Commission officials can enter a home and pester the life out of any head of a family in the province before he is given a dollar of relief. My mind reverts to what makes the state. I realize that the home stands for the building up of character, that the church stands for upholding the principle of righteousness, that the school stands for the development of the mentality of every pupil, and if I read history aright any nation worthy of the name has always stood for justice. But what I have described is not justice. It is the sort of treatment, however, the poor people in Saskatoon and other Saskatchewan and western centres have to put up with before they can get one dollar of relief. If they must mortgage their homes before they can get relief they must do it, because after all life is sweet, and before a man will see his loved ones starve to death he will mortgage his home and everything he has in the world. If he does not he will find himself on the roadside.

May I say on behalf of all those people who are out of work in the province of Saskatchewan and on behalf of all those who find themselves in straitened circumstances that I fully appreciate their great difficulties, and so far as I am concerned I have taken this opportunity to put their situation clearly before the house in order to urge the government as strongly as possible to alleviate their distress and remove the conditions complained of. Of course, I know what the answer will be. It will be constitutional in its nature. We will be told, as the Prime Minister told us the other day, that this is a provincial problem, that the dominion which votes the money passes the administration on to the province, and that the province must work out the problem as it sees fit. But apart from all those intricacies of law and constitutional government I wish to emphasize that the cases which I have put before the house tonight are of such a nature that it is imperative for the government to do something to encourage people in such a desperate situation so as to make their lot in life at least a little easier.

I have only time to touch the fringe of the farm relief problem. May I tell you what is going on in the province of Saskatchewan? I do not want to find fault with my hon. friend the Minister of Labour because I know he has a very difficult problem. I must say that any time I have put before him a question dealing with farm relief and called to his attention the serious conditions in regard to unemployment, he has given consideration to the matter. I cannot say that in every case the grievance which I have presented has been redressed, but at least the department has interested itself in the case and taken certain action. The problem in northern Saskatchewan is this. Thousands of settlers have trekked from the southern part of the province to the northern part. They have gone north where there is water and bush and land and animal life. It is in the south that the dried out areas are and to-day we have in northern Saskatchewan hundreds of people who are finding it difficult to exist. They may have to go back to their lands and homes in the south because they are on a type of land and farm in the north upon which they will have some job to make a living and raise a family. May I draw the attention of the house to a meeting that was held at Medstead in my own riding early this fall. Here is how one of the reeves present at that meeting—there would be fifteen or twice that number of reeves and councillors and secretaries at that meeting gathered to discuss farm relief and the movement of settlers from Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and Regina and the dried out areas in the south into this part of the province—sized up the situation. Reeve McDonald of Spiritwood had this to say:

> He explained a number of settlers from the cities and the dried-out areas had come into the Spiritwood district. They were without crop this year and available cash worth mentioning.

No crop and no cash:

> They were put on poor land, land so poor, rocky and bushy that store bills would have to be run up and sixty per cent of the taxes remain unpaid.

He says further:

> I consider it was utterly impossible for many of these people to exist on the type of farms upon which they were placed. He also mentioned how last winter the provincial government sent to certain individual farmers in the district hired men and housekeepers for which the people of the province had to pay $10 a month and who were absolutely unnecessary, only causing an uncalled-for burden on the province. Every application for help should be scrutinized.

That is his idea of the back to the land movement in Spiritwood rural municipality.

Mr. GORDON: May I say that Reeve McDonald is just fifty per cent out in that last statement the hon. member read, because half of the ten dollars is paid by the Dominion government.

Mr. McINTOSH: Whether or not he is out on the amount is not the main point, I presume that he is striking at the principle, that these people were sent to farm homes by the provincial authorities and the municipality never asked to cooperate or have a word to say about any of these contracts.

Let me go a little further. We have the words of Reeve Charles Comerford, a man who has been in that country over twenty years. He says:

The municipality had asked for a $2,000 to $3,000 grant, but the answer received was grant could not be given because Meeting Lake R.M. was not in the relief area. Notwithstanding this request and answer the "dumping" of families was going on. In one and a half years forty families had landed in the municipality and already these families had fifty children that had to be schooled. No help was forthcoming from Regina. Reeve Comerford said he objected to the principle of such land settlement schemes where men and women had not a chance to make good on land that should not be settled.

Then a little farther on I find the following:

Department of Education, Regina, promised $400 grant for new school providing settlers would erect walls but building remained unfinished and meanwhile fifty children have no school advantages like other children. Mr. Comerford said he repudiated municipally as far as his municipality was concerned any responsibility of cost of upkeep of all such people wrongfully unloaded upon Meeting Lake R.M. "Dump" families should be looked after by federal and provincial governments.

That was his analysis of the problem. Let me read a little more. What did Reeve Soderberg of Medstead rural municipality have to say?

Reeve Soderberg at this juncture in the discussion gave it as his carefully arrived at opinion that families placed on the rough useless land complained of would find it impossible to succeed.

Note the expression "impossible to succeed". Then the article continues:

If experienced farmers could not make a living on these farms how can we expect families from the cities without money and experience to do anything else but fail.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. MANION: What is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. McINTOSH: From the North Battleford News, a most reliable paper.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member owns that paper?

Mr. McINTOSH: Certainly. I was at the meeting myself, and therefore I know the report was correct.

Mr. SPENCE: The hon. member is reporter, editor and everything else.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, variety is the spice of life. Next we will see what Reeve William Grimes had to say:

Reeve William Grimes, Parkdale R.M., was the next speaker. He said Parkdale R.M. of which he was head wanted good settlers—they are an important addition to the well being of any municipality. Up to the present Parkdale R.M. has had no trouble with the so-called "$300 land settlement class." The hospitalization of mothers, children and adults admittedly was a real problem costing money. The medical attention demanded by mothers, children and others outside the municipality and resident in the local improvement districts also presented another major difficulty. The Department of Municipal Affairs, Regina, had promised payment of all the medical costs defrayed by the R.M. of Parkdale for patients from the local improvement district contiguous to Parkdale R.M., but as yet no money had been remitted—the municipality being meanwhile out all moneys paid, an altogether unfair condition of things. Taxes in many cases have not been paid for five to ten years; tax collections are impracticable with costs unpaid if contracted; many other obligations are also piling up. Burial and cemetery costs (for a municipal cemetery) have had to be met. The settlement move of the last year in which settlers bought Canadian Pacific railway bush lots paying $25 cash and supposing to have in their possession certain stock and equipment has not worked satisfactorily. In many cases these settlers have not had the stock and equipment required yet have been placed on difficult lands with no real chance of success. Relief has been and in many cases will be requested. Without horses, wagons, stock and equipment how can these people get anywhere? They cannot. No taxes paid, nothing received in lieu of taxes, and no action for redress on the part of the Canadian Pacific railway. Department requested reeve and secretary to visit all families in predicament but this has and will not be done as municipality does not consider itself responsible for a land policy in which it was not invited to have any say.

There is the foundation for the grievances of many people in the north, namely that these people were unceremoniously dumped into the north country from the cities of Saskatoon, Regina and Moose Jaw. They were dumped without having the required amount of money, the required equipment or the required experience. They were placed in various municipalities, and received little or no cooperation from the provincial authorities. They are on poor lands, and these reeves say that their chances of success on the whole are nil.

Mr. GORDON: I should like to ask a question. Does the hon. member know whether any of these people have been supplied relief by the municipalities?

Mr. McINTOSH: Relief?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, I understand they were supplied with some relief. In some cases they cut cordwood for practically nothing; they received hardly enough to exist on because they were poor axe-men. They were without the required money and were settled on land which did not offer them a chance in the world so far as making a decent living was concerned. The fundamental weakness of the policy behind the whole movement was that there was no cooperation between the department and the municipalities. Had they sat around a common conference table they could have, in half an hour, placed families at points where they would have had some chance to make good. In that way far-reaching action could have been taken.

Listen to the words of Percy Marks, the constable of Medstead village:

> Percy Marks, Medstead constable, drew the attention of a unique case of settler "dumping" taking place in Medstead that afternoon when a mother and four children were left by the government relief officer in the Canadian National Railways station. The mother had fifty cents in her pocket to take care of herself and family till her husband somewhere nineteen miles away would turn up. Relief officer and mother same afternoon had searched for husband but could not find him, he being on some inaccessible farm on which it was said anyone could not be expected to do anything else but surely and slowly starve. The mother and family had to be taken care of by Constable Marks after relief officer had left her in station and directed his way to Saskatoon. The woman and family were from Saskatoon —one of the city's selected settler units for "the north." The meeting was astounded to her such a damning example of government inefficiency in regard to northern settlement and asked its secretary to act in behalf of mother and children without delay.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I have read enough to show what this much-heralded northern settlement means, what going back to the land means, what the movement back to the northern lands in Saskatchewan means, so far as northwestern Canada is concerned. Before the meeting I have described broke up they appointed a resolutions committee which drew up resolutions concerning the wise settlement of these northern lands, financing of settlers, and a third one directed against dumping. I presume the fight is still being waged in these municipalities; no doubt they are still trying to get the provincial government to give the necessary relief, financial and otherwise, so that these families may have a chance to live.

In closing I should like to touch upon a point discussed by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), namely that of soldier settlers. Soldier settlers in North Battleford and Lloydminster are organizing. When we know that soldier settlers are organizing we realize that they have some reason for so doing, they are not organizing for fun. They are not organizing because it is a pleasure to hold public meetings; they are forming themselves into an organized body to get redress. They are organizing because they feel they must do that or later suffer. They are organizing because they feel if they did not they might be evicted from their farms. They are organizing so that they may demand justice and common sense action—justice from the department and common sense action on the part of the soldier settlement board. As far as their contracts with the department are concerned they feel that they have not been accorded by the soldier settlement board the treatment to which they are entitled; therefore they are dissatisfied. They feel that they bought farms at inflated prices, and apart from reductions, the amount owing is out of all proportion to the earning power of the land. They also feel that, as far as liquidation is possible, if their farms were liquidated today they would not pay their way. Debt piling upon debt, principal added to principal, interest added to interest. Moreover Mr. Speaker, the soldier settlers feel that they have done everything possible to pay their way. They do not think their present lot is their fault. They feel that they have a legitimate grievance, and they are going to do their utmost to have that grievance removed. They are not able to control the factors which constitute the basis of their grievance. They have been told by the department that they must pay, and if they do not they must get out. Now it is impossible to pay, so they have organized, with two objectives, one immediate and the other secondary. They are organizing to meet the immediate problem of their debts, how to pay their way and stay on the land. The other reason for organization is that they feel that they have an objective to which they must drive on; if they do not they are going to be lost, because they feel that they cannot pay their principal and interest. They are faced with the threat of being evicted from their property and dumped on the roadside, and they feel that the only thing to be done is to have the whole situation investigated by the department and redress meted out in some satisfactory manner. I notice that the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren), is not in his seat, if he were I would ask him if he intends investigating this soldier settlement question. Or the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), I think I did ask him that question recently on the orders of the day and he turned it down flat, said that there would be no investigation.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, I am so sorry I did not hear the question.

Mr. McINTOSH: The question is, the soldier settlers feel that, to stay on their land and pay their way there must be a reinvestigation, full and complete, of the soldier settlement problem, and they must be given redress. They must have revaluations and reductions, because at the present time what they owe for the land, principal and accrued interest, is out of all proportion to its earning power, and payment is impossible. The department is investigating the administration of the pension act, why not couple with that the administration of soldier settlement affairs across northwestern Canada? If there is anything wrong with soldier settlement, if these grievances are well founded, then in the name of Canada and Canada's honour,—we gave them our word of honour in 1914 that we would stand by them and their children and dependents,—I would say as a member of this house that we ought to get the report of a parliamentary committee, or any other committee that would get the facts, and then act upon those facts.

I would like to read about the lot of one soldier settler—I have time for only one. This man resides on section 16-45-14 west of the 3rd, has a half share.

Mr. GORDON: What is his name?

Mr. McINTOSH: I will give it a little later. The man had 693 bushels of wheat as his half share. The soldier settlement board seized the whole of it and after it was hauled to Whitkow, to market a short distance off, they released all over two thirds of the crop. Their seizure was 462 bushels, he was left with 231. He sold it at 27 cents and realized $61.67. Then he had some Canadian Pacific land, section 17-45-14 west of the 3rd, on which he harvested 947 bushels. The total proceeds were $284.10. From the soldier settlement board part he had $61.67, making a total of $345.77.

Here was his outlay: threshing, Canadian Pacific Railway section, $47.35; threshing, soldier settlement section, $34.65; loan from his son repaid, $27; insurance, $10; haulage, $40; grocery bill, $59; John Garland, $12; Bank of Commerce, interest on note $40; taxes, Canadian Pacific arrears only, $35.69; blankets, $15; hog, for meat, $7; and he paid miscellaneous bills, $6.50. These bills total $334.19. Subtract that from the $345.77, the proceeds of his wheat, this soldier settler has left the glorious sum of $11.58; "this is now spent" he says, and he has no seed, no grist, no winter clothing for wife and family of four children, and is short of bedding. The name of this soldier settler is A. G. Sibley, and he lives about 20 miles from North Battleford. I may say this man's case is under investigation now by the department I think. I understand General Ross and the commissioner of soldier settlement are out west now investigating a certain number of cases, and I think from what Mr. Sibley said in his last letter they were investigating his case. What, if anything, will be done for him I cannot say.

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to have an opportunity of taking part for a few minutes in the discussion of the question of farm relief, and of saying a few words on unemployment. I do so because the people of my part of the country are more concerned in knowing what this government intends to do in the matter of farm relief than they are in anything else that is before this parliament, not excepting the conference agreements. I realize that the government of today have a great many difficulties to face, but some of them were brought about by their own action. I want to show that agriculture today is suffering to a far greater extent than any other industry in this country. The situation briefly is that in recent years the bottom has completely dropped out of all markets. In December, 1929, wheat was worth $1.40 a bushel. A year later it had dropped to about 80 cents. In 1931 it had dropped to about 62 cents. This year I have the quotation for November 21: No. 1 northern wheat closed at 47⅛ cents, Fort William price. Oats have dropped to 24½ cents, barley to 30⅞ cents, flax to 70 cents, and rye to 30 cents. The position is the same in regard to live stock; I believe I gave some statistics in regard to that last year. But I point out that even these low prices are not the prices the farmer receives. From the 47 cents for wheat must come elevator and freight charges; so the farmer in western Canada today is receiving for wheat at least 25 cents a bushel less than the actual cost of production. In view of this I do not believe there is any justification for the government taking the stand they have taken in regard to the wheat bonus. Last year I presented to the house a resolution asking the government to consider extending an acreage bonus on wheat. I said at that time that I did not believe in the bonus principle, but it was my view that if all other industries in the country were to be bonused by means of high tariffs then the farmers were entitled to their share.

The prices of all farm products have come down; the bottom has fallen out of the industry, and the farmer has to buy at high prices the commodities he needs. Those prices are the result of tariffs imposed by this government. The price of everything the farmer has to buy is high and he is producing his own commodities at below cost of production. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), during the last session, and I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said something to the same effect. At any rate, the Minister of Agriculture said last year that he was responsible for bringing to the attention of the Prime Minister and the government the necessity for a bonus on wheat. He said he saw the necessity for such a course in view of the fact that the wheat farmers of Canada received little or no benefit from the tariff, and he suggested a bonus on wheat as a compensating adjustment for the high tariffs imposed. Now I claim that if a compensating adjustment was necessary last year, in the form of a bonus of five cents per bushel on wheat, then we are not asking too much if we request a bonus of $1 an acre to be paid to our wheat farmers this year.

I have said that farming in Canada is suffering to a far greater extent than any other industry, and I think I can prove that from one of the bulletins prepared by the department—the Monthly Bulletin of Agricultural Statistics for March, 1932. I will not quote very much from it, but in 1928 the gross annual agricultural revenue of Canada—that is, of field crops, farm animals, wool, dairy products, fruits and vegetables, poultry, eggs, fur farming, maple products, tobacco, clover and grass seed, honey, etc., was $1,806,000,000; in 1929 it was $1,631,000,000; in 1930 it was $1,262,000,000, and in 1931 it had dropped to $880,000,000, just about one half of the average of the previous six years.

Now I turn to the province of Saskatchewan and I find that in the year 1928—I do not go further back than that—the gross agricultural revenue was $409,661,000; in 1929 it had dropped to $299,304,000; in 1930 it had fallen still further to $190,288,000; and last year the figure was $106,686,000. In other words, in 1931—and I believe it will be lower by a considerable sum this year—it was only about one-quarter of what it was during the six years from 1925 to 1930. This table goes on to say:

> The table shows that, for 1931, the total gross agricultural revenue of Canada is estimated at $880,241,000, as compared with the revised estimate of $1,262,047,000 for 1930, which is a decrease of $381,806,000, or 30 per cent. There are reductions in all the items with the exception of tobacco, the largest being in field crops, farm animals, dairy products and poultry and eggs.

Not only has the revenue from our agricultural industry declined, but the trade of Canada has diminished very rapidly in the last few years. There is an axiom that trade is the life blood of a country, and if Canada is going to survive we must have trade. There is where I believe that the tariff policies of this government have added to the burdens of agriculture in stifling trade. It seems that this government rather pride themselves on the fact that they have kept out imports from other countries. They seem to be averse to imports of any kind, completely overlooking the fact that every period of prosperity in Canada has been a period of large importations, and that when imports decline there is a decline in business generally, followed by depression. The same is true of individuals. We cannot purchase goods if we have not the money. The government, by discouraging imports by reason of high tariffs, have demoralized trade.

I turn to the Commercial Intelligence Journal giving the exports from Canada to the United States of a number of commodities such as are produced on Canadian farms or manufactured directly from such farm products. Figures are given for the four months ending October in the years 1920, 1929, 1931 and 1932, and this publication also sets out the United States tariff rates. It shows that as the tariff rates increased in the United States the exports from Canada to that country decreased. In 1920, for the four months ending October, our total exports to the United States of agricultural products amounted to $53,768,874; in 1929 this had decreased to $19,862,983; in 1931, it was $3,524,582; and in 1932, for the four months ending October, the figure was $1,235,599.

I quote these figures merely to show the effect of high tariffs on trade. Someone will say, of course, that we are not responsible for high tariffs in the United States, but it just shows that high tariffs do stifle trade. Let me give another glaring example. I have a return showing our trade with the Argentine, a country with which we did considerable business a few years ago. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) visited the Argentine on behalf of Canada two years or so ago, I believe, and he spoke in glowing terms of the possibilities of trade with that country. I have here the imports from the Argentine in 1930 and 1931, and I have them also for the ten months ending October, 1931 and 1932. In 1930 our total imports from that country were $7,641,000; in 1931 they had dropped to $3,205,430. Our exports to the Argentine in 1930 were valued at $12,417,486 and in 1931 at $4,575,497. It appears to me that this business should have been encouraged in some way, as was suggested to this house by the right hon. member when he made his report upon his return from that country. What is the result for this year? Our total imports for the ten months ended October 31 are valued at only $885,723 and our exports at $2,650,688. We cannot expect Canada to make progress if we put up such barriers that other countries cannot trade with us.

I have one or two other suggestions to make. The first is that this government should begin to realize that their high tariff policy is not only a failure but is proving disastrous to the trade of our country. There is another problem which confronts our farmers and the people of this country generally, that is the problem of the spread in prices between the raw products and the finished article. A year ago the Minister of Agriculture made the suggestion that there was a possibility that some board would be appointed to inquire into the spread in price between our raw and finished products. This afternoon the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) gave some of these spreads, mentioning among others the spread in price in connection with leather and wool. Surely something could be done in this connection and I think the government would be well advised to appoint a board whose function it would be to inquire into these spreads in prices. Today our farmers are getting about one and a half to two cents per pound for their wool and they have to pay $2 per pound for the finished product. They are hardly able to sell hides, but when they do they get about twenty-five cents apiece, yet they have to pay $6, $10 and $12 for a pair of shoes. Surely there is something the government could do to investigate these spreads, and if there is, I think it should be done immediately.

I should like to make another suggestion in connection with our trade commissioners and embassies located in the different countries. If it is the definite policy of this government to shut out the foreigner from trading with this country, why do we maintain commissioners at Washington, in Japan and in other parts of the world? Why does not the government recall these men until such time as we have a government in power willing to trade with the other countries? The expense of these offices would be saved. Unless something is done very soon for agriculture I am afraid that this industry, as far as western Canada is concerned, cannot survive.

In conclusion, I want to say this in connection with the tariff. I believe that any industry that cannot survive with a ten per cent tariff had better be allowed to disappear. Industries should not be maintained with the high tariffs which prevail at the present time. If they were allowed to disappear we would probably get reductions in the prices of clothing, machinery and a great many other necessities.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, Canada has been going through the greatest crisis in her history. It has lasted three years and is now affecting three-quarters of her people. If Canada is to get out of this crisis, whatever action is taken must be initiated by this parliament. The problem has now become so difficult that the ordinary individual is unable to deal with it. So far as Canada is concerned, the principal cause of the depression is the low prices received for the products of our farms, forests, mines and fisheries.

The prices of farm products fall faster and further during a depression than the prices of any other products. These prices have now fallen so low that it takes twice as much produce to pay his taxes, interest and debts, and he can buy only about half as much as he could previously. The majority of our people are engaged in agriculture and the prices they receive for their products constitute the bulk of the money which goes into circulation for the promotion of trade, commerce and industry in Canada. The prices received by the producers in our primary industries largely determine the amount of purchasing power which the people of Canada may have in their hands. I do not think I could describe the financial position of the farmer better than to quote very briefly from a recent issue of the Farmers' Sun. The article states that the price collapse has cost the Canadian farmer one billion dollars and that the condition of agriculture is a national crisis.

The article continues:

> Unemployment, decline of business and national financial difficulties traceable to the drastic consequences of falling prices.
> Farming is being destroyed by the price collapse.
> Canada's basic industry, the industry which supports 46·29 per cent of the people, which produces 58·3 per cent of the exports abroad, is being steadily wiped out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member is out of order. It is clearly out of order to read from an article commenting upon any question before the house.

Mr. COOTE: If it were not so late in the session I would challenge your honour's ruling. I think what I have done is in accordance with the rules, as I understand them; however, I will be governed by your decision in this matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member has the privilege of challenging my ruling.

Mr. COOTE: I suppose it would be useless, and in the present instance I bow to your ruling. However, I think I am permitted to give some facts and perhaps I could give them a little more accurately by occasional reference to the article in question.

The gross annual revenue of agriculture dropped $174,939,000 in the year 1928-29; it dropped $369,034,000 in 1929-30 and $381,806,000 in 1930-31. That is a total drop of $925,779,000 in three years. The indices of farm prices for the present year indicate a drop of $400,000,000, which would make a total drop of $1,250,000,000 in four years. To correct that situation, drastic action is necessary.

While farm products have dropped to one-half their former value, prices of other goods have not declined in proportion and I find that the farmer's dollar, in comparison with 1926 when it was worth 100, will buy only 75 per cent as much retail food, 65 per cent as much retail clothing and 55 per cent as much household furnishings. The cost of agricultural implements to the farmer shows that the price of implements has not dropped more than a fraction of the drop in the prices of farm products. We find that ploughs still have 100 per cent, drills, 98.4 per cent, wagons 97.1 per cent and binders 96.3 per cent of their 1926 values. In order to purchase any of these implements, it takes twice as many farm products at prevailing prices as it did in 1926. I was told this fall by one merchant in my home town that the price of binders which he handled had dropped $5. This was a $300 binder and he said that that was the equivalent of a drop of eight cents in the price of a $5 pair of shoes.

To sum up again, I would say that the unequal fall in farm prices has doubled the farmer's debts, taxes, interest, insurance premiums and all fixed charges. It has certainly cut the purchasing power of his products anywhere from 30 to 60 per cent, depending upon the class of goods he has to buy with his products. In fact, if he pays all these fixed charges, he will not have any purchasing power at all and he will have to live on what he produces on the farm. The women will have to go back to the spinning wheel, or the farmer's family will have to go without clothes. The result is that farm women today are canning their own vegetables; they are canning fruit, poultry, meat. They are doing their best to provide a living for their families off what they produce on the farm. In some cases they are taking old dresses out of the ragbag and mending them because they cannot buy new ones. The farmers are today buying very little. Most of them are down to the very minimum. The fact that they are not buying is not because they do not want to buy, but because they have not the wherewithal. They are skimping and retrenching in every possible way; they are working harder and getting less than they ever did before. Because the farmers are able to buy so little, there is unemployment in retail and wholesale stores, in our factories and on our railways. One reason that there are idle canning factories in Ontario is that the western farmer is no longer able to buy canned goods. If he has any canned goods, the women have to can them themselves. One-fifth of our people are out of work. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) told us that 800,000 people were on relief, and I am sure another 1,000,000 are out of work and being kept by their relatives or living on what little they have left.

Mr. GORDON: Where does the hon. gentleman get those figures?

Mr. COOTE: The figure of 800,000 was given by the minister. The other figures were given to me in one case by a professor of economics who made this estimate.

Mr. GORDON: That is hopeless.

Mr. COOTE: Well, those who are out of work and not on direct relief would, with their dependents, make that many.

Mr. GORDON: The 800,000 include dependents.

Mr. COOTE: But those are only people who are on direct relief from municipalities, provincial governments or the federal government. There are hundreds of thousands who are out of work, who are still living on their means or being kept by their relatives. No doubt there are several hundred thousand young men and women who have finished their schooling and who want to go to work, but for whom there is no work. This number would be included in the million people that I suggested a few minutes ago as being out of work. All those people are existing on a reduced standard of living. Under such conditions they must reduce it.

The situation is becoming so bad that action must be taken at once. If not, the bonds of some of our municipalities, many of them in fact, to the extent of many millions of dollars are bound to go into default. The farmer's power to pay taxes to meet interest on bonds is not there. The investments of loan, trust and insurance companies is bound to be affected; it cannot be avoided. Even the investments of our governments are affected and in fact the whole financial structure of the country is affected by the low price of farm products. The situation demands prompt action and I am glad to hear that we are to have a conference of provincial premiers to be called probably in January. I would suggest that when this premiers' conference is called, they should consider action on similar lines to that which was taken in Australia a year and a half ago at what was known as the premiers' conference, when it was agreed that all the states should introduce legislation to reduce interest rates on existing mortgages and agreements of sale by 22½ per cent of the existing rate. The banks also agreed to reduce interest on their loans by one per cent and interest on deposits by one per cent. It was agreed that a bonus on wheat amounting to 4½ pence per bushel should be paid on last year's crop. It was also agreed at this conference that the exporter should be helped by depreciation in Australian currency. The conference also agreed to a conversion of the entire internal bonded indebtedness of the commonwealth and of the Australian states at a reduction of 22½ per cent of the existing rates. This conversion was carried out shortly afterwards, 97 per cent of the bonds being voluntarily converted and the remaining three per cent being converted by legislation. That effected a saving of $16,000,000 annually to the commonwealth and the various states. The greatest benefit has come to Australia through a depreciation of her currency. I know some people would immediately say that such a course would ruin the credit of Canada; that her bonds would not be saleable after such an operation as that. I find in the Commerce of the Nation, in a recent issue this dispatch:

New South Wales, Australia, conversion loan of some $50,000,000 launched under aegis of Commonwealth government was taken up in London market within half an hour.

That was a foreign loan.

Will reduce former interest of 5½ per cent to nominal rate of 3½ per cent though over-all yield of four per cent will be realized by investors. Saving estimated at over $2,000,000 per annum.

Canada's government has made great efforts to maintain her credit on a high standing with foreign countries, but I doubt very much whether after all this effort Canada could secure a bond issue in any foreign country at a net rate of four per cent and that is what the state of New South Wales has recently been able to do.

May I also mention this in passing:

British government announces new conversion loan involving $400,000,000, causing sharp rise in government securities. British treasury two per cent bonds totalling $200,000,000 underwritten in record time in city of London.

Great Britain quite frankly abandoned the gold standard a year ago last September. The result is very low interest rates in that country, as evidenced by the fact that the British government is able to sell $200,000,000 of treasury notes at a rate of two per cent, while in Canada our government pays the banks four per cent on treasury notes.

Coming back to Australia and the depreciation of her currency which was agreed upon at that conference, I find in a recent issue of the Ottawa Journal a splendid editorial which is headed: "An Australian Recovery." I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that you will not allow me to read this editorial. I would just say that it goes on to make some very favourable comment on the Australian situation. It says that there is a certain amount of criticism in Australian papers about the action that has been taken, but that the criticism has arisen mainly on the part of party politicians. Perhaps on some later occasion I may be able to read it.

I have another editorial here from the Leader-Post of Regina, dated November 8, and headed "Australia Reports Recovery." It goes on to make some very complimentary remarks on the Australian situation and winds up by saying that business and trade in Australia are coming to life as a result of the policies put into operation, and says that this does not appear to be happening in Canada, and it asks: Have we been following the wrong path?

I read in a recent dispatch that Australia this year has set aside one and a quarter million pounds for the purpose of paying a bonus to wheat growers. They also propose to pay a bounty of one pound per acre—I give that figure subject to correction—for fertilizer. They also propose to make a reduction in the land tax in Australia.

At the present time the currency of Australia is depreciated sixty per cent as compared with that of Canada. Some bankers in Australia have advocated that that depreciation should be even more than sixty per cent so as to assist the Australian exporters to continue in business. I should like to say a word or two on the recent action of the Prime Minister by which he indulged in a small measure of inflation I refer to his action in regard to the sale of $35,000,000 of treasury notes to the Canadian banks at four per cent.

Mr. SPENCER: Three per cent.

Mr. COOTE: He was borrowing from the Canadian banks at four per cent. The Canadian banks then borrowed $35,000,000 from the Finance department at three per cent, using these treasury notes as security. This is unquestionably a measure of inflation, and I would ask the house to note that the basis of that inflation was money made by the printing press.

Mr. EDWARDS: Does the hon. member say that commodity prices have risen since that action was taken?

Mr. COOTE: No, commodity prices have not risen. I was just going to bring out that point. There will be very little increase in commodity prices from this small measure of inflation. This $35,000,000 in the vaults of the banks does furnish a basis for issuing bank credit to the amount of $300,000,000 if the banks care to issue that amount of credit, and can find customers who will borrow from them and give them satisfactory security. The banks do not loan to a producer unless the price of the commodity he produces is at such a level that the banker can naturally expect his customer to secure the cost of production plus a profit equal to the interest charge on the loan. When the price of farm products is so low that the banker believes that the farmer cannot get sufficient for his products to repay the bank loan with interest, he does not make the loan. If the banks are to be able to use that $35,000,000 as a basis for issuing credit in Canada under our present system, we must do something to increase commodity prices. When commodity prices are increased to the point where the banks think that the producer can make a profit sufficient to pay the interest on the loan, the banks will again begin to loan to the producer. So the great problem facing us today is to raise commodity prices. I should like to quote a statement made by Sir William Beveridge, who is director of the London School of Economics. The statement is taken from The World's Economic Crisis and the Way of Escape, published in London last year. Speaking of prices, Sir William Beveridge says that there are three different movements of prices. I shall not refer to the first two because my time is limited:

> There may be, third, a general movement of prices initiated from the side of money. What we have in this crisis is a change of this third kind, a fall of prices representing deflation of money. That is what we are concerned with in the first instance.

I would direct the attention of the house to that statement of Sir William Beveridge, that what we have in this case is a fall in prices representing deflation of money. He says on the following page:

> The fall of prices with which we are concerned is initiated from the side of money. It is a deflationary fall of unexampled violence.

Sir William Beveridge is an able and noted economist, and is generally regarded, I think, as orthodox. He is authority for the statement that the fall of prices with which we are concerned today is initiated from the side of money, and that it is a deflationary fall of unexampled violence. Every economist that I have read for the last year agrees that the world today is suffering from a depression that has been caused by a deflation of prices, and there you have Sir William Beveridge's statement that the cause of the fall of prices was the deflation of money. If we are going to raise prices we must raise them through monetary action. If the fall in prices was caused by deflation, the way to raise prices is by inflation.

An hon. MEMBER: Bringing prices back to normal?

Mr. COOTE: Yes. It is sometimes called reflation. Our prices are fifty per cent below normal, and the people who are depending on the price of their commodities to meet their debts and living costs are simply unable to meet them and are drifting fast into bankruptcy.

I was very sorry that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) today was ruled out of order because I think it was a good amendment. It referred first to the question of debts, to which I have made a very brief reference. Then he went on to deal with the question of a wheat bonus. I should like to say a few words on that matter.

First of all, why should there be a wheat bonus? Because wheat is the most important item in our whole national economy. It is our greatest item of export. It furnishes employment for more of our people than any other commodity. Next to minerals it furnishes the greatest amount of traffic and traffic earnings for our railways. We had a bonus on wheat last year. There must have been very good reasons for that, and the reasons that existed then are still in force today. As a matter of fact, there is more reason for the wheat bonus today than there was a year ago. One of our chief competitors is Australia. Last year the Australian farmer got a bonus of nine cents a bushel as compared with five cents a bushel in Canada. Australia has already set aside one and a quarter million pounds to bonus her farmers this year but this government is doing nothing to provide a bonus. I want to assure the house that our farmers are badly in need of the bonus. I have a telegram here which I received from some people in my constituency a short time ago. It says:

> Large meeting of your constituents held at Blackie on Monday night strongly urge that price of grain and general conditions of the farmer necessitate this year a bonus on grain production by the Dominion government.

I should like to give hon. members some idea of the position in which many of our wheat growers find themselves. Any farmer who is able to produce No. 1 wheat can get today about 26 cents a bushel, a price which is much less than the cost of production. However all our wheat does not grade No. 1. I have before me a clipping from a Calgary newspaper which was sent to me recently. It is sent from Cardston, Alberta, and is dated October 25:

> A. W. Zeigler of Cardston, Friday took settlement for his good crop of fall wheat, which averaged 33 bushels to the acre over the whole field.
> Wheat in Cardston was selling at 28½ cents a bushel locally. The elevator people deducted 6 cents a bushel because it was fall wheat. Then they said it was smutty so took off another 6 cents a bushel. They then decided it was tough, and so extracted another 6 cents from the selling price.
> It had already cost Mr. Zeigler 7 cents a bushel for twine and threshing, and it took 3 cents a bushel for hauling to the elevator. This amounted to 28 cents a bushel, leaving Mr. Zeigler exactly ½ cent a bushel to cover his year's work, his seed, ploughing, drilling, cultivating, and a long summer's anxiety about hail, drought and grasshoppers, with deductions for the herd of collectors who saw the field of wheat grow into maturity.

I would not like hon. members to think that all farmers in Alberta are receiving only one-half cent per bushel for their wheat. But even those who received 27 cents at the elevator, after paying for threshing and hauling, twine, stooking, groceries for feeding the stookers, and binder repairs, would have practically nothing left.

I have dealt with the question of wheat; may I for a few moments turn to another of the farmer's problems. I have before me a report of the Dominion live stock branch containing prices at Calgary for live stock which mixed farmers are now selling. In every case I have deducted 50 cents from the price quoted, because it costs 50 cents for freight and other charges to Calgary. These are the prices per hundredweight:

|---|---|
| Choice steers | $2 25 to $2 50 |
| Common steers | 1 00 to 1 50 |
| Cows | 0 65 to 1 50 |
| Select hogs | 3 00 |
| Bacon hogs | 2 50 |
| Butcher hogs | 2 00 |
| Lambs | 3 00 to 3 50 |

I do not need to argue with any man acquainted with farming as to the necessity of raising farm prices. Next we come to the question of how to raise them. As the prices of grain, cattle, hogs and I think poultry, are all on an export basis, the way to raise them is to allow our currency to depreciate in outside countries as was done by Australia. This creates a premium on foreign exchange, and as the exportable surplus of these products is sold for foreign exchange the prices will be raised in terms of Canadian currency. If the price of our exports is raised this will raise the price of that part consumed at home, because, unfortunately, the surplus exported fixes the price of practically all farm produce. Today the British pound is worth only about $3.78 in Canada, when it should be worth at least $4.87. We are losing $20 on every steer exported; $2.80 on a bacon hog; 7 cents a pound on turkeys; 7½ cents a dozen on eggs and 19 cents a bushel on wheat. These figures are taken from the evidence given by exporters to a correspondent of the Country Guide. I do not think Canadian farmers will be getting a square deal even when the pound is worth $4.87 in Canada. The British pound is worth about $6.10 in Australia. I learn that definite action to raise the exchange rate is to be taken by New Zealand, so that the British pound may be worth as much in New Zealand as it is in Australia.

I put this question to hon. members in the house, and particularly hon. members opposite: How are our farmers going to ship butter to England to compete with New Zealand? Absolutely impossible. The countries with which we compete have a great exchange advantage over us. Australia, New Zealand, the Argentine, Denmark, Sweden and Norway enjoy this advantage. Compared with us they have depreciated their currency from 25 to 50 per cent. They can undersell us right in our own market. The depreciation, or, in other words, the premium they get on exchange would pay duty two or three times over. There are many hon. members in the house, and some people throughout the country who still hold to the theory that the rise in retail prices which would result if our currency were depreciated would completely offset the advantage we would receive by an increase in price brought about by a premium on exchange, or in other words by a depreciation in our currency.

We now have in the case of Australia an illustration of the effects of depreciated currency on internal price levels. Australia has been off the gold standard and has had a depreciated currency for approximately two years. During that time the depreciation of her currency compared with Canada has ranged from ten to fifty per cent. Figures recently obtained from the bureau of statistics at Ottawa, giving index numbers of different price levels, living costs and purchasing power of agricultural products in both these countries, show the following results, using the figure 100 to represent the pre-war price levels in every instance. The statement from the bureau shows averages of general wholesale prices as follows—I shall give the figures first for Australia and then for Canada for each of the years mentioned.

| | Australia | Canada |
|---|---|---|
| Average 1930.. .. .. | 146·7 | 135·3 |
| Average 1931.. .. .. | 131·3 | 112·6 |
| March, 1932.. .. .. | 132·2 | 107·9 |
| July, 1932.. .. .. .. | 128·4 | 104·0 |

Then we have the index figures for agricultural products:

| | Australia | Canada |
|---|---|---|
| Average 1930.. .. .. | 135·3 | 131·5 |

There was not much difference that year.

| | Australia | Canada |
|---|---|---|
| Average 1931.. .. .. | 102·2 | 90·0 |
| March, 1932.. .. .. | 113·5 | 82·2 |
| July, 1932.. .. .. .. | 114·1 | 76·7 |

Hon. members will readily note the tremendous advantage Australian farmers have over us—38 points in agricultural products. Then we come to the figures in regard to the cost of living:

| | | Australia | Canada |
|---|---|---|---|
| Average | 1930.. .. .. | 141·3 | 152·0 |
| " | 1931.. .. .. | 126·7 | 137·1 |
| March, | 1932.. .. .. | 122·8 | 128·4 |

The cost of living in Canada in March last was six points above the cost of living in Australia, although the price of farm products in Australia was very much higher. Then, the bureau of statistics have prepared the figures to show the purchasing power of farm products in terms of living costs. Using March 1930 as 100, we find the figures as follows:

| | | Australia | Canada |
|---|---|---|---|
| Average | 1930.. .. .. | 99·6 | 92·2 |
| " | 1931.. .. .. | 83·8 | 69·9 |
| March, | 1932.. .. .. | 96·1 | 68·6 |

The bureau of statistics does not give the index figures to show the purchasing power of farm products in Canada for recent months, but their index figures for September show a drop of five points in the price of farm products since March 1932, while cost of living has dropped only two points. This, of course, shows a further decline in the purchasing power of farm products.

The figures shown in this statement are very significant. They show that the prices of farm products have been much higher in Australia than in Canada; that whereas in Australia in the last two years farm products have dropped 21 points they have dropped 55 points in Canada and that in spite of the big drop in the price of farm products in Canada the cost of living, or retail prices in Canada, stood six points above the cost of living in Australia. The purchasing power of farm products in Australia was 28 points higher than in Canada. In other words the purchasing power of agricultural products in Australia in March last was 42 per cent more than the purchasing power of agricultural products in Canada. Does not that show a distinct advantage to the Australian farmer, not only in purchasing power but in debt paying power; of 50 to 100 per cent more than in Canada, yes, I would say in some cases 150 per cent more? This table also shows that whereas in the price of farm products in Canada there was a drop of 14 points from the average of 1931 to July 1932, during the same period there was a rise of 12 points in the price of farm products in Australia. These figures, which I have obtained from the bureau of statistics within the last week, certainly disprove the contention that the apparent advantage which would come to Canadian farmers in cheaper currency would be offset by a rise in the prices of the things he would have to purchase.

Action such as I have suggested, that is depreciation of our currency to the level, I would suggest, of Australia, or whatever depreciation we may have, will put more money in circulation, which in turn will increase the purchasing power of the people, which will increase employment, increase trade, and as a result will increase the revenue of this government, increase railway earnings and decrease unemployment relief budgets for all our governments. I think it would enable our governments to balance their budgets. I notice in the New York Times recently that even Argentina has a balanced budget. There is a dispatch in the New York Times of October 15 from Buenos Aires saying that finance minister Hueyo announced that he would have a balanced budget ready for submission to congress this week. While we are struggling along here with high prices, "sound money", a country like Argentina with a smaller population and less natural wealth is able to balance its budget while we are faced with a deficit of probably $100,000,000 to $120,000,000. The measures which I suggest would, if adopted now before our situation becomes too desperate, save thousands of our farmers and others in Canada from bankruptcy. It would save many of our municipalities from default and would make many mortgages and bank loans and municipal debentures, which are now of very uncertain value, worth their face value.

This is a matter of interest to the whole nation. Any plans which this government may make for the employment of our people must necessitate some change in our monetary policy. I suggest to the government that when the interprovincial conference takes place, very concrete plans should be outlined for the employment of our people. I suggest that they gather the best practical men who can be found in Canada, together with some of our economists, and charge them with the duty of bringing before the government plans for the employment of our people. Unemployed people create no wealth. We have in Canada an abundance of material and natural resources, and we have people ready to work; it is simply a question of using our own credit, our own money, currency which is now printed and lying in the federal vaults, to put these people to work and produce real wealth. Let them at least produce something to provide for their own needs.

[Mr. Coote.]

I just mention in passing the proposal which I made a year ago, that we should undertake a housing scheme, tearing down the slums in some of our big cities and building modern apartment houses. There is nothing impossible about dealing with this question of unemployment; it is just that we lack nerve to tackle it. The hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson), I am sure, knows many lumbermen who have lumber to sell and who would be glad to sell it very cheaply; and there are many people in Canada who need houses, there are many carpenters who would be glad to do the work. Let us bring the men and the material together and build these houses.

May I make one other suggestion, with special relation to my own constituency. There is a great deal of unemployment in the coal districts. I do not think that employment can be given these people at this time of year, but I suggest that the government be a little more liberal in dealing with municipalities and provinces, at least in western Canada, and as far as I am concerned in eastern Canada also, so that they may take care of these people. This correspondent of mine says that there are quite a few working on provincial relief, road work, at 30 cents an hour. The married men get ten days per month at $2.40 a day; single men get five days.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. COOTE: I should like, if I may be allowed, to complete this statement. Some men with big families get an extra day in. Then he says the union and the town council are appointing a committee to canvass the town for money for the needy. The union men working at the mine pay five per cent from their wages, but working only two days in two weeks it does not amount to much. I would urge upon the government that they deal more liberally with some of these municipalities in the west that are finding it very difficult to handle the problem on the present basis of relief.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I should not have found it necessary to speak this evening if the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) had acceded to the request of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and announced a definite policy regarding the subject now under discussion. In the Unemployment and Farm Relief bill introduced last session by the Prime Minister there is nothing definite as to what the policy of the government then was in the matter of farm relief. As he was presenting the bill I asked him if it was the intention of the government to continue the five cents per bushel bonus on wheat, or if they had changed their mind and were now going to adopt an acreage basis. His reply was to the effect that they had not yet decided what the policy should be, but were taking power under the bill to do all things necessary regarding farm relief if an emergency should arise. It has been suggested to the government time and time again during this session that some pronouncement be made by them as to their relief policy. So far all we have been able to get from the Prime Minister is that he was spending money for the stabilization of the wheat market rather than paying the five cents per bushel bonus. He pointed out that it cost some $11,000,000 last year to pay the five cent bonus, and he thought that by taking that amount and stabilizing the market by the purchase of futures he would help the wheat grower more than he would by paying the bonus. There is one thing that puzzles those of us who are deeply interested in the wheat industry, and there are several on this side of the house, and some on the other side who are themselves in the industry. It is rather strange that at the very time that this government was supposed to be stabilizing the market, we find on more than one occasion that the Chicago market was higher than the Winnipeg market; and the Prime Minister said that had it not been for the intervention of the government in stabilizing the market, wheat would have gone below 40 cents per bushel. We have asked him on several occasions to tell the house and the country just how far the government has gone in this stabilizing, but we have been unable to get anything from him.

A good deal has been said to-night about the condition of western agriculture, but there is one particular condition that prevails to-day, especially in Saskatchewan, which has never been known to prevail before. In the old Northwest Territories we had an act that permitted the seizure of farm produce for taxes. That act has never been invoked during the twenty-seven years I have been privileged to live in that province, and I have been living on a farm throughout that entire period. The custom had always been, until this year, that when a farmer was one year delinquent in his taxes they sold a tax receipt. That is to say, they sold the land for the value of arrears of taxes and then the farmer had two years in which to redeem his land; but because of the inability of individuals or corporations to buy tax receipts, the municipalities themselves found that they were the only purchasers of such receipts, and it came to the point where many municipalities were unable to carry on in this manner. They have this year had recourse to the old Northwest Territories Act and have created out of every secretary treasurer of a rural municipality a bailiff, and that official has been collecting taxes by seizing farm produce. For the first time in the twenty-seven years I have lived in Saskatchewan we have witnessed such a procedure. That proves conclusively to those of us who are interested in the land that the land to-day has no value, simply because the produce of the land is itself without value.

I should like very briefly to outline the position of the individual who happens to live in that portion of western Canada and who had a crop this year, and to see where his money goes after he has got his crop. The first persons who have a claim on that crop are the Saskatchewan relief commission, provided that the farmer has received some relief from the commission. That comes before anything else, mortgage, interest or anything else. Following that come taxes, and the produce of the farm can be seized for taxes. After that come merchants, grocers, food mortgage. Now you have those three, and they come before even wages. What position does the farmer find himself in? The average bushelage for that portion of northern Saskatchewan that grew a crop this year was 16 bushels. I should say that the average price received by the grower was less than 30 cents—between 25 and 30 cents. To-day they are not receiving 25 cents in many parts of the west. Where there is a 26 cents freight rate per hundred pounds they are getting somewhere around 21½ or 22 cents, and where there is a 24 cent rate, which is the rate in the division I live in, we are getting about 24 cents to-day.

Now, naturally the farmer who has not the equipment to thresh or to combine his crop must depend on someone else. When that someone else is approached and asked either to thresh the crop or to take it off with a combine, he naturally looks the crop over and estimates the bushelage. He may find that, after the relief commission have had their pound of flesh and the municipality has taken its taxes, and the merchant what is coming to him, there is not enough left to pay labour, and the result is that many farmers will conclude it is not worth while even taking off the crop. That is what has happened. Then the relief commission stepped in through the provincial government and announced that the first hundred dollars' worth of crop that was taken off would be exempt from all seizure. There are a great many of these farmers to-day who are farming on land which they rent from the mortgage company and they deliver to the mortgage company one third of the crop, so that it is utterly impossible for these people to carry on in that part of Canada. That is why we have been impressing on this government the necessity for some definite policy, some statement as to how the government proposes to relieve agriculture, because the mental strain which is evident to-day throughout that western country is simply appalling. I think it is the duty of every member of this house to urge upon the government the absolute necessity for action, if for no other reason than to relieve the mental strain which these pioneers in western Canada are undergoing.

Let me draw a picture for you, Mr. Speaker. I said I lived in western Saskatchewan for twenty-seven years. I went there as a youth and at that time it was a wilderness, the nearest railway station being some 110 miles distant, and I have seen that country grow out of a wilderness. I have seen them build highways, railways, telegraphs, telephones, schools, towns, villages and hamlets. I have seen millions, yes billions of wealth roll out of that country in live stock and in all sorts of cereals, and in some manufactured goods; and the tragedy of the whole thing is that after twenty-seven years of effort not only on the part of the farmer himself but on the part of his wife and his family as well, he finds himself today with very little if any equity in the land which he wrested from the wilderness.

For these reasons I think this government tonight should give some ray of hope by a pronouncement of definite policy as to how they propose to relieve these people. I do not intend to read extracts from papers or letters. There is no member in this house who could not produce all manner of clippings from papers to support the argument I am putting forward. Hon. gentlemen could give all sorts of statistics from various sources. I could read letter after letter setting forth the very conditions I have depicted in the last few minutes. What I am concerned about is whether the government will take action and make some announcement which will give some ray of hope to these people.

I have been amazed that hon. gentlemen sitting behind the government, members from these western provinces, should apparently be so little interested in this matter. I listened to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy), delivering or reading an address some two or three weeks ago, but he had nothing concrete to put before the house. There was nothing in what he said that offered any solution of the problem. We have been waiting patiently to hear from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). He knows the conditions in western Canada; he knows what the western agriculturist has to face. And the Prime Minister knows it just as well as any of us, for he has lived in that country for thirty-five years; I have heard him say so himself. There are many out there tonight who do not know where the next hundred pounds of coal is coming from. The other day I received a letter from my wife telling me of a neighbour who had taken fifty bushels of barley to the village of Superb with which to buy some coal. That barley netted him exactly one dollar, and I ask the house to consider how much coal could be bought for a dollar. In many parts of that country it is now twenty below zero; there are two feet of snow on the ground, and many of these people do not know how they are going to live through this winter. In spite of the Prime Minister's statement that we have threshed this matter over on previous occasions, nothing has been done. The reason why we do what we are doing tonight is to impress upon this government if at all possible the absolute necessity of definite action being taken immediately. And it should not be done surreptitiously, but should be announced so that these people may at least see a little ray of hope.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, one almost feels like apologizing for saying again what has been said so many times in this house, but when one thinks of the condition of agriculture and the suffering of the people he welcomes an opportunity to say again and again those things which he knows to be so true. We know that the two great problems facing Canada today are the problems of unemployment and agricultural relief, and I believe there is a connection between these problems. If we can solve the problem of agriculture, if we could get agriculture into a healthy and thriving condition, it would in part solve the problem of unemployment.

May I be permitted once more to state the agricultural problem? It is this: there are three levels affecting the farmer. The first and lowest level is the level of his commodity prices. Above that is the level of the prices of the things which he must have, the things he needs in his daily life. There is a great disparity between these two. The farmer getting what he is getting at the moment for his commodities cannot buy any substantial amount of the things which are on the market and clamouring to be consumed. Above these two levels is the still higher level of debts. The farmer is required to meet his obligations and to consume goods, and if he cannot do these things, disaster faces the whole nation. As things are at the moment he simply cannot, and I think, we will have to keep repeating this fact over and over again. The farmer today cannot pay the interest upon his debts, and he cannot pay for the services and goods which he requires. It is impossible. It is certainly quite obvious that something must be done about it. Either the debt level must be scaled down closer to the commodity price level, or the commodity price level must be brought up nearer to the debt level; and also the disparity which exists today between the prices the farmer gets for the commodities he sells and the prices he has to pay for the goods which he needs must be lessened.

You can hardly take up any publication which comes into an agricultural community without finding these ideas emphasized. Just the other day the United Farmers of Ontario issued a manifesto dealing with agricultural conditions. This manifesto was sent to the clubs, the united farmers' organizations in Ontario, the municipal council and all agricultural bodies. The first paragraph reads as follows:

Ontario agriculture faces a crisis. The result of several generations of intelligent, self-sacrificing and unremitting toil is disappearing with ominous rapidity. Progressively exploited for some time past through the artificial stimulation of modern industrialism, it now faces the danger of rapid decay and general bankruptcy. Ordinarily the farmer faces a business depression, as he does other difficulties, with courage and confidence. But the situation is different today. The extent, duration and severity of the present economic breakdown have brought about a condition of hopelessness which is both a threat and a challenge to every citizen. The farmer's savings are being exhausted, and his capital is being depleted, at such a rate that the end is in sight. Municipal institutions cannot be maintained much longer on the present basis. Rural civilization is crumbling.

I should like to quote from the next paragraph as follows:

The collapse of prices destroyed the farmer's purchasing power. The inevitable result was a steady decline in merchants' sales, a falling off of wholesalers' orders, a curtailment of manufacturing output and a marked reduction in railway tonnage.

The manifesto then goes on to say that all along the line unemployment has been created. Very much the same thing is said in the Country Guide. If Mr. Speaker will permit me I should like to read portions of an editorial which appeared in the November issue. The editorial starts off by saying that wheat prices have not been so low in fifty years, and goes on to say that other prices are also much lower. It states that with tax arrears, interest arrears and debts steadily mounting, the agricultural industry is in an extremely bad way. It then continues:

Not only is Canada's major industry facing ruin, but the lack of farm purchasing power is the direct cause of business stagnation throughout the country with a rising tide of unemployment and huge deficits being faced by municipalities, provincial governments and even by the federal government. This process of liquidation is continuing at an alarming rate with no relief in sight. It is no exaggeration to say that we are heading towards a national disaster in the midst of a world-wide disaster.

Before I came in to the chamber the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) had given the declines which had occured in the annual revenue of agriculture from 1928-29 to 1930-31, but these figures will bear repeating. The loss during these three years amounted to $925,-779,000. That being true one does not need to read any manifestos issued by any agricultural body or editorials written by agricultural editors to realize that such a loss in the purchasing power of the agricultural people will cripple the whole commercial community of Canada.

If we are desirous of raising the commodity price level to a point closer to the level of the prices the farmer must pay for the things he needs and to the debt level, we must find some way of doing it. I think many of us have come to the conclusion that one of the great reasons for this disparity is Canada's remaining on the gold standard while her chief customer and her chief competitor in agricultural products have long since dropped the gold standard and inflated their currency. I sometimes wonder just how long we are going to go on bleeding the agricultural and other primary industries of Canada. I quote again from the editorial in the Country Guide, which covers almost a whole page, as follows:

If the Canadian government were to abandon the gold standard temporarily and bring our currency to the basis of the British currency, the agricultural industry of Canada would receive a stimulus beyond what could be brought about by any other method now in sight. Practically all of our important competitors in agricultural products throughout the world, except the United States have gone off the gold standard.

Then again:

Our agricultural industry would benefit decidedly and immediately if our currency were placed upon a parity with the British pound. It would help at once to reestablish the price level between agricultural products and other commodities in Canada and would bring immediate relief to the agricultural industry which would be felt throughout the whole commercial life of Canada.

When we in this corner of the house first started to advocate inflation, the rest of the members were certainly not impressed and thought it was very wild talk. One who has been here now for some years cannot help realizing that the house is gradually and possibly quite rapidly coming to see that inflation of our currency, the putting of more money into circulation, bringing the amount of money in circulation into relation to the goods in circulation and not out of relation as it is at the moment, is a sensible thing to do. May I presume to say that it is the thing that will be done and I would not be surprised to see this government do it. Two years ago I would have said that was impossible; a year ago I would have said it was impossible, but I do not say that now. It is possible that this government will do the very thing that we have for some time been advocating.

Mr. COOTE: The hon. member has a great deal of faith.

Miss MACPHAIL: Of course, when they do it, it will be the "sound" thing to do, but I am not going to worry about that so long as they get it done. I have seen them on several occasions make a right about face, being right each time. When we face a budget deficit this year of $100,000,000 or $120,000,000 or $125,000,000; when we have, with additional taxation, diminishing revenue for another year and municipalities default and possibly even provincial governments start defaulting, even this government will be very glad to do anything that will increase revenue and get us out of the difficulties in which we are at present.

The effects of inflation are canvassed very carefully in a pamphlet which came out recently. It is compiled by Pitfield, Mathewson and Company, brokers of Montreal, and gives both sides of the question. In their introduction they quote from the concluding paragraph of the League of Nations report on "Courses and Phases of the World Economic Depression" as follows:

> But once any country has abandoned the monetary standard which links it to the majority of the community of nations it can for a time at any rate—and subject to ultimate and strict limitations—enter upon a credit policy which may do much to mitigate the immediate severity of the depression in so far as it is itself concerned and in so doing act independently of its neighbours.

[Miss Macphail.]

So the house will see that we do not have to wait for the world economic conference. That is a relief, is it not? In concluding how in their opinion inflation would affect agriculture, they say this:

> Agriculture
> The broadest advantage of a depreciated currency in Canada would accrue to industry through the enhanced buying power of the Canadian farmer. A 450,000,000 bushel wheat crop at forty-five cents a bushel, today is worth $202,500,000; if our funds were at par with the United States, it would be worth only $183,295,000, while if our dollar were quoted at a par with sterling, the crop would be valued at $274,942,500, a maximum spread of over $90,000,000, to the benefit of the Canadian farmer which would provide additional purchasing power. Similar striking comparisons can be drawn for a host of other agricultural products, and it is not hard to visualize the stimulating effect such added income would have on general business throughout the country.

When one finds a firm of brokers in Montreal sending out literature reading like that, one would infer that they have been converted to the idea of inflation, although they carefully say that they are not—that they are just canvassing the idea on both sides.

There is no doubt that the depreciation of the Canadian dollar would raise the internal price level; there is no doubt also that it would relieve the government of at least a great part of the burden of unemployment. As a Saskatchewan correspondent of mine said:

> If as producers we could get prices for our stuff, very few of us would need relief.

That is true, speaking for the producers; and it is also true that if the producers could spend these many more millions of dollars in buying the things they need, industrial workers would also be drawn into employment. In the Montreal Witness and Canadian Homestead, which I received I think yesterday, I read a sentence that arrested my attention. In an article referring to inflation this paper says:

> Inflation taxes the capitalist and spreads wealth. That is why the capitalistic press are so horrified at the very idea.

I think that is true. I do not think so merely because I read it in the Canadian Homestead; I thought so before and this confirms my opinion.

May I now give the house the twelve reasons which this firm of brokers gave in favour of inflation? They are twelve very interesting reasons. They say:

1. It would automatically increase the internal price level of all exportable commodities.

2. This would place Canadian manufacturers in a better position to compete in world markets, and would help towards the retention of those markets which they may otherwise readily lose.

In our case they might just as well have said: Those we have lost. Our dear money has lost us nearly every cheap money market in the world.

3. A rise in export commodity prices should find reflection in some increase in internal business, and thus assist in the paying down of debts.

4. Any increase in the volume of business would relieve unemployment, which in turn would relieve the Dominion, provincial and municipal governments from unemployment relief payments.

5. Any recovery in the dollar volume of business would bring about additional tax collections, thus assisting in the balancing of government budgets.

6. It would strengthen the position of our banks—

We may get it on that account.

—by increasing deposits and of our insurance and loan companies by the paying down of overdue mortgage interest.

7. Such inflation would act as a stimulus to the security markets, and if Canadian internal high grade bonds were to sell on a four per cent basis, this would substantially increase values of securities and strengthen the reserves of our financial institutions.

8. Certain industries, such as the newsprint industry, which sells a large part of its output in the United States, a gold standard country, would stand to benefit materially.

9. It would increase the premium receivable on gold production and thus stimulate this industry which, in turn, through the purchase of additional equipment, etc., would help the iron and steel and many other industries.

10. Any improvement in the volume of business would be reflected in the traffic of our railroads, which are themselves another serious factor in the Canadian situation.

11. The salutary effect in the Canadian west of an upward move in commodities would be of prime importance. It is impossible to procure full statistics on the western situation, but we understand that in Saskatchewan, for instance, over 46 per cent of all mortgages are at least one year in default of interest. It is estimated that an increase of 15 per cent in the price level of wheat alone would net the western farmer from thirty to forty million dollars additional this year, and this extra return would permit the paying down of mortgage and trade debts, as well as improving tax returns.

12. It would provide added tariff protection to Canadian industry and prevent the dumping of goods by countries with depreciated currencies.

That is a very imposing list. It may impress even the hon. member for Weyburn.

Mr. YOUNG: Not a bit.

Miss MACPHAIL: While it is true that all countries in the last few years have lost trade, countries on the gold standard have lost most heavily. If you compare the loss in total trade for the first half of 1929 with the first half of 1932, you will find that the United States lost 68·2 per cent of her trade, Great Britain only 47·9 per cent and Canada 61·4 per cent. These figures were given by Henry Somerville writing from London. I read them in the Toronto Daily Star a week or more ago, possibly two weeks ago. In the same article he gave a comparison of exports between the first half of 1931 and the corresponding period of 1932, and showed that the exports of the United Kingdom had decreased by £12,000,000, the United States by £97,000,000, Canada by £15,000,000, and that Australia's exports had increased by £3,800,000. I think those figures are convincing. At least they are to me, and would be even if I were not already convinced on this subject. Mr. Somerville says:

With trade figures like these before them the British authorities have no inducement to strain themselves to keep sterling anywhere near the old relationship to gold.

He says it is a puzzle to him why countries which keep up a high value for their currency make such sacrifices to do so, but he thinks perhaps they are waiting for the world economic conference when they will come down from their uncomfortable but exalted perch. I think that shows that Mr. Somerville has a sense of humour. I do not want to talk another moment on inflation except to say that I think it is a thing that ought to be done. We should depreciate our currency to the level and below the level of the pound sterling, bringing it close to that of the currency of Australia and the Argentine, and at the same time increase the amount of money in circulation in Canada. We should not do it by running around to the banks with $35,000,000 and giving the banks $700,000 for the privilege of issuing their premises. I see no reason why our own Dominion government through the treasury board cannot issue the money direct and without interest.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It was a most extraordinary transaction.

Miss MACPHAIL: It was, and will be a very profitable one for the banks.

May I say to the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) that I appreciate his sincerity and sympathize with his earnestness in seeking to place on the land people who are destitute. I wish for his sake as well as for theirs that the scheme would prove successful, but I think it cannot succeed. It is not possible to put people on the land who have been off the land for some time, and for the most part putting them on poor land, with equipment not comparable to that of their neighbours, and expect them to succeed where those much better equipped in knowledge and otherwise have failed. I do not think it is possible. I was up at North Bay two or three weeks ago and the people in the township that runs right up to the city of North Bay told me the very same story that was told to this house to-night by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), of families brought there from southern Ontario in the spring, without any consultation with the municipality, people who were not in any way able to take care of themselves through the winter, and who only meant an added burden upon that municipality. I really think that that movement cannot succeed.

May I add this? I was astonished to hear the Minister of Immigration deplore "the hiving," as he called it, of people in the industrial centres. I had always thought that that was the very object of the smokestack policy that we have had in Canada for almost seventy years. We have done everything possible to drive people off the land and into the cities, so do not let us complain now if the thing has been successful. It is astonishing to hear anybody who during all these years has been advocating the pampering—I cannot think of a better word—of secondary industries express pity that people are now hiving in the industrial centres. We have done very well to keep anybody on the land in view of all the effort made to lure them away.

There is one other thing that I want to suggest as a method of relieving the present situation, and that is the lifting of federal taxation off the backs of the masses and putting it quite firmly on the backs of the classes. I think that federal taxation should be applied pretty largely to incomes and inheritances. We all know that the difficulty of our age is the lack of distribution of goods. There are two groups in Canada and every other country which make the distribution of goods impossible. The one is the great mass of people, at the moment the unemployed and the underprivileged, whether on the land or in the cities, who wish to consume goods but have not the money to pay for the goods they could quite easily consume. The other class consist of those people who, by the pampering of industry and finance which we have had for so long a time, have amassed more money than they can conveniently use. So we have these two classes, one with a capacity to buy but unable to consume sufficient to take the goods off the market, and the other with the capacity to consume but not the purchasing power. If we lifted the burden of federal taxation off the masses and put it on the people who have now too much money for our economic good, we would I think be helping very much to solve our present problems.

Then too, I think as time goes on, particularly if science and invention continue to make the strides in the next twenty-five years which they have made in the past, we must face the fact that hours of labour must be and will be lessened, while the purchasing power of the workers is sustained. One of the things that I deplore at the moment is that wages are being beaten down all over. Even people who do not need to lower wages are lowering them. The need of the people is being used as a club over their heads. In the long run that policy will hurt not only the people who are deprived of their purchasing power, but those who have the goods which they wish to sell. I think anybody who is thinking about the problem sees quite clearly that if we are ever going to absorb our unemployed again we must lessen the hours of labour. I think that is sound. Possibly we have not got to the place where we like to think it, but at any rate I think we are going to get to that place. If we are going to continue to give special privileges to financial and industrial groups in this country—I am speaking now particularly of industrial groups—if we are going to continue to tax all the people for the sake of certain industrial enterprises which claim to be necessary to the national life of this country, we must see to it that the benefits which they receive are passed on down both to the general consumer who buys the goods and to the worker in the factory who produces the goods. We must see that wages are sustained and working hours lessened. I see no justification for continuing to give privilege to secondary industries in this country when the mass of the people are in the distress they are in today. I think it will not be long before this house will come to the conclusion that if industries are going to be pampered and petted the benefits they receive must be passed on down by them. Markets may be saved for them, but they must pay for the saving of those markets in reduced prices and sustained wages.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The benefit of the machinery must be divided.

Miss MACPHAIL: As the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) has said, the benefit of machinery must be divided. That is the great tragedy of machinery. The machine which should be liberating people from toil is enslaving them, and, more than any other thing—that and money—is enslaving those tremendous numbers, those millions all over the world today, who despairing do not know where their meals are to come from nor where they are going to live.

There is one orthodox way of approaching this matter and that is the cooperative method. I should like to take just a minute or two to tell the house how very successful the British consumers' cooperative has been, even in these days of depression. Through the depression they have increased the number of people they employ, and sustained their wage scale. In 1931, in Great Britain alone, they employed 5,546 more people than they did in 1930. In 1931 they employed a total of 263,037 people. Not only that, but they had the best wage rates of any group of industries in Great Britain. One may ask: Why is it that the consumers cooperative can employ more people at better wages than any other industry? I think the answer is simple and clear, that the cooperative movement divides its surplus, its profits, among its members by participation dividends in accordance with the amount of business done. So they themselves sustain their own purchasing power. The money goes round and round, and instead of letting the purchasing power go back in great profits on one side with great poverty on the other, they sustain it. The amount of this increased purchasing power of the masses in Great Britain, because of the consumers' cooperative, was in one year £30,000,000. That amount is in participation dividends alone. It is becoming big business. The consumers' cooperatives in Great Britain have a capital of $1,628,147,385. Sometimes I think if only we had a little more time that this would be the happiest way of arriving at the new state of society towards which we are all striving. Therefore I think that the federal government of Canada should give every possible assistance to cooperative movements. I do not mean that the government should go out and organize or pamper them too much, because that is bad for them. But I have been very close to some cooperatives, from the points of view of both the consumer and the producer in Ontario and in Canada generally, and I know many times they failed through lack of expert advice at the proper moment. I do think that the Dominion government should, through the Department of Agriculture, begin at once to train experts in cost accounting, experts in processing, experts in sales management, and that those experts should be made available to the producers' cooperatives throughout the dominion. The economic branch of the Department of Agriculture could perhaps be used for this purpose.

There is one other point: I am very much concerned about a small producers' cooperative. Whether we are going to be able to save it or not is still doubtful. We have had to pay six and a half per cent interest for the money. When I heard that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company got their money for nothing, I thought the idea was an excellent one but did not see why it should be confined to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. When people want to help themselves, as did this group of 1,500 producers I am speaking about, they should be assisted by loans at low rates of interest and by expert help for a period of time.

An hon. MEMBER: Will the hon. member do the same for the manufacturers?

Miss MACPHAIL: We have always done the same for the manufacturers, if my information is correct. Not only have we loaned money which will never be repaid, but we have pampered them all the days of my life, at any rate.

Now, for the remainder of the time at my disposal—and it is not very long—I wish to discuss the problem of unemployment. I feel that what I have so far advocated in my remarks up to this point would help to absorb the unemployed. But at the moment we are faced with a terrific problem of unemployment in Canada. We have to try to do something about it. There are certain classes of unemployed which cause me more concern than others. One of these is youth. When I think that in the last generation a great many of the youth were killed or maimed beyond repair, and that this generation of youth in quite a different way are being injured beyond repair—

Mr. BOURASSA: Morally and physically.

Miss MACPHAIL: Yes. Unless the despair can be lifted from their hearts very shortly, many of them will never be the citizens they would otherwise have been. When you think that out of our schools and colleges there come about 100,000 a year, and that only a small percentage of them are finding real places in life, we come to realize the magnitude of this problem. These young people come out eager and more anxious then than at any other time to get into the adventure of life, and it is a very serious condition when they have not the opportunity to work.

We have heard lately a great deal about crime, criminals, penitentiaries, riots and that sort of thing. One of the difficulties is that we have overcrowding in our penitentiaries; there are many other things wrong. We have a penal system that is antiquated and that belongs to another age, not this one at all. But part of the trouble is due to overcrowding. The majority of people in our penitentiaries today are young people. The striving, eagerness and restlessness of youth will find an outlet, whether the policy of the government or the policy of the society in which we live will allow it a suitable outlet or not. They will find an outlet whether by quarrelling, thieving or whatever it may be. Anyone who has taught school knows you cannot have young, restless people doing nothing, and not have trouble result. It is unavoidable.

When I heard an hon. member deplore the fact that some young chap had held a gun under his nose, I concluded that such a condition was deplorable—especially if it was not the right nose. But on the other hand there is no use in blaming youth. There is no use in saying all we can do is to punish crime out of existence. That is nonsense; it cannot be done. While I believe there should be control and that there should be punishment as part of the process of reforming the individual, I believe also that punishment alone should not be resorted to. I know enough about youth to know that. Surely all of us who know young people know that the eagerness, the drive and the urge in youth will find an outlet, good or bad.

The second class that concerns me among the unemployed are the "young-old" I named them myself—the people around fifty who with their experience and training and matured knowledge of life should be at the height of their usefulness. In far too many cases the unemployed are people around fifty, a disastrous age at which to make people feel useless and discouraged. Many such start the car in the garage and are found dead; or they jump into the river or take whatever seems the best way out. At any rate they are despondent and despairing. I visited several shelters last winter, and it was one of the hardest things I have ever done, seeing people of all ages scurrying around to avoid saying a word to me, to avoid meeting me—I do not think it was just meeting me; I think it would have been the same with any hon. member who had gone there. They did not want to discuss their plight; they were ashamed, cowed, beaten. That is the worst possible thing that can happen to any group of citizens, and when it comes to the point that we must decide between the chances for youth, the morale of great groups of our citizens, of the young-old, and finance, then it does not take me a moment to decide; I decide for humanity and human happiness, let it take what toll it will of accumulated wealth.

[Miss Macphail.]

On motion of Mr. Ralston the debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR RECEIVING OF PETITIONS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I desire to move, seconded by Mr. Rhodes:

That the provisions of standing orders 92 and 93 with regard to time limits for receiving petitions for private bills be suspended, and the first day of the present session in relation thereto be deemed to be the 30th January, 1933, instead of the 6th October, 1932.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know whether it is the desire of the house that we should sit in the morning. Apparently it may not be possible to conclude the business this week, in view of the length of the discussions that have taken place. If it is the desire of the house that we should sit—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I move, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That when this house adjourns it stand adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning (Friday).

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I assume it is understood that the procedure with respect to supply will be the same tomorrow as it was on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. BENNETT: Clearly, in view of the consent given today, it must be treated as being a day in which the motion has to be made for the Speaker to leave the chair. That is what I apprehend the right hon. gentleman means, and we shall treat it accordingly. If we get into supply we will have to proceed with some items at least. There are two bills left; one will be the second reading of the redistribution bill, which should not take long; the other may take longer. If we get into supply we might pass the non-contentious items, get through the other two bills, and then conclude with supply. I do not know whether it is possible for the house to conclude tomorrow or not. It would seem probable that it is not, in view of the discussions that have taken and will take place; but we will do our best in that regard, and meeting at eleven o'clock may assist to that end.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not for me to make any suggestions to the Prime Minister—

Mr BENNETT: I should be glad to hear them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I imagine if we have the redistribution measure first, then the other bill, and then resume consideration of the motion for committee of supply, we would probably make more headway.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I gather, and I suggested that we should go into supply and pass some items first. In view of the present standing of the debate on the motion that the Speaker do now leave the chair, I assume he will determine that we should proceed with that before we go to the bills. If not I am perfectly content to move the redistribution bill first.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Start with the redistribution bill.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know whether we can or not, but if we can, we will.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.58 p.m.

Friday, November 25, 1932

The house met at eleven o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. GORDON: I desire to lay on the table of the house certains orders in council passed pursuant to the relief measures.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

STEAMSHIP CYMBELINE INVESTIGATION*

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has the investigation, ordered by the government in the matter of the ss. Cymbeline at the Vickers dry dock in Montreal, been terminated?

2. Has the government received the final report of the commissioner?

3. What has been the cost of said investigation?

4. How much was paid by the government to the commissioner and to the lawyers appointed by the government to represent the public before said commissioner?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have received verbal information to the effect that the investigation has been terminated, but as yet no report has been received by the department. However, it is expected that this will be forthcoming in a few days. The answers to the last two questions will be in the negative.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—MISS RUTH EDWARDS—MISS MARGUERITE GIRARD

Mr. GAGNON:

1. Was one Miss Ruth Edwards employed in the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa since 1920?

2. If so, how long did she work in Ottawa?

3. Has she been transferred to Montreal?

4. If so. for what reason?

5. Did the department try to send her to the maritime provinces before transferring her to Montreal?

6. Who recommended such a transfer to the Civil Service Commission?

7. What reasons were alleged for such a transfer?

8. Did the department consider, before making such a transfer, that the transfer of Miss Edwards was preventing promotion of other employees?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Yes: Miss Ruth Edward (not Edwards) was employed at Ottawa.

2. In the Department of Agriculture from November, 1918, to June, 1919, and continuously from October, 1919, to July, 1929.

3. Yes.

4. (a) There was need in Montreal for one seed analyst thoroughly proficient in the English language, the former English-speaking analyst having died, (b) Miss Edward's parental home is in Montreal, (c) The work at Ottawa had decreased because of the establishment of a laboratory in each of the maritime and Quebec inspection districts and the transfer to these laboratories of work formerly done at Ottawa.

5. No.

6. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture on the recommendation of the seed commissioner.

7. Answered by No. 4.

8. No. The established position occupied by Miss Edward in the Ottawa laboratory was also transferred to Montreal.

Mr. GAGNON:

1. Was one Miss Marguerite Girard employed in the Department of Agriculture, seed branch, Montreal, in the province of Quebec?
2. If so, since when?
3. In what capacity?
4. What salary did she receive?
5. Was she recommended to the Civil Service Commission by the Department of Agriculture in 1931 and 1932 to be employed in Montreal?
6. If so, who signed the recommendation for the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Yes.

2. Each seed testing season since January, 1926.

3. January 4, 1926, to May 15, 1926, temporary junior seed analyst; December 20, 1926-April 30, 1927, permanent-seasonal junior seed analyst; January 9, 1928-June 30, 1928, permanent seasonal junior seed analyst; December 17, 1928-April 30, 1929, permanent-seasonal junior seed analyst; January 7, 1930-July 6, 1930, temporary seed analyst; January 12, 1931-July 11, 1931, temporary seed analyst; March 1, 1932-May 31, 1932, temporary seed analyst and junior seed analyst.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE—SUPERIOR OFFICERS

Mr. LAVERGNE:

How many superior officers in the Canadian merchant marine are Canadian citizens or native Canadians, and how many were born in foreign countries or in Great Britain?

Mr. MANION: I have endeavoured to obtain these names but if the hon. member will be satisfied to allow this question to stand as an order for return I will bring down the return later on.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it well to state that in view of the representations which have been made during the last few days in connection with Bill No. 11, notably a request from the board of trade sent by way of a telegram received yesterday and asking that further consideration of this bill be deferred until January 30 in order that they may have an opportunity to make representations, we will leave this bill on the order paper until January 30. I have conferred with the commissioner of income tax who informs me that no public interest will in any sense be injured by reason of this bill standing until that date. I believe there is a misapprehension upon the part of the Toronto Board of Trade, but in view of the shortness of time we thought that no injury would be done if the bill stood until January 30.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 2, to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

He said: In moving the second reading of Bill No. 2, to readjust the representation in the House of Commons, I think it is necessary only to point out that the bill corresponds identically, except as to dates, with chapter 63 of the statutes of 1924. It is identical also with the bill introduced by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in 1923 when Prime Minister, except as to section 4 which has been amended to meet the changed conditions with respect to population. It might be pointed out that the practice of introducing this bill in this form commenced in 1903 when the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier brought in a bill which set forth the number of members to which the provinces would be entitled under redistribution, it being left to the house to determine the boundaries of the constituencies. This matter was very fully dealt with by the right hon. gentleman opposite when he introduced a bill in 1923, and I do not think any good purpose will be served by repeating the statements then made except to say that the practice commenced by Sir Wilfried Laurier in 1903 has been followed in subsequent redistribution measures. The old contest in the House of Commons over the boundaries of constituencies which represented the views of the government of the day, has not taken place since 1903. In this instance, it is proposed to proceed exactly as has been done since 1903.

It will be recalled that the British North America Act provided that at Confederation the number of members in the House of Commons would be 181—this is covered by section 37—and that the method by which increases were to be made as provided by the constitution is covered by section 51, which reads:

On the completion of the census in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

(1) Quebec shall have a fixed number of sixty-five members;

(2) There shall be assigned to each of the other provinces such a number of members as will bear the same proportion to the number of its population (ascertained at such census) as the number sixty-five bears to the number of the population of Quebec (so ascertained);

(3) In the computation of the number of members for a province a fractional part not exceeding one-half of the whole number requisite for entitling the province to a member shall be disregarded; but a fractional part exceeding one-half of that number shall be equivalent to the whole number;

(4) On any such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards;

(5) Such readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing parliament.

It will be observed that the unit of representation is ascertained by dividing sixty-five, the constant number of members from Quebec, into the population of that province. Inasmuch as the boundaries of the province of Quebec were extended in 1912, it was provided, in order that the other provinces might not feel that they had been unfairly dealt with, that the population into which sixty-five would be divided would be the population of old Quebec, that is, the population within the area of the provinces as it was at confederation. The effects of the present census are set forth in the notes to the bill. It might be well to indicate the populations of the provinces under the census of 1931, which were as follows:

| Prince Edward Island | 88,038 |
| Nova Scotia | 512,846 |
| New Brunswick | 408,219 |
| Ontario | 3,431,683 |
| Manitoba | 700,139 |
| Saskatchewan | 921,785 |
| Alberta | 731,605 |
| British Columbia | 694,263 |
| Quebec (without new Quebec) | 2,872,078 |

The population of new Quebec is given at 2,177. The total population into which sixty-five is to be divided is 2,872,078, and the result of that division is a quotient of 44,186, which constitutes the unit of representation. By dividing the population which I have indicated for the different provinces with this unit of representation, we have the representation to which each province is entitled.

However, there are two exceptions which must be borne in mind. The first is found in subsection four of section 51 of the British North America Act, to which I have just directed attention. This deals with the diminution in population and provides that where the change in population does not exceed one-twentieth, there shall be no change, but where it does exceed one-twentieth, it is competent to reduce the number of members.

The second exception is to be found in the provisions of the constitutional amendment of 1915. It will be recalled that after Prince Edward Island came into confederation, the number of senators from the three maritime provinces remained at twenty-four. Two senators were taken from New Brunswick and two from Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island was then given four senators, so that Nova Scotia had ten; New Brunswick, ten and Prince Edward Island, four. But it was provided in 1915, in consequence of the representations so strongly urged in the house at that time, that a change should be made by amending the constitution and, as a result of the amendment which was made it was provided that the representation in the House of Commons should never be less than that in the Senate. So Prince Edward Island, which would be entitled to only two members, is, by reason of the operation of that provision, entitled to four and the province of New Brunswick that would be entitled to only nine members, under the rule set forth in section 51 of the British North America Act, will be entitled to ten members because it has a representation of ten in the Senate. Therefore the application of the rule, with the exceptions to which I have just directed attention, would result in the following;

| Province— | Representation |
|---|---|
| Prince Edward Island | 4 |
| Nova Scotia | 12 |
| New Brunswick | 10 |
| Quebec | 65 |
| Ontario | 82 |
| Manitoba | 17 |
| Saskatchewan | 21 |
| Alberta | 17 |
| British Columbia | 16 |
| Yukon | 1 |

We have in the draft bill provided for one member for the Yukon, leaving its representation as it is. This makes a total of 245 members.

It will be further observed, from the notes that accompany the bill, that were it not for the application of the exception provided for in section 51, there would have been a loss of membership in Ontario, but inasmuch as the census indicates there has been no diminution that exceeds one-twentieth, the membership remains at eighty-two the figure we now have. The net result is that the representation of New Brunswick, as I said, will be ten instead of nine by reason of the provisions of the statute of 1915; that of Ontario will be eighty-two as it now is; that of British Columbia will be increased by two, from fourteen to sixteen; that of Alberta is increased by one, from sixteen to seventeen; that of Manitoba will be seventeen as it now is; that of Saskatchewan will be twenty-one as it now is; that of Prince Edward Island remains at four as it now is, by reason of the 1915 amendment referred to; that of Nova Scotia will be reduced from fourteen to twelve, the result being that we have a total of 245 members as the house is now constituted. I do not think it desirable to put on Hansard again the figures that have been so frequently placed there, but I wish merely to indicate the general principles that govern the redistribution and the result of the application of the rule and its exceptions.

When the bill has been read a second time, I propose to move that it be referred to a committee, the names of which I hope to indicate to the house before we adjourn, the motion being that the bill be referred to a committee to be set up, the names of which, as I say, I shall presently give, I hope possibly at three o'clock. It is thought a committee of twenty will be satisfactory, as according to the strength of the parties in the house the government would have eleven members, the official opposition seven, and the other groups two on that committee. That involves a fair and just application of the relative strength of the parties in the house to a committee of twenty.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to the effect that the government intends to follow with respect to the readjustment of representation in this house about to be effected procedure similar to that which has been followed in the last three distributions, is entirely satisfactory. My right hon. friend says that the present bill is, with one exception which he has mentioned, identical with that which was presented to the house by the previous administration at the time of the last redistribution. That, I believe, is also correct and the fact may I say, quite satisfactory as far as we are concerned. In following the same procedure I hope it will be understood —and I assume it is from what the Prime Minister has just said—that the select committee of the house to be appointed and to which this measure will be referred, will be guided in its action by the same principles as guided previous committees in preparing the redistribution map, if I may so describe its work. In a word, the principles that have guided other committees have been, in the first instance, to follow as largely as possible the county municipal organizations in defining and delimiting the constituencies. The county municipal organization is that which is followed in municipal affairs and with respect to the judiciary and it is familiar to the people of the country generally. I suggest that it should again be adopted as largely as possible with respect to the defining of boundaries under the redistribution that is now to be made.

The second guiding principle is that the unit of representation in urban centres would necessarily be larger than that in rural constituencies. The reason for that is obvious. If it were not so, with the country as sparsely settled as it is in some parts, the rural constituencies would be difficult to control for purposes of administration. But there is a further and more important reason, and that is that as far as the urban constituencies are concerned, they have a means of voicing public opinion which rural constituencies have not. I need not mention the various organizations which exist in the urban centres, the large number of bodies such as boards of trade and commercial, industrial and social organizations, all of which play a part in forming and expressing public opinion. But I would refer particularly to the effect of the press. The daily press of the country is for the most part, if not exclusively, to be found only in urban centres. The rural press is, generally speaking, weekly, semi-weekly or bi-monthly, and the press from the cities finds its way into the country districts to a very great extent, whereas the same cannot be said to be true of the press of the rural parts. As hon. members well know there is no other single factor that so largely goes to influence public opinion as the press. What is done in that way is reflected again by what is said here on the part of hon. members.

There is a further reason also, which I think will be apparent and which will appeal to hon. members. It not infrequently happens that rural constituencies are represented in the House of Commons by gentlemen who reside in cities and urban municipalities, but the reverse, except in very rare instances, is not the case. It seldom happens that an urban constituency is represented by someone who resides the year round in a rural constituency, but there are in the house at the present time and have been in all previous parliaments many hon. members who have represented rural constituencies but who are more familiar with the life of the cities and the large towns than with the life and needs of the rural communities. The principle of a larger unit for urban representation has been accepted practically ever since confederation by committees which have dealt with this matter, and I hope and asume full recognition of it will be given by the committee to which this bill will be referred.

There is an additional guiding principle, that, so far as reasonably can be arranged, there should be an effort at compactness in the shaping of constituencies. That permits of an expression of opinion from a community that is familiar with its own affairs, and in that way helps to give a more accurate representation of the views of the people.

Finally there is one other factor which I should mention, and that is that so far as it can be arranged there should be an equalization of the representation as between the different urban constituencies and as between the different rural constituencies; that is to say, as nearly as such can be worked out, having regard to the other guiding principles to which I have referred, there should be as between city constituencies a unit of representation approximating that in other cities, and as between rural constituencies there should also be as nearly as possible an equal unit of representation. Undoubtedly it would not be possible for a committee to work out any redistribution map with mathematical exactness. That cannot be expected. The most that can be expected is that the members of the committee will seek to be fair and just and to apply common sense in an effort to frame the redistribution map along the lines that I have indicated. The purpose of bringing together a number of members of the House of Commons around a common table to discuss with good intentions the framing of a redistribution that will be fair and equitable has been found to be an infinitely better method than the old one of having the government itself frame the map, in the first instance, and then bring it into this house for discussion. The report of the committee will of course be open to amendment, acceptance or rejection by the house, but it is to be hoped it will be so nearly a matter of general agreement, that none of these steps may be necessary.

May I point out that since this new method has been adopted of referring the question of delimiting the constituencies to a select committee of the house there has been unanimity on the part of the committee with respect to the measure that was subsequently recommended to the house. At all events agreement was arrived at. I think that was due to the fact that a real effort was made by the members of the redistribution committee to be as fair and just and use as much common sense as they could in framing the redistribution map. I believe that we shall be able to count on at least a like degree of agreement in any committee that may be appointed at this time.

May I add this further word? The Prime Minister has indicated that the committee is to be named forthwith. I assume that the proceedings of parliament will not continue much longer for the present, but it might be of advantage to those on the committee if its membership could be brought together before adjournment and the members themselves provided with what there may be available in the way of data, maps and the like, which later will have to be considered by the committee, and which if made available to the members at once would perhaps expedite the committee's work when it meets after the adjournment.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): As a Nova Scotian I was, of course, very much interested in the remarks of the Prime Minister, but I would like to call attention to what the effect of the rule referred to will be so far as my province is concerned. At confederation Nova Scotia had a representation of 18 members in this house, and that was subsequently increased to 21. Since then our representation has gradually been brought down until today it is 14. Under the proposal referred to by the Prime Minister, after the next redistribution Nova Scotia's representation will be cut down to 12. Compare the position of Nova Scotia in that respect with that of Prince Edward Island. When Prince Edward Island came into the union we unfortunately lost two senators as did also the province of New Brunswick. Subsequently the British North America Act was amended to give to the province of Prince Edward Island four senators and an equal number of members of parliament. The population of Prince Edward Island is practically one-sixth of that of the province of Nova Scotia, yet their representation in this house is one-third that of the province of Nova Scotia. I do not intend to discuss this matter at any further length because I assume that the whole matter will be fully discussed before the committee. I trust that the committee and the house generally will take a sympathetic attitude regarding the representation of the province of Nova Scotia, which I hold should not in view of the understanding under which we entered confederation fall below the present number of 14 members.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): May I call attention to the fact that we in the west, where there is any increase in population, have just as great a right to our proportion of the representatives that are due to us, and if we are going to begin to give fixed number of representatives to certain of the older provinces it is going to create a very serious situation across the west. There cannot be two or three different classes of Canadians in this country, with certain classes having superior rights to others. If a mistake was made in giving a fixed number of representatives to Prince Edward Island there is no reason why we should follow a bad precedent. The way to get away from that is to amend the British North America Act so that Prince Edward Island would have only its due number and not a number out of proportion to the rest of the country.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I agree with the last speaker (Mr. Woodsworth) that there should not be different classes of Canadians when it comes to representation in parliament. The right hon. the Prime Minister has accurately and fairly stated to the house what the legal position is with regard to the basis of representation in the house.

I wish to call attention to an anomaly which is being discussed at the present to a considerable extent in my own province. As the right hon. gentleman has said, the basis of representation is the unit as determined by dividing the population of the province of Quebec by 65. The representation of the other provinces is supposed to be based on that unit of population. I think every hon. member of this house by a simple computation will see that the changes which are effected by one subsection of section 51 of the British North America Act work most unfairly in respect of the representation of the province of Quebec. I take the figures in bulletin No. 20 of the census of 1931, which show the quotient of the province of Quebec, of the new Quebec so far as its representation is concerned, to be 44,186. If you apply this quotient to Ontario you will find that if Ontario is granted 82 members, as it will be, and I agree that until a change is made in the British North America Act it should be done in that way, the unit in Ontario will be 41,849 as compared with 44,186 in the province of Quebec. Surely my friends from Ontario are just as well qualified as we are in the province of Quebec to represent the same number of people. But they will not, under the new redistribution; they will represent only a unit of 41,849 people. The anomaly of that situation is more glaring under the present redistribution because this great difference did not occur in 1921. In 1921, if the exception under subsection 4 of section 51 had not been applied, under the quotient Ontario would have had 80·86 members which would mean, under the act, 81 members. But this year the quotient of Ontario is not even 78, but 77·66. Therefore I say it is certainly unfair. I have tried to find in the debates on confederation and elsewhere the reason for the exception in subsection 4 of section 51, but have been unable to do so. This subsection is as follows:

> On any such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

Why this provision? I cannot find why it appears; I should be pleased if some one could give me a reason. Perhaps it was inserted to help some of the smaller provinces, but when it works the way we see it will work this year, certainly it is an anomaly which works unfairly. I am sure hon. members from Ontario want only representation by population. Before confederation they fought for it, and that should be the principle governing that province. What amazes me is that this same principle is not working the other way. Why should not the representation decrease when its proportion of population with regard to the whole of Canada has not decreased by one-twentieth? Why should it increase if the number is increased by less than one-twentieth? As it is, any other province which would come under the same conditions keeps its representation, not on account of its own increase, but because of decreases in other parts of Canada,—and not of Quebec, which is taken as the pivot. If anybody can give me one sound reason for it, if anyone can tell me why Ontario should have only 41,000 as a unit of representation and we from Quebec should have 44,000, I am quite willing to listen, I cannot see how any reason could exist.

A suggestion was made that in order to equalize with Ontario, the number of representatives from Quebec should be increased. I do not think that would be a fair way of settling it. I believe the representation of Quebec should remain at 65, as fixed by the British North America Act, but that subsection 4 of section 51 should disappear. Then we would have a real representation by population. The right hon. gentleman opposite has stated that before parliament meets again at the end of January there will be an interprovincial conference. There are certain changes in our constitution, and with regard to taxation, which seem desirable. I submit the Prime Minister should place this matter before the premiers from the various provinces. If that were done I believe they would come to the conclusion that subsection 4, which certainly works unfairly, ought to be repealed.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): Mr. Speaker, I have observations to make on only two points in connection with this bill. First I should like to direct my remarks to the effect it will have on the province of Nova Scotia. I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) that it gives us a very great feeling of regret, and even of sadness, to see a progressive reduction in representation from our province. He has pointed out, and I shall supplement his remarks with figures, that since 1881 there has been, after each decennial census, a reduction in representation. In 1881 we had 21 members; in 1891, 20; in 1901, 18; in 1911, 16; in 1921, 14, and this bill provides for only 12.

I realize the fact, namely that it is in the bond, and that technically, according to the interpretation of the British North America Act, we must bow to the inevitable and, at least for the purposes of this bill, accept the reduction being made. I do feel however that we should not allow this occasion to pass without recording the position of Nova Scotia, and the idea which the fathers of confederation had in mind at the time they adopted a certain principle of representation. I shall take only a moment to remind the house that at the conference the Hon. George Brown when introducing the resolution with regard to representation, intimated that the practical result would be that "while lower Canada certainly will not be less, and the lower provinces may increase in population, they cannot decrease in the number of representatives." In contradistinction to that I point out to the house the fact that at every decennial census there has been a decrease. I point out, further, that the fathers of confederation had adequate representation in mind, and not only the principle of representation by population.

In support of that let me cite the instances of the provinces which came into confederation after 1867. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has been rather strong in his intimation that we must stick to the letter of the pact, and that the calculations must be made directly in accordance with the terms of the British North America Act. Let me remind him—and I do not do it in any spirit of criticism—that when Manitoba entered the confederation she had a representation amounting to less than the required unit for one member. Yet Manitoba was given a representation of four members. In 1881, I believe it was, a readjustment was made as had been provided in the act admitting Manitoba. At that time it was found that, under the strict arithmetical basis to which the hon. member has referred, Manitoba was entitled to only three members. The fact is however that when readjustment took place she was given five.

Let me remind the house further that when British Columbia entered confederation the strict principle was not applied. I need not be tender in my remarks because hon. members must realize that I am making these statements to the house simply to show that the arithmetical basis has not been the only principle upon which we have acted when fixing representations. When British Columbia entered confederation it had a total population of about 40,000 and was given representation of six members, and an irreducible minimum of six. Ten years after British Columbia entered she had only two units of representation, that is to say, her population entitled her to only two members. Ten years later, in 1891, she had a population which entitled her to only four members, if the unit of representation applicable to the maritime and other provinces which came into confederation originally, had been applied. Prince Edward Island had only five units of representation when she entered confederation, but was given six members. At the present time the representation of Prince Edward Island is four, the irreducible minimum. I just mention this to indicate to the house that it was not altogether arithmetic or mathematics that influenced those who were seeking to found and foster the Canadian idea of democratic institutions and representative government. So it is that Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island feel that they have made some contribution in men and women to the western provinces, the western provinces have had an increase not only in population but in territory as well, and we find ourselves today with the representation shifting to the west away from the provinces which originally entered confederation. I remind my friends that Nova Scotia was the cradle of representative institutions in British North America, and you cannot blame us for a feeling of regret and sadness that our representation is being reduced.

Let me close with this word taken from the case which was presented to the maritime commission three or four years ago.

> There is surely something wrong with the system of representation which penalizes some provinces for the sacrifices they have made in sending their children and their means to upbuild the other parts of the dominion, and which would fail to make any special allowance in their representation in the Canadian parliament in respect of their isolated position which prevents them from enlarging their bounds out of the public lands of Canada.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, although it cannot be done in connection with this bill, that the suggestion of my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), might well be accepted by the right hon. Prime Minister, the matter might be made a subject of discussion at the inter-provincial conference, and in view of the fact that constantly during the last two or three sessions there has been forecast the possibility of amendments to the British North America Act, it seems to me this subject is one which might well engage the attention of those framing these amendments and discussing the subjects to be dealt with thereby.

So much for the general point. The other point is in connection with Nova Scotia. It is felt that there is grave doubt as to whether Nova Scotia during the last ten years has had its full representation. That comes about, as was pointed out to the commission on maritime claims, by reason of the fact that in calculating the unit of representation based on the 1921 census it seems there was included the portion of Quebec taken in under the legislation of 1898, with the result that the unit of representation was increased, with the consequence that, dividing that unit into the population of Nova Scotia the amount left over after the even number of members was found, was less than one half, whereas as a matter of fact had that addition to the population of Quebec not been included the amount left over would have been greater than one half—

Mr. CANTLEY: And would have added another member to Nova Scotia's representation.

Mr. RALSTON: —and therefore would have entitled Nova Scotia to another member, as my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley), suggests. It is too late to adjust that now, but I want to be sure, in connection with the calculation which has been made, that this mistake has not been made again.

Mr. BENNETT: That is clear.

Mr. RALSTON: I only want to mention this to the right hon. Prime Minister. The notes to the bill are very specific in setting out the proportions in 1921 and 1931 between the populations of each province and the population of the dominion. But the notes to the bill do not set out what it is in the publication issued by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), with regard to the census, and when we come to take this matter up I should like to see in black and white as part of the notes, the population, indicating, if it can be done, the portion of the province of Quebec which came in in 1898, the portion which came in in 1912, and the original province of Quebec. Because that did give rise to heart-burnings in Nova Scotia, and we feel that it is quite possible that it deprived us of a member for the last ten years.

I know the Prime Minister will permit the reservation of anything we might have to say with regard to the matter of calculation of the number of representatives to which Nova Scotia is entitled arising out of a possible error in calculating the unit of representation caused by this addition to the province of Quebec.

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): May I ask the Prime Minister a question? The right hon. gentleman mentioned a population of 2,000 for new Quebec. Do they exercise the franchise, do they vote anywhere, are they comprised in any constituency?

Mr. BENNETT: As far as I know they are attached to the hinterland of the constituencies that run straight through to the boundary of Quebec. But I am not certain of that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: When it was added to Quebec in 1912 it was stated in the law that it would not be taken into account.

Mr. BENNETT: But that is not the question the hon. gentleman asked. His question is whether or not the 2,177 souls within the province of Quebec do or do not vote. My memory is that they have a right to vote by reason of being the backlands of the constituencies that run straight through. That matter may easily be dealt with by the committee, I am not certain about it.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the government to the fact that there has been considerable agitation during the past ten years, perhaps not so much in recent years, to have representation for the Northwest Territories. I know that on one occasion there was some humorous discussion as to whether the natives should be entitled to vote. But that is not the question. The Yukon, which enjoys representation by the hon. the Speaker is very similar in its topographical features to the Northwest Territories, mining is becoming an important feature of the activities of the population there, and I thought that possibly the government would consider that this would be an appropriate time to give representation in this house in some way or another to the Northwest Territories.

With respect to the discussion on representation, may I say that I think it must be apparent to thoughtful men that we have too much representation in all our institutions. Naturally the excuse, if one would call it that, for the provinces and the municipalities having the representation that they enjoy in Canada today is that they take their cue from the federal government. I am well aware of the difficulties in the way of reduction of representation in the House of Commons, but I confess that I think in Canada we are entirely over-governed, that the cost of government is away beyond reason with respect to the services rendered. I do not say that arises from over-representation, but I do say that if we have the population in Canada that we hope for it will not be long before we have a tremendous representation in this house. And when readjustment, as suggested by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) is taken into consideration at the forthcoming conference that I understand is to take place during the recess, it seems to me that this would be an appropriate time to discuss this whole question. It does seem to me that we in Canada could get along with a much smaller representation for administrative purposes in all our deliberative bodies.

But my main object was to bring to the attention of the government the fact that no provision is being made to give representation to the Northwest Territories in the forthcoming redistribution.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, having been a member of the last redistribution committee, and having, I hope, taken my duties at that time somewhat seriously, I arrived at two or three opinions as a result of my experience which I should like to state briefly today. I am not going to comment on the general aspects of the bill, I think the procedure that has been followed the past years and which will be adopted is as fair and equitable as it very well can be. I think the bill we have, based as it is upon our constitution, the British North America Act, is the normal and proper bill on such an occasion, but there are one or two points which were the subject of very definite discussion the last time, which I have no doubt will be discussed just as strongly this coming year.

The first point was the general question of representation by population, "rep by pop" as it is popularly called; that is, the question of whether the rural and urban constituencies should have exactly the same unit of representation. In the last committee there was a very strong body of opinion in favour of "rep by pop," but there was a somewhat stronger body against it. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am absolutely in agreement with the position taken by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in that respect; that is, that the rural constituencies should have a smaller unit of representation than the cities. After all, why do we have this representation? I assume that it is in order that under our laws and our taxation customs absolute equality shall prevail throughout the country, so that each section of the population shall be dealt with fairly. But, as has been pointed out by the leader of the opposition, the representation in the House of Commons is not the only form of influence which has to do with the making of our laws or the formulation of our taxation policies. There are others. The right hon. gentleman referred to the question of the press, and undoubtedly in the matter of formulating and expressing public opinion the cities have a far greater opportunity through the public press than have the rural communities. But apart from that there is another question; the financial domination which is inseparable from the cities carries with it a tremendous influence which is not found in the rural communities. In that way, too, the cities have an opportunity to impress their beliefs, their ideas and their opinions upon the country and to put them into effect to a far greater extent than has a scattered rural population. Then there is the fact that through the centralization of population public opinion can be drawn together and expressed forcibly and adequately so much more easily and readily in the cities than is the case in the country.

For all these reasons I think it very essential that the committee which will meet during the next part of this session should be very careful that the rural communities carry in every respect as fair a share as possible of influence upon the laws of the country. It must be recognized that from the very nature of our progressive civilization, making no reference to special laws which may favour the cities and which may naturally bring people together in industry, the proportion of our population found in the large centres must increase while the percentage found in the farming communities must decrease. There is no question about that. The fact that every new industry that is formed and every new want that comes into being is expressed in terms of industrial commodities makes it inevitable that this should be the case. On the other hand, however, there is no doubt that the rural portion of the community is of such tremendous importance that its viewpoint at all times must be adequately expressed.

As to the actual details of the bill, the Prime Minister has pointed to one or two factors which must be taken into consideration. First, of course, there is the factor of population, to ensure that after taking into consideration the question of rural and urban constituencies, the population shall be as nearly as possible alike in the various constituencies. There is the question of natural boundaries which must be taken into account so far as possible. There is the question of accessibility, so that the lines of railways and highways shall be followed as nearly as possible. There is the question of community interest, to avoid as far as possible the division of community interests and to bring about their centralization. All those matters must be taken into account, but there is still another factor which appeared when the last bill was under consideration, and which undoubtedly will be found again. This is a factor which, to my mind, should be ignored as far as possible. I refer to the political factor. May I suggest that the members of the committee which is to be set up should avoid as far as possible this political factor, this desire which always has been found so to divide the ridings as to ensure a majority for one party or the other. I need only allude to that point and to glance at the faces of the older members of this house to assure myself that they understand the point. I think it very desirable that in this year of grace we should go a little beyond that and attempt so to carry on this redistribution that the people of the country, regardless of political affiliations, may have an equal chance to express their opinions when the time comes to do so. I only refer to that point because it is a question that is very dominant in the minds of the people at this moment. They are wondering today whether the committee will rise above those considerations or whether they will be influenced too much by them, as has been the case sometimes in the past.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BENNETT: If that closes the debate I have just a word or two to add. My hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) applies mathematics to the problem; my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) desires that mathematics shall not be applied. I can only say this, that what the east has lost in representation it has secured in no inconsiderable extent in representation in the newer provinces. A very large number of former residents of the three smaller provinces are residing now in at least three of the larger provinces, and representation is obtained in that way. I count it a privilege to have been born in New Brunswick, though I have the right to vote for and represent an Alberta constituency.

I should like to say just one word to clear up a difficulty in connection with a matter mentioned by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. I cannot find that the hon. member is correct in his statement that Nova Scotia lost a member by reason of what transpired at the last redistribution. Hon. E. M. Macdonald, who was then a minister of the crown from Nova Scotia, threshed out that matter very thoroughly. I am only speaking from what I understand to be the facts, since I was not in the house at that time, but my information is that allowance was made for the factor to which the hon. gentleman refers. I understand that Mr. Macdonald pressed the matter very strongly but was overborne by mathematics and was unable to secure the retention of the additional membership to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I believe that on inquiry he will find this to be so, and I believe an investigation will satisfy the hon. gentleman that it is mathematically correct.

Further I should like to say that I do not think it probable that a provincial conference that has to deal with the problems with which we will have to deal will be in a position to discuss constitutional changes on general lines. The ex-Minister of Justice knows how contentious that subject is and how difficult of solution is the question of the amendment of the constitution on a large scale. That would involve a reconsideration of the question of the basis of representation in parliament. Sometimes I do think, and I believe most hon. members of the house will agree, that those who were responsible for the British North America Act were exceedingly wise men. When one thinks how, with changed conditions and new circumstances, we have been able to work out our problems within the elastic provisions of that statute, one has more and more regard, esteem and reverence for the genius of the men who prepared it, especially sections 91 and 92. When I look at section 51 I realize that those who had to deal with the problem felt that one day there would be a larger Canada and that sixty-five should be—I was very pleased to hear the hon. gentleman say that it was very proper that sixty-five was the unit—the unit. It is an amazing thing how the application of the principle mentioned in that section has kept pace with the expanding population of the country, the population of Quebec having kept pace and really more than kept pace with the growth of other parts of Canada. Of the older provinces, undoubtedly it was the province to select for a fixed representation. The result is amazing when you contemplate it in the light of circumstances which have since transpired.

There is always a difficulty between the rural and urban populations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Before my right hon. friend comes to that, would he kindly give a justification for subsection 4 of section 51. Why should the unit of Quebec be 44,000 and that of Ontario 41,000?

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad my hon. friend mentioned that point. I know of no reason why, except that the two smaller provinces desired to ensure their position in confederation. I, like the hon. gentlemen, have not been able to find anywhere any discussion of this matter. At one time I intended to ask Sir Joseph Pope if there was any memorandum of Sir John Macdonald's on the matter, but so far I have not found anything which bears upon this particular point. Looking now at the matter as it stands, I am inclined to think that that one-twentieth or five per cent leeway was put there to protect the smaller provinces. I may be wrong, but that is the only suggestion I can give in answer to my hon. friend.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It probably works only one way.

Mr. BENNETT: Undoubtedly it works only one way, it has the effect of increasing the unit of representation as it concerns Quebec and in many instances it places other provinces in not quite as good a position as the province of Quebec.

I was rather amazed at the argument of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), who seemed fearful of political considerations prevailing in a committee which is to be selected by mathematical processes. The figures are very clear. We would have 11·265 members on the committee, the official opposition would have 7·265 and Labour, the Independents and the United Farmers of Alberta would have 1·469. They have less than one and one-half and they are being given two, while the Liberals and Conservatives are losing their half. It was a rather strange argument which the hon. member used. He made a plea for the recognition of the rural population through a higher ratio of representation in the house than that enjoyed by the urban population. It rather negatives the argument of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), it was an assertion that 50,000 people in one part of Canada should have but one member while 20,000 in another part would have the same representation. That was the argument. If he was fearful of political considerations prevailing and felt that there should be equality in every part of Canada with regard to representation, how is his first plea supported? What he did in the early part of his argument was to contend that one man residing in the country should have as much influence as two and three residing in the city. He then closed by saying that political considerations should not prevail in order that the farmer would have the same rights as the city man and be in the same position. I leave it at that.

I desire to associate myself with what has been said in comparing the present method of proceeding by way of committee and that taken by the old parliaments when they themselves made the redistribution. In the old days, the government of the day brought in its bill, which was sometimes called a jerrymander bill.

An hon. MEMBER: Quite often it was.

Mr. BENNETT: The boundaries of the constituencies were defined by the government of the day and my reading leads me to the firm opinion that there has never been a time when the rural population of Canada has received such a relative representation compared with the urban population as it does today. I think the reasons for this were stated quite clearly by the right hon. the leader of the opposition.

I cannot anticipate the principles upon which the committee will act. It will be a committee selected from the 245 members of this house. It will be comprised of twenty fair-minded men who will deal with this very difficult problem with all the ability and skill at their command. I fancy it will be recalled by the right hon. gentleman opposite that upon one occasion this committee was not able to complete its duties within a year and had to go into the following year because of the difficulties with which they had to deal. The right hon. gentleman said that the last committee was unanimous but I should think that one would have to put a slight shade of meaning upon the word "unanimous" in order to arrive at that conclusion. For the sake of argument we will admit that the report was accepted by the house as being substantially unanimous, which was a great triumph over prejudice and partiality.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank the right hon. gentleman for his references.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the second time.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT moved:

That Bill No. 2, intituled an act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons, be referred to a special committee, the names of the members of such committee to be given at a later date, with instructions to prepare schedules to contain and describe the several electoral districts entitled to return members to this house and to report the same.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—FISHING INDUSTRY

FISHING INDUSTRY

The house resumed from Thursday, November 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rhodes for committee of supply.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this motion I shall detain the house but a few moments in dealing with the conditions which prevail in the country generally and in connection with the fishing industry in particular, which industry has been hit as hard as any natural industry which could be mentioned.

Taking the conditions in the country as a whole, I think we are all agreed that they are perhaps worse than any which have prevailed at any time since confederation. There can be no division of opinion in connection with a situation where between seven and eight hundred thousand people are receiving relief. While we may say that it should not be so and while we do say that promises were made that it would be otherwise, for the moment we must devote ourselves to endeavouring to find some solution for the problem and some mitigation for the conditions which will exist this winter.

There is going to be a day, perhaps not far distant, when an accounting will be demanded of the stewardship of those who are in power at the present time. There is going to be a day when men will ask a reason for the disastrous condition which has followed the very flagrant breaches of undertakings which were given in 1930. But we can afford for the moment to leave that to one side in order to discuss conditions as they exist at the present time and any thing which may be done to ameliorate them. The other evening the Prime Minister made a statement which was regarded in the country as being rather important, namely, that a provincial conference was being called, but with due respect—and I am not making this criticism in any carping spirit—I felt that perhaps too much emphasis was laid by him on matters that are not essential at this time. It was pointed out to us that this conference would be held in order to discuss amendments to the Companies Act. Of course such amendments are important, but they pale into insignificance beside the question of unemployment and that of the necessity of our people having an opportunity to earn a living. Amendments to the Insurance Act and the question of provincial and federal jurisdiction were to be discussed as well. The matter of spheres of taxation was also to be taken up. I felt that the real object for which this conference ought to be called was somewhat beclouded by the extended references which the Prime Minister made to those matters which would be discussed at a provincial conference at any time, in any year in the history of the dominion and that the real object for which this conference should be called, and I hope the real one which the Prime Minister has in mind, was the discussion of unemployment and relief conditions and the possibility of providing an opportunity for our people to work.

The right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) has repeatedly in the house mentioned the constitutional question. I do not think there is any difference of opinion in this chamber or in the country with regard to the constitution. We all agree that in times of national emergency the dominion has jurisdiction to legislate or to impose its will upon the people of the provinces; that it assumes paramount legislative jurisdiction. But we are not at this time—and I commend this to my right hon. friend—talking about the question of imposing obligations on provinces or on the people of the provinces; we are talking about the possibility of conferring some benefit upon them and there is in the British North America Act, that sacred ark of the covenant, nothing which prevents us from doing so. My right hon. friend draws a distinction between a national emergency and a national condition. The people do not care one whit whether it is a national emergency or a national condition; they are hungry and cold and need shelter.

Mr. POULIOT: They are in distress.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, they are in distress. It does not make any difference what you call it, if the federal authority has power within itself to deal with the situation, it seems to me that my right hon. friend cannot get rid of the responsibility. All the discussion that there has been about the British North America Act, the jurisdiction of the provinces and the inviolate field which must be maintained there with regard to legislation amounts to little when we have the responsibility definitely assumed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon). He has made the position of the government abundantly clear; as a minister of the crown in a federal government which takes its jurisdiction from the British North America Act, he says this: "No one need worry about being adequately supplied with food, clothing, fuel and shelter." There is a responsibility assumed, and I do not think there is any need of a lengthy discussion on the question of the constitution. The government has assumed the obligation and the question is now: What is the best way to carry it out? I say frankly to my right hon. friend that when you use federal money, for instance, as it is used in connection with the Old Age Pensions Act, you may impose conditions and say to the people: You may use this money only provided those conditions are observed. My right hon. friend two years ago, in bringing down the provision for unemployment relief, expressly imposed by order in council provisions in regard to accounts, and in regard to supervision. All those were put into the order in council and nobody suggested that this was unconstitutional. So in the same way we can suggest and impose conditions whenever we pay money out of the federal treasury. Nobody doubts that the Dominion of Canada has power to pay money out of the federal treasury for these purposes of relief. The Minister of Labour has admitted that and the question of jurisdiction is rather beyond the point now, having regard to the serious situation which confronts us.

I do not intend at any length to go into the question of the method whereby that general principle is to be carried out. I say this to my right hon. friend, since he has suggested that a provincial conference should be held. I reiterate what my right hon. leader has said so frequently that the people of Canada are entitled to see some mobilization of the business, industrial, agricultural and economic forces of this dominion in order that plans may be worked out to deal with this situation. I do not think that is a reflection on the government. The same thing is being done in the country to the south of us. It seems to me that the problem is far and away beyond one simply of government and administration, and while the government have the responsibility for the expenditure of this money, at the same time I do not think they would be humiliating themselves in the slightest if they took the advice of some national council which could survey the field broadly, not from the point of view of legislative jurisdiction alone. What I mean by that is this: I mean there may be in the dominion certain industries which, if assisted to a reasonable extent by a direct grant of money, if you like, might provide substantial employment. For instance, those who are engaged in and familiar with the lumbering industry might be able usefully to advise the government in that respect. With regard to plans which might be made as to conditions under which the money is to be spent, people throughout the dominion could give advice out of their ripe experience and their knowledge of the business in which they are engaged and the part of the country from which they come. That is not handing jurisdiction over to a federal commission or a violation of the British North America Act, but it is carrying out the idea of national cooperation and the mobilization of national forces. That is what has been suggested repeatedly and what is at last being adopted in a more or less modified form by my right hon. friend when he suggests conferences. Let me point out to him that this matter of conferences is not new. He had in 1930 exactly the idea which I am now trying to express. I find in his speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, he complains on February 24, 1930, about conditions in Canada being very, very bad. I quote from page 18 of Hansard of that date where he is reported as saying:

> What about conditions in this dominion at this moment? What about conditions from east to west? It is true that part of the unemployment is seasonal; but since the beginning of the year I have traversed Canada from Victoria to the far east and in every city of this dominion, east and west, there is abnormal unemployment, so that men who are accustomed to give, as I have been, to assist those who are unable to earn sufficient to keep body and soul together, have never before seen such distress as I have seen in the communities I have visited.

Then he goes on:

> What was the Minister of Labour doing? What was the Prime Minister doing? Were they calling conferences? The only conferences they were calling were conferences to determine how best they could ward off the blows of an indignant people. The only conferences they were having were as to how they might increase their power and retain their positions. I have received a telegram from the secretary of the Miners' Union at Fernie indicating that their mine is closed because it is owned in the United States by one of the great railway systems and in pursuance of the policy of Mr. Hoover to give employment to the people in that country they are going to mine coal in the United States and shut down the Canadian mine. What is the Minister of Labour doing about the matter? Where was there a conference of Canadian business men?

This is what we are suggesting.

> Were they asked to meet together? They were not.

My right hon. friend now suggests they cannot be; that the constitution prevents it. I submit to him that there is no doubt in the world he was then suggesting the very thing which we are suggesting now. He goes on:

> When a meeting was called by Mayor Webb in Winnipeg of all the mayors of western towns and representatives of western provinces as well, the minister will recall that he was to attend and it was given out that he was ill and unable to go, but his illness was not so great as to prevent him from attending banquets around but not on that particular date.

There was a clear intimation by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that he did believe in the calling of conferences, the calling of those who had experience in connection with the general business and industrial life of the country. The seriousness of the condition then did not compare with conditions today, and I submit to him, even though two years have passed, and although the delay has been very harmful, it is not too late for some such conference as this to be called in order that this country, if it is going to revive from the situation in which it finds itself, may have the assistance of the brains and experience of our business leaders and of those engaged in both natural and manufacturing industry all over this country. That has got to be done, and I submit to my right hon. friend that that should be done now regardless of whether or not an interprovincial conference is going to be called. I mention this in passing because I do feel that we should not spare any endeavour to impress on my right hon. friend the necessity for national organization to take hold of the situation in which the country finds itself at the present time.

I want to refer for a moment or two to an industry that has not been mentioned here. Agriculture has been mentioned, and there has been a good deal of talk about manufacturing. I want to refer to the fishing industry in which are engaged in the province of Nova Scotia some 20,000 men, and which industry provides, or should provide, a livelihood for these men and their families.

An interesting sidelight came to me recently in connection with this matter of fish. We are all looking for markets for lumber, for wheat, copper and fish. I pick up the St. John Telegraph-Journal of November 23, and I find there the menu provided at the penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul for a week. Do you know I have searched that from start to finish, and there is not a single item of fish on the menu.

Mr. ERNST: I beat you to it. I drew the matter to the attention of the Fisheries Association.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is always ahead. I only want to say to the government, no wonder these men in St. Vincent de Paul rebel.

Mr. ROSS: They may refuse fish, just as they have refused porridge.

Mr. RALSTON: If you put fish on the menu I think probably those men would return to sanity and be perfectly tractable. I commend that suggestion to the minister, not to the Fisheries Association, but to the Minister of Justice whose department provides the menu in St. Vincent de Paul. That is an instance of what goes on. Even for Friday I cannot find fish on the menu.

Let me speak for a moment with regard to conditions in the fishing industry as I know them in the western end of Nova Scotia. These men and women are not asking for sympathy or relief if they can have an opportunity to earn a living in their vocation. I want to point out to the government that there is a possibility of at least substantially improving the situation down there without going to the extent of relief; that is, the payment of actual dollars which would otherwise be necessary. I want to give two or three instances to the house showing what these men earn who are engaged in this hazardous industry.

Let me remind the house that the individual shore fisherman and the men who go out in a two-man or three-man boat probably out at three in the morning and do not return till late in the afternoon. He may have had a poor day or a fairly good day. He has to pay for his oil and his gasoline and his bait and for the upkeep of his boat, and sometimes he does not catch enough fish to pay his expenses at the very low prices for fish now prevailing. I have here some actual examples of what these fishermen have earned, men who have persistently pursued their vocation in an endeavour to make a living.

Here is one case of two men going out two months day after day and getting a total of $64 for the two months' work. Interest, upkeep and depreciation comes to $20 for a boat probably costing $600. The net result is $44 for two months' work, on which these men have to keep themselves and their wives and families.

Here is another case of two men going out day after day, and at the end of the trip they average $15 for two months' work. They get $36 altogether. Their out-of-pocket expenses were $21, leaving $15 or $7.50 apiece for the two months.

Here is another case of men going out in a schooner for a trip of eight weeks. I find that these men got a little over $25 per man for that eight weeks' period.

Here is the case of two men making eleven trips covering a two months' period, going out in a two-man boat, and making $92 altogether; out-of-pocket expenses $38; $20 for interest, upkeep and depreciation; leaving $34 to divide between himself and his buddy. Think of it, $34 for two months' work for two men.

Here is another fisherman whose gross is $56; out-of-pocket expenses $26; $20 for interest, upkeep and depreciation; actual net, $10 to be divided between two men for two months' work.

Another fisherman gets $26 in a two-months' period; expenses $16, leaving him $10, out of which he has to pay interest, upkeep and depreciation.

Here is the case of a three-man boat making ten trips, with a gross of $138; interest, upkeep and depreciation, $48; leaving $90 to be divided among three men for two months' work.

Another instance. A four-man boat makes seven trips and grosses $123.15; out-of-pocket expenses $63; interest, upkeep and depreciation $40, leaving $20 to be divided amongst four men for two months' work.

The house might ask why is there this difference between the number of trips that these men take. The difference is due to this: Men who are away behind cannot afford to go out except on the very best days. They cannot afford to pay for gasoline and oil and bait and run the risk of a bad trip and a non-productive catch. I emphasize again that this is hazardous work. It is the hardest sort of work, and these men are constantly at it in an endeavour to make a living.

You ask me, what is the remedy? The situation is this. That fish is bringing from three-quarters of a cent to one cent a pound. The difficulty is that these men are directly in competition with the trawlers which have been repeatedly mentioned in this house and in orders in council and even in statutes. I submit that at this time the remedy is for the government either definitely to refuse licences for the trawlers which are operating or to so reduce the number of trawlers, so that the fisherman will have the first chance at the market. I am not going into the history of the trawler situation except to put clearly on record that the Maritime Fisheries Commission in 1928 made a report, the majority recommending the absolute abolition of the trawler, and the minority, the chairman.

recommending that the trawlers be reduced at least to an extent that would give the fishermen the first opportunity at the market. The government of that day made an investigation into the whole matter, and after the fullest inquiry by the Minister of Fisheries passed an order in council whereby it was provided that the trawlers should be licensed and that the licence fee should amount to one cent a pound for non-Canadian-built trawlers, and three-quarters of a cent a pound for fish landed from Canadian trawlers, and that after April 1, 1932, only Canadian-built trawlers should operate. The tax was imposed. Trawler interests were very much against it. It was paid by some companies and refused by others. Action was brought, with the result that the order in council was held to be ultra vires, that is to say beyond the scope of the act under which it was passed. That was after the present government came into power but no action was taken to reinstate the order in council or to make it effective by legislation, although that could have been done. But the present government, following a considered policy, passed an order in council under the act whereby it was provided that two things should take place, first that trawlers should be licensed and secondly—a more or less important provision—that trawlers should be marked so that they could easily be identified in case of the destruction of fishermen's gear. But, this proviso was put in—and it is to this proviso that I refer the government—that trawlers should be licensed only to the extent that was necessary to make up for any deficiency in the supply of fish from shore fishermen. That brings me to my point. I submit the time has arrived when shore fishermen can supply every pound of fish required. Trawlers are landing vast quantities with the result that the fishermen can only dispose of about 25 per cent of normal production. If shore fishermen were given an opportunity to supply the market the price of fish to them would show a substantial increase, and they would have an opportunity to make, perhaps not an adequate living, but at least some further earnings.

My plea to this government at the present time is to take the steps which, under the order in council they can take to stop the operation of the trawler, so long at least as the shore fishermen are able to supply the demand. I say to hon. members opposite from the information I have received there is plenty of reason to believe that the shore fishermen could supply the demand now obtaining. I do not wish to labour the point, but I submit I have placed before the government something in the nature of concrete action it should take. I have placed before it something definite which can be done. My hon. friends may consider this something in the nature of a relief measure needed at the present time. Not only would it be a relief measure, but it would be a measure of justice which should be extended under the order in council of this government. If they were to take the action I have suggested they would do much toward relieving the situation in fishing communities.

I repeat my statement of last year, that fishing communities do not want assistance if they can be allowed to work out their own destiny. They would rather work and pay their own way through the natural resources at their disposal, than take a dole, charity or assistance. The present situation is that if something is not done for them their only alternative is to ask the Minister of Labour through the provincial government to do something by way of relief. I say the best relief which can be given to the fishermen of the maritime provinces is an opportunity to help themselves and to enjoy the markets there for them, provided they are given an opportunity to free themselves from the competition of trawlers which, after all, under the legislation now on the statute books, and by the order in council, are only auxiliary to the shore fishermen. Our market is supposed, primarily, to be given to those fishermen.

The general problem of unemployment has been fully covered, and at this time I urge upon the government particularly this one matter, namely the reconsideration of the trawler situation, so that there may be a wiping out of or substantial curtailment in the operation of trawlers. Such change should obtain until the fishermen are able to take up the slack in the market and are able to enjoy to the full the market which, in fact, is really theirs. There can be no question about the foresight, ability or enterprise of our fishermen. All they want is an opportunity on the market free from trawler competition which even hon. members on the government side of the house admit, should be used only for the purpose of implementing the supply in case that supply cannot be filled from other sources.

I am informed that the shore fishermen could supply the present demand, and that the price is very low. If regulations were enforced against the trawlers, no doubt the price would be substantially improved. I urge upon the government in the strongest possible manner the reconsideration of this matter.

FRUIT GROWING AND CANNING INDUSTRIES

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take only a few moments of the time of the house concerning a matter affecting the fruit growers of the province of Ontario. My remarks at this time arise from a question I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a few days ago in connection with the export to Great Britain of a cargo of canned fruit and vegetables shipped by Canadian Canners from St. Catharines, Ontario. My question was as follows:

May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether about one-third of a cargo of canned fruit loaded at St. Catharines on a Norwegian tramp was shipped from Medina, New York, and labelled with Canadian Canners labels, to be conveyed by that steamer to the British market.

The reply of the minister on the following day is as follows:

Yesterday the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser), under the guise of a question, made a statement as follows, that:

About one-third of a cargo of canned fruit loaded at St. Catharines on a Norwegian tramp was shipped from Medina, New York, and labelled with Canadian Canners labels, to be conveyed by that steamer to the British market.

In the first place, I wish to say that a statement of that kind, unchallenged and unrefuted, would certainly do serious damage to Canadian trade. I therefore made immediate and very careful inquiries and am able to inform the house that there is not a word of truth in the statement. The goods so canned were the product of Canadian farms, fruit and vegetables, and canned in the factories of Canadian canneries under the inspection and supervision of the inspectors of the Department of Agriculture in accordance with Canned Foods and Meats Act. In every sense this was a Canadian shipment, and I add this, that far from permitting the impression to go abroad that in any way Canada was not playing the game in its trade with the United Kingdom, the fact is that Canada has every reason to be proud both of the magnitude of the shipment and of its contents.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make this statement: I am very deeply interested not only in the fruit growing industry, but in the canning industry of Ontario, and I would be the last member in the house who would wish in any way to damage their interests. This time however I am not going to ask a question, but I am going to make a statement, or several statements, which I am prepared to substantiate.

Before proceeding I should like to commend and congratulate the representatives of the fruit branch in Canada, and in the old country, for the splendid work they have done in the interests of fruit growers and canners. Let me go farther, and congratulate the government, inasmuch as I believe that some of the clauses in the agreement with Great Britain which pertain to apples will prove, and are proving, beneficial to the apple growers and the canning industry of the province of Ontario. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I have this objection to make concerning the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in reply to my question. I still maintain I asked a question; I placed before the minister a question asking for information, and based upon the fact that complaints had been lodged with representatives of certain departments in the city of Ottawa that the Canadian Canners are importing, and have been importing pears and other fruits from New York state, paying the duty of two cents per pound, canning them in Canada—as the minister has truly said—under the inspection of the Department of Agriculture, yet, nevertheless canning American or New York state pears and peaches in Canadian canneries, taking advantage of the rebate of 99 per cent and the duty of two cents per pound, and shipping them to the old country market as Canadian products. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make that statement because I believe it is in the interests of the fruit growers, that every hon. member should realize that this practice is being carried on, that the canners of this country are taking advantage of the low price this year of pears in New York state, $10 a ton to be exact, paying the 2 cents a pound duty, securing the rebate, and thus hammering down the price to the fruit growers in western Ontario. That is the point that was behind my question addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I submit that in view of the facts that I am giving to the house—and I can prove what I say—the minister should have considered my question as that of one seeking information, and, in view of the publicity the matter has had through the press of Ontario, he should have been a little more careful about insinuating a lack of interest in the fruit grower.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one word more. In the interests of the fruit growers and pear producers of western Ontario, regardless of the statements reported in the press as having been made by officials of the Ontario and federal governments and of Canadian canners in connection with this shipment on the Norwegian tramp that I referred to, may I suggest that this government take steps to prevent the fruit growers of Ontario being subject by reason of the drawback to the unfair competition of the extremely low prices existing through over-production in New York state and exporting fruit grown there as a Canadian product. That I submit for the consideration of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and his colleagues.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I feel it is necessary for me to reply to the further statement made by the hon. member. The hon. member has stated clearly today that he charges that Canadian Canners have been importing foreign pears and shipping them to the United Kingdom, to which hon. members sitting around him cried "shame."

Mr. CHAPLIN: Always done for years, under the Liberal government.

Mr. STEVENS: His further statement is that Canadian Canners have used this condition for the hammering down of prices to the Ontario growers.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): The hon. gentleman quibbled about it the other day.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The statement is untrue.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not quibble. The only reason I referred to this the other day and the only reason I refer to it again is this, that whether the hon. gentleman realizes it or not, the language in which he couched his alleged question and the language which he used today is in my opinion calculated to damage Canadian trade with Great Britain, and I think it necessary and desirable that it should be cleared up very definitely. I made careful inquiries into this matter, as I stated, and I have made further inquiries since, and I am advised—and later I will have exact figures to support this—that a comparatively small proportion of the shipment made from Hamilton the other day was composed of canned goods the contents of which were foreign to Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: Wait a moment. It has been the practice of the canners in western Ontario and other parts, but chiefly western Ontario, for many years, after the season is over for canning Canadian fruit, to import large quantities of grapefruit, pineapples, and other fruits for canning purposes, thus keeping the canning factories going. No one can have any criticism of that. In addition, it has been the practice of canners in western Ontario to import considerable quantities of pears for canning in Canada, to which no objection can be taken. There is nothing sinister about it, nothing wrong about it, it is a perfectly legitimate trade. But it happens that a very small quantity, I am told, if any, found its way into this particular large export shipment to which reference has been made.

An hon. MEMBER: That is at least some admission.

Mr. STEVENS: Another point the hon. gentleman has raised is the question of hammering down prices. I have been supplied with information regarding prices paid, as follows:

> We paid Canadian fruit growers this year $40 a ton for Bartlett pears, $40 a ton for peaches, and about $12 a ton for apples. In the western states, from which our chief competition in the British and foreign markets comes, the growers received only $10 a ton for No. 1 pears, $6 a ton for No. 2 pears and $2.50 a ton for apples. New York state prices for Bartlett pears were $20 a ton and $10 a ton for Keefer pears.

Now this will indicate the competition that Canadian canners are confronted with in regard to the packing of goods for the export market. As I have already stated, the company assures me very definitely that this shipment contained but a very small proportion of this fruit.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): What proportion?

Mr. STEVENS: In addition to that the practice in Canada has been in some cases to import considerable quantities of apples for the purpose of making pectin, which is used in Canada by jam manufacturers and those who put up various preserved fruits, to be added in the packing of these fruits and the manufacture of these jams as a jellying ingredient. It is also exported. This is a fruit ingredient which is quite legitimate and proper and good trade, and there is nothing about it that is in any sense to be criticized. I think, sir, that it is only fair to this company, particularly in view of the cries of hon. gentlemen a moment ago of "shame," when the hon. member was making his statement, it is only fair to a Canadian company that is trying to do business with countries outside of Canada, whether in the empire or out of it, that we should give them a bit of commendation for their efforts in promoting this foreign trade. I deplore more than I can say any suggestions from influential members on the floor of this house regarding the practices followed by this and other Canadian companies.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Will the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. STEVENS: Surely.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): For my own information I would like to be quite clear on this point: Is the house to understand that canners may bring in, under the conditions that I have mentioned a few minutes ago, American or foreign pears and ship them under the economic trade agreements and take advantage of the British preference, provided they are canned in this country?

Mr. STEVENS: It is as clear as day under the law. I will explain as well as I can, subject to not having precise percentages before me and therefore being unable to speak with entire accuracy. Goods manufactured in Canada have access to the British market under the preference if they carry the percentage of Canadian content prescribed by the British regulations. Just what that percentage is in regard to canned fruits I cannot at the moment tell my hon. friend, but I can secure the information. I suggest this however, speaking merely from my own opinion, that it is altogether probable that the value of, say, raw pears, we will take them as an illustration, as compared with the value of the completed article, including the cans, the packing, the shipping and so on, would be in such proportion as to meet that requirement. I expect that it would, and if it does—I will put the "if" in there—is it not legitimate that they should be so shipped?

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Mr. Speaker, on this important matter I do not propose to allow the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) again to think he has given this house the last word. On November 23 the minister gave the house what he intended to be the last word with respect to this matter, which was brought up by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Fraser) who was not in the house at the time and who, at the earliest possible moment, brought to the attention of the house the true facts. Let me read again the reply as given by the minister on Wednesday of this week:

Yesterday the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser), under the guise of a question, made a statement as follows. . . .

Any hon. member reading the question of the hon. member for Northumberland will realize that it has not even the suggestion of being a statement; it was a straight question asked of the minister by a member of this house. The minister went on:

In the first place, I wish to say that a statement of that kind, unchallenged and unrefuted, would certainly do serious damage to Canadian trade. I therefore made immediate and very careful inquiries . . .

The minister made immediate and careful inquiries and gave the house what he found as a result.

. . . and am able to inform the house that there is not a word of truth in the statement.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, representing the trade of Canada, rises in his place and tells the hon. member for Northumberland that he was not telling the truth when he said that a portion of the goods were brought in from New York state, canned here and sent out under the guise of Canadian canned products. Now the minister has turned around; he says that some part of the shipment was brought in from New York state. He does not give the proportion; he leaves the impression that it was a very small part. Let me continue:

The goods so canned were the product of Canadian farms . . .

May I ask the minister if that was correct?

Mr. STEVENS: Absolutely.

Mr. GRAY: They were the product of New York state farms, brought in here and canned and sent to the United Kingdom under the guise of Canadian fruit. The British have already stated that they will not allow our wheat to proceed through United States ports except under a through label, and I ask the minister if he expects the British to say we are playing the game when we bring in New York pears, can them in Canadian factories and ship them out as the product of Canadian farms.

Mr. STEVENS: Talking nonsense.

Mr. GRAY: Talking nonsense? The minister was talking nonsense not only today but on Wednesday as well, when he said there was not a word of truth in the statement made by the hon. member for Northumberland. Let me tell my hon. friend that he has not brought much credit on the Department of Trade and Commerce, over which he presides.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at one o'clock we were discussing a matter covered by a question asked by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser), a few days ago. I must say that we have listened to the tears which have rolled and fallen from the eyes of certain hon. members regarding the fruit business—

Mr. NEILL: How do you listen to tears?

Mr. CHAPLIN: You could almost hear them, they fell in a stream. These hon. gentlemen become interested in fruit only when they are in opposition. I should like to refer for a moment to the actions taken by hon. members opposite in connection with rebates. From their remarks one would think that rebates came into effect only recently whereas this legislation has been on the statute books for a considerable time. Why did they not object to it before? I have sat on both sides of the house, I have objected to certain rebates, but not one hon. member opposite would support me. The system is wrong, but hon. members opposite did not attempt to correct it.

The question asked by the hon. member for Northumberland was as follows:

May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether about one-third of a cargo of canned fruit loaded at St. Catharines on a Norwegian tramp was shipped from Medina, New York, and labelled with Canadian Canners labels, to be conveyed by that steamer to the British market.

What does the house think of a question like that? That is simply making a statement; the hon. gentleman either knew or did not know that that stuff came from New York. In fact, it never came from Medina.

Mr. BENNETT: He wanted to hurt the country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It was done with the intention of harming the industry.

The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray), seems to have become suddenly sympathetic towards the farmers. He referred to loss which must accrue to the farmer because, forsooth, pears and peaches were allowed to come in.

Mr. GRAY: Will the hon. member read article 1 of the agreement between Great Britain and Canada?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not intend to read it just now.

Mr. GRAY: Will the hon. member read it before he finishes?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No more than I will read the hon. member's speech.

Mr. GRAY: I shall not read yours.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Tears came into the hon. gentleman's eyes because of the fruit farmers.

An hon. MEMBER: Crocodile tears.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Crocodile tears, yes. I should like to ask the hon. member how many Bartlett pears or peaches are grown in his riding?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. GRAY: How many acres of land does the hon. member own in New York state?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Not one. I answer the hon. member but he does not answer me. I ask the hon. member for Northumberland: How many Bartlett pears and peaches are grown in your riding? The hon. member for West Lambton was a member of this house in previous years when this condition was a good deal worse than it is today.

Mr. GRAY: Read the agreement; it states, "grown, produced or manufactured in Canada."

Mr. CHAPLIN: "Grown, produced or manufactured in Canada." Does not this come under the heading of manufactured in Canada? While the hon. member is attempting to divert me from this subject, I should like to ask him: If these rebates were not allowed, how could the country export anything in the way of rubber, silk or cotton goods? It would be impossible to export if such goods were considered as coming from the countries where they were originally produced. Hon. members tried to convince the house that these goods had been canned in the United States and that all that was to be done in Canada was the labelling. If that is not the inference to be drawn from the question asked, I will eat the question.

Mr. GRAY: Hypocrisy.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Let me tell the hon. member something about hypocrisy in connection with his own actions. He knows that under the Liberal regime the department which had charge of customs permitted the duty paid on automobile parts coming into the country to be considered as part of the Canadian content.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): That has nothing to do with these empire trade agreements.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who said anything about rebates now? Under the British arrangement any goods which can qualify as being of fifty, and sometimes sixty per cent Canadian content, are considered as products of this country. Many goods come in from the old country which are not more than fifty per cent English, and yet they are allowed to come in under the agreement.

Fruit is allowed to come into Canada after paying a duty and the Canadian Canners are allowed under the law to obtain a rebate when such goods are exported. This is exactly the same system as applies to other manufacturers; no more consideration is given to the fruit canners than is given to the manufacturers of other products. In spite of these facts, hon. members have tried to make it appear as though the farmers of this country were being injured.

Mr. GRAY: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Sit down a minute; the hon. member had his say and he will not answer any questions asked of him.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for West Lambton was permitted to make his speech without interruption from any part of the house.

Mr. GRAY: I merely asked the hon. member if I could ask him a question. He has refused and I am sitting down.

The SPEAKER: It is out of order to interrupt a speaker in this way. When a member speaking is asked whether or not he will permit a question, he signifies his willingness to be interrupted by taking his seat; when he does not do so he indicates that he does not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The facts are that this fruit was packed in Canada, the cans were made in Canada and certain work was done in Canada. In some instances fruit was allowed to come in.

Mr. GRAY: Trucked in.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, not trucked in either. The hon. member is very free with interruptions. He is talking about something of which he knows nothing, and usually people talk the loudest when they know the least.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is hardly in order either.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The fruit business is of a seasonal nature. Take peaches, for example. This fruit is on the market for only five or six weeks, and the same thing applies to Bartlett pears. What did the present government do?

Mr. GRAY: What did the Minister of Trade and Commerce do?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the hon. member try to be quiet just for once? This is the same old calf story.

The fruit business is seasonal. The fruit is available only in its ripened state; it cannot be kept even in cold storage for more than a week or two. When the season is over, no more fruit is available. In order to protect the fruit farmers of this country during the season, this government has put an embargo upon fruit coming in from the United States. The previous government promised to do this, but they did not. When the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Dunning, introduced his budget he told the house that it was impossible to put a seasonal tariff upon fruit. Six days afterwards he did introduce a seasonal tariff but it proved to be unworkable. This government has a tariff which is workable. Fruit is allowed to enter the country only after our own fruit has gone off the market; the embargo is not lifted until the ripened fruit season is over. The Canadian canners pay twice as much for Canadian fruit as they would have to pay for American fruit, but they are not permitted to buy American fruit while our own is on the market. That is something the opposition never did for the farmer and never would do. Heaven knows we asked them often enough to do it.

I have no interest in this matter; I am not interested in any canning company, but I hate to see men get up in this house and talk until the cows come home upon a subject about which they know nothing. That has happened on more than one occasion. I come from a county where there are over twenty-five canning factories; the fruit industry of Lincoln county is as large as if not larger than that in any other county in Canada. I know something of conditions there, and something of conditions in the trade, and when one sees members get up and talk in this fashion it is absolutely sickening.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (North Bruce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) has certainly made a few facts abundantly clear. He spoke quite correctly with respect to the fact that Canada's export trade in manufactured products was not confined entirely to the production and further processing of Canadian goods and that much of our export trade was built up on raw materials which came from other parts of the empire and other parts of the world. He mentioned the rubber industry. It is true we enjoy within the British Empire considerable export trade in rubber products, the cotton of course, coming from either Egypt or the United States and the rubber from Malaysia. We enjoy a considerable market in other countries for canned fruits and vegetables and in the past, in order to have continuity of operation of our canneries, as the hon. member for Lincoln has said, we have permitted the importation of fruits and vegetables for canning in Canadian factories. I do not think anyone in the house disagrees in general with the principle of trying to have continuity of work in an industry where the Canadian product is seasonal, nor do I think anyone objects particularly to the importation of fruits which are not grown in Canada, such as grapefruit, oranges and fruits of that type. This at least gives the Canadian workman an occupation during a season of the year when the Canadian product is not available for canning. I think, however, the hon. member for Lincoln was wrong in regard to his statement on embargoes. I do not think there has ever been an embargo placed on fruit for canning purposes. I may be mistaken.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. member is mistaken. I know there has been.

Mr. MALCOLM: Well, I was of that opinion, and I stand corrected if the hon. member is quite sure of the fact.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know it.

Mr. MALCOLM: But there is another point to which I should like to make slight reference. We have made some agreements with the British Empire and it has been heralded, I think rather broadly across this continent, that by these agreements the Canadian producers are to benefit. The Canadian producers will benefit in many instances; they certainly will benefit on raw fruits such as apples which have a preference in the British market. I have before me an article which appeared in the Financial Post on November 18 and the heading tells the story just about as clearly as the hon. member for Lincoln has told it. The article is headed:

Canadian canned fruits taken by British markets. Ocean steamship at St. Catharines takes entire cargo of pears and peaches canned by Canadian canners.

That is a very careful statement. The house will observe it does not say that the steamship takes an entire cargo of Canadian pears and peaches canned by Canadian canners. In the address which was made and to which this article was referring, the same being made by one of the officers of Canadian Canners, I note the speaker has been careful to make himself clear that the fruit was canned in Canada and not that it was of Canadian origin. I wish to make only one observation and it is this, that so far as the agreements are concerned, the statement of the hon. member for Lincoln clears up the point abundantly. The agreements do not give to Canadian producers of fruit for canning purposes any preference whatever in the British market. My hon. friend has made that quite clear. Certainly the agreement gives us a preference in the British market for fruit canned in Canada.

]Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. BENNETT: I thought we had finished these agreements.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my right hon. friend will let me proceed when I am agreeing with the hon. member for Lincoln.

Mr. BENNETT: I was not in the chamber at the time that the hon. member for Lincoln was speaking, but these matters having been voted upon and disposed of, having been sent to the Senate and passed by it, are we now going to waste the time of the house at the rate of $15,000 a day on this?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MALCOLM: I shall not delay the house a minute, because my speech is almost finished.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member was rising to a point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser) this afternoon brought up a grievance as any hon. member has a right to do on the motion to go into supply. Any hon. member has the right to discuss any grievance on the motion to go into supply.

Mr. MALCOLM: In deference to the Prime Minister's suggestion, which I think is quite reasonable, I shall not delay the house. I think we are all out of order, but as I am answering the hon. member for Lincoln, I think my right hon. friend will allow me a minute.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I was only answering somebody else.

Mr. MALCOLM: The speech of the hon. member for Lincoln is quite in accord with the facts in this instance, and it clears up any doubt in the mind of the house and should clear up any doubt in the minds of the people that any preference we are receiving in the British market for canned fruits and vegetables will be of benefit to Canadian labour and Canadian canners but will be of no direct benefit to Canadian fruit growers.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the house will permit me, I should like to decide the point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It was withdrawn.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I rule that the discussion which has taken place is out of order.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): In the hope that the fruit industry will survive the little storm which has raged so violently in the house for a short time, I desire to discuss in a more quiet atmosphere a question which is of great importance to the country, namely, that of unemployment. I do so now with some embarrassment because I hesitate to prolong the proceedings and delay hon. members in returning to their homes.

In a consideration of the question of unemployment there are two factors which are outstanding in the minds of all members of the house: first, the duty of parliament and of the people of Canada to care for those hundreds of thousands of people who are not any longer able to care for themselves; and second, and this is infinitely more difficult, the necessity of finding the causes and devising a remedy for the position in which we find ourselves.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) a few days ago gave to the house the information that there are now dependents on the bounty of the people of Canada no fewer than 850,000 people. That in itself constitutes to my mind a tragedy. Although I was aware, like other hon. members of the house, that there was a great deal of distress in the country, I was shocked at the magnitude of those figures. In view of the fact that in Canada there is plenty and the means of producing a great deal more, and that the same condition obtains in almost every civilized country of the world, it is a reflection not only upon civilization but upon Christianity, if you will, that such a condition should have arisen and should have continued to this day, with no real relief in prospect.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) some days ago said that we were moving toward a new economic order of things. I wish I knew exactly what was in his mind when he used those words. I believe he is right, but I wonder if he could explain to the house just what the nature of that movement is, and whether it is controlled, whether it is controllable, or whether we are merely drifting in a direction the end of which we do not know and cannot foresee.

The question of unemployment may fairly be divided into two main phases: First, the question of relief itself, which has nothing to do with the cure of unemployment; and secondly, the cure of the condition in which we now find ourselves.

So far as relief is concerned, every member of the house will join with the Minister of Labour when he says that there shall not be any man, woman or child in this country who will not be supplied with food, clothing and shelter. That may necessitate the taking from those who have and giving to those who have not. So far the debate on unemployment has confined itself mainly to methods of giving relief, which has nothing whatever to do with the cure of unemployment itself. Last year and the year before the method that was adopted by the government, in accordance with the policy of the Prime Minister that he was not going to hand out doles but proposed to give work to all who needed it, was this: Federally, to proceed with the construction of public works; provincially, helping some of the provinces, for example, in connection with the construction of a national highway, which project I imagine was not entirely as successful as it might have been; and municipally, through assistance received from the province and from the dominion a great deal of work was anticipated, that is, construction which might have been postponed for some years but was proceeded with then in order to provide employment. The difficulty was that the municipalities were called upon to spend such large sums of money that they have now arrived at a position where they can no longer pursue that course, and so, according to the Prime Minister, we have a request from the municipalities through the provinces, and from the provinces themselves that this year the relief shall take the form of direct assistance. I have no great fault to find with that, although of course I might say to the Prime Minister that he has been obliged to change his course. I might say to the Prime Minister in that regard, and to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) in connection with the debate that we had, that it is never safe for any man, least of all a public man, to make statements or promises that extend too far into the future, because conditions may arise necessitating a change of course of action.

We have now entered upon a new policy, a policy which I believe is hardly justified, and that is the policy, and I say it with some hesitancy, of making cash loans and cash advances to private corporations. My hon. friends will all understand to what I allude. I have no objection to means being provided so that men may be given employment, but I would draw to the attention of the government the fact that they are establishing a rather dangerous precedent. Generally I am not much given to considering precedents, even though my lawyer friends may be; but I think the government is placing itself in rather an unenviable position when it advances help to one private corporation, which after all is conducted for profit, and which precedent will undoubtedly subject the government to demands, perhaps just as fair, from many hundreds of other sources which the government, I imagine, cannot concede.

I shall not say very much on the question of direct relief because it is largely a matter of efficient administration, to be handled on a non-partisan basis, with common sense and humanitarianism, and at that I am willing to leave it. But the question of direct relief has nothing whatever to do with curing the causes of unemployment. I propose to deal with the question, if I might say so, in the larger sense.

There are those who now say—we on this side have always said it—that unemployment and the condition in which we now find ourselves is largely attributable to world causes and that it obtains throughout the civilized world. That is true. But it does not follow that as a nation we cannot take certain steps which will at least alleviate or ameliorate the present condition. This I think we may as well lay down as a basic requirement before the world can return to prosperity: it must escape from the tremendous debt resulting from the war and in which perhaps our friends in the United States constitute the chief and deciding factor. These debts must be reduced or cancelled, and more than that the world must get away from the spirit of war, that spirit which today, despite the League of Nations which was organized for the prevention of war, in Europe alone prompts the spending in preparation for another war of no less than about $5,000,000,000.

There is another condition of which we must rid ourselves. I refer to that feeling of patriotism, or that false doctrine—yes, I will call it a false doctrine—which leads nations to surround themselves with unscalable tariff walls. That is done in many instances with the idea of patriotism, which expresses itself in that way. Not only that, but in many countries patriotism seems to imply not only a love of one's own country but a hatred of or antagonism towards another. I said a minute ago that these are world conditions which must be dealt with. When one looks upon Europe today, considers the temper of European countries and of countries in South America which are on the verge of war, one is at once aware of the difficulties with which the world has to cope before improved conditions may be brought about.

I had intended to touch upon the problem from a Canadian standpoint, and what can be done by Canada itself to relieve ourselves from the excessive condition of unemployment around us. To my hon. friends in the corner of the house may I say that for about three years, since the beginning of the depression, I have listened to them and learned to regard them with a good deal of admiration. Sometimes I have envied them their attitude of certainty. Lately, when I have listened as they have given to the house the benefit of their advice as to what could be done to relieve us from the conditions under which we are suffering—and I am not saying this in any critical sense—I have regarded them with a feeling of inferiority, for I did not feel so sure as they do as to the remedy. However, when I learned two or three weeks ago that a greater man, perhaps, than most of us, Sir Montagu Norman, Governor of the Bank of England, had, figuratively speaking, thrown up his hands and admitted that he did not know what to do, I felt that my self respect had been more or less restored. That does not mean after all that we should do likewise, but it does mean that he confessed his ignorance and humility just as I am doing now, by inference.

I feel, after all, that we might discuss in a more or less hopeful vein some of the things we could do. There is one matter which has been mentioned frequently by hon. members in the corner of the house and in connection with which I must again admit a lack of knowledge and, if you like, an ignorance—I am referring to the matter of currency reform. All I should like to say in that connection is that when we have a condition, under the system as it now obtains, whereby a man who three years ago created a certain debt now has to pay it three times over, having regard to the value he receives for his commodities, then certainly something must be wrong. What the remedy is I do not know. Our friends in the corner of the house recommend inflation. Sometimes I am not quite sure just what inflation means, and I imagine that many hon. members in the house, if they speak their minds, would admit a similar lack of knowledge.

Perhaps the Prime Minister has now come to the conclusion that a certain degree of inflation may be advisable. With the issue of $35,000,000 more of currency I believe inflation has been started at least in some degree. Further, the other day the Prime Minister admitted something I believe he had never admitted before, namely that we are no longer on the gold standard.

Mr. RHODES: Oh yes, he had.

Mr. EULER: If I may say so, my mind is quite open with regard to the matter and, if the Prime Minister and his government should see fit to enter upon a reasonably controlled degree of inflation, I am inclined to believe that I should support them.

Another matter which has been brought to the attention of the house by the labour members is that concerning shorter hours, a condition closely linked up with the introduction of labour saving machinery. Although we term such machinery "labour saving machinery," perhaps it should not be so called. I may be wrong in that respect, but I fear that often such machines have not worked out entirely to the benefit of those operating them. Certainly in every constituency which is industrially organized, such as my own city of Kitchener, the introduction of labour saving machinery has literally replaced thousands of men. I am not opposed to the introduction or the development of machinery. I do not believe we should discontinue its use. I do not believe it is good for a man to labour from early morning until late at night, ten hours, nine hours or even eight hours a day, if machinery can be made to do the work the man formerly did. I believe it would now be possible, if men were put to work with the machinery at our disposal, and through the medium of machines which will be invented in the future, to produce by four or five hours of labour each day sufficient to meet the requirements of all the people. Under those conditions it would be right for the working man to enjoy the leisure which undoubtedly would be his, a leisure which could be devoted to recreation or amusement, or for the benefit of body and soul, if you wish to put it that way. I believe in that. I have no doubt that one of the remedies and one of the results which must come from the introduction of machinery will be shorter hours of labour. I realize that the introduction of machinery and shorter hours presents many problems, some perhaps international, but at this time I shall not dwell upon them.

Then, there is another remedy which the present government has tried with, I suggest, no satisfactory results; I refer to extremely high tariffs. With that point I shall not detain the house long. My position in relation to tariffs is well known. I am not in favour of extremely high tariffs, and I believe even now members of the government will admit that as a factor in the cure of unemployment the introduction of extremely high tariffs has not been a success. It has not been successful in creating greater purchasing power within the country. Further, since higher tariffs have been in force our foreign trade has declined from a position of fifth in world trade to that of seventh.

Mr. McLURE: Would the hon. member be satisfied if the farmers of Canada worked only four or five hours a day?

Mr. EULER: I should be very happy if they could operate their farms in that way. Perhaps it can be worked out. I should not attempt to do so, however, because I am not an expert. On the other hand, if they were able to do that I should be pleased, because I do not play favourites.

I was going to suggest that it might be possible to do something by way of controlling production. By that I do not imply that there is overproduction. I believe there will never be overproduction so long as the wants of every individual are not satisfied. I was directing my attention to another phase of the matter, and thinking particularly of the organization of industries for which there is no necessity. I refer particularly to over-expansion of industry. The example which occurs to my mind is that of the manufacture of paper. For many years there was sufficient equipment in Canada for all the business in this commodity we could get, and yet there were people, men who were not "paper people," but promoters, who went into the field, organized new companies and built new mills which since have gone into the hands of the receivers, and the investors' money has been lost. The suggestion I was going to make to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it is more or less casual, is whether it would not be in the interests of the Canadian people that the Department of Trade and Commerce should have a branch which would devote itself to the acquisition of knowledge and information with regard to all lines of business, and particularly manufacture, in Canada; so that the investing public might have some means of ascertaining whether the business in which they are asked to invest their money has any chance for success. It might be possible to go even further, to work out a scheme with the provinces whereby if upon investigation it were shown that there really is not room for the investment of further capital in any particular line of business, a charter could be refused.

Then we have the remedy—or rather not a cure but a palliative—of unemployment insurance. I favour unemployment insurance, as I think does every member. The Prime Minister has declared himself in favour of such a measure. He stated that it was delayed last year until compilation could be made from the census reports. I think that time has now arrived, and I suggest to him that the government concern itself with the working out of an adequate system of unemployment insurance.

I wish to make another suggestion, which is not original, but of which I read a few days ago in the Saturday Evening Post. It might be called the rationing of work; to ration work just as food and fuel were rationed during the war. I will read a short extract and leave it as a suggestion to the government for inquiry. The article is headed:

Job Spreading by Job Sharing

It goes on to say:

Now that the share-the-work movement is in operation from coast to coast and, has set up a regional organization in each federal reserve district, it cannot be premature to direct attention to the accomplishment it already has to its credit and to point out its possibilities as an engine for preventing the further spread of unemployment.

The basic idea of tiding the unemployed over present hardships by employing more hands for fewer hours a day or fewer days a week is simplicity itself; but its application to scores of differing trades and industries, each of which has requirements inseparable from its nature, is anything but simple.

The specifications for any sound plan for hastening business recovery demand that it be to the common advantage of three overlapping but still different groups,—the employers, the employed, and the general public. The share-the-work movement appears to meet this three-fold requirement, and its sponsors seem fully warranted in declaring that it helps the employer because work spreading hastens business recovery; that it is to the advantage of the worker because job sharing makes for job security; that the public benefits because spreading employment means spreading spending power and the feeling of confidence and security that follow in their train.

I appreciate that that is not a cure, but it might be of some assistance.

Now I am going to venture for a moment upon a subject my attitude concerning which may be misinterpreted. If so, so much the worse for me. It rests upon what has become more or less a platitude, that while the world has solved the problem of production, and can produce sufficient for every man, woman and child, especially in Canada, it has not solved the problem of distribution; in other words, that which is produced is concentrated more or less in a few hands. I discussed this question a few days ago with one of my friends, and when I stated my thought with regard to it he said: "That is the Karl Marx doctrine." Well, I must admit, perhaps to my discredit, that I have never read the works of Karl Marx. But this theorem or principle does appeal to me; that wealth, generally speaking, is produced almost entirely by the application of labour to natural resources, whether it be on the farm, in the factory, the mine, the stream or the forest. I make due allowance for management, transportation and so on—

Mr. RHODES: And capital.

Mr. EULER: Yes, I will include capital in a reasonable way. If then it is found that there are great accumulations of wealth in a few hands, and poverty and distress obtain among the workers who have produced it, surely it is fair to assume that the spread between the man who has and the man who has produced is greater than it should be; in other words that capital is receiving too large a share of that which is produced.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Take care of the iron heel!

Mr. EULER: We are faced with the problem of better distribution. I am inclined to think that hardly a member in this house does not believe in the accuracy and fairness of what I have said. But how are we to obtain better distribution? That of course is a difficult question. There are those who say—I think we have some in the corner—that we ought to scrap the present capitalistic system. I am not here to advocate that. Others say we should modify the system we now have, and I believe that at least for the present we ought to try that out. That we must do something I am convinced. Whether it shall take the form of taxation of profits, of profit sharing in industry, which already obtains in some industries managed by far-seeing and humanitarian leaders, I do not know. I read some time ago—perhaps my hon. friends in the corner will be interested in this from the Labour press, although they probably read it long before I did—an editorial in a Labour magazine. It said that the working people were already convinced that socialism is coming, in fact were so fully convinced of it that they were sitting more or less with folded hands waiting for it to come. The article went on to say that the editor himself was not in favour of the application of socialism now, because people were not ready for it. He hoped that the capitalistic system, which he seemed to think was more or less staggering, ought to be restored for the time being, and in the interval between the present and the coming of socialism the Labour people and the public generally should prepare themselves for the duty of making the system operative when the proper time arrived. Now, I am not a socialist, but the mere fact that a man believes in certain principles in which socialists also believe does not necessarily make him a socialist. Here again my self-respect is restored when I hear men like Sir Josiah Stamp state in a speech which he made in the parliamentary restaurant that perhaps the remedy for the ills from which we were suffering lies somewhere between our present system and that which they have today in Russia. I should hardly have dared to go as far as that, but if I did I would be in pretty good company; I could cite other prominent economists also. The word "socialism" has no particular terrors for me, although, as I say, one's attitude is apt to be misinterpreted. I read the other day, or someone was telling me, about a book which in the time of the Czar someone attempted to introduce into Russia. The title of the book, I think, was The Dynamics of Sociology, and the officers at the border refused to let the book enter because they thought the word "dynamics" indicated that it had something to do with dynamite and the blowing up of the present system, and "sociology" indicated that it was to teach socialism. I cite that as showing that we have a fear of something just because of its name when as a matter of fact we have the thing already.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A fear of words.

Mr. EULER: We allow ourselves to be handicapped by the fear of words. We have in Canada a system that is socialistic in a certain sense. The municipality from which I come owns the waterworks, the electric light plant, the gas plant, the street railway—

Mr. LAPOINTE: And liquor?

