admiration on every scene which each turn in the river brought into view; but to the most ordinary observer, it could be plainly seen that her mind was not at rest. Her face wore a pensive, melancholy expression, which she would at times try to conceal, but ever and anon the old look would return again, which it would be vain for me to attempt to deseribe. Regret for the past, mingled, no doubt, with her feelings for one whose conduct had wounded her sensitive nature, when redress, was beyond her power. "What could I do," she would often say, "at such a scene as that which occurred last evening? Placed between two persons,-the one cold, calculating, vindicative, and revengeful, the other, ardent in his feelings and devotedly attached to me. Charlton I cannot but despise ; his conduct on that occasion has, since I have grown from childhood to the present time when a woman should understand her position and duty, fully confirmed my suspicion, and has taught me to believe the truth of many reports I have received concerning his character, which, if revealed, no woman could esteem. Fortunately for myself I have escaped from the tyranny of one by circumstance the most unpleasing to reflect upon, and most harrowing to my feelings, and to which I shall ever look back on with regret and shame. The error I have committed is a slight one when I reflect on what a woman's chief happiness depends, but will no doubt be forgiven when the pure completion of the latter shall one day be fulfil. led." "What are you reflecting on;" said Danton, as he rose from his seat where he had been sitting for a long time engaged in conversation with several gentlemen. "Something," replied she, "that I cannot banish from my mind; which oppresses my heart and makes even the bright seenes through which we are passing appear to me tame and uninteresting." "Think not of the past," replied Danton, "but coufide in me; time alone can but lessen that sorrow which you now feel: the past will soon be forgotten ; everything was done for the best, and all I now ask is your love." He spoke with the old feeling of tenderness and sympathetic impulse which no art could conceal. Miss Vernon seemed very much affected, and could make no reply, but huns her head in silence. They thus conversed at intervals, until the bold outlines of the surrounding hills appeared visibly in view, which announced that we were near our journeys' end.

When the boat arrived at the wharf, Danton hired a cab and drove at once to the hotel. Gordon and myself' called upon him the same evening and, saw at once from the blush of triumph on his cheek, that love had crowned his path. The next morning he started for Boston with Miss Vernon, and after a stay of some months returned to St . John. In the winter they were to be married. It was now, late in autumn, and often during the cold nights of the month, have we sat and talked on the faded joys of the past. It was on one of these nights that he revealed to me much that is already contained in this story; but the tenderness with which he spake in respect to her and his love, excited the strongest emotions of his heart. "I have been," said he "the strongest fool to passion, and have bowed to many idols, but none shall allure me now. Had I not been the accepted suitor of the only person I now love, I should have turned from the ambition and pursuit of the world and become a perfect recluse." "And what," I replied, "is the secret of your passive strength in that feeling which has ruled you so long? It is singular you have not sunk under the effects of wasted and disappointed affection, which you tell me so eloquently of." He made no reply, but handing me a pocket volume of Byron pointed to the following lines:-
Existence may bo borne and the deep root
Of life and sufferance make its prime abode
In bare and desolated bosoms muto
The camel labours with the heaviest load
And the wolf dies in silence,-not bestow'd
In vain should such examples bo if they,
Things of ignoble or of savage mood
Endure and shrink not we of nobler clay
May temper it to bear,-it is but for a day:
In consequence of the crowded state of our advertising space this month we have been compelled to issue in conjunction with this number of the Gazette a SUPPLEMENT, containing a portion of our advertisements. We beg to apologize to our friends for our not being out punctual on the first of the month, but the tardiness of the arrival of the mails occasioned the delay.The Gazette will be issued on the first of the month in future.