Mr. EULER: No, not in the municipality I come from. I can see the direction in which my hon. friend's mind is running. But we have all these things, and I will say to my hon. friends in this house in whose localities the principle of public ownership has not made the same progress as it has in mine, which is of course, the most progressive community in Canada, that it has been extremely successful. These services have been given the people of that community at a low cost and in just as efficient a manner as they could have been given by any private business. Provincially we have the great hydro system which in the past has been a great boon to the people of Ontario, and which I hope will carry on in the same way in future. We also own a railway running from the city of Toronto to James bay. Let me say this also, though I am afraid it will not meet with the approval of some hon. members of this house: The success of the hydro in Ontario would not have been possible but for the fact that it is a monopoly. I have no patience with those newspapers and individuals who constantly say that we want no monopoly, either public or private; that all monopolies are bad. I have said before in this chamber that a public monopoly loses the sinister features of a private monopoly, because it is conducted on an entirely different basis and for an entirely different purpose. The purpose of private ownership, of course, is profit, while the purpose of public ownership is service at as low a cost as possible. The inducement for the abuse of privileges in a public monopoly is not present as it is in a private monopoly. We also have in Ontario, as well as in every other province in the dominion, the public control of the traffic in liquor, and I am inclined to believe that this works a great deal better than was the case when it was in private hands. In the dominion we have had the post office for many years; that is a socialistic activity, if you like to call it that, and we have the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): That is a tough one.

Mr. EULER: I suppose hon. gentlemen will say, as my colleague from South Waterloo (Mr. Edwards) says, that this is a tough one. I do not intend to say much about the Canadian National Railways, though I am very much interested in them. If the national railways are in difficulties they are in just about the same condition as their great private competitor, and I think those difficulties are largely the result of the failure of private ownership. In my opinion—and here I know I am treading dangerous ground—if the national railways had the same monopoly of the railway business that the hydro has in that business in Ontario, we would have a successful system today.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Under the same kind of management, perhaps.

Mr. EULER: Under a good government it would have that management. Some eight years ago, Mr. Speaker, I had the temerity to make the suggestion in this house that it would be worth while for the government of Canada—and it was a Liberal government at that time—to make a canvass of the whole railway situation, with a possible view of the amalgamation of the two great roads. I made the statement then, and I had it on very good authority, that we could save at least $75,000,000 yearly by the cutting out of wasteful competition. Not long ago, before the Royal Commisison on Railways and Transportation, Mr. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, stated that a saving of $65,000,000 a year could be effected by the amalgamation of the two roads, and if that had been done at that time, in the ten years that have elapsed we could have saved possibly three-quarters of a billion dollars, or about one-third of the national debt.

I had not intended to go into this matter very deeply, Mr. Speaker, but as I said at the outset of my remarks, it is never very safe to make too definite statements, especially if you are in public life, or too definite promises as to what you may do in the future, and when I say that I am not referring to the promises made by the Prime Minister in regard to unemployment. I am referring to the slogan, if you like to call it that, which the Prime Minister nailed to the mast during his campaign. In connection with the railways he said, "Amalgamation never; competition ever." I believe that before very long the Prime Minister will have to reverse that slogan, because if we continue as we are going at present in connection with the two railways, with the consequent waste, this country will not be able to bear the burden.

I am out of order, perhaps, but I should like to make just a reference to the recommendations made by the royal commission. They advocate compulsory cooperation. This may be the only thing that can be done, but I will say that I have no great faith in compulsory cooperation; the two things just do not go together. I say further that in the future we will find the old slogan "competition is the life of trade" out of date; in certain respects at least competition is the death of trade and of prosperity. I hope that in future the slogan of Canadians and of the world will be cooperation rather than competition.

The question now is how far we can go in the direction of these socialistic tendencies, if you like to so call them. I am not prepared to say. It has been suggested that we should have a national bank, and that may be a good suggestion. It has been suggested also, and I am rather inclined to favour the suggestion, that we should at least mutualize our life insurance companies, and there may be many other directions in which we might proceed. The point I want to make, however, is that I believe some modification of our present system is necessary. We may survive the present difficulties; after a while we may turn that mythical corner of which we have heard so much, around which we will find prosperity. I do not desire to be pessimistic, but I am a little afraid it may be some time before we turn that corner. Whether or not that is so, however, some time later we will have another period of depression, and that will happen again and again unless we modify our system.

Some people think depressions are absolutely necessary under our capitalistic system. I do not believe that, but if it be so, then so much the worse for our system. In the olden days people believed that epidemics of smallpox, yellow fever and other diseases were dispensations of Providence, but science has overcome those epidemics. It does seem to me that it should not be regarded as inevitable that these alternate periods of depression and prosperity should exist in a country such as Canada. I feel that whether or not we see the way clear, at least we should make some effort to find a remedy. If there is one thing in the public mind at this time—and this applies not only to the people who have not very much by way of money or possessions but also to every member of this house, as it applies to myself—it is the constant fear of the future. We do not know what the future will bring, yet we are living in a country and in a world that can and should produce enough for everyone if that production is properly distributed. Surely there must be men of ability in this country, men of good will if you like, men like those who accomplished wonders during the development of the world's civilization, who can find a remedy, so that we should not regard ourselves as impotent to make further advances in the direction we desire to go.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, although I have made one or two tentative suggestions which possibly may be quite valueless, I admit, that I do not know the exact course of procedure which will bring about that which we all desire. During last session the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) proposed a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee or commission which would look into questions of this kind and present its findings and advice to the government. As I recall it, that resolution was passed by the house and accepted by the government, and I would suggest that action be taken along the lines suggested. Hon. members opposite, including the Prime Minister, have asked for the cooperation of members of parliament in the difficulties through which we are passing. The Prime Minister has a right to make that request; I think it is our duty to extend that cooperation just so far as may be possible, and I was going to make this suggestion entirely on my own responsibility, unless the Prime Minister accepts the one I made with regard to the resolution adopted last year: the Prime Minister might very well consult with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the leaders of the parties to my left in connection with the appointing of a committee. This committee could consist of certain hon. members of this house, augmented and supplemented by men in the country from whom we could obtain information or inspiration and advice. This committee would have the power of investigation and of forming settled opinions so that some sort of program might be drafted which would enable us to proceed in the promotion of that condition to which we would like to return or which we would like to reestablish. It might be found that such a committee would prove to be of real assistance to the Prime Minister when he goes to the next world conference or succeeding world conference upon the deliberations and recommendations of which may depend the prosperity of the world in general and Canada in particular.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COST OF SNOW REMOVAL FROM GASPE BRANCH LINE

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, under the privilege which we have under this motion to go into supply, I wish for a moment to comment upon the publicity given to the evidence of Mr. Appleton, head of the Atlantic region of the Canadian National Railways, before the Duff commission. The summary of this evidence appears in the Montreal Gazette. In dealing with the various branch lines throughout the maritime provinces, Mr. Appleton made the statement that one year it cost a million dollars to remove the snow from the Gaspe line. This statement is so preposterous that I cannot believe it was made by Mr. Appleton. I have been requested by the people in my district to correct any impression which may have been created in respect to this particular line. Snow removal upon this line costs no more than it does on other lines. Some winters we have very little snow, at times the first snow not coming until the middle of January. I think it is only fair to the people in this district to correct any impression which may have gone abroad that this particular branch line of the Canadian National Railways is being maintained at such a tremendous cost.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, for two or three days we have been discussing the questions of unemployment and farm relief. These two questions are somewhat related and until we can bring about a reasonable return to the farmers for the expenditure and cost of production, we will have an unemployment problem upon our hands. In anything I say this afternoon I do not wish to be understood as condemning any policy because it has not brought about one hundred per cent results nor in advocating anything as a cure-all for our ills. It has been said again and again that the farmers are chronic kickers. There are always some people who are failures and who will complain even in the best of times, there are others who can make a success in the hardest of times and living under the worst of conditions.

The question of the return which the farmer receives for the produce he places upon the markets of this country or of the world has been studied scientifically and thoroughly by the Department of Agriculture. I should like to refer to certain figures which appear in bulletin number 159 issued by this department in 1932, and dealing with the cost of producing farm crops in the prairie provinces. This study of the costs of production was made with the idea of ascertaining just where the farmers could reduce their costs. The farmer must market his products in competition with the world, and even though he sells on the home market, it is necessary that costs of production should be reduced if at all possible. I intend to refer to the cost of producing wheat given in this bulletin, and then set over against those costs the prices received by the farmer. This study has been very thorough and I do not think anything like it has ever been attempted before, at least I have not come across anything as thorough. The study was made in cooperation with eight experimental farms, by thirty-one dominion illustration stations in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and in addition a survey was made by private individuals in cooperation with the officials of the department. The cost of producing wheat for the period 1923 to 1930 is given as 64 cents per bushel for wheat after fallow. In the second year after wheat, the cost is given as 75 cents per bushel. These figures were obtained from the dominion experimental farms. In the case of the illustration stations in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, where there was a check of thirty-one stations, the cost of producing wheat after summer-fallow was 63 cents per bushel, and the cost for the second year after fallow, 76 cents per bushel. On private farms the costs were 78 cents and $1.12 respectively. If I am correct in my figuring, the average cost of producing wheat up to 1930 was 65 cents per bushel.

It may be said that the cost of producing since 1930 has been reduced but I do not think that the reduction amounts to very much. The farm at Rosthern secured the lowest cost of production, the figures being as follows:

| Use of land | $3 00 |
| Seed at $1.18 per bushel | 1 47 |
| Machinery | 1 35 |
| Twine at 15 cents per pound | 0 39 |
| Manual labour at 25 cents per hour | 1 13 |
| Horse labour at 8 cents per hour | 1 18 |
| One-third cost of summer-fallow | 2 48 |
| Threshing at 12 cents per bushel | 2 70 |

This gives a total cost per acre of $13.70 which based on a yield of 22.5 bushels per acre, gives a cost per bushel of 61 cents. If we revise these figures downward and estimate the seed at about 50 cents per bushel, twine at about 9 cents per pound, labour at about $1 per day and threshing at 5 cents per bushel, leaving the other costs at the level of 1930, we get a cost per bushel of about 46 cents. That does not allow for anything over and above the actual costs.

I find that the average return to the farmer in the three prairie provinces for the year 1930 was 44 cents per bushel. In other words, they lost that year about two cents a bushel, but they got the bonus. In 1931 they got thirty-eight cents and the loss in that year was about eight or nine cents a bushel. This year, without any reduction in cost below the 1930 figure, we have an estimate of what is actually reaching the farmers on the average grain on their farms, of twenty-five to twenty-nine cents a bushel. In other words, the farmers have been losing from eight to twenty cents during the last two years. If we take the figures from 1923 to 1929, we find that the farmers were making a profit of about fourteen or fifteen cents a bushel and things were going fairly well in Canada at that time. But that was not an exorbitant profit; it was a reasonable profit.

The question may be asked, and asked quite fairly, whether, because of the prosperous conditions we enjoyed from 1923 to 1930, the farmers should not have been able to stand the gaff, as some people say, in the last two years. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has raised the question why the farmers were in difficulties during 1930 considering the total value of their production in the preceding few years. There was issued by the Imperial economic committee, volume twenty, on the wheat situation, 1931, and at page 111 there is a statement taken, I believe, from tables prepared by the statisticians in Great Britain showing the relative value of wheat as compared with other commodities in Great Britain. The figures may not apply strictly to Canada, but I do not think that we have any figures worked out on this basis in this country. These figures are given over the period from 1846 to 1930. In 1846 we start off with 100, and if you follow the course of the value of all commodities in Great Britain, excluding wheat and flour, and the value of wheat in terms of other commodities, you will find that the value of wheat has been sliding down steadily ever since 1846. I should like to make a brief reference to 1909. In that year the index figure for all commodities excluding wheat and flour was 91, and for wheat 82. Taking the war and succeeding years, the figures are as follows:

| 1914 | 69 | 103 |
| 1917 | 69 | 218 |
| 1918 | 60 | 242 |
| 1919 | 54 | 261 |
| 1920 | 52 | 317 |

This illustrates the fact that notwithstanding the high prices for wheat during the war the cost of other commodities in relation to wheat rose very high as compared with what they had been prior to the war.

Coming to the last few years, let us take the prosperous years we have had from 1923 to 1929:

| Year— | Wheat | Other commodities |
| 1923 | 52 | 162 |
| 1924 | 56 | 176 |
| 1925 | 62 | 175 |
| 1927 | 67 | 152 |
| 1930 | 56 | 122 |

The story is simply this, that the wheat producer throughout the world has been giving constantly since 1846 more wheat for less commodities and the disparity as between wheat and goods was greater during the time wheat was selling well over $1 a bushel than in ordinary times, outside the last three years, when wheat was around sixty-five to seventy cents. The charge against the farmers in general throughout the world that they are complainers; that they are not efficient, is, in view of those facts, absolutely wrong and not an expression of intelligence. So I submit that we have before us a real problem. Whether we can solve it, whether we can do anything to solve it, is another matter.

I should like briefly to refer to the question of cattle. We have not as complete statistics with regard to the cost of producing or finishing cattle as we have with regard to wheat, but we have some. There is an experimental station at Manyberries, Alberta, where under range conditions the figures are as follows:

| Per 100 Pounds Live Weight | |
|---|---|
| Cost of calves (in fall) | $7 25 |
| Cost of yearlings (in fall) | 6 98 |
| Cost of two-year olds (in fall) | 6 42 |
| Cost of three-year olds (in fall) | 6 15 |

It has been said that if there is nothing in wheat, the thing to do is to raise cattle. What are the prices of cattle? These are range figures that I have given. I think it is fair to say that it costs a little more to produce cattle under farm than under range conditions. Further, we ought to call attention to the fact that these are prices on the range, not on the market. It would cost probably $1 per 100 pounds to get a lot of that stuff on to the market. So, while there has been a drop of possibly 30 per cent in the price of feed grains, it would still be necessary, in order to pay the cost of producing these animals, the cost of getting them to the market and the feed, to get about five cents a pound. I have under my hand a statement in the monthly bulletin of agricultural statistics for September, 1932. I am taking the quotations at Calgary and Edmonton of steers up to 1,050 pounds common. In Calgary they were selling from $3.50 per 100 pounds in May to $2 in August. That is the lowest figure given. That is the problem. They are returning about 40, 50 or 60 per cent of the cost of production. In Edmonton the price of steers common, up to 1,050 pounds, ranged from $3.20 per 100 pounds in May to $2.05 in August, and for steers over 1,050 pounds common, from $3.18 per 100 pounds in May to $2.06 in August. You lose on the production of wheat; you lose on the production of cattle if you feed the wheat to cattle. That is the story.

What about hogs? I do not want to take time or to weary the house, but I should like to give just a few figures taken from the report of the superintendent at the experimental station at Lacombe, Alberta, and I have checked them against figures of Ontario and further east in Canada. The cost of producing hogs in 1930 at Lacombe was $6.50 per 100 pounds for feed alone, nothing for labour, nothing for depreciation of buildings, nothing for the cost of carrying on the parent stock. That is given at page 36 of the report of the superintendent for 1930. Let us take bacon hogs. The price of hogs at Calgary was $3.37 in May and $4.08 in August. That might bring back the feed cost of production if we allow for the fact that feed has dropped in price a little from 1930. At Edmonton the price of bacon hogs was $3.25 in May and $3.92 in August. It is the same story there.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the agricultural problem. What are we going to do about it? Prices have not gone up to any very great extent since August of this year. In fact, some have come down. Wheat has come down, and there does not seem to be any bottom to the wheat market. I have here a statement prepared by the Imperial Economic Committee. In its twentieth report on The Wheat Situation, at page 105, it shows the approximate wheat stocks in important areas from August 1, 1921 to August 1, 1932 as follows:

| 1921 | 476,000,000 |
| 1922 | 507,000,000 |
| 1923 | 461,000,000 |
| 1924 | 578,000,000 |
| 1925 | 419,000,000 |

In other words, at the end of August 1, 193. we had more wheat in the world than is imported annually by the leading importing countries of the world. They usually import about 800,000,000 bushels. There was a little drop down in wheat stocks during the year 1931, but while I do not want to take time to quote the figures I may say that that was more than made up this year. We have wheat stocks in the world to-day of approximately 1,000,000,000 bushels, and available for export possibly 700,000,000 bushels. So I submit that whatever the government may do—I think the government was wise in the steps it took to support the wheat pool in marketing our western wheat, and I want to give the government credit for that—in face of the vast oversupply of wheat that we have in the world today there is no possibility of raising the price, and we might as well face that fact. It is no use handing out statements to the press that we have marketed a few more million bushels of wheat over a certain period than we did over a similar period in a former year and so on, so long as we have a huge surplus hanging over the world that we cannot get rid of. Nor can you raise prices of cattle or hogs so long as you have a huge surplus hanging over the market. When we were discussing the trade treaties I said then that you cannot raise prices while you have huge surpluses pressing on the buying market all the time. You cannot do it. If we are to save our present social system or save it long enough till we can change it for something better there must be a reasonable increase in prices, and the question of raising prices is not altogether a question of raising the value. Prices is a purely relative term. If we cannot raise prices in the world's markets we can decrease the cost of production, and decrease the value of money in relation to the price of wheat, thereby making our produce worth more in relation to money. That is the only thing we can do.

It has been argued that the value of gold is always the same. Yes, it is, in relation to gold, but not in relation to anything else. Just as motion is a purely relative thing, so is value, and the only thing I can see to do in this regard without advocating inflation and increasing the volume of credit or money, or whatever you like to call it, is to lower the value of money in relation to our commodities. It is the flow of money or credit or whatever you like to call it in accordance with the law of supply and demand that determines the value of money in relation to all your commodities. That same law applies to money just the same as it does to wheat or anything else. But the world has been restricting credit in spite of the gold basis. Take what has happened in the United States, which country we have been trying to follow to some extent here in Canada. I have a report of an address here which was made by Donald M. Marvin, Ph.D., economist of the Royal Bank of Canada, in which he sets forth what happened in the United States about 1929. He says:

> In the months which followed the clash in security prices the volume of world trade declined steadily, and prices fell. As gold accumulated in the creditor countries, France and the United States, these countries did not increase their volume of outstanding credit; they permitted it to continue to contract. Even in recent months the weekly returns of the member banks in the United States show a decline in loans and investments of $1,000,000,000 since the first of November; $2,000,000,000 since the last of September, and $3,000,000,000 since April, 1931. The decline in the first four months from October has been at the rate of $6,000,000,000 per year, or more than 25 per cent per annum. No nation can stand such a contraction of credit.

While there may have been contraction or a drop in prices due to the fact that other countries were doing similar things, the contraction in Canada and the United States was also a factor, and a big factor, in the crash of commodity prices.

One reason why we want to see the dollar go down to the level of the pound is that it will mean that our commodities that we must sell on the basis of world prices will be worth more in relation to debts and in relation to the cost of production. We do not advance that as a cure-all. If we did we might well be laughed at. There will still be a lot of problems to be solved even after that is done. I do not think the government is taking the wise course in relation to the primary producers of this country in trying to keep the dollar up as high as possible. Somebody has to sacrifice, and I think the farmer has sacrificed in the last few years. I have advised the farmers throughout my constituency, notwithstanding the fact that I could not see any prospect in the near future of an improvement in conditions to any great extent, at least until this money question was tackled, in spite of the fact that the treaties are of some value and will do some real good, to continue on as carefully as possible because it is their duty to Canada to carry on. If the primary producers of this country were to throw up their hands, the bonds of the country and the savings of the people would not amount to much.

Some people take another position. The Prime Minister has taken it on one or two occasions, if I understood the reports of his speeches, namely, that because we ask for some inflation we are asking the government to do what they did in Germany and Russia during and after the war. Now if praying for rain means that you are praying for a flood, that would be all right; but it is not so. Our whole life is an attempt to regulate our conduct on the principle of moderation, a choice between two extremes. If it is right to argue that every man who takes a drink is a drunkard, it would be all right to argue that deflating the dollar to the level of the British pound would be asking the country to do what happened in Germany during the war. What happened in Germany? In December, 1920, they had 81 millard paper marks issued, and at that time 17 paper marks were worth one gold mark. In August, 1923, there were 116,000 millard paper marks issued, and it took 1,000,000 of them to equal one gold mark. That, Mr. Speaker, is inflation with a vengeance.

Then, turning to Austria we find that in June, 1920, there were 17 millard paper krone in circulation; at that time 27 paper krone were worth one gold krone. On August, 1923 there were 5,557 millard paper krone in cicu-lation, and 14,369 were required to equal one gold krone.

Then follow the currency conditions in Russia. We find in January, 1919 there were 61 millard paper roubles in circulation, and at that time 103 paper roubles equalled one gold rouble. In June, 1923 there were 8,050,000 millard paper roubles in circulation, and at that time 97,690,000 paper roubles equalled one gold rouble. These figures show the extent of inflation which obtained in Germany, Austria and Russia. What happened in those countries was that the savings of people holding wealth in titles to money were wiped out. Germany practically wiped out her internal debt. The same happened in Russia.

We do not want that to happen in Canada. The sensible basis upon which to regulate the volume of money—and it cannot be done without a central bank charged with responsibility—is in relation to price levels. Thereby one can issue a fair volume of money to the people who have saved up wealth, and a reasonably fair issue to the producers of commodities. That is the point at which we must aim. At present we are sacrificing the people who produce manufactured goods, and we are also sacrificing the farmers for the sake of those people who have wealth and titles to money. We are not asking the government to go to the other extreme, but merely asking for reasonable parity or equilibrium. There are other places also where parity might be established.

So, Mr. Speaker, that is one step which in my view may be taken. Some people ask: How can it be done? The Macmillan committee advanced various methods of doing it, but I believe it could be done very simply if the Prime Minister would announce tomorrow in this house that Canada, for the future, would try to stabilize her dollar on a level with the British pound, in relation to the United States dollar. I believe that would do it. Further, I believe anything done along that line, while it may take away from people who have wealth and titles to money, will make for better conditions generally among the whole population of Canada.

The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) who spoke immediately before me referred to the doubts entertained by Sir Montagu Norman and several other gentlemen. Certainly there is one thing about which there can be no doubt, namely that we cannot continue to go on as we are doing today. We must go somewhere. What have been the experiences in countries which have devalued their money? Has Great Britain lost? Undoubtedly some people in Britain had to lose, but Great Britain has been able to balance her budget. Further, if the figures given to the house by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) can be relied upon, and I believe they can, Great Britain has been able to show an increase in employment. She is maintaining her export business on the markets of the world better than any country that has chosen to remain on the gold basis. The United States, and several other countries on the gold basis, are losing heavily. Australia is operating on a devaluated currency. An editorial taken from an Ottawa Journal of recent date is as follows:

> A loan floated by the government of New South Wales in October, guaranteed by the Commonwealth government, was over subscribed within half an hour. The loan was for thirteen million pounds, to bear three and one-half per cent interest, and was issued at ninety-seven. . . .
> Professor Copland, of the Melbourne university School of Commerce, who is one of the Australian government's expert advisers, says that Australia has been saved by a three-fold policy:
> 1. Depreciation of currency in terms of gold. The exchange rate is now 25 per cent off sterling and 60 per cent off gold.
> 2. Expansion of credit.
> 3. Cutting of costs.

We have tried some of these things in Canada but not depreciated currency and expanding credit. We have been contracting credit although, I believe there has been some slight expansion lately. It is because I believe that will help in the present situation that I am advocating it to the house. I want to give the government full credit for what it has done in the marketing of wheat, although I wish it had been able to continue the bonus, because the need is desperate. If however the government cannot see its way clear to do that I think it is only fair that, in view of the tremendously difficult circumstances under which the farmers of western Canada are operating and for that matter all farmers, there should be a devaluation of the dollar, and, for a time at least, a sacrifice on the part of those people who in the last few years have received wealth by an increase in the purchasing power of their money without effort on their part. I believe they should be asked to make a sacrifice in order that primary producers may be helped, by a relative lowering of costs of production and debts.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I regret I cannot understand the attitude of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) who has spoken before me. It would seem that he is dissatisfied with the government, and for that reason I cannot understand why he has voted with them.

I regret very much the absence from the house of the Prime Minister at this time. The present discussion concerns the situation now obtaining in Canada and I believe the Prime Minister should be in his seat to hear the complaints from the different constituencies.

Mr. MANION: Where is the leader of the opposition?

Mr. POULIOT: The leader of the opposition is not in charge of the government.

Mr. MANION: I see.

Mr. POULIOT: I believe the Prime Minister should follow the good example of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) and should be in his seat at the moment.

Mr. MANION: So should the leader of the opposition.

Mr. POULIOT: To show my appreciation of the Minister of Railways and Canals I shall quote him in a few moments. Because of the distress suffered by farmers in the province of Quebec may I say that I regret very much to see none of the Quebec ministers in their seats. The only members we see on the government benches are the would-be ministers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Name them.

Mr. POULIOT: No; in due course the Prime Minister will name them. A few days ago my distinguished friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) brought a matter of great importance to the attention of the house. At that time he spoke concerning the guarantee given by the government to the wheat pool. In the course of his explanation the Prime Minister uttered the following words which appear at page 1094 of Hansard:

If I might say so, I do not think any good purpose would be served by going into the details of the operations which we have entrusted to the organizations I have mentioned under the management of Mr. McFarland.

At that time I took the opportunity to make a practical suggestion to the Prime Minister. It appears as follows at page 1096 of Hansard:

As the right hon. gentleman has said that it would serve no good purpose to give any more details about the situation and as the explanations that he has already given are most interesting, would he have any objection to having the galleries cleared in order that he may give full information to the house? I have asked the Prime Minister for an answer.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

I asked for an answer because the Prime Minister made no reply to my suggestion. Then Your Honour said "No." I note however that there was no answer from the Prime Minister. My point of view was this: We are here to look after the business of the country. At times it may have been that the government was a few millions up. At the moment the Prime Minister made his statement however I learned from a reliable source that the government was down about $30,000,000 or $40,000,000. Whether or not my information was correct I cannot say, but I was very suspicious when the Prime Minister refused to tell the house what had really happened. If he could not give that information to the press, he could very easily have the galleries cleared and given full information to the house so that we might have known the deficit in connection with that particular operation.

He has done that for the west; what has he done for the east? In that connection I asked him another question; I like to see him in the house so that I may ask him questions. As it is a one-man government, of course I can ask questions of only that one man. The other day I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) to convey a message to the Prime Minister. I had to convey my message through Hansard, because the Prime Minister was not in his seat.

Mr. SANDERSON: Probably the Solicitor General could not see the Prime Minister.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh, I believe he could see him; I shall give him the benefit of the doubt. According to Hansard of November 15, page 1155, I spoke as follows:

Whether it is good, or whether it is bad I am not yet ready to express a view,—

I was speaking about the guarantee to the wheat pool.

—but may I ask the government seriously to consider if it is not advisable to give the same warranty to the farmers who raise hogs, to those engaged in the dairying industry, in potato-growing, to those who have greenhouses, to those—

Mr. Chairman said: Order, and I continued:

If the move that has been made by the government with regard to guaranteeing wheat is a good move, it is just as good for the hog industry. If it is necessary for the wheat industry it is just as necessary for the hog industry and for agriculture as a whole. For this reason I ask the Prime Minister whether he is not ready to consider at once guaranteeing the hog industry in order to provide some actual relief to the farmer in Canada the same as is done for the wheat business.

The Chairman: Shall article 6 carry?

Mr. Pouliot: I should like to have an answer to my question. I spoke in plain English?

The Chairman: There is no rule to compel anyone to answer. Shall the article carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

No answer! Just as well to have no Prime Minister if you have one who does not answer. He is dumb! I asked him what was the guarantee that he was giving to the pool. No answer! I asked it on behalf of hon. members of this house who wanted to know something about it. No answer. Then I asked him if he is ready to do for the farmers of the east what he has done for the farmers of the west. No answer, he is mute.

In the province of Quebec, at least, each farmer is a lumberjack. The farmers divide their life between the two industries, farming and lumbering. I am not going to speak at great length about it but may I say that there is no actual relief to the lumber industry, if we take the words of the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) who said that the results of the trade agreements in respect to lumber would mean something in three to five years. In the meantime in rural centres the burden of private charity is on the shoulders of the farmers, and those who have to suffer a cut of ten per cent in their salary.

The other day the right hon. Prime Minister was in Toronto, and may I quote a very short extract from the Mail and Empire of November 17, 1932. It is entitled:

Hordes of Yelling Children Surround Premier at Fair, Forcing a Strategic Retreat

Children to the right of him, children to the left of him, children in front of him, screamed, yelled, pushed, shoved, kicked him in the shins, hurtled in his middle, and had the time of their lives upsetting every vestige of dignity in the tour.

Only one premier, but—

That is the subtitle; isn't this delightful?

It was a lot of fun, at first, judging by the large amused smile on the Prime Minister's face, but at the end of two hours the somewhat wan and harassed look had almost removed the smile. The difficulty was there was only one premier, but there were no less than 25,000 youngsters to step upon his toes.

And it explains that if he made a fair speech in the evening—he was speaking at the fair, it was necessarily a fair speech, but some of the statements were painful. We see in large characters as a headline in the Mail and Empire of November 17, what declaration, what statement?

Home Market Ensured Farmers, Bennett Asserts

That is all. That is a very commonplace saying. As you know very well, Mr. Speaker, in this country production exceeds consumption and farm products are supposed to be on an export basis. If the Prime Minister says that the farmers have only the home market, it means that the market has shrunk and they cannot expect anything at all as a matter of export.

Now I had something on the tariff, but I will only say a word about that. I am most surprised that Right Hon. Senator Meighen has introduced the legislation about the agreements in the upper house. I will tell you why. I say that on account of the farmers, who complain that prices of foreign commodities are so low. If we take Hansard of April 8, 1926, we see this:

Mr. Ross (Moose Jaw): You contend that if the tariff is taken off the prices immediately rise?

Mr. Meighen: We contend it and we know it, because we see the facts.

Now, in order to fulfil my promise to my genial friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion); on that same occasion, the same page, he said:

If you take off the tariff you raise the prices of goods.

Which can be reversed this way, that if you increase the tariff you decrease the prices of goods. My hon. friend knows very well that I would not like to misquote him. Now the government gives the figures of quantities instead of values of sales and exports. The farmers have to produce three times as much for the same amount of money. That is what is being done now.

During the campaign the right hon. Prime Minister said: I will give you work, not charity. What has been done? According to the report of the Dominion director of unemployment relief of March 16, 1931, there were 228,351 individuals given employment, but the number of man days given were only 3,975,355. In other words, by virtue of this relief act each of the unemployed mentioned in the report worked for only thirteen days.

Very often in this house I have stressed the importance of a classification of the unemployed. On October 31 of this year I asked a question, which will be found at page 693 of Hansard:

Mr. Pouliot:

1. Does the total number given relief 741,241 (page iv of the last report of the Dominion Director of Unemployment Relief) include men and women?

2. If so, what is the proportion of men and women?

3. Does it include boys under twenty-one years of age?

4. If so, how many?

5. Does it include: (a) railway employees; (b) farm help; (c) store clerks; (d) commercial travellers; (e) agents; (f) miners; (g) sailors; (h) carpenters; (i) bricklayers; (j) masons; (k) plumbers; (l) office clerks; (m) day labourers, and (n) people who were working for manufacturers?

6. If so, how many of each class?

Mr. Gordon:

1. Yes.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. The statistics regarding the number of persons receiving direct relief under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, were submitted by the provinces under the following headings:

(a) Number of heads of families given direct relief.

(b) Number of dependents on heads of families.

(c) Individual relief cases covering one person only.

Therefore, the Department of Labour has no information as to the division of men, women, etc., or the occupation followed by persons receiving relief.

There are social organizations which look after the unemployed, such as the St. Vincent de Paul Society, the Salvation Army and the Red Cross. These organizations do a wonderful work. They try to locate those poor people who are ashamed of their condition, whom we might call the hiding poor. As my humble contribution to this debate I would suggest that the government see to it that the unemployed are classified so that we might be able to do something for them more quickly. We have heard a good deal about direct relief. According to the report of the Dominion director of unemployment relief dated March 1, 1932, there were 2,223,671 meals given, while the total number of people on direct relief was 741,241. So, according to the official report, the relief given each man, woman and child mentioned therein amounted to only three meals, or food for one day. I would like to remind that gentleman that one day is only a very small fraction of the year. The case is even worse in regard to lodging. There were 426,461 nights' lodgings given those 741,000 unemployed, which means that about one-half the unemployed were lodged for one night. Can we say that direct relief means anything?

It seems to me that the government underestimates the number of unemployed and overestimates the aid it is giving. Today while I was having luncheon in the restaurant I asked the waitress how many members there were in her family. She told me there were nine boys and seven girls. One boy is married and lives away from home, and is unable to give any assistance. Of the seven girls one is working in another city and two are employed as maids. So there are four girls and eight boys left at home, with their mother and a father who has paralysis. Of the fourteen children at home only two girls are able to contribute to the support of the family. There are many government employees receiving small salaries, who suffered a cut of 10 per cent and who are supporting their married children who are unable to get work. The situation is worse than it ever has been. You know, Mr. Speaker, that many heads of families have come to the assistance of the unemployed by giving them lodging, food, shelter and clothing. There are many young men just out of college who are unemployed; what are they to do? They are willing to work but there is no work, and perhaps they will not always have that desire. Today I received the following letter from an unemployed man in Quebec:

(Translation)

Quebec, Nov. 23, 1932.

Mr. Jean-F. Pouliot,
Member for Témiscouata.
Dear sir,—

Would it interest you to know what it costs the Dominion government, provincial government and the city of Quebec to feed, light and heat a family of six persons, for a period of twenty-eight days, under the government of R. B. Bennett. I shall put an end to unemployment or perish in the task. For Heaven's sake will you do me the favour, if you think it expedient, of drawing the attention of the house and the pressmen to this letter. Perhaps this would help to close—

Then, there are a few words which are illegible.

—who states that nobody is in want in Canada. Were I conveniently dressed to appear before a justice of the peace, I would be pleased to make a sworn statement as to the list of articles which I am enclosing in this letter. Not wishing to trouble you further, I remain,

Your most obliged.

October 29 direct relief

| | | Cents |

| 11 | loaves of bread, 2 lbs. each | 88 |
| 1 | cord of wood, 2 ft. long | $6 00 |

About the same things are supplied each week.

Total $20.56.
Fuel $6.
Lighting 21 cents.
Food $14.35.

For a family of six persons for a period of four weeks.

That is, under the direct relief system, an amount of $14.35 is given to feed six persons for a period of 4 weeks. He further adds:

I wish to point out that one must not find fault, otherwise one is looked upon as a communist.

This brings me to what the Prime Minister said in Toronto on November 10:

Well, if there are any Liberals within sound of my voice you will get away from that party because it is no longer a party but a jumble led by a cooperative commonwealth. Why? Because they seek to capitalize on all the unrest that exists.

I should like to know on what authority the Prime Minister based his statement that he would end unemployment; that information would be very interesting. For the first time in my life I have seen a copy of L'Internationale, not published by the Liberal party but contained in a paper called Spartakus, the official organ of the unemployed. National unrest is caused by national distress. The government has done nothing or very little to assist the unemployed; it is private charity alone which has prevented the spread of communism throughout the country and it should be thanked for the fact that "L'Internationale" is not our national anthem.

Last year I made a suggestion to the Minister of National Defence, which he accepted. I suggested that the military clothing in the possession of the department should be used to clothe the unemployed. The minister followed out my suggestion by placing some unemployed in the citadel at Quebec, and that was a very good move. There is an armoury in my town in which considerable clothing is being ruined by moths, and I submit that this clothing should be given to the unemployed. If new uniforms are necessary for the militia, the department should order them to provide work for the tailors.

Mr. COTNAM: Will they wear kilts down there?

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend is more familiar with Scotch matters than I am.

The back to the land policy is sound theoretically but it should be carried on with great discretion. Consideration should be given to the natural disposition and experience of those sent back to the land. A farmer cannot be improvised, he must have a disposition for settlement upon the land. It is almost impossible to change the manner of living of the white-collared unemployed—he cannot be turned into a farmer in a day.

The lands should be classified before people are placed thereon in order that the right selection can be made of good farm lands and forestry reserves. No lot should be granted unless it is upon a road. I have knowledge of some unemployed who tried to get to the lots issued to them but they found they could not do so because there were no roads.

Mr. GORDON: The selection and location of the families is determined by the provinces.

Mr. POULIOT: I will admit that, but as the provinces are to send delegates shortly to a dominion-provincial conference, I suggest that this matter should be brought to the attention of those directly concerned.

This morning I read an interesting report in the paper, a résumé of an order for return tabled yesterday showing that certain extravagant purchases had been made in the province of Quebec in connection with the back to the land scheme. It is impossible to keep any settlers upon the land if they are forced to live unhappy lives. They must have a certain amount of comfort but this is no excuse for the extravagance which has occurred. Extravagant purchases have been made, certain accounts are supposed to have been falsified and apparently certain purchases were made without authorization. The Montreal Gazette of November 23 contained an interesting report of a rather lively meeting which took place between the council of the city of Montreal and the premier of the province of Quebec in connection with direct relief. I should like to make a certain statement and before I do so I will say that I take full responsibility for what I say. I make this statement as a Canadian and as a French Canadian who does not like to see these people suffering as they are. In the neighbouring constituency to Témiscouata certain farmers were forced to eat herbs last summer in order to exist. These people are just as poor as anyone possibly could be. They were isolated in the middle of the woods and had no opportunity to communicate with anyone. Another matter which should be investigated is the issuing of letters patent or location tickets to so-called farmers who do not settle upon the lots issued to them. The whole matter of colonization should be thoroughly investigated. I know of one instance in the giving of direct relief where lumber was purchased in the Abitibi district to be used in Charlevoix-Saguenay constituency. This purchase was made because one of the leaders of the movement had a brother who had a mill in Abitibi. It is a shame that money should be wasted in this way. I would suggest that the Trappist friars, who have made a specialty of agriculture, should be called upon to organize the settlement of people upon the land in the province of Quebec. This is another suggestion which I offer to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. GORDON: That matter would be entirely in the hands of the premier of the province of Quebec.

Mr. THOMAS F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Mr. Speaker, we are, I hope drawing near to the end of this portion of the session. Hon. members who come from industrial centres will be going back home to their constituencies and the first question the labourer will be asking them will be: What have you done for the unemployed? They will have to admit that during the present session nothing has been done which will in any way help the unemployed. Those of us who come from the agricultural centres also will be going back home, and the first question our farmers will be asking will be: What have you done for the relief of the distressed farmer? We shall be obliged to admit that nothing whatever has been done during the present session to relieve unemployment and our distressed farmers.

With a government that went into power promising to end unemployment, promising the farmers a high price for their wheat, a high price for their butter and high prices for all their other farm commodities, unemployment, farm relief and the administration of those two matters should surely be their first consideration. Whatever we may say or think, throughout the length and breadth of the country these two problems, the relief of farmers and the giving of work to the unemployed, are uppermost in the mind of almost every Canadian.

Some hon. members will say: This unemployment and this distress on the farm are due to the world depression. We admit that. It was true in 1929; it is true today. The depression which has spread over different parts of the world has caused in other countries conditions similar to those obtaining here, but we believe the policy of the present government has aggravated the situation in Canada. If we study this depression, we find that it has followed the course of many others. Depressions have existed in Canada and in the world before, and they have all gone in the same direction. We find that the first people to feel the effect of hard times are the primary producers: the farmers on the land, the fishermen, the lumbermen and the miners, especially of the coarser metals. These people begin to get a smaller price for their product. The result is that their buying power is lessened, they are able to buy very little from the retail merchant. The retatil merchant in turn is able to buy very little from the wholesaler, and as a consequence the wholesaler is able to buy very little from the manufacturer. In about six months or a year the manufacturer begins to feel the lack of buying power on the part of the primary producer, whether he be farmer, fisher, lumberman or miner. Conversely, when we begin to come out of the depression, the first people to feel the effect of good times are the primary producers. They begin to get higher prices for their goods. The farmer receives a better price for his produce; the fisherman also, the miner a better price for his coarser metals and the lumberman, whether in pulpwood or ordinary lumber, begins to get a better price. These better prices enable them to buy more from the retail merchant. As a result the retail merchant buys more from the wholesaler, and the wholesaler more from the manufacturer. This has been the course of every depression through which the world has passed, and doubtless the present one will follow the same course.

We find, however, today that instead of times getting better, day by day and week by week prices are getting smaller and smaller to the primary producr. We are getting further and further, deeper and deeper into the present depression, and in fact it looks as though there were no daylight ahead. We have never yet got over a depression by starting at the top and working down, by the manufacturer or the financier or the stockbroker getting better prices for stocks or shares or bonds. The movement always starts with the primary producer and we find that he is getting into a worse position day by day and week by week.

What is the cause of the present unemployment and farm distress? All economists throughout the world say today that the main cause of unemployment and farm distress is tariffs; that greed on the part of an individual, of a corporation, of a country and, coupled with that, anything which produces or constitutes special privileges handed out to individuals are the causes of our present depression. We find today, for example, that in western Canada we have conditions where our farmers are unable to grow wheat because it is too cheap. With wheat at from twenty-five to thirty cents a bushel our farmers cannot grow it because it is too cheap. Yet in Germany we find that the farmers cannot eat white bread because it is too dear. On the other hand, we find that the farmers in western Canada cannot buy iron or steel for the repair of binders or mowers or rakes or whatever it may be, because those commodities are too dear, whereas Germany cannot produce iron and steel because they are too cheap. The German common people and the common people of the west are willing to exchange our wheat for their iron and steel, but they are prevented from doing so. By whom? By the big interests, by politicians and by the policies of the different governments in placing restrictions in the way of high tariffs on our wheat going into Germany and their iron and steel coming into Canada. The result is that we are starving for the need of iron and steel for our repairs and Germany is starving for the lack of wheat. These are well known facts. I might say the same thing with regard to France, Italy, and almost every other country in Europe. Almost everyone today, even some hon. gentlemen opposite—the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) in South Huron, and the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Spotton), said they would like to see tariffs done away with—realize the proper course to pursue is to do away with tariffs. We would like to do away with tariffs, but everyone is afraid to make a beginning. They say: We cannot do that because all the world has gone crazy and we must be crazy too. Someone must make a beginning in the direction of lowering tariffs. If we were to start doing so, then we would be able to deal with other countries and make conditions better for our own farmers and labourers.

We in Canada live under a system of what we call individualism or capitalism. This has grown out of the old Norman system when each individual was supposed to be paid according to his work. He could work as long and as hard as he liked and put as much mental ability into his employment as he wished, and he was rewarded according to his labour. The idea was that every man should have freedom of action. Developing out of that we have the system of Cobden, Bright and Gladstone of freedom of action by a country, where we should have freedom of trade between countries, just as individuals have freedom of action. That is the history of the past. But we find at the present time that restrictions have been placed upon freedom of trade among nations and we find also that under our system there has not been a just reward for labour, I do not care whether it be that of the mine or sea or farm or office. Capitalism has been receiving too much; the manufacturer has been getting too great a reward for his capital. Unless something is done to give a more equitable reward to labour, there is no doubt that this capitalistic system of ours will break. Then the only thing left for us is communism, and no one wants communism in this country. As a matter of fact, we have it already in a measure in Canada. We are under communism when the state tells us what we are to work at, to get a living, clothing and warm beds. If you go to gaol or the penitentiary the country will give you a meal and a warm bed, but no one wants that condition. Our present system must be reformed, and if it is not reformed then as sure as day follows night our system as we know it today is going to break. I repeat, that this system does not work out perfectly either for the individual or for the country. In other countries we have seen people carried away by greed and selfishness.

I have sympathy with the Prime Minister because I do not think the manufacturers used him fairly, and I say that without fear of contradiction. When he came into power he did away with the tariff advisory board, and then the manufacturers came to him and told him that they wanted so much tariff on their goods. I believe they asked for more then they needed. I believe that firmly, but the Prime Minister took them at their word and gave them what they asked. He gave them too much. These manufacturers asked for too much and they got too much. It is only human nature to ask for a lot and expect less. That was the way with the manufacturers, except that they asked for a lot and got a lot. It was this spirit of greed operating again. They were carried away by this trait in our human nature. But I say, Mr. Speaker, that granting them such high protection has helped to make conditions worse than they otherwise would have been. Personally I do not think that any manufacturing concern in Canada or anywhere else should receive more than 15 or 20 per cent protection at the most. A certain amount of protection perhaps should be given to some manufacturers, but when a manufacturer asks for 90 or 100 per cent protection he should not be given it. It is out of reason altogether. Yet these manufacturers asked for it and got it. The result is what? It means that our farmers have lost their buying power; they cannot buy as much as they could before. It means that the ordinary labouring man is thrown out of employment, and little by little the effects spread and intensify the present depression.

What do we find in regard to unemployment? Last year I had occasion where I was situated to see many of these men who were out of work and wandering up and down the country. I must disagree with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) when he says that these men are mostly foreigners. I am sorry to say that most of them are Canadian-born, young men mostly between the ages of 16 and 24, who have left the farm and gone out into the world to try to make a living, and now find themselves out of work. It was these young men, Canadian born, who were in the majority of those that I found travelling up and down on our trains. When they left home and started out in the world to make a living they wandered about for a year or two, and I am sorry to say that the majority of them go from bad to worse, so that after a time it is hard to get them back into industrial life. Those are the conditions as I saw them in western Canada, at all events.

The only policy that the Minister of Labour seems to have to cure this condition is to put these people back on the land. I want to say this with regard to the back to the land movement: I have been farming in western Canada for the last 24 or 25 years and you can take any farmer in western Canada today, and let him be ever so good a farmer, put him on the best land in western Canada, and give him his home and the farm equipment he needs, and I will guarantee that he cannot make a living and pay his taxes. When men who have been at farming all their life are not able to make a living on the best farms in western Canada today, why send these people out of our cities back to the land? The best farmer in western Canada today, if you give him his land and his home, his horses and equipment, is not able to make a living and pay taxes on the land at present prices of farm products. I am still farming in western Canada and know whereof I speak. And when I see papers like the Winnipeg Tribune writing article after article saying that all is well in the west and that we are on the road to prosperity, I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a shame. They are just armchair farmers sitting around the fire, not out doing the actual work on the farm, getting up at four or five in the morning. If they had to do that, they would realize what they were up against and what reward they got for their labour. They would know that conditions are as I have stated. They simply do not know whereof they speak. I repeat, the farmer in western Canada today, I do not care where he is, is not able to make a living and pay his taxes under present conditions.

I hope that some good will come out of the provincial conference which the Prime Minister has called, and that something will be done whereby work will be provided for some of our people. It is a step in the right direction, and I want to congratulate the government for having taken it. I trust that something will be evolved that will enable our unemployed to get work.

Just to give the house some idea of farming conditions in western Canada, last summer a man on one of my farms was going into town and he thought he would take in a beef hide to sell. He put the hide into the car and drove into town. He went up to the merchant and asked him: "How much will you give me for this?" The merchant replied, "It is of no value to us." "Will you give me two bits for it?" the man asked. "No," said the merchant, "it is of no value to us." "Well," said the man, "will you take it if I give you two bits?" "Well no," the merchant replied, "as far as that is concerned, if you want to get rid of it I will take it from you, but it is of no value." So the man gave him the hide for nothing, a hide from a 700 or 800 pound steer. Then the man turned round and went across the street to the hardware merchant's, and bought for $1.50 a pound of lace leather made out of the very same raw material that he had given away for nothing.

Mr. MULLINS: That statement is absolutely wrong and misleading to the farmers of western Canada. You cannot make lace leather out of that kind of hide.

Mr. DONNELLY: I want to tell the hon. member that I have seen lace leather made out of hides of that kind. If the hon. member is a tanner he may know. I am not a tanner, but I have seen lace leather made out of that kind of a hide.

Mr. McKENZIE: (Assiniboia): So have I.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes. I am not speaking from hearsay. I know whereof I speak. He paid $1.50 for one pound of lace leather, and the hide he gave away for nothing. What is true of that hide is true of other things. Only the other day a carload of feeders was sent down from western Canada to Toronto and sold to the farmers on the farms in eastern Canada. It was laid down outside of Toronto for two cents a pound. How much will the farmer in western Canada get for those cattle? About half a cent a pound. He cannot get more. The freight all the way from western Canada to Toronto and then out to the farms will eat up the other cent and a half, leaving the farmer in western Canada only half a cent a pound. That will give the house some idea of the prices the farmer is getting for his products. Freight eats up most of his returns. Some baby beef was sent into Winnipeg, and was sold for two cents a pound. One cent a pound was paid for freight and commission, with the result that the farmer received only one cent per pound for his product. That was his net return. On top of that he had to pay fifteen cents exchange on the cheque. Hon. members will readily see that farmers are receiving ridiculously low prices for their products. The result is that today it is impossible for the farmers in western Canada to exist and to pay taxes on their lands. The condition I am describing is general throughout the western provinces. At this point however I should like to refer to conditions in my own district.

I come from a part of western Canada which has been so unfortunate as to have had no crop for the last four years. This year we are in the same position; we have no crop. Conditions may be described as terrible. I have heard of famines in India, China, and other parts of the world, but the condition existing in my district is as bad as any famine which ever took place. I have lived in and practised medicine in Canada for many years. I have always said that I never saw a hungry farmer in western Canada; I never saw want or poverty before. But I must admit that in the last two years I have seen more want, more poverty and more hardships than I have known to exist in the world before. These are the conditions in my section of the country.

What has the government done to relieve these settlers? Many charitable organizations have sent out relief in the form of clothes, groceries, and one thing and another. The farmers in the stricken areas are thankful for the relief they have received. Provincial legislatures also have handed out a certain amount of relief, and I want the house to understand we are thankful for the relief we are given. On the other hand, what are we actually getting by way of relief? How much do we receive? I have in my hand a letter from a clergyman in my district which sets out what the farmers in western Canada are receiving to help them in their distress. According to his information an adult is receiving $7 a month, a boy $5 a month, a girl $4 a month, and a child under seven years of age $2.50. With this amount of money they must buy their clothing and their groceries—$7 a month for an adult. Anyone who stops to think must know that a man cannot buy the necessities of life with this amount of money, and with that in mind hon. members realize the distress that exists.

We feel that the cost of distributing relief is altogether too high. In every municipality there is a relief officer. He runs up and down from one town to another; I do not know what he does, or why he travels from place to place. The fact is, however, that he runs backwards and forwards and receives good pay for it. There is a whole army in Regina. and I shall endeavour later to tell what they do. On the reverse side of the relief orders handed out there is an indication as to what a man may buy—a certain quantity of beans, tea, coffee, sugar, or other necessities of life—and the prices he must pay are set opposite. I will guarantee that when those orders are presented to the merchants not one in half a dozen is made out according to the list on the back,—no, not one in a thousand. I will guarantee there is not a merchant in western Canada today who lives up to the regulations appearing on the back of those orders. He fills in the order just as he likes, indicating so many pounds of beans, so much tea, and so on. According to these receipts, carloads of beans have been sold. The merchant fills in the order, then turns around, asks the farmer what he wants and gives it to him. For example, tobacco is not included in the list, and we all know that every farmer who smokes will get tobacco. The result is that the farmer gets his tobacco, although it may not appear on the order.

In Regina an army of two or three hundred is working in connection with relief measures. What is their work? Their work is to go over these lists and see that they are made out properly. They see that the calculations appearing on the orders are correct, and that the right amount of sugar or flour has been handed out. They are employed in that way, although we know as a matter of fact that many of the entries on the backs of the orders are fictitious. Yet we find them figuring at it, and that is the work for which we are paying them. In my view we would do much better to write out a cheque and send it to the farmer, telling him at the same time that he will receive no more until the first of the next month. Under the present circumstances a farmer may want to buy a postage stamp, and has to have money therefore. Under those circumstances he would go to a merchant, hand him his relief order and say, "I want a dollar with which to buy postage stamps," or "I want to go to the drug store to buy a bottle of castor oil." Invariably the merchant hands out the dollar and charges it up to so many beans. That is the way it is done, all the way through. Despite the inaccuracy of it all, we are paying all these relief officers and assistants. For what? For nothing, that is all.

In connection with this problem of relief I have only one more point to make. I have often wondered why a bachelor, we will say, out on a farm on the prairies, who wants a crust of bread, a cup of coffee or a pound of butter, must, before he receives any of them, sign a note saying that he will pay. We talk about relief, but we are not receiving relief in western Canada. We are only being financed. I wonder if the Prime Minister considered he was granting relief when he loaned money to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or if he considered that he was merely financing. That is all he is doing with us; he is just financing us. For every dollar we receive in western Canada we have to sign on the dotted line, saying that we will pay. Why should we be treated differently from other parts of the country? What is the practice in the cities? When a man in the city of Ottawa states that he is hungry and wants a meal, do you make him sign a note before you send him to a soup kitchen? Why should you make the farmer in the west sign a note? I am not talking about seed grain; I am not talking about relief handed out by way of feed for horses, or that sort of thing; I am referring to ordinary grocery bills and the necessities of life. In order to get ordinary pork and beans with which to sustain life the western farmer has to sign a note, a promise to pay.

I do not know whether the same practice is followed in Ontario or in Manitoba, but I know it is done in Saskatchewan, and is being done to day. When I asked the Prime Minister why this practice was followed he said: "Why, I was flooded with telegrams from people in western Canada begging that they be allowed to sign notes." But when I asked him for a copy of those telegrams I could not get them, and so far they have not been forthcoming. I have gone all through the west and questioned farmer after farmer, man after man, to find just who had sent those telegrams. I could not find any of them; I do not know who sent them. I heard one farmer say if he ever caught hold of the man who admitted sending one of those telegrams it would be a sorry day for him, that he would make it most uncomfortable for him. They believe they are being descriminated against. They believe their hard times are being made worse.

Another thing we in the dried out areas had to contend with was the relief measures handed out by this government by way of wheat bonus. That was one of those half-baked pieces of legislation put through last year by the government. At first it was going to be so much a bushel, five cents, on export wheat, but that was modified time after time until we got five cents per bushel of wheat sold by the farmer. What relief would that be to the farmers in a dried out district in which no crop was produced? We got none of it whatever. The only thing it did for us was to make us pay five cents a bushel more for our seed wheat. We had to pay more for our flour on that account. There were some seventy to one hundred municipalities in the same condition, which got no benefit whatever from this bonus. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) took great credit to himself last year in connection with this wheat bonus. He said he came down here and told the Prime Minister that this was to be a compensating adjustment for the tariff, and prevailed upon the Prime Minister to give him the bonus. This was to be compensation to the farmers for the increased prices they would have to pay on their purchases on account of the tariff. I want to know if the Minister of Agriculture is using his persuasive powers on the Prime Minister again to get a bonus. We do not want a bonus on wheat. Of course I am glad to see these people get the higher price; we know that in the north the people had a production of forty and fifty bushels an acre and some of them received $2 or $2.50 an acre through the bonus. We do not begrudge them that, but we say that we in the south who had the same trouble putting in our crops and got nothing are also entitled to something. We believe this bonus should have been so much per acre seeded to wheat. It came just at the time when this could have been done without any trouble whatever. The census had just been taken; every farmer had stated the amount of land that he had in wheat; all the government had to do was to take the acreage and say: it is going to be fifty cents or $1 an acre. But instead, the principle was invoked: "he that hath, shall be given, and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath." It is the same policy carried out by this government all the way through—the man who is rich gets more; the poor man is made poorer. Here is the man with a crop getting $1.50, $2, $2.50 an acre, and the man without a crop having to pay more for his seed.

Mr. LOUCKS: What about the relief they got ?

Mr. DONNELLY: I have just spoken about that, for every nickel of relief we had to sign on the dotted line saying we are going to pay it back. Did you sign on the dotted line for the five cents a bushel bonus, and promise to pay it back? I did not get any of that relief because I did not have any crop, but I had to pay five cents a bushel more for my seed this year.

All the money I have is invested in land in western Canada, and that land today is not worth anything. Our Prime Minister and the government have not the farmer's viewpoint, not one of them. The Prime Minister has the viewpoint of the industrialist and the capitalist. I am anxious that he should see something of the farmer's viewpoint. If he would do a little farming he would know something of the farmer's difficulties. I will make him an offer. I have four half sections of land, 320 acres each. Two of them are encumbered and two of them are clear. I want to give one of these half sections to the Prime Minister, provided he will farm it for the next five years. I do not say he has to go on the farm himself, but he can have it farmed for the next five years and show each year the return he gets. Farm land is not worth anything today; it is a liability rather than an asset, because you have to pay taxes on it. For the last three years I have not received one dollar by way of return from that $125,000 invested in farm land in western Canada. That is the condition that exists there now. I say to him that if he is going to take this land he should take one of the half sections that is encumbered, because then he will know what the average farmer has to contend with. The average farmer in western Canada has his land encumbered. Let him farm it; let him see what they have to put up with. He can farm it in one of three ways: with oxen, with horses, or with gasoline. I would advise him to go back to the oxen, because if he tries to use gasoline he will have to pay duty on it, and he will find it very expensive. This is just a digression, but I make the offer to the Prime Minister in good faith, and I am willing to turn the land over to him at any time he wants it.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. DONNELLY: Someone over there is talking; I can give him a half section too. There are four of them, and he can have any one of them.

An hon. MEMBER: And make money!

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, you are a better man than I am. I have noticed that people in eastern Canada know more about farming in western Canada than the man who is living there. But I notice, too, that the man who comes from eastern Canada has to spend two or three years in the west before he knows anything at all about farming. The farmers in the west are the most up-to-date in the world, bar none. We do not need anyone from the east to tell us how to farm. We are through with these armchair farmers who go through the country telling the western farmers from the back of an observation car how to farm. All we want is that they get off our backs and give us an even chance. We sell in the markets of the world, and we want to buy as freely as we sell. If they get off our backs and let us do that we will make good. That is the trouble today. Do you know that in western Canada we have been importing, from 1925 to 1930, about $200,000,000 worth of manufactured goods a year from eastern Canada? The duty we have had to pay on these goods is somewhere about 25 per cent. In short, we have been paying 25 per cent more on those goods than we should, and we have been paying that to eastern Canada, an average of $50,000,000 a year. What does that mean? It means that when I go out on the farm and thresh my wheat, I thresh three loads and sell it to the elevator, and it is mine, but the fourth load I have to give to the industrialists of eastern Canada.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the various phases of farm relief have been so well and so ably covered by the speakers who have preceded me in this section of the house that I will confine my remarks entirely to one feature of what I consider farm relief.

In dealing with a change in the money system I do not for a moment suggest that this will be a cure for all our ills. As long as the world depression remains as it is, as long as world markets are demoralized, as long as Europe remains the armed camp that it is today, as long as the dark shadow of international debts overhangs the world, I know that there is very little that can be done by this parliament or this government to create better markets in Europe. But I do believe that there are some measures of relief that we can introduce here that will at least alleviate the situation to a great extent. I believe that certain changes in our monetary system will give a large measure of relief, particularly to the agricultural industry, and to a lesser degree perhaps to all other lines of business. Twenty-five hundred years ago the great philosopher Aristotle, speaking of money, said that its value was determined by its quantity. If money is scarce, its value is high; if there is a superabundance of money, then it is cheap. The price of commodities, of course, varies conversely to the price of money; when money is dear commodity prices are low, and when money is cheap commodity prices are high. It seems that when one speaks of inflation a lot of timid people become frightened; the average man who is not familiar with the term visualizes a person going to a store with a wheelbarrow full of paper money with which to buy groceries. That is an absurd thought. I know something like that did happen in Germany some years ago, but when some of us in this section of the house suggest the issuing of more money we do not propose for a moment that it should be allowed to get out of control. I think perhaps when we speak of inflation we use the wrong term. The word frequently used by bankers and economists today is reflation. I do not know whether or not that is the proper word, but at any rate it indicates that the process of deflation of our currency has been carried to an extravagant degree. All that is asked by those who wish for a change is that it be brought back to a reasonable level.

Let me give the simple illustration of milk. This commodity may be sold to the public watered to the extent of perhaps twenty-five per cent. I would call that inflated milk. It may be sold just as it comes from the cow; I would call that a proper standard. It may be dehydrated and sold as milk powder; I would call that a condition of deflation. That is the condition of our money today. It has been dehydrated, and we are only asking that it be hydrated or watered back to where it was a few years ago in order to bring about a proper price level. The farmer, as well as the ordinary debtor, who contracted obligations three or four years ago finds himself compelled to pay back today about three hundred per cent of the actual debt, and we suggest that in carrying out this deflation or reflation it should be carefully managed.

After all, what have we in Canada today? A few days ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) told us that Canada had not been on the gold basis since 1929. As a matter of fact today we have a currency that is managed. The greatest of all the problems facing us in Canada today, it seems to me, and a problem common to the farmer as well as to the business man, is that of debts. The deflation during the last few years has tremendously increased our debts, public as well as private. What are we facing? Today we are on the horns of a dilemma. One possibility is repudiation of those debts, and that is not confined entirely to private debts. If present conditions continue, hundreds of municipalities throughout Canada, and even some provinces, are almost sure to default in their payments in the months to come.

I say we are facing either a repudiation of debts or a reflation of currency to meet that condition. A year or two ago, when some of those in this section of the house suggested certain monetary changes, it was looked upon as bolshevism by some of our orthodox business men and newspapers, but today we find some of those same newspapers getting squarely behind those who advocate that policy. I hold in my hand a copy of the Toronto Saturday Night dated October 1. This is one of the most orthodox publications in Canada, which a few years ago would have poured scorn and ridicule upon any suggested change of this kind. On the front page I find a very excellent article on the money question by John Collingwood Reade. The very heading is arresting; it is:

Liquidation versus Repudiation

Post war conditions call for new financial machinery—Consumption of industry's products must be financed or debt repudiation will follow.

I do not wish to weary the house by quoting extensively from this article, but I do feel that it is worthy of some consideration. This article points out that in dealing with the situation prior to the deflation the United States had two courses open to it in connection with the European debt. They could have accepted goods, the product of European nations, in payment of those debts, or they could have forgiven the debts. There is no possibility of those debts ever being fully paid in gold, and those two courses are open to the United States today. In dealing with the former course, that of accepting goods in payment, the article points out that if the United States had decided to accept goods, those goods could have been distributed to the people of the United States without necessarily affecting their factories at all. It would have given them a larger percentage of goods; a greater quantity of goods would have been delivered to the individual, and the standard of living in the United States would have been increased immeasurably. It points out that a policy of that kind would necessitate certain monetary changes; if the extra amount of goods taken in payment of those debts had been balanced by an increase in currency, those goods could have been distributed to the people of the United States without disturbing the business equilibrium of the world. In that case there would have been no depression.

I would ask you to call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BENNETT: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I said that at six o'clock I would speak to hon. members as to the possibility of adjournment tonight. It is quite clear that there is no likelihood of adjourning tonight, so with the consent of the house I would like to move that when the house adjourns it stand adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow, Saturday morning. That is the best we can do.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to the Prime Minister that, speaking for the official opposition, so far as we are concerned we will become a party to any agreement the right hon. gentleman may make with other individuals or groups in the house. If the Prime Minister cannot make an agreement with the other individuals or groups who do not belong to the official opposition, I think his suggestion that we meet in the morning would be best adopted.

Mr. IRVINE: We did not hear what the Prime Minister had to say.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that apparently it would be impossible to conclude the business of the house this evening so as to adjourn tonight, and that with the consent of the house I would move that when the house adjourns this evening it stand adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. The right hon. leader of the opposition suggests that as far as his party is concerned, the official opposition are prepared to expedite business so that we may adjourn this evening, and he suggested also that I communicate with hon. gentlemen in the far corner. I should be glad, with the consent of Mr. Speaker, to have an expression of their views.

Mr. CAMPBELL: So far as I know there is only one other member who wishes to speak, and he has indicated that he will take only a few minutes.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that another hon. member desires to speak, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think he has spoken on supply. Perhaps under the circumstances it will be better if I do not make the motion now but wait until after we resume at eight o'clock.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think the hon. member will be here tonight.

Mr. CAMPBELL: As far as I am aware, no other hon. member in this section of the house desires to speak except the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CAMPBELL: When the house rose at six o'clock I was dealing with the money question and was referring to an article in the Toronto Saturday Night of October 1 last. Dealing with the question of how the United States might have collected their international debts, the article states:

> It would be necessary for the American people to raise their standard by a very considerable amount if they are to be enabled to absorb the commodities tendered in payment of debt and still purchase the output of their own manufacturers.
> The financial system, as at present constituted, is unable to finance the distribution of the enormous import of goods and services to which the existence of accrued debt entitles the American people without demoralizing the market for domestic output.

It goes on to say:

> Repudiation is inevitable if one of the other alternatives is not adopted.

Then it says:

> The proper manner of dealing with the world situation as it touches the maldistribution of equities and purchasing power is to institute a pragram of financial reorganization throughout the world such that the basis for money is provided by goods seeking a market, and that the necessity of competing for gold by bonusing exports is removed.

Then it comes to what I think is the all-important part of the whole article. It states:

> A superabundance of goods should be an advantage, not an embarrassment. If they are accompanied by the money with which to buy them they are an advantage.

The amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) and which was ruled out of order, dealt with this very question and pointed out that in our opinion money should be based on the actual amount of goods to be distributed, because, after all, that is the only reason we need money—to distribute goods.

To come back to the article, it further states—and this is referring to Canada:

> The fact is that we do not really need to borrow anything. In the last analysis, capital is an accumulation of labour, skill and resources. All four of these are already a drug on the Canadian market.

The concluding paragraph of the article sums up the situation in this way:

A new basis for the creation and distribution of money other than by gold accretions or the manufacture of new liabilities in exchange for bank credit can accomplish this, and it must be accompanied by a ready acceptance of goods so that it does not exhibit the evils of an uncontrolled inflation.

Again I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that this is not from a labour paper; it is not written by an ordinary theorist. It is on the front page of the Toronto Saturday Night.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but it is not an editorial. It is a contributed article.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I did not say that it was an editorial. The very fact that a journal like the Toronto Saturday Night gives the article such a prominent place, shows that if it does not reflect the actual opinion of the editor, it certainly is accepted at least in a measure, because if it came directly into conflict with the opinions of the editor it certainly would not be given such a prominent place, if indeed it would find publication at all.

May I refer to an editorial in the Leader-Post of Regina of November 8, 1932. This is a paper that has been orthodox on the money question, and until very recently no such editorial would have appeared in it. The editorial is headed:

Australia Reports Recovery

Australia, whose economic position a few months ago was generally regarded as much more serious than that of Canada, appears to be making a surprisingly rapid return toward recovery. Public expenses have been reduced, loans have been converted at lower interest rates, the people have acquired a fresh degree of confidence, and, what is most important of all, trade is reported to be reviving and unemployment to be decreasing.

The editorial goes on to quote from a recent report of the Canadian trade commissioner at Melbourne. The report, in part, reads:

Business conditions generally continue to improve. During the last four weeks unemployment figures have declined and increased activity in many lines indicates that the peak of the depression has probably been passed and that improvement may now be expected. The recent advance in price of primary products has formed the basis for growing confidence among traders which has been reflected in increased importations. Wheat prices have advanced materially and at present levels efficient operations can be conducted by the growers without loss.

This is a condition entirely foreign to the wheat growers in Canada at the present time. The quotation from the report continues:

[Mr. Campbell.]

With a rise in prices growers have been selling their stored wheat very freely, in many cases three shillings net per bushel at country railway stations, plus the government bonus of four and one-half pence (both in Australian currency).

The article goes on to point out:

Three shillings are worth about seventy-five cents in the payment of debts, taxes, etc., within the Commonwealth of Australia.

It says:

The height of prices of Australian primary products is due to the fact of the depreciated Australian pound.

Dealing with the credit of Australia, which is a factor considered when any monetary reforms are suggested, it states:

A conversion bond issue put out by New South Wales, nearly £13,000,000 was oversubscribed within half an hour although the rate was only slightly over three and a half per cent.

It quotes an article sent out by the Empire Press Union dealing with the financial situation in Australia, headed: "The Great Recovery." I am not going to weary the house by quoting the article, but the headline itself is significant. In part, the article says:

Revenue continues to increase and the expenditure is being kept down.

Then it goes on to say:

Australia has paid up on the due dates to the last penny.

Then, dealing again with general industrial conditions in the Commonwealth of Australia, it says:

The commonwealth now boasts an industrial harmony and willingness that it would be hard to match in any other English speaking country.

The editorial further quotes from Professor Copland of the Melbourne School of Commerce, who, it says, is one of the government's expert advisers. He said:

Australia has been saved by a threefold policy:

1. Depreciation of currency in terms of gold. The exchange rate is now 25 per cent off sterling and 60 per cent off gold.

May I digress here to point out that if we were 60 per cent off gold, our dollar would be worth only forty cents in gold. If our dollar were worth only forty cents in gold, wheat at the head of the lakes today ought to be worth about ninety cents a bushel in the depreciated Canadian currency. Of course if other commodities were to rise in proportion, it might be argued, as it frequently is, that the farmer would not be any better off; but the debt-paying ability of the bushel would under these conditions be more than doubled. Moreover, that the increase in money in circulation would certainly have a stimulating effect on business will not, I think, be denied by anyone.

Professor Copland gives as the second factor which has helped to save Australia, expansion of credit, and third, cutting of costs. The article goes on to point out that Australia has had a refunding of her loans and that the interest on the internal government debt and on mortgages was reduced through a voluntary conversion by 22½ per cent. Dealing with the trade figures for July and August it says that the commonwealth receipts exceeded expenditures by £2,141,000. The article goes on to draw a comparison between conditions in Australia and in Canada, and says that we have attempted to stay on the gold standard in this country while Australia frankly and fearlessly went off the gold standard. In conclusion it says:

Business and trade in Australia are coming to life as a result of the policies put into operation. This does not appear to be happening in Canada. Have we been following the wrong path?

With regard to the government's recent issue of $35,000,000 of paper money, which is inflation to a small degree, and which I think is welcomed by those of us who believe in that policy, I would point out that this action of the government has been well received by business men throughout the country. There was a suspicion in many circles that orthodox business men would be opposed to it, but they seem to have received it quite well. I hold in my hand a copy of the Financial Times of Montreal, dated November 11, again a paper which is looked upon as the mouthpiece of what we ordinarily call the big interests, the financial and industrial interests of Canada; yet right on the front page, played up prominently, is an article dealing very sympathetically with the government's action. The heading itself is arresting. It says: "Broad benefits expected from money policy. Higher prices on exports should help farmers, miners and other exporters." The article goes on to say:

The most important development in Canadian business in a considerable period has been the announcement from Ottawa that the government has adopted a policy of easier money—or modified inflation—to relieve the economic strain and improve prices of primary products marketed abroad. The action of the government will tend to restore the basis of the pacts entered into at the Imperial economic conference, which was considerably upset by subsequent developments in sterling exchange .

The article goes on to enumerate the different industries that will benefit, among which the farming industry is put at the head of the list. It also includes the producers of newsprint, the mining industry, the textile industry, the producers of foodstuffs, and the packers and canners. The article sums up as follows:

Business as a whole should benefit through any increase in purchasing power, and the circulation of a larger amount of money.

It seems to me, therefore, that the country is really ready for some policy of this kind. Of course, I appreciate the difficulty of the government, and I believe that if I were in the office of Prime Minister today and really had it in mind to put into operation such a policy as this, I certainly would want to avoid announcing it to the country in advance, because at once advantage would be taken of it by speculators. I do not know whether the government had some such policy as this in mind when the Prime Minister last year first asked parliament to grant the government extraordinary powers, practically blanket powers, but I for one would be willing to give the government a blank cheque in regard to financial matters, because I quite appreciate the fact that such action must be taken quietly and cannot be preceded by an announcement to the country.

Before I sit down I wish to refer for a moment or two to some remarks that were made by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) with regard to the operations of the relief commission in Saskatchewan. I do not know what the conditions are in the constituency of Willow Bunch. The hon. member, if I understand him rightly, said that out of a thousand orders issued by the relief commission not one had been correctly filled; that different articles of food had been substituted for those listed in the requisition. I would hesitate to think that the farmers and storekeepers in the constituency of Willow Bunch are so dishonest as to carry on a policy of that kind. I cannot believe it, and I do not think it would be proved on investigation that such conditions actually exist. In some cases a man may have been allowed to substitute raisins or something else which is not permitted by the relief commission for, say, flour, but I think that would be done only in the odd case, and certainly not on a wholesale scale.

My constituency is not in the relief district. We have had good crops in that part of the country, but owing to the influx of four or five thousand settlers from the dry district the relief commission is operating there through two of its officers. I have been working in very close harmony with these men and have had every opportunity to find out whether or not their work was efficient, whether or not it was honest, whether or not they were earning their money, and I say without fear of successful contradiction that in the thirty years I have lived in western Canada, I have never seen any government organization which has been more efficient or has better justified its existence than the Saskatchewan relief commission.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The men representing the Saskatchewan relief commission in my territory are honest, capable and industrious. They are on the job all the time. There are very few justified complaints against the commission from that part of the country. I can also say the same with respect to the higher officials of the relief commission, the general manager and his assistant, at Regina, in so far as I have been able to review their work. So I can hardly think that the condition of affairs represented by the hon. member for Willow Bunch is a true picture of the operations of the relief commission in that part of the country.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to call the attention of the house to some conditions which in my judgment are not in the interests of the Canadian people.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) seems to think that I always have a grievance. That may be so, but I would submit that it is not a personal grievance. If I had as my clients the Canadian bankers or the Canadian manufacturers or, we will say, the Canadian canners, perhaps I might find myself in a position in which I could give great praise to the government. But I have been trying to represent certain groups in this country which I consider under our system are exploited groups. I wish I could truthfully say with one of the foremost leader of socialism in America, the late Eugene V. Debs:

> While there is a lower class, I am in it.
> While there is a criminal element, I am of it.
> While there is a soul in prison, I am not free.

Or as James Russell Lowell expressed a somewhat similar thought a good many years ago:

> If there breathe on earth a slave,
> Are ye truly free and brave?
> Is true freedom but to break
> Fetters for our own dear sake?
> No! True freedom is to share
> All the chains our brothers wear . . .

Again:

> They are slaves who fear to speak
> For the fallen and the weak;
> They are slaves who dare not be
> In the right with two or three.

So although, like most members of the house, I should like to have the commendation of the majority of the members, I feel that there are certain matters that I must speak of even if I may be criticized as merely a man with a grievance.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, may I venture to congratulate the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) upon the speech he made this afternoon. It seems to reveal a growing consciousness on his part of the seriousness of the problems now confronting us. My only wish would be that the spirit in which he delivered his speech could be more frequently manifested in this house, because it seems to me that beneath the party fight that occupies so much of our time there are aspirations and heart searchings on the part of a great many. I fancy conditions are rapidly becoming so serious it might well be that irrespective of party lines men are willing to give more serious attention to the real problems facing the people.

May I suggest that during the last few weeks of this session we have been witnessing a gradual curtailment of the rights of private members. This is a regular session, and yet the regular order of proceedings has been set aside. We have not had the opportunity of introducing private members' motions. Private members have had no opportunity to introduce bills, despite the fact that certain legislation was much needed. Further than that, the rules with regard to introducing a matter of urgent public importance have been so strictly interpreted that it has been almost impossible for us to introduce anything under that order. In that connection I refer to only one instance, namely that of the Sun Life management. True, there is a certain charge of criminal libel pending, but I submit that since the report of the superintendent of insurance has been tabled in the house, and since many of the figures which have been circulated to the public have been taken from that report, any hon. member should be allowed to discuss the management and the affairs of the Sun Life. I submit that a suit for libel has very little to do with the responsibility of this house towards the management of a great insurance company. Under the circumstances, all we can do is to point out that the government assumes heavy responsibility in refusing to allow public discussion of the affairs of a company in a position such as that occupied by the Sun Life.

Further than that, the trouble in our penitentiaries has received a great deal of public attention, and many of us would have liked to hear this matter discussed. We are told by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) that since there is a departmental investigation in progress it is unnecessary for us to have any further investigation until the departmental investigation has been completed. I submit that decision is not going to satisfy the public. Prisoners are the most helpless of people, because almost every man's mind is set against them. We have been taught to believe that criminals are anti-social and they are placed under such constraint that it is next to impossible for them to vent their grievances It seems to me, therefore, that owing to the fact they are, in a certain sense, wards of society, special protection should be thrown around them by a body such as this House of Commons, and if there is the slightest suspicion of unfair treatment or favoritism there should be the widest possible investigation by an impartial commission. I make these statements merely in passing, because I do not wish to wait another two months before placing my views on record. It seems to me that the troubles in the penitentiaries offer the government a spendid opportunity to investigate not merely the administration of the penitentiaries, but also the whole matter of the treatment of criminals.

Again I point out that under ordinary circumstances a private member has two opportunities of bringing almost any matter before the house. One is afforded on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means, and the other on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply. The latter is the occasion upon which I am now speaking.

I repeat that owing to rulings of the chair it has been impossible for us to bring matters before the house in such a way as to obtain a full expression of the views of hon. members on any one question. Resolutions have been ruled out of order. We have been able to do only that which we are now doing, namely voice our protests. I cannot understand why a government would take that attitude, unless it is really afraid of the votes of its own supporters. That is the only reason which occurs to my mind. As I have said, I have come to the conclusion that by such rulings the rights of private members are gradually being curtailed.

Another instance—we have been discussing matters of taxation. I shall not attempt to labour this point, but it does seem to me that when tariffs are arranged beforehand, and when they cannot be changed, the business of the house lacks reality. Another and perhaps more serious development which shows how far we are getting away from what most of us have thought to be a democratic form of government, lies in the fact that moneys have recently been loaned, without interest, to a private company. It would seem that repayment may be deferred almost indefinitely. If that action can be taken by the government with regard to one corporation, I suggest it may be taken with regard to others, and it is hard to say just where such a practice may stop. An hon. member suggests we want some of that money. Yes, I do not see why the farmers or the labour men should not have help from the government, if private corporations can get it. Further than that, we must consider the guarantees which have been given to the banks. We have witnessed a very great extension of the principle of government by order in council. Indeed I am not quite sure whether sometimes orders in council were issued until considerable time had elapsed after certain gentleman's agreements had been given. Then, if our grain prices should not recover it is quite possible that the government may have committed itself to a policy which, a few years ago, was described as gambling in grain, and which may be very harmful to the financial structure of the country.

Further, according to the statement of the Prime Minister, Canada's foreign policy cannot be discussed while the situation is under review. That is a very serious matter, because the public generally ought to make its opinions felt before questions are finally decided.

Now I should like to come to the more immediate question of conditions among the unemployed in this country. I do not hesitate to take this opportunity, because I did not finish what I had to say on that matter a few evenings ago. With regard to certain charges which I had passed on to me about conditions in the camp at Riding Mountain, let me say this; both the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) read statements and correspondence which would seem to show that the conditions stated do not prevail. Personally I have not since then had the opportunity of investigating the matter. If they do not prevail, I am very glad. I would feel very sorry indeed that I read the letter, if the conditions stated do not prevail, but I read it in good faith, a letter from a man whom I have known and who I do not think was trying to deceive me. But if I made a mistake in judging him I am very sorry. I did not read it primarily in order to cast any reflection upon the management of the camps, but rather as an instance of the bad conditions under which a great many of our people are living at the present time. But whether or not one particular camp is bad or good, I submit that the government has not answered the statements we made in regard to the far-reaching nature of the prevailing unemployment, and the unsatisfactory policies that prevail with regard to the treatment of the unemployed. The minister advocates the back to the land movement. I agree that that may be a good thing as far as a few individuals are concerned, but after what we have heard from the prairies as to conditions on the land it is obvious that the back to the land movement is no solution of our general unemployment problem.

Further the Prime Minister announced that we are to have a conference to consider the question of unemployment insurance. As the house knows, I have advocated for a great many years, as have my colleagues, unemployment insurance, but frankly I think we have now almost passed the stage when it can be of any great value. With 800,000 unemployed, how can we possibly make provision for them under a contributory unemployment insurance scheme? They are outside of that scheme altogether. I cannot see how with the small numbers of men employed in industry to-day the necessary reserves can be built up. I shall be very glad indeed if some plan can be worked out between the dominion and the provinces under which a scheme of unemployment insurance can be put into operation. But again I say that is no solution of the problem that is going to face hundreds of thousands of our people during this coming winter.

I have no desire to delay the house, or I should have liked to offer a resolution something in these terms:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted:

In the opinion of this house the government should take immediate action to provide for the unemployed either suitable work or adequate maintenance.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask the hon. member a question? If the Dominion government will not assume any responsibility for unemployment insurance, what right have they to decide that it should be contributory?

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I think the hon. member would have to ask that of the government. I presume that the announcement meant that the government would assume a certain share of responsibility if matters could be arranged between the governments. I hope it meant that, although I see that some of the papers came out with the announcement next day that the Prime Minister absolutely refused to consider unemployment insurance.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Has the hon. gentleman those figures by provinces, that 800,000?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; that was the figure given by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No, that was the number on relief.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Not all workmen.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, that 800,000, as I understood the figures, included men, women and children. But I think there is no doubt whatever, according to the statistics given by my colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and others, which I have checked carefully, that there are at least three quarters of a million unemployed at the present time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Men, women and children?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, men and women who would normally be engaged in work. Since the government has assumed the sole responsibility for dealing with this question, I said the other day that I thought about all we could do at this stage was to try to bring home to the house and to the government the real situation that exists among large numbers of our people.

I received a few weeks ago, from a United Church minister who has a pastorate in one of the suburbs of Winnipeg, a letter from which I should like to read some extracts. He says:

The weather is still mild though there has been much snow and rain recently. We are glad because we do not have to get coal for a few days yet. There is no money in our house but 75 cents in my purse. The secretary of the church has about $50 he got from the ladies' aid a week or so ago. Some of it is needed to buy coal for the church as the company would give us no more on credit. Our bill for last year is still unpaid. I mean the church bill. I am in debt, the church is in debt, and a great many of my people are on relief. Those not on relief have been so reduced that they have little more than an existence. The weather has been wet, cloudy and cold and I have often looked at the men working in the ditches here near the church with pity. The outlook for so many of them seems so hopeless. I wonder if a great many of them really realize except in a dim way what is happening. A day or two ago on a cold morning preceding a storm of rain and snow about twenty men came to the corner nearest our house to dig a ditch alongside of the road. A fence and tall residence and the church building gave some protection from the north wind. Half of the men at any time were huddled against this fence. You see they are not clothed for this weather and work and they have no spirit to try to keep up heat by working. This work on the roads and ditches is a most wasteful kind of expenditure. So many, many men accomplishing so little. Working three days a week for "relief tickets" and idling most of the time.

Further on he speaks of general conditions.

The school board have sent out a letter to the parents of boys and girls to say that if the fee of $2 per month is not forthcoming from all able to pay that the high school will be closed in the near future. I understand that the fee is not coming in, so we anticipate the worst. This high school has been going about twenty years and does good work. If closed five teachers will be out of a job. I have a boy in grade II, a bright youth, and I do not know just what we shall do.

A movement is afoot to establish some kind of municipal store in town to supply groceries to the unemployed. The merchants don't like this and are protesting.

Again:

The mounties have been very busy rounding up the transients here east of town and at the Canadian Pacific Railway north of here. Motorcycles are constantly on the run. People despise these men. The children call names at them as they pass on the streets and say "Take the yellow off your legs and put it down your backs." One cold night 66 men were turned over to the local police here. The man on duty is a kind fellow and got them some warm floors to sleep on.—except four of them. These had stopped and sat down on the sidewalk apart from the main body. Ten minutes later the policeman found them all four asleep there.

In the face of that about all we can get from the Minister of Labour is that no one need suffer. But these men are suffering. The minister who writes me this letter goes on to give me some individual cases:

Two of the men in the gang referred to were mechanics in the shops. Both about 29 years old, married, with children. They had started with the company at 16 years and never had done any work except at the machinists' bench.

—went into the shops at 16 years old, has been there since, a period of thirteen years. He married three years ago, set up house, paying rent, was laid off last April, went at once to live with his father-in-law and stayed till near June. Then he and the family went to the lake where he has a small cottage, and spent the summer. It was cheap living because he has a pass and could come up every few days for groceries. Now he is back with his father-in-law and on "relief." A week ago on Monday when out to talk with the men in the ditch—a common practice of mine—I met Ed. He told me that the company had just begun taking on apprentices at the shops "to take our places" as he expressed it.

Mr. —— is a superior kind of man about 28 years old. Has been with the company since he was fifteen years old. He is married. His wife was a nurse. They have one adopted child. —— has been buying his home and has put all his surplus into it. He was laid off in April last. —— has been getting an odd day's work in Winnipeg and has been able to maintain himself part of the time. When he cannot get a day's work he goes on "relief." He is a good man for the company, spent considerable money in correspondence courses on the air brake to make himself efficient. There is not much prospect of him going back to work for a long time.

Mr. —— is a Scotchman. He was trained as a machinist in Glasgow, came to Canada twenty-one years ago. Has been with the C.N.R. or G.T.P. all this time. He was at the bench first, then was in charge of the apprentices. About the year 1922 he took a job as instructor in the first aid department, thus breaking his time. He was laid off at December 31 last. He has had no work since except a few days at the race track as first aid man. He has a wife and two children. They are thrifty people but have put most of their savings into a house, not a good house. They have had considerable sickness. Mac is now on "relief." He was an elder in our church and at one time superintendent of the Sunday school.

And the Prime Minister meets this situation by quoting from one whom he styles the Man of Galilee, "The poor ye have always with you."

Mr. —— is our best known citizen over a period of fifty years in this district. He was born in Old Kildonan. John became a wealthy man overnight as he had a farm partly within the hands of the townsite of ——. He was called the millionaire. Perhaps he was rated at about $250,000 about twenty years ago or less. John has seven daughters, no boys. They had a good time for several years. Then things began to go wrong. The money was dissipated or never existed. Well, in short the boom was all over and John's land fell to near normal price. Meantime he had lost the —— block in Winnipeg and much other property. When the manager of the Bank of Commerce here about two years ago fleeced about forty residents to the extent of forty or fifty thousand John lost $1,200. He met me that morning, tears in his eyes and said "It finishes me." John had a house rented here in town at $25 a month. The rent went for groceries. The people moved out about a week ago. It is a big house, out of repair and will not likely be taken again. Mr. —— is a teacher in our Sunday school and a good worker of council, has been for about forty years and a member of the school board from the beginning. There are still three girls at home doing nothing. John has no money but he has property—land at —— beach. It is worthless to John. He is now about 66 years old. Suffers from rupture. Works from daylight to dark on his farm to make a living.

And so it goes. I could read to the house a dozen other similar cases.

Mr. COTNAM: Will the hon. gentleman tell us who is the author of that letter?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I will not. I said it was written by a minister of the United church in a suburb near Winnipeg.

Mr. COTNAM: Then the hon. member ought to be ashamed of himself for reading something the author of which he cannot tell.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman may have his own opinion in that regard. I am reading certain extracts from this letter because I think they serve to bring home to the house the actual conditions which exist in my part of the country. Personally I could give scores if not hundreds of similar instances.

An hon. MEMBER: Give them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am not going to give them. Almost the entire district around—

Mr. COTNAM: I rise to a point of order. Is it customary for an hon. member of this house to read extracts from a letter the author of which he refuses to give. I should like a ruling on that point.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the hon. member should either give the name or take personal responsibility for the facts stated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quite willing to take responsibility for the statements I have read. It seems very strange that with these conditions prevalent the Prime Minister can have the effrontery to quote scripture. He says, "The poor ye have always with you," as though the Man of Nazareth could be possibly conceived as condoning our indifference to the welfare of our fellow men. Since the Prime Minister has set the precedent perhaps I might take the liberty of quoting a passage or two of scripture:

> Woe unto you also, ye lawyers!

The reference, of course, is to ecclesiastical lawyers, but since the Prime Minister has undertaken to interpret scripture perhaps he might be included in that class.

> Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

Mr. GORDON: What about the false prophets?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, there is also a good deal to be said about false prophets. If the hon. gentleman cares to know it, the author of that last passage is Luke. May I quote the next passage, in all seriousness:

> For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not. . . . Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of these least, ye did it not to me.

Mr. COTNAM: How about the next part?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are certain gentlemen who think this is a matter for great levity. I think it is a time for common sense. I believe it is time to consider the very foundations of this civilization which we commonly call Christian. There are those who seem to think that any discussion of actual existing affairs is an attempt to wreck our civilization. I venture to say that it is the only possible way in which we can save our civilization. Before now I have quoted in this house that old favourite passage from James Russell Lowell, which I venture to quote again tonight:

> . . . Think ye that building shall endure
> Which shelters the noble and crushes the poor?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: You think that may be met with derision? Very well. I am firmly convinced, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite within the range of possibility that if this thing goes on very much longer a great many of us will suffer very greatly indeed because of the fact that we have neglected those in our community who today are suffering. I wish hon. gentlemen opposite could understand that I am not merely censuring one government or another. I wish they could understand that tonight I am not thinking so much in terms of politics as I am in terms of the needs of these people. Hon. gentlemen do not seem able to comprehend that point of view. I urge that we each have our responsibility. There is not one of us who would be sleeping in as good a bed, or eating as good food, or going on with our business as easily as we do, if we took seriously some of these ethical teachings which I have ventured to quote in the house tonight. I think the time is coming when if we refuse to do these things because of higher motives we shall be forced to do them because of the effect of the economic laws which are working out a new type of life.

Mr. MORAND: Who has refused them?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: An hon. gentleman asks: "Who has refused them?" I say the fact is that there are hundreds of thousands of people who are not able to live a decent, normal life. We ask parliament to take some responsibility in this matter.

Mr. MORAND: They are taking it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some one speaking on behalf of the government says that the government are taking responsibility. They are, in form, taking responsibility, and I would not say a word in reproach if they were meeting fully the needs, but in my judgment the measures that they have adopted are not meeting the needs. To be perfectly frank, I doubt very much whether under the existing competitive system they can meet the needs. That is why some of us look forward to a radical and complete change in our whole economic system. However, I take it for granted for the moment that the present economic system is equal to meeting the needs. This seems to be the prevalent impression in the house. On that ground I charge that our present policies are not meeting the needs.

The needs of the people should have prior consideration. You may call that mere demagogy, if you like, but, as I have said ever since I entered public life, when the profits of shareholders or the interests of big business come into conflict with the needs of men, women and children, then I have urged that the needs of men, women and children should have priority. I know that is considered to be a very extreme doctrine, but I firmly believe in it.

Mr. MORAND: Everybody believes in it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We are not putting it into practice. If we were we would not have hundreds of our young people walking the street without any chance of continuing their education, some of them not knowing where the next meal is to come from; we would not have thousands of people in the jungles as we have today, herded together under conditions not even sanitary, and wholly unsatisfactory from the point of view of the standards of good citizenship; we would not have the riots such as have occurred during the last few weeks in a number of our western cities. These men who have been rioting, or the majority of them, were until a few years ago good workmen. If we go on in this way it will not be very long before their spirit will be broken and we shall have a large group of unemployable people and a considerable number of criminals. I may be right or I may be wrong, but if I think that way, surely I am under an obligation to state my thoughts as forcibly as I can.

The other day the Prime Minister took the standpoint of property and property rights, and I feel it requires some hammering to get the other point of view effectively before the public. He said:

> We believe that the honest efforts of man should be rewarded. Since when has it become a crime to acquire property? The initiative of genius should be rewarded.

That is his defence of our present economic arrangements, but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the ordinary citizen is not having his honest efforts rewarded; he is not having a chance these days even to work. He has taken his full share in the building up of this country, he has worked upon our railroads, in our lumber camps and in our mines; he has done his fair share of the hard work, and yet when we reach a depression he is laid aside and has no chance of receiving a reward for his honest efforts. The Prime Minister asked: "Since when has it become a crime to acquire property?" My submission is that the vast majority of the people on relief, and many more in a desperate condition of anxiety, have no chance of acquiring property. Indeed they have been forced to watch their homes slip away from them; they have had no chance to keep even the little property they have acquired. Why should it be right for a wealthy man to be protected by the government in his possession of property while the poor man receives no assistance, or very little, when his property is in danger? It is all very well to talk about the initiative of genius being rewarded, but let me point out to the house that there are hundreds of young people today who have no opportunity to develop their initiative.

I was talking with a conductor the other day and he told me that he wished I could find some job for his girl. He said that she had been trained as a school teacher, that he had given her the best chance possible, but now she was at home and if she remained there much longer she would become absolutely discouraged. He said that as long as he had a roof over his head she would not suffer hunger. The position of this girl is that of thousands of other young people who have been prepared to enter the professions. Many, though, have not the shelter of a parental roof.

I think of a young man in my home city whom I met only a few weeks ago. Two years ago he graduated from a university in civil engineering. He had always been willing to undertake any kind of work; as a matter of fact he had gone out to do unskilled labour in a foundry, but the depression having become more severe he was turned out of even that job. His father had worked hard for many years to give him a chance at a college education. The father was a poor workingman and could not afford to support his son in idleness, and this boy had drifted around doing casual jobs, even thinking of whether or not he should commit suicide. At a matter of fact the only thing that saved him was a chance to get a position in Camp Borden which lasted two or three months. That offered relief for the time being and he took it because it tided him over until the spring time. He told me that almost the entire membership of his graduating class were in a similar position to that in which he found himself. If we really believed that the interests of the people should take priority over property rights, then we would immediately take such steps as would provide the unemployed either with suitable work or with adequate maintenance.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to make my remarks very brief. During the course of this session I have covered in the main some of the activities of the various governments throughout Canada directed toward taking care of the situation which exists in our country, and I have spread upon the record, in so far as the departments of government can collect information, the situation with which this government is endeavouring so earnestly to cope. I have listened to the addresses made in the house, and while I do not think we should complain about the descriptive phrases and at times almost extreme language which has been used, it has occurred to me very frequently that perhaps the addresses would have been more effective and more helpful if hon. members had taken the trouble to inquire from the departments of government and thus get a more complete picture of the situation as reflected in dependable governmental sources, rather than base their remarks upon fragmentary information as disclosed in letters and newspaper clippings which have been so frequently resorted to.

I was considerably disappointed when I listened to the criticism of the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), and I believe also the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), in connection with the administration of the lands owned in part by the soldier settlement board. As the house knows, a complete reorganization of that department was effected some eighteen months ago. I say with a great deal of confidence that the reorganized force of that department is very efficient and is carrying on its work in a manner that, I believe, commends itself to the great majority of the settlers under its control.

The hon. member for North Battleford made some startling statements, statements that distressed me greatly, with respect to two or three settlers in his locality and with regard to the efforts made by the Saskatchewan government, with a contribution from this government, toward returning to the land people who had previously had agricultural experience, who expressed a desire to return to the land and who were then receiving direct relief in the cities. My mind, however, was relieved and my anxiety in large measure dispelled when I found, after the interrogation of the hon. member for North Battleford by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), that the hon. member for North Battleford, having made those statements, in order to prove them and to hammer them home in the way that probably only he could do, proceeded to read from a newspaper, owned and edited by him, a report made on the cases by himself. During my business life I have had some acquaintance with the proper method of proving a case, and if his method is a proper one, then I suggest to the hon. member for North Battleford that I would not have a chance at all against such an argument as he advanced. Can anyone imagine a man standing in the House of Commons, criticizing what I believe to be a very efficient department of government, a department that is doing a great work in Canada, and particularly at a time like this, making charges such as he made, and then attempting to prove them by reading his own report in his own newspaper? I can say only that my anxiety in the matter was at once dispelled. In order that the house may not labour under any misapprehension with respect to the attitude of the department in regard to not only the soldier settlers but all the settlers under the jurisdiction of the soldier settlement board, let me say that since this government came into power, of more than 20,000 settlers on lands in part owned by the government—and I say that because the settlers have an equity in those lands—in respect of only three-tenths of one per cent have the government felt they should take some action in order to protect the equity of the crown in their holdings.

Just one word more with respect to the situation at Lloydminster referred to by the hon. member. An organization was formed there among the soldier settlers; they communicated with me and they sent out rather an alarming circular as to what attitude they intended to adopt with respect to discharging their obligations to the crown. But when they met, there apparently was sound sense among most of the settlers, and those who organized the union were not able to put across the sentiments expressed in the circular. We received from this union a report of the meeting, and the suggestions in it are almost identical with the policy that has been followed by the soldier settlement board since this government came into power. The director of soldier settlement is constantly moving from coast to coast interviewing the field staff in connection with the work, and with reference to the oustanding case brought forward by the hon. member for North Battleford, the director instructed his field superintendent at Edmonton to go down at once to that locality and investigate it. Whom does the house suppose he took with him? None other than the hon. member for North Battleford. The superintendent took him right down to that settler and let him investigate the condition for himself. He knew the arrangement at that time and after seeing the condition for himself, he drove home with the superintendent and did not have a single word of criticism to offer. Yet he spreads that story upon the record here for the edification of hon. members, which record read by the uninformed would, if not contradicted, do great injury to the work being carried on by this department.

Within the time allotted to me it would be utterly impossible to cover the various criticisms of the government that have been made from the other side of the house. The colonization at home scheme that I in my innocence thought would meet with the approval of the people of this country does not seem to commend itself to some hon. members on the other side. I have listened to speeches by some western members and I know from my own knowledge that certain of the pronouncements made in this chamber by a number of representatives of western Canada—not all of them by any means—have resulted in those who heretofore had confidence in the financial stability of the western provinces, withdrawing their support from them, selling the bonds of those provinces and investing the proceeds in other securities. I put it to those members from western Canada who day in and day out seem to take a great delight in condemning their own provincial governments, condemning their own country, condemning the people in it—because painting pictures such as they paint is the worst sort of condemnation they can offer of their own community and province: Can they go home to their people and be happy in the thought that they have stood up in this chamber and spread upon the record a picture of conditions in their own part of the country calculated only to condemn it in the eyes of anyone outside those provinces? I offer the suggestion that that sort of thing should stop. I am not unacquainted with western Canada. I was in the west for a considerable period of time, long before the arrival there of some of the hon. members who have talked so earnestly, or at least so loudly, about conditions in those provinces, and I still have many acquaintances throughout that part of Canada. I do not hold any such views of western Canada as do those members. I think I can go out there now and meet many thousands of farmers who of course are not getting the prices we would like to see them get for their produce. That is most lamentable, and it is something everyone in the house, I am sure, will do everything possible to try to correct. But I know thousands upon thousands of western farmers are absolutely firm in their belief that by accepting this temporary condition, and by exhibiting that courage which they in common with the other peoples of Canada so abundantly possess, they will overcome the present depression, and western Canada will again be prosperous and rightfully styled the golden west.

We have heard what perhaps I might call strange doctrines preached at this time, but that is nothing new in the history of the world. Anyone who has taken the time and had the opportunity to review the past must have found that the great writers of those days wrote just as learnedly about the difficulties besetting the world then as the writers of to-day. Times of general depression always bring into bold relief new corrective ideas, and at times permit people to offer as a corrective an extremity of view to which in my humble opinion we should not give too much heed, because in any situation extremity of view and extravagance of statement are not helpful.

We find some people, for instance, suggesting that there should be shorter hours of labour, by which they claim labour would be better distributed. I am not going to quarrel seriously with that. I would not mind myself if some of the duties I am trying to discharge were divided up and someone else shouldered some of them for a while. I think it is fair to say that if it were possible to cut down the hours of labour and divide up the work to the point where labour sufficient to keep a man's body and mind in good condition were available it would probably be a good thing

But on the one hand we are highly industrialized and on the other, an agricultural country and a producer of raw products. There are other countries just as highly industrialized as ours which we have to meet in competition in the markets of the world. If it is still to maintain its standard of living, what possible chance has Canada, acting alone in reducing the hours of labour, of competing in the markets of the world with the manufacturers of other countries? The thing is so simple that it does not admit of argument The situation was very well put in the British House of Commons on the 20th of October last by Sir Henry Batterton the Minister of Labour, where he said:

> Experience shows that an international convention regulating hours of labour will not be ratified by the countries which are industrially important unless it can be so framed as to make provision for the very real difficulties that must be encountered in its practical application. His Majesty's government, therefore, while favouring a full examination of the problem of reducing hours of work without reducing the standard of living of the wage-earning population, have opposed and will continue to oppose any attempt to improvise a convention which evades the difficulties instead of solving them. Such a convention will be of no effect save to cause friction and misunderstanding and to delay the solution of the problem with which it professes to deal.

If by international action such a thing could be brought about, I do not think there is a shadow of doubt that this government and this country would be found supporting it.

It has also been suggested—and I listened very carefully to the addresses made on this subject—that we should inflate our currency. I am not going to offer much on that subject, because frankly I feel that while I can build up a theory on both sides I am not sure that either of them is sound. Quotations from almost every known writer on economics have been read in this house, but I believe I am sufficiently well acquainted with the writers on economic subjects and their works to say that I could take a dozen of the foremost authorities on the subject and find half a dozen on the one side and half a dozen on the other. I have no doubt that in the other legislative halls of the world the pronouncements on this subject dealt with by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) are being proclaimed with a solemnity which ought to carry weight in those chambers. I know this, that there are many things that might be said in favour of the view which has been put forward. At the moment we do not think it desirable—I am speaking of the government— to inflate the currency of this country.

The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), who gave such an interesting address this afternoon, with his usual skill and care suggested—I took his words down and I noticed the flirtatious look that he gave to his left when he said it—

Mr. EULER: Order. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, whether that is parliamentary language.

Mr. GORDON: He said that there should be a reasonable and controlled degree of inflation. That is a very subtle description. I suggest to the hon. member that I would almost be able to subscribe to it if he would leave out the word "controlled." If my experience in business means anything, just start to give anything away and let the impression go abroad that the well will never run dry, and you will have a great deal of difficulty in controlling the importunings of those who would seek to dip into it.

Mr. EULER: Does my hon. friend suggest that it should be uncontrolled?

Mr. GORDON: Not at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was wondering if the minister was speaking out of his experience with reference to the blank cheque.

Mr. GORDON: I congratulate the right hon. gentleman for his very valuable contribution to the debate.

I have listened to another great grievance which has been commented upon from time to time in reference to the great corporations of this country—private corporations, but still great—which from time to time split their stock and probably get an authorized increase in their capaitalization. I am sure I made reference to what my idea of such a thing was when I presented to the house the report of the investigation into the Beauharnois project. In substance I said then that every dollar added to the capital cost of the development of any industry or national resource meant that the product of that industry or resource would be increased in cost to the consumer to the extent of the interest required to carry that additional charge, and my remarks brought forth a certain amount of applause from those who sit to the furthest left of the Speaker. Now I offer this as a suggestion. I hear from many members opposite about the iniquity of watered stock in private corporations, and I am in thorough agreement with those who advance the argument respecting watered stock. But, I ask, what is the difference in principle between private corporations watering their stock and the country watering its currency? Hon. members who would condemn the private corporation will commend the government for doing the same thing in principle. They are willing to approbate and reprobate in the same breadth. I may be wrong, but I can see no difference in principle.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. gentleman is quite wrong in his interpretation of what other people are discussing.

Mr. GORDON: Perhaps I am. Then, there is a class of people in Canada concerning which no mention has been made, so far as I know, by any of the speakers who at this time have condemned the government's action. I have reference to the type of man who is shouldering great responsibilities in providing for his wife and family, the man who, unlike many others who during the past ten years attempted to hitch his bronco to the financial cart for the wildest ride in history, has often denied himself the necessities of life in order that he might set aside a fund in the form of government bonds, an annuity or otherwise to provide for his old age or against misadventure or death in the interests of those for whom he may be responsible. There are many people in Canada such as I have described, but I have not heard one word about them. A number of members are flirting with ideas which have been projected, but with which I did not think they would be in entire accord. I venture to hazard the opinion that when the class of persons to which I have referred read of the advanced socialization suggested by some hon. members, and hear of the state undertaking to provide this, that and the other thing, they will wonder: "What was the use of it all? Why should I have tried to live a disciplined life? Why should I have tried to scrape and save to provide against the future and to give my family a fair chance to get along in life?" Those are the people who have not had consideration in this chamber, and I think it is high time they had. We should have at least some consideration for people of that type.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): What is the difference between one who has put his savings into government bonds and one who has invested in a farm?

Mr. GORDON: The government has been earnestly endeavouring to see that those who require relief are given it. I should like very shortly to spread on the record what the government has endeavoured to do since this situation developed. I do not wish to dwell upon the facts, but would begin by saying that undoubtedly Saskatchewan has had a very difficult time. There was a time when this government, because of successive crop failures in that province, was providing sustenance for upwards of 300,000 people. There was no hesitancy about dealing with that situation. The government, realizing its responsibility, took hold of it promptly and spent huge sums of money, because such expenditures were necessary in order that those living in the stricken areas would have a chance either to move somewhere else or to try again. This government did not hesitate to accept its burden and to endeavour to discharge what it considered to be its responsibility.

The complaint has been made and this government has been condemned because in the province of Saskatchewan notes were taken for relief. In the first place, let me say that the federal government had nothing to do with the matter; but I should like to add that I am not condemning the Saskatchewan relief commission for its action, for the very obvious reason that the people they were helping were not indigents, in the true sense of the word the people who were the victims of that great tragedy are sturdy, wholesome, courageous Canadians, people who are not accustomed to taking money from governments, or from anybody else, without repaying. I cannot tell how many, but at least a great many of them said, "Here are our notes; we will pay you this money back." In face of that, what could the Saskatchewan relief commission do? Although reports are not available, I am told that many of those people are already making provision for retirement of advances. I can see nothing in that transaction concerning which the Saskatchewan relief commission, the government of that province or this government, should be condemned.

Throughout Canada appeals were made to this government the substance of which were that the depression was general, and that it had cast a great burden upon the provinces—not such a burden, I suggest, as would take it out of the ordinary rule that provinces and municipalities have a primary responsibility; but there was such a general need that this government felt, and I think properly, that they should contribute to the provinces according to the need. What has the government done? In the four western provinces, either by way of direct non-recoverable advances or in recoverable loans, the Dominion government has supplied the sum of $73,844,130.98. And this very day, when the government was being condemned by the hon. member for Willow Bunch, in a speech that was delivered in perhaps as extravagant a style as I ever listened to, the province in which he lives is asking for further assistance in financing its affairs, and its application is under consideration by this government.

Mr. MacDOUGALL: He voted against it.

Mr. GORDON: For all of Canada this government has provided the sum $115,631,733.80 up to date for the purpose of tiding the provinces, the municipalities and the people generally over this trying period. That money does not come from people who have not got it. The tribute must be levied upon every Canadian citizen. It is those who have who will contribute that money, not those who have not. And I suggest to those who would criticize that that is no mean contribution; that this government might easily be criticized for having pledged the credit of the state in too large an amount. But as far as the government is concerned it is ready to meet any criticism of that sort.

I could enlarge upon this picture and give the details of how this money was distributed. We know from reports that come in weekly from sources throughout Canada that the giving of this help to the provinces, to the municipalities, and through them to the individual, has not created, as was suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), the fear that the people will not know where their next meal is coming from. Not at all. Because as far as this government is concerned, as I have before stated in this house, we will continue to see that the people of this country will not suffer for fuel and food and the necessities of life. And while we are doing it I suggest to all hon. members of this house, regardless of their political persuasion, that when they go home and meet conditions that are perhaps not as they would like them to be, they should not be content to say to their constituents: "If you are not getting along very well, blame it on those terrible Tories!" That is not helpful. Let every hon. member go to his constituency as a Canadian, as a lover of his fellow man, as a lover of his country, and say to his people: "The government, the state, is assuming a tremendous responsibility. The state is willing to continue to assume it, but you as an individual have a duty to perform to yourself, to your family, to your community, to your country. Do not lose the opportunity; do anything you can to help, because individual effort will help probably more than any other effort that can be put forth. That is the right attitude, the attitude which ultimately will prevail in this country, in spite of the speeches that we have listened to. I have been through Canada perhaps as thoroughly as any member of this house. I have had to do with its economic complexities from many angles. I know the people of Canada, and I know that they are well aware of the opportunities that are here. But this dislocation of world affairs came down in the year 1929 so rapidly and with such compelling force that even those in the highest places in finance, in industry, in all the various vocations of life, were totally unable to conceive of the immensity of the problem that they would shortly have to face.

I did not intend to take even this much time, but I say in conclusion: Go out from this chamber as Canadians; do not be content to say as partisans that the government has failed, but carry the message to the Canadian people that all is not lost by any means; that we have a great country, and a small population; that we have wonderful assets, tremendous resources for the people to make use of. As far as this government is concerned it will put forth every effort, yes, it will go to its last available dollar to see that those who are unable to take advantage of those opportunities will not suffer during this coming winter.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask a question? I understood the minister to say that some farmers were willing to do without in order that they might come through. Would he be kind enough to suggest what he thinks the farmer should do without in order to come through?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Legislation—House of Commons—To provide for payment to George A. Touche and Company for professional services in connection with the gasoline inquiry, $11,233.

Mr. NEILL: I would like some information about item No. 3. What was this $11,233 for? What services were rendered to that amount?

Mr. RHODES: This is the account of the auditors for their services and disbursements in connection with the gasoline inquiry.

Mr. NEILL: I gathered that from the description, but I want to know what value we got for it. I consider that it is an enormous, an outrageous charge for the services rendered.

Mr. RHODES: All I can say is that the amount was approved by the Clerk of the House in the ordinary course and submitted for payment, and the charges were of the usual character. The services were rendered by a very reputable company. We have the detailed account rendered.

Mr. NEILL: That is what I would like some information about. They must have a whale of a reputation that enables them to charge $11,233. Did the account as rendered give any indication of how many men were employed, and for what period and at how much per day or per minute?

Mr. RHODES: Yes. I have not the accounts before me, but I must point out to my hon. friend that the account was incurred by a committee of this house, not by the government. I could get the account for my hon. friend if he would like to see it.

Mr. NEILL: I do not think for a moment that when the committee authorized the employment of these gentlemen they had any conception that it would cost any such amount.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say that like the hon. gentleman I thought the amount was very large. But they were instructed by the committee to do the work. The charges were tariff charges. We did not ask that the account be taxed, because you cannot tax it, but we asked that it be moderated. However, the account is here as it stands, and they have complained bitterly that it has not been paid. We have no money with which to pay it without the vote of the house, and that is why it is here.

Mr. NEILL: I would suggest, then, that we do not pass this item and ask them to wait until the spring. They would have had to wait in any case but for this special session.

Mr. BENNETT: They thought provision had been made last session, though as a matter of fact it had not.

Mr. IRVINE: I recall when this account was presented to the committee. What the Prime Minister has said is quite correct. We went into the items and discovered that instead of the account being greater than was customary for such a company, they had given us a very material reduction because of the depression. Of course I objected to the charges myself; I thought they were much more than I would be able to earn in an hour or two, but that was their charge and we could not get any further.

Mr. DONNELLY: This account is for the work of auditors we had looking into the question of gasoline. These men were sent out by the committee; first they went to the British American and the McColl-Frontenac companies, where they spent five or six days. Later they were sent to Sarnia and Halifax to investigate certain definite points for the committee, concerning the price of crude oil, the amount of crude oil taken by the various refineries, the amount of gasoline obtained from the oil, and the prices of the gasoline and of the oil. They spent a good deal of time there and when they came back to the committee we asked them what they had found with regard to the British American and McColl-Frontenac Company. They told us they had found nothing and that they had no report to make, but said they would go back again if the committee wished. I think anyone looking up the records of that inquiry will find that the auditors said they had no report to make in connection with the McColl-Frontenac and Imperial Oil companies. If two experts had been sent out by Imperial Oil to justify a higher price for gasoline they could not have found two men who could have done the work better. These men reported that the Imperial Oil Company were not charging too much; that they were making a profit of only one cent a gallon, and that the price of gasoline in Canada was due to the bootlegging of gasoline from the United States, though I do not know where they got that information. At that time the committee said, "We do not want that sort of information; we want the facts and figures in order to draw our own conclusions." As a matter of fact the auditors brought in their conclusions without the actual figures. After arguing with them for a whole day we did manage to obtain a few figures, and they told us that if we wanted the other information they could figure it out but they did not have it prepared. So far as the committee was concerned the work done by those men was very unsatisfactory, though no doubt it was satisfactory to Imperial Oil and the other companies in general.

A minority report was brought in following that inquiry. The price of gasoline is disturbing the people from one end of Canada to the other; in fact it is disturbing people the world over. The price of gasoline in the world has followed the price of wheat, of coffee, of cotton and of many other things. Standard Oil of New Jersey has been looked upon as the tool of John D. Rockefeller, and for years the people of the United States have tried to pass legislation curtailing its activities and profits. They were not successful, but in 1929 or 1930 mother nature took a hand and more crude oil was produced than the world could consume. Consequently in 1930 or 1931 the price of gasoline fell all over the world, and continued to fall until crude oil was selling in Oklahoma and Texas, the mid-continent field, for ten cents a barrel. In Canada, however, the price of gasoline was maintained; this is the only country in the world where the price remained high. It was kept up by the tariff and dumping duty imposed by this government. Last year, however, when the United States found that too much crude oil was being produced, they began to curtail production. They said, "We will cut down production and increase the price," and this did work to a certain extent. Finally they woke up and found this to be a world condition, so they called together the oil producers of the world with the idea of cutting down production all over the world in order to keep up prices. Many of these oil producers would not enter into a combine of that kind, with the result that the world price for oil remained low. We find now that the United States are asking for a duty against outside gasoline in order to increase the price in that country.

The government kept up the price of gasoline in Canada by four or five cents a gallon, which made it possible for Imperial Oil to declare a profit of over $17,000,000 last year. Standard Oil of New Jersey owns some sixty-nine per cent of the shares of Imperial Oil of Canada, and that company received some $12,700,000 in profits from the Canadian company. In other words, though they suffered a loss of $4,000,000 on all their operations, Standard Oil of New Jersey were able to declare a profit of $8,000,000; they took $12,700,000 from our Canadian consumers in order to do so. I think it is time we in Canada showed a little of that red blood about which the Minister of Railways spoke, and stopped being cheque signers and dividend payers for our American cousins.

At the time the committe was sitting the Shell Oil Company was bringing in gasoline at four and a fraction cents a gallon at Montreal. They were selling that gasoline wholesale, in tank car lots, for something like 12 cents a gallon. I had a private individual in Ottawa go to the Department of National Revenue to inquire what dumping duty would be put on gasoline coming from Roumania, but we could not get any information. They said: "We will have to find out what their money is worth and what is the exchange rate before we can tell you what the charge will be." The result was that nobody attempted to bring in gasoline from any other part of the world for fear of the exchange being so high that they would not be able to make a profit.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

Not long ago the government saw fit to take off the dump duty on gasoline, but at the same time they passed orders in council stating that gasoline brought in from the United States by an ordinary consumer would have to pay the wholsesale price there plus the excise tax of one cent per gallon on the American gallon, equal to one and a quarter cents on the Canadian gallon. When I asked the Minister of National Revenue about this he said that no orders in council had been passed, that this was something done by the Liberal government. It is true that the Liberal government did pass legislation which fixed a fair market value at whatever the price was in the country of origin, but why did this government pass orders in council stating that the value for duty purposes would be the wholesale price at the refinery plus the American excise tax of one cent per gallon? I understand that American refiners do not pay that one cent tax when gasoline is exported, but the government has said that if the consumer brings in gasoline he must pay the wholesale price, plus that one cent tax. If he cannot make the American refiner take that tax, it must be paid to the customs. This means a one and a quarter cent protection for the oil refineries in the Dominion of Canada. In fact, when added to the other charges, this protection amounts to from one and three quarter cents to two cents per gallon. Our oil companies are enjoying this protection in addition to the regular duty of two and a half cents per gallon. I asked the minister why orders in council were passed providing that the refiners would not have to take into account this one cent excise tax, and he said that no such order was passed. The supplement to appraisers' bulletin number 3897, reads as follows:

> On importations of gasoline to be used bona fide for blending purposes and not for resale as a motor fuel in the condition as imported, the excise tax should not be included in the fair market value for regular or special duty purposes.

Why did the government make that exception with regard to refiners or blenders? Why did they insist that the Canadian consumer who brings in gasoline must pay the one cent excise tax? I submit that this was done in the hope that additional protection would be given to the refineries and the Canadian public would not be the wiser.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Donnelly) said something about the report itself not being satisfactory, but I shall not attack it upon that ground. These accountants were entitled to make their own report but it may well be considered uunsatisfactory on the ground that they were asked to obtain certain information which it would seem they did not obtain. I followed the proceedings of this committee very closely, and that is the conclusion I have come to: all they brought back was a whitewashing report which they were not asked for. A large portion of the accountant's report was included bodily in the report of the committee.

I have in my hand a copy of what I assume the Minister of Finance was alluding to when he said he had an itemized account. This account would seem to cover the services not of a man, an individual or a firm, but of a whole army. We have the whole bunch here with the exception perhaps of the furnace man—there is no amount low enough to cover the services of such a man. The first item is for the principal, 58 days and 3 hours at $50 per day, total $2,921.43. Luckily there was only one principal. The next item is for supervisor, 73 days and 2 hours at $35 per day, total $2,565. I am speaking only from memory, but I believe there were some twenty days upon which the committee sat. Of course these men would be working when the committee was not sitting, but seventy-three working days would represent over two months and a half. The itemized account states that the charges are for a seven hour day, and it might be possible that in their integrity and industry these men worked fourteen hours per day. Otherwise I cannot see how they could have worked two and one-half months during the time the committee was sitting. Then we come to first assistants. Apparently there were a number of these, because the account is for 123 days at $25 per day. Then there are second assistants, 43 days at $20 per day; third assistants at $15 per day, and fourth assistants at $10 per day. Unfortunately we did not have many fourth assistants; the account is only for 14 days. The total account amounts to $9,756.46. In addition to this there are out-of-pocket expenses totalling $1,477, but if there are vouchers to cover this amount, I cannot object. The hon. member to my left mentioned something about a price cut owing to the depression but I hate to think what this account would have been if there had not been a depression.

Either the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister stated that these rates were according to the recognized scale for professional accountants. That is quite interesting, but there is also a recognized scale for doctors and lawyers. If you happen to be dissatisfied with either your lawyer's or doctor's bill and try to dispute it, the first lawyer or doctor to whom you go will tell you that you have not been charged much more than half what you could have been charged under the schedule. When a doctor charges you $2.50 or $5 per visit, you will find that his schedule calls for a charge five times that. These schedules are arranged by these close corporations but they are never enforced, and that fact is to the credit of both the lawyers and the doctors.

Mr. BENNETT: No bargain was made antecedent to the employment being given to this firm. They have rendered an account which was referred to me personally and I could find no way by which it could be reduced. If we do not pass it we will be compelled to grant a fiat and they will recover the money in a court of law.

Mr. NEILL: If that is the case, there is no use in my wasting the time of the committee. At the same time, it is a good thing to uncover these things as they can be remembered the next time we need the services of accountants.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—Pensions to families of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who lost their lives while on duty—further amount required—

To provide for a pension to Mrs. Catharine Mildred Ralls, equal to one-half of her late husband's daily regimental pay and ration allowance, from July 6, 1932, to March 31, 1933, $497.65.

To provide compassionate allowances to Victor, Everett, Doreen and Stanley Ralls, at $30 per annum each, from July 6, 1932, to March 31, 1933, $88.43.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to a case which I consider to be very conservative. I brought this to his attention this afternoon by presenting the particulars to his private secretary, but I think I might be permitted just one moment to state the facts of the case I have in mind. This is a veteran of the South African and Flanders wars. He was gassed but was not considered as pensionable. After discharge he was confined to hospital; and the authorities, after investigating his case, undertook to defray his hospital expenses and granted him a compassionate allowance of $20 per month. The point I desire to raise is that this $20 per month has been withdrawn. The communication which I received and which I passed on to the minister was from the president of the Lacombe board of trade, a man who I believe is thoroughly acquainted with the veteran and in whom I have the utmost confidence. I do not know this particular returned soldier; I am relying entirely upon the evidence of the doctors and also the plea made by the president of the board of trade of the town of Lacombe. I merely wish to urge that the Minister of Pensions reconsider the withdrawal of that compassionate allowance. The man in question is suffering from cancer and I do not think he can last very long. He is unable to work and has no other resources. I do not know whether the minister is listening to me or not, but I hope he will reconsider the discontinuance of that compassionate allowance.

Item agreed to.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—British Columbia and Australia and/or China, services between—further amount required, $35,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): To what companies is this subvention going?

Mr. STEVENS: The British Canadian Steamship Company, Limited. The contract is dated August 15, 1932. It was given by tender.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is this amount additional to what they are already receiving, or a new item?

Mr. STEVENS: It is to carry on the contract during the period of the winter months.

Mr. NEILL: It is a different contract, is it not?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: There has been some agitation in Vancouver—and I presume it has come to the minister's notice—amongst a number of unemployed white seamen. They say: Why cannot these subsidized steamers employ whites exclusively? I have not at the moment the figures before me, but I was astonished to find the numbers of orientals that are employed on these boats running out of Vancouver, all of which are more or less subsidized on this line or carrying mail. I think the number of orientals ran up into several thousands; I think it was 5,000, if my memory serves me aright, although I would not care to guarantee that. They ask in these distressful times if, instead of taking up their crews in China, they could not take on British residents in Canada. Is the minister able to undertake any relief in that regard?

Mr. STEVENS: These ships employ, in regard to all the engine crews, officers and so on, only Canadians or other British subjects. It is only the portion of the crew comprising deck hands and stokers that is Chinese.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. NEILL: That is the majority, of course.

Mr. STEVENS: It is quite a story, and I do not desire to delay the committee by discussing the matter tonight, but if we leave it until the main estimates come up I shall discuss it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Like the hon. member for Comox-Alberni I am also in receipt of many representations on this point. I should like to urge the government to look into this matter carefully, especially in regard to companies receiving subventions from the government of Canada. In that case I think the entire crew should be white.

Mr. STEVENS: May I say to my hon. friend very frankly that what is asked cannot be done for the money we are giving. The answer is this: It is a case of do it in the way it is being done or not at all.

Item agreed to.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Unemployment relief—further amount required, $975,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Many hon. members have received representations expressing dissatisfaction, especially in my province of British Columbia, in regard to the scale of rates. May I ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health if a new scale for the winter has been satisfactorily established?

Mr. MacLAREN: The scale on which unemployment relief is granted for pensioners is that the amount of relief to those who are entitled to receive it is not less than the amount that is allowed by the municipality in which the individual resides. The matter is carefully scrutinized, and if an advance is made, especially during the winter, in any municipality, the amount under the department is raised to correspond with that. That is the policy for the winter months.

Mr. RALSTON: When does the minister expect to have the report of the committee in regard to pensions headed by Mr. Justice Rinfret?

Mr. MacLAREN: Not before February. It will be during the remainder of the session.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, if under this heading of unemployment relief there can be made any acknowlegment of or reference to the speech of the Minister of Labour recently concluded? His remarks included a very strong indictment of the hon. member for North Battleford with respect to soldier settlement.

The CHAIRMAN: Certainly unemployment relief can be discussed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Minister of Labour made a very wide and slashing attack against the whole western contingent of Liberal members. He accused us of maligning our country and doing all kinds of things derogatory to our own interest. Mr. Speaker left the chair too quickly or I should have replied at that time, but since you are good enough to permit a reply now, I shall not say anything about the other matter. Two years ago the Prime Minister used to indulge in that sort of accusation, but I think he has got enough in return from this side of the house to feel he should discontinue it. Moreover he has been reformed in that respect and he took advantage of a certain event that occurred in this chamber to say something himself about conditions, not only in the west but throughout Canada. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote some of the Prime Minister's remarks on that occasion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: From what is the hon. member quoting?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am quoting from the report of the Imperial economic conference, the deliberations of which were held in this very chamber, and I should like to mention incidentally that we are not now in the Imperial conference but in the parliament of Canada and we are not to be cowed as the Prime Minister tried to bully the other delegates on that occasion. This is what he said:

> Canada, like all other countries, has suffered severely from the calamitous fall in commodity prices. Since August, 1929, our index of wholesale prices has fallen 32 per cent and is now only four per cent above the prewar level. This means that the dollar has increased in purchasing power by 48 per cent. As a result of this rapid and persistent decline in the general price level and the inevitable disparities created between different kinds of prices, normal business relationships have been disrupted, profit margins have disappeared in many cases, enterprise has been discouraged, unemployment has steadily increased, the fiscal problems of all our public bodies have been greatly aggravated, and the burden of fixed charges is exerting an almost intolerable pressure upon some of the strategic elements in our national economy.

The author of that is the present Prime Minister of Canada. He continues:

> Moreover, such fixed charges, except as they are reduced by bankruptcy and reorganization, are not being adjusted by the normal corrective processes which falling prices are supposed to set in motion. Indeed it seems that new disequilibria are created almost as rapidly as old maladjustments are corrected and the paralysis of business enterprise with profit margins uncertain or non-existent continues. Trade languishes and unemployment persists or tends to become aggravated.

That is what the Prime Minister said during this conference held in this chamber. Let me continue:

> I have said enough to indicate the importance which Canada is bound to place upon the solution of the problems of price instability and of unstable exchanges. In particular we believe that it is imperatively necessary to put a stop to the persistent decline in commodity prices which is paralysing private enterprise, choking off international trade, multiplying unemployment and social distress, and menacing the stability of our present social and economic order.

What hon. gentleman on this side spoke more strongly about conditions in Canada? I want to state that not one-half the truth has been told regarding conditions in the west. We scarcely breathe about the conditions to each other, much less to this chamber, and when any hon. gentleman opposite takes a different stand and pretends to know more about conditions than we do, he is getting beyond his depth and is talking of some thing of which he knows nothing. I have to compliment the Prime Minister on the great reform which has come over him in that respect. We remember quite well when he said that conditions in the west were due to our own extravagance and our speculating in the markets. By the way, he has done a little bit of market speculating himself, but we will come to that on a later item. He has been permanently cured, however. If the Minister of Labour wants to discipline anybody for talking honestly about conditions in the west I think he had better discipline his own leader, because he spoke more plainly with respect to Canadian conditions in this document that he gave to the world than we have ever done here.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—The Canada Grain Act, including management operation, maintenance and equipment of elevators, administration of —further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I gave notice, Mr. Chairman, that I wanted some more information about this marketing business. The Prime Minister made a very excellent statement the other day. I do not know whether anybody understood it or whether he himself did, but he left the impression on me that he was doing something for the farmers by way of supporting the market in lieu of paying the bonus on wheat which has been suspended this year. I have looked over the Prime Minister's statement very carefully since then, and I find that in three or four places he spoke deliberately of steadying the market, or putting some muscle into it, as the saying is, in lieu of paying the bonus this year. Answering a question by the hon. member for West Edmonton, the right hon. leader of the government indicated that this holding up of the market which he spoke of had been done since 1930. So there is no question of its having been done then in lieu of paying the bonus.

I should like a further explanation of that from my right hon. friend or from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and while they are answering they might also tell us what was done with that wheat when they took it over from the pool by the selling agency which has been under Mr. McFarland's administration for the last two years or more. Was it sold directly as cash wheat, or held and storage paid on it, or converted into long range futures; and was more purchased? Further, why did not the government get out from under this wheat marketing business when they could get out at a profit? I understood the Prime Minister to say that there was a time when a profit could have been made on the pool wheat taken over by Mr. McFarland had the wheat been sold at that time. Unless my right hon. friend has some justification for holding that wheat we shall have to conclude that he was just like any other speculator and did not know when to let go. The government had an inquiry made some time ago, headed by Sir Josiah Stamp, into the wisdom and usefulness or otherwise of the market for futures. The commission evidently concluded that the futures market served some useful purpose. The pool made some mistakes, possibly, while they were handling this wheat. They were accused of gambling in wheat and of holding wheat when they should have sold. Mr. McFarland and the government, we are told by the Prime Minister, could have sold this wheat at a profit at one time. Possibly the right hon. gentleman will say that the government had nothing to do with the selection of Mr. McFarland, that the pools elected him, but he was recommended by the government and the pool only nominally appointed him. Mr. McFarland has now had charge of the selling agency for two years. He took it over with the idea that he was going to show the farmers how to engage in futures profitably. He engaged in trading in futures; it is admitted that he could have made a profit at one time he did not sell, and now he must admit a loss if sale were made at present. I am ready to listen, and listen very carefully, to an explanation by either the Minister of Trade and Commerce or his leader the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not come prepared, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this matter tonight. It does not arise out of this item, which is to extend the facilities required by reason of a larger crop being reaped than was anticipated. But I may say this to the hon. gentleman, who is familiar with conditions in western Canada. I said that there was a blackboard loss when Mr. McFarland took over the operations of the pool. I said that there was a day or there were several days on which, if the wheat could have been sold, it could have been sold at a profit, but the difficulty was that it could not be sold. That has always been the difficulty; you had to let the farmer either sell or not sell for himself. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I did not bring any papers with me with which to meet questions of this kind, because I did not think on an item to provide facilities under the Canada Grain Act this matter could possibly be discussed. On mature consideration the hon. gentleman will see that it is hardly fair to expect this matter to be discussed on an item of this character.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Last year, Mr. Chairman, it was discussed on this very same item relating to the Canada Grain Act, and not only that, but we had the denial that Mr. McFarland was in the business of buying any kind of wheat. It is admitted now, but it was not admitted then.

Mr. DONNELLY: Last year, I brought up this very question of trading in wheat futures by Mr. McFarland, and I was told at that time that he was not trading in futures; that all he was handling was the wheat held by the pool, and that outside of that he had no activities whatever and was not hedging or buying futures.

The CHAIRMAN: This discussion is out of order on this item respecting the administration of "The Canada Grain Act, including management, operation, maintenance and equipment of elevators."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We discussed the matter on this item before, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, by consent of the house an item was reserved for discussion of all matters pertaining to the department.

Mr. MALCOLM: There is not another item in the whole estimates under which you could discuss it except the item for the Canada Grain Act, and it was discussed on that item last year.

The CHAIRMAN: That is quite right, but that was done by special consent. I remember very well, because I was in the chair at the time, that one item was reserved for a general discussion of all matters pertaining to the department. But if the committee agrees to the discussion continuing, I have no objection.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Prime Minister left the impression on me that there was only one prop to the market this year, and that was Mr. McFarland, the representative of the pool and of the government, if you like to put it that way, and that had that prop been taken away the whole business would have come tumbling down like Samson when he got his hair cut. As we are only part of this world and as Winnipeg is only one of many wheat markets, has some great economic Goliath been holding up the markets in the rest of the world that there should be a parity in all markets at this time and that our market should not be out of line with the other markets in Antwerp, Rotterdam, London, Liverpool, Manchester, Chicago and Buenos Aires? Where are these Goliaths? Why should my right hon. friend take all the credit for holding up the world's market at this time particularly when the market fell so badly? That is what he did, Mr. Chairman in his recent statement, and I could quote his words to you, but you would not let me; you never do. But it is in Hansard in black and white. I am not going to say that the Prime Minister deliberately deceived us. I do not think he knows much more about the market than I do, and I do not pretend to be an expert. I am searching for information, and if I have to depend on my right hon. friend I am afraid it will be a case of the blind leading the blind, unless he divulges more than he did on the recent occasion to which I have reference. I am not joking. I want to know if it is true that the wheat market not only in Canada but all over the world was kept either up or down during this period to which we have reference this year by the right hon. leader of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: The answer to that is no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No to what? This is what the right hon. gentleman said on November 14:

> Under these circumstances, Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited—

That is the company which this government was behind:

> —to which I have referred, became the only available hedging organization left in western Canada, and the government is faced at the moment with the issue as to whether or not, under these circumstances, it would give its support as provided by the Relief Act passed in 1931 and 1932 as well.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was no other hedging avenue. My information is to the effect that every elevator company, inside of twenty-four hours after they buy in the country, have their grain purchases hedged. It is because the pool had not their grain hedged two years or so ago that they suffered a loss. The rest of them had theirs hedged, and yet my right hon. friend takes the ground that he is the hedger for the whole grain trade. That is what he says.

Mr. BENNETT: As I have indicated, Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to discuss this matter because I did not bring a single note with me, being under the impression that this question would not be reconsidered. There will be ample opportunity when the estimates are before the house to discuss the matter fully. I repeat that the only available hedging possible is that provided by the wheat seller, by this organization.

Mr. YOUNG: They hedge for the trade as well.

Mr. BENNETT: They did some for the trade. I said the other day that I was not quite certain. However, I inquired about it, and found that they did some hedging.

Mr. YOUNG: They did all the hedging?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. DONNELLY: There was hedging on our Canadian market of Chicago wheat as well. Were they doing the buying of this wheat also?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot answer, because I have not the papers before me.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I came unprepared also, because I did not expect the Prime Minister to be present. He seldom is when these questions are under discussion. The Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke last year, because it comes under his department.

Mr. BENNETT: He has not his information before him, either.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He made quite different answers last year. I will not press it too hard, because there might have been state reasons for his answering other than exactly correctly. I am ready to forgive that. But when it is admitted by the Prime Minister this year that the government was in the wheat market I think it is high time we knew the facts.

Mr. VALLANCE: In view of what the Prime Minister has just said, namely that he has not the information before him, and in view of the fact that we have attempted on many occasions during the last seven weeks to extract from the government their position in connection with the wheat problem, will the Prime Minister give a guarantee to the house that when this matter comes up again for discussion the information will be given?

Mr. BENNETT: The word "guarantee" is a highly improper term to use. I will say, however, that so far as the government is concerned it will supply any information it has at its disposal if the house, or the committee of the house, and the opposition, think it is in the public interest to ask it. I will put the full responsibility for it exactly where it belongs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Until we do get this information we won't know whether the government has helped or hurt the market this year.

Mr. BENNETT: The Premier of Alberta made that perfectly clear. The other day Mr. Brownlee said what we had done had saved the situation, and I believe he is as well informed in these matters as any other gentleman in western Canada. I presume hon. members opposite saw his public statement in that regard. I know only this, that if we had to do it over again we would do exactly as we did.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, we see statements; there is always someone ready to make them when they are required. Statements are always forthcoming when it is necessary to prop up the government as well as the market.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say I had no knowledge of what Mr. Brownlee was going to say.

Mr. YOUNG: Did the Premier of Alberta have information when he made that statement?

Mr. BENNETT: What is that?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. YOUNG: Did he have information when he made that statement?

Mr. BENNETT: I have had no communication with him. It was made after the statement made by me in the house the other day.

Mr. DONNELLY: Last year I brought this matter up, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce told me the government had not taken any action of the kind. Now the Prime Minister tells us that they have been in the market since 1930. I was in this house in 1928, 1929 and 1930. We were told how the pools had been gambling in wheat, and it was because they had gambled that they had made such great losses. Last year and the year before I listened to the Prime Minister tell us that the reason the farmers in western Canada were so hard up was that they had been playing the stock market. Now we find that the big boy is going to show us how he gambled in wheat. It seems we have been in it for two or three years, but we have not had a statement yet. We do not know whether we are behind or whether we are ahead. When I suggest that there might be a profit the Prime Minister says that if there is any profit it goes to the bank.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say any such thing. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the hon. member retract that statement.

Mr. DONNELLY: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon; I meant to the selling agency.

Mr. BENNETT: Thank you.

Mr. DONNELLY: The suggestion that there was a profit was rather outside the question. One day we were told they were ahead of the market, that if they sold out and cleared up they would be ahead. I cannot see for the life of me why it was not done. I have heard the statement that a bear or a bull can make a profit on the market but that a hog cannot. Possibly that is why they have not sold out.

Mr. BENNETT: I am content that the issue should be left to the Canadian people.

Mr. DONNELLY: I hope when this matter comes up on the estimates we will have a full explanation of the activities of the government and a statement as to their position.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For the next two months then we are to look upon the Prime Minister of Canada as the great economic Tarzan the Terrible who can do all things and hold up all markets not only in Canada but throughout the world.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

ROYAL ASSENT

Office of the Governor General's Secretary, Canada

Ottawa, 25th November, 1932.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable L. P. Duff, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today at 10.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
James F. Crowdy,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons
Ottawa.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. RHODES moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1933, the sum of $1,534,957.08 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 12 for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1933.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILL NO. 2 TO CONSIDER READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I desire to move, with the consent of the house, that the following be members of the committee to consider Bill No. 2, an Act to Readjust the Representation in the House of Commons:

Messrs. Barber, Beaubien, Bell (St. John-Albert), Burns, Dorion, Elliott, Gobeil, Heaps, Ilsley, Kennedy (Peace River), MacNicol, Manion, Mercier (Laurier-Outremont), Reid, Smith (Cumberland), Stanley, Stewart (Brockville), Stewart (West Edmonton), Totzke and Turnbull.

And that standing order 65 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I asked this morning if it would be possible for members of the committee to be supplied with any data of which it is usually in possession when it begins its work on the redistribution bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, I understand the Prime Minister is attending to that, and will see that the proper papers are supplied.

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the Deputy of His Excellency of the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate.

And having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Excise Act.
An Act to amend The Canada Grain Act. (Domestic grain.)
An Act to amend The Montreal Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1894.
An Act respecting a certain Trade Agreement between His Majesty's Government in Canada and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom.
An Act respecting a certain Trade Agreement between the Dominion of Canada and the Union of South Africa.
An Act respecting a certain Trade Agreement between the Dominion of Canada and the Irish Free State.
An Act respecting a certain Trade Agreement between Canada and Southern Rhodesia.
An Act to amend the Customs Act.
An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

FRUIT COMBINE REPORT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Before we adjourn, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I should like to lay upon the table the final report of an investigation into an alleged combine in the distribution of fruit and vegetables, 1924-25. In some way this final report was not tabled previously, and the statute contemplates that this should be done.

BACK TO THE LAND MOVEMENT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I should like to table the answer to a question appearing as No. 33 in the votes and proceedings of November 23, 1932. The question was asked by Mr. Bourgeois, and I think the information should be tabled as soon as possible. The question and answer are as follows:

Mr. BOURGEOIS:

1. With respect to the return to the land movement, how many persons in the province of Quebec have benefited by the provisions of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act and received assistance from the federal government up to the present time?

2. How many persons in each of the other provinces of Canada have benefited thereby and been similarly assisted?

Mr. GORDON:

1. The provincial government of Quebec reports that up to date 148 families with 768 dependents, making a total of 916 individuals, have been settled under the relief settlement plan in accordance with the terms of the agreement entered into between the federal government and the province of Quebec under the provisions of The Relief Act, 1932, and that approximately 375 additional families are expected to be settled this season.

2. The provincial government of Nova Scotia reports 95 settlers placed on the land with 522 dependents, making a total of 617 individuals to November 1st, 1932. In addition a further 22 applications have been approved by the province.

The provincial government of Ontario reports 226 settlers placed on the land with 932 dependents, making a total of 1,158 individuals to October 5th, 1932.

The provincial government of Manitoba reports 179 settlers placed on the land with 637 dependents, making a total of 816 individuals to November 7th, 1932.

The provincial government of Saskatchewan reports 366 settlers placed on the land with 1,313 dependents, making a total of 1,679 individuals to October 18th, 1932, and that a further 133 additional settlers have been selected for settlement.

The provincial government of Alberta reports that 29 families with 108 dependents making a total of 137 individuals have been approved by the province for settlement.

[Mr. Gordon.]

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that this house do now adjourn, and that it stand adjourned until three o'clock in the afternoon of January 30, 1933.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.02 p.m.

Monday, January 30, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF ADDRESS IN REPLY

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a message from His Excellency the Governor General, signed by his own hand, reading as follows:

I have received with great pleasure the address you have voted in reply to my speech at the opening of parliament, and thank you for it sincerely.

Bessborough.

Government House,
Ottawa.

THE LATE MR. MAXIME D. CORMIER

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that death loves a shining mark. If that be true, we in this house have since the adjournment had striking evidence illustrating the force of that observation. Little did any of us, when we left here a few short weeks ago, think one of our number, Mr. Maxime D. Cormier, member for Restigouche-Madawaska, would have passed from this world. Nevertheless, such is the case.

A young man of great, indeed, of more than ordinary promise, has been called from us. He had a career that exemplifies fully what may be achieved by honest effort. He was descended from a family that came to this country over two and a half centuries ago. He early conceived the idea of making for himself a place in the public life of the country, and, settling in Edmundston, although born in the county of Westmorland, New Brunswick, identified himself with every local movement in that community. He was principal of the school and, subsequently admitted to the bar, he filled practically all the offices that might be filled by a member of the profession in the capital town of that county. He was judge of probate, clerk of the supreme court and clerk of the county court. In the fulness of time he offered himself as a candidate for the suffrage of his fellows. He was defeated, but in the election of 1930 he was returned to this house.

He had many qualities that endeared him to those who were privileged to know him well. I am told by one of his colleagues who was present at his funeral, that the manifestation of real sorrow and grief on the part of thousands of people who gathered there that day to pay their last earthly tribute to one of their number, was indeed striking, he had not seen anything like it before.

Mr. Cormier had a genial disposition and readily accommodated himself to the difficulties that arose by reason of the fact that he represented a constituency in which lived, in almost equal numbers, representatives of the two great races. Everyone spoke well of him in his desire to do justice and deal fairly with the claims of all persons regardless of race or religion, and to have attained the position of singular confidence he enjoyed in his community was well worth the effort of a lifetime. We shall miss him because of his kindly disposition, because of his buoyant optimism, because he represented the admixture of fairness and justice so essential in dealing with the many problems that confront legislators and others in this country. I ask you, sir, to convey to the sorrowing wife and children the expressions of sympathy of this chamber in the great loss they have sustained.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Personally, and on behalf of the Liberal members of the opposition, I desire to express to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and to hon. gentlemen opposite, our sincere sympathy in the loss which they and their party have sustained through the death of the late member for Restigouche-Madawaska, Mr. Maxime Cormier.

Having entered parliament so recently, Mr. Cormier was just coming to be known to many of the members. Those of us who had the pleasure of his acquaintance will appreciate how considerable is the loss sustained by those whose interests he sought to serve; and how merited the tribute which has just been paid his memory by the Prime Minister.

We join with other members of this house in the desire to have the expression of its sympathy conveyed to Madame Cormier and the members of her family, who have been so suddenly and so greatly bereaved.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, may I on behalf of those who sit in this corner of the house join in the tribute which has been paid to our late colleague, Mr. Cormier, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). Although Mr. Cormier had been a member of this house only since the election of 1930, I am sure all hon. members will join sincerely in the tribute which the Prime Minister has paid to his memory.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce a bill to amend the Railway Act (rates on grain).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. REID: This bill contains one clause proposing that the parliament of Canada grant to British Columbia the same freight rates on grain for domestic purposes as those enjoyed by eastern points. It is a simple clause.

Mr. SPEAKER: No copy of the bill has been filed as yet, and its first reading will have to be postponed until the bill is forthcoming.

Motion stands.

EXPORT ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. S. C. ROBINSON (West Essex) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 14, to amend the Export Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. ROBINSON: The object of this bill is, by repealing section 8 of the Export Act, to restore to the revenues of Canada the large amount of revenue lost by its enactment, and to open the way by international treaty or convention for reciprocal duties and obligations on the part of the two governments concerned. It is also an effort to help the serious unemployment situation in Canada, and to assist in the prevention of smuggling.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MARIA, QUE., INDIAN AGENT

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has Edmund Nadeau, Indian agent of Maria Indian Reserve, been dismissed? If so, for what reason?

2. Who was appointed in his place, and was the appointment a temporary or permanent one?

3. Has the appointment of Mr. Nadeau's successor been confirmed, and if not, who is now in charge of the agency?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Yes. For political partisanship.

2. Rev. J. A. W. Provencher was appointed temporarily.

3. No. Mr. J. Adhemar Cyr.

POST OFFICE—DISMISSALS

Mr. POULIOT:

Do the figures 814 which appear in file S.P. 163, Ref. 22, of November 14/16, 1932, as constituting the number of employees of the Post Office Department who have been dismissed since August 1, 1930, include postmasters dismissed for political partisanship, incumbents who lost their position as a result of the changing of post office locations, and those whose retirement resulted from the closing of post offices?

Mr. SAUVE: The statement mentioned covers all postmasters dismissed on account of active political partisanship, unsatisfactory management or site or other reasons, but not those whose services had to be dispensed with on account of the closing of post offices.

SULLY, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Was Mr. Isidore Jean, a returned soldier, appointed postmaster of Sully, on or about June 30, 1932?

2. If so, upon whose recommendation?

3. Did the Post Office Department issue instructions for the transfer of the post office at Sully to the said Mr. Jean?

4. If so, on what date?

5. Were these instructions suspended?

6. If so, on what date, at whose request, upon whose instructions, and why?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. By order of the Postmaster General.

3. Yes.

4. June 30, 1932.

5. Yes.

6. On July 6, 1932, by order of the Postmaster General.

IMPORTS OF MANUFACTURES

Mr. GOTT:

What was the value of the manufactured products imported into Canada, each year or part of year, during the years the late administration was in office?

Mr. STEVENS: Canada's imports of partly and fully manufactured goods during the years ended March 31, 1922 to 1930, were as under:

| Years ended March 31 | Partly manufactured | Fully manufactured |
| 1922 | $ 71,843,851 | $459,511,728 |
| 1923 | 77,818,110 | 496,733,213 |
| 1924 | 100,277,664 | 539,065,981 |
| 1925 | 85,715,404 | 490,315,839 |
| 1926 | 93,127,644 | 578,335,296 |
| 1927 | 104,707,342 | 662,314,666 |
| 1928 | 106,321,137 | 718,826,782 |
| 1929 | 101,228,395 | 873,966,247 |
| 1930 | 95,970,100 | 864,026,719 |

IMMIGRATION, 1926-1930

Mr. GOTT:

How many people were admitted into Canada from all countries—each year, or part of year—during the years the late administration was in office?

Mr. GORDON:

|---|---|
| October 1, 1926, to March 31, 1927 | 53,105 |
| Fiscal year 1927-28 | 151,600 |
| Fiscal year 1928-29 | 167,723 |
| Fiscal year 1929-30 | 163,288 |
| April 1, 1930, to July 31, 1930 | 58,273 |

SINKING OF BRIGHT FAN

Mr. McINTOSH:

1. In view of recent developments, does the Government intend to further investigate the circumstances surrounding the sinking of the British freighter Bright Fan?

2. If so, when?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1 and 2. The government has no knowledge of any "recent developments" in this matter.

C.G.S. ST. HELIERS

Mr. GARDINER:

1. When was the C.G.S. St. Heliers bought and from whom?

2. By whom was this vessel inspected and at what location?

3. What was the price paid for it?

4. What repairs have been made each year since its purchase?

5. By whom were these repairs made?

6. What have these repairs cost each year?

7. What balance, if any, was due by the Department of Marine for repairs on July 28, 1930?

8. What balance, if any, was due by the department for this vessel on July 28, 1930?

9. When was this balance paid and to whom?

10. What to date is the actual cost to the department for this vessel?

11. To what use each year has this vessel been put?

12. When was it last used?

13. Where is it now lying?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. The vessel was bought under Bill of Sale dated July 10, 1930, from St. John Drydock and Shipbuilding Company, Limited, of Saint John, N.B.

2. It was inspected by Steamship Inspectors C. E. Dalton and W. R. Bennett, at Saint John, N.B.

3. $184,978.80.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

REPORTABLE DISEASES

Mr. ROSS:

1. What are the reportable diseases in each province of the Dominion?

2. What has been the death rate for the past ten years for, (a) tuberculosis; (b) diphtheria; (c) puerperal state; (d) organic diseases of the heart; (e) pneumonia; (f) diabetes; (g) poliomyelitis?

Mr. STEVENS: Return tabled forthwith.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DETROIT RIVER-LAKE ERIE CHANNEL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. GOTT:

For a copy of the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America which permits channel construction in the lower Detroit river and Upper Lake Erie, international waters, at or near Amherstburg, Ontario.

LOWER DETROIT RIVER—PATROL

MR. GOTT:

For a copy of the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America regarding the operation and maintenance of a patrol in the lower Detroit river during the course of channel construction and the closing of the West Channel to navigation.

EXPORT ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) moved:

Resolved, that in the opinion of this house, the Export Act Amendment, 1930, refusal of releases and clearances to countries where importation of liquor forbidden, should now be repealed.

Mr. BENNETT: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if this resolution is in order now that a bill founded upon its subject matter has been introduced and read a first time today.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill introduced today undoubtedly covers the very same matter dealt with in this resolution, and as the bill itself cannot be anticipated by a resolution I declare the resolution out of order.

Mr. POWER: I have nothing to say, Mr. Speaker, except to acquiesce in your decision.

CURRENCY, NOTES AND BONDS

PROPOSAL FOR STAMPING OR PRINTING IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) (Translation) moved:

Whereas French-speaking Canadians constitute approximately one-third of the population and have always evinced their attachment to the throne and British institutions;

And whereas their language, one of the languages most commonly used in international relations, is coupled with their culture and traditions, one of the essential elements of Canadian nationality, and establishes a characteristic that differentiates and protects our country against the dangers of Americanization;

And whereas the Fathers of Confederation had in mind and the federal pact demand the equality of the two languages: English and French;

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, in order to more clearly establish the distinctive character of the Canadian people and to better ensure its preservation, all state currency, notes or bonds should be in both official languages.

(Translation) He said: Mr. Speaker, I did not anticipate to be called upon, to-day, to discuss the motion which appears in my name on the order paper. The question to which this motion gives rise is of great importance to the maintenance of the good understanding which must always exist among the various ethnical groups in Canada. Therefore, I only wish I possessed the necessary gifts in order to discuss this question as it deserves; however, I trust that the veterans of Canadian politics, whom I see around me in the house and who are my inspirers and models, will kindly complete by their masterful arguments, the proof of the theme I set forth, after I have given the motives which have induced me to move that Canadian currency as well as Government notes, bonds or debentures, be, in the future, stamped or printed in both the official languages of this country. I do not intend to enter into an historical or philosophical description to support the wish expressed in the resolution, which I have the honour of introducing. I would deem this beyond my power. Moreover, the resolution speaks for itself; it is quite evident to the great majority of Canadians who are intelligent, tolerant and possess some knowledge of the history of their country. It is to them that I appeal, for I do not entertain any hope of convincing ignorant and bigoted or silly people.

Any bright Canadian who has studied his history admits as a fact that Canada is a bilingual country and was founded by two great races from which she borrowed the best characteristics to build up an individuality of her own and distinct from that of other nations which surround her. Any intelligent Canadian who has perused his history also admits that the two-fold formation of the Canadian nation must appear in the foremost acts of its national life, as for instance, in the stamping or printing of its currency, government notes, bonds or debentures, which is a prerogative of the sovereignty of a nation.

Bilingual currency is not a new question to this house. I find in the Hansard of the session of 1906-1907, that Col. O. E. Talbot, member for Bellechasse, speaking for Mr. Armand LaVergne, member for Montmagny, questioned the hon. Mr. Fielding, who was then Minister of Finance, as to the stamping or printing of currency and government notes in the two official languages of this country. The hon. Mr. Fielding replied that this reform did not seem to him, generally desired. The house will bear witness that this answer has not varied since then; it is the same which is given to-day. One may find the questions and answers, at page 6015, vol. IV of Hansard, session 1906-1907.

I am pleased to point out that this question was brought to the attention of the house by one of the former members of the county of Bellechasse which I have the privilege of representing in parliament.

More than 100 years ago, another member for Bellechasse, the hon. Augustin-Norbert Morin, who later became prime minister of Canada and whose family is related to that of my hon. friend, the member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) published a pamphlet in connection with an order issued by a certain magistrate, whose name I cannot recall at this moment, that the English language should be adhered to in pleading before Canadian courts. "In what language should justice be meted out"? inquired the hon. Mr. Morin. "Evidently," he replied, "in the language of those who are judged!"

Prompted by my illustrious predecessor and model, allow me, sir, in my turn to put a similar question: In what language must be stamped the currency which serves to pay the taxes? The answer is clear: "In the language of those who are taxed."

Then, as one third of the rate payers in Canada speak the French language, it is befitting that the currency with which they pay their contribution to the state should bear a French inscription. This currency which serves to pay taxes, seeing that Canada is composed of a people speaking two official languages, should be stamped in the two official languages spoken by the ratepayers.

Whether one likes it or not, Canada is a bilingual country, in fact as well as in rights she bears the stamp of both French and English civilizations. It is exactly what distinguishes, characterizes and differentiates her from other countries. My fellow-citizens speaking the English language will pardon me if I state that without us, without our help, they would only be ordinary Americans, or common Americans, if you prefer.

There was held, last summer, in Quebec a congress of a national society called "The Native Sons of Canada," I had the pleasure of accompanying to the old Basilica of Quebec one of the officers of this society and I pointed out to him that the sacred chant to which he was listening: "Domine Salvum fac regem" had been sung in the old Quebec Basilica for the last three hundred years, ever since this Basilica had been founded, in 1633. We thus have prayed for the King for three hundred years; first, for the King of France; then for the King of England; and now it is for the King of Canada for whom we pray in this Basilica, three centuries old. I pointed out to him that the two or three square miles comprised within the walls of Quebec were at a time of its history the only territory in America over which floated the British flag, and that, if Canada is British territory and forms part of the possessions of His Majesty George V, the King of England and equally so of Canada, it was due to the defence of Quebec by Canadians speaking French united with the Canadians speaking English, in 1775.

One of our most eminent public men said to me one day: "You should withdraw this resolution. Canada is not a bilingual country." But, I replied, you are not without knowing that there are more than 3,000,000 Canadians speaking the French language. Does this not make of Canada a bilingual country? "Read the British North America Act" he answered. The eminent person who so addressed me is a member of the profession to which I belong, this, I state, without wishing to be considered as his equal. It is, perhaps, a professional defect of lawyers to attach too much importance to the wording of an act. Notwithstanding, however, that the wording of article 133 of the British North America Act seems to convey that French is only official in the House of Commons, before federal courts and in Quebec, it is nevertheless a fact that Canadians speaking French, are established in the nine provinces of Canada; it is furthermore a fact that the French Canadians are the pioneers of this country, they opened it to civilization and have helped to build it up, therefore Canada is, in fact, a bilingual country.

When we are aware, Sir, that other countries are learning again their old time languages; when we witness, for instance, Ireland reviving Gaelic, the Jews in Palestine reviving Hebrew, the Catalons, who have just been given their autonomy by the Spanish Republic, reviving their old Catalonian language, literature and theatres, so as to assert their individuality and distinguish themselves from other nations, it is very strange to find that certain Canadians are opposed to Canada asserting her individuality as a bilingual country, simply, they say, "So as not to embarrass the Government."

Whether this motion be presented by a liberal or by a conservative, whether it be adopted by a liberal or conservative government, it is of little import, the essential is that it be adopted. I waited until the house had been in session for some time before placing on the order paper this resolution.

I wished to afford an opportunity to my friends opposite to introduce this motion themselves instead of my doing so, and I would have been pleased to support it had they done so. If my hon. friends on your right, sir, had moved this resolution, they could not have been reproached for doing so "to embarrass the government." However, I wish to point out to those who accuse me of moving this resolution with the view of embarrassing the government that, if a change of government takes place at the next election and if the reform which I claim is not granted, I shall continue to make the same request to the government which will replace this one.

The text of article 133 of the British North America Act of which I spoke a moment ago, did not prevent the hon. Louis Philippe Pelletier, one of the most distinguished and able men that the conservative party has ever had, of having post cards printed both in French and English; this text did not prevent the hon. senator Jacques Bureau—before whose grave, freshly covered, I bow—from issuing excise stamps in both languages, when Minister of Customs; this text did not prevent the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot), when Postmaster General from giving us postage stamps in both languages. They were guided by common sense, propriety and justice rather than by the lack of broadness of the wording.

Moreover, Canada is, by rights, a bilingual country, and this since 1774. Our present system of government is but the expansion of the systems which preceded it, and it has become heir to them. The Quebec Act of 1774, which established civil government in this country, after the conquest, and which applied to all territories remaining under the control of England, permitted officially the use of French together with English and thereby proclaimed the bilingual character of this country. The constitution of 1791, which set up a parliamentary regime, acknowledged equally the similar rights of French and English in this country.

One hundred years ago, the currency in this country was bilingual and on the face of an 1827 penny one may read these words "Deux sous, province du Bas Canada" and on the reverse side "Bank token, one penny." You will perhaps, be amazed, sir, to hear that in the English colony of Hong Kong, the currency is stamped both in English and in Chinese. It therefore seems to me that nobody should be astonished to hear the French Canadians request that in Canada, where they constitute one third of the population, the same justice be meted out to them as that which is meted out to the Chinese people of Hong Kong.

The Act of the Union of the two Canadas, of 1840, prohibited the use of French, but this prohibition was of short duration, and in 1849, thanks to Baldwin and Lafontaine, all that was then Canada became again officially bilingual. The Canadian Confederation is as much bilingual as the Canada of 1774, the Lower Canada of 1791 and that under the Union of 1849. Without wishing to criticize the Fathers of Confederation of 1864 and 1867, it seems to me that they could have better laid down the principle of bilingualism in Canada. When Confederation was constituted, the French Canadians were about equal in number to the English Canadians. It strikes me that the Fathers of Confederation, instead of playing the part of poor relatives, instead of appearing as whipped dogs—pardon the expression—should have better upheld the rights of those they represented and made really of Canada a bilingual country, in its rights, as it existed in fact, instead of acquiescing to this narrow and shabby text which we find in the British North America Act. Another reason why I request that Canadian currency be stamped in the two languages, is that this act would proclaim the fact that Canada was founded by two great races.

I do not think it necessary to develop at length this argument. Those who have studied Canadian history are aware what has been, in the past, the contribution of French-speaking Canadians to our national life. We, belonging to this generation believe, without bragging, that we carry some weight in the affairs of this country, we bear our share of the taxes and help in working out the destinies of this country. We take as much pride in our forebears and the part they played in our history as do our English-speaking fellow-citizens. Our love and devotion for the common fatherland is equal to that of our fellow-citizens who speak another language, and the patriotism of the oldest Canadians has nothing to envy to that of Canadians speaking English.

We require no pressing to take up our share of sacrifices and liabilities. Moreover, we are never left out on such occasions, no more than we are forgotten by the public treasury. Why should our rights and privileges be ignored? Why should we be forced to claim them as in the present instance? What a noble act it would have been on the part of a Canadian speaking English to move a resolution purporting to stamp Canadian currency and print the state notes in the two official languages, so as to proclaim the duality of formation and civiliaztion in Canada, and the perfect equality of the two principal ethnical groups constituting the population.

The frank and loyal acknowledgment of the rights of the Canadians speaking French by the majority are the peace terms between brothers without which this country's welfare, as a whole, cannot exist. We do not think, we are requesting too much in claiming as a right the appearance of our language on national currency, notes, bonds or debentures, so as to proclaim to the world the historical part played by the people of our race in this country. Of this we greatly pride ourselves and we love to recal' the time when Quebec was the centre of a vast empire extending from the Atlantic and the Alleghanies as far as the Rocky mountains, from Hudson bay to the Gulf of Mexico. We like to recall the time when the Ibervilles, the Bienvilles founded cities in the valley of the Mississippi, as far as the Gulf of Mexico, and that not one single large town, except on the New England coast, was founded by others than by French speaking Canadians.

The spirit of justice is part of the English character. We therefore trust that our fellow-citizens speaking English will acknowledge the justice of the rights we have of making our existence known on such official documents as our national currency, notes, bonds or debentures. Those endeavouring to unify, to standardize us will strive in vain, there will always be two languages, two races in this country. It is moreover its distinctive feature from others. Why not, honestly, make the best of it? Why not scrupulously respect the rights and views of one another? Why not endeavour to better know and understand one another by learning both languages, by practising entirely bilingualism, as His Excellency the Governor General himself recently advised, at the Ottawa University. I find his own words in the published account of the "Voix National" dated December 10, 1931. The Governor General in answer to the address of the students of the Ottawa University stated plainly:

I was particularly pleased to hear you inform me, with evident satisfaction, that bilingualism, in your institution, forms part of the foundation stone of the education you receive. In my opinion, the importance of the knowledge of both languages in this country cannot be over estimated. The better the citizens of this dominion will be able to discuss easily and freely, both in French and English, the vital questions which interest the whole Canadian nation, the better will they appreciate their respective qualities, and the less will there be danger of their being misunderstood.

The stamping of currency in both languages would certainly remind young Canadians to follow the sound advice of Lord Bessborough.

Moreover, this is an excellent opportunity to achieve the reform requested. Has not the British Government just handed over to the Canadian Government the control of the Mint, at Ottawa, which it held up to December 1, 1931. By the way, may I congratulate the Government on having realized this reform quite flattering to our national pride and suggested by the Order of Native Sons of Canada.

We may be reminded, perhaps, that there is no demand for bilingual inscriptions on our national currency. We are aware that this was the hon. Mr. Fielding's answer, in 1907, and that of hon. Mr. Robb, in 1928, when he was requested to please his fellow-citizens of Quebec on the occasion of granting a new contract for the printing of State notes.

I do not think that the same objection stands this year. Indeed, since this question was brought up in the House, most of the newspapers of this country, not only those published in the French language but also many published in the English language, have referred to it in their editorial page, and they are unanimous in requesting Parliament to adopt this reform. Such a reform is equally requested by the Native Sons of Canada, the "Société du bon parler français" of Quebec, the St. John the Baptist Society of Montreal and Quebec, the Commercial Travellers' Syndicate and many others whose names I cannot recall, at present; all have adopted resolutions recommending the putting into practice of the principle we advocate.

Petitions signed by a great number of ratepayers were forwarded to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) requesting that State currency and notes be stamped or printed in both Canadian official languages. I do not think that it can be said now that there exists no demand, or popular sentiment in favour of the resolution which we are debating.

Practical men, dampers of practical sense, have objected to the cost and expense that such a reform would entail. They remind me of the Scotchman who said:

"There is no pleasure in smoking. If you smoke your own tobacco you are always thinking of the awful expense. And if you are smoking someone else's tobacco your pipe is filled so tight that it does not draw."

What does the outlay of a few thousand dollars amount to when a principle is involved and when it is a question of doing justice to one third of the population of a country?

Moreover, the outlay would only consist in making out new drawings, new lithographic plates and dies.

What will you do, I was asked, with the small metal coins which bear already figures and inscriptions in Latin and English? If I am not mistaken, there are but the one cent coins on which we could translate "one" by "un" and the large coins of five cents on which "five" could be duplicated by "cinq." As to "cent" I wonder whether it would be necessary to translate it by "centin," for this word "cent" has been accepted if not by the French at least by the Canadian language. However it is with reference to government notes, our beautiful "paper money" according to a "popular expression" that we shine. A few years ago, when the United States reduced the size of their state notes, some one suggested to the Canadian Minister of Finance to follow their example. He, however, refused with contempt, wishing to preserve the full and rich appearance of the Canadian notes. It is true that since then the United States took upon themselves the task of reducing their value, however, we remain with the large size notes of the period of the seven fat cows. That is fortunate for we shall thus have the necessary space for beautiful notes printed in both official languages.

How do you translate "Dominion of Canada" I was asked? It is told that it was Sir Georges-Etienne Cartier who undertook to translate it by "Puissance du Canada." To some one who remarked to him that the expression was not French, he replied with the little sharp tone which, it is said, he had: "It will be in the future!" I leave the care of settling the question to experts. The Canadian Confederation will get on well, likewise the Kingdom of Canada of Sir John A. Macdonald and of my friend the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. LaVergne) or even the Republic of Canada, seeing that, since the Westminster Statute saw light, Canada is a republic presided by a King.

Some one informed me that Canadian currency can only be stamped in English, since it bears the likeness of the Sovereign and that the language of the Sovereign is English. Since the statement of Balfour, at the Imperial Conference of 1926, and also since the Westminster Statute, His Majesty George V is king of Canada as he is king of each of the nations comprised in the British Commonwealth. As King of Canada, he must speak the language of all his subjects of which one-third speak French. Moreover, as a question of fact, His Majesty speaks French far more fluently than I do.

In England, a person does not consider himself well educated unless he can speak French, the language of his Norman ancestors who were also those of the French Canadians of to-day. I shall never forget the confusion and abashment of three or four English-speaking Quebec people, obliged to confess, after passing all their life among their French-speaking fellow-citizens, that they were unable to follow Sir Austen Chamberlain and Sir Ronald Rudd, speaking in an irreproachable French, in an address given at the Canadian Club in Quebec. Bilingual currency is not a rare thing. The notes of both the Banque Nationale and Banque Provinciale are printed in French and English. I think that the currency and postage stamps of the Free State of Ireland are stamped or printed in Gaelic and English, while that of South Africa are in English and in Dutch. That Belgian currency is stamped in Flemish and French; that of Switzerland in German, French and Italian. Switzerland is a country where really the principle of bilingualism or rather trilingualism is practised, since nobody can occupy any public post, not even that of tramway conductor, without knowing the three official languages of the country. When shall we see such a reform and such an evidence of punctilious good faith in Canada where most of the high officials of the Dominion government are unilingual, as for instance, a chairman of the railway commission who does not even know how to write the names of witnesses of the province of Quebec who appear before him.

In closing my remarks may I express a wish: That of seeing the members speaking French in this house, united on this question. I trust that no one will take the attitude of whipped dog that some of our public men have sometimes taken on national questions and which is no doubt characteristic of three centuries of colonialism. If there are "ifs" and "buts" to be brought forth, if there are objections to be made, let this be done by the hare-brained people of the Orange Order or Ku Klux Klan who have brought into this free and peaceful country the narrow and ignorant fanaticism of foreign countries.

My last appeal is to Canadians who take pride in their country, its origin, history and character. We speak in this country the two most beautiful and important languages of the world which we have inherited from the two greatest civilizations that have ever existed. Let all Canadians, all true Canadians, whether they speak English or French, help us in proclaiming throughout the world, on Canadian currency, notes, bonds and debentures, that Canada is a bilingual country and that it is this characteristic which makes for its individuality and distinguishes it from other countries.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): As I wish to take part in this debate, as do also a number of my colleagues, and as I did not expect that this motion would be introduced immediately, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Mr. Speaker, speaking on the motion for the adjournment, it strikes me that my excellent friend, the hon. member who has just spoken, should be ready to address the house. He has only to read the articles which he has written in "l'Action Catholique" and which my hon. friend from Bellechasse has so ably disproved. The inscriptions on the jam pots are bilingual.

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): They are sticky.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the motion for the adjournment of the debate seconded?

Mr. GOBEIL: Because the mover of the resolution has spoken in French, I moved the adjournment of the debate in that language.

Mr. SPENCE: I second it.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Gobeil) which was agreed to on the following division:

CITY OF OTTAWA

EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT WITH CORPORATION TO JULY 1, 1933

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Minister of Public Works, on behalf of His Majesty, to enter into an agreement with the corporation of the city of Ottawa to extend the period of the existing agreement with the corporation for one year from July 1, 1932.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if there will be a report of the recent dominion-provincial conference; if so, will it be tabled shortly?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the interprovincial conference was a conference of representatives of the provinces and the dominion, and it was agreed that no record would be kept of the proceedings other than of the resolutions that were passed. They will be tabled in due course. They have already been printed in the press.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if it is the intention of the government to introduce any legislation with respect to unemployment relief or farm relief at this part of the session; if so, can he indicate at once what the nature of the legislation will be?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to indicate the character of legislation before it is submitted by formal resolution to the house. There will be legislation with respect to one or both of the matters mentioned. As to the form it will take, that has not been settled.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask the Prime Minister if Canada will be represented when the disarmament conference resumes its work, and if so, by whom?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Canada will be represented. As to the personnel of the representation that has not been settled. Cable communications have passed between the government of Canada and our representatives at Geneva, I can only say for the moment that we will be represented. It will depend entirely on the general character of the discussions by whom we may be represented, that is whether or not it is desirable to send anybody to Geneva for that purpose.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

CANADIAN POLICY IN THE FAR EAST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) whether the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) represented the view of the government of Canada when he spoke at Geneva about the Manchurian question?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): If the hon. gentleman will read the whole of the speech made by the Secretary of State for Canada, rather than the first part of it, which seems to have had much publicity in the newspapers, because it was sent before the speech was concluded, I think he will perhaps realize that many of the criticisms made of that speech were wholly unwarranted. As a whole, I think the speech does not bear the interpretation placed upon it. The Secretary of State had his instructions, and he made it abundantly clear,—I saw him in London—that his speech as a whole did not in any sense depart from them, although isolated sections of it might leave the impression that he was endeavouring to support one particular phase of the situation rather than another. I think the speech as a whole shows no departure from the general principles which I indicated to the house as being the views of the government in matters of this kind.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then I assume he represented the views of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: He represented the government. And he believes that on a true interpretation of his remarks they are not open to the criticisms that have been urged. In view of the statement as a whole I cannot see that he departed from his instructions, but if you take isolated sentences you might arrive at conclusions entirely at variance with what was intended by the speaker. As he will be back here very shortly he will be able to explain the situation fully.

IMPORTATIONS OF BUTTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) if the government received complaints from western Canada, British Columbia particularly, in regard to importations of New Zealand butter?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Melfort): There have been certain representations made with reference to the importations of New Zealand butter.

Mr. E. O. BERTRAND (Prescott): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) as to what action will be taken by the government should there be importations of butter from Australia or elsewhere.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Such action as is necessary and proper under the statutes of this country.

UNION WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if there have been any communications or correspondence with the government of, or with parties in, Newfoundland with regard to possible political union or arrangements with that dominion, and if so, will he lay copies of that correspondence on the table.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I doubt not that the hon. gentleman with his love of order will realize that questions have already been placed upon the order paper in connection with that subject.

Mr. RALSTON: No, there are no questions about that. One is in regard to Labrador and the other in regard to the financial position.

Mr. BENNETT: Inasmuch as the hon. gentleman has raised the question now without notice, I can only say that there has been no correspondence in regard to the matter he mentioned; I think I am correct in saying no correspondence of any kind. Last fall, after a conference took place here, I think a personal letter was written to me by the Prime Minister of Newfoundland stating that if the matter were to be considered, ample opportunity would be afforded for discussion, something of that sort. But there has been no communication of an official character dealing with the matter to which the hon. gentleman refers.

SURVEY OF NATIONAL PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. I. A. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) if it is the intention of the government to introduce any legislation based on the recommendations of the Gibb commission?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I think it is the intention of the government to bring in legislation.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): May I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if the government will shortly make a statement in regard to the proposed cattle deal with Russia?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Tomorrow being a government day I see no reason why I should not make a statement at that time.

PENSION ACT ADMINISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to inquire of the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren), when we may expect the report of the committee investigating the workings of the Pension Act.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Speaker, the report of this committee has been delivered to me and is now in the hands of the government. As to what further steps may be taken, I expect to be able to furnish this information at an early day.

ESTIMATES—BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), if he is in a position to inform the house as to when the estimates for the ensuing year will be presented, and also whether or not he hopes to be able to bring down his budget at an early day. I would direct his attention to the fact that we have been in session now for over two months.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I anticipate that the estimates will be presented to the house this week, possibly on Wednesday, although I cannot be certain that that will be the day. I am sorry that I cannot give my right hon. friend a specific answer to the second portion of his question.

SOLDIER LAND SETTLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to ask the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Gordon), if it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation this year affecting soldier settlement upon lands.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): The position of soldier and other settlers upon lands owned by the Dominion government is now under review by the officials of the department, and although I cannot state definitely, it may be that some remedial legislation will be introduced at this session. I cannot state the exact nature of such legislation, but the action which the government intends to take will be announced in due course.

INTERNATIONAL RADIO CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau), when we shall be favoured with a report on his work in connection with the radio conference in Spain.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): My hon. friend will be satisfied within a few days.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Pretty soon?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Within a few days.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 4.20 p.m.

---

Tuesday, January 31, 1933.

The house met at three o'clock.

PENSION ACT ADMINISTRATION

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): An inquiry was made yesterday by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) with reference to the report of the committee investigating the administration of the Pension Act. I now take this opportunity of tabling the report.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table of the house a number of orders in council passed in pursuance of the relief legislation, referring to the payment of sums of money.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce a bill to amend the Railway Act (rates on grain).

[Mr. Reid.]

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I would ask the hon. gentleman to be good enough to allow this bill to stand for a day or two until I can give a short explanation, possibly tomorrow, which I think will obviate the necessity of introducing the bill.

Mr. REID: I shall be glad to agree to that

Motion stands.

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

EMPIRE CONTENT OF GOODS ENTITLED TO PREFERENCE IN GREAT BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I should like to ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance if they can give me any information as to the truth of a statement appearing in this morning's paper to the effect that after the first of April next empire goods in order to obtain free entry into Great Britain must have a fifty per cent empire content in labour and materials. Is that correct?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): At the sessions of the Imperial economic conference which took place at Ottawa, the discussion as to empire content was carried forward for some time and various suggestions were made. Generally speaking, fifty per cent was regarded as a reasonable empire content, and the British government concluded from their standpoint that they would fix fifty per cent, effective from the first of April next, as sufficient empire content to entitle goods to the benefit of the empire preference. That refers, however, not to all goods, but to a limited number, particulars of which I shall in due course lay on the table of the house. The report in the press is a summary of what the intention of Great Britain is. We finally agreed at the time of the conference that each country could probably best decide for itself what would be a reasonable content, and the matter will be further considered at the meeting of the committee on cooperation which will be convened on the fourteenth of February.

Mr. EULER: Is there to be any uniformity in the matter?

Mr. BENNETT: That was a question that engaged our attention here, and it was concluded at that time that it was difficult to provide for uniformity. That was the reason why no conclusion was arrived at, as no doubt the hon. gentleman has observed from the record of the proceedings.

PETER VERIGIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Several weeks before the adjournment of the house an order was passed for the production of papers relating to Peter Veregin, who the newspapers state is about to be deported. I should like to ask the Minister of Immigration when we may expect the papers to be brought down.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Any papers that bear upon the Veregin referred to as Peter Veregin will be brought down. I regret if there has been any delay in bringing down the return. I shall immediately look into the matter and have the papers tabled as soon as possible.

TARIFF BOARD

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): There have been several intimations to the effect that the personnel of the tariff board would be announced at the time of the opening of the house. Is the Prime Minister in a position to say who the members are, or whether the members have been selected?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think practically every hon. member of the house knows something of the difficulties connected with completing the personnel of the tariff board. In pursuance of the promise that was given that we would endeavour to obtain a board that would not be censured or criticized as, to use the language of one hon. gentleman, a board of political hacks, or at all events of not too pronounced a political stripe, we have been endeavouring to meet that view to the best of our ability, and I contemplate being able to make a statement to the house before the end of the week.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suppose the Prime Minister has not felt that a conference with the opposition would be at all helpful in securing members who would be persona grata to both sides of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: The only difficulty, Mr. Speaker, that I would experience with that would be to know which opposition was meant —the rising tide, it is so said, opposite and to my right, or the ebb tide directly in front.

SOLDIER LAND SETTLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I understand that during the parliamentary recess the Minister of Immigration and Colonization came to some definite conclusions regarding soldier settlement policy. May I ask when he is going to give parliament and the country the information as to what these changes are.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): The same question was asked and answered yesterday, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately the hon. member for North Battleford was not in his seat. There has always been, since we have been here, a definite policy with respect to soldier settlers which has been consistently carried out. I have set it forth on a number of occasions, and as I stated yesterday I have under review possible remedial legislation which I hope to be able to present to the house before the session is concluded.

WHEAT SHIPMENTS TO GREECE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce with respect to a press dispatch dated December 24 last, announcing that Greece was negotiating with Argentine for wheat on account of some disagreement with the Canadian government. May I ask if a new agreement has been concluded with Greece, and has there been a decreased exportation of Canadian wheat to Greece within the past year?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is no new agreement with Greece. A very considerable quantity of Canadian wheat has been exported to Greece within the last few months.

GOVERNMENT WHEAT PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Just before the house adjourned, the Prime Minister promised to give the house and the country a report on the government's activities in the wheat market during the past two or three years. When may we expect that statement?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): If the hon. gentleman will look at the record, he will find that that is not a correct statement. The discussion which took place between the hon. member for Battleford and myself finally explained the situation, and that undertaking will be kept.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF CANADIAN CATTLE AND OTHER COMMODITIES FOR PETROLEUM AND OIL

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, some question has been raised regarding trade relations with Russia, and I thought that at this time it would be well to make a statement as far as possible covering the whole field.

1. A trade agreement was negotiated in 1921 between the United Kingdom and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. On August 22, 1921, and December 26, 1921, through appropriate minutes in council, the government of the United Kingdom were informed that Canada desired to participate in the arrangement, and a formula to be embodied in notes to be exchanged between the British foreign office and the Russian trade delegation with the object of making applicable to Canada the provisions of the trade agreement was approved by the Canadian government. Effect was given to this decision by an exchange of notes, under date of July 3, 1922, and the British trade agreement was applied to Canada from that date. Subsequently a Russian trade delegation was established in Canada.

2. A general treaty of commerce was negotiated in 1924 between the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and the British government, but in November, 1924, after the Labour party was defeated in the general election, the new Foreign secretary, Mr. (now Sir) Austen Chamberlain, indicated to the Russian representative that the government found themselves unable to recommend the treaty in question to the consideration of parliament or to submit it to the King for His Majesty's ratification, so that Anglo-Russian commercial relations continued to be governed by the trade agreement of 1921.

3. Following like action by the United Kingdom, Canada formally recognized the Soviet government by letter from Mr. King, the then Prime Minister, dated March, 24, 1924, directed to Mr. A. Yazikoff, the Soviet official agent at Montreal.

4. In May, 1927, a search was made of the offices of the Anglo-Russian trade organization in London and as a result the trade agreement between Russia and Great Britain was terminated. The Russian representatives were requested to leave the country on the ground that as the result of the search it was conclusively proved that military espionage and subversive activities throughout the British empire were directed and carried on from the offices of the organization. The Russian Mission denied the statements but complied with the request to leave Great Britain, and the British representative in Moscow was simultaneously withdrawn. Canada took the same position as the United Kingdom. Mr. King, then Prime Minister announced that Canada had taken independent action and declared itself free from the obligations of the agreement, and he further stated that this action was being taken "on our own initiative as a result of the evidence we have before us at the present time" as well as on "the statement of the British Prime Minister in parliament", which "leaves no doubt as to propaganda being conducted by the agents of the Soviet". In the note sent by Mr. King to the Soviet official agent in Canada, he informed him that the Canadian government had concluded that the Soviet authorities had failed to "refrain from hostile action or undertakings and from conducting outside their own borders any official propaganda direct or indirect against the institutions of the British empire, which was an essential condition of the agreement as entered into by Canada as well as by the United Kingdom".

5. On April 16, 1930, a temporary commercial agreement was entered into between His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom and the government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics pending the conclusion of a formal treaty of commerce and navigation. The agreement was to remain in force until a commercial treaty was concluded subject, however, to the right of either party at any time to give notice to the other to terminate the agreement, which remained in force until the expiration of six months from the date on which such notice was given. The protocol contained a provision that the contracting parties were animated by the intention to eliminate from their economic relations all forms of discrimination, and that they agreed that, so far as relates to the treatment accorded by each party to the trade with the other, they would be guided in regard to the purchase and sale of goods, in regard to the employment of shipping and in regard to all similar matters by commercial and financial considerations only and, subject to such considerations, would adopt no legislative or administrative action of such a nature as to place the goods, shipping, trading organizations and trade in general of the other party in any respect in a position of inferiority as compared with the goods, shipping and trading organizations of any other foreign country.

6. In 1930 by chapter 3 of the statutes of that year parliament conferred upon the governor in council power to place an embargo against goods imported from any country which was not a party to the treaty of Versailles.

On February 27 and December 10, 1931, pursuant to the powers thus conferred, orders in council were passed, the effect of which was to prohibit the importation of coal, wood-pulp, pulpwood, lumber and timber of all kinds, asbestos and dressed furs from the Soviet Union.

At the Imperial conference in August, 1932 a trade agreement was entered into between the United Kingdom and Canada. Article 21 of which reads as follows:

> This agreement is made on the express condition that, if either government is satisfied that any preferences hereby granted in respect of any particular class of commodities are likely to be frustrated in whole or in part by reason of the creation or maintenanced directly or indirectly of prices for such class of commodities through state action on the part of any foreign country, that government hereby declared that it will exercise the powers which it now has or will hereafter take to prohibit the entry from such foreign country directly or indirectly of such commodities into its country for such time as may be necessary to make effective and to maintain the preferences hereby granted by it.

Having regard to the provisions of the temporary trade agreement entered into by the United Kingdom with the Soviet Republics in 1930, as above mentioned, effect could not be given to article XXI so long as that trade agreement continued in force. In consequence of this, the British government on October 17, 1932, notified the Soviet government of the termination of the agreement, which would thus be terminated six months from that date, or on the seventeenth day of April, 1933. The British government at the same time intimated their willingness to open negotiations with the Russians for a new agreement. It was not suggested at any time during the discussions at the Imperial conference that Great Britain should cease to trade with Russia. On the contrary, the British representatives made it perfectly clear at all times that trading operations on a large scale had been carried on and that credits had been established which, in point of fact, were renewed shortly after the conclusion of the Ottawa conference. Similarly, except for the articles covered by the embargo there have never been any restrictions on trading between Canada and Russia, except that in 1931 Russia placed an embargo against the importation of any commodities from Canada.

Later in 1932 a private arrangement was made between an aluminum company in Canada and the Soviet government, under which a certain quantity of aluminum was purchased and paid for by petroleum. The government of Canada was not a party to the transaction except in so far as it became necessary to determine the duty payable on the imported petroleum.

It may be of interest to the Manchester Guardian and other British papers which have been so vigorously assailing the government during the last few weeks that, in consequence of the embargo against the importation of Russian coal, employment has been afforded to Welsh and Scotch miners to the extent necessary to produce for importation into Canada during the calendar year 1932, 1,399,086 tons of anthracite coal.

While returning to Canada from Great Britain, in December last, I received press messages by wireless that an agreement had been concluded between Canada and Russia for the exchange of Canadian cattle, hides, and other commodities for Russian petroleum and coal. I replied that there was no foundation for such reports. No communication of any kind has been received from the Soviet government in this regard.

It would appear that one G. G. Serkau, with associates, conceived the idea of doing a barter business with Russia, and Mr. Serkau, having seen Mr. Weir, the Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, proceeded to New York and later to Moscow in connection with the business. As a matter of fact he went there apparently as the emissary of a syndicate, the expenses being provided by one well-known member of it. Although he alleges that he had communication with the authorities there, he has produced no evidence that he has any agreement with the Soviet government, and no communication regarding his proposals have been received from them. The mere statement of what the proposals of Mr. Serkau are would be sufficient to indicate that this is an effort to make very substantial profits under circumstances to which I shall presently refer.

On December 21 last, Mr. Serkau wrote Mr. Weir, the Minister of Agriculture, as follows:

> Since we aim to obtain for the Canadian cattle producers at least five cents for grade, and a much higher price for registered stock, the total amount payable by the Russian government for 100,000 head of cattle, including freight, etc., will be in the neighbourhood of $8,000,000. On the other hand, the prices at Black sea ports of the commodities that Russia is to give in return are so low that it will require an enormous tonnage of petroleum products, etc.
> Having in mind the time required for marketing and storage facilities in Canada, I

I believe that my associates and myself, with what capital we could muster and with expected assistance from banks or other sources, could finance the purchase of a cargo or two of cattle, including the freight and expenses to Black sea ports. This, I estimate, would be about $1,000,000. Therefore, if we could take sufficient quantities of kerosene, lubricating oil and anthracite we could probably get along without any financial support from your government. Or, if we spread the deliveries of cattle over a period of two or two and a half years, as I said before, we may be able to market the products received in payment as we deliver the stock.

But I am firmly convinced that it will be necessary for us to ship the live stock within the twelve month period, in fact, perhaps deliveries would almost have to be completed by November of 1933 if we are to serve the interests of the Canadian live stock producers. I expect also that it would be unsafe to estimate that we could handle the enormous tonnage of petroleum, etc., within that period.

Therefore, I think it would be wise to figure on a basis of your government guaranteeing Russian seven per cent bonds payable June 1, 1935, for such balances as may be owing to our corporation from time to time. The total amount involved in such guarantees I would estimate at not more than $4,000,000, at any time and only very little of these bonds will remain unpaid at the end of the term, for the reason that we will be taking deliveries continuously and the value of such deliveries will be applied on the bonds.

In asking for this support from the government, our corporation would be prepared to employ the government's nominee as comptroller of disbursements and receipts.

I learned abroad that the German government established a credit to Russia of $75,000,000 and cashed Russian bonds at par as these bonds were received by German exporters and presented to the treasury. The British government guaranteed Russian bonds received by British exporters to the extent of sixty per cent. This partial guarantee satisfied the British exporters owing to the fact that they increased their prices to Russia to such an extent that sixty per cent paid them for their merchandise, plus reasonable profits. Our case is somewhat different inasmuch as the increase in prices of live stock from the present market price of two and one-quarter cents to five cents per pound, will enure to the benefit of the producers and not to our corporation. Therefore, it will be necessary for us to have balances fully guaranteed.

It should be observed that the nature of this transaction is largely in the interests of the live stock industry, the profits to myself and my associates being merely brokerage commission.

[Mr. Bennett.]

One other form of support that I imagine we will require is some manner of protection against breach of contract by the Russian government. While we will under no circumstances make any disbursements until the contract has been signed on behalf of the Russian government and until a representative of that government has arrived in Canada and approved of live stock purchases, still I fear that careful bankers, under present conditions, will demand some manner of assurance that our corporation will incur no loss if the Russian government should fail to accept the cargoes of stock, or fail to deliver the products to be given in payment. This, of course, could, at the most, only involve a cargo or two of live stock, and I do not believe that there is the slightest chance of default by the Russian government, but I do expect to be confronted with that question when applying for assistance from banks even for short term financing.

Accompanying the communication was a memorandum of suggested conditions of trade transactions between the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and the Canadian syndicate, represented by Mr. Serkau; but there is no evidence that the Soviet government or its representatives ever agreed to these proposed suggestions, and on being pressed Mr. Serkau had to admit that they were merely notes of suggestions that he himself made. The memorandum reads as follows:

Suggested conditions of a trade transaction between the U.S.S.R., hereinafter referred to as the "Union," and

The Canadian syndicate, represented by G. G. Serkau, hereinafter referred to as the "Syndicate."

The union to purchase from the syndicate 100,000 live cattle (to include five per cent pedigreed and registered stock) within a period of one year from the date of the contract. The stock to be purchased by the syndicate from Canadian producers in the presence of inspectors of the union.

The price of live stock to be cost plus cost of purchasing, maintenance, freight, insurance, etc., plus one cent per pound.

That is the brokerage. It only runs between twenty and thirty per cent!

The syndicate to deliver the live stock to Black sea ports and to receive at Black sea ports credits to be given by the union on account of payment for the stock purchase.

To apply on payment for the stock so purchased the union is to deliver to the syndicate f.o.b. Black sea ports the following products in quantities as hereinafter stated:

Petrol: During the months of April to October, 1933, both inclusive, 2,000 metric tons per month.

During the months of November 1933, to March 1934, both inclusive, 5,000 metric tons per month, and

From April 1934, to the end of the term, 20,000 metric tons per month.

Kerosene: Beginning with April 1933, from 5,000 to 15,000 metric tons per month during the term.

Lubricating Oil: Beginning with April 1933, from 200 to 1,000 metric tons per month during the term.

Anthracite: Beginning with the month of April 1933, from 3,000 metric tons to 20,000 metric tons per month during the term.

In the above, in every case where the tonnage is in varying quantities per month, such variations shall be at the option of the syndicate.

The syndicate to have the privilege of buying from the union, pulpwood for delivery in the United States of America, and shall apply the value of such pulpwood purchases on account of payment of the live stock sold to the union. The prices of all the products to be delivered by the union in payment of stock purchases herein to be, in the case of petroleum products prevailing universal or basis current Gulf prices, and for anthracite the price to be not in excess of the prices paid by Canadian importers of anthracite coal from British exporters. The syndicate in any event to be paid in full for the live stock etc., sold to the union on or before June 1, 1935, by the application of products delivered to the syndicate, and the balance in cash at the end of the term. Balances owing by the union to the syndicate from time to time shall be subject to interest at seven per cent per annum, such interest charges to commence on the dates of advances made by the syndicate with respect to purchase of live stock or expense advances, and the union to be credited with the value of its deliveries of products as above, on the days when such products have been loaded into ships for shipment into Canada.

The reply of the minister to this communication and memorandum was to request that he be given such information as would satisfy him that any agreement existed between Mr. Serkau and his associates and the Soviet union. This information has not yet been supplied. The letter reads as follows:

Ottawa, December 23, 1932.

G. G. Serkau, Esq.,
Chateau Laurier,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Serkau:

I would refer you to the subject matter of our discussions on various occasions since the 15th October, and particularly since your return from Russia, with regard to the purchase in Canada of 100,000 head of cattle for export to Russia, in exchange for petroleum products etc., from that country to Canada.

I would be glad to place before my colleagues the proposed transaction as outlined in the memorandum which you submitted upon receipt of a definite statement from you that the government of the U.S.S.R. is desirous of entering into trade on such a basis as you outlined.

Yours very truly,
R. Weir.

No further communications have been received in that regard.

I think this house will agree that no Canadian government would seriously consider a proposal to provide credit facilities for a syndicate of vendors and at the same time to guarantee that the alleged purchaser, the Soviet government, would discharge its obligations to the vendors.

Shortly put, the matter stands in this light. Proposals were made on behalf of promoters desirous of entering into a commercial transaction for profit. The proposals are in writing. They contemplate the payment by the purchasers of commission of from 20 to 30 per cent depending upon the value of the live stock, the commission being one cent per pound. A request was made that a guarantee be given not only for one half of the entire suggested purchase price, namely $4,000,000, but also that the government of Canada should guarantee that the government of Russia would keep its alleged undertakings with those who put them forward. That is the proposal.

The minister, before even submitting it to the government for consideration, asked for evidence of the bona fides of the transactions. It has not yet been received and those who are interested in the propaganda that has been carried on in this country by at least two public newspapers, and the manner in which it has been carried on, will be able to decide for themselves whether or not despatches, sometimes carrying a date line of a community in which they were not written, to arouse, on the strength of statements that were made in the public press or elsewhere, we do not know, anticipations which were incapable of realization, are conducive under present conditions to the national welfare.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to inquire of the Prime Minister whether he has read all the correspondence that has passed between the minister and the syndicate.

Mr. BENNETT: I believe so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If not, I would be glad to be furnished with any further correspondence in connection with the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member means: Have I read here to-day all the correspondence?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I have read the relevant part of the correspondence. There was a communication from Mr. Serkau to the minister about the health of cattle in Canada, whether they were free from tuberculosis.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not concerned in that correspondence. The correspondence I am concerned in is with respect to this particular transaction.

Mr. BENNETT: I have read all of which I am aware.

part of his statement the Prime Minister referred to the action of the late Liberal administration in withdrawing certain privileges that had been conceded to the Russian agency in Canada at the time that Canada became a party to the commercial treaty between Great Britain and Russia. I think my right hon. friend in a subsequent portion of his statement made it clear that the action taken by the then administration was not intended in any way to interfere with trade between Canada and Russia; it was simply that certain diplomatic privileges which had been granted to this agency were cancelled on the score of evidence which we had at the time that the Russian government had not fulfilled the conditions on which the original treaty had been entered into. I think I am correct in saying that a communication was given to the house at the time by myself to the effect that the action of the Canadian government was not intended in any way to interfere with perfect freedom of trade between Russia and Canada so far as individuals were concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: There has been no departure from that except in so far as the order in council which I read placed an embargo against certain named commodities.

In view of the fact that members may desire an opportunity to make any observations they please with respect to the matter, while I have made no formal motion, because I do not know of any motion except one to adjourn, with your permission, sir, I would be quite willing that a discussion should take place and I would endeavour at the conclusion of it to give any explanation that might be thought desirable.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I appreciate the offer the Prime Minister has just made. I think it would be preferable to allow us to read the statement which my right hon. friend has given to the house and perhaps at a later stage we shall have an opportunity of discussing it.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 11, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Geary in the chair.

On section 1—Personal corporation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps the minister would give us a brief explanation of the bill. It is some time since we have had an opportunity of considering it.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. RHODES: Sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 are designed to amend the law relating to personal corporations. I shall have the statute here in a moment or two, but it will be remembered that the income tax law creating personal corporations was enacted in 1926. This law was made applicable to personal corporations as then described existing in 1925 and thereafter. Prior to that time the law had been that a company paid a company tax and the individual shareholders paid a tax only as and when dividends were declared. Realizing that the company tax was but 9 per cent—I am speaking now as of that time—and the individual tax by successive brackets of income rose as high as 40 per cent on incomes up to $140,000 and higher in the higher brackets if an individual had an income above that sum, many individuals resident in Canada were incorporating companies which they controlled, the income of which was not a manufacturing or merchandising one, but was income derived from stocks, bonds, debentures, real estate, such as dividends, interest, rent and so forth. This income was taxed at corporation rates of taxation and higher bracket rates were avoided. The personal corporation section, in effect, for taxation purposes ignored the existence of the company and continued to tax the individual on the income of the company as if the individual had received it direct, and thus brought the income by brackets for taxation purposes under the increasing rates of taxation. To this law there was no objection. However, evasions of the law were effected by incorporation of companies outside Canada. Although they were owned entirely within Canada, they were controlled outside Canada and an attempt was made by that method to avoid income taxation in Canada. It is proposed now to make it clear, as it is believed was always the intention, that notwithstanding the fact that an individual company, person or corporation may be incorporated outside Canada, and the assets may be held outside the country, inasmuch as it is owned and controlled in Canada its income should be taxed in the same manner as if it were the income of a company located and managed in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): How will the minister obtain the information in that event? Take the case of a company incorporated outside Canada but doing business in Canada, just as any foreign company might be doing business here. What method will the minister adopt to establish the fact that it is a Canadian company? How will he succeed in establishing that fact?

Mr. RHODES: The best answer I can give to that question is a twofold one. In the first place the mere fact that this proposed legislation has been introduced into this house has had the effect already of bringing substantial sums of money into the treasury from companies of that character. In the second place there must come a point where the individual Canadian, if he is to derive any advantage from his income, must eventually bring some of it back to the country.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then it is taxable.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, and the knowledge then becomes available.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Shareholders to file statement of personal corporation.

Mr. POWER: Subsection 7 reads:

"(7) The shareholder of a personal corporation who controls such corporation shall file with his income tax return a statement of the assets, liabilities and income of the personal corporation.

Should it so happen that this personal corporation is controlled by a combination of individuals, "his wife or any member of his family", which shareholder shall file the return? I think this provision ought to be amended to make that point quite clear.

Mr. RHODES: The Commissioner of Income Taxation will be here in a moment but my impression is that the knowledge as to the ownership of a personal corporation is common. As a rule a personal corporation, although there may be several shareholders, is in effect owned and controlled by one individual.

Mr. POWER: The definition of personal corporation is given in section 1 of this bill:

Personal corporation means a corporation or joint stock company . . . controlled, directly or indirectly, by one individual who resides in Canada, or by one such individual and his wife or any member of his family, or by any combination of them or by any other person or corporation or any combination of them. . . .

I would suggest that perhaps it would be well to enlarge the scope of subsection 7 to cover combinations of shareholders instead of one shareholder.

Mr. RHODES: We might let that subsection stand for the moment. Later on I will deal with the point my hon. friend raises.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I believe the hon. member will see that the proposed amendment is perfectly clear if he will read the interpretation of "personal corporation" which is given in chapter 97, of which this is an amendment. That definition reads:

"Personal corporation" means a corporation or joint stock company (no matter when or where created) controlled directly or indirectly by one person. . . .

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Section 1 of this bill sets up a new definition which in effect repeals the other.

Section stands.

On section 5—Non-resident Canadian officials—allowance.

Mr. RHODES: I will ask the Minister of National Revenue to move the following amendment to this section:

That section 5 of the bill be amended by inserting after the word Canada in the second line thereof these words: "or an agent general for any of the provinces of Canada, or any officer, servant or employee thereof."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 6—Persons liable to tax.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move that section 6 be amended by inserting after the word Canada, as first appearing in line four thereof, the following words:

or an agent general for any of the provinces of Canada, or an officer, servant or employee thereof.

Mr. POWER: Do I understand from this section that employees or servants of the government of Canada or agents general of any of the provinces who reside, let us say, in the United Kingdom or in the United States, are subject to Canadian income tax?

Mr. RHODES: Yes. This means that the class of officials defined in this bill shall be subject to income taxation in Canada, but in making out their income tax returns they can receive credit for any income tax they pay on their official salaries in the countries in which they are located.

Mr. EULER: Are the employees of other countries resident in Canada subject to our income tax? My understanding was that there were to be reciprocal exemptions.

Mr. RHODES: In all cases, so far as I know, there are such reciprocal exemptions, but this statute provides that in the event of taxation being imposed, then allowance may be made to the extent of such imposition. Where taxation is not imposed, then we subject such incomes to taxation.

Mr. POWER: I would direct attention to a class of persons who have been specially taxed under legislation of last year; I refer to the judges. Perhaps this is not quite relevant to what is under discussion, but I understand that a special income tax of ten per cent has been imposed on judges. There are income taxes other than those imposed by the federal government; in some cases there are provincial and municipal taxes. Certain judges are now being forced to pay their municipal or provincial income taxes upon the basis of their salaries which have been in fact reduced by the special income tax imposed last year upon members of the judiciary, the military forces and the police. The result is that these people who draw salaries from the Dominion government are being discriminated against much more than the ordinary civil servant who has received a straight ten per cent cut. Judges, officers of the army and officers of the police are being made to pay a special income tax of ten per cent to the federal government and are then being taxed by the municipality or the province upon the basis of their nominal salary.

Mr. RHODES: The objection just raised by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) is one which is applicable not only to judges but to all those who pay income tax. This objection has been raised times without number with respect to all income tax payers. There is no doubt that in a measure an injustice is done to the individual who receives a stated sum of money and pays income tax upon that amout and when a second taxing authority comes along is forced to pay not only upon the amount which remains to him after the first income tax has been levied but also upon a sum which he does not receive. In some instances there is a third taxing authority which comes along and does the same thing. It seems to me that in equity there should be some distinction made but the difficulty is to ask a taxing authority which is competent and fully within its taxing sphere to forego its rights and permit another taxing authority to be considered as superior and having the first choice, as it were. I do not think it is incumbent upon the dominion treasury to defer to the provinces or municipalities in a matter of this kind, but it does seem to me—this is merely my own view, it is not the considered view of the government—that if there are, we will say three income taxes imposed upon the one income, the residuum remaining after the dominion has imposed its tax should be the sum upon which the province could impose its taxation and continuing along the line to the municipality, its tax should be imposed upon the residuum then remaining to the individual. However, I do not think the remedy is one which can be sought in this parliament.

Mr. POWER: If the minister desires a remedy I might suggest that had he and his colleagues paid some heed last year to our representations upon this matter he would have imposed a straight ten per cent cut upon the salaries of judges and others and would not have taken a roundabout way by making them pay a special income tax. That is the burden of my complaint. For example, a judge who is receiving $12,000 would receive $10,800 if his salary had been cut ten per cent, and the municipal or provincial income tax would have been imposed upon that amount. Under the legislation which exists at the present time by which these judges have to pay a straight ten per cent income tax, they have still to pay the municipal or provincial tax upon the $12,000 salary.

Mr. RHODES: As my friend must realize, this discussion is at the moment largely academic.

Mr. POWER: It is not academic.

Mr. RHODES: It is so far as any effect upon judges or others is concerned. For that reason I do not think that any advantage will accrue, at this stage at all events, from pursuing the discussion with my hon. friend.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I had hoped that this matter would have been one of the subjects for discussion at the recent provincial conference. May I point out that there are others besides the judges who are suffering the same effects. I do not see any possibility of there being a reduction in taxation, on the contrary I think the minister will have to increase taxation, but the fact remains that this matter of duplication of taxation imposed upon not only judges but other individuals is something which should be settled by arrangement between the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. RHODES: I quite agree with the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Stewart). And as I said to the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), I think it is unfortunate but I believe the remedy can be applied only in the manner I have suggested. I do not think the dominion treasury should be expected to defer to the provinces and the municipalities. This matter has been discussed by the dominion and provincial authorities before.

Mr. POULIOT: Would it be possible for our distinguished high commissioner in London, the Hon. Mr. Ferguson, to pay his income tax with humbug, the Hon. Mr. Herridge in Washington to pay his with Hooverism, and the Hon. Mr. Marler with ambassadorial dignity? If that were done I am sure the debt of the country would soon be wiped out.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Information returns.

Mr. RHODES: There has been considerable misapprehension in the minds of the public in connection with this section. The idea has got abroad that there has been a change in the time and method of filing income tax returns but of course those who have read the proposed amendment know that there is no difference whatsoever in the system. The income tax returns will be filed at precisely the same time as hitherto has been the case. This section provides that the returns made to the income tax authorities by incorporated companies and giving a list of the shareholders who are in receipt of dividends shall be accelerated in its preparation and in the hands of the income tax authorities a month earlier than has been the case previously. This will enable the income tax office more conveniently to prepare its assessments and speed up the sending out of accounts. As I understand it, no objection has been raised in the great majority of cases. It may be that in the case of the odd individual company which has a large number of shareholders, the amount of labour involved would impose a hardship upon the company if it were called upon to present its return a month earlier, but that class of company would compose only a fraction of those making these returns. If a case is made out by such a company there is a provision in the law which enables the minister to provide for a deferred return. I might further point out that inasmuch as this legislation was introduced some months ago and the section was drafted with a view to its passing probably at an earlier stage in the session, to give effect to it at this later day might impose a hardship on some companies, and therefore it is not the intention of the income tax authorities to have this apply to the income tax returns of this year. If this passes it will remain on the statute books, and it will be known to the companies that their returns need not be accelerated until one year hence.

Mr. EULER: The minister has pretty well anticipated an answer to a question I was going to ask. Apparently he is merely asking for an earlier return by one month. I had in mind, and I think the public had in mind, that this one month's earlier return might merely be in preparation for a demand of one month's earlier payment of income tax, as might be provided when my hon. friend brings down his budget; but I gather from his remarks, that there is no intention of asking for an earlier payment of the tax than has been the case in the past. Perhaps my hon. friend does not desire to give an answer to that question, but it does occur to one that the reason for asking for an earlier return by one month is that it is the intention to ask for an earlier payment by one month.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will appreciate that I am estopped from stating what may be the provisions of any budget that I or any successor of mine might bring down. At the same time I can assure my hon. friend that this provision has no bearing, nor can it be construed as having any bearing, upon the case which he raises.

Mr. EULER: It was only an inference—

Mr. RHODES: And the inference was not warranted.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Continuation of liability for tax.

Mr. POWER: Have there been cases where it has been successfully contended that the minister cannot re-assess if the first assessment has been found to be insufficient?

Mr. RHODES: This is simply to make clear beyond question that the right of the government to income tax is in no way to be hampered by reason of returns having been filed, nor is the government to be estopped from collecting what may be due by reason of the fact that it has accepted income tax on a given set of figures. In reply to my hon. friend's question, that point has never been contested in practice, as I understand it.

Mr. POWER: The old section was pretty broad. It read:

> 55. Any person liable to pay the tax shall continue to be liable, and in case any person so liable shall fail to make a return as required by this act, or shall make an incorrect or false return, and does not pay the tax in whole or in part, the minister may at any time assess such person for the tax, or such portion thereof as he may be liable to pay, and may prescribe the time within which any appeals may be made under the provisions of this act from the assessment, and may fix the date of payment of the tax.

Mr. RHODES: Notwithstanding the apparent clarity of that language, the fact remains that many people still have the view that unless they make a false return, once they have made a return the government is estopped from going back.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But the government have gone back.

Mr. RHODES: Certainly, and I want to make that very clear. Furthermore, quite improperly, some people have taken the view from the use of the words "incorrect or false return" that provided they make a bona fide return, notwithstanding the fact that it may subsequently turn out to have been an incorrect return, the government is estopped from going back and correcting the error simply because it was not a false return. The new section is merely intended to clarify the language and to make perfectly clear what the intention is.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Has there been any legal decision that once an assessment has been made the minister is estopped? I would like to remind the minister that the principle of estoppel does not apply against the crown.

Mr. RHODES: It applies if there have been appeals from the decision of the minister to the Exchequer court, but the amendment itself is not in dispute. The issue is a question of fact; whether the individual or company paid income tax on the correct amount.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Not a question of jurisdiction?

Mr. RHODES: No.

Mr. HACKETT: I doubt if this section can be satisfactorily disposed of without reading section 10. The committee will notice that section 10 provides that different sections of the bill may be applied to periods in the past of varying lengths. It becomes retroactive to 1926, as regards some sections, to 1925 as regards others, and to 1917 as regards section 8. I think that an attempt will undoubtedly be made, and fairly, to interpret section 55 as amended as giving clear authority to the crown to review all assessments made since the act came into effect in 1917. Now if there is one upsetting influence in business, whether it arises from changing tariffs or fluctuations in currency, it is uncertainty, and if a company, having settled with the income tax branch sixteen years ago, and having acted upon the assumption that it has paid to the crown all that it owed, is now to be asked to pay substantial sums for past periods, results untoward and pernicious may well follow. There is no finality. Let us imagine a company which made large profits in 1920. The company made its return—

Mr. POWER: This applies to individuals also.

Mr. HACKETT: But it does not go back so far with respect to individuals. The company made its return and paid its tax in good faith, and has gone on through the years on the assumption that it owed nothing more because it received a receipt in full, and now it is asked to pay a very substantial amount. That might result in bankruptcy for some companies. It might result in unemployment. It certainly would result in uncertainty. I submit that whatever merit is to be found in the section, it should not be made retroactive. Taxation is an ill to which we must all submit, but it is well that we should know its exact purport and extent, and that having settled and having shaped our course on the settlement made, we should not be asked to review a situation that has been closed. The great criticism of taxation legislation in the United States is that there is never any finality; the tax-payer is assessed and pays his tax, and years afterwards is re-assessed and subjected to all the penalties that result from dishonesty. I therefore suggest to the minister that this section as drafted, with the implications that are found in section 10, should receive most careful scrutiny if he wishes to avoid the troubles and the worries and the real hardship which will result from making any legislative act retroactive for sixteen years.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): It seems to me we are going far afield, and that we ought to confine our discussions to the section now before us.

Mr. HACKETT: It is impossible to discuss section 8 fully without referring to section 10.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): We discussed sections 1, 2 and 3 without section 10, and in my view we were doing exactly the same thing at that time.

Mr. HACKETT: With the slight difference, Mr. Chairman, that sections 1, 2 and 3 go back two or three years and that the others go back sixteen years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend would not suggest fraud should be covered in the returns.

Mr. HACKETT: No.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): Shall we discuss retroactive sections, or take them in order?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To a great extent I agree with the remarks of the last hon. member but I would not go so far as to say that in the case of a dishonest return the crown should not have the right to reopen.

Mr. HACKETT: That is not the point, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should like to put these facts before hon. gentlemen and have their opinions: What about the case of an estate where there was an incorrect return, distribution has taken place fifteen years ago, and clearance certificates have been issued to the executors and trustees? That may be extreme, I am referring to an incorrect return of an estate in which those making the return have acted in a purely representative capacity, in which distribution has been made, and upon which the trustee has acted, and concerning people who may have died or married, or in other ways changed their status. Where will the end be? Surely that case should appeal to the minister.

Mr. RHODES: The clause I have presented does deal with such circumstances. I am hoping that no such injustice will arise, because the crown would be estopped from going back over the old ground.

Mr. HACKETT: Estoppel does not apply to the crown.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I could show the minister case after case in which the crown has not been bound by the principle of estoppel. I remember, that in a case against the crown in which I appeared I discovered decision after decision where the crown was not bound by the principle of estoppel.

Mr. RHODES: I do not wish to engage in a long legal discussion with the hon. member, but I understand it is a principle of law that the law of estoppel does not apply to the crown. I say however that to all intents and purposes, so far as the administration of the income tax is concerned, it does apply. If my hon. friend would refer to section 55 he would see that if the trustee carries out his duty he will get a certificate of clearance from the income tax department.

Mr. BURY: I draw attention to the words appearing in the first line of the new section. As it reads now it provides, "Notwithstanding any prior assessment," without qualification whatsoever. I suggest that after the words "any prior assessment" the words "based on an inaccurate return" should be added. Otherwise the provision of the act, even though there may be an accurate return, leaves the income tax payer open to liability. The suggested section reads: "Notwithstanding any prior assessment, or if no assessment has been made, the taxpayer shall continue to be liable for any tax." Surely there is no intention to continue the liability of a taxpayer if his return has been made accurately, and if the assessment and payment have been made on an accurate return.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): What liability would remain?

Mr. BURY: His liability for his assessment, so it says.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): There is no liability.

Mr. BURY: The statute says it shall remain.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): But it cannot remain if it does not exist.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend should read this section in conjunction with the whole act. If a return is accurate, that is the end of it. The assessment would be accurate also.

Mr. POWER: There should be a distinction where a return is accurate, but the assessment inaccurate, and where the department has asked for a further payment.

Mr. BURY: I merely call attention to the fact that the original act contains the very phrase to which I have referred.

> Any person liable to pay the tax shall continue to be liable, and in case any person so liable shall fail to make a return as required by this act, or shall make an incorrect or false return—

And so on. Why not include the same provision in the new section?

Mr. RHODES: I pointed out that in practice those words have been interpreted by the individual making out his income tax return in the sense that there must be an element of falsity in the return. That is not the intention at all. A return may be incorrect or inaccurate and may still have been submitted in all good faith, and with the honest belief that it was correct. I have already explained that is the reason the words

"incorrect or false" have been eliminated in the proposed new amendment. It has always been the intention in the administration of the act that those persons subject to the tax would remain subject to it only until they had fulfilled their obligations to the crown by virtue of the act.

Mr. EULER: I am in accord with what has been said, so far as fraud is concerned. In my view there should be no limit upon the liability of the individual who has committed fraud. But in cases where incorrect returns have been made and, as the minister has stated, where they have been made in absolute good faith, I think there ought to be some sort of finality. A concern might very easily make a return in good faith, but in that return there may be inaccuracies. Where there is a responsibility upon the department to see that correct returns are made, and where it would appear that returns have been made in good faith and no fraud can be proved, I believe the returns should be finally approved. To my mind there should be at least that protection given the taxpayer. If after a lapse of two or three years no fault is found with a return, it may be that an individual may make a distribution of his assets or his profits, and he may find that in a period of eight or ten years he is faced with notice of an inaccuracy of which he did not know. In those circumstances I believe he would not be fairly treated, and it would not be just to ask him to pay with means he no longer possesses. I believe there should be reasonable consideration in those cases.

Mr. RHODES: I have no fault to find with the spirit shown in the remarks by the hon. member for North Waterloo. His remarks are based upon the premise that injury may be done to an individual making a return. But let me point out to my hon. friend that this very provision can be a protection to the individual. Because it has transpired in other countries, where the attempt has been made by statute to reach finality in the matter of returns, that the income tax authorities in many instances, realizing that it was their last chance, made sure that the assessment upon individuals was sufficiently large to be beyond question on the safe side.

Mr. EULER: That is not fair. It is dishonest.

Mr. RHODES: It may be dishonest; I am speaking of the actual facts of administration. It is not so in this country, but it has been in other countries. It seems to me that basically there can be no objection by the individual, he is only called upon to pay his honest tax, he should pay it the same as other individuals, and should not escape because of the fact that errors have arisen. However well-intentioned he may have been, however honestly these errors may have occurred; he should pay his just share. It seems to me cases of injustice under these circumstances would be far fewer than if, once having made a return, that was the end of the matter.

Mr. EULER: Why should not the statute of limitations apply in this case the same as in others?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I was about to make some remarks about this question of finality to which my hon. friend on the other side has referred. Notwithstanding all that the minister has said, there are in the provincial jurisdictions local statutes of limitations against the crown. There is no reason in the world why there should not be some limitation in the case of a man who has made an honest return, but has inadvertently made a mistake. I do not think you ought to go back so far. I would ask the minister to give some consideration to the point raised by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), with a view to doing away with uncertainty. Take the case of a trusteeship; an executor who has got a clearance is amply taken care of by the statute. What about the case where executors have a continuing trust and have not got a clearance, but have made a distribution, and the money is gone; is that taken care of by the statute? I have in mind a case in my own practice, a long continuing trust, a trust company in charge. The trust may last for thirty years. They distribute the money, the people die.

The trouble with legislation of this kind is that all its ramifications are not given consideration when the legislation is adopted. Some situation arises: you attempt to cure that by legislation. You meet the immediate case but may do an injury to someone else. That is what I would like the minister to consider.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, in reply to my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), let me say there need be no difficulty in the case put by him. If the trustee is wise he will confer with the income tax authorities and get his clearance, whether the distribution is made in part or whether absolute disbursement of the whole estate takes place at one time. He is absolutely protected in the latter case the same as in the case first raised by my hon. friend. And I am told that there has been no difficulty in the administration along that line.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, it has been pointed out by the minister that this amendment might afford an opportunity for remission to the taxpayer who might have paid too much. There is no suggestion that the administration of this act has not always been fair and considerate, but there is a very definite period mentioned in the statute which precludes the taxpayer from having his returns reviewed. Section 69 of the act makes the return final as regards the taxpayer. It says:

> If a notice of appeal is not served or a notice of dissatisfaction is not mailed within the time limited therefor, the right of the person assessed to appeal shall cease and the assessment shall be valid and binding notwithstanding any error, defect or omission therein or in any proceedings required by this act.

I am not at the moment taking serious exception to the suggested enactment as set forth in section 8. I am objecting to the portion of section 10 which makes it retroactive to 1917. I am going to ask the minister if he does not think this question of sufficient importance to stand this section over for further consideration and possible redrafting. Just as sure as we are here, if it be enacted there will be a constitutional controversy over it, the department will find itself confronted with an attack on the validity of this legislation, and there will result expense, delay and all the harrassing incidents that flow from the enactment of legislation without all possible safeguards. I am therefore going to ask the minister if he will not let this section stand for a few days to ascertain if it is not possible to restate it in a way that will be more acceptable to everyone.

Mr. RHODES: There is no disposition on my part, nor on the part of the government, to crowd this measure through the committee with undue haste. It is true it has been before the house for some two months or more. I would be quite content to leave the bill in committee. But I may say to my hon. friend that while we must be just to the individual—and we all wish to be just to the individual—we must be just to the crown and the treasury as well. My hon. friend knows full well that if a contest arises in court as between the individual and the crown the law is construed against the crown every time. The crown must prove its case to the very limit. I have known a judge of the Exchequer court to advise counsel on behalf of the crown that he was against him from the start in all cases. I do not object to that, but I say with all respect, and without the slightest intention of giving offence to anyone, that we must not shed any crocodile tears for the class of persons who may be called upon to pay taxation. I object as much as anybody does to injecting the element of retroactivity into legislation, but at the same time, if substantial justice is to be done, I can see no good reason why those who have substantial incomes should escape scot free the payment of their just dues to the treasury, when their fellows who have been honest and decent and above-board, have done so in large measure. There may be some middle ground, I do not know, but certainly as the law now stands we do a very grave injustice to the treasury. I may say to my hon. friend that I do not fear the effect of this section as he does. I may be wrong. There were some individuals who were in mind when this section was drafted and since it has been brought down they have paid their taxes. Otherwise they probably would not have done so. And they have paid them in very substantial sums, running into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. JACOBS: Perhaps it was due to the Oxford Group movement?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend always sheds light upon the subject under discussion. But I may say to him that if the Oxford Group movement were responsible for the instances to which I refer, then we need not fear any amendment to the statute because all would have come in.

Mr. JACOBS: Why not withdraw the measure?

Mr. RHODES: The subjects in question, if they are subjected to the appeal of the Oxford movement, would be all embracing because there would be nobody who could possibly be called upon to come in under any amendment we might make.

Mr. JACOBS: What about people of my race who cannot accept that?

Mr. POWER: I notice, in reading section 55 as it is at present, it states:

> The minister may at any time assess such person for the tax, or such portion thereof as he may be liable to pay, and may prescribe the time within which any appeals may be made under the provisions of this act from the assessment, and may fix the date of payment of the tax.

In the new section as proposed by the legislation before us, no mention whatsoever is made of appeal. Does the minister now have power to assess, re-assess, make additional assessments without the right of appeal?

Mr. RHODES: I am informed that the method of procedure has been entirely changed since the original clause was drafted.

Mr. POWER: Is the right of appeal provided elsewhere in the act?

Mr. RHODES: It will be found in part VIII, section 58 of chapter 97 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. We might pass section 9, if that is agreeable, and let section 10 stand.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): We are stlil on section 8. Is that carried?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Before we leave section 8 or allow it to stand, I should like to say a few words. In the first place I am sure no hon. member would object to the taxpayer, irksome as it must be to pay his taxes, paying the exact amount with which he is chargeable under the law. I think we are all agreed upon that. Section 8 works both ways, but the committee has thought of only one. This will be of advantage to the taxpayer himself, because at the instance of the taxpayer, if he has a good case, the minister might make a re-assessment, one that he would be precluded from making under any provision of the act as it exists today. To be sure, it provides for an appeal. It provides that there shall be no claim on the part of the taxpayer, no matter whether he has paid an incorrect amount, let us suppose, if more than a year elapses, but under this section the taxpayer could come to the department and say: It is plain I have paid too much; I want a re-assessment under section 55. In that case I do not see how avoidance could be made of his claim. This is in the interest of the taxpayer himself.

As regards the date 1917, that strikes one as a long time to go back. The reason 1917 is inserted is, as I am sure the hon. member knows, there was provision in the income tax law that profits which were not distributed could be computed prior to the end of 1917 and paid out without tax. After that, these profits were taxable. That is the reason for the insertion of 1917. If someone in juggling with his tax liabalities has done so relying upon the special legislation that appeared in the act with relation to profits to the end of 1917, I say that he as well as anybody else who has not paid the correct amount should be called upon to pay. It has been said that there should be a period of limitation. Frankly, I do not believe one man should be allowed to say: Well, time ran against me and I got out of paying what was honestly my fair payment under the law, while another man comes along and says: They picked me up because they got me within two or three years as suggested. I think an honest debt should be paid and the debt the taxpayer owes is an honest one. Exactly what it is can be found. If it takes some time to find this out, that is unfortunate and I agree with the hon. member for North Waterloo that it is not in the interest of good business, if that were the test; but, as I am sure he knows, auditors of the department over which he presided had to go from 1930 back to 1923 or 1924 and when it was found mistakes had been made, as obviously was the case, the findings of the auditors of course being carefully checked, money was requested to liquidate the debt. All that was said was: You have been concerned about this for a long time; but no real objection could be taken to paying what was the honest liability of the taxpayer. I think section 8 could very well pass. It will result in legitimate help to the taxpayer and I think it will help the tax collecting authorities.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In the section as now drafted there is nothing that gives a taxpayer the right to use it. Further, the draftsman, when he drew this and made the explanation, to be found on the opposite page, had in mind only re-assessment on the part of the crown. I am not against the crown getting its just and legitimate revenue; I think any member who would take any other view would be doing a great wrong not only to the country but to his self respect. But I ask respectfully that there should be some limitation of time. Let me put an extreme case. Under the New Brunswick Succession Duties Act there is a provision that every gift inter vivos by a testator to his children or to anybody has to be accounted for back to the year 1892, the first year in which the New Brunswick Succession Duties Act was passed. It is almost impossible to get a client to take the oath under the New Brunswick Succession Duties Act that there has not been anything like that done, because you cannot have knowledge going back forty-one years. That is the effect of the New Brunswick statute. I mention that as an extreme illustration, and the analogy is applicable here. I suggest to the minister that he give some consideration to a shortening of the time. I will not press the point further.

Mr. LAWSON: I regret that I find it necessary to differ from the views expressed by the Minister of National Revenue as to the interpretation of this section. If it ever was intended that the section should confer any benefit on the taxpayer, then I can only say that it is one of the most loosely-drawn pieces of legislation I have ever seen. Read the section and see what it says:

—the minister may at any time assess, reassess or make additional assessments upon any person for tax, interest and penalties.

How on earth can he be assessing, re-assessing or making additional assessments for tax, interest or penalties if the object is to make some refund to the taxpayer in respect of the application of the tax? I am not shedding any crocodile tears, but I think we might as well keep one thing clearly in mind. If the object of this section is to get at any person who has not made a return or who has made a false return, then I will go as far as any member of this house in making that person pay taxation. But that is not the point. If a man were wise, as I believe the Minister of Finance said, he would get a certificate; but let us assume that he is not so very wise but honest. There are any number of executors and trustees who are not lawyers. I can go through my files and find cases in which I have settled income tax matters with the income tax department and have never yet received a certificate, nor do I expect ever to receive it. The point in which we are interested in this section is this. Where a man honestly but inadvertently, and, if you will, unwisely, makes a return which ultimately proves to be incorrect, should the minister have power after the expiration of sixteen years, by a combination of that section with section 10, to go back and make an assessment particularly in such a case as the one pointed out by the hon. member for York-Sunbury, where the individual has been acting as trustee for an estate and has probably had all the funds disbursed out of his hands? My whole training makes me unalterably opposed to retroactive legislation, and in this case it goes a bit further and I think we may work a great injustice. If the object of the legislation is to get at a wrongdoer who has failed to make a return or who has made a false return, why not say so?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I do not wish to prolong the argument, but I would direct attention to the wording of the section, which I think the lay mind can interpret:

—the minister may at any time assess, reassess or make additional assessments upon any person for tax, interest and penalties.

That, I submit, does not mean that he can make a re-assessment only in case the amount is larger than what has been returned. If the department were approached in an honest case the minister would be authorized under this section to make a re-assessment, and when I say a re-assessment I mean a true re-assessment, which might very well be in the interests of the taxpayer.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would call attention to section 56, which covers the point of refund of overpayment. This section we are discussing cannot mean what the minister suggests.

Mr. RHODES: I think the section is a reasonable one. I do not think we should be led astray by interpreting it in connection with section 10. I have already agreed to let section 10 stand. I submit, with all deference, that we are not asking for any further powers than the act has contained; it is only for the purpose of making it clear beyond peradventure and avoiding any question of dispute such as has arisen heretofore in individual cases.

Mr. HACKETT: If section 8 were redrafted, section 10 which we are allowing to stand might not be necessary at all.

Mr. RHODES: This is substantially what has always been contained in the act. Look at section 62:

Upon receipt of the said notice of dissatisfaction and statement of facts, the minister shall reply thereto by registered post admitting or denying the facts alleged and confirming or amending the assessment or any amended, additional or subsequent assessment.

We have always had these provisions. As regards the section which is now before us, it may not be drafted in the best possible manner, and I am open to suggestions on that score; but I can say at all events that its intention is to clarify the law as it has obtained heretofore in this matter. There certainly cannot be any objection to it in principle, and I do not think we should be led astray by interpreting it in connection with the retroactive features contained in section 10, which we are permitting to stand for the moment for further consideration at the request of my hon. friend from Stanstead.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Redeemable stock taxed on redemption when issued against capitalized surplus.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Why is this necessary?

Mr. RHODES: I can give an explanation, in layman's language, I hope. In the statutes of 1930, chapter 24, we did what I must submit was a very extraordinary thing. Section 19 provides:

> On the winding-up, discontinuance or reorganization of the business of any incorporated company, the distribution in any form of the property of the company shall be deemed to be the payment of a dividend to the extent that the company has on hand undistributed income earned in the taxation period 1930 and subsequent periods.

That meant opening the door to a glorious opportunity on the part of a great many companies to go out of business and distribute accumulated profits, calling them assets, thus escaping taxation, so that the treasury lost many hundreds of thousands of dollars in consequence of that amendment. Some companies, in the guise of distributing assets, did this in effect: A company would cause a new company to be incorporated; it would transfer the assets to individuals who in turn handed them over to the new company in exchange for redeemable certificates, and from time to time these redeemable certificates were cashed by the new company; and inasmuch as they were capital they were not taxable. It was certainly a very grave injustice to a large number of companies who were, and had been for years, distributing their income. The position is that companies which went through that process merely for the purpose of escaping taxation, as and when those individuals cash in the stock certificates, shall be taxed four per cent. That is fair to the individual; the tax on the average is lower than it would be if it had been assessed upon the income throughout the year. I will admit that there is an element of retroactivity, but, on the other hand, I believe it is equitable, sound and just.

Mr. EULER: I support entirely the action of the minister in making this amendment to the legislation passed in 1930. Strangely enough, at that time the possible unfortunate consequences of this legislation escaped the observation of the lawyers in the house, to say nothing of the laymen, and were not realized until some clever lawyers in the pay of corporations and others discovered this loophole and reincorporations were made with a view to escaping the tax. So far as I am personally concerned it was mortifying and humiliating to find that such a loophole had been left, and I am quite in agreement with what the minister is doing to eliminate it. I may add that if a loophole was left in the first instance it was not by any means intentional.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. MacLEAN: When a company is insolvent and the assets are distributed, can those assets be taxed?

Mr. RHODES: This section would have no bearing whatsoever upon such a case.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Application of sections.

Mr. LUCAS: Earlier in the session I asked the Minister of Finance if he intended to provide for the taxing of bearer bonds. Rightly or wrongly I understood him then to say that at this session he would bring in an amendment to the Income War Tax Act making such a provision. I cannot find anything to this effect in the bill. Is the minister taking any action to see that the holders of bearer bonds pay their rightful share of income tax?

Mr. RHODES: It is not customary to anticipate what will be contained in the budget, but I feel that in this case an exception is justified, especially in view of the intimation made at an earlier stage of the session. I can assure my hon. friend that legislative provision will be made at this session which will fully protect the treasury in respect of those who have hitherto escaped taxation in the matter of bearer bonds. For many months I have studied the various systems and methods which could be applied, and I think we have devised a scheme which will be simple, effective, and not unduly irksome in the way of unnecessary impedimenta so far as the individual is concerned. This will have the effect of bringing into the treasury every last cent of money which ought to come from those who have bearer bonds.

Mr. COOTE: I am taking advantage of the fact that we are in committee to ask the minister a question regarding a case which came to my notice a few days ago. A gentleman moved to Canada from the United States; for three months of the tax year he was in Canada and for nine months he had resided in the United States. He tells me that he was compelled to pay the Canadian authorities income tax upon his full year's income, while he paid tax to the United States upon the income he had earned during the part of the year he was in that country. It seems to me that an injustice has been done. Will the minister inform me whether or not that is the correct procedure under the present act?

Mr. RHODES: I am not the minister responsible for the administration of this act, but I am advised by the income tax authorities that the tax payable in such cases is determined by the facts as to place of residence at the time a resident is subject to income tax. That being so, there is no method of deviating from the taxation in question. In the example given by my hon. friend, while the individual would be called upon to pay his income tax in Canada by virtue of his being resident in Canada at a time when residents of Canada were liable to income taxation, since he had been assessed in the United States he would be able to ask for and obtain in Canada an allowance for such portion of income tax as he had paid in the United States. The opposite applies, also, as this is a matter of international comity which has I believe worked out very satisfactorily.

Mr. COOTE: When I asked the minister the question I had forgotten that the act was not under his administration; perhaps I should have directed my question at another time to the Minister of National Revenue. I understand from this man that the department would not make him an allowance on account of his having had to pay an income tax to the United States.

Mr. RHODES: I am assured by the commissioner of income tax that the statement which I made to my hon. friend is correct—that where the source of income has been in the United States the taxpayer can claim and receive a deduction in Canada for that portion of his income tax which he paid to the United States.

Mr. GERSHAW: In view of the fact that many provinces impose income taxes, has this government considered the advisability of collecting these taxes for such provinces and turning over the proceeds?

Mr. RHODES: This question was raised at the recent interprovincial conference While I am not in position to say that any definite decision was reached, I think there was a near approach to a possible amicable solution which will meet the cases mentioned by my hon. friend.

Section stands.

On section 4—Shareholders to file statement of personal corporation.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not know whether or not I am in order, but if I am I should like to make a serious suggestion to the government in connection with our judges. The judges' salaries have been reduced, and in view of this fact I think the government should consider the providing of proper accommodation. At the present time the supreme court is sitting in what was previously a shed used by the contractors for the construction of the old parliament buildings as a shelter and storehouse. These quarters are very unsuitable for the judges, and if the government has seen fit to reduce their salaries I think it should follow the example set by the United States, which country is now constructing a new supreme court building in Washington. It would give our supreme court decent quarters, and would at the same time provide work for the unemployed. Our supreme court judges have to sit in a room where the temperature is often eighty degrees and then go back to their offices where the temperature may be down to sixty, with a great risk of catching cold. The building is not a fit place for the Supreme Court of Canada. I suggest that the government provide fitting accommodation for the court and at the same time do something in a practical way for the unemployed.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend from Temiscouata, with his usual versatility and ingenuity, has succeeded in hanging a very large garment upon a very small peg; for under the guise of a discussion of the Income Tax Act, he has discussed the income tax on judges' salaries, ergo the building that houses the judges—

Mr. POULIOT: Because their salaries are small, their accommodation at least should be decent.

Mr. RHODES: I must commend my hon friend upon his ingenuity, great versatility and resourcefulness, which are always in evidence. While I cannot see what bearing his remarks have upon this bill, I agree with him that the question not only of proper quarters for the accommodation of the members of the supreme court itself, but also of the preservation against fire hazards of a very valuable library, is one which is worthy of very careful consideration by this parliament, and I hope that the day is not far distant when the objection my hon. friend has raised may possibly be met.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you very much.

Mr. RHODES: Would my hon. friend from Quebec South mind repeating the objection which he raised to section 4?

Mr. POWER: I have referred to the definition of a "personal corporation" as laid down in section 1 of this bill. The definition reads:

"Personal corporation" means a corporation or joint stock company, irrespective of when or where created, whether in Canada or elsewhere, and irrespective of where it carries on its business or where its assets are situate, controlled, directly or indirectly, by one individual who resides in Canada, or by one such individual and his wife or any member of his family, or by any combination of them or by any other person or corporation or any combination of them—

Taking that to be the definition of a personal corporation, I now turn to section 4, subsection 7 of this bill, which reads:

The shareholder of a personal corporation who controls such corporation shall file with his income tax return a statement of the assets, liabilities and income of the personal corporation.

I ask the minister what would happen if the shareholders were a combination of several who controlled. My hon. friend from Stanstead shakes his head.

Mr. HACKETT: It is not a personal corporation under the definition and is not entitled to the immunities that go with it.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend from Quebec South will find that the definition clause includes "shareholders" as well as "shareholder," the plural as well as the singular.

Mr. POWER: I have in mind, for instance, one individual and a corporation who control a personal corporation. Would this individual and the corporation also be bound to file an income tax return of the assets and liabilities and income of the personal corporation? I take it from the wording of subsection 7 that they would not, because that subsection states that it is the shareholder who controls who must file the return. That would be only one shareholder. It might be that a combination is in control.

Mr. RHODES: Under the interpretation clause, that would be read in the plural—shareholder or shareholders or any combination of them.

Mr. POWER: I do not wish to persist if the minister is satisfied, but the same argument that he applied to section 8 would apply here. The reason why we make section 8 more severe is that some taxpayer was led into error by certain phraseology in section 8. I submit that taxpayers would certainly be led into error by the phraseology of subsection 7 of section 4, and now, while we are making the act clear, we might as well make it clear in all its sections.

Mr. RHODES: I do not feel that I am competent to enter into a legal discussion as to the proper construction of this section—

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend is now sarcastic.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. RHODES: No, I am not in any sense attempting to be sarcastic. I am speaking in all seriousness, because it is about twenty-five years since I have had any contact with the law. I am advised by the income tax authorities that they are satisfied, after a conference with the legal advisers of the crown in the Department of Justice, that there is no danger as far as the interpretation of this section is concerned.

CITY OF OTTAWA

EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT WITH CORPORATION TO JULY 1, 1933

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Minister of Public Works, on behalf of His Majesty, to enter into an agreement with the corporation of the city of Ottawa to extend the period of the existing agreement with the corporation for one year from July 1, 1932.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Stewart (Leeds) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 15, to authorize an agreement between His Majesty the King and the Corporation of the City of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 5.20 p.m.

Wednesday, February 1, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1933-34

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1934 was presented by Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

PRIVATE BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 16, respecting the Synod of the Diocese of Saskatchewan and to change its name to "Synod of the Diocese of Saskatoon."—Mr. Mackenzie King.

Bill No. 17, to incorporate Canadian Railway Employees Mutual Benefit Association.—Mr. Casselman.

PENSION ACT ADMINISTRATION

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN moved:

That the report of the committee on the administration of the Pension Act be printed, six hundred copies in English and three hundred copies in French.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN FREIGHT RATES

REDUCTION OF DOMESTIC RATES ON GRAIN AND GRAIN PRODUCTS

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I promised to make to the house a very brief statement concerning domestic freight rates, and particularly concerning the relation of that matter to the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), and the resolution in the name of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley). At various times other hon. members from the western provinces have asked questions concerning this matter. May I point out that during the interprovincial conference a meeting was held at which were traffic representatives of the two railway systems, and two representatives from each of the four western provinces, with the exception of British Columbia. On account of Doctor Tolmie's loss there was only one representative from that province. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), and myself, attended the meeting, and there was an endeavour to arrive at some satisfactory solution of the difficulties, and to formulate at least a compromise among the different parties concerned.

As a result of the conference a satisfactory arrangement was arrived at. Although I do not intend at this time to give details, I may say that after a lengthy discussion, a proposal was made by myself to cut the domestic rate materially on the lower grades of grain—feed grain. The intent was not to get the rate as low as the export rate, but to cut it materially. That suggestion was satisfactory to the representatives of the four western provinces, as expressed by them at that time, and in a general way was acceptable also to the representatives of the railways, who agreed to take the matter under advisement and to submit to me a letter officially offering to put into force the rates proposed on the lower grades of grain, or that type known as feed grain. This would affect particularly the poultry raisers. From the information we have received the greatest number of complaints concerning the freight rate between the prairie provinces and British Columbia had come from the poultry raisers.

Mr. HANBURY: There is no dispute between the prairie provinces and British Columbia; it is between eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Mr. MANION: I refer to the dispute between the western provinces and the railways. The railway representatives were to receive from the Department of Agriculture a list of the lower grades of grain which could be used for feed purposes, and some time was required to get this information. Unfortunately one of the representatives, the traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Stephen became ill and as a consequence the proposal has not been placed in my hands, but it is my expectation that within a day or two I shall receive it. At that time I shall send it to the representatives of the provinces. They are to deal with it, and if it is acceptable to them they will advise me and the new rate will be put into effect.

In view of the proposed compromise arrangement I suggest to the hon. members for New Westminster and Qu'Appelle, and to any other hon. members interested that they might well leave the matter in abeyance until we have had the opportunity to get replies from the western provinces.

Mr. REID: Could the minister give any information of what reduction might be expected?

Mr. MANION: I did not intend to give exact information, although I can think of no objection to stating that it will be in the neighbourhood of a fifty per cent reduction of the difference between the domestic and export freight rates. That arrangement was acceptable to the representatives of the four western provinces. They considered it a very fair proposition, and they appeared to be particularly pleased with the proposed compromise arrangement.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Will that affect other commodities?

Mr. MANION: We dealt only with lower grades of grain for feed purposes, and particularly considered the interests of the poultry raisers.

Mr. REID: Mr. Speaker, may I be pardoned for asking a question at this point? I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals or the Prime Minister what attitude the government will take regarding the appeal before the Privy Council?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. REID: I was asking the indulgence of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is not the proper time to introduce a discussion such as the one proposed by the hon. member.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 18, to amend the Railway Act (rates on grain).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. REID: The purpose of this bill is to give to British Columbia the same rates on grain as were given by parliament to the eastern provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

PENSIONS RECEIVED BY CHARWOMEN

Mr. SPENCER:

1. Are any charwomen employed in the House of Commons receiving pension, as widows, from the United States Army and Navy Department, Washington, District of Columbia?
2. If so, how many, and how long have these charwomen been employed?

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not understand why the question has been dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood information had been supplied to the hon. member by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. SPENCER: I received a letter, but it is not satisfactory to me.

An hon. MEMBER: Stands.

PAYMENTS TO SHIPS CARRYING LUMBER

Mr. DUFF:

1. What amount has been paid by the Dominion of Canada to ships carrying lumber from British Columbia ports?
2. Was the said amount paid on the basis of one dollar per thousand superficial feet?
3. To what ports of destination was said bounty or bonus paid?
4. Has any amount been paid for the carriage of lumber from Atlantic ports, on a basis of so much per thousand superficial feet?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. August, 1929, to December, 1932, inclusive, $268,950.
2. No.
3. To Sydney, Melbourne and other Australian ports or to Shanghai, Hangkow and other north China ports.
4. No.

COPPER, NICKEL AND SILVER COIN HOLDINGS

Mr. REID:

1. What are the various amounts of copper, nickel, and silver coin held by the Department of Finance in the right of the Dominion of Canada or as collateral for bank issues?
2. What were the total amounts of copper, nickel and silver coins issued by the Mint during 1932?
3. Were any gold coins minted during 1932?
4. If so, to what value were these minted?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Issuable silver, nickel and bronze coin held by the Department of Finance:

|---|---|
| Silver | $258,960 |
| Nickel | 53,290 |
| Bronze | 17,700 |

2. Silver, nickel and bronze coin struck by the Mint during 1932:

|---|---|
| Silver | $287,000 |
| Nickel | 165,000 |
| Bronze | 213,200 |

3. No.
4. Answered by number 3.

ALFRED, ONT., MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. BERTRAND:

1. Did the contract for mail delivery on rural route No. 2, Alfred, Prescott county, expire on December 31, 1932?
2. If so, to whom was the renewal of the contract granted?
3. Were any tenders called for?
4. Who were the tenderers and what was the amount of each tender submitted?
5. Is the successful tenderer now performing the work?
6. What sum will be paid to him annually for his services?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Department did not grant a renewal.
3. Yes.
4.

| | Per annum |
|---|---|
| H. Charette, Alfred | $475 |
| Joseph Seguin, Alfred | 480 |
| Ovide Lepage, Alfred | 490 |
| H. Charette, Alfred | 595 |
| Geo. Bourgon, Alfred | 600 |
| Alfred Lariviere, Alfred | 645 |
| Dolphe Larocque, Alfred | 675 |
| Joseph Bourcier, Alfred | 750 |
| Arthur Poirier, Alfred | 750 |

5. Yes.
6. $475 per annum.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF IN CITIES

Mr. BOURGEOIS:

1. How many persons have received direct relief during the twelve months preceding the first of October, 1932, in each of the following cities: Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers, Sherbrooke, Hull, Ottawa, Windsor, Stratford, Peterboro, London, Kitchener, Brantford, Halifax, Moncton, Saint John, N.B., Winnipeg, Brandon, Victoria, Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Regina, Saskatoon?

2. What sums were distributed by way of direct relief in each of these cities during the aforesaid period and what sums for food, rent, fuel, clothing, medical treatment, etc.?

3. Was the portion contributed by the federal government the same in the case of each of the above-named cities, and if not, what is the difference?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PETER VERIGIN

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

For a copy of all correspondence, including letters, telegrams and other documents, exchanged between the Minister of Immigration, or any of his officials, and Mr. J. M. Hackney of St. Paul, Minnesota, and other persons, regarding the release of Peter Verigin, or the proposal to remove the community Doukhobours to Mexico.

POTATO EMBARGO

Mr. MacLEAN:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents that have passed between the Canadian government and the government of Great Britain, regarding the lifting of the potato embargo, including report of British officials who visited Canada in the fall of 1932 in connection with potato embargo questions, and the possibility of the potato beetle being transmitted in potato shipments.

COOPERATIVE COMMONWEALTH

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

Whereas under our present economic arrangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;

And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;

Therefore be it resolved,—That, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

He said: All down through the years there have been those who dreamed of a new and better social order. I do not know that it was ever better expressed than by our own English poet Blake, who would give us no respite until "we have built Jerusalem in England's green and pleasant land." Prophets have foretold the coming of a better day. Great economists have pointed out that our present economic system could not last very long, but must give place to a different one. In more recent days we have the technicians pointing out not only the feasibility of fundamental changes in our social order, but the absolute necessity of such changes if our civilization is to persist.

It is only the newer groups, however, that have had the courage to set this before the country in the form of a definite program. When the Independent Labour party was first represented in this house in 1921, we placed in the very beginning of our platform the following:

> The Independent Labour party of Manitoba is formed for the purpose of giving political expression to the aspirations of all workers regardless of industrial affiliation, who believe in the establishment of a cooperative commonwealth, with production for use and not for profit as its economic basis.

As far as opportunity offered I have tried through the years to keep that object definitely in view. Last year the United Farmers of Alberta, in order that there should be no doubt about their ultimate objective, stated their position in very clear terms, adopting the following short definition of a cooperative commonwealth:

> A community freed from the domination of irresponsible financial and economic power, in which all social means of production and distribution, including land, are socially owned and controlled either by voluntarily organized groups of producers and consumers, or—in the case of the major public services and utilities and such productive and distributive enterprises as can be conducted most efficiently when owned in common—by public corporations responsible to the people's elected representatives.

When I introduced this motion a year ago there was no large body of organized opinion behind it. Today that situation is altered, for last August there was organized the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation—

> —a federation of organizations whose purpose is the establishment in Canada of a cooperative commonwealth in which the basic principle regulating production, distribution and exchange will be the supply of human needs instead of the making of profits.

The statement given to the public at that time, and embodied in resolutions by the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, goes on:

> The object of the federation shall be to promote cooperation between the member organizations and to correlate their political activities.

We endorse the general viewpoint and program involved in socialization of our economic life as these have already been outlined and accepted by the Labour, Farmer and Socialist groups affiliating.

I may say that a considerable number of organizations have already affiliated with the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation—

Mr. BENNETT: Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question before he leaves that phase of his argument? What would he do with the constitution of the country as it now stands?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The constitution of the country I presume would remain as it is to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: It could not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is the Prime Minister's option to explain the matter in his own way. I would say that if changes are necessary in order to meet the needs of the people, then those changes must inevitably come.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. It would mean the entire wiping out of the present federal system, if effect were given to what has just been said.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. I would point out further that this new organization is a federation rather than a party. The farm bodies in the three western provinces and in Ontario have already voted to affiliate. Further than that, the political labour bodies in the provinces from British Columbia to Montreal have also voted to affiliate. And in addition a very large number of people who have been outside the ranks of farmer or labour political parties are now joining Cooperative Commonwealth Federation clubs, and will in this way come into the federation.

May I say that the name is descriptive of the basis and purpose of the new organization. It does not advocate a bureaucratic state socialism. We recognize very clearly that there are certain matters which must be dealt with by the state; there are other matters that may be left to voluntary cooperative effort. We clearly emphasized that in one of the planks of our platform, if I may use that term—the encouragement of all cooperative enterprises which are steps to the attainment of the cooperative commonwealth.

The Prime Minister, who has already voiced his objection thus early in my speech, gave a rather curious reception to the new organization. In his speech in Toronto last November, as reported in the Mail and Empire of November 10, 1932, he said:

The "swing to the left" behind Mr. Woodsworth is towards a government soviet in its character. . . . It is no longer a party but a jumble, being led by a cooperative commonwealth. Why? Because they seek to capitalize all the unrest that exists.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister or the Conservative party ought never to talk about capitalizing unrest.

Mr LAPOINTE: In this he is right!

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister goes on:

What do they offer you for dumping you in the mud? Socialism, communism, dictatorship. . . . They are sowing their seeds everywhere. . . . And we know that throughout Canada this propaganda is being put forward by organizations from foreign lands that seek to destroy our institutions. And we ask every man and woman to put the iron heel of ruthlessness against a thing of that kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are some hon. gentlemen behind the Prime Minister who applaud.

An hon. MEMBER: A lot of them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to say to the Prime Minister that his statement is not only libellous, but it is clearly seditious.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does that come under section 98 of the criminal code?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, it comes under sections which are much more fundamental to the welfare of this country than section 98. It is setting one class against another. It is advocating the use of force, and as such I say that it is clearly seditious, and further it is absolutely untrue. I wonder what would be suggested if I should advocate putting the iron heel of ruthlessness on all capitalists?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On the neck of the Prime Minister.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Or, as has just been suggested to me, on the neck of the Prime Minister? I am quite sure that certain sections of the criminal code would be immediately invoked. In all seriousness I think it is beneath the dignity of the Prime Minister to make a speech of that kind. The Prime Minister is very fond of quoting scripture. May I venture to recall to his memory a certain passage in which the one whom he calls the Man of Nazareth says "with what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again."

I may say that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation has no connection whatever with Moscow—none whatever.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If some of the gentlemen who say "oh" would have the courage to get up and make the statement that their interjection implies, they would have to retract. It is all very well for men hiding behind high positions to make baseless allegations against other citizens of this country, but the least they can do, is to prove their allegations, and the Prime Minister has the whole secret service at his disposal to try to prove his. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is an indepedent organization, and it is preposterous—

Some Hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —that the labour men of this country from coast to coast, and further, the organized farmers in the four great provinces, should back an organization of that kind only to have it suggested that it emanates from Moscow. The Conservatives say that. On the other hand, the Liberals say that it is a Tory trick. You can take your choice.

Let me say that we must distinguish clearly between the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and communism. It is quite true that both believe in a changed social order, in a new economic system. The communists are convinced that this can be brought about only by violence. They think it cannot be done in any other way. We believe that it may come in Canada by peaceful methods and in an orderly fashion, and that is the purpose of this organization.

Mr. MORAND: The end being the same.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It may very well be that force may prove inevitable, yes, if the attitude of certain gentlemen is persisted in and the people of this country are denied the right that they have to self-expression and to the enjoyment of a decent livelihood.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Even the right to work is denied them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I note that the Vancouver Daily Province in its issue of December 5, said this:

> The answer is that you cannot effect such a revolution at once, if at all, without force and violence. You cannot destroy coupon clipping without tearing down the intricate and all-involving structure of capitalism, and you cannot do that without misery and universal suffering and injustice and tyranny.

Well, if many take the position that we cannot do this thing constitutionally, and behind it is the threat that it will not be permitted to be done constitutionally, then none of us can answer as to what may actually take place. We in our group are out to try to bring about the end in view by peaceful and orderly methods.

The Prime Minister goes on to say:

> Remember the words of the Man of Nazareth, "the poor we have always with us." Nineteen centuries have passed, but it still is so.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, positively sickening that a wealthy man should stand up and lecture poor people in that fashion. Only a week ago, when I was addressing a large meeting of unemployed married men in Calgary, the Prime Minister's own city, I thought how insufferable it was that the Prime Minister should talk to these men in that fashion and offer them that kind of moralizing, when he himself enjoys his own wealth because of certain social arrangements, and when his policies, in the judgment of a great many people of this country, have done much to bring about the impoverishment of these poor people.

An hon. MEMBER: What have you done for this country?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, for order. I am, I think, within my rights. Certain gentlemen are constantly interrupting and I would appeal to you that they either leave the chamber or be silenced. As a matter of fact, I do not think the Prime Minister is interpreting scripture in accord with the interpretation of a great many of the most eminent theologians. May I venture to quote a paragraph from a very interesting pamphlet, Catholic Principles and the Present Crisis, issued by the Reverend John A. Ryan, D.D., in which he says:

> We cannot permit millions to starve in this land of plenty nor can we afford to unleash the forces of savagery and revolution. In the extreme predicament that is closer to us than we like to contemplate, there is another Catholic principle which is pertinent and adequate. It was stated by Pope Leo XIII in an Encyclical On the Condition of Labour: "Whenever the general interest or any particular class suffers or is threatened with injury which in no other way can be met or prevented, it is the duty of the public authority to intervene."

Father Ryan goes on to say:

> If for any reason the public works remedy fails, the public authorities will be under moral obligation to take temporary charge of and operate our essential industries, not only for the benefit of our most distressed classes but in the interest of the whole community.

Showing the bankruptcy of capitalism in this crisis, may I quote a paragraph from Hjalmar Schact, until lately president of the German Reichsbank, who in a recent book said:

> Never was the incapacity of the economic leaders of the capitalist world so glaringly demonstrated as today. A capitalism which cannot feed the workers of the world has no right to exist. The guilt of the capitalist system lies in its alliance with the violent policies of imperialism and militarism. The ruling classes of the world today have as completely failed in political leadership as in economic.

We believe that the first step to be taken in bettering the present conditions is to adopt a planned economy. During the war, when the life of the nation was considered to be at stake, there was very careful planning not only within our own country but as between the allied nations, and rationing was carried out to a very considerable extent. Within the nation as a whole, however, we normally have permitted anarchy to reign; we have had overdevelopment in some lines and underdevelopment in others. Take our pulp and paper as an outstanding example of the absence of any definite plan—overcapitalization and overdevelopment of every kind going on until even Saturday Night describes the power project as a racket.

I do not need to dwell on this; it is known to everyone. Moreover, we have had manipulation of credit which has played serious mischief with our whole economic system and has transferred hundreds of millions of dollars from one set of pockets to another. Further than that, we have had no relationship existing between distribution or consumption and production. It is obvious that our machine must slow down unless the people can buy what is produced. Had I time I could easily give a great many quotations from recognized authorities on this point.

One of the most recent pronouncements was contained in a resolution passed by the international labour organization. Mr. P. W. Martin, summarizing the conference resolution, says:

> By means of the special financing of public works, it aims at increasing the volume of buying—the fundamental condition of any improvement in the economic situation. By insisting upon monetary stability it provides for the essential measure which must accompany any such increase in the volume of buying, viz., adequate safeguards against undesirable price inflation. By laying down that the achievement of monetary stability must be international in scope it makes the necessary basic provision for the achievement of exchange stability. Finally by drawing attention to the need for non-monetary measures, the adoption of which would be facilitated by the monetary measures already considered, it opens the way to international action for adjusting production to consumption and removing the barriers to international trade. . . . For the irrational forces which at present control business activity it proposes to substitute a process better adapted to modern conditions; conscious adjustment of the volume of buying, so as to provide an adequate outlet for the whole product of industry, no matter how large that product may be. And in making this proposal it goes to the root of the present crisis.

In this connection I may give one other quotation taken from the October letter of the Royal Bank of Canada. Speaking of changes, he says:

> Among the most notable has been the attention given in the last few years to national planning—an idea developed in a rapid and spectacular form by the Russians, but of necessity forcing itself upon all of us. . . . We have scarcely grasped the fact that individualism in the old sense is no longer possible and that laissez-faire and the invisible hand are out-dated, when we are compelled to acknowledge that cooperation on a base even so broad as the national one is inadequate. In fact, its consequences are far more serious. Disasters may follow from an unregulated and individualistic economic behaviour, but they are mild compared with the tragedies if large national groups clash, each thoroughly organized in opposition to the rest. The national approach will not do.

I do not think we could proceed very far along the line of central planning—that is, under an administration really in earnest about producing results—without having to deal with the control of the banks. Theoretically, of course, parliament controls the banks, but in practice, in my judgment, the banks control the administration. Back as early as 1925 I introduced a resolution to this effect:

> It is not in the interests of the country at large that the privilege of issuing currency and controlling financial credit should be granted to private corporations.

I am more than ever convinced that the issuing of currency and the control of financial credit should be in the hands of a body directly responsible to the representatives of the people. It may be that we can set up a commission, although the commission form of government is today on trial; but it ought not to be left to those who might rightly be termed irresponsible and interested parties. Whether or not it is necessary to nationalize our whole banking system is perhaps a matter for debate, but all that we insist upon is that there should be effective control, and that may probably be exercised through a central bank working in the interests of the people rather than in the interests of the banks.

I do not think we could proceed very far without increasing the public control of industry. I believe the Prime Minister himself stated the underlying principle that should obtain in dealing with our natural resources, in his speech introducing the radio bill last year. This is what he said:

I believe that there is no government in Canada that does not regret today that it has parted with some of these natural resources for considerations wholly inadequate and on terms that do not reflect the principle under which the crown holds the natural resources in trust for all the people. . . .

If the Prime Minister would extend that principle to all our natural resources he would be advocating what we in this corner have been advocating through the years. The crown holds the natural resources in trust for all the people.

Mr. BENNETT: May I remind the hon. gentleman that it is the crown in right of the provinces.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Not in relation to the radio.

Mr. BENNETT: That is national

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not want to go into the constitutional question in detail today.

Mr. GEARY: You are founding your argument on it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. I am not founding my argument on the constitution as it is today but on something a great deal bigger.

Mr. GEARY: Why don't you establish your basis and proceed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am dealing with principles. There may be the complicated legal question of the crown in right of the provinces as against that of the crown in right of the dominion. I do not want to be drawn into that discussion today; I am dealing with the general principle and we believe that what is true of the Dominion government ought to be true of the provinces as well. We are laying down a great general principle which will have to be worked out. If war broke out these constitutional questions would not stand in the way for a minute; the Dominion government would invoke certain residual powers it holds and would manage to make the constitution work. That is the point. An hon. member behind me suggests that the crown is the people. Of course it is. There is a great deal bigger question at issue than that of the respective rights of the provinces and of the dominion. Let me quote still further from the radio speech of the Prime Minister:

I cannot think that any government would be warranted in leaving the air to private exploitation and not reserving it for development for the use of the people.

It was only a few days after that utterance that the question of radium came up. I think radium deposits are considered to be under the control of the dominion, but when this matter was being considered the government made no effort to apply its own principle. If the principle enunciated by the Prime Minister applies to one particular natural resource it ought to have been applied to radium as well. I think this gives a practical answer to the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary)—the government took no action even where it had the authority.

Whether or not we like it, to-day the state is intervening more and more in business affairs. I submit that the Duff report and the suggested plans founded thereon go further than most legislation when they attempt to consolidate the railroads in some way or to arrange for their centralized control. We are being forced to advance along socialistic lines. I know there are those who say we should have less government in business, but—

Mr. YOUNG: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) says, "hear, hear." He has been long enough in Ottawa to know that there is a steady stream of people coming here to secure special favours and that no corporation could exist had it not come to the government for its charter and for special favours.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Industry undoubtedly is in a serious plight to-day. It seems to me that instead of our being forced to take over industry, a great many industries will be coming to us as did the old Canadian Northern, and asking to be taken over. Industry is in a bad way. I do not believe that the industrialist can pay his dividends to-day and at the same time pay decent wages, but when that alternative must be decided I say unhesitatingly that the employees ought to be secured a decent living and their claims should have priority over dividends. If industry as constituted under present conditions cannot grant a decent living to its employees, so much the worse for industry, and in such cases it should be taken over.

Similarly the governments of this country are in a bad way because they are not able to balance their budgets; I do not believe they can, on the one hand, give adequate services to the people and, at the same time, pay the interest upon their bonded indebtedness. We shall have to say whether the interest upon bonded indebtedness shall have precedence over the services needed by the people.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have only two or three minutes left.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We will give you a little more time. Does the hon. gentleman know of any industry where interest has taken precedence over wages?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have only a few moments left; we are narrowly limited as to time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Answer the question.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Speaker intervenes upon other occasions.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I recognize that a great many object to the program which we have in view in that it may undercut what is called the principle of private property. That may be quite true, but I suggest that that principle of private property has been unwarrantedly extended. We create an artificial body which we call a corporation, and then, without imposing upon it any responsibilities, we give it all the privileges of a private person; without its having any soul, we endow it with immortality. I do not think we can allow an assumption of that kind to continue. It may very well be that my home is private property, that other things which I use and enjoy are private property, but the original idea of private property should never have been extended to the machinery by which modern production is carried on. It does not belong there at all and ought never to have been extended to such a degree—that will have to be altered. Who can contend for a moment that the Bank of Montreal or the Canadian Pacific Railway are private property in any real sense? They have been given certain charters and certain privileges which they enjoy just so long as they are considered to minister to the welfare of the country. Many believe that our banks are inviolable, but I would remind the country at large that our banks exist because of charters which really terminate this year. Those charters need not be reissued if parliament so desires; they are given at the will of parliament for a ten year period only, and the sooner the banks recognize that they are dependent upon the people, the better for all concerned.

The Prime Minister in his Toronto speech said: "Are you prepared to give up those things which have been earned by honest toil?" Does anyone mean to say that the great fortunes in Canada have been built up by what could be termed "honest toil"? Has the Prime Minister's own fortune been gained by honest toil?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask the hon. member to withdraw the imputation he has just made.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I simply asked a question.

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask the hon. member to withdraw the imputation he made; he must know that it is out of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I submit—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I submit that I made no statement which is contrary to the rules of this house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have given my ruling, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw his imputation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; may I again state that the Prime Minister made the statement—

Mr. SPEAKER: I recall what the hon. member said, and what he said is out of order. I have so ruled, and I ask him to withdraw.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I appeal from Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has used unparliamentary language and I ask him to withdraw it. The hon. member has made the imputation that the Prime Minister has been guilty of dishonesty.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, Mr. Speaker, I gladly—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would regret to have to name the hon. member, but I propose to do so unless he conforms to the rules of this house. I ask the hon. member to withdraw his objectionable words.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I withdraw any imputation that the Prime Minister has made his money dishonestly.

An hon. MEMBER: Yammer ahead.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What I was trying to point out was that a great many fortunes in Canada have not been built up by what we used to consider in the old days as steady savings, collected by hard, assiduous toil. I was trying to say that a great many fortunes in this country—in this case I am not referring at all to the Prime Minister—have been built up by manipulation, by stock watering, by various kinds of speculation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oil.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, oil and so forth.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask for silence in the house because it is impossible for the hon. member to speak with so much noise.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I believe it is within the knowledge of all hon. members that large fortunes have been made in this country by other methods than that of the old-fashioned toil, and under such circumstances there is no reason why the right to the possession of such fortunes may not be challenged and why, when there are hundreds of thousands of people on the verge of starvation, there may not be levied on those who presently own them, the large amounts that are necessary to put into effect certain kinds of public works or to make other provision that will adequately meet the needs of the people in this crisis. As certain people have pointed out very clearly, it is quite constitutional to do that in the case of an international war; it is equally constitutional to do it in the case of a war against poverty. Unfortunately we have been emphasizing too much the financial aspect; we have not paid sufficient attention to the welfare of our citizens. May I be permitted to quote those old lines of Goldsmith which I think ought to be inscribed in every legislative chamber in Canada:

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

Unfortunately we have had a great acceleration in the speed with which wealth has been built up in this country and today we are experiencing the reaction in that people are literally decaying in their physical health and in their morals because of conditions that exist. I think of the thousands of people whom I meet, who are almost in despair, who should be lifted out of their despair. It is the first duty of any administration adequately to feed, clothe and shelter its people. That is not being done by the present government. I quite admit that if anyone proceeds to carry out that policy, it may very well mean heavy taxation on certain corporations and individuals who hitherto have escaped lightly; it may very well mean a challenge to the prevailing ideals of private property, but it is becoming essential at the present time. With me, and I think with an increasing number of people across the country, the question is not whether we ought to have changes; the real issue is whether changes will be brought about in an orderly and peaceable fashion or whether matters will be allowed to drift until there is a crisis, possibly a catastrophe, when, as best we can, we may try to pull ourselves together.

The terms of the resolution are, I think, clear to all. I would say again that the new program is being backed by responsible groups of organized farmers, labour men and other citizens. I trust the discussion will not simply degenerate into a calling of names, but that on the other hand we shall attempt to discuss seriously the principles which are at stake.

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, in rising to second the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), I wish first to say that since the house adjourned before Christmas we have had a particularly interesting time. Those of us who call ourselves members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation have had the opportunity in the last two months of seeing large numbers of our Canadian people. May I say that for the most part the money which paid for our travelling and other expenses came out of our own pockets or, if it did not, collections to meet expenditures were taken up at the meetings. I cannot understand the attitude of many individuals and newspapers, particularly some of the small ones, which have been printing really scurrilous reports. While I may make bitter attacks on policies, I hope I may not live to mete out to my fellow members in the house some of the, shall I say, receptions that have been meted out to me.

In the last three or four years as things got worse and worse, and the suffering and poverty of the people increased very rapidly, many citizens and members of the house who do not belong to either of the major parties, really expected—I for one, at any rate, did—that there would be changes of policy on the part either of the government or of the Liberal party. I thought there would be on the part of responsible members, citizens who must stand in high regard in their individual communities—one would judge that by the fact they have been elected to this house—a realization that these days we are passing through are not ordinary days and that a change of policy had become necessary. As time went along we saw there was no such realization, and possibly I had better pay tribute where tribute is due and thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his party for the very able assistance they have unwittingly given to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. It would not otherwise have been possible to have addressed such vast audiences nor would such support have come our way had it not been for the policies of the Prime Minister and his pronouncements from time to time, and I here and now thank him.

There was, on the part of many people, fine people too, an expectation that the Liberals would turn to the left. But instead we found them talking about personal liberty, religious liberty and constitutional liberty, as though these could be all that they ought to be if they were not accompanied by economic liberty. So it seems curious that it has fallen to those groups which are much less well equipped by way of organization across the country, possibly by way of training and certainly by way of financial support, to give a lead to the country at this time. The name of the organization that is saying the only things that are different from those which have been said for a hundred years is the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. It is true that organized farmers, organized labour and the socialist party of British Columbia were the founders of the C.C.F., but it is also true that the cold waters of this prolonged depression are to-day loosening the hold on security of business and professional men and industrialists. There is no doubt at all that business and professional men, and smaller industrialists who thought they would never reach a time when they would experience insecurity are to-day insecure, and indeed some of them are in the ranks of the unemployed. This orderly mobilizing of the people's forces does not consist of farmers and labourers only, but is augmented by these new, insecure groups, namely, the business, professional and smaller industrial peoples. Therefore it cannot but be true that in the months that lie ahead of us the forces of the people will gather strength. It has not been our doing. Had either of the old parties offered solutions, or even attempted to offer solutions, or had the government extended some sympathy to those suffering so greatly, they would have held much of the ground which they so easily won in 1930, and the Liberal party would have gained ground more rapidly than it is now doing. The Liberals, of course, do offer sympathy, if nothing else.

[Miss Macphail.]

I am very glad to say that the Canadian people cannot be reconciled to continued want and privation, suffering, disease and early death in a land of abundance. They cannot and will not be reconciled to it. If they could they would not be the red-blooded Canadians about whom the Minister of Railways and Canals talks so much. The attempt of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is to build a social order or society which will serve mankind, instead of allowing a social organization to continue which makes mankind serve the system. Although municipal governments and provincial legislatures may desire great and fundamental constitutional changes, they cannot make them, and that the great constitutional changes which must come will come because of changes made in the House of Commons of Canada.

May I say—and I do not think I need say this to the country, if I must to the House of Commons—that I am an anti-revolutionist. I never have believed in force. Today I have no more belief in it than I had in years gone by. It will not be the activities of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation which will bring revolution in Canada. There are only two classes which make revolution possible, namely, the class at the top which stubbornly and stupidly will not be moved by changed conditions, and the class at the bottom which wants to bring about a change in the social order by revolution. Those at the top, well aided by the government of this country, unconsciously are doing everything they can to bring about that which they most fear. It is simply ridiculous to brand as revolutionists members such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and myself. If any hon. member will turn to the debates of this house for the eleven years we have been here he will find that we were anti-militarists at a time when we were called Germans and Russians and all sorts of things, because of it and there are no two people in the House of Commons who have stood out more consistently against force as a means of settling disputes than have the two members speaking to this resolution. So that may I say here that those who try to assert that we are bloody revolutionists, that Mr. Woodsworth was born in Russia and has a foreign name, and all that kind of nonsense, are doing us very much good and themselves as much harm. It will not take the people of Canada long to know there is no truth in such a suggestion.

We did not get out of previous depressions by intelligent collective action. We got out of them more or less by accident. Either some great, startling invention came along which caused capital expenditure on a large scale, or we had a war, or some other unexpected occurrence, or there was an export of capital. But the export of capital is no longer possible. These three factors, the export of capital, the war of 1914 which brought an end to the depression previously existing, and startling inventions such as the motor car brought us out of depressions previous to the present one are not likely to be repeated. It seems to me that this depression has been so prolonged that there is less and less chance of some accidental happening bringing us out of it. It looks as though we were going to have to think our way out, then act our way out, and as individuals we cannot do it. We can do it only by collective action. The things which have brought us out in the past are less likely to bring us out now. I refer particularly to two factors, namely, the export of capital and those startling inventions causing great capital expenditures. The third one I want most of all not to happen, namely, the declaration of war. Oddly enough, however, if war were declared the government now sitting on the treasury benches, to save the situation would do those very things which, if done in peace times would be equally effective. But apparently we would have to have a war to convince them such action was necessary. Great capital expenditures brought about by new and great inventions are unlikely since industralists, capitalists and financial magnates who would be injured by the displacement of equipment which they now possess would take steps to buy up inventions which might in their opinion enter into too great conflict with their interests. Such inventions would have a nuisance value.

Suppose none of these factors become effective what will we do? If we follow the policy which is now being pursued, one of liquidation without replacement of credits we will bring about wholesale defaulting on bonds and debentures, with therefore less credit in circulation and lower prices. In the year 1932 corporations and municipalities in Canada defaulted on their bonds to the extent of $45,000,000. We must remember that those bonds and mortgages which are the debts of the people are really the basis of financial credit. Those defaults wiped out credit. The banks used the bonds as a basis of credit, and individuals and companies used them as collateral. So an insolvent debtor means default which wipes out credit, making the volume of currency and credit in circulation less, with attending lowered prices and greater insolvency. That is the policy we are now pursuing relentlessly. There is no doubt at all that there is a curtailment of credit throughout the country, and a great many individuals believe that if there are fewer expenditures the money will be saved. Actually that is not so. But reduced expenditure lessens the volume of the means of payment slowing up trade and pulling down our activities all along the line.

In this connection I should like to quote the words of Gustav Cassel, the well known Swedish economist with whose works I am sure hon. members are familiar. In the work before me he deals with the policy of deflation. He considers the condition where there is less and less currency in circulation. He is recommending the opposite treatment, that of raising falling prices by a greater flow of currency into the commercial life of the country. But he says:

> The deflationists, however, look upon this question in their own way—

I do not know any real reason why a person should have to strain his voice to make himself heard. If anyone wants to talk there are comfortable lobbies.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Miss MACPHAIL: May I begin again:

> The deflationists, however, look upon this question in their own way, regarding deflation as in itself a desirable thing. They think that the necessary equilibrium should be brought about by forcing down all prices to the level of the lowest. They disregard—

And this is exactly the policy that this government has been pursuing.

> They disregard the great social evils, labour struggles, and political disturbances—

Of which the Canadian Cooperative Commonwealth, I should say, is one.

> —unavoidably connected with a restrictive policy of such severity as would be required for the purpose. And, what is still more important, they do not understand that such a restrictive policy would inevitably expose the low prices to a new pressure and cause them to fall still more.

So that if Gustav Cassel is right, there is no doubt that unemployment figures will continue to increase, that prices of all basic commodities will go still lower than they are at the moment.

There is one other thing that possibly we have not given enough thought to, that is that the industrial mechanism is very delicate and very intricate and that while it can be slowed down to a certain extent without smashing it, you cannot slow it too much or the whole thing goes to pieces. We all know that you must have a certain turnover in business to carry the overhead, once the turnover becomes too small to carry the overhead then the concern cannot go on. That is true of any business, and the bigger the business the truer it is. One would think, in that regard, not only of our great industrial plants but also of commercial companies, like Eaton's or Simpson's, or of our railways. Sometimes I think we are getting very close to the minimum of activity, and that once we have passed that minimum we shall run into difficulty much more rapidly than we have done up until now.

That brings us then to the question: How are we going to increase business activity? How are we going to increase industrial activity? How are we going to raise the level of prices of basic commodities? I think there are many ways. But I think one of the things that must be done—and I am not going to develop it because it will be developed by other speakers—is that we must draw upon social credit, or the credit of all the people; we have to stop a small group of individuals, no matter who they happen to be, having the right to issue credit against the assets of the people. I have no objection to them writing notes against their own assets, but I have great objection to them writing notes against the assets of the people, for which the people pay them very high interest. We have paid out far too much in interest, both on foreign and domestic loans, in the years that lie behind us. We have now solved the problem of production but not that of distribution. The distribution of goods and services is in essence the whole problem that faces us at the moment. In order to distribute goods and services, the purchasing power of the masses of the people in this and every other country must be increased. That means, of course, that those who have more purchasing power today than they have needs or capacity must have their purchasing power curtailed, for the economic good of the whole.

When we are passing through a time such as the present, individuals and even large companies are spending less and less. Uneconomic as it is, and as they may realize it to be, it is impossible for them to do anything else, grim necessity forces them to cut down their expenditure, and the cutting down of expenditure by individuals, companies, corporations and governments greatly lessens the volume of currency and credit in circulation, with the result of a still further fall in prices, greater unemployment and greater distress.

So we must increase the amount of credit and currency in circulation. May I quote what two eminent authorities have to say on this subject? G. D. H. Cole is one of the great British authorities, a leader in economics in the university of Oxford and a member of the economic advisory council. He says, at page 345 of The Intelligent Man's Guide Through World Chaos:

> Where the private investor refuses to invest governments will have to step in. Nothing would be more likely to help, given the right international conditions, in promoting world revival than a large-scale and systematic policy of public development directly planned and financed by the governments of the leading countries. With this would have to go a more liberal credit policy and, if possible, an international agreement under which each state would agree to liberate its currency system from the present shackles upon expansion, either on the basis of a reformed gold standard or through a system of related national currencies "managed" without any reference to a metallic standard.

Stuart Chase, who is a well-known American economist, commenting on the same point, says:

> When the cycle starts down, extend public works; when it starts to boom, retrench public works.

Again he says:

> The depression could be broken by feeding a huge stream of new purchasing power into the industrial system. . . . We may have to create new money to finance new wealth. If you want to call it inflation, all right. I am not afraid of the word.

And another very brief one from Chase. Anything I may say on this subject may be discounted, so I believe we had better keep to world authorities. He goes on to say:

> In the last analysis, what is a people's credit for, if not to finance the end of a people's misery and desolation? Certain leading citizens regard government credit as private property, to be doled out to bankers and railroad bondholders. The very mention of letting the people of America benefit by their own credit throws some of these prominent citizens into a paroxysm. "Better," I heard a banker say, "universal bankruptcy than one dollar of inflation." These brave boys on burning bridges may stand a moment too long.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member's own speeches read better than what she is reading.

Miss MACPHAIL: The odd thing about it is that when private individuals or companies or corporations borrow against their assets we call that prosperity, but when it is proposed that governments should use national credit to finance national schemes, it is called inflation. I must say that I do not quite appreciate this great worry about inflation, but I am not going into that. There is no doubt about this, that the essence of the depression is falling prices, caused by deficiency of purchasing power. One sees everywhere attempts to break down "sales resistance," the spending of large sums to induce people to buy, and the very people they are trying to induce to buy would very much like to buy if they only had the purchasing power. One sees it everywhere. I notice at the picture show last night that at the motor show in Toronto they put on a vaudeville performance to induce people to go to the motor show, which I would say is a rather odd way to break down sales resistance. We must now turn our whole attention upon the consumption of goods. We must pass at once from an economy of production to an economy of consumption and we must continue to address ourselves to that problem until the consumption of goods equals the production, and continue even further, until the amount of goods consumed is equal in volume to the amount of goods which all our plant and equipment is capable of producing. When that point is reached we shall for the time being have solved the problem. That being so, we must seek to evolve policies, taxation, financial and trade policies, which will increase the consumption of goods. This I will admit is a new idea because the whole effort of governments in the past, and it has been a very well directed and very successful effort, has been towards the production of goods. But to-day the only thing that people with accumulated capital know what to do with it is to invest it in plant and equipment to produce goods of which there are already too much. So that to use it in that way is nonsensical.

It does seem to me that what we shall have to do in the very near future is to take the burden of federal taxes as much as possible off the backs of the consumers so as to increase their purchasing power of goods, and throw the burden of federal taxes upon accumulated capital, not for the purpose of injuring accumulated capital, but rather to prevent accumulated capital from being what it is now, an economic nuisance. If that were done, and it could be done by income tax, inheritance tax, and the taxation of unspent balances, whether of individuals or corporations, beyond a certain figure, it would bring into the federal treasury great sums of money from a yet almost untapped source, and at the same time it would increase the purchasing power of the masses of the people, enabling the consumption of goods in some degree at least to catch up with production.

I am sure there is no member of this house—at any rate I would not like to think there is one—who is not sensible of the very great suffering of the people of Canada today, and that suffering is increasing day by day and week by week. In this year 1933 we are going to see very many more people go off our farms and many more people give up their homes because they are unable to meet their payments than was the case in 1932. That certainly must be realized by other members of this house if they receive as voluminous a mail of the same sort as comes to my desk. They must know a great deal about the extreme suffering of our fellow-Canadians. But it does seem to me that inasmuch as parliament can, parliament should relieve the people from the corroding worry and despair to which they are subjected at the present time. People are so much afraid of certain things. They are afraid of unemployment, with no means of their own. They are afraid of sickness and accident. The are afraid of old age, because often old age for various reasons starts before the age of seventy, and inasmuch as these fears can be relieved, I think it certainly ought to be.

One word about unemployment. The only real cure for unemployment is employment. I think one by one we have all come to that conclusion. The last time I spoke in this house before the Christmas adjournment I said I wondered if any of us really realized the actual feelings of millions of our people who go on from day to day without work and without hope. I wonder if we realize what that is really doing to the moral fibre of our nation. How long can we continue to do it without actually destroying the very qualities in Canadians of which we have been so proud? I feel that we must set about getting work for those who are out of work. I do not think we can say that there is nothing to do while people live under the most wretched conditions in this country, while they live in the slums of our great cities, while the people in our countryside have not got the comfortable homes and the electricity and the various other conveniences that everyone ought to have today and while some work too hard.

I have here a little pamphlet called the Canadian Student which came to my desk only two days ago. In an article written by an English girl, under the title of "Why Don't Our Young Men Care?" One finds the very thing I have been emphasizing, that these people are our charge, and however much we may try to laugh it off and say it does not matter to us, after all, if we are responsible citizens, and particularly if we are responsible members of parliament, the misery of our fellow-Canadians matters very much indeed. If it does not, we have no business to be here. After expressing her disappointment in the activities of the student body in Canada she says:

> No, I am forced to the conclusion (refute it if you can) that you here just do not care; you have no enthusiasm, no zest; nothing on which you are really "keen." You do not care that at a ten-minute walk from the university there are houses, inhabited by your fellows, which are so insanitary, rat-infested, smelly and filthy, that they would be a disgrace in an uncivilized community. You say you do not know this? Why not? It is your business.

That is exactly how I feel about it. She goes on:

> How many of you know that in three centres less than a half-hour's walk from Varsity, there meet once a week groups of men, often numbering in the hundreds, who are your fellow-Canadians, who through no fault of their own are not working at the moment, but who would welcome the friendliness of a chat or a smoke or a game with you—if you are really interested in their problems? Are you not interested in them or their problems? Why not?—they are your business.

I know that sentiment is out of place in this house, but I do feel that what we need now is a new sense of patriotism, not the sort of patriotism that means going out to fight and kill somebody, but that sort of patriotism that says to each one of us that the feeding and clothing and sheltering and the developing of the personalities of Canadians is the business of each one of us, the business of all thinking Canadians. I do think some times that members of this house do not always feel a sense of personal responsibility for present unhappy conditions. This is the test! Are we willing to sacrifice ourselves, our time, our money and our efforts, in an endeavour, even though it be in vain, to set up a new social order that puts in the centre human beings and relates everything else, finance, industry, and all else to the service of our fellow-Canadians?

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, everywhere that I have gone since parliament adjourned a few months ago I have been met with this question by the citizens of this country: Is parliament going to do anything for us this year? Is parliament going to do anything to make conditions better? Will parliament do anything to give us employment? Will it do anything to make it possible for our boys and girls to get work?

I have not been able to give my fellow-citizens a very reassuring answer, and coming back to parliament on Monday last and looking over the speech from the throne which was read to us a few months ago, and glancing over the order paper now before us, which I suppose contains the bulk of the program which is to be submitted to parliament, I cannot help feeling that the resolution which is now before the house offers the most promise to the citizens of Canada for some improvement in conditions, because it asks that the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interest of the people and not for the benefit of the few. That proposal, it seems to me, is so reasonable that it should have the sympathetic consideration at least of all the members of this House of Commons.

[Miss Macphail.]

Wherever we look today throughout the so-called civilized world we find the various countries enduring all sorts of trouble. I fancy that most of the statesmen of the world, when they retire from their offices at night, must exclaim with that celebrated character of Shakespeare:

> The time is out of joint; O cursed spite,
> That ever I was born to set it right!

Coming to Canada, we find conditions in a frightful mess. We find a land where food is more plentiful than it has ever been before; yet many people are going hungry. We find great quantities of clothing in the warehouses and in the retail stores; yet I personally know of many people who are going insufficiently clad, people who have not all the clothing they really ought to have. There is a vast amount of coal in Canada, and any number of miners who are willing and anxious to work; yet there are thousands of homes in the country in which the furnaces are not being lit this winter, the people having to keep warm as best they can around the cook stove because they have not sufficient money with which to buy the necessary fuel. There is a lot of railway equipment idle in the yards while there are numbers of Canadians who are wanting to ride on the trains; but the trains are not running, at any rate not more than half the number of trains we had in operation some time ago.

As a matter of fact, we have goods and services of all kinds in abundance in Canada, but the people are not in a position to obtain anything like a sufficient quantity of these things. There is no scarcity of anything, so far as I can ascertain, except a scarcity of money; and as one of the best living economists said some time ago, of all things that mankind needs in this very complex system under which we now live, the one thing of which mankind can have as much or as little as it likes, is money, because money is so easily made. There are two kinds of money, one made with a bank ledger and a fountain pen—a kind very easily made and, unfortunately, easily unmade. There is another kind of money made of high grade paper and with a printing press, and that is the better kind.

A good many people have an entirely wrong idea of money. They think it is something to be saved, something to be hoarded, something to be bought and sold, a commodity like wheat or potatoes. Money is nothing of the kind. In the true sense of the word it is a medium of exchange, a system of tickets whereby we exchange goods and services one for another. Speaking in the material sense money is the most important thing in our lives, and it is imperative that we should have a proper amount of it. It is important not to have too much and equally important not to have too little. You might have too much, just as they had in Germany years ago, when there was a great quantity of money in circulation and a very small amount of goods, with the result that money lost its purchasing power. On the other hand, you might have such a condition as exists in Canada today—great quantities of goods and very little money, so that the goods lose their money value. Money, I repeat, is the most important thing in life, because it is the means of livelihood of every man and woman receiving wages or salary; it is the means of livelihood of professional men and and all others, including producers. Why do they want money? Because they must have it if they are to get their livelihood. That is the reason that money is so important to us. The whole standard of living of our people depends upon the amount of money they control, and for the last three years the standard of living has been steadily declining.

It seems to me that the success of any monetary system should be judged by the standard of living which the people can enjoy under it. If our standard of living has been steadily declining, as it has been for three years, then there is something seriously wrong with our money system and we have a prima facie case established against the present system. We may understand it better if we examine the causes of the crisis from which we are suffering, the so-called depression. I have not time today to attempt to deal with the many contributing causes of the crisis. One cause, of course, is the displacement of men by machinery; I will not attempt to deal with that. Another cause is the unequal division of wealth or income, with which I shall have to deal incidentally. The next cause is our antiquated money system, a debt-creating system which has been in use in the so-called civilized world for the last hundred years, under which, according to an estimate of the League of Nations, there has been built up throughout the world an aggregate debt of over four hundred billions of dollars. In the United States, according to an estimate I have seen, the figure is two hundred and eighteen billions, and I have seen an estimate of eighteen billions for Canada.

I suppose these debts are theoretically or technically payable in gold; yet all the gold in the world amounts to only eleven billion dollars. May I ask how anyone expects to pay in gold even the interest, let alone the principal of this debt of four hundred billion dollars. The interest is not paid in gold but in goods. When it comes to paying international debts they are paid with goods, and the tariffs which we hear so much about today only serve to impede that payment in goods. Many international debts are today impossible of settlement owing to tariffs and the low world price of export commodities. I believe that any student of the present crisis will agree that the immediate cause of this world situation is the collapse of commodity price levels which started in 1929, and which collapse was brought about by a deflation of the world's credit.

May I quote briefly from Sir William Beveridge, director of the London School of Economics:

> This is essentially a money crisis. There is a breakdown in the machinery of exchange. What we have in this crisis is a fall of prices, representing deflation of money.

That is a very positive statement. The house knows what deflation means; it means contraction. Evidently the remedy for the deflation of money would be an inflation of it; yet some leading men in the country tell us that the last thing in the world we can think of would be some inflation. All the inflation I want is enough to offset the deflation which has already taken place. There are many people in this country who do not believe that there has been any deflation; they say, "There is as much money now as there ever was." I want to contradict that statement positively and to give figures in support of my contention.

There are two kinds of money—cash or currency made with a printing press, and bank loans or credits created by means of a bank ledger and a fountain pen, as I have already said. I recently secured figures from the Deputy Minister of Finance to see what deflation had taken place in Canada in the last three years, from October 31, 1929 to October 31, 1932. I find that there has been a contraction or diminution of dominion notes in circulation in Canada of $50,000,000. As a matter of fact, we have only about half the dominion notes in circulation now that we had in 1920. Speaking from memory, I believe we have at present $161,000,000 as compared with $320,000,000 in 1920. One would have to go back to 1914 to find a year in which there was as small an amount of dominion notes in circulation as there is today.

Those figures will give some idea of the deflation which has taken place in the amount of legal tender in circulation in the country. There has been a shrinkage of $50,000,000 in the bank notes in circulation in Canada. The figure is now down to $133,000,000. There is a diminution or contraction of approximately $600,000,000 in total bank loans in Canada outstanding on October 31, 1932, as compared with October 31, 1929. Of the amount of bank loans outstanding today I dare say that perhaps fifty per cent are frozen loans. The bulk of the business of this country is done by means of bank loans, and we are attempting to carry on with probably not more than one-half the amount of active bank loans which we had three years ago. Surely when these figures are available to the house no one will say that we have not been deflated. We have been deflated to the extent of approximately $700,000,000. How can business in Canada be normal under these conditions? The amount of business which can be done depends upon the money in circulation and available to the people. This deflation started in 1929 and has continued ever since. As a result the confidence of the people has been destroyed and the velocity of the circulation of money has slowed down. Once confidence is destroyed the whole vicious spiral of deflation gets under way and commodity prices go to—I shall not say where. As one commodity dealer has said: "If it is true, as some modernists say, that there is no hell, where have commodity prices gone to anyway?"

Speaking of commodity prices brings me to the present position of those engaged in our four primary industries, agriculture, forestry, mining and fishing. The prices received by the people engaged in these industries largely determine the amount of new money with which the people of Canada can do their business. When the prices of these commodities break fifty and sixty per cent, as they have done lately, is it any wonder that business has disappeared?

In order to illustrate the position of our commodity producers I shall deal very briefly with the position of the farmer. The farmer is affected by three different levels, the level of his debts, his taxes and insurance premiums, his hospital fees, etc., the price level of the goods he sells and the level of retail prices. As I remember the statement of the Prime Minister at the Imperial conference, he said that in three years the price of wheat had fallen sixty-three per cent, that of other farm products fifty-six per cent, and the cost of living, nineteen per cent. Averaging the price of wheat and other farm products, we find that there has been a drop of sixty per cent in the price received for these commodities, while there has been a drop of only nineteen per cent in the price of those goods which the farmer is forced to buy, and no drop at all in the level of his taxes or the interest on his debts. How can the farmer carry on? Forty-five per cent of our people are engaged in agriculture, and the prices they receive for their products largely determine whether or not there is to be business prosperity in Canada. The gross revenue of agriculture has decreased by over $925,000,000 in the last three years.

What I have said about agriculture applies in a greater or lesser degree to forestry, mining and fishing. We talk about the great debt of this country, and we sometimes forget that the payment of that debt depends upon the earning power of the people engaged in these industries. When this country was floating one of the great victory loans, Sir Thomas White was reported to have said that if the interest upon those bonds was to be paid, it would be paid from the top six inches of Canada's soil. There is no interest paying power in the prices received to-day by those who are working the top six inches of our soil. Those who are dependent upon the coupons which they clip from the bonds of Canada should be concerned about this matter; they should do something to bring back the buying power and paying power of the people engaged in our primary industries.

So far as the farmer is concerned, his load of debt has been doubled and, in some cases, trebled, but in connection with that debt there has been a fortuitous gain to the creditor because of the increased purchasing power of his money. If I remember the Prime Minister's words correctly, he said that in some cases this fortuitous gain has amounted to forty-eight per cent. Even if this increase could be borne, it constitutes a grave social injustice. Canada cannot return to prosperity so long as we maintain a policy which inflicts a grave social injustice upon the great body of producers of this country.

I do not think the people of Canada are going to put up with this forever, especially if we can get a chance to tell them what is going on. Of course, that will be very difficult. The previous speaker (Miss Macphail) deplored some of the reports which had appeared in the press. So far as I am concerned I think the press has on the whole been very fair to me. To those who have been maligned by the press I should like to quote the words of an economist, not a politician. John Maynard Keynes, in his Essays in Persuasion, says this about the press:

> But we live in a curious age when utterances in the press are deliberately designed to conform with the worst informed instead of with the best informed opinion because the former is wider spread.

If the impending crash about which some people talk ever occurs, the metropolitan press of this country will be more responsible for it than the politicians. However, I believe that some of the papers in Canada are turning over a new leaf; they are showing better judgment than they did in the past. We find editors who realize that we face a really desperate situation and that new measures must be considered and considered in a friendly light and with an open mind.

I have not the time to recite fully the conditions which exist in Canada, but the present deplorable state of affairs is familiar to most of us. It is the result of the old policy of laissez-faire, the old "rugged individualism," the "survival of the slickest," every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. In short, a state of anarchy is prevailing in Canada today, with regard to production and distribution. We cannot expect to get out of this condition until we exercise some control. We need something to replace anarchy, we need a planned economy. I know that some people think that it is very radical to talk about a planned economy, but in doing so I think we are in very good company. I should like to quote from the World's Economic Crisis and the Way of Escape. This is a collection of six lectures given under the auspices of the Halley Stewart Foundation by Sir Arthur Salter, Sir Josiah Stamp, J. Maynard Keynes, Sir Basil Blackett. Henry Clay and Sir William Beveridge. Sir Basil Blackett is a director of the Bank of England, and I think he will be considered as being eminently respectable. He says:

> A fair summary of what has been expressed in previous lectures would be that modern civilization finds itself on the brink of chaos owing to the inability of human beings to manage the machine they have brought into being. It is not merely that we are failing to make full use of the marvellous opportunities which science opens up to the twentieth century.

I hope hon. gentlemen will listen to this next sentence.

> We are in immediate danger of finding ourselves the victims of a Frankenstein of our own creation; the genius of man has outstripped his code of morals both in the national and in the international sphere. The structure of the twentieth century cannot be built up on outworn foundations. If we are to survive we must be prepared to "think adventurously" and to challenge existing values and the customs based on them, carefully distinguishing between those that have passed their usefulness and those that are really essential.

And then again:

> I wish to put before you this evening the view that conscious corporative planning is not only a desirable means of progress but an unavoidable necessity if we are to save the economic structure of modern civilization from disaster—

Those are just as strong words as I could use myself.

> —and that the immediate task to which we should bend all our energies is to prove to ourselves and to the world that planning is consistent with freedom and freedom with planning.

I regret the Prime Minister is not in the chamber to hear those words. I am sorry I have to skip so much of what Sir Basil Blackett said on that occasion. He says:

> Here we come to the heart of our present-day problem of a financial and economic crisis brought on not by scarcity but by plenty. It is the fact that this is a crisis of plenty which has shocked mankind and accounts in a special degree for that intense interest in economic and currency questions which has among its other manifestations brought crowded audiences to listen to these lectures.
> It is said that in proportion to their numbers there are more chess experts in the lunatic asylums than any other class, and next to them come currency experts.

Now listen to the laughter.

> In view of what we have done with currency and currency has done with us in the last twenty years, we are all of us fit for the lunatic asylum. If many currency experts go mad, it is the natural result of their coming face to face with the insanity of the monetary systems with which man has tortured himself ever since he passed from barter to money. Money was meant to be a yardstick with which to measure the value to be put on commodities and services in process of being exchanged for each other, but throughout the ages mankind has never been able to devise a monetary yardstick which did not at one time measure an inch and at another a hundred or more inches.

I remember reading some time ago that in olden times the yard in England was the measurement of the king's waistline. All of us will realize how the yardstick must have fluctuated in those days. The old Saxon kings used to have, I believe, fasting periods succeeded by feasts and one can imagine the change in the yardstick after dinner. One can imagine the change which took place when the old king died and he was succeeded by a slim person like myself.

In the forefront of the reforms which the planned twentieth century demands is a stable money whose purchasing power will remain constant. It is to our failure to seize this primary necessity of any rational monetary system that our present distress is preeminently to be attributed.

I wish to draw the attention of the free traders in the house to the next paragraph which I read; and I want to apologize for such lengthy quotations from Sir Basil Blackett, but I cannot resist telling the house some of the things he has said in this excellent address. He continues:

And we have erred with our eyes open. At the Genoa conference of 1922, some forty-five nations there assembled solemnly adopted a series of financial resolutions which set before the world two principal aims, first the restoration of the gold standard and second the prevention of fluctuations in the purchasing power of gold. The nations of the world were remarkably successful in giving effect to the first part of these recommendations, and by 1929 practically the whole world except China was on the gold standard. But they signally failed to give effect to the second part of these recommendations, the stabilization of the purchasing power of gold, although it was far the more important of the two. Indeed it may be averred that the return to gold was by itself of importance mainly as a step towards stability of prices. By this neglect we have earned the well deserved punishment of our present distress. We snatched at stability of the foreign exchanges on the basis of an international gold standard, whose main value was that it would facilitate and expand world trade. With poetic justice most of the nations which have remained nominally on the gold standard are moving heaven and earth to restrict world trade in order not to be driven off the gold standard.

How are they moving heaven and earth? Why, by putting on prohibitive tariffs. After the nations all got back on the gold standard, the nations with the lower production costs, lower price levels, were able to ship their goods into countries that were on a gold standard and that had higher price levels, and they took their payment, not in goods, as they should have done in world trade, but in gold. The gold standard countries with the higher price levels, in an endeavour to protect their gold supplies which were not large, imposed prohibitive tariffs to prevent those goods from coming in. That destroyed all the good effect that might have accrued from the gold standard. The gold standard is the reason for the ultra high tariffs that have been imposed by the nations of the world in the last five or six years, and I am really very much surprised at free traders being such ardent defenders of the gold standard. I want to say very emphatically that I am opposed to these high tariffs; I want them wiped off.

According to Sir William Beveridge whose remarks are given in this book I have just been quoting from, the root cause of booms and depressions is that anarchy has been allowed to prevail in the issuing and in the destruction of credit. He says:

The making and unmaking of purchasing power has fallen into an anarchy, and from the anarchy spring the alternate inflation and deflation which make our booms and depressions. Unless we can restore effective control and stabilize purchasing power we shall never escape from crises.

There is the explanation for hon. gentlemen who want to know the cause of this trouble. Anarchy has been allowed to prevail in regard to the issuing and destruction of credit and the making and unmaking of purchasing power because the bulk of purchasing power is credit issued by banks. If I can quote from memory the words of R. S. Noble at a meeting of the Canadian Political Science Association in the spring of 1931, he said that in his opinion the main cause of the world depression was a stupid central bank policy with France and the United States the principal villains in the piece. If we are to get out of this depression and to avoid further depression, we must see that anarchy no longer prevails in the making and unmaking of purchasing power. I do not think any halfway measures will accomplish this. As regards a central bank, as has been suggested by some hon. gentlemen where the banks will cooperate with the government and they will each take a share in it, in the ownership of the bank, I do not think that will suit our purpose at all. Personally I think the state must assume its natural function of providing for its people a monetary system which will ensure that at all times there is just the right amount of money to serve the needs of the people.

Sir William Beveridge—and I think he can be called an orthodox economist—Director of the London School of Economics, says:

If you look back into history you will see that, from the earliest times, the making of money, of purchasing power, has been a thing which men have thought should be controlled by one authority in the state, should not be entrusted to many authorities or to private caprice. That, I believe, is a bit of basic common sense in economics. The making of purchasing power is a privilege too important to be allowed to a subject.

I want to repeat the last sentence:

The making of purchasing power is too important to be allowed to a subject.

We are in this crisis principally because we have not heeded that bit of basic common sense in economics. As Sir William Beveridge says, this matter is too important to be left to the whim or caprice of any banker or any corporation. Credit is the life blood of industry and it cannot any longer be entrusted to private authority. The state must assume control and we are responsible to the people of Canada in this matter.

I earnestly hope members of the House of Commons will be willing to assume their full share of responsibility and let us create a body which will be responsible to the people and which will be put in charge of credit in this country. The first step in a planned economy which Sir Basil Blackett mentioned and which I so ardently desire to see set up in Canada is a central bank owned by the state whose duty it would be to see that sufficient money is at all times available to allow us to distribute among our people the consumable goods which we can produce. Had we had such a system in operation in Canada during the last six years, we would not have had a falling standard of living for the past three years; we would have had instead a rising standard of living. That is the way to keep people employed. It will mean complete abandonment of the gold standard, so far as internal currency is concerned. So long as we depend on a gold standard we place our whole internal economy in the hands of the goldmongers of the world. As a red-blooded Canadian I am not content with that system. As a Canadian I want to say that our national money system must be one which will give us honest money. Some hon. members may ask what I mean by honest money—it is money which will be an honest measure value. As Sir Basil Blackett has said, we have a measure of value which fluctuates to the extent of at least fifty per cent in one year. We must have money which will always measure the same amount of goods, so far as the question of money affects the price of goods. It may well be described as a money which will enable the farmer and the artisan to work and to live, to pay taxes and to enjoy life—that more abundant life for which we were created. In 1914 we abandoned the gold standard; otherwise we would have lost the war. In that year bankers came to Ottawa and conferred with the Minister of Finance for a few hours; a special meeting of the cabinet was called, and an order in council was passed suspending redemption in gold. Bankers next day were relieved from the liability of paying out gold. We got off the gold standard in half a day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Illegally, at that.

Mr. COOTE: Yes, but I do not care about that. The action taken at that time was in my opinion quite proper. In the present instance we have had at least a year and a half to take similar action and we have not done it. However, I have not time to go into that phase of the matter; at a later time a better opportunity to do so may be afforded. We are engaged in a war today, a war against depression, unemployment, hunger and poverty, and this war can be won only by scrapping the system which has brought about the present desperate condition, and by the use of honest money issued only by a national government agency, and guaranteed by the real wealth of the nation. We must have money which cannot be cornered or depressed by enemies without the state, and which cannot be made scarce at a time when we need it most. One of my friends has suggested to me that enemies within the state might be included.

I shall not devote much time to a discussion of a substitution for the gold standard; I fear that already I have taken too much time on that particular point. But we can have a managed currency so that the amount of money in circulation will correspond to our production. Again I take the liberty of quoting the words of Sir Basil Blackett. He says:

> There is still a strong tendency to stigmatize all talk about stable money as unorthodox, visionary, cranky. Do not be frightened. Let the British people with their strong grasp of the practical realize that stable money is an intensely practical proposition, within their grasp today, if only they will believe in it and work for it and insist on getting it, and make up their minds to accept and enforce all the measures necessary to secure and maintain it.

I have before me a page taken from Lloyd's Bank Monthly, of London, England, in which I find the following statement:

> The pound sterling, since it has had no metallic basis has proved a better and more constant standard than gold. Indeed, if all currencies were stabilized in terms of purchasing power, with safeguards against inflation and deflation, instead of in terms of one arbitrary commodity like gold, these great changes in the burden of debts and other fixed charges would be avoided.

The first step in a planned economy is to create a money system owned by the state itself. Then an agency set up by the state —a central bank—would see, as I said before, that we have the money necessary for our own business, and not any more than is necessary. I do not want a bankers' bank; it should be owned one hundred per cent by the state itself. That means that money would be controlled for the benefit of society.

I might very well recommend to the house the words of Henry Ford as they appeared in a magazine article last fall. He is reported as saying that the government should take back control of money. He states that the control of money is just as important as the postal service or any other national service. His words are:

> The government should take back control of money, and give us a public service money system, managed as our postal service is for the service of the people's business, managed as our weather service is for the protection of the people's business, and as our rivers and harbours are, for the promotion of the public business.

We have spent millions of dollars in harbour improvements for Canada so that our business may be promoted. Those harbours are not receiving half the traffic they should. Our railways are not getting half the traffic they should get because we have failed to provide our people with a proper monetary system which would enable us to distribute in Canada those things which some people are getting and others are not, and to develop a standard of living which only some now enjoy. The question may be asked: How would you get this money out? That is very easy to answer. I have to be very careful in my suggestions, but I wish to make one or two. The first is the payment of a bonus on wheat production in Canada. I would do it yet. We could put out quite a few dollars in Canada in that way. Last year in Australia the government paid a nine cent bonus on wheat. First, I say we should have a bonus on wheat, and perhaps on some other things, if necessary. I do not particularly like the system of bonuses, but at the same time something must be done to keep a lot of our farmers from falling back on the state for direct unemployment relief. I think the state would be wise to give them a slight bonus rather than to have them on its hands in the other way.

Then we could have a useful housing program to be operated in cooperation with some of the municipalities which might tear down some of the slums and replace them with decent dwellings. Within eight minutes' walk from this point in the city of Ottawa, in a vicinity adjoining Bank street, there are many buildings which look as though they might fall down at any time. Then, we should have a more liberal old age pension scheme; some of our old men should be relieved of their duties so that our young men coming out of school may have the opportunity of taking their places. We need state hospitals and medicine, and we need more state owned hydro-electric power stations. We must put the unemployed to work. A terrible state of affairs exists. The labour of 800,000 men is available to increase production of real wealth in Canada. We are crazy to think we would bankrupt ourselves if we put these people to work. I do not care if it did take $200,000,000 in dominion notes to put them to work; my idea would be to put those notes in circulation and keep them circulating. As I said before, the dominion notes in circulation today are about $160,000,000 less than they were in 1920. We would not be bankrupting ourselves. We would not be ruining ourselves. We would not be following the example of Germany if we took $200,000,000 and put those men to work. Why not put them to work? Is that not what the government promised to do? —but that was before hon. members opposite formed a government.

Miss MACPHAIL: Now they sit and laugh at anybody who suggests a remedy.

Mr. COOTE: We should increase commodity price levels, increase the returns of every farmer and of all the men engaged in our four primary industries. Then give us more public works. At a time like this, we cannot rely any longer upon private initiative to put money into circulation. That means that the government must act, and in this instance I refer to the federal government. That government has control of the economic forces which determine whether or not people can get employment. It has full control of finance, banking, currency and credit. It has control of railways and immigration. The responsibility lies on the Dominion government. How can it take care of the burden of unemployment? Let us produce some real policy, and put those people to work, a policy which will put purchasing power in their hands—because business depends upon the purchasing power of our people. And it depends upon that purchasing power going round and round. Once we get this money out we must see that it stays out, that some millionaire does not take a half million of purchasing power in any one year and side-track or hoard it up, waiting for a period of depression to come when he can go out and buy twice as many industries with it as when business is good. To keep it circulating I suggest that we should change our income tax; take the suggestion made by the Prime Minister, I think two years ago, a tax based upon this principle; one per cent on the first $1,000 of taxable income, two per cent on the second, three per cent on the third, and so on, not stopping at twenty-five per cent on the twenty-fifth thousand as he suggested, but carrying it on until it reached ninety-nine per cent on the ninety-ninth thousand; thus you would effect a limitation of income to about $50,000 a year. That may be too small, or it may be too large, but I suggest for the consideration of the house that we adopt that as an emergency measure. I think it would prove so useful that we would not give it up. We should call the provinces together and suggest to them that the Dominion government should collect the inheritance tax and pay a share to the provinces and we should have an inheritance tax that would take for the state all that is left beyond what is necessary to make ample provision for the widow and orphans. That would be a kindness to some of the sons of our millionaires, for under the present system the money they get is the ruination of them, some of them become nothing but useless parasites on society.

This subject is well dealt with in a book entitled In Days to Come by the late Walter Rathenau, a former minister in Germany, the son of a wealthy German industrialist, who says that the handing over of these vast estates through legislation set up by the state is absolutely unjustifiable.

Then we should have some control over industry, particularly those industries which are now approaching monopoly; control of capitalization, to prevent the exploitation of the public through bonds and stocks such as has taken place in the last few years. With a proper income tax and business profits tax and inheritance tax we can collect enough money to give ample old age pensions and ample unemployment insurance.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. COOTE: If I may just have two or three minutes to conclude. I crave the indulgence of the house.

What I want, in short, is to give a feeling of economic security to the masses of the people of this country, who have always shown themselves willing to work and do their very best. Once we give them that feeling I am sure they will find it possible to develop the artistic side, the poetic side, the spiritual side of their life in a way that has not been possible hitherto but that should be possible in the days that are ahead.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): This afternoon we have been discussing what I regard as one of the most important resolutions that has been introduced into this parliament. The three previous speakers have made a very strong indictment of the whole capitalistic system, and so far we find none so humble to do it justice. The viewpoint they have represented here this afternoon is being expressed by large and increasing numbers of people in Canada. I think those of the members of this house who during the past couple of months have had the opportunity of meeting either their own constituents or those in other parts of the dominion will realize that a great change has taken place among many hundreds of thousands of the Canadian people in their views of these great economic problems. It is generally admitted by all thinking people that there is something radically wrong with our economic structure. It is quite obvious that it is not functioning as it should, and that people in numbers undreamt of a few years ago are now in want, or are facing the future with the utmost uncertainty.

Some people claim that the condition in which we live is merely a dislocation of the economic structure. Those who make this admission and yet favour the retention of the existing system must realize that when a dislocation of the magnitude of the one we are at present experiencing occurs, it may mean that the capitalistic system is falling apart. There is no one today bold enough to say whether present conditions are temporary or permanent in their character. For almost three and a half years we have been confronted with this acute crisis, each day bringing forth the oft-repeated assertion that "prosperity is just around the corner," or that "we have reached the bottom." Just as no person is able to say whether the crisis is temporary or permanent, so no one can state with certainty that we have reached the bottom or have turned the corner. These statements are merely the expression of a pious hope, without any sound reasoning to support it.

The economic situation has compelled many people to give thought and consideration to these problems, and on every hand we find those who doubt the efficacy of our economic structure and who are wondering whether some other system more just in its character could not be devised than the one under which we are now living.

The crisis through which we are passing is man-made. It is not one that has been imposed upon up by some supernatural force. If the crisis is one created by the action of man it ought not be beyond man's capacity to find methods of coping with it. The greatest desire of all people is for security, economic and otherwise. At present even those whom we term capitalists have not much security; certainly the great masses of the people who depend upon their labour power for their very existence have none. With the advent of the machine in industry our capacity to produce the essentials and even the luxuries of life has reached a capacity undreamt of by our forebears. Productive capacity has increased to such an enormous extent that it is a generally accepted fact that there is practically no limit to it. During the past hundred years the ingenuity of man has been directed towards perfecting our modes of production, but while this has been taking place the question of consumption and distribution has been left to take care of itself, with the notable exception of the efforts of the organized labour movement in all parts of the world. I claim that the greater the capacity to produce the better it should be for all concerned. Therefore, efforts such as are being made at the present time to supplant more efficient means of production with those less efficient is a retrograde step. Production should always be maintained at the highest level.

But in our present economic structure it is a fact that the greater our production and accumulation of wealth, the more poverty and all that it implies do we find in our midst. Such a self-contradiction affecting our daily lives cannot go on indefinitely. Those who advocate increasing our manufacturing establishments as a means of providing further employment lose sight of the important fact that it is not lack of production that is causing the present economic condition; it is the question of a reasonably equal distribution of the commodities produced amongst those who require them. Our energies must be devoted, not to the problem that has already been solved, that of production, but to the task of distribution. We have in Canada more than is sufficient to satisfy all our human requirements. Wheat has been used as fuel by our farmers, while in the cities people are begging for bread. Last year we were informed by hon. members of the house that potatoes were being sold at six cents a bushel because there was no market for them, yet many thousands would be glad of the opportunity of utilizing them to keep body and soul together. Our coal miners walk the streets in idleness, anxious to win the coal from mother nature, yet many a home is cold in winter for lack of fuel. In other parts of the world we find exactly the same conditions as we do here in Canada. For instance, in Brazil, there is too much coffee and it is being dumped into the ocean. In the southern states there is too much cotton, and they are making bonfires of it. Yet people are in dire need of these very commodities.

As I have already said, I am unalterably opposed to any policy of curtailing production. What I do want to see is a rational system of distribution, under which some of the conditions I have mentioned may be forever eliminated from our midst. Poverty in the midst of plenty is something which cannot exist for long. No people can take their rightful place amongst the nations if they are denied a proper and decent standard of living. The workingman within the state has his responsibility, just as the state has its responsibility to the individual. There seems to be an idea widely prevalent, which cannot be too strongly challenged, that the labourer is always seeking aid from governments. As a matter of fact, the person who receives the least assistance from the state is the worker. The state, for instance, protects the rights of property as against the rights of the producing class. If we will reflect for a moment on the aid that has been given by the state to financial institutions, to our railways, to manufacturing and shipping industries in this country, we shall see what a staggering figure that aid has reached, and what a staggering obligation it has thrown upon present and future generations. But the only direct way in which the state has come to the assistance of the worker in giving him economic security in Canada has been through old age pensions, and one or two other pieces of legislation of a similar character. If the worker at a time like the present seeks the assistance of the state, he hopes that that assistance will be given in such a way that he in return will be able to contribute something of a constructive character to the community. It is the worker, by hand or brain, who is responsible for the building up of a nation, and no nation can develop and progress if it allows its men and women to live in more or less complete idleness.

Today we are living in an era of contracting capitalism and competitive individualism, and the conflicting nature of these two forces must be quite apparent to hon. members. It is the object of the motion to remove the competitive basis of industry as it now exists, and to supplant it with cooperative effort in which all our citizens will be asked to give of their best in building up a strong and vigorous nation. Our design is to eliminate all that is undesirable in the present economic system, and to keep that which is best, and to build upon that basis. Naturally this implies fundamental changes and a new mental attitude towards our economic problems. It means a considerable extension of the policy of government ownership, government control and regulation, beyond what we now have. I know that some hon. members are horrified at the thought of more government ownership or control, but I should like for a moment to enumerate some of the forms of government control that we now have and with which we come in contact in our daily life.

Taking the federal government first, it owns or controls the post office. It owns or nominally owns a railway. Then it controls, through the agency of a railway board, railway rates. It owns harbours and canals, and only very recently there came under the ownership and control of the federal government the radio broadcasting services in Canada. But there is a form of government control and regulation elsewhere by the federal government to a far greater extent than exists in any of the directions I have already mentioned. It has been stated in this house and on the public platform by members of the government that but for the tariff now existing in this country many of our industries could not possibly exist. So we see that in the tariff structure of Canada we have another form of government control and regulation. It has also been said by the Prime Minister and others that if the tariff had not been increased to the height it has now reached in Canada, some of these industries would have been driven out of business. So in the tariff we have a form of government control and regulation, and I regard it as a form of government control that acts simply for the protection of capital and in no way for the protection of those who are employed in industry.

In the provincial sphere, we find local governments owning or controlling hydro light and power, telephones, and, what may be of even greater importance to some people, the liquor business. Our provincial governments also have control of the educational facilities of the nation. A great many years ago the education of the rising generation was practically in the hands of private enterprise, but gradually we have reached the stage where private enterprise had to be supplanted by the state, and today education has become almost a state function in all parts of the country.

In the municipal sphere, we find a similar state of affairs. In many of our municipalities the transportation facilities are owned and controlled by the municipalities. It would be almost unthinkable if the water supply, for instance, of any city were in the hands of private enterprise, or anything else which has to do with the health of the community. Municipalities also control parks and recreation facilities, hospitals, and in some cases cemeteries, as well as looking after the general health of the community. My hon. friend from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) also adds golf courses, but I class them under the head of recreation, and not work.

In addition to what I have already enumerated, we find that various governments have introduced workmen's compensation acts providing for compensation to the man who is injured while at work. Minimum wage laws which affect different industries have also been introduced in different legislatures, and the hours of labour have been controlled. There have been similar enactments put on the statute books in all parts of this dominion, giving a certain control and regulation to the state of the industries affected.

What we are really asking for in this motion is that this idea of state control, ownership and regulation, should be extended a great deal further than obtains at the present time. I know that some hon. members of this house have a horror of the idea of government control or government regulation, but what is the position at the present time? Who is in control of industry in this country? Is it the individual or is it the banks? I venture to assert that most of the industries of this country are at this very moment owned by the banks or the great financial institutions of this country. So therefore when we advocate either state control or government ownership it really resolves itself into the question whether there shall be control and ownership by the banks or control and ownership by the state. And if we put that question plainly to the people of this country I have no hesitation in saying that they would prefer state control to banking control. Those who have been in control of the affairs of the nation in recent years have failed to grasp the significance of the vast changes which have been taking place in our midst. For many decades we have been building up a political democracy which finds expression through its representatives in this house. While that is desirable and is something which must be maintained, there has also grown up in this country a power which is a more potent force than parliament itself. I refer to the power of finance. I am not entirely blaming the financiers for this state of affairs. I blame parliament far more because it ought to be sovereign in the country, and if parliament has allowed the financial interests to have such a controlling influence, then it ought to be the duty of parliament to see that the control of finance and credit should be in its own hands and should be utilized for the benefit of the people as a whole and not for the benefit of financial institutions.

We are told that if we allowed the state to own or control the industries of the country it would be doing away with that private initiative which helps to build up a nation. For a moment or two I want to deal with this question of private initiative, sometimes termed incentive, about which, if this debate is prolonged, we shall hear a great deal in this house.

I wonder what incentive the average working man has at the present time. Take a man working on the railway. He gives the best years of his life in the service of the railway, helping to build up the system in this country, and after he has worked for ten or fifteen or twenty or twenty-five years what does he find? What is his position at this moment after twenty or twenty-five years of service? He is told that his services are no longer required, and after an experience of unemployment he has to go into the bread line and take his chance with the rest, becoming a recipient of public relief. Is that any incentive, or where is the opportunity of initiative? And yet that is what we find among hundreds of thousands of our people. The average working man who has laboured in industry for ten or twenty or thirty years finds, when he gets old, that he is supplanted by someone who is younger and more vigorous and is therefore able to turn out a larger amount of work because he is more physically fit for the task. We find, therefore that men are thrown into the scrap heap and told to go and shift for themselves, and if they are fortunate enough to reach the age of seventy they will then be entitled to five dollars a week.

Most working men today like farmers live on the borderline of poverty, and these people who have a hard grind to make a living, year in and year out, eking out a mere pittance, hardly able to put anything away for a rainy day, have not much urge in the way of initiative or incentive. I maintain that the very system under which we are living crushes out of the individual that incentive which so many of us would like to see among the people as a whole.

[Mr. Heaps.]

I wonder how many people have been in Ford's factory or any similar institution and had an opportunity of seeing just how much incentive there is for the workers there. The individual merely becomes a cog in the machine. This is true of every industry. Industry has become so specialized in every line of endeavour that at the present time the eight hour day is nothing but a monotonous grind, and instead of the machine becoming the slave of the individual the individual is made the slave of the machine. I entirely disagree with those who suggest that under a sane and more orderly social system there would be no room for that incentive that makes for invention and progress. Let me say something that I have said in this house before, because it is worth repeating. There is one profession whose members do not always regard the dollar as the sole motive for scientific advancement. In most of the engineering lines and among other professions the main motive no doubt is the desire to accumulate a little more wealth. But here may I say a word with respect to the medical profession. In the sphere of medicine it has been a time-honoured custom that those men engaged in research in medical laboratories, those who are able to discover something of advantage to humanity at large, never attempt to use their discoveries as means to gain any commercial benefit for themselves. Such discoveries are given to the world at large so that humanity may be the gainer as a result of the efforts of these research workers.

Even though money has not been the incentive to the medical profession in bringing about these changes which in some way relieve human suffering, I believe I can state with considerable confidence that medicine has kept pace with almost any other branch of scientific activity we know of, so that it ought to be obvious, that given something worth while to strive for, the human being will usually respond, refusing to regard money as the motive for engaging in work of real value. Most people would be satisfied with the thought that anything which they might do to improve conditions in the world at large and to make for a happier life and a better standard of living would bring its own reward.

During the hundred and fifty years or so that capitalism as we know it today has been in operation it has been of some advantage to mankind; it has done certain things which the present generation appreciate. But we say that it has more or less outlived its usefulness; it has reached the stage where it is beginning to decay and is unable to function as a sane or orderly system. It has almost perfected the art of production. We have produced wealth in abundance, wealth undreamed of a few generations ago; yet capital itself is at this moment rapidly disappearing from our midst. May I here make a distinction between capital and wealth? If the capital of a nation disappears it does not for a moment follow that one iota of wealth will disappear —I am of course referring to finance capital. Although, as pointed out this afternoon by the hon. member for Southeast Grey, a great deal of capital has disappeared from our midst during recent years, the wealth of the country remains intact, and all that is required is a sane system of planning whereby the wheels of industry will be kept running and men engaged in useful production.

Our indictment against capitalism is that it has made man the slave of the machine. On most occasions it has fought every effort made in the past to improve the conditions of the masses. In its competitive character it creates hatreds and jealousies; in its quest for markets it engenders war. It allows wealth to accumulate in superabundance in a few hands while vast numbers live on the border line of poverty and others in actual poverty and want. We in this corner of the house and many others in the house wish to replace these conditions by an economic structure which will really recognize the human being as all-important. Human wellbeing must therefore be the first consideration. We want competition replaced by cooperation. We want the human being to realize that his own and the community's interests are identical and that the wellbeing of the one is the wellbeing of the other. We want to abolish the real causes that lead to war. We want to abolish the idea that the interchange of commodities is a form of warfare, making people realize that, on the contrary, such interchange is the cement that binds nation and nation together. We want to eliminate that competitive individualism with the enormous waste and poverty resulting therefrom. We want to displace all this with an idea which will build up a strong and vigorous nation, where mutual help shall be the dominant factor instead of antagonism. If a labour government were in power today I would expect the faithful service of all citizens. As a writer in a British labour paper stated recently, under a labour government the state would enter upon the task of national reconstruction, keeping always before its eyes the principles of humanity. They should have precedence to profits.

Miss MACPHAIL: A labour government?

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. member for Southeast Grey asks, "a labour government?" I believe that if a labour and farmer government took control of this country we would expect just that thing. As far as I am concerned I do not care whether a government under another label brings in these reforms and fundamental changes in our economic life. What I am anxious to see is that these changes are made. However, I have little hope that any other group or party will be responsible for these changes except that group which happens to sit in this corner of the house. A labour or a farmer government, a combination of both, or the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation if given a mandate by the people, would inaugurate a policy which would govern the nation as though it were an association of citizens, cooperating to provide by the most economical methods for the material needs of all the people, requiring faithful service of all members of this association, and assuring to them a means of living a healthful and decent life.

This afternoon certain statements were made as to the constitutional aspects of this question. Whenever we desire to bring about a fundamental change, particularly in the economic life of the people of this country, we are always told that there is a constitutional difficulty. Let me say that where there is a will to bring about these changes which will improve the lot of millions of our people, then there will be found a way out of these constitutional difficulties. It is only when there is no will that there is no remedy. A few years ago the same constitutional difficulty was raised with regard to old age pensions, but we find that the constitutional objections were overcome and today approximately 45,000 people are receiving the benefits of old age pensions. If it had been necessary for the provinces to agree to certain constitutional changes to make that possible, these 45,000 people probably would not be in receipt of pensions. When the people of this country are prepared to bring about the changed economic conditions which are in keeping with the general terms of the resolutions proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think ways and means will be found of adjusting our constitution to meet the needs of the people. As has so often been said by others, the constitution was made for the people of Canada, not the people of Canada for the constitution.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this resolution I find myself in almost complete agreement with the utterances of those who have preceded me.

I regret that no member of any other party in this house has so far taken part in the discussion. I trust that before the debate is concluded we shall have the result of their deliberate consideration with regard to a proposal which is not only fundamental but which is receiving with extraordinary rapidity the marked approbation of the people of Canada from coast to coast. Nothing has interested me so much in the last few months as the astonishing display of enthusiasm at meetings wherever this question has been discussed, the proposal to bring into being by constitutional and legal means a new social order has been considered. I wish hon. members could have attended some of these meetings and have heard the expressions of opinion of those who attended, the applause, the condemnation of existing injustices, and the complete agreement in the general denunciation of the inhuman and unsocial character of the economic order under which at present we are condemned to function.

As I say, I find myself in accord with the words used by the hon. members who have preceded me. They have done something which neither of the old political parties, with all their experience, with all their love for the existing capitalistic system and their reverence for those institutions which they are determined to keep alive, has yet done. We have developed a constructive social plan. It is true that it is tentative in character and will be subject to necessary modifications from time to time, but hon. members on both sides of the house, particularly of the government, have so far utterly failed to offer the people of this country any constructive plan whatever. They have shown that they are bereft of courage and vision in the handling of the situation, even if they have the economic knowledge, which I very seriously doubt.

We have been in an economic tailspin, if I may use the phrase, for three years. We are now entering the fourth year, and any tailspin which is permitted to go on unchecked will sooner or later bring about the crash. That is just about the stage this country has reached. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has expressed the gravest alarm at the dangerous financial, commercial and economic condition of our people. But what is he doing about it? What is his plan? Does he think he can make the present social and economic order function intelligently? Does he think that under capitalism he can ever undertake the distribution of the collectively produced wealth of Canada upon a fair and equitable basis? Does he imagine that under capitalism he will be able to cure unemployment? Does he believe that under capitalism he is going to establish equality of social and economic life for the people of Canada? If he does, then I tell him that he does not know anything about economics.

During the three years of this tailspin we have had no constructive leadership; it has been just a jumping from one crazy idea to another. First, high tariffs; then, rigid deflation; at another time the expansion of money in order to relieve unemployment; at still another time the contraction of money; and today we have the all-pervading policy of economy. This is the most destructive deflationary policy which could possibly be conceived, and the most stupid which could be inaugurated in a country where, as other speakers have suggested, the only problem is to discover how best to consume the wealth of goods which we are so capable of producing collectively. There has been no intelligent leadership, on the part of either the bankers, the statesmen, the big businessmen or the political parties during the past three years. They have all concentrated with everlasting energy and persistent resolution upon the effort to "just get by" in the hope that some expected upturn which they have no justification to expect, will occur. There has been no application of rationality to the problem; there has been no wish to experiment; there has been no boldness in policy; there has been no understanding of the modern economic world in which we live, in short there has been no leadership.

Debatable as it may be, inadequate as I grant you it possibly is, we in this corner of the house at least are offering to the people some leadership, some way out. You may call it wrong, stupid, and futile. I believe it to be sound, intelligent and rational. If it is not, then in the most friendly sense I challenge hon. members on both sides to disabuse me of my consciousness in this regard. But let me point out for their interest that men who hold infinitely higher positions than I ever hope to attain have already expressed themselves in no uncertain terms on this matter. Let me take words I used last year and use again, the words of Lord Marley, speaking on June 22, 1932 (not long ago), in the House of Lords in Great Britain, that chamber which with the exception of our own upper house is perhaps the greatest bulwark of the existing capitalistic system one can find anywhere on earth. This noble Lord said:

The capitalist system is tottering. Unfortunately we cannot be entirely detached because we are affected in the common smash. The difficulty of the system is how to consume the goods which the system is able to produce.

Even he understood that.

The greatest danger in the world from the system—

And I ask hon. members to note these words of his.

—is the danger that the only means of consuming these goods to an adequate extent is by another world war.

Let those significant words sink into the consciousness of hon. members both opposite and around me. One can philosophize at times, but after all we are facing practical difficulties and issues now. I ask hon. members what they conceive to be the cancer, the canker, that is wrecking this civilization as surely as I am standing here. With all the earnestness, sincerity and moderation at my command I say this. That cancer is that we have an economic code which bases its conception of success upon the attainment of wealth. We do not ask how the wealth is attained. It may be by any kind of trickery or chicanery, by stock juggling, by syndicates formed to exploit the shareholders of a company; it may be by a dozen devices well known to hon. gentlemen, well known to competitive commercialism. But I say to them that the philosophy that underlies and governs such a system belongs to a day of primitive and primeval barbarism and not to a modern Christian civilization. Somebody said this afternoon that there had grown with the system the strange idea that the survival of the fittest was the law which should govern—the law of the jungle.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' DAYS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the house rises, I wish to move a resolution that I promised the last day before the fall adjournment. I move:

That the following resolution passed by the house on October 7, 1932, be rescinded:

"That on and after Monday, the 10th instant, and every day thereafter, government orders shall have precedence over all business except questions by members and notices of motions for production of papers."

And that standing order 15 be adhered to in the same manner as though the session had opened on January 30, 1933.

It will perhaps be recalled that I indicated to the house we would treat private members' days as though the session opened on the 30th day of January, and this is to give effect to that understanding. It is well that the motion should be passed now, because tomorrow is a private members' day, and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) will be able to continue his remarks.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, February 2, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION ACT

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 19, to amend the Migratory Birds Convention Act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. MURPHY: The first amendment is designed to obviate the necessity of printing the regulations in the prefix to the annual statutes. This is done at the request of the authorities concerned with the printing of the statutes as it delays publication and it is felt that since the regulations are printed in the Gazette and distributed by the department, the third publication in the statutes is unnecessary.

The purpose of the second amendment is to obviate the need of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police taking an additional oath in connection with the particular enforcement of the Migratory Birds Act such as must be taken by every special constable appointed to enforce this act. Their regular oath of office is sufficient for the needs of the act.

The purpose of the third amendment is to eliminate the ambiguity in the wording of section 6 since the word "bird" is not defined in the act to include the various birds which it protects.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

CONIFEROUS SEED EXTRACTION PLANTS

Mr. REID:

1. How many coniferous seed extraction plants are operated by the government?
2. Where are these located?
3. What were the various amounts of coniferous seed extracted last year?
4. To what countries is this seed exported?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. One.
2. In New Westminster, B.C.

3.

| | Pounds |
|---|---|
| Picea sitchensis (Sitka spruce).. | 732 |
| Pseudotsuga taxifolia (Douglas fir).. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 30 |

4. British Forestry Commission, London, England; Forestry Branch of Government of Northern Ireland.

IMMIGRATION OF AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS

Mr. REID:

1. How many agricultural labourers were admitted to this country during the years of 1930-1931-1932: (a) from European countries; (b) from the British Isles, including also the Irish Free State?

2. How many immigrants exclusive of agricultural labourers were admitted to this country during the years 1930-1931-1932: (a) from European countries; (b) from the British Isles, including also the Irish Free State; and in both cases not including boys or youths?

1.

The above figures include all adult male farmers and farm labourers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE OF RESOLUTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise a point of order. On Monday of this week I presented a resolution; it was not adopted because as soon as I had finished speaking the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) caught the Speaker's eye and moved the adjournment of the debate. Yesterday a resolution was introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). After the adjournment of the debate on it my resolution was placed in that section of the orders of the day entitled public bills and orders. I find today that the resolution introduced yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been placed ahead of mine in the orders of the day. I do not know much about the intricacies of printing the Orders of the Day, but it seems to me in good logic that as my resolution was presented first it should appear first in the section to which it belongs.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On the same point of order, may I submit to Your Honour that I did not move the adjournment of the debate last night but that you called six o'clock while I was still continuing my speech. The adjournment was moved in the case of the resolution to which the hon. member refers, and it properly takes its place on the order paper. The continuation of yesterday's discussion is the natural order for today.

Mr. LAVERGNE: On this point of order, according to standing order No. 17:

(1) All items standing on the orders of the day (except government orders) shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the order paper.

Therefore today, the adjournment of the debate having been moved on Monday, it seems to me the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger), should appear today on the order paper before the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). This question has to be discussed in the house. I think the point of order taken by the hon. member for Bellechasse is correct, and his resolution should appear before that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the arrangement of the order of business as it appears on the order paper today is correct and in accordance with standing order No. 27, if the hon. member will refer to that:

27. If at the hour of six o'clock p.m. on a Wednesday, . . . a motion on the notice paper be under consideration, that question shall stand first on the order paper of the following day, next after orders to which a special precedence has been assigned by standing order or order of the house.

Consequently the resolution under discussion, to which the hon. member was speaking at six o'clock last night, takes precedence on the order paper today.

PENITENTIARIES

REPORT OF INVESTIGATION BY SUPERINTENDENT INTO RECENT DISTURBANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. SAMUEL FACTOR (Toronto West Centre): May I ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), if he intends tabling the report of the superintendent of penitentiaries in connection with the riots?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): There is a report now in the hands of the printing bureau, which I expect to have in the course of a few days.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): I would like to bring to the attention of the government a rather serious condition that exists in the city of St. Boniface. The matter is embraced in a brief telegram. But if it is against the rules of the house to read the telegram, I will explain the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think it would be as well to address the question direct to the government. It is not a desirable practice to read telegrams or newspaper extracts in prefacing a question.

Mr. HOWDEN: The message is from the mayor of St. Boniface. He states that the merchants in St. Boniface have refused to honour the vouchers of the city of St. Boniface for relief. He says that the city of St. Boniface, in applying to the provincial government, have been notified that they cannot afford any relief, and he wires to me, asking that I present the matter to the federal government in the hope that possibly this government may be able to fill the gap and render the necessary assistance. May I, therefore, ask the Prime Minister, as representing the government, whether the federal government of Canada is in a position to assist the city of St. Boniface at this time.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the Minister of Labour is in a position to answer that question.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Many requests come to the federal government from municipalities throughout Canada, suggesting that this government should deal directly with the municipalities. I would earnestly suggest to the hon. member that he ask the mayor of St. Boniface to turn to the premier of Manitoba with his troubles, and proper subscriptions such as we have been making will be made in order to assist them in the discharge of their functions.

Mr. HOWDEN: I have already stated that the mayor of the city and the council have appealed to the local government, which is unable to help them.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question has been asked and answered.

Mr. HOWDEN: I have not yet received an answer whether the government will or will not assist in the matter.

COOPERATIVE COMMONWEALTH

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

Whereas under our present economic arangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;

And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;

Therefore be it resolved,—That, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): At the adjournment of the house last night I was endeavouring to point out that the evils from which we are suffering under the present economic system are attributable in a large degree to the fact that we predicate success under that system on the accumulation of wealth. We were not, I suggested, very particular as to how the wealth was acquired, by what method it was obtained, at what cost to the people, the extent of the suffering involved, nor did we have any regard to its effect on the welfare of the people as a whole. All that seemed to be required was to acquire wealth, and if one secured enough of it we would spread red carpets for the fortunate possessor, strew roses in his path, he might even aspire to the highest offices in the land.

I suggested that the philosophy under which the system operated belonged to a barbaric stage in the progress of society and not to what we are pleased to call a Christian social order. The condition of things I indicated belonged to a primitive and barbaric state of society, and underlying it all was the philosophy of the survival of the fittest. As pointed out yesterday by an hon. member, the commercial system seems to be actuated by that idea, and he properly paraphrased the old sentence; because, were it the survival of the fittest, that would be bad enough but, as he well said, it means today the survival not even of the fittest but of the "slickest."

Someone has said somewhere that if he were asked to design a crest emblematic of the present order he would first draw the two donkeys' ears that bedecked the head of the mythological King Midas. He is said to have devoted his entire attention to the acquisition of wealth, turning everything to gold, and we are told in the end he suffered starvation, despair and death. Now we see around us an economic system based on precisely the same philosophy that actuated King Midas, the acquisition of wealth, and it is dying, as its prototype did, in starvation, misery and despair. This does not mean, of course, that capitalism will vanish tomorrow or next week. It does mean, however, that in sound evolution, economic forces, forces beyond the apparent control of either of the political parties in this house, will bring an end to a system a characteristic of which is inhuman injustice.

I would ask hon. members opposite whether they imagine for an instant that a state that is not founded on social justice and equity can survive. If they do, then they ignore the teachings of history; for we have seen empires and nations dethroned and dispossessed of power because injustice had crept into the functioning of the economic and social systems under which they existed. Regard, if you will, the Roman empire, where great Caesars and nobles invested with special privileges passed on their way to an unhappy end. Study again the French revolution, characterized by the Bourbonistic type of mind—a type of mind still prevalent in this country, sad to say, the mind which can suggest to people who are suffering that if "they cannot get bread they should eat cake." That type of philosophy, which is still prevalent, was responsible for the destruction of the leaders of France at that time, so that all that is left of that era, apart from a few written words in the history of the day, is the memory of red threads in the stockings knitted by Madame Defarge and those associated with her when the heads of the rulers fell. Consider again the situation of Russia, then the last remnant of medieval autocratic feudalism left in Europe, a remnant which in turn came to its unhappy end.

What have we here today? The leader of the opposition well described the situation not long ago when he said that we have a form of imperial feudalism. We have more than that; we have an economic imperialism, extreme in type, into which has been concentrated, by a process of greed and acquisition on the part of the few, the entire control of and dominion over the wellbeing of our people. Do you imagine that the capitalistic kings and emperors of finance and industry today are on a sounder basis or can survive any longer than did the old feudal kings and emperors of past days? Disabuse your minds of that idea; the present condition cannot continue. This injustice cannot last. As the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) said yesterday, "red-blooded Canadians," to use the words of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), will not permit the continuance of such a system in this country. In Great Britain at the moment there is such gross inequality that a study of statistical returns will indicate that about ten per cent of the people control almost all the wealth and power in the state. That seems pretty bad, but turning my studies to a work by Professor W. H. Wakenshaw, formerly of Exeter college, Oxford, in regard to the distribution of wealth in America, I find that in 1850 sixty-two per cent of the national income went to the producer and thirty-eight per cent to the non-producer; by 1860, ten years later, forty-three per cent went to the producer and fifty-seven to the non-producer; by 1870 thirty-three per cent went to the producer and sixty-seven to the non-producer; and by 1900 ten per cent went to the producer and nearly ninety per cent to the non-producer. Of course we may dispossess ourselves of responsibility in that regard by saying that it is not so in Canada. Unhappily for those who hold that view our own statistical returns will disabuse them of that conception. If hon. members will take the trouble to analyze thoroughly the income tax returns of Canada they will find, speaking roughly, that there are about 5,300,000 persons in this country of twenty years of age and over, the adults of Canada. Of that number about three per cent pay income tax while ninety-seven per cent apparently have not enough income to fall within the income taxable class. Of course this does not mean that there is not a large body of wealth outside the income taxable group, but hon. members know how difficult it is to live upon their present salaries or indemnities; they are subject to a small amount of taxation under the income tax and therefore know something of their difficulties in maintaining a reasonable standard of living. The knowledge of this fact will give them some conception of the extraordinary disparity in income in the dominion when they realize that ninety-seven per cent of the people are on a lower plane and are living under very much lower standards than they are themselves.

No system in which such inequalities exist can continue. I should like to ask hon. members opposite and to my right if they think that we are upon a solid foundation when the economic system apparently relies for its stability upon the economic freedom of the few and the economic enslavement of the many? We may not think ourselves responsible for the excessive disparity which has brought this condition about, we may not think ourselves responsible for the unrestrained racketeering upon the part of the industrial and financial institutions in their wild exploitation and waste of our natural resources, in the grabbing for wealth, in unjust taxation, and for many other evils inherent in the system, but I do not think that I need to tell hon. members that we are responsible, particularly in this chamber. Upon us has been placed the onus of solving these problems and bringing about a social order in which justice shall prevail. We are responsible and we have a duty to see that these wrongs are ameliorated or replaced by a system more equitable, by one which will subordinate the interests of the individual, the greedy, predatory individual, to the general good of society.

Any student of the questions back of the present world system of monetary control, involving as it does our own country, knows that it involves also the piling up of the means of production at the cost of a progressive, relative lessening of the means of consumption. The consuming power has seriously declined, there is less and less inclination at this moment to increase the production of goods; in short, as one of my colleagues has said, the end of an era has arrived. There are still experts, so-called, who suggest that we should continue to develop production. The Prime Minister himself in his now famous, or perhaps I should say notorious New Year's address, directed the attention of the people of wealth in Canada to the necessity of investing their reserve funds in production. In the name of heaven why should we produce more goods which the people are not permitted to consume, or more goods which cannot be shipped abroad under the existing system? What object could be attained at this moment by investing more money in production? As has been so well said by those who have preceded me, the job is to develop a system by which we can consume and then production will take care of itself.

After all, this is a part of the real issue, of the practical question which is before us, the suffering, the inhuman injustice and misery which is all around us. Individual hon. members are more and more becoming cognizant of the true condition, but many others have not gone behind the cold statistics. Do they realize what 700,000 or 1,000,000 unemployed men means? Do they understand the spectre of want? Do they understand the gnawing worry and anxiety of the family whose bread-winner cannot get a job no matter how he tries? Do they understand the degrading and demoralizing effects of having to go down daily or weekly for relief, of going to certain stores in order to obtain a very meagre existence from a not too benevolent state? I wonder if hon. members have any conception of the weakened minds, broken bodies and diseased souls which these conditions have brought about? Have they studied the figures of suicide to ascertain their causes since this depression commenced? Have they studied the records of the penitentiaries, have they found out that these institutions today contain about double their normal quota? Have they undertaken an investigation of the insane institutions even in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and found them overflowing and this in the face of the fact that all too many others are unable to secure admittance to such institutions? I wonder if hon. members have really understood the inexcusable horror of real want?

Have hon. members ever gone into a magistrate's court some morning when the vagrancy charges are being brought up? I had the suffering to endure of attending a court in Toronto a few months ago, and I shall give the house a picture of what I saw there. There was a number of men ranging in ages from sixteen to thirty-eight years. Most of them appeared to be the ideal type of citizen, earnest looking, and, according to their declarations, willing to work; they were healthy looking except that they were becoming rather pallid and thin-cheeked. The same ritual took place in every case. As the unfortunate man was brought before him the magistrate said "guilty or not guilty?" "Guilty, sir." "Do you want work?" "Yes, sir." "What kind of work?" "Any kind, sir." "How long have you been unemployed?" The answer to this question varied from two to three years to two weeks. "You cannot get work?" "No, sir." "All right, three months." And so it went on, as the court pursued its relentless task. The magistrate seemed to be a human sort of individual who had an understanding of his task but he was as much a victim of the system as those who were brought before him, there was nothing he could do to give work to those men.

The steady stream was broken twice by pitiful incidents. There was one man brought there, a six-footer, a fine looking type of man who looked like a Cape Bretoner or a highland Scotchman; he had the high cheek bones and the prominent nose of the fine highland type. He stood in the dock with a sort of defiant look upon his face and as the magistrate said "guilty or not guilty?" He said, "guilty, sir." "Do you want work?" "Yes, sir." "What kind of work?" "Any kind, sir." "How long have you been out of employment?" "Two weeks, sir." "You have been in the city for two weeks?" "Yes, sir." "You cannot get anything to do?" "No, sir." "Do you want work?" "Yes, sir, I will take anything." "What have you been doing this summer?" "I was working on a farm." He then gave the name of the farmer and the location of the farm. With a lawyer's trick the magistrate turned to him quickly and said, "what did you do with the money you made farming?" With a slight smile upon his face the man replied, "I was working for my board." The apparently customary judgment of three months was then given.

Does the house get the significance of this? Three months for what crime? For the solitary crime of not being able to get a job under a system which has broken down and which can offer no job. This is why we are sending our own Canadian citizens to gaol. There was only one foreigner vagrant present the morning I attended court, a Macedonian, an old man who had been picked up by a constable upon the streets in a sick condition. He had asked to be sent to a hospital and this was the only instance in which a constable was called upon to take the witness stand. The magistrate called upon the court interpreter, who happened to be a little, stout Jewish or Armenian woman. She stepped over to the dock and talked with the man in his own language, and her interpretation corroborated the evidence given by the constable. She said that the man said he was sick and would like to go to a hospital. For the first time the magistrate seemed to be disturbed; he lifted his hands off the desk in a gesture of despair, thought for a moment and then said, "Oh, well, you will get some medical care there; three months." Three months for the sick as well as for the well, and we call this a Christian society, we call this a human society. We believe that a system of this kind can endure; hon. members opposite think they can make it endure but I tell them that they are treading in the midst of dreams if they imagine that such injustice will continue to be endured by the people of this country.

Mr. LAWSON: If the hon. gentleman will allow me a question—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just a moment, and I will answer any questions that I have time after my forty minutes is up.

Mr. LAWSON: Will the hon. gentleman give me the date of the incident to which he refers?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not have the date of the incident at the moment nor is it necessary because you can go to any magistrate's court in Canada where vagrancy charges are tried, and you will find the same thing, or practically the same.

Mr. LAWSON: The hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down!

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman not to interrupt without permission from the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, sit down. I will tell the hon. member something as bad as that, of which I had not intended to speak at this stage. The conditions I am speaking of are true not only with respect to the unemployed industrial workers, but to a slightly lesser extent of even some of our farmers. Let me give an illustration. A friend of mine, one of the directors of the Alberta wheat pool, employed a fine young Canadian farmer for three years. This young man saved his money, and two years ago took up a bush homestead north of Edmonton, and of course, as young men sometimes do, he got married. This last harvest season he wanted to make some money with which to carry himself and his wife over the winter, and so, rolling up a few blankets he jumped a freight train from Edmonton and went down to Camrose, and worked in the harvest fields there for six weeks. As many hon. gentlemen know—the harvest season there was broken by rain and snow, and the actual amount that this young man saved as a result of all his effort was $36.90. When he had accumulated that amount, he received a letter from his wife telling him she was sick, that the nearest doctor was sixty-five miles away, and asking him to please come back at once, to get medical advice in Edmonton and bring home some medicine. That young Canadian rolled his blankets, jumped a freight train, and got as far as Clover Bar station when the mounted police came on board, handcuffed him, took him down to the guard house, finger-printed him, photographed him and cross-questioned him. They took him before Mr. Justice Pidgeon next morning, and he was fined $2. He then saw a doctor, got the medicine for his wife, and not being willing to risk being caught by the police a second time, paid his passage home and arrived there with the sum of $15 in his pocket. Do you call that justice? Do you think that this is a decent sort of system when people of that type, and this young man is one of the finest types of men I have known in western Canada, a young man anxious to contribute what he can to the well-being of our country, have to suffer things like that? But that is the sort of thing we mete out to him.

I was not surprised when my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote), yesterday, in quoting from various authorities, referred to the statements of Sir Arthur Salter and Sir Basil Blackett. I have a quotation here now, which I will ask even the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), to listen to, because this is what the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation intend to do, and we are going to get a chance to do it. Sir Arthur Salter says:

> We need to reform and in large measure to transform this system. We need so to improve the framework of law, of institutions, of custom and of public direction and control that the otherwise free activities and competitive enterprises of man, instead of destroying each other, will inure to general good. In the organization of industry, of credit and of money, we need to supplement the automatic processes of adjustment by deliberate planning.
> If we fail—the alternative is an intervening period of collapse and anarchy, followed by chaos and a different system inconsistent with political and personal liberty.

We are going to save the best that is in our present civilization, Mr. Speaker, if hon. gentlemen opposite can forbear long enough in their support of capitalism to permit us to do it.

Let me give another illustration. There is a great scientist in Great Britain called John L. Hodgson. He delivered a most informative lecture before the Royal Society of Arts, a very respectable body of men, containing in its membership knights, baronets and peers of one kind or another. Many of these men are intellectuals, scientists, and they listened to this lecture of Mr. Hodgson, as is shown by the discussion, with a good deal of interest. Listen to what he says, and then let us apply it to our own conditions:

> Every week for the past twenty years my work has on an average given somebody wealth at the rate of £2,500 a year. Instead of being able to contemplate with joy the prosperous community that such an increase in industrial efficiency should have brought into being, I am haunted by a wan army of 20,000 unemployed from whom my efficiencies have filched away their life purpose and their means of adequate livelihood.
> As I look round, I notice that the unemployed in England alone would, if set up side by side with their wives, children and dependents, form a parapet longer than our two thousand miles of coastline. Picture this two thousand mile line of living poverty and hopelessness in a country rich in knowledge and wealth beyond the dreams of all the ages!

Is not that equally true of this country where we have seven or eight hundred thousand unemployed, with a long streaming line of dependents, stretching mile after mile, people living in abject poverty and hopelessness in a country which in wealth of material resources and equipment is beyond the dreams of previous generations? Why all this suffering? Is there no way out? Have hon. gentlemen opposite no way out? Is there no answer? They have yet to give us their plan. I challenge them to stand up in this house before this debate is concluded and say what their plan is.

Some hon. MEMBERS: What is your plan?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I have a little order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPENCE: Deliver your own views; never mind reading so much.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hon. gentlemen will hear my views aplenty before I get through. I understand that the constituency of Parkdale from which my hon. friend (Mr. Spence) comes is convinced that the time has come when his usefulness to the city of Toronto can be dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE: You do not know much about it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to give a quotation from Sir Basil Blackett, a director of the Bank of England, from whom my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) quoted yesterday, but as he had not time to include this reference I wish to place it on Hansard in support of our contention that we must have a definite economic planning of our society and the greed and predatory ruthlessness which has been the motive force so far must give away to the welfare of the community. I quote from The World's Economic Crisis. Sir Basil Blackett said:

> All along the line we have simultaneously to get to work to overhaul existing methods and practices and to rebuild our institutions.

He goes on:

> There is no reason why in a short time any human being should feel serious anxiety about the provision of food and clothing and house-room for himself and for those for whom he is responsible. Science offers to us and to the generation immediately ahead of us a standard of living—

Notice what he is saying:

> Science offers to us and to the generation immediately ahead of us a standard of living and of material comfort immensely higher than any that has been known to the most fortunate of those which have gone before.

Let it be our work to make that utopian dream, if you wish to call it that, that "nostrum"-like prediction of so respectable a person as Sir Basil Blackett, a director of the Bank of England, come true. Let that be the object of every hon. member of this house, instead of supporting the crazy-quilt state of society which has grown up, like Topsy, without planning or direction, and with the overwhelming motive of the private accumulation of wealth irrespective of the well-being of the people. Why should we any longer assume that the provision of work is necessarily the primary object of industry or of our own social effort, when as a matter of fact the entire trend of industry and of our economic and scientific system is towards the elimination of employment or the reduction of the necessity for labour. Is it not time then that we came back to a question which I asked in the house three years ago when I was discussing the technological changes in industry? The question was: Is the sole basis of living to continue to be a job? If it is, then the job must be found and under a profit-making capitalistic system jobs cannot be found for the increasing volume of unemployed throughout the country. So much for that aspect of the matter.

Here we have a country rich in natural resources, with tremendous agricultural wealth —a by-word in the mouth of every politician, sometimes even in the mouths of statesmen. We crow about it; we boast about it, and in the past we had very just pride in it. Let us examine this. With an economic system under which we unfortunately have been compelled to function, we find our statistical returns show that in the last ten-year period, prior to 1931—and this does not take into consideration the terrific decline in values since 1931, which decline of course has been tremendous—the private ownership of farms, the sacred god of capitalism, has declined by 28,842 farms.

An hon. MEMBER: What percentage?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I will give this in another way. The percentage of tenant farmers increased by 32·9 and that of part owner and part tenant farmers by 70 per cent. The actual decline in the value of farm property is 20 per cent, or a shrinkage of $1,025,000,000. What security in private ownership is there under such a system as this? No, sir, not even the hard-working man who has devoted his life savings to the acquirement of a home, of his own personal property, is secure under capitalism in the possession of his home, of his property; nor is a farmer today, except it be under the guise of some temporary legal enactments such as debt adjustment boards and moratoriums, guaranteed anything like continuity of ownership in his property, his home or his farm, or even the right to operate. Not only is that the case, but we have a system under which a man has not even the right to work. Will hon. members let that sink into their consciousness, become seized of its meaning? A man is kicked out of a job as soon as his services are not required by the profit-making industry, whatever it may be, and he has no chance to return to it until profit again becomes possible to the industry. Do hon. members think such a system will endure? I ask them to defend it if they can. The census figures to June, 1931, show that the value of lands declined $984,000,000, or an average decline of about $1,495 per farm. What then of the decline that has taken place since then? We find roughly one-third of the holders of farms, 224,000 out of 728,000, reported on their mortgages. What did they report? They reported outstanding mortgages amounting to $677,000,000, or almost $700,000,000. No, this system is definitely done; it is definitely passing to its miserable conclusion.

Of every sincere member we ask but one thing: that he devote himself to a recognition of the different economic forces now at work.

We have plant equipment such as our forefathers never dreamed of; we have resources of great potential value; we have tremendous artificial power resources without which, of course, the machines would be largely useless. I have not time to give all the illustrations of the scientific attainments of the Canadian people. What we have to do is to make these available to humanity. I am sorry my permitted time has passed.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, I have only one comment to make on the speech delivered by the hon. member for Bow River. My colleague, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson), on hearing the statements made in reference to the police court of Toronto, than which there is none fairer anywhere, asked the hon. member for Bow River to give the dates of the cases to which he made reference. That the hon. member has refused to do.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I shall do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MacNICOL: If the hon. member will give the dates now, I shall resume my seat and allow him to do so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just as soon as I can get my files, I can give the hon. member the dates and the name of the magistrate.

Mr. MacNICOL: While the resolution before the house in my opinion in its tenets savours of socialism, and while outside of this house the utterances of the mover of the resolution (Mr. Woodsworth) on the public platforms throughout the country savour of communism, I do not for one moment intimate or suggest that the supporters of this resolution are either socialists or communists. Further, if the resolution had been moved by a socialist, I am not one of those who think that on some occasions somewhere socialists have not advocated perhaps worthy objects. But the resolution itself conforms to the statements made by the mover of the resolution on many platforms throughout Canada during recess of parliament, and as I am opposed as strongly as I can be to the resolution, I propose, in my argument against it, to quote some of the statements made by the mover of the resolution during the course of his speeches. The resolution states:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth.

The expression "cooperative commonwealth" is not by any means modern. It has been used by socialists from the time of Karl Marx in 1847. Mr. Philip Snowden, now Viscount Snowden, many years ago in his book on socialism said this, on page 139:

> Socialists, as we have seen, look to the attainment of the cooperative commonwealth—

On the same page he quotes the then Mr. Arthur Balfour, later Prime Minister of England, as giving a definition of socialism which I should like to place on Hansard. Mr. Arthur Balfour, speaking at Birmingham, on November 14, 1907, is quoted as saying:

> Socialism has one meaning only. Socialism means, and can mean nothing else, than that the community or the state is to take all the means of production into its own hands, that private enterprise and private property are to come to an end, and all that private enterprise and private property carry with them. That is socialism, and nothing else is socialism.

I propose to place before the house some of the statements made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) during his campaign across the country. Speaking in the riding of the hon. member for West York, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quoted by the Toronto Star of December 9, as stating:

> J. S. Woodsworth, M.P., stated that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation was an organization "that has frankly a socialistic basis."

Immediately thereafter, as no doubt the honest, intelligent workmen of West York in the town of Long Branch,—and they are intelligent and honest and they are neither socialists nor communists—gasped at the expression "socialism," the hon. member proceeded to say:

> "We don't want to smash things," he declared. "All we want is to take control from the hands of the few for the benefit of the many."

That is another stock socialistic expression that you read in all the books on socialism of the last sixty or seventy years. At London on December 12, the Border Cities Star quotes the hon. gentleman as saying in his advocacy of a new social order:

> "Will you choose the orderly way or a vast and violent upheaval as they had in Russia?" he asked. "If those who are now in the enjoyment of special privileges"—

That is another stock socialistic expression you read in all books on socialism—

> "—decide that they will not do what is proposed, it will be a great deal the worse for them, for the change must come."

That is, the new proposed order, which in my humble opinion is founded on socialistic tenets, must come. In other words, if we do not accept this proposed new propaganda in an orderly way, then we shall have it jammed down our throats by a violent upheaval. Further, in London, the hon. member made this statement:

> The time has come for people to think these things through. We have got to band ourselves together to bring these changes about. We will have to make the effort. Some people in London have asked me since my speech this afternoon if it shall not be necessary to have a great climax as they did in Russia.

That is, a vast and violent upheaval in which several million people were killed.

What is our major business today? The major business of this house is to do something to encourage the investment of capital in factories, buildings and land. I know my hon. friend said a moment ago, as was also said yesterday, that we have too many factories at the present time. There is nothing new in that idea. I quote from the report of the United States Commissioner of Labour for the year 1886, or forty-seven years ago when they had exactly the same conditions:

> The nations of the world have overstocked themselves with machinery and manufacturing plants far in excess of the wants of production. This full supply of economic tools to meet the wants of nearly all branches of commerce and industry is the most important factor in the present industrial depression.

There is nothing new in it. The world got out of that depression in 1886 and by encouraging capital instead of decrying it and doing everything possible to hurt it, the world will get out of this depression too. The hon. gentleman in concluding his remarks at London, after making a very slashing attack on the bankers of Montreal, made this statement:

> "People shout at us that this is socialism, bolshevism," he declared. "Maybe it is. What of it? Who runs this country, anyway?"

I should like for a moment or two to deal with the question of socialism and communism. Many people do not care to read socialistic books, and out in the country socialism is generally taboo. I have carefully studied the works of Karl Marx and of his two associates Friederich Engels and Ferdinand Lassalle. Boiled down, their principles are three. First, surplus value; second, the economic interpretation of history; third, class warfare. I think I can associate all of these principles with this resolution. What is surplus value? In Marx's own interpretation it is the difference between the cost of producing an article and the sale price of it. And he goes further and says that the plant in which the article is produced, the capital to operate the plant, and all associated with the implements of production are the surplus values of past years and belong to the commonwealth. It is on that basis that in Russia today we have the community plants, which as you know are very, very large. Well, that kind of doctrine will not go in this country, nor anything like it.

Then the economic interpretation of history; Marx says that away back in the tribal days all land, and all that was produced on the land under control of the tribe, belonged to the tribe. That is the basis of the collectivization in Russia, state farms. This country will never tolerate any such condition as that.

Then the whole idea of class warfare is this, that capital and labour are antagonistic, that their interests are directly opposed. I do not believe that. On the other hand I do not think that in the past labour has always had a fair return for its efforts. But I do believe that the consideration given labour during the last fifty years has advanced, and I believe further that as time goes on the relationship will perhaps be much fairer than it is today. But class warfare will not help.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, if all this talk about the breakdown of capitalism encourages the investment of capital and provides employment? It does not. It freezes capital, it induces capital to go elsewhere, where there is safety. It causes unemployment. During the last two months statements have been made on the public platforms throughout this country, irresponsible statements, that have had a material effect in increasing unemployment in this country. Far be it from me to try to connect up the sponsors of this resolution, or the speeches delivered throughout this country recently, with the third internationale in Moscow, because the mover said yesterday that they were not in any way connected with Moscow, and I accept his statement. But I am going to quote some statements, and leave it to the members of this house to decide whether this movement is or is not in any way associated with or like what is advocated in Russia. Before doing so, let me say that I am one of those who hope that some good will come in Russia. I sincerely hope that the condition of the Russian peasants will improve. I do not like to hear of any country retrogressing instead of going forward and I sincerely hope that the Russians will prosper.

In the trial in Toronto known as the King vs. Timothy Buck and others, a great deal of evidence was adduced and enrolled on the records of the court. According to this evidence it appeared that the communist party of Canada was a section of the communist international and that from the year 1924 onward the theses and statutes of this organization became binding upon the communist party of Canada.

I wish to place on Hansard two or three of the statutes of the communist international whose headquarters are at Moscow:

The communist international makes its aims to put up an armed struggle for the overthrow of the international bourgeoisie and to create an international Soviet republic as a transition stage to the complete abolition of the state. The communist international considers the dictatorship of the proletariat as the only means for the liberation of humanity from the horrors of capitalism.

This is one of the stock socialistic phrases. I quoted a few moments ago statements in which the expression "violent upheaval" was used. Let me now quote the following:

Only a violent defeat of the bourgeoisie, the confiscation of its property, the annihilation of the entire bourgeois governmental apparatus, parliamentary, judicial, military, bureaucratic, administrative, municipal, etc., even the individual exile or internment of the most stubborn, and dangerous exploiters, the establishment of a strict control over them for the repression of all inevitable attempts at resistance and restoration of capitalist slavery, only such measures will be able to guarantee the complete submission of the whole class of exploiters.

How often have we not heard that expression, "class of exploiters." Those who do their very best to keep the wheels of industry running, those who invest their money in plants and industry, are called exploiters by those who do not invest any money in industry or give employment to anyone. Now I wish those who represent agricultural districts to take particular notice of the next quotation I am going to give. I frequently go out into the country—it is not necessary to mention the riding—in Grey county, inhabited by the sons and grandsons of those sturdy pioneers who hewed that country out of the forest and who have farms of one hundred, two hundred, three hundred acres and more. I would ask those who represent agricultural districts throughout the country to listen to this:

The landed peasants or farmers are capitalists in agriculture, usually managing their lands with several hired labourers. . . . This is the most numerous element of the bourgeois class and the decided enemy of the revolutionary proletariat. After the victory of the proletariat in the towns this class will inevitably oppose it by all means from sabotage to open armed counter-revolutionary resistance. The revolutionary proletariat must therefore immediately begin to prepare the necessary force for the disarmament of every single man of this class, and, together with the overthrow of the capitalists in industry, the proletariat must deal a relentless, crushing blow to this class. To that end it must arm the rural proletariat.

Speaking in London, the mover of this resolution, referring to the question of farmers, is quoted in the Border Cities Star as having said—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sure the hon. member is trying to be fair. May I say that I made no reference whatever to the resolutions that have been just read.

Mr. MacNICOL: In the Border Cities Star, of December 12, the hon. member is quoted as having made in London the statement which I am about to read. If he says it is not correct, I shall be more than pleased to withdraw it, for, as he says, I always try to be fair to everyone.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What I have said is that I made no reference whatever to the theses of the international which the hon. gentleman has just been reading.

Mr. MacNICOL: I did not suggest anything of the sort. I never associated the hon. gentleman's name with the third international or with the international communist organization. What the hon. gentleman is quoted as having said is this:

If a violent upheaval were to come here it would be hard on all except perhaps the small farmer off in the hills, who would be able to live by himself.

In other words, all the rest of them had better look out.

If it is possible for us to avoid that sort of thing we should do it.

I know that he would not for a moment advocate bloodshed or anything of that nature.

Many people who are at the head of things here are trembling in their boots. If anyone were to make a push against the government, it would go over like a house of cards.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a very strong opinion of the present government and I do not for one moment think that anything of this kind can upset it.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), in his concluding remarks a few minutes ago, made some allusion, if I understood him correctly, to the fact that someone had not been rightly treated in our courts. Well, in this country under a capitalistic system we at least have courts and they are conducted by competent judges, so that every man and woman gets fair play in any court in the land. That, however, is not the state of affairs in that country which is held up as the example par excellence of a cooperative commonwealth. Let me quote from the Toronto Star of June 20 a dispatch from Berlin:

G.P.U'S Machine Guns Mow Down
370 Men and Children
Villagers charged with refusing to sell grain to state
Survivors' tales

The slaughter of 370 Russian men, women and children by G.P.U. (secret police) officers in the village of Turbachoff, near Kiev, was reported in a despatch from Warsaw to the newspaper Lokalanzeiger today. . . . The residents were charged by the G.P.U. with conspiracy to refuse to sell their grain to the state and resisting Soviet grain collectors.

A few days ago we all read that some 45,000 kulaks or farmers in southern Russia were dispossessed of their land and marched off to the frozen territories in the north of that country. Would the proposer of this resolution have a state of affairs in this country, in which people can be machine-gunned in this fashion, or would he rather have the capitalistic system as it prevails in Canada? I know what the people of Canada would choose. Hon. gentlemen are merely deluding themselves, therefore, when they imagine that they have made any impression on the audiences to whom they have addressed their views throughout this country. There is an old saying that people out of curiosity will go to see anything once. The hon. gentleman and his lieutenants have had a great deal of publicity during the last few years, and out of natural curiosity people have crowded to hear them, but those people were not socialists or communists.

It has been said that the capitalistic system is the cause of our present condition, but I do not believe for one moment that that is so. The Napoleonic wars caused a depression in the 1830's which continued until the 1840's. That depression was just as severe as the present one although perhaps it was not quite as hard upon the people because at that time the majority lived in rural communities while the minority resided in the cities, the reverse of the situation today. The wars in America and Europe in the 60's and in Europe in the early 70's were directly responsible for the depression which lasted from 1873 to 1879.

The great war is largely responsible for the present depression, and in this connection I shall refer to one or two instances which I believe supplemented it. Technocracy has been mentioned, it has been said that the machine has displaced man. The governments in all countries encouraged the scientists, the physicists, the chemists and the engineers to go the limit in increasing production because destruction had been so great as to make it impossible to produce sufficient for the people to carry on. After the great war had ended our system was left loaded up with a machine far beyond its necessity, but the economic and capitalistic system had nothing to do with that.

Following in the wake of the great war we had a period of high pressure salesmanship when people were loaded up with commodities which they did not require and for which they could not pay; the people mortgaged their financial stability for some time to come. Then we had the experience of the stock-market. I have before me a report issued in 1932 by the United States Senate in connection with the exploitation of the public through the stockmarket. Without dealing with this matter at any length, I have in mind one case where a stock was forced up by dishonest methods from a valuation of $105,000,000 to $1,400,000,000, and then, by equally despicable methods, forced down to $170,000,000. Our economic system had nothing to do with that. Such matters can be regulated and righted and should be righted.

I invite the hon. member and those associated with him to desist from the campaign now being carried on. This is only interfering with the investment of capital and the reducing of unemployment throughout the country. There are many other things which would help this country and to which they could devote their time. The regulation of stockmarkets is one and the advocacy of the abolition of war is another. If war were abolished I believe it would do more than anything else to make depressions impossible in the future. I invite the hon. member and those who are associated with him to co-operate with all of us in the house, who I am sure are in earnest in their efforts to see that this country should get on with its business, to see that the great era of unemployment through which we are passing shall be relieved. If we could all work together and forget parties for a while, much could be accomplished. This is not the time for the bitterness of party strife. Canada is not alone in facing this condition, the whole world is suffering, and I for one believe that we should forget partyism and should all unite to try to put Canada back upon her feet. We should try to do everything we can to provide employment for those who are out of work and to relieve the conditions now being faced by our country. Instead of carrying on as they have carried on during the last few months, instead of holding up the financial institutions and everything else to attack, hon. members should cooperate. If that were done I feel sure that it would be better for Canada and that we would soon be back upon our feet.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, whether or not we agree with the resolution now before us or with the views of those who have supported it, I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) for having brought this subject before the house. Before the affairs of Canada and the world are finally settled there will have to be much thinking and even some talking; and the more we think these matters over, the more we revolve and study them outside of the ordinary lines of party, the better for all concerned. Whether we agree or disagree with the resolution, I think we should give attention to these matters.

If this resolution is brought to a vote I will vote against it, for reasons which I shall presently give to the house. Nevertheless, I thank the hon. member for having brought forward this resolution, and I feel free to express my acquiescence in some of the views which have been presented, especially by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). Without diminishing the merits rightfully belonging to the other speeches, I think he has perhaps remained the closest to the gist of the resolution and presented the soundest views in support thereof. It seemed to me that he gave the most faithful paraphrasing of the recent encyclical of Pope Pius XI.

Last Saturday I happened to be in New York where I met an Irish Catholic who is very enthusiastic about social work. For the last four or five months he has been endeavouring to foster organizations among the Roman Catholics of the United States to uphold and expand the principles of social justice as expressed by the Pope. He told me of a curious incident of that campaign. He said to his great surprise he had found very little preparedness among his fellow Roman Catholic citizens, and that the greatest success which he had had so far in the city of New York was at a gathering largely, if not exclusively, composed of Jews. This has convinced me once more of the soundess of St. Paul's prophecy, that when the Jews come into the fold they will make the best Catholics. In saying this, I am referring only to social matters.

This resolution has two aspects, one, political or constitutional, and the other, and perhaps broader, social or economic. At the outset of the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) quite properly raised a constitutional objection. I do not think that this aspect has been sufficiently considered, and, therefore, I propose to deal with this phase. On the other hand, may I suggest to the Prime Minister and to hon. members of the house who are always ready to raise constitutional objections to any measure of social or economic reform, that they are thereby suggesting objections to the constitution itself. Of course, if we take the resolution as suggesting that the present constitution of Canada should be discarded in order to establish, in place of our confederation, what is called a cooperative commonwealth—and I must say I do not yet quite understand what that expression means—the constitutional objection is properly raised. Curiously enough, this is not the first, nor the tenth nor the twentieth time, that, in an experience running now for forty years of political life, I have been struck with that dual tendency so un-British among our English speaking fellow members: some always suggesting that a law must be superseded, wiped out and something entirely new put in its place; and others sticking to the letter of the law to oppose everything new. This is essentially un-British. What has made in Canada as in other British possessions the enduring success of British institutions? It is that by instinct and by practice, British legislators make as few laws as they can. They make them when new needs have imposed themselves, not all of a sudden, not in the midst of a passing crisis, but over a long period; or they make laws to give statutory form to a practice already long established. Probably the difference in temperament and practice as between Canada and Great Britain has arisen from the fact that we have a written constitution, whilst in England they have not. But it should not be forgotten that our so-called constitution is not in the broad sense of the word, a constitution. I have always maintained and I still hold that the broad lines of our constitution and its fundamental basis are the unwritten constitution of the British world, operated from year to year, from century to century, carried the world over by people of British origin and operated in partnership with them by what I might call new associates of the British people such as the Hindus and the Mahommedans in India, the French Canadians in Canada, the Dutch in South Africa, and so forth. Curiously enough, the point has come where some of those Britishers of foreign origin seem to have preserved a better understanding of British institutions than have many Britishers by birth, race and origin. I claim that the object of the framers of our constitution was merely to apportion and distribute the legislative and administrative powers between the central government and the various provincial governments. It is what I might call a code of legislative and administrative functions. Within the four corners of that constitution, what prevents the federal parliament in its sphere, the various provincial legislatures in theirs, and even our municipal governments in theirs, in developing the practice of cooperation in political, economic and social matters?

This brings me to the broader aspects of the question as presented to us. If the mover of the resolution had framed it in other words; if he had suggested that the efforts of public bodies as well as of individuals and of classes, if you like, should tend towards closer cooperation between the various public bodies, classes and interests, and that such cooperation would offer us a better solution to our problems than the existing chaotic and archaic system of unbridled capitalism, I would fully agree with him; and he would find in the old province of Quebec, considered, rightly perhaps in certain respects, the most conservative and traditional province in Canada, much support for that idea. But the moment he or anybody else suggests any radical change in the frame of our constitutional act, immediately this raises other problems disconnected, if you like, from the economic problem; but nobody can expect any class of people in this country to set their brains into compartments. It is all very well to talk of the present evils—and I am absolutely in accord with my friends to the left that the picture they have given of those evils is not exaggerated. I am also in accord with them that the present political and economic system has proved a failure to correct those evils, and therefore that we must look for some remedy. On the other hand, they cannot expect us, in looking at those matters and thinking of those possible remedies, to forget other things which are as dear to us as the possession and retention of wealth, as the settlement of economic problems, and that is the preservation of those objects for which we have struggled for years and years and even centuries: the preservation of our civil liberty, of our municipal laws, of our civil laws, of our religion, of our French culture. These worthy objects are not only legitimate objects of care for the French Canadians. I claim as a Canadian, without any racial qualification or without any limitation of race, that the preservation of the racial and cultural characteristics of the province of Quebec is a necessity for the preservation of a Canadian nationality. They are the only real, standing and permanent obstacles to the mental, economic and social absorption of Canada by the United States. It is not by armed force, by differences in law, that you will preserve a Canadian nationality not inimical to but different from the United States civilization. Although of course there are several factors governing that preservation, I claim that the most permanent, enduring and characteristic, the one which goes deeper into the minds and hearts of a large proportion of the people of this country and which at the same time strikes the foreigner as characteristic of Canada, is the dualism of this country. By that I do not mean that the other elements do not count; on the contrary, I cherish the hope that those various elements will preserve their own culture, their own characteristics. But I claim that thanks to history, which we have not made, thanks, if you like the language better, to the will of Providence, for three centuries there has developed on the northern part of this continent a civilization which draws its best characteristics from the two great English and French civilizations. Those things, to me, are and they ought to be to every Canadian, just as dear as the reestablishment of social and economic order. Therefore, as my hon. friends will see, the constitutional aspect should be considered at once from a more particular angle, and also a broader viewpoint than either, if I might say so, their viewpoint when they think only of the obstacles before them in their struggle for better social life, or that of their opponents, who make use of the constitution as an obstacle against sorely needed reforms.

Mr. BENNETT: May I interrupt? The resolution asks, not for cooperation, but for the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth.

Mr. BOURASSA: Quite so. That is exactly what I said, and that is my main reason for voting against it. But at the same time the resolution does contain the suggestion of cooperation, and I think this is the proper time to ask ourselves this question: whether under the present regime—the capitalistic regime, so called, though I do not like that expression—it is possible to continue and enjoy individual liberty? And this further question: Can we, with the legal and administrative machinery, federal and provincial, that is now in our hands, cure the present evils and do something to guard against their recurrence? I claim not, sir.

Let us take first the question of private ownership. It is all very well to set up a bogy, the bogy of communism, the hidden hand of Moscow. I have read a good deal about Russian affairs, as the hon. gentleman who has just preceded me has done, and I congratulate him upon most of his reading; but I do not know what is actually going on in Russia and to what extent their system is good or bad. I am not prepared to assert or deny that some good will or will not arise out of it. I still belong to the old catholic school and believe that there is no absolute evil on earth, that there is only one absolute good, and that is God Almighty. Outside of that, everything human is a composition of good and evil; and very often out of evil good has arisen and salvation has come to the world. Take, for instance, the French revolution. It was certainly detestable in its principles. It committed crimes and brought human misery just as much in proportion to population as has the Russian revolution. Nevertheless even the most Conservative countries in the world, today, have to trace back some of their most cherished institutions to the destructions wrought by the French revolution.

But I am not talking about Russia; I am talking about Canada. What is the situation with regard to economic affairs? Is it true that the struggle is between individual liberty, on the one hand, and socialism on the other? It may come to that, but I claim, sir, that under the present system, individual liberty and individual enterprise in trade and industry and all forms of social life are threatened and crushed by the present economic system as it now works. The hon. member for North Winnipeg, very rightly put the question to us yesterday. "What remains of initiative to the labourer?" Is it not true that under the present system man has become enslaved, in a different form, if you like, but just as effectively as he was under the iron heel of the Romans? Not only is the labourer losing the liberty of exercising individual intelligence in his work by reason of being tied down to a certain part of a machine and knowing nothing of the rest, but take the case of the farmers also. Reference has been made to them by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). Take my own province of Quebec, for example, perhaps the most conservative province of Canada, and where today there are hundreds, thousands of good farmers who are on the verge of expropriation, who are left with one hundred acres of land under their feet simply because the creditor is afraid of taking over the farm for his mortgage or because the municipality is afraid of selling all the farms that are in arrears for taxes.

In the city of Montreal we have a very interesting class of labourers, past labourers, if you like. Advanced socialists and communists of the type which has been described this afternoon might call them capitalists. Some of those men worked steadily for thirty or forty years as tramway employees, railway employees, and in spite of their small wages saved a certain sum of money year by year—others were carpenters, plasterers and so forth. They put some little money aside, and when they came to the age of about fifty, purchased a building lot and erected upon it a three-flat building. They put into that building all their spare capital, $5,000 let us say, and then borrowed from the insurance or lending companies, who were running after just such investments four or five years ago, let us say $10,000. Then with their own hands they put up that building, expecting that when they reached the age of sixty they would have a property worth about $20,000. They lived in one of the flats themselves, and from the other two derived revenue sufficient to keep them. Thousands of these buildings exist in Montreal. Thousands of these small capitalists have lived happily in that way for years and years. But their lodgments now are empty or are occupied by lodgers whom the owner keeps there simply in order to heat the lodging, and who pay no rent. The owners in the meantime are called upon to pay more taxation, and of course to pay interest on their mortgages, and are refused mortgage renewals by the lending companies. Consequently they have gone in a delegation to the municipal authorities and to the provincial government, asking for what? Asking to be put on the list as paupers, and some of them are actually receiving relief funds from the St. Vincent de Paul Society and other charitable institutions. Does not that justify what was said by one or two speakers yesterday, that under the present system of capitalism individual property is being expropriated?

Now is that the fault of the system? Not altogether. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. MacNicol) that the war is largely responsible for it. I am glad at last to receive testimony from various quarters that I was right in the opposition which I carried on, nearly alone, during all the war, against the crime we were then committing against future generations in this country by bleeding our country to death, by piling up billions and billions of dollars of debt. We were not only participating in a crime against civilization in our own day, but we were transmitting to generations to come the consequences and punishment of that crime. But let that pass. The war is undoubtedly responsible for a good deal of what we are suffering from today. But is it not true that the advantage that was taken of the war, not by all capitalists, but by the greedy exploiters of capitalism, has doubled and trebled, perhaps multiplied tenfold, our suffering?

What do we consider capitalism to mean? If by capitalism we mean an association of five or ten individuals who pool their money to carry on a legitimate enterprise, and who by reason of the risks of that enterprise reap any benefits therefrom, then within certain limits which the state ought to fix I admit that that sort of capitalism is useful and legitimate. But when you have eight or ten financial brigands who meet together, and instead of subscribing their own money, let us say to the extent of $1,000,000, to put on a legitimate enterprise, issue paper for $10,000,000 and get gullible subscribers to take that paper for good money, and load upon the consuming public the charge not only of paying a return upon the $1,000,000 that was legitimately required, but upon the $9,000,000 stolen from the public and pocketed by those brigands, do you call that private initiative? Do you think it is proper that under the laws of this country, whether federal or provincial, such things should go on?

I was talking recently to one of the most important business men of Montreal. I asked him "Could you point out any large enterprise in Canada that in one way or another is not built upon fraud? Fraudulent processes or watered stock?" He is a very cool-headed fellow, connected with one of the largest banks in Montreal. He thought a minute, and said, "There may be, but I know none." Now those institutions and corporations exist by the will or permission of the state. They function under our legal system, whether provincial or federal does not matter. I will give two or three examples. One very important for the province of Quebec is the lumber industry. Of course it is badly hit by the general conditions of the market, but it is ten times worse on account of the brigandage of a handful of the most unscrupulous financiers of Canada. They took eight or ten lumber concerns, honestly capitalized, honestly administered, doing an honest business, and drew them into their pool, covered the whole thing with a fake capital amounting to millions, and now they are in bankruptcy. Yes, in bankruptcy to the public, but these financiers have pocketed the proceeds of their brigandage.

Another example is the operations of the Sun Life Assurance Company. There has been a sensational trial in Montreal, of a man, who, I think, wrote foolish articles, not that what he wrote was untrue, but he wrote in a very foolish tone. But the manner in which that trial was conducted is a striking picture of the spirit that prevails. He engaged good lawyers to defend his case; those lawyers were made to understand that if they took up his case they were done for as far as the favour of the Quebec government is concerned, the head of which is a director in the concern. They quitted the case. The case was shifted from one court to another until it reached a judge—I do not want to be disparaging, I think he is a very nice man, but nevertheless before he became a judge he had all his life long been a corporation lawyer, connected with the organization of some of the most shameless enterprises of this country. Before I knew anything about these accusations I knew a little about insurance affairs. I studied the report of the Sun Life Assurance Company three or four years ago at the time they came here with their bill, which was thrown out, thanks to the effective resistance of Hon. Mr. Robb and of Mr. G. D. Finlayson, the permanent head of the Department of Insurance, a very able and efficient and honest man. Nevertheless, on a report which on its face showed a diminution of $6,000,000 in their assets, they increased the dividends to their shareholders from fifty per cent to seventy-five per cent in one year, with the result that the shares, originally $100, were quoted at some $3,000 to $4,000.

I need not dwell upon those examples. I will finish with two connected with public services solely. I think it will not be said that the transportation of workers between their homes and their work, that the supply of electric light and gas for home and industrial use, ought to be left entirely to private enterprise with entire disregard for the public. Well, what has it come to in the city of Montreal, the metropolis of Canada? The tram service, the electricity service, the gas service, are in the hands of one single concern, or rather of a few men who control not only those public services, but indirectly that enormous lumber monopoly which is now in bankruptcy, the Sun Life Assurance Company and the Royal Bank, and of course the Montreal Trust Company —because each respectable bank must have a trust company to carry on with the money of the depositors operations which the Bank Act forbids to the bank. You have there this greatest financial-industrial monopoly, controlling the city of Montreal. Do you want to see what it means? There are two parts of the island of Montreal that have not yet been absorbed, the town of Outremont, in which I live, and the town of Westmount. The people of Westmount are fairly enterprising; they considered they were being squeezed by the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, so they organized a plant of their own, with the result that the price of electricity went down at once fifty per cent. And we have this spectacle in the city of Montreal: on one side of Atwater Avenue the poorer individuals pay four cents while on the other side the rich people of Westmount pay two cents. Is this social justice or economic equilibrium? Do you think the people will stand it very long and be satisfied with this "upholding of the constitution?" No! I give this warning to true Conservatives—I use the term in the large sense, there are Conservatives on this side and Conservatives on that side, just as there are socialists on either side. I repeat, I am not afraid of the word "socialism." It always amuses me when I hear cries of horror on both sides of the house the moment socialism is mentioned. Forty years ago Sir William Vernon Harcourt, a Liberal, it is true, but surely not a revolutionist, was taunted with the accusation of socialism. He said, "What does it mean? Everyone is more or less socialist, after all." Think of the advance since then, not towards Marxian socialism, but towards the adaptation of some of the essential principles of socialism to modern life; far more advance in conservative England than in so-called progressive Canada. Corporations have far more power over the public in Canada than in England. Conservative governments in England have taken much more effective means of curbing the powers of large corporations than we have in Canada, under either the Liberal or the Conservative regime. But attention is being drawn and focussed upon this situation. I give this warning to true Conservatives: Do not raise the bogy of bolshevism all the time. Do you know what people, even good farmers, are beginning to say in the province of Quebec? "Well, after all, bolshevism is in Russia; it is far away, but we know what we are suffering from and we are not going to be satisfied with denunciations of bolshevism all the time. What we want is some alleviation of our own evil." That is what the people expect from us. Let hon. gentlemen remember the results of the anti-German propaganda during the war, when people were made to believe that the Germans were cutting off the ears and arms of all the children in the towns of Belgium, and that they were using human grease for their cartridges. There are still a few Chinese who do believe that sort of thing, and still a few Canadians who believe that the Germans were cutting off the ears and arms of children in Belgium; but all informed and intelligent people know better than that. Today you could not possibly make people believe all the lies that were accepted as gospel truth during the war.

I do not believe in attempting to remedy any situation or in trying to accomplish anything by lies or by giving what we call in French the tangente, by throwing sidelines on foreign situations in order to make the people forget their own situation. I claim that the principle of cooperation is bound to increase, is bound to take the place of the old practice of individual enterprise which has been crushed by corporate capitalism; and I believe that if we want to prevent the evils of bolshevism, if we want really to prevent Canadians of all classes and in all our provinces from developing instincts of revolution, we must do something else than we have done in the last five, ten or twenty years. We must combine the true and eternal principles of social conservation with true measures of social progress and reform, and I claim that this can be done only by means of cooperation, not necessarily the enactment of a cooperative constitution but the recognition that no class can save the country, no class can save the world. No system can save the world, but all classes, looking primarily to their own interests if you like—because we must take human nature as it is—and all parties, looking to their own traditions and prejudices and shibboleths, should at least broaden their minds and stiffen their wills to establish some sort of cooperation between parties, between classes, and in a country like ours between provinces and races, if we are to pull the country out of the present quagmire.

May I close these remarks with a quotation? I am not strong on quotations but I must say that I was struck by a sensible observation of an author who I suppose is an economist. I may say by way of parenthesis that I largely share the views of the Prime Minister when he says that economists very often have not many practical remedies to offer. They always remind me of a lesson in medicine given by Moliere in Le Malade Imaginaire: "primo seignare, ensuita purgare....and you swear not to cure or to kill your patient otherwise than according to the rules of the faculty."

This book I read with interest because it is unpretentious; because, as the author says, his object is not to teach extraordinary things but to try to bring the minds of most people to the consideration of ordinary truths. Now, mind you, he declares himself, and he proves it, quite antagonistic to communism or even socialism if you take holus bolus the doctrine of socialism as propounded by Marx and others and put into practice more or less in Russia. He is not foolish enough however to imagine that all that has been preached and practised by socialists is all wrong. Therefore he gives a warning at the end of his book which I commend to people of ordinary minds like myself, people who will find comfort in it because it is understandable. The book is The World Economic Crisis 1929-31, by Paul Einzig. The author speaks particularly of the struggle, perhaps much more menacing than some people imagine, between antagonistic schools and interests as represented on the one hand by Soviet Russia and on the other, broadly speaking, by western Europe and America. He says:

> Should the Soviet Union pursue an aggressive and destructive policy, the rest of the world may be compelled into a defensive alliance which would have to make use of the weapon of economic boycott.

This government tried it tentatively in a very limited way.

> It is possible, however, that the Soviet authorities realize that there is no hope for stirring up a world revolution by means of ruining the industries of capitalist countries through cut-throat competition. In that case, they focus all their energies upon trying to accentuate their economic progress instead of trying to destroy that of other countries. Our task will then be to do our utmost to maintain and even increase our economic superiority over the new system.
> To that end it is essential that we should establish cooperation in all its possible forms. We cannot afford any longer to suffer periodical setbacks caused by crises. . . . The rival economic interests which are reluctant to curtail their freedom of action for the sake of cooperation, should be made aware that their very existence is at stake. Nothing but the closest relations betwen them, coupled with the cooperation of political powers to maintain internal and international peace, can maintain the superiority of our economic system which is the raison d'être of our social and political system. In order to accelerate our progress and to prevent setbacks, individuals, groups, and classes will have to consent to sacrifices which will be, however, rewarded in the long run by the results obtained. If we combine judiciously the advantages of cooperation with those of individual initiative, there is no reason to fear that a system where individual initiative is eliminated can ever win the victory over us.

[Mr. Bourassa.]

Therefore, in the name of all that is true and legitimate in private initiative and private property, which is now being expropriated in Canada as fast as in Russia; in the name of all that is best in our past traditions, Canadian, French or British, I seriously call upon the members of the various parties and groups of this house to forget for a moment their party differences and to do all they can, not to counteract every new idea that is presented as being a form of bolshevism, but to listen attentively and sympathetically to every suggestion which is made, prepared to reject what we think is wrong and to accept what is right. Do not let us endeavour to crush the growing feelings and aspirations of a suffering people by telling them that what was good enough for our fathers is good enough for us. Do not let us tell them that this is a passing crisis and that things will adjust themselves. They will not, and we know it. It is all very well to preach optimism if by optimism you mean that we must foster the feelings of hope in a better future. But if by optimism you mean that we must go on deceiving the people as to the gravity of the crisis, that we must let the people believe that because of a little change in the tariff, because of little treaties made here and there, matters will adjust themselves—no. It is wrong to deceive the people. We have deceived them too long. I know that in my own little sphere of life hundreds of people are starving today. Why? Because they believed three years ago that if there was a change in government, while they would not be rich, they would be well off. And so they spent their little savings. Others thought that because of a little measure of relief adopted in Ottawa in conjunction with Quebec that all things would come out all right. There is not one specific measure which has been adopted either here, in Quebec, in Toronto or elsewhere which can cure the evil. The best intellects among the capitalists, among the traders, among the farmers and among the labourers must get to work and convince themselves that the main thing is not to turn over the country to the labourer, to the farmer or to the capitalist, but that the one standing law of humanity is that every individual in every class must make his bit of sacrifice in order to save the whole. If we make it better for the whole, then the individuals in all classes will benefit.

Mr. G. C. WILSON (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is several years since I have had the privilege of addressing the House of Commons. Coming here in 1911 I am now classed as the third oldest member on this side of the house, not in age but in service.

I served in the legislature from 1908 to 1911, and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) will pardon me if I say that if he had worked as hard in Quebec as I did in Ontario from 1908 to 1911 for the introduction of publicly-owned hydro-electric power, they would not be paying such high prices today in Montreal for their power. As I say, I have not cluttered up Hansard with long speeches and I do not know just how long I will be able to continue today because, as many hon. members know, I am speaking against medical advice. Not long ago the Independent Labour party came into the town of Dundas to hold a meeting and the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) was introduced with the statement that he had said more in one session of this house than I had in twenty-one years. I do not deny that accusation. I happen to be one of those to whom a banquet was tendered because it was thought I was going to pass out before very long. My leader was kind enough to do the honours, and I think that fact coupled with the fact that I am a Presbyterian and believe in predestination and foreordination, made me not think very much of what the doctors told me. It is due to a kind Providence and the use of sweet cider that I am here today.

Having a Scotch grandmother and an Irish mother I had to learn the twenty-third psalm and the fifty-fourth paraphrase, but my father beat me out because he could recite the hundred and nineteenth psalm without a skip. I could never accomplish that and I suppose the reason was that I did not take enough pease brose for breakfast.

I should like to recall a story concerning Sir John A. Macdonald. He spoke in Hamilton in 1891 during his last campaign. I was at the back of the rink on Jackson street where he spoke when a member of the audience in a whisper just loud enough to carry over the heads of the people said, "Oh, go to hell." Quick as a flash Sir John said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I have been in public life a great many years, I have been invited here and I have been invited there, but this is the first time I ever had a direct invitation to Grit headquarters. I decline with thanks." Personally, I do not feel like accepting the invitation of any party whose ultimate goal is chaos and the disregard of law and order.

In enlarging upon the wonderful strides made by the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) said that multitudes are joining the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and halls will not accommodate the crowds of those eager to enter.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said that he did not like to quote scripture and I am reminded of an occasion where a choir leader was asked to sing the national anthem and he got up and sang "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow" before starting with the national anthem. I would refer the hon. member for Southeast Grey to St. Matthew VII, 13-15, which reads:

> Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat:
> Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.
> Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

I, like Sir John A. Macdonald, must graciously but emphatically decline the invitation to join the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) may claim that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is not interpreting scripture as many of the most eminent theologians would do, but it must be remembered that today the churches are allowing their pulpits to be occupied by salad faced college professors and new era economists who, suffering from high blood pressure and brainstorms, exploit new theories instead of preaching the simple gospel of the Nazarene, to which we will have to return if we are to get out of the deplorable position in which we are today. Can the house imagine the pulpit of Calvin being filled by a Woodsworth, the pulpit of Knox by a Bland or that of Luther by a Garland? We must learn to put first things first. I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Globe of December 2, 1932, entitled, "Thirteen Years After" and which reads:

> Still the insistance that there must be a revolution bespeaks little for a gain in wisdom. When revolution is proclaimed as inevitable, even the "mental revolution" of Miss Agnes Macphail, as a beginning, whether there is bloodshed or not depends upon the kind and amount of energy devoted to propaganda, as history has shown.

And then again:

> The Canadian Annual Review of 1919 records that, upon committal for trial of eight strike leaders, "a meeting with indignant speeches followed, addressed by Rev. Dr. Salem Bland and J. S. Woodsworth, who dealt at length with the evil work of those who were trying to 'crush the Russian experiment in democracy.'"

A little further on we read:

> This all happened at a time when labour, so called, was depressed compared with previous months, and when the One Big Union was out to "subdue the mad dogs of capitalism and open the gates of freedom," when the theory was, as Rev. William Ivens was reported to have told a Winnipeg labour meeting, addressed by himself and Rev. Doctor Bland: "All you have to do is to walk into any industry, tell the owner you are going to take it over, and it is done."

The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), as reported on page 1694 of Hansard, has this to say:

Had either of the old parties offered solutions, or even attempted to offer solutions, or had the government extended some sympathy to those suffering so greatly, they would have held much of the ground which they so easily won in 1930, and the Liberal party would have gained ground more rapidly than it is now doing. The Liberals, of course, do offer sympathy, if nothing else.

I am very glad to say that the Canadian people cannot be reconciled to continued want and privation, suffering, disease and early death in a land of abundance. They cannot and will not be reconciled to it. If they could they would not be the red-blooded Canadians about whom the Minister of Railways and Canals talks so much. The attempt of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is to build a social order or society which will serve mankind, instead of allowing a social organization to continue which makes mankind serve the system.

One would think from a speech that sounds like "holier than thou," the hon. member for Southeast Grey was above all this sort of thing, but as we all know, she has joined the capitalistic class, and I wish to refer to an incident which took place while she was on a speaking tour. This appears in one of the Fergus papers, but I do not wish to quote that part of it. I desire merely to refer to an incident that took place. While certain people can criticize the capitalistic class and find fault with members on this side, I am aware of an incident which occurred when the hon. member addressed the Women's Institute at Rockton in my constituency. What was their surprise when two days afterwards they received a bill from the hon. member for Southeast Grey for $12 for her expenses. This is the patriotic lady who says that we should do this and do that. She has now joined the capitalistic class and become the "Oil Queen of the West." I do not intend to deal with the Fuego Oil Company. It has no connection with or reference to tempus fugit, which in Russian—pardon me, in Latin—means "time flies." Perhaps it would be better for me to quote:

In time the ignorant may become learned, the foolish may be made wise, and the wildest, wanton maiden may be brought to a modest matron.

The hon. member for Southeast Grey has not brought forward any solution of our present problems, other than to say, as reported on page 1694 of Hansard:

The attempt of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is to build a social order or society which will serve mankind, instead of allowing a social organization to continue which makes mankind serve the system.

That is a mere platitude, not a plan. I would be daring indeed should I suggest to the lady member a plan that is claimed to be a formula for happiness, but I am not suggesting it impolitely, and I suppose if it appears in the Mail and Empire it must be all right. This paper has an article under the following heading:

Formula for Happiness

I will read a portion of it:

Ten happy couples, living within a short distance of each other in Cape Breton—some of them next-door neighbours—celebrated on Sunday their golden weddings. Judging by the names in the Sydney Post they were all Scots or of Scottish descent. The MacPhees have fifty grandchildren; the MacIsaacs, twelve children, twenty-two grandchildren and three great grandchildren; others somewhat smaller families. Inevitably they were asked the secret of long life and happiness.

An hon. MEMBER: Tell your Prime Minister.

Mr. WILSON: Here are some of the answers:

"We have always had food and love and laughter," said Mrs. MacDonald, "and these are the only real necessities of life. When women today talk about necessities they mean automobiles and telephones, electric lights and permanent waves. I never had any of those things. When I was married women didn't want anything but homes and babies."

An hon. member has said: "Tell your Prime Minister." Well, I can include the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), the leader of the party immediately opposite me and myself, so there might be a race. But I do not think there will be one, because I shall not be a starter, not even an added starter.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre yesterday made reference to my leader in these words:

Does anyone mean to say that the great fortunes in Canada have been built up by what could be termed "honest toil?" Has the Prime Minister's own fortune been gained by honest toil?

Then, after quite a dispute in the house it will be remembered that when the Speaker was about to name the hon. member, the latter started to say:

I withdraw my imputation that the Prime Minister has made his money dishonestly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I point out that I did not say I withdrew "my" imputation. The hon. gentleman is misquoting Hansard.

Mr. WILSON: I beg pardon. I should have said "any imputation."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not mean to impute anything of the kind.

Mr. WILSON: I do not mean to impute to the hon. member anything except what is found in Hansard. I apologize for the error.

Hon. members know the difference between an accident, a coincidence and a habit. An accident is when a man for the first time throws himself out of a third-story window. If he throws himself out a second time, that is a coincidence, and if he throws himself out a third time, that is a habit. I think in this case it has become a habit, and it does not do credit to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The hon. member for Southeast Grey thinks she has a remedy, and if I may quote from the Globe, this is it:

> There are the presses, many in need of a run, and no scarcity of paper and ink, with pressmen and printers eager for work. There should be nothing more necessary than to get up steam—

If she had anything to do with the matter, I think they would be run by oil.

> —turn on the juice, or turn the wheels by foot power. Anyway, start the press. The output would "appall" even the workmen. By a little overtime there soon would be so much money that it might be carried away by the armful. It all seems so simple. Let the designers turn out handsome bills. Let them be crisp and crinkly so that there may be melody as they circulate. Money talks now. Make it sing—with Miss Macphail conducting.

That is from the Globe.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. member is not quoting the hon. member for Southeast Grey.

Mr. WILSON: No.

Mr. IRVINE: That is good enough for the Globe, but it would never do for the hon. member for Southeast Grey.

Mr. WILSON: What solution has the hon. member for Southeast Grey? Nothing but the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, nothing but coal, cattle, fraud; she asks us to carry out what? The bolshevism of Russia. She suggests inflation and makes political capital out of the worldwide depression. In a period of deep and widespread depression she keeps in line with the leader of the opposition, who raises a constitutional question. Well, constitutional questions will not fill empty stomachs. To the mercantile class he holds out the prospect of greater markets in countries which have closed their doors to us by prohibitory tariffs. In connection with the inflation of currency as proposed by the Woodsworth-Macphail cohorts of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation I should like to tell the story of Hans.

In 1903 there was a run on the banks in the United States. The banks were short of cash, and a German, fearing for the money he had in one of these banks, went in to see the teller. The teller told him to go to the bank manager. The bank manager met him and said, "It is just like this, Hans. We are short of cash at the present time, but we will give you a certificate showing that you have that amount of money here." "Yes." said Hans, "but I do not quite understand it yet." The bank manager repeated his explanation, and then asked, "Do you understand it now, Hans?" "Oh yes, I quite understand it now." said Hans. You mean that if tonight my baby wakes up and asks for milk I can give him a milk ticket." I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the working men of this country want this kind of inflation or deflation they will find that they will be paid in dollars that are worth not more than forty or fifty cents. When they want milk they will get milk tickets. Is it not true that the remote-control leader of the Ontario Liberals said that he was swinging to the left? After the spectacle of the leader of the opposition in connection with the empire trade pacts it would be quite in order for him, I should think, to embrace the whole Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, including the member for Southeast Grey.

Speaking of the radio problem, I notice that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), is much concerned about the freedom of the air. Last night I had a dream, and I heard the following:

> Russia: This is radio station "Moscow" speaking. Hello Canada, this is Russia.
> CCF: Hello Russia. This is the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation—Woodsworth speaking.
> Russia: Are we free to talk?
> CCF: O.K. No need to use the secret code.
> Russia: How are you making out with the coal, cattle and oil deal?
> CCF: Not so good as last week. Bennett stepped into a weir, and upset our plans.
>
> Russia: Too bad. What does Mackie think?
> CCF: He is walking up and down the corridors damning Bennett.
> Russia: What does the oil queen of the west say?
> CCF: She says, "Just another phase of the question showing the Prime Minister's determination to uphold law and order and his insistance upon Canada meeting all her obligations at home and abroad—mere piffle, but you can't change him."

Russia: Is the Toronto Star still playing its part?

CCF: Oh yes. They sent out this telegram to all their correspondents in Ontario:

Toronto, Ontario.

"Please interview the Conservative member of parliament in your riding on the Soviet trade question determining his views of what the government's action will or should be on guaranteeing bank advances to finance the deal whereby Soviet offers to take $7,000,000 worth of Canadian cattle and hides in barter for oil. Point out that in Britain the government has created a department for the purpose of guaranteeing loans by banks in connection with foreign trade transactions and the Canadian government has guaranteed bank loans in connection with wheat so there would be nothing new in guaranteeing bank loans in connection with a huge deal in cattle. The work of carrying cattle to Russia and bringing oil to Canada would proceed simultaneously and the import would pay for the export. The banks would be paid off and the guarantee effaced. Aluminum people in Montreal who have had big deals with Soviet say they are quite satisfied. They have never lost a cent or had any difficulty getting payment. They regard Soviet as one of most stable governments in Europe. This is strikingly confirmed by speaker in United States congress today urging resumption trade with Russia. After explaining these developments to your M.P. ask him whether this deal promising first opportunity to rehabilitate the primary producer and first spender merits support. Does he favour the government's supporting the deal to extent of guaranteeing up to $4,000,000 pending completion of shipment, especially in view of fact that no organization has lost a cent in trading with Soviet government. Please wire soon as possible."

Some members who were interviewed by the Star did not know what they were doing when they gave their views, but many others absolutely refused to say anything whatever until the question was put before us by the government, and our views never appeared in the Toronto Star. I now continue with the radio conversation:

CCF: I am afraid that that telegram sent out by the Star will not be as effective in the future. Many are sorry now and regret going off at half-cock.

Russia: Are any of them wise to the fact that all is not well in Russia? The great experiment is a failure.

CCF: Cut off. Here comes Rhodes the watchdog of the treasury, and Bennett.

All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that for those people who are not satisfied with living in Canada, there are other places to which they can go without being deported. This country is good enough for me and I would rather remain under the folds of the union jack than under any other flag. I am not at all concerned about introducing a new flag for Canada. I am quite satisfied with the old one, because we shall never have a flag that carries with it all the prestige of the union jack, under whose folds, no matter where you go, once you become a British subject, you are protected and your rights are respected on every land and sea. So far as I am concerned I hope that I shall always be classed as a red-blooded Canadian.

A great many people think that conditions today are absolutely unlike any we have experienced before. Well, I am not very old, but I have seen prices as low as they are now, although I have not seen the depressed conditions so widespread. But what did the pioneers of this country do when they were faced with conditions much harder than those of today? They tightened up their belts and went out into the woods and cut homes for themselves out of the forest. They used the wood in the box stoves; I have seen that done myself. We had coal oil for lighting, and later gas, and then electricity. The pioneers of this country were men who were proud of the country of their adoption, and I thoroughly believe that Canadians will come through this depression successfully; for on no other country in the world has Providence smiled so beneficently.

My time is nearly up. In closing I should like to quote from a Canadian poet who comes from the county which I have the honour to represent. In The Khan's Canticles, R. K. Kernighan writes:

> Oh, shall we shatter our ancient name,
> And lower our patriot crest:
> And leave a heritage dark with shame,
> To the infant upon the breast?
> Nay, nay—and the answer blent
> With a chorus is southward sent:
> "Ye claim to be free—and so are we;
> Let your fellow freemen alone:
> For a foreigner never shall place his heel,
> On the men of the northern zone."
> Shall the mothers that bore us bow the head
> And blush for degenerate sons?
> Are the patriot fires gone out and dead?
> Ho! brothers stand to the guns!
> Let the flag be nailed to the mast,
> Defying the coming blast!
> For Canada's sons are true steel,
> Their metal is muscle and bone,
> The foreigner never shall place his heel,
> On the men of the northern zone.
> Oh, we are the men of the northern zone
> Where the maples their branches toss,
> And Great Bear rides in his state alone,
> Afar from the Southern Cross.
> Our people shall aye be free,
> They never will bend the knee,
> For this is the land of the true and leal
> Where freedom is bred in the bone—
> The foreigner never shall place his heel,
> On the men of the northern zone.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. WILSON: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to hear an hon. member say "Hear, hear."

Now they ask, and it is only a suggestion of a member on this side: How would you go about improving some of the conditions? In the first place I would certainly try to put agriculture on its feet.

Mr. SPENCER: How?

Mr. WILSON: By dealing internally with the troubles we have, that is with the milk problem, the butter problem, the dairy problem, the meat and meat products problem, right at home. I know you are going to say it is a provincial affair. Yes, but we can overcome all this; we have overcome a lot of things since the right hon. Prime Minister came into power, and furthermore, though constitutionally it may be wrong, constitutionally we have done many things that are not exactly according to the law. The carrying out of the empire pact will, I think, lead to great advances, if we carry them out in the spirit and not in the letter of the law as some have argued. We wasted seven weeks here discussing the treaties from the constitutional standpoint, and what the price of barbed wire is going to be, and the price of socks, cream separators, and so forth, we made ourselves the laughing stock of the world, because other parts of the empire had passed the treaties. As far as I am concerned, I hope to remain a Canadian and a British subject.

> To our British institutions and traditions hold we fast,
> Follow close to old Trafalgar, nail the colours to the mast,
> Clinch the ties that bind us to them, give the world no cause to think
> That this Empire's chains might sever at our firm Canadian link.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have often wondered why we come to parliament. But the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol) has enlightened me. He said the reason that we are here today is to encourage capitalists to invest their capital in factories and plants. I presume all would be well if the capitalists would only do that, but if they do not, evidently he has no other solution for our problem, and we must go on starving.

I was also glad to know of his acquaintance with our old friend, Karl Marx, and that he was able to distinguish at least three basic principles in the Marxian philosophy, namely, surplus value, the class struggle, and the materialist conception of history. But he merely named these; he did not go on to explain them, nor did he refute Marx, although he said that everyone knew that we have not a class struggle. I would like to ask, how does he account for all the struggles and conflicts that have gone on between the various classes all down through history, not only during the capitalist régime, but through feudalism and chattel slavery? In all these the workers had to fight with their masters, and the wage slaves under capitalism have to carry on the same struggle. Every advance they have made has been made through blood and tears.

Does the hon. member deny the fact of surplus value? How does the employer get his profit? Let me explain what surplus value is. Before a worker, a propertyless man who has no other way of getting a living, can get into industry, that is before he can get a job, there is first the understanding that he shall produce for his employer in values more than his employer gives him in value in return for his labour. If he is working eight hours a day, in say three hours he produces his own wages, then for the remaining five hours he is producing values for his employer. That, very briefly, is the surplus value theory of Karl Marx. No person employs a worker except under those conditions. There would be no reason for doing so. The reason employers will not employ workers today is that although they still produce a surplus, that surplus cannot be disposed of.

We are told that conditions today have arisen out of the world war, but we ask: What did the world war rise out of? Was it its own cause? As the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said in regard to another subject, every intelligent person realizes today that the German kaiser did not cause the war. The cause of the war was the conflict between the various capitalist countries to find markets for this surplus value that they had filched from their wage slaves. Through the development of capitalism and industrialism in every country it had become impossible to find markets for this surplus value that was accruing to the employers internationally. And that is the very reason why today we cannot have international concord or international action on the questions confronting the world.

I was very much impressed with the speech made by the hon. member for Labelle and his impassioned appeal for cooperation between the various classes in the community and the various parties in the country. But it is absolutely impossible to have cooperation between the exploiters and the exploited. There is no cooperation between the wolf and the lamb unless the lamb is inside the wolf. Nor is there cooperation between the workers in industry and the employer, because of the inherent exploitation that must exist. I am not blaming employers. My friends in the corner here usually blame the banks for the condition that this country is in, the fall in prices and so on. I blame neither the banks nor the employers; they are compelled by the necessities of the situation to eat or be eaten, to exploit or be exploited. The reason we find so many today placing the blame on the banks for the conditions under which we suffer is the lack of understanding of capitalism and how it functions. The banks are not in the banking business for the good of the country, they are in it for the good of the banks; and if the good of the banks and the good of the country are not in accord, then the good of the banks will prevail, until some stronger power than the farmers have at the present time takes a hand in the situation.

There is something very significant in the reception this resolution has received in the house on this occasion. If anything were needed to indicate the serious condition of the country it is found in the attentive hearing that has been given to the speeches on the resolutions. There has been quiet attention on this side and rather boisterous attention from the other side, but nevertheless attention—almost every man in his seat listening to what is said. We did not have that on other occasions when we brought such matters forward. It was driven home to me when the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) ended his speech with the words that the system as we have it now was finished. That statement met with laughter from the other side, but that laughter was only halfhearted; there was no enthusiasm behind it. It was not the spontaneous outburst you would have got in 1930 if such a statement had been made at that time. The statement, however, is true. It is not a laughing matter and that is why hon. gentlemen opposite did not laugh heartily. They all realize the truth and they express it in conversation outside no matter what they may say in the house.

Another realization is coming and that is that, the system being finished, there are only two alternatives. We shall have to reconstruct the whole system so as to make it work, or else we shall have to have socialism. The present system is based on competition and we must make the competitive principle work or adopt a cooperative system. And that is all that is meant when we use the word socialism.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

The constitutional question was raised by the Prime Minister very early in the discussion. I was glad to hear from the hon. member for Wentworth that we had done unconstitutional things already and that it did not matter so long as the results were satisfactory. I quite agree with him there. It does not particularly matter whether what is done is in accordance with the strict letter of the law so long as the results are in the interests of the people of the country. Indeed, after listening to the leader of the opposition during the last two or three years I came to the conclusion that there was no constitution left to violate, and my reading of history leads me to believe that the constitutional question is trotted out only when the ruling class does not wish to do something which ought to be done. As a matter of fact, raising the constitutional question is about the best way of passing the buck that I know of. Let us go back to the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931. In that act we find these words, which caused a good deal of discussion in the house:

and for the maintenance of peace, order and good government in the country.

By the insertion of that phrase the government took to itself the right to do anything it might see fit by order in council. It stated so very plainly, and the Minister of Justice, in replying to the criticisms that were made against that act, made this statement as reported in Hansard of 1931 at page 4439:

It is recognized that there is a national emergency. . . .

Another significant statement.

We recognize this emergency by the adoption of these words from the British North America Act, and they were placed in the bill as the foundation of our authority to pass such an enactment. They have nothing to do with the question of enforcement, they are merely a declaration to give us the jurisdiction which we know we have under the circumstances but of which we want to be sure.

The act did say something with regard to enforcement, because we find in it these words:

All orders and regulations of the governor in council shall have the force of law and shall be enforced in such manner and by such court officers and authorities as the governor in council may prescribe.

That, if you like, is going a long way towards unconstitutional action. So that with the passing of that act, and with the precedent set us by the Prime Minister himself, it seems to me that a good deal could be done which the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation would like to see carried out. The measure that was adopted in 1931 was adopted for the reason that a national emergency existed, and the reason it did not go further was that the national emergency was not great enough. When the emergency does become great enough, other things that have to be done will be done and will be done constitutionally.

I do not think that as Britishers we should feel greatly disturbed over unconstitutional acts, because British history bristles with such acts. I suppose it was quite unconstitutional for the barons in the thirteenth century to bring a document to King John and tell him to sign on the dotted line. I remember quite well that in my history book I was taught at school that King John, with a smile on his face and rage in his heart, did sign on the dotted line. It was also I suppose quite unconstitutional during the Civil war in the reign of Charles I for the people to cut the king's head off. But who blushes today because that was done? These are some of the things we are proud of. Some hon. gentlemen here celebrate the glorious revolution of 1688. It is true the revolution was bloodless, but that was a mere accident. And they would celebrate it with just as much gusto if there had been considerable bloodshed. Yet they talk about unconstitutional acts.

What about the famous or infamous telegram sent by the Acting Prime Minister of Canada to a lawyer in Winnipeg during the general strike there? Let me read a telegram from Mr. Meighen to Mr. Andrews, of June 17, 1919.

> Notwithstanding any doubt I have as to the technical legality of the arrest and the detention at Stony Mountain, I feel that rapid deportation is the best course now that the arrests are made, and later we can consider ratification.

If the cooperative commonwealth acts on the same principle we will do things today which we can ratify later on, whether they are constitutional or not, and I do not see how the leader of the Senate could find fault; nor could the Conservatives in this house complain, because they made no complaint against the action indicated in this telegram when it was done. If therefore we find it necessary to arrest Mr. Meighen and others we can have the arrest ratified later. If we find that we have done anything illegal, we can ratify the arrest after we have held them in Stony Mountain or some other place for some time. These however are minor points.

The great question that we have to solve is why and how we got into this state, and how we are going to get out of our difficulties. It is quite useless for the Conservative party, as they did in 1930, to put on the shoulders of the Liberal party all the responsibility for the condition of affairs that preceded this administration, and it is equally useless for the Liberal party to place the blame on the Conservatives for the conditions that prevail today. I have no doubt these conditions would be pretty much the same if the Liberal party were in power, and that is not casting any reflections on them. We might as well get to the basis of the conditions and, instead of one party blaming the other, we ought to endeavour to find a solution. And let me say that it would be just as useless for the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation to try to place the blame on these two parties unless we ourselves intended to alter fundamentally the basis of the present social order.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the hon. member contend that if the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation were in power that conditions would be any different?

Mr. MacINNIS: No, not if the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation endeavoured to administer capitalism. The difficulties which arise are not caused by parties. When times were good the Liberal party governed well enough and I presume that if times were good today the Conservative party would govern well enough and there would be very little objection, especially from those who like that kind of thing. It would not satisfy me but that is neither here nor there. It would seem that businessmen can run their businesses only when conditions are favourable and the very fact that today they do not know what is wrong or what they should do to set things right is proof positive that they do not understand the fundamentals of their own system and how it operates. While things were prosperous the bigwigs of business thought that they were responsible for the prosperity. They were like the fly upon the wheel; as long as the wheel was turning the fly thought it was responsible for its revolving, but when the wheel stopped, the fly had no idea why it had stopped. Business has slowed down and these people do not know what is wrong or how to right the condition. The fault does not lie either with the lack of business ability upon the part of businessmen or with the lack of administrative ability upon the part of governments. It is because of qualities which are inherent in the capitalistic system.

Speaking upon the question of unemployment during the session of 1931, I stated that the root cause of the condition which prevailed in the country at that time was the private ownership of the means of production—capitalism. It was the private ownership of the means of production which is vested in a few hands and which operates only when the owners can make a profit. I challenge anyone to prove that that is not the case. We have a superabundance of commodities on one side and we have misery, want and starvation on the other. Why can we not take the abundance on this side and give it to those who are suffering in want and hunger? It is because between the abundance and the misery stands the ownership of the means of life. Until we have changed that social relationship there is nothing we can do that will be of any particular benefit or help in getting us out of our present situation.

There are those who say, like the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), that if we could only change men's hearts we could do it. Others say that it can be done by merely changing the monetary system but I have yet to see a monetary reform, I do not care from whence it comes, which will incline any employer of labour to give to his employee more of the actual value of his labour than he is now getting. By the very necessity of the case, the employer of labour is compelled to increase the spread between what the labourer gets in wages and what he takes in profits. Until we can solve this problem there is no use in putting forward monetary reforms or other palliatives.

Then we come to the matter of surpluses. At the present time it is impossible to dispose of the surplus which has been produced by labour. Despite this fact every employer of labour, not necessarily because he is greedy, not necessarily because he is anti-social but because of the inherent nature of capitalism, is compelled to lower still further the wages of his employees. He is compelled to do this in order that he may compete upon more favourable terms with other employers producing the same kind of commodity. Every time an employer of a particular class of labour, for example, shoe workers, reduces the wages of his employees, although he may be able to meet world competition, he is reducing the purchasing power in his own particular community. He is reducing the purchasing power at home in order to increase his ability to sell in markets abroad. Under the present system it is impossible to get away from this condition, and we cannot meet the situation by offering some sort of monetary reform.

Capitalism was able to continue just as long as this surplus production could be disposed of, either by being invested in new capital or through being wasted in war. However, whether it was invested in new capital or wasted in war, there was always left behind a load of debt upon which interest must be paid. The problem facing the governments of the industrial countries of the world is how to meet the ever-increasing debt burden and the ever-increasing expenses of unemployment out of an ever-decreasing revenue because of the slowing down of the production of wealth.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol) and the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Wilson) endeavoured to make up for their lack of knowledge of the policies of the socialist and labour movement in this country by trying to frighten the people of Canada with tales of Moscow, the Third Internationale, patriotism and so forth. The hon. member for Westworth said that if there were any one in Canada who was not satisfied with conditions as they existed he had better go to Russia. I know of many Conservatives who are not satisfied with conditions as they are in Canada; neither am I, but I have no intention of going to Russia because to do so would not rectify matters in this country. Canada is my native country, by accident of birth, I admit, but I am going to stay here and do my share in making conditions better.

To try to connect us up with the Communist party is certainly most foolish, because anyone who knows anything about the tactics of that party and who has read any of its literature, knows we come in for more condemnation at the hands of that party than does either the Conservative or the Liberal party. Let me read a short item in connection with the election in my constituency in 1930. I had there as opponents a Conservative and a Communist. It was rather strange that in every constituency where the Labour party ran a candidate in the dominion election of 1930 and in no other, the Communist party had also a candidate. This, I think, will bear out what I say. After referring to me in language that was anything but complimentary, the Communist party say:

> This is what the Labour party here offers to the workers of South Vancouver and Canada. The Communist party is in this campaign to expose the Labour party for what it is—a worse enemy of the workers than the avowed capitalist parties.

A rather peculiar feature of that campaign was that while I had two opponents who were supposed to be diametrically opposed to each other, neither of them said anything against the other in the election, but each of them turned his guns on me. In order to show where the sympathies of the Communist party went, let me read a little further:

Unfortunately, the Communist party in Vancouver South has a family name—Bennett—that may mislead some of the voters on polling day, but he earnestly hopes that no Conservative will vote for him in the belief that it is a vote for the leader of the Tory party.

This was because if they voted for Bennett in Vancouver thinking it was the then leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), those would be votes taken from the Conservative candidate in that election and consequently votes in my favour. The Communist party naturally were not in favour of that. I should like Conservative members to explain this if they can.

To deal further with the reference of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest to the philosophy of Karl Marx, I do not know whether this is the first time it has been quoted in the House of Commons, but I do not think it will do members any harm to get a better conception of that philosophy, of the genius of the individual concerned, whose monumental works, the analysis of capitalism, capitalist economists have for the last seventy years been trying to discredit and have been unable to do so. Let me read from his work, Capital, at page 533:

We have seen how this absolute contradiction between the technical necessities of modern industry, and the social character inherent in its capitalistic form dispels all fixity and security in the situation of the labourer; how it constantly threatens by taking away the instruments of labour, to snatch from his hands the means of subsistence, and by suppressing his detail function to make him superfluous. We have seen, too, how this antagonism vents its rage in the creation of that monstrosity, an industrial reserve army kept in misery in order to be always at the disposal of capital; in the incessant human sacrifices from among the working class, in the reckless squandering of labour power, and in the devastation caused by a social anarchy which turns every economical progress into a social calamity.

Is that not absolutely true of the present situation? I can prove this by quotations from various other sources, but let me give one. On December 27 last the Vancouver Province had an editorial on the project which France has in hand at the present time of irrigating 1,000,000 acres of the Sahara desert. After referring to that immense project, that is expected to be at least partly finished by the end of three years, it goes on to say:

But to a disillusioned world the news brings no gleam of hope, no anticipation of happiness. It is true there are millions of people who could use the cotton that will grow on the new Sahara acres, if they could get it. But there are great quantities of cotton grown in the world now—in Egypt, in the United States, in India—and the market for it is dull and the price low. If the million acres of Sahara land come under cultivation by 1936 and begin to produce, then a million acres of marginal land in some of the countries that produce cotton now will have to go out of cultivation or be turned to some other crop.

Maybe they will start growing wheat.

Unless, of course, the market can be widened. We have come to the point in cotton, and not a few other things, where the irrigation of one desert means the creation of another.

If those who do not understand Marx or have never read him will take a little time to read what he has written and then compare it with conditions as they find them today, they will very soon be convinced of the wonderful insight of the man. Let me read a little further from the famous thirty-second chapter of volume one:

That which is now to be expropriated is no longer the labourer working for himself, but the capitalist exploiting many labourers. Thus expropriation is accomplished by the immanent laws of capitalistic production itself, by the centralization of capital. One capitalist kills many.

That is what the hon member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), was telling us this afternoon in such beautiful language. I quote further:

Hand in hand with this centralization or this expropriation of the many capitalists by the few, develops, on an eevr-extending scale, the cooperative form of the labour process, the conscious technical application of science, the methodical cultivation of the soil, the transformation of the instruments of labour into instruments of labour only usable in common, the economizing of all means of production of combined, socialized labour, the entanglement of all peoples in the net of the world market, and thus, the international character of the capitalistic regime.

I hope the hon. member for Toronto Northwest will continue his studies of Marx, and we may expect to hear more from him in the future. In face of the situation that is confronting us, in face of the fact that we have an abundance that we do not know what to do with, all that the present ruling classes are able to offer us is more economy. All that they can offer to a people now almost suffocated with the abundance of their own production is more economy. Let us see what this economy means. First of all it is practised by the cutting of wages. Lowered wages mean less purchasing power. Less purchasing power means a lowered consumption of goods. A lowered consumption of goods means the slowing down of industry. The slowing down of industry means more unemployment. More unemployment means more governmental expense, and that means more taxation and more difficulty in balancing budgets. Then we arrive at the stage where in order to meet the situation we have to economize still further and go around the whole vicious circle again. That is the solution, and the only solution, that the present ruling classes have to offer. We maintain that all the factors that were present in 1928 and 1929 at the height of the boom are still here. We have our natural resources; we have the same mechanical means of production; we have the human skill and technical training and all the human labour necessary to operate our machines; and yet because the employing class cannot make a profit out of the operation of their equipment, factories and machines are idle, and thousands starve.

It is said that Canada will not stand for socialism. Well, sir, I say that there is one thing that will prevent socialism coming in Canada, and that is that those now responsible for affairs in this country make capitalism function in the interests of the people. That is their business, and if they cannot do it, no one else can.

I was interested in noting that even as great a conservative as President Hoover has come to the realization that governments must take more interest and a more constructive part in the organization of production. In his last message to congress in December, 1932, in closing President Hoover made this statement:

> With the free development of science and the consequent multitude of inventions some of which are absolutely revolutionary in our national life, the government must not only stimulate the social life, the government must stimulate the social and economic responsibility of individuals and private institutions but it must also give leadership to cooperative action amongst the people which will soften the effect of these revolutions and thus secure social transformations in an orderly manner—

That is what we are after—social transformations in an orderly manner.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion we have finished the upbuilding of our industrial civilization; it is now more than sufficiently equipped to supply the needs of the population for many years to come. Such being the case, the government of this country, in common with nearly all the governments of the world, is facing a very serious situation. It is faced with a collapsing social structure. It is not responsible for that impending collapse. I take it that it built as well as it knew. Most of us thought that we were living in the best of all good worlds, a world in which it was possible for everyone to get richer than everyone else, provided we were willing to work hard and take advantage of the need of our fellows.

The system is slowing down and failing to provide for our needs in even the inadequate way in which it once did. The slowing down is the direct result of its own development. Change now is inevitable. The only choice is to faciliate change or oppose it. Ours is the opportunity of helping to bring in the new social order which will make the bounty of nature as organized by the intelligence of man available to everyone. But changes do not wait for our pleasure, and we oppose them at our peril.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): The resolution moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) surely merits reasonable consideration and is a subject of fair debate. So far as I can see there is no need for any rash imputations from either side, nor is it necessary to bring in personalities. The resolution clearly sets forth the line of thought which divides the government from those in this corner, and indeed divides the official opposition from those in this corner. I have been surprised that so little interest has been manifested in a question which will shortly be, and is now in fact, an issue not only in Canada but throughout the world, and one which will undoubtedly be the issue at the next election in Canada, whether we wish it or not. I am surprised that the government has not taken a deeper interest in the issue. Only two government members have spoken, one of whom told us that he has been silent in the house for twenty-one years, and now he comes out in defence of the capitalist system. I hope he will not take it unkindly when I suggest to him that if he has been successful for twenty-one years with his tactics of silence, it was a great pity to break it, because I do not think he will be nearly as successful making speeches as he was by saying nothing.

I am surprised that some of the members of the official opposition have not had anything to say on this question. The hon. member from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) has declared from the floor of many platforms in the western provinces that there is nothing in the program of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation which has not been in the Liberal program from time immemorial, and that he supports our platform in every detail with the exception of its land policy. I am surprised that he has had nothing to say in this debate. I had hoped that he would tell us just how far he was willing to go on this resolution, which marks the only real difference of opinion in this house.

We had an election in Calgary very recently. It was for a provincial seat covering practically the territory of two federal ridings. In that contest, which was held under the proportional representation system, we had the Conservatives and the Liberals joined together under a new name. Neither party dared to run a candidate under the banner of either Liberal or Conservative. They both joined together as against the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation candidate. What was the result of that election? A little over two years ago the Liberals and the Conservatives combined had a surplus over the Labour candidate of 24,988 votes. The territory was not precisely the same; in fact, the area left out in this most recent election included a large agricultural district in which we would have expected to get ninety per cent of the votes. But we may take the vote in the recent Calgary by-election as representing the relative strength of the two forces—the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and the capitalist forces. At that election we reduced the majority of 24,988 to something like 1,800. That would seem to indicate that the people in the country are more interested in this question than some hon. members of this house.

This resolution goes to the very heart of the present economic system. It implies, if it does not definitely state, that the capitalistic system, or the economic system under which we are now living, has distinct characteristics. One of these is the private ownership of public utilities and public lands, or what should be public lands, and power which should be public power, and sources of wealth of that sort. It next implies that the method of capitalism is competition, and that competition has led to anarchy within the nation and bloody wars outside. It implies also that the object of capitalistic production is profit. This resolution implies—and I want hon. gentlemen to listen, because some of them have suggested that no proposals have been made—first, public instead of private ownership; cooperation instead of competition; production for use instead of production for profit. It stands for a planned control of our national economy instead of the present anarchy. It stands for the priority of human needs over property rights. It stands for international peace, to come as a natural consequence of cooperation, instead of international strife inevitable in a condition of competition such as we have at the present time.

These, Mr. Speaker, are our proposals. And I take it that there is room for debate on them. We are perfectly willing to be shown that these proposals are impractical, if the hon. gentlemen who are so interested will undertake to show it. These are our proposals, and we turn to the government and to the opposition and say: What are yours? Have they ever been articulated? The government's attempted remedies are already on the scrap-heap. The first was increased tariffs. Have the tariff increases done anything to improve business? Have they wiped out unemployment or done anything to meet the immediate needs of the hour?

Mr. VALLANCE: You voted for it.

Mr. IRVINE: My hon. friend is having one of his dreams. I am telling him and telling this house that as far as solving the economic problem of Canada is concerned, tariffs have failed. But that does not say you can do without tariffs, or that I would not vote for them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker, I ask you to keep order when hon. gentlemen who are so anxious to talk when someone else is talking create disturbance. My hon. friend reminds me of a rooster that has been defeated in a barnyard fight and moves a little way off from the scene of his defeat and forthwith begins to crow up another reputation.

Mr. VALLANCE: Had you that all written out?

Mr. IRVINE: My hon. friend realizes that he has not been able to bring forth a single proposal in this house, nor has his leader, nor has his party. They have been expecting to gain power from the failure of the present administration, but up to the present time they have not advanced one constructive policy. If they have one, I am waiting to hear it, and if it is constructive enough I am with them, but so far nothing has come.

Mr. BRADETTE: The new Messiah!

Mr. IRVINE: And the devil! I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will allow me a little extra time, because it is impossible to reply to all these interruptions and carry on my speech and keep within the time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. IRVINE: This is the liberty of Liberalism that we have exemplified on the right. Let me summarize some of the features of our social and economic problem. First, there is a marked decrease in trade; second, there is falling revenue and there are unbalanced budgets everywhere, as bad in other countries as in Canada; third, we have paralyzed business; fourth, a growing army of unemployed; fifth, our farming industry is being carried on at a loss, in fact carried on at less than cost, farmers being unable to pay their taxes or their interest or reduce their debts; there is constantly increasing debt, and a hopeless outlook for the youth of Canada.

These are the facts. I do not blame these either on the opposition or on the government; I blame them on the system itself. They are natural consequences of the manner in which we have been doing business. We say that capitalism is on trial. Hon. gentlemen have done their best to turn the guns on the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. I want to make it clear that we are not on trial, that capitalism is on trial for its failures in the matters that I have pointed out. Our resolution implies that it has failed and cannot be reconstructed.

It is no cause for fear when we say that capitalism cannot be reconstructed. The economic system known as capitalism is only one of a number of economic systems known to history. That known as slavery and that known as feudalism both preceded capitalism. They, like this system, made their contribution and passed out of human history, and out of their ashes grew the present system. It, too, is falling to pieces and cannot be resuscitated, cannot be repaired. I have no hesitation in saying that if it could have been repaired the hon. gentleman who is now tinkering with it would have been able to do it. As far as I am concerned I have no interest whatever in putting someone else in to administer the capitalistic system in place of those now on the job. I believe there is at the head of the present government one of the greatest capitalistic minds that Canada has produced, and if he cannot make capitalism go, the hon. member for Vancouver-Centre and his leader will have a hard job making it go. The Liberal party has already tried to repair the system. It is only two years since the Liberals were compelled to give up their repairing in the interests of the country. I am therefore not interested in putting any other group in power. So long as capitalism has to be administered, let those who understand it go ahead with its administration. I say however in the first place that capitalism cannot be repaired because it cannot go on without foreign markets and there are not sufficient foreign markets in the world to take delivery of all the goods which the industrialized world is capable of producing. There can be no question about that. It has been estimated that the United States can make enough automobiles for eight worlds the size of ours and therefore they must distribute automobiles throughout the world. But so can Canada make enough automobiles for several worlds; so can Great Britain, and so can other industrialized countries. Now, where are the foreign markets for automobiles? And what is true of automobiles is equally true of everything else that is manufactured generally throughout the world.

Every industrialized country in the world today has a surplus, and to a very large extent a surplus of the same sort of goods which every other country has to offer; so that capitalism without foreign markets cannot go on. There are no foreign markets to take the surplus. It may be asked, why cannot capitalism go on without foreign markets? The reason is that capitalism, because it is capitalism, never has distributed and never can distribute sufficient purchasing power in the process of production of any commodity to enable the people concerned to buy the output, so that there must remain a surplus at the end of each producing year, and that surplus cannot be distributed because capitalism has failed to provide the purchasing power necessary for the purpose. Hence a surplus for which foreign markets are sought. Our own Prime Minister has suggested that a favourable balance of trade is imperative to the wellbeing of Canada today. But how can every nation in the world obtain a favourable balance of trade? That is an impossibility; so that if capitalism depends on nations retaining favourable balances of trade then obviously the system is absolutely doomed.

The next reason why capitalism cannot be repaired is that already the field for the investment of capitalistic surplus has narrowed almost to the vanishing point. For instance, if an hon. member had a million dollars which he wished to invest today he would have a great deal of trouble finding where to put it so as to get back with safety his investment plus ten per cent. Where would he put it? Not in railways, not in coal mines, not in agriculture, not in pulp and paper, not even in the bonds of the state, because that is no safer than the people's ability to pay taxes. There is therefore really no safe place in which capitalistic surplus can be invested either at home or abroad.

Now what happens when you cannot find profitable investments for surplus capital? Simply this: capitalism stops. The dynamic force of the system is the hope of making a profit, and when you have taken away all chances of profits it stops the investment of capital. The hope of profit is to capital what gasoline is to a car, and if there is no gasoline obviously the car stops. That is the second reason why capitalism cannot be repaired.

The third reason is that the debt structure which has been built up under the capitalistic system has been so constructed that its collapse is no longer a matter of prophecy but of mathematical certainty. The reason why it collapses is that the debt charges have become so great, they take so much of the national income, that standards of living cannot be maintained if they are paid. And already a number of nations have repudiated their debts. Germany has repudiated; France has repudiated; Belgium has repudiated; Czechoslovakia has repudiated, and Great Britain has given her last notice that she will never pay any more under the old conditions. And Calgary has repudiated. Now, these are only the beginnings. There is no question at all that the debts of the world cannot be paid—four hundred billions of dollars of an international debt, and we have approximately twenty billions of interest bearing debts in Canada which cannot be met as things are. These will be cancelled because there is nothing else to do with them. They cannot be paid in gold because there is only eleven billion dollars of gold in the world, nor can they be paid in goods because the people whom we owe have already so much goods of the kind which we would give in exchange that they do not know what to do with their own surpluses, so that they will not take delivery of ours. Indeed, they have built up tariff walls to protect themselves against receiving goods in lieu of debts. Therefore the debt system will crush the capitalistic system. It may be that while the present government is in office it will have to do the cancelling of international debts so far as Canada is concerned, and in that event, I would point out, that would not be capitalism. Capitalism never cancels anything, but when these debts are cancelled it will be a clearing away of the debris so as to make it possible to lay the foundations of the new social order which we propose.

Let me point out something else in connection with capitalism. Technological unemployment is a fact. A large percentage of the unemployment today throughout the world is attributable to the fact that mechanical contrivances of one kind or another have supplanted men. We are told by technocracy that the tendency is towards the reduction of the human element to zero in the production of goods, and judging from the growing army of unemployed there certainly does seem to be some reason for the conclusion arrived at in this regard.

Now what does this government, what does this opposition propose to do with regard to unemployment? If you have a cure for unemployment, put it on the table and let us have a look at it. If you have a cure for the burden of national and international debts, let us hear what it is. If you have a cure for the overproduction of farm produce, let us know what that cure is, because we are willing to listen. It may be that capitalism can be rebuilt. I am arguing that it cannot, but if it can be, then let us see how you propose to do it. But in my opinion capitalism should not be rebuilt even if it could be, and I argue that it should not be rebuilt chiefly because of the manner in which it distributes the national income. The national income to-day is divided by a mechanical method. There used to be a time when it did take a great deal of work and thrift for a man to become wealthy. That was before machinery made such a contribution to the production of wealth; but since it became possible to invest savings in bonds there has been no further need for anyone to work if he has been fortunate enough to be left an inheritance of bonds payable in twenty, thirty, forty or fifty years, at five and one-half per cent. The only thing such an individual needs to do is to hold his mouth to the spout, and if he has not enough intelligence to find the point someone will show him, and if he is not physically fit to stand with his mouth open at the spout, someone will support him while he does so.

Capitalism divides the wealth of the country unfairly and by mechanics. That machine is made up first of natural resources such as land, timber, minerals and water powers. Next is the monopolistic control of the machines that have been produced by thousands and thousands of men in all ages and which have contributed to human wellbeing. Next we find privileges—banking privileges and charters and tariffs and other things that enable people to acquire wealth easily. This great machine is put together and held together by an interlocking directorate, at the very centre of which is finance. They proceed then to divide wealth by machinery and, as someone has said, this process is very much like the cream separator. The farmer puts his milk into the big can at the top while the working man turns the handle; centrifugal power divides the cream from the skim milk. All the cream comes out the spout into the capitalist's mouth, while the skim milk goes into the mouths of everybody else. When the capitalist is filled up with cream, he stops the machine and the people do not get even skim milk. That is how the wealth of this country is divided; it is divided mechanically, and no matter how much you may hope and pray, as long as that machine is working the cream always will come out the cream spout and the skim milk come out the other. We say that that division is unfair and that it must be stopped, but we contend that it cannot be stopped under the capitalistic system.

I pause now to ask both parties if they will kindly tell us how they propose to divide the wealth of the country in the future. How do you propose to divide incomes in a different manner than that being employed today? How do you propose to meet the difficulties which I have enumerated? If you have a policy, let us hear it. The people of this country want to know what it is. We have not so much time in which to find one if one has not already been found. Things are moving much faster towards disaster than most of us are aware, and if the government or the opposition has a policy, this is the time to say what it is.

I intend to utilize the rest of my time in dealing with the proposals of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. These proposals have been argued and put forth for several years by hon. members in this corner of the house. I could look up Hansards of the past and indicate to the house how resolution after resolution has embodied in part the principles of the present one. We have put forth from time to time policies with regard to finance, the socialization of credit, natural resources and planning. Do hon. gentlemen ask that we go into details at this moment and state exactly everything which should be done twenty years from now? If they do, then I reply in the words of one of the great leaders in this house, who was perhaps quoting another leader, by saying that we will prescribe those details when we are called in. It is the old parties and the capitalistic system which are on trial, the people of this country are the jury and the evidence is in every home in Canada. I have no objections to outlining our program, but we are not on trial. We refuse to enter the dock and take the place of that system which is on trial and which we say is bringing the people of Canada to distress and disaster.

First of all, we submit that we should plan our national life, and we propose to do that when we get the opportunity. In the capitalistic world at the present time planning not only is not done but is impossible. You cannot plan in a world which is competing; you cannot plan when you have thousands of individuals competing with each other because of personal viewpoints. You can plan only when you have control of the economic situation and we propose to take that control by, in the words of the resolution, socializing the means of wealth production, which are our natural resources, and the plant, equipment and financial structure of the country. These we say should be socialized. No attempt has been made by hon. gentlemen to show us that we can continue successfully under the capitalistic system; so far the only argument which has been advanced has been an indiscriminate condemnation of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. This I think is due either to lack of ability or lack of knowledge which would enable hon. gentlemen to criticize judiciously. We are putting forward a proposed system in general terms, and we believe that planning will be an important essential in the introduction of that system.

Next, we want to nationalize or socialize —I use the terms synonymously—the natural resources of the country. Let me illustrate by a reference to the water-powers of Canada what we mean by that. Surely no one in this house will say that the water powers of the St. Lawrence should be voted by this or any other house to any individual or group of individuals. Surely we will all say that if the water-powers of the St. Lawrence belong to anybody they belong to all Canadians, not only those now living but those who will be here a century from now, those who will be here a thousand years from now—they belong to all Canadians for all time. To vote that authority and control of these powers be put into the hands of one little group, to be passed on to their children's children, while all the rest of Canada pay tribute, is too absurd for comment. We propose to take these over as the common right of the people of Canada.

Let me give another illustration. We are told by the technocrats that one hundred men in the United States working in an up-to-date factory equipped with modern machinery can make enough bricks for all the United States. Is it fair to allow such a machine to be controlled by an individual or group of individuals? It used to take hundreds of thousands of men to make these bricks; they used to receive wages with which they bought goods and thus increased business. They were able to make a living for themselves without being forced upon charity. Now, because of the control of this machine being in the hands of one corporation, vast numbers of people have been put out of employment. Did the people who now control this machine make it? No. That machine was not made by any single individual or by any single nation; that machine represents the cumulative creative genius of mankind. It is the heritage of man and is not for sale. There are some things which cannot be bought, no matter how much money there may be with which to buy them, and that machine is one of them. It cannot be bought, because no man has the right to sell it; it is the heritage of mankind. We propose to take over such machines and run them in the interests of all the people rather than allow them to be controlled by one or two.

Next, we propose to socialize the credit system of Canada, which represents ninety-six per cent of all the money distributed throughout the country. That money is distributed by the bankers of Canada. The banks themselves have no credit; they are simply empowered to administer the credit of the people of Canada. That credit certainly has not been well administered in the past; it has been excellently administered of course from the bankers' point of view or from the point of view of private ownership and control, but not from the point of view of the well-being of the people and of the business of Canada. I do not blame the bankers, because they are simply following the capitalistic system, and as long as they follow that system they will continue to do what they have been doing. But I argue that we cannot continue, that we must change the system. No government can meet the conditions described as long as they hold on to the capitalistic system. The banks cannot do other than what they are doing as long as they hold on to the capitalistic system. No institution under capitalism can do other than it is doing today while that system lasts. The argument is advanced by the government and the opposition that that system must last, that it is a good system, and that we cannot improve upon it. I argue that the system cannot last; that it is a bad system and that we must improve on it or civilization will go down.

The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation guarantees to every Canadian economic security. We have in this country sufficient food, clothing and shelter, with our 10,000,000 people and all our plant equipment, to guarantee at least abundance of these necessaries to every Canadian. That cannot be done under the present system unless you go into debt to do it, or unless you organize charitable institutions to take over the work of distributing supplies. But it can and must be done under socialization.

Just one other point. Let me draw the attention of the house to the difference between the philosophy of capitalism and that of socialism. Capitalism took its rise in the midst of perpetual scarcity. Scarcity was not only perpetual; it was universal. There was not too much of anything but poverty. It follows that the natural law under a condition of scarcity would be competition. Every man will struggle and fight for the biggest share of that which is scarce if it is essential to his welfare. So that capitalism necessarily was a competitive system, and in competition the wage earner usually came off second best; because in the struggle for markets, reduction of overhead was essential and wages were usually the easiest kind of thing to reduce. The result was that the human element was left entirely out of account and the struggle went merrily on. Under present conditions we suggest we can begin our new system by laying down the cornerstone of the cooperative commonwealth on the bed-rock fact of abundance. There is in Canada abundance of food, clothing and shelter—I cannot go into all the other things, but I am claiming there is abundance of each of these three. Just as conflict and competition are the inevitable outcome of scarcity, so cooperation is the inevitable outcome of abundance. Therefore we have come to the place in history where it is possible to cooperate one with another. There is no more need in Canada to fight over bread than over water; there is no more need to fight over a home than over water. Our building materials and our men to build them are so abundant that every person in this country can have a home. There is no more need to fight over clothing, boots and shoes, furniture or other essentials of the home in Canada than there is to fight over water. There is simply an abundance of everything, so much so that our citizens are today being smothered in it and have not been able to find a way out. Our capitalistic protagonists, advocates and administrators have not been able to find means to distribute to the people of Canada the abundance that capitalism has produced. How are you going to distribute this abundance to the Canadian people this year? It cannot be done through wages, for there is no work. You cannot increase work, because there is a surplus already and no markets for what is on hand, let alone a further production. So there you are with an abundance at hand, yet holding up your hands and saying: Because we have a constitution and because capitalism must be sustained, we must allow the people to starve while we just sit here. I do not believe the people of this or any other country will stand for that very much longer. They are going to find some way of correcting the maladministration that I have indicated.

May I conclude by saying that the resolution moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, clearly cuts the line between capitalism and socialism. There is no question about that. It places the issue where it ought to be placed. The next fight in Canada will be between socialism and capitalism, and if hon. gentlemen opposite and to my right do not defend capitalism better in that election than they have done in this debate, then it is going to be too bad for hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe the issue is what I have said it is. In the place of private ownership, competition, debts and unemployment, we advance cooperation, social ownership and the use of commodities instead of holding them for profit.

Mr. J. EARL LAWSON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I accept the invitation, shall I say the challenge, of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), seconded to-night by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), that some of us on this side should discuss the resolution before the house. The hon. member for Bow River, in endeavouring to describe what he alleged to be the condition into which capitalism had put this country, chose to draw an analogy from the field of aeronautics. Hon. members who were in the house will probably remember that he said:

> We have been in an economic tailspin . . . for three years. We are now entering the fourth year, and any tailspin which is permitted to go unchecked will sooner or later reach the nose-dive stage.

Unfortunately, the hon. gentleman illustrates very clearly his lack of knowledge of aviation. Any skilled pilot will take an ordinary flying machine out of a nose dive. He will take it out of a bank. He will take it out of a falling leaf. He will take it out of an upside down or reverse position. His one fear is when he gets into a tailspin; if he does, he has great difficulty in relieving himself of that condition to get into any other position, whatever it may be.

Later on in his speech the hon. gentleman propounded to the house and to the country that the group with which he allies himself is offering leadership to Canada. He says with respect to that leadership: It may be wrong; it may be stupid; it may be futile; it may be anything you say about it, but at least we are offering leadership. I say to the hon. gentleman that I fear that the leadership which he and his group are offering to this country displays a similar lack of knowledge of fundamental principles to that which he has so ably demonstrated in the field of aviation.

The hon. gentleman pithily punctuates his address to the house with a question: Can a state founded on social injustice and inequity, survive? Obviously the answer is no. But the point is: What is social injustice and inequity? That question is just as difficult of ultimate conclusion as is the abstract one frequently asked: What is truth? or another one which is rather facetious: How long is a piece of string?

The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) would have us proceed to our new order with little regard for our constitution or for constitutional methods. In justification of that position he illustrates the unconstitutional method adopted to procure, I think, the Magna Charta, in 1215; the unconstitutional methods adopted to secure other reforms from 1688 to 1690. But surely when the hon. gentleman so argues he loses sight of the fact that he is now living in the twentieth century, that civilization has progressed a long way, and that democratic institutions both in this country and in many other countries of the world have been firmly founded since the dark ages of 1200 and 1690.

The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), who has just taken his seat has also uttered one of those commonplaces which we hear so frequently from public platforms, and which was stressed by some of the advocates of cooperative commonwealth in the riding of West York, namely, that capitalism is on trial. I take issue with him on that statement. I do not believe that capitalism is on trial. Capitalism is merely an economic system which is permitted by a democratic people in a democratic country through the expression of the will of a substantial majority of the people. To my mind what is on trial, or what is the issue which my friends of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation are raising, is that democracy is on trial, not capitalism. The issue they raise is: Shall this democracy in the future be permitted to express its will by constitutional methods through the voice of the people, or shall the people of this country be circumvented and controlled by a state financial system and by state operation of industry and all other activities of our people? Shall we lose our individualism and be controlled in almost our every action? To my mind it is democracy, not capitalism, which is the issue raised by my hon. friends in this motion.

Several hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the motion have dealt with the monetary question. Time will not permit me to discuss that phase tonight, but I shall be glad to avail myself of a future opportunity if it arises, because hon. gentlemen in the far corner have complimented us on this side of the house by saying that we have neither the knowledge nor the wit to discuss that question.

Let us for a moment consider the resolution before the house:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Sometimes it is worded "and not for the purposes of profit." If I can judge aright from the utterances of hon. gentlemen, particularly of the last speaker (Mr. Irvine), the ultimate object of the program of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is to set up in this country complete state control. My first session in this house was 1929, and the first utterance I ever heard in this house with respect to the only state-controlled economic system which I know of in this world was a mention of Russia by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) who now leads this new social order. At that time he arose to inquire what steps were being taken by Canada to reestablish trade relations with Russia. Later on in the same session the same hon. gentleman moved a resolution asking for copies of all correspondence, reports and other documents relating to the activities of the Communist party in Canada during the year 1928. The then Minister of Justice objected to the house carrying such a motion on the ground that in the interests of the country the information should not be made public.

Later on in the same session the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, not having succeeded in carrying his resolution, took the then Minister of Justice to task because he had not given out the information. Speaking at that time he said:

I think this is a case of a bogy man held in reserve to be trotted out occasionally by the reactionary elements in the community. I do not see that we are helping the cause of good government in Canada by maintaining a secret police system which is constantly spying on certain groups.

Well, sir, time has proven that the position of the then Minister of Justice was well taken, because at that very time we had in this country a communist party financed by Moscow, subscribing to the Third Internationale, and endeavouring to disrupt, if I may use a phrase which is sometimes condemned, peace, order and good government in this Canada of ours.

My second session in this house was 1930 and in that session the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, when the estimates for external affairs were under consideration, was upon his feet inquiring of the then Prime Minister as to what were the relations existing between Canada and Russia. In the course of his inquiry and discussion he said:

To be more specific if, for example, a Canadian wishes to go to Russia can he obtain a passport here?

Then in 1931 or 1932 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did go to Russia on a visit, and learned of their great state-controlled system. In the session of 1932 he again questioned the government of the day as to what commodities were being traded in as between Canada and Russia.

My third session was 1931, and in the session of that year I find the hon. gentleman still displaying the same great concern over Russia and our trade with that country. Speaking on a resolution moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as reported on page 77 of Hansard of that year, said:

I wish I had time to go into a question which is of very great interest to me, namely, the ban which has been placed upon Russian imports. It is not so much the order in council even that I object to, as the statement which accompanied that order in council.

Then after quoting a statement made by a member of the government he said:

I regard that statement as an absolutely gratuitous insult.

Then I come down to the session of 1932. The hon. gentleman had made his visit to Russia. He took occasion to deliver an address in this house on a resolution moved by a member of this house, in which he extolled in most glowing language the benefits and enjoyments brought about under the Russian system of managed economy—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I will not sit down. A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman is not stating what took place. There was no extolling the wonderful privileges existing in Russia. I gave a statement as to what I found there, in some places praising it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That is not privilege.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —in other places condemning it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is making a speech.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not making a speech, Mr. Speaker. It is a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon member may not agree with the hon. gentleman who is now speaking, but this is not the time to reply. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) will have his opportunity to reply.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not replying, I am speaking on a question of privilege.

An hon. MEMBER: Of opinion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, it is a question of privilege. I absolutely deny the statement made by the hon. member.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman will have his opportunity to reply, as I have just pointed out.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As a member of this house I have a right to rise at any time on a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the hon. member is not speaking to a question of privilege.

Mr. LAWSON: I have no desire to do the hon. gentleman an injustice. Time will not permit me to quote at length from the speech which he then made. I have given to this house my interpretation and understanding of the words which I then heard, and which I have subsequently read, and if any hon. members of this house are interested in coming to a judicial conclusion as to whether or not I have misstated or misrepresented the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I refer them to his speech in Hansard of 1932, commencing at page 114. Before I finish I shall give a quotation from it to illustrate my point.

When I find in every session since I have been in this house the hon. gentleman so solicitous, so concerned for that country which has a completely state-controlled economic system; when added to that I find him blossoming forth in 1932 as the leader of this new —not political party—social movement, and when I find that the utterances of the gentlemen who support that movement lead ultimately to complete state control, then, sir, I think I am justified in coming to the conclusion that the cooperative commonwealth is communism; communism without bloody revoluton, if you will; communism without what these hon. gentlemen are pleased to term bureaucratic control, if you will, but nevertheless, as an economic system and in its essence I say that cooperative commonwealth is communism and communism is cooperative commonwealth.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Absolute rubbish!

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is what it is.

Mr. LAWSON: The remark of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) on this subject is only equalled by his knowledge of aviation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not as much in the air as my hon. friend.

Mr. LAWSON: Sir, I happen to represent in this house a constituency which in point of population is one of the largest in the Dominion of Canada, and ninety per cent of the people of that constituency are labouring people. So that there may be no misunderstanding either in this house or in that constituency as to where I stand, let me say here and now that I stand for capitalism as an economic system, as against communism or cooperative commonwealth.

Let me for a moment contrast the two systems. Time will not permit me to state in detail all the reasons for my judgment; I can deal with it only broadly. Capitalism in its origin as I understand it was individualism unrestrained. Communism in its origin was individualism absolutely throttled, choked.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is now, too.

Mr. LAWSON: Human nature, with its weaknesses, developed in the capitalistic system greed, avarice, acquisitiveness; so to meet that weakness in human nature governments from time to time, or the state if you will, legislated—legislated to restrain the full exercise of individualism; hence we have on our statute books what is sometimes called social or paternal legislation, such as old age pensions, workmen's compensation, mother's allowances and so on. Nevertheless capitalism with such restrictions still permits a degree of individualism, of initiative, of the exercise of ability. Communism found that with individualism completely throttled and choked it could not survive. Initiative was gone, the will to accomplish, the desire of the workman to be a craftsman disappeared and there developed in Russia under that communistic system what I think has been best described by Maurice Hindus as, "Nichevo",—"I should worry." Machines were ruined carelessly, production was slowed down, desire for achievement and inititative, were lacking. To counteract that situation communism started a system of bonuses in the form of holidays and trips to the seashore. They found that would not work. Then they changed their whole system of equality of wages and started paying higher wages in certain trades. That has not worked except to a comparatively small degree. So you find this communistic system gradually drifting back to the inherent principle of capitalism, namely that human beings are not automata, that you must allow the exercise of individualism, must have incentive, must allow initiative and reward it.

One hon. gentleman speaking to-day mentioned something that I frequently hear discussed. They are constantly talking about the state creating corporations and conferring upon them special privileges. They talk about the creation of financial corporations. Do my hon. friends who are the accredited representatives of labour loose sight of the fact that in this democratic state we create the labour corporation, the labour union? We create the great corporation of labour, the labour unions, and we confer upon this corporation many special privileges, two of which come to my mind at the moment—collective bargaining and picketing. In picketing we legalize for the labour corporation that which would be an offence against our law as something amounting to a restraint of trade. So let us remember that governments, either of to-day or of the past, have not just existed for the purpose of creating great financial corporations.

My hon. friend from Bow River told us this afternoon of several incidents that occurred one morning in the Toronto police court. I do not represent the city of Toronto, nor is any part of it in my constituency, but for ten years in the practice of my profession I frequented the police court in that city. I have frequented that court in the not far distant past, and never have I found occurrences such as were outlined by the hon. member for Bow River. I grant you that in the past, before the days of our social legislation which provided for the aged, I have seen old men come up, charged at their own request with vagrancy and sent to the gaol farm, which is not so bad a place,—I have been there—indeed, on one occasion by mistake they locked me in with a prisoner, so I have some experience of the place. But let us not forget that the city of Toronto, supported financially by this government and by the government of the province of Ontario, provides hostel accommodation and shelter, and also makes provision in other ways for those who are in necessity and want. I do not say that it provides luxuriously, but it provides for those who are in want, and I say here and now that if the hon. member for Bow River will at any time tell me any incident of a man willing to work, brought into the Toronto police court and charged with vagrancy and sent to gaol for three months, I will promise to get that man out at my own expense—and it will not take long.

In the constituency I represent, some of those gentlemen who are speaking for the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation have been addressing the unemployed. And bear in mind, there are many of them in my constituency, so that I have just as good a knowledge of their condition and the privations they are suffering, as have hon. gentlemen who talk so much about them in this house. But in my constituency they talk with loud acclaim about the fact that not a man is unemployed in Russia. Well, I imagine it is true. But may I point out that unemployed Canadians in this country, under the relief arrangements made by reason of the payments in taxes of the people who are working and are earning—these unemployed men in this country to-day, I say, are better fed and better clothed, and live under just as good conditions as the average employed worker in Russia.

I said a few moments ago that I would refer to part of a speech on Russia delivered by the leader of this new social order in 1932. I shall do so now. That speech always stuck in my mind. The hon. gentleman was telling us of some of his experiences. He said:

> I will give a little illustration which I believe I have published somewhere and which I think is very illuminating. We were waiting at a street corner to allow the traffic to pass and a group of high school boys and girls, ranging in age from fourteen to sixteen years, passed, each one with a spade upon his or her shoulder. They were jollying one another and joking as high school youngsters will, and on inquiring where they were going I was told that this was their free day—they have one day free in five, although I believe in the last few months the plan has been altered in some industries where they now put in six days straight—and they were spending their holidays by giving voluntary assistance to some particular state enterprise which was lagging behind its schedule.

I do not object to that; more credit to the boys and girls of Russia. But he continued:

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine a group of our high school boys and girls putting spades on their shoulders and starting off to tamp ties on the Canadian National railways? They might if we had such a plan. The fact remains that we lack that enthusiasm which seems to be so prevalent in Russia.

That speech stuck in my mind, and as the hon. gentleman uttered those words there occurred to me these few lines:

Breathes there the man, with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burn'd,
As home his footsteps he hath turn'd,
From wandering on a foreign strand!

In 1914 in this country we had boys just out of the high schools who shouldered, not spades but rifles, who offered to give up not their holidays but their lives in defence of this country and its institutions. We had young girls, some of them from homes of luxury and ease, who donned the uniform of voluntary nurses and went into our hospitals and made bandages and treated the wounded, living under conditions such as they had never been asked to put up with before. My hon. friend asks, Will you find Canadian high school boys and girls performing a service for Canada in the hour of necessity? I answer yes, a thousand times yes. And so good an opinion have I of the high school boys and girls of this country, of their intelligence and their ability to think, that I venture to say that when the opportunity is given them to express their views—because a great many of them will be of age by the next election—they will with one accord turn down this cooperative commonwealth proposition of communism for Canada.

My hon. friends sometimes lose sight of fundamental characteristics of human nature They seem to proceed on the assumption that all men are equal. That is a fallacy. Men are no more equal in mental capacity or moral fibre than they are in physical strength or stature.

Mr. IRVINE: Who ever said so?

Mr. LAWSON: I do not say that you have said so in so many words, but I do say that your reasoning is predicated upon that premise, and upon others equally fallacious which I could name. Now, I do not think that the capitalistic system is perfect. Just as we have had to make changes in the system in the past, sometimes by negotiation between capital and labour, sometimes by legislation of the state, so in my opinion we shall have to continue from time to time to make changes in the capitalistic economic system. But what I refuse to do is, willy nilly, without being convinced by sound argument and logic, to swap the devil I know for the devil I do not know. The aim of the capitalistic system, realizing as it does that all men are not equal, is to give to all men in this democratic country an equal opportunity to have the comforts of life, an equal opportunity to attain that which is best in life by the exercise of individualism, of initiative, of those qualities which raise man from the level at which he starts to the level he ultimately attains. May I suggest to some hon. members that because of the equal opportunities which have been given to us under capitalism there are many of us where we are today, in a much better position than we were a few years ago.

I stand for that system which will give equal opportunity. Communism has proved conclusively that it can make rich men poor but it has not provided one tittle of evidence that it can make the poor man richer. I am not interested in any economic system the object of which is to tear down, to make the rich man poor; but show me an economic system or a change in our present capitalistic system which will make richer the poor man in this country or give him an opportunity for a better and fuller life and I will support that change as forcibly and vehemently as I have tonight stood for the capitalistic system.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great pleasure during the last forty minutes to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson), having been interested not so much in what he said as in the adroitness and ability he displayed in trying to make the best of a bad case. His first statement was that the members in this corner of the house had no knowledge of fundamental principles. It is not necessary for me to say that if any hon. member or anyone in the country cares to look through Hansard for the last ten or twelve years he will find contradictions of the statement made by the hon. member. He is a clever debater, he is well liked by all of us, but he knew he had a bad case to defend, and, like the able lawyer he is, he started out to do the best he could. He spent much time in castigating the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre need fear no challenge in this house. He has his own record of which he need not be ashamed. Furthermore, he is looked upon by a large portion of the population of Canada as the greatest private member in this house, and I think that is the best compliment which could be paid to any hon. member.

The hon. member for West York attempted to criticize the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. Knowing that he had no case to make against us, he started off with the wrong premises. He said that the federation was communism and that communism was the federation. I wonder if the hon. member knows that so far apart are these two that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is being continually opposed by communists at the different elections. If the communist believed in the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, he surely would not oppose the thing in which he believes. I think these facts fully answer the argument advanced by the hon. member for West York.

I might remind the house that two years ago this same hon. member was the father of a bill which would have given statutory power to certain individuals to charge those poor, unfortunate people who were forced to borrow money from them a rate of interest, with all charges, amounting to about eighteen per cent. That is something of which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has never been guilty.

I was interested in reading yesterday a leading article in the Ottawa Citizen, written I might say before this debate commenced. I should like to quote a few lines, as follows:

> The vision of Canada's capacity to support a hundred million people, as Hon. H. H. Stevens pictured it recently, would become more real. At any rate, it would be seen that there is no need to submit to nationwide privation when the natural resources of Canada so far exceed the needs of the Canadian people.

And again:

> When the national policy of Canada is more along the lines of planned economy, with surveyors and engineers and accountants exercising more influence than speculators and financial promoters, the people of this country may look forward with more hope to the coming of the real commonwealth. After seeing Canada as the dominion land surveyors have seen it, there should be no denying of the true vision of Canada as a land of plenty.

As proof of the need for the debate which has taken place yesterday and today, I should like to quote from a statement made yesterday. I do this particularly for the benefit of the hon. member for West York. Speaking in the House of Lords on June 22, 1932, Lord Marley said:

> The capitalist system is tottering. Unfortunately we cannot be entirely detached because we are affected in the common smash . . . the difficulty of the system is how to consume the goods which the system is able to produce. The greatest danger in the world from the system is the danger that the only means of consuming these goods to an adequate extent is by another world war.

We were in a somewhat similar position in 1913. The war broke out and for a time saved the situation, because when all is said and done a war consumes the greatest amount of goods in a given time. There was a glut of goods at the time but the war got rid of them and to that extent saved the situation. However, in the long run debts were increased enormously and the aftermath of the war has been felt for some years in the extremely high taxes which the people have been called upon to pay in order to take care of the interest upon war bonds.

When I hear people talking about how to get out of this crisis, when I hear them saying that the only way is to work harder, produce more, save and consume less, I think of that well known character, the Reverend Malthus, who some one hundred and fifty years ago not only wrote but preached throughout the country that it was absolutely necessary to have disease and wars to take off the surplus population; that with the world as it was it was quite impossible for the people to be fed or clothed or looked after as to various necessities. That was quite possibly true in such an age of scarcity, but since then, as hon. members have pointed out, many forces have come to our assistance. We have had steam, the internal combustion engine and electricity. As has been pointed out in the last two days, we have passed from an age of scarcity one hundred and fifty years ago to an age of abundance today. Therefore, the solution which was suggested then, and perhaps entirely correctly, is quite out of date now, and the more we use antiquated remedies to try to cure the present crisis, the worse we shall make it. I quite agree with the statement made this evening by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) that in any cycle of time there never is sufficient money paid out in the cost of production of goods to enable the buying of the goods when they are put on the market. So many people think all that is wrong with our system is that some have too much and others have too little. That has something to do with the matter. The inequality of wealth has a good deal to do with the situation as we find it today, but it certainly has not everything. Even if we were able to equalize incomes, that would not solve the problem; it would probably alleviate a certain amount of suffering, but we would still be up against the glut of goods that is being continually collected under the system.

Let us consider for a few minutes the signs of the times. I notice the hon. member for West York did not refer to the signs of the times, because if he had his argument would have been on very bad ground. First of all, we have to recognize the fact that we have poverty and plenty side by side, poverty in the fact that people cannot buy the things they want, and plenty in the fact that there are storehouses and wholesale houses full of goods wanting buyers. Then we have inequality of wealth. It is not necessary for me to go into that, because anyone who is familiar with the figures that were given by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) yesterday, knows only three per cent of the people are in a position to pay income tax.

Again, the system is a debt creating system. I have yet to find the individual who can prove it is not. I think the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) mentioned that last year municipalities defaulted to the extent of $45,000,000. If hon. members care to go to the trouble of writing to the bureau of statistics, they will find that if they take just the bank debts, railway debts, government—federal, provincial and municipal—debts, and certain industrial debts, they alone amount to about nine and a quarter billion dollars. Many economists consider that our interest bearing debts in this country amount to between $17,500,000,000 and $20,000,000,000. The present deflation, which is perhaps being felt more than any other, particularly with regard to agriculture, has had the effect of doubling and trebling debts. Even if it had only doubled debts; if by halving prices, we had doubled debts, it would be only fair to reverse that process and by doubling prices to halve debts. That would be fair to everyone.

Let us look at the railway situation. Our railways, whether privately or government owned, are close to a bankrupt condition. Never before in our history has the big private railway of Canada has its shares selling so low on the market. Why are our railways suffering so badly? We have only to look at our international trade to find that it has fallen down to less than one-half. We must recognize the fact that the railways depend a good deal on traffic coming not only from across the border, but also from across the oceans, and if you halve traffic coming into the country, you will halve such traffic on the railways. Budgets, whether provincial or federal, are not being balanced. I know full well that whoever happens to be in charge of federal or provincial administrations are doing their best—and I do not for a moment question their sincerity—to balance their budgets, but they are not able to do it.

As mentioned the other day by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) the value of farm products has dropped no less than sixty per cent, and the total farm revenue has dropped during the last 3 years by $925,000,000.

I should like to put on record a few figures I had sent me the other day with regard to an average of five farms. They are so startling I think those who have not as close a knowledge of conditions in western Canada as they have of the east, may be interested in getting them. Five average farms were taken. It is true that these farms had one year been hailed out and one year dry, but otherwise they were good farms and in a good part of the country. The average acreage of those farms was 427 acres. The debt against each was $6,916. The debt and interest charges accumulated since 1929 amounted to $1,188.31. The crop this year was twenty-six and a half bushels an acre. Hon. members will agree that this is a very good return. The average total crop was 3,524 bushels. The total return from the crop this year per farm was $712.40. One would say: Well, possibly they would get along with that. Let us see where this revenue disappeared. The average payment to mortgage companies or owners per farm was $254.22. The average cash expenses, threshing, seed, twine, labour and taxes was $412.45. The average return from the crop left to the farmer for one year's food, clothing, fuel, running expenses and to pay debt was $45.73. Unless those farmers receive an average price of seventy cents per bushel basis Fort William on an average crop of an average grade, it will be impossible for them to pay their 1933 interest charges on the total debt plus cost of production, let alone any payments on principal. I put that on record because it is only a duplicate of what we find we are up against in many parts of Canada, and another reason we must look at this crisis in the serious way we should, and do more than parliament has done so far to remedy it.

We have the problem of inequality of income. I will hurry over the various reasons for that. We have the control of machinery, the appreciation of the machine going to the owners. That phase of the subject was enlarged upon this afternoon. We have the effect of interest charges, the stock market exploitation, which was so ably pointed out by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). We have financial control. I have not time to go into that, but every business man in the house knows what financial control means. Furthermore, as regards the mechanization of industry, although one might think it would not develop to any great extent in difficult times, I should like to point out that it is in these difficult times the mechanization of industry proceeds faster than ordinarily. Under the competitive system, the manufacturer who is going to sell goods has to cut down his cost price, and if he can find some way of cutting down his costs and his payroll by putting in labour saving machinery he will do it every time, and one cannot blame him under the present system. Therefore, we can fully expect in these difficult times, when manufacturers are at their wits' ends to know where to sell their goods, that they will make every possible use they can of the progress of mechanization. Our problem, it seems to me, is not to stop the machines from working, but to develop science and invention to the limit, and at the same time to find means of distributing the products of the machines. That is all we ask in the resolution now before the house. We are suggesting that the human being be put first, and the machine second; unforunately to-day the human-being often takes the second place.

We have to replace competition by cooperation. We have to distribute goods and services which to-day are certainly a glut on the market. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) spoke very effectively yesterday on the control of prices through the control of money. If one takes the September bank statement of the years 1928 and 1932 he will find in them a contradiction of the statement that is so often made, that there is just as much money in the country now as there ever was. Comparison of those two statements will show that there is $584,000,000 less in loans owing to the banks to-day than four years ago, and that the bank deposits are less by $362,000,000. During that time I might add that the banks were able to put $7,000,000 into new buildings, and set aside $30,000,000 for reserves.

I am not going to take up the time of the house by going into details of how money to-day is written into existence through bookkeeping, and written out in a similar way, because that phase of the subject was ably covered yesterday by the hon. member for Macleod. I should like, however, to quote a terse statement by Professor Soddy of Oxford, who sums up the situation in a nutshell:

Another and most important fact to be emphasized, is that virtually all the money in the hands (or banking accounts) of the community originally came into existence in the form of loans from the banking system It can come from nowhere else, nor otherwise than as loans. This fact, which reverses all the old concepts of loans as money taken out of pre-existing deposits, is demonstrated fully in Major Douglas's works, and, in fact, has since been endorsed by Mr. McKenna, the chairman of the Midland bank. The order of procedure is as follows:

(1) Money is printed or written into existence by the banks:

(2) It enters circulation as a loan to somebody:

(3) It is then spent, and then becomes a "deposit" in the name of the receiver.

For the benefit of the hon. member for Northwest Toronto (Mr. MacNicol) and the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Wilson) who spoke this afternoon, and who I am sorry to say spent most of their time in criticizing this corner of the house rather than putting forward something constructive, and who were both particularly anxious to know what our policy was, I am going to put on record the proposed program of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, commonly known as the C.C.F. Their proposed program is as follows:

1. The establishment of a planned system of social economy for the production, distribution and exchange of all goods and services.
2. Socialization of the banking, credit and financial system of the country, together with the social ownership, development, operation and control of utilities and natural resources
3. Security of tenure for the farmer on his use-land and for the worker in his own home.
4. The retention and extension of all existing social legislation and facilities, with adequate provision for insurance against crop failure, illness, accident, old age and unemployment during the transition to the socialist state.
5. Equal economic and social opportunity without distinction of sex, nationality or religion.
6. Encouragement of all cooperative enterprises which are steps to the attainment of the cooperative commonwealth.
7. Socialization of all health services.
8. Federal government should accept responsibility for unemployment and tender suitable work or adequate maintenance.

Such a program naturally we would not expect to bring into effect overnight or in a year or two. It is an object to be aimed at, and if the program comes into effect within fifteen years it will represent greater progress than we have seen made in the last twenty or thirty years.

Before sitting down, I should like to state what I think are the five chief fears of mankind. First is the fear of the loss of work by those who have not otherwise the means to sustain themselves. Those, of course, who have purchasing power from other sources, if they have no work, can enjoy themselves; we call that leisure; but for those who have no other means of subsistence, loss of work means enforced idleness.

Then we have the fear of poverty, and unfortunately we have only too many in this country today afflicted by that fear. It is not necessary for me to give the numbers, because they have been given before, but I am sorry to say that they are growing.

Then there is the fear of sickness. That is something that could be obviated. With the great numbers of medical men now in the field and the number of students going into our universities, we ought to be able through the aid of medical science to keep the health of our people at a higher level than that which prevails today. A doctor in Edmonton told me only the other day that doctors could not get a living because the paying was bad, and he thought no other medical students should be allowed to enter the universities. I would suggest that we can never have too many doctors so long as we have in this country sickness that can be cured or alleviated in any way.

Then we have the fear of debt, a fear which is probably worrying more people in this country today than ever before.

Lastly we have the fear of penury in old age.

These are the things, Mr. Speaker, that we are aiming to obviate in the future by gradually bringing into effect the policies which we have placed before the house. I should like to point out that apparently people in the old country are facing this problem perhaps a little more seriously than many in this country. It may be because they are facing greater economic stress. I would like to quote from one who has been mentioned before, Sir Basil Blackett, a director of the Bank of England, and a former controller of finance of the British treasury. He said:

> We are facing the possibility of a collapse which would compare in history only with what happened at the end of the Roman empire. In view of what we have done with currency and what currency has done with us in the last twenty years we are all fit for the lunatic asylum.

I commend that statement particularly, for his edification, to the hon. member for West York. If we had made that statement from this corner of the house I suppose he would have said: That is communism. But it comes from a director of the Bank of England.

In closing I want to say that I have no hesitation in supporting the resolution.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the house is plain in its words. It states that:

> The government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Like other members, I have been very much interested in the launching of this so-called Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. I observed the meetings, and I hear from those who addresed them, the leaders of the party, that they are well-pleased with the numbers of people who attended the meetings and the reception which the speakers received. That is hardly to be wondered at. People will go to hear something new. But one hears also from those who were at those meetings that after all nothing was advanced to them which seemed really to offer any solution of the difficulties under which we are at present labouring.

Feeling that interest, and noticing the resolution on the order paper, I looked forward with some interest to this debate. I expected that the arguments of those who were furthering the resolution would at least contain something definite in the way of description of the state to which they wished to attain. But I have looked for that in vain. True, we have heard the program related by the hon. member (Mr. Spencer) who has just sat down, and we have heard diatribes against capitalism. But for a definition of the cooperative commonwealth at which they aimed we are forced to look elsewhere. We find the term as part of the Marxian philosophy, part of the program of socialism as it was finally brought into being in Russia. That that is what is aimed at is, I think, borne out by the fact that there was brought forth the well-known socialistic argument that if this state cannot be arrived at by peaceful evolution then it would come about by revolution and force. So I am forced to the conclusion that what the proponents of this resolution hope for is the establishment here of a state such as we find today in Russia. I will not quarrel as to the means of bringing it about; one of the speakers has differentiated between their program and that of communism by saying that communism seeks to attain its ends by force—

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? He said it had been stated that in the event of this program not being brought about by peaceful means, force might be used. Was that statement made by one of the speakers from this corner at any time?

Mr. GEARY: Yes, made yesterday during the course of this debate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member ought to mention the one who made the statement.

Mr. MOORE (Chateauguay): You made it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Pardon me, I did not make it. I am sure the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) will be fair in this.

Mr. MOORE (Chateauguay): You implied it if you did not make it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. What I said was, if it were not brought about by peaceful means I feared—

Mr. MOORE (Chateauguay): Oh, you feared! What did you say in Edmonton?

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Speaker, I am in the judgment of Hansard. At page 1689 the hon. member is reported as follows:

I do not want to quibble over words, I am only saying that the well-known socialist argument has been advanced, and I deduce from that that what is sought is the establishment of a system similar to that which they have in Russia today. There is no other example today of anything approaching a cooperative commonwealth as set out by socialistic writers except what we find in Russia.

And the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, on the same page, just above the quotation which I have read, said:

> It may very well be that force may prove inevitable—

An hon. MEMBER: A threat.

Mr. GEARY: That is the proposal.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, Mr. Speaker. I have no objection whatever to my words being quoted, but I did not suggest that we would in any way bring about a revolution by force.

Mr. GEARY: I am only intimating, what is perfectly clear from the extracts I have read, that hon. members opposite take the view that if this is not brought about by peaceful evolution then it will come to pass by revolution and force.

Miss MACPHAIL: Yes, but not force by us.

Mr. GEARY: I am not saying that.

Miss MACPHAIL: You are inferring it.

Mr. GEARY: I am stating the facts.

Miss MACPHAIL: Some of your own people are saying the same thing.

Mr. GEARY: Putting the best construction on the conditions in Russia that one may, one favourable to the Russian situation, I ask you, sir, if by any possibility there can be in this country any feeling that our people, our proletariat so-called, our farmers, would be satisfied with the condition of things under which people are obliged to live in Russia? There is no other cooperative commonwealth suggested. I was looking for a definition; if there is any other my hon. friend, the member for Winnipeg North Centre will be able to indicate it in his reply. There was no looseness in the drafting of this resolution, because I looked back over the program that had been set out in Hansard, and I find that the same thing occurred there. Looking at page 1689, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is reported as saying that the Independent Labour party believe in the establishment of a cooperative commonwealth, with production for use and not for profit as its economic basis. And further on on the same page, that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation has on its program the bringing about of—

> —a federation of organizations whose purpose is the establishment in Canada of a cooperative commonwealth in which the basic principle regulating production—

And so on. So that the resolution now before the house follows in terms exactly the program or platform of the Independent Labour party formed in 1921 and the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation of which we hear now for the first time.

In that view was not the interjection of the Prime Minister perfectly apposite? Does it not mean that if we are to adopt a system of a cooperative commonwealth such as they have in Russia, the only one proposed, we thereby scrap confederation and the constitution of this country? The observation was fully justified by the words of the resolution now before the house. It is a far cry, as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said, from such a resolution to one emphasizing the duty of citizens to work together and cooperate for the good of the state. With such an expression I would have no fault to find. I think it is our duty to work together, to do the best we can by united effort to lift the pall of depression which has fallen so densely upon the world and in a lesser degree upon this country of ours.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was good enough to say in closing that he trusted the discussion would not degenerate into a calling of names, but that on the other hand we would attempt to discuss seriously the principles which are at stake. May I say in all kindness that it is a pity the hon. member violated that sentiment before he gave it utterance. He does not advance his cause, nor do those who spoke after, or some of them; they rather cheapen it by levelling taunts such as were levelled at the Prime Minister of this country on matters that are purely personal. I resent that, as I would resent its being said of any hon member of this house. All I would say in passing is that the words of the hon. member in closing his speech were good. These words I hope we can follow, and discuss this matter on its merits and with a desire to elucidate some of the reasons for and against this action which is advocated.

My hon. friends advance a proposition. Now their business is to make that proposition good, and if they can make it good in this house or in the country they will have achieved their object. But they cannot make it good by deviating into attacks upon the house as a whole or upon individual members of it. As a matter of fact, the program as I read it is exactly the program of socialism as we find it in the United States. Hon. members opposite know the magazine The World Tomorrow, which is purely socialistic. Their program follows the program of the socialist organization over there, without deviation in essentials, and it is interesting to note that that magazine was very strongly behind Norman Thomas, the presidential candidate of the socialist party at the last election—apparently a fine citizen, an upstanding man of character and conviction. Probably the socialist party was never better led than it was at the last presidential election and if I remember rightly that party got fewer votes, relatively and absolutely, than it has received in any other presidential election.

Now my hon. friends disclaim, and of course I accept their word, any intention to capitalize the unrest of the country. Let me say to them however that they are doing so, perhaps unconsciously; nevertheless, this movement does look towards the capitalization of unrest, and you will find that, I judge, from the comments that have been made at these different meetings. However, let us pass that. I refer them to the speech—and his speeches are always eloquent—of the hon. member for Bow River, a speech that suffered somewhat from the same disability to which I referred earlier. It was a speech that consisted, I submit without argument, in a diatribe against capitalism, and I think that what the hon. member was aiming at was not capitalism under the capitalistic system in all its branches, but that part of it which has evinced itself in the plundering by a few of the public domain or treasury or the pockets of the people; and in common with all other members of the house, I would take no exception, I would offer no objection to a campaign that could be carried on to clip the wings, to destroy the power of those people who have, by manipulation of stock markets, by manipulation in the offices and not in the plants, destroyed the productive power and the very solvency of many of our best industries. I have many in my mind at the moment. They do not need repetition, but the fact remains, and I think you will find this side of the house, as you will that corner, allied with any effort to destroy the possibility of that sort of thing occurring again.

My hon. friend from Bow River—and this is really what brought me to my feet—instanced a case in the police court in Toronto. From his description of the man who sat on the bench I think I know the magistrate; but he narrated something that seems incredible. He gave it with the tone of one who was watching an executioner. Some poor devil came up and was asked a question or two and was given three months in gaol, and this he said went on hour after hour. I do not know much about the police courts; my practice does not happen to lie there; but I read of their proceedings and I have never heard of anything like that. I think my hon. friend has forgotten the circumstances to some extent. True it is that in some cases some poor destitute person comes before the court wanting shelter; he has asked during the night to be picked up—at any rate this was the fact before we arranged matters better in Toronto—in order that he might be given warmth and shelter in one of the institutions, particularly the gaol farm near Toronto. Today however, under the honest and capable administration that exists in Toronto, our destitute are being taken care of in great numbers—the more's the pity—single men and married men and their families, and are receiving food and clothing and are given shelter. There has been no corruption. We get people not only from the city itself but many hundreds and thousands from outside; yet, with the aid of this government and the provincial government and our own treasury we have been able, I say with some pride, owing to the very careful and sympathetic administration of the resources entrusted to us, to take care of the destitute in the way I have described.

The proponent and supporters of this resolution went by very easy steps from the general determination to establish a cooperative commonwealth to certain measures which they thought this house should take under advisement at the moment. These I suppose are what are referred to in the resolution as the immediate steps which the government should take. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre went immediately to "economic planning." I believe my hon. friend from Red Deer introduced that in this house last session or perhaps longer ago than that. From that the hon. member went to banking and credit, currency and inflation, and of these matters I wish to speak for a moment, because apparently they are steps which are to be taken at once in order to bring about the condition of affairs which my hon. friends have described as a cooperative commonwealth. Later there will be opportunity for discussing these questions in detail.

There is however one observation I desire to make with regard to credit. I gather from the speeches made that the credit aimed at, the credit which it is desired to establish, is some sort of credit administered practically directly by the government of this country, directed or administered by a body answerable to this House of Commons. If that means that individual cases of credit are to be handled directly or in the manner I have indicated as indirect, by this House of Commons, then I can say at once that I am opposed to it. All my life I have wanted to be able to step up to some wicket and hand in my note and say, "I want this much," and get it. But I can conceive of no rhyme or reason, nor will my hon. friends when they come to think of it, why the money of this country, any more than the money of private people, should be handed over except on recognized and proper principles of loan. If, on the other hand, what my hon. friends aim at is a central bank as established in some other countries, there is something to be said for it as well as something to be said against it. There will arise difficulties, because in Canada we have no money market, for instance. It would mean placing in the hands of selected bankers an expensive institution, and you would still be in the hands of those who are anathema to my hon. friend—the bankers. We have a system now. How well it works I cannot tell; I do not profess to say. Under the Finance Act there is a certain loosening of credit over and above the gold coverage. In any event that is not a matter in regard to which immediate steps can be taken. It is a matter that requires study and investigation by a committee or commission, or in some way, so that the arguments pro and con can be stated in the house in such a way as to enable the house to make up its mind on the question.

As to inflation, there are two kinds so far put before us. One is that suggested by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) and, I think, the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), which is simply the printing of money. If I remember rightly. the hon. member for Southeast Grey last year advanced this proposition—that we should build the St. Lawrence waterway; it would be expensive, but we could pay for it by bills freshly printed for the purpose. Yesterday the hon. member for Macleod said very much the same thing, and then proceeded to state how this money would be put into circulation. His proposal firstly was that a certain amount be given away, and secondly that we should use that money to build all sorts of public works and social enterprises and that sort of thing, most of which I do not think we need at the moment, and none of which we can afford.

With that sort of inflation we have this difficulty, which my hon. friends will recognize at once. If you inflate money you can buy in the end, with that inflated money, the same number of articles that you could have bought with the money as it stood at the price these articles then were. There may be stimulation for the moment; they expected it in Great Britain, but the results which they anticipated have proved to be entirely illusory; they have not received the benefits they hoped for. We would have the same result as far as internal trading is concerned, but if it was only an internal matter it would make no difference whether we printed dollar bills, hundred dollar bills, wampum, or anything you like. If we simply traded our money within the boundaries of this country, all would be well and good; but it is when you come to deal with matters outside the country that you have to rearrange your thoughts.

The other method suggested was to tie up our currency to British sterling. Toward the end of last session the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) gave a very lucid and forceful address with regard to this matter, one which would bear re-reading by hon. members. But sterling is not stabilized, it is often subject to the raids of speculators. During the last four weeks it has risen twenty-five points and we cannot anticipate what raids will be made by continental countries; it may be forced down to a point lower than it was four weeks ago. Sterling is subject to constant raids by continental financiers, and if we tied to sterling we would be tying to something unstable commercially. If we tied to sterling we would have to consider the matter of balancing the benefits against the cost. This country has been hard hit by a depreciated currency because it is a producer of primary products, but on the other hand Canada is a great debtor and unfortunately the substantial part of our indebtedness rests in the United States.

Miss MACPHAIL: Does the hon. member mean that this country is particularly hard hit by a depreciated currency or by lack of a depreciated currency?

Mr. GEARY: By the depreciated currency on the other side. All countries that are primary producers are naturally in the same position. My hon. friends from the west who grow wheat instance this fact very cogently by stating that for the pound sterling they get so many fewer dollars then they used to, and they cannot buy upon the same basis. I think there is a great deal to be said for that contention, not in trading within the country but rather in the payment of debts. When we come to the resolution sponsored by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) we shall have an opportunity of discussing this matter in detail.

To my mind there is no sense in inflation qua inflation, but there is a great deal to be said both for and against the present situation with regard to debts. If there be a sound method of dealing with the question of debts, we should seek it, but we should not seek to remedy that situation by unsound methods.

What I am really getting at in my cursory discussion of these principles of finance and currency is that this question is largely international. From the other side of the house we hear again and again of the interdependence of this country, that we cannot be an economic unit, that we cannot trade within our own borders, that we must seek for greater opportunities for trade, both within the empire and in other directions. Trade must be increased, but if you are going to trade with any country you must be able to conduct that trade on a system of exchange which is somewhat stable. The whole question of the stability of money is wrapped up with the question of the stability of exchange, which in turn is wrapped up with the question of international trade. We are to have a conference to discuss these very matters, and it seems to me that we would be most ill advised to make a drastic change in our currency at the present moment and to go to that economic conference with some system at which we had jumped or guessed.

It is all so easy to say that we can pay our debts by printing so much money, that we can build this work or that by printing so much money, that we can obtain advantages by depreciating our currency—if we can do it so can other countries. If it is so easy I wonder that it has not been done all over the world. Does anyone think that the Prime Minister of this country, the cabinet or the legislators in this house have any desire to do anything but what is best for the country? Surely that must not be suggested; it should not be suggested that proposals are rejected only out of some spirit of stubbornness.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Or perversity.

Mr. GEARY: Anything you like. Men of sense, men of discrimination and men of experience in business are doing their very best, and if they cannot agree with hon. members in the far corner, they should at least be given the credit of doing their best according to their lights and ability. They are seeking to remedy the situation.

Miss MACPHAIL: I have always said that it is the light that is wrong.

Mr. GEARY: To give my hon. friend credit, she is shedding just as much light as she knows how, but just how much she knows, I do not know.

Miss MACPHAIL: It is a little better than the Prime Minister's, and that is something.

Mr. GEARY: If my hon. friend wants to carry on a personal war, that is none of my business. I am dealing with an international situation. My hon. friends have filled pages of Hansard with quotations, and may I say, again in all kindliness, that I do not think they get anywhere with such methods. To me a quotation is absolutely nothing unless I know the context, the local background, and the reasoning which has led the author to the conclusion cited. I fancy that if I dug into books on economy I could find quotations which would be diametrically opposed to each and every one advanced in this debate by my hon. friends. However, if they will examine the quotations which they have placed on Hansard during this debate I think they will find that without exception they are predicated upon a proper international system having been found and adopted.

I have directed my observations largely to this point; that as far as monetary systems go, we are interdependent. Each country is so tied up with other countries in trade that we are dependent upon the facilities provided for exchange. We can not go on our own, and we would be most ill advised to do anything of the sort. If we are able to get a full, frank and free discussion of this matter at the coming conference, it is more likely that the qeustion will be solved there than by anything adopted by this chamber and having a relation only to the bounds of this country.

Hon. gentlemen say: what is to be done? We have one problem of our own which is costing us an enormous amount of money—the Canadian National Railways. That is a matter immediately to our hand. There is also the one I mentioned a little while ago, the control of those who have plundered by their manipulations of the stock market. As the hon. member for Labelle has said, we have not exercised the forces of the law in that regard as much as they have in England. That is a matter ready to our hand.

There is also another vast problem to be solved, that of war debts and reparations. Reparations would not exist if war debts could be abolished. Reparations would be done away with if creditors would do away with war debts. If war debts were abolished there would be a great effect upon the morale of the people of the world. There would be a restoration of confidence and an abolition of fear which would go a long way towards setting this world once more upon the road to recovery.

These observations are not intended to be a discussion as close as one would like to make it of matters still to come up, but I say once more that if we approach this question in the spirit eulogized this afternoon by the hon. member for Labelle, that of cooperation, that of getting together, that of putting our shoulders to the wheel and recognizing the difficulties under which we labour, then surely out of the united wisdom of this house will come measures which will react to the benefit of this country and probably lead us out of our difficulties.

Before I resume my seat I should like to say that the discussion in this house of the conditions prevailing throughout the country is not without bad effect. As long as we are moderate, reasonable and accurate in what we say with regard to conditions, I suppose no harm can be done. But it should be remembered that this country is not so badly off as many others. I believe, and I think other hon. members do also, that given a chance Canada will find her way out more quickly than any other country provided she has wise and proper guidance. If this country does not think the guidance it is receiving, the direction it has at the present moment, is right, the remedy lies with the house, with the electorate. Personally I earnestly feel that the government can not succumb at this moment to the temptations that beset it in regard to currency. It could popularize itself to many unthinking people by yielding to the clamour of some groups or members, but it will not do that unless it thinks it is right. I believe the government has a quality which must carry the admiration of the house in that it is strong and courageous, that it believes its principles and its policies are right, and that it will hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may; that it will pursue the course which in its wisdom it deems best for this country, and that in its deliberations and acts it will have regard for one thing only, that which is in the best and highest interests of Canada.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the last speaker (Mr. Geary) upon his well reasoned and moderate speech. I should like to take a few minutes to explain briefly the vote that I propose to give upon this subject. I had thought this matter was going to be treated, as we so often treat these resolutions, in an academic spirit, and that it would be ultimately possibly withdrawn or shelved, affording a very useful opportunity for hon. members to express their views on the situation as it presents itself to them. But I understand that the matter is going to a vote and I am confronted with the necessity of voting yes or no on the resolution before us.

This is not a question of condemning the government for their alleged misdeeds or of applauding them for what they have done; it simply stands by itself. But in that connection I must pay some attention to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), when he spoke as follows:

> What the government is trying to do is to hold together this country—to maintain its financial and industrial integrity.

When a man in the position of the Prime Minister of Canada, with the opportunities for information he possesses and must possess, uses language like that, and says further—

> We are dangerously near the limit of this country to pay additional taxes.

—we must all pay heed and give credence to the situation as he there outlines it. There are thousands, yes, probably hundreds of thousands of people in Canada today, who, if given an opportunity tomorrow would vote for this resolution. They would vote for it as it is, not because they understand it. If they do understand it, it is not because it has ever been explained to them. They would vote for it merely as an expression of their dissatisfaction, disgust, if you like, with existing conditions, and turning to any port in a storm, they would take the only means presented to them to express that dissatisfaction. The resolution is calculated to create, let us say, a vast political cave of Adullam. We are told in Scripture that David went down into the cave of Adullam, and there resorted unto him every one that was in distress, every one that was in debt and every one that was discontented. Can we get a better epitome of the situation as it is in Canada today?

This resolution is extremely comprehensive, and that is at once its strength and its weakness, its appeal and its danger. It is comprehensive enough to take in anybody and everybody. The prince and the pauper can find a common footing. The millionaire, disgusted because he has lost one-third of his millions, and the man in the breadline who has lost his all, are equally welcome, and can find common ground for entering this political cave. Conservative and communist are alike welcome. A disillusioned workingman can meet there the millionaire or the disappointed political grafter who is turning against the party that he formerly supported. They can all meet and they will all be welcome in this political cave of Adullam.

But is it wise for us at this time to adopt the attitude of a wounded animal, which, injured by he knows not what, blindly kicks out or bites at the nearest object within his reach? I know, of course we all know, how wide is the distress in Canada, and that the existing discontent is general and entirely justified. It would be idle to deny that. I shall admit further that the workman and the farmer have too long been the victims of the moneyed and manufacturing interests of Canada, and there is ground for saying that it is about time this condition changed. But will it improve the general condition of Canada to create another tyranny, somewhat similar, another class government, of course a somewhat different one from the system under whose sway we have been so long? I hardly think so.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) this afternoon suggested more co-operation. Suppose we try something along that line before we go to the extreme of a cooperative commonwealth. Let us adopt a national government. We have had precedents for that in many countries throughout the world. Let us forget party politics and get together the best men on both sides. There are many things that readily suggest themselves that can be done to improve existing conditions, but I have not time to deal with them all. Last year the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) said, I believe—and if I am wrong I apologize—that no law could be framed to prevent the watering of stock. That is nonsense. A system could easily be found that would pass on every issue of stock by every corporation, and if it were found there was watering of stock to an improper extent at the expense of ignorant buyers, we could refuse to allow it to be issued. That evil and a very great one, could be easily checked.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think the Secretary of State put it in those words. In fairness to him, I think he said that there was no law to prevent people from buying watered stock, because they could buy it if they wanted to do so.

Mr. NEILL: If I am wrong, I withdraw the statement, but I certainly had the impression he said there was no way by which it could be prevented. However, if it were not offered for sale, of course people could not buy it. What brought ruin to many a poor and many a rich man in 1929 was the collapse of the stock market. That could largely have been prevented in its most disastrous effects by forbidding gambling on margin, which was the cause of impoverishing many people. I need not go into that, because it would take too long.

We could inaugurate a system of unemployment insurance of far-reaching effect, not attempting to deal with conditions today, because that would be hopeless, but looking toward the future. Let us do the Joseph act reported in Scripture: in the years of plenty he created reserves against years of want. These things could be brought forward and adopted without upsetting our whole fiscal system, and I do not find them in what I have gathered of the program of the cooperative commonwealth. I have to vote either yes or no on this question, and I find that if we pass the resolution, the house and the government will be bound immediately—note that, immediately—to take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth. Are we really prepared to do this, or shall we vote for it only because we think it is popular at the moment?

If I vote for it, I am in all honesty committed to it. I have to go home and explain it to my people, but I do not understand it because it has never been definitely explained to me and I doubt very much whether the leaders of the party could explain it in the language that would cover the whole ground. It is entirely too vague for my purpose and taste. It suffices not to turn aside pertinent questions such as the Prime Minister asked this afternoon when he pointed out that the nationalization of land was a provincial matter. It will not do to pass that off as a detail. These things are part and parcel of what we are asked to vote for and we ought to know them.

I wonder what would be the first six things they would do if they got into power? Or let us ask, even the first two? The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) read out a partial program but it was only a suggested proposal he gave and I have a somewhat different program I took from a newspaper. He was the first man in the debate who gave anything tangible to go upon, and he stated even what he suggested might not come within the scope of practical politics for the next fifteen years.

One of the first things suggested is the abolition of money, at least of all such as we must have if we want to trade with foreign nations. Perhaps that is an excessive statement, but that is the spirit of it. The money that would be created, in the sense I understand their proposals, would be of little use outside Canada.

Then there is the nationalization of land. Do we realize what that means? From every man who has a home which he has hewed out of the wilderness or a house built in town, his property is to be taken away. These farms and houses pay heavy taxes at present to keep up the respective governments; who is going to pay them in future? I wonder. Let us grasp the idea: this means all land, and in addition we are to have nationalization of industry, because you have to go the whole hog. I have to ask myself do I realize all that that involves? Am I prepared to vote for that?

Then we come to another feature: Production for use and not for profit. I have not time to deal with that, but that means simply Russia and nothing else. I do not agree with the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) when he says that the whole thing is communism; he seeks to damn it for political reasons. There is good in the cooperative commonwealth program, but that particular feature of it is communism pure and simple. There is no question about that; it cannot be explained in any other way. It is not socialism: it is communism, with all that it involves, because you have to take it all, and we are being asked to put it into force today or tomorrow. I know that it would be popular with many people in my constituency if I voted for the resolution, because it has a sort of specious appeal, but I have a responsibility to those people, not to look behind, but to look ahead. These working men trusted me. They gave me the opportunity to come here and educate myself in these matters, to see and learn and observe. They gave me the time and the opportunity, and they would demand foresight on my part and can hold me responsible if I were to catch at the passing fancy of a moment and then go back to them and say: I have landed you in something the end of which I can only guess. I am responsible to them, and I accept my responsibility. I shudder to think of the condemnation that would be my just guerdon if I took a step that I felt might end in disaster and make their condition far worse than it is now, if that be possible, and it is.

I do not think I can be accused of favouring capitalism. My record in this house, I think I can safely say, has been one of radicalism. I have supported and am willing to go to considerable lengths in supporting old age pensions, unemployment insurance, health and other social legislation. I would go further than we have done, but I must have a clear vision of where we are going. I want to know where it is going to land before I start the rock rolling down the mountainside, and I cannot see where we are going under this program. I do not know and I have not been told what benefits it would really confer.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), in his able speech, made, not an argument, but perhaps the very best appeal, although a specious one. His appeal was this, that the two great parties have failed to produce anything better, that their system has failed, so let us now try this. It is a plausible argument; I do not know that it is a sound one. He says in effect: You have made a mess of things, and so now try our policy, which has at least the merit of being new and untried. That is all the merit it has, and newness and untriedness is not always the very best recommendation in these days. When we are in deadly economic peril, in which all of us are involved—for the man in the bread line and the Prime Minister with all his wealth have just the same thing at stake, their all, and if we go down we will all go down in one common catastrophe—it is not the time for rash experiments by well-meaning theorists, undoubtedly with the best intentions, but lacking experience and cohesion. How long could a combination of farmers who essentially must believe in dear food and cheap labour coalesce with the labour party who must in the very nature of things believe in cheap food and high wages? And when we see the deep anxiety of the Finance minister as to whether he can make ends meet and make his budget balance, is it wise to give out to the financial world that we are contemplating going along this path, this new and untried path, a path on which we cannot even see around the nearest corner, a path whose main recommendation is that it is new and untried? Are these the days and these the times to go into things such as that? I am under no obligation to either great party in this house and could readily give my support to any scheme that seemed to offer a reasonable hope of a workable measure of reform. But like the man from Missouri I must be shown. If I cannot see the distant scene and ultimate benefit, I must surely be shown some benefit in the immediate future, and until I see that, and something more, at least the promise of some permanent benefit, I shall be somewhat reluctantly compelled to vote against the resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I would ask you to call it eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker,

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BENNETT: Tomorrow is government day, and we propose to go into supply, on trade and commerce estimates. We were in supply on trade and commerce once this session, and we should be able to take them on Friday, but if there is any question as to that, we can do so by consent. I do not know whether it was ever contemplated when the rule was made that once being in supply in the session you may go into supply any day with respect to those items. We were in supply this session already on the trade and commerce items in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MACKENIE KING: Have any other departments besides trade and commerce been in supply this session?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the right hon. gentleman may remember moving an amendment on going into supply in connection with agriculture, and a point of order was raised whether its subject matter had not been covered by the debate on the address. The debate continued for two days and was concluded on the third, when we went into supply and took four or five departments. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman will remember that we took pensions and national health, trade and commerce, civil government, and there was one other, if my memory serves me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The proposal is to go on with trade and commerce estimates tomorrow?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Mr. RHODES moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

POWERS OF COMMITTEES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the select standing committees of this house shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the house and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. Cotnam be substituted for that of Mr. Manion on the special committee appointed to consider and report upon Bill No. 2, an Act to Readjust the Representation of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether it is still the intention of the government to bring down certain amendments to the Grain Act, as previously announced, more particularly that with respect to the separate grading of garnet wheat.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It is not thought desirable that any revision of the Grain Act should be proceeded with, and the information that we have secured is not considered completely satisfactory to warrant our proceeding with the particular item referred to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES ON THURSDAY AND FRIDAY—TEN PER CENT DEDUCTION FROM CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

On the orders of the day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether his understanding is the same as my own with respect to the taking up of estimates on Thursday and Friday. I understood last night that the Prime Minister wished to proceed to-day with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce and expressed the view that that might have to be by consent. Let me say at once that so far as the official opposition is concerned we are quite agreeable to proceeding to-day with the estimates of that department by consent. My inquiry at the moment is as to whether it will be necessary or not for the estimates of all other departments to be taken up in committee of supply on a Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday before they can be taken up, except by consent, on Thursday or Friday. I believe that last night, from his remarks, the Prime Minister may have had in mind that the house having taken up in supply some supplementary estimates of the fiscal year 1932-33, we might be considered as having already entered upon the estimates of these particular departments. My reading of the rule is that unless a department has had its estimates gone into before a Thursday or Friday, it cannot, except by consent, have its estimates considered on a Thursday or Friday, and that this applies to the main estimates of the session and not to supplementary estimates pertaining to a previous fiscal year. If there is any doubt about this, perhaps His Honour the Speaker would give a ruling on the matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It was because I was somewhat uncertain about the matter myself that I mentioned it last night as I did. Had it not been for that uncertainty it would have been unnecessary to have brought it to the attention of the house. The fact is that this house as at present constituted has already resolved itself into committee of supply and that committee of supply has considered the estimates of several of the departments, including Trade and Commerce. It is equally true that the estimates considered were supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1933, and I was somewhat uncertain as to whether, reading the rule, you could not technically say that the obligation had been discharged when the house was in committee on the estimates of any department on Thursday and Friday, as in fact was the case. It is true that in the early days of this session we passed a motion suspending the operation of the rules, whereby it became possible to have every day regarded as a government day. That is clear. I think it would probably be the sense of the house that it would be a more equitable observance of the rule if we treated the supply that was granted, by referring the items of several departments to the committee, on supplementary estimates, as not having reference to the main estimates. That would strike me as the more equitable view; if I were in the opposition I would take that view. That is the reason I mentioned it last night as I did, and by consent we will take up Trade and Commerce and observe the rule hereafter as though the supplementary estimates had not comprised the estimates of any department that had to be referred to the committee for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1934.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is entirely satisfactory. My impression is that, at the time the house passed the resolution to which my right hon. friend has referred, a reservation of the kind mentioned was made by the opposition. There is one other point which I should like to have understood between us before we discuss the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is the same point that arose last year with respect to the ten per cent deduction from the salaries of the civil service. As hon. members will have noticed by the estimates, apparently the intention is to continue the ten per cent deduction this year, though I understood last year from the government that the deduction was to be for one year only, and that it would not apply to the present year. I am not raising that point at the moment however. My question now is whether the government should not in the first instance introduce its bill, authorizing the ten per cent deduction and let us settle the matter of principle, which will be necessary on the bill, rather than attempt to settle it item by item as we discuss the estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not proposed to vote in the aggregate a sum greater than ninety per cent of what the figure heretofore has been. It will be observed that at the end of each item a deduction of ten per cent is made, so that the vote will be only for ninety per cent of the salaries as they were prior to last year. That is my understanding of the situation after the discussion I have had with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). I cannot see that it will make any difference inasmuch as the amount available under the action of the committee for the purposes of discharging the public services will be only the sums mentioned in the final estimates, as indicated by the document tabled yesterday. If it would affect in any sense the principle, I could understand there being some importance in passing the legislation, but as it stands I cannot see that it would be necessary to do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It does affect the principle. This house this year has not decided that the salaries of the civil servants shall be cut ten per cent, and until the house does so decide I do not think we should by any act, either implied or otherwise, countenance that action. The same point was raised last year and the government admitted eventually that the course of procedure which I urged should be followed was the correct one. While we were discussing the items under trade and commerce we withheld any which affected salaries until after the government had brought in its bill and the bill had passed this house. All I am asking is that the same procedure shall be followed this year.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as my right hon. friend has said, we covered this point quite fully last April. Personally I have no objection to the position he has taken, that the better course to follow would be to proceed with the bill, but I would point out that strictly to follow that course means that the bill would have to be introduced at the beginning of the session and there might be no opportunity to consider the estimates as long as the house desired to debate that particular bill. Therefore, it was felt to be in the interest of public business that we should present the estimates to the house in order to provide it with business, it being the intention of the government to bring in immediately a bill to deal with the question of the ten per cent reduction. That bill has been prepared and printed and I hope it will be submitted to the house the first of next week.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have no desire to delay the procedure in any way, but I would point out to my hon. friend that he has had at least four months in which to prepare the bill. It is not our fault if it has not been introduced ahead of the estimates.

Mr. RHODES: It was not a question of requiring four months in which to prepare the bill, it was a question of deciding as to whether it was in the public interest to make a ten per cent deduction. The question of the preparation of the bill is a minor matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is understood that we shall proceed in this matter at this session as we did previously

Mr. RHODES: The bill will be introduced, I hope, on Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will withhold any items which relate to salaries.

Mr. RHODES: As I understand it, last year we withheld those items which hon. gentlemen opposite desired should be withheld.

FRENCH LANGUAGE

QUESTION OF PRINTING TRADE AND COMMERCE BULLETINS IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOSEPH A. BRADETTE (North Temiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have before me a daily bulletin published by the Department of Trade and Commerce. This bulletin contains information which is very useful to every section of the country, and I should like to inquire of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) if it would be possible to have such bulletins printed bilingually?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, these bulletins are really brief editorial presentations of what otherwise would be technical reports which emerge from time to time from the bureau of statistics. They are put out for press circulation to facilitate the distribution of information to the public through the press. Up to the present time there has been no necessity for their being printed in the French language, and to do so would double the cost of production without perhaps adding anything effective to their value. My hon. friends will please bear in mind that these are specially distributed to the members of the press gallery.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Some of the members of the press gallery are French speaking and they have not time to make a translation.

Mr. STEVENS: No request has been made for publication in French. These are issued very promptly and the translation into French would cause some delay and possibly some of their real merit would be lost. However, I have no objection to offer in the matter. Up to the present this subject has not been brought to my attention other than by a question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). If it is thought desirable that these bulletins should be printed in French as well as English, we will endeavour to do so, although I would point out that it will double the cost.

Mr. CASGRAIN: In view of the request made by the hon. member I think the government should see that they are printed in French.

Mr. STEVENS: Very well, we will do so.

Mr. BRADETTE: There is a considerable demand in my section of the country for these bulletins, and I am glad to hear the Minister's decision that they will be printed also in French.

WHEAT MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest shown in different parts of western Canada in the setting up of a national wheat marketing board, may I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if the government has given any consideration to the establishment of such a board or to the calling of an international wheat conference of the wheat exporting countries of the world to deal with the questions of production and marketing.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It has not been considered necessary to consult other nations as to the domestic policy of this country.

PENSION ACT ADMINISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to inquire of the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) if it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation based upon the findings of the committee investigating the workings of the Pension Act.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): This matter is now under consideration by the government.

CITY OF OTTAWA

EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT WITH CORPORATION TO JULY 1, 1933

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works) moved the second reading of Bill No. 15, to authorize an agreement between His Majesty the King and the corporation of the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Agreement with the city of Ottawa.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that this agreement is a duplication of the one in force last year and save as to date of its application does not differ in any particular.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My right hon. friend is absolutely correct in his assumption, this bill simply continues the existing arrangement for the current year, a considerable portion of which has already expired.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION ACT

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the Migratory Birds Convention Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Publication.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister might explain the significance of this section.

Mr. MURPHY: The proposed amendment is the result of a request of the law clerks of the house. I think I could not do better than read the letter which was submitted by Messrs. Troop and Ollivier on June 26, 1928, to the Deputy Minister of Justice. This letter reads:

Dear Mr. Edwards:

The statutes of 1928 are being printed rapidly and we are comparing and correcting the proofs.

There is a serious matter to which you will allow us to draw your attention in this respect.

By section 46 (2) of the Fisheries Act, Revised Statutes, chapter 73, by section 4 (3) of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, Revised Statutes, chapter 100, the regulations under these acts are to be printed in the prefix to the annual volume of the statutes. We have had to do this for years past and it is the cause of delay in getting out of the statutes. This year is worse than usual, as we have to print again the special fishery regulations for each province, a small volume in themselves, besides the amending regulations. The migratory birds regulations are not so long.

Some years ago, when Sir Lomer Gouin was Minister of Justice, we brought this to his attention and he advised us to leave the regulations out if any delay was caused in issuing the statutes. We asked him to bring in a bill to amend these two acts, to delete these provisions, but it was overlooked.

These regulations are printed in the Canada Gazette and printed and distributed widely by the departments concerned. They are printed for the third time in our annual volume.

We will be sending this prefix to the printing bureau to-morrow, and would like just to show it to you before doing so, and you will understand the point clearly. Mr. Troop will call in and it will only take a moment of your time.

Yours sincerely,

Troop and Ollivier,
Law Clerks.

W. Stuart Edwards, K.C.,
Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

That is the reason for this proposed amendment; it is merely to meet the wishes of the law clerks so as to enable the statutes to be printed at an earlier date than is otherwise possible.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Just for the purpose of information, may I ask the minister; if these regulations are not printed annually in the statutes, in what manner will the public be informed, because practically nobody outside of the lawyers reads the Canada Gazette?

Mr. CASGRAIN: And not many of them do so.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes. These regulations are important to the people in my community because they want to observe the law. The regulations are part of the law.

Mr. MURPHY: The regulations are very widely distributed by the department, and any interested party can easily secure a copy from it.

Mr. POULIOT: Would it be possible for the department to post the regulations in each post office?

Mr. MURPHY: If my memory serves me correctly, that is being done at present.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Is there in this bill anything which will be incompatible with the provincial game acts?

Mr. MURPHY: I cannot answer that question, because I am not certain what action the provinces might take, but any bill passed by a provincial legislature cannot go beyond the terms of this act, which is a dominion act giving effect to an agreement with the United States.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): That is not exactly what I had in mind. What I had in mind is whether any change is being made by this bill which is not already included in provincial game acts.

Mr. MURPHY: In this bill there is nothing of which I am aware that would conflict with any provincial act.

Mr. POULIOT: The migratory birds fly over several provinces and for that reason, by virtue of the British North America Act, this law is under dominion jurisdiction.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Will the minister consider an amendment to the act in addition to those now before the house, that would allow the legal opening of the shooting season in the Yukon territory earlier than the first September? When the original act was passed, it and the terms of the treaty as well, provided that no open season should be permitted before the first September. That applies to Alaska as well as the Yukon territory. If the hunters there wait until the first September, they get no shooting, because the birds nesting in those northern regions are fully fledged and going south by August 10 and any shooting done is done in violation of this act. Local legislatures in both Alaska and the Yukon territory have endeavoured to overcome this. I have many times discussed the matter with the officers of the department who are charged with the administration of this act, and it has been said that on the first occasion when an amendment to the act came before the house, the question of this amendment would be raised. I would ask the minister to consider it while the bill is before the house.

Mr. MURPHY: Before any amendment of that nature could be made it would necessarily have to be taken into consideration in relation to the agreement which this country has with the United States. Therefore, until I can consult the act, I would not be prepared to consider any such change. This act is based upon an agreement with the United States and certain dates are no doubt incorporated in it. We cannot go beyond the terms of that agreement in any amendments we might seek to bring down at this time.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): That matter I am convinced can be very easily settled. I think there would be agreement between the United States and Canadian authorities. Probably we have something on record in the department now concerning it.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is true that the great bulk of the migration northward in the spring follows the Atlantic-St. Lawrence past Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but ninety per cent of the southward migration passes overland, first passing over the wheatfields of the west and then going down through the United States, and it is the people of the United States who get all the advantages of the treaty, and we get none. That is the situation.

Mr. MACLEAN: The people of the maritime provinces feel that they are not getting a fair deal under the treaty, and petitions I believe have been presented to the government time and again asking for a revision of the whole matter. I would ask the minister if the treaty has been renewed for a term of years, or if it is just being extended from year to year.

Mr. MURPHY: There has been no renewal of the treaty for any specified term of years.

Mr. MACLEAN: Has the first fifteen-year period expired?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): With all due respect to my hon. friend from Pictou and my hon. friend from Prince, there are two views with respect to this matter. Anybody who has shot geese in the fall of the year and also in the spring will know exactly what I mean. In the fall of the year the birds are in good flesh and are good to eat; in the spring they are not; they are skinny and tough and lean. I say, let the birds have a chance to get up north and breed. It will be better for them, notwithstanding what a few game hogs, if that is a proper term to use here, may think. I think we had better not change this. Let us give the birds a chance.

Mr. CANTLEY: With all due deference to my hon. friend from York-Sunbury, I have probably had as much experience in the attempt to shoot ducks, brant and geese in the province of Nova Scotia as he has, and my experience is that the first flight in the spring, when probably only three or four days elapse between the birds leaving their southern winter sojourn and their arrival in Nova Scotia, finds the birds in as good condition as they are in when they come down from the north. Later flights to the northward may possibly be open to the objection my hon. friend points out, but that certainly does not apply to the first flight, and I think my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island will corroborate that. After many years of experience of the treaty the people of the maritime provinces feel that we are not getting a fair deal. The United States gets ninety-five per cent of the advantages under the treaty, and they know it.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I think the minister would be well advised not to open up spring shooting in any part of the dominion. The same condition which my hon. friend from Pictou has described obtains in the Yukon. In the spring the birds come up there in the thousands as soon as the ice is out of the river, but notwithstanding that that is a remote country and that a supply of fresh food, with no freight charges to pay, would be very welcome, no one in the Yukon would say, open up spring shooting. It is too bad that some people in that locality and in the maritime provinces should be deprived of a little sport, but it would not be fair to interfere with the birds on their northern migration.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—R.C.M Police to be game officers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has the minister given consideration to withholding from the mounted police who are now policing the western provinces the right to try those whom they apprehend for breaking the law? I always questioned myself the wisdom of allowing the officer who apprehended a man to try him. I am speaking, of course, of territories where magistrates are available.

Mr. MURPHY: That phase of the situation has never been brought to my attention before, and I shall be glad to give it consideration.

Mr. BRADETTE: I think this section is likely to lead to conflict between the federal and provincial authorities, for in northern Ontario we have both provincial and federal police. I know cases where the penalties inflicted in northern Ontario were absolutely unwarranted. I think we should specify in the act just where the mounted police shall have jurisdiction. To extend the use of the word ex-officio in this way is giving the police too much latitude and is likely to lead to conflict of jurisdiction.

Mr. MURPHY: At the present time the mounted police, under certain circumstances, are made game officers, and it has been found necessary in each individual case so to appoint them. This section simply means that these men will be game officers without the necessity of taking another oath.

Mr. BRADETTE: It is too broad. There should be an amendment specifying the jurisdiction of the police, and this is the time and place to do it. To my knowledge conflicts have arisen in the past, and an amendment ought to be introduced specifying where these activities of the mounted police will be permitted. I would include the Northwest Territories, and possibly Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, but leave out the old provinces where the mounted police have no jurisdiction in these matters.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I direct the minister's attention to the previous clause which says that the minister may appoint members of the police force game officers? It also says that he may appoint them magistrates. Is it intended by this amendment to do other than to make them ex-officio game officers? In other words the amendment does not contemplate their becoming ex-officio magistrates?

Mr. MURPHY: The intention is simply to appoint them ex-officio game officers.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If they are to exercise power as magistrates they will have to be specially appointed as such?

Mr. GUTHRIE: In the provinces, yes.

Mr. MURPHY: I am informed that in the provinces the province appoints the police magistrates, in the Northwest Territories the Dominion government appoints them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The original section reads:

> The minister may appoint game officers for carrying out this act and the regulations,—

As I understand the amendment, all the members of the mounted police are made game officers ex-officio. But the section goes on:

> —and may authorize such game officers to exercise the powers of a justice of the peace or the powers of a police constable.

My question is, does this amendment make any of these members of the police force who are appointed game officers ex-officio justices of the peace as well?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think the leader of the opposition, reading the whole of section 5 with the addition now provided for by section 2 of this bill, is right; and they would not be confined to any province. But it would have to be by designation by name. So there is a potentiality there along the line the right hon. gentleman has intimated.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I may say for the information of the committee that in part the reason for the granting of this authority to the minister arose from the very matter that was in controversy a few minutes ago. It was the difficulty of getting a conviction before a magistrate for spring shooting. A great deal of unnecessary expense was incurred trying to obtain convictions and it was suggested that if the minister had authority to appoint his own magistrates it would get over that difficulty. However I am not in favour of a police officer who is attempting to bring a party to justice being the magistrate who tries him for the crime.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister has not yet given a statement that is satisfactory. Let me ask specifically, does this act as he is amending it now make members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police ex-officio justices of the peace where they are made ex-officio game officers?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The act as it now reads, without this amendment, is:

> The minister may appoint game officers for carrying out this act and the regulations, and may authorize such game officers to exercise the powers of a justice of the peace . . . .

Now it is provided by the amendment that that all members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall for the purposes of this act be ex-officio game wardens. That is the first. Then if the minister subsequently authorizes it they may also become justices of the peace.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Under the old section?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under the old section, not under this. The law as it has been on the statute book is merely extended now to include the mounted police.

Mr. BRADETTE: I beg to move an amendment, after the words "be ex-officio game officers":

> In districts and territories where the federal government has full jurisdiction in such matters.

Mr. BOWMAN: That does not add anything to the section, because the authority is there now.

Mr. BRADETTE: Well it is there and it is not there. I have seen in my own district, provincial authorities in conflict with federal. We will have the same thing here. That applies to northern Ontario and northern Quebec where you have the provincial police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I point out to my hon. friend that this act is based on an international agreement for the protection of migratory birds that inhabit both countries. Our difficulty in the past—I do not know what difficulty the present minister has—was that in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and the maritime provinces the local authorities were only interested in the administration of the local game laws. Take the case of spring shooting, which illustrates it best; you could not get a conviction for spring shooting before the local authorities on a bet. Throughout Canada we have the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under the control and jurisdiction of the federal authorities, which authorities have given their promise to the American government that the provisions of this act would be carried out. It was simply for the purpose of getting the administration properly carried out that it was thought advisable to appoint the mounted police as game wardens. The fact that the minister also took authority to appoint the magistrates is perhaps a doubtful feature. On the other hand the difficulty was, even when a man was apprehended, to get a conviction when he had infringed the law. If the administration of the act were handed over to the provincial authorities I fear we would be in trouble in connection with our agreement with the United States to enforce the provisions of the act.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I would like to add a word to what has been said by the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette). I think this act should be limited to those provinces where the mounted police are also in charge as provincial police. In the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and New Brunswick that have been mentioned by the ex-minister I am under the impression that the law has been changed, that the provincial governments have been asked to change their law to comply with the federal law, and that the spring shooting season has been fixed to accord with the federal law. Therefore there is no need for this change. There is the danger of conflict between the mounted police and the local authorities. In Quebec there is a close season for killing migratory birds in the spring, and we have game wardens in every part of the province, and if we are going to have added to those the mounted police right amongst our own population we are bound to have conflict.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This proposal does not change the present law. Under the present law members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are nominated and appointed.

Sir EUGENE FISET: They are specially selected and named.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are named now. This only provides that instead of naming them individually, all members shall be ex-officio game officers.

Sir EUGENE FISET: That is exactly what I object to. At present you could not name mounted police officers as game wardens in Quebec, at least without consulting the provincial government. Let us say down in Rimouski there are ten or fifteen mounted police, who are interfering enough, Heaven knows, in our provincial law, we do not want them to go any further. I think the law as it stands today is quite enough.

Mr. MURPHY: This act was passed by this government to enable the government of Canada to enforce the provisions of an international treaty, consequently I take it, although I am not a lawyer, any provincial legislation must conform to the provisions of this act. It rests with the government of this country to see that the provisions of this act are carried out. Therefore of necessity the provincial legislation must conform to the provisions of the dominion act.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister has said that the Dominion government has to see that the provisions of the treaty shall be respected by those concerned. It will be necessary to send the Royal Canadian Mounted policemen to the universities to study the laws of the provinces if they are to know whether those laws conform with the federal law. I fully agree with what my hon. friend from Rimouski has said; we have a good deal of trouble in the province of Quebec owing to the activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The minister laughs. He should stay in Quebec for some time; it would do him good. These men are supposed to be quite busy with their duties as customs and excise officers. Suppose the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were notified of smugglers five miles away and at the same time they were informed that there were people shooting game at a distance of ten miles in the other direction. In this event which act will prevail—this one or the Customs and Excise legislation? These men have not the gift of ubiquity; they cannot be in two places at the same time. If, therefore, you charge them with too many duties they will fail to carry out any of them properly. We find that the same thing happens in connection with the officers of the Quebec Liquor Commission who sometimes are obliged to charter boats. There is a boat that belongs to the mounted police or to some other department in Ottawa. The officers are notified that a seizure has to be made somewhere and the officials of the Quebec Liquor Commission have to charter a boat because these people will not undertake the work. I know one who was afraid of seasickness and for that reason he left his boat at the wharf all the time. If the United States authorities knew how these people were looking after the enforcement of the law I am sure that the American guns would be directed at the minister. They would ask him at the point of a gun why he does not get better men to look after the execution of the treaty. These people might be appointed if they were personally known to the minister as men with the gift of ubiquity, as I say; otherwise the law should be enforced by those who are responsible and who have been doing it quite well. They are just as good citizens as the hon. member for Pictou. Perhaps they have not as wide a game experience but they are all right just the same. We have too much legislation in this house; we have to legislate about this and about that. The treaty was passed and legislation was enacted in accordance with it a long time ago, and now we are wasting the time of the house splitting hairs, while people are unemployed and agriculture is in a very serious position. Let us look after the more important business of the country and satisfy the general cry of the people who are asking for employment, and the farmers who are in distress.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is a good deal of merit in the suggestion of the hon. member for Rimouski and the hon. member for Témiscouata. I am afraid that if the officials are made game wardens there may be a conflict with the functions of the officials in the province of Quebec. There are at the present time on the river St. Lawrence certain game officers appointed every year by the Department of the Interior to see to the proper administration of the law. Are these officials of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police intended to supersede the other men, or is it the intention of the government to do away with the officers who are appointed every year? There is a staff that goes down there every year, selecting certain people at different places and hiring motor boats to look after the administration of the law. I know there are also officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the district. Who will have jurisdiction? Who will be the superior of the other? I should like to have an answer to that question from the minister.

Mr. MURPHY: It had been the practice in past years to employ temporary assistant migratory bird wardens at certain seasons of the year, but these assistant bird wardens will not be appointed in the future. The duties which they formerly performed will now be discharged by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. CASGRAIN: In the province of Quebec, where the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have not been accepted by the provincial government, we shall have them functioning to see to the proper observance of this law. I do not think that is good for the province of Quebec, and as a representative of that province I wish to protest against this sort of legislation going through this house. We are going to have men under the control of the federal government coming there to carry out a particular law and see to its administration, whereas formerly it was under the control of a responsible department. Mr. Lewis is a highly qualified official and I have nothing but praise for his services, and I do not see any reason why the government should dispense with such a valuable man. He has rendered excellent service in the enforcement of the act.

Mr. MURPHY: The hon. member is in error when he states that the services of Mr. Lewis have been dispensed with; they have not.

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister is increasing the expense of administering the law. If I understand it, the provinces of Quebec and Ontario have brought their acts into conformity with the dominion act so far as the flight of migratory birds is concerned and the season in which they may be shot. Under section 5, if any difficulty does exist in any province, or if the act is not in conformity with the federal law, the minister has all the powers he needs to name members of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police to take care of the provisions of the act. But why should we duplicate services? Ontario and Quebec have their own officials, their own provincial police and their own game wardens, and such additional men as may be necessary in different seasons may be appointed to carry out the provisions of the act. Why add the whole mounted police automatically to the service in all the provinces? The provinces already have their services. There is one point that is in the minds of the people, and that is duplication of expenses.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is the other way around.

Mr. MALCOLM: Not at all; you are not abolishing the provincial police or the game wardens. You are giving the mounted police an over-riding authority—

Mr. GUTHRIE: At no expense.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not see how they will police Ontario or Quebec without additional expense, because they must put on extra men.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are inspectors now appointed by this government. The mounted police have now taken over our obligations under the treaty in regard to migratory birds. They have heretofore been appointed annually to carry out work along with civilians in various parts of Canada, to discharge the obligation which was entered into by the preceding government. Now we propose to allow the mounted police as a body to be game wardens. They get their pay whether they do this or other work, so that there is no increase involved but on the contrary a saving. As a result of this legislation a number of the men now employed will not be required. The saving will be in the salaries of the men who are now employed by the Department of the Interior, as they have been for years, which men will not be required in future.

Mr. BRADETTE: Let me give a typical example of what is being done. In Cochrane today we have machinery for taking care of the migratory bird law. There we have provincial game wardens and provincial police, and we have our police magistrates who have complete jurisdiction in such matters. If the government goes ahead and appoints a member of the mounted police as a magistrate, Toronto will say, and quite rightly, that they have no right to do so. The law will become ultra vires.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have the right to enforce treaties made by this government with foreign governments and to impose our will upon the provinces for that purpose.

Mr. BRADETTE: No matter what this government may do in appointing a man in a district as a magistrate, that appointment will become ultra vires. The province of Ontario will be the first one to protest, and I believe that we should do away with this evil. I have seen it done repeatedly and that is why I am so keen in seeing a remedy provided at this time. Not even the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) can deny that these appointments would be ultra vires the moment Toronto protested.

Mr. MURPHY: The sub-section reads as follows:

> The minister may appoint game officers for carrying out this act and the regulations, and may authorize such game officers to exercise the powers of a justice of the peace or the powers of a police constable.

The minister has had that power ever since the treaty went into effect; he could have exercised it at any time and he could have designated a police officer to carry out these duties.

Mr. RALSTON: Not as a police officer but as an individual.

Mr. MURPHY: In answer to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) I may say that instead of adding to the expense, this action will decrease the expense. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police will perform duties formerly performed by temporary employees, and we will save the salaries of those men. The mounted police will carry out the provisions of this act the same as they enforce the provisions of other acts.

Mr. MALCOLM: How many men will be dismissed as a result of this amendment, and what are their salaries?

Mr. MURPHY: These men were simply seasonal employees. I am not sure of the number, but I think it is something like twelve to fifteen, perhaps a few more.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is one of these officers in my city. He was appointed by the Civil Service Commission and apparently he is going to be let out. I have been trying to help him by having him appointed by the mounted police to perform these duties. I know a substantial saving will be effected by letting out the temporary officers, but this man happens to be a permanent appointee. He has reached the age of sixty years and has been in this office a long time. It seems to me that the mounted police being so active in connection with the customs and excise act, will not give the attention to this act which is desired. I think this would be very true of the south shore, and perhaps the north shore of the St. Lawrence river and the bay of Chaleur. This is just one more thing being loaded upon the mounted police, and I understand it is something they are not very keen to take over. However, the matter of policy has been settled and the thing is done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It would look as though this were an effort to increase the number of members of the mounted police force. If ten or twelve officials were required to enforce this act, some addition to the mounted police will be required in order to carry on the work, provided, of course, that today the mounted police are not too numerous for the duties they are being called upon to perform.

Mr. MURPHY: There seems to be some confusion in regard to this matter which I hope I can clear up. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) stated that as a result of the non-employment of these temporary assistant migratory bird wardens, certain officers have been let out and he thought I was in error in making my statement. There were temporary assistant migratory bird officers who were appointed for a short period each year. When the season was over they were out of the service and might not be employed the following year. The class of official to which the hon. member has referred was not known as temporary assistant migratory bird wardens; they were known as assistant migratory bird wardens and are still in the service. By order in council they have been transferred to the Department of Justice.

Mr. MALCOLM: Then there is no saving.

Mr. MURPHY: The saving has resulted from the fact that the temporary assistant migratory bird wardens will not now be employed, their duties will be performed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Because of the reasons stated by the minister, I think we are safe in opposing this legislation. In my county there are five or six of these men who work under Mr. Lewis. They work from April to October only but are able to earn a certain amount of money which helps them through the rest of the year. In connection with this service there are also guardians of bird sanctuaries who are appointed every year to be stationed at certain places to look after the administration of the act. The stretch of land from the Saguenay down to the Labrador coast is divided into three or four districts, and these men are stationed at various places and have certain territory to patrol. Mr. Lewis supervises their work and the administration of the act is carried on in an efficient manner. I cannot see how it would be possible for the government to have mounted police officers do this work. It would require nearly the same number of constables and the force would have to be increased. The constables would have to hire boats and perform the same duties as these other men. There would be no saving and yet a certain number of people would be deprived of considerable remuneration. The mounted police is being used in connection with the inland revenue and excise acts, as well as in connection with other acts, and it would seem that the government has gone mounted police mad. These officers are gradually displacing the officials of many departments. I think we should adhere to the administration as carried on formerly as I cannot see that any bad results have resulted from such administration.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not see where any saving will be effected. If five or six temporary wardens are necessary in any district, it is quite evident that five or six mounted police will be required to perform the same duties. The present system under which the minister has been administering the act provides that he may pay temporaries for the time the migratory season is on, that is, from spring to fall. If he has to put on mounted police he has to increase the mounted police force and will therefore have a number of policemen idle between seasons. We cannot save money by administering the act in that way. The Minister of Justice says he has transferred the administration to the Department of Justice and he is going to substitute mounted police for temporary wardens. In other words, he is to put on full-time policemen to do what part-time civilians are doing now.

Mr. BRADETTE: If I am wrong, the minister will correct me, but to me the main reason for the change is quite evident; it is the conflict of jurisdiction between the federal and the provincial governments and lack of cooperation on the part of the provinces in applying the migratory birds law. I mean by that what the Minister of Justice, and also the Minister of the Interior, said a few minutes ago, that apparently the international law has not been applied by the older provinces at least. Is that so?

Mr. MURPHY: We do not compel the provincial governments to pass their legislation, but I may say there has been cooperation between the various provinces and the dominion, and to the best of my knowledge the provisions of the provincial acts conform to those of the dominion act.

Mr. BRADETTE: I have under my hand a document in which there is an appendix to the Ontario game and fish law in which is incorporated international provisions applicable to the whole of Canada, and also instructions to the game wardens. It seems to me that we should define the jurisdiction of the federal authorities. I do not see why we should be discussing that matter for such a long time, because in this act there is an anomaly in that a certain provision cannot apply to Ontario. Ontario will never allow any such jurisdiction in the whole of that province and I suppose the same thing applies to Quebec as well as to any other province. In my section of Ontario it cannot be applied. Therefore obviously my amendment should be passed now because the federal government should prevent overlapping of jurisdiction.

Mr. MURPHY: The answer, to my mind, is very simple: the dominion has complete jurisdiction.

Mr. RALSTON: How many game officers, not police officers, are there in Nova Scotia, within the meaning of this section?

Mr. MURPHY: The number of temporary migratory bird wardens in Nova Scotia would usually, I think, be in the neighbourhood of nine or ten. In addition to them there are permanent assistant migratory bird wardens. There are two in the province who have been transferred to the Department of Justice.

Mr. RALSTON: How many of those nine or ten has the minister appointed as officers?

Mr. MURPHY: They were appointed for the season.

Mr. RALSTON: But appointed under this section. It states that the minister may appoint game officers for carrying out this act. Those nine or ten were appointed by him under this section.

Mr. MURPHY: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Did my hon. friend appoint any members of the mounted police in addition to those nine or ten?

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Mr. RALSTON: Is the situation not this? Let us consider the province of Nova Scotia. At the present time there are nine or ten officers appointed by the minister. The minister has power also to authorize those nine or ten to perform the duties of justices of the peace. If this amendment were passed, I suppose about 150 men will be added to that strength. These last 150 men are responsible to the Minister of Justice. The first nine or ten are responsible to the Minister of the Interior. Immediately a conflict of responsibility arises, and there is also a conflict in the exercise of jurisdiction. Who is going to proceed with it? Is it to be the nine or ten?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The nine or ten will be dropped.

Mr. MURPHY: The nine or ten will not be appointed.

Mr. RALSTON: Then there is no objection to my hon. friend dropping the nine or ten.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the idea.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there any intention of dropping that provision from the statute?

Mr. MURPHY: There would be an objection to that, because I might want to appoint some in the Northwest Territories or at some particular point where the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police might not be available, and I think the minister should have that power; but it is not the intention to reappoint those men in districts where their duties can be efficiently performed by the mounted police.

Mr. RALSTON: Are the mounted police acting as ex-officio game officers under this amendment, responsible to the Minister of the Interior or the Minister of Justice?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act is being transferred under that special act which permits the transfer from one department to another, and I assume in the future the Department of Justice, being the department in control of the mounted police, will have the administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act. The idea is as far as possible to use the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and our belief is that this will not in any way increase but will lessen the expense. We have the men now; they are supposed to be a very valuable force of trained investigators and we think their services ought to be utilized. I believe the original object was to save money, and I am satisfied, if this bill passes, we shall succeed in that. There may be points where at odd times it may be necessary to name some special officers for a particular district for certain seasons of the year. I do not, however, anticipate that will be necessary.

Mr. RALSTON: What minister will do that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That will be the mounted police.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would be the Minister of Justice after the transfer is completed, but it is not anticipated that will be a power that will be utilized at all. I see, however, no objection to leaving it there in case the necessity should arise.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the fact not really that the government is gradually doing away with the Department of the Interior and this is one step in that direction?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Possibly there is something in that. The suggestion did not come from the mounted police. It came from the Department of the Interior. The mounted police as now constituted is, I think, the proper force to handle such a matter. If we can utilize the services of trained men and thereby save money, we should do so.

Mr. RALSTON: I would point out to my hon. friend I am afraid he is not quite correct with regard to the power to appoint those officers as justices of the peace.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps I made a slip in my former statement, because I notice the language of the amendment is:

All members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall, for the purpose of this act, be ex officio game officers.

Now they are appointed under this act; they are not appointed by the minister and it is only those who are appointed by the minister who could be made magistrates.

Mr. RALSTON: Notwithstanding what has already been said, I want to protest against the idea of an administrative officer being given the power of a justice of the peace. I am glad the Minister of Justice assures us that under this amendment as it stands the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police do not become justices of the peace by reason of having been included as ex officio game officers. They would have to be specially appointed. Let me say one thing more, and that is, I sincerely hope that power will not be exercised and that the magistracy of the country will be utilized instead of these officers who are responsible for making arrests and enforcing the law and who would naturally be zealous in prosecuting, being charged also with the administration of justice.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I fully agree with the observations of my hon. friend in that respect. It is a very doubtful practice that men who lay the information should also try the case. I would discourage that in every way possible.

Mr. MacLEAN: On December 17, 1932, an order in council was passed, P.C. 2744, which authorized the transfer of five officers of the Migratory Bird Service with their positions to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Up to the present I understand that these men have not been given employment although they were transferred with their positions under this order in council, and money was voted to continue their services. These men had been in the service for quite a long time, and they were permanent civil servants. I would ask the Minister of the Interior or the Minister of Justice to look into this matter and see whether these permanent officials who have been transferred by order in council cannot be given employment. It seems hardly fair for the mounted police to take new men into their service and at the same time dispense with the services of these migratory bird officers who had been in the service for many years. Some of them had splendid war records, and it does seem strange to me that they should be let out and new men taken on to replace them, especially in view of the order in council transferring them to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I trust that the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Justice will give attention to that order in council and endeavour to see that justice is done to these men. Up to the present I do not believe that they have been given any assurance that their services will be continued. I think they were given leave of absence with pay, and perhaps they are still in that position. I would like a reply from the ministry.

Mr. MURPHY: There are certain permanent officers engaged in carrying out the provisions of this act who are known as migratory bird officers. There is one in the four western provinces, Mr. Munroe; one at Ottawa, Mr. Lewis; one in the maritime provinces, Mr. Tufts, and in the maritimes there have been five other permanent officers, who are known as assistants to the migratory bird officer. It is these five officers who have just been brought to my attention by the hon. member. No other part of Canada has such officials, but these five were carrying on in the maritimes as assistants to Mr. Tufts, and when the move was made to transfer to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the duties which they had been performing, these five were transferred by order in council to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Whether it will be necessary to retain their services now that their duties are being performed by the mounted police will be a matter for the Department of Justice to determine.

Mr. MacLEAN: I thank the minister for his explanation, but it seems to me hardly fair to let out permanent civil servants and fill their places with new men. I think it is generally admitted as a fair principle to retain throughout the service men whose services have been satisfactory rather than to take on new men.

Mr. RALSTON: Might I suggest that the ridiculousness of this whole proposition is shown by the illustration I have given? Nova Scotia could be covered by nine or ten officers who understand their work, but now it is to be done by 150 or 160 men. It is absolutely ridiculous. If the Minister of the Interior or the Minister of Justice wants this work done by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, why not designate seven or eight or nine officers to do the work? The mounted police are being given entirely too much authority in this country, and too many things are being handed over to them. But if the government are determined to have this work turned over to the mounted police, why not designate seven or eight or nine or ten officers who would have power to act, and not have 150 or 160 take the place of the nine men who are doing the work in Nova Scotia? That would obviate this blanketing in of the whole force, and you would be able to carry out exactly the same idea you have in mind if you want to transfer this work to the mounted police. Personally I think the idea is all wrong, and that the work should remain where it is, namely, under the responsible officers of the department which is administering the act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not at all wedded to the suggestion contained in the act, and if my hon. friend is serious in his suggestion I should be prepared to let this clause stand and discuss the matter with the officials of the mounted police. I think, however, there is a good deal to be said in favour of empowering all the members of the force to do particular acts or administer particular laws, and that is now done in respect of other laws. While my hon. friend says that the duties of the mounted police are becoming altogether too extended, in every case in which their duties or the areas in which they operate have been extended it has been done at the request of the provinces themselves.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Not of Quebec.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have not extended their duties there, or in Ontario, but in all the other provinces it has been done at the request of the provincial authorities. The force is now in Nova Scotia. I do not know, from memory, just how many men are there, but under this provision all these men would be ex officio game wardens and would have the right to administer the provisions of the act. If my hon. friend thinks there is merit in the suggestion that only a specific number be designated instead of the whole force, I am willing to consider it. I do not disfavour it at all. There is of course the principle that all members of the force should have equal powers. I will ask that the clause stand and we can discuss the matter further.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I also doubt the advisability of this transfer. I am not questioning the ability of the officers to enforce the act, but it does seem to me that the Department of Justice is not the proper place for the administration of an act of this kind. The mounted police officers are undoubtedly zealous in performing their duties; I have always admitted that. But I do think the government are making a mistake in this transfer, as will be disclosed as time goes on. My experience with the act was that it was sometimes difficult to reconcile domestic and local difficulties with the international questions raised. The officials now in charge have had some training in this work; I think we have met the situation fairly well up to the present and are beginning to reconcile many of these difficulties. Therefore I question the wisdom of transferring the whole administration of this act to the mounted police, who are obligated to perform other duties, and who while performing those duties zealously, undoubtedly, have not had the experience in this particular work of the local men who are to be dismissed.

Mr. MURPHY: They are not being dismissed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I found that they did their duty fairly well, and the only difficulty I encountered was in getting convictions. I do not think this is a step in the right direction, or that it will make for as efficient administration as before.

Sections 2 and 3 stand.

On section 4—No one to buy, sell or possess bird, nest or egg in prohibited time.

Mr. HOWDEN: Some years ago what used to be the Kirchoffer's hunting preserve around the southern end of lake Manitoba was acquired by a number of well-to-do American gentlemen. They shot over it for a number of years, and as game had become rather scarce in that locality, last year they made it their business, doubtless with the knowledge and sanction of either the provincial or the federal authorities, to breed many thousands of wild ducks. They gathered the eggs and set them under hens and tame ducks, and consequently in the hunting season of 1932 there were more wild ducks than there had been in that district for many years. Certainly it was a great benefit to the duck hunting fraternity of Manitoba. But if the collection of wild ducks eggs for such a purpose is not permitted, it seems to me the province of Manitoba would be the poorer. It could not be done again if this clause obtains.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This clause is the same as it was before, except for the matter of a few words.

Mr. HOWDEN: Ducks were bred in great abundance, and last year there were more ducks around the south end of lake Manitoba than had been seen for many years.

Mr. POULIOT: Why not discuss the whole thing at a lame duck session?

Mr. MURPHY: There is nothing to prevent the continuation of that plan, which I understand was carried out under licence.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): In connection with section 6 I may say that I am a migratory bird officer, have been for ten years, without remuneration, and I think I know something about migratory birds. But there is one thing here I do not quite understand and would like to be enlightened upon. Section 6 says:

> No person, without lawful excuse, the proof whereof shall lie on such person, shall buy, sell or have in his possession any migratory game bird—

Will the minister state what he considers a lawful excuse? I am a prospector; my work takes me sometimes far afield, as much as two, three or four hundred miles from my base. I carry in my grub pack the usual bannock and bacon, no more than I can help, because we sometimes have many portages and we get tired; besides it sometimes becomes rancid and not very palatable. I want to know if I should be considered as breaking the law if I killed a duck and boiled it. If so, there is about a thousand years coming to me right now.

Mr. MURPHY: I would say that the only person who could answer that question would be the magistrate who is trying the case.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I would be trying myself, as it stands at present, being a migratory bird officer and ex officio magistrate. I think I would let myself off.

Mr. BRADETTE: I would ask the Minister of Justice: this act we are dealing with being an international matter, is there anything in the constitution machinery which will allow the federal government to ask the provincial governments to apply this act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a provision in our constitution that in regard to international treaties the federal government can enact laws imposing upon a province whatever is necessary to carry out an international obligation. This being an international obligation, a matter of treaty between Canada and the United States, the federal government is empowered to pass such laws as are necessary to put it into force in the various provinces of Canada.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Salaries, $524,790; contingencies, $40,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This item raises the whole question of civil service salaries. I think it should stand.

Mr. STEVENS: If there is objection to proceeding with the civil service list we will let that stand.

Item stands.

An act to place Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron or steel on a basis of equality with imported coal, administration of, $1,000.

Mr. RALSTON: May I ask the minister who in his department has charge of this particular matter?

Mr. STEVENS: Does my hon. friend mean the officer in Ottawa?

Mr. RALSTON: No, I mean the officer to whom any part of that $1,000 is paid—I presume an officer in the plant.

Mr. STEVENS: John MacLean.

Mr. RALSTON: In the plant?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: What is his salary?

Mr. STEVENS: He gets $3,600 a year, but the Dominion government pay $1,000 and the company pays the balance.

Mr. RALSTON: Can the minister state the amount paid last year under this item?

Mr. STEVENS: Up to December 31, 1932, only $780; but I apprehend that the accounts for the year are not all in. For the preceding year it was $62,000.

Item agreed to.

The Hemp Bounties Act, 1923, administration of $500.

Mr. MALCOLM: What was paid under the Hemp Bounties Act last year?

Mr. STEVENS: The answer will have to be the same, a very small sum so far, the year not being complete. The year previous the amount was $2,189.

Mr. MALCOLM: The administration of the act costs 25 per cent of all the money paid.

Mr. STEVENS: No, we do not pay anything out. As a matter of fact, this is provided for travelling expenses and is used only in case of necessity. Nothing was used last year or the year before.

Mr. SANDERSON: When does the act expire?

Mr. STEVENS: At the end of the calendar year 1933.

Mr. SANDERSON: I hope the minister will seriously consider the question of renewing it. I am of the opinion that this is money wasted. I said so when the late administration was across the floor, I said so last year, and I repeat it now. It does not serve any good purpose at all. It was the intention of the act to give some assistance to the farmer in growing hemp but it does not assist the farmer. It never has done so and it never will. What money is paid out is paid to the manufacturers of hemp, and I think the minister and the government would be well advised not to renew it.

Mr. STEVENS: This is an occasion on which I can say to my hon. friend that his advice is welcome, and we will certainly give it careful consideration, because I have somewhat sympathetic views myself although I am not prepared to make any definite pronouncement now.

Item agreed to.

Commercial intelligence service, including miscellaneous expenditure in connection with Canada's trade, and also to provide for the appointment of L. D. Wilgress, as director of the commercial intelligence service, Department of Trade and Commerce, at $7,800 per annum, effective April 1, 1933, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $693,487.30.

Mr. STEVENS: This includes salaries abroad. Does the leader of the opposition object to going on with it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it is understood that a bill will be introduced it will be all right to proceed.

Mr. STEVENS: It is understood that the opposition reserve their full rights with respect to discussion.

Mr. BRADETTE: Does this item include expenditures in connection with advertising?

Mr. STEVENS: No, that is under another item.

Mr. MALCOLM: What increases have been made in the number of trade commissioners abroad to justify the increase in this vote in face of the fact that general salaries are down 10 per cent?

Mr. STEVENS: Covering the last two-year period there have been six new assistant trade commissioners appointed and there are some slight adjustments. Beyond that I do not think there is any increase.

Mr. SPENCER: Has the minister noticed any particular increase in trade from those countries where we have trade commissioners?

Mr. STEVENS: Under the very difficult circumstances we have been passing through in connection with external trade I am proud to say that very definite benefits are resulting from the services of our trade commissioners abroad, and I welcome this opportunity of paying tribute to the devotion and efficiency of these officers.

Mr. MALCOLM: In 1928 we got along with, in round figures, $425,000, and in the previous year $375,000. Now we are asked to vote $693,000, practically $700,000. I think the minister should give some further explanation than merely to inform the committee that there are six more junior trade commissioners. This is a large increase; in fact it is double the amount voted in 1927-28.

Mr. STEVENS: In 1927-28 the amount was, in round figures, $413,000; in 1928-29, $495,000; in 1929-30, $663,000; in 1930-31, $749,000; in 1931-32, $690,000, and the present provision is $693,000. It is of course clearly understood that the total vote does not go for salaries. There are statutory increases accounting for a considerable amount. There is a variation in the matter of travelling. We have cut that down, our aim being to reduce it to a minimum. Rentals are up to what they were in 1928-29, although down this year as compared with a year ago, and sundry expenditures amounted to $107,000 last year.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister has compared the amount of this estimate with the amounts in previous years, but the house and the country will remember that the situation with regard to revenues in previous years was far different from that which the Minister of Finance will experience this year, and I do not think the country will be satisfied with the alleged paring-down which has been shown in the estimates as announced by the Minister of Finance the other day. It is of course difficult to pick out items; the government knows better what items to pick out. I submit, however, that my hon. friend, in bringing down an estimate which is somewhat larger than the estimate of last year and larger than the estimates in 1927-28 and 1928-29, years when there were expanding revenues, is not doing justice to his colleague the Minister of Finance. In my opinion this amount is too large. My hon. friend suggests that an expansion has been made in appointing more junior trade commissioners. May I suggest to him that he is going ahead a good deal more quickly than the fiscal policy of the government of which he is a member would justify. There is not much use appointsix more trade commissioners while you maintain the fiscal policy of this government. We can pretty well abandon the idea of selling abroad until we decide to change radically the tariff policies of this government. I submit to my hon. friend in the first place that it is not an evidence of economy, it does not help very much, and it will not receive the approval of the country, to find in this vote $7,800 for a director of commercial intelligence. I do not know Mr. Wilgress at all but it seems to me that in these times when, as the Prime Minister suggests, we are almost on the brink of a precipice so far as national finance is concerned, this is not the opportunity to appoint an officer of this kind; rather some adjustment should be made in the department to render the appointment unnecessary. While I criticize this estimate on the ground of expenditure, I criticize it also from the point of view of the method adopted. It has been done in the past, for this is not the first time that officers have been voted in through estimates. It is in direct contravention of the Civil Service Act, which provides a preference for returned men. This deliberately cuts them out of the preference. A high salaried position is given to a man whose appointment in this manner, although he may be entirely qualified, contravenes the principle which parliament has laid down governing the matter. My hon. friend should give the committee a full explanation as to why it is proposed to blanket in a man at a salary of $7,800 in the face of the financial conditions which exist to-day and in view of the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. STEVENS: I am very glad my hon. friend invites an explanation, because I feel sure that I can make a satisfactory response to his query. In connection with the office of director of commercial intelligence service, we brought to Ottawa a man whom we considered one of the most efficient in the service, and who, having been in the service for nineteen years, has served this country abroad most effectively in important fields. He was brought to Ottawa for the express purpose of lending to the service in Ottawa his wide and practical experience in trade matters abroad. Not only have I no apologies to make; I am distinctly proud of having made this move. Mr. Wilgress has not only proven himself to be efficient in this regard, but during the recent economic conference he was one of the most valuable officers that Canada had in Ottawa, dealing as he did with the complicated matters of trade abroad. I trust that this will prove to be sufficient justification for the move.

In connection with the maintaining of these services, I do not think it was ever more necessary to study the question of foreign trade and markets in an endeavour to open up and extend markets abroad than it is at the present time. I am not going to be drawn into a discussion on the merits or demerits of protection or free trade. Perhaps the best place to do that is when the budget is before us—it is the time honoured occasion for such a discussion. I will say, however, that there is evidence that in our trade this particular service abroad has shown excellent results. Let me illustrate by a reference to Australia. It will be recalled that our trade with that country was very seriously disturbed because of the fact that Australia depreciated her currency, and put into effect severe import regulations and prohibitions, for the very laudable purpose of attempting to balance her budget and correct her internal financial situation. Of course we have no complaint to make with all that; we have no right even to make observations, but the fact is that it seriously interfered with our trade with that country as well as with her trade with other countries. Subsequent to the consummation of the agreement—

Mr. RALSTON: To what agreement does my hon. friend refer?

Mr. STEVENS: I am referring to the Canada-Australia treaty. For the nine months ended December of the present fiscal year, our exports amounted to $5,489,000 as compared with $3,744,000 for the same period in 1931. This increase took place in spite of the fact that there was a considerable drop in commodity prices generally during the intervening period. I should like to give some quantity increases in various products exported to Australia. For instance, canned fish increased from 67,000 hundredweight to 69,000 hundredweight; canned salmon from 60,000 to 61,000 hundredweight; cotton fabrics from 131,000 yards to 1,130,000 yards; oilcloths from 150 yards, practically nothing, to 102,700 yards; other textiles and fabrics from $967, virtually nothing, to $51,248. The exports of logs increased from 1,800,000 feet board measure to over five million feet; planks and boards, from 37,000,000 feet to 66,000,000 feet and squared timbers from just under 4,000,000 feet to 29,000,000 feet. The increase in paper was from $1,456,000 to $1,565,000 and in wallboard from 2,100 hundredweight to 3,600 hundredweight. Newsprint increased from 456,000 to 591,000 hundredweight while wall paper increased from 87,000 rolls to 121,000 rolls. The figures in connection with automobiles are very interesting. Last year we exported just one automobile while this year the exports numbered 1,581. The value of parts exported last year was $46,000 as compared to $147,000 this year. These figures show a marked increase in our business with Australia.

Mr. RALSTON: Why not give the total trade?

Mr. STEVENS: Unfortunately I have not the figures.

Mr. DUFF: Do those figures include trade with New Zealand?

Mr. STEVENS: No. Unfortunately I have not those figures under my hand, but there has been an increase during the past seven or eight months.

Mr. MALCOLM: From what point?

Mr. STEVENS: The trade has dropped considerably. I think the figures giving the quantities illustrate my point more clearly than the totals. There is no question that the total figures will show a serious decline. I think they were published in this morning's papers.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would the minister be good enough to obtain the figures for the last three years and bring them down later?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, I can do that. Our exports of canned fruit to Great Britain during the last nine months were 7,138,000 pounds as compared with 3,980,000 in 1931. The increase in syrups was from 138,000 gallons to 343,000 gallons. The exports of oats increased from 4,800,000 bushels to 7,194,000 bushels. I will give the figures in connection with wheat, not for the purposes of my argument but rather to provide information for the house. Other figures of exports are as follows:

| Commodity— | 1931For nine months ending December 31 | 1932For nine months ending December 31 |
|---|---|---|
| Wheat | Bushels96,000,000 | Bushels125,000,000 |
| Bran and shorts | Cwt.156,000 | Cwt.1,411,000 |
| Flour | Bbls.1,658,000 | Bbls.1,878,000 |
| Vermicelli and macaroni | Lbs.684,000 | Lbs.1,471,000 |

As regards some of these commodities in particular, taking for instance, the last one that I have mentioned, we have made special efforts through the agency of the commercial intelligence service to increase our exports in such things as we are well able to produce, and are meeting with excellent results.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Oil cake and meal | Cwt.43,000 | Cwt.75,000 |
| Tobacco, unmanufactured | Lbs.2,708,000 | Lbs.5,842,000 |

And I believe before the end of the season that will be increased to approximately 11,000,000 pounds exported to Great Britain.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Honey | Lbs.1,715,000 | Lbs.1,929,000 |
| Bacon and hams | Cwt.93,000 | Cwt.250,000 |
| Canned meats | Lbs.14,500 | Lbs.372,600 |
| Poultry | Lbs.48,400 | Lbs.983,000 |
| Condensed milk | Cwt.57,000 | Cwt.131,000 |
| Oils, fats, greases and waxes | Gals.88 | Gals.17,533 |
| Fish oil | 16,500 | 170,100 |

Then there are a number of smaller items.

There are other items, but these, I think, will indicate the increase at least in certain commodities of our exports by weight or quantity.

Mr. YOUNG: Will the minister tell us from what countries we are capturing this trade?

Mr. STEVENS: It is always, I think, inadvisable on the floor of the house to speak about "capturing" trade from this or that country. We do not wish to stir up the jealousies of competing countries. Perhaps I can say that in many of these items we are capturing trade from the United States, and on some of the items I could name we are capturing trade from some European countries, but I would not care to be too specific in that connection.

Mr. HANBURY: May I ask the minister to repeat the figures he gave in relation to the export of cottons to Australia?

Mr. STEVENS: This is for the nine months ended December:

| | 1931 | 1932 |
|---|---|---|
| | Yds. | Yds. |
| Cotton, fabrics | 131,796 | 1,130,497 |

Mr. HANBURY: Could the minister explain why there is such an increase?

Mr. STEVENS: Because of the advantages given to us under the treaty we made with Australia a year and a half ago.

Mr. MALCOLM: They gave us the same rate as Great Britain?

Mr. STEVENS: Not quite, I think. I am speaking from memory, but I do not think it was quite the same rate.

Mr. MALCOLM: It was only on cotton goods we were able to compete in Australia on not quite as good a rate.

Mr. STEVENS: On certain lines, that is true. As regards cotton goods, one must remember there are literally scores, and, I presume, almost hundreds of different kinds of cotton goods manufactured, but I am told that our cotton factories are exceptionally well equipped in the way of machinery and so forth for the manufacture of certain classes of cottons.

Mr. HANBURY: That suggests the observation that it would seem unnecessary for our manufacturers, when they are able so to compete in the world markets, to have protection against cotton coming into Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: I think any manufacturer would reply to that argument by saying that if they were denied the protection which is commonly afforded, for instance in this country and all countries now including Great Britain, so that they might have the mass production created by the home market, they would not be able to compete in the foreign market. Therefore with the fact of the protection and the access to the home market, the quantity enables them to have a surplus for export at reasonable prices through the lowering of the overhead costs in mass as compared with restricted production.

Mr. HANBURY: If they have the unrestricted home market, that better enables them to dump the surplus in foreign markets.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend can put the case in that way, but I prefer not to agree.

Mr. DUFF: The minister read a number of interesting figures, but in my opinion he failed to tell us what part the personnel of the commercial intelligence service played in getting any of that business. Perhaps he might be good enough to explain to the committee what part the officers of that service played in getting any of that trade with Australia and Great Britain.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is quite reasonable in his request, but to give a complete or even a moderately complete story of that would occupy a very long time, and I did not come prepared with detailed illustrations. There comes to my mind one illustration. For instance, let us take Australia and the movement of timber. Our trade commissioner in Australia is Mr. Ross, and I think my predecessor in office who now sits on the other side would agree with me when I say that Mr. Ross is a man of exceptional ability and knowledge.

Mr. DUFF: He is from Nova Scotia.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, and that ought to commend him to the high opinion of almost anyone, even myself. Mr. Ross, by his intense efforts in regard to the market, conditions of sale, and so forth, as well as by making connection between Canadian exporters and Australian importers, was able to increase our sales tremendously. It was not alone through his efforts, because, as my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard will recall, representatives of the timber industry went over there; but had it not been for the local knowledge of our representative on the ground, business men going to these countries abroad would have had great difficulty in sensing the local atmosphere and becoming acquainted with the personnel doing business over there. Our files are charged daily with letters from the business men of Canada expressing appreciation of the services rendered to them by our various trade agents abroad. I have no hesitation in saying to the committee that we have in the personnel at the thirty-four or thirty-five stations where they are located a body of trade commissioners of whom Canada can justly be proud and who are rendering a great service to this country. If hon. gentlemen opposite were interested enough to inquire from any of the larger business concerns engaged in the export business, they would find one and all bearing testimony to the splendid services rendered.

We have also in our department a foreign tariffs branch, through which we are able to give to the business men of Canada, from whom we receive inquiries every day, the fullest possible and most up to date information regarding tariffs and other technical conditions in every country of the world. These are the services that are being rendered, and I think they are of very great value to the country.

Mr. RALSTON: My criticism was that the minister was sending these men to do an impossible task, that he was voting this money to pay them and then tying their hands. I submit that that is the position. I am not entering into the argument of free trade versus protection, but I am touching upon the question which has frequently been raised in this house, during the last two years at least, as to whether Canada can extend her export trade so long as she imposes prohibitory tariffs against almost every other country of the world, and irritating exchange dumping duties and other import restrictions which make it impossible for importers to know just how much they are going to pay for their goods. However hard these men are trying to do their job, I say it is not much use to vote this money and then make it impossible for these men to do their work because of the policies put in force by the government. I know Mr. Ross personally, and I know he is an excellent man and that he has done good work in Australia. My hon. friend selects Australia. I happen to have here the figures for all the empire countries, and while we may have gained something with Australia, we must have lost something somewhere else, because for the nine months ending December 31, 1932, our exports to empire countries totalled $176,834,000 as compared with $178,633,000 in the same period of 1931. I doubt if my hon. friend will find a single increase in our exports to countries other than empire countries, and I say that he is not giving his trade commissioners very much chance when his government put into force the tariff policies they do. In what countries are these six new trade commissioners? Are they in Australia, or where?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend misunderstood me. I did not say six new trade commissioners, but six assistant trade commissioners.

Mr. RALSTON: Well, six assistant trade commissioners.

Mr. STEVENS: May I take time to explain the system which has been established, and very wisely, I think, maintained in Canada? After the original group of trade commissioners was set up, each year a small number, six or seven or eight young men are chosen after a very stiff competitive examination, one of the most exacting I believe in the service generally, to be trained for the position of trade commissioner. They start in as junior or student trade commissioners here in Ottawa, where they are trained for one year at headquarters, and brought into contact with business people. Then they are sent out as assistant trade commissioners to our various offices throughout the world, and are gradually advanced until ultimately they become, after many years abroad, full fledged trade commissioners. We have thirty-five trade commissioners stationed in various parts of the world, most of whom have an assistant, and some in the larger offices have two. In this way the service has been built up. We did open one new office last year in northern China. It was our intention to open an office at Tientsin and at Dairen. We did open an office in Dairen, but owing to the disturbed conditions in Manchuria transferred it to Tientsin.

Mr. RALSTON: Where are the six new assistants?

Mr. STEVENS: They have been sent out in the last few months to Bristol, Liverpool, Brussels, Port of Spain, and Hamburg, and there is one more who has not yet been assigned, but will be shortly.

Mr. RALSTON: I know some of these trade commissioners and the work they are trying to do, and the enthusiasm they show. I do not think my hon. friend himself can express any higher appreciation than I have of what they are trying to do, but I am trying to point out that their hands are tied by the policies of this government. I know Mr. Croft in New Zealand. He had done excellent work. I also know Mr. Scott in Liverpool.

Mr. STEVENS: He has been moved to the Argentine.

Mr. RALSTON: I also know Mr. Palmer, our representative in the Scandinavian countries. But with regard to the point I was raising with respect to this appointment which is being blanketed in under the act, while I am not suggesting that the gentleman is not an admirable man—I do not know him at all—he is being blanketed in at a time when economy is supposed to be the watchword. What amount was paid the director of commercial intelligence previously? Is this the usual salary?

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friend will turn to the civil government details, he will find that the previous occupant of that office received $4,800. It will be recalled that the director of commercial intelligence was changed some years ago, and Mr. Poussette, who was an experienced trade commissioner, was sent out into the field and an officer from the department who had not been abroad at all, and was not trained in the service other than in the office mentioned, was put in as director of commercial intelligence at the reduced salary.

Mr. RALSTON: Who was that?

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Payne. After a year or more of that system I felt it was highly desirable to have one of the best trained men we had in the service, who fully understood the problems, brought to the head office. It was with that idea, and distinctly for the purpose of improving the service generally, that I chose the man whom I considered to be the most experienced and efficient man we had in the service. We brought Mr. Wilgress to Ottawa.

Mr. RALSTON: Where was he?

Mr. STEVENS: He was at that time located in Hamburg. It was done at my request, as a result of a decision I arrived at after most careful study of the whole situation. Mr. Wilgress is not receiving any larger salary than he received abroad, including his allowances; in fact I think it is a little less. So there is no question as far as he is concerned of increase in remuneration. It is a question of putting in charge of a very important service a man who is trained and experienced in the technique of the service. I consider it was a very wise and proper move.

Mr. RALSTON: I assume, of course, that the gentleman who replaced him in Hamburg got the salary that he did, and that therefore there is an increase of $3,000.

Mr. STEVENS: No, the gentleman who replaced him got precisely the same salary he was getting before.

Mr. RALSTON: That is what I say. Therefore there is an increase of $3,000, because under the previous arrangement the incumbent had been receiving $4,800, which now becomes $7,800 and that at a time when we are cutting salaries. I commend that to my hon. friend and members of the house who are looking for economy in these times and who see newspapers containing headlines showing that this government has succeeded in reducing the estimates some $10,000,000 below last year.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Camouflage.

Mr. RALSTON: Yet we find here an increase of $3,000 in the salary of one officer.

Mr. STEVENS: I know my hon. friend does not want to give a wrong impression. There is not an increase of $3,000 in the salary of one officer.

Mr. RALSTON: One office, then.

Mr. STEVENS: I would not even agree to that.

Mr. RALSTON: The increase is in regard to the position of director of commercial intelligence service. The person who was occupying that office was getting $4,800; the person who occupies it now is getting $7,800, at a time when the salaries of civil servants are cut ten per cent and the cost of living is down. I assume the minister made the best bargain possible, but I doubt whether the gentleman, no matter how good, in view of the situation in the commercial world, could not have been obtained for less money than the salary proposed to be paid, which was practically the salary of a deputy minister three years ago.

The second point is that the minister has taken upon himself, and makes no apology for it—if I had done a thing of that kind I would make no apology either; that is the proper attitude, I suppose—he has taken upon himself to override the provisions of the Civil Service Act and to say he is going to make the appointment and come to parliament for approval. The Civil Service Act provides for examination of junior members of the commercial intelligence service. If Mr. Wilgress was to be regarded as such an important officer he should have been taken out of the Civil Service Act. That was not done. Without regard to the fact that returned soldiers are given preference or that the Civil Service Commission are supposed to hold an examination of candidates, the minister makes the appointment himself, and says, "I have made the selection and that is all there is to it." That has been done before, as I say, but in very exceptional cases. I have never approved of it. I do not believe it is the proper thing; it is an ingenious way of getting rid of the act. If it were found by the Civil Service Commission that no returned soldier was qualified for the job—and my hon. friend himself could specify the qualifications; it is his department, then of course under the qualification he prepares this gentleman would get the job. Why not comply with the act instead of asking parliament to rubber stamp an appointment made in contravention of the Civil Service Act?

I criticize the item first on the ground that it is not in accordance with the principle of economy which should be practised at this time; second that there is an increase in the salary of $3,000, and third, that it is a contravention of the Civil Service Act.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. STEVENS: I fear I cannot allow the observations my hon. friend has made to go without an answer. In the first place there is not an increase. The situation is this: Mr. Wilgress was at Hamburg. I have stated the reasons he was brought to Ottawa. There was no increase in his remuneration. We took the trade commissioner from Athens, leaving the Athens office in charge of the assistant who, we felt, was competent to carry on. Thus we saved one salary at Athens, so there is a saving as far as this particular move is concerned of about half the salary of a trade commissioner.

Mr. RALSTON: There is an increase in the amount paid the director of commercial intelligence service.

Mr. STEVENS: No, there is no increase in the amount paid to the official who occupies that office. There is an increase in the amount that is paid to the office, I will agree. But in order to fill that office we bring a man who was already receiving the salary from Athens to Hamburg and leave the Athens office vacant. So the net result is an actual saving. Then my hon. friend says we have brought a man in in contravention of the Civil Service Act. Again I differ from him. We are not seeking to evade the act; the very fact that my hon. friend is discussing it here so freely shows there is no evasion. We bring it frankly before parliament and ask parliament to sanction it. It is true that under a strict interpretation of the Civil Service Act we would have to call for applications by and large, but I submit to my hon. friend—he has occupied the post of a minister—that there are occasions in some of the higher offices of the crown where a minister should have the liberty of exercising some judgment, particularly when in doing so he brings it before the house, states frankly what he has done and justifies to the best of his ability the action he has taken.

Mr. RALSTON: He cannot help doing that.

Mr. STEVENS: When I said I had no apology to make it was not with any desire to affront the house, but rather to assure the house of my conviction of the rightness of the course I had taken and that I am quite willing to take full responsibility for it. I am convinced that it is a strengthening of a service which I think is of great value to the country. We must not forget, either, that the appointee to this office had passed the civil service examinations, was fully qualified under the Civil Service Act to hold the positions that he held; and it is to be remembered that he is not being taken from the commercial intelligence service into some other branch but is simply being transferred to a position at Ottawa where, shall I say, his extraordinary experience qualifies him to direct that service. I do not wish to say a word of a derogatory character in regard to the previous occupant of the office, but the fact remains that the gentleman had no experience in commercial life and no experience abroad in this service. He was put into that service a few years ago, as my hon. friend knows, direct from the position of private secretary to a minister.

Mr. MALCOLM: He had been secretary of the commercial intelligence department and was promoted on the recommendation of the deputy minister, owing to his long years of experience.

Mr. STEVENS: He was a man who had spent all his time in Ottawa. I would rather not say anything derogatory with regard to his occupancy of the office but I did believe, and I say it frankly, that it was desirable to have at the head of the service a man who had had experience in this particular branch.

Mr. RALSTON: So far as experience is concerned, I test a man by results. Looking at the trade returns for 1928, and 1929 and 1930 and the present returns, I do not think there is much comfort for the minister in the figures there given.

Mr. STEVENS: No one is getting much comfort these days out of anything.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has not met the point which I must keep before the committee, and that is that if the Civil Service Act procedure had been followed, an ex-service man with qualifications would have had the preference. By proceeding in the way adopted here, you have done away with the provisions of the act so that a qualified ex-service man is given no chance. My hon. friend is ingenious with regard to figures and he can argue as much as he pleases that the situation is the same as it was before. The fact is however that in his own estimates of last year, at page 98, the director of commercial intelligence received $4,800, while in his estimates this year, the item with which we are dealing, the director is to receive $7,800, a difference of $3,000. The fact that there is an assistant in Athens who is able to take charge of the office does not alter the situation in Ottawa, where you increase the salary. If the man in Athens had been qualified he would have been shifted anyway, and the fact that this gentleman came from Hamburg would have made no difference. The fact of the matter is that we are paying $3,000 more owing to the minister's feeling that he, instead of the Civil Service Commission, should fix the salary and make the appointment.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Did his predecessors always follow the rule and leave it to the commission?

Mr. RALSTON: I have said that there have been cases in which it has not been followed—

Mr. CHAPLIN: Many of them.

Mr. RALSTON: —and it was criticized most bitterly by my hon. friends who are now on the other side of the house. I remember particularly an instance in which there was a position in the Speaker's estimates and it was criticized bitterly by the present Prime Minister. I do not find him here this afternoon criticizing this item.

Mr. GERSHAW: I wish to ask a question with regard to the distribution of the Commercial Intelligence Journal. I pointed out to the manager of a large glass factory that there was a notice in this journal one day about a market in another country for a product he manufactured. He stated that he never saw a copy of the journal and that the department had no idea of the line of goods he made. Can the minister state how information of this kind is collected?

Mr. STEVENS: That comes up under another item.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If we are about through with this item I wish to congratulate the minister on enlarging the service, because I am fully aware of the difficulties he is facing and I sympathize with him to the fullest extent. I sympathize with both him and the Minister of Finance. If they are to increase Canadian trade they will need a tremendous staff abroad and in the empire, because this government has never failed to place barriers in the way of trade. Indeed, I am amazed that my friends in the corner have forgotten that fact in their arguments with regard to currency. I am in favour of increasing sales agency staffs because if we do not increase them trade will disappear altogether and the minister will find himself in the unhappy position of having to admit that Canadian trade has entirely vanished. I was rather amused—and I do get amused once in a while at the minister's efforts—to see a sort of camouflage in his citing innumerable instances in which he has increased trade since 1931. If we had not, there would be no trade at all now, and in consequence the treasury would have suffered much more severely than it has. Surely after three years of an attempt to increase trade in Canada by means of the policies which my hon. friends opposite have put into force, it is nearly time now there was a right about face. If they made a right about face they would give the intelligence service a chance to do something for Canadian trade and help it to expand in the empire and in foreign countries. Until they do so I am in accord with the minister in increasing his staff because he will need to work day and night if we are to dispose of some of our produce, so long as the government refuses to receive the goods of countries to whom it is attempting to sell.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Has the minister considered the desirability of raising the trade commissioners to the position of consul in countries where they represent Canada? I understand that our trade commissioners are in an inferior position in other countries where they have the position virtually of consuls.

Mr. STEVENS: I have given a great deal of thought to that suggestion. Quite a number of prominent and competent persons in Canada have made the suggestion and after giving it a good deal of consideration I came to the conclusion that it would not be wise. In saying that I am expressing my own opinion. Of course, such a change would necessitate action on the part of the government and I am now speaking not the opinion of the Prime Minister but merely my own as head of this department. The reason I came to that conclusion was this. The primary object of a trade commissioner abroad is trade, business, making contacts between Canadian business houses and prospective customers, the compilation of information on trade and all matters appertaining to trade; and the danger is that if you make the trade commissioner a diplomatic officer he will become obsessed with a glorified idea of his position, and I do not say this at all offensively.

Mr. CASGRAIN: A superiority complex.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; he might develop a diplomatic complex and might pay more attention to the diplomatic than to the trade side of his duties. The only objection is that the trade commissioner in a foreign country, in approaching the government, has more difficulty achieving that objective, that is to say, getting direct contact with the minister than has the consul of another country. That is true; but we must bear in mind that the major part of the trade commissioner's duties consists not in contacts with the government, negotiating between one government and the other, but in contacts between business men in Canada and business men in the country in which he is stationed. While, therefore, I am not adamant on this, I came to the conclusion that it would be better for our trade commissioners to retain the status of purely commercial rather than diplomatic agents.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I always understood that a consul's occupation had relation more to trade. Diplomacy is represented by ministers or ambassadors, but the consul's function relates more to trade. Coming down to the business side of it, on looking over the list of Canadian trade agents I find very few French names. I state openly at this time that I do not think a man should be appointed to any position because of his nationality; qualification should come first, but he should not be kept out of any position because of his French descent. In many countries in South America, in Europe and in Africa the qualification for a foreign trade agent is that he shall be able to speak the language of the particular country, or French. I could name forty-two countries where that qualification is necessary. I am wondering just how many of our thirty-five agents are familiar with the French language and are therefore able adequately to represent this country in trade matters. In many countries French is the language which replaces the language of the country when that is not known to the individual. I am sure that outside of the agents at Brussels, Paris and Cairo, very few of our trade representatives abroad are familiar with the French language. I understand that in Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Peru where a trade agent does not speak Spanish, he conducts his negotiations in the French language. Knowledge of French is a qualification which should be necessary in the appointment of our trade agents.

Mr. MALCOLM: I might say to my hon. friend that I feel just as responsible for these trade commissioners as does the minister. I think my hon. friend is making a mistake when he assumes that our trade commissioners do not know the languages of the countries in which they are located. That is one of the first requirements of a man to be sent to a foreign field. I am not saying that Mr. Langley can speak Japanese, or that Mr. Cosgrave can speak Chinese, as they might be the exceptions. I should like to support what the minister has said against giving diplomatic status to our trade commissioners.

Where there is a minister in the country the trade commissioner could be attached to his office as a commercial attaché and obtain entrée through the minister. It is a very serious matter to recommend that all trade commissioners be given diplomatic status, as that would place them under the Department of External Affairs rather than the Department of Trade and Commerce. While I do not agree that should these commissioners be given diplomatic status they would immediately acquire a superiority complex and neglect their business. I do say that their purpose primarily is to make contacts with commercial houses on behalf of Canadian firms desiring to export. They are able to make all the necessary contacts through their memberships in the various clubs, and I do not think anything would be gained by giving them diplomatic status.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I understand that foreign countries carry on trade matters through their consuls.

Mr. MALCOLM: I cannot give my hon. friend any information as to what foreign countries do here, but I may say that while I was in charge of the department I never found that we lost any business because we had not put gold braid upon our commissioners. I support the minister in not being too anxious to give them diplomatic status.

Mr. DUFF: In giving the figures in connection with the increase in trade, the minister mentioned an increase in cod oil from 16,000 gallons to about 100,000 gallons. These figures show the ridiculousness and stupidity of interfering with trade. I do not want to be regarded as paying a compliment to the recent Imperial economic conference; I am simply referring to one of the results therefrom. Great Britain and Europe, up to the time Great Britain put a tax of one shilling four pence per gallon upon cod oil, were the natural markets for Norwegian and Swedish oil, but since that tax was put on very little of this oil has gone into Great Britain and the other countries of Europe. Canadian cod oil found a natural market in the United States, but due to this policy of interfering with trade, the Norwegians immediately looked for other markets. They came to the United States, and to-day we find Norwegian cod oil coming to Boston and New York while Canadian cod oil crosses the Atlantic to Great Britain.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to make one or two suggestions to the Minister in connection with our trade services abroad. I think we are neglecting a great market in not having trade agents in Russia. Lately we have heard a great deal about the negotiation of what is termed the cattle deal with Russia, the bartering of Canadian cattle and hides for Russian oil. One of the objections urged against the transaction is that the syndicate which has attempted to negotiate this trade has been asking too much for its services. If we had a trade agent in Russia it is possible that he could negotiate such deals. It may be that because of the high tariffs put on by this government and the fluctuating exchange rates we shall have to resort to bartering one class of goods for another, and from what I have heard of conditions in Russia I rather imagine that a trade commissioner might be able to barter some of our wheat which we are unable to sell for some of their kerosene, gasoline and lubricating oil, of which Russia has a surplus. The petroleum products which we might obtain for our wheat could be used by the farmers who grow the wheat. This would be a very sensible thing for a trade commissioner to endeavour to accomplish. We should make every endeavour to obtain trade in every place it is possible to obtain it.

Another suggestion I should like to make is that this service should be enlarged by placing a grain milling chemist in Europe in order to push the sale of Canadian wheat. I mean a man who would be familiar with the milling of our wheat and who could go into the mills in Europe and the old country and demonstrate the superiority of Canadian wheat over other wheats which the miller might be using. I heard a short time ago that the Argentine, Australia and Russia all have such men located in Europe, and I have no doubt that Canada is losing the sale of a considerable amount of wheat through not using similar expert salesmen. We cannot afford to miss any of these opportunities. If such a man could assist in the sale of our wheat, there is no better way in which we could spend some of the money voted to the commercial intelligence service than to employ a well qualified man in that position.

I should like to point out to the minister and also to hon. members that one of the greatest obstacles to trade within the British Empire, trade which the recent imperial conference was supposed to foster, is that the currencies of all the other countries within the British Empire are discounted in Canada all the way from twenty-five to fifty per cent. This is a very serious matter. In about every third issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal will be found some trade commissioner stating that this is a great handicap to Canada's endeavour to sell our goods in other parts of the empire. I remember particularly, I think it was in the issue of October 15, our trade commissioner in Australia points this out as one of the greatest obstacles to Canada selling her goods to Australia. It is something we cannot overlook. I should like to suggest to the minister that in the Commercial Intelligence Journal, on the page where the exchange quotations for the currencies of different countries are given, the old parity should be given in the table. Last year that was done; at least it used to be done, and for quite a long time it has not been included. It is something that would be appreciated by a good many who are securing copies of the Commercial Intelligence Journal.

Before I sit down I should like to ask the minister just what the Australian pound is quoted at in Canada in the last issue which he may have available, and also the rate of exchange for the New Zealand pound.

Mr. STEVENS: The rate of exchange, of course, varies from day to day, but my recollection of the last Australian quotation of a day or two ago was $2.73, and New Zealand was on a parity with Australia. This is the New York rate as against parity. My hon. friend wants the Australian rate in Canada.

Mr. COOTE: I am just wondering what the Australian pound is worth in Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: The Montreal quotation for January 23 last was $3.09 and for January 30, $3.1849. As regards some of the observations made by my hon. friend, I happen to have under way now steps which I hope, though perhaps not in precisely the way suggested by my hon. friend, will achieve the idea he has in mind, namely, that in wheat and flour purchasing countries, particularly in Europe, our trade commissioners will be peculiarly well informed on the technique of, let us say, the flour content and wheat content. We have considered the question of a special man to be sent around for that purpose. We question for the moment whether this would be as effective as the process we are working on at the present time, and that is to have a highly qualified and scientific person prepare the data which will be placed in the hands of each of the trade commissioners who will be instructed and informed technically as commercial agents.

My hon. friend spoke about bartering with Russia. It must of course be borne in mind that the Russian government handles all the trade of that country, both imports and exports, and the question there is not one of salesmanship but of their government control. I would prefer at the moment not to enter into a discussion of the alleged sale to Russia of a certain quantity of cattle. That was dealt with by the Prime Minister in his statement the other day.

Mr. MALCOLM: When the minister looks over the cost of our foreign business, he has to go beyond the cost of administering the commercial intelligence service and to turn to the amount of money Canada votes for subventions to steamships plying between Canada and foreign countries in order that our trade may be carried. In 1929-30 steamship subventions and the commercial intelligence service cost this country $1,000,000. This year under the estimates which the minister is presenting he is asking the people to pay $2,250,000 in taxes for those two services combined.

Mr. STEVENS: May I interrupt my hon. friend, so that he will not be in error on one point? It must be borne in mind that steamship services include a very large amount for the carriage of mail.

Mr. MALCOLM: There are being subsidized new services which have not been subsidized before. We will discuss those when the items come up. I see the minister has a new service for $659,000 between Canada, China and Japan, and a new one for $535,000, the second one being to Great Britain, a service which did not exist in the old days. These two amount to nearly a million and a quarter dollars. Some explanation will have to be given why so much of the taxpayers' money is needed to help steamships which are lying around ports looking for cargoes. Will the minister after eight o'clock kindly give the figures as to the trade of Canada for the years from 1926 to 1932 and the cost of the commercial intelligence service and steamship subsidies for the same period?

Mr. STEVENS: I shall try to have that for my hon. friend.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

SYNOD OF THE DIOCESE OF SASKATOON

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prince Albert) moved the second reading of Bill No. 16, respecting the synod of the diocese of Saskatchewan and to change its name to "Synod of the Diocese of Saskatoon".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the Synod of the Diocese of Saskatchewan to the Synod of the Diocese of Saskatoon, and to provide that all existing rights are not affected.

The Synod of the Diocese of Saskatchewan was incorporated by dominion statute in 1882, that is before the province of Saskatchewan was established in 1905. The Diocese of Saskatchewan so incorporated is to be divided into the Diocese of Saskatchewan and the Diocese of Saskatoon. All matters relating to the division of property come within the competence of the local legislature, and will be dealt with by an act of the legislature of the province of Saskatchewan at its present session.

The southern part of the present Diocese of Saskatchewan will become the Diocese of Saskatoon, and the northern part will become the Diocese of Saskatchewan under the act of the local legislature. The Diocese of Saskatoon will function under the charter of the Diocese of Saskatchewan, which necessitates the change of name from "Saskatchewan" to "Saskatoon" in the dominion act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister was to give some information, I think, to the ex-minister.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, I shall be glad to do that in a moment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the meantime, referring to the figures which the minister quoted this afternoon showing a greater export of wheat this year as compared with former years, an export of over 100 million bushels this year as compared with about 90 million bushels last year, I should like to know to what particular policies of the government the minister attributes that increased shipment.

Mr. STEVENS: If the hon. gentleman had been listening to me he would have noted that I said when I interpolated those figures that they had no particular reference to the point I was then discussing, and that I gave them merely for information. The figures I gave showed an export of wheat for the nine months ending December 31, 1931, of 96,000,000 bushels, in round figures, as compared with 125,000,000 bushels in 1932. The hon. gentleman now asks to what particular policy of the government we attribute that increase. It is not attributed to any particular policy. There has been an increased purchase of Canadian wheat by Great Britain; no doubt the six cents a bushel preference had some influence during the latter part of last year, but we are not arguing that that accounts for the whole increase.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am glad that my hon. friend can see it that way, because the preference has been in effect only a very short time.

Mr. STEVENS: I have already said that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister will not mind my repeating it. I think a much more likely explanation of the increased export is, first, the large crop last year, secondly, the high quality of the wheat, and thirdly, its extremely low price, all of which tended to bring about a larger export to Great Britain. I think those are much more likely reasons than the one assigned by the minister.

Mr. DUFF: The minister was good enough this afternoon to give some figures of the export of lumber from Canada to Australia. I noticed in answer to a question asked by myself and which the minister answered that $268,000, in round figures, was paid in subsidies to steamers carrying lumber from this country. Would the minister be good enough to say if the same treatment was meted out to lumber interests on the Atlantic coast in connection with shipments to Australia as was meted out in other parts of Canada?

Mr. STEVENS: The matter to which the hon. gentleman refers was dealt with in a question the other day. I am not quite certain how he arrives at the figure he quoted. I have not the figures in mind in detail at the moment. There are certain subsidies paid to shipping on the Atlantic as on the Pacific. Up to the present the steamship service between our eastern ports and Australia and New Zealand has been carried on by the Canadian National Steamship service, which, of course, receives no subsidy. There are other services from our Atlantic ports, one to South Africa, which for the last thirty years has been carried on with an annual subsidy of between $100,000 and $125,000. That is a regular service and one of the oldest subsidized services that we have. Then we have a subsidized service to China at the present time which is finding a market for a class of lumber which is very difficult to market in Canada or Great Britain—in fact cannot be marketed there—that known as common. That service is very successful, carrying a great deal of lumber to that market.

There is at present no subsidy for the service to Australia. There was a subsidy under a contract entered into about four or five years ago to Australia, but that contract expired last year. In the latter three years it was designated in the estimates as "Canada to Australia and /or China," and it was optional whether it be to Australia or China. For the last three years the subsidy was paid for a service to China, not to Australia; but during the past year the increase of lumber shipments to which my hon. friend refers was largely, or entirely due, to the additional preference secured under the trade agreement with Australia.

Mr. DUFF: With all due respect I think I am quite in order in referring to the fact that some $268,950 was paid from August, 1929, to December, 1932, to ships carrying lumber from Canada. My reason for saying I am in order is that the minister this afternoon was good enough to give full particulars regarding exports of lumber from this country. In my question which appears on page 1686 of Hansard I asked:

1. What amount has been paid by the Dominion of Canada to ships carrying lumber from British Columbia ports?

And the answer given was, $268,950. I have no objection to the shipments of lumber being increased, but I say that every port of this country should be treated alike. If it is thought advisable that steamships should be subsidized to carry lumber from British Columbia ports to Australia, then it seems to me that Atlantic ports and Atlantic shippers of lumber should be put in the same position. It is not quite fair if no money has been paid by this government for subsidies to encourage the lumber trade from Atlantic coast ports. The government should seriously consider this matter and put all our ports on the same basis.

Mr. DONNELLY: We all recognize these days the difficulties in the way of international trade, on account of the high tariffs different countries have put into effect and the barriers of extreme nationalism. We recognize that it is necessary for this country and all countries that are endeavouring to trade with one another to have agents, ambassadors, consuls in the different countries to promote trade. I hold in my hand a clipping from a newspaper which purports to lay before the people the new deal which the president-elect of the United States proposes to put into effect. His program is arranged under seven heads, and I notice that the seventh is: "Restoring foreign trade by general debt-tariff adjustments, and by Business with Russia." Arising out of that I would like to ask the minister what steps his government is taking to promote trade with Russia. Have we any agents there? Are we doing anything at all to promote trade? Russia seems to be the one country in the world that many nations are looking to for trade. Are we doing anything at all along those lines?

Mr. STEVENS: The document presented to the house by the Prime Minister the other day I think covers the situation. There is little I can add to what was said by him in that official statement. However, my hon. friend and others who have made reference to Russian trade should bear in mind certain facts. The first is that all exports and imports of Russia are under the direct control of the government of Russia. The second is that during the past five years Russian purchases have almost invariably been based on long term credits, or what in ordinary trade would be considered long term, that is, from say eighteen months to as much as three years. The question of the extending of credits to Russia by the countries from which these goods are exported, either by a private exporter or a private exporter assisted or guaranteed by the government, is a matter of grave importance. Up to the present time this government has not considered it advisable or desirable that we should place this country's resources or credit behind the financing of the sale of goods to Russia. I grant that the subject is one for discussion; much may be said upon it. But I do not think that at the moment, and under existing circumstances, much can be said strongly in support of it. It is not my desire to reflect in any sense upon Russian methods; those are of their own choice. It is equally clear, however, that the question whether or not the government of Canada shall place its resources behind goods that leave this country to go to Russia is one that we ourselves must decide, and up to the present we have not decided in favour of it.

Mr. DONNELLY: I thank the minister for his pronouncement. When he says that the government of Russia does all the trading in that country, we recognize that fact, and that makes it all the easier. We have not to travel all over the country to see various individuals; we go to the government. We have only to interview them; we do not need a band of agents throughout the country. But I understand that in many cases Russia is willing to barter, in the purchase of steel rails and cattle, for example, to barter oil. Is the government willing that we shall trade on a fair basis with those people? Will it give anyone who wants to trade with them a clear bill so that they may be allowed to do it? No one wants to trade with Russia in steel rails and then find when they get the oil on the ocean that the government is going to put on an embargo or prohibitive duty and prevent it from landing. A year ago when we were investigating the oil situation there was an offer of oil from Roumania. We went to the trade department and tried to get them to tell us what duty they would put on, and they would not tell us. Under those conditions you do not know whether when you got a boat load of oil to Montreal they would put on a prohibitive duty. No one can trade under those conditions. If the government will give a written guarantee to people bringing goods from that country that prohibitive measures will not be enforced against them and they are at liberty to trade, they will know whether you are willing to allow these goods from that country to come in.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps I may take advantage of the observations of my hon. friend to clear up a point which apparently is obscure in the minds of many. My hon. friend, in his concluding remarks, said something to this effect—he will correct me if I am wrong—that if the government would guarantee that, when the goods arrived here, they would be treated in a given manner there would be an opportunity of trading; and he suggested that this was one of the essentials of trading. I see he nods his head in concurrence. Let me point out that in no item of our trade, and with no one in Canada, do we do that. Let us get that clear in our minds. In all our business, to no one do we give any such guarantee. Surely we should not be expected, in trading with Russia, to do anything different from what we do with others. Instead of putting it negatively let me state it in a positive form. There is nothing in the world, nothing in this country that prevents anyone who wishes to buy from or sell goods to Russia from doing so, with certain limited exceptions, those exceptions being coal, pulpwood, furs and lumber. I believe these are the four items, and with the exception of these items anyone in Canada can sell to or buy from Russia or barter anything he wishes to. He can do so within the ambit of the law. We say to everyone: There is the statute law of the country; we have no desire to interfere with it and you can trade so long as you remain within that law.

My hon. friend mentioned oil. He said that no one knew, if he bought oil, whether he would get it into the country. Anyone who wants to bring in a cargo of oil can do so if he keeps within the terms of the statute; in conformity with the terms of the statute he can do so at any time without let or hindrance. But here is the difficulty. There are some who desire to bring into Canada, under the guise—I use this term not offensively but for convenience—under the guise of crude oil, an oil that is partly refined. Apart from Russia we have had some experience in that regard. There was a desire to bring in what was called skimmed oil; and though it does not come within my official knowledge, I may observe by way of illustration that I have been told there are those who desire to take a refined gasoline which has been mixed, after refinement, with fuel oil to a certain extent to disguise the nature of it, seeking to enter that as a semi-refined oil. If you will turn to the statutes you will find there the schedule fully set forth in technical terms —a certain specific gravity, certain degrees, 60 degrees, 2,700 and so on, the usual description peculiar to that class of goods. It is all specifically set forth, some being free and some dutiable according to the nature of the commodity. Now, if there is anyone in Canada who desires to do so, he can bring in a cargo of oil to-morrow in conformity with the laws of the country. People can buy or sell anything they like provided they comply with our laws. The only thing this government has refused to do is to use the credit of the country, either on its own part or behind individuals, in a movement of goods from this country to any other country or the reverse as the case may be.

An hon. MEMBER: Not including wheat?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, including wheat. We are not putting the resources of the country behind the sale of goods to other countries, and this includes Russia.

Let us look at the items in the order in council. First there is coal. Why did we take the action we did in that regard? Well, there was an opportunity of giving to Great Britain a very substantial market for Welsh coal. We were buying large quantities of anthracite and it was thought desirable to let Great Britain have a substantial share of that market, so we put on a small duty of 40 cents a ton, which had a tendency to turn the business to Great Britain. Had we not put on an embargo against Russian coal, mined under conditions which are not compatible with the normal ethics of business and labour in any other country, then Russian coal would have come in and Great Britain would have had virtually none of that market. We are consciously giving that business to Great Britain.

Next there was the question of pulpwood. It started out, as a matter of fact, with a shipment of pulpwood which came up the St. Lawrence—hon. members from Quebec will probably recall this better than I do—and was shipped down into the States through one of the short routes south from the St. Lawrence river, and the intention was that that pulpwood was to come to Canada. Now, here we had a pulp and paper industry not in a flourishing condition, to put it mildly, with thousands of settlers and small farmers who were selling pulpwood to the industry and whose business was threatened by the importation of Russian pulpwood again, I say, produced at costs and under conditions which we in this country did not consider a desirable type of economic production to promote.

Mr. CANTLEY: Produced by penal labour.

Mr. STEVENS: I am putting it as mildly as I can; at any rate, under conditions that we do not wish to encourage. We therefore put an embargo on pulpwood. The same applies to furs, although that item was modified later. At the time it was put on it was known that Russia had vast quantities of furs which they were willing to part with at almost any price, and we felt that the fur industry of this country, which is very important, was entitled to consideration. The same applies to lumber.

Let this also be borne in mind, that the main object behind Russian exports is the securing of foreign credit, not necessarily to get for the product a price that will pay a legitimate cost of production with profit internally, but simply to create a foreign credit. That is the object of their export and it did not matter to them, by and large, whether they got a profit on the particular individual export, because in their main operations, their large operations as a government, they were able to absorb losses on exports by some other manipulation internally. Anyone who studies their financial statements, their budgets, will see that clearly provided for. Let us turn to the experience we had two years ago last fall, in 1930. We were trying to ship wheat to Great Britain. I myself, my colleague the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister and other members who were in London at the time saw ships with cargoes of seven, eight and nine thousand tons of Russian wheat. In my mind's eye I can see a cargo of 7,000 tons of wheat which arrived at Bristol on consignment. The broker to whom it was sent was standing beside me when the hatches were broken open and he told me that he had instructions to sell the wheat at any price he could get. That wheat was offered throughout the country at any price and as a result the Liverpool market broke six cents per bushel. It is impossible to compete with articles sold under such conditions. My hon. friend speaks of selling wheat to Russia. I have looked into this matter with some care, and at the present time there does not appear to be any official or reliable information to the effect that there is a market for wheat in Russia. We know that in some sections of Russia there is need of wheat for food purposes, but we have no authentic information that that country purposes buying wheat. Last year we sold about 3,000,000 bushels which were imported through the Siberian ports mostly for seed purposes, although I think some was used for food. There is nothing before us at the present time to indicate that the Russian government has any intention of buying this commodity. If there are any other questions with which hon. gentlemen would like me to deal, I shall be glad to do so. In these few brief remarks I have endeavoured to outline the situation which exists in connection with this sort of business.

Mr. CANTLEY: I should like to inquire of the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) what authority he has for the statement he made that Russia wants to buy steel rails from Canada

Mr. DONNELLY: I do not know that Russia wants to buy steel rails. I simply asked what the government would do if Russia wanted to buy steel rails.

Mr. CANTLEY: You say that they did.

Mr. DONNELLY: We have been told that we are at liberty to trade with other countries, but I can remember in 1932 when the banking and commerce committee was investigating the price of gasoline I went to the Department of National Revenue, and had another man go two or three times, in order to try to find out what would be the duty upon gasoline coming in from Roumania. They said that they would have to find out the price of gasoline in Roumania and the value of Roumanian money, and would let us know the duty later. I know of an importer who was offered a tanker of gasoline laid down in Montreal at six cents a gallon, but he was unable to find out how much duty he would have to pay. He would not import any gasoline because he was afraid that when the boat was on the ocean he would be informed that there was a duty of ten cents per gallon against his gasoline. We want to know what the duty will be on commodities coming from Russia or if any other restrictions will be imposed. As I said, apparently the president-elect of the United States is ready to assist trade with Russia, and I want to know if this government is going to assist or prevent such trade.

Mr. STEVENS: Before dinner the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) asked for certain information, which I am now prepared to give him. The figures he asked for are as follows:

| Fiscal year ending March 31 | Value of imports into Canada | Value of exports from Canada | Expenditure on commercial intelligence service | Expenditure on foreign steamship services | Expenditure on local steamship services | Total expenditure on steamship services |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ | $ | $ | $ |
| 1926 | 927,328,732 | 1,328,700,137 | 320,837 | 547,768 | 507,874 | 1,055,643 |
| 1927 | 1,030,892,505 | 1,267,573,142 | 357,415 | 395,717 | 613,281 | 1,008,998 |
| 1928 | 1,108,959,466 | 1,250,598,034 | 413,294 | 223,999 | 620,593 | 844,593 |
| 1929 | 1,265,679,091 | 1,388,896,075 | 495,184 | 328,183 | 698,191 | 1,026,375 |
| 1930 | 1,248,273,582 | 1,144,938,070 | 663,378 | 445,175 | 669,971 | 1,115,047 |
| 1931 | 906,612,695 | 817,028,048 | 749,634 | 582,216 | 740,528 | 1,322,744 |
| 1932 | 578,503,904 | 587,565,517 | 690,609 | 2,322,038 | 671,687 | 2,993,725 |
| 1933—Estimated | | | 669,068 | 1,482,850 | 602,852 | 2,085,702 |
| 1934—Estimated | | | 693,487 | 1,582,850 | 590,080 | 2,172,930 |

It is impossible to give the trade figures for 1933 and 1934, and it will be noted also that the other figures for those years are estimated.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not very clear as to the reasons given by the minister for not encouraging the proposal made to barter Canadian cattle for Russian oil and other products, nor do I know that such proposal had the official sanction of the Russian government. The rumours going about are that such a proposal was made to the government, the suggestion being that the government put up sufficient credit to enable those engaged in the business to pay the Canadian people for their cattle which would in turn be exchanged for the Russian products. I cannot see how such a transaction could be considered as dangerous to the government, as apparently the Russian government would not enter into the picture. Their products would come in here and our products would go to Russia in exchange; the government would merely have to wait until our Canadian firms sold the Russian products in this country in order to reimburse the government. In what way could such a deal be financially dangerous for the government?

Mr. STEVENS: I thought the statement which the Prime Minister made the other day completely covered the case.

Mr. IRVINE: I am sorry I did not hear it and I did not read it.

Mr. STEVENS: Then I certainly recommend that my hon. friend read it with care.

Mr. IRVINE: The statement just made by the minister was the basis of my question, regardless of what the Prime Minister may have said.

Mr. STEVENS: I shall deal with the matter again. The hon. gentleman asks: Why should the government not have sanctioned and supported—and I presume he means financial support—and backed the proposal made by Mr. Serkau in regard to the exchange of 100,000 head of cattle. I think I can put the case clearly and concisely by saying this: In the first place, the proposal by Mr. Serkau contemplated, according to his own written word, a sum amounting to $8,000,000. That is his own estimate. In other words, he says that the total amount, including freight, payable by the Russian government for 100,000 head of cattle will be in the neighbourhood of $8,000,000. Let us keep that fact in mind, because later on in his letter he states that he hopes the transaction will not involve more than perhaps $1,000,000. The fact, however, remains that the total amount involved is $8,000,000. The second fact to bear in mind is this: it is clear, according to this written proposal, that they do not expect the Russian government to pay completely for those cattle until June, 1935. That is quite in harmony with what I said a moment ago was the common practice. The point is this: The sum of $8,000,000 is involved, and payment will be, presumably in a progression of payments, between now and June, 1935. The third point to keep in mind is that we are asked to accept Russian 7 per cent bonds, payable in June, 1935, for whatever sum may be outstanding. The fourth fact is that Mr. Serkau says, also in writing, that those cattle ought to be shipped before November next, so that the total liability would be incurred before that time. Another fact is that Mr. Serkau asks us, in addition to assuming responsibility for this liability, to guarantee them against any possible breach of agreement by the Russian government. These are things we felt we were not warranted in doing. First we did not think we were warranted in using $8,000,000 of this country's credit, or money, as the case might be, for the export of live stock to Russia. In the second place we did not think we were warranted in guaranteeing those involved in the transaction against the possibility of any breach of contract by the Russian government.

Then we come to the question of exchange of commodities, to which my hon. friend has referred. The suggested exchange of commodities consists of a number of items: petrol in its various forms, lubricating oil, anthracite coal. I have already made it clear that we do not consider it advisable to sacrifice to the Russians the British coal markets in this country, and that is the reason we imposed an embargo. We do not think it advisable to change that. This eliminates anthracite coal. In so far as kerosene, lubricating oil and petrol are concerned, if any private person desires to purchase these commodities, they may be brought into this country now under the regular tariff under which anybody else can import them. But we do not think it advisable for this government to offer to Russia or any other country, such as Roumania, if you like, any particular guarantee that we are not going, at any time within the next few years, to make any changes in the tariff or any such changes as that. Obviously no government could pursue that course. We say to them: There is the statute law; you are at liberty to import goods within the confines of that law just the same as is being done to-day from South America and other parts of the world. I do not think anything is to be gained by labouring the point, but that is our conclusion.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Furthermore, let me make this abundantly clear. There is not one syllable in this document to show that the Russian government is even cognizant of this proposal. We are told orally that they saw officials of the Russian government, but there is not a scrape of a pen or any credential to show that the Russian government is a party to this transaction.

Miss MACPHAIL: This is a question I want to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it not true that farming in Canada is actually threatened? Farming in this country has been seriously injured, not only by uncertainty as to what the cost of products would be when brought in from Roumania or Russia, as well by the uncertain cost of goods from Great Britain. This uncertainty is one of the things that has caused real suffering in the last two years. On the export of farm products from Canada to Great Britain, we were quite sure we would lose in exchange because our money was dearer than British money, but when the goods that the farmers might have bought with that money in Liverpool should have come into this country much cheaper because of the cheaper money of Great Britain, it is true—and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce must acknowledge this at any rate in his heart—importers here in attempting to bring in British goods, to say nothing of Russian, were never sure what the taxes against those goods would be. There was always uncertainty. There were some very grave injustices, such as valuation of goods at a parity with the pound, then the superimposing of the tariff on that, adding to that three per cent on the excise duty paid value plus six per cent on that and then plus a dumping duty that varied from time to time. Quite apart from trade between Canada and Russia, trade between Canada and Great Britain has been very greatly injured by the uncertainty of the importers' position.

As regards the question of the government not caring to make guarantees or advance moneys, some years ago the government of this country sold goods to Roumania, and in that case they were not protecting the farmer or seeking to alleviate his difficulties. At any rate they did advance a very large sum of money for the purchase of goods in this country. Is it not also true that very recently money was advanced for the relief of Newfoundland? The Minister of Trade and Commerce will know whether or not that is true. It is true, at all events, that the government of this country by order in council saw fit to come to the aid of the distressed furniture industry in this country and of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Personally my way of approaching this subject is simple. The agricultural people of Canada are suffering in a way that is not good for this country. Apart from the fact that it is bad for the farmer himself, it is having a very ill effect on the whole dominion; the trade and commerce of the whole country is being very seriously injured by lack of purchasing power on the part of the farmers. If there is a possibility—may I say to the minister?—if there is a possibility that Russia will take cattle and hides from us at prices as good as or better than they can now be sold for or exchanged for oil or any other product, then I think it is the business of the government to do what they can to promote such a bargain. What is the use of having trade commissioners and whatever other names you call these people who go out to drum up trade throughout the world if we are not going to make the greatest possible use of a potential market? Because whether or not we make a trade with Russia of our cattle and hides for oil and other Russian products, undoubtedly there is a potential market in Russia for Canadian products, and I think we should do all we can to make use of a market which we very greatly need.

Mr. VALLANCE: Following the argument of the hon. member for Southeast Grey, I recall that we had two very definite illustrations of what is being done when we were putting through the economic conference agreements last year. It will be recalled that at that time, when we were dealing with barbed wire, the Prime Minister said that a certain quantity of barbed wire was offered to Canada from Holland, and he proposed to place an arbitrary valuation on that product to shut it out. The same with cream separators; a duty of twenty-five per cent was imposed against foreign separators, and we found from the statistics that cream separators were coming into Canada from three sources, Sweden, Finland and the United States. I myself put this question to the government at that time: If it were possible for Sweden to pay the twenty-five per cent duty on cream separators and ship them into this country, would the government allow them to come in at the valuation placed on them, plus twenty-five per cent? No answer was forthcoming, and naturally not, because we knew that the government would not let them come in.

As regards the cattle deal, the minister knows, or at least I think he knows, that unless Canada is able to deliver 100,000 head of cattle before the first of November, 1933, it will do no good to the industry. The syndicate which has been negotiating through the Minister of Agriculture is prepared and able to-day to deliver from one thousand to two thousand head a month to Russia, or at the most twenty-four thousand head a year, which is only a drop in the bucket in the cattle trade of Canada. In order to get any benefit there should be some means whereby it would be possible for us to deliver 100,000 head of cattle now. That would relieve the cattle market, and would probably raise the price of cattle, as is suggested in the memorandum, from 2¼ or 2½ cents up to four or five cents a pound. I am sorry the whole discussion of this cattle and oil deal has come up to-night because the Prime Minister promised that there would be a specified time fixed when we could discuss it. There are some angles of it on which we wish to obtain more definite information, because we believe that the government have further communications than they have yet revealed, and we propose to ask for them. The Prime Minister when he was reading the memorandum the other day said that subsequent to December 23 there had been no communication with him by Mr. Serkau, but some of us have been led to believe that further information can be given, and the hon. member for West Edmonton has already made the suggestion to the Prime Minister that certain documents and correspondence be tabled. We propose definitely to ask for further information, because we believe that there is a great deal more to be known than has already been revealed with regard to this cattle deal. The Minister of Trade and Commerce shakes his head, indicating that there is nothing further. I would ask him one question: If he will read the statement of the Prime Minister the other day, he will see that it was stated that after Mr. Serkau had the interview with the Minister of Agriculture he proceeded on two occasions to New York. Why did he go to New York? Did he go because of the fact that he received some suggestion that it might be beneficial to Canada if he went there and saw what he could do? According to the statement of the Prime Minister, there was no such suggestion made to him. In support of what the hon. member for Southeast Grey has said, I believe the government should do something to help put this cattle deal through.

Mr. STEVENS: I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that I can make clear that there is no mystery so far as the government is concerned about this cattle and oil deal, so-called. The only thing before the government in regard to this deal is the document read by the Prime Minister the other day. If there be other correspondence, I do not know. Certainly there is none with me. But I do know that this is the sum total of the proposals. Mr. Serkau came to see me on January 4, of this year.

Mr. MacMILLAN: What nationality is he?

Mr. HANBURY: What does it matter?

Mr. VALLANCE: He is a Canadian, born in Manitoba.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Serkau gave me a copy of this letter written to my colleague, and also a copy of the memorandum. He laid the memorandum on my desk, and it is headed, as hon. gentlemen will recall; "Suggested conditions of a trade transaction between the U.S.S.R.", hereinafter referred to as the "Union," and so forth. I said to Mr. Serkau the first thing, as I turned over this memorandum and saw there was no signature, "This is not a signed agreement." "No," he said. Then I asked, "Is it an official agreement with the Russian government?" "No," he replied. Then after further conversation which I shall not go into, Mr. Serkau frankly admitted that it was a memorandum of the conversations which he had had with the Russian officials of Moscow. Who they were I do not know. Mr. Serkau also mentioned something similar to what my hon. friend has said, that he was anxious to serve the cattle interests of Canada, and I suggested to him that it would probably be better to be perfectly frank about the matter and say that his chief interest was, as is disclosed in the memorandum, "the price of live stock to be cost plus cost of purchasing, maintenance, freight, insurance, etc., plus one cent per pound." I have no quarrel with that, and I told him frankly that I quite understood and in a measure perhaps respected anyone who would make whatever profit he could. But I did say this, that certainly no government with any regard for the taxpayer's money would guarantee bonds in a transaction up to $8,000,000 or would guarantee against the government of Russia making a breach of its contract, and pay brokerage of one cent a pound on the purchase of live stock at the figures suggested by my hon. friend, two and a half to three cents a pound.

Mr. VALLANCE: No, four or five cents.

Mr. STEVENS: All right, say five cents. We would not be justified in putting the taxpayer's money behind it. On 100,000 head of cattle it means about $600,000.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. VALLANCE: Does Mr. Serkau suggest in his memorandum that the government pay that?

Mr. STEVENS: No, Mr. Serkau says the commission will be paid by the Russian government. But almost any person knows perfectly well that whether you get your commission from the one who buys or the one who sells, it is part of the transaction. To me that was a meaningless statement.

Mr. DONNELLY: What difference does that make?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not know that it makes any.

Mr. DONNELLY: Then why bring it up?

Mr. STEVENS: For this reason; if we were going into a transaction and putting $8,000,000 of the taxpayers' money behind it we would do it ourselves; we would not retain someone else at one cent a pound.

Mr. DONNELLY: Do you not do it every day in government business?

Mr. STEVENS: No, not at all. Certainly we do not do that sort of thing. I trust my hon. friend will at least understand that there is no mystery behind this. Anyone is at perfect liberty to do it; we say we do not wish to do it, certainly not under these circumstances.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to ask the minister if the government has taken any steps whatsoever to find out from the Russian government, apart altogether from Mr. Serkau's proposal, whether they would be prepared to exchange oil for cattle; or made any inquiry to see whether there are firms in Canada who would take the oil from Russia, whether we cannot make an arrangement by which we would give cows for gallons, and let the Russians land their oil first and ship our cows later.

Mr. STEVENS: I may say to my hon. friend and to the house, very clearly, that this government has not entered into negotiations with Russia or any other country for the barter of cows for oil or gallons for hoofs or anything of that character.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to refer to a remark made by the minister in regard to the embargo on anthracite coal from Russia being due to a desire to assist the British coal industry. I would remind him, with all deference, that the original embargo was placed in consequence of the fact that the Russian government were shipping to Canada, both to Montreal and to Nova Scotia, very considerable quantities of rewashed slack, the accumulation of a considerable time. That coal was mined by practically forced labour. When air-washed as it was it gave a type of fuel better than anything we could then or now produce because it was anthracite, absolutely clean, with a very high fixed carbon and low ash content, and was offered at a price less than that at which we can produce bituminous coal in Nova Scotia. That was the reason the original embargo was put on. I think it advisable to have that clearly stated, because that was antecedent to any consideration in favour of the old country coal miners.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would also like to have a word in connection with coal. I supposed, from the statement of the Prime Miister, that we would have an opportunity to discuss the cattle deal at some later day; I did not know it was coming up to-night. Before addressing myself to the question of coal I want to congratulate my good friend from Southeast Grey—I am sorry to see she has left the chamber—upon realizing that duties have something to do with trade, and that embargoes are having a very severe effect upon the farming community of this country. I would ask some of my other friends also to take note of the fact that excessive duties are crippling that industry almost completely. Finance and currency may play some part, but after all the fundamental difficulty lies in the tariff.

Let me say this with respect to Russian coal, especially to my good friend with whom I have had many controversies. When Mr. Thomas came to Canada with a view to inducing us to take more British coal he was not greatly interested in selling anthracite in Canada. What he wanted to sell was bituminous coal. I know perfectly well that my good friend, who was so very mild in his remarks to-night, would not be quite so mild with me if I were to agree to anything of the kind, because if ever an attempt was made to bring British bituminous coal to Canada we would certainly hear from the hon. member for Pictou. I heard from him when an attempt was made to encourage the importation of anthracite. Mr. Thomas stated very frankly on that occasion that they had a market for nearly all their anthracite production. I urged him to get into our market. We were importing about three and a half million tons from the United States at that time. The amount had been reduced considerably owing to the fact that use had been found in furnaces for the product of the mines of Nova Scotia, or the Canadian product, but we were still importing three and a half million tons. The British shippers gradually came in, as fast as they were able to provide the necessary coal, and took their share of this market, until to-day I am glad to know that they are shipping in something like 1,300,000 tons of anthracite coal. At the same time cargoes of Russian coal began to come in, the kind of coal that my hon. friend has described. And a holy row was raised, because this coal was mined, they said, in some cases by convict labour and in some cases by women. But I notice they did not sell it at any lower price in Montreal in competition with the British and American coal, notwithstanding the fact that it was stated that the dealers were making a tremendous profit.

What did my hon. friends do when they came into office? Did they seek to get the price lowered of this very important fuel in Canada? No, they immediately put on a duty against American coal, in order, they said, to encourage the importation of British coal. But I am sure it was not necessary for that purpose; the British anthracite would get the Canadian market as fast as they could supply it up to at least three million tons. They could meet the competition of the American. There was not one ton of British coal supplanted by the Russian product that came in; it was the American product that lost out. And we were not very anxious to have the American product come into Canada if we could get the coal from some country with whom we could do some business in exchange for it.

That is the situation. There was no necessity for the consumers of this country being charged that additional forty cents a ton on a commodity so important for a cold country like Canada. It does not help the importation of British coal by so much as half a ton. That is my statement in connection with the matter, and I have gone into it very thoroughly. But when this government put on a duty, when they force the consumers of Canada to pay more for products they must have, the excuse always is that it is to help someone, in this case the British coal miner. The Prime Minister made a great deal of that the other day. I can say to him without much fear of contradiction that he need not worry about the British coal miners; they can take care of themselves in competition with Russian or American anthracite. My hon. friend shakes his head, but they did so before; when my hon. friend came into office, coal was at about the same price as it is to-day. When the government that preceded this came in, anthracite coal was selling at $17 or $18 a ton; it was reduced to $14 and it has been hanging around $14 ever since. So I say without any fear of contradiction that there was no occasion for the action this government took except the desire to raise the price to the Canadian consumer.

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot allow the hon. gentleman's statement to pass without expressing my view, which is held by all those who have studied the question in government circles recently. My view is that to lift the embargo on Russian coal would virtually result in the complete displacement of British anthracite in this market. That is our firm conviction, based on knowledge and accurate information.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not raise the point because I admit it is not proper to bring it up while an investigation is going on, but the government have seen fit, owing to the price which the Canadian consumer has to pay for anthracite, to institute an investigation.

Mr. STEVENS: There is no objection to that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, but it is the result of this government's action.

Mr. STEVENS: The investigation is the result of the government's action.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understood my hon. friend opposite to say that the coal to which I referred was not offered in Montreal at that time at much if any less than the cost of American anthracite. I want to tell him that the coal I refer to and the coal that did come in at that time was Russian anthracite and was offered in Montreal, to my own knowledge, at less than $6 a ton. It was sold at Halifax at $5.25 a ton and I took a carload to New Glasgow to see what it really was like and have an analysis of it made. There is no use suggesting to the house that that Russian anthracite coal was sold at prices equivalent to the prices of American anthracite at that time, because it is not so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am speaking of Russian nut coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: So was I. It was then one-third the cost of the American anthracite. As regards English anthracite now coming in, I am quite pleased that this is so because it has displaced about a million and a half tons of American anthracite and it does not conflict with our bituminous coal from the maritimes. That is the situation in a nutshell so far as I am concerned. The facts are as I have stated them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend would not suggest for a moment that the importation of both English and American anthracite does not cut in on his opportunity to make coke and sell in competition.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is another story.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is the story you were telling.

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, at that time, but the people who control the proposition at the moment have not enough get-up to them to do what they ought to do. I am not responsible for that, however.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is any bituminous coal coming into Canada today from any source?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: How do you like that?

Mr. YOUNG: As I understand the situation, Mr. Serkau and his friends discovered that there was a market in Russia for 100,000 head of Canadian cattle, and they also discovered that there was a market in Canada for vast quantities of Russian coal and oil. Mr. Serkau saw an opportunity to dispose of a portion of our surplus cattle and thereby help the farmers of this country, and an opportunity to bring into this country coal and oil, which are needed by our people, and in that way to help our own consumers and at the same time the people of Russia, as well as, incidentally, making some money, perhaps a considerable amount of money, for himself and his associates. But they could not put the deal through because they could not finance it. They asked this government to guarantee certain bonds in order that they might be able to finance the deal and the government refused to do so. I want to ask the government this question: If Mr. Serkau and his friends or any other syndicate or group of men could find a way of financing such a deal, would the government be prepared to permit them to bring in these commodities from Russia?

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. gentleman is putting a hypothetical question—

Mr. YOUNG: No, it is a practical and very vital question.

Mr. STEVENS: He asks whether, if this and that happens, we will guarantee to do this, that or the other. We are not doing business that way and we are not going to give to any syndicate, Canadians or anyone else, something to go out and peddle to other countries or peoples or interests. We are not going to give to any syndicate in Canada or elsewhere some governmental guarantees that they can take to New York and peddle to New York financiers, incidentally protecting themselves and securing handsome profits. We are not doing that sort of thing, and there is no proposal of a hypothetical kind that we will entertain. We have nothing before us of a concrete or official character at all.

Mr. YOUNG: According to the figures given the other day by the Prime Minister, there is a possibility of marketing Canadian cattle in Russia and of marketing Russian coal and oil in Canada, and of the syndicate doing so making some money for themselves —I understood the Prime Minister to say a considerable amount of money. That being the case, there is not the slightest doubt in the world that a syndicate will arise that will be able to finance that deal, and the only thing that will stop them from putting it through successfully, to the benefit of the people of this country, of the people of Russia and of themselves, will be the possibility or probability that this government will step in and refuse to allow them to bring the goods in. Will the government lift the embargo and allow them to bring the goods into the country if they succeed in putting the deal through?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I should like to be allowed to answer the hon. gentleman. There are members on the other side in whose judgment I have a great deal of confidence, but I do not think there is a member opposite who could ever seriously give one moment's consideration to this Russian deal as it was put to the government. The hon. member for Weyburn was not quite fair in that he did not go on and announce the last condition of the deal before he asked his question. What was that last condition? These gentlemen made it a part of their proposition that the Dominion of Canada should not only establish them in credit, as the hon. member has said, but that the government should guarantee them against any default on the part of Russia. That is to say, if one party to the deal would not carry it out, they asked us to come forward and settle with them. Did anyone ever hear of such a proposition? Can anyone on either side of the house tell me when a deal of that kind was ever supported by anyone who had one atom of common sense? First of all they are buying from us, and they say, "Although we are buying from you we want you to put up the money to enable us to do so. We are buying from you to sell to Russia and we have doubts about Russia, so after we have borrowed money from you we want you to give us a guarantee that we shall get every cent even if the deal is not satisfactory".

An hon. MEMBER: That is not the proposition at all.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is a new proposition.

Mr. DUFF: Rip van Winkle.

Mr. RYCKMAN: That is what the proposition is. If any hon. gentlemen can tell me of any one who would listen to that proposition for a moment, I should like to hear from him. I want to say something to the hon. member for Willow Bunch. I happened to be behind the curtain and I heard him say that he came to the Department of National Revenue himself, and had sent two or three others also to find out what would happen to Roumanian oil or gasoline. I believe I have had some slight connection with the Department of National Revenue; I am always glad to see members of parliament, but the hon. member for Willow Bunch never came to see me. Apparently he was not very keen to find out what would happen to the Roumanian oil, but I will tell him what would have happened. If that oil had been sent here upon terms such as one honest man would have used in transacting business with another it would have been permitted to come in under the tariff which this parliament has ordained. That is a simple answer to a simple question. If the hon. member for Willow Bunch or his friends had some oil in Roumania and thought the time favourable to dump that oil upon Canada's market to the detriment of the business men of Canada, then the department would have taken care of that situation.

Mr. DONNELLY: Can the minister tell me the present duty on Roumanian gasoline?

Mr. RYCKMAN: There is also Persia which produces—

Mr. DONNELLY: I am talking about Roumania; never mind about Persia.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I will admit that the hon. member has me there; at the moment I cannot tell him the duty. I would first like to know what his cargo is.

Mr. DONNELLY: Gasoline.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) complained that there was a handicap being placed against the admission of goods from England. I submit that that handicap is more in thought and in newspaper publicity than in actual fact. Every hon. member who is engaged in business knows that because of the depreciation which has occurred in the pound sterling, the protection which it was intended by this parliament should be given to certain classes of goods has been entirely wiped out. In order to carry out the intentions of parliament and to give this measure of protection, very moderate in some cases, it has been found necessary to value the pound at $4.40 for special duty purposes. I might say that those in England who were concerned with this trade agreed at the time this valuation was made that it was reasonable. Complaints have been made that the $4.40 valuation should be reduced, but at the same time others say that this valuation gives them no protection at all and that the importer and British exporter is given a preference to which they are not entitled. It is quite true that the special excise tax of three per cent is added to any duty imposed; the hon. member for Southeast Grey added a total of six per cent, but she evidently forgot that this is added to all sales with the exception of those included in schedule three of the act. It is unfair to count that six per cent as an additional protection because that is paid on all goods sold in this country. In discussing these matters I think it only right that we should take the facts as they actually are and not attempt to distort them and seek a result which is not warranted.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) evidently feels that he should speak on behalf of the government, but he has not answered the question.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I was just speaking on behalf of myself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister did not answer the question asked by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young). All that the minister has said refers to the past, to something which has long since been discussed by the house and which is, I think, understood by all, but the hon. member's question refers to the present and to the future. Perhaps the minister, now that he is speaking for the government, can answer the question. It was: If at the present time a syndicate could be found which was prepared to say to the government that it could ship cattle to Russia, provided the government of Canada would allow it in exchange to bring in coal and oil from that country, would the government permit coal and oil to be imported from Russia?

[Mr. Ryckman.]

Mr. RYCKMAN: If a business proposition is made to the government, the government will give a quick answer.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We on this side of the chamber are asking this question on behalf of the people of Canada who are most affected. The farmers of this country want to sell their cattle in whatever part of the world they can be sold. We should be in a position to tell them, if such is the case, that the reason their cattle cannot be sold is that the government of Canada will not permit them to effect an exchange for Russian products upon a barter basis. If the government is willing to permit Russian coal and oil to be brought in and exchanged for cattle, we should be in a position to say so. If the government is willing to permit such an exchange I do not imagine there will be any difficulty in some syndicate finding a way to bring about the exchange. They have a right to know what action the government will take.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Surely my right hon. friend is not one of those who would pass upon a contract without knowing its terms?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not a question of contract; it is a question of a syndicate wishing to effect an exchange, which they might find it possible to effect if the government would so permit.

Mr. DONNELLY: I think the whole difficulty confronting this trade with Russia is the feeling which has been left in the minds of the people by no one else than the Minister of National Revenue. In 1930 when the Cockshutt people were attempting to make a deal with Russia, the minister came out and said: This is communism, its creed and its fruits which we as a nation cannot countenance by an interchange of trade. Has the government changed its views? Is it willing to let us trade with Russia? England is trading with Russia and, as I said before, the president-elect of the United States has laid down as one of the points in his new deal the permission of trade with Russia. The people of this country want to know whether or not they are to be permitted to trade with Russia. We do not care what Serkau is going to make; all the farmers are interested in is the fact that he may get $4 or $5 per hundredweight for his cattle instead of the present price of $2.75.

Mr. STEVENS: I think we have answered this question several times.

Mr. YOUNG: No, you have not.

Mr. STEVENS: The question has been answered several times, but I will answer it again. There is nothing in the world to hinder anyone in Canada who so desires from selling goods to Russia. That is quite clear. There is nothing to hinder anyone in Canada who so desires from bringing goods from Russia provided they are not those goods referred to in an order in council which has been before this house ever since it was passed, namely—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Since the present government came into power.

Mr. STEVENS: Ever since it was passed, in February, 1931,—namely, coal wood pulp, pulpwood, lumber and timber of all kinds, asbestos, crude.

Mr. HANBURY: All that they have for sale.

Mr. STEVENS: Very good, but I am frankly telling my hon. friends just the situation.

Mr. HANBURY: In other words, we cannot do the business.

Mr. STEVENS: I have already stated quite clearly that in our opinion the embargo on coal is important because of the fact that a market is provided thereby for British coal. The hon. member for West Edmonton holds a different view. I am not quarrelling with him at all, but I am telling him and also the hon. member for Willow Bunch precisely our position in that regard. In so far as importing goods is concerned, they come in from Russia, as from any other country, under the terms of the statute, and we are not prepared to say to some person or syndicate or firm or corporation that if they at some time in the future attempt to bring in goods, they will be treated in some specific way. They will be treated just as the statute indicates that they should be treated.

Mr. YOUNG: The statute or the order in council?

Mr. STEVENS: I have made it clear that the order in council refers to certain specific items and the statute refers to all of them.

Mr. MALCOLM: I have listened with a good deal of interest to the minister's explanation, and I think he has made a fairly frank explanation why the particular Russian deal submitted to him was not accepted. On the other hand, I believe he has been very unfair in making the remarks that he made just before taking his seat. How is trade or barter to be carried on if the business men of a country do not know the terms of entry into the countries in which they want to sell goods? How can a man proceed to make any deal unless there is some stability and some known factor under which the trade is to be made? The minister says that there are four items under an order in council which has become a part of the customs tariff of this country and which states that certain goods may not be imported. We are not going to deal with hypothetical cases. The minister knows quite well he was approached by the fur merchants on the item of fur and he changed the order in council to allow furs to come into Canada because this was considered good business.

Mr. STEVENS: I stated that a little while ago.

Mr. MALCOLM: Quite so, but there is no use in thinking there is anything permanent about these four items if the government chooses to allow them to be brought in.

I should like to make one observation regarding coal. One would think there was something entirely new about Canada importing coal from Great Britain; because we are bringing in 1,300 tons of Scotch and Welsh anthracite one would think this all happened within the last year. We have been importing 800, 900 or 1,000 tons of this anthracite for the last six or seven years. It is true there is an increase. We are, however, taking all the British anthracite—and the minister knows this just as well as I do—that Britain can give us; and we are still taking almost 3,000,000 tons of anthracite from the United States. This statement of the minister that Welsh anthracite is going to be injured by the importation of 1,000,000 tons of Russian coal is not, I think, founded on fact. The importation of United States anthracite is going to be decidedly injured, but I also believe consumers of coal in Canada, if they are given a fair chance, will get a good deal better and cheaper coal. I feel like the hon. member for West Edmonton, one really should not discuss this coal question because it is under investigation by the government, an investigation as to why we should be paying $14 and $15 a ton in this country for anthracite coal. Personally I hold very strong views that the profits being made by jobbers on Welsh and Scotch anthracite in the city of Montreal are entirely out of line with the services rendered to the Canadian people, and I hope the government investigation proves of benefit.

The minister very kindly gave me some figures for which I had asked him before dinner. These figures reveal a rather interesting situation, and the minister certainly has my sympathy in administering the commercial intelligence service and in trying to promote trade at the present time. I know how worried he is about $1.64 per bushel against Canadian wheat going into Germany or France. I know how worried he is about all the restrictive tariffs that are placed against merchandise being exported. We are faced with this situation: that in 1933-34 we are prepared to spend on foreign steamship services and on commercial intelligence service, $2,240,000, or about two and a quarter million dollars, to do a trade of about $900,000,000. In 1929-30 an expenditure of $1,000,000 was necessary for a trade of fully twice, probably two and a quarter times that amount.

The Minister of National Revenue gave us a very fine lecture to-night about how those things came about and how we could protect Canadian trade with dumping duties and so forth. Let me say to him that if he wants to help the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the commercial intelligence service, he will have to be prepared to let some goods in from countries that can buy our wheat. Unless the government has made up its mind that it has some religious scruples with regard to trading with Russia, scruples which it has not entertained against the Hindu or the Confucian or the Buddhist; unless it has some religious or other scruples about the Russian method of operating, it will find that before very long it will have to follow the lead of Great Britain and do business with Russia.

I am not going to say to the government that it ought to finance Russian trade deals. Far from it. We did finance a deal with Roumania and we have not yet been paid for it; the bonds are still held by this Dominion. But there are commodities which we can use and there are commodities which we can sell. At the present time Russia is buying from the United States—and the hon. member for Pictou knows this—very substantial quantities of steel rails; she is buying very substantial quantities of electrical equipment; very substantial quantities of agricultural implements; very substantial quantities of boots and shoes, running into millions of dozens of pairs. I do not know why Canada, which has the second largest, if not the largest per capita foreign trade of any country in the world, should set herself upon such a high pedestal, so much higher than the United States of America, than Great Britain, than France, than Germany, than Italy, in her refusal to do business with the Soviet republic. I have no criticism of the recent action of the Italian government in refusing to trade on credit. I believe any firm trading with Russia has a perfect right to finance its own trade. I do not think the minister is at all to blame in saying that he should not be asked to carry this business of $8,000,000, especially when the promoter was to make $1,500,000 in commission. The minister is quite sound in his stand in that regard, but I submit to him that the hon. member for Weyburn asked him a very simple question. He asked him: If the deal could be financed, would he permit the entry of the commodities to which reference was made. The minister has not yet answered that question. The house must come to a decision on it. The country wants to know; business men have a right to know. It is not only the farmers of the country who have a right to know, the manufacturers of agricultural implements have a right to know; the manufacturers of rubber goods are asking the question. Every industry in Canada is looking for foreign business. Foreign industrial business is being done in Russia to-day. Are we going to take advantage of this or not? That is a question that is being put to the minister. The Minister of National Revenue will not answer it although he purported to speak for the government to-night. The Prime Minister has not answered it. The country wants to know. When the question is answered, business men will proceed to do business. Perhaps the answer is given when the minister states business can be done with Russia except on those four commodities against which an embargo exists. Unfortunately the four commodities on which an embargo has been placed, include two which we could import to advantage to ourselves. I think the hon. member for Weyburn is entitled to a frank answer from the minister on these questions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would like to take a little whack at this, Mr. Chairman, if I may. I find by to-day's Montreal Gazette that Mr. Serkau has been making some statements regarding this matter that do not leave it as a hypothetical case at all. I thought my hon. friend from Weyburn was going to read this, but as he did not, I will. It is headed, "Serkau hopeful of barter scheme. Will furnish government with evidence of readiness of Soviet authorities." It goes on to say:

Mr. Serkau's statement follows a review of the situation made by Premier R. B. Bennett in the House of Commons yesterday. The syndicate has been strengthened, Mr. Serkau states, by the inclusion of a number of men of financial substance in the cattle industry. Guarantees from the government may not be necessary.

That alters the situation altogether. I presume that Mr. Serkau has made the same statement to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Agriculture. Then follows the statement in Mr. Serkau's own words:

There appears to be a misunderstanding with respect to evidence indicating the readiness of the government of the U.S.S.R. to trade with our syndicate on the basis of the memorandum as submitted to the government of Canada. Subsequent to the Hon. Mr. Weir's letter of December 23 last, I made two return trips to New York and had several interviews with Mr. Weir and I was not under the impression that any further evidence was wanted or awaited by the government. However, we are in constant communication with the U.S.S.R. foreign trade authorities and will promptly furnish the government any further evidence required.

Our syndicate will be strengthened by the inclusion of a number of men of financial substance in the cattle industry who have expressed their willingness to join the syndicate. We expect to be able to carry out the project without guarantees as alternatively requested of the government or perhaps on a somewhat modified scale, but the market for cattle so important at this time will still be available to the Canadian live stock industry.

There is the government's bluff about this being a hypothetical case called right away. I could hardly make out the mumblings of the Minister of National Revenue, but I understood that he was putting up a straw man, saying that it was simply a question of dealing with something that really did not exist. Does not the Minister of Trade and Commerce consider that this statement of Mr. Serkau's puts a different aspect on the matter? Does he not admit that the hon. member for Weyburn asked a perfectly legitimate question even without this statement of Mr. Serkau? As a matter of fact, the government do not want to trade with anyone, not even with Old Nick or St. Peter. That is the trouble. Shut ourselves up in economic hermitage and trade with ourselves —that is the policy of this government. They won't come across on this. I make the prediction that not a hoof of our cattle will go to Russia under this deal.

Mr. SPENCE: Join the syndicate and make some money for yourself, and help put the deal through.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let me commend the Minister of Trade and Commerce for one sane thing he said. Rather than comply with all these conditions laid down by Mr. Serkau, he said, and I think he said rightly, that the government would rather do the work themselves. Then why does not the government do it? That is the point. Why don't they do it instead of monkeying around with these people for months, keeping everybody on the string, and the people out in the country getting their cattle ready and wondering if this deal is going through, and needing the money as they never needed it before? But here the government stand idling away, fiddling and diddling, and the whole thing will wind up as ashes, gall and wormwood in the mouths of the farmers of Canada. Why not come along as the previous government did?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hold on! We were criticized for selling a bunch of small horses in southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta, locally unsaleable horses that were doing nothing but eating up good grass. The King government made a deal with Russia, and at that time Russian money was not worth anything. It was not quoted on any of the money exchanges of the world. But we sent out our own live stock men and veterinarians, bought the horses and paid for them, delivered them to Montreal, and sent them on their journey to Russia. It was criticized by those who then sat on this side of the house, including the present Minister of Justice, and criticized by the Toronto Globe on high moral grounds, that we should not provide Russia with horses of any kind, especially if they could be used for cavalry purposes. But we put that deal through and we got that money for our farmers, which proved to be all velvet, as the horses were really otherwise unsaleable. Russia is in an infinitely better position to trade with to-day than it was six or seven years ago, and yet the government are sitting on their haunches day after day, wearing their clothes out and making excuses why they cannot trade with Russia.

Mr. SPENCE: It is unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that so much of the time of this house should be lost talking a lot of pure bunk. It is amusing to hear the ex-Minister of Agriculture and the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce defending this so-called barter with Russia when we know they do not believe in it themselves. No honest man believes in it. I wonder if the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce would like to send a carload of his beautiful furniture to Russia and wait till they paid for it.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is not the question.

Mr. SPENCE: It is about the same thing. Would it be fair for the hon. gentleman in such a case to come to the government and ask for a guarantee?

Mr. MALCOLM: The hon. gentleman must have been sound asleep when this whole discussion was going on, for such a thing was never even suggested.

Mr. SPENCE: I wonder that a number of these people who are so favourable to trading with Russia do not join the syndicate and make some money for themselves. Who knows that Serkau ever had official instructions from Russia to go into a deal of this kind? Who knows that it is not simply propaganda of two or three yellow journals in this country, to create strife in this country between the party opposite and the government? It is political propaganda, the whole thing. There may be nothing in the whole deal at all, and why should we waste time talking about something that may not exist, and about cattle that Russia may not even want? I do not believe that Russia has ever asked for this deal. I have heard people of sound judgment say that this deal is nothing but propaganda by two or three yellow journals to make bad friends between the farmers of Canada and this government, to make the farmers of this country dissatisfied with the legislation that they are getting from this government.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That would be quite unnecessary; they are dissatisfied already.

Mr. SPENCE: You have never been to Russia and I have not, and you do not know any more about it than I do. I say that it is simply propaganda pure and simple to create strife in this country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Has the hon. gentleman been asleep or down in the basement?

Mr. SPENCE: Neither, but you have been asleep for years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sure if the Minister of Trade and Commerce were left alone he is sufficiently sane to see how this thing could be done. It could be done through the Department of Agriculture, through its live stock branch, to look after the selection of the animals, and through the health of animals branch, to look after their health.

Mr. ROWE: Who will pay?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The government can look to that.

Mr. SPENCE: If you will guarantee the money I will do the job myself.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Serkau says, as read, that there is a good prospect now of the personnel of the syndicate being so much strengthened that they can handle it financially themselves. We will have to take that as their last will and testament until we hear something else. Now what is the government's last will and testament? It is their move.

Mr. BRADETTE: Last Tuesday I asked the minister a question in regard to wheat shipments to Greece, and he was kind enough to tell the house that a considerable quantity of Canadian wheat has been exported to Greece within the last few months. A press report in December said:

> Canada Might Lose Million Dollar Trade
> Reported Greece to Form Pact to Buy Wheat from Argentina
> Athens, December 23.—The Greek government is negotiating a treaty with Argentina for the importation of large quantities of wheat at advantageous terms. Officials said that with such a treaty, no importations of United States or Canadian wheat would be required.

Then the report goes on:

> Ottawa Inquisitive
> Special to the Star
> Ottawa, December 23.—The ministry of Trade and Commerce is inquiring into reports that Greece will buy no wheat from Canada or the United States but will obtain her supplies from the Argentine. Officials of the department told the Star no advices had been received from the Canadian trade commissioners in Europe, and had such action been announced in Greece word would have been cabled to Canada.
> Canada's sales of wheat to Greece in the last six months of last year totalled 2,180,508 bushels. . . . This wheat was sold in the usual way and not to the Greek government.

My question now will be: Did the Department of Trade and Commerce receive any news about the loss of such trade between Canada and Greece?

Mr. STEVENS: I did not hear all that my hon. friend said, as there was quite a buzz in the house. but as far as I could gather his observations they were in regard to the importation of wheat into Greece. He will recall that Greece had a very high rate of duty —for the moment I cannot recall it—against wheat, under their maximum tariff. Within the last month, or it may be the last two months, Greece has placed Canada on the minimum tariff, and Argentine on the minimum tariff. Some sixty thousand tons of wheat have been shipped to Greece, or are under order for shipment now from Canada, and a similar quantity, as I understand, has been ordered and is on the way from the Argentine.

Mr. COOTE: When the Minister of National Revenue was replying to the member for Southeast Grey—who was since called out of the chamber—he said, as nearly as I remember, something to the effect that the fact that the British pound has depreciated in Canada to such an extent made it absolutely necessary in the interests of Canadian manufacturers to place a dumping duty and fixed valuation of the British pound in connection with the importation of goods from Great Britain. If that is true, if the Canadian manufacturers need that protection, what is the position of the Canadian farmer to-day in regard to his exports of wheat in competition with Australia? —because the Australian pound is depreciated twenty five per cent in relation to the British pound.

I want to give the house a few figures regarding the export of wheat to the orient, to show the serious effect on our export trade. This is one of the reasons why Canadian exports of wheat are falling off so badly. It is not the only one; I agree with practically all that has been said tonight in regard to how tariffs are interfering with trade. I point out that since my hon. friends have denounced the French treaty the French tariff against our wheat is double what it was before.

I have here a table showing the imports of wheat into Japan. It is taken from the Japanese customs returns. I will give the figures briefly, and with the permission of the house I will ask that the table be embodied in Hansard:

Sales of Wheat to Japan

In 1931 the Australian currency was depreciated; you will note the difference that started in that year. This return was secured from the Canadian legation in Tokio in May of 1932. I think it proves conclusively that we cannot get our fair share of wheat into the markets of the world while our currency is at such a high level compared with the currencies of all our competitors. May I point out again that our currency is the highest of that of any country in the British Empire, and we are losing out in world trade because of two things: the exchange situation, that is the high value of our currency in relation to gold compared with most other countries and—the other reason which has been emphasized by hon. members on my right—the very high tariffs and arbitrary rulings of the national revenue department since this government took office. The situation in regard to the exchange value of our dollar we can easily correct, if we make the pound worth $4.87 and if the Minister of National Revenue will remove the dumping duties against Great Britain. Let us have a measure of free trade with Great Britain so that we can get on a basis where we can compete reasonably with the other wheat exporting countries.

Mr. POULIOT: If the tariff is lowered will there be any further necessity for inflation? If trade becomes normal will not our currency also return to normal?

Mr. COOTE: The more tariffs we remove the sooner our money will return to its proper level. I wish to stress for a moment the question of wheat exports, because after all wheat is the main item in our export trade, and it is important that we should obtain proper returns for our wheat. I have here a table I secured from the Department of Trade and Commerce in May last, giving the value of our exports of wheat and flour from 1924 on. I will not weary the house giving all the figures but I will go back to 1927. In 1927 our exports of wheat amounted in value to $421,000,000 in round figures; in 1928, $411,000,000; in 1929, $493,000,000; in 1930, $261,000,000; in 1931, $210,000,000, and in 1932, $134,000,000. In bushels, in 1927 our exports amounted to 294,000,000; in 1928, 309,000,000; in 1929, 421,000,000; in 1930, 212,000,000; in 1931, 249,000,000, and in 1932, 215,000,000. Our exports last year were 3,000,000 bushels more than in 1930 and the value was $134,000,000 as compared with $261,000,000 in 1930. A final word I leave with the committee, and it is this. Can Canada afford to continue keeping her currency on such a high level as compared with the other trading nations of the world, and bankrupting our agriculture in doing so?

Mr. VALLANCE: We have been dealing extensively to-night with the possibilities of trade with Russia. An hon. member behind me dealt with trade with Greece and we have been talking about trade with Japan. I turn to another oriental country in regard to which I want to ask a question. Was a deal proposed to the government on October 31 last for the purchase of 50,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat? If so, what happened?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot recall such an offer in any definite form. During the past two years there have been numerous suggestions with regard to the advancement of wheat to China, because that is what it amounted to. I myself looked into the matter with care and I had the officers of my department resident in China go into the whole situation thoroughly, and I can say that there are certain fundamental difficulties that present themselves in connection with any such transaction. For instance, a suggestion was made on several occasions that we should give some wheat in view of the privation that prevailed in some parts of the interior of China. We looked into the matter very carefully and with a good deal of sympathy but we found that the consensus of opinion of informed business men and authorities with whom we consulted was that practically none of that wheat would reach the stricken area. Many of the provinces being in the hands of brigands or military groups or bands, it was quite a common experience that goods never reached their destination. I want my hon. friend to understand that the matter was given very careful consideration and it was deemed not desirable to take the step proposed. The hon. gentleman will pardon me if from memory I am unable to give precise data, but there were one or two occasions when suggestions were made that we should advance credit for the sale of wheat to China, but I cannot recall any really definite proposal supported by persons whose responsibility was commensurate with the extent of the deal. I am not saying definitely that there was no such offer, but I cannot recall it. Such offers as we received, however, we found on examination did not warrant us in taking the risk of supporting the deal, one being for a period of three years. The periods of the others I have forgotten.

Mr. VALLANCE: Perhaps I can refresh the minister's memory, because the matter is quite vivid in my own mind to-night. Sunday was the 30th of the month, and on the Monday, October 31, a gentleman by the name of Webster interviewed this government and made an offer for the sale of 50,000,000 bushels of wheat to the Chinese government. The question I am asking is: Was that wheat sold, and if not, why not?

[Mr. Vallance.]

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend makes a definite assertion, and I confess that his knowledge in these matters and his confidence in the accuracy of his information are much greater than mine.

Mr. VALLANCE: It is backed up by a statement of the minister to myself, if I might refresh his memory further, although I did not want to do so.

Mr. STEVENS: Certain proposals were made, but without having an opportunity of refreshing my memory, I will not make any further statement in regard to the matter.

Mr. VALLANCE: I will not press it; we will get it some other time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps this is hypothetical too.

Mr. SPENCER: I am sorry that the hon member for Parkdale has left the house. From what he said with regard to the suggested Russian cattle deal, he would appear to be much less informed on the matter than most members on this side. I am informed on good authority that Mr. Serkau, who was pushing the deal, was very closely in touch with the Minister of Agriculture the whole time he was trying to negotiate it, and that it was with the consent and on the suggestion of the minister that he went to New York to interview the Russian trade agent.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is your authority?

Mr. SPENCER: It was also with the consent of the minister that he went to Russia, and I understand further that the Minister of Agriculture was favourable to the deal. I say this because the hon. member for Parkdale tried to make the house believe that the suggestion was brought forward from political motives. As a matter of fact the deal was put forward by Mr. Serkau and his associates in good faith and the Minister of Agriculture or the department was kept informed all the time. Most hon. members, I believe, know that quite well.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is your authority?

Mr. SPENCER: I learned it at a public meeting in Calgary.

Mr. McGIBBON: From whom?

Mr. SPENCER: From the syndicate.

Item agreed to.

Electricity and gas inspection service, $213,745.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the reason for this increase?

Mr. STEVENS: It is a small item in connection with the replacement of some equipment for testing meters and so on.

Mr. MALCOLM: Has the work of the gas and electricity inspection service been transferred to the national research council?

Mr. STEVENS: No. They are, however, housed in the same building, because there is quite a bit of common work, shall I say, between the two departments.

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions and fairs, $137,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. STEVENS: A substantial proportion of this vote is for the setting up and maintenance of displays of samples of Canadian goods, particularly agricultural products, in Great Britain and other countries. Displays are also set up in various British fairs and exhibitions, as well as in exhibitions in other countries. It is not intended at the present time to enter into any extensive expenditure in connection with exhibitions in other countries, but we do desire to maintain such permanent exhibits as we have in different parts of the old country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would like to convey to the minister the appreciation of the people of Saskatchewan and all through the west of the magnificent world's congress and exhibition building which was erected at Regina as a relief measure, and more particularly of the splendid manner in which the interior has been decorated. Mr. Turcotte is an artist at this work and I think the minister should know that everyone who has seen these interior decorations are simply delighted with them.

Mr. STEVENS: Thank you very much.

Item agreed to.

International customs tariffs bureau, $1,800.

Mr. MALCOLM: Is this the foreign tariffs division?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is a very small vote for that.

Mr. STEVENS: That is really our fee.

Item agreed to.

Motion picture bureau, $70,000.

Mr. BRADETTE: What has caused the increase in this vote?

Mr. STEVENS: If it is finally decided to do so, we intend to add the sound feature to this bureau.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am glad to see that the minister has restored this bureau to its former state of importance. Last year the vote was reduced to $40,000, whereas previously about $75,000 per year was spent upon this department. I always felt that this department had great educational value, and if sound equipment is added I think its value will be still greater.

Item agreed to.

Printing of parliamentary and departmental publications, including the "Canada Year Book," $139,325.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hold in my hand a book entitled "Canada 1933. The Official Handbook of Present Conditions and Recent Progress." I should like to know if the printing of this publication is included in this vote.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, I understand it is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I take exception to government money being spent in this fashion. According to the title this book is supposed to contain information with regard to present conditions and recent progress. There certainly are no statistics which will bear out anything in the shape of progress since the present administration came into office. Just how the government can issue a handbook on recent progress to the people of this and other countries is a bit of a mystery to me. This book has been printed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and I should like to know whether the information contained therein has all been supplied by the bureau or whether some of the material has been furnished from sources outside of the bureau?

Mr. STEVENS: This book is the sixth issue of this particular publication, the first being published in 1927. All the information contained therein is compiled by the staff of the bureau. The original object in publishing this book was to put into handy form certain historic and other data as well as supplying up to date information with regard to matters of interest to industry and business. The first issue was welcomed by the country as providing a handy and appropriate form of getting such information before the public, and its publication has been continued year by year. When I took office we continued to publish the book in the same manner as it had been published previously, and in so far as its compilation is concerned, that has been carried on in the same way as it was before I took office. Wherever possible we attempt to collect the small fee of twenty-five cents per copy. There has been a wide demand for this book and I think, generally speaking, it has received the approval of the public.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as this handbook provides reliable information I have no exception to take; it is the kind of publication which I think is very useful. However, in this particular number a very considerable part is devoted not to authentic information on matters of general interest but to what purports to be an account of the recent Imperial economic conference held at Ottawa. There is given what purports to be a story of the conditions which led up to the conference, what took place and what achievements were attained. I must say very frankly that the greater portion of what has been added in this way this year is in the nature of Tory propaganda; it is in no sense of the word reliable statistical information and should not be published and circulated at government expense. In addition, I say that it should not have been written at government expense. I would point out that there is material in this book which has not been written by anyone connected with the bureau of statistics, and I make that statement without fear of contradiction by the minister.

Mr. STEVENS: I am afraid my right hon. friend will have to face my contradiction.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I shall read the minister a statement from the book itself which shows that what he is now saying is wrong.

Mr. STEVENS: This book was compiled by the bureau and was then submitted and discussed with the Department of External Affairs in so far as the imperial conference references are concerned. If the right hon. gentleman will refer to something specific to which he takes exception, I shall be very glad to pay attention to what he has to say. I am simply asserting that this book has been compiled in a manner similar to all the preceding issues.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will draw the minister's attention to a note which the Dominion Statistician evidently felt it important to insert in this book. It is signed by Mr. R. H. Coats, and reads:

> This handbook has been prepared in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics from material which has, in the main, been obtained from the different branches of the bureau.
> In certain special fields information has been kindly contributed by other branches of the government service.

[Mr. Stevens.]

I venture to say that none of the material relating to the conference has been supplied by the bureau; as the minister says, it has been contributed by the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. STEVENS: My right hon. friend is wrong. It was written by the officers of the bureau and then submitted to the Department of External Affairs for verification or such comments as they chose to make.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The statement of the Dominion Statistician is this:

> This handbook has been prepared in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics from material which has, in the main, been obtained from the different branches of the bureau.

Mr. STEVENS: Necessarily, in this book there must be information which is not drawn immediately from the bureau of statistics. For instance, I open it at random. Take life insurance: obviously, such information on that subject as is purely statistical would be in the bureau and other parts would come from Mr. Finlayson, superintendent of insurance. As regards the Post Office Department, such information as there is in this book regarding post offices would be compiled from the bureau in part but would include information secured from the Post Office Department. So one can take other portions of the book. As regards the water powers of Canada, the bureau would have such information as is purely statistical, but where there are historic references or matters of interest of a literary character pertaining to water powers, that would be furnished by the water power branch. There is nothing sinister about the introduction. I venture to say it is the same as is used in all others. It is simply a routine introduction that has always been used.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would draw the minister's attention to what is clearly an insertion in the book, undoubtedly inserted after the whole book was finally prepared. I think the minister can see there are four pages that are largely in the nature of illustration, that clearly have been added to the book and that do not form a part of it as it was originally prepared, dealing entirely with the Imperial economic conference of 1932. I have no objection, if the government so wishes, to the reproduction of pictures and the like, of the Imperial economic conference, but surely there has been enough of that at the public expense without perpetuating it indefinitely in government publications. May I draw attention to the very first page. I would ask by what authority the government inserts this kind of thing in a handbook which purports to be authoritative as to existing conditions in Canada?

The agreement signed to-day constitutes a definite advance towards closer empire economic association. Because of this, we may fairly lay claim to an achievement greater than that of which any other conference can boast.

All this is, as is stated at the end:

Excerpt from the speech of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Chairman of the Imperial economic conference, at the plenary session, Ottawa, August 20, 1932.

It goes on:

We have commonly acknowledged that empire association can be based advantageously upon the principle of reciprocal preferences, and by our several agreements have evidenced our belief that these preferences ensure the greatest benefits when they are predicated upon a general empire tariff plan.

. . . but this propitious beginning must not blind us to the fact that it is but a beginning, and that if this scheme of closer empire association is to endure and bring to each one of us the benefits we hope for, further action must be taken at a not too distant date.

How does that find a rightful place in an official handbook of present conditions in Canada? It is a reproduction of a part of a speech made by the Prime Minister at the Imperial economic conference and contains a number of statements that are highly controversial. There is not in this house agreement that a general empire tariff plan is what is desired. I venture to say that hon. gentlemen opposite are very much in doubt about the wisdom of a general empire tariff plan, and certainly everyone on this side of the house is decidedly opposed to anything of the kind. Why should we and those whom we represent be called upon to authorize an expenditure from the federal treasury for the spread of that sort of political propaganda? There is an introduction by the minister, with a very nice portrait of himself, which is quite appropriate, but a little further on another portrait of the minister also appears. I have not any objection to any number of portraits of the minister being published, but if he intends to circulate them, let him circulate two different ones, and not the same one in two different places and sizes.

Mr. STEVENS: Where are they? I have not seen them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is one on page 7 and another on page 179, the same portrait but a little smaller.

Mr. STEVENS: We do that to save expense.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That, however, is a minor affair and I do not wish to more than mention it. I want however, to draw attention to the minister's review at the beginning. The greater part of it was taken up with the imperial and international situation. It is in large part simply one of the minister's speeches on the Imperial economic conference and its effects. I have no objection to the circulation of the minister's speeches in as large numbers as he chooses so long as this is not done at the public expense.

Mr. STEVENS: What is my right hon. friend referring to now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The introduction on page 7, what the minister has to say there and on the following pages about the imperial conference, why it was called, what it did, and so forth.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not any speech at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the same sort of material the minister is using in his speeches.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The same tone.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the same tone. I thought my hon. friend said "the same dope," and so it is.

Mr. STEVENS: It shows that I take my speeches from the material of the bureau.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it shows that the minister is prepared to use the bureau to further political propaganda, and that is what I object to.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am going to read to the house some of this stuff and to allow hon. gentlemen to see whether we are justified in paying for this sort of thing. On page 15 there appears the following heading for chapter one, the first chapter of the book, which deals with imperial conditions.

The Imperial economic conference, 1932, and intra-empire trade.

Then there is a little introduction, and this heading follows:

Conditions leading up to the Imperial economic conference in 1932.

It runs away back to the "industrial revolution" of the later part of the eighteenth century and Adam Smith's teachings. Then it comes down to the Napoleonic wars and the corn laws. What business has the government in an official publication on Canadian conditions spending money on a review of that kind and trying to relate its incidents to the imperial conference? It goes on to describe the campaign of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, and it says:

The severest threat to free trade was Joseph Chamberlain's tariff reform campaign, ably outlined in an historic speech delivered in Glasgow, where Adam Smith had taught, in 1903. Chamberlain foresaw an empire slowly disintegrating unless a closer economic union founded on preferences granted reciprocally between the United Kingdom and her overseas possessions were brought about before the dominions had rounded out their economy for themselves by establishing local manufactures on a large scale.

What has that to do with a recital of Canadian conditions either past, present or future—a campaign of Joseph Chamberlain against free trade many years ago in Great Britain? The effort is to make it appear that a greater than Joseph Chamberlain has arisen who has brought about an economic union which Chamberlain had striven in vain to accomplish. May I point out, from the viewpoint of historical accuracy, that what was accomplished at the recent imperial conference in Ottawa was diametrically the opposite of what Joseph Chamberlain fought for. He fought for a system of preferences that would bring about free trade within the British Empire.

This conference in its tariff arrangements has been of a character to restrict trade between different parts of the empire, preserving only a semblance of some preference to Great Britain and some other parts of the empire effected by the extra high tariffs which have been raised against all other countries.

The handbook deals, as I have said, with Chamberlain's campaign in England; then it takes up the McKenna duties. The Napoleonic wars were brought in I assume to show the relation between them and what took place here last summer. Then we come to this:

It was at the Imperial conference in 1930, when the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, renounciated the policy of reciprocal tariff preferences, that the stage was set for the wholesale retirement of the United Kingdom from her free trade position.

It was at the conference of 1930 that British ministers themselves described the so-called Canadian offer as being "humbug." That is the conference we are here told at which the stage was set for getting Britain off a free trade position. What is the next sentence?

At the time, a Labour government was in power, and was not disposed to regard with favour the offer held out by Canada.

What business have we in an official handbook on Canada to make a recital of this kind, which has to do purely and entirely with domestic politics in Britain, and why should the Canadian taxpayer have to pay for the circulation of that sort of inaccurate and misleading information? It is information that will be taken exception to in Great Britain as well as here. It is not accurate, and as one reads it, it is seen to be equivalent to saying that the government of Canada went overseas and interfered with politics in Great Britain to the extent of being responsible for the overthrow of a Labour government in Great Britain, the change in British fiscal policy, and for the introduction of something that is now going to bring about a vast change in world affairs. I submit that if anything of the kind has happened, it was all quite wrong. We in this country have no business to try to interfere with the fiscal policies of other countries or in order to ensure their defeat to put up propositions which we know other governments will find it impossible to accept.

What else does this publication say?

The economic section of the conference was not able to reach satisfactory conclusions in the time available and, on the invitation of the Canadian Prime Minister, it was arranged that it should convene later in Ottawa. On the formation of a strong National government and after the election of the following year, it was admitted that the British people had expressed themselves definitely in favour of the principle of imperial preferences.

That is wholly untrue; it has never been so admitted. As a matter of fact, as hon. members well know, there is a very large portion of the public in Great Britain which believes it was grossly deceived when, after a National government had been returned to power, that government undertook to deal with the tariff, when, as is asserted, the people were told in advance the tariff would not be a matter for the coalition. For the Canadian government to send this sort of thing broadcast to the different countries of the world at the expense of the Canadian public, is wholly indefensible. It continues:

The National government acted at once and there followed a gesture on the part of the United Kingdom which was of the greatest importance in relation to the 1932 conference, for the passing of the Abnormal Importations Act of November, 1931 (a temporary measure later supplemented by the Import Duties Act of March, 1932), marked Britain's abandonment of her historic position. But her retirement was made conditional on the receipt of compensating trade privileges from the dominions at the conference, and the preferences then extended to the dominions were, therefore, to cease automatically on November 15, 1932, unless arrangements were made at the conference for their continuance.

If that is true, this parliament has been deceived. We have never been told, until this document came into our hands, that there were conditions and understandings with the British government of which this parliament had no knowledge before the conference was called.

Mr. STEVENS: If my right hon. friend will permit me, it is set forth in the legislation of Great Britain that on November 15, unless in the interim arrangements are made between the British government and the dominions, the preference would expire.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Imperial conference was not referred to in that legislation, but it is referred to here. No one reading this document could escape the impression that what was done in England in its legislation and what was done in our legislation here was a part of some secret understanding between the two governments.

Mr. STEVENS: No such inference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then what is the meaning of the words, "But her retirement was made conditional on the receipt of compensating trade privileges"? How can you have a conditional arrangement unless there has been some understanding?

Mr. STEVENS: Set forth in the statute.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I continue and give some further statements contained in this book?

> In order to understand just what this change meant to the United Kingdom and her reason for making it conditional on the return of compensating privileges, it is necessary to recall that under free trade her policy of purchasing food and raw materials in the cheapest market had kept down the cost of living at home to a minimum and enabled her manufactures to compete in price with those of other nations abroad. This policy had, in its day, helped her to become the leading trader of the world, its financial centre and owner of a large part of its shipping.

What has this sort of special pleading to do with conditions in Canada? I need not go on and read the remainder nor the next page. It is all intended to make it appear that Britain's tariff was made what it was as a result of some secret understanding, or that what was done at the imperial conference led to this country receiving certain rights of free entry into the British market which we all know she would have had even had there been no conference at all. When we were discussing the conference agreements, this was stated a dozen times here without any possibility of contradiction.

I turn to the next page, and here I find another illustration from the moving picture bureau, "The new colours of the Governor General's Footguards—One of the events to which the delegates to the imperial conference were invited while in Ottawa was the ceremony of the presentation of colours by His Excellency the Governor General to the regiment of which he is Honorary Colonel." Why circulate that sort of thing at public expense at this time? Surely there was enough advertising of its attendant features at the time of the conference itself, and before, without continuing them indefinitely and unnecessarily in the way in which it is done in this book.

I turn to page 19, and find another page devoted entirely to this subject. It deals with matters immediately preceding the conference and describes how busy the government were at that time. These are the words used:

> As the preliminary and final reports of the various committees were turned in they were studied by a committee of the cabinet under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister, and the broad lines of Canadian policy at the conference laid down. Frequently this required further information on a great variety of subjects so that the weeks preceding the opening of the conference were marked by a concentration of effort as great as any undertaken by the Canadian government since the close of the great war.

What is the sense of or justification for publishing that sort of thing in an official handbook that is supposed to be dealing with present conditions? Then we have several pages dealing with inter-empire trade, all of which are supposed to relate to this conference, containing charts, and the like, but no information of a character which can be regarded as authentic in relation to the possible trends of Canada's trade as a whole. After occupying many pages in the earlier part of the book, the same sort of material appears again on pages 39, 40, 41, 42, 43 and 44, which are devoted entirely to an account of what is described as the achievements of the conference.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would ask hon. gentlemen who say "hear, hear" in a very faint tone, to tell me what those achievements have been. There is not a man living who can point to any definite achievements as yet. And yet this book devotes pages of material on what is termed the achievements of the conference for circulation throughout the various countries of the world.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Tory propaganda.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Take this statement as an example:

The Canadian delegation succeeded in not only securing the continuance of the preferences for, in most cases, a period of five years, but in greatly widening their scope. The grain grower, the mixed farmer who raises cattle and hogs in addition to grain, the dairy farmer, the fruit grower, the tobacco grower, the rancher and breeder of live stock will, as a result, enjoy a larger demand for their products.

If that is not pure political propaganda, and false propaganda, I should like to know what is.

Mr. STEVENS: No, the figures prove it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It goes on to say:

As pointed out by the Prime Minister, on October 12, 1932, when tabling the agreements in the house, Canada will naturally benefit more than any other dominion from the preferences on manufactured goods.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Assuming that were true, it might be saying very little, but has a statement of that kind any place in a handbook purporting to be dealing with conditions in this country and published by a government bureau?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let hon. gentlemen be sincere. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite how they, had they been sitting on this side, would have viewed publicity of this kind with reference to Liberal policies in a handbook put out by a Liberal government at the public expense. We all need official statistical data on which to base what we have to say, and I would have had no objection whatever, so far as the conference is concerned, if the government had issued or published the agreements in this volume and let them speak for themselves. No exception could have been taken other than that it would have been an unnecessary expense. It at least would have been information, but the government has no right to draw its own partisan inferences, give its own partisan interpretations, and, above all, to make absolutely false assertions in regard to what have been the results and adopt this method of putting them into circulation.

Let me read another statement. On page 41 I find this:

It was provided, however, that the Canadian tariff board (the establishment was provided for last session but the personnel has not yet been appointed) should act as a judicial as well as a fact finding body.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Now I asked the Prime Minister himself, at the time we were discussing the functions of the tariff board in relation to the conference agreements, whether it was to act as a judicial body, and he gave me the assurance that it would not, but that it would be a fact finding body. If hon. gentlemen will look at Hansard, they will see that this very question was raised, and they will find the Prime Minister's statement denying that the tariff board was to be a judicial body and asserting that it was to be purely a fact finding body. Yet my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in this publication of his department, advertises to the world that we have in the personnel of this new tariff board which has not yet come into existence, a new judicial body in Canada. I would think that there would be time enough to make a record of the tariff board in an official publication when we had the board, but here the government is erroneously advertising the function of a board which has not yet been brought into existence. Then on page 42 I find this statement:

An empire policy has also been followed in respect of vegetable oils which Canada imported to the value of $7,000,000 even in the sub-normal fiscal year 1932.

An empire policy! I should like to know since when this parliament has taken upon itself the business of fashioning empire policies. Hon. gentlemen opposite used to talk about national policies, and when they were talking about protection, they said: This is the great national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald. But we have here in an official handbook of the government the statement that we have been enacting empire policies.

Mr. STEVENS: At the conference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If at the conference it was without authority from any parliament for so doing. How does my hon. friend justify printing in any government publication, which purports to be a record of facts, any such statement as that this parliament has lent itself to creating empire policies. It may be true, but most of our members will not be prepared to admit the fact. I quote further from the same page:

The above tariff changes along with those concerning miscellaneous industries announced on October 12, 1932, constitute the beginning of the revision of the Canadian preferential tariff.

This is information which parliament has not had before. We have never been told that this was the beginning of the revision of the tariff. We were led to assume, after having had three or four revisions in less than that number of years, that we had got pretty near to the end. Now we are told in this particular handbook that it is but the beginning.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It will be the end of the Tories.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point this out as to the worth of what is set forth as a matter of historical record? I have read, I think, all that this publication has to say on empire preferences, and I do not find a single reference in this book to any preference having been given by Canada to Great Britain from 1896 to 1930—not one; and yet this work purports to give an accurate and complete historical record of what has taken place. Though the preference idea owes its existence in practice to the government which was in office in Canada in 1896, the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and though the governments of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, of Sir Robert Borden, or Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, as well as the late Liberal government all continued to give preferences to Britain, and all alike shared in supporting a policy of imperial preferences, no mention is made whatever in this record of what was done by way of granting preference to Britain by any one of them, albeit we are told a lot about Adam Smith, about the Napoleonic wars, the corn laws, and the like. I say, Mr. Chairman, that that is not fair play. It is not honest, decent, straightforward, nor is it a truthful record. It is the suppression of the most significant and important part of the whole. The whole thing is a miserable effort to spread Tory political propaganda at the expense of the public to print and publish and circulate an official handbook containing the false literature of the Tory party. I think that the item for this service ought in the circumstances to be reduced, and I would move that it be reduced by $12,575, which is the increase which we are being asked to make in the expenditure in the present year as against the expenditure of last year. No doubt the increase is due to this propagandist feature. Last year we had a very large expenditure. I think it had been increased on the score that the imperial conference was about to be held. Now it is being increased because the conference has been held and because the government wish to circulate this party literature in reference to it. Whatever other economies may be necessary at the present time, this one certainly ought to be effected, and an end put to the practice of a government using public funds for political propaganda. It is exactly the same thing as took place the year before last when the minister published at government expense what he called a creed—Canada first.

Mr. STEVENS: There is a tremendous demand for it still.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But in the meantime another creed has found expression, not "Canada first," but "empire first," and not only "empire first" but "empire first, empire last and empire over all." That is the policy of the present government, and they are seeking, by means of this propaganda, to get abroad a lot of their literature before the campaign comes on, and to send it out at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer. I say that is carrying government expenditure to a point absolutely unjustifiable. I move that the item be reduced by $12,575 on the score that the expenditure is unnecessary, that the information it is intended to circulate is historically inaccurate and false, and purely in the nature of political propaganda and cannot be justified on any public ground whatsoever.

Mr. STEVENS: The obvious mental disturbance of the right hon. gentleman is due to the fact that my right hon. leader the Prime Minister of Canada played an important part in the imperial conference. The right hon. gentleman has never forgiven my right hon. leader because he was Prime Minister during the past year. So the right hon. gentleman takes a handbook which was prepared in just the same way as all preceding ones, and because the editors of the handbook dared in the opening pages to honour the Prime Minister of Canada and to quote in the foreword a speech that the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada delivered at the imperial conference, they are subjected to this diatribe. The utterance of my right hon. friend was unworthy of him. It is simply a display of pitiful childish spleen because the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government was in this honoured position at the imperial conference.

An hon. MEMBER: Answer the criticism.

Mr. STEVENS: So far as the matter in this publication is concerned, as I have already intimated it was prepared in exactly the same way by the staff of the bureau, and I want to pay this tribute to them; there are in the bureau some of the most able men, not put there by me, but who got their positions years ago when the right hon. gentleman himself was the head of the government, able men who have discharged their duties year in and year out without fear and without favour. They were not dictated to, they were not interfered with in the slightest degree.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: None of this was written by any of them.

Mr. STEVENS: It was produced by them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No sir.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my right hon. friend not take my word on it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I dispute absolutely that this was written as it appears in the bureau, and the minister knows it.

Mr. STEVENS: I tell my right hon. friend this, that every word of it was produced in the bureau by the officers of the bureau without one word of intimation from me as to what should be written.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say that.

Mr. STEVENS: My right hon. friend must take my word for that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I take my hon. friend's word when he says he did not direct that these things should be written.

Mr. STEVENS: This publication was written and produced in the same way as preceding publications.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say that what I read to-night was not written by anyone who is a member of the bureau of statistics.

Mr. STEVENS: It was written by an official of the bureau of statistics. I give that on the authority of the head of the department who sits before me.

Mr. HEPBURN: He should be fired, then.

Mr. STEVENS: He should not. I want to say that the head of the bureau of statistics and the chief officers are gentlemen of whom this country may well be proud. I will say this to my young friend opposite who has just interjected, that the head of the bureau of statistics is held in the highest esteem and respect in practically every leading country in Europe, as well as Great Britain, as one of the most outstanding statisticians in the world.

Mr. HEPBURN: Did he write it?

Mr. STEVENS: He certainly did not. In justification to him I say this further, that this country has every reason to be proud of the head of the bureau and of its staff. And I repeat that this is the product of the officers, but I am not taking any shelter behind them as to what has been produced here. I am the head of the department, and I take responsibility for its production.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Motion agreed to.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house will unite with them in the formation of a joint committee of both houses on the subject of the printing of parliament, and that the members of the select standing committee on printing, viz., Messieurs: Anderson (Halton), Baribeau, Belec, Boulanger, Bourgeois, Brasset, Charters, Desrochers, Dubois, Embury, Esling, Factor, Fortin, Girouard, Gott, Gray, Hay, Heaps, Howden, Lucas, MacLean, McKenzie (Assiniboia), McLure, Maloney, Marcil, Matthews, Moore (Chateauguay), Munn, Murphy, Parent, Peck, Perras, Pickel, Porteous, Price, Quinn, Rhéaume, Rinfret, Roberge, Robinson, Rowe, Ryerson, St-Père, Short, Simpson (North Simcoe), Spankie, Spencer, Spotton, Taylor, Tétreault, Verville, Wilson, Woodsworth, Wright, will act as members on the part of this house, on the said joint committee on the printing of parliament.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house has appointed the honourable the Speaker and Messieurs: Ahearn, Barrette, Black (Halifax), Bourassa, Carmichael, Cayley, Garland (Carleton), Hanbury, Howard, Howden, Laflèche, Macphail, Miss, Mullins, Ryerson, Senn, Spankie, Spence, Sproule, Thauvette, a committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the restaurant, so far as the interest of the Commons are concerned, and to act as members of a joint committee of both houses on the restaurant.

Motion agreed to.

PORTSMOUTH PENITENTIARY

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I lay on the table the report of the superintendent of penitentiaries re Kingston penitentiary disturbances. I move that the report be printed, five hundred copies in English and two hundred and fifty copies in French.

Motion agreed to.

VACANCIES

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have recived a communication from two members, notifying me that the following vacancy has occurred in the representation, viz:

Of Maxime D. Cormier, Esquire, as member for the electoral district of Restigouche-Madawaska, by decease.

And that I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

And also, that I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the electoral district of Yamaska, consequent upon the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada declaring the election therefor, held on the 28th July, 1930, to be null and void.

LABOUR CONFERENCE

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation. Also, Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table the authentic text of the draft convention which was adopted at the fifteenth session of the International Labour Conference, 1931, in accordance with the provisions of article 405 of the treaty of Versailles and the corresponding provisions of other treaties of peace; also text of an order in council which has been adopted dealing with the competence of parliament and of the provincial legislatures respectively with regard to the subject matter of this draft convention. The texts of the draft convention and of the order in council above mentioned have been transmitted to the lieutenant-governors of the several provinces.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE RESPECTING BILL TO AMEND THE INCOME WAR TAX ACT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): When notice was given of the introduction of this bill to amend the Income War Tax Act, and of the one that follows, to amend the Salary Deduction Act, 1932, it was believed that by having them placed on the order paper, under the heading "Introduction of Bills," these bills could be proceeded with merely by introducing them in the ordinary course inasmuch as they were bills proposing to continue existing acts for a further period of a year. It subsequently transpired that there is a specific rule of the house which requires that a tax measure must be preceded by a resolution. Under these circumstances I would ask the unanimous consent of the house, to accept this notice of introduction as notice of the resolution, in which event I would move that the house do to-morrow resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider the proposed resolution. The advantage of that course would be that we could proceed to-morrow with the resolution; otherwise, the next government day being Friday, we should be precluded from the consideration of the resolution until Friday. In these circumstances I would ask whether I might have the unanimous consent of the house. If not, it only remains for me to put the notice on the order paper and wait until Friday.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): The minister's remarks apply, I take it, to the two last measures on the order paper. So far as the opposition is concerned, there is no objection to what he has proposed.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to continue in force until March 31, 1934, the provisions of an act to amend the Income War Tax Act, chapter 44 of the statutes of 1932, and to provide that the persons therein described shall be liable to pay the tax thereby imposed in respect of salaries or pay paid to them by the Dominion of Canada during or in respect of the fiscal year 1933-34, in accordance with the provisions of the said act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

SALARY DEDUCTION ACT

PROPOSED CONTINUATION OF DEDUCTION OF TEN PER CENT FROM SALARIES AND INDEMNITIES

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee tomorrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to continue in force the provisions of the Salary Deduction Act, 1932, until the 31st day of March, 1934, and to provide that the provisions of the said act shall apply to the indemnities of members of the Senate and the House of Commons for the session of parliament which commenced on the 6th day of October, 1932.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: Does this mean that we are postponing our objections until to-morrow?

Mr. DUFF: I do not wish to impede the progress of the minister's resolution, but I want to say here and now that I am just as much opposed to these resolutions as I was last year. I am opposed to any reduction in the salaries of the officials of the House of Commons or anyone else.

Mr. SPEAKER: There will be a proper time at which to express objections.

Mr. DUFF: I contend that I am entitled to express my objection upon the moving of the resolution.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE W. McPHEE (Yorkton): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), in connection with the now much discussed deal with Russia to exchange Canadian cattle for Russian products. My question is based upon a statement made last Friday evening by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer). The hon. member stated that Mr. Serkau had been keeping closely in touch with the Minister of Agriculture and—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should state his question.

Mr. McPHEE: This is the basis of my question.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not permitted to quote in this manner from debates of the same session.

Mr. McPHEE: The hon. member stated that the minister had given consent to Mr. Serkau before he went to New York to consult with the Russian agent, and that it was with the consent and approval of the minister that he went to Russia.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should proceed with his question.

Mr. McPHEE: My question is: Are or are not the statements made by the hon. member for Battle River correct?

An hon. MEMBER: Ask him.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I would like the hon. member to suggest what the withholding of my consent would have to do with that gentleman going to New York?

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

SILLARSVILLE, QUE., POST OFFICE

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the Postmaster General received a petition signed by the patrons of Sillarsville post office, asking for the appointment of Mrs. E. G. Sillars as postmistress to succeed her late father-in-law, Hugh Sillars?
2. If so, what action has been taken in this matter?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Prior to receipt of petition, instructions were issued for appointment of Mr. Hudson Adams. In view of petition, the case is being given further consideration.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has a mail contract been awarded for the mail service between Bonaventure railway station and Bonventure East?
2. If so, to whom and at what price?
3. Who were the other tenderers and what was the price of each tender?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Pierre Henry, at $144 per annum.

3.

| | Per annum |
|---|---|
| Barthelemi Henry | $240 |
| Ovide Bourdages | 298 |
| Pierre G. Poirier | 340 |
| Alfred Bourdages | 344 |
| Fermin Bourdages | 354 |

JAPANESE LEAVING CANADA

Mr. REID:

1. Has any record been kept by the Department of Immigration of those of Japanese origin leaving Canada for Japan?

2. If so, what numbers have left Canada during the years 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932?

3. What percentage of those leaving Canada for Japan have left with the intention of returning or on permit?

Mr. GORDON:

1. The only record kept by the Department of Immigration and Colonization of Japanese leaving Canada covers those registering outward with the intention of returning to Canada.

2. The number of outward registrations on record are as follows:

|---|---|
| 1929 | 798 |
| 1930 | 871 |
| 1931 | 835 |
| 1932 | 711 |

3. No information.

HAVRE ST. PIERRE, QUE., RECONSTRUCTION WORKS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has the government received a petition from the municipal council or citizens of Havre St. Pierre, on the north shore, in the county of Saguenay, requesting that improvements and reconstruction works be carried out at the wharf in this locality?

2. If so, does the government intend granting this petition?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Yes.

2. Matter under consideration.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

AMOUNTS SPENT IN DIRECT RELIEF

Mr. GOTT:

1. How much has the present government spent in direct relief since assuming office?

2. How much was spent through unemployment schemes?

3. How much was loaned to provinces for relief work?

4. What amount was loaned to each province?

GRANDES BERGERONNES, QUE., WHARF

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has any money been voted and spent to improve the approaches of the wharf at Grandes Bergeronnes, in the county of Saguenay, to enable boats to land more easily at this point?

2. If so, what money was spent for this purpose?

3. Who requested that such work be undertaken?

4. What is the name of the superintendent in charge of said work?

5. By whom was he recommended and appointed?

6. What was the total cost of this work?

7. What are the names of the persons engaged in this work?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

VICTORIA, P.E.I., WHARF

Mr. MacLEAN:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and correspondence regarding the work in connection with the extension and repairs to the wharf at Victoria, Prince Edward Island; also a copy of all tenders and a statement showing in detail the names of the different men employed on the work, the amount paid to each, the names of all parties from whom lumber and other materials for the wharf were purchased, the amount paid in each case, the name of the inspector and the amount paid to him for work done.

DISMISSAL OF ALPHÉE OTIS

Mr. LaRUE:

For a copy of all telegrams, correspondence and other documents, including copy of the evidence and proceedings of the inquiry in the possession of the Minister of Marine, with respect to the dismissal of Alphée Otis as light and fog signal keeper at Sainte-Félicité, Matane county, on September 16, 1927.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

PROPOSAL THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE IMMEDIATE ATTENTION TO QUESTION OF DEBTS AND INTEREST RATES

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer) moved:

Whereas; the question of public and private indebtedness has become one of our greatest and most perplexing problems, enhanced during the past years by the extremely low price level of all primary commodities, through which this indebtedness must be in large part met, and the effect of which has been to double and treble the actual burden of these liabilities; and,

Whereas; this fact has been recognized in respect of certain international obligations, and has become a practical issue in respect of the public obligations of many countries; and,

Whereas; no such recognition has as yet been given to the heavy private indebtedness within this country, although these, together with the high interest rates which prevail, constitute just as heavy and impossible a burden to the individual, as do national and international obligations to the countries concerned; and,

Whereas; this situation is one of the greatest factors in the present economic depression, and is one of the greatest barriers to the financial recovery of agriculture and industry, and as such, deserves and commands the immediate attention of this parliament;

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, the government should give serious and immediate attention to the question of debts and interest rates within this country, and the possibility of their reduction, either by way of direct action, or by the submission of the entire problem to a special committee of this house, in order that the subject may be fully inquired into, and if possible, some solution found.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution which stands in my name and which is now before the house deals with a problem and presents a situation which is familiar to most hon. members and which, I think, demands the serious consideration of us all. In drafting this resolution and its preamble I have endeavoured to make it, so far as possible, self-explanatory, so that it will contain within itself not only an indication as to the problem involved but one or two of the main arguments in support of the suggestion which is made, that suggestion being contained in the germane part of the resolution and asking that the government take into serious consideration the possibility of some reduction being made in the debts and interest of the people of this country, whether that reduction may be made by way of direct action or whether the subject may be dealt with through the appointment of a committee or in some other manner.

It might be said that I have not been very definite in this resolution. Not only do I admit the fact that I have made no definite suggestion as to the percentage of reduction which is necessary or which might take place, or as to the method which might be followed in applying such a reduction, if one were found possible, but I have purposely refrained from attempting to speak in a definite and dogmatic manner, for I recognize as clearly as does any other hon. member that this subject is one of tremendous difficulty; that it is fraught with complexities and that it can be approached only with great care and dealt with after careful consideration and deep thought.

Owing to the fact that my time is limited I shall not try to deal with the matter in other than a somewhat superficial way. Did my time permit, I should be glad to go into it in a more fundamental manner, and to discuss the question as to whether the growth of debt was an inevitable and integral part of the system under which we live and whether it were possible under any circumstances for the debts of the world to be paid. But as my time is limited I shall confine myself to the more obvious phases of the situation.

I have stated that I am aware of the difficulties that are involved. I am also aware of many of the criticisms which might and undoubtedly will be advanced in respect of such a suggestion, and with your permission, sir, I shall endeavour to anticipate one or two of the more serious and obvious. It might be suggested in the first place that this question of debt reduction, so far at least as it applied to agriculture, was at this time wholly academic in that now and under present conditions it makes little difference to the average farmer whether his debts stand as at present or whether they are materially reduced, as in few cases on the farm is the farmer able out of existing prices to pay any part of that indebtedness, as it now stands or if reduced. But I must point out in connection with that objection, first, that this resolution does not confine itself wholly to agricultural indebtedness but deals with indebtedness as a whole and, second, that we surely may anticipate that there will be some change in the situation. As a matter of fact, were we to follow that line of action or of inaction which led to an indefinite perpetuation of the present situation at least in respect of agriculture, we might accurately anticipate, not that the question of debt reduction would be one of prime urgency, but that not only would agriculture itself gradually become bankrupt but those who are directly or indirectly dependent upon agriculture would follow that pursuit into bankruptcy. Whether by the flux of time—and I doubt this—or by definite action taken, I am taking it for granted that some change in the situation must be brought about, and when that time comes, then the question of debt and its payment becomes one of immediate and urgent consideration.

It might also be suggested by way of criticism that in this resolution I am calling upon a federal government to consider matters which, under our constitution, are outside federal competence. I have no such purpose in mind nor am I suggesting that the federal or any other government should exceed the bounds of its own constitutional jurisdiction. I am not suggesting that we should ignore the law as it stands, but I am proposing that among the various governmental authorities, federal and provincial, within this country, in cooperation and joint action lie sufficient power and authority to deal not only with the question of debt, but with any other question in which the general good of the Canadian people is so deeply involved. I am suggesting that this government might well consider the question to the extent of its own jurisdiction and competence and, realizing that a part at least of the question of interest lies within federal competence, might take the lead, as the senior body, if one might so term it, within Canada in bringing about conference and cooperation as between itself and the provincial governments with the object of deciding upon and, if possible, putting into effect some policy which would relieve this intolerable burden. That is as far as my suggestion goes. I might further suggest along the same lines, that the federal government, as a federal government, is deeply concerned and that the resolution now before us might also contain a reference to the international situation and the part which Canada must play.

The other criticism which might well be advanced, and which as a matter of fact has been advanced throughout the country, is one touching the financial morality of such a suggestion. There is the question as to whether or not by any action, governmental or otherwise, bodies, individuals, corporations or countries which have loaned money should be deprived of a part of their rights when they demand repayment. There is the question as to whether we should suggest that a creditor organization which has loaned, say, $1,000 some years ago should now content itself with the receipt of $500. I use these figures arbitrarily and merely by way of illustration. In this connection I would ask the question: What was loaned at that time? Money? Yes. But what is money? I am not going to enter into an academic discussion concerning money, but I am going to suggest that, after all, what was actually loaned had in itself no intrinsic value. What was loaned was potential purchasing power, potential goods, potential commodities, potential service. In other words what was loaned was the equivalent of certain goods or services which might be rendered. To my mind there is nothing unjust in the suggestion that in these days of public stress, in these times when every citizen in the land is sharing or should share the effects of present conditions, we should at least consider the question as to whether it would not be perfectly fair to return to the creditor the same value in purchasing power, the same value in respect of goods and services purchased, as had been advanced, together with fair interest. To my mind that is a matter which might well be considered; it is a question which few have answered, and it is a suggestion which will come within the strictest bounds of financial morality.

Then there is another aspect of the matter which is much more serious. We are well aware that during a war—in fact at any time of public emergency—the legal right of individuals must at times give way to the public weal. I am suggesting there is more involved in this matter of debt than merely a legal demand upon some person to repay a sum of money borrowed, than merely the legal right of some individual or corporation to receive repayment of a sum loaned. There is the question of the effect of the debt situation upon the entire community, upon the welfare of all the people and of the state itself. To my mind not only is there a tremendous question involved but in this situation there is a definite menace to the well being of all of us. After all, concerning certain classes of international indebtedness, it has been recognized throughout the world that the repayment of such debts, even if possible, would be detrimental to the public weal—would be detrimental alike to both the loaning and borrowing countries. That was recognized fully in respect of the German war reparations. Step by step, period after period, conference after conference, the demands for reparations have been reduced until at Lausanne those demands were practically wiped out. They were not, in my view, wiped out from any altruistic motives; they were wiped out because of the definite recognition on the part of the allies that they would suffer equally with the country called upon to make the payments. The allies recognized that the withdrawal annually of those large sums of money from the current purchasing power of the world, that the payment of those moneys without a corresponding exchange of goods, was detrimental to public interest and a definite handicap to the restoration of trade. The same argument could be applied with equal power and equal truth to other classes of war debts. It will be noted that to-day the statesmen of the world recognize that fact, and not only is debtor country after debtor country defaulting or threatening to default, repudiating or threatening to repudiate payment of the moneys they owe, but even Great Britain herself, whose financial morality has never been questioned, and who has prided herself upon her ability and willingness at all times to pay every dollar when due, has come to the conclusion, and has so notified her chief creditor, that some different arrangement must be made, and that the latest payment she made may be the last under present circumstances.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the withdrawal of that percentage of current purchasing power, the absorption of that portion of the national income along unproductive lines is a menace and barrier to future trade recovery. To my mind it is the impelling motive, and will be the impelling motive when these arrangements are perfected, and when these debts in large part will be—and I believe they will be—wiped out and cancelled. After all—and this is a somewhat paradoxical situation—the ill effects of payments of international debts is felt just as much by the creditor nation as the debtor nation. To-day we have the seeming anomaly of the United States, the chief creditor country of the world, declaring on the one hand a definite policy providing for debt repayment, and, on the other hand recognizing, as every country must recognize, that in the last resort those debts must be paid in goods, refusing to accept payment in that form. She realizes that such payment would not only inflict hardship upon the country charged with payment, but would inflict greater hardship upon herself. To avoid that eventuality they have raised barriers to prevent the payment of those debts in goods, because if the debt were paid in that way great quantities of goods would be admitted into the country without calling for the export of other commodities in return. Nations of the world are beginning to realize that such a situation would end in the closing of factories of the creditor country, and a tremendous increase in unemployment figures. I cannot but believe that what applies to war debts or reparations must apply with equal force to other forms of international indebtedness. Every factor which makes it impossible or inadvisable to pay war debts in full operates to exactly the same degree and in exactly the same way in respect of all other international obligations. There may be a difference of course, from an academic point of view, or from the point of view of financial morality, if you will—a difference in the origin of the debts, or a difference in the purpose for which those debts were incurred. But from the business point of view, and that is the aspect from which I choose to discuss it, there is no difference in the effects of the repayment, or the demand for repayment, as between one form of international liability and another.

Now as my time is passing rapidly and, as these arguments are being given increasing recognition throughout the countries of the world, may I suggest that some of them apply with almost equal force to internal and private indebtedness? When we survey the debt situation throughout the world and endeavour to compute the amount which is now owing we find a sum which is so huge as to stagger the imagination. Four hundred billion dollars, the computed amount of world indebtedness, means nothing to me personally. I can no more comprehend it than I can comprehend the computations by which astronomers measure the distances between stars or the speeds at which certain stars may travel in their orbits. Four hundred billion dollars means as little to me in actual effect as the distance represented by a light year. Any consideration of that sum, any question of repayment in full or even in large part becomes not only meaningless but positively ludicrous. When you consider that the interest alone at five per cent amounts to $20,000,000,000 a year on world obligations, I think it becomes obvious that the business of this world, the production of this world, the ability of this world to pay must fall infinitely short of that vast sum.

Now we turn to private indebtedness, internal indebtedness, the discussion of which is the main purpose of this resolution, and which to a much greater degree than international indebtedness is in our hands, within our own competence, and is a much more immediate and urgent problem as far as we are concerned. I have been endeavouring to compute with as great accuracy as possible the aggregate of debt within this country. I have been unable to arrive at an accurate computation, but roughly speaking, drawing upon the last census returns I find that in interest bearing bonds publicly issued, that is federal, provincial and municipal, we owe $4,600,000,000 of which $3,220,000,000 is owing in Canada and $1,380,000,000 outside of Canada. Then I find also that other bonded debts, that is of railway and other corporations, amounts to nearly as great a sum. I say "nearly"; a billion dollars less, but what is a billion dollars in view of sums such as I have indicated? Their bonded indebtedness amounts to something like $3,500,000,000, of which $1,500,000,000 is due in Canada and nearly $2,000,000,0000 due outside of Canada.

Then I find that mortgages upon farms amount to approximately $700,000,000. There is a question in doubt in regard to that, I have been unable to obtain satisfactory information as to whether that includes all forms of sale agreements on farms, some say it does, some say it does not, I have been unable to ascertain from any of our authorities whether in taking the census all census takers treated those questions alike, and secondly, as to what actually was involved. But the weight of opinion is that this does not include agreements of sale, but only mortgages, where the money has been actually loaned to an individual already owning his land. And this total does not include mortgages on town or city property, but only farm mortgages.

Then I find that the sums owing to banks of this country by individuals and corporations amounts to somewhere about $2,500,000,000. Again I have been unable to get definite details as to that indebtedness, but that figure is given me from the census office from the best authorities that I can consult as approximately the amount owing to the banks at the present time.

These figures then, totalling about $12,000,000,000, can be taken as fairly definite. But they do not include, as I say, mortgages on town or city property, it is unlikely that they include amounts owing on sales agreements on farm and other properties, and they do not include the vast total of relatively small debts owing by various individuals and companies, to retail stores for instance. So I think it would be safe to estimate that you can add another five or six billion, but I shall confine myself to the $12,000,000,000 definitely indicated, merely suggesting that this is not the whole. A tremendous load, you will say, upon a population the size of ours. Including interest it calls for an enormous percentage of our national income. As to the interest charges, that again is somewhat uncertain because the rate of interest varies greatly, from perhaps 4½ per cent in some favoured cases, 5 per cent on some classes of bonds, up to 8, 9, and 10 per cent upon certain classes of mortgages and other liabilities. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I know that in many cases, through fees, charges on renewals, compounding of interest, it amounts to as high as 12 and 14 per cent for some unfortunate people. But even if you take it on an average at 6 per cent and apply it only to the $12,000,000,000 of which we have definite record we have a sum of $720,000,000 a year due in interest, an amount double or treble the entire value of this last year's wheat crop.

Now what is the effect of that? I must deal with it very briefly, and merely from two aspects. First as to the effect on the public weal, using the term commonly used, one expressing a situation of very great importance. What is the effect of the withdrawal from channels of consumption, from current purchasing power, of so large a sum? Of even so large a sum as that part which is paid? It must be remembered in this connection that a large part of these annual payments is due, not to men of moderate means, who will spend the greater part of their income in the purchase of commodities or services, but to men or corporations whose income already covers their needs, and the bulk of whose surplus income must go not into purchasing channels but into investment. Now investment is necessary and good. But the common form of investment is either bonds or additions to our productive plant or its improvement. No matter how it is invested it is not added to the purchasing income of this nation in respect to its purchase of goods.

What is the effect of its withdrawal from current purchasing power? The effect is obvious on all sides, in every country. As you withdraw purchasing power—it is true that this is only one factor in the situation—the inevitable result must be unsold goods and crashing price levels. Both of those conditions are with us to-day, and to this the debt situation, the payment of debt and of interest as far as it is paid, is one of the main contributing factors. It is for the public good—including the cerditors in this country—to see a revival of trade, an increase in the price level of primary commodities, a general speeding up of the wheels of industry. This can only be accomplished through an acceleration of and adding to the means of consumption. I must leave that, for time will not permit any detailed discussion of the point.

Now I come to the effect of debt on the private individual—its damning and crushing effect—and if I confine myself largely to its effect on agriculture it is from no lack of realization that it applies with equal force and weight to other industries and individuals; but I am familiar with its effect on agriculture, and I prefer to speak of that which I know. Take the case of the average farmer to-day—and I am not speaking now of the farmer whose position has always been hopeless; I am not speaking of the inefficient farmer, but the average farmer who is recognized by those who know him as being as efficient and courageous an individual as will be found in this country. As a matter of fact, when you take into consideration the ordinary vicissitudes of farm life, the uncertainties through climatic conditions which must always be the farmer's lot, you will recognize that to be a farmer continuously, to stay with the job year in and year out throughout a lifetime, requires courage, patience, perseverence and optimism of no mean order. But he is content with that.

Consider, however, the situation of these men to-day. Some years ago, for purposes of increased production, in some cases because of the encouragement offered by the high price levels, because of the demand made on the farmer for increased production, because of governmental and financial encouragement, many of these men, too many of them, went into debt. I am not discussing the question whether or not they should have gone into debt. I suppose if our foresight had been as good as our hindsight, many of us would have acted differently four or five years ago than we did. But they did go into debt for business purposes, and certainly for purposes perfectly meritorious. They borrowed money, mortgaged their farms and other property as security for the payment of that money, and anticipated at that time, as they had every right to anticipate from the price levels, the general conditions, future prospects, and from the optimistic statements of every political and financial leader in the country, that they would be able to borrow in safety and repay when the time came.

Prices crashed and this money, we must remember, was borrowed at that time mainly on high prices. That statement will go unchallenged. Certainly no farmer has borrowed, at any rate very few farmers have borrowed any money since prices fell. No money has been loaned since that time. So that I am safe in saying that the debt was incurred on high price levels. Now the farmer finds himself with a debt which was a moderate and reasonable one at the time it was incurred, bearing not too great a proportion to the value of his assets; but to-day under any fair appraisal—and I am not speaking now of forced sale when land and stock are worth practically nothing, but of fair appraisal—to-day, I say, under any fair appraisal, tens of thousands of these men owe more money than the entire value of their assets; and if the ordinary rules of bankruptcy were put into force, that is to say, the ability to pay when due the amount due, they would be bankrupt. Of course, they are not bankrupt now in that sense, because no one is attempting to foreclose, or very few. No mortgage company or bank, no individual wants to take a security which has become a liability; they do not want to find themselves obliged to pay taxes on the land. At the present time therefore the land is reasonably safe. But the farmers find themselves confronted with a debt greater in amount than the entire value of their property, and with an income reduced enormously through the crash of prices.

Let me give one slight illustration. There is a man whom I know very well who borrowed a relatively small sum—$2,000. He borrowed at a time when the price of wheat in my locality was a little over a dollar net to the farmer. He was unable to pay because the price fell shortly after the time he borrowed. To-day wheat is worth, roughly, 25 cents a bushel at the country point in my district, for No. 1, as compared with a dollar and a few cents three years ago. That means that while he borrowed the value of 2,000 bushels of wheat he must pay 8,000 bushels in return. Now, wheat itself has not lost its value; it is as valuable for food purposes as ever it was. But it has lost its value in relation to other goods and principally in relation to money. This man is called upon to pay that increased number of bushels of wheat. It is not merely a matter of his debt having quadrupled; his ability to meet his indebtedness has been cut far more than four times. A man farming pays his debts out of the surplus left after he has paid his cost of living, operating expenses and taxes. Even were there a modicum left to-day, you will realize that it takes a far greater percentage of 25 cent per bushel wheat to maintain his farm and keep his family than when wheat was worth a dollar. The surplus left therefore, if any, is a much smaller proportion of the entire crop than at the time wheat was higher; and yet that smaller surplus is worth only one-quarter as much per bushel. So that the debt-paying ability of the farmer has been cut eight or ten times, even if the price has fallen only three-quarters.

Now what will this man do? You will say to him, carry on. Surely; he is carrying on in the hope and confident trust that times will improve, in the confidence that the mortgage company will not foreclose, for reasons I have indicated, or that the provincial government will step in with some protection and prevent foreclosure. But what then? The man is not paying that principal; he is not paying his interest. As a matter of fact he has cut his standard of living to the bone. In doing so he is leaving goods unpurchased on the shelves in the stores. This results in factory wheels being slowed down, thus adding to unemployment. He has cut his operating costs, and that means that he is reducing the efficiency of his farm for the future. He is allowing weeds to grow because he cannot keep them under control; he is allowing the place to fall into disrepair because he cannot keep it in proper condition; his fences are falling in because he cannot repair them; his machinery is wearing out because he cannot replace it; and his efficiency is being reduced not through any fault of his own but because that is involved in the lower cost of operation. He is paying his taxes if he can. But he sees year by year not only that unpaid amount remaining but the accumulation of interest. His debt is increasing, and there is a situation which is breaking the hearts and threatening to break the morale of the most courageous and optimistic lot of men in the country.

I am asking to-day that in view of these circumstances the government should do something—not that they should step in and immediately cut debts; no. I am asking, however, that they take into serious consideration the possibility of this being done; that they acquire all the knowledge and the experience that men may give them; that they discuss it with those who are interested in cooperating and in endeavouring to remove part of the burden. For it is obvious to all that it is not only the individual who suffers; but the nation itself, under that load, when faced with the upward trend, which we hope is ahead of us, will be hampered and weighed down so that the climb into that prosperity which we are all hoping for will be retarded. May I repeat that I am asking for nothing unfair. It is the duty of every citizen of this country to bear his or her share of the troubles which lie upon the land. Amidst the crash of falling values when stocks have disappeared, when men once wealthy have become poor, when farms have become liabilities, when primary goods can be hardly given away and when retail goods have been left upon the shelves, one commodity, one set of men are standing untouched—money itself has retained and is increasing its actual value. It is a misnomer and a mistake to treat money as a commodity and to my mind it is a most ridiculous and anomalous situation that when the value of the real wealth of the land has fallen, the value of the symbol itself remains untouched or has actually increased in value. It is not right that one class of men, the creditor class, should be immune in an emergency which is crushing and threatening the nation itself.

I am not asking for anything unreasonable and I have endeavoured to avoid speaking in a political, a critical or a partial manner. I am not imputing blame to any government, as no government in itself has been responsible. Certain governmental actions have added to the situation, but the difficulty lies in the system under which we live and move.

I am speaking of this matter from the point of view of what I believe to be practical business and common humanity. I fervently hope that the house will consider this matter from the same point of view, that it will give its unbiased consideration, its most intelligent thought and considered vote in an effort to assist the people of this country and of the world in removing a burden which can no longer be borne.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think we will all agree that the hon. member who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Speakman) has brought to the attention of this house a serious problem which confronts not only the people of this country but of all civilized countries of the world, namely, the question of debt and the question of interest. In reading the motion which the hon. member moved I notice that apparently he intended to confine its scope to what one might call the domestic debts of the Dominion of Canada; in his motion he asks that the immediate attention of this house should be given to the question of debts and interest rates within this country. While in his opening remarks he elaborated quite fully his own views with regard to what one might call the international financial situation throughout the world, I think he intends his motion to apply more particularly to what I might describe as the domestic situation or the question of national, provincial, municipal and private debts within the borders of the Dominion of Canada.

The figures which he gave to the house with regard to these various classes of debts I think produced something in the nature of a shock. Personally, I had no idea that the aggregate indebtedness at this moment of the Dominion of Canada was anything approaching the figure of twelve billions of dollars; I thought the total amount would have been much less. These figures stated by the hon. member are so enormous that I think the house should take serious note of the situation as it exists to-day. When one contemplates the aggregate debt of the country one must also contemplate the aggregate amount of interest which is payable annually in respect of such debt. As I understand this motion its purpose is to induce this house or a committee of this house to give serious and careful study to this important and pressing problem. As the hon. member elaborated his ideas I thought that he was perhaps a little academic and a little theoretical in his treatment of the situation and I was inclined to think that he should have offered something in the nature of a practical suggestion as to what might be achieved to the end asked for in his motion.

In this country there are roughly four chief divisions of indebtedness. First, there is the public debt, in which term we include national debts, provincial debts and municipal debts. Then, there is another type of debt which is also a public debt namely, our railway debts. I always include railway debts when considering the public debt of this country. There is yet another vast amount of indebtedness which has to be considered namely, that of the great corporations of this country. Private corporations have raised large amounts of money by bonds and otherwise both in this and other countries, and these obligations must be considered to some extent at least as public debts of the country. Unfortunately, a large proportion of these corporation debts are held and are payable outside of Canada and this fact rather adds to the burden which we have to bear in respect to them both in connection with the payment of principal and the payment of annual interest.

We then come to what we might call the private debts of the country, the debts which the people of the country owe to each other, to the banks, to the loan companies, and to individuals. In respect of all these debts interest is payable. Under the act which constituted the Dominion of Canada the matter of interest was placed among those subjects which come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. By subsection 19 of section 91 of the British North America Act, interest is specifically mentioned as being one of the subjects to be dealt with exclusively by this parliament. To many it may come as news that there is in existence an act of this parliament known as the Interest Act. Unfortunately or fortunately in dealing with the subject of interest this parliament has to a very large extent divested itself of authority in respect of past transactions. The second section of this act provides:

> Except as otherwise provided by this or by any other act of the parliament of Canada, any person may stipulate for, allow and exact, on any contract or agreement whatsoever, any rate of interest or discount which is agreed upon.

Parliament in its wisdom has left the question of interest almost entirely at the will of the people who enter into contracts or make bargains. The only practical enactment contained in the Interest Act having application to past transactions, is to be found in the third section which provides that where no interest is stipulated in the bargain or agreement, five per cent shall be the maximum amount which may be chargeable.

It is true that there are provisions in the act with regard to the rate of interest which may be charged upon mortgages, but these provisions are not what one would describe as being provisions of practical utility. For instance, in respect of mortgages it is merely provided that where the payment of principal and interest is combined as in the instalment plan that a specific rate of interest must be stated in the mortgage and no greater rate can be charged. There is also provision that where a mortgage extends beyond a period of five years it can always be paid off at the end of the five year period by tendering the amount of the mortgage plus three months' interest in advance by way of bonus. The same section also provides that after such a tender no further interest may be charged. These are practically the only items of general utility mentioned in the Interest Act.

We have a number of special acts which deal with interest. We have in the Bank Act provisions in regard to the rate of interest. We have in the Exchequer Court Act provisions under which five per cent only can be charged. We have in the Expropriation Act and in the Bills of Exchange Act provisions in relation to interest. We have likewise on our statute books an act known as the Moneylenders' Act under which I think the maximum amount chargeable by way of interest is 12 per cent, but that act applies only to loans under $500, so that the Moneylenders' Act is one of very limited application. One may state in general that this country, whatever rate of interest may be agreed upon between the borrower and the lender, such rate will have to be paid, except under certain specific acts some of which I have just mentioned. So far this parliament has not taken any very definite action in regard to the question of interest although its jurisdiction in respect of that subject is certainly exclusive and, I believe, unquestioned. To a large extent parliament has left the question of interest to be agreed upon by the borrower and the lender.

The practical question is: How are we going to proceed to reduce the debt and interest in Canada and at the same time be just, do no wrong to any party concerned? It will be readily understood that most of our contracts and agreements, in fact one might almost say all of them, are made under the authority of provincial laws; they all touch the great question of property and civil rights; they are contracts upon which this parliament of Canada has no right to legislate. The only legislative right of this parliament would be to fix the rate of interest; but this parliament has already expressly provided in the Interest Act that the parties themselves may stipulate and agree in regard to the rate of interest which shall be charged. After having given parties the right to negotiate, to make their own agreements in respect of interest, would it be wise or proper for this parliament now to intervene and in any way to alter or vary rights arising under contracts and agreements which we have permitted to be made and where various interest rates have been agreed to between the parties?

There may be some means, which does not for the moment present itself to me, of meeting a situation of this kind. No practical suggestion was offered in regard to the matter by my hon. friend who moved the motion. If there is a prospect of reaching a solution of the problem, of finding a remedy for the pressing situation which undoubtedly exists in this country as regards both debt and interest, the house will certainly welcome the opportunity. I notice my hon. friend in his motion asks that a committee of this house should study the question and report upon it. I would heartily agree with his suggestion. Perhaps a special committee might be best for the purpose, but in my judgment I think a question of this kind might well be studied by the banking and commerce committee. That, however, is not a matter of importance. The banking and commerce committee is already constituted and I think at present embraces in its numbers all or practically all hon. members who are most familiar with the subject of finance, public debt, banking, interest and the like. My suggestion—and it is only a suggestion—would be that this particular question should be referred to that committee to be dealt with at the present session, and if any solution can be found which will assist us in reducing rates of interest or in reducing the public and private debts of this country, then my hon. friend will be entitled to congratulations in regard to debt from every corner of the dominion.

I am not dealing at all with the international situation; I am at the moment referring only to those debts which are hampering us in this country and those burdensome interest payments which we are called upon annually to make in Canada. Whether from private individuals, corporations, municipalities, provinces, or from the Dominion treasury, I cannot recognize much distinction between them. They are all oppressive; they are all burdensome. I think I can admit that I did not fully realize the enormous amount of indebtedness of this country until I listened to the figures submitted to the house this afternoon by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman). I suppose an ideal state for this or any other country would be to have no debts, either public or private. Indeed we may well recall the words of William Shakespeare when he says:

> Neither a borrower nor a lender be,
> For loan oft loses both itself and friend;
> And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

However we may never reach that happy condition. Business has to be carried on in this, and every other country by means of credit. The question is: What rate of interest must we pay for the credit which is necessary for the conduct of business? Is there any practical way of controlling interest rates except through the inexorable law of supply and demand? Personally, I trust this motion may pass this house and that the whole question may be referred either to a special committee or to the committee on banking and commerce, and let me express the hope that the committee, to whichever one it is referred, may bring in something in the nature of practical conclusions from which we may eventually obtain some relief.

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I am glad indeed to second the resolution moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and I am sure hon. members will join with me in congratulating him on the clarity and forcefulness with which he presented the subject matter of this resolution to the house. I should also like to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) on the manner in which he has accepted the resolution and advised the house to pass it and refer it to a committee. He stated that the hon. member for Red Deer had not offered any practical solution to this question. We are all looking for solutions, and the idea of the hon. member was that instead of a solution being offered by him, the question should go before a committee of the house where it would receive the benefit of the combined wisdom of the members of that committee in offering a practical solution to deal with this all-important question, one which I think touches the very lives of the people at the present time.

When one speaks of scaling down debts, this is looked upon by some as repudiation and therefore with disfavour, but in my opinion the average individual is honest and wishes, if at all possible, to liquidate his undertakings, I believe hon. members will agree that we are facing at present entirely new world conditions. As the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, speaking on the last British budget, says:

> As I left the politics of yesterday for those of to-day, I now leave the politics of to-day for those of to-morrow.

In other words, what was good for yesterday may not be good for to-day or to-morrow, so we have to change our outlook according to the general conditions with which we are confronted. When we come to the question of debts I am sure most hon. members, including the Minister of Justice, have certainly been shocked by the startling figures presented to the house this afternoon by the hon. member for Red Deer. I am not going to repeat those figures, because they are already on Hansard.

Coming down to the question of farm debts, I shall direct my remarks more particularly to conditions obtaining in the province of Alberta, from which I come. It is not my wish to cast any reflection upon those engaged in taking census information, but I suggest there is at least a doubt as to whether or not the figures as shown in the census reports present a true picture. I find from those reports that there are 97,408 farms in the province of Alberta. Of that number 34,305 reported debts, showing a total debt of $108,463,700. In other words only 35 per cent of Alberta farms report encumbrance, and the natural conclusion would be that 65 per cent are clear of debt. I believe any hon. member who is familiar with conditions in western Canada will agree it is hard to believe that 65 per cent of western farms are in that fortunate position. We know, further, that apart from mortgages there are many other debts. Before a committee of the Alberta legislature sitting about a year ago the fact was brought out that the retail merchants in that province alone had on their books debts totalling over $40,000,000. We know that those debts in most cases were contracted in good faith, but that the price levels at which they were contracted were much higher than they are to-day. As everyone knows the price of farm products to-day has dropped approximately 60 per cent, while the cost of living has dropped only about 20 per cent. Farm prices have been cut more than 50 per cent while debts, mortgages, interest rates and other charges have remained the same. It is generally recognized to-day by all well informed people that war debts must be cancelled. In this connection I should like to quote the words of Mr. Chamberlain, as they appear in the press of recent date:

> Now in pointing out what would be the effect of resuming war debt payments, I am not using threats. If you see a man walking along a precipice and you point out to him that the ground just in front of him is undermined, that is not a threat, it is a warning, and it is not less friendly because it is evident that if the man goes over the precipice he is quite likely to drag you down with him.

I believe that is a point we should all keep in view, because it is becoming generally recognized that to force payment at the present time is just about as harmful to the creditor as the debtor. While there is a general feeling that war debts must be cancelled I think we must come to the conclusion that the same process must be applied to governmental and private debts. I have before me a copy of the Toronto Saturday Night of February 4, a publication printed in Toronto, the financial centre of Ontario. In it I find the following:

> That it is time something was done to readjust the relations between debtor and creditor, so far as the sovereign power of Canada can properly readjust them, becomes daily more evident. We do not think the east of Canada fully appreciates the tremendous force behind the demand for readjustment of interest rates—even on old contracts—in the west.

It is encouraging to find a paper from the city of Toronto voicing that viewpoint, because there is a general feeling in western Canada that the east has not a full appreciation of the tremendous debt load carried in the west. Just as the world has become more and more interdependent, so are the different classes of people becoming more interdependent. No one class can hope to be prosperous while another class suffers. These facts lend some force to the expression of Mr. Chamberlain to the effect that if the debts are enforced the creditor will also suffer.

No matter how honest a farmer may be, how can he pay his debts under present conditions? As the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) has said, the price of wheat at most local points in Alberta is about 25 cents a bushel. The result is that a debt of $1,000 contracted when wheat was worth $1 per bushel is equal to a debt of $4,000 to-day. Then, turning to cattle and hogs, I find some information in the live stock market report of February 2, 1933, issued by the Department of Agriculture which I have no doubt will be of interest to hon. members. These are the average prices in the cities of Toronto, Winnipeg and Calgary:

| | Toronto | Winnipeg | Calgary |
|---|---|---|---|
| Steers, good and choice | $3 78 | $3 29 | $3 10 |
| Steers (up to 1,050 pounds) medium | 3 45 | 2 53 | 2 60 |
| Hogs (bacon) | 3 65 | 2 82 | 2 62 |

From my experience I know that from seventy five cents to one dollar is charged for freight and commission to deliver those hogs from most points in Alberta to Edmonton or Calgary. When one realizes that a 200 pound hog will bring only $4 or less he realizes how impossible it is for the farmer to meet his obligations.

In regard to poultry raising I do not believe any people in Canada are playing their part better than the farm women. When the price of wheat went down to such low figures the women, in order to do their share in an effort to help out, went in for raising poultry, and especially turkeys. However, at Christmas time in the district from which I come No. 1 turkeys were selling at 6½ cents a pound, No. 2 for 4½ cents and No. 3 for 2½ cents. It was quite a common thing to buy turkeys weighing 15 or 16 pounds for as little as fifty cents. Under those conditions the farm women can derive very little encouragement. A wrong impression has been broadcast by a number of people who have travelled through western Canada to the effect that everything in that section of the country is fundamentally sound. True, there have not been many evictions; in most cases the farmers have been allowed to stay on their lands. As a matter of fact it has got to the position where the creditor does not want the land, it is a liability to him at the present time, because when he takes possession he becomes liable for taxation. It is true that the people are becoming more or less reconciled to the condition. But there is a feeling of bitterness developing amongst the farmers, for they realize that while they are allowed to live on the land, yet all the time interest is piling up, and now that there is very little hope of this depression passing in the near future they realize that by the time it does pass all the equity they may now have in their land will have disappeared and they will find themselves with nothing, and their life's savings gone.

Dealing with this interest question I think Australia has set an example that is worthy of consideration. If I am rightly informed, they cut interest by 22½ per cent, and also lowered the rate on bank deposits and loans.

There is no question that conditions are serious, and I am very glad indeed to know that the government is prepared to accept this resolution, and I trust that when it comes before the committee they will give it the consideration which it deserves.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): This resolution, Mr. Speaker, deals with a subject which is very prominently before the people of Canada at the present time. People everywhere are discussing it; indeed one of the most hopeful signs on the horizon at the moment is that interest in economic problems such as this is widespread and general. Clearly the primary producers are being discouraged and crushed by the burden of debt and interest charges, and everyone recognizes the necessity of some adjustment between the debtor and creditor classes. If there is one point I would like to make clear and emphasize, it is the fact that recovery in general is inseparably bound up with the recovery of agriculture in particular. Everywhere we find stagnation in business. This is due largely to lack of purchasing power, the sources of which in Canada are largely the sale of products of the forest, the mine, the sea and the land. Of these primary products agriculture is the most important, because some forty-seven per cent of the people of Canada are engaged in agriculture. When our agriculturists are in the red, as it were, there can be no prosperity, because the curve indicating the progress and welfare of the agriculturists is reflected in the curve marking the prosperity of Canada in general. Mr. Wilson, of the Royal Bank, made the statement recently that during the past year interest rates on bonds had fallen from 5.20 to 4.83 per cent. This is a small reduction; it is nothing compared with that which has taken place in the prices of primary products. Certainly the value of money has remained up, whereas the value of other things has greatly depreciated.

I desire at this time to put on Hansard a few figures from the Minneapolis Tribune, showing that the production of wheat has more than doubled during the last forty years. In the United States of America it has increased from 378,000,000 bushels to 890,000,000 bushels; in Canada from 42,000,000 to nearly 400,000,000 bushels; in the Argentine from 31,000,000 to 219,000,000 bushels; in Australia from 27,000,000 to 171,000,000 bushels; in India from 229,000,000 to 347,000,000 bushels. In Canada we have a crop usually somewhere around 400,000,000 bushels. We can only use 100,000,000 for food and seed, so we are faced with the necessity of marketing between 200,000,000 and 300,000,000 bushels. I believe that the difficulty in distributing this amount would have been much less had we some sixteen or eighteen months ago followed Great Britain and some twenty-one other countries in going off the gold standard. Where can we find a market? The countries of Europe,—France, Italy, Germany,—have high tariff barriers against our wheat. Great Britain cannot take it all. For years we looked with hope to the Orient. We saw there a great potential market, with hundreds of millions of hungry people, but recently we have lost that market. According to the figures from Mr. Marler's office, referred to the other night, we have lost it to Australia, because in 1928 we supplied 51 per cent of the wheat imported by Japan, and at present we are supplying only 13 per cent, just enough for blending purposes. Australia in 1928 supplied only 12 per cent, and to-day is supplying 84 per cent. So that great market is gone. Also the flour millers of this country have in the past supplied the Orient with large quantities of low grade flour. Recently some of them tendered for contracts; if they had received those contracts their mills would have been occupied for a long time. Unfortunately for us the contract went to Australia, because Australia was able to make more use of the money of China. The premier of Australia pointed out recently that his country by the action it had taken had been able to improve very much its desperate financial condition. Why is Australia taking from us the market that we so badly need? Why is it possible for them to get flour contracts, sell their crop and improve their financial condition? I think the answer is clear; they have depreciated their currency, when world-wide deflation was sweeping over all countries. Canada, almost alone among the smaller nations of the world, has taken the full impact of deflation unchecked and unsoftened by any form of reflation. We have seen values crumbling around us, and no hand has effectively stopped them. Even to-day we are trying to pay debts that in present values, of wheat for example, amount to three or even four times what they amounted to when incurred. We find it very difficult to carry on trade; while people in New Zealand and Australia and the Argentine, who are our competitors, can sell their products in Great Britain and taking home the pound sterling find it worth $6 to $7, we in Canada in selling to Great Britain find the pound sterling in our country worth something like $3.80. How can we compete on an unfair basis such as that? Surely there has been much misery and suffering owing to the unfair position in which our producers find themselves.

In discussing some of the effects which deflation has had, I wish to put on Hansard a few figures taken from Stuart Chase's book entitled "The New Deal." I quote these figures because of their accuracy, although similar conditions could be found anywhere in our own country. A certain committee visited 6,304 families in New York. These families were unknown to the relief organization. They did not apply for relief. We find that 81 per cent lacked food; 88 per cent were in arrears for rent; 38 per cent lacked winter clothing; 25 per cent were short of fuel; 67 per cent were in arrears for life insurance; 74 per cent borrowed from relatives, and 1,500 families had pawned their furniture to buy food. That, remarks the author of this book, is what deflation means in human terms; that is the grim savagery of the business cycle downward. We need only look around us in Canada to see what deflation has meant here. We find that a debt which could have been paid in 1929 with 100 bushels of wheat now requires 400 bushels. Unemployment is more widespread; financial stringency is greater; tariffs are higher and confidence is less. According to the definition, deflation is caused when the available supply of goods outruns the available supply of money, and it is quite easy for us to see how, in days like these, when new machinery is being invented and when more and more capital has been put into larger and larger factories—when these conditions exist, it is easy to see how the supply of goods could exceed the supply of money, and when that happens deflation occurs. It has happened before. History records that away back in the early ages the Roman Empire had a standard of living which until that time had not been thought of. So long as they were able to get gold from the mines of Spain and Greece their prosperity continued, their standard of living was maintained. But when these mines were worked out and there was a shortage of gold, the Roman Empire declined and fell. Their rich fields were turned into pastures. Taxes were unpaid and Rome fell into an abyss and carried a large part of civilization with it.

Surely if this process of deflation continues we must take warning lest a similar fate befall our country at the present time. Repeatedly during the last century we have been threatened with disaster from deflation; many cycles of depression have come, and usually they have gone when some fresh supply of gold has been discovered. The discovery of gold in South Africa or in California or in the Klondyke has usually arrested the downward trend and introduced a better standard of living, better prices and greater prosperity. That is what has happened time and again, whereas a shrinking of currency has resulted in lower prices and a lower standard of living.

Some figures were put on Hansard the other night by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) showing that at the present time we have a great shrinkage in currency. Dominion notes in the last twelve years have shrunk from $320,000,000 to $161,000,000, and bank notes from $200,000,000 to $150,000,000, while bank loans have shrunk by $600,000,000. Deflation has resulted in a decrease in profits and an increase in fixed charges, and this has induced, first, caution and then fear and then the panic which we see at the present time.

In 1869, Senator Sherman of the United States, speaking on the effect of a contracting currency, said this:

> To every person except the capitalist out of debt and the salaried person—

I assume he means the person whose salary has not been cut.

> —it is a period of loss, lassitude of trade, the fall of wages, suspension of enterprise, bankruptcy and disaster.

Another book I have read recently points out that there are certain classes who suffer and suffer severely by deflation, and there is one class that suffers much less than others through this process. Deflation affects the active business man. If he is renting buildings his rent stays at about the same rate, whereas he finds that he has fewer sales, less cash and less in the way of profits. Deflation affects more particularly the primary producer, the producer of an exportable product, because of the lower prices which he receives for that product, and owing to the fact that interest and mortgages are stationary, his burden is relatively increased. Deflation is hard for labour because there is so much unemployment, and particularly hard for governments because budgets are unbalanced and the people are dissatisfied and discontented. Only the capitalist with vested interests may be fortunate enough to gain, if he has money invested and can secure the same rate of interest for it.

Other countries have faced difficulties such as confront us at the present time and have made attempts to stay the process of deflation. I find that as far back as 1790 inflation took place in France. At that time some 400,000,000 units of currency were issued, based on confiscated church property. There were some gainsayers even at that time, but others could hardly contain themselves for joy when they anticipated the advantages of this action. The result of this particular effort was apparently quite successful. The treasury was relieved, a portion of the debt was paid, credit revived, trade increased and troubles seemed to vanish. It is quite possible that if the national authorities had stopped at that point no disaster would have ensued. No doubt they brought great relief to many of their citizens at that time. We read, of course, that later on they got into difficulties. The government was unwise enough to yield to temptation and followed the seductive path of unrestricted inflation.

Those who are so much afraid of inflation at the present time have in mind unrestricted inflation, whereas those who advocate some measure of inflation contemplate a controlled effort, not as a panacea for all our evils, but as something more desirable than drifting with the downward course of deflation without any effort at control. We are the custodians of all that has been gained and earned in the past, and surely with the experience before us of other nations and ages we should be able to act and still avoid the pitfalls which face those who carry on to fatal extremes. We know what the process of deflation has done to others, and we must guard our country and see that all that is modern in our civilization does not pass away. New Zealand, South Africa and other countries are keeping their currencies upon a suitable depreciated basis; why not Canada?

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) has made so convincing an argument that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) on behalf of the government has consented to the appointment of a committee as requested in the resolution, it is probably a little out of place to attempt to discuss the merits or demerits of the question of debts and interest, and I may say to you, sir, that I do not intend to do so. The mere citation of the total amount of debts as being twelve billions of dollars, and the fact that governments, federal, provincial and municipal are obliged to pay some $700,000,000, annually in interest, presents an immediate argument for the consideration of this question, especially in view of the fact that it would seem to be impossible to continue to pay this interest. My principal reason in rising at this moment is not only to give my support to the resolution—this is not necessary since it is going to carry—but to deal for just a moment with another phase of the matter which has not been touched upon by my hon. friends from the west.

Quite naturally they have spoken of the difficulties of the western farmer—perhaps eastern farmers should be mentioned as well—but I have in mind a situation which is just as serious as that facing the farmer. If you look over the industrial towns and cities of the province of Ontario, cities like Windsor or Kitchener, you will find there literally thousands of men out of work. Two or three years ago these men owned their homes. They placed mortgages upon them, and they now find it not only impossible to pay the interest, but, like the farmer in the west, they are seeing the equities in their little homes absolutely wiped out. They are being left with nothing. Their difficulty is just as great as that being faced by any other class in the country. It seems to me that the trend must be in the direction of lower interest rates, especially so long as prices of commodities remain as they are at present.

It seems a solution which is offered apart from the preventing of future issues from bearing such high rates of interest, is what might be called repudiation. This is an action which none of us like to contemplate; countries pride themselves in carrying out their indebtedness, as do people, municipalities and provinces, but sometimes the necessity or, as the hon. member for Red Deer has said, the weal of the public generally requires remedies which otherwise would not be considered. I think it was about two years ago I made a suggestion to this house which, if hon. members paid any attention to it, rather shocked the house; I said that it might ultimately become necessary to have what might be called a capital levy. I also made another sugegstion along the lines of what may be considered by the committee to be appointed, I referred to the fact that the Jewish people in ages gone by had what they called a jubilee year every fifty years when all debts were wiped out. I commend that suggestion to the consideration of the committee. The suggestion is of course not really serious.

As has been stated, Australia has by process of legislation reduced the interest on her debts by something like twenty-two and one-half per cent. Great Britain has reduced the interest on some ten billions of dollars of securities from five per cent to three and a half per cent. I am inclined to think that the acceptance of the new bonds at the new rate of interest was not quite so voluntary as some of us might think.

I have really nothing more to say except that I do not quite agree with the Minister of Justice when he stated that the hon. member for Red Deer had made no practical suggestions as to what might be done. I do not blame him for that; he has opened up the question and apparently he believes that in a multitude of counsellors there may be wisdom. I think he is quite right in leaving concrete proposals to the committee itself. I believe that the deliberations of this committee will serve the further purpose of bringing out information which will show the Canadian people the serious situation in which we are placed.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) closes the debate, I should like to say just one or two words. In the first place I congratulate the hon. member upon the temperate and judicial manner in which he has dealt with an admittedly very difficult and complicated question. It is not only a subject difficult in its perplexity, to use the hon. member's own word, and one which can be dealt with only after deep thought and careful study, it is a most important subject having regard to the possibilities of implication and repercussion in the character of the discussion itself. I need not elaborate upon this point of view except to say that for this reason I wish to pay tribute to the hon. member for his moderate method of approach.

The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) cited the case of Australia but I do not think that a parallel can be drawn between Australia and this country. In the first place the Australian debt was much larger in proportion to population than the debt of Canada. At this point let me say in parenthesis that I do not propose to discuss with the hon. member the accuracy of his figures with respect to the gross debt.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: They were taken from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. RHODES: They may be correct and I do not know that a discussion as to their magnitude is material. However, I do think that he has rather gone beyond the mark in the matter of the annual interest charge. We all agree that the debt is sufficiently onerous and constitutes a heavy burden; a real problem is created which has to be dealt with by this country as well as by every country in the world.

The Australian national credit has become impaired, so much so that their national bonds which had been sold in 1928 by the house of Morgan at ninety-two and a half, dropped within three years to a figure of thirty. In other words, they were selling in the open market at less than one-third of the issue price. The bonds of some of the Australian states went to even lower figures, and so they were confronted with a desperate situation which required rather drastic treatment. I would point out that despite the fact that they had a desperate situation with which to deal and in connection with which a drastic remedy had to be administered, they did not for one moment attempt to repudiate the principal sum of their national debt. All they attempted to do was to reduce the interest charges and that in the first instance was done voluntarily. A very substantial period of time was allowed to the people of Australia to convert on a basis which meant a reduction of some 22½ per cent in the interest charge. As a matter of fact voluntary conversion took place on the part of 91 per cent of the holders of the bonds. With respect to the remaining nine per cent, only three per cent refused to convert. It was assumed that the remaining six per cent were either indifferent or were prepared to convert. It was then that they stepped in by way of legislation to compel conversion on the part of the nine per cent or the three per cent, as the case might be.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Ninety-one per cent applied directly; six per cent applied by efflux of time, and three per cent refused.

Mr. RHODES: I am quite prepared to accept the figures given by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). That is substantially what I said or intended to say. But it must be noted that although Australia did by this method reduce interest charges to the extent of 22½ per cent, it did so only in the case of its own nationals; it made no attempt whatever to reduce interest charges as regards its obligations outside that country. In other words, it was free entirely of any suggestion of repudiation. A subject for the committee might very well be the collateral considerations which followed the reduction of interest in Australia, because they realized that the sacrifice must be general. So they abolished royalties which had been in existence for many years; they abolished or largely reduced bounties of a substantial character to the Australian wine industry; they reduced mother's allowances; they reduced very substantially the salaries of all civil servants, the reduction ranging from 15 to 20 per cent. A corresponding reduction was made in indemnities to members of parliament and to all officials of state. Old age pensions were reduced in a like proportion. At the same time there were substantial increases in taxation. It might be well for the committee, when it considers this subject, to bear these collateral considerations in mind,

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What was the percentage of international as against domestic debt?

Mr. RHODES: I do not think I can give my hon. friend the figures at the moment, but I may say that the proportion of the Australian debt which was held externally was very substantial, because for a number of years prior to 1931, the average annual borrowings of Australia in outside countries aggregated £30,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The total amount was £556,000,000.

Mr. RHODES: A very substantial amount.

Mr. COOTE: Practically the same as their internal bonded indebtedness.

Mr. RHODES: About half and half. I am not for a moment suggesting that a reduction in interest charges is not desirable. Unquestionably it is, but it can make only a partial contribution towards that recovery to which we all turn our minds with such keen interest.

When the hon. member for Red Deer gave the illustration of the farmer who had placed on his farm a mortgage of $2,000 which, at the time it was made, represented a mortgage value of 2,000 bushels of wheat, whereas the same mortgage would to-day require for payment 8,000 bushels of wheat, I could not help thinking the remedy there would not lie even in a reduction of principal of our debt. The remedy there would lie in an increase in commodity prices. The singular point is that although economists, financial men and experts who have devoted their minds to the subject of economics disagree on every other subject, the one subject on which they are all in agreement is that the one thing desirable to bring about world recovery is an increase in commodity prices.

Mr. IRVINE: How is that to be brought about?

Mr. RHODES: How it is to be brought about is another matter entirely. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), having in mind the constitutional aspect, indicated that there were some very real difficulties in the way of practical solution of this subject. The hon. member for Red Deer recognized that fact. I do not wish to stress the constitutional difficulties in the way; I merely indicate that fact as an added circumstance, showing that we have an additional difficult problem on our hands in dealing with the matter as compared with Australia, because in the latter country a few years ago the whole of the states' debts were taken over by the commonwealth and to-day there can be no increase in debt there except that authorized by a public body which has been set up under statute. To put ourselves in a position comparable to that of Australia we would have to take over all the debts of the provinces and they would thus thereafter lose their autonomy in the matter of raising additional sums by borrowing.

My hon. friend said quite properly: Nevertheless the dominion is in a position to give a lead. Let me assure the hon. member and the house that the government is sensible of the difficulty and the importance of this subject and has given it great consideration. Discussions have been had for a considerable period of time with responsible bodies throughout the country, including provinces, looking to some arrangement which would give a lead to the people at large in the matter of a reduction in interest charges. Further than that I would not at this stage wish to go lest my remarks might be given a wrong interpretation. I need only point out the fact that the government long since has recognized the desirability of reducing interest charges. As a matter of fact the conversion loan of two years ago was a step in that direction, and the magnitude of that operation at that time is not generally recognized in this country. There was converted then no less a sum than $638,600,000, or 60 per cent of the total bonds available for conversion, representing a conversion covering, in round figures, at least 25 per cent of our whole direct national obligation. The net result will be, when the full interest reduction comes into force in 1935-6, we shall have saved in interest annually no less a sum than $6,192,964.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What was the rate of interest?

Mr. RHODES: The conversion loan interest, as the house is well aware, was four and a half per cent as against rates of interest of five and five and a half per cent on the bonds. It is one thing to pass a pious resolution as to the desirability of reducing interest charges; it is quite another to bring about that reduction, especially bearing in mind that the man who owns the money is the arbiter as to the interest he will receive if he chooses to lend, because so far even in utopian society I do not know of any method whereby an individual can be compelled to lend money.

Only last year we tried an experiment in a mild way in Canada. We brought out a national loan and bearing in mind the insistent demand that had been made, not only by public bodies but in parliament and in the press that we should have lower interest rates, we properly took heed of those voices. We tried mildy to give the people of Canada an opportunity to respond to that call. As a matter of fact, for the first time in Canada we issued bonds bearing a four per cent coupon. It is true it was offered to the public at the rate of 93.45, and at a price which yielded four and one-half per cent. That issue was made to the public on October 31, 1932. I have in my hand information showing the yield to the investor in dominion securities, as they were sold in the open market on November 1 of last year. The highest yield to be found in the list before me on comparable issues is on the 1943 issue and that issue yielded to the investor on that day 4.68. The lowest yield on any dominion issue in that range on that day was 4.57. Yet, would you believe it, that ·07 per cent was sufficient to cause many individuals to refrain from purchasing our bonds yielding 4½ per cent when they could go to the open market and buy one yielding 4.57. That trend is shown in a most eloquent way by an analysis of the figures showing purchases of that issue of last year. The total number of those who purchased bonds in $500 denominations was 3,784. Their purchases totalled $2,693,000, or only 4.81 per cent of the total issue. Almost half of that issue or, to be exact, 47.32 per cent was purchased by large institutions. Those figures would show that the issue did not meet with popular response. It may be that the government should have made a greater effort by way of publicity although I must say that at the time we inaugurated that campaign we were criticized because we called to our assistance, by means of radio hookup, the premiers of the various provinces. It would seem therefore that we get criticism both ways.

Mr. EULER: I would have suggested smaller denominations.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend suggests smaller denominations, and in reply I would say that that subject received very careful consideration. An analysis of the response by those subscribing in amounts from $100 to $200 in earlier bond issues reveals that the aggregate sum subscribed by those small purchasers is very small indeed, and represents but a small fraction of each issue. It was the opinion of those identified with bond circulation that it was desirable to keep the cost of flotation and servicing to the lowest possible point. I may say that the cost of servicing coupons on smaller issues is out of all proportion to the amount of money received. It is true that after weighing the arguments one might conclude that it would be highly desirable to have distribution as wide as possible. It may be that we erred in not having smaller denominations in the last issue. In connection with a future issue, which will be larger, I have no doubt there will be an opportunity for the purchasers of small amounts to subscribe. Our reason for not issuing in smaller denominations was, in part, as I have indicated, but more largely by reason of the fact that it was only a small issue, and it was only in connection with larger issues covering longer periods of time that we felt we would be justified in issuing the smaller denominations.

I do not know that there is anything further I should say at this time. I should like to assure my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and the house, that the government is entirely in sympathy with the main object of the resolution. Any assistance we can render will be gladly given. We will co-operate in every possible way, and while I believe that the committee will face a very heavy task, and while I am fearful as to the results of its practical conclusions, I do know that it will embark upon its work with our blessing. May I go just a little farther than my colleague the Minister of Justice. As to the question whether the matter should be referred to the banking and commerce committee instead of to a special committee, I suggest my hon. friend would do well to amend his resolution so as to refer this subject specifically to the banking and commerce committee, a body set up deliberately for the purpose of settling matters of this kind. I believe that committee would give the subject as good if indeed not better consideration as a special committee, unless that special committee were composed of members of the banking and commerce committee. In that event there would be no object in not using the standing committee.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this resolution has been dealt with very fully by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), and in the few moments at my disposal I shall try not to traverse the ground that he has covered. First of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member upon his presentation, and upon his success in obtaining the consent of the government to have the matter referred to the banking and commerce committee.

Further, I should like to congratulate him upon having convinced for the first time, some of the members of the government of the seriousness of the debt situation in Canada. I feel like congratulating both ministers who spoke this afternoon upon the very fair attitude they adopted, and particularly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) upon his frank discussion of the matter.

Let me at the outset refer to a statement of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) to the effect that many people believe it would be a highly desirable state of affairs if we had no debts at all. No doubt that would be a very happy condition, but I am bound to point out that under the present system if we had no debts there would be no place for the people to invest their savings. The savings of the Canadian people are invested in the debts of others, and that is why the debt question is so important. At least ninety-five per cent of our money is based on debts. Ninety-five per cent of our money is credit, and for every credit there is a debit; in other words, for every credit there is a debt, and for every creditor there is a debtor. Unless the debtor can meet his principal and interest, the creditor must suffer. At the present time the debtor in many cases cannot pay his interest, and the creditor if he can collect his interest is in a much better position than he expected to be when he extended the credit, due to the increased purchasing power of money. The payment of debts presupposes a stable price level, because the producer repays his debt by selling the goods he has produced, or by selling the proceeds of his labour. At least in so far as the control of money affects price levels, we should have a stable price level. For three years there have been falling price levels caused by the deflation of money, and it is because of that the debt situation has become so serious. In many cases the interest on mortgages bearing eight per cent has not been paid for a period of three years, and to my personal knowledge agents of mortgage companies are visiting farmers, asking them to sign new mortgages adding the three years' arrears of interest to the amount of the original mortgage, which would have the effect of increasing the mortgage by twenty-five per cent. Such a condition will render it impossible for many farmers to continue. I know that many members of the house say—and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) hinted at it this afternoon—that the jurisdiction relating to interest on existing obligations is in the provinces rather than in the dominion. But the dominion cannot escape responsibility in the matter, because the Dominion government has control of the whole money and credit system, and it is at least largely because of the deflation which has taken place in our money system that we are faced to-day with this terrible debt situation. I am sure that if this government had had control of property and civil rights the pressure upon the government to do something in regard to the rate of interest and price levels would have been so strong that long before this they would have adopted some different money policy. Despite the present determination of most of our people to pay their debts at 100 cents on the dollar in the actual terms in which those debts were expressed, our producers and citizens generally, the house owners referred to by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), and many of our municipalities and school districts, will find it utterly impossible to pay the interest and principal in the terms of the bond or mortgage. It is simply an impossibility at present price levels.

May I offer one or two suggestions as to the lines the committee might very well follow in their investigation. I should like to point out to them an arrangement which recently has been put into effect by the Imperial Oil Company. I quote from the Farm and Ranch Review of January, covering the point very briefly:

> An announcement is made in this issue by the Imperial Oil Company to the effect that all interest charges on debts owed them by farmers for products supplied in 1929 and 1930 will be cancelled up to October, 1933, and after that the rate will be only four per cent. The principal will also be placed on a five year basis of payment. This is a step in the right direction, and a useful lead to other large companies carrying rural accounts. Such intelligent action by large creditors will go far towards saving the western situation.

I wish to refer briefly to the action taken in Australia as a result of what was called the premiers' conference, at which the commonwealth and all the state governments were represented, and agreed to by the representatives of all the states at the conference. At some of the meetings of the conference the leader of the opposition for the commonwealth was present, and some of the measures, perhaps all of them, had his approval. That is something that might very well be considered in Canada. Before this question is settled it may be necessary to have in Canada a conference corresponding to the premiers' conference in Australia. It took place in the summer of 1931. I endeavoured to secure from the library a book giving an account of the conference from which I might quote briefly, but as the book happened to be out

I could not have it to-day. Briefly, however, the premiers' conference in Australia agreed to take action to reduce the rate of interest on all Australia's internal bonds and indebtedness. The amount converted, at a reduction of 22½ per cent of the existing rate, was £557,000,000. The annual saving to the government amounted to £6,500,000 or $30,000,000. I commend this course to the Minister of Finance, who I think, has paid some pretty high costs on Canadian bond issues—this conversion of £557,000,000 was effected at a total cost of £50,000. The statements I have made in this respect will be found reported in the Hansard of the commonwealth parliament of October 13, 1931, in the speech made by the treasurer of the commonwealth. I will not go into all the reasons given for floating the loan, but the commonwealth treasurer points out that the reason for the success of the conversion was that the bulk of the holders of Australia's internal bonds believed it was in their own interests as well as in the interests of the state that they should accept the lower rate.

At this conference it was also agreed that the rate of interest on all mortgages and agreements of sale and private debts should be reduced by 22½ per cent of the existing rate, and legislation to that effect was passed by all the state governments. There was a reduction of one per cent in the interest rate on all bank loans and all bank deposits. That was agreed to by the banks. From what I have read, the banks stated that they would rather make a voluntary offer to do that than have legislation passed to bring it about. Perhaps I should add that in the case of the internal loan, ninety-seven per cent, was converted voluntarily, and legislation was then passed providing for compulsory conversion of the other three per cent.

Since this conversion was effected the state of New South Wales was able a few months ago to float 3½ per cent bonds in London at a price representing a four per cent return to the buyers. That shows that the standing of Australian bonds in foreign markets has improved since Australia took this action. One other reason must of course be given: that because of the depreciation of Australian currency in the gold countries, the commodity price level in Australia has risen to a point where business conditions have very materially improved. Australia has been able to increase her exports, and is therefore in a much better position to meet her external obligations. As a result of the external depreciation which has taken place in Australian currency there has been an increase in the price of commodities in that country to a point where 1,000 bushels of wheat will pay twice as much debt of the Australian farmer as 1,000 bushels will pay in Canada for the Canadian farmer. The Australian farmer has also had the interest on his mortgage or agreement of sale reduced by 22½ per cent. One of my friends tells me I might suggest to the Minister of Finance that that is the way to raise commodity price levels in Canada—make the pound worth as much here as in Australia. I do not think we would then have to spend so much time in a discussion of this question of the reduction of interest on debts.

Mr. YOUNG: Would that be tying our dollar to the pound?

Mr. COOTE: No; it would be placing our dollar at its proper level, much nearer the proper level in gold countries than it is to-day. I think there is a great deal of misconception about the value of our dollar, about its being down so much; it is really the value of gold which has jumped around in the last three years, more than the value of sterling and the Canadian dollar. Canada, in her desperate attempt to keep up with gold, has deflated her currency much more than Australia, New Zealand and other countries that we are attempting to compete with. The result is that price levels are much lower in Canada than in nearly all those countries, and therefore the problem of debt is much more acute.

I support this resolution because so far I have been unable to interest the government in the question of raising the Canadian price level. Two years ago I said in this house that Canada should abandon the gold standard and allow her dollar to depreciate in foreign countries so as to raise commodity price levels in Canada. Had that been done, farmers and other producers in Canada, as well as working people, would not have been so terribly indebted to-day but would have been able to keep up their interest. There is no doubt in my mind that the bulk of our farmers could under such circumstances have kept up their interest payments. However, the government did not see fit to give much consideration to my proposal, so that deflation has continued while commodity prices have fallen steadily and debts and interest have continued to pile up. It was pointed out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), in the splendid speech which he made last year, that interest rates of eight, nine and ten per cent could not be paid at present price levels. The prices of agricultural products are so low that the farmers have no ability to pay interest at any rate to-day. There are therefore only two alternatives: either find a way of doing what is suggested in this resolution, or we must raise commodity price levels. I would say that at the present time we must do both, because debts have continued to pile up on us until they have reached that point where in many cases we cannot take care of past indebtedness.

As suggested by the Minister of Finance, I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), that the resolution be amended by striking out the words "a special committee of this house" and substituting therefor the words "the select standing committee on banking and commerce." If that is accepted by the house, I am sure it will be acceptable to the hon. member for Red Deer and a great many others of us, and I hope that when it is taken up it will receive very serious consideration and that we shall get from the committee some definite recommendation which will lead to a solution of this problem, one of the most important and most pressing in Canada to-day.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): I have no intention of prolonging the debate, but I do wish to express my appreciation of the reception which this resolution has met throughout the house and particularly, may I say, on the part of the government as voiced by the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance. I have succeeded up to the limit of my most optimistic expectations for the time being.

I am perfectly prepared to accept the amendment, and that the matter be referred to the committee on banking and commerce, my sole purpose being to have the subject brought before a representative body of the house for the most careful investigation and study and in the hope that some results may accrue. I think there is no question that throughout the country a certain measure of relief and appreciation will be felt on the part of debtors, who form such an overwhelming majority of the population, at this evidence that their plight and this problem have been recognized by the house and the government, and that the house is at least taking the first necessary step towards studying and, if possible, meeting the situation.

It is unnecessary for me to say more, save to reply to one or two suggestions or inferences on the part of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). The Minister of Justice was not exactly critical, although he seemed rather disappointed; that I did not make, nor did I propose to make, any definite suggestion either as to the extent of the reduction which might be undertaken or as to the method which might be followed. I purposely refrained from this for the reason suggested by the Minister of Finance himself, that I felt it would be arrogating to myself more knowledge than I possess were I to assume that I had solved the problem in my own mind and that therefore it was unnecessary for other people to give any consideration to the problem. I think it is infinitely better for the committee itself, with all the means at its disposal, and all the evidence that will be adduced, to arrive at a solution. It would be far better to have a solution which was sound and businesslike, a practical solution, than one which would be more or less theoretical.

I also refrained from discussing any other aspects of the situation. The Minister of Finance rightly suggested that perhaps a better method would be to raise price levels. I agree, but the minister will recognize that they are two separate questions, although dealing somewhat with the same problem and having the same result in mind. From my experience I have found that the less involved you make a proposition the better its chances are for possible success in the house. If you segregate it from all other suggestions you are likely to find that support which would be lacking if you linked up the question with some other point of view which might not be so acceptable. While, therefore, I should have been glad to discuss inflation, depreciation and all the various aspects of the problem, I felt it was wise to refrain from such discussion at this time.

I can only again express my appreciation of the support given and interest taken throughout the house, and my most sincere hope that the labour of the committee will not be wasted but that it will get to work promptly, taking its duties seriously, and that something worth while for the country will result.

Resolution as amended agreed to.

A CANADIAN FLAG

PROPOSAL FOR ADOPTION OF FLAG SYMBOLIC OF CANADA AND HER PARTNERSHIP IN BRITISH EMPIRE

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, a special committee be appointed for the purpose of considering the advisability of adopting a Canadian flag, representing Canada as a whole and in which the British flag shall occupy the position of honour, thus symbolizing the dominion as an equality partner in the commonwealth of British nations.

He said: I am not moving the resolution to-day, Mr. Speaker; I am making a brief statement—

Mr. STEVENS: I did not quite understand what my hon. friend said. The resolution has been called, and surely if he now proceeds he is discussing it.

Mr. McINTOSH: Very well. The resolution standing on the order paper in my name, with reference to a distinctive flag for Canada, and requesting a special committee of the house to investigate and report upon the question, is a resolution which in scope and substance is essentially the same as the one which was before the house two years ago. In my humble opinion, and I am quite satisfied in the opinion of growing thousands of red-blooded Canadians throughout Canada, this resolution occupies fundamental ground and affords an historic basis for the discussion of a distinctive flag for Canada. When endorsed by the members of this house, the resolution will result forthwith in a preliminary satisfactory solution of an heraldic problem which is becoming more important nationally and imperially every day. May I remind hon. members that two years ago a similar motion was brought before this house. If I remember correctly, when I rose to speak in moving the resolution it was about a quarter after five o'clock and after I had finished speaking the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) abruptly adjourned the house. The discussion at that time took place upon Empire day, a very noteworthy day in our national and imperial history. The resolution then found its way into public bills and orders and did not come up for further discussion during that session. Because the discussion at that time had been very brief and no vote had been taken, I made up my mind that I would again put this resolution—a similar one—upon the order paper.

However, there is another reason for placing this resolution again upon the order paper. If hon. members will allow their minds to go back to July and August of last year, they will recall the imperial conference and also the fact that Canada, the oldest self-governing dominion of the crown, was the only nation represented at that conference without a distinctive flag. Australia had her flag, New Zealand had hers, as also had South Africa; every self-governing dominion of the commonwealth of British nations, with the exception of Canada, had a distinctive flag—a flag symbolic of its national life. The comments of prominent Canadians as well as the lively discussion in the weekly and daily press of the country at the time showed the great interest there was in the question of a national emblem, in the manner in which Canada had been placed in a ridiculous "equality of status" position during an imperial conference held in the capital city of our dominion. Everywhere there was a sentiment remedial action should be taken.

Further, may I say that during last October and November no private members' resolutions or bills came before the house, which explains why this resolution is now before us. Were conditions normal throughout Canada, were we in the same position to-day financially and otherwise as we were in 1928 or 1929, I would certainly press this resolution in order to have a complete debate upon it and place every hon. member on record as being for or against. Because of the anything but normal conditions now prevailing throughout Canada, because of the unemployment rampant throughout the land, because of the interest charges which are bearing so heavily on our people, because of the avalanche of debts which are facing Canadians from ocean to ocean, because of the economic and industrial problems which face this country, because much time must be taken up in the consideration of all these matters, I am going to ask that the house postpone its consideration of this resolution. The fact that many Canadians are without food, clothing and shelter causes me to withhold this resolution until some future occasion when it may be discussed under more auspicious conditions, thus helping rather than perhaps hurting a cause so near and dear to all Canadians strong in their national and empire zeal and faith. When this time rolls around I hope parliament will come to a flag conclusion that will redound to the welfare of this country.

What we desire is a distinctive flag for Canada, a distinctive flag for Canada's life, a distinctive flag to symbolize Canada's soul, a flag to tell of the Canada spoken of in the words:

> Life's the force divine that makes us differ from the states effete—
> Be it ours to catch its image as it speeds with twinkling feet.

When that time comes—and it cannot come too soon—I hope every hon. member will give this question the unerring attention it deserves. May I hope every representative will catch a glimpse of the greater and more glorious Canada to be, and make sure such a Canada is emblazoned in figures clear and plain. And when this important occasion arises I hope every hon. member will not be afraid to discuss this matter as any courageous Canadian ought to discuss it. Should that be done and should a committee be appointed to deal with the question, I feel sure that its report will be unanimous in favour of having a distinctive flag for Canada.

Mr. POULIOT: I congratulate the hon. member upon his excellent speech, but would direct his attention to the fact that because of the conditions now prevailing in Canada, our flag should be at half-mast.

Mr. SPEAKER: Am I correct in understanding that the hon. member wishes to withdraw his resolution?

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: By consent of the house, the resolution is withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

TARIFF BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT AND PERSONNEL —ORDER IN COUNCIL TABLED

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): At the request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) I wish to inform the house that His Excellency has been pleased to approve the appointment of the three members of the Tariff Board:

The Hon. George Herbert Sedgewick, a justice of the High Court of Justice of Ontario, Toronto, Ontario, chairman.
Milton Neil Campbell, Esquire, M.P., Pelly, Saskatchewan, vice-chairman.
Charles Hebert, Esquire, B.A., of the city of Montreal, P.Q., wholesale grocer.

I ask permission to lay a copy of the order in council on the table.

"KINGDOM OF CANADA"

PROPOSAL THAT OFFICIAL NAME BE CHANGED FROM "DOMINION OF CANADA" TO "KINGDOM OF CANADA"

Mr. ARMAND R. LAVERGNE (Montmagny) moved:

That in view of the statute of Westminster, the traditions of the Canadian people, and the constitution of the country, this house is of the opinion that the name of Canada should be changed from that of "The Dominion of Canada" to that of "Kingdom of Canada."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the resolution which stands in my name has been on the order paper for the last two years and I feel I must apologize to the house for bringing it up only to-night. The first year I was prevented by the rules of procedure and also by some more pressing business, from bringing it up. Last year I was delayed by private circumstances in coming to the house, and I bring it up to-night on its first call so that I may not lose the opportunity of presenting it.

By the Statute of Westminster we have become a nation, equal in partnership, of the commonwealth of the British Empire; we have ceased to be a dominion in order to become an independent nation under the sovereignty of the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the dominion beyond the seas. Having outgrown the status of a dominion, according to our constitution, we are certainly not a republic—and may I add, I thank God we are not—we are a country which is under the sovereignty of King George V and his successors. This country since the Treaty of France in 1763 has become one of the jewels, may I say, of the British crown. Having outgrown the status of a colony, not being a republic, we are, according to our constitution, according to history, according to facts, a country which is under the monarchical system, which has at its head a king or monarch and which is legislated for by him through a parliament, comprising the Senate, which takes the place of the House of Lords in England, and our House of Commons. Having ceased to be a dominion, having ceased to be a colony, not being a republic, we are therefore in our constitution a kingdom, and I claim that it is high time we should come back to the thought of the fathers of confederation and give to our country as its official name that of Kingdom of Canada.

In 1864, at the conference of Quebec, it was decided by the fathers of confederation that the new British-American state which was being created on the North American continent should be a kingdom. It was so officially styled in a draft which was submitted to the House of Commons in Great Britain. History tells us that the British House of Commons, or the minister for the colonies of the time, to please our republican friends to the south, decided to change the name to "Dominion of Canada" instead of "Kingdom of Canada," as was desired by Macdonald, Cartier, Galt and all the other fathers of confederation. In my opinion this was a mistake. It was unfortunate, but at the same time there was not only the fear of the republican sentiment of our neighbours to the south, but also the fear of displeasing, as making for independence the rabid imperialists who then lived in Canada. It was stated at the time that an independent or another kingdom under the British crown could not exist, as such a course would be contrary to logic, the fact being forgotten that for a long time the king of Great Britain had been King of Great Britain and, before the union of 1603, King of Great Britain and Scotland; King of Great Britain and Ireland; King of Great Britain, Ireland and France; King of Great Britain, Ireland, France and Hanover, until the Salic law prevented Queen Victoria from becoming Queen of Hanover. We have seen the joint kingdom of Sweden and Norway. Perhaps the house will permit me to refer to a letter written by Sir John A. Macdonald to Lord Knutsford on July 18, 1889, in which he says:

The union was treated by them—

That is, the House of Commons and House of Lords in Great Britain.

—as if the British North America Act were a private bill uniting two or three English parishes. Had a different course been pursued —for instance, had united Canada been declared to be an auxiliary kingdom, as it was in the Canadian draft of the bill—I feel sure (almost) that the Australian colonies would, ere this, have been applying to be placed in the same rank as "the Kingdom of Canada."

And he added a postscript:

On reading the above over, I see that it will convey the impression that the change of title from Kingdom to Dominion was caused by the Duke of Buckingham.

The Duke of Buckingham at the time was Minister for the Colonies.

This is not so. It was made at the instance of Lord Derby, then Foreign Minister, who feared the first name would wound the sensibilities of the Yankees. I mentioned this to Lord Beaconsfield at Hughenden in 1878, who replied: "I was not aware of the circumstance, but it is so like Derby, a very good fellow but one who lives in a region of perpetual funk."

Therefore, if our country in 1867 was not called the Kingdom of Canada, it was for those two reasons which seem antagonistic but which we often find in combination in our history—the rabid imperialists on one side and those who have, to use the words of Lord Beaconsfield, "a funk" of the Yankees.

Since by the Statute of Westminster we have acquired a status of equal partnership, it is high time that we should recognize our independence, our real status of equality, the system which administers our country, and that, having ceased to be a dominion, we should be called the Kingdom of Canada. By taking this course, we should at the same time do away with the title of the governor general; we are governing ourselves and it would follow logically that the governor general who represents in this country the King of Great Britain and of Canada, should be a viceroy. If this house will look into the history of the resolution passed by the conference of 1864 it will find that the fathers of confederation intended to have as the chief executive in Canada the King of England or as a representative one of the members of the royal family.

I have given the reasons for the resolution and have outlined the historical facts. There is one other point upon which I should like to be perfectly frank. In this twentieth century, particularly since the great war, we have seen thrones crumbling and frenzied democracy asserting itself. I speak on behalf of a race which has had only one motto since it has been known as the French race,—God and the king. I feel that a voice should come from the true American continent asserting the undoubted benefits of the monarchical system, recognizing at the same time the proud state which our country has attained. I feel that we should no longer be a dominion, no longer a crown colony or one administered by the Governor General, but a free nation in the British commonwealth known as the Kingdom of Canada under the sovereignty of the King of Great Britain, Canada, Ireland and the other kingdoms of the empire.

Mr. SPEAKER: Before further discussion takes place I should like to call the attention of the hon. member moving the resolution to the fact that he indicated the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) would second the motion. As the hon. member for Bellechasse has not been in his place to-day I feel called upon to ask the hon. member for Montmagny to name someone else.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I do not know whether I need a seconder, but if it is necessary I hope someone will second it.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): I am supporting it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. member seconds it.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, I second it. It is my pleasure to agree this time with the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne), a man who is a true patriot. Although I do not always agree with him there are occasions when one is glad to do so. As my good friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) is not here to-night, I willingly second the motion.

There is one particular phase of the remarks of the hon. member for Montmagny which seems worthy of further comment, namely his reference to the viceroy. The old French governors were known not only as governors but as viceroys, and at the present time if we adopt the suggestion of the hon. member opposite we would be reverting to traditional practice. May I make reference to those words appearing on the arms of the royal family, "God and my right." I have the greatest respect for the royal family, and I much admire the fact that they have emblazoned on their coat of arms the French expression "Dieu et mon Droit." To those who would be inclined to oppose a suggestion such as the present one, or that involved in the use of both languages on our currency, I would call attention to the fact that down through the centuries the royal family have chosen to have inscribed on their coat of arms the French words "Dieu et mon droit" and "Honi soit qui mal y pense."

I am pleased to support the remarks of the hon. member concerning the viceroy, but in closing should like to add one sentence in French. Although the speech of the hon. member for Montmagny was to the point and was most excellent, (Translation): we admit that all cannot understand why we should call Canada "a kingdom" since (text) il "empire" tout le temps.

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, before this resolution comes to a vote, and as there appears to be a dearth of speakers on a motion of such importance as this one which concerns our country's name, I should like to say a few words extempore in praise of the name of our country, the Dominion of Canada. Probably it will be easier for me to make these remarks than certain other hon. members—and I say this without intention of offence—because an hon. member might ordinarily be censured for what might appear to be disloyalty if he ventured to speak against a motion of this kind. I imagine, however, that a man who bore arms in support of his country and of his king is not liable to that criticism.

Some years ago, if my memory serves me correctly, I wondered just how the Dominion of Canada acquired its name. I learned that while the fathers of confederation were debating what name they should give our country one of the fathers whose habit it was to read the scriptures before retiring happened to read one of the psalms, the following verse of which struck his imagination: "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth." It was because of that biblical expression, Mr. Speaker, that the Dominion of Canada was named. Against the resolution of my hon. friend, the Deputy Speaker, I urge that the sacred and historic character of our nature is enshrined in the word "dominion" more than it ever can be in the word "kingdom." There is perhaps another reason. Since the Statute of Westminster, and even before that date, the self-governing units of the empire have been referred to as the self-governing dominions. And I believe they have been so called, because that word has been used to denote not only our connection with the empire but our autonomy. That is another reason why we should continue to adhere to and hold dear the name "Dominion of Canada."

I did not expect that this resolution would come before the house this evening. I rather feel that on a matter of this kind, which is perhaps one of high policy, one on which many hon. members of this house would want to take time to deliberate, it would perhaps be in order if I moved the adjournment of the debate, and I do so move, seconded by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. B. M. Stitt).

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX

INTEREST ON BEARER BONDS—PROPOSED COLLECTION BY DEDUCTION OF TAX ON PAYMENT OF COUPONS

Mr. A. E. MUNN (North Vancouver) moved:

Whereas the question of securing proper returns from taxpayers so that no revenue properly taxable is to escape taxation becomes of utmost importance, especially in times of decreasing revenues such as at present;

Whereas the securing of revenue from these sources is difficult inasmuch as bonds to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars have been issued by the dominion and provincial governments as well as industrial companies, power and public utilities companies, the majority of these being bearer bonds transferable by delivery pass from hand to hand without any available record as to who holds them at any particular time.

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, legislation should be introduced providing that banks, trust companies and other agents in making payment of interest coupons on bearer bonds shall deduct from the amount of each coupon the tax returnable to the federal or provincial governments interested and be responsible for the deposit of the same in the federal or provincial treasury.

He said: The resolution, as I see it, speaks for itself. I am not offering any criticism; I am offering what I consider a practical suggestion that will in my opinion result in the return to the federal and provincial exchequers of large amounts of taxes that have been missed. The honest man, of course, will make his return, but unfortunately we have others, and there is the danger that we are losing a lot of money in this way. It would be a very simple matter, in my opinion, to tighten up the regulations or introduce some new system so that there would be no possible chance of the treasury losing taxes due from those who are well able to pay.

One thing we must bear in mind; we must take care of the small investors, those whose revenue is exempt. If this tax is collected at the source and the small investor is compelled to pay it, then there would have to be some way of rebating it to those who come under the exemption.

I think this resolution should have the unanimous support of the house.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): With the principle of this resolution the government is in entire accord; we have complete sympathy with the object sought to be attained. We have no hesitancy in accepting the resolution, although I may point out that while accepting the principle in its entirety there may have to be some variation from the procedure outlined. This resolution provides that the tax shall be deducted when the individual coupon is cashed. In numerous instances such bonds are in the hands of small holders by whom there is no tax payable, and to make the deduction at the source would involve such individuals in hardships and delay waiting for the cumbersome machinery of government to move before receiving their rebate, which in the nature of things might have to be many weeks or perhaps months. A better method, one which I think can be equally effective, is that of keeping absolute check upon the cashing of each individual coupon; then as it is disclosed that the coupon in question ought to bear a tax, the assessment can be made and the money returned to the treasury. This method would not only avoid the necessity of making refunds but would also save a large sum in accounting costs, and inconvenience to the treasury.

As I have already intimated to the house, before this session closes a measure will be brought down which I think will completely and effectively carry out the object of this resolution.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROPOSED BASIS ON UNIT OF POPULATION OF PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. J. A. BARRETTE (Berthier-Maskinongé) (Translation) moved:

Whereas this house will soon be called upon to effect a redistribution of electoral ridings in the various provinces constituting the Canadian confederation;

Whereas; the number of electoral ridings in each province other than the province of Quebec is based on the population unit of this latter province; and,

Whereas; the parliamentary representation of the province of Quebec with a population of 2,874,255 comprises 65 members, or a quotient of 44,219 per unit of representation; and,

Whereas; the parliamentary representation of the province of Ontario now comprises 82 members, with a population of 41,849 per unit of representation; and,

Whereas; notwithstanding the fact the population of the province of Ontario shows an increase in numbers but a decrease proportionally to the increase in the population of the province of Quebec, the latter province taking as a basis the unit of representation of the province of Ontario would be entitled to 69 members, New Brunswick 12, Manitoba 17, Saskatchewan 22, Alberta, 18, British Columbia 17;

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, in order to promote harmony among the Canadian people, the parliament of Canada do grant to the provinces a just and equitable representation based on the unit of representation of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution which the house is called upon to consider tends to do justice to the provinces which have not their fair quota of representatives in this parliament. I am broaching a rather ticklish question. It should give rise to quite an important debate in the house, as all hon. members are interested in rightly representing their province and exacting the largest representation possible so as to assert their rights. The purport of this resolution is to prove to the house that the province of Quebec has not, at present, the quota of representation to which it is entitled according to the last census.

Ever since confederation, the representation of each province has been based upon the representation of the province of Quebec. Each had the number of members to which it was entitled taking as a unit the population represented by each of the sixty-five members of Quebec, the decennial census was to be the basis of reckoning.

According to the last census, the province of Ontario should be deprived of four seats, if Quebec is taken as the unit of representation, but if Ontario retains its eighty-two seats, Quebec should be given sixty-nine instead of sixty-five, if we wish to place Quebec on the same footing as Ontario. In claiming these eighty-two seats. Ontario bases its contention on section 51, subsection 4 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:

On any readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

That is equivalent to a loss of 5 per cent in the ratio of its population.

The number of members of the House of Commons may be from time to time increased by the parliament of Canada, provided the proportionate representation of the provinces prescribed by this act is not thereby disturbed.

It is with reference to this article that I shall base my contention that Quebec be given sixty-nine members and that the other provinces be given the representation in the same ratio. I shall point out to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) that, were he to accept my resolution, his province would be given three more members, Alberta, which is represented in the house by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), would have two more members, and Saskatchewan one more. Would any one oppose this resolution simply because Quebec would be entitled to four more representatives? I do not think that this would be a good reason for rejecting the resolution which I have the honour to submit to the consideration of the house.

When confederation was decided upon, this case was particularly dealt with by the fathers of confederation and a long debate ensued on this point, Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinierè had foreseen the situation which presents itself to-day. If you will permit me, I shall read to the house an excerpt of the discussion which then took place. In the Hansard of 1865, at pages 359 and 360, you will note, sir, that the Fathers of Confederation attached great importance to this question.

The following are the clauses of the resolution of the Quebec Conference which settles the organization of the House of Commons, especially as regards the number of representatives:

17. The basis of representation in the House of Commons shall be population, as determined by the official census every ten years, and the number of members at first shall be 194, distributed as follows:

Upper Canada, 82.
Lower Canada, 65.
Nova Scotia, 19.
New Brunswick, 15.
Newfoundland, 8.
Prince Edward Island, 5.

18. Until the official census of 1871 has been made up, there shall be no change in the number of representatives from the several sections.

19. Immediately after the completion of the census of 1871, and immediately after every decennial census thereafter, the representation from each section in the House of Commons shall be readjusted on the basis of population.

20. For the purpose of such readjustment, Lower Canada shall always be assigned 65 members, and each of the other sections shall at each readjustment receive, for the ten years then next succeeding, the number of members to which it will be entitled on the same ratio of representation to population as Lower Canada will enjoy according to the census last taken by having sixty-five members.

21. No reduction shall be made in the number of members returned by any section, unless its population shall have decreased, relatively to the population of the whole union, to the extent of five per centum.

22. In computing at each decennial period the number of members to which each section is entitled, no fractional parts shall be considered, unless when exceeding one-half the number entitling to a member, in which case a member shall be given for each such fractional part.

I object, says "Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière" to the 21st clause, because it contains provisions which are unjust to Lower Canada. The full scope of that clause is not generally understood; that proportion of five per cent appears to be a very small affair, and yet, under certain circumstances, it might produce considerable results, which are not taken into consideration in the explanations given on that subject in the work written by the Hon. Mr. Cauchon, which the government has caused to be distributed (pages 72 to 87). It is difficult to foretell what the exact numerical increase of the several provinces will be from the present time to the next census in 1871. The Hon. Mr. Cauchon assumes, as the basis of his calculations, a rate of thirty per cent. Let us suppose the case to prove that in all the provinces (with the exception of Lower Canada) the population increases by thirty per cent between 1861 and 1871, and that of Lower Canada increases by thirty-four per cent. It may, perhaps, be objected to this that it is improbable. My reply is, that when we are discussing a scheme of such importance as that which is now under our consideration, we should provide for all possible contingencies; but this one is far from being impossible if the predictions of the Minister of Finance and the Attorney General, who promise to Lower Canada so brilliant a future under the federal system, are fulfilled. If Lower Canada become the heart of the commercial life; if the mines of copper, lead, silver, and gold which we have lately discovered should produce the same results that they produce everywhere else, that of attracting a great influx of population, I cannot be accused of any great exaggeration in supposing that the population of Lower Canada may, between the years 1861 and 1871, increase by four per cent more than the population of the other provinces. In the case which I have supposed the increase would be as follows:—

|---|---|
| Upper Canada.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 418,827 |
| Lower Canada.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 377,625 |
| Nova Scotia.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 99,257 |
| New Brunswick.. .. .. .. .. .. | 75,614 |
| Newfoundland.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 39,000 |
| Prince Edward Island.. .. .. .. | 24,227 |
| Total increase.. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,034,550 |

According to this calculation, Lower Canada would have in 1871, a population of 1,488,289 souls, which would have to be divided by 65, that being the invariable number of representatives assigned to Lower Canada, in order to ascertain what would be the number of constituents for each representative in the federal parliament. The result will be found to be 22,896. Upper Canada would have a population of 1,814,918 souls, which, divided by 22,896 would give her 79 representatives instead of 82. Nova Scotia would have a population of 430,114 souls, which would give her 19 representatives as at present (eighteen and a fraction over the half). New Brunswick would have a population of 327,661 souls, which would give her fourteen representatives instead of fifteen. Newfoundland would have a population of 169,000 souls, which would give her seven representatives instead of eight. Prince Edward Island would have a population of 104,984 souls, which would give her five members as at present (i.e. four and a fraction over the half). It would be seen that if the five other provinces were represented on the same scale as Lower Canada, they would, in 1871, lose among them five members; but as the total population of each will not have decreased by five per cent, relatively to the total population of the confederated provinces, there will be no reduction in the number of their representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this twenty-first clause. It is the interest of Lower Canada, more than any other province, to watch with a jealous eye over the mechanism adopted for the organization of the federal legislature. In case of a vital question arising, we should have to counteract the votes of these five members (who ought, in justice, to be deducted from the representation of the other provinces) by those of five of our members, whose votes would thus be lost to us, as would also be the weight which their five united counties, with a total population of 114,480 (or 22,896 for each county), would throw into the scale.

As you will note, Mr. Joly complained then of what is happening to-day. But Sir Hector Langevin, one of the fathers of confederation, pointed out to him that he misinterpreted the Confederation Act, and I am quoting an extract from his speech of February 21, 1865, page 391, of the Debates of the House of Commons of that day.

The hon. member for Lotbinière, getting over his fears and predictions and speaking of the sixty-five members from Lower Canada, put the following question—"Suppose the population in Lower Canada should in ten years increase thirty-four per cent, while that of the other provinces increases only thirty per cent, would it not be unjust to Lower Canada that the number of its representatives should remain the same, should still be sixty-five, while that of the other provinces will be increased; while in any case the number of representatives from the other provinces is not to be diminished unless their population should diminish five per cent?" This point is very important, but we must observe that whatever the increase of the population in the other provinces, the part from Lower Canada is fixed and known. Thus, for instance, if the population of Upper Canada should increase more than that of Lower Canada, the latter would always have sixty-five members, the other provinces receiving such increased number of representatives as their increased population would entitle them to. But the resolutions do not prevent Lower Canada from having more than sixty-five representatives, if its population should increase faster than that of the other provinces. The French translation of these resolutions is erroneous, for its says that "for the purpose of determining the number of representatives from each province at the end of every decennial census, Lower Canada shall never have either more or less than sixty-five representatives," whereas the English version of the resolutions, which is the official version, says: "Lower Canada shall always be assigned sixty-five members." This does not mean that Lower Canada can never have more than sixty-five members, but that it cannot have less than sixty-five members. That is, I think, a categorical answer to the hon. member's objection.

This is a categorical answer, stated Sir Hector Langevin, and this categorical answer was never contradicted in that debate. Therefore, we should consider as a fact, that the basis of representation of the provinces in the House of Commons is the population of these provinces.

Moreover, allow me to read extracts from the proceedings of the deliberations of the delegates from the provinces of British North America assembled in October 1864, at Quebec, to discuss the scheme of confederation:

Minutes of the deliberations of the conference of the delegates from the provinces of British North America, October, 1864.

Conference Chamber,
Parliament Buildings,
Wednesday, October 19, 1864.

It was moved by the hon. Mr. Brown:

That the basis of representation in the House of Commons shall be the population as determined by the official census every ten years; and that the number of members at first shall be two hundred—distributed as follows:—

|---|---|
| Upper Canada | 89 |
| Lower Canada | 65 |
| Nova Scotia | 19 |
| New Brunswick | 15 |
| Newfoundland | 7 |
| Prince Edward Island | 5 |

That each section shall distribute its representatives in such electoral divisions as it deems best;

That until the official census of 1881 has been made up, there shall be no change in the numbers of the representatives from the several sections;

That immediately after the completion of the census of 1881, and immediately after every decennial census thereafter, the representation in each section shall be readjusted on the basis of population;

That for the purpose of such readjustment, Lower Canada shall always be assigned sixty-five members, and each of the other sections shall at each such readjustment receive, for the ten years then next succeeding, the number of members to which it will be entitled on the same ratio of representation to population as Lower Canada will enjoy according to the census then just taken by having sixty-five members.

That no reduction shall be made in the number of members returned by any section, unless its population shall have decreased relatively to the whole population of the whole federation to the extent of five per centum or over;

That in computing at each decennial period the number of members to which each section is entitled, no fractional parts shall be considered, unless when exceeding one-half the number entitling to a member, in which case a member should be given for each such fractional part;

That the number of members may at any time be increased by the federal parliament—regard being had to the proportionate rights then existing.

Mr. Galt: In reference to Mr. Brown's motion, I propose 225 members instead of 200. If we divide 225, according to population, I calculate it would give:—

|---|---|
| Upper Canada | 99 |
| Lower Canada | 74 |
| Nova Scotia | 21 |
| New Brunswick | 17 |
| Newfoundland | 8 |
| Prince Edward Island | 6 |
| | 225 |

We should commence with the census of 1861, and readjust after each subsequent census. We have supposed that the population of Lower Canada, being tolerably equable in its character, would afford the best basis. But having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada, we think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio. Therefore, the lower provinces would have the same as they have now unless in the very improbable case of any one falling off by five per cent or more—that is a decrease relatively to the whole population.

Mr. Brown: We thought it best not to take the census of 1861, but the proportionate increase in five years thence and change in 1881, but this may not be intelligible. It may be better to take the census of 1861. In that case the figures in the motion would be as follows:—

|---|---|
| Upper Canada | 82 |
| Lower Canada | 65 |
| Nova Scotia | 19 |
| New Brunswick | 15 |
| Newfoundland | 7 |
| Prince Edward Island | 5 |
| | 193 |

Mr. Tupper: That is better, as the public in the other case have no data.

Mr. Brown: In the apportionment, if a fractional part, we don't allow it; if over one-half, we allow one.

Mr. Johnson: But if you have quadrennial parliaments, you may by increase of population have to increase your members in the assembly at an improper time.

Mr. Tilley: And to alter your electorial divisions.

Mr. Brown: After the census of 1871, we shall adopt the same rule. The practical result will be that while Lower Canada certainly will not be less and the lower provinces may increase in population, they cannot decrease in the number of representatives. It keeps the house within a reasonable limit. It is now to start with one in 17,000. It will afterwards vary. There is just one difficulty. Messrs. Galt and Cartier think the number too small. They think the house should number 216. In that event, Mr. Galt proposes that Lower Canada should get 73, and the rest in proportion, so as to get, on the basis of the census of 1861, 216 in the house.

Mr. Coles: 1871 is too soon to alter. It should be in 1881.

Mr. Galt: Upper Canada will not consent to that, and it must be so definitely understood.

Mr. Tilley: We have fourteen counties, some with four representatives, others with two, and the City of Saint John, two. Twenty one, the number stated in the printed motion, would better answer us. I agree with Mr. Brown's proposition to begin with a goodly number, that it may not be disturbed for some time to come.

Mr. McCully: I advocate the adoption of the measure as it stands. I do not think we should make local distribution of members.

Mr. Archibald: By accident the proposed arrangement will suit both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. One member for each county, and one for each metropolis, will give the exact number provided in Mr. Brown's scale of 193.

The several provinces announced their consent and approval of the scheme of 193 members based on the census of 1861, as precisely suiting the mode in which each could adapt the electoral divisions at present existing to such a state of things.

Mr. Shea, however, argued that inasmuch as a Newfoundland census was taken in 1857, an allowance for the period intervening between that date and 1861 would entitle Newfoundland to another representative. It was conceded by all the provinces that Newfoundland should have another representative, thus raising its number to eight, and the whole number to 194.

Mr. Brown's motion carried, Prince Edward Island alone voting nay.

Mr. Haviland: Prince Edward Island would rather be out of the Confederation than consent to this motion. We should have no status. Only five members out of 194 would give the Island no position.

Mr. Tilley: That is rather singular ground of objection, for they objected to the basis of representation by population. Now it was fully understood at Charlottetown that those who came to the conference expected representation by population. Some difficulty might have arisen on those points but not on this.

Mr. Palmer: I am not inimical to the grand scheme of Confederation. I believe it will be productive of great benefit. But I take exception to the principle adopted by this resolution. Representation by population is not applicable when a certain number of provinces are throwing their resources into one confederation, and giving up their own self-government and individuality. When a colony surrenders that right, she should have something commensurate in the Confederation. The debt of Prince Edward Island is nothing. Our taxation is vastly below that of the other provinces. Our trade and revenue are rapidly increasing. Why give up so great certainties for an uncertain benefit where we have only a feeble voice? Looking first at the larger provinces, Canada has secured to herself a greater number of representatives than she had before. It may be said that we may join with the other maritime provinces in any matters affecting our common interests, but even then our united strength would still be far below Canada's number of representatives. Not even two or three more members would induce me to give my assent to the scheme. I never understood that any proposition at Charlottetown was to be binding as to representation by population. It was there made by those from Canada and I did not think it necessary to remark on it, as it was a mere suggestion then thrown out by Canada for consideration.

Mr. Shea: The speech just made should have been delivered before we came to this conference. What has brought us here? What brought about the conference except the difficulties in Canada over the question of representation by population? We came here from Newfoundland with that understanding. Canada could not give way in such a matter. Prince Edward Island is in a better position than Newfoundland as regards the Legislative Council, as they have an equal number of representatives therein.

Mr. Coles: Newfoundland is the cause of our getting a less representation in the Legislative Council than we should otherwise have had. I understood that this matter was to be settled on the basis of representation by population. I stated lately that I thought our Prince Edward Island government should not have sent us here unless to carry out these views stated by the Canadian government. The Attorney General of Prince Edward Island (Mr. Palmer) now states that the government cannot accede to it. I think that we came here prepared for representation by population, and I regret that the Attorney General of Prince Edward Island had not previously stated that he could not accede to the principle and withdrawn from the conference.

Mr. Haviland: I am not a member of the Prince Edward Island government. I express only my individual opinion.

Mr. Coles: Then the government should have instructed their delegates properly.

Colonel Gray (Prince Edward Island): My colleagues and myself feel in a humiliating position. We feel that a slur has been cast by Mr. Coles on the government which I have the honour to lead. I came to the conference understanding fully the question. I have never had any conversation with the Attorney General on the subject. My idea was as clear as the sun at noonday that we were to treat on the basis of representation by population. The Attorney General heard as much as I did at Charlottetown. Certainly none of us should have been here unless the members of our delegation had been agreed on the point. All that I could get for Prince Edward Island I would, but I fancied we were fully agreed on these points at Charlottetown, and that our discussion was to be about details.

Mr. Galt: It would be a matter for the greatest regret that any difficulty should arise over this matter. We request the Prince Edward Island delegates to reconsider their position. It would be a matter of reproach to us that the smallest colony should leave us.

Mr. Whelan: I should feel it my duty to-night to vote against the resolution, but we had better reconsider the matter. Mr. Haviland and I came here perfectly untrammelled and without any instructions from the Governement of Prince Edward Island. We understand that all proceedings were to be de nova and apart from anything which had taken place at Charlottetown. I thought that Prince Edward Island had not been fairly treated as to representation in the Legislative Council, but I gave way on that occasion. I do not think, however, I could say that I was satisfied with the representation of five in the Federal House of Commons. We are in an isolated position. Our resources are large, and our people would not be content to give up their present benefits for the representation of five members. It may be said that the Confederation will go on without Prince Edward Island, and that we shall eventually be forced in. Better, however, that, than that we should willingly go into the Confederation with that representation. But if the government who form the delegation will take the responsibility on them, I may support them.

Adjourned at 10 o'clock p.m.

Thursday, 20th October, 1864.

Mr. Brown: I desire to ask if the Prince Edward Island delegates will state what their views are on the resolution of last evening?

Mr. Palmer: On making my observations last night I was under the impression with respect to any vote given that the party voting was bound to maintain it. Dr. Tupper had said whoever voted for a proposition could not afterwards oppose it in his local legislature, and such appeared to be the general opinion by tacit consent. I could not consent that Prince Edward Island, free of debt comparatively, should come into federation with the other provinces indebted largely, especially as nothing had been said or settled as to the relative share of the burden to be borne by each. I am told, however, by my colleagues from Prince Edward Island, that the financial question will follow the present discussion, and that the matter of representation must depend on the financial resolutions. That may alter our position.

Mr. Coles: Every question must stand on its own footing. Why mix up financial matters with representation?

Colonel Grey (Prince Edward Island): I am instructed by my co-delegates to say that the provision of five members is unsatisfactory. Prince Edward is divided longitudinally into counties, each returning ten members. But they are always opposed to change of representation. We cannot divide the three counties among the five members.

Mr. Brown: Every province must revise its own electoral division to suit the number to its representation.

Mr. Coles: Mr. Galt had proposed six members for Prince Edward Island. I approve that rather than Mr. Brown's motion, because it allows us to give to our three counties two members each.

Mr. Pope: I was absent last night. I was under the impression that it had been clearly laid down at Charlottetown that representation by population was to form the basis of he Lower House. I could not, therefore, have argued for a greater number than our population entitled us to get. I agree in all that has been said by Colonel Gray and Mr. Coles. But the circumstances of Prince Edward Island are such that I hope the conference will agree to give us such a number as we can divide amongst our three constituents. Nature, as well as the original settlement of the Island, has made three counties, and it will give rise to much difficulty if we had to adjust five members to the three counties. I cannot ask it as a matter of right, but one of expediency as one without which it is impossible for us to carry the measure in Prince Edward Island, I, therefore, ask for six members.

Mr. Haviland: I fully agree with Mr. Pope. It would be an insuperable difficulty if we had not six members.

Mr. Brown: To give Prince Edward Island five members the total population should be 205. It is obvious we cannot depart from representation by population. The only thing to do would be to take Prince Edward Island as the basis which would give a House of 230, altogether too large. Give one member to each county, and let the whole Island elect the other two, and keep the number five intact; or let the whole Island elect five. We should have to add thirty eight members to the House in order to give Prince Edward Island, six as the basis of representation by population.

Mr. A. A. Macdonald: We are not bound by the principle of representation by population laid down at Charlottetown. Our constituents will say and will speak of the increased representation of Canada, and decrease representation of the Lower Provinces.

Mr. Galt: There is no use in asking the conference to depart from the principle laid down. We cannot justify it. If the principle is good it is the same for all, and we could not defend the action of giving 13,000 in Prince Edward Island a number where it required 17,000 in any other province for that purpose. It would be indefensible. The difficulty is of a purely local nature. It is impossible for the conference to depart from the rule of population being the basis of representation.

Mr. McCully: There is another reason. As to the constitution of the Upper House, we looked on that as flexible. If we made the concession perhaps Prince Edward Island might not come in, and, besides, the Northwest might require, for a local reason, an increased representation irrespective of population. The rule of representation by population must be rigid and unyielding.

Mr. Dickey: Give one member to each county in Prince Edward Island, one to Charlottetown, and one elected by the whole Island. Members elected for the federal legislature would not be elected for local purposes, but are representatives of the whole Island. It is a question for Canada. We (Nova Scotia) would concede six members though it would place us in difficulty.

Mr. Haviland: There is no solution in the above proposition.

Mr. Pope: Religious feeling in Prince Edward Island runs very high. The Protestants outnumber the Roman Catholics, and in consequence the fifth number as proposed by Mr. Dickey would not represent the Roman Catholics.

Mr. Fisher: I came here convinced that representation by population was settled as the basis upon which the provinces were to be asked to confederate.

Mr. Coles: Whatever may be the result of this matter, Prince Edward Island should submit. The question has been settled. Let us go on with the business, and let Prince Edward Island settle for themselves when the question comes before them.

And after the debate:

And the question of concurrence being put on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Brown, the conference divided, and the names of the provinces were taken down as follows:

[Mr. Barrette.]

Yeas

|---|---|
| Canada | 2 |
| Nova Scotia | 1 |
| New Brunswick | 1 |
| Newfoundland | 1 |
| | 5 |

Nays

|---|---|
| Prince Edward Island | 1 |

So it passed in the affirmative.

And the hour of ten o'clock p.m. ensuing, and a motion for adjournment being carried, the chairman declared the conference adjourned until to-morrow.

I wish to draw the attention of the House to the adoption by this conference of a resolution as proposed by Mr. Brown, and which reads as follows:

The basis of representation in the House of Commons shall be population, as determined by the official census made every ten years, etc.

Immediately after the completion the census of 1871, and immediately after every decennial census thereafter, the representation in each section shall be readjusted on the basis of population.

For the purpose of such readjustments Lower Canada shall always have sixty-five members, etc.

No reduction shall be made in the number of members returned by any section, unless its population shall have decreased relatively to the whole population of the whole federation to the extent of five per centum or over.

The federal parliament may at any time increase the number of members—regard being had to the proportionate rights then existing.

And as they discussed these resolutions, the delegates became more familiar with the subject. Thus, Mr. Galt explains clearly that the clause providing that a province may keep its representation in the event of a decrease in its population of less than five per centum has been inserted so as to protect all other provinces against that of Ontario, and he expresses himself in the following terms:

We should commence with the census of 1861, and readjust after each subsequent census. We have supposed that the population of Lower Canada, being tolerably equable in its character would afford the best basis. But having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada, we think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio. Therefore, the lower provinces would have the same as they have now unless in very improbable case of any one falling off by five per cent or more—that is a decrease relatively to the whole population.

And Mr. Brown added:

The practical result will be that while Lower Canada will not be less and the lower provinces may increase in population they cannot decrease in the number of their representatives. It keeps the house within reasonable limits.

The above two quotations show very clearly that the clause concerning the five per centum has not been inserted with a view to protecting the province of Ontario. It was in fact an arrangement proposed by the latter province with a view to win the other provinces to the principle of representation by population. This principle was further advocated by the several delegates to the conference with the exception, however, of the delegates from Prince Edward Island who were against population forming the basis of representation, and they preferred at first to remain out of the confederation rather than consent to this measure.

Following are some declarations made by a few of the delegates:

Mr. Tilley: It was fully understood at Charlottetown that the several delegates who came to the conference expected representation by population.

Mr. Shea: The conference was brought about by the difficulties arising in Canada over the question of representation by population. We came from Newfoundland with this understanding. Canada cannot give way in such a matter.

Mr. Coles: I understood that this matter was to be settled on the basis of representation by population.

Colonel Gray: My idea was as clear as the sun at noonday that we were to treat on the basis of representation by population.

Mr. Pope: I was under the impression that it had been clearly laid down at Charlottetown that the House of Commons was to be constituted upon the basis of representation by population.

It was also in the course of the same speech that Mr. Pope proposed that Prince Edward Island be given an additional member, not as a matter of right, but one of expediency.

To which Mr. Brown took objection on the ground that this would have made it necessary to increase the number of members from the other provinces.

Mr. Galt added:

It is impossible for the conference to depart from the rule of population being the basis of representation.

Mr. McCully added:

The rule of representation by population must be rigid and unyielding.

The motion of Mr. Brown was then carried by the conference of Quebec in 1864, adopting the principle of representation by population.

The following year, on March 13, 1865, the Provincial Parliament of Canada after a lengthy debate also adopted the terms of the Act of Conference concerning the following clauses: 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25.

In the course of the discussion, it was emphatically declared that representation should be constituted on the basis of population, and Sir Hector Langevin in his speech, an excerpt of which I have already quoted, declared that clause 21, in respect to the five per centum clause, cannot work to alter the basis of representation by population. As in the hypothetical case presented by Mr. Joly, the representation of Quebec will be increased.

I also wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that following the conference of Charlottetown, that of Quebec in 1864, and a meeting of Parliament of Canada, in 1865, there was held in London a conference of the delegates from the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

The following is the official correspondence relating to this conference:

Appendix
VI

Westminster Palace Hotel,
London, S.W., Dec. 4, 1866.

My Lord,

I have the honour to inform you that the delegates from the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick met this morning and formed themselves into a conference for the purpose of arranging the terms of union of those provinces.

The gentlemen forming the conference are as follows:

CANADA

The Hon. John A. Macdonald, Attorney-General, Upper Canada, and Minister of Militia of Canada.
The Hon. G. E. Cartier, Attorney-General of Lower Canada.
The Hon. A. T. Galt.
The Hon. W. McDougall, Provincial Secretary.
The Hon. W. P. Howland, Minister of Finance.
The Hon. H. L. Langevin, Postmaster General.

NOVA SCOTIA

The Hon. Charles Tupper, Provincial Secretary.
The Hon. W. A. Henry, Attorney-General.
The Hon. J. W. Ritchie, Solicitor General.
The Hon. J. McCully.
The Hon. A. C. Archibald.

NEW BRUNSWICK

The Hon. P. Mitchell, President of Council.
The Hon. R. D. Wilmot.
The Hon. S. L. Tilley, Provincial Secretary.
The Hon. Charles Fisher, Attorney-General.
The Hon. J. M. Johnson.

I have the honour further to inform Your Lordship that I was then appointed Chairman, and Lieut.-Col. H. Bernard, Secretary of the conference.

I have the honour to be, My Lord,
Your Lordship's most obedient servant,
John A. Macdonald.

The Rt. Honourable,
The Earl of Carnarvon,
Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Westminster Palace Hotel,
London, December 25, 1866.

Dear Lord Carnarvon,

I am happy to inform you that the delegates who have sat steadily from the 4th to the 24th inst., have arrived at a satisfactory conclusion, and have adopted by unanimous vote of the provinces, a series of resolutions which I shall transmit to-morrow morning to Your Lordship at the Colonial Office.

The delegates desire me to convey to you their views that it is expedient to avoid any publicity being given to the resolutions until the bill is finally settled and ready to be laid before parliament. They think that their early publication would answer no good purpose, and might tend to premature discussion on imperfect information of the subject both in this country and United States.

Believe me,
Dear Lord Carnarvon,
Yours very sincerely,
John A. Macdonald.

The Rt. Honourable,
The Earl of Carnarvon,
Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Westminster Palace Hotel,
London, December 26, 1866.

My Lord,

I have the honour to transmit to you by desire of the conference of delegates from Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, a series of resolutions. They submit these resolutions for the favourable consideration of Her Majesty's government with a view to the early introduction of a bill into the Imperial parliament based upon them.

The delegates purpose to reassemble here on Friday the 28th inst., and shall be glad to wait on Your Lordship at your convenience for the purpose of arranging the course of action.

I have the honour to be, My Lord,
Your Lordship's very obedient servant,
John A. Macdonald.

The Rt. Hon. The Earl of Carnarvon.

December 28, 1866.
Downing Street,

Sir:—

I am directed by the Earl of Carnarvon to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, forwarding resolutions in which the delegates from Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have embodied the principles on which they desire that a bill may be introduced into parliament for the union of those provinces.

Lord Carnarvon will at once give his careful attention to these resolutions, and as soon as His Lordship shall have had time to give them the consideration which they require, he will not delay to fix a day and hour when he may have the pleasure of conferring with you and the other gentlemen who are acting with you on the subject.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
Frederic Rogers.

The Hon. John A. Macdonald.
Confidential.

Highclere Castle,
Newbury, December 28, 1866.

My Dear Sir:—

I received this morning your official letter and the resolutions of the delegates.

I found it difficult to consider them in their present form and have sent them to London to-day to be put into type; but I will on their return to me lose no time in giving them my best attention. I will communicate with you, as soon as I have sufficiently mastered the changes introduced, to fix a meeting with yourself and the delegates.

I quite agree in the expediency of considering the resolutions private for the present.

Believe me, my dear sir,
Yours very faithfully,
Carnarvon.

The Hon. J. A. Macdonald.

The resolution relating to the House of Commons reads as follows:

The House of Commons shall be constituted upon the basis of representation by population and shall consist of 181 members, distributed as follows: Upper Canada, 82; Lower Canada, 65; Nova Scotia, 19 and to New Brunswick, 15; and after the decennial census of 1871, and every decennial census thereafter, upon the termination by a dissolution or otherwise of the parliament then existing, the representation from each province shall be readjusted, and for that purpose shall always be assigned 65 members, and to each of the other provinces at each readjustment shall be assigned the number of members to which it will be entitled in the same ratio of representation to population as Lower Canada will have.

In the computation at each decennial period of the number of members to which each province is entitled, no fractional part shall be considered, except in cases when any such fractional part shall exceed one-half the number which would entitle a province to a member on the basis of population, in which case a member shall be assigned for each such fractional part; and no reduction shall be made in the number of members to be returned by any province unless its population shall have decreased relatively to the population of the whole union, to the extent of five per centum.

The parliament may at any time increase the number of members in the House of Commons, but such increase shall be in the proportion to which each province would be entitled under this act.

Once more you can see that it is stipulated that population shall form the basis of representation and that the parliament may at any time increase the number of members in the House of Commons, such increase to be in the proportion to which each province is entitled. You will further notice that the reason why Quebec is assigned 65 representatives is being given in the following terms:

Representation from each province shall be readjusted and for the purpose of such readjustment Lower Canada shall always have sixty-five members.

This number of sixty-five members is established for the purpose of the readjustments, because it represented at that time the number of representatives Quebec was entitled to get according to its population. It was never intended to limit at sixty-five the number of representatives from Quebec, but simply to settle the total number of representatives in parliament, using as a basis the population of Quebec which, it was expected, would increase with more stability than that of the other provinces.

The Act of British North America was subsequently passed by the Imperial parliament. The only difference between the statute enacted by the latter parliament and one passed by the Canadian delegates, is in the phraseology. The rule in respect to population being the basis of representation is clearly defined therein.

If, because of subsection 4 of section 51 of the Act of North British America, the principle of representation by population is materially affected, then we must, as explained by Sir Hector Langevin, take advantage of section 52 of the same act which stipulates that the number of members of the House of Commons may be increased by parliament, from time to time, regard being had to proportionate rights then existing, as provided by the act.

I ought to remind you, sir, at this time that the Act of Confederation of British North America has been altered at London, and that subsection 1 of section 51, which reads: "Quebec shall have the fixed number of 65 members," has been substituted for the original clause reading, "For the purpose of readjustments, Lower Canada shall always be assigned 65 members. . . ." etc. Both versions, however, must be interpreted as meaning that Quebec is to have a minimum of 65 members.

It is obvious that this number was adopted because it was expected then that the population of our province would increase gradually and come nearest to the average increase in population of the whole country—and that is exactly what happened; the increase in population of the province of Quebec has been proportionate to the average increase of the whole population of Canada. On the other hand, the population of the province of Ontario, after increasing for a few years, has not been decreasing relatively to the increase of the general population, seemingly to the extent of 3·86 per centum.

Therefore, it is obvious that unless parliament avails itself of its power, as per the provisions of section 52, of the British North America Act to raise the number of representatives in the House of Commons, that Ontario shall continue to retain its 82 members, in spite of the fact that the population will be decreasing by 3.86 per centum at each census compared with the increase of the rest of the population.

At the time of the 1921 census, Ontario was entitled to get no more than 81 members; nevertheless, the latter province has, in accordance with the provisions of subsection 4 of section 51, retained its 82 members. The retaining of this one member did not in itself constitute a great injustice to the other provinces, but it created a precedent in consequence of which, upon the date of the census of 1931, Ontario has retained four members above the number which its population entitled it to get. What will the result be upon the census of 1941 and thereafter?

Let us suppose that the Dominion of Canada shall increase in population in the proportion of 18.4 per centum every ten years; that the province of Quebec shall also increase in the same proportion, that is 27.71 of the total increase, while the increase for the province of Ontario relatively to that of the other provinces, shall be less, gradually to the extent of 3.86 per centum—less than one-twentieth. Thus, Ontario, never decreasing to the extent of one-twentieth relatively to the general population of the dominion shall upon every census retain its 82 members, and we will then have the following result, in 1941, the population of the whole of Canada shall be 12,241,551; that of Quebec shall be 3,392,133, while that of Ontario shall be of 3,848,743. Nevertheless, Quebec shall have 65 members—one member per every 52,186 of population; while Ontario, with a population not entitling it to get more than 74 members, shall retain its 82 members —8 members above the number to which it is entitled, and each of its members shall be elected by 46,936 constituents—5,250 less than in each county in the province of Quebec, which will nullify the votes of 341,250 voters of the latter province. In 1951, the population of the dominion shall be 14,445,030; that of Quebec, 4,012,717, and that of Ontario, 4,316,174. Thus, Quebec with its number of sixty-five, shall have one member to every 61,734 which ought to bring down the representation from Ontario to 70 members; yet, because its comparative decrease in population will be less than one-twentieth, the province of Ontario shall retain its 82 members, each one of whom shall represent a population of 52,635 which is 9,099 less constituents than in every county in the province of Quebec, and will nullify 591,435 votes from our province.

In 1961, the population of the dominion shall be of 17,045,135; that of Quebec, 4,723,-206 and that of Ontario, 4,840,818. Each member from Quebec shall represent 72,666 constituents. While the representation from Ontario should be reduced to 67 it will, nevertheless, retain its 82 members. Each of these 82 members representing 59,034 constituents, which is 13,632 less than in each county in the province of Quebec, and will nullify 886,080 votes from the latter province. In 1971, the population of the dominion shall be 20,113,259, that of Quebec, 5,573,382 and that of Ontario, 5,426,557.

You will notice that in 1971, the Ontario population shall be slightly less than that of Quebec, nevertheless that province shall have retained its 82 members as against 65 from Quebec. In 1971, Ontario shall be assigned one member for a population of 66,177 while Quebec shall have one member for a population of 85,600, a difference of 19,423 per county, which nullify 1,262,495 votes from the latter province and 3,059,637 from all over Canada.

This proportion is absolutely ridiculous, in fact so much so that it makes it obvious that section 52 has been inserted to correct section 51 which is solely a clause to guarantee a certain minimum representation to the province.

The following is a schedule of figures I have just quoted.

| Census— | Population Canada | Population Quebec | Population Ontario |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1861 . . | 3,171,418 | 1,111,566 | 1,396,091 |
| 1871 . . | 3,689,257 | 1,191,516 | 1,620,851 |
| 1881 . . | 4,324,810 | 1,359,027 | 1,926,922 |
| 1891 . . | 4,833,239 | 1,488,535 | 2,114,321 |
| 1901 . . | 5,371,315 | 1,638,898 | 2,182,947 |
| 1911 . . | 7,206,643 | 2,005,776 | 2,527,292 |
| 1921 . . | 8,787,949 | 2,367,665 | 2,933,662 |
| 1931 . . | 19,374,196 | 2,874,255 | 3,431,683 |
| 1941 . . | 12,241,551 | 3,392,133 | 3,848,743 |
| 1951 . . | 14,445,030 | 4,012,717 | 4,316,174 |
| 1961 . . | 17,945,135 | 4,723,206 | 4,840,818 |
| 1971 . . | 20,113,259 | 5,573,382 | 5,426,557 |

The 1931 census gives too considerable advantages to the province of Ontario for the other provinces to ignore the situation. If Ontario is to be allowed 82 members without increasing the representation of the other provinces, then the result will be that each member from Ontario will represent 41,856 constituents as against 44,219 for every member from the other provinces, (except Prince Edward Island) a difference of 3,269 constituents per county, which would make a total of 212,485 constituents whose votes would be nullified in Quebec only, or a total of 519,771 for the whole of Canada.

The British North America Act is the result of an agreement signed by the delegates from the several provinces of the Dominion, the basis of which being that every province shall be represented in the House of Commons by a number of members proportionate to its population. Every province had insisted on this condition and this is precisely why Prince Edward Island remained out of the confederation at the start.

[Mr. Barrette.]

The idea of confederation originated in Ontario, the most powerful of all provinces of the dominion, which for years had requested the representation by population.

Subsection 4 of article 51, was inserted with a view to the protection of the smaller provinces, and it never occurred to any of the delegates at the time that this clause might some day, serve to give the larger province of the dominion such a considerable advantage over the other provinces.

The population of Ontario which is affected by subsection 4 of section 51—that is to say one-twentieth of its comparative population, is four times more considerable than that of the second largest province—exception being made of Quebec—and thus give her a protection four times greater.

Parliament has not only the power but it has also the duty to carry out the provisions of section 52 of the act with a view to the re-adjustment of the representation from the provinces so that Ontario shall not be assigned a higher percentage of the membership of the house than her population entitles her to get and this can only be done by increasing the total membership of the house. Ontario has the right to retain her 82 members but the other provinces have also the right to an increased membership.

According to the census of 1931, Ontario has a population of 3,431,683 which if divided by 82 gives a result of 41,849; the population of the dominion is 10,374,196 from which we should deduct the population of Prince Edward Island, the Yukon and the North West Territories, which are assigned 5 members irrespective of population numbers 100,720 and therefore the net population of the other provinces, amount to 10,273,476, which divided by 41,849 would give 245 members for these provinces, and to that number should be added 2 members to provide for subsection 3 of section 51 which allow an extra member to a province for a fractional part exceeding one-half of the unit of representation and this would bring the total membership to 252 members including the five members for Prince Edward Island and the Yukon. Therefore, in all fairness to five provinces of the dominion a bill should be passed by the house stating that:—

"According to section 52 of the confederation act, the number of members of the House of Representatives is thereby increased from 245 to 252—and, the next House of Commons shall be constituted as prescribed by the confederation act upon the basis of representation by population and shall consist of 252 members distributed as follows:

|---|---|
| Ontario | 82 |
| Quebec | 69 |
| Prince Edward Island | 4 |
| Nova Scotia | 12 |
| New Brunswick | 10 |
| Manitoba | 17 |
| Saskatchewan | 22 |
| Alberta | 18 |
| British Columbia | 17 |
| Yukon | 1 |
| | 252 |

And for this purpose subsection (1) of section 51 is changed to read: "Quebec shall have the fixed number of 69 members," and subsection 2 of section 51, is amended by substituting—"Number sixty-five by number sixty-nine."

Section 52 gives to the Parliament of Canada the right to amend section 51—as mentioned above, as otherwise, Parliament could not take advantage of Section 52, as the number of members is controlled by the population of the Dominion divided by the population of Quebec multiplied by 65—plus such additional numbers guaranteed to the provinces by sub-section 4 of section 51, and a special act of the Imperial Parliament which guarantees to each province as many members as they have senators.

It is therefore, very clear that unless the Parliament of Canada can increase the representation of Quebec it cannot take advantage of section 52 and this would be an absurdity.

I must point out that section 52 gives to parliament the right to increase the membership of the house but does not give it the right to reduce such membership. This reduction can only come in the natural operation of section 51 by an excess increase in the population of Quebec over the population of the other provinces. And this is an additional proof that the legislators intend to fix the representation of Quebec at 65 as a minimum and not as a maximum, as stated by Sir Hector Langevin.

What objections can there be to give to Quebec and five other provinces the increased membership they are entitled to receive? Economy? The indemnity of the 9 new members will total $28,000 less 10% or $25,800. By decreasing the indemnity of each member by 12½% instead of 10%, you will offset this increase in our expenditures and even if the full amount of $28,000 had to be provided for, the principle involved is worth much more as the advantages given to Ontario now represent the disfranchising of 212,485 of Quebec citizens, figure which is obtained by multiplying by 65 the difference of the unit of representation between Ontario and Quebec; each member represents 54,219 citizens in Quebec and only 41,850 in Ontario a difference of 3,269 by county. Also, you must keep in mind that at the time of confederation the unit of representation was 17,101 and it is now 44,219, or more than 2½ times greater. This unit should be stabilized around 40,000 and this can only be done by increasing the membership of the House.

If it does not take this logical and just action, the government will be facing a worse situation at the next census. During the next decade, indications show that Quebec and the West will continue to increase at a greater rate than Ontario. If the same rate prevailed, Ontario who has retained 1 seat more than she was entitled in 1921, and 4 seats more in 1931 would be entitled in 1941 to 8 seats less which she may keep on account of subsection 4 of section 51: in 1951, she will again keep 12 seats more than she is entitled, in 1961, 15 seats more and 1971, 19 seats more with the result that in 1971, with a population less than Quebec, Ontario would still retain its 82 members, against the 65 members of Quebec. Do you think that Quebec and the other provinces would tolerate this?

I fail to see how Ontario could be allowed to retain the representation it now enjoys without increasing proportionately the representation of the other provinces. The confederation act does not only permit but implicitly compels the house in this case to increase the membership of the house by using section 52 of the act. The rights of five provinces are involved and surely these five provinces should vote unanimously in favour of my resolution which is a recognization of their rights. A vote against it by any member of the province affected can only mean that this particular member would deliberately refuse to accept an increased membership for his province, because it would benefit Quebec too much. But this cannot be the spirit of justice which animated the present parliament and I expect that every member of this house will vote for my resolution as soon as he will stop to think and recognize its justification.

This resolution is of the utmost importance to the Province of Quebec, which would entitle it to four more members; British Columbia, so well represented by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), would be entitled to three more seats; Alberta to two, and Saskatchewan to one.

I do not see why, those who have an interest in setting forth the claims of their respective provinces should not take advantage of the present resolution. In my own province it may be contended that it is simply a question of delivering a speech in the House and being placed in the limelight, however, I state the province of Quebec, under the circumstances, is entitled to have four more members, comparatively to the population of Ontario; this is what I am claiming at present in the house and I trust that my voice will be re-echoed, especially on this side of the house. I see by my side the honourable member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), the honourable member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) as well as the honourable member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan) all of whom, I am certain, will claim what is due to the province of Quebec. I am also aware that a number of my colleagues on your left, sir, will equally do their duty and claim for our province a just share of representation. I feel confident that the government will agree that the claim which I have just presented is just and will be favourably considered.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not been able to follow the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Barrette) in his argument, but I think I understand fairly well the chief points of the case he has presented. The hon. member suggests that because of the application of, shall I say the rules of the game, as set forth in the British North America Act, it so happens, that the unit of population of Quebec at the present time exceeds the number which is found by dividing the number of members for Ontario into the population of that province, and that possibly there has been something in the nature of unfairness to the other provinces of Canada. The hon. member has been good enough to indicate that in my own province of British Columbia, if his system of allocation of members throughout Canada were adopted, we would have three additional members instead of two. However, this situation is covered by the British North America Act.

The first point which I would like to draw to the attention of my hon. friend is that the resolution which he proposes, no matter what treatment it may receive, cannot in any way affect the matter as it is determined by the British North America Act. Let me direct the attention of the house and my hon. friend to the terms of his resolution. It will be noted that he asks for two things, his first proposal being that the parliament of Canada shall grant the provinces "just and equitable representation." I shall deal with this point in a moment when I refer to the British North America Act. He then asks that this representation be based upon the unit of population of the province of Ontario.

When the fathers of confederation dealt with this very difficult and complex matter they hit upon a system which has I think been recognized throughout the British Empire, and probably throughout the world, as a unique and admittedly fair method of ascertaining the representation within a dominion such as Canada. Furthermore, the fathers of confederation, and particularly Cartier, who as one of the members of the government at the time played an important part in formulating this particular scheme, were highly commended for the solution which they had arrived at. Through all the succeeding years this has been looked upon as one of the outstanding achievements of confederation. May I point out to my hon. friend that were it possible to adopt his resolution, which it is not; were we able to achieve the objective which he desires, namely, that the unit of representation should be based upon the population of Ontario provided by its present number of members, it would take away from his own province what has always been looked upon as one of its finest, shall I say, elements in its association with confederation—the fixture of its representation at sixty-five members.

An hon. MEMBER: A safeguard.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, a safeguard. If this resolution were adopted I am afraid we would hear some very strong protests from the hon. member's own province, because, after all, it would be but a temporary advantage which would pass away as time went on.

If hon. members care to refer to the British North America Act, they will find that this matter has been fully covered by sections 51 and 52. For the purpose of the record and for the information of the house I shall quote from the act. Section 51 reads:

> On the completion of the census in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time, as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

A moment ago I referred to the rules of the game, and perhaps that term was not entirely out of place. Certain rules are then set out in the act, and these rules have been followed from the time of confederation down. The first rule reads:

> Quebec shall have the fixed number of sixty-five members:

The hon. member urges that the British North America Act does not say that Quebec shall not have more than sixty-five members; his argument is that the act says that it shall not have less than sixty-five, and he suggests that it is permissible for them to have more. I submit that the reading of the act will show that he is in error in making that deduction. Rule No. 1 states that Quebec shall have the fixed number of sixty-five members, no more and no less. Rule No. 2 reads:

> There shall be assigned to each of the other provinces such a number of members as will bear the same proportion to the number of its population (ascertained at such census) as the number sixty-five bears to the number of the population of Quebec (so ascertained).

In simple language that means that we take the population of Quebec, divide it by sixty-five, which gives the unit of representation which is then applied to the other provinces. The fathers of confederation anticipated possible trouble, and in their wisdom they devised further rules. Rule No. 3 reads:

> In the computation of the number of members for a province a fractional part not exceeding one-half of the whole number requisite for entitling the province to a member shall be disregarded; but a fractional part exceeding one-half of that number shall be equivalent to the whole number.

In other words, if in applying the unit ascertained from the province of Quebec to another province there is a fraction and that fraction is less than one-half, it shall be disregarded, but if it exceeds one-half, then it shall give the province the right to another member. Rule No. 4 governs the whole case upon which my hon. friend has based his argument, and to my mind it makes a complete reply. It reads:

> On any readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

That may seem a little complicated, but in my own perhaps more simple language it means that unless the population of a province is found to have diminished more than one-twentieth in its relation to the total population of the dominion, then the number of members from that province shall not be disturbed; if the diminution is more than one-twentieth, then the number of members must be reduced accordingly.

What has happened in the present instance is this: The unit ascertained by the application of rule No. 1 is 44,219. My hon. friend asks that we should divide 44,219 into the total population of Ontario. Upon doing that he finds that Ontario is entitled not to eighty-two members but to some lesser number. However, he has overlooked the provision contained in rule No. 4 which states that unless the population of Ontario has diminished by more than one-twentieth the decrease shall be disregarded; consequently the application of the unit of 44,219 is not necessary. Under rule 4, Ontario retains its present number of members, eighty-two.

Let me pause for a moment to indicate the fairness of this rule. There is no doubt as to its purpose. It was set down in anticipation of, shall I say, temporary variations in the extent of the advancement of population in the various provinces. That is really what it is intended to anticipate. For instance, in this case the population of Quebec has advanced at a more rapid ratio than the population of Ontario, and such a possibility was anticipated by the act. Of course, the same applies to other provinces as well. If I am not mistaken—and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) will correct me if I am wrong—at the last census the same rule was applied to Nova Scotia and preserved for that province one or two members that it otherwise would have lost and that unfortunately I think it will lose on this particular occasion because the differentiation is more than one-twentieth.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier): In the case of the maritime provinces is the number of senators to which they are entitled not the basis on which the number of their members to this house is established?

Mr. STEVENS: No, my hon. friend is referring to another point. What he refers to, I think, applies to Prince Edward Island, namely, that the number of members in the house shall in no case be less than the number of senators in the province.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier): Does that apply only to Prince Edward Island?

Mr. STEVENS: It applies to any province, but it is actually in force only in regard to Prince Edward Island, because all the other provinces, I think without exception, have at the present time a larger number of members than senators.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The numbers are pretty close in New Brunswick.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, they are getting close. But the point I wish to make is that rule No. 4 of section 51 of the British North America Act has completely anticipated the very point he has raised—that is the main argument he advances—and has specifically provided for it. Consequently it is not competent for us to change that.

The hon. gentleman then proceeds to section 52, and under it he makes the claim that it is competent for the house to increase the number of members. I shall read section 52 and then indicate wherein I differ from my hon. friend in the interpretation of it. Section 52 reads:

> The number of members of the House of Commons may be from time to time increased by the parliament of Canada, provided the proportionate representation of the provinces prescribed by this act is not thereby disturbed.

Obviously, the meaning of that section is simply that should, for instance, Quebec stand dormant, without increase in its population —a condition which, heaven knows, is impossible, but still let us assume for the sake of argument it were so—and the rest of Canada were to increase rapidly in population, then the unit of population ascertained by the division of the population of Quebec by sixty-five, divided into the rest of Canada, would very probably call for a much larger number of members than at present sit in the house. While the hon. member was speaking, I made a brief computation which will illustrate this point. Let us assume for the sake of argument that in the next decennial period the population of Quebec did not change and the number of members being sixty-five, the unit of population would be, as at present, 44,219. But assume also that 3,000,000 were added to the rest of Canada: that would give an additional 240 members above the number for Quebec, or, in all, 305 members who would have seats in the house. I admit that with the division of provinces there would be fractions which would vary that, but I am taking it just as a general argument. In other words, if the population of Canada outside Quebec increased at a more rapid ratio than did Quebec, there would be an increase of membership in the house. So the fathers of confederation, realizing that that might occur, provided that the parliament of Canada, in the event of such a happening, should have the power to increase the number of members in the house, and of course this has been done from time to time. I believe at the last decennial census it worked out that the increase was from 241 to 245 members. I am speaking from memory.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: From 235 to 245.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, I thank the hon. member. I knew there had been an increase. But this time it happens that although there are adjustments, a few gains in the western and a few losses in the eastern provinces, the number is unchanged. This is just a rather unusual coincidence. So my hon. friend who places a great deal of confidence in section 52 will, I think on second thought, recognize that that section is inserted in anticipation of what I have indicated may happen and not for the purpose of saying that the parliament of Canada, in disregard to the British North America Act, may willy-nilly increase the number of members in the house, any more than that parliament can disregard the British North America Act and change the basis of our whole calculation from Quebec to Ontario. That cannot be done without an amendment to the British North America Act, nor can the terms of rule 4 be varied without a change in that act, nor can we in any sense apply section 52 to the argument which he suggests.

I have very briefly, and I fear very imperfectly, covered my hon. friend's points. I should like to make this suggestion to him: in the first place I should strongly commend to him and to others who may be perturbed by the adjustments to which I have referred, that they should hesitate to press this resolution in view of the fact that it would take away from the province of Quebec the right it has enjoyed since confederation of having a fixed and assured number. That is an important matter, and I am sure there would be a very serious difference of opinion among the members from that province. That should be borne in mind. Then there is the further reason that this resolution cannot alter the situation at all; all it could do, if it were adopted, would be to embarrass the house, I might say; in fact, it would be quite useless. But the hon. member having had the opportunity of expressing his views and of drawing attention to the situation, I suggest to him that he might be good enough to withdraw his resolution, because, as I have already intimated, it cannot have effect because the only thing that could give him what he is asking would be a serious amendment to the British North America Act itself. Personally, if such a thing were done, I do not believe any good could be served either in Quebec or in any other province. My hon. friend has indicated to me and other hon. members that the western provinces would gain. I do not think there would be any advantage to us in having some temporary gain at the expense of disturbing what, since confederation, has been looked upon as a most equitable method of arriving at a fair and just representation in the house for the various provinces.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not rise to discuss the motion. I agree with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), that the representation as provided in the British North America Act has so far worked out very satisfactorily for all the provinces. But my friend and colleague, the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), expressed a desire to discuss this motion, and I would ask permission to adjourn the debate in order to give him an opportunity to speak to the motion later. I do not wish to cut off discussion now.

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to occupy the time of the house and delay proceedings by a further discussion of this important matter, certain phases of which have been fully covered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). I am sorry also that my knowledge of the French language is not sufficient to have enabled me to follow the mover of the resolution (Mr. Barrette). After listening to the clear responses made by the minister, however, I believe I have a fair grasp of the pertinent portions of the mover's remarks. It would appear from what has transpired in the last few years that the farther we remove ourselves from the time of confederation, the farther we remove ourselves from the spirit and intentions of the fathers of confederation and get down to the strict and rigid interpretation of the British North America Act. I believe before I have concluded I shall have established to the satisfaction of hon. members the fact that at least in some measure that is so.

With the few minutes at my disposal I should like to give a brief history of the question of representation in this house as it affects the maritime provinces, and the inequalities with which we have had to contend for a great many years. Representation in this house is a burning question in the maritimes to-day on account of what would appear to be a further decrease in our representation in the near future, which we claim is already too greatly reduced.

A conference of the representatives of the provinces of Canada met in December, 1910, convened by the premiers of Ontario and Quebec, to consider the representation of the maritime provinces in the parliament of Canada. This question was discussed at considerable length, but no decision was reached.

A further conference was held in October, 1913, at Ottawa, to continue the study of the question of representation and other matters. A resolution was moved by the premiers of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island:

> That, in the opinion of this conference, the representation granted to the maritime provinces at the time they respectively entered confederation should be restored and rendered irreducible.

After considerable debate, this resolution was withdrawn and another substituted to the effect that an amendment to the British North America Act be sought providing an irreducible minimum in the representation of the maritime provinces of eighteen for Nova Scotia, thirteen for New Brunswick and six for Prince Edward Island. This also was withdrawn, and a resolution dealing with the problem of Prince Edward Island was introduced. Finally, the conference passed the following:

> Resolved, that this conference expresses the opinion that, not representing the provinces for the purposes of this matter of representation, it declines to take any action in regard to it.

At this conference two memoranda were presented, one by the premiers of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and the other on behalf of Prince Edward Island, urging its special claim. At that time, 1913, as a result of the census of 1911, Nova Scotia's representation had been reduced from eighteen to sixteen, New Brunswick's from thirteen to eleven, and Prince Edward Island's from four to three. The representation of the western provinces had increased according to their population.

One result of the conference was an amendment to the British North America Act, 5-6 George V, chapter 45, providing that "notwithstanding anything in the said act, a province shall always be entitled to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of senators representing such province." This enabled Prince Edward Island to retain a fourth member.

For a moment or two I should like to speak concerning what we claim is the loss of a federal member from the province of Nova Scotia, despite the present method of establishing the unit of representation for each of the provinces of Canada.

The population of Nova Scotia increased from 1911 to 1921 by 31,499, Quebec's population increased at a relatively larger rate, so that the unit of representation after the 1921 census became 36,283. Nova Scotia's representation in the House of Commons was therefore reduced from 16 to 14. The population contained 33,965 more than was necessary to give fourteen representatives, but because we had fallen 2,318 below the fractional part, not exceeding one-half of the whole number required to entitle the province to a member, our population to that extent was disregarded, and we suffered the loss of one member. Nova Scotia could not retain its members, as Ontario did, under subsection 4 of section 51 of the British North America Act, whereby no reduction can be made unless the proportion which the population of the province bears to the total population of the dominion be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

It may be difficult to overcome an effect such as this, but it is a fact that there are 33,965 persons in Nova Scotia unrepresented in the House of Commons while there are in Canada, outside of the maritime provinces ninety-six electoral districts returning members with less than that population within their bounds. The membership for Nova Scotia cannot be reduced below ten, the number of our senators. But if by the increase of population in Quebec our representation were lowered to this minimum, it would mean a total reduction since confederation of nine. This is a condition which is being rapidly approached. Had the unit of representation, instead of being 36,283 been 36,125, a difference of 158, Nova Scotia would have been saved another representative, and instead of having fourteen members in the House of Commons would have had fifteen; that is, if the population of Quebec had been less by 10,287 persons the unit would have been so reduced.

By the British North America Act, section 51, subsection 2—

> There shall be assigned to each of the other provinces such a number of members as will bear the same proportion to the number of its population (ascertained at such census) as the number sixty-five bears to the number of the population of Quebec (so ascertained).

Quebec is defined by this act, section 6 as follows:

> The part of the province of Canada (as it exists at the passing of this act) which formerly constituted respectively the provinces of upper Canada and lower Canada, shall be deemed to be severed, and shall form two separate provinces. The parts which formerly constituted the province of upper Canada shall constitute the province of Ontario; and the part which formerly constituted the province of lower Canada shall constitute the province of Quebec.

That is, the population to be taken is the population of the territory known as Quebec at the passing of the British North America Act. But the population of Quebec which has been taken as the basis for the unit of representation since 1900 is the population of that province as originally constituted, plus the population of the extensions made by chapter 3 of the acts of 1898. It is now possible from information at hand to ascertain just what population was counted in these added territorities, for they contain all of Abitibi, the district of Labrador, and what is known as part of east Maine, all that territory north of the height of land, part of it being traversed by the National Transcontinental Railway. In extending the boundaries further in 1912 the territory then given to Quebec was excluded in considering the population forming the unit of representation but the population added by the Act of 1898 is included. A statement from the dominion statistician shows that there were 13,644 people in this area. These should not have been counted in determining the unit of representation. Excluding them, the unit becomes not 36,283 as used, but 36,073. This figure divided into the population of Nova Scotia, 1921, gives 14 and a fractional part, exceeding one-half of the whole united number by 778 and entitling this province to another federal member. The representation in the House of Commons from Nova Scotia, as fixed by the Redistribution Act, 1924, should therefore have been fifteen members. The province was under-represented in the last parliament by one member and will be in the next unless immediate steps are taken to correct this error.

Now let me refer you to some remarks of the fathers of confederation. I begin with a statement by Sir John A. Macdonald in the parliamentary debate on confederation in 1865:

> By adopting the representation of Lower Canada as a fixed standard—as the pivot on which the whole would turn—that province being the best suited for the purpose, on account of the comparatively permanent character of its population, and from its having neither the largest nor the least number of inhabitants.

But instead of the population of Quebec being "comparatively permanent" in its character it has shown a relatively large increase and is overflowing into territory which did not form part of its original area. Taking the original provinces into consideration, Nova Scotia has increased in fifty years 35.8 per cent, New Brunswick, 35.2 per cent, Quebec, 98.17 per cent, and Ontario, 80.99 per cent. Quebec, therefore, has shown the largest relative percentage of increases of the four original provinces and is the least stable in character instead of being comparatively permanent.

Gray, in his account of the conference at Quebec, states:

> Thus at the first inception on entering into the union, population was not intended to be held as the only rule for representation. Though taken as a guide, the apportionment must be more or less arbitrary. Existing arrangements, territorial and other considerations must be taken into account, and modifications to suit circumstances necessarily made: but after entering the union, future changes of the entire representation were to be governed by that principle. . . The conference, therefore, while taking population as the basis, and laying down that strictly as the rule, acted upon the principle that in the first instance territorial area and local circumstances must also be considered.

The memorial which was presented at the interprovincial conference in 1913 on behalf of the three maritime provinces forms substantially their claims to-day. The memorial reads:

The question of the legal right of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to retain their original representation was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada in 1903, and was decided against these provinces. On appeal to the privy council the answer of the supreme court to the question submitted was held to be correct.

We must bow to this decision so far as the strict interpretation of the written contract is concerned, but this was not the expectation and belief of the delegates at the time of the negotiations of the terms of union, for the Honourable George Brown, in moving the resolution fixing the number of representatives which each colony should have in the house, stated: "The practical result will be that while Lower Canada certainly will not be less and the lower provinces may increase in population, they cannot decrease in the number of representatives. It keeps the house within a reasonable limit."

And in a speech delivered at Sherbrooke in 1864, shortly after the Quebec conference, Hon. A. T. Galt had said:

We have supposed that the population of Lower Canada, being tolerably equable in its character, would afford the best basis. But having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada, we think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio. Therefore, the lower provinces would have the same as they have now unless in the very improbable case of any one falling off by five per cent or more—that is, a decrease relatively to the whole federation.

Representation by population, while accepted as a guiding principle in fixing the representation of each province, in the dominion parliament, was intended to be made subservient to the right of each colony to adequate representation in view of its surrender of a large measure of self-government. In consideration of surrendering its independent colonial status, each colony was entitled to such a representation in the federal parliament as would be sufficient to guard that right.

A self-governing colony was something more than the number of its habitants.

The principle that population was not the sole consideration in fixing representation was recognized in the cases of Manitoba, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island when these provinces respectively entered the union.

Manitoba, with a population less than one unit of representation, was given four, with a provision that after the census of 1881 its representation should be "readjusted" under the terms of the British North America Act.

The census of 1881 showed a population of sixty-two thousand two hundred and sixty, which would have entitled it to three members, but it was "readjusted" up to five.

British Columbia with a white population of less than ten thousand and a total population not exceeding forty thousand when it entered Confederation, in 1871, was given six members as an irreducible minimum. In 1881 it had but two units of representation and in 1891 four units.

Prince Edward Island obtained six members upon entering confederation with but five units of population, passed the census of 1881 in the same condition, but, not being safeguarded as was British Columbia, was reduced to a representation of five after the census of 1891.

It may be said that in each of these cases there was an expectation of such increase as would in time bring all the provinces upon the basis of representation allowed upon entering confederation. Admitting such to be the case, it goes to show that the splendid optimists who made confederation thought only of readjustment upwards and not downwards.

When the maritime provinces entered confederation it was impossible for them to have foreseen the extent and effect of the development of western Canada. They never imagined that in the days to come the growth of the west would strip them of their influence in the councils of the nation. Though the times were not over prosperous, they contributed their share to the cost of purchasing the lands from the Hudson Bay Company and equipping them for settlement; bore their part of the cost of Canada to the Canadian Pacific Railway and all the other vast expenditures that went to link together the far-flung provinces of Canada and to convert the wilderness into thriving communities out of which have developed the splendid prairie provinces of to-day. But most of all, they gave their sons and daughters to the west. From Manitoba to the Pacific coast the maritime provinces people form an important element of the population who have played no small part in the development of these new lands.

All these contributions the maritime provinces have cheerfully made in the interests of Canadian unity and progress; but they feel it a cruel exaction of the strict letter of the bond which will impose a lasting penalty upon them for the sacrifices they have made in such a cause.

I appeal to this house, Mr. Speaker for unity and justice in this matter. This resolution may not be the appropriate time to express our views on this question, but as it would appear that this may be the last opportunity to present our case before the redistribution bill is brought into the house and passed I appeal to this parliament for a spirit of unity and fair play with respect to the representation of the maritime provinces in this house which has suffered so badly. I feel that we have every just right to put forward this claim, which I have humbly endeavoured to do in the interest of the province from which I come.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Richelieu): I think it is becoming apparent that the existing representation of the province of Quebec in the House of Commons is not adequate, and that a change might be sought in the near future. I do not contend that the resolution which is under consideration is the proper mode of attaining that purpose. I admit quite frankly and without hesitation that the argument of the Minister of Trade and Commerce appears to me to be perfectly correct and in accordance with the true interpretation of the statute. I do not think that the mover of the resolution (Mr. Barrette) had in mind changing the system of determining representation in the House of Commons; he only wanted to make an adjustment for the present owing to the inadequacy in practice of the British North America Act.

It is said that the representation has been settled as it now is with a view to providing a safeguard for the province of Quebec. It has turned out, however, that this safeguard has worked against the province of Quebec. The law has not fulfilled the expectations of the fathers of confederation, because at the present time the province of Quebec finds itself in an unfavourable position when that law is carried into practice. This is not the fault of anyone in this house; it is the fault of the fathers of confederation, who made the mistake in making their estimation of what would be the result of their legislation and what the growth of population in the different provinces might be. One can readily understand that it is not fair that a member should represent a constituency in the province of Quebec on the basis of a population of 44,000 while a member representing a constituency in the province of Ontario does so on the basis of 41,000. As I have said, however, the remedy is not to be found in the resolution which has been presented to the house by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge (Mr. Barrette). As has been said, when the redistribution bill was presented to the house, an amendment to the British North America Act would be required to achieve the aim of the hon. member, and I think the whole speech of the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge was based on a wrong interpretation of the British North America Act and of the resolutions passed in 1864 or 1865, as interpreted by Sir Hector Langevin. The true position was placed before the members at the time by Sir Henry Joly, and the argument made by him was perfectly correct and in accordance with the true interpretation of the resolutions and of the different sections of the British North America Act. When Sir Hector Langevin undertook to reply to Sir Henry Joly and to try to dispel the fears he had expressed, Sir Hector Langevin was entirely wrong, and the text of the law would not justify the interpretation which he gave the resolutions at that time. Sir Hector Langevin had based his whole argument, in his reply to Sir Henry Joly, on section 52, which empowers parliament to increase the number of representatives of the different provinces; but the mistake he made was this, that section 52 could not be interpreted as a contradiction of section 51. Section 51, subsection 1, provided that Quebec should have a fixed number of 65 members. A fixed number of 65 members means that the number cannot be increased or decreased, and section 52 cannot be interpreted as meaning that the representation of the province of Quebec can be increased when section 51 declares that it cannot be increased and that the number of 65 members is fixed. The whole argument of the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge is based on the observations made at the time by Sir Hector Langevin, whose argument was based upon an error and a wrong interpretation, a supposed contradiction between section 52 and subsection 1 of section 51. That is the whole question.

Apart from the question of law, I think it is well that all members of the house should keep in mind and give their best attention to the possibility of going into the matter on another occasion, with a view to providing for a change in the British North America Act, because, according to the calculation placed before the house, before very long there will arise a situation which will be unjust to the province of Quebec. I think it is the duty of all hon. members of this house, who are desirous of preserving that harmony that has always existed in the relationships of the citizens of the various provinces of Canada, to study this question seriously, and when the next opportunity presents itself to find a better and more equitable basis for representation of the province of Quebec in the House of Commons.

On motion of Mr. Stewart (Edmonton) the debate was adjourned.

PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF SPREAD BETWEEN PRICES OF RAW PRODUCTS AND MANUFACTURED GOODS

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, an immediate inquiry should be made under the provisions of The Research Council Act, chapter 177, R.S.C., 1927, or by other means, into the causes underlying the wide spread between the prices of raw products and the prices of goods manufactured from such products.

He said: In presenting to the house the resolution which you have just read, Mr. Speaker, I do so because I am firmly convinced that in many instances an injustice is being perpetrated upon our people, which has the effect of bringing the present depression to bear more heavily than it need bear, particularly upon the farmers and the labouring classes. In the second place, I find that there is throughout the country a demand that the government provide means for the most effective relief possible by enabling the people to buy their necessities as cheaply as they can, discarding all handicaps that have a tendency to make living expenses higher than they ought to be. In many instances our farmers and labouring classes particularly find the cost of living bearing more heavily upon them than it has ever done previously. This is due largely to the disastrous fall in prices in the last few years of those commodities which the primary producers have to sell in the markets of the world, and also the fact that there is not a similar decline in the prices of manufactured products.

I go to a relief officer in any part of the country and ask him about relief matters, and at once I am told that one of our greatest needs in relief work is clothing; and I ask myself why it is that clothing is so badly needed when all our products are at such low prices. The only answer I can make is that the price of clothing of all kinds is too dear when compared with the purchasing power of the individual. This fact is the reason for this resolution.

Some months ago I sent a letter to the weekly and daily press throughout Canada, almost from one end to the other, in which I drew attention to the wide spread between the price received by the farmer for his raw wool and the price he had to pay for underwear. I dealt with just that one article, but I received letters from people all over the country. At that time wool was selling at from four to four and one-half cents per pound and people were having to pay from $2 to $4 per pound for the same wool manufactured into underwear. From the many letters which I received I learned that there were many people like myself who were wondering why there was such a wide spread between the price received for raw wool and the price paid for the finished product. Many people had arrived at the same conclusion as myself, that someone was making a high profit. One man evidently had settled in his own mind the reason for this wide spread; he seemed to have a solution, nevertheless it was hard for me to understand why four cent wool should become two, three and four dollar wool when manufactured into underwear. I have most of these letters before me and I shall give a few extracts to show the feelings of different people throughout the country in connection with this very matter.

One man wrote that he had purchased a pair of trousers for $10 the weight of which was two pounds. He said they were simply trash in comparison with trousers he had bought in Scotland for fifteen and sixteen shillings. I wonder why the imperial conference did not do something to enable the clothing manufacturers in the old land, who could produce at less than half the cost of the manufacturers in Canada, to send their goods into this country.

Another man wrote that his sheep were of the Rambouillet breed which produces a very fine grade of clothing wool. He received six cents per pound for this wool, a premium of one or two cents over the market price. He went out and bought three ounces of fine yarn at twenty cents per ounce; in other words, he exchanged ten pounds of wool for three ounces of yarn. That would seem to explode the argument that high wages is the reason for this spread, because we know that wages make up only a small part of the cost of converting raw wool into yarn.

Another man wrote and said that four years ago he had bought one hundred per cent woollen underwear for $3.50 per suit; at that time he had sold his wool for twenty-five cents per pound, but this year while he had to pay the same price for his underwear he could get only four and one-eighth cents per pound for his wool.

Mr. SHAVER: Does the hon. member think that that is a true statement, that underwear is selling to-day at the same price as it sold for three years ago?

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): These letters were written ten months ago, and at that time the writer said woollen underwear cost the same as it did three years ago.

Mr. SHAVER: Does the hon. gentleman think that that is a correct statement?

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): The hon. member will have a chance to explain, if he wishes. He is not from western Canada, and this letter was received from a resident in that part of the country.

Another man sent me a purchase slip covering two suits of underwear at $2.95 per suit, their weight being thirteen ounces. This would show that the wool in the manufactured state was selling at over $3 per pound.

All this was a year ago; but let us see what the conditions are to-day. I say to my hon. friend that they are very much worse to-day than they were a year ago. A farmer in my own part of the province of Saskatchewan sent 600 pounds of wool to Winnipeg through the cooperative organization and at the same time ordered some blankets, the cost of which was to be charged against his wool. To his surprise he received word that his wool was too dark in colour and that owing to the deplorable state of the market no advance could be made on his shipment either in cash or in credit. That is the condition which exists to-day. When I received these letters raw wool was selling at four or five cents per pound, but to-day some of our farmers are receiving only two and two and a half cents per pound. The relief officers still report that the greatest need of the people to-day is clothing, and the price of this manufactured product is very little below what it was three or four years ago when the farmers were receiving twenty-five cents per pound for their wool.

I am frequently asked whether conditions in western Canada are better to-day than they were last year. Last year if you spoke to almost any farmer in western Canada about the conditions which prevailed he replied that things would not be too bad, even with the low prices, provided he could get a good crop; he felt that he would be able to pull through. Taken on the whole, the crop in western Canada was quite good; in some parts of my province it ran forty to forty-five bushels per acre in wheat, but because of the prices he received for his crop the farmer is even poorer to-day as far as money is concerned than he was a year ago. It is true that there is plenty of food for everybody, but money is out of the question.

Last year our people were hoping that the imperial conference would surely do something to relieve conditions, that it would permit the good quality clothing which is produced at lower prices in the old country to come into Canada, the type of clothing so badly needed by the people of this country. This conference, to say the least, has gone into the limbo of forgotten things, with no benefits so far to our farmers. Even the preference on wheat and the bacon quota have been of no value whatever to them.

In the replies which I received to the letters which I sent to the press, I was quite frequently asked: Why do you mention wool? A man from British Columbia would say: Conditions are just as bad with regard to our fruit, our fisheries, and people in other parts of the conntry would mention other products in regard to which they said the situation was just as bad as that of wool. My reason for mentioning wool was that in Saskatchewan, the province from which I come, during the hard winters which we have there, people require woollen clothing and they find it almost impossible to buy it at the prices which prevail. That is why I said that wool was too cheap, while on the other hand woollen clothing was too dear.

Let me put the situation in this way. In western Canada to-day we have farmers who do not shear their sheep because it does not pay them to do so, especially if they have to hire a man to shear them; the wool will not pay for the cost of shearing. On the other hand, those farmers and their families are not able to buy woollen clothing because it is too dear. Under such conditions I say to the government that something must be done. Surely they will not permit such a situation to continue without endeavouring to do something towards relieving it.

My resolution, however, does not deal with wool alone; it deals with products in general, and I have no doubt some adjustment is just as urgent in many other lines. In fact, I have with me newspaper clippings indicating that many other people are as firmly convinced as I am that there is a need for adjustment in many other lines. I have under my hand a clipping which I took from the Farmer's Sun of December 8 last, which says:

> Farm price declines fail to aid consumer.
> Burden of debt doubled, but, while producer gets less, distributors maintain same spread.
> All interests not bearing same burden.

Then the article goes on to show the spread between the price of wheat and the price of flour and bread. It deals also with something which is quite noticeable in the cities, and that is the difference between the price the farmer receives for his cattle and the prices people have to pay in city shops for their meat. It also mentions the high price of milk, retail, in comparison with what the farmer receives. Then it deals with another subject which was dealt with in a resolution introduced earlier to-day and which the government is evidently going to send to the banking and commerce committee. I refer to the question of the burden of debt. It says:

> Farm prices have been cut in half.

That is hardly a correct statement, because they have been cut in three and in some cases even four.

Debts—mortgages, interest rates, remain the same.

I believe the time has come when something must be done with regard to the question of debt and interest.

I have under my hand a clipping, a letter sent to the Winnipeg Free Press and signed by John Farmer of Sennett, Saskatchewan. I want to read a portion of it because it deals directly with the resolution which I am presenting. It appears in the issue of December 3, 1932. It is headed:

800 pounds of wheat for eight ounces of tin.

This gentleman says:

Since the imperial conference I have had occasion to order extra parts for a cream separator, which I have been using for the past 16 years. The parts required were a tin float, a tin cup, in which the float works, and three small rubber rings.

Not knowing the price of these articles I enclosed one dollar with my order, deeming it sufficient to pay for both extras and postage.

The articles ordered from a house in Winnipeg came by parcel post with a c.o.d. charge against them for $2.91. This amount, plus the dollar that I had sent with my letter, covered the cost of the goods and the postage and money order fee.

The total cost to me was almost four dollars. The two articles of tin, together, weighed exactly 8 ounces.

I understand that tin is a product of our own country, and taking this into consideration along with the current prices of the commodities that I had to sell in order to raise the money to pay for repairs for my cream separator, the following rather startling facts were revealed. At 30 cents a bushel, I would have to exchange 800 pounds of wheat for 8 ounces of tin; or 1,600 pounds of barley at 12 cents a bushel; or 1,700 pounds of oats at 8 cents a bushel; or 40 dozen of eggs at 10 cents a dozen; or 33⅓ pounds of butter at 12 cents a pound. The labour and expense incidental to producing these commodities would, I think, more than offset the labour and expense of manufacturing a float and a cup out of 8 ounces of tin.

The prices quoted above were current at the time of ordering the separator parts, which was in the early part of October, 1932.

Examples of this kind should, I think, be brought forcefully to the attention of our government. Do they realize the weight of the unjust burden placed on the farmers while they are protecting the manufacturer?

Then the letter goes on to deal with the matter of protection about which I may have a little to say later on.

Many anomalous conditions exist throughout the country. For instance, we have oats selling in Saskatchewan at seven cents a bushel and even less, but oatmeal is selling at five cents a pound. A man would have to sell about thirty cow hides at present prices to buy one pair of cowhide boots. Wool is selling at about two cents a pound while underwear is in the neighbourhood of $3 a pound. Just consider the fact that a man would have to care for, house, feed and shelter the year round and shear, if he thought it was necessary, thirty sheep in order to get enough money from the wool to buy one suit of underwear. Surely that is a condition which ought not to be permitted to exist. A year ago I brought to the attention of the house another anomalous condition with regard to a man in western Canada who took a calf skin into a store where they gave him fifty cents for it. He bought a pair of shoelaces which cost him twenty cents, and a clerk in the store figured out that if he were to buy back that whole calf skin in the form of shoelaces, it would cost him something over $70. Surely that is a condition about which it should be possible to do something.

Wheat at present is selling retail at country elevators in western Canada at thirty cents a bushel, while puffed wheat is worth more than $30 a bushel. Surely something can be done in regard to such a situation. I believe the government are aware that something should be done in connection with this matter. I was pleased last year with the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) when he spoke regarding agricultural conditions and the proposed appointment of a marketing board. His words appear at page 3400 of Hansard for 1932:

I assure hon. gentlemen that we have given more attention and thought to this question than to any other,—

Referring to the marketing board.

—and in this connection I have received excellent cooperation from hon. members irrespective of party. Because of the reasons I have stated it has been thought best to appoint a commission to study the whole problem of marketing, and the government intends to appoint such commission to study this question, especially in connection with export marketing. It will study the problem of supply and demand and perhaps more particularly the spread in the processing of the major farm products.

I regret the board has not been appointed, and particularly that no action has been taken concerning the last part of the minister's words I have just quoted. I have never been very much in favour of the marketing board, except in so far as it would have power to investigate these processing spreads. I want to emphasize again that something must be done; western Canada has practically reached the breaking point. People cannot go on this way very much longer. If in time of war it was necessary to create statutes preventing undue profits; why not do it now? I believe it is more necessary to-day than it was during war times.

I may be asked for my suggestion. I do not believe it necessary to make any. The resolution standing in my name states specifically that the matters to which I have referred should be placed in the hands of the body appointed for that particular purpose, namely for the purpose of investigating conditions such as these. The investigations could therefore be made without cost to the government. The research council has the power to make investigations and to summon any persons they may wish to give evidence before them. I know there are people who are satisfied that if we had proper tariff legislation—and I must confess I am one of them—conditions would be greatly improved. A reduction in tariffs would help to relieve matters. Others say we cannot have a proper adjustment unless there is greater control of currency. That is a factor which may be of importance. Then there are those who say that reduced tariffs and control of currency would be of no use unless an attempt were made to control the monopolies, combines and cartels which control industries to such an extent throughout the world. I do not know just to what extent industry is controlled by monopolies, but I am told that a large percentage of industries are to some extent under the control of monopolies or combines. Then there are others who say that the trouble lies in ineffective distribution and transportation, and that until these difficulties are corrected we cannot expect any relief. I would say that something must be done concerning the spread in prices, even though the government may find it necessary to take over industries, as some of our friends in the corner suggest. If it is necessary, let them do it. I am firmly convinced, however, that undue profits in all lines of industry must be curtailed, and that industrialists must not be allowed to charge more than reasonable profits.

Mr. GOTT: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that these conditions have existed only since the present government came into power?

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Yes, certainly.

Mr. GOTT: They existed throughout the former regime.

Mr. HARRY BUTCHER (Last Mountain): Mr. Speaker, rising to second the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie) I wish to state that the subject matter is of vital interest to the farmers of the prairie provinces. Quite often we hear comments upon the relation of the price of manufactured goods to the cost of raw material. The hon. member who has just spoken has referred to letters he has received from some of his constituents, and from other people in various parts of the dominion. I, too, have received letters from constituents referring to the fact that while the cost of raw material is continually falling, the price of manufactured goods has not fallen proportionately. Of course there has been a fall in the price of manufactured goods, but not such as to correspond with the fall in prices of raw material. That is so not only of those raw materials which pass through many and complicated processes before they become finished articles, such as wool and woollen goods, hides and leather goods, also of goods of which the processes are less complicated.

In the latter connection the hon. member referred to wheat and wheat products, such as bread, flour and bakery products. I may be accused of wasting the time of the house, but I should like to refer to a letter I received only yesterday from one of my farmer friends who tells me that he has just received settlement for five steers. The five animals weighed 3,710 pounds, and he received for them $30,86. For one steer weighing 530 pounds he received $3.18, for another weighing 770 pounds he received $8.47; for another weighing 950 pounds, $8.76 and for two steers weighing 1,460 pounds he received $10.45. These were small steers, but he claims they were well nourished and in good condition. Marketing costs were $37.18; then, for two calves weighing 470 pounds he received $16.92, which he regarded as a very excellent price. At the same time he sold these animals he was offered $2.50 for a pig fifteen months old. Refusing the offer he slaughtered the animal, realizing therefrom 80 pounds of lard and 325 pounds of pork. Naturally he wants to know why there should be such an enormous spread between the cost of his raw material and the selling price of his products, and why the men in the towns and villages have to pay such high prices when they go to the butcher shop to buy meat.

By the same mail I received a letter from a man who had made a shipment of wool. He said he shipped 454 pounds and it was sold for $25.48; that his expenses were, for stockman's supplies, sacks, twine and dip, $9.08; freight, $7.40; operating expense, $4.54; and he received a cheque for the balance, $4.46—for 454 pounds of wool! He wants to know why it is that he should get so little for his wool and yet have to pay so much for clothing, whether underwear or other clothing. Of course every hon. member of this house realizes that many factors enter into the question; there is the cost of distribution, overhead, wages, interest, advertising, and other almost unavoidable costs. But apart from these it seems to me that there are perhaps other factors which should be taken into consideration by the committee or the organization to which this question might be submitted.

The resolution proposed by my hon. friend reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, an immediate inquiry should be made under the provisions of The Research Council Act, Chapter 177, R.S.C., 1927, or by other means, into the causes underlying the wide spread between the prices of raw products and the prices of goods manufactured from such products.

I have already said that I have pleasure in seconding this resolution because I believe some very interesting discoveries will be made when such examination is proceeded with. There are two aspects of the question to which I would like to draw attention as entering into the high cost of manufactured goods. One is the unwarranted inflation of capital structures due to the interference of finance with industry. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), speaking in this house the other evening, used words of this kind. He said:

I was talking recently to one of the most important business men of Montreal. I asked him "Could you point out any large enterprise in Canada that in one way or another is not built upon fraud? Fraudulent processes or watered stock?" He is a very cool-headed fellow, connected with one of the largest banks in Montreal. He thought a minute, and said, "There may be, but I know none.'

This quotation is from page 1726 of Hansard of February 2. Quite recently the Montreal Witness contained an article by Doctor D. L. Ritchie. The article was headed "Astounding." Part of it reads as follows:

Recently in one of his public speeches, Mr. Taschereau made the startling, indeed, the astounding statement that the power, paper and pulp companies of eastern Canada with an original capital of $30,000,000, had within a few years enlarged and financed themselves into a capital of $714,000,000. The mere statement takes one's breath away. The frog that dreamed of blowing itself as big as a cow is not in it with such inflation; but, when one thinks of all that it means to-day and to-morrow in the lives of thousands who were induced to invest in these companies, one is amazed that there is no concerted public action demanding a judicial examination of how such an inflation of capital ever came to be, for Mr. Taschereau added that in his judgment the value of that $714,000,000 was to-day not more than $25,000,000.

I think it was in November that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), speaking in this house, quoted from some evidence given before Sir Henry Drayton's tariff commission of 1919 by the late Senator McSweeney. One paragraph reads as follows:

The directors in Dominion Cotton were directors in Dominion Textile; A. F. Gault, Sir Rodolphe Forget, Sir Herbert Holt, and the others. And this stocks pays them, according to the investigation held in Ottawa, I think before Pringle, 312 per cent annually. In other words, stock which cost them $10 a share is now in this depressed market worth $1,620. Can you find any gold mine in the world doing better than that?

These are all illustrations of the influence of the interference of financial men and corporations with industry, first of all by gross inflation of capital structures, and then by making demands upon the management of industry to earn dividends thereon.

The hon. member for Assiniboia has already referred to the high protection now afforded to manufacturing interests in this country. It has been frequently said in this house by the proponents of high protection that no advantage is being taken of that protection by the manufacturers. That statement cannot be correct; it would be contrary to human nature. In order to obtain all that the traffic will bear, our manufacturers have been demanding and receiving higher and higher protection all the time. I therefore support the resolution, in the hope that some good may result from the investigation.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): There is an expression that I have used in this house on former occasions, taken from Bastiat, and I want to repeat it because it should be graven on the mind of every man in this house. It is this:

Study all economic questions from the consumers' standpoint, for the consumers' interests are the interests of the human race.

Every improvement in the methods of production or distribution of goods should result in lower prices to the consumer. If it does so result it benefits the whole human race—the consumer, which includes everybody, because he has more goods available for consumption; the producer, because he has more employment in producing that greater quantity of goods.

Let me give you an example. Take the printing industry. Prior to the invention of printing, the transcribing of the written word was a slow and laborious process, and not many men were employed in it. Their work was physically painful; their wages were small, and very little reading matter was produced and made available to the people. Then someone invented printing. What was the result? Printed matter became so cheap, that the advantage of the new invention passed on to the consumer in the form of cheaper printed matter resulted in an ever greater and greater demand for the printed word. Instead of a few hundred men being employed in transcribing the written word thousands nay, millions of men were employed, and the wages they received were infinitely greater than the wages of the old-fashioned hand writers. People throughout the world were enlightened, received the benefits of knowledge, which can be traced directly to the invention of printing and the passing on to the consumer of the benefits of the invention. The men who profited by the process, although they made not nearly so much profit per written sheet, found their aggregate profits enormously greater than they otherwise would have been. Suppose those in charge of that industry had said: "We will not pass on this advantage to the consumer; we will appropriate to ourselves all the advantage of the new invention, charge as much as we ever did for the written page, and put the profit in our pockets,"—what would have been the result? No increased demand for printing, no increased number of people employed in the industry—a larger profit on each individual sheet to be sure, but the aggregate profits would not have been as a drop in the well compared with what they are to-day.

Take another example, the invention of the loom. Before the time of that invention cloth was made by a slow and laborious process requiring a great amount of human labour to produce it, so much, indeed, that people could not afford many clothes, and what they had were of the coarsest. Someone invented the loom. Those engaged in the industry, seeing this new machine coming and throwing them out of employment said, "This machine is going to take away our livelihood", and they proceeded to wreck the machines and had to be restrained by law. What happened? They soon discovered that the invention of this new process was cheapening the production of cloth so that now everyone was buying cloth; the demand increased so enormously that more men than ever were employed in the industry. The benefit was passed on to the consumer. All humanity profited by the advantage of having cheaper clothing. Those engaged in the industry profited because they had more work and better wages, and those who owned the industry found that their profits were greater in the aggregate, though they might be less on each piece of cloth. This, then, we can take as the rule: that wherever the advantage of an improvement in method or process of production or distribution is passed on to the consumer in the form of lower prices, all humanity benefits; but whenever an attempt is made to retain that advantage to one person or group of persons, whether capital or labour, whoever they may be, the result is less employment for the human race and nothing added to the aggregate wealth of the world.

Improvement should always result in lower prices. When an improvement in any process or the invention of a new machine does not result in lower prices, then one of two things is true: either that machine is not truly a labour-saving device, or somebody is taking too heavy a toll and profiteering by it. It is quite conceivable that a new machine or a new process of producing a certain article might be invented, and that the labour cost required to produce that machine might be greater than the labour saved by the use of it. But that does not often happen. Generally there is a real saving in labour, and unless it is passed on to the consumer in the form of lower prices, the result is less wealth for the human race, less employment, smaller profits for those interested in the industry, and more misery in the world.

To-day the tendency throughout the world is to keep prices up. Whenever any institution or industry installs new machinery or improves its processes, the last thing they think of is passing the benefit on to the consumer; they want to retain it to themselves; and in order to conceal their profits, as my hon. friend from Last Mountain has said, they call in the high financier. They water their stock and expect the industry to pay profits on that water. As a friend of mine once put it, the greatest need of Canada to-day is some means of protecting her good business men from her big business men. The good business man improves his methods; the big business man sees the possibility, because of these improved methods, of increasing profits if he can get control of the industry—and he does so. He gets control and then proceeds to find ways and means of keeping prices up, retaining for himself and his associates the advantage of these inventions which should be passed on to the consumer.

In the days of our grandfathers a man could build a flour mill on the side of a stream and grind the people's wheat into flour. At that time we had a law which provided that no miller could take more than 20 per cent toll on the grain he ground. A farmer could take 187½ pounds of wheat to the mill and for that receive 100 pounds of flour, 50 pounds of bran and shorts, leaving 37½ pounds with the miller as his toll. And at that rate many millers laid the foundations of substantial fortunes. To-day I live within one hundred miles of one of the most modern mills in the country, and it takes 540 pounds of wheat to buy 100 pounds of their flour, and I get no bran or shorts. That is in one modern up to date mill. Not very far away in another direction a farmer has erected a small mill and he will grind wheat and deliver it in the same town at the rate of 100 pounds for 360 pounds of wheat. This would seem to indicate that the larger the mill the higher the prices they have to charge. I cannot believe that, with these immense mills with all modern machinery and with labour costs reduced to a minimum, it is necessary for them to charge such prices. If it is, then I say they are not economical, and I think it would be very interesting for the government to find out exactly why it is that with all these modern inventions and all these improvements in processes of production and in methods of distribution, we find ourselves paying ever higher and higher prices instead of lower prices. I do not think it would be a very expensive thing to get at the facts; it would be merely a matter of gathering of statistics to find out the cost of producing and distributing goods: What are your capital costs? What are your labour costs? What are your selling costs? What do you pay in rent? What do you pay for the lease of land, and so forth? These facts can be easily discovered. Let the information be gathered in the form of statistics and it is not a difficult matter then to interpret them. If we got such information I believe we should find that in many industries we are paying far more than is at all necessary for the products we buy.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): This resolution asks for an inquiry under the Research Council Act. There is ample power under that act to inquire into the subject under discussion. Under section 10(c) of the act the council is empowered to undertake in such a way as may be deemed advisable researches with the object of improving the technical processes and methods used in the industries of Canada, and of discovering processes and methods which may promote the expansion of existing or the development of new industries. And under section 10, subsection (c), paragraph (vii) the council has power to carry out researches, the object of which is to improve conditions in agriculture.

Under both these sections I think there is ample power, and the illustrations given by those hon. members who have spoken before me, as well as the few illustrations I will give, will, I think, impress upon the government the necessity of having an inquiry.

A few days before leaving for Ottawa to attend this session, I saw a demonstration of General Motors in the city of Swift Current. They had three or four different makes of cars there, and one of the representatives of General Motors seemed to think that a Chevrolet car was the kind of car that the farmers in that district should buy. It would represent a price of around $900, a reduction of $400 odd as compared to what it was a few years ago. For that car, priced at $900, the farmer would have to pay 3,600 bushels of wheat, and when that car was selling for $1,300 or thereabouts, 3,600 bushels of wheat would have bought three of them.

In Montreal this past summer harness leather, but not made into harnesses, was worth 40 cents a pound, and at the same time cow skins were worth a cent a pound. Shoes were selling at from $7 to $10 a pair, while calf skins were selling at 10 cents apiece. The hon. member for Assiniboia spoke about wool and the cost of the articles manufactured therefrom. A few days ago there appeared in one of the western papers a letter from a gentleman in the province of Saskatchewan, telling his experience with wool. He was offered from two to three cents a pound for his wool, according to grade, colour and so on. They could not get it much lower than that—it varied from two to three cents. He accepted that price and shipped the wool to a woollen mill in Ontario to have it made into blankets. When he received the blankets he sold them in competition with the stores and realized eighteen cents per pound for his wool, after allowing for freight on the wool from Saskatchewan to Ontario and on the blankets from Ontario to Saskatchewan.

Last summer a farmer went into his home town to get a pair of shafts for his horse rake. He went to the Massey-Harris agency, where he was quoted $4.50. He thought it was too much and said he would go to the planing mill and get them made. The agent offered to order them from the mill for him, but he said he would do it himself. He went to the mill and had the shafts sawn into the right shape, and the completed article cost him $1. He had to drill a couple of holes before he could use them, but I think this illustrates the great difference there is in the cost of manufacture of certain articles and the retail price. It might be interesting to note that the Massey-Harris agent told him that as they were selling very little new machinery, they had to charge more for the parts.

Another farmer in the same district bought a set of bob-sleighs for which he paid $55. Last winter he thought he would try to make up a set. He took his own timber out of the bush, had it sawn, and made up the sleighs. He bought some bolts and used the shoeing off some old sleighs. His actual outlay was $4.25, his time being put in for nothing. While it may not be just as good a set as he could have bought, they answered the farmer's purposes just about as well as the set for which he had paid $55. The shoeing, not being new, may wear out a little more quickly, but the sleighs are very serviceable. The same farmer needed some doubletrees, and upon pricing them found that they would cost $3. He had them made up at the local mill at a cost of eighty cents, and then used some paint which he happened to have around to finish off the article.

With mills and factories properly equipped to manufacture these things, there would seem to be too great a spread between what they charge and what it costs a man to have them made in a rather crude sort of way. These illustrations would seem to prove that there is too much difference between the cost of raw material and the price of the finished product. I support the resolution because I believe that valuable work can be done by the research council along these lines.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there are a few things which I should like to say in regard to this matter, but as it is now almost eleven o'clock possibly it would be just as well to call it that hour.

May I point out to the hon. member who moved the resolution (Mr. McKenzie) that it would be much better if instead of referring to the research council he referred to the bureau of statistics. The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) spoke to the point when he said that much of this information is already available and needs only to be compiled. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) quoted a section of the Research Council Act, but that refers obviously to scientific research.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Also to agriculture.

Mr. STEVENS: That is scientific research into agriculture. For instance, the council is carrying on inquiries with regard to honey, and so forth, but it is scientific research. The bureau of statistics is equipped with a staff of statisticians and economists who could handle a question of this kind much better.

There are some observations which I feel should be made in regard to this matter, and perhaps it would be as well to allow the resolution to go over for a few days. It will be up again, and I can assure all my hon. friends who have spoken that my observations on that occasion will be sympathetic and not in any sense antagonistic to the object they have in view.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, February 7, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

DOMINION LANDS ACT

Hon. THOMAS G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior) moved:

That the orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette between the 17th day of December, 1931, and the 9th day of September, 1932, in accordance with the provisions of section 75 of the Dominion Lands Act, chapter 113, R.S. 1927, and which were laid on the table on the 7th day of October, 1932, be approved.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the Toronto Star of February 6 contained an article to the effect that G. G. Serkau had said that his syndicate, strengthened by the addition of much capital, was now prepared to go ahead on its own, financing the Russian barter by itself and asking nothing of the government except a guarantee that once the barter was arranged the duties and regulations would be kept stable. I should like to inquire of the government whether or not such an offer has been received from the syndicate, and, if so, what they propose to do about it.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I think I can state definitely that no such offer has been received.

Mr. GEORGE W. McPHEE (Yorkton): In connection with the Russian deal, did the government or any member thereof have knowledge last October of the proposed deal of the Serkau-McDonald syndicate with Russia, and if so, was the subject matter of same communicated to the Prime Minister?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member should put his question upon the order paper.

Mr. McPHEE: Could I not have an answer to my question?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the hon. member will place his question upon the order paper it will be answered.

TARIFF BOARD—APPOINTMENTS

MR. JUSTICE SEDGEWICK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MITCHELL F. HEPBURN (West Elgin): Mr. Speaker, the morning papers contain the personnel of the newly appointed tariff board, naming Mr. Justice Sedgewick as chairman at a salary of $12,000. I should like to know if this is the same Mr. Justice Sedgewick who as an appointee of the Ontario government was the chairman of a commission which investigated the Ontario Hydro Commission and gave that body a complete whitewash.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEPBURN: I have not received an answer to my question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEPBURN: I should like to know if this is the gentleman who acted as commissioner to investigate the conduct of the Ontario Hydro Commission? I think I am entitled to an answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I do not think it was the hon. member's intention to ask a question but rather to make a smart remark. I do not think the government is called upon to answer frivolous questions.

MR. MILTON NEIL CAMPBELL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the acting leader of the government whether the appointment of Mr. Milton Neil Campbell to the tariff board may be regarded as a non-partisan appointment or as a recommendation of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I think it will be regarded throughout Canada as a very excellent appointment.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking for the opposition, I might say to the Minister of Justice, that we feel no more partisan appointment could possibly have been made.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will be more fortunate in having an answer to my question. I should like to know who are the representatives of Canada at the disarmament conference which has just entered upon the more important part of its work. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians have signed a petition asking the government to send the strongest men possible to this conference; the government sent two members to attend at the first part of the conference, but at the present time they are sitting in this house. Is Canada taking any part in this disarmament conference and, if so, who is representing this country?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is not here to-day I think it would be better that this question stand in order that he may answer it as Secretary of State for External Affairs. May I remind my hon. friend that the date of the meeting of the commission has been uncertain from day to day and from week to week because of various reasons which my hon. friend can readily understand. There has been the difficulty in the far east and certain changes which have occurred in the governments of France and Germany, all of which have brought about an uncertainty as to the date of meeting. If my memory serves me right the disarmament commission itself is not sitting, the only body now carrying on is the bureau of the commission upon which Canada is not represented.

PASSENGER TRAIN SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOSEPH A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), a question concerning a persistent rumour which is circulating in northern Ontario that the passenger train service will be provided in that section by trains Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 via Montreal, North Bay, Cochrane and Winnipeg. I should like to know if there is any truth in this rumour.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Such matters as running trains are not discussed in any shape or form with the government. This is entirely a question of railway management. We are not asked our opinion any more than my hon. friend is asked his.

TREATY WITH FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): I am sure we are all desirous of welcoming the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) on his return to the house. May I ask him when we are to expect an official pronouncement on the trade treaty between France and Canada?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): It is true I have had some conversations with two French governments, one succeeding the other, regarding trade relations between Canada and France. This morning I made to the Prime Minister a full report with regard to the conversations and negotiations in which I have taken part. It will rest with the Prime Minister to make any subsequent pronouncement to the house.

ANYOX, B.C., DISTURBANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he has been instructed or asked by the British Columbia government to send armed boats and mounted police to Anyox, B.C.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I might say that on Sunday a communication came from the attorney general of British Columbia informing this government that there was some trouble at that time at Anyox, and stating that on account of weather conditions he had been unable to place provincial police in that district. He had attempted to do so by aeroplane. He also suggested that as there was a government fishery cruiser at Prince Rupert, it might be sent down to Anyox with, I think, four provincial police. I believe that was arranged. I have no particulars as to the nature of the trouble.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Has any further news been received since yesterday?

Mr. GUTHRIE: None since Sunday.

NEW ZEALAND BUTTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): I hold in my hand letters from farmers' organizations of Water Glen and Calumet, Alberta, complaining of New Zealand butter coming into Canada. Is the government doing anything to safeguard the interests of Canadian farmers in this respect?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Last calendar year, 1932, there were entered for consumption in Canada 50,000 and some odd pounds of New Zealand butter. There was also entered in bond a quantity amounting to about 400,000 pounds. The total production in Canada of dairy and creamery butter was over 300,000,000 pounds. I simply submit these figures to my hon. friend as an answer to his question as to the necessity at this time of extraordinary action on the part of this or any other government in the premises.

DEPORTATION OF PETER VERIGIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Minister of Immigration whether there is any reason for the very great haste and secrecy in connection with the deportation of Peter Verigin?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): The hon. member, usually well informed, is entirely ignorant of the facts so far as the deportation of this man is concerned. There is no secrecy, no haste about it. Verigin knew months ago that he would be deported. His solicitor was so advised. Months ago this same solicitor, who is one of Verigin's followers, came before me and argued his appeal. This solicitor and counsel admitted that he should be deported and wanted only time to fix up his affairs. Months were given him to fix up his affairs and if I have anything to do with the matter, he, as an undesirable alien, as the record clearly discloses, certainly shall be returned to his country of origin as the law contemplates.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to continue in force until March 31, 1934, the provisions of an act to amend the Income War Tax Act, chapter 44 of the statutes of 1932, and to provide that the persons therein described shall be liable to pay the tax thereby imposed in respect of salaries or pay paid to them by the Dominion of Canada during or in respect of the fiscal year 1933-34, in accordance with the provisions of the said act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 20, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SALARY DEDUCTION ACT

PROPOSED CONTINUATION OF DEDUCTION OF TEN PER CENT FROM INDEMNITIES AND SALARIES

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to continue in force the provisions of the Salary Deduction Act 1932. until the 31st day of March, 1934, and to provide that the provisions of the said act shall apply to the indemnities of members of the Senate and House of Commons for the session of parliament which commenced on the 6th day of October, 1932.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance be good enough to give the house an explanation of what this resolution means?

Mr. RHODES: If it is agreeable to my hon. friend I think we would do well to go into committee first, and have the explanation at that time. Otherwise our discussion would be limited.

Mr. DUFF: I am quite agreeable to that procedure, but I want to protest again against the introduction of this resolution.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough has asked the reason for the resolution before us. I believe it is self-explanatory. It is intended to be the basis of a bill which will have for its object the continuance for one more year of the salary deductions of last year. With one exception the bill, if it is approved by the house, will be precisely the same as that of last year. The only difference is that it will contain a clause making it clear that the indemnity for the present session of parliament will be taxable for income tax purposes in the taxation period of 1933. The object of that provision will be readily apparent to hon. members. Otherwise an injustice would arise in the case of any members whose indemnities would be increased out of proper proportion to the amount of income tax which they ought properly to pay in any one income tax period.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I gave last year, I do not wish to be taken as in any way approving the passing of this resolution. At this stage it is not my intention to repeat my former arguments. The statements I made to the house last year will be made even more forcibly again this year. I am absolutely and irrevocably opposed to the adoption of this measure and any bill which may be founded upon it, or any bill which may be founded upon a similar resolution. I reserve my right to protest on every occasion the matter may be brought before the house, namely when the bill may be introduced, and when it appears for second reading.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make some observations concerning the resolution now before us. Last year and the year before there were no very strong protests against the reductions, because we wanted to give the government a chance. However during the first part of this session hon. members of the opposition have proved that the high tariff policy of the government has caused the external trade of our country to decrease. We maintain that the worries obtaining in many homes may be traced directly to the salary cuts and that they affect internal trade. The resolution before us constitutes one of the silly policies inaugurated by the provincial government of Ontario. Without inquiry this government has followed the example set by the Ontario legislature. I should like to offer a few suggestions before the government make any definite decision in this matter; there is still time for them to change their minds.

First of all, there are eight vacancies in the Senate. The government have a majority in the Senate, and they are sure to carry their legislation through that body, whenever they think fit. What is the necessity of spending $32,000 per annum in order to fill those vacancies? The government could wait until a time immediately preceding the next general elections, whether they take place this year or next. If they take place this year the government would save $32,000 and if next year, $64,000. In this particular I offer another suggestion to the leader of the government:

There might be some applications for senatorships. Quite so. I suggest the government should notify all the applicants that only one application should be sent, and when a second application is sent, the government should take the stand that the applicant would not get the job. They should post notices, or in some other way notify those who want to be appointed to the Senate that if they come twice to get the appointment they will get nothing. They should be notified that if a man, after having applied to the Senate, sends his friend or any one else, or canvasses any ministers of the crown, he will be sure not to get the job. This is a very practical and timely suggestion, and will give the Prime Minister and other members of the government a chance to enjoy more peace and rest. I suggest that before cutting salaries the decision should be made that no other Senator should be appointed before the next general election.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank hon. members very much for carrying my first suggestion and I hope anything further I have to say will be received in the same spirit. In our confederation there are nine provinces. Citizens of the province of Ontario as well as those of the province of Quebec are interested in the welfare of the seven other provinces of our dominion, from sea to sea—but not farther than that. We are not interested in the situation obtaining in Newfoundland. What happens in Newfoundland is of no particular interest to us, since it took a slice from Labrador, thanks to the indulgence or diplomacy of the Privy Council. I learn from the press that the government has loaned $700,000 to Newfoundland; that is a large amount of money. I learn, further, from the press, Mr. Speaker, that on two previous occasions the Canadian government saved Newfoundland from bankruptcy.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask a question. I should like to know to whom the hon. member is speaking; Mr. Speaker is not in the chair.

Mr. POULIOT: True, Mr. Speaker is not in the chair but—

Mr. DUPUIS: And the hon. member addresses his remarks to Mr. Speaker. He does not say "Mr. Chairman."

Mr. POULIOT: Well, Mr. Chairman, I shall continue by arguments. I feel I should thank the committee for their kindness in listening to my remarks with such great attention. But may I say that what I am telling you is most important? I see that this government has loaned $700,000 to Newfoundland; has saved that dominion twice from bankruptcy. These are large sums of money. We are not interested in the welfare of Newfoundland any more than that there are human beings there; we are not more interested in their affairs than we are in the welfare of Germans, French, Spaniards or Roumanians.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Oh, yes, we are.

Mr. POULIOT: I know my hon. friend from Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) will go to Fort Saskatchewan and console his friend Maloney.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Hon. gentlemen will please keep order and allow the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) to continue his remarks.

Mr. POULIOT: It is only proper that the government, before thinking of making another cut in salaries, should ask Great Britain to restore the money which has been advanced to the Newfoundland government. I ask my good friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes): Where did he get that money? He should get back that money. If it was loaned on the advice of the Prime Minister the Prime Minister was wrong, I am sure if my good friend the Minister of Finance had been left to his own judgment he would never have done it. There are perhaps millions of dollars that should come back from there into the Canadian exchequer to fill the hole that should not be filled by cutting the salaries of the civil servants.

Besides that, I saw in the papers some time ago that a gentleman by the name of Kenneth G. Rea, had sailed on the Empress of Britain to begin the construction of a Canadian legation in Tokio. Is that work undertaken for the relief of unemployment in Canada? Will Canadian materials be used? Will Canadian workmen be employed? Before such work is begun, or before any payment is made on account of it, would it not be better to obtain the assurance that a Japanese legation will be built in Ottawa at the same time?

There is something else, something extraordinary. It is this, that the government has seen fit to make a loan of $1,500,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway without interest, and at the same time the Canadian Pacific Railway has enough money to buy $2,000,000 worth of dominion bonds bearing interest at four per cent, which means that the government is paying four per cent on $1,500,000 of Canadian money, something very extraordinary—inconceivable. If the government forced the Canadian Pacific Railway to pay four per cent on that $1,500,000 it would mean $60,000; in other words that 600 poor little civil servants who will have to suffer a cut of $100 would be exempt, and that the company would have to act in accordance with what is done in business circles, namely that people who have money can pay interest when money is loaned to them.

Another suggestion that I would make, not to the Minister of Finance but to his leader, would be to stop the gambling in wheat. When the matter came before the house the Prime Minister said it would serve no good purpose to give us full details although not only each member as representing the constituency that sent him here was interested but Canada at large. I asked him to clear the galleries in order to take the house into his confidence, but got no answer from him. It is time for him to stop that extravagance, which serves no good purpose but is rather an embarrassment.

There is another thing. When Adam was in the Garden of Eden—

An hon. MEMBER: Tell us about Eve.

Mr. POULIOT: No, there is no question about women. Some day there may be a lady in the cabinet, but to-day as there are only men, I will speak about the first man. After he ate the apple he was ashamed—

An hon. MEMBER: Maybe it was an onion.

Mr. POULIOT: No, it was not an onion, because at that time there was no culture of onions. Onions grew wild in Egypt then. After he had eaten the forbidden fruit he clothed himself in a fig leaf, but the Prime Minister, the apostle of "Canada first," is riding in an American car, and instead of a fig leaf we find him using a silver maple leaf to hide the American origin of his car. Now here is a most important point. The members of the government get $2,000 a year for their cars. I see a car here every day at the door of the east block bearing the number BB-1 or something like that, I have no objection to the number, but I have an objection to Canada's coat of arms being on this car. If the car belongs to the country I do not see why the country has bought for the Prime Minister, the apostle of "Canada first," an American made car. If it is privately owned by that gentleman, he has no right to put the coat of arms of Canada on his car.

An hon. MEMBER: How do you know?

Mr. POULIOT: Everyone knows, if they don't they are ignorant. That is the point I make; first I do not subscribe to paying $400 of my salary to keep that American automobile for the Canadian Prime Minister. Perhaps he does not know, perhaps that car was sold to him under the pretence that it was Canadian made. But if you look at the list of Canadian automobile manufacturers, I defy any hon. member from the other side of the house to say that the Stearns-Knight Company has a factory in Canada. Where is it? No one answers. I say there is none. Well, that is strange. Charity begins at home; why not buy a Canadian made car? Canadian made cars were good enough for Mr. Baldwin, they were good enough for members of the delegations from other parts of the empire who came here last July. But the Prime Minister of Canada has an American car. Canada first!

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: But there is something else. If my hon. friend will not keep silence I will tell him some very unpleasant things.

Mr. Chairman, I am a poor man. Most of us are poor men. The indemnity is not a salary. We come here at great sacrifice. During the time I have been here I have heard members from the province of Quebec as well as members of the Progressive party asking for some concession in this matter. Certainly there is not a single member of moderate means who does not attend the sessions of parliament at great sacrifice to his business or his practice, whatever may be his trade or profession. We are here to fulfil a duty. Some people do not agree with the views I express, but I can say that when members are polite to me I am equally polite to them and I treat them just as well as they treat me—some times much better. I must repeat that we come here at a great sacrifice, many members of parliament, gentlemen of culture who have done well in their profession and who have done well for the community, men from every part of the country, from British Columbia to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. These gentlemen realize that there is such a thing as public spirit in this country and we do not come here merely for the honour of it, which means very little. Indeed, it is troublesome rather than honourable to be a member of parliament, although everyone appreciates the fact that the members of this house have enjoyed the confidence of those who have sent them here. Still, I say, the government must realize that an indemnity of $4,000 does not go very far.

We have to give more to charity to-day than anyone else. It is all very well to quote scripture and to say that a cup of cold water given in the Lord's name will not be forgotten, and so on. We have to be charitable not only as members of parliament but as private citizens. The fact remains, however, that members of parliament are called upon to make greater sacrifices than the ordinary citizen has to make. The Prime Minister himself has appealed on several occasions to private charity on behalf of the unemployed; he has asked the Canadian people to come to the assistance of those who are out of work. The government itself cannot do anything. I do not say that any member of the cabinet is insincere; I believe they are all sincere. But I am sure they realize by now that they are unable to do anything practical for the relief of unemployment.

People speak of the back to the land policy, but that means nothing; it only means that some people are of the opinion that those who are on the land are much better off than the unfortunate people in the city. A good many people who have been in the cities for a considerable length of time are returning now to the paternal shelter because there is no more work for them in the urban centres. Others have therefore to come to their assistance. We find that not only the children, but also the sons in law, the daughters in law and the grandchildren in many cases are coming once more under the paternal roof. According to the last report of the director of unemployment relief, we find that the government gave only three meals on one day to each of the unemployed; they fed these people only one day, and during the other three hundred and sixty-four days these unfortunates had to be fed by private charity. Similarly the government afforded one half of them shelter one night and for the rest of the time private charity was responsible for their accommodation.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh no; I am going to say all I have to say; I am going to say it for the benefit of those who, having ears to hear and eyes to see, will neither see nor understand.

I am a poor man, Mr. Chairman; my friend from Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père), is a poor man; so are my friends from St. Henri (Mr. Mercier), from Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier), and from Gaspe (Mr. Brasset), and the majority of us. Now each of us has to subscribe $400 from our indemnity for purposes of private charity, and we have to subscribe that money to some millionaire in the cabinet. The five of us—taking us as examples—have to subscribe $400 each as a contribution either to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of Customs or to the hon. gentleman who presides at meetings of the council in the absence of the Prime Minister. I say, we have subscribed that money to millionaires. Is it fair? I do not think anyone will suggest that for a moment. Well, here is the automobile proposal, which the government apparently will not consider. I said last year and I repeat this year that I sincerely believe the salaries paid to members of the cabinet are inadequate. In ordinary times I would be in favour of voting a salary of $25,000 at least to each one of the cabinet ministers and I would be willing to vote a salary of $50,000 to the Prime Minister, because I do believe that the Prime Minister has a more arduous task than the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway or the president of any private concern. At the present time however we are not asking for anything more than what is due to us.

What is improper and indecent is this. The year before the salaries were cut the Prime Minister had sent the then Minister of Labour, Senator Robertson, to the west to get in touch with the people, and that hon. gentleman saw for himself the difficult conditions that existed out there; and after he had been converted he said in answer to my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) who was pointing out that the farmers of the west had no money. "Why have they not any money?" Senator Robertson went to the west and when he came back his report was so unfavourable that the Prime Minister could not help realizing the situation and he wanted to do something to assist these people who were in distress. After that it was decided to cut the salaries of the civil service, to cut the salaries of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate and of everyone else, thus increasing the distress that existed in every home.

People everywhere simply could not believe that a member of parliament was subscribing $400 a year to a millionaire like the Prime Minister or a millionaire like the hon. member who replaces that gentleman when he goes away, or a millionaire like the Minister of National Revenue, or for that matter any one of the millionaires in the cabinet. They cannot understand it. They do not realize that so many of us have to subscribe so much each for this purpose. The Prime Minister subscribed to the charity drive in Ottawa $250 of the $400 he is taking from my indemnity.

No one can justify the discrimination of the cut in the eyes of the people. Only two members besides myself had the courage to speak of this matter in the House of Commons—my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond) and my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I fancy that there must be remorse among the members of the cabinet.

Do hon. members realize that $2,000 is too much to pay for automobile service in these times? You can hire a taxi for a quarter and if you add ten cents to that by way of tip, that makes thirty-five cents; use the taxi four times a day, and does that amount to $2,000? We have simply got to practise economy, and ministers of the government would do well if they would give back to the state the amount that they have received in respect of automobiles during the past two years.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member mentioned the garden of Eden and I am sure the people of South Essex will appreciate his comparing their country to the garden of Eden.

Mr. POULIOT: But my hon. friend has been expelled from the garden. I do not intend to speak much longer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I will continue. I can imagine a meeting of the council. At that meeting will be certain ministers who are in touch with the people, while there are others who are not; there will be those who know of the hardships, the poverty and the misery which exists in so many homes, and there will be others who are quite satisfied so long as they themselves are not hungry or thirsty. A discussion arises as to a cut in salaries and I can see someone saying, "Ontario has given us a lead, we must follow." Probably other ministers stated their objections, but the thing was done.

I appreciate the fact that hon. members on both sides of the house are so courteous in listening to what I say. They are all supporting the stand which some of us took last year and the year before. It is to be hoped that there will be no cut this year in the salaries of the civil servants or anyone receiving moneys from the exchequer. So much the better.

I know that hon. members of this house are not hard hearted; they are compassionate and they suffer from the bottom of their hearts when they see a man who has not enough to eat, who cannot clothe his children in order to send them to school to receive an education. If we had $4,000 per year, if the ministers were allowed only $400 in lieu of private motor cars, conditions would be different because we could do much with that extra $400 to relieve those in distress. That is what should be done.

Private charity has done a lot in this regard. The Prime Minister has made an appeal to private charity, but he then goes ahead and cuts it by ten per cent. Many people have charitable obligations. I met a man who works here in the building, receiving a salary of $80 or $90 per month. He told me that his priest had said that he should support the unemployed, that the civil service had been asking him to subscribe to the Ottawa drive, and yet he was supporting two of his children with their families. I told that man he was already doing enough, that it was not necessary for him to subscribe to church charities or to the Ottawa drive. I told him that if he continued to do what he had been doing he could be cited as an example to anyone. Private charities are doing considerable to relieve conditions; the work of the St. Vincent de Paul society, the Salvation Army and the Red Cross has been marvellous.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: If the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Gott) wants to be decent, he will listen to me.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member for Essex didn't utter a sound.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I take the hon. member's word and I apologize. It must have been the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): I have not said a word.

Mr. POULIOT: I am satisfied with the hon. members' explanation.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member is cross-eyed.

Mr. POULIOT: My eyes are good enough to see the hon. member for South Essex and the hon. member for Long Lake.

I ask the support of every hon. member in this house in trying to persuade the Prime Minister and his colleagues not to cut salaries. They have decreased the purchasing power of a great many families and this example has been followed by a number of public and private concerns. The purchasing power of nearly every head of a family has been reduced. I remember distinctly that when the Prime Minister was coming from England two years ago he gave an interview in which he advocated the support of private charity. Hon. members of this house do their duty by subscribing to such private charities, to the best of their ability they endeavour to improve the conditions of the poor who surround them, and for these reasons I ask every

hon. member on both sides of the house to do his best to induce the leader of the government and his colleagues to reconsider this matter. If the government give to all of us the opportunity to help more than we can do now, our constituents, relatives, friends, and those who are in need, I have no objection to their keeping the two thousand dollars for cars provided they continue to do what I am sure they have already done, namely, give out of that sum a helping hand to private charity.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) has such a ready gift of speech, such an extensive vocabulary, that I am rather surprised that even he should deem it necessary to practise upon a committee of this house, thereby taking up its time for upwards of forty minutes, one of the speeches which he intends to make at the next election down in the constituency of Témiscouata. Without desiring to be in the least disrespectful, I may say to the hon. member that much of what he said had far better been said upon the hustings or another occasion. It had little or no bearing on the resolution which is now before the house.

But my hon. friend made certain specific statements to which I feel it my duty to refer at once, lest my silence might be taken as consent to the accuracy of his statements with respect to either the facts in question or his deduction from the premises which he laid down himself. In the first place my hon. friend said that this government had lent some $700,000 odd to Newfoundland. This government has done nothing of the kind; it has not lent one cent to Newfoundland either now, recently, or at any time.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RHODES: I have listened in patience to my hon. friend for forty minutes and I think I have a right not to be interrupted while I occupy the time of the house for such few moments as may be necessary while I reply to the statements which he has made, following which I shall submit to any questions which my hon. friend may wish to put to me.

My hon. friend has said that Newfoundland means no more to Canada than does some foreign country. I do not think he will have many other members in the house or people in the country who will subscribe to that kind of view. Newfoundland is the oldest dominion under the crown. It has been, and quite properly so, one of the boasts of the British people that they have always met their obligations. There has never been a default. When it was open to us in cooperation with the mother country, to lend a hand to the oldest dominion, a sister dominion, I claim we are entitled to consideration for having come to her assistance under those circumstances. What we did was to say to the banks who came to the assistance of Newfoundland at that time, that we would stand behind them in cooperation with the mother country in case eventually Newfoundland found it impossible to meet her just obligations. So far from being criticized, I think we have every reason to take credit for having lent that helping hand under those circumstances. I do not need to place it on the ground of patriotic consideration. If, as has been the case in times past, we have come to the assistance of those who have met with disaster in foreign countries, surely we are entitled to come to the assistance of our sister dominion, Newfoundland, in the circumstances.

My hon. friend has referred to the fact that we have sent money to Tokyo to build a legation. We have done nothing of the kind. We have not sent a dollar. That arrangement in detail will, I have no doubt, be discussed when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are under review. When it is discussed, I have every reason to believe the arrangement which was entered into because of the patriotic action of the Minister to Japan will be approved by this house and by the country. It is fortunate that we have in the public service of Canada a man with such high ideals of the public service as has the Minister to Japan.

My hon. friend used an argument which I know rolls like a sweet morsel upon the tongues of some hon. gentlemen, especially when they are discussing before a popular audience the shortcomings of the administration, when he referred to the fact that the government had lent $1,500,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That is one way of putting the situation. As a matter of fact, whether the advance was right or not, what we did was not to give the money to the Canadian Pacific Railway because it was the Canadian Pacific Railway. We had decided that inasmuch as the shops of that railway would not be opened and there would be poverty and want on the part of those who had hitherto been employed, rather than have those people go upon relief, it would be not only humane but fitting to provide a sum of money which would enable the shops to be opened, thereby affording employment to those people. All that will come as an ultimate loss to the treasury is the interest upon that sum between the time it was advanced and the time when it is repaid as I believe it will be by the Canadian Pacific. If the payment is not made for a period of years, the cost to the exchequer will not be greater or will be very little more than would have been the case if money had had to be handed out by way of relief.

My hon. friend has said by way of criticism —and I have heard this argument before—at the same time as this government gave $1,500,000 to the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Pacific bought $2,000,000 worth of bonds upon which the dominion is paying interest at 4½ per cent. That statement is absolutely untrue. In the first place the Canadian Pacific Railway did not buy one dollar's worth of bonds. That is the fact to start with, but even if we asume it had done so, there would be nothing inconsistent in the two positions because the Canadian Pacific Railway is the custodian of trust funds, pension funds, sinking funds, which have to be invested, and it would be quite fitting and proper under those circumstances for the Canadian Pacific Railway to make trust funds and invest them in trustee securities which would be the securities of the Dominion of Canada. Therefore there is nothing inconsistent in that position.

My hon. friend harps upon a familiar chord, which I have not any doubt affords sweet music in the ears of those who want to indulge in the old political pastime of spellbinding, when he deals with the question of $2,000 to ministers in lieu of motor cars. In the first place this has not been $2,000 for the last two years. It has been $1,800, because it has been subject to a deduction of ten per cent. Let me say to my hon. friend that under previous administrations these sums of money did not more than pay for the gasoline, repairs and extra tires of cars of ministers. It barely would pay for the salaries of the chauffeurs, every one of whom was provided by the government and not one of whom, if my memory serves me rightly, received less than $1,440 a year. It did not take account of depreciation of cars, some of which cost as much as $5,000 and $6,000, and most of which were imported cars at that, I may tell my hon. friend. The reason the cars were taken away from ministers and an allowance given in lieu of them was to save the public treasury some tens of thousands of dollars. I have not the figures before me, but I have perused them in times past and I may say to my hon. friend that this allowance to ministers to-day in lieu of motor cars means that that service costs the public treasury not much if any more than one-third the cost under the old arrangement sanctioned by previous administrations. I am not going to defend the amount of emoluments ministers may receive. I have had some experience in public life, and I may say to my hon. friend that any minister who is devoted to his duties leaves the service of his country poorer than when he entered it. When I say that I include as well the allowance for motor cars. It might be good politics for the ministers to say, "No allowance, we will walk." But I say that would cost this country more than the allowance of $1,800, because ten or fifteen minutes in the time of a minister on a busy day is of the utmost importance to the country, if the country's business is to be run expeditiously.

I submit my hon. friend went a little too far when he brought the name of the Prime Minister into the discussion in connection with a matter which, after all, is his personal and private affair. I say to my hon. friend that the car owned by the Prime Minister was purchased by him in Canada as a second hand car, from a man in needy circumstances who wanted money. I am not going to stress that angle of it, but I know that idea was in the mind of the Prime Minister when he made the purchase. He had to have a car of some sort and he purchased it with his own funds. So far as the Prime Minister is concerned I say I have not the slightest doubt that not only does he give away his $1,800 but much more besides. And when my hon. friend suggests that his only contribution to charity was $250—

Mr. POULIOT: I did not say that.

Mr. RHODES: I am glad to hear the hon. member say he did not make that statement, because my interpretation of his remarks was that it was his impression the Prime Minister's benefactions were limited to that small sum of money. I am glad the Prime Minister is not here. Even although he may be absent I do not purpose going as far as I might go, but I feel obliged to say that the Prime Minister in his generosity towards his fellowmen is second to no man with whom I have ever come in contact in my lifetime. His modesty in connection with his benefactions, which I know to be numerous, is in marked contrast to the character which hon. gentlemen in this house would give him when they accuse him of being a Mussolini and a dictator.

The hon. member states that members of the government do not realize that there is hardship and poverty and misery in many homes.

Mr. POULIOT: I did not say that that statement applied to all ministers.

Mr. RHODES: Well, I shall take the hon. member's remarks in their most restricted form. When my hon. friend gave utterance to that sentiment I was thinking of those conditions, when families in Canada who have hitherto known comfort and some of them luxury are to-day in distress and in receipt of public charity, but have accepted it only as a last resort. I have been wondering what they will think of the hon. member for Témiscouata when, from his remarks, they must readily realize that he begrudges making his contribution along with the contributions which must be made through the sacrifice of all the people of Canada, if we are to get over the period through which we are passing to-day.

I know about the demands made upon members of parliament. If my memory serves me correctly, I recall that when I first entered this house the indemnity was only $1,500 a year. I may say I found it hard scratching in the earlier days to make ends meet,—not that I did so, certainly, from my indemnity. Notwithstanding the demands made upon members of parliament the fact is that having regard to the costs of living, leaving aside any other considerations, a member of parliament is as well paid to-day at $3,600 as he was three years ago at $4,000. But apart from that—and I do not place my discussion upon a money basis at all—when in our need we must ask sacrifices on the part of our people to help us through this period of depression, a condition which we share in common with the whole world, we could not hold up our heads as members of this House of Commons if we asked everybody in Canada to make sacrifices but refused to make them ourselves. Let me say to the hon. member for Temiscouata that I know something of conditions in Ottawa. I know of no city in Canada where there is less distress and want than is to be found in this very city. I shall go a little farther and say that I have great admiration for the civil servants of Canada. I have seen much of them, and I know that no more loyal service could be given by any individual than is given by many civil servants to this dominion. Many of them who are serving the crown to-day are doing so at a sacrifice, because to my certain knowledge some of them are in receipt of salaries much smaller than they could receive from private employers. But the type of patriotism found in the civil service goes all down the line. I say to hon. members opposite that the great majority of the civil servants of Ottawa realize the necessity for this sacrifice, and are prepared to make their contribution. I say particularly to the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier), that there was a feeling of delight on the part of civil servants when they learned that we proposed to ask for a contribution of only ten per cent this year; many of them expected it would be much higher. We are not seeking any undue sacrifice by asking the civil servants to make a ten per cent contribution. I know of no country where it is not being done. In Australia, instead of ten per cent they are taking from 15 per cent to 20 per cent. In the great republic to the south of us, with all their wealth, last year they called upon the civil servants to take a month's holidays without pay. There is a further proposal which may or may not go through, that there should be a cut of 11 per cent on top of that.

Mr. Chairman, I do not purpose further to labour this discussion. I do not wish to be accused of lecturing; I do not wish the hon. member for Temiscouata to think that I am censorious of his rights in this committee. I do submit however that at a time like the present if we cannot forget party we ought at least realize that there are serious problems confronting this country, and that we would be better employed in devoting ourselves to the consideration of the matter in hand rather than indulging in political spell-binding such as we used to indulge in on the hustings on the back concessions in the piping times of prosperity.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, as the Minister of Finance has said, we have had in the last few minutes two political speeches intended for consumption on the hustings. One, he said, was delivered by the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), and I suggest one was delivered by himself. Perhaps I may be allowed to go back to the resolution before us, which appears as follows:

> That it is expedient to continue in force the provisions of the Salary Deduction Act 1932, until the 31st day of March, 1934, and to provide that the provisions of the said act shall apply to the indemnities of members of the Senate and House of Commons for the session of parliament which commenced on the 6th day of October, 1932.

As the minister tried to argue, it may be necessary that there should be a continuation of the legislation of last year. But I should like to ask him why in this resolution he deliberately singles out members of the House of Commons and the Senate. Why does he find it necessary to add the words:

> That the provisions of the said act shall apply to the indemnities of members of the Senate and House of Commons for the session of parliament which commenced on the 6th day of October, 1932.

Are they an entirely different class of people? Why are we singled out? Why did the minister say a few moments ago that we should be glad to give $400 from our indemnities? Sure, we are glad to give more. How much did my hon. friend give to charity last year? I have no doubt he gave three times $400. Then why should the Minister of Finance come and say we should give this $400 towards charity or poor relief? I say our salaries as members of parliament have nothing to do with our subscriptions to charity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid this resolution was hurriedly drawn, the Minister of Finance yesterday had to rise in this house and ask the indulgence of the house because he did not put his resolution on the order paper. Of course we decided unanimously to let the matter go through without the regular notice. But let us see what actually is going to continue under this resolution. In 1932 this house and Senate passed chapter 52, an act to provide for a deduction from compensation in the public service. In clause 2, subsection (b), it says:

> "Member of the public service of Canada" means every officer, clerk and employee in any branch or portion of the public service of Canada, to whom any compensation is paid, either directly or indirectly, out of the revenue of His Majesty in respect of his government of Canada, other than the Governor General of Canada, the lieutenant-governors of the several provinces of Canada, the members of the judiciary, and the members of the military, naval and air forces of Canada, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police,—

Now, Mr. Chairman, the exemptions start from the Governor General and go down to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. These exemptions are going to be asked again under this resolution which we are now considering. I wish emphatically to protest, as a member of this parliament and as a citizen of Canada. If there is going to be a reduction, whether 10 or 20 or 50 per cent, in my indemnity as a member of the House of Commons, or if there is going to be a reduction in the salaries of light-keepers, there should be a reduction all round. For instance, my hon. friend must have noticed a few days ago that in his constituency a poor light-keeper, a returned soldier, was fired from his position on Green island and a new man appointed, not a returned soldier, and this new man has to take a reduction of ten per cent, while the Governor General and the lieutenant-governors and the military and naval forces and the judges are going to get their whole salary. I say that is not right. It may be all right for the Minister of Justice to see that the judges get 100 per cent while the light-keeper on Green island gets only 90 per cent, but the people of this country believe in fair treatment for every one, and I for one protest against this resolution, and before I conclude I am going to ask that the committee rise to enable the finance minister to redraft the resolution so that every one gets the same cut as the light-keeper and the poor charwomen and the elevator men and the $100 postmasters and everybody else.

Now let us consider this matter. The finance minister said that the civil servants were delighted to accept this ten per cent cut. Well, the Minister of Finance may move in different company from what I do. I have never met one civil servant who accepted this cut with good grace. Why? If we are going to fix the salaries of civil servants every year as conditions may warrant, give them $1,000 this year and $1,200 next and $2,000 when the Grits get back in power and we have prosperous times, and then when the Tories get back in the next fifty years cut them down to $500, then I say, it is all right to make this deduction this year. But it must not be forgotten that the civil servants, whether times are good or bad, whether the cost of living is high or low, get only the same salary. Consequently I say it is not fair to these civil servants, who have made plans and commitments thinking they were going to get a certain sum, to have to take a cut of ten per cent. I know that if my hon. friend goes on the hustings at the next election and tries to defend the policies of this government by saying it was the right thing to do to cut these civil servants, who in any case we could perhaps do without, there will be certain people who will applaud. It will be fairly good stuff on the public platform. But after all is said and done the people of this country are sane. A great many shibboleths have been discussed on the public platform, but I have confidence in the sanity of the people of Canada, and in spite of the quack remedies that are offered them I say they are sane and sensible and are going to agree that if they require a postmaster he is worth $100 if he is worth anything; if they require a customs officer he is worth the amount which was agreed to be paid him under the Civil Service Act. And, coming back to the matter of salaries of members of parliament, last year I went back to my constituency and the province of Nova Scotia and I have yet to hear one criticism because I stood up in this parliament and said I was worth $4,000 and had a contract with the people of Canada to pay me that amount. I say to every hon. member of this house or the Senate that he is worth the money which the people of this country contracted to pay him. This is not a salary, it is only an indemnity, and every hon. member knows that we do not get enough to half meet our expenses, we leave our businesses and give our time and any ability we possess and do our duty as far as in us lies for the people of the country. No right thinking man in this country grudges the member of parliament $4,000, because he knows that instead of having $4,000 at the end of the year he has nothing or less than nothing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the idea of these exemptions? Why are we asked to pass this act? Have we again to fight the battle we fought last year, when members of the militia and the navy, the judiciary and the lieutenant-governors were to get their full salaries, while the page boys and the charwomen were to take a ten per cent cut from their widow's mite that the people of the country are paying them. What have we seen in the last twenty-four hours? Look what these poor charwomen met this morning. My hon. friend the finance minister talks about economy; he says expenses have to be cut. Think of these poor charwomen coming here at six o'clock in the morning, picking up the newspaper and reading that they are going to lose ten per cent of the pay the government gives them, and on the other page that the government has appointed Milton N. Campbell at a salary of $10,000 to the tariff board. Is that the kind of economy my hon. friend professes, taking from the charwomen and the elevator men and giving Milton N. Campbell $10,000—

An hon. MEMBER: And pay him a pension too.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, pay him a pension. If my hon. friend wants to economize I will be glad to help him, I will show him where it is not necessary to take ten per cent from the charwomen and the elevatormen and the lighthouse keepers. Someone mentioned Tokyo this afternoon. The gentleman who is the ambassador or commissioner or whatever he is, Mr. Marler, is a personal friend of mine, but since this government in their wisdom have settled the question that Japanese oranges are not oranges but tangerines there is no further necessity to have Mr. Marler in Japan. This government raised the tariff in 1931, putting a duty on oranges from foreign countries. The Japanese government at once protested, and taking a leaf out of the Prime Minister's book they said, "If you put an embargo on coal from Russia we will put an embargo on goods coming from Canada to Japan." They were asked by Mr. Marler why they took this attitude and he was told that it was because this government put a high duty on Japanese oranges. The result was that there was consternation in Japan and Canada. Well, the governor in council solemnly gathered his ministers around him and after some length of time, consulting Webster's dictionary they saw that tangerines were oranges; it said, "Tangerine—see oranges." Then they looked up oranges and they found that one variety of oranges was known as tangerines and another as margarines. And this government, which is so busy that a minister cannot waste fifteen minutes to walk from one department to another, passed an order in council declaring that oranges from Japan were not oranges at all but tangerines.

Now why not let us economize? Here we are going to be asked to vote $70,900 for the Tokyo legation. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, as you know, in the last two or three years our trade has fallen off more than fifty per cent and I say that if the government would take this amount which they intend to spend in Tokyo—not for business, because they do not want business from Japan—and would use it for the purpose I am going to suggest, they would be able to avoid this ten per cent cut in the salaries of lighthouse keepers and others in Canada, including the salary of the man on Green island in the county of Richmond, Nova Scotia. They have also cut the salary of the lighthouse keeper on Cranberry island. Perhaps the Minister of Finance read the Halifax papers a day or two ago; if so he will have noticed that in the terriffic storm that occurred on the Atlantic coast last week the situation was so grave that the lighthouse keeper and his family at that point could not get outside the light for thirty-six hours. The breakwater as well as the cribwork surrounding the island was washed away; the light was shaking back and forth and it was expected to be hurled into the sea. Yet my hon. friend and the government solemnly propose a vote of $70,900 towards the Japanese legation, while they are taking ten per cent off the salary of the lighthouse keeper and his poor wife on Cranberry island. Is that fair? Is it decent? If they want to save the country, if my hon. friends opposite want to save the government, surely they can do better than taking ten per cent from the lighthouse keepers and the page boys, the elevator men and the ordinary postmasters throughout this country. If they cannot do better than that then I suggest with all deference that they should resign and let someone else take charge.

An hon. MEMBER: When was Mr. Marler appointed?

Mr. DUFF: I do not care when he was appointed.

An hon. MEMBER: By what government?

Mr. DUFF: He must have been a pretty good Tory when this government continued him in his official position.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: What was the cost of the Tokyo office in 1923?

Mr. DUFF: It does not make any difference what the Tokyo office cost in 1923, because conditions in this country under the Liberals were so good that there was no necessity for us to reduce the salaries of lightkeepers, postmasters and everyone else ten per cent. On the contrary, we raised the salaries of the civil service officials twice in our period, or whilst we were in power.

An hon. MEMBER: You borrowed the money.

Mr. DUFF: An hon. member says that we borrowed the money to pay for the increased salaries we gave the civil service commissioners.

O wad some Power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us!

I do not want to use the language used by the hon. member for Temiscouata, but I would point out to the hon. gentleman that every man and woman who reads must know that during that time while the Liberal government was in power we reduced the public debt of the country to an enormous extent. Perhaps we are not entitled to all the credit for it, but everyone knows, and my hon. friend must know—the hon. member for North Grey says that he does not know, but I cannot believe that—the hon. member must know that from 1922 to 1930 the Liberal government reduced the public debt of Canada to the extent of some $285,000,000.

Mr. GOTT: You increased it many millions in railways.

Mr. DUFF: I am glad we have two financiers on your right, Mr. Chairman, although they occupy the farthest desks in the chamber towards the Speaker. I will not mention any names because it might embarrass them.

If we want to economize we must do so in the proper way and not take money from deserving people. So far as I am concerned, although I cannot afford it, if it is a matter of saving the country, or even saving the government, I am willing to have them take fifty per cent of my indemnity.

An hon. MEMBER: Not to save the government.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, even to save the government. I do say that if the government want to economize they must cut down expenses that can be done without. Let us take, for instance, the amount which it is proposed to spend in connection with our representation at Washington—$92,900. I am not going to be personal at all. This office was created and opened by the Liberal government, and I am criticizing neither the office nor the individual; but I do say that in this time of stress and strain, when it is necessary for the country to practise economy in every direction, and when the government is taking ten per cent from the $100 received by the postmaster, or $10, and when we are talking about cooperation all the time and even amalgamation, we should pay some attention to a matter of this sort. I say, close the Washington office until we get back to better times and let the British ambassador do our work over there. That would result in a saving of $92,000. The Liberal party established the office and we are proud of it, but we could afford to close it for the present. What my hon. friends opposite are doing is not building up but tearing down; they are even tearing up the page boy's little cheque every fortnight.

There are further items in the estimates to which I might refer; some of them we could very well do without. For instance, here is an item of $38,500 to provide for the payment of salaries and expenses in connection with St. Lawrence ship canal surveys investigation. It seems to me that, especially after Mr. Roosevelt's election as president of the United States, there is no hope in the near future of this canal being built by Canada or the United States, and consequently there is no need of surveys. Let us wait until the country is in a position to build a canal or to make some arrangement regarding it. At any rate, there is an amount which would make up the ten per cent on certain salaries which the minister thinks he is obliged to reduce. And I might go on to deal with other items.

While I am willing if necessary, and if it is in the interests of the country, to have salaries reduced, I do think that it is poor policy, it is bad business to economize in the way this government is doing, because it is simply withdrawing from circulation in the country millions of dollars. Financiers who know more about money matters than I do have told me that one dollar goes around seventeen times; so that if you multiply the amount which the Minister of Finance thinks he will save by means of this resolution and the act which he proposes to introduce, you can readily see that if that money were put to work in Canada there would not be as much unemployment as there is at the present time. This is following a penny wise and pound foolish policy, because every person who has had to take this reduction has had to reduce his budget. Expenditures have been reduced and for every dollar which a civil servant does not spend, hundreds of other people suffer. As I said a moment ago, there is a class which is being exempted, and this should not be. We are being solemnly asked to adopt this resolution, we will be asked to pass a bill similar to the one passed last year under which lighthouse keepers, postmasters and other civil servants will be cut ten per cent, but I think the minister should amend his resolution and strike out the reference to members of the House of Commons and members of the Senate. In the act passed last year and in the present resolution it is stated definitely that members of the House of Commons and members of the Senate have to take this ten per cent reduction. Why trot them out to the public gaze, why not leave the poor devils alone? It is bad enough that they should lose $400 without deliberately singling them out for mention. No mention is made of the high hats in the militia, no mention is made of the cocked hats in the navy, but the poor members of parliament are trotted out for mention. Subsection (b) of section 2 of the act states:

—and includes members of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, and members, officers, clerks and employees of every commission, board or corporate body.

The minister should move that this committee rise and report progress in order that he may have an opportunity to redraft his resolution. He could come back with a new bill based upon his new resolution, and we could then consider the matter. If the lighthouse keepers, the postmasters and other civil servants are to take a ten per cent reduction—a twenty per cent reduction if necessary—the judges, the lieutenant-governors, the members of the militia and the navy and everybody else should take the same reduction.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) has been consistent during the last year or more in his opposition to the ten per cent salary deduction. But when he states that by making this deduction we are saying that hon. members should receive only $3,600, he is putting an interpretation upon it entirely different from—

Mr. DUFF: I did not say that.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend did not say that in so many words, he said it by imputation. He said that he took the same attitude before his people as he did in this house, that hon. members are worth $4,000 per year. I do not quarrel with my hon. friend when he takes that point of view; if conditions were good in this country I believe hon. members ought to get $5,000 per year.

An hon. MEMBER: Or $6,000.

Mr. RHODES: Or $6,000.

An hon. MEMBER: Or $10,000.

Mr. RHODES: I believe it would be more in the public interest to overpay than to underpay a member of parliament, but that is another question. The indemnity has been fixed at $4,000, and therefore we ask that a contribution be made from that indemnity as it stands. I just wanted to make that point clear.

My hon. friend has taken exception to the wording of the resolution, but I would inform the committee that this resolution is in strict conformity with the one of last year.

Mr. DUFF: That does not make it right.

Mr. RHODES: It has been drawn up with the utmost care by the law officers not only of the house but of the Department of Justice, and I submit that from the point of view of procedure and legality it could not be drawn in any other way. Members of parliament have to be mentioned because they have a statutory indemnity, otherwise the salary deduction would be applicable only to civil servants. My hon. friend in referring to the high hats of the army, the cocked hats of the navy, and the judges, has overlooked the fact that just this afternoon we passed a resolution upon which is to be based a bill amending the Income War Tax Act. This bill is designed to continue the same deduction to the very people about whom he has complained.

Mr. DUFF: Will my hon. friend explain that?

Mr. RHODES: We assumed that my hon. friend, along with other hon. members of the house, knew what the resolution was for, otherwise he would not have consented to its going through without discussion.

Mr. DUFF: No one has seen the bill.

Mr. RHODES: It was done last year.

Mr. DUFF: We did not see this present bill and consequently we could not know what was in it.

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry my hon. friend did not raise the question when the resolution was before the house. Apparently it was understood by his leader and by those who sit around him.

I should be quite willing to have a discussion with my hon. friend in connection with the proposition which he laid down, and which, I submit, has no bearing whatsoever upon the resolution, in respect to the golden era under the Liberals and the hard times under the Conservatives. I would be very happy to discuss that with my hon. friend.

Mr. DUFF: I did not start it. One of your own members started it.

Mr. RHODES: I did not hear it started. However, I am not going to be drawn aside in a discussion of that proposition, although I am quite prepared to do so at the proper time.

Mr. DUFF: So am I.

Mr. RHODES: I should be very happy indeed to do so, and I should hope to be able to present an argument which would have some merit. I say that with all modesty.

Mr. DUFF: Let us go to Arichat and have a meeting.

Mr. RHODES: I am quite prepared to do that. If my hon. friend is no more fortunate there in the accuracy of his statements than he is here—

Mr. DUFF: That is not quite fair.

Mr. RHODES: I am going to show the thing up by chapter and verse in order to make it clear to every hon. member. When my hon. friend made the statement that I had dismissed a lighthouse keeper—

Mr. DUFF: I did not say that at all.

Mr. RHODES: I leave it to Hansard and to the judgment of this committee. If my hon. friend did not say so in so many words, he left a clear imputation; otherwise why refer to it?

Mr. DUFF: Because a returned man was dismissed.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is wrong there again.

Mr. DUFF: I am not.

Mr. RHODES: He is quite wrong.

Mr. DUFF: I am not wrong.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend will not take my word, I will ask the chairman to rule that he be compelled to take it.

Mr. DUFF: You have to take mine. I made the statement that he was a returned soldier. Mr. Chairman, on a point of order; the Minister of Finance has no right to rise in his place and say that I did not know what I was talking about and that I was not telling the truth. I ask that he withdraw.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend has again misquoted my words. I did not say that he was not telling the truth. I never used that phrase or anything of that character.

Mr. DUFF: What did you say?

Mr. RHODES: I said that if my hon. friend was no more fortunate—

Mr. DUFF: What is the difference?

Mr. RHODES: —at Arichat than he is in this committee, then it would be unfortunate for him. That is practically what I said. Then my hon. friend took the omnipotent position that he is never in error.

Mr. DUFF: Then my hon. friend also took the omnipotent position that he is never in error.

Mr. RHODES: I may say that I am the first to admit when I am in error. I have made many mistakes, but to admit that is not to admit that one has made a false statement. That is an entirely different thing.

Mr. DUFF: Take it back and play ball.

Mr. RHODES: I am taking nothing back, because I am absolutely within my rights. I think I am placing a correct interpretation upon the remarks of my hon. friend.

Mr. DUFF: Then I am not taking anything back either.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, if you cannot have order in the committee possibly the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough will realize that we are not lightly discussing matters in a smoking room; we are dealing with public affairs in a committee of the high court of parliament.

Mr. DUFF: Then the Minister of Finance should set an example.

Mr. RHODES: When my hon. friend started out to roughhouse the discussion in committee—

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The Minister of Finance used the term "rough house." I am going to ask him to withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): The term "rough house" is possibly not quite parliamentary.

Mr. RHODES: If the expression "rough house" is offensive to my hon. friend, or if the chairman rules that it is unparliamentary, I should be happy to withdraw it. When my hon. friend proceeded to mix up the discussion and to draw me away from the main point of the discussion which I proposed and still propose to carry on, he was not helping out the general tenor of discussion in this committee. I started out by saying that my hon. friend left the imputation upon this committee that I had been responsible for the dismissal of a lighthouse keeper on Green island—

Mr. DUFF: On a point of order—

Mr. RHODES: It is not necessary—

Mr. DUFF: I am speaking to a point of order.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend should at least do me the courtesy of listening until I complete a sentence. There is no point of order, I submit. I shall be the first to withdraw any imputation if my hon. friend says I ought to withdraw it. I say that the clear impression he left was that I was responsible for the dismissal of a lighthouse keeper on Green island. If my hon. friend says that that is not the position he took, I accept his word at once.

Mr. DUFF: I rise to a point of order. The Minister of Finance says that I imputed to him the responsibility of dismissing a lighthouse keeper on Green island, which is in the strait of Canso, and some miles from Petit-de-Grat. When the minister first made that statement I immediately rose and said that I did not make it. That should have been sufficient for any hon. gentleman to accept. I stated that I did not say it. I know exactly what I said, and I was very careful of what I said. All I was trying to say to the minister was that this returned soldier had been dismissed lately and another man put in his place. I did not say that the Minister of Finance dismissed him, but the Minister of Finance will agree that this government of which he is a member had to pass an order in council dismissing that man.

Mr. RHODES: I hope, Mr. Chairman, you have the point of order. I may say very frankly I did not understand it. I had started out from the point of departure in this discussion. I accept at once the statement of my hon. friend that he did not wish to leave on the committee the impression that I was responsible for the dismissal of a lighthouse keeper on Green island. I merely said at the start that that was the inference I drew. Let me say to my hon. friend that the lighthouse keeper on Green island was dismissed for neglect of duty. There was nothing political with respect to his dismissal, neither was I a party to it in any way, shape, manner or form. It may or may not have been necessary for an order in council to be passed. If one was passed, I have no cognizance of it, although I may have been present when it was passed, or it may have been passed in my absence. I set no store on that, because many pro forma orders in council are passed. But my hon. friend, if I mistake not, said in his earlier remarks that this was a returned soldier and that he was replaced by a man who was not a returned soldier. Am I right in that?

Mr. DUFF: Yes.

Mr. RHODES: My information is that the man who replaced the one who was dismissed was a returned soldier with a record at least as good as that of the one who was dismissed for cause.

Mr. DUFF: The minister admits that the man who was dismissed was a returned soldier.

Mr. RHODES: I have no personal knowledge of the circumstances. I am quite prepared to take my hon. friend's word for that.

Mr. DUFF: The man was away for one night, and his wife, who is just as good a man as he is, was there in charge of the light.

Mr. RHODES: My information is that the man who now occupies the position is a returned soldier.

Mr. DUFF: If my hon. friend says of his own knowledge the gentleman who was lately appointed was a returned soldier, I shall take his word for it and retract my statement.

Mr. RHODES: I did not ask for any retraction.

Mr. DUFF: The minister does not know whether he is a returned soldier or not.

Mr. RHODES: It has been my endeavour at all times in the house to conduct myself with reasonable decorum and, I hope, with courtesy to hon. gentlemen. I must submit that the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough is not fair either to me or to the committee in his frequent and unnecessary interruptions.

Mr. DUFF: I do not want any lecture.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend also said —and I wrote down his words—that I made the statement that the civil service was delighted to accept the ten per cent salary cut. Hansard will bear me out that I said nothing of the kind. What I said was that many civil servants were delighted when they found out that the cut had not been greater.

Mr. DUFF: What is the difference?

Mr. RHODES: All I can say is that now I can understand by that mere question how it is my hon. friend has found himself unable to follow me in this discussion.

Mr. DUFF: My hon. friend has been unable to follow me for the same reason.

Mr. RHODES: Let me say a further word. When I made reference, in dealing at an earlier stage in the proceedings with the question of the allowance for motor cars, to the fact that members of the government were busy, I was not referring particularly to members of this government; I used the term "ministers" in a broad sense as applicable to ministers of different governments at different times, and my statement had no personal reference at all.

My hon. friend made one other statement which has no bearing on the resolution, but I should like to reply to it briefly because it has been so often stated by hon. gentlemen opposite that they have come to believe it. They have frequently asserted in the house that under the Liberal administration led by the present leader of the opposition they reduced the national debt by so many million dollars. I have the figures taken from the official records, and they show that beginning in the year 1922-23 there was an increase in the national debt of $31,641,067. Following that came a series of decreases in the national debt, as follows:

| Year | Decrease |
|---|---|
| 1923-24 | $35,993,594 |
| 1924-25 | 345,589 |
| 1925-26 | 27,706,586 |
| 1926-27 | 41,896,729 |
| 1927-28 | 50,984,137 |
| 1928-29 | 71,345,528 |
| 1929-30 | 47,740,746 |

This makes, according to the records, a net decrease in the national debt during the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite from 1922 to 1930 inclusive of no less a sum than $244,371,842. But they forgot to tell the country that because of the practice which they inaugurated, instead of paying the Canadian National deficits out of the treasury of this country, of putting their endorsement on the back of Canadian National Railway notes, during that period of time the debt of the Canadian National Railways, which is guaranteed by this country, increased by no less a sum than $371,838,622, so that instead of their decreasing the national debt by $244,371,842, they increased it during their regime by no less a sum than $127,466,789.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend dispute the figures apart from those with regard to the national railway?

Mr. RHODES: I quite agree with the figures. I stated in the first instance the direct national debt was decreased under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite by the sum I mentioned, but at the same time the debt of the Canadian National Railways, which is guaranteed by this government and which is just as much an obligation of this country as is the national debt, increased by $371,000,000, so that instead of hon. gentlemen opposite decreasing, as they say, the national debt, they increased it in the sum of $127,000,000 while they were in office.

Mr. EULER: Would the Minister of Finance answer this—

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. EULER: I think I should have an opportunity to speak; I have not taken much time of the committee. Would it be fair to say that when the government took over the national railways, together with a liability of a billion dollars or more, the national debt was to that extent increased under a Conservative government? Would that be a fair description?

Mr. RHODES: It may be, but I do not think it is germane to the point I now make. It may or may not have been good policy for the government to guarantee the securities of the Canadian National Railways. That is not the point about which I am complaining, but is a different matter entirely. What I say is that when hon. members opposite say that the late government decreased the national debt by that sum, they are not making an accurate statement. To make myself clear I shall use an illustration. If a farmer who had a mortgage of $2,000 on his farm went to the bank, borrowed $2,000, and paid off $1,000 of the mortgage, it would be just as truthful for him to say he had reduced his debt by $1,000. In fact he would be $1,000 more in debt than before he went to the bank. It would be just as truthful for him to say that as for us to say that we decreased the national debt while we are guarantors of a sum of money which we owe and must pay.

Mr. EULER: They have assets to counterbalance the situation.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister has referred to an increase of the national debt by virtue of the guarantee of the bonds of the Canadian National Railways. Will he at the same time tell the committee what the increase of the assets of the Canadian National Railways has been?

Mr. RHODES: I submit, with all due deference to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, that his question has no bearing upon the matter at all.

Mr. HANBURY: It certainly has.

Mr. RHODES: It might have a bearing if the assets were revenue producing, but we have not had that experience in this country for many years.

Mr. HANBURY: And we do not expect to have it under a government with a trade policy such as that of the present one.

Mr. RHODES: As a result of that guarantee we had to pay out some $70,000,000, and we will not be very far from that sum this year.

Mr. HANBURY: And you will have to pay out more every year, so long as you continue your present trade policy.

Mr. RHODES: I suggest that is another matter, and I am prepared to discuss it at the proper time.

Mr. HANBURY: Let us discuss it now.

Mr. RHODES: I submit a resolution such as the one now before us, upon which it is proposed to found a bill, is not the proper place to discuss the government's policy.

Mr. DUFF: I did not begin this discussion. It was an hon. member in a back seat who started it. I have enough sins to answer for, but not that one.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, this discussion has taken a wider range than I think it properly should take. In justice to the administration I think I ought to say it was necessary for me to deal with some statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. RALSTON: Why did the minister not deal with just the deficits of the last two years? Why did he not inform the committee that taking all the guarantees of the Canadian National Railways for the last ten years against the reduction of the national debt, the present government has in the last two years increased the national debt more than the Liberal government did in its whole ten years in office?

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, that observation is typical of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth.

Mr. YOUNG: It is right to the point.

Mr. RHODES: It is typical of the hon. member, of the astute lawyer who can get away from the point at issue, but I suggest it has no bearing upon the discussion, nor would it have had any bearing if this government had increased the debt by a thousand million dollars. I simply dealt with statements repeatedly made by hon. gentlemen opposite to the effect that during their tenure of office they had decreased the national debt by so much, and I have confined my discussion to that point. The question of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth has no bearing upon the discussion at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No doubt we will have an opportunity for further discussion at a later time.

Mr. HEPBURN: The discussion has gone far afield, and I intend to trespass on the time of the committee for only a moment or two. I do not want the impression to go abroad that all hon. members on this side of the house are opposed to the Minister of Finance. I do not wish it to go abroad, either, that I am advocating a national policy. I am opposed to this government, and would be equally opposed to a national government. But I think in the present instance the government is taking a step in the right direction. Whether we like it or not there will have to be some measures of retrenchment, because the government of the country costs sums out of all proportion to the capacity of the people to pay. Costs of municipal, provincial and federal governments to-day total something like a billion dollars. The value of Canadian field crops to-day is something like $450,000,000, so that we readily see that it takes more than twice as much than the value of the Canadian field crop to pay for the cost of government. These extreme costs reflect themselves in trade conditions. The world is suffering from overproduction.

I have no doubt that in the main we will do irreparable damage if we insist in keeping government costs where they are at the present time. So far as I am concerned, I know I have less of this world's goods now than when I entered politics some years ago. However, the penalty I personally have to pay for keeping a Tory government in office is $400 a year. I am willing to make that sacrifice in the anticipation that some time in the near future we will have a Liberal government back in office and again enjoy prosperity.

While we are on this point I should like to assure the government that I would be prepared to support it if it were inclined to make searching inquiries along some lines. Public accounts show that we are paying $9,000 to a lieutenant-governor in Nova Scotia, $10,000 to one in Ontario, and supporting nine in all Canada. We could cut down that expense very considerably. Further, I do not think there is any necessity for 245 members in this House of Commons, and now that when we have an opportunity we should reduce the number regardless of constitutional barriers. We do not need that number of members any more than does the city of Ottawa need 245 mayors to run its municipal offices. There are too many cabinet ministers; there is too much duplication between provincial and federal services. For instance, we have provincial departments of labour and a federal Department of Labour. I am suggesting if the government is prepared to cut down expenditures I am prepared to support it, and that is going a long way for a Liberal. We could make many savings all along the line in eliminating federal and provincial duplication. We wonder, however, what the feelings of the charwoman will be when she finds her salary is again being cut and learns from the press that Milton N. Campbell, a member of this house will sit on the tariff board at a salary of $10,000 a year. I do not know what qualifications he has, except that he has been pretty consistent in his support of the Tories. We learn, further, that Judge Sedgewick of Ontario is being appointed chairman at a salary of $12,000 a year. In terms of wheat at western values it would take 60,000 bushels to pay the salary of Judge Sedgewick as tariff board chairman, and about 50,000 bushels to pay the salary of our friend and late departed member of the house.

Then, only a short time ago the personnel of the radio commission was selected. Heading the organization we find Hector Charlesworth, whose particular qualification seemed to be that in the years 1925 and 1926 he was publicity man for the Tory party in Ontario. Aside from that I do not know what further qualifications he may have to act as chairman of the radio commission. May I add that I heard him make a speech over the radio from Montreal and I can truthfully state I never heard such a terrible exhibition in my life.

An hon. MEMBER: Of course you are a judge.

Mr. HEPBURN: To use his own expression, he said there were no damned comedians in Canada. I believe if he could have listened to his own speech he would have changed his views. One further remark. The Minister of Finance said that the debt of Canada had been increased during the regime of the Liberal government. That statement is rather misleading. True, we did guarantee the bonds of the Canadian National Railways, but we got value in return. We had assets to show for it. Following his own argument by way of explanation of the guarantee of the banks for the loan to Newfoundland, he said the government of Canada did not lend the money but backed the note. By the same kind of argument will he agree that the debt of Canada has been increased $700,000 in virtue of the guarantee to the banks by the dominion.

Mr. RHODES: Certainly there is an indirect liability; there is no question of that.

Mr. HEPBURN: Then you admit that the national debt has been increased?

Mr. RHODES: When I discuss how much we have increased the national debt I am prepared to discuss it along that line.

Mr. HEPBURN: Well, as far as I am personally concerned I am prepared to support the Minister of Finance in this resolution. I do not think there is any need to waste the time of the house any longer—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEPBURN: We discussed it fully last year; it is the same thing again, exactly. I hope those on this side will let it go through without further discussion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, last year I opposed this legislation, and must maintain the same position this year. I can sympathize with the desire of the Minister of Finance to balance his budget, but it seems to me there are other ways in which this can be done than by cutting down the salaries of the civil servants. There is undoubtedly a good deal in what the member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn) has just said, that there are a great many places where economies might be effected. I think undoubtedly the government of Canada costs more than it should, but I do not believe that the economy should be effected by cutting down the salaries especially of the poorer paid civil servants. The largest item that we have in our expenditures is that recognized generally as uncontrollable expenditure, most of it interest on bonded debt. It seems to me that the finance minister might very well consider the possibility of cutting down that item. During this time of depression almost everyone has taken his loss except those who hold bonds. The finance minister said a little while ago that he thought possibly a member of parliament receiving $3,600 now is as well off as he was a few years ago when he received $4,000. I think that is probably true. But if it is true it means that the man who has a bond for $4,000 should be receiving only $3,600. I think that is drawing it very mild indeed. On the minister's own argument, that money has increased in purchasing power, he must recognize that bondholders to-day are drawing a larger amount than that to which they are justly entitled, regard being paid to the altered buying power of the dollar. It would seem to me that the government ought to take into consideration some form of conversion by which the present bonded indebtedness would be reduced so that it could be handled. I suppose the easiest and simplest way to do that would be by a form of inflation. It might possibly be done, of course, by a cutting down of the interest charges in one way or another. It seems to me we cannot maintain the policy of paying interest on our enormous debts, and especially trying to do it by means of reductions in salaries.

Again let me point out that legislation of this kind savours of class legislation, because it bears directly upon one class of citizens, namely, the civil servants, and others who draw their salaries from the government. Why should not the extra amount be raised by a steeply graduated tax on all incomes, not selecting the civil servants, but putting a tax—an extra tax—on all salaries?

I would point out that this so-called "economy" of this kind is no way of solving the economic problem that confronts Canada at the present time. I think it is recognized by all economists that what we need to-day is increased purchasing power, but legislation of this kind leads to decreased purchasing power. When the ten per cent cut was first made I think the merchants of Ottawa received a very salutary lesson in economics, because most of them experienced in their decreased sales the effect of the cut. The great majority of people spend what is coming to them, so if they have ten per cent less to buy with, that means ten per cent less business. I cannot see that for the sake of saving a few dollars we are justified in adding to the general depression.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The same money to-day will buy twenty per cent more than two years ago.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so. I admitted that a moment ago. But I say that this cut means a decrease in the general purchasing power, hence a decrease in the general volume of business, and my point was that we are taking that out of the earnings of people and are not making corresponding decreases in the amounts that are being paid to the holders of bonds.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask a question? Suppose for the sake of argument you keep the civil servants' salaries where they are, what about the workmen throughout the country who have to pay the same tax on one-quarter or one-half the salaries they had previously?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite admit that a good many workers throughout the country are having their earnings cut down and are placed in a very awkward position. That is one reason I would advocate a measure of inflation, as the only way in which this burden can be at all equitably spread over the entire population.

Mr. McGIBBON: You have not answered my question. I say if you are going to keep the civil servants' salaries at the same rate as before, what about the man who has to pay that salary with half his former income?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I have answered it; that we should raise the general price level and cut down the debts, as we undoubtedly would by a measure of deflation.

Mr. McGIBBON: You do not answer the question. The point is his tax would be doubled.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, it would not be doubled. It might be increased. My suggestion is that if we cut down the interest on the bonded debt it would not be increased.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is another question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But that is the important question. I venture to submit to the finance minister that he might take into consideration that method of balancing his budget.

Then another point. A flat rate of ten per cent is far from equitable. As we pointed out last year, it is comparatively easy for the men receiving $4,000, $5,000, $6,000, $8,000, $10,000 a year, as some civil servants do, to pay ten per cent of their salaries. It is an altogether different thing for the civil servants who receive perhaps less than $100 a month, some of them around $90 a month. To those not receiving their statutory increases it means an even heavier burden than ten per cent. That does not seem at all like equal sacrifice. I remember seeing a cartoon in an English paper months ago; I do not remember whether I called attention to it here before or not, but it seemed to me to hit the situation off very well. There was a pool of water, a ladder reached up from it, and men were stationed on different rungs of the ladder in accordance with the various grades of salary they were receiving. The man receiving the lowest salary was on the lowest rung of the ladder, his head just above the water line. Other men were up on the higher rungs. The politician comes along: Now, he says, we want equality of sacrifice, everybody one rung down. That is about the situation. Ten per cent is not equal for all. If we are going to carry out a rating of salary reductions it should be a graded percentage, giving exemption to certain people, who are receiving to-day less than a living allowance, and steeply grading it up for those receiving the much higher amounts.

I do not intend to develop again the points which we argued last year, but I wish to state that we must oppose legislation of this kind.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): As was his custom, the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), flung many taunts at the member for Long Lake. He has been doing that constantly ever since the special session some time ago. I have paid no attention to him whatever and do not intend to waste time on him to-day. He amuses me so much that I get increasing enjoyment out of the things he throws at me. But I might point out to the hon. member that while he is objecting to the economy which this government is practising, the forty minute speech he made to-day has cost this dominion no less than $2,000; and those who have figured up the cost of his speeches during the last session of parliament have arrived at the conclusion that in the past year those speeches cost the dominion no less a sum than $68,000.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): I shall come to him later on. I suggest to my hon. friend across the way and to several others that if they would cut down their speeches so as to enable us to get through the session in a shorter time and get back to our homes and business, we could save the money which those same speeches cost, and we could make this cut at the same time.

My real purpose in rising to object to the speech of the hon. member for Témiscouata is to answer a statement he made with regard to the fact that Canada had loaned Newfoundland $700,000. In this connection he said, "Newfoundland is no more to me than Germany." Is that the extent of his loyalty to the British Empire? The French Canadian is said to be the race in Canada most loyal to the empire, but if the hon. gentleman's utterance represents French Canadian sentiment then I say that loyalty is merely lip loyalty. But I refuse to accept what the hon. gentleman says as representing the feeling of the French Canadian people. I have more faith in our French Canadians than to believe his statement. I have no objection to the Germans as such; we have thousands of them in our part of the country and they make the very best citizens. But they were recently our enemies at war, and what happened in that war? Did Newfoundland respond? Did Canada respond? Did New Zealand respond? Wherever the British flag flew we found citizens of the British Empire responding to the call to arms; and to-day if the island of Newfoundland is in trouble and needs support, I do not care whether it is twice $700,000, if we have it I think we are all prepared and willing to give it to them. More than that, if Canada is ever in trouble, I am sure the British Empire as a whole will come to her support as in days gone by. For that reason I resent the statement made by the hon. member, that he had no more interest in Newfoundland than in Germany. A fellow-Britisher is a fellow-Britisher no matter where he is, and he will get my backing and support so far as I can give it; he will get the support of the empire in every corner of the world. The sooner the hon. member realizes that the better.

The hon. gentleman went on, however, to indulge in the discussion of a racial question. What has that to do with the subject which is before us this afternoon? I am sorry that the hon. member who sits right opposite me is not here, but I want to say this here and now. I have been in this house a good many years and I have never raised any religious or racial question, and my hon. friend has done so deliberately. I do not care who knows it,

I am a Protestant; I presume the hon. gentleman is a Catholic. Well, that is his business, just as my religion is my business. The hon. gentleman suggested that the reason I have not defended myself in various attacks that have been made upon me was that I was afraid. Look here, my dear sir, I say to him: you think I am afraid. Well, just change your notion, for you will get it after this every time. Don't make any mistake about that. Don't defy me, because you will find me right on the offensive every time. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that he cannot persecute thousands of people in this country without the inevitable reaction, and he will get that reaction mighty quick. That is my only answer to him.

Now, as to this deduction, I have no objection to the cut of $400, but I am glad that the government has decided not to make any further reduction in salaries. We as members of parliament and leaders in Canada must set the example; otherwise where shall we find ourselves? I accept the present reduction as a necessity, but I would ask the Minister of Finance to note this. We must not balance our budget too rapidly. We are balancing our budget and the provinces and municipalities are endeavouring to do the same, a proper thing to do. But let us remember that in balancing our budgets, the budgets of a million homes in Canada are being drawn upon. Out of that million homes you have to draw the money to enable you to balance your own budget, and we must bear that in mind. The wastefulness and extravagance of hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in office, were such that it will take twenty years to undo the wrong they did. It will take that length of time. I say therefore to the Minister of Finance, "Take your time and balance your budget, but be conservative."

One more word and I am through. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough and, I believe, someone else on the other side made reference, rather in bitterness, to the appointment of Mr. Milton Campbell to the tariff board. I thought their remarks were somewhat nasty. Let me say that I am in thorough accord with the government in putting a representative of the farmers on the board; yet hon. gentlemen oppose it. I say there is no class in the country more entitled to representation on that board than the farmers, and I am glad—

An hon. MEMBER: Put Brown on; he would be non-partisan.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): The hon. gentleman can have the representative of Lisgar if he wishes; I prefer Mackenzie. Mr. Campbell and I have lived in the same province for many years. The Tories could never lick him, the Grits could never lick him. His personality alone has been the secret of his success in his constituency. He has always been independent, he has always done what he thought was right. In this house at times he voted with this party, at times with that. I want to say to hon. members that the appointment of Mr. Milton Campbell as a member of this board will receive the approval of the people of my province. I cannot speak for Manitoba, although I feel sure that his appointment will be acceptable to that province as well. As a representative of an agricultural constituency I think I know something about the needs of the farmer, at least I ought to. Hon. gentlemen opposite, no matter what is before the house, attempt to drag in the tariff. According to them, there is nothing else but the tariff to be talked about. It is an obsession with them. But when they get a man who is an actual dirt farmer appointed to a tariff board, they turn around and sneer at him. I only hope that all the actions of the government will be as good as this one has been.

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Chairman, my taking part in this debate at this moment is inspired by the views just expressed by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn). I would not like the country to believe that there is a lack of sentiment in this house in favour of the principle underlying this resolution. I know that many Liberals, both in and out of the house, favour economy, and it is but fair, not only to the country generally but to the party I represent, that we be given an opportunity to express our side of the case.

I do not think it is a good argument against this resolution to point out that the government should have practised economy in other fields. If that is any argument at all, it is one in favour of the resolution. I do agree with my hon. friends on this side that further economies might be practised in connection with other items in the estimates, but the proper time to point that out is when these estimates are before us. If we want further economy in the general expenditures of the government, we should be ready ourselves to give an example. We should accept this deduction with grace and dignity. I believe in this contribution—I prefer calling it a contribution rather than a deduction—first, because of the material advantages it will give to the government in the expedition of business, and, second, because of the moral example given to the country in that, realizing the serious plight of the country, realizing the position in which thousands of men, women and children are placed in this period of crisis and depression, we are willing not merely to talk about it, to multiply words and speeches about it, but to contribute some of our own indemnities to help the government solve this great problem.

It has been said that the indemnity is in the nature of a fixed obligation on the part of the government. I do not agree with that statement, because the amount of the indemnity has been changed from time to time. Some years ago it was increased; times were prosperous and it was thought that members might be given a little more for their work and the expenses of their stay in Ottawa. The same principle should work the other way: when times are hard, when money is scarce and everybody is making sacrifices, members of parliament should be willing to agree to a reduction in their indemnities.

All public bodies are making similar deductions. We will have to do it in Montreal, if I may be permitted to cite that as an example. When I first took part in the administration of the city of Montreal, my colleagues and myself were hoping that we might be able to carry on without reducing salaries. But we found that that would be impossible. There was not only the financial burden of the salaries, but there was also the pressure from public opinion which demanded that the municipal employees should do their share. We have 40,000 unemployed heads of families in Montreal, which means a very large population of unemployed. I hope I will be understood when I say that I think anyone who to-day has a position and is in receipt of a salary is in a preferred position, especially when compared to those heads of families who although willing to work are unable to find anything to do. This applies not only to the higher salaried people, but even to the charwomen who were mentioned a moment ago. With all due respect to this class of people, I think that even a charwoman who to-day is employed and is receiving a salary is in a preferred position when compared to the many mothers of families who are willing to work but who are unable to find employment. I do not think it is unreasonable to ask these people to contribute their small part to the general welfare of the country.

Another argument advanced is that members of the house, being public men, are asked to contribute heavily to private charity. We all know that these demands have grown with the increased difficulties of the times, but the committee must realize that in times of stress like these we cannot rely on private charity alone. Private charity is absolutely unable to meet the demands made upon it, and must be assisted by the immense contributions of the federal, the provincial and municipal governments. I say without hesitation that I would rather see every hon. member of this house reduce his contributions to private charity by $400 and contribute that amount to be used in a public way for the dispensation of relief. It would be absolutely impossible for a city like Montreal to rely upon private donations alone. I would rather see this extra amount expended through the federal government and used in a public way in order to meet the extraordinary demands of the day.

I am in favour of this resolution. I do not care what its phraseology may be so long as it says what it means. I am quite sure that when the government asks parliament, through its members, to contribute to the general need of the day it will receive a happy reply, not only from the government side but from all sides of the house. I do not think this question should be approached either with levity or with the idea of taking a bitter stand against the resolution; it should not be contended that simply because our indemnities are being reduced by ten per cent the whole fabric of the country is going to fall to pieces. On the contrary, I say in all modesty that we should accept this reduction with grace and dignity. That is my stand upon the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: I have great respect for the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) and I like him, but I am sorry to have to disagree with him to-day, because I earnestly and sincerely believe the worry will not disappear from any home until the head of the family is sure of getting his full pay at the end of the week or of the month as was the case in good times. This is the principal argument for which I am against the cut in salaries. I also sincerely and earnestly believe conditions in Canada will not improve until people have no worry about the day after, and the only way to give them a chance to recover from the worry that exists everywhere is to return to the people the salaries that were paid two years ago.

I have listened with attention and very politely to my good friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). He knows I have a great regard for him, and I would do nothing that would be unpleasant to him, but he must admit that the Prime Minister is not the only public servant in the house; we are all alike; he is only the first amongst equals.

I admit he works hard; I give him credit for his sincerity, but from the other side they must admit that we on this side also work hard and they must give us credit for our sincerity and the sacrifices we make. Might I say to my hon. friend that we can discuss the policies and the public acts of the Prime Minister without being personal. If he leaves his car outside the east block; if I see it there and if it is an American-made car, there is nothing to prevent me from saying that he has an American-made car. It is the first thing that one sees. If I cannot say that, I would suggest to the Minister of Finance or to the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) that they have legislation enacted in order to make the person of the Prime Minister sacred in accordance with Roman law, or have it enacted that he is a god and that it is a sin to contradict him or to mention his name in a debate. I have never been personal to any member in the house. The only thing I have done has been to defend my rights as a member.

While I mentioned many matters in connection with the senators, the Minister of Finance said nothing in answer to my suggestion. I hope he will accept it, because it was made in all earnestness.

As regards the Canadian Pacific, we have seen in the press that the government has lent money without interest to that railway company. The Minister of Finance says that this has been done in order to give an opportunity to the Canadian Pacific to open the Angus shops. Well, this was a hold-up of the government on the part of the Canadian Pacific. They had the money to employ the men, but they wanted it without interest. As to their subscription afterwards to the dominion loan, what I have said is exactly what has been reported in the press.

As regards Newfoundland, a matter of sentiment, which I understand, arises; people may have friends or relatives there. That is all very well. The hon. member for Long Lake will understand my point as well as anyone. What I say is that this country of ours extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, including Prince Edward Island. I am more interested in Canada than in Newfoundland, and Newfoundland being outside the boundaries of Canada is no more to me than is the United States or any other country which is outside the boundaries of this dominion. The people in my county will be ready to do anything for those in any other province within those limits, but we are interested in Newfoundland only inasmuch as our people here are all free from care. We have first to look after our own people in Long Lake or in St. Peters or Témiscouata, wherever they are in Canada. As long as there is in this country one man who is not looked after, we cannot do anything outside. That is my view about the matter. I may be wrong; I may be right. I respect the opinion of others on that point. The question is not one of sentiment; it is one of helping first the Canadian who lives in this country or anyone who has been living here for years. It is the same Canada first policy.

As regards the legation at Tokyo, there is no smoke without fire. I do not know what happened, but what I said was after having read a dispatch in the press about the trip of a Montreal architect to Tokyo in connection with the matter. Mr. Marler might be the most wonderful minister since Metternich and Talleyrand, and he must be very popular with His Imperial Highness and the royal family, and so forth. The Japanese people are good people; they are very well represented in Canada, but my point is that it is absurd to start a Canadian building in Japan until she builds a legation building in Canada and gives the same chance to Canadian workmen in Canada as Canada gives to Japanese workmen there.

In the morning papers I have seen something in the way of educational pictures, "the spice of the program," something from the ginger group. There was the picture of Mr. Milton Campbell, the newly appointed tariff commissioner. I was glad to learn this afternoon that he has been highly recommended by the Klu Klux Klan. It is fair that he has been appointed in lieu of Conservative members who could do better. Mr. Milton Campbell has won the race over his illustrious namesake, Sir Malcolm Campbell, the speed king, and made a new record. I wonder if his accomplishments on the tariff board will be just as notable as those of Sir Malcolm Campbell at Daytona Beach. May I suggest to the government that they retain another five per cent from his salary, if the ten per cent is to apply, in order to supply the newly appointed commissioner with an encyclopedia of general knowledge, because the Minister of Finance knows that there is a great love of books in the far corner, and if he looks back at the speeches delivered by the new commissioner while a member of parliament, he will see there are many quotations. If he does not want the new commissioner to build a shrine in the basement of some printing office, he must supply him with books—and what would be better for him than a nice encyclopedia of general knowledge, the speeches delivered during the election and afterwards by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MacINNIS: In saying a few words in connection with this resolution I shall try to confine myself to the subject matter before us. In the first place I am rigidly opposed to the principle of the resolution itself, and when I say the principle of the resolution I mean the horizontal cut of ten per cent. I am not opposed to a reduction in salaries, a reduction in members' indemnities if such be necessary, but I am absolutely opposed to any reduction in the salaries of those who are getting too little now on which to live. If I gathered his words correctly, the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) stated that even a charwoman getting a very small salary should feel privileged to make a contribution at this time. I believe, however, she would feel more privileged if it were not for the fact that some of the contribution she makes goes into the pockets of people who have more money than they know what to do with.

I should like to draw to the attention of the minister some facts with which I am familiar, and I believe that some of the circumstances I shall outline are typical of the conditions in which many civil servants find themselves. I refer to a man in the city of Vancouver who was a full time employee of the government. Because of lack of work in his department he was put on part time, with the result that he is engaged two and one-half hours a day at forty cents an hour, giving him a daily wage of $1. From that dollar there is a ten per cent reduction. Although he receives only $5.40 a week, yet he is working and is not eligible for relief, although he is a married man with a wife and one child. How can a married man support his wife and family on $5.40 a week? I should much rather see a greater percentage deducted from my indemnity, and from the indemnities of hon. members, in order that the salaries of these men might be left as they are. It is all very well to talk about making our contributions, but when from a wage of $1 per day there is a deduction of ten cents I do not think we would urge that conditions are at all equitable, particularly when we know that others of us are getting enough to live decently on, under present standards of living. I am convinced the Minister of Finance is not unmindful of existing conditions, and I should be very happy if he could see his way clear to bring in an amendment to the present legislation which would relieve from the proposed reduction those receiving salaries under a certain amount. I leave that suggestion with the Minister of Finance and with the government. I suggest the minimum should not be lower than $1,000. The loss to the country would not be great, and the feeling of goodwill would be worth far more than any inconvenience the loss of revenue might cause. I ask the Minister of Finance to consider my suggestion, and if it meets with the approval of the government I should like to see an amendment to that effect.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief in my remarks. It is admitted by all that we are undergoing a very serious crisis. Our governments request the co-operation of all citizens, rich and poor. It strikes me that this resolution might have been less exacting from those who are in poor circumstances or in receipt of small wages, and demand larger contributions from those who receive large salaries. When our soldiers were fighting for their country on the battlefield, even sacrificing their life, the large financiers remained at home taking advantage of the war to pile up immense wealth. To-day, the crisis we are undergoing calls for the co-operation of all. I am ready to do my share and to accept a cut in my indemnity; on the other hand I think it reasonable and just to exact a larger contribution from those who receive salaries of $3,000, $5,000, $10,000 and $15,000, than from those who are in receipt of $1,500 to $1,800. On behalf of my constituents, my province, and the whole country, I request that the government compel those who have wealth to contribute on a larger scale and collect a smaller contribution from those who receive wages hardly sufficient to give bread to their dependents. We have in this country a large number of millionaires who contribute nothing to the revenues of the State. They have loaned their millions to the government, at 6 per cent; they own no property and pay no taxes; therefore, I deem it only just to request them to contribute their quota in order to help the country to extricate itself from the straits we are in.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

---

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the resolution of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), that it is expedient to continue in force until March 31, 1934, the provisions of the Salary Deduction Act, 1932, Mr. Pickel in chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, the minister stated he thought that the members of the civil service had a feeling of delight that the reduction had not been more than ten per cent. I should like to ask the minister if he had any consultation with any representative body of the civil service before making this extension of the ten per cent reduction for another year.

Mr. RHODES: I would not wish to be misunderstood in the statement I made that the members of the civil service were delighted that the salary cut had not been greater. That statement was made in private conversations I have had with members of the civil service. It has no reference whatsoever to the main portion of the question of my right hon. friend. Last autumn—I had forgotten the exact date—I asked for a conference with representatives of the various civil service organizations. We met and took some considerable time discussing the whole question of possible salary cuts for this year. There were present at that meeting, V. C. Phelan, of the Civil Service Federation; V. L. Lawson, of the Civil Service Association; L. S. McLaine and J. L. Rannie, of the Professional Institute of the Civil Service; Fred Knowles, of the Amalgamated civil servants; J. J. Reeves, of the Letter Carriers; G. M. Donnehy, of the Railway Mail Clerks; W. N. Duncan, of the United Postal Employees, T. H. Burns, of the Customs and Excise Association, and A. H. MacDonald, of the Printing Bureau Association. Our discussion was along general lines, and the meeting concluded in this form; that if it were felt that a larger cut than ten per cent would be called for I would reconvene them and confer with them further. While I did not say so in terms at that time, the clear inference from the nature of my discussion with them was that the probabilities were that it would be necessary to make a ten per cent cut this year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would ask the minister, was any reference made at that conference to the—implication I will call it—of the Prime Minister at the last session to the effect that this deduction would be for only one year? I remember at the time the matter was being discussed the Prime Minister made it quite clear that the intention of the government at that time was that the cut should be only for the period of one year, and I asked specifically whether it was felt that that assurance could be lived up to. My hon. friend will find in Hansard of February 26, at page 564, the following statement by the Prime Minister:

> In this instance the bill which will be founded upon this resolution has force for one year only. As the resolution itself indicates, the bill will expire on the 31st day of March, 1933. It has no vigour or life beyond that date, . . .

Of course that was perfectly true of the bill. But what was in the mind of the house at the time the matter was being discussed was the possible continuance of the provisions of the bill. I know such was the case in my own mind, because I said at the time, as reported on page 568 of Hansard.

> If it is a measure to effect economy in the public service, that would imply that these salaries are being reduced with a view to having them permanently maintained at a lower level. I say the ministry cannot be too emphatic or too clear in making its exact position known in that regard.

I then stated that I gathered the Prime Minister was giving that assurance, and continued:

> . . . I take that from his statement that this measure would have effect only until March 31 of next year. The Prime Minister says it will have no vigour of life beyond that date. Again I should like to accept the prime minister's word, but I am not too sure of what may happen at the end of that time, and I refer to it at this moment in order that there may be some record of this aspect having been considered at this time.

After pointing out that we were being asked to extend the provisions of another measure for a period longer than was understood at the time of its enactment, I concluded by saying:

> So I say, with that motion on the order paper, indicating a position diametrically opposite to that which my right hon. friend took at the time of the introduction of the measure, we must be particularly cautious in accepting my right hon. friend's words as to the length of time for which the present measure will be in force. However, I do accept them, and I hope my right hon. friend will see to it that what he has said in that regard will be given full value when the time comes.

I think it is quite clear that at that time the government was giving an assurance to the service that this cut would not be continued beyond a single year. I mention it as one more promise, which, I am afraid, has gone into the discard. I might ask my hon. friend whether he contemplates that at the end of another year there may have to be a renewal of this year's bill, or whether he hopes or believes that the reduction may not be continued for more than another year.

Mr. RHODES: In reply to my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I cannot agree with him in his point of view that a promise was broken by our having brought this measure in this year. The deduction was made last year for a period of one year. There was no undertaking with respect to what might or might not have to be done in the future With respect to the question whether this point was raised in the discussion I had with the representatives of the various organizations, I speak from recollection, but I think with accuracy, in saying that point was not raised at all.

My right hon. friend asks what will happen another year. I can only say that I would rejoice if the government were in a position not to call upon the civil servants for a similar sacrifice another year. The answer as to what may happen at that time will depend upon the stress of conditions, which alone is responsible for the circumstance that we appear before the house to-day again asking for a deduction for this one year. I do not know that I can say anything further than to assure my right hon. friend that as far as I am concerned, and I think I am speaking for the government as well, we shall rejoice if no further sacrifice along this line has to be called for. But I may say to my right hon. friend, lest there be any misunderstanding, that if conditions next year should happen to be as serious as they are at the present, and sacifices are called for, another bill of a similar character may be introduced. But I sincerely hope that will not be necessary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just one further question. The Civil Service Commission, I believe, has by statute the duty of fixing salaries and classifications. Has my hon. friend had any conference with members of the Civil Service Commission regarding the effect of the deduction of last year, and with respect to the possible effects of the continuance of that deduction upon members of the Civil Service for another year?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, we covered the ground very fully in the conference to which I made reference. I think there was hardly a phase of the various enactments and measures which have been taken with respect to promotions, salary increases, appointments and so on, which was not very fully discussed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I mean with the Civil Service Commission as a body.

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps I did not get the full import of my right hon. friend's question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand the first conference was with representatives of the civil service organizations, that is a conference with a group of civil servants. I am asking about a conference with the Civil Service Commission itself.

Mr. RHODES: No; as far as I am concerned and as far as I am aware, there was no conference with the Civil Service Commission with respect to the matters in question.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, when the house rose at six o'clock, I was stating that it is the workmen and labourers who have suffered the most during the war. In the present crisis, it is the same people who suffer the most, and governments have failed to understand their responsibility and duties when, instead of helping this class in weathering the crisis, they have contributed in increasing the number of unemployed by dismissing a considerable number of employees.

In requesting civil servants, members, and senators to contribute in relieving the distress, I think the government is wrong because in cutting down the salaries of civil servants they simply decrease their purchasing power. We must, in order to remedy the financial crisis take effective means, create this purchasing power which at present is lacking. All our financial and industrial institutions have contributed largely to spread the crisis by diminishing the purchasing power of the people and dismissing a large number of employees.

If there be a class of society which should contribute to relieve the present day distress, it is certainly the one that profited the most and even disregarded the laws of this country by overcapitalizing its enterprises and taking more than reasonable profits. It strikes me that these industrialists and financiers, instead of sitting on their capital, should have placed it at the disposal of their employees so as to afford work or at least help to those who assisted them in amassing this enormous wealth.

Mr. Chairman, it is more than time that this government seriously considered the enactment of social laws to restrain the ambition of financiers. I recall a few years ago an act was passed by this House to prevent trade coalitions. However, daily, we witness certain corporations absorbing other companies and organizing coalitions which greatly contribute to increase the hardships of those who suffer and to maintain the cost of production at a high level. It would be necessary, to-day, that laws be enacted to force these over-capitalized corporations to revert to their original capital so as to cut down the cost of production. Is it reasonable, is it rational, that a government which needs revenues should apply to financial companies and offer them a rate of interest as high as 6¼ and 6½ per cent, such as those that were granted by the government, not on the last loan but on previous loans. I think that the country is quite solvent and if there is a borrower who should pay the lowest rate, it is certainly the government; a rate of 3½ or 4 per cent would have been sufficient. The administration boasts of having done a great deal for the unemployed. The government had blank cheques voted to them so as to help the unemployed and distribute doles—an entirely false and immoral principle. Our friends, sir, on the extreme left have charged the present regime with favouring capitalists. Our governmental regime is not one of capitalism. If to-day, it seems to be so, it is because the members who compose it are inclined to favour financial interests to the detriment of the other classes of society. A free hand was allowed to these financiers thus fostering their inclination and ambition. When in the future we grant powers to certain companies who solicit the government, it should be stipulated that their capital can no further be increased, and that over-capitalization be prohibited in order to forestall coalitions as they exist to-day. We have mergers in lumber, water powers, gasoline, and coal etc. etc. These abuses should cease and we should not allow that the people be thus exploited. Speeches delivered by our friends on the extreme left are purely academic. They are the kind of people who wish to appear in the limelight, besides being extremists. What is needed is not a change but a reform of the present regime. A sound and wise administration must be given to the country in keeping with the interests and needs of the people. What is especially wanted at the moment, is work. It is absolutely impossible for governments, either federal, provincial or municipal to supply work to all. Corporations will be compelled to carry on their operations and it will be necessary for the government to permit them, through a moderate tariff policy, to sell their products with advantage on the world markets. Tariff barriers have had no other result than to paralyze industry and bring hardship upon us. What is needed is not a change in the administrative regime, but a reform; tariffs must be reduced and our products must find a market abroad in order to give work to our people.

We must be on the alert; the storm is on the horizon; we must not rest on laurels won by false and sham promises; we must return to a sound policy, one profitable not only to some but to all. The weak point of the present administration is to ignore such a policy. I think, if the government adopted higher ideals, we could easily weather this crisis by giving work to those who have none, creating this absolutely necessary purchasing power, and this aim will not be reached by thanking employees for their services, and cutting down their salaries, or allowing higher officials to enjoy large salaries and preventing the lower classes in the public service earning a decent livelihood.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated a short while ago, the time has come not to change our economic regime but to reform it and return to a sound policy, one of patriotism, and not one of sham as advocated in order to capture the popular vote and later on favor friends, increase the number of large financiers and drive the people to greater distress.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I listened attentively to the last speaker but I must confess that I could not tell whether he was expressing the same views as I shall put forward. Prior to the dinner hour, however, there were two spokesmen from this corner representing, as they would suggest, labour particularly. I do not admit that myself because I also represent labour; in fact my whole constituency is a labouring constituency. The point of view of the direct labour representatives as expressed more particularly by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) does not indicate the feelings of the farmer representatives; at least it is not my own point of view. When we consider that the farmer's revenue has diminished to almost the vanishing point, so that he is scarcely able to make his living, a mere reduction of ten per cent in our sessional indemnity does not look very big to him. Indeed, I think the average agriculturist would suggest that we should be reduced considerably more than ten per cent.

So far as the wages are concerned, which the farmer pays to labour directly employed by him, they have been considerably reduced compared to what they were a few years ago; they have been reduced far more than ten per cent. It is only a matter of three or four years ago that the farmers were paying fifty and sixty dollars a month wages for the summer in my own district. This last year, or for the last two years in fact, they have been paying twenty, twenty-five and thirty dollars for the same work. The day wage a few years ago was five, six, seven and even eight dollars, whereas during the past two years it has been only a dollar and a half and two dollars.

The farmer cannot adopt the point of view which the labour representatives hold, of increasing wages in order to start a boom. He simply cannot do that; he has not the wherewithal to do it. Think of the young ladies and gentlemen engaged in the teaching profession. In the western country a few years ago they were drawing from a thousand to twelve hundred dollars a year and they have been reduced more than twenty per cent, many of them having had their salaries cut in half. Indeed, I heard of one young man who went out teaching for a salary of fifteen dollars a month plus board rather than be idle, and in many cases rural schools are closed because they cannot afford the salaries.

Mr. McGIBBON: One school in my riding advertised for teachers and they got an offer from one who was prepared to teach for his board.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: That is going one better. Knowing these conditions in our agricultural areas, the representative of an agricultural constituency would be very nervy indeed to oppose a ten per cent reduction in his own indemnity. Last session I took a similar point of view, that it was the only fair thing to do for us to contribute something towards meeting the financial needs of the country, and I think that in general the house contributed their ten per cent without very much objection. I should like, however, to point out here a certain inequality in the way members are treated this session compared with the session of a year ago. A year ago we came here on February 4 and continued until the 26th of May and then went home, and I do not think anyone minded the ten per cent reduction; at least we were all able to come back for the fall session. But this session, I would point out, has been divided into two sections. We met on October 6 and continued in session until November 26 and then we had the option of going back home and remaining there for two months, then coming back to Ottawa, or continuing to reside in this city, paying the high rents asked and the other additional living expenses for the two months. Those of us who live four or five days' journey from Ottawa, and some who live still farther away, find it quite expensive coming to this city and returning home. Those who live close to Ottawa, in Quebec or in Ontario, may not see this point quite so forcefully as those of us who live in the west or in the maritimes, but it costs us a good deal of money to travel.

Now, we are allowed an expense account for one trip down here and back, that is, supposing the session to start on a certain date and we continue in session until the business of the house is concluded, when we return home. But this session there has been a break of two months so that there has been a double expense coming here and going back. I think in fairness to hon. members who live a considerable distance from Ottawa, the government—perhaps the Minister of Finance will advise us whether he thinks the government could take this into consideration—possibly by way of an expense account, could reimburse us our expenses. I have no objection to the $400 deduction, but if we are to be subjected to additional inconvenience and double expenses, I think it is only fair that we should be given some consideration.

Mr. RHODES: The point raised by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) is a good one. There is no doubt a hardship is imposed upon hon. members who have had to pay double travelling expenses through no fault of their own because of the division of this session. This matter has received the consideration of the government. I find that under the act only one railway fare is allowed per session, but the same point arose, I think during the session of 1926-27, and the extra expenses were covered by a supplementary estimate; there was a vote to provide an additional allowance for travelling expenses. It is my anticipation that when the supplementary estimates are brought down this year, they will contain a vote to meet the objection raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. DUFF: For once my hon. friend and myself agree. I agree with him that we who come from the far ends of this country are entitled to special consideration. For instance, I spent thirty-four hours on the train in one place between Moncton and Newcastle, cut off from telephonic and telegraphic communication of any kind. Perhaps that may have been a good thing in these days when most any news is bad news. I assure the Minister of Finance that if he brings down an item to pay our additional expenses for this session, I will support it.

My hon. friend and I both come from fishing constituencies in the province of Nova Scotia. We have in our constituency a number of lighthouse keepers, and in the discussion this afternoon we apparently misunderstood one another's language. I do not belong to the Oxford movement, I was not born with a silver spoon in my mouth, and consequently my English is not quite as good as it might be. If an apology is necessary, I apologize to the committee for using language which could not be understood. Apparently my good friend the Minister of Finance either took my English literally, or did not quite understand it, because he said that I had accused him of being a party to the dismissal of a lighthouse keeper in the county of Richmond in his constituency. I am sure that upon reflection he will agree with me when I say that he is the last man in Canada with whom I would want to have a difference of opinion.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. DUFF: For several reasons which I shall be glad to explain in camera. I am sure the minister will be just as anxious as I am to have this matter cleared up, so that we may start anew. The Minister of Finance in replying to what I had said in connection with the lighthouse keeper on Green island, made the statement that I had accused him of being responsible for the dismissal of that lighthouse keeper. He said at page 1881:

When my hon. friend made the statement that I had dismissed a lighthouse keeper—

I then replied that I did not say that at all, and the minister continued:

I leave it to Hansard and to the judgment of this committee. If my hon. friend did not say so in so many words, he left a clear imputation; otherwise, why refer to it?

Let me refer back to what I am reported as having said. Hansard reports me as follows at page 1877:

—for instance, my hon. friend must have noticed a few days ago that in his constituency, a poor lightkeeper, a returned soldier, was fired from his position on Green island, and a new man appointed, not a returned soldier, and this new man has to take a reduction of ten per cent.

I think the committee will agree with me that there is no inference in that statement that I accused the Minister of Finance of dismissing this lighthouse keeper. My language this afternoon may not have been as clear as it should have been, and I want the committee to know exactly what I said. I was accused by the Minister of Finance of making the statement that he had fired this lighthouse keeper.

Mr. RHODES: I did not say that; I said that the inference in what my hon. friend said was that I was guilty of having dismissed him. I did not go quite as far as my hon. friend now says I did. I may say to my hon. friend that I am prepared to accept his statement that that is what he said.

Mr. DUFF: My conscience has been sort of bothering me. I was accused of making a statement that the Minister of Finance had fired this lighthouse keeper. A little further on the minister evidently had it in mind that I was accusing him of doing something which I know he would not do, that is, fire a poor lighthouse keeper.

[Mr. Duff.]

The Hansard report says at page 1882:

—my hon. friend left the imputation upon this committee that I had been responsible for the dismissal of a lighthouse keeper on Green island.

The statement I made was as reported on page 1877:

—for instance, my hon. friend must have noticed a few days ago that in his constituency, a poor lightkeeper, a returned soldier, was fired from his position on Green island, and a new man appointed, not a returned soldier, and this new man has to take a reduction of ten per cent.

There is nothing in that language to support the contention of the minister that I accused him, either inferentially or otherwise, of dismissing that lighthouse keeper. I may have said what I should not have said, but I think my hon. friend will agree that I was very careful in my statement in regard to this dismissal. However, the fact remains that a returned soldier was dismissed, and another man put in his place.

Before I sit down I should like to refer to one or two other matters which the Minister of Finance mentioned this afternoon. I want again of course to be careful in my language. When my hon. friend says, as he did this afternoon, that in Ottawa the civil servants were rather pleased or delighted that they did not receive a reduction of more than ten per cent and that this city was in a better position than any other city in Canada, he evidently is not quite in touch with conditions in Ottawa. There must be some reason for old Knox church being now the headquarters for the relief committee from the city. As the Ottawa newspapers stated yesterday, they are looking after four thousand families, the heads of which are out of employment. Surely if the heads of four thousand families in Ottawa are out of employment, the condition in this city is not as good as we would like it to be. Consequently, when my hon. friend says that Ottawa above all other cities can afford to take this ten per cent cut, he is not in touch with conditions here. Ottawa benefits more from the salaries of civil servants than does any other city in Canada. It is made up mostly of people in the employ of the government, and any reduction in their salaries has a detrimental effect upon the city. This is evident from the fact that in old Knox church a committee is at work looking after four thousand families the heads of which are out of employment. Consequently, I say again, as I said this afternoon, it is poor policy for this government to make a reduction of ten per cent in the salaries of civil servants or of anybody else.

What was the result last year? Is my hon. friend's position as Minister of Finance any better than it was before the reduction took place last year? He was compelled then to come to the house with his budget in which, if my memory serves me rightly, as Minister of Finance he showed a deficit of some $50,000,000. Is he in any better financial position to-day because of the fact that he has reduced the salaries of civil servants in Ottawa and, indeed, all over Canada? Oh, no, because even with that amount in the coffers of the government, I have no hesitation in saying that when the budget is brought down this year, instead of the deficit being $50,000,000, it will be almost double that amount. It is penny wise and pound foolish policy to reduce the earning power of our workers—because our civil servants are workers. What is the result of the government in their wisdom deciding to reduce the salaries of civil servants? Almost every business firm in the country said to its employees: We must reduce your wages; the government has set us the example; the government says that in order to carry on the affairs of the country, in order to balance the budget, it must reduce the salaries of civil servants all over this country by ten per cent, and we as business men must follow its lead and take ten per cent off your salaries. What has been the consequence? Not a saving of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, which the government thought to save by this reduction, but throughout this country the purchasing power of the people has been reduced not $5,000,000 but $50,000,000. I say to the Minister of Finance and to the government that it is poor, foolish policy to take ten per cent off the salaries of civil servants or anybody else if they are giving good value, because there is bound to be a reaction and this policy will have a bad effect in all parts of Canada. I appeal to my hon. friend, who is a reasonable man on most occasions. It is not good policy to make this reduction. What will it mean? It will mean a mere bagatelle in the affairs of the country. What difference does it make in his budget whether the deficit is $100,000,000 or $102,000,000, especially when the $2,000,000 would be circulated from the Atlantic to the Pacific? My hon. friend can never save the country by this reduction of ten per cent, because as Minister of Finance he is setting a bad example to the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National and every other business in Canada to reduce wages and consequently restrict the purchasing power of the people.

Mr. RHODES: Let me at once assure my hon. friend that I accept without question his statement as to what he said, and as to the interpretation that was placed on what he said this afternoon I hope he will appreciate the fact that I took in perfectly good faith what I thought was a proper interpretation under the circumstances.

Just one other word. Whatever the merits may be as to the principle whether we ought or ought not to make a reduction of ten per cent in the salaries of civil servants, I should like to point out that the reduction is not a mere bagatelle.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the minister say what the saving is?

Mr. RHODES: Last year it amounted to $8,300,000. It will be approximately the same this year, except that vacancies have arisen in the public service and the service has not absolutely required that those positions should be filled. There will therefore be a contraction in the service this year, so that the sum will not be quite as large, but it will be something over eight million dollars for the ensuing fiscal year.

At this stage of the session, except by consent, we cannot get into supply, on departments not previously taken up, on a day other than Monday or Tuesday, and this is the only opportunity we shall have of moving into supply. It would appear that this resolution will not speedily pass, so in these circumstances I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I ask the Minister of Finance whether the statutory increases and promotions will be restored this year?

Mr. RHODES: No, they remain as they were last year, excepting this: that the treasury board will do this year as it did last—in cases of an exceptional character where upon the merits there ought to be promotions and increases, those individual cases will be dealt with on their merits.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask a question of the hon. gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN: There is a motion to report progress.

Mr. POULIOT: It is just a question.

The CHAIRMAN: The rule is that the moment a motion is put that the committee rise and report progress, I must put it to the committee. If the committee consents, I have no objection.

Mr. RHODES: I have no objection.

Mr. POULIOT: This afternoon I said that the government had lent without interest

$1,500,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and that on the other hand the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had bought Dominion government bonds to the value of $2,000,000 bearing interest at 4 per cent, or practically that. In regard to that the minister said: It is untrue. I wonder what part of my statement is untrue—because it is based on facts reported in the press.

Mr. RHODES: I think I made that very clear this afternoon. As regards the first portion of the statement with respect to the matter of $1,500,000, I pointed out, while it was lent to the Canadian Pacific, the purposes for which it was really advanced. As to the second portion of that statement, I pointed out that the Canadian Pacific did not subscribe to a single bond.

Mr. POULIOT: Even indirectly?

Mr. RHODES: Even indirectly, so far as I am informed.

Mr. POULIOT: But it appeared in the press.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Exchequer Court of Canada

Contingencies—judges and court officials' travelling expenses, remuneration to sheriffs, etc., printing, stationery, etc., and $150 for judges' books, $7,500.

Printing, binding and distributing court reports, $3,000.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Harbours and Rivers

Saint John—channel improvements, $350,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I would like to ask the minister who paid for that most illuminating booklet we have just received from the Saint John Harbour Commission, which contains such a beautiful portrait of the Minister of Marine, a neighbour of the Minister of Public Works. I have received this publication, one of great size, containing extensive propaganda about imperial trade and the last Imperial economic conference. I should like to know who pays for such propaganda.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I can understand the hon. member's curiosity, but unfortunately I cannot satisfy it. The matter to which he has referred does not come within the jurisdiction of my department.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT: I suppose it was printed in camera?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What was the expenditure last year? Was all but $12,000 of the total amount spent? I see there is a revote of $12,000. Further, I should like to know the work proposed to be done during the coming year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This item is to provide for the continuation of work in Saint John harbour, contract for which was signed in the year 1930 pursuant to order in council dated July 14. It is expected that the work will be completed during either the current or the coming fiscal year. The work is extensive, involving an expenditure of about $1,250,000, and payments are made from year to year. For the current year the estimated expenditure will be $338,100.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will that amount complete the work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The construction is being carried on on a unit basis, but it is not expected that the appropriation this year will be sufficient to effect completion.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Could the minister give us any idea as to what amount will likely be required for the completion of the work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The total estimated cost is $1,249,532.19. The estimated total expenditure to the end of the present fiscal year will be $749,532.19, leaving an estimated balance to complete the work of $500,000, of which we are asking this year for $350,000. A further sum of about $150,000 will be left for next year.

Item agreed to.

Quebec

Beebe—building for immigration and customs purposes, $1,500.

Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $120,000.

Montreal armoury—payment of instalment on purchase of armoury, $15,140.

Montreal—postal terminal building, $500,000.

Quebec citadel—improvements and maintenance, $15,000.

Ste. Anne de Bellevue—public building—under contract, $2,000.

Trout River—building for immigration and customs purposes, $14,500.

Westmount—armoury—payment of instalment on purchase of armoury, $13,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I notice in the estimate that there is an appropriation of $500,000 for a postal terminal building at Montreal. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with that work this year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say to my hon. friend that this is simply a repetition of an item which we have had for the current fiscal year and possibly for the year before. I am in hopes that circumstances will permit the awarding of the contracts and commencement of the works this year. However, as the hon. member knows, these expenditures are made from revenue, and when revenues contract the expenditures of the Department of Public Works, which are perhaps more controllable than those of other departments, are sometimes curtailed. There are occasions when we are not in a position to proceed with works provided for in our estimates. I do hope, however, that we will be in a position to proceed this year with the work. The building is needed, our plans are well prepared, and I am looking forward to some action.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We have had the vote for a good many years but we have not the building, and the people in Montreal are asking that work be started and employment given. I think it would help unemployment a great deal if the government would go on with this building; it is greatly needed in Montreal.

Item agreed to.

Ontario—Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $125,000.
London—tractor for postal purposes, $2,600.
Port Arthur examining warehouse—renovation of heating plant, $8,500.
Toronto—payment of instalment on purchase of armoury—under contract, $29,500.
Toronto armoury—government's share of cost of local improvements, $1,730.
Toronto — postal station "A" — mechanical equipment and improvements—under contract, $11,000.
Windsor — public building — under construction, $500,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: What public buildings are included in these improvements and repairs, and where are they?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As I understand it, my hon. friend is inquiring as to where we propose to make the expenditures from this vote. That of course, will depend upon what we find the requirements to be. It is a general vote for improvements and repairs found necessary upon examination by the district architect, and reports from him. There is no specific allocation of it in advance.

Mr. SANDERSON: Not for any part of it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No. I can tell my hon. friend where we have spent in prior years, but it does not follow that there will be expenditures on the same buildings in succeeding years—heating and plumbing repairs, painting, roofing, lighting, general repairs such as buildings require from time to time. Some of them we have had to delay somewhat. It will depend upon how urgent they are; the most urgent will be taken care of.

Mr. SANDERSON: How does the minister arrive at the estimate? Is it just a bulk amount covering the province?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): From our experience over a period of years it is found that an average can be arrived at. We are taking the same amount we had last year, which I think is smaller than we have had in some other years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to ask my hon. friend in regard to the renovation of the heating plant in the Port Arthur examining warehouse. That is a repair matter, but I assume it will be done by contract. Am I correct?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is requested by the chief architect. The district resident engineer recommended that two boilers be replaced, as they are in a bad state of repair. It was late in the season, and it was decided to make temporary repairs and carry them through to the next year. It is a matter certainly that would be done by tender.

Item agreed to.

Alberta — Calgary—armoury — repairs and alterations, $30,000.
Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $5,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What is the nature of the repairs and alterations to the armoury, and are they to be done by public tender?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I assure my hon. friend the former Minister of Public Works that the practice of the department adopted by him and by my predecessors of inviting tenders for works of this kind will be continued.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I may say to my hon. friend, I do not know of any better example.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia

Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $45,000.
Esquimalt—repairs and improvements at R.C.N. barracks and H.M.C. dock yard, $10,600.
Vancouver armoury—payment of instalment on purchase of armoury, and installation of fittings, $18,000.
Vancouver public building—to meet one year's interest at 5 per cent on mortgage of $400,000, $20,000.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): A question that has been before this house on former occasions, the public building at Prince Rupert. It has been promised consideration, and that is all. Some time last year the lease expired on the building in which the federal offices are situated. I understand that the government renewed the lease for one year, and that they were going to make an appropriation at least to start a building in the city of Prince Rupert this year. It is needed, as the minister knows very well; it has been brought to his attention by boards of trade and by representatives of the different political parties, and it is not a political question. It is not necessary for me to repeat what has already been said in this house on several occasions in regard to this building, but as I notice there is nothing in the estimates I would ask the minister again if he would give this his consideration and if it would be possible to have it in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply to my hon. friend who has from time to time mentioned the construction of a public building at Prince Rupert, and who has by correspondence and otherwise set forth the requirements of that city, I can only say that we have a site, but that the construction of the building would involve an expenditure of approximately $100,000; we have many requests to which unfortunately at this time we cannot accede, and this is simply one of many of the same character. I cannot promise my hon. friend that in view of the condition of the revenue I can hold out much hope of providing for it in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is it then the intention of the government again to lease the building now occupied? Because I understand the lease is expiring shortly; it was renewed for only one year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As no building will be constructed, of course we shall have to continue accommodation in rented quarters. Whether the lease will be renewed or not will depend upon the suitability of the quarters and whether more desirable quarters are available at a lesser rent.

Mr. REID: What is the Vancouver public building on which the minister has to meet one year's interest at five per cent?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is a building upon which there is a mortgage, which building was acquired by the Dominion of Canada. This provides for payment of interest on the mortgage.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. NEILL: Is that the Winch building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Winch building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: For how many more years will that interest be payable?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The mortgage is past due, und until we are in a position to pay off the principal we must continue to pay interest on it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As the minister doubtless knows, the Indian school at Labret was destroyed by fire last fall, and everyone was expecting it would be rebuilt in the spring. As that item is not here, I presume we may look for it in the supplementaries.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is under the control not of the public works department, but of the Department of Indian Affairs, and they have their own estimates. I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend the information he requires.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That will be satisfactory.

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to the $4,500 for alterations and improvements to the old post office building at Saskatoon, for what purpose is it proposed to use that building now? What are the proposed alterations?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The alterations proposed are to make it suitable for accommodating the mounted police. That force has been augmented and has taken over police duties for the province and consequently it requires the additional accommodation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will that be let by tender?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think so. If the work is such that specifications can be prepared and it can be done by tender, that course will be followed.

Seaforth—breakwater extension, $5,000.
Spencer's Point—wharf improvements, $3,600.
Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $200,000.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to make a representation to the minister with regard to the blanket item of $200,000 for harbours and rivers generally, for maintenance of services, "no new works to be undertaken." As the minister probably knows, a very severe storm has swept the coast of Nova Scotia recently and it has done a great deal of damage to a number of small wharves and breakwaters there. Reports are coming to me and, I have no doubt, to the minister with regard to the matter. I was hoping that this vote could be so broadened that it might be possible for essential work in the way of renewals to be undertaken—I am not speaking of new works. These small wharves and breakwaters are very essential in order that the fishing industry may be carried on. They provide shelter for the fishing boats and harbours which are not naturally available, and they make it possible for the fishermen to have their boats lie afloat so that they can go out at a comparatively reasonable hour instead of having to go out on the tide, as would be the case if their boats were aground. It is not a matter of luxury but of absolute necessity; it is essential to the carrying on of their business. It affords employment and enables the fishermen through that to give assistance to the community. Does the minister consider this vote wide enough, assuming the amount were large enough, to undertake essential renewals of that kind in connection with small wharves and breakwaters seriously damaged by the storm?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can understand my hon. friend's anxiety about this class of wharf, particularly in Nova Scotia where for the past two or three years there have been experiences similar to the one which he now relates. This vote is calculated to take care of just such improvements as he has mentioned, and the reference in the vote to the fact that no new works are to be undertaken means simply that we cannot start anything new, any new wharf out of the vote, but that it is intended to repair, rebuild or renew any existing structure, which I understand is what my hon. friend is urging. The report of the engineer comes in from time to time setting out the conditions and recommending those structures most in need of repair.

Mr. RALSTON: I may tell the minister that I addressed a letter to him to-day with reference to one particular structure, the partial demolition of which has come to my attention, a structure at the Hawk off Cape Sable island and another at Port La Tour where a part of the wharf has been rendered unusable. I want to commend these to the favourable consideration of the minister, and I shall bring to his attention others that are in need of repair.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The whole of our vote last year was expended in this way and I am sure that this amount will not be found too large for our requirements. I shall certainly take my hon. friend's representations into very serious consideration.

Mr. RALSTON: I hope the vote will not be found too small.

Mr. DUFF: I think the minister will agree that this vote is for repairs which do not necessarily involve a great deal of money. It has been put in the estimates every year for a great many years to cover repairs costing a thousand dollars or five hundred or two hundred dollars, and seldom has it exceeded five thousand. I agree with my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth, although I do not think he has gone far enough. In my opinion this item will be required for the ordinary repairs that have to be made every year, but it will not cover the extraordinary circumstances as outlined by my hon. friend. The minister will no doubt get the engineer's reports shortly showing what has happened in Nova Scotia and in the maritime provinces in the last fortnight, and he will find that $200,000 will certainly not cover the requirements. In my own constituency, I have so far heard of several places where there will have to be repairs to existing wharves and breakwaters, and from the information that has come to me the cost will be at least $100,000. These repairs are absolutely necessary if the fishermen are to prosecute their vocation, and consequently I would urge on the minister that, while this vote is essential to take care of small repairs to wharves and breakwaters, it will not fill the bill presented both by myself and my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth.

Mr. QUINN: I wish to add a word or two to what the two previous speakers have said on this subject. On January 29 and 30 we had an unusually severe storm along the southeast coast of Nova Scotia, particularly affecting the constituency of my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth, the constituency of Halifax, the constituency of my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough and other points; and though I appreciate the fact that this vote of $200,000 is for ordinary expenses in connection with repairs, I would point out that there will be an unusually great demand for repairs owing to the destruction caused by the storm of the last two days of January. There are three letters of mine now in the mail addressed to the Minister of Public Works, directing his attention to three breakwaters and wharves in the county of Halifax which need attention, and I am sure others will be added to that list. If the minister cannot enlarge this item in the main estimates, I suggest that some provision be made in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I should like to say a few words with regard to this vote covering public works in the province of Nova Scotia. I may say that times without number I have interviewed the minister and I always found him sympathetic regarding my representations. I feel that he has done everything within reason to assist the fishermen in my constituency. I sympathize with the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough and the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth in the pleas they made for the fishermen of Nova Scotia, but I am rather sorry that hon. gentlemen opposite have not taken advantage of their position as members of the house to go to the minister to ask for estimates for their constituencies. If in making my plea I include the fishermen in the constituencies of Antigonish-Guysborough and Shelburne-Yarmouth, I hope my hon. friends will not hold it against me.

I am not satisfied with the appropriations made for public works in the province of Nova Scotia. I may say to the minister that I do not hold anything against him personally; I have always found him willing to go out of his way to help the province of Nova Scotia, irrespective of political affiliations. But the fact remains that insufficient appropriations have been provided. The government is contributing direct relief, in many cases to people who do not deserve it, and consideration should be given to these fishermen. I am sure my hon. friends will agree that this matter should be kept entirely out of politics. Without wanting to criticize the minister personally, I may say that if some recognition is not given to the claims of these fishermen, this government or any other government is going to hear from me. I think in taking that stand I will have the support of my hon. friends opposite. I believe that in the constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough there are public works which should be provided, and I know that in my own constituency that is the case.

I should like to mention an instance at Broad Cove Marsh. Before giving the particulars, I may say that at the last election the vote in this district was about four to one in favour of my opponent. People in this district have never been in receipt of charity and they do not want charity; they would sooner jump into the sea and drown themselves. Because of inadequate public works these people are forced to go seven miles in order to land their fish. I will not stand for such a condition, whether it is a Conservative or a Liberal government in power.

Mr. POULIOT: Will you stand for the results of the imperial conference?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I think my hon. friend said enough this afternoon. These people are descendants of old highland Scotch people. They have never asked for charity; all they want is a chance to live. I intend to give them that chance. I realize the difficulty which the government is facing, but, to use a local expression, there is going to be blood on the moon if a wharf is not provided at Broad Cove Marsh. I do not care if I am read out of the party for taking this stand; I do not care what happens, I am going to see that these people who have never looked for charity, who would never take relief or anything, are given a chance to live. They are among the best citizens in the province, and at that many of them are Liberals. The chief engineer of the department was down there to look over the whole situation and his opinion was that a wharf should be provided. It is not provided for in the main estimates, and I am going to do my best to see that it is provided for in the supplementary estimates. Either that, or I am going to get out of politics.

Mr. DUFF: There is a seat over here for you.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Nothing doing. These people should be given a chance to earn their living, and I am not confining my remarks just to those in my own constituency.

Again I state that the minister has always been very fair in his dealings with me; he has always gone out of his way to do what he thought was right. But I am afraid that these estimates are not the right thing for the people of the province of Nova Scotia. I know the constituency of my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough probably as well as he does. I know that appropriations should be made to construct works to enable the fishermen in his county to carry on their vocation. If the government is prepared to give direct relief, not in all cases, but in some cases to bohunks, and in some cases to people who really do not deserve it, why should these old pioneers who have built up this country not be given at least a chance to live?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply to my hon. friend, who has made to me privately the representations he has made here tonight, I may say that with regard to Broad Cove Marsh we have had two or three wharves carried away. The engineer is down there endeavouring to find a site where there will be more probability of the wharf remaining, and I hope we shall be able to take more care of it in the future.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister and his officials will bear me out in this, that I have repeatedly made to him and his officials representations privately as well as by letter with regard to the matters of which I have spoken and also with regard to a number of public works which I regret very much not to see in the estimates.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is quite true.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers — New Brunswick — Shippigan—wharf extension and repairs, $25,300.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What is the nature of the repairs to be done?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is required to construct a triangularly shaped extension and to block up the four outer spans of the existing wharf to give greater stability to the extension, and also to effect urgent repairs to the structure.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just what proportion of the expenditure will be extension and what proportion repairs?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The extension is $23,000, and the estimated repairs, $2,300.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Therefore it is really a new structure as to the $23,000. This will be done by public tender, I assume?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and Rivers—Quebec

Under contract—
Riviere la Guerre — contribution towards dredging, province of Quebec to bear a like amount, $23,000.
Essential undertakings—
Anse au Canard—improvements to training piers, $2,100.
Anse au Griffons—to complete wharf improvements, $3,500.
Anse au Griffons (river)—improvements to jetties, $12,200.
Batiscan—freight shed, $1,350.
Champlain dry dock—keel blocks, $26,000.
Doucet's Landing (Ste. Angele de Laval)—wharf improvements, $7,900.
Havre au Maison, M.I.—wharf, $5,200.
Isle Verte—wharf reconstruction, $13,300.
Matane—repairs to harbour works, $24,100.
New Carlisle—wharf reconstruction, $22,000.
Paspebiac (Robins)—wharf extension, $25,000.
Petit Cap—breakwater reinforcement, $20,000.
Rimouski—wharf repairs and improvements, $47,100.
Ste. Emelie—wharf reconstruction, $18,000.
Timiskaming dam—reconstructing Quebec side, $70,000.
Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $400,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I see under this item the term "essential undertakings." Does the government mean by that that only those items that are mentioned there are considered essential in the province of Quebec; that there are no other works just as essential that have been omitted?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is the same wording that has been used in connection with the other items. These are considered essential and that is why we are undertaking them. In these times we are not undertaking anything that we do not consider essential. I quite agree with my hon. friend that this does not include everything that is essential, but we consider these more urgent than others.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to know if the minister has received recently from the authorities of the municipality of Havre St. Pierre on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence certain requests regarding improvements to the wharf at that point.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have received petitions and representations and I think a request by my hon. friend for work there.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the government undertake to place in the supplementary estimates an item to cover that work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot promise my hon. friend that I shall place any item in the supplementary estimates. I shall give it consideration, have a report secured, and then we shall consider whether an item will be placed in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is that work considered essential?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): At this stage I cannot say.

Mr. CASGRAIN: My hon. friend must have the report and the petition from the municipality. I think it is essential and I have recommended it as such. I should like to find out from the minister whether any new development has taken place with reference to the request that was made last year with regard to improvements at a place called Shelter Bay in connection with a wharf there.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Very strong representations have been made in connection with additions to that wharf, which is one owned by the Ontario Paper Company, constructed at their own cost, and which is in need of extension or some strengthening. Unfortunately we did not feel we could at this time meet their request for this rather heavy expenditure.

Mr. CASGRAIN: With reference to some other works that were apparently carried on last year at a place called Grande Bergeronnes in the county of Saguenay, I should like to know what amount of money was appropriated to enlarge the berthing facilities of that wharf, who was in charge of the work and who recommended it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As I recall the matter, my hon. friend has within the last few days put on the order paper a question and also a motion calling for an order for return of the papers in connection with that. I can assure him that these will be brought down speedily and if they do not contain the information he desires, I shall undertake to give it to him.

Mr. CASGRAIN: At Tadoussac in the county of Saguenay I understand of late certain works have been carried on by the federal government in cooperation with a gentleman named Imbeau, regarding the construction of a dry dock. I should like to know what arrangements have been made in connection with the construction of that dry dock.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As I recall the matter, a small amount, approximately $1,000, was spent in dredging at that point for the purpose of improving a rather natural harbour for the repair of small ships. A request is being made for a further expenditure and a report of the engineers is being secured as to the desirability of the work.

Mr. CASGRAIN: With reference to certain works that were carried on last summer at that very same place, Tadoussac, I think it is my duty to read to the committee certain extracts from a letter which I received from the mayor of that place, Mr. Ernest Bourgoing, as to the manner in which the works are being carried on under the present administration. If the committee will bear with me for a few minutes I shall read the letter, which is addressed to me. It is as follows:

(Translation):

Ernest Bourgoing,
General Merchant,
Tadoussac Co. Saguenay, Que.
Tadoussac, Jan. 3, 1933.

Mr. Pierre F. Casgrain, M.P.,
Montreal.

Sir,

You have no doubt received a petition signed by many Tadoussac people as a protest to the way the work in connection with the wharf is distributed.

The government is having some work done to relieve the unemployed and the local conservative leaders distribute the entire work among their families and relatives, including brothers and brothers in law, they do not even give work to people belonging to their party. This petition was first started by discontented conservatives, I signed it myself because the injustice was too flagrant; those who are really in want cannot find work and the municipality is obliged to support them. There are, included in this family circle that is given work, some who have been working the whole summer season on the telegraph line along the Northern coast. One among them was able to save as much as $800 on the men's board and when he returned here he was given work on the wharf, while the heads of large families who are really in need cannot find work. Furthermore, the lumber which enters into the wharf is cut by the farmers to whom they only pay $18 per 1,000 ft. delivered on the wharf; at that price the farmers only earn 75 cents to $1 per day, while these local conservative leaders resell it to the government at $25 per 1,000 feet. Therefore, they are the ones who make large profits without even handling this lumber while those who do the work earn beggarly wages. Would it not be possible to find out the exact price this lumber is sold to the government? The local conservative leaders Arthur Deschênes, Johnny Maher, etc., and Johnny Gagnon, the foreman on the job, contend that the petition will be of no avail; however, take the necessary steps to inform the government that the money granted for the unemployed finds its way into the pockets of those who are the least in need.

Trusting to hear from you shortly,

(signed) Ernest Bourgoing.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, it would appear that at that particular point some work had been carried on under the authority of the federal government, but the only people who were able to secure work were those who did not need it. Only a few friends of the people higher up in the Conservative party, and men in a very limited family circle—we might call it a family compact—have been able to secure work. So that the money provided to assist people who needed work has not gone to them. There is a suggestion that certain timber is being bought and sold to federal government authorities at a huge profit, the proceeds going into the pockets of people who do not need it. The statement is made that these high chiefs of the Tory party in that particular district are not much concerned about what the government may say, because they assert they know how to fix things up so that their little game will not be disturbed. I should like to know if the condition I have described actually obtains. The mayor of this place, Mr. Ernest Bourgoing, is a most reliable citizen, and enjoys the respect and confidence of his people. I am sure he would not write such a letter unless conditions were such as he has described.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have not received complaints such as those the hon. member has described. Had they been received I assure him an investigation would have been launched long ago. Our district engineers have strict instructions to see that value is secured, that no excessive prices are paid, that there is no profiteering, and that in the distribution of work efforts are made to secure competent men and to have it given to those in greatest need. I am sorry if any condition such as described by the hon. member exists, and if he will take the responsibility of saying that they are so, or that we are warranted in going to the expense of an investigation, it will be launched to-morrow.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am pleased with the reply of the minister. My only authority is the letter I have read. Further, I read the letter in the exact terms in which it is couched. It is now on Hansard, and I shall be happy to send a copy of the minister's statement to the people in my district. If they are in a position to substantiate their statement I shall communicate further with the minister.

Mr. POULIOT: Before the minister recovers from his surprise and astonishment I shall tell him something more. There is a wonderful spot on the earth called Cacouna, in the province of Quebec. Last year a sum of money was spent on the wharf at that point. Most of the time there were two foremen in charge of two men. One foreman was named Roy and the other Dumont, each having to look after one man. Many men were employed at the wharf, but each for only a short time; they were employed mostly two by two or three by three throughout the summer. The two foremen did not take more men, so that their work would last longer. Roy and Dumont were very busy looking after the two other men. One had a chisel in his hand and the other a hammer. On the hammer there was an apparatus for pulling out nails, so that when he hammered a nail he immediately pulled it out, because it had been hammered in the wrong direction. Then he proceeded to put it in again. All this took place under the vigilant eyes of one foreman. Then, the other one used his chisel to give a satin finish to the timber in the wharf. All of this, Mr. Chairman, is most ridiculous. Certainly it did not relieve the unemployment situation. I have been told by reliable people that two young men about fifteen or sixteen years of age were employed fifteen days doing some painting which could have been done by a good man in two days. Another young man was very busy carrying wood shavings from the wharf to a small building nearby, putting those shavings in bags and taking them to the home of the foreman. I am informed that some of the paint left over was used to decorate a sailing boat or canoe belonging to a good friend whose home happened to be near the wharf. It was a family affair, and did not help the unemployed at all.

There are many unemployed at Cacouna. Last year and the year before the minister was fair enough to allow a grant for public works at that place. This year however it would seem that he must have been told by some interested people that Cacouna no longer suffered from unemployment, and probably he has decided that work should no longer be given to the unemployed but only to a small group of special friends. It is pretty hard to tell who are the friends of that small group, because it is only a small family gathering. No doubt the minister has not heard about these circumstances before, and as I have great confidence in his fairness I have no doubt he will see to it that such conditions do not exist in the future.

And yet the Minister of Public Works is very smart. He says, "Here are the essential undertakings; they do not amount to very much." But in the tail is the poison, because I find at the last of item No. 117 the following:

Harbours and rivers generally, for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $400,000.

This is for the good of the community. I hope the minister will be good enough to tell me what happened to that general vote last year. I remember that last year there was a vote en bloc like this one, and very few questions were asked. I should like to know what was done with the money then voted, and what has been decided with regard to the $400,000 asked this year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This appropriation is a repetition of one that has been in the estimates for a number of years, except that the amount is smaller than in previous years. The appropriation for 1932-33 was $413,800, and we had authorized to January 15th, $391,140.12 and expended to January 31st of this year, $351,887.91. So we are spending most of it.

Mr. POULIOT: That is very good, but I would like to have the details—not each bill that has been forwarded to the government, but the amount that has been spent in each place in that general vote of last year. I do not want to impose on the minister; I shall be satisfied if he will put it on Hansard in order that we may have the information. As it stands now we have fog behind and fog ahead of us; we do not know what has happened in the past and do not know what will happen in the future. It is most important to know how that money has been spent. I will not ask the minister to read that information for half an hour or an hour, but I want to have it at hand. May I suggest that he be kind enough to give it to Hansard in order that it may be printed to-morrow so that each member can get the information?

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend is entitled to the information he asks for, and I appreciate his desire that the time of the committee be not unnecessarily taken up by the reading of fifteen pages with about fifteen items to each page, and a statement of the expenditure at each and every place. My hon. friend will find each year in the Auditor General's report the details of these expenditures.

Mr. POULIOT: It comes too late.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We should have them before.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no objection, if the house desires, to read these fifteen pages, or put them on Hansard as suggested. If there is any particular place my hon. friend wishes to inquire about I can give that now, or I will put it on the table.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Put it on the table of the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I submit that this new policy is wrong, to put in the estimates an amount which is twice as large as the rest of the estimates for the province, without giving any particulars or details. The whole amount for Quebec harbours and rivers is $720,750, and of this amount $400,000 is put there generally, without any particulars or details. I agree with the hon. member for Temiscouata that this is wrong. The committee should be given particulars of the work which is to be done by the department under this item. It is all very well to say that in the past there has been a general item of about $400,000, but surely it was not always half of the total amount. I believe parliament is entitled to know specifically what works are to be carried on under that item.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I quite agree with the principle the hon. member has enunciated. Parliament is entitled to the fullest information, and as far as this department is concerned, and I am sure the same is true for every department, it will be given. But my hon. friend must agree that it is impossible now to say what wharves will be damaged by storm, where repairs will be needed. Just as has been pointed out in connection with the province of Nova Scotia, where a storm has occurred, our engineers have not been able to make their investigation and report. It is just to cover conditions of that kind, and unforeseen emergencies, that this vote is asked. My hon. friend is quite right when he says that this amount is larger in proportion to the other items than in past years. That is simply because the program has been curtailed. But these repairs, these unforeseen emergencies that come up, recur about the same in each year; therefore we cannot curtail that vote. Our program has been limited practically to repairs.

Mr. POULIOT: Does that amount of $400,000 include relief work by the Department of Public Works?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have no relief work as such. I think my hon. friend will remember that it was determined as a matter of policy in consultation with the provinces that public works should not be undertaken purely as relief for unemployment.

Mr. POULIOT: But it was done in the past.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It was one year.

Mr. POULIOT: As I say, I do not wish to impose on the minister by asking him to read those fifteen pages, but I would like to know how I shall take cognizance of that information. Will the information be laid on the table or published in Hansard?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should think the requirements would be met by tabling them, and if my hon. friend wants a copy of them I will send it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to have a copy of them myself.

Mr. POULIOT: What has already been decided with regard to that item of $400,000 for the coming year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Nothing has been decided, no allotment made, because we have not sufficient information upon which to make an intelligent allotment. But we cannot undertake new work.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the minister wait until after the storm to decide what is to be done?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We certainly do not provide for repairs caused by a storm before the storm takes place.

Mr. POULIOT: So the hon. gentleman must be in consultation with the weather bureau all the time. You see, Mr. Chairman, I like the minister, but I have to be a little careful. Will the minister be kind enough to tell me when he will table the information referred to?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Now.

Mr. POULIOT: Then will he move that the committee rise in order that we may have an opportunity of glancing at these pages before proceeding further?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I second the motion.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think what my hon. friend desires might be accomplished by leaving one item of the estimates open, upon which discussion may take place.

Mr. POULIOT: Certainly, no objection. Thank you very much.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to obtain some information in connection with this item of $23,000 to dredge the Guerre river. I understand that this river situated in Chateauguay-Huntingdon county, is being dredged to drain the adjacent lands; only the waters of this river will flow into the St. Louis river which is situated in the next county—that of Beauharnois. I fear that in draining the lands along the course of the Guerre river, the adjacent lands of the St. Louis river will be flooded.

Will the hon. Minister inform me whether steps have been taken to prevent the flooding of lands along the course of the St. Louis river.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The matter will be called to the attention of the engineer. I am sorry I have not been able to follow the hon. gentleman but my colleague has explained what he is inquiring about and I can assure him that attention will be given it. The engineers will be asked to look into his request.

Mr. RAYMOND: I do not know whether my information is correct, but I am informed that the department has already received a report from the engineer to the effect that there is great danger of flooding the lands in the vicinity of Rivière St. Louis. That is the effect of the dredging of Rivière la Guerre. Although I am not opposed to this item, I think the government should take the necessary steps to protect the proprietors of land situated in the vicinity of the Rivière St. Louis.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The work that is being done is calculated to remedy the conditions to which my hon. friend refers. No report such as he mentions has been called to my attention. I shall inquire about the matter to-morrow.

Mr. RAYMOND: Can I have the assurance of the minister that if there is any flooding of land in the vicinity of Rivière St. Louis the government will take care of the situation?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should not care to go as far as that without further information as to the cause of flooding.

Item stands.

Ontario

Under contract—
Leamington—harbour improvements, $93,000.
Midland—harbour improvements, $73,000.
Essential undertakings—
Belleville—dredging, $22,500.
Blind River—dredging, $47,000.
Cobourg—dredging, $17,000.
Depot Harbour—dredging, $15,200.
Fort William—wharf extension, $6,500.
Key Harbour—harbour improvements, $15,000.
Kincardine—harbour repairs and improvements, $18,000.
Oshawa—harbour improvements, $35,000.
Port Hope—dredging, $12,400.
Rockport—wharf, $1,900.
Sault Ste. Marie—harbour repairs and improvements, $13,000.
Sydenham and Chenal Escarté—dredging, $19,000.
Toronto—harbour improvements, $22,300.
Wallaceburg—wharf and warehouse, $9,500.
Windsor—warehouse extension, $60,000.
Harbours and rivers generally for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $200,000.

Mr. LUCAS: What work is being carried on at Oshawa?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The development of a harbour, consisting of dredging and the construction of wharves and warehouses. It was undertaken, I think, in the year 1929 or 1930 and is being continued as funds will permit, with very satisfactory results. A great deal of tonnage is being handled with increased payments for wharfage coming in.

Mr. LUCAS: What class of shipping goes through there?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Coal, sugar, automobiles going out and general freight coming in.

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to harbours and rivers generally, I want to ask a question similar to that asked by my hon. friend from Témiscouata with respect to the other vote. Would the minister tell us what the general vote for harbours and rivers generally was for the year 1930-31?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have not the information for that year but for the last year, which was the same as this. I will get it and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would suggest that the same thing apply to this item 118 so that the matter may be properly discussed, because the question does arise whether or not too great a proportion of the total amount expended for harbours and rivers in the province is being left entirely to the discretion of the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will table the same information with respect to this item as with regard to the other so as to enable my hon. friend to see how the expenditures are made. They are very general and widespread.

Mr. HEPBURN: Can the minister give us an explanation with regard to the vote of $60,000 for warehouse extension at Windsor?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is for the construction of a proposed new warehouse for the accommodation of the Canada Steamships traffic for which they pay rental.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my information is correct, and I have glanced through the estimates, the general amount put in in the year 1928 was $50,000; the general amount for harbours and rivers in 1929-30 was $75,000; in 1930-31 it was $85,000. We have now, in these times in which we find ourselves, for the year 1932-33—I do not happen to have the figures for the year 1931-32—the sum of $200,000, and for the year 1933-34 it is also $200,000. Does not my hon. friend think that in an expenditure such as this, amounting to $680,000, $200,000 this year and last, as compared with $50,000 in 1928, for this particular vote, is leaving entirely too much to his discretion? Does he think that he is putting himself in a proper position?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Only $93,000 was spent last year, and the object of taking the vote in this way is, as I have said, to meet conditions for which we do not feel justified in making special provision in the estimates. If it becomes absolutely necessary to take care of the situation we shall have the funds, and if it is not necessary the expenditures will not be made.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand exactly the idea of the minister and the object he has in mind, but this is leaving a very large amount entirely in the discretion of the minister; anyone can see that. It does seem to me that in the curtailment of expenditures on public works which has been rendered necessary owing to the circumstances in which the country finds itself at the present time, the minister's discretionary powers have been greatly enlarged. They have been increased from $50,000 to $200,000, and he is putting himself at the mercy of importunate members who will be asking for expenditures during the year. I happen to know something of the difficulties to which a minister of public works is subjected, even when he puts through estimates for nearly everything, but when these matters are left to his discretion, he is putting himself in a very unfortunate position. I think he should submit to the committee the expenditures which are intended to be made. After all, that is what the estimates are for.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): None of it can be used for anything in the nature of new work, it is only for the maintenance of existing services and repairs. The vote is limited in that way, and the minister has very little discretion. I think the expenditures for last year show that the department has been able to resist those importunities inasmuch as we have expended only $90,000 out of a vote of $200,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Apparently the government has no faith in its being able to resist these requests nearly as well for the coming year, because the amount is being increased from $90,000 to $200,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is the same vote as last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Last year the minister spent only $90,000 out of a vote of $200,000. It seems to me that that is a good argument for limiting it to $100,000 this year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The department had the same latitude last year, but in view of the financial stringency, certain works were delayed. I have one case in mind, the dredging at Cobourg. This has usually been done annually; it was not done last year, but there is every possibility that it will have to be done in the coming year. I suggest that this item stand in the meantime.

Item stands.

Department of Agriculture
Contributions to empire bureaux, $21,000.

Mr. POULIOT: According to the official publications the exports of agricultural products are not so bad, but the farmer has to ship three times as much of his products in order to obtain the same return as he did a few years ago.

The CHAIRMAN: I suggest that we confine the discussion to the item.

Mr. POULIOT: The item covers contributions to empire bureaux, and I suppose that they are a sort of clearing house for the farmer. I am discussing the exportation of farm products, but if this is not relevant I will not proceed. I have no desire to be disagreeable to the minister, but I think it my duty as a member of this house to take up this matter which is of such vital importance to the farmer. As I said the other day, there are only two matters which are of interest to the people of Canada, unemployment and agriculture. I do not attach any blame to the government, I am only seeking information which will be satisfactory to the farmer. Last year some time, I forget whether it was in the first part of the year or the first part of our previous session, I asked a question on the orders of the day in connection with the imports of butter from either Australia or New Zealand. My information was that some butter has been imported and no duty had been imposed but the minister said that I was wrong. I should like to know what happened to that butter, in view of the rock-bottom prices which have been prevailing for Canadian butter.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I suggest that any discussion in connection with dairy products be taken up under the proper items.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What are these bureaux and how much goes to each one?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Each dominion makes a contribution; the total contributions are pooled and the money is used in research and the gathering of other information in connection with agriculture. The findings are disseminated to the various dominions in order that they may derive the benefit therefrom. There are three bureaux to which contributions are made. The first is the Imperial Agricultural Bureau, £3,125; the Imperial Bureau of Entomology, £1,000, and the Imperial Bureau of Mycology, £300. This makes a total contribution of £4,425, or $21,535, taking the pound at par.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When were these various bureaux founded and where are they located?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort.: I am sorry I have not that information before me.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Are they all located in London?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I believe they are all located in the United Kingdom with branches throughout the country, such as at Aberdeen.

Mr. VALLANCE: In view of the lack of information available to the committee, I think that this item should stand. Surely the committee is not going to vote $21,000 as contributions to imperial bureaux when the minister cannot tell us where they are. They may be located in South Africa, Australia, the Fiji islands, or even in Canada. We should have accurate information. As the minister does not seem to have his deputy or other officials in front of him to supply this information, I think the item should stand.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Just where the information is gathered has no bearing upon the value of the work performed.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We do not question that at all. Surely the committee is entitled to the information. We are asking the minister where the bureaux are located, what is their history and what they do. We should not be asked to vote $21,000 for an item which we do not understand and about which we are told nothing.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I believe this agreement was reached first in 1927 and was for a period of ten years. The centre of accumulation of information is, as I understand the matter, in London, but the information is gathered from various research bureaux, too numerous to mention, throughout the whole empire.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Do I understand that the information that goes through this bureau goes through the Department of Agriculture, and if so, what officials in that department are responsible for correlating the information?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Through the office of the deputy minister.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not understand why we should pay one cent to a research bureau situated outside Canada when we have a research bureau of our own where there are people who are just as competent as those who are in those bureaux the location of which the hon. gentleman does not know. In Ottawa on Sussex street, not far from here, there are competent men who do excellent work and in the minister's own department there are excellent cerealists and others who are experts in every branch of agriculture. There was Mr. Mackintosh, the discoverer of the famous apple. I do not see why we should make any contribution to a research bureau outside this country. We might subscribe to publications issued by bureaux that exist outside Canada, and I have no objection to that. We might occasionally have lectures from people who come from outside this country, but what interest have we in supporting these bureaux if they are of no benefit to us ? If the minister tells us what benefit those bureaux are to the Canadian farmer, perhaps I may reconsider my opinion in regard to the matter.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This money is used not to support research laboratories in any part of the dominion, but as a means of setting up machinery to collect information as to discoveries that are made in various research laboratories throughout the empire so that we shall have the benefit of this without any expense to us other than this small amount.

Mr. POULIOT: Is that not what is done in this country? What are these people doing in our own research bureaux?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In our own research bureau they carry on certain research work. The result of that research work, when completed and thoroughly substantiated, will be sent to the central bureau, whence it will be disseminated to the various dominions so that they will be able to avail themselves of it without any expense other than that for the support of the bureau.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister has answered me very nicely. I reconsider my opinion.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have no objection to the $21,000 being voted. I realize, as the minister says, it is a very good thing for the various dominions and colonies of the empire to have a bureau such as this from which information may be disseminated to all other parts of the empire. The item "contributions to empire bureaux" explains itself, but still I think the minister should be able to say where the bureau is, whether it is in London, the seat of the empire. If there are several of them, we should know where they are. If they are all in the British Isles, I do not think that is good policy. Just as much research in certain lines is done in Canada as is done in the British Isles. Industrial research might be more expeditiously carried on in the British Isles, but so far as agriculture is concerned, we might at least expect to have a bureau located in Canada. We know we have our own dominion bureau. Now we have an empire bureau, and we should like to know where it is.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): When this empire agreement was reached by the dominions, it was decided it would be advisable that the bureau be located in the United Kingdom. The agreement is for ten years, and during that period there would be ample time to bring the matter to the attention of the authorities if it were felt necessary at the end of that time to make a change.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the bureau under the supervision of the British Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I would say yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: Surely the minister sees the justice of our demand. I do not think we should pass an item amounting to even $21,000 without knowing where the bureau is located and who has control of it. The minister, I think, is rather doubtful. He says that it is located within the United Kingdom. If so, it naturally would come under the administration of the Department of Agriculture of the British government. I do not think this item should pass until we have the information. We do not wish to be insistent, but we are within our rights. I would ask that the item stand.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I have no objection to the item standing, but so far as the bureau itself is concerned, I think we realize it is merely the machinery for collection and distribution of information, and it makes very little difference where it is located so long as the different dominions have agreed upon the point at which it would be located.

Mr. VALLANCE: We have this empire bureau. Is there any one specific thing the minister can tell us that has been contributed from the bureau and that has not been developed by research in Canada?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): One item to which they have made a great contribution and that we have not undertaken very extensively in this country has been carried on in the Rowett Institute at Aberdeen under Doctor Orr. It is perhaps the greatest work done in the world on nutrition, the uses, otherwise unknown, that can be made of very cheap feeds, such as potatoes and vegetables that otherwise would be wasted, and that the feeders in Scotland in olden times felt were of such little use that they considered they had to use much more expensive feeds.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does the minister say that one of the bureaux is located in Aberdeen?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): One of the research laboratories.

Mr. REID: Has any Canadian been sent over there?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is a Canadian now at the Rowett Institute. I think his name is Mackenzie.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am not making an effort to delay the committee, but it is through the questions we put to the minister that the public is able to learn what is happening. That is the only way they have of obtaining knowledge as to why these moneys are voted. I say quite frankly that some of the actions of the government should be advertised, and this matter should be given all the publicity possible. For that reason I suggest that the item stand.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We may be asked by some of our constituents regarding this matter. I could not give them the information, because the minister has not been able to give it to us. I think it is reasonable to ask that the item stand, so that the information may be brought down later.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is a report covering a good many pages issued by these empire bureaux. If the committee so desires I shall bring down that report and read it from cover to cover, or lay it on the table. I suggest laying it on the table.

Mr. STEVENS: We are merely giving the minister an opportunity to open his department. Could not the item pass, and the minister bring in the information later on?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He has opened his department.

Item stands.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Mr. Chairman, I ask you to call item No. 92.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Last night the Minister of Trade and Commerce advised the house as to the departments which would be gone into. At that time he did not mention the Department of National Defence, and I do not think we ought to consider that department to-night.

Mr. STEVENS: If there is any opposition we shall not do so. The right hon. gentleman is quite correct; we did not name that department. The only reason I suggested it was that the Minister of Railways and Canals is ill—not seriously; he has a bad cold and had to go home. He has asked me if the committee will agree to calling an item in railways and canals, and as there are one or two noncontroversial items I think we might comply with his request. With that understanding I would ask the chairman to call item No. 99.

Department of Railways and Canals.

Miscellaneous—Printing and stationery, $7,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would the minister give the details of this item?

Mr. STEVENS: Obviously the item is for the ordinary printing of the reports issued by the Department of Railways and Canals from time to time. If it were necessary I think I could name a number of those reports; I am quite sure the hon. member is as familiar with them as I am. This vote provides for the ordinary printing necessary from year to year.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the Duff report included?

Mr. STEVENS: No; I wish it were.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the right hon. gentleman object to calling item No. 97, concerning the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada? I understand there could not be very great controversy in connection with this item.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, there is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think that item should be left for the attention of the minister.

Mr. STEVENS: How about item No. 101?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Leave the rest for the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals. Do not disappoint him.

Mr. STEVENS: Then, I can proceed only with my own department.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Go back to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STEVENS: If the right hon. gentleman would be content to discuss that item in the Department of Agriculture estimates and pass it to-night, we might proceed. In the meantime however we shall turn to the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister did not say anything about Trade and Commerce estimates yesterday.

Mr. STEVENS: They have been opened, of course.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister intimated what estimates would be considered to-day, and he did not mention the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. STEVENS: The right hon. gentleman is quite within his rights, if he insists upon them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Some of the members would like to have a word concerning these estimates.

Mr. STEVENS: Then I must call another item in Railways and Canals, or move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is the best thing to do.

Progress reported.

MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION ACT

The house resumed from Friday, February 3, consideration in committee of Bill No. 19, to amend the Migratory Birds Convention Act—Mr. Murphy—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 2—R. C. M. police to be game officers.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I believe there was some information the minister wished to give in connection with this matter.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): What information does the right hon. gentleman desire.

Mr. RALSTON: I had suggested to the Minister of Justice and to the minister in charge of the bill that this section be dropped, in view of the fact that already the minister has power to nominate members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or anybody else, so far as that goes, for the purpose of carrying out the duties imposed under the act. The Minister of Justice said he would consider my suggestion. I had pointed out that in the province of Nova Scotia there would be about one hundred and sixty officers taking the place of nine or ten. Those one hundred and sixty officers would obviously have no particular knowledge regarding the matters in their care, whereas the nine or ten would understand the nature of the duties with which they were charged, and would have the technical information necessary to enable them properly to enforce the act. I understand very little about this subject, but I believe there is considerable to learn with regard to the habits of birds, and it seems to me that we would do well to have men well fitted for their work rather than by act of parliament provide a group of men who obviously are not acquainted with the duties they have to perform.

Mr. MURPHY: I think the hon. member is under a slight misapprehension in regard to these game officers. There was only one part of Canada in which they were appointed, and that is in the maritime provinces. In the western provinces we have one permanent officer in the person of Mr. Munro. The game laws were enforced in those provinces, under the provincial acts and this dominion act, by the provincial police until their duties were taken over by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under an arrangement made within the last year, I think, with the Department of Justice, whereby the dominion police perform these duties. The same applied to Ontario and to the province of Quebec, with the exception of a small area along the river St. Lawrence. In the maritime provinces we had a permanent officer in the person of Mr. Tufts. Assisting him were five permanent officers known as assistant migratory bird officers, and there were additional men employed seasonally.

Mr. RALSTON: How many?

Mr. MURPHY: Possibly fifteen to twenty in the three provinces. These men were appointed seasonally, and were chosen from the localities in which the work was to be done. Now in place of employing those men seasonally it is proposed that their duties be carried on by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. When the hon. member speaks of replacing nine or ten men with one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty he is in error. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police are on duty in those provinces now, and we are simply adding these duties to others which they already perform.

Mr. RALSTON: Perhaps I was under a misapprehension, but that is not what I understood from the Minister of Justice. I understood from him that the idea was possibly to drop all these officers of which my hon. friend has spoken, at least all the assistants, and to substitute the full force of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, so that in effect the Migratory Birds Convention Act would be enforced under the direction of the Minister of Justice rather than the Minister of the Interior. From what my hon. friend just says it sounds to me that there is going to be Mr. Tufts, who is a very efficient officer, and I understand chief for the maritime provinces, the five officers of whom the minister has just spoken, the five, I presume, permanent officers, the fifteen or twenty temporary officers to whom he referred, plus the number of mounted police there are in the maritime provinces; and speaking of Nova Scotia I think I am not far wrong when I say there are about 150. The argument for this was that it was reducing expense. I cannot see that it is reducing expense if we are going to maintain the officers my hon. friend has already appointed and add let us say 150 who have no particular knowledge of the subject but who are members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. MURPHY: I am afraid I have not made myself clear. These temporary men who have been appointed seasonally will not in future be appointed at all. Their duties will be performed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who have no experience.

Mr. MURPHY: Possibly some of the temporary men appointed from year to year had not experience either.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Oh yes.

Mr. MURPHY: Perhaps my hon. friend is more familiar—

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I point out that the men appointed in my district under the supervision of Mr. Lewis, who is a capable official, were nearly always the same men for five or six years, and their knowledge grows.

Mr. MURPHY: New men were appointed from time to time. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, being permanent officers and continuing in their duties from year to year, will become efficient men, because they will be continued in the job. May I point out that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have in recent years taken over the duties of the preventive service, which duties were formerly performed by officials or appointees of the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. RALSTON: That is a totally different sort of duty, more like police duties.

Mr. MURPHY: These men are to-day protecting the coasts of the maritime provinces from smuggling, they have their boats and are in a splendid position to protect the migratory birds from illegal shooting.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I do not exactly understand the minister's explanation. I understood the Minister of Justice the other evening to give an assurance to my hon. friend the member for Shelburne-Yarmouth that the government would consider specifying particular individuals among the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to whom would be delegated the duties assigned to them under this bill. I understand now that all the 150 or so mounted policemen in the maritimes will be potential game officers. That is exactly what we objected to the other day, and the Minister of Justice promised specifically that he would take this situation under advisement. I should like to know now from the Minister of the Interior what conclusion the administration has come to in regard to this question.

Mr. MURPHY: The former section reads as follows:

5. The minister may appoint game officers for carrying out this act and the regulations, and may authorize such game officers to exercise the powers of a justice of the peace,—

It is that latter part with which the Minister of Justice was dealing when he said that such game officers might be designated for the exercise of the powers of justices of the peace, not that they would be appointed game officers. I hope my hon. friend follows me. We are proposing under this clause that all members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall for the purposes of this act be ex officio game officers. Under the old section the minister had the power to appoint game officers for the carrying out of the act. Action has already been taken transferring to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the carrying out of the provisions of this act, in place of the Minister of the Interior appointing these officers seasonally. Then the further question arises as to whether the mounted police should exercise the powers of justices of the peace, and I agreed with the objection that was made, as expressed by the Minister of Justice, that it is not advisable that a prosecutor should also be a judge sitting on the case. I am very reliably informed that the mounted police themselves do not wish such authority, and do not exercise it when they can secure the services of a magistrate. I fail to see the objection which my hon. friend appears to urge against this clause.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister is quite correct in what he has stated, but in addition the Minister of Justice gave the assurance to which I refer, that he would consider, probably in collaboration with my hon. friend, whether the government would nominate specific officers to enforce the provisions of this act in the various provinces, or whether blanket authority would be given to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as such. I should like to know now the conclusion they arrived at in regard to the assurance that was given.

Mr. RALSTON: Let me refer the minister to Hansard, page 1775, to which my hon. friend the member for Vancouver Centre refers. I said:

> But if the government are determined to have this work turned over to the mounted police, why not designate seven or eight or nine or ten officers who would have power to act, and not have 150 or 160 take the place of the nine men who are doing the work in Nova Scotia? That would obviate this blanketing in of the whole force, and you would be able to carry out exactly the same idea you have in mind if you want to transfer this work to the mounted police. Personally I think the idea is all wrong, and that the work should remain where it is, namely, under the responsible officers of the department which is administering the act.

And the Minister of Justice replied:

> Mr. Guthrie: I am not at all wedded to the suggestion contained in the act, and if my hon. friend is serious in his suggestion I should be prepared to let this clause stand and discuss the matter with the officials of the mounted police. I think, however, there is a good deal to be said in favour of empowering all the members of the force to do particular acts or administer particular laws, and that is now done in respect of other laws. . . . If my hon. friend thinks there is merit in the suggestion that only a specific number be designated instead of the whole force, I am willing to consider it. I do not disfavour it at all. There is of course the principle that all members of the force should have equal powers. I will ask that the clause stand and we can discuss the matter further.

Mr. MURPHY: I have no desire to force the clause through in the absence of the Minister of Justice, nor have I any particular desire to have the clause passed in the bill. The minister has power under the present act to name every one of the 150 or 160 and therefore it can be done in any case even if this clause is dropped. If hon. members are very anxious that this clause should not carry we can at least let it stand, or I would be willing to drop it.

Mr. RALSTON: My point is that there could be much more efficient administration of the act by a specific naming of nine or ten men to do the work rather than, by act of parliament, blanketing the whole force. The Minister of Justice seemed to have the idea that he would be administering and appointing special men. He said at page 1774:

> There may be points where at odd times it may be necessary to name some special officers for a particular district for certain seasons of the year. I do not however anticipate that will be necessary.
>
> Mr. Ralston: What minister will do that?
> Mr. Guthrie: That will be the mounted police.

It sounded to me therefore as if the mounted police were taking the place entirely of the officers to whom the minister referred earlier this evening.

Mr. MURPHY: That is not a correct interpretation of the situation, because the minister designated to carry out the act is the Minister of the Interior and therefore that responsibility devolves upon him. However—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That was not the impression we got the other day. We distinctly got the impression that this was another step in the progressive dismemberment of the Department of the Interior and that all these powers would be vested in the Minister of Justice. Now the minister says that it will rest with the Department of the Interior. I should like to let it stand until the Minister of Justice is here so that we shall know just where we are.

Mr. MURPHY: Very well.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, February 8, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I desire to lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

DURATION OF KING GOVERNMENT

Mr. GOTT:

On what date, or dates, did the late administration, that of the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, assume and relinquish office?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the government is unable to answer this question, I can tell my hon. friend where he can find the information. I think he can get the information in the Parliamentary Guide, the Canada Gazette, or the Canadian Almanac.

Mr. GOTT: I have asked the government for the answer. The right hon. gentleman forgets that he is now in the opposition.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the objection is well taken. The question should not be on the order paper. It will be struck off.

Question dropped.

RADIO COMMISSION

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Since the coming into force of the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932, how many licences for broadcasting stations have been issued, to what persons or corporations were they issued, and where are those stations located?

2. Were any of such licences issued for new stations, and if so, to what persons or companies and on what dates?

3. When were the members of the radio board appointed and when were they sworn in as commissioners?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. One; issued to La Patrie Publishing Company, Ltd., of Montreal; station situated at 180 St. Catherine street east, Montreal.

2. Yes: licence issued to the La Patrie Publishing Company, Ltd., on the 28th October, 1932.

3. They were appointed October 5, 1932; the chairman and the vice-chairman were sworn in on October 31, 1932; the third member of commission sworn in on January 18, 1933.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. How many employees are under the direction of the Radio Broadcasting Commission at the present time?

2. What are their family and Christian names?

3. What positions do they occupy?

4. What is their nationality?

5. By whom were they recommended and appointed to the various positions they occupy?

6. Which of them speak the French language?

7. Are the communications of the Ottawa office of the radio commission drafted in French?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The following information has been furnished by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission:

1. Four.

2 and 3. Miss Isabel Kirby—Stenographer; Miss Eglantine Plouffe—Stenographer; Miss Frances McAuley—Stenographer; Mr. Percy Paleff—Office boy.

4. British.

5. Civil Service Commission.

6. Miss Plouffe.

7. All communications received which are in the French language are answered in that language.

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

1. What appointments have been made to the radio commission?

2. By whom have these appointments been made?

3. Which persons, if any, have not been appointed through the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The following information has been furnished by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission:

1. One stenographer and one office boy.
2. Civil Service Commission.
3. None.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS—DAILY BULLETIN

Mr. MARCIL:

Is the Daily Bulletin, issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Department of Trade and Commerce, issued on the same day in French, and, generally, how is it distributed?

Mr. STEVENS:

Not hitherto, but instructions have now been issued to do so. This bulletin is distributed daily for press purposes.

DOMINION NOTES—GOLD COVERAGE

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. What is the amount of Dominion notes issued by the Dominion government with a gold coverage and what is the amount of the gold coverage for this total issue?

2. What is the total issue made by the Dominion government under the Finance Act up to the present, giving dates; and what is the amount of notes now outstanding with no gold coverage?

Mr. RHODES:

Nos. 1 and 2. As of January 31, 1933, total amount of Dominion Notes in circulation was $180,473,727.19. These notes were issued under authority of the following statutes:

|---|---|
| Cap. 4, 1915 | $ 26,000,000 00 |
| Finance Act, cap. 70, R.S. 1927 | 46,744,000 00 |
| Dominion Notes Act, cap. 41, R.S. 1927 | 107,729,727 19 |
| | $180,473,727 19 |

Total gold held against Dominion note issue was $70,936,056.24, including $12,500,000 against the first $50,000,000 of Dominion notes issued, $57,729,727.19 representing full coverage against notes issued in excess of $50,000,000 under cap. 41, R.S. 1927, and $706,329.05 representing gold held in excess of statutory requirements. Gold held represent a coverage of 39·3 per cent against total amount of Dominion notes outstanding.

(As to dates of advances under the Finance Act, it should be noted that the amount outstanding at any time is the net issue after many different advances and repayments.)

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

Mr. LUCHKOVICH:

1. How many immigrants entered Canada during 1932?
2. What was their racial origin?
3. What provinces absorbed them, and in what numbers?

Mr. GORDON:

1. 20,591.

2.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

Mr. GOBEIL:

1. Who is responsible for the administration and collection of annual payments on loans made to farmers by the Canadian Farm Loan Board, in the province of Quebec?

2. Has the Canadian Farm Loan Board given instructions to the board of the province of Quebec to take legal proceedings against the farmers who were unable to meet their payments when due?

3. If not, who issues such instructions?

Mr. RHODES: (Submitted by the Canadian Farm Loan Board).

1. The Provincial Board as agent for the Canadian Farm Loan Board in the province.

2. Legal proceedings, when unavoidable, are authorized by the Canadian Farm Loan Board after consultation with and on the recommendation of the provincial board.

3. See answer, No. 2.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

QUEBEC TOPOGRAPHICAL SURVEY WORK

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. How many land surveyors, chainmen and assistants have been employed on topographical survey work in the province of Quebec since January 1, 1930, to date?

2. What are their family and Christian names?

3. By whom were they recommended and appointed?

4. In what areas in the province of Quebec were the said topographical surveys effected during the aforesaid period?

PUBLIC WATERWAYS AND CANALS

Mr. HEAPS:

1. What are the waterways and canals owned, controlled and operated by the Dominion of Canada?

2. What was the date of construction of such canals and waterways?

3. What was the capital cost of all such works and annual interest charges on same?

4. What were the annual maintenance and operating charges on same during past ten years?

5. What is the annual revenue derived from all sources from each undertaking during the past ten years?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

RESTIGOUCHE, QUE., INDIAN AGENT

Mr. MARCIL:

For a copy of the evidence given at the investigation and report of the commissioner appointed to investigate the charges of political partisanship made against Dr. Richard, Indian agent at Restigouche, Quebec.

NORTH EAST HARBOUR N.S. POST OFFICE

Mr. RALSTON:

For a copy of all orders in council, reports, letters, telegrams, correspondence or other documents, relating to the change of location of the post office formerly at North East Harbour and with regard to the qualifications, recommendations and appointment of the postmaster in charge of such post office at this new location and the dispensing with the services of the previous incumbent, including all representations made in respect of any of these matters.

BAILEY'S BROOK, N.S., BREAKWATER

Mr. RALSTON:

For a copy of the payrolls in connection with the work done on the breakwater at Bailey's Brook, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, during the summers of 1931 and 1932.

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S., BREAKWATER

Mr. RALSTON:

For a copy of all bills, accounts, cheques and correspondence, respecting logs purchased for use on the North Sydney breakwater extension done under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931.

MISSANABIE, ONT., POST OFFICE

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, petitions, reports, plans and other documents, in the possession of the government, respecting the post office at Missanabie, Ontario, since the month of August, 1930.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED DIVISION INTO TWO SECTIONS—AGRICULTURAL AND WHEAT

Mr. F. H. PICKEL (Brome-Missisquoi) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the agricultural committee would give much better satisfaction if it were divided into two sections: (a) agricultural section; (b) wheat section.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in offering a few words in support of this resolution, I intend no discourtesy towards the grain growers. I move this resolution simply with the object of getting a committee that will function better, at least as regards eastern agriculture. At the present time and for some years past it has been impossible in the committee on agriculture to discuss agricultural problems relating to eastern Canada, and I should like to have that committee divided in such a manner that these questions may be discussed in a sane way. At the present time and for many years past the committee on agriculture has consisted of an overwhelming number of grain growers who have just swamped the eastern section of that committee and it has been impossible, as I say, to discuss properly matters connected with eastern agriculture. The committee is composed of sixty members, twenty-seven of whom are grain growers, nine or ten genuine farmers from the east and the twenty-four or twenty-three who make up the remaining number, representing medicine, law, dentistry and almost every other calling that we have in this country. Under such circumstances it is hard to imagine how eastern agriculture can be discussed with any clearness in that committee.

I want to pay my respects to the grain grower; I admit he is a number one good fellow and good citizen, but he is just as loquacious and aggressive as you can find. He never misses an opportunity of telling you all about any subject you may want to bring up; he imagines he knows it all. This is a superiority complex which has been developed in the past, when between the year 1921 and 1930 the wheat growers were directing the destiny of this country.

I should like to call to the attention of the house some of the grievances facing eastern farmers. Especially since 1925 the east has been in a bad condition. The late government apparently did everything in its power to put it out of business. Further, I am forced to admit that the present administration is not exerting itself to the extent I had wished. It is with some reluctance I take upon myself the task of bringing this to the attention of the house. The importance and urgency of the matter demands that something be done at once, if we are to save eastern agriculture. This should not be made a matter of political controversy. Both of the major parties in this house for a great many years have been negligent of the interests of the eastern farmers. There are a few genuine farmers in this house, some of whom have been here for many years. Even they do not seem to be willing to accept the task of speaking for eastern agriculture. Perhaps their unwillingness may be the result of their longer and greater political experience. However that may be, Mr. Speaker, I am going to do my best to fulfil my promise to help my farmer friends. I trust that the house will charitably accept my observations in the spirit in which they are given. It is my intention to make some constructive suggestions with the sole object of aiding the government in some small measure, so that it may come to the rescue of the biggest and best class of citizens in our dominion.

In 1925, 1926 and 1930 I was told from every platform in my counties that it would be impossible to do anything in this house to help the farmers. I do not believe that such is the case. The great trouble in this chamber has been that hon. members did not know how to help eastern farmers. I purpose to tell of the grievances under which those farmers are labouring, and I am presumptuous enough to believe that I can suggest ways and means of relieving their difficulties.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How about changing the government?

Mr. PICKEL: I have been engaged in mixed farming all my life. Without boasting idly, I flatter myself that I know the game from A to Z. I want to add that it has been an expensive experience, and anybody who has been engaged in agriculture the last few years will not doubt my words. I have the honour to represent a double constituency, composed of those two fine counties Brome and Missisquoi, situated in the eastern section of the province of Quebec. I was elected by my farmer friends on the distinct promise that I would do what I could to help them, and to the best of my ability I shall attempt to fill my promise. I can but say, in the words of Lincoln, "I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true; I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have." Knowing that there are several ways in which the farming industry could be beneficially assisted, I should be remiss in my duty were I not to bring my suggestions to the attention of the House of Commons, the body which has the power, if it will exercise that power, greatly to help the farmer out of the abyss in which he finds himself. I have been a member in this house for about two and a half years, and during the two long and one short sessions I have been a regular attendant. Now I find I have made a good beginning on a third session.

I submit we have had very few practical suggestions, let alone any material legislation, for the benefit of dairymen. That fact in itself seems rather strange. I have listened anxiously and patiently for some of the farmers in this house to say a word for eastern agriculture, but up to the present time we have not heard one practical constructive suggestion from either side of the house. The opposition never misses an opportunity of portraying the calamitous conditions under which eastern farmers are working, and have no hesitation in denouncing the present government therefor, despite the fact that hon. members opposite, when they occupied this side of the house, gave the farmers their death blow through the Australian trade treaty of 1925. The New Zealand order in council which remained in force until October 25, 1930, proved most destructive to the interests of the farmers. They have not been able to regain their former prestige and will not do so for some time. In 1922 the then government, the present opposition, enacted the Hog Grading Act, and in 1925 the Egg Grading Act. The unfair, irrational and unjust administration of both of these acts has proved a curse to the farmers. In the past two or three sessions it has been the regular pastime of some hon. members opposite to compare prices. They state that butter is so much in Canada and so much in the United States, eggs so much in Canada and so much in the United States. Particularly, that was the pleasant pastime in which the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) indulged. To-day however we do not hear so much cackling. I would like to remind the house that all kinds of farm produce, with the exception of beef, are selling for higher prices in Canada to-day than anywhere else in the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. PICKEL: That is absolutely true. Hon. members do not realize it because they do not hear that side of the question discussed. While farmers in the United States are receiving only ten or twelve cents a dozen for eggs, in Canada they are receiving twenty cents or more. While butter costs only sixteen or seventeen cents in the United States it costs twenty cents in Canada. We do not hear so many comparisons of prices as we did.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the price in New Zealand?

Mr. PICKEL: A good deal less than it is here. During my short sojourn in this house I have learned a few things, from observation and experience; not the least of these is that this house is not in sympathy with eastern agriculture. That seems strange. The eastern farmers constitute by far the largest class in this country. We all realize that the government is endeavouring to do everything it can to get us out of the terrible condition we are in, and to my mind, helping eastern farmers to increase their purchasing power would go a long way in that direction. I propose to tell you how this can be brought about without increasing the cost to the consumer.

To repeat, I say that this house is not of a dairying mentality. When agriculture is mentioned in this house the great majority of the members at once commence to think of grain growing. In grain growing we have a short seasonal occupation, seed time and harvest, with three or four months intervening which the growers devote principally to local and domestic visiting and social amenities of one kind or another and studying all sorts of abstract political theories such as inflation and deflation, currency revaluation, increase of the price level, parity of the pound and dollar, and so on. To my mind, inflation is equivalent to destruction, damnation and dissolution of the country. After harvest these same gentlemen —barring the last two years—fortified by a large bank roll, take occasion to tour the world. They make large amounts of money, but Canada does not get any benefit from it; it is spent in foreign countries. The western grain grower cannot stand the rigors of a Canadian winter; he has to go to southern beaches where the gentle zephyrs blow through his whiskers, cooling his heated brow. I do not blame him one bit; I would do the same thing if I could. And I do not know that I can blame him for trying to put these things over on the east. But it is high time that the grain growers should recognize that there is an east, and to appreciate the fact that it is all due to the east that there is a west at all. They should also appreciate that where there is one farmer west of lake Superior there are three east. The westerner is a sort of migratory farmer; he goes away with the birds in the fall and comes back with them in the spring.

Mr. VALLANCE: He doesn't take the eggs with him.

Mr. PICKEL: Referring back to the agriculture committee. I want to say that whenever an easterner gets up in that committee and begins to talk milk, eggs, butter, anything of the kind, the western grain growers will take the words right out of his mouth. Seventy-five per cent of them use canned milk, and they do not want to be tied down to a cow, for if they are they cannot go south. Theirs is the glorious carefree life! Contrast this orgy of existence with the hard, plodding life of the eastern farmer. He puts in the longest hours of continuous and exacting labour for the least remuneration of any closs in the world. His is not a short seasonal occupation; it is continuous from day to day and from year to year all his life. He has to be on the job over six hundred eight hour days a year without respite or holiday. That is the life of the eastern farmer.

The eastern farmer is endowed with a peculiar mentality; the great difficulty he has is that he is non-cooperative. The western farmers, on the other hand, all hang together. I would counsel the farmers of eastern Canada to send more representatives from the rural sections, members whose interests are their interests. I think the welfare of the farmers would be better looked after if there were more rural representation. If the eastern agriculturist were better represented in this house it would be much better for the house and for the country. I firmly believe that if there had been a good strong representation here of eastern farmers we would not have built the Grand Trunk Pacific, nor yet the Hudson Bay railway. The eastern farmer is faced with a continuous struggle for existence; he has the heavenly elements to fight—drought, flood, wind, frost, hail; he has numberless enemies in nature, many varieties of parasites, flies, worms, grubs and bugs. Everything he raises is the result of continuous and hard labour. One would naturally think that when he had brought his crop or product to maturity his labours would be about finished, but, sir, such is not the case. When he comes to put his product on the market and tries to secure a little return for his labour he meets another set of pests, even worse than the others. I refer to middlemen, commission men, inspection acts, irrational and unfair administration of grading acts, governmental interference, regulations and restrictions, and by no means least, the politician. That is what the eastern farmer is up against.

Now the politician means well, but in the majority of cases he has not the slightest idea of what could and should be done to help the farmer; so adverse instead of beneficial legislation is often enacted than otherwise. For instance, we hear advocated the formation of an export marketing board. That seems to be a sort of shibboleth in this house. To my mind, sir, we do not need an export marketing board at all. We certainly do not need it for the east; if it can do anything for the west I am for it and will do anything I can to further it.

Here I would like to put on Hansard the percentage of Canadian agricultural production consumed in the domestic market. Excluding wheat and cheese, nearly 97 per cent of all farm produce is consumed here in Canada; excluding wheat, 95·7 per cent; including wheat, 88 per cent. The eastern farmer has nothing of any consequence to export, just a little cheese. Of oats, 100 per cent is consumed in Canada; of barley, 100 per cent; of rye, 100 per cent; of flax seed, 100 per cent; of milk, condensed, and milk products, 100 per cent; of eggs, 100 per cent. Red clover is the article of which we consume least, namely 27·7 per cent.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I ask the hon. member where he got these statistics?

Mr. PICKEL: I got them from the bureau of statistics.

An hon. MEMBER: What year?

Mr. PICKEL: The last year for which I have figures, 1931-32. Right at home, under our very noses the eastern farmer is being exploited and profiteered against by the middleman and the commission man. These people apparently have no difficulty in securing the necessary legislation from the different governing bodies to enable them to take advantage of the farmer, and that is the trouble with the eastern farmer to-day.

In support of my contention I bring to your notice the condition of the milk trade. In my section of the country, fifty-five miles from Montreal, 75 per cent of all the milk produced is consumed fresh as fluid milk or cream; 57 per cent and a decimal of all the milk produced in the entire dominion is consumed as fresh milk or cream, 25 per cent is made into butter, 6 per cent into cheese, and 7 per cent and a decimal into milk products—evaporated milk and milk products. The great bulk of the produce of the farmers in the east is milk; that is what the farmer depends upon principally for his income.

In the city of Montreal during the past season the farmers in my section have received a net of 70 cents a hundred pounds for milk. They are supposed to get $1.35, and they must pay 25 cents express to the city as well as cartage from the station, and then they are penalized because they are told that they are sending too much. The distributor tells them that they have so much milk that they have to separate it, and therefore the farmer has to take butter prices. This brings his net down to 70 cents and even as low as 60; at any rate it varies between 60 and 80.

The Montreal market, even at that low price, is the best market we have, and the result is that more milk and cream is sent to the city than is consumed as fresh milk or cream. Consequently much of this milk is churned, so that the farmers have to be content with a butter price. That is the farmer's side of the story. On the other hand, the distributor, when he sells that milk, receives $4 per hundred, if he distributes in quarts, at 10 cents a quart, and he gets 2 cents a quart extra if he distributes by the pint. If you consider the spread he gets out of ice cream, which costs him 37½ cents a gallon and which he sells at $1.20, and consider the buttermilk which he steals entirely from the farmer and sells for nearly as much as he does whole milk, and if you consider further the separated milk which he uses to reduce the super-standard milk which he also steals from the farmer, you will readily see that he is getting more than $5 per hundred. How in the world such an unjust condition of affairs can be permitted to exist in this supposedly civilized country is more than I can imagine. It is absolute robbery.

Now the farmer does not wish to boost the price to the consumer, who is paying enough already; 95 per cent of the consumers in the city, if you asked them, would tell you that the farmers are robbing them. That is simply propaganda spread by the milkman to cover up his wickedness. He tries to pull the wool over people's eyes and make them think he is engaged in some philanthropic undertaking instead of staging a genuine holdup.

The farmer should have a fifty-fifty break in regard to the selling price in the city; he is entitled to it and should have it. The farmer in eastern Canada is not asking for a dole or a bonus or anything of that sort. Come to Quebec if you want to see thrifty, industrious people. Come and see our farmers. Let me say that the agitators in the southeast corner of the chamber will not have much weight in Quebec; they will not get any sympathy and so they will not come there. The older I get the firmer I am in my conviction that the greatest asset the dominion has is the French Canadian race. These people are the bulwarks of Canadianism; there is no question about it. Come there and go amongst them and you will see that they are busy people. They do not travel, but stay at home and attend to their business.

Right here I want to tell the western grain growers that there is a great potential market in the east for them if they will only take advantage of it. We should not be making butter in the east. We make the poorest butter in the world. It is humiliating to tell the farmer of eastern Canada that his butter is no good, but it is a fact. Whenever we send a consignment of butter to England, which is rare, it is at the bottom as regards grade and price; it receives the lowest price in the world. But when we send a box of cheese it is of superior quality. Our cheese is on top; it is the best cheese in the world.

It is a sad reflection on the Canadian people that we have been making butter for years and years when we could have done so much better making cheese. Last summer we made butter that sold at 15, 16 and 17 cents, whereas if we had made cheese we could have got as much as 22 to 25 cents. Let our people in the west make butter and everyone else in Canada make cheese; let us specialize in it. We make an article that the English market requires.

Let us note the trend of the trade. In 1904 we exported 247,000,000 pounds of cheese to England; last year we exported 74,000,000 pounds. In 1904 New Zealand sent hardly any cheese to that market; last year they exported 250,000,000 pounds. They have usurped our place in the English market so far as volume is concerned; nevertheless we maintain the supremacy of our quality and price. Our cheese is the best; let us specialize in it. The government is possessed of all these facts and should organize an educational campaign throughout the east to assist the people in every way possible in the making of cheese.

Returning now to the milk situation, in the cities the different inspectors, the officials of the board of health and the legislatures seem to vie with one another in passing restrictive legislation at the request of the distributors for the purpose of keeping the small man out. The distributor builds great big palaces of plate glass and marble, moving into new premises every few years, and the farmer pays the price. Go into the streets of Montreal and stop before some apartment house in which there are fifteen or twenty families and you will see half a dozen milk trucks. They are just as extravagant in their operations as they can be. They do not curtail; the farmer is an easy mark and he pays the price. There are times when one may be pardoned for experiencing a sort of sentimental charitableness towards a pickpocket or a robber who takes long chances to gain his end, but there is no charity that anyone can feel towards the milk distributor who is daily guillotining and robbing the farmer, taking no chances at all himself. The milk distributor is gouging and robbing the farmer, he takes no chance at all as he is protected by legislation. I do not blame the Dominion government for the irregularities connected with the distribution of milk but I consider this house supreme, we have the power and it is within our jurisdiction to investigate the whole situation. The public should know at once who is responsible, there should be no hesitation in investigating this matter fully.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. PICKEL: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon) that this resolution be adopted.

[Mr. Pickel.]

Mr. W. E. TUMMON (South Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in making a few remarks as seconder of this resolution I do not propose to draw any comparisons between the farmers in one part of Canada with those in any other part, nor do I intend to take up the time of the house in referring to many of the subjects already covered by the mover of the resolution (Mr. Pickel). The resolution reads:

That in the opinion of this house, the agricultural committee would give much better satisfaction if it were divided into two sections: (a) agricultural section; (b) wheat section.

I think the hon. member for Brome is to be congratulated for bringing this matter to the attention of the house. The subject matter of this resolution has been discussed privately by many members of the committee. I believe the usefulness of this committee could be increased by the adoption of the resolution. Like the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I do not want the house to think for one moment that I feel that the questions which have been discussed in the past by the agriculture committee were not necessary or were not justly and properly discussed. I believe that these questions were important and were properly brought before the committee, but the fact remains that there have been certain years when practically the entire time of the committee has been taken up with questions of the grading and marketing of wheat, of barley and such like. There has been a feeling which has been not only confined to the members of the committee, that problems affecting the farmers in eastern and central Canada have been crowded out. This may be very largely due to the fact that the farmers of western Canada are more ready than those of eastern and central Canada to bring their problems to the attention of the government. As we all know, there is a proper way to get these different problems before that committee.

I went back a number of years to find out just how many meetings had been held annually by this committee and the subjects that had been discussed each year. I found that in 1922 there were twenty-seven meetings, twenty-two being in connection with wheat marketing and five in connection with questions relating to other forms of agriculture. In 1923 there were seventeen meetings held, none of which related to wheat or grain. That would seem to show that when questions concerning the marketing of wheat or the Canada Grain Act were not before the committee, the committee found time to deal with questions relating to other parts of Canada. In 1924 there were seven meetings, two in connection with wheat rust and five in connection with other matters. In 1925 there were thirty-two meetings, twenty-six being in connection with wheat and the grain act and only six in connection with problems affecting other parts of Canada. In 1926 there were seven meetings held in connection with the grain act and two in connection with other problems. In 1927 seven meetings were held, all in connection with problems other than wheat and grain. In 1928 there were twenty-seven meetings, twenty-four in connection with the Canada Grain Act and the protein content of grain, and three in connection with other farm products. In 1929 forty meetings were held in connection with the protein content and grading generally of wheat. In 1930 fifty-one meetings were held, forty-nine of which were in connection with the grain act revision and two in connection with the maple sugar industry, a matter of much importance to the province from which the mover of this resolution comes. In 1931 there were seventeen meetings in connection with farm problems generally, and five in connection with the Whiteside inquiry. In 1932 there were ten meetings in connection with grain and six in connection with the beet sugar industry. In ten years there were one hundred and eighty-five meetings in connection with wheat, the grading of wheat and the like, and only seventy-one in connection with other problems affecting the farming industry of Canada.

As I said before, I am not questioning the importance of the questions relating to wheat; rather I feel that the committee at all times should be prepared to give whatever time is necessary to matters which relate to the marketing of grain and such like in the west. However, I do not think that the time of the committee should be taken up wholly in the discussion of such matters; some provision should be made whereby other branches of agriculture could be discussed. The growing of wheat is important to a great portion of the west, but there are other agricultural products which are just as important to other sections of Canada. For instance in the dairy industry the district, from which I come, is particularly interested. The growing of potatoes is important to the maritime provinces; the growing of fruit is important to parts of Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, and there is also the live stock problem, the poultry problem, and other matters which are important to many sections of the country. I am convinced that some effort should be made to increase the usefulness of the agriculture committee, and I trust that the government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) will look sympathetically upon this resolution.

Mr. P. A. SEGUIN (L'Assomption-Montcalm) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening attentively to the honourable member who moved this motion; and, in reading it over I note that he requests that the committee be divided into two sections: one, properly speaking, on agriculture and the other on wheat. I cannot see why the honourable member, to be more precise, would not go so far as to request a section on tobacco and another on dairy, two industries of primary interest to eastern Canada.

I was in no way astonished to hear the honourable member complain of the fact that, since he has been in the house, since 1930, he has not heard a speech embodying proposals of a practical order in connection with agriculture. I congratulate him on having had the courage of rebuking his government for not having done justice to this industry and for not advocating a policy which would help the farming class of this country, and, more especially that of his province. I think that the honourable member revealed what was in his mind or went further than he would have wished, nevertheless, he bitterly rebuked the majority of the members of this house representing rural districts, and more particularly the honourable ministers of the province of Quebec, among whom a few at least represent rural counties.

The honourable member went so far as to suggest an increase in the rural membership. I think it would have been more proper for him to state that the present ministerial rural representation failed in its duty and in no way endeavoured to obtain from this government, in favour of the agricultural community, but especially eastern Canada, the share of protection to which it is entitled. The honourable member neglected to state, for instance, that the present government did not fulfil the pledges given in 1930 nor find the means of increasing the price of butter, but simply of preventing the decrease of the price of butter as it is to-day. These gentlemen, in 1930, made a great ballyhoo, and appealed to the people stating: that the King government was responsible if butter sold for 32 or 33 cents a pound. How does it happen that these gentlemen, within the last three years, were unable to remedy this evil, on the contrary, the situation is getting worse and butter, to-day, sells between 20 and 22 cents?

I congratulate the honourable member for having had the courage of rebuking his government for having acted so shamefully ever since it has been at the helm of public affairs.

Mr. Speaker, so far as the motion itself, it is worthy of being discussed, and I really wonder if we would not gain by having the committee on agriculture divided in various sections, one special section being allotted to these two great industries: that of tobacco and dairy. I think that the tobacco question is of the utmost importance, since it contributes a revenue to the country through the customs and excise. This industry should be allotted in the committee a special section which would devote itself to revising our tariff and enquiring whether the custom and excise duties existing on our tobacco should not be altered and whether something could not be done to prevent foreign tobacco competing with that of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add for the present; I shall have the opportunity of referring to this subject again before the end of the session.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, because I have the honour to represent one of the finest agricultural constituencies in New Brunswick and because I am extremely interested in the farmers of my constituency, as I have shown on many occasions in a practical way, especially during the last four years, I rise to support this motion and to congratulate the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) on having brought forward his motion as a first practical step towards a study of the situation which confronts us as the representatives of these farmers.

I have been a member of the house for twelve or more years and I have never been honoured with representation on the committee of agriculture. While I do not pretend to be a farmer, I can claim to be a son of the soil, and because I am a son of the soil I have the deepest sympathy for the farmers and their problems; I have studied their problems and I know the conditions under which they are labouring. I know further the remedies are very difficult of achievement. Nevertheless I congratulate the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) on having brought forward this motion and intend to support it; I ask that every hon. member support it or show cause why he should not do so.

I have no quarrel with the grain growers and their representation in the house; they are doing exactly right when they come down here, discuss their problems and ask parliament to pass legislation which will assist them in the solution of those problems. We certainly have heard enough about them. I remember the session of 1922 when wheat was king in this house and the question of freight rates on wheat was uppermost in the mind of every hon. member.

I know the question of distribution is one of the most difficult with which any legislative body can deal and under our constitution that difficulty is doubled and trebled. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has referred to the situation respecting the marketing of milk in Montreal. What he has said with respect to that is duplicated in every city and large municipality throughout the whole dominion and is something that should certainly engage the attention of those who, under our constitution, are primarily charged with the responsibility. I take it that they are the provincial authorities, but there is much that the federal authorities can do in a cooperative way in respect to this matter. In the city of Saint John, which is the largest municipality in New Brunswick, the consumer of milk pays ten cents a quart delivered, while the distributors of milk pay twenty-five cents for an eight-quart can, or a fraction over three cents a quart, delivered in Saint John. It will be seen at once that there is a spread of nearly seven cents between the cost of the distributor for milk delivered at his depot and the cost to the consumer. I say—and I say it with great confidence—that anyone who studies the question will agree with me that the cost of distribution is entirely too great and no blame is to be attached to either the consumer or the producer, but the fault lies with our method of distribution. I am not going so far as to say, as my colleague from Brome-Missisquoi has done, that these gentlemen are highwaymen and robbers; unquestionably they are in business for a profit, but there is a way of handling this proposition and it is by the cooperative method.

Mr. POWER: Political cooperation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not mean political cooperative method as suggested by the hon. member for Quebec South. I think he and I are pretty much in agreement as to that. There is a way, but it takes somebody to point it out to the farmer. It is through the different departments of agriculture and I make this as a constructive suggestion. In the meantime attempts should be made to have the question investigated. We have a Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Which is working overtime.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not know it is working overtime on coal.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is working on coal.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not going to suggest it should not, but there is a large field of investigation with regard to the distribution of milk. The trouble with the act is that a foundation charge has to be laid by some private individual. It is not the business of any public functionary to start in motion the machinery of the law. That was the weakness of the act from the very beginning.

Mr. HEENAN: It is not necessary to wait for an information to be laid.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not recall whether or not the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) was the father of the act; perhaps it was his predecessor.

Mr. HEENAN: I just want to point out that my experience in connection with the act is that it is not necessary to wait for an information to be laid. If a case is drawn to the attention of the minister, he may take action.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Some private individual has to bring it to the attention of the minister. I do not know what the experience of the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) may have been in connection with the act, but I know the results achieved under him have been actually nil, especially in regard to milk, and he was Minister of Labour for five years under the late government. We have heard a great deal of his sympathy for consumers, but when he was in a position to do something for the producers of milk and when this condition must have been known to him, because it has prevailed for years, he sat strangely silent.

The resolution, in my opinion, does not go quite far enough. It suggests that, in the opinion of this house, a special committee or another select standing committee on agriculture should be set up which will not deal with the problems of the grain growers.

Mr. VALLANCE: How is the house going to become acquainted with them?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I suggest that as long as the hon. gentleman is in the house, we shall be acquainted with them? I do not find any fault with his attitude in that respect. In what he is doing he is carrying out his full duty to his constituents. Nobody will complain about that. There is no doubt that the eastern agriculturist has been strangely silent in this house, and that opportunities should be given to him to ventilate the grievances he unquestionably has. This is the first step towards his attaining that end.

I commend the resolution to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). I hope he will support it, and if he does I believe he will receive the thanks of thousands of agriculturists in eastern Canada who, after all, outnumber by far the agriculturists of western Canada, and who are the backbone of our dominion.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite proper that hon. gentlemen should ventilate this question, but I trust the government will not be too much exercised by the proposal to divide the agriculture committee into two or any other number of sections. If hon. gentlemen opposite desire to bring the milk, butter, egg or any other question before the committee I am sure they will find that on every occasion hon. members on this side of the house will be quite prepared to facilitate such action. It must be remembered that the government is responsible for questions submitted to the agriculture or any other committee; those matters must have the approval of the government. While it is claimed that those who are growing grain are more grasping and more insistent upon having their problems considered or ventilated, it is up to other hon. members who are particularly interested in these other problems to press their views with equal persistence.

Hon. members are mistaken, however, when they suggest that only two or three provinces are interested in the production of wheat. Every province in Canada grows wheat. Ontario grows on an average about 20,000,000 bushels; Quebec grows a very considerable quantity, and although the quantities grown in the maritime provinces and British Columbia are small, yet even those provinces grow some. I should like to remind the house that the western prairie provinces produce per capita as much as any other province of the dominion of any kind of live stock you may mention. They produce, per capita, quantities equal to those of Ontario and Quebec. Mention anything you like—butter, eggs, bacon, ham, hogs, cattle, horses—and you will find that we produce per capita in quantities as large as Ontario and Quebec. I make the one exception of cheese, because the western provinces do not produce much of that commodity. So I say it is folly to asume we are not interested in mixed farming products. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will not be greatly moved by the pleading of hon. members who have already spoken, and that he will not accept the suggestion of dividing this country into two camps, one of wheat growers and the other of the producers of other farm commodities.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is divided now, and the hon. gentleman helped to do it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In my view that would be a mistaken policy. Further, it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), not the Minister of Agriculture, who refers questions pertaining to wheat or other cereals to the agriculture committee. If some hon. gentleman opposite, or from any other part of the house, will move to have all agricultural matters and products under one minister, he will have my support, irrespective of the present or past incumbents of that office. That is a move which should be made, so that there would be only one minister to deal with and not two as at present. For the past thirty years every problem affecting grain has been referred to the agriculture committee by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I should be more enthusiastic about any move which would bring greater centralization in the Department of Agriculture than any action which might tend to separate it.

I recall that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) appeared as a member of the agriculture committee for the first time in 1931, on which occasion he spent most of his time slamming the system of grading farm products. Nearly all new members who come into this House of Commons, even those from the rural districts who are not familiar with the grading system, like to take a slam at it. Before they are here very long, however, they realize that after all it is worth while and a great improvement on former "pigs is pigs" or "eggs is eggs" methods. Let us improve but not ditch or discard our grading methods. At the end of the first session of this parliament I was pleased to find before this session was half through that even the new members on all sides of the house who had not given the grading system great study, were strongly in favour of perpetuating that standardization of farm products policy which had been inaugurated by the previous government. When he first appeared in the committee the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi strongly advocated doing something drastic about the grading system. His suggestions were not definite however. It would appear that he wanted to hoist it, altogether. We realize that there are two or three commodities which present great difficulties, so far as grading is concerned. In this connection I would mention particularly hogs and eggs. However, taking it by and large the system of standardizing our products and especially those for export, has found general favour in the minds of both consumers and producers.

I do not know what advantage the hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon) hopes to obtain from dividing the agriculture committee. Probably he is under the impression that only eastern farmers are interested in dairy products. As I said before, although in the west we are not particularly interested in the production of cheese and the growing of tobacco or other commodities which require greater heat or precipitation than are afforded by our climate, our production of the commodities I mentioned previously is as great per capita of the total population as is the production in the other provinces of the dominion. Having that in mind I am sure the hon. member will realize the folly of dividing the committee, calling one "agriculture" and the other "wheat," as if wheat was not agriculture.

The hon. member for L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Séguin) indicated that if there were an effort to divide the agriculture committee on a basis of commodities grown there would be difficulty in ascertaining where to stop. Fruit, vegetables and other commodities are produced right across the dominion, and for that reason rather than making a geographical division such as the one suggested it would be much better to cement the divisions already existing.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I think we owe thanks to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel). He has invited the house to consider whether or not agriculture is entitled to a forum in which its problems may be adequately discussed. The last speaker has referred to per capita production of beef, butter, milk, pork, eggs and other kindred commodities in the west. In passing I suggest to him that probably that is not an adequate yardstick by which to measure. In the east we have large urban centres, and a more restricted area under cultivation. Therefore I do not believe the application of the standard which he himself has invoked would lead him to a satisfactory conclusion. I think the hon. member will admit that whatever may be the production of beef, butter, cheese or eggs in the west, the first interest in that section of Canada is wheat. The complaint of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is that topics more peculiar to the east are denied a hearing.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BROWN: Never.

Mr. HACKETT: That is the situation which has been described by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. DUPUIS: He has been misinformed.

Mr. HACKETT: The desire of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and of other hon. members from rural constituencies in the east is not to set the east against the west, or to disintegrate the agriculture committee, but merely to find a place in which the ills from which the agricultural population of the east now suffer may be adequately discussed, and, if possible, remedied. That is the argument of the hon. member, and I cannot imagine that any hon. gentleman in the house could oppose it. I am not a member of the agriculture committee, and I do not know whether it will be necessary to divide it to bring about the desired result. That may be a matter which the committee could determine as satisfactorily as could the house. I do know, however, that at the present time there is no place in which eastern agricultural problems are discussed; at least we can admit that. For instance there is a question which is vital to the milk producers of the eastern townships, that is butter. We were told a few minutes ago that our entire production of butter is consumed in Canada. We know furthermore that our Canadian production is adequate to the requirements of Canada. But the market and the price of butter appear to have been bedevilled by the possibility of importation from New Zealand. The disparity between the value of New Zealand money and our own and English money and our own has done much to nullify the benefit of the protective measures enacted by this government some months ago, so far as the butter producer is concerned. From time to time a few pounds of New Zealand butter come into the country, no large quantity came during the last year and a half, but there is the constant menace, with the result that butter is being sold at extremely low prices, which is very discouraging to that large element in southeastern Quebec that is engaged almost exclusively in that industry. If a certain part of the time of the sessions of the agriculture committee were allotted to the discussion of questions of this kind, or if a subdivision of the committee were to devote time to problems of this type, that element which now feels itself almost without representation and without opportunity of making known its situation would feel that something had been done to alleviate its distress. If, as stated by the hon. gentleman who spoke last, there are large interests in the west producing butter, eggs, cheese, poultry and possibly tobacco, it seems to me that they should welcome this opportunity of studying these problems. I do not think it would necessarily follow, if a subcommittee were set up or a certain portion of the time of the present committee were devoted to these problems, that east would be set against west. If these interests exist in the west as they do in the east, then both have a common interest in going into these matters and seeing whether the condition of those engaged in this type of production cannot be improved.

In bringing this question before the house at this time I feel that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) has expressed the ardent longing of that section of the country from which we come. He made also reference to legislation enacted within the last four or five years with regard to grading, he mentioned particularly hog-grading and egg-grading. Personally I am not possessed of information to qualify me to express an opinion as to the value of this legislation, but I do know that large elements feel that this legislation is burdensome. If it is beneficial, and if results are being achieved which warrant the expense of applying it, it would be a valuable service if the facts could be made known, because at the present time great numbers of the farming community feel that this legislation serves mainly one purpose, that of providing positions of emolument for the incumbents.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): It is not my intention to-day to make suggestions to the house as to how we should meet the problems facing the farmers of both eastern and western Canada. But I hasten to assure the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) after listening to his argument, that if the solution of the problems stated by him is to be found in this resolution, then I am all for it.

He says:

That, in the opinion of this house, the agriculture committee would give much better satisfaction if it were divided into two sections: (a) agriculture section; (b) wheat section.

As I say, if the adoption of this resolution would remedy the ills he mentioned, I am all for it, but otherwise I am absolutely against it. I have been privileged since 1925 to be a member of the agriculture committee. The statistics that have been presented to-day by the hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon) do not present a true picture. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi charged that the western members are more aggressive; I admit it, but probably that is the reason we have at least attempted to grapple with the problems of western agriculture. I hasten to assure him that the same problems which he says are facing eastern agriculture to-day are facing western agriculture. During the years I have been privileged to sit on that committee I can assure the house that if they will consult the various reports that have been tabled they will find that we have discussed everything pertaining to agriculture; chickens, potatoes, butter, pork and pork products, the marketing and improvement of cattle, horses, etc. I have never known a question referred to the agriculture committee during the years I have sat on it that did not originate in this house or was not sent by some responsible minister of the crown, either the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Immigration and Colonization or the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If, as the hon. member contends, the eastern agriculturists have not had a fair break on the agriculture committee it is their own fault, they have the right to bring up on the floor of this house resolutions asking that certain matters be dealt with, and never in my experience has the committee refused to discuss them. One reason stands out preeminently in my mind for opposing the division of this committee, it is this; we have 245 members of this house, the greater number of them from the seats east of the great lakes, and if the problems of western agriculture are going to be discussed intelligently, without monopolizing the time of the house, the place is the floor of that committee, and representatives of various provinces east of the great lakes should find themselves in that committee, if not to contribute to the debates, at least to get some knowledge of the position. I think those members from eastern Canada who have been on the agriculture committee will admit that sitting in and listening to the discussion has been an education to them.

[Mr. Vallance.]

In connection with the figures given by the hon. member for South Hastings, we did revise the Canada Grain Act along about 1928, and I think he charged the committee with setting up a special committee or subcommittee that dealt entirely with the wheat problem and consolidation of the Canada Grain Act. There is no reason, even as the committee is constituted to-day, to prevent a subcommittee from discussing any problem pertaining to agriculture in any of its aspects. One would judge from the remarks of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi that all we do in western Canada is grow wheat or cereals. During the two months we sat here last fall I had the privilege of attending the Royal Winter Fair, and it amazed me the way western Canada scooped most of the prizes for cattle there. Does that indicate that we are only wheat growers? We are just as interested in all branches of agriculture as are the eastern provinces, your problems are our problems. I speak perhaps more as a grain grower than a stock raiser but I have some knowledge of the live stock industry and I am here to make any contribution I can towards the solution of its problems. These are our problems, and I think the proper place to discuss them is in the agriculture committee, with all sections of Canada represented. Do not divide the east against the west. I am sure the present Minister of Agriculture will agree with the ex-Minister of Agriculture and myself on that point. With the ex-Minister of Agriculture I say, again we have another illustration of the necessity for bringing all these branches of agriculture under one head. We in western Canada have always contended that the administration of the Canada Grain Act is not in the proper department of government. With all due respect to the officials of that department, we still believe that the administration of that act should be under the control of the Department of Agriculture.

I want to assure my hon. friend that in anything I say to-day I am merely endeavouring to accomplish the very thing he proposes to do when he advocates dividing the agriculture committee into two sections, but I say to him that he will never attain his object in the way he proposes. The proper method is for all the members interested in these problems which he has enumerated to bring up on the floor of the house any question that should be discussed with a view to solution, so that it might be referred by the government to the committee on agriculture, and as a westerner I can assure him that he will get one hundred per cent support from us in any effort that is made to solve the problems he has indicated.

Mr. H. A. MULLINS (Marquette): As a member from western Canada, I have been studying this resolution and I have come to the conclusion that it is not advisable to have two sections, a wheat section and one on agriculture, in the agriculture committee. I would suggest that we divide the time. Last session the entire time was taken up talking about a wheat called garnet. Both the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), and the hon. gentleman who last spoke (Mr. Vallance), know very well that there were many serious problems connected with agriculture which it was important to bring before the house and which we had no opportunity of discussing. I will refer to a few of these matters now.

During the recess I passed through the west and I took occasion to look into the conditions of agriculture, and I tell you now that unless some drastic step is taken and taken at once to save agriculture from its present situation we shall never get anywhere in Canada. I do not think there should be any division such as is proposed. I want us to stretch our hands over that wide space, and say that we are all Canadians. We want to understand each other. There are several problems that I am going to mention and I should like the Minister of Agriculture to listen to me because I am going to talk about them in a practical way. Unless he does something with regard to these problems there is no hope for agriculture.

I want the minister to take note of the commercial marketing of live stock; let him go over the live stock yards east and west and find out what is taking place there. Call the men to one side and talk to them about the commercial marketing of live stock in the stock yards at the various districts in the east and west, and you will see what is going on. I do not want it to be supposed that I am speaking for myself, for I am out of the business although I spent fifty-five years in the marketing of live stock products; but I am bound to say that there are many things going on to-day that are positively injurious to the successful marketing of cattle in the various stock yards. The situation is appalling. You stand in the alley way and see one man in possession of the yard, the salesmen waiting for one buyer. They are right in the grip of the big interests. I make that statement because I know what I am talking about. There is just one buyer in the yard and he can fix his own price. I say to the Minister of Agriculture that unless he puts an end to the iniquitous system which is in operation now, of requiring a bond of $10,000 for a man to do business in the yards, he will kill every little man doing business in western Canada; he will put them all out of business. I say, give the little fellow a chance; give the man with $5,000 a chance to operate in the yard, and the big fellow will not get the innings he is having to-day. Why should you ask for a bond of $10,000? And I believe that in the city of Winnipeg it is $180,000. The man who would be the most active buyer in the yard is the little man who is working with $5,000 or $6,000, but he cannot do business when he has to put up $10,000. The present system was inaugurated by the late Minister of Agriculture and, it is said, was adopted to protect the shipper of live stock. Well, in the old days he did not ask for protection. He came with his live stock and sold them in the yard. Before he got his money he would lock the gate and he would say, "When I get my cheque I will give you delivery of these cattle." That is the way business was done at that time.

I want now to say a word or two in regard to the grading of hogs. Here again a most iniquitous system has been adopted in connection with the grading of these animals. I have here a letter from one of the best cattle men in the west, a live stock salesman, indicating this iniquitous system of the grading of hogs is playing into the hands of those who are buying hogs in the yard, to the detriment of the farmers. That system is worn out and should be abolished.

Another thing I would mention is the need for some protection for the farmer. If you are giving protection to all other industries, why not give some to the farmer? Why not shut out all products that come into competition with the products of our farms? I have a list of products shipped in from various countries, products that are competing with our own farm production. I am not strong on statistics. I am like the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa)—I do not take up the time of the house reading statistics. I did, however, ask the bureau of statistics for a list of products that come into competition with our agricultural products, and I will give it:

Then people ask why it is that the price of pork is so low. Does the house realize that Canada is importing pork in barrels from the United States to the extent of 2,460,925 pounds? We are bringing in pork from the United States down to the sea port, and into bonded warehouses, going outside the three mile limit. Why not use the Canadian product? All these products brought in from these various countries come into competition with our Canadian product, and I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to shut them out of Canada so as to give the men on our own land a chance. When I look at the man who struggles—

Mr. SPEAKER: I have no desire to interrupt the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) but I cannot see that the remarks he has just made have anything to do with the resolution now before the house. The house is discussing the rearrangement of the agriculture committee, not the general question of agriculture.

Mr. MULLINS: I have had no chance to bring these matters before the committee because the members of that committee talk of wheat and of nothing else. If I cannot bring these matters before the committee, I want to bring them before the house.

There is another matter I should like to discuss, although it may be out of order, and if your honour rules against me I shall abide by your ruling. No man in western Canada can farm successfully in the face of the present freight rates. Forty years ago the freight rates were forty per cent less than they are to-day. It may be said that the railroads are losing money, but if by increased volume they could reduce rates to the point where they were forty years ago, they would be giving the man upon the land a chance. In shipping a carload of lumber to the prairies from the coast, the railroad gets seventy per cent while the man who finds the logs and cuts the timber receives only thirty per cent. These are matters which I would like to bring before the agriculture committee, but I have no chance to do so. The former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) will bear me out when I say that the only discussion in this committee was in connection with garnet wheat.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who brought it up?

Mr. GOTT: Or the protein content.

Mr. MULLINS: Garnet wheat was the only matter brought before the last committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We did not bring it up.

Mr. MULLINS: In considering Canada there should not be an east and a west, but the fact is that the west is suffering and I want to say something on its behalf. As far as the freight revenues of the Canadian Pacific are concerned, the west has contributed far more than the east. From 1907 to 1911 the eastern lines earned $43,500,000 as compared with $91,500,000 for the western lines. The figures for 1912 to 1916 were $60,000,000 for eastern lines and $152,500,000 for western lines. For the period 1916 to 1920 eastern lines contributed $70,500,000 as compared with a contribution by the west amounting to $144,500,000. The heads of our railroads should go out to the western prairies and take a survey of the conditions faced by the man on the land. They should do something like James Hill did when he went out through Montana. When he realized the condition of the men upon the land in that state, he cut his freight rates by half on the Great Northern. The same thing should be done to help western Canada.

As I have said, I cannot agree with separating the east from the west, but I do think some time should be given in which matters other than wheat could be discussed by the agriculture committee. It is hard to discuss these matters in the house because some hon. members do not take a great deal of interest. I am interested in the success of agriculture and unless the man upon the land can be made prosperous, then God help the rest of Canada.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in bringing this resolution before the house the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) has been under a misapprehension. He seems to assume that some malign influence has been at work to prevent the problems affecting eastern agriculture from being discussed.

An hon. MEMBER: Not at all.

Mr. BROWN: He made the definite statement that the western members refused to discuss the problems of the east.

Mr. GOTT: He did not say any such thing.

Mr. BROWN: It certainly sounded like that. Any question which any hon. member desires to bring before the agriculture committee can be brought before it in a proper way. All that needs to be done is to have the matter brought before the house and referred to the committee by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) or any other member of the government. If that is done, I assure the hon. member that the matter will be discussed.

Apparently the hon. member forgets that two years ago we spent considerable time discussing matters pertaining to the hog trade. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) mentioned milk. We are all agreed that this is a serious problem, but why did not some hon. member take the proper steps to bring this question before the committee? It was never done. If it is done I assure him that we from the west will be just as much interested in the solution of the problem as any hon. members from eastern Canada.

The hon. member who moved this resolution apparently assumes that we from the west are not interested in any question other than wheat. I should like to remind him, as he has been reminded already by the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), that the west is intensely interested in all these problems. Does he realize that the province of Manitoba took in the neighbourhood of fifty per cent of the first prizes offered for butter at the various fairs held throughout Canada last summer? It is perfectly evident that we are intensely interested in many problems outside of wheat.

The member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) admitted that he spoke without authority, and his remarks made that quite evident. He stated that there was no place in which eastern agricultural questions could be discussed. Such a statement is not in accordance with the fact, because these questions can be brought before the agriculture committee. The hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon) gave the house certain statistics in connection with the various meetings held at which wheat and other questions were discussed. There has been an abundance of time for the discussion of other questions had they been brought before the committee; even when discussing the Canada Grain Act the committee did not sit every day in the week. I have been a member of this committee since 1922 and there never has been a question brought before it which was not discussed to the fullest possible extent. I can assure hon. members that if these questions are brought before the committee they will be discussed.

One fact has been impressed upon me since I have been a member of this house, and that is that the session is always so far advanced before these committees are set up. We were here two months last fall, we are now entering the second week since the house opened this year, and yet no work has been done by any committee. That has been the condition which has prevailed ever since I have been here. Hon. members have the time to give to the various committees if there is any business to be taken up.

I see no necessity to divide the agriculture committee. The occasion may arise, as it did when we were dealing with the grading and the protein content of wheat, to appoint a subcommittee, but I see no reason why this committee as a whole cannot deal with all problems relating to grain or agriculture generally. Again I say that I see no reason why we should seek to divide the east against the west.

Mr. CANTLEY: He is not doing that.

Mr. BROWN: Unfortunately the hon. member for Brome is seeking to do that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BROWN: Then why did he spend so much time talking about the western farmers having such a carefree life and being able to go to California to spend the winter months? I may be unparliamentary in my language, but to me such talk is pure nonsense. It does not add anything to the discussion to seek to give the impression that the western grain growers are so prosperous that they can spend their winters in California. Never at any time could more than a very small fraction of the grain growers of the west do any such thing. I feel that unless further reasons are given why we should adopt this resolution, I shall have to vote against it.

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the speech of the mover of the resolution which was presented in an entertaining style and contained some very significant truths. But when the mover of the resolution suggests that the western farmer would not be tied to a cow—I believe that was his expressive term—inferring he should turn to mixed farming, may I say quite seriously to all hon. members who represent eastern constituencies: What would happen to the farmers of eastern Canada if all the western farmers took to mixed farming? The eastern farmers would have a very fine time selling their products! The figures given by him with regard to our small exportable surplus, if they are accurate, are a great surprise to me; a great change in conditions must have occurred in the last few months because in my county of Grey, where mixed farming prevails, as I am sure the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Porteous) will agree, a great deal of our produce goes overseas. It is all right for those who live close to Montreal to say that they do not ship much overseas; they do not, because they are near the largest city of Canada. I am going to check up on the figures. They are quite different from some of the figures that were given while the Imperial conference was in progress, as regards the very great need for an export market for the industry of agriculture.

There are very real reasons why wheat occupies a major portion of the discussion in the committee on agriculture. One reason is that wheat has been the largest single item in the export trade of Canada and to a great extent it determines the prosperity or lack of it of this country. There are other reasons why wheat has been given what may be a major place, not to the discredit of the grain growers or members who come from western constituencies but rather to their credit; they are seeking to do the best they can for their people. Another reason for the importance of wheat in the agriculture committee is that the farmers of western Canada are well organized. I almost stumbled into saying "intelligent enough to be well organized," but at any rate, they are well organized and they send not only a large group to this southeast corner who can speak as they will and who constantly fight for the agricultural interests of western Canada, but also those who represent western rural constituencies in the Liberal and Conservative parties and who have been outspoken in defence of their constituencies because they know quite well they have at home an organized and alert public opinion. I do not say that is the only reason why they have talked of wheat, but it gives assurance they will do so. Far too many of our eastern agricultural constituencies are represented by lawyers and doctors —and I have nothing against lawyers and doctors except that they know nothing about farming—who live in cities away from the land. Here may I take the opportunity of thanking the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) for his very complimentary remarks about me in Winnipeg last year.

Mr. WILLIS: I did not utter a word.

Miss MACPHAIL: Not at the moment. This was during the recess. He referred to my not too great knowledge. I plead guilty to a lack of knowledge of law but as regards his observations in the house on barley as a suitable food for hens—

Mr. WILLIS: I again plead innocence.

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not, as I said, know as much about law as does the hon. member, but at any rate I know about hens.

Eastern farming constituencies in Quebec, Ontario and the maritimes are too often represented by members who know nothing about agricultural conditions. Their utterances in this house go to prove my contention without my taking time to quote any of them, which, were I to quote would, I am sure, be very amusing to the house. I was glad, however, we had this afternoon one convert; if the conversion was not made, to-day, it was announced this afternoon by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). He is now a strong advocate of cooperation, in which I wholly agree with him. I think the milk producers ought to cooperate; they ought to be given every possible assistance in doing so by the provincial government, the agricultural college, the agricultural representative in each particular district, and the press. It would be good for everyone if the milk producers were organized in a way that would enable them to market their own products or at least to see that the price paid by the consumer for the product came back in the main to the producer and not such a great proportion of it, running over 50 per cent and sometimes very much over going to the distributor. It is economically unsound to have six or seven delivery wagons going up and down one street. The departments of agriculture are doing their best, but they are running contrary to the economic policy of their governments and so do not get far, but just as soon as the provincial and Dominion governments are ready to give practical and moral cooperation, the thing can be done. So far the farmers have had to fight ignorance in their own ranks; they have had to fight the press and public opinion and too often the economic policies of governments. I am referring to milk because it was spoken of particularly. The milk producers of some of the provinces like Ontario and Quebec should have in this house some representative who can speak for them. It would be better, I think, if that man were here in the house as an independent; but even if he were not, if he had behind him a strongly organized milk producers' association that would be prepared to vote in their own behalf every time it was necessary, such a member would look after their interests. until the farmers of the east waken up to the fact that nobody can attend to their interests as well as they can themselves, the condition of which the mover of the resolution has complained will continue to exist.

Mr. G. C. WILSON (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise only to commend the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) for bringing this matter to the attention of the house. When I first entered the chamber I was in accord with the resolution, but having heard the discussion, I wonder whether it would not be advisable to refer this matter to the committee on agriculture and, if necessary, to have subcommittees of that committee appointed. For instance, I represent a county —or misrepresented it, some people say—of some 67,000 people.

Miss MACPHAIL: Hear, hear.

Mr. WILSON: I hear the hon. member for Southeast Grey say "hear, hear." I am not going to talk about hens anyway. I represent the county of Wentworth with a population of 67,000. I have a milk producers' section, a fruit section, a potato-growers' section, a grain growers' section in my county and I have an urban section as well in which the largest farmers' market in the Dominion of Canada is situated. Possibly, therefore, I can speak with some assurance in regard to their interests. I commend the hon. member for bringing this matter to the attention of the house. An hon. member on the other side stated that it might be brought up in some other way. In speaking the other night I said that I would first try to put agriculture on its feet. An hon. member asked me how I would do this. If hon. members will look at Hansard, page 1733, they will find the following:

Mr. Spencer: How?

Mr. Wilson: By dealing internally with the troubles we have, that is with the milk problem, the butter problem, the dairy problem, the meat and meat products problem, right at home

I know very well it is going to be said that this is a provincial matter, but if this does nothing more than stir up the provincial authorities to act and act promptly as regards the problems of the farmers, a great deal will have been accomplished.

I wish to bring a petition before the house and I would have done so before but for the fact that the petition sent to me is, so I am advised, not properly prepared. Let me, however, read this petition sent to me, signed by hundreds of milk producers in my constituency:

We, the undersigned producers of milk, petition and request Mr. Gordon C. Wilson, M.P

to take whatever steps are necessary in order to bring to the attention of the government the unfair and unfortunate position in which we find ourselves to-day. We believe that some arrangement can be made whereby the producer of milk will be paid for his milk and milk products a price which at least covers the cost of production and provides for a profit on a par with that earned by the dairies.

As agriculture is one of the most important basic industries of Canada, all reasonable and effective measures should be taken to revive the dairy industry upon a basis equally advantageous to the producer and consumer.

That is the petition I shall present when I have it prepared in proper form in the course of a few days. I approve of the conduct of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel), in bringing this matter before the house, and I respectfully suggest the agriculture committee should take notice of it. I am in accord with the remarks of the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance), when he suggests that he does not think there was any attempt on the part of the mover to effect a separation between the eastern and western sections of Canada. Far be it from me to form that conclusion from the remarks of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. Although for some time I was a member of the agriculture committee, I am not at the present time. I do feel however that those interested in fruit, grain, meat, meat products, or pork should be the ones to bring those particular commodities to the attention of the committee which, in turn, would bring it before the house. In that way very careful discussions would be the result, and proper measures could be introduced to relieve any situation which might arise. No one knows better than I, representing a constituency both urban and rural, that the first thing this government should attempt to do is to put agriculture on its feet.

Mr. J. E. TETREAULT (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, as a representative of a rural community I am pleased to support the resolution of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel), and I should like to congratulate him upon bringing to the attention of the house a matter of very great importance. I am proud to say that all hon. members, with the exception of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), seemed to be in favour of the resolution. I have no doubt that although that particular hon. member is not in exact agreement, he may yet join in supporting it.

This resolution involves the major part of our population; we are discussing the problems of those people in whom we are most interested, the people providing our living. Even if hon. members are not farmers, or as the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), suggests, if some are doctors, some lawyers or other professional men, we must all recognize that we are getting our living from the ground. When we have an opportunity to do something for agriculture, I think there is a duty cast upon us, regardless of the political party to which we may belong. I am happy to see that nearly all hon. members who have spoken to this resolution have approved of the attitude of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, although I am sorry some hon. members opposite, from the western provinces, seem to have missed the meaning or the intention of the resolution. So far as I can ascertain it is not his intention to effect a division of the provinces, but—and I believe I am speaking correctly—it is his intention that when the agriculture committee meets we should divide its time so that the dairy industry or other sections of agriculture might receive proper attention, instead of devoting all the time to the problems of the wheat growers.

I have no doubt hon. members from the western provinces will not suggest that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi harbours any ill-feeling towards western Canada. I am sure he will agree that every class of agriculture should be treated in the same way. It is my view that an expression of opinion by many hon. members in the house concerning this important resolution would be greatly appreciated by farmers throughout Canada.

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St. John-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted at the attitude taken, this afternoon by the honourable member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) and appreciate his remarks in connection with the Department of Agriculture, which are certainly true.

He blames his government for not taking an interest in the agricultural class of the Eastern Townships. I do not know whether it is a sign of approaching elections, however, we are now in the fourth session and it is the first time that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi champions the agricultural class.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Better late than never.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): On May 18, 1931, I introduced a resolution, which specially concerned agriculture in the Eastern Townships, requesting an increase in the grants allotted to live stock. My honourable friend from Brome-Missisquoi spoke a few minutes and stated he was opposed to this resolution. I, therefore, find his attitude this afternoon somewhat astonishing. I am aware that the hon. member for Brome-

Missisquoi won his election in 1930 by specially appealing to the farming class of his county, by blaming the Liberal government for having completely ignored agriculture. The western farmers are criticized for discussing only wheat. Hon. members of the opposition have certainly, on many occasions, spoken in favour of the farming industry in the Eastern Townships, especially as regards butter. Many have made suggestions and even requested that a bonus be granted on butter. We were not supported by the hon. members of Quebec; neither by those of the Eastern Townships nor by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), nor the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) both of whom have the honour of representing farming counties.

We have, more than once, requested a bonus on butter. We have, on many occasions, stated that the farming class both of the Eastern Townships and the province of Quebec required a bonus on its butter and cheese, yet not one member of the government had the courage of supporting the hon. members of the opposition.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi requested an enquiry in connection with the price of milk. I share his views and I think that if the Dominion government instituted an enquiry on the milk distributed in Montreal, in connection with the price paid by the consumer and that paid to the farmer, they would discover an alarming situation. I hope that if an enquiry is held as regards milk one will also be held in connection with the meat trust. There exists, to-day, in Montreal, one of the largest trusts in this country: The Canada Packers and the Montreal Abattoir. The Canada Packers is composed of the Harris Abattoir, Canadian Packing, William Davis and Gunn, Limited, and, if I am not mistaken, there are in Toronto two similar companies: The Swift-Canadian and the Canada Packers.

Everybody is aware that the Eastern Township farmers are producers of butter, eggs and meat. I must state that in 1930 most of the eastern members generously responded to our appeal, and I am amazed that they awake, to-day, from their slumbers, after three years of session.

In connection with the price of meat, pork, for instance, sells at 2½ to 3¼ cents per pound; this, however, only on condition that the hogs be of first quality, which means that the weight of the animal must vary between 150 to 240 pounds and, if it weighs more than 240 pounds the dealers deduct one to two dollars per head.

I would request the Dominion government to help agriculture in Quebec and throughout the country in the same measure that the Quebec government is assisting their farming class.

I shall read to the house a short article which appeared in "La Victoire", a small newspaper published, as you will recall, during the by-election of Three Rivers:

> Farmers, you desire a bonus on your butter, which Mr. Taschereau refuses you, because his Minister of Agriculture finds it senseless to help the farmers. Well, vote for the government's candidate who is ready to grant it, if you so manifest the desire. Electors of Three Rivers and St. Maurice, vote for Bourgeois, on Monday, at the polls.

Well, I find it strange that the honourable member for Three Rivers, who represents a city and rural parishes, of which fifty per cent of the people are farmers, has never had the courage of rising in the house to move such a measure, after having promised it. It cannot be said that Liberal newspapers published this article. This newspaper bears the date of August 8, 1931, and a few of our good Conservative friends have, perhaps, laid aside a few copies.

Mr. TETREAULT (Translation): Will the honourable member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): With pleasure.

Mr. TETREAULT (Translation): On what date did the honourable members opposite introduce a motion in the House to request a bonus on butter, in addition to the assistance given by the provincial government.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): If the honourable member for Shefford (Mr. Tetreault) will refer to Hansard of 1932, he will find that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) requested a bonus on butter in the speech he delivered in this house.

Mr. TETREAULT (Translation): There was no resolution moved, the hon. member for Bellechasse made this request in his speech.

Mr. DORION (Translation): No resolution was introduced.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): It is the bonus on butter which won the Three Rivers election.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): It is more than time that the hon. members opposite used their influence with the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in order to request him to have the necessary measures enacted so as to help the Eastern Township farmers and the other districts of the province of Quebec, Everybody is aware that unless something is done immediately to help the farming class, bankruptcy will appear everywhere. Many of our opponents are as well aware as I am of the farmers' plight and if one of these hon. members had the courage to rise in the house and request a bonus on butter, cheese or any other farm product, so as to help our farmers, he could rest assured that he would meet with no opposition on the part of the Liberal party.

I understand that the resolution under consideration requests that the committee on agriculture be divided into two sections, one of which would take up wheat and the other the dairy industry. If our western friends have obtained a bonus on wheat and if they obtain all they request, it is because they have the courage to rise in the house and set forth their claims. I have not the honour of being a member of the committee on agriculture and I do not know whether the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is one. If there are no members opposite included in this committee, I trust that the eastern township members and those of Quebec who represent rural districts will be invited to appear before this committee in order to make known their grievances and the needs of the province of Quebec.

I make these few suggestions, hoping that they will be taken under consideration. I would request the hon. members who have had the honour to be elected in the Eastern Townships and in other rural constituencies of Quebec to do their utmost in order to improve the lot of the farming class and, this, as soon as possible. If nothing is done within the next few months, we shall certainly witness a complete bankruptcy of the farming community.

Mr. L. DUGUAY (Lake St. John) (Translation): Representing a rural constituency and being a member of the committee on agriculture and colonization, I deem it my duty, first, to extend my sincere congratulation to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) on the resolution which he introduced this afternoon, and then to express my humble views on the subject matter. When certain hon. members contend that this resolution purports to divide the west from the east, I wonder why they make such an assertion. In my opinion the resolution simply aims at granting more time to the study of the various agricultural problems.

I was present at most of the sittings of the committee on agriculture and I can assert, to my knowledge, that the question of wheat was always to the fore, except once when eggs were discussed. I therefore think it wise to divide the committee on agriculture into two sections and have one group of members devote their time to farming in general. This will not be to the disadvantage of western farmers since they themselves state that they carry on mixed farming. We could study this subject, thus allowing more time to those who specialize in wheat growing.

Allow me to state, sir, that when one attends the committee on agriculture five or six times to discuss a subject which is of particular interest to him and finds that wheat takes up the whole time, this subject in the long run appears tedious, especially if one hails from the outlying parts of the province of Quebec. If there existed a subdivision of this committee, we would likely appear more regularly at the sittings and take a greater interest in the discussion of problems which we have at heart.

It is unfortunate to note that hon. members of the opposition and especially those of Quebec, when it is a question of agriculture, are not broadminded enough in discussing this question outside of petty politics. Two of these hon. members this afternoon spoke on this resolution. Unfortunately, contentions were brought up, which I might characterize as false. The hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume) states that agriculture is encouraged in the province of Quebec; let him request the Prime Minister of that province to settle the bill of $452 which is due to Mr. Wilfrid Ouellette, since January last.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): This does not appear in the resolution.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): I am aware that I am outside of the subject and that this question does not please my hon. friend. I must inform my hon. friend on the left that they should not attach to my remarks more spite than they actually imply, but to consider them simply as a wish to show matters in their true light.

I wish to state in closing my remarks that I am in favour of the resolution and that, if I am called upon to vote, I shall support the motion.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I listened with much pleasure to the discussion which took place between my friends from the province of Quebec, on both sides of the house. I congratulate the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) for having given us the opportunity of discussing the subject matter of this resolution, by moving that the agricultural question which interests both east and west be considered on an equal footing. I agree with him heartily.

Although being a city lawyer, I am somewhat acquainted and love the countryside. My forebears were farmers and it always gives me much pleasure to hear farming discussed, because Quebec, from the viewpoint of mixed farming, is the first province of confederation.

In this discussion I am particularly interested in the suggestions made to the Government by our friends on the right. They request an enquiry on milk. Very well! I am in favour of it. The farmers of Quebec are taken advantage of, there is no doubt about it. They are allowed seventy cents per hundred pounds of milk, as the honourable member for Brome-Missisquoi stated, and, in many localities in Quebec, milk dealers allow farmers only what they themselves are willing to grant them. The milk producers are never certain of the price they will obtain for their product and they never know what amount is enclosed in the envelope which is forwarded by the butter or cheese factories. Milk is purchased very cheaply in the rural districts and it has been sold as high as eleven cents per quart in the cities; to-day, it is sold at ten cents a quart. As the honourable member for Brome-Missisquoi, who made a special study of the question, stated, is it reasonable that milk distributors should make a profit of four to five dollars per hundred pounds? I state that it is a shameful exploitation and that no government should tolerate such a situation. Moreover, this milk is distributed to poverty stricken people and the Dominion Government pay one-third of the cost, the provincial government one-third, and the municipality the other third. This government is therefore interested in legislating on this question, in order to put an end to this exploitation and do justice to the consumers as well as the farmers.

If the farmer is too highly paid, we are charged too much; if the farmers are underpaid, we, city consumers, are still charged too much. A readjustment of prices must take place, this protection must not be granted to those who form part of trusts and exploit, first, the farmer and then the city consumer.

The same may be said of coal. An enquiry is at present being held on coal. I trust that it will not come out as dark as coal itself, that light will be thrown on the subject and the situation remedied. We are informed that coal is hardly worth seven dollars per ton delivered in Montreal, yet it is sold to consumers at fifteen and sixteen dollars per ton. There is no reason why coal should sell at such high prices. There again the Dominion Government has an interest since it pays, in Montreal and in all cities of Quebec, one-third of the price of the coal which is supplied to those in need, the other two-thirds being paid by the province and the municipality. It is, therefore, in the government's interest to pay a lower price for this coal and they should refer the matter to the Labour Department in order that an inquiry may be held on trusts, as the members on the right have just requested on the milk trusts, for which I congratulate them.

It is all very well to ask that the Committee on Agriculture be divided into two sections, one on mixed farming and the other on wheat, but this committee embraces all the branches of agricultural activities in this country. If honourable members wish to be heard they have but to consult the rules of the House. If they have reason to complain, they have but to put their grievances in writing and muster up sufficient courage to bring them up in the House, even if they are not looked upon favourably by the government. We shall heed them and refer them to the Committee on Agriculture where they may be threshed out and justice done to farmers and consumers. Let them put in writing their complaints, let them place them on the order paper of the House and demand a vote. Notwithstanding all efforts brought to bear to have them withdrawn, under pretext that they might harm the government, let them see that they remain on the order paper of the House. Let them move their adoption, they will be put to a vote and if they have a majority they will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture where they will be given the time necessary so as to be discussed without any need of sub-dividing the committee into two sections. We shall help them, in the committee, to pass all the resolutions that they wish to introduce with a view to forcing the government to act, that is in case they should refuse to protect the farmers and prevent exploitation of consumers in the cities.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I will only detain you two or three minutes. During the discussion this afternoon reference was made to an alleged milk combine in Montreal. Reference was also made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) to the fact that the Combines Investigation Act was not what he thought it ought to be, I thought I would be helpful in telling him how the machinery was set in motion. He, in his usual style, said that as far as the member for Kenora-

Rainy River was concerned, while he was in office for five years—it was in fact only four—the results under the Combines Investigation Act were nil, and he snapped his fingers in the customary know-it-all style which characterizes the hon. gentleman. Just to keep the record straight let me say that the Combines Investigation Act is probably one of the most unpopular acts on the statute books, and one of the most unpopular to administer. I can say that from experience. But when the hon. member says there were no results, and just leaves it at that, I think we should make a matter of record some of the things actually done. When I held office—

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, but the resolution that is being discussed relates to the rearrangement of the agriculture committee.

Mr. HEENAN: I am referring to some remarks made in the course of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: Even so I would ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the resolution.

Mr. HEENAN: I am replying to statements—

Mr. SPEAKER: Whether it is in reply or not it is irrelevant to discuss other matters in the debate on a resolution to rearrange the agriculture committee.

Mr. HEENAN: During the course of the debate a question was brought up about combines and the hon. gentleman remarked that the Combines Investigation Act was not working; he referred specifically to milk. I am only replying to those remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER: It does not make the remarks any more in order.

Mr. HEENAN: I am only sorry that you permitted the remarks to go in the first place. Having permitted those remarks to be made in the house accusing the ex-Minister of Labour of doing nothing, I think in all fairness you should permit him to reply. I hope I have your honour's permission.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not recall in the debate hearing criticism of the hon. member as Minister of Labour. If he was so criticized it was improper and the Speaker should have stopped it. But I must ask hon. members to confine their remarks to the resolution before the house.

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member for York-Sunbury said there had been no protection for the milk industry under the Combines Investigation Act while I was Minister of Labour. I want to say that in nearly every instance when officers went to investigate an alleged combine they were met with the statement that the act was unconstitutional and if the investigation were persisted in the matter would be taken to the privy council to have the act declared ultra vires.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: In 1926 we appointed a commissioner to investigate a complaint as to what was known as the drug combine, the P.A.T.A. The result was that the act went to the privy council and was held to be intra vires of the federal parliament, and the P.A.T.A. was dissolved. In 1929 what was known as the A.B.C., the Amalgamated Builders Council, was investigated. The case was brought to court and there were convictions, and fines amounting to $45,000 were imposed.

An hon. MEMBER: What has that to do with the agriculture committee?

Mr. HEENAN: I may say that every time you squeeze an onion it makes your eyes water more.

Mr. GOTT: You cannot make any reference to me now, I am not in this.

Mr. HEENAN: I was not referring to my hon. friend.

Mr. GOTT: I represent the best farming section in the dominion, including the best onion growers.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It may be the best section, but badly represented.

Mr. HEENAN: In addition to the $45,000 these gentlemen were fined, they returned $16,000 to concerns from whom they had taken money they felt ought to be returned. In 1930 the Electrical Estimators Association in Toronto was investigated, and upon being taken to court fines amounting to $26,000 were imposed.

Mr. GOTT: You would be closer to the subject if you did discuss onions.

Mr. ROWE: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wish to draw your attention again to the fact that this is absolutely irrelevant to the question before the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The remarks of the hon. member now addressing the house are out of order. Recounting the operation of the Combines Investigation Act so far has not been connected with the resolution, which is that in the opinion of this house the agriculture committee would give better satisfaction if it were divided. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River knows as well as anyone in the house that what he is saying now is not in order.

Mr. HEENAN: Well, I have to repeat that unfortunately Your Honour has not been in the chair all afternoon, and during the discussion the hon. gentleman who introduced the resolution alleged there was a combine in milk in Montreal. Then the hon. member for York-Sunbury said the Combines Investigation Act did not function under my administration, mentioning the ex-Minister of Labour. I will come to the point right now and say that the alleged milk combine in Montreal was investigated during my administration, and the officers of the department reported that there was no combine existing. I just want to have the record right, and to say in addition that there were over one hundred other cases investigated during the time I was in office.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will give a good deal of satisfaction to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) that his resolution has provoked this discussion, showing the interest he has aroused. I shall be very brief.

In the 1931 session the agriculture committee held twenty-two meetings. Seventeen of these meetings were devoted to a reference from the agriculture committee, and all of the seventeen dealt with mixed farming, none with wheat. Among the items dealt with there was that of grading.

I think that if it were generally understood that our grading policies grew out of a demand from the producers themselves it would set at rest the minds of many people who perhaps do not thoroughly understand them and take exception to them. All that grading does is to put the highest quality product here, the second there, the third next and so on, so that the purchaser can have the benefit thereof in purchasing and it encourages our producers to turn out the highest quality.

Another problem discussed was that of milk prices. This is almost entirely a question for the provinces, and the provinces have taken very serious hold of it. At least two of the provinces have for the past few weeks or months, I believe, been engaged in very serious and careful investigation of milk prices. The Quebec government, I believe, have almost finished their investigation. They have a few references to report upon yet, and the report is not printed but only in typewritten form. The Ontario government have also done a good deal of work in this connection.

With reference to the stock yard question, we have been in consultation with the various stock yard representatives throughout the dominion and they have before them now a request from the Department of Agriculture with regard to a reduction in the charges in stock yards. We hope to hear from them in the course of at least a week or two.

It is regrettable, in a house like this, representative of all Canada, that misrepresentation should unwittingly be made regarding a great body of farmers in the dominion. I can assure hon. members that if any of them think of going to western Canada they will still find a great number of farmers living there in the winter time and that they are not all in California.

After listening to the discussion, I cannot see any problem in connection with the division of the committee on agriculture. All hon. members from eastern Canada who have spoken have expressed themselves in favour of a fuller discussion of the problems of eastern Canadian agriculture, or agriculture apart from wheat; therefore they are agreed. And I believe that all western speakers have also spoken in favour of at least a perfectly full discussion of eastern problems in agriculture. Personally I think that there is ample room and opportunity within the committee on agriculture, as it is at present constituted, to discuss all these problems. The east will get the benefit of suggestions from the west, and the west will receive some suggestions from the older and more experienced agriculturists in the east. Therefore I should like to see this matter left as it is and brought up before the committee on agriculture, because no one listening to the discussion this afternoon can have any opinion but one, and that is the necessity for cooperation and for a full discussion of any agricultural problems that are placed before the committee.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Mr. Speaker, will you please call it six o'clock.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is the business to-morrow?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Public bills and orders.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And estimates?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I doubt whether we shall get into estimates, but if we do we will take up one of the departments that have been opened.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, February 9, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 21, to amend the Indian Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MURPHY: It is proposed to make certain amendments to the Indian Act dealing with the appointment of truancy officers and executors of estates; also relating to the sale of cattle and field crops; the establishment of roads on reserves; enfranchisement; residing or hunting upon reserves without authority; and the regulation of the operations of hawkers, peddlers and others on reserves.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GRADING OF HAY AND STRAW

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 22, respecting the inspection and grading of hay and straw.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The present grades for hay and straw were established some twenty-five years ago, when the demand for these commodities was of a different nature from now. We have had a number of requests that the definitions of the grades as set out in the statute be repealed and that authority be given to the minister to establish new grades more in conformity with present requirements. If this bill could be given its two readings this afternoon, I would then refer it to the committee on agriculture.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. AHEARN:

At the coming conference with the provincial governments, is it the intention of the government to move to obtain an agreement whereby the censoring of motion pictures be concentrated under a minister of the Dominion government?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This question apparently refers to matters coming before the interprovincial conference which was held last fall. I think the question is out of date.

RAILWAY REST AND FEED STATIONS

Mr. GARDINER:

1. At what points between Calgary and Saint John are rest and feed stations available?
2. What are the facilities at these various stations?
3. Are the stations operated under the direct control of the railway or are they privately operated; if privately operated, what are the names of the operators?
4. Are the railway companies financially interested in any of such operators; if so, what is their interest?
5. What is the price of fodder charged shippers at the various feeding stations; where price is per bale is there any standard weight of such bale?
6. What inspection, if any, is made of quality of fodder supplied?

Mr. MANION: This question can be passed as an order for a return so far as the Canadian National Railway is concerned, but we have no records of the Canadian Pacific Railway with respect to this matter. I am sure that my hon. friend could get that part of the information by writing to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. SPEAKER: Question passed as an order for a return.

Mr. MANION: So far as the Canadian National Railway is concerned.

NEW ZEALAND BUTTER

Mr. MACLEAN:

1. How many pounds of New Zealand butter were imported into Canada in 1932?
2. How many pounds of New Zealand butter were imported into Canada up to present date during the month of January, 1933?
3. What is the total amount for both periods?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Canada's imports of butter from New Zealand entered for consumption, for the year ended December 31, 1932, were 50,972 pounds.

2. Canada's imports of butter from New Zealand entered for consumption, for the month of January, 1933, were 76,924 pounds.

3. Canada's imports of butter from New Zealand entered for consumption from January 1, 1932 to January 31, 1933, were 127,896 pounds.

CANADIAN RAILWAYS—EMPLOYEES

Mr. LUCHKOVICH:

How many persons were employed on Canadian railroads in 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932?

Mr. MANION: The average number of railway employees throughout Canada is as follows:

|---|---|
| 1928 | 187,710 |
| 1929 | 187,846 |
| 1930 | 174,485 |
| 1931 | 154,569 |

1932—Complete returns not yet available.

CAMPBELLTON, N.B., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Has Mr. A. C. Belle-Isle been appointed postmaster of Campbellton, New Brunswick?

2. If so: (a) on what date was he appointed; (b) was he advised that an inspector would install him as postmaster at a given date, and in such a case, on what date?

3. Was he installed as postmaster of Campbellton?

4. If so: (a) on what date; (b) if not, why?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2, 3 and 4. A certificate was issued by the Civil Service Commission on behalf of Mr. Belle-Isle on the 20th January, 1933, and Mr. Belle-Isle would be notified by the district superintendent of the probable date of the transfer. Mr. Belle-Isle was installed on the 4th instant.

BITUMINOUS COAL IMPORTATIONS

Mr. DUFF:

1. How much bituminous coal was imported into Canada during the year of 1932?

2. What quantity came from the United States of America?

3. What quantity came from Great Britain?

4. What quantity came from other countries?

Mr. STEVENS:

1, 2, 3 and 4. Canada's imports of bituminous coal entered for consumption, by countries, year ended December 31, 1932, were:

| Imports from | Tons of 2,000 lbs | $ |
|---|---|---|
| United Kingdom | 332,037 | 766,084 |
| United States | 8,187,178 | 10,824,064 |
| Newfoundland | 2 | 24 |
| Total Imports | 8,519,217 | 11,590,172 |

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

RAILWAY REST AND FEED STATIONS

Mr. GARDINER:

1. At what points between Calgary and Saint John are rest and feed stations available?

2. What are the facilities at these various stations?

3. Are the stations operated under the direct control of the railway or are they privately operated; if privately operated, what are the names of the operators?

4. Are the railway companies financially interested in any of such operators; if so, what is their interest?

5. What is the price of fodder charged shippers at the various feeding stations; where price is per bale is there any standard weight of such bale?

6. What inspection, if any, is made of quality of fodder supplied?

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF CANADIAN CATTLE AND OTHER COMMODITIES FOR RUSSIAN PETROLEUM AND OIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): May I ask the Minister of Justice, who is leading the house, the following question: Will the government afford the house an early opportunity of discussing the proposed Canadian syndicate Russian barter transaction in cattle and oil and other commodities? What I mean by an early opportunity is, say, not later than next Tuesday because, in the absence of the Prime Minister, which we all regret, I know that we cannot expect the opportunity to be afforded to-morrow.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): In answer to my hon. friend, I shall discuss the question with the Prime Minister at the first opportunity, probably this afternoon, and let him have an answer to-morrow. I think an early opportunity could be afforded for a discussion of the matter, but the proposal that I have heard made was that it should be discussed on the estimates of the Agriculture department. However, if that is not agreeable to the house, some other date can be fixed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That will be quite satisfactory to me, if we may discuss it on the live stock vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think that would be the appropriate time, and if it is acceptable to the house we shall arrange to have the matter discussed on the live stock vote of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the reply of the Minister of Justice intended to convey the impression that the Minister of Agriculture will take up his estimates on Tuesday so that the matter may be discussed at that time?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I did not intend to leave that impression. I have not discussed the matter with the Minister of Agriculture. I do not know when he will be ready with his estimates, but I fancy it will not be at a very distant date.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the meantime apparently there is at least one syndicate trying to make an agreement to exchange cattle for Russian goods. May I ask the Minister of Justice, whether the government would be opposed to such an agreement being carried out provided it could be made satisfactorily and without any government guarantees?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not going to express an opinion on behalf of the government in answer to the question of the right hon. gentleman. The matter was fully placed before the house by the Prime Minister himself, and I have no further information than he afforded the house on that occasion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have no right to speak for the Minister of Agriculture, but I have a hunch that he will be quite ready by next Tuesday.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am sure reasonable notice will be given.

Mr. SAMUEL FACTOR (Toronto West Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if the government has been approached by a steel industry concerning a certain barter involving an exchange of steel rails for Russian oil, to a value of about $4,000,000? What is the attitude of the government towards that proposed barter?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No offer of the kind has come to my knowledge. Until this moment I had not heard of it, but I shall make inquiries regarding it and let the hon. member know.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED PURCHASE OF RAILWAY DOCK AT VANCOUVER BY FIRM OF COAL MERCHANTS

On the orders of the day.

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion). A press report from Vancouver contains the information that representatives of Hull, Blyth and Company, old country coal merchants, are leaving for the east to negotiate with authorities of the Canadian National Railways for the purchase of the railways' dock at Vancouver harbour. I should like to know if the minister has any information in this connection, or whether he will obtain it and give it to the house.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I have heard more or less indirectly that there have been some negotiations between the Canadian National Railways and some other parties concerning the dock in question. However I cannot give any accurate information at this time. I understand the railways are not using the dock to any great extent. I shall make inquiries however and give the hon. member any information I may receive from the railway company.

ANYOX, B. C., DISTURBANCE

On the orders of the day.

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has received any further information concerning the trouble at Anyox.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): No word has been received concerning the situation at Anyox since last Sunday. I apprehend conditions are quiet at that point, or we should have heard.

RUMOURED DEPORTATIONS

On the orders of the day.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if it is the intention of the government to deport Fred Booth, John Harris, Tom Kirbride and J. Waldon, all of Bienfait, Saskatchewan, together with their families? I have been notified that such deportations will take place. Is there any truth in this notice of deportations I have received?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I shall draw the hon. member's question to the atttention of the Minister of Labour as soon as he enters the house. His department is charged with deportation matters.

WESTERN FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY CONCERNING APPEAL BY WESTERN PROVINCES FOR RE-HEARING

On the orders of the day.

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): Mr. Speaker, in respect to the appeal made by the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia in October, 1929, against the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners in their order No. 448 dated August 26, 1927, I should like to ask when an answer will be given or a date set for re-hearing?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I believe I explained the other day that at the interprovincial conference an understanding was arrived at by which domestic freight rates on feed grains were to be lowered. Representatives at that conference from the western provinces were quite agreeable. Although the proposal was delayed a short time owing to the illness of a traffic officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it has now been received, and I have submitted it to the western provinces. If it is acceptable to them—and I think it will be—it may be that the appeal will be disposed of. However when the replies arrive the government will have to deal with the appeal in the proper manner.

GRANTS FOR THE DREDGING AND DRAINAGE OF RIVERS

On the orders of the day.

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé): I want to inquire whether he has received from the Department of Public Works a grant of 50 per cent on the dredging and drainage cost of rivers in Laval-Two Mountains county, since 1930, and what is the amount?

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General) (Translation): I do not quite follow the drift of the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville's question. I shall make inquiries and consult the files, if necessary, and shall give him, in due time, the answer to which he is entitled.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Does the hon Postmaster General wish me to put the question in English?

Hon. Mr. SAUVE (Translation): If the hon. member thinks he can better express the purport of his question in English, he is free to do so.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I did not catch what was said. Does the hon. Postmaster General wish to reply in English?

COOPERATIVE COMMONWEALTH

The house resumed from Thursday, February 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

Whereas under our present economic arrangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;

And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Mr. R. K. ANDERSON (Halton): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the house to-day was moved on the first day of this month by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). It was discussed very ably by hon. members from this side of the house, as well as those from the Progressive, Labour and Independent groups, but Liberal members observed a discreet and possibly ominous silence. None of them has yet indicated his reaction to this resolution. Coming in at this time, when we are in the midst of an unusual depression, at a time when there is considerable unrest in the country, the resolution has created a great deal of interest in the house and country. On account of the new political party sponsoring it, and the acclaim the party has received, the resolution has produced the impression in the minds of some people that it challenges our democratic institutions. It is for that reason only that I venture into the debate.

The first clause deals with the unprecedented unemployment situation obtaining in Canada and in other lands. There is no doubt that everyone regrets the extreme unemployment and the attending distress suffered by many of our citizens. The unemployment situation which we have has been produced by many forces. They are world-wide in their character and have been in operation for some years. I would judge that the great war and the unusual inflation following it, and the unprecedented prosperity from 1921 to 1929, have been largely the causes of our present depression. It commenced in the latter half of 1929 and by the time of the election in 1930 was well under way. It has continued since that time and we are still looking for a solution. This country is not worse off in that regard than other countries, and I compliment the government on the courage and efficiency they have shown in attacking this situation and bringing relief to our unemployed as much as possible.

You may say that the unemployed fall into two classes; the first class, those citizens who never have accepted responsibility for making a living for themselves and providing for their dependents. These people have been on the unemployed list before and probably will be as long as they live. They accept employment by fits and starts but are very much subject to wanting leisure. The second class consists of those citizens who do accept the responsibility of making a living for themselves and providing for their dependents. They are the larger class. The unemployment list to-day includes quite a number who have come on it only this year, because their little savings that they had accumulated in previous years have been spent, and only with great reluctance have they ventured to ask for assistance under the unemployment relief scheme, that is direct relief, that we have this year. This is the class of citizen that deserves sympathy and should get every assistance possible.

Before the present time it has not been looked upon as the duty of the government to provide jobs for the individual. It is the duty of the government to make the laws, to put into effect such machinery as will enforce them, to see to it that the individual's rights and liberty and life are protected, that he is given justice as between man and man. It is the duty of the citizen to obey those laws, to provide for himself as far as possible and to assist in paying the taxes that will keep the country solvent. Many of the people who are on the unemployed list to-day are not able to pay taxes, but they have paid taxes before and it is not their fault that at present they are not able to do so. It has been said in this house that large numbers of people in this country have been denied the right to work. This is a free country and the right is not denied to any person to work in any vocation he chooses. But circumstances may be such that if they depend for their day's labour on the ingenuity and initiative of some other individual, under the circumstances we have to-day that other individual may be unable to give them employment. To my mind employment is not going to get much better in the future. We have a condition, brought about by many forces, as I have already indicated, that will render employment in factories and other places not so extensive as in the past.

The unemployment relief system which we have to-day is not satisfactory, it is not a permanent solution for our difficulties. It will be a less satisfactory solution in the future, and I am going to offer a suggestion to the government that I have not heard mentioned before. I do not know of any country that has put anything like it into effect. It is this, that the government should set up some means by which more people will be returned to the land. The government has made some efforts in that direction; I compliment them on it. It is the right direction. They are putting certain people on crown lands in various parts of the country. They are assisting them to make homes and provide for themselves. But I would go further than that. There are large tracts of land going back to a state of nature all over this country. In Ontario —I speak of it particularly—there are large tracts of land unused at the present time farms practically deserted. You see them in all sections, with only a fence around the hundred acres, no fences within, going back to grass and weeds. I would suggest that the money that is now spent on unemployment relief might be better used in acquiring some of that land by the government, parcelling it out into small lots, five or ten acres, or even twenty-five acres, and taking the unemployed from our cities, towns and villages and putting them on that land; assist them by giving them expert direction, and help to build their own homes. Show them how to produce agricultural products by what might be called a forced system. If numbers of these people were given the opportunity to go on the land —and I know lots of them would be willing— they could produce on a five acre lot all the fruit and vegetables they require. They could also produce eggs and poultry, milk and butter, sufficient fodder for the cow and grain for their fowl. Then they would have a stake in the country, would be more contented, and better citizens. It would provide a solution in a certain measure of the unemployed situation to-day.

I would also suggest that some of the large industrial plants move from the cities to country districts where they might be surrounded by land which could be parcelled out amongst the employees in a similar manner. The day is coming when fewer men will be employed in those industrial plants, the shorter working day and week are coming, so they are going to have more leisure time. It would be a good plan to give them a stake in the country, where they could use their leisure in doing something for themselves, improving their homes. It would keep them from burning up gas on the highways and getting into traffic jams, and I am quite satisfied that they would be happier, and better citizens, and would be less troublesome in times of distress. I simply offer this to the government as a suggestion in the hope that it may be looked into and if possible put into operation to a certain extent.

In the second or main section of the resolution is embodied the policy of the new political party. I will read it:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

That, of course, is plainly a socialistic program. This new party, as stated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his speech on February 1, has attracted to itself certain other groups and political parties in this country. Those affiliated are the United Farmers of the three prairie provinces and of the province of Ontario, but I note that the United Farmers joined with a reservation. They got into bed with the new party, but indicated that should the sleeping conditions prove not congenial they would leave at any time. They intimated that in affiliating with the new party they still maintained the right to follow their own policies as United Farmers. Speaking of the United Farmers of Ontario more particularly, I may say that they are a hardheaded business class and very shrewd politicians. They are not going into anything very definitely and securely until they know how it is going to turn out, and just so soon as they find out what this commonwealth actually means a great number of them will secede from it. Not only that, but even at the present time the leaders who have affiliated with the new party will not be able to carry with them anything like the body of United Farmers of Ontario. It is also stated that the labour unions from the Pacific coast to the border of Quebec have affiliated with this new organization. Well, the labour unions may have affiliated but there is a large class of labour in the dominion that does not belong to the union. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made the statement, that they had affiliated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the hon. gentleman is in error; I said nothing about the labour unions.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): If the hon. gentleman says they have not, I will accept his word. But I find at page 1688 of Hansard he is reported as saying:

> Further than that, the political labour bodies in the provinces from British Columbia to Montreal have also voted to affiliate.

That gave me the impression that he meant the labour union, but apparently he meant something else. He also said that there were a large number of people in this country who had indicated their intention of uniting with the party, people from one end of the country to the other, and I have noticed in the newspapers that many people have so intimated. There was also another party, it appears, that endorsed the policy of the new party and which neither the hon. gentleman nor any member of his party mentioned, and that was a section of the United Church of Canada. The United Church in Toronto on December 7, 1932, in their report presented to the Presbytery of that city, moved this resolution which was passed:

> In view of the fact that our political leaders have not evolved any adequate system so far as the masses are concerned, but have directed their efforts toward protecting vested interests, rather than the common welfare, be it resolved that we adopt some such program as that of the C.C.F.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear," but large numbers of the United Church of Canada do not say "hear, hear."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): And the United Church itself does not say "hear, hear." Now, the acceptance of this policy as presented by hon. members across the aisle will simply mean that we shall need to get a new constitution for the dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I am glad they say "hear, hear" to-day, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not say "hear, hear" when that was said on the first of this month by the Prime Minister. He did not believe then that it would be necessary to change the constitution of the country if the policy of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation was to go into effect. The policy as enunciated is communist, pure and simple. I am quite sure that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the party behind him are sincere in what they say. They are in favour of socialism or communism, and the difference between these two systems was defined in the house by the hon. gentleman: communism is brought in by force and the other by constitutional means. I agree with the hon. gentleman in that statement; so far as I can make out from a study of the two systems, that is the difference. But can anyone supporting an effort towards socialism say that force will not eventuate? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not say that force could be prevented. At page 1689 of Hansard, in answer to a question that was asked at the time, as to whether force might be used, he said:

> It may very well be that force may prove inevitable, yes, if the attitude of certain gentlemen is persisted in and the people of this country are denied the right that they have to self-expression and to the enjoyment of a decent livelihood.

That is the statement of the hon. gentleman, that force will be used if it becomes inevitable. Now, that is a warning and also a threat.

Mr. SPENCER: Did he say who was going to use force?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): No, but who else except the socialist party? Does the hon. gentleman think that the rest of Canada will use force? The hon. member made this statement that I have quoted. This means that if the people of the dominion are docile enough to accept this policy meekly, if they do not resist, then we shall have socialism; but if the rest of us do resist, if the people object to it, we shall have force, because in any event this party intends to put its policy into effect and create a socialistic or communistic state in this country.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman is misstating entirely the position I took the other day.

[Mr. R. K. Anderson.]

Mr. McGIBBON: It is a fair deduction.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I am basing my proposition upon the statement made by the hon. gentleman himself. That is the way it appeared to me and I am satisfied that is the way it will appear to many other people in Canada. If the hon. gentleman did not mean that, I am sorry that I misconstrued his remarks as I have no desire to do him wrong. It is the intention of this new party which had its birth in the closing months of 1932, to appeal to the electorate upon this policy. That is their whole policy because it has been stated in this house and it has not been enlarged upon. It is a policy fashioned after the Russian system, it is nothing less than that.

The hon. gentleman gravely asks this parliament to endorse this policy and put it into effect immediately. That is a most extraordinary proposition to make to any house. Such a proposition makes it impossible for any hon. member, no matter how favourable he may be towards that policy, to vote to put it into effect immediately. That would not be democratic. It is socialistic to ask that we go ahead without the endorsation and consent of the people of Canada. Such a course of action would wreck our constitution and destroy confederation.

The hon. gentlemen who are advocating this policy state that it is meant to displace capitalism. It might displace capitalism but it would destroy democracy. What is capitalism? It is simply a system by which we produce wealth for the production of further wealth. Capitalism as we know it to-day came into being during the last half of the nineteenth century, less than one hundred years ago. Since that time the world has made more progress than it had in the previous five thousand years. The success of capitalism has been phenomenal; the world jumped ahead immediately it came into effect and the progress of the world has been continuous ever since. As the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) said, when this system was founded the world was suffering from a scarcity of everything except poverty, but in less than a century we had an overproduction and over-abundance of everything. In spite of this, capitalism is denounced as a failure. Before capitalism terrible famines took place all over the world. I can remember when the people of Ireland faced starvation because of the failure of the potato crop and I can remember when the people of India and China were starving by the millions because of the failure of their crops. What has been the result of capitalism? Famine has been eliminated, so much so that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin says that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation offers economic independence to everybody.

Mr. IRVINE: My statement was that economic security was offered to everyone.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): The hon. member is reported on page 1743 of Hansard of February 2, as saying;

> The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation guarantees to every Canadian economic independence.

If there has been a mistake made in Hansard the hon. gentleman should have had it corrected. He said also that there was in this country sufficient plant and equipment to guarantee at least an abundance of the necessaries to every Canadian. That would mean that the Canadian people would have economic independence and an abundance of necessaries free of cost. It is the intention of hon. gentlemen to destroy the price system and to destroy capitalism, consequently the necessaries of life, which include shelter, clothing, food and heat and light, will be given free to everybody. Was there ever a greater slogan for an election? Was there ever a greater attempt at wholesale bribery of the people? Such promises are over and above any ever made by the Liberal or Conservative parties, yet hon. gentlemen complain about the promises made by the political parties during election campaigns.

In the last twenty-five years—I make this statement subject to correction if any hon. member cares to correct me—the world made more advancement under capitalism than it had made in the previous two thousand years. Does any hon. member want to deny that statement? Since the war everything has been stimulated by capital. Laboratories were set up wherein scientists could work unhampered by the necessity of producing a living. Nature has been made to yield up her secrets and those secrets have been applied to such an extent that our civilization has been transformed. Yet, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, capitalism is a huge failure.

Capitalism brought in the machine age in which we are now. By means of the capital expended in the laboratories, in our industries and in all lines of personal endeavour, the machine has been developed to such an extent as to eliminate thousands of men from gainful labour. Far more men have been eliminated than is required to build the machine. This has all been brought about by capital. We are entering the electrical age, our machines are going to be run by electricity and more men will be eliminated from gainful occupations. These things are just signs of the times, they are progress and it is futile for anyone to think that he can stop the progress of the world. It will go ahead in spite of what any human being may do.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is happening to those men who have been eliminated?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I am just going to take up that point. The hon. gentleman gave his own solution for this. I am not saying that there is nothing in socialism, I am simply saying that we are on the verge or are well advanced into a new era. The sun of that new era is well above the horizon and the signs of the time are everywhere for any man to read. We are not going back to the old system but also we do not need to go to socialism. We can carry on with the system we have, that is capitalism. The only thing that is wrong now is that capitalists did not realize that the advances have been so great that it is out of step with our social order. Capitalism got ahead of the social order which we have in the world to-day and we must bring the social order up in step with capitalism.

The machine age is only beginning. As I have said, we shall see further advances and progress in machinery until possibly some day every man will be able to have a servant of an electrical character. That is one of the possibilities of the future and we must prepare for it. But only a fanatic would attempt to disrupt the present order by trying to bring in a new order all at once. If there is to be a new order, it must come gradually and imperceptibly, a merging of the old into the new, so that when the old order passes out, the new order will be ready to take charge of the situation and carry on. I am not altogether advocating capitalism. I say that it has been a splendid thing for the world, but it has defects. It has had defects which have been remedied; the defects which it now has can be remedied, and by remedying those defects and carrying on with our present progress we shall eventually bring about a system under which the people of this world will be able to have a living without very much work. We shall be able to have abundance to eat and all the luxuries of life without having any socialistic state. Socialism was in existence long before capitalism. Socialism has been in existence pretty nearly as long as the world has. It is a failure in Russia to-day, and it is a peculiar situation for some hon. members to be advocating socialism and communism when socialism and communism are at this very time failures in Russia. Russia started out without a price system. They were going to run a socialistic state there by making everybody engage in labour and by parcelling out to them what they needed in the way of food, clothing, shelter and so forth. But what is happening now? At the end of five years they are trying to bolster up their plan by bringing in capital. They are beginning to arrange for a capitalistic system in that country to bolster up a system of communism. They are asking the loan of capital from outside countries, even from Canada. Socialism has not been a success; it has been a failure, and all I have to say is that we should stay with the capitalistic system that we have, improve and perfect it, and it will bring us out of the depression in which we find ourselves just at present.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, the motion that is before the house reads:

> Whereas under our present economic arrangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;
>
> And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;

Since the beginning of this debate many quotations have been made by hon. members in the far corner to my left. In the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) we find quotations from the English poet Blake, the Reverend John A. Ryan, D.D., Hjalmar Schact, ex-president of the German Reichsbank, Mr. P. W. Martin, the October letter of the Royal bank, and Goldsmith. The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) has quoted Gustav Cassel, Mr. G. D. H. Cole, Stuart Chase, and an English girl, from an article in The Canadian Student. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) has quoted Shakespeare, Sir William Beveridge, John Maynard Keynes, Sir Basil Blackett, Lloyd's Bank Monthly, Henry Ford and Walter Rathenan. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has quoted Lord Marley, Professor W. H. Wakenshaw, Sir Arthur Salter, a great scientist called John L. Hodgson, and Sir Basil Blackett. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) has quoted Karl Marx and President Hoover.

I am not interested to-day, in any one of those people. The only quotations I shall make will be from the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is the mover of the resolution. I do not know what it exactly means because there are in it some words that may mean a great deal or nothing. I should like to know whether they mean a great deal or nothing and in order to procure that information I want to ask the hon. member fifty-five questions.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Put them on the order paper.

Mr. POULIOT: First of all, may I quote the speech of the hon. gentleman which is of much more interest than any quotation from Sir Basil Blackett, G. D. H. Cole or Walter Rathernan or Karl Marx. I am not interested in any of those. As I have already informed the house, I have not time to read any communistic books and I believe those who do so are wasting their time.

An hon. MEMBER: Treason.

Mr. POULIOT: I would not go so far as that, but they think a great deal of them because they do not always understand their full and real meaning, and those who write those books do not themselves often understand the first word of what they are writing.

First of all, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre spoke about a new and better social order. There is only one social order and it is order. When there is no social order, the situation is disorder. So if the hon. member proposes a new social order, conditions will remain the same; there will be no change. If it is something different, then it will be disorder. Is that not logical, Mr. Speaker? There has been confusion in the mind of the hon. gentleman between capitalism and ownership and the abuse of capitalism and capitalism itself. The two things are entirely different. One cannot condemn capitalism just because of the abuse of it. While the abuse is bad, that does not mean capitalism is also bad. I am not personally interested in capitalism in a practical way, but if I take the stand to-day, I do so on behalf of human liberty and freedom, and if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre thinks he is advocating liberty, he does not realize the results that will be brought about by his proposal. If his proposal were adopted in this country, there would be no more human freedom and liberty; we would have human slavery, state slavery.

I quote from the speech of the mover of the resolution:

> Great economists have pointed out that our present economic system could not last very long, but must give place to a different one. In more recent days we have the technicians pointing out not only the feasibility of fundamental changes in our social order, but the absolute necessity of such changes if our civilization is to persist.

What are those changes? Those changes come from the platform of 1921 as quoted by the hon. gentleman, and it is most important that I should put them on record as a basis for my questions. The hon. gentleman said at page 1687 of Hansard:

> The Independent Labour party of Manitoba is formed for the purpose of giving political expression to the aspirations of all workers, regardless of industrial affiliation, who believe in the establishment of a cooperative commonwealth—

Mark this, Mr. Speaker:

> —with production for use and not for profit as its economic basis.

Quoting from the platform of the United Farmers of Alberta, the hon. gentleman continued:

> A community freed from the domination—

This is rather mixed up, but afterwards I shall detach some sentences in order to analyze them:

> A community freed from the domination of irresponsible financial and economic powers, in which all social means of production and distribution, including land,—

Mark you, it includes land:

> —are socially owned and controlled either by voluntarily organized groups of producers and consumers, or—in the case of the major public services and utilities and such productive and distributive enterprises as can be conducted most efficiently when owned in common—by public corporations responsible to the pepole's elected representatives.

There was another platform published by the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, and here is the quotation from their platform as given by the hon. gentleman:

> A federation of organizations whose purpose is the establishment in Canada of a cooperative commonwealth in which the basic principle regulating production, distribution and exchange will be the supply of human needs instead of the making of profits.

Just the same thing as in 1921. The reason I am suspicious about that platform, Mr. Speaker, is because of the following expressions which were used by the hon. gentleman in the course of his speech, and I would ask if these statements mean much for the social welfare of the country and the public good. Here is what he says:

> The object of the federation shall be to promote cooperation between the member organizations and to correlate their political activities.

That is why I am against it. We cannot play any game for political purposes with the welfare of this country. To-day we have a most serious problem to consider, and while I give full credit to the hon. gentleman for the sincerity of his view, still as a Canadian citizen I believe that order must be maintained at any cost, and that if anyone is found guilty of a breach of order he must be punished. The whole community should not suffer for the excesses of the few.

Here are my questions, Mr. Speaker, and before each series of questions I give first of all an excerpt from the passages which I have just quoted from the hon. gentleman's speech, and then state the consequence. The questions follow:

> "All social means of production and distribution (including land) (should first be) freed from the domination of irresponsible financial and economic power."

First consequence:

> There would be no more municipal and other taxes on land; municipal councils and school boards would be abolished.

Questions:

1. Would the municipal councils and school boards be replaced by other public bodies?
2. If so, how?

Second consequence:

> All mortgages on lands and buildings would be wiped out.

Questions:

1. What is the total amount and number of mortgages in each province?
2. How many are held by widows, orphans and different people who have no other means of living than the revenue therefrom?
3. Would the cooperative commonwealth pay the mortgagees in full?
4. If so, how?
5. If not, what proportion, if any, would be paid to widows, orphans and people who have no other means of living than the revenue therefrom?
6. What would happen in the case of mortgage transfers for value received?

That is only to give the house a sweet mouth before I put my other questions, as follows, giving first a quotation from the hon. gentleman's speech:

> "All social means of production and distribution (including land) (should be) socially owned and controlled by voluntarily organized groups of producers and consumers."

Questions:

1. What is the definition of the words (a) "socially owned" and (b) "socially controlled"?
2. What would be the function of the dominion parliament and provincial legislatures in a cooperative commonwealth?

3. By what process would privately owned lands be turned into societies or become socially owned and controlled property?
4. How would such groups of producers and consumers be voluntarily organized?
5. Would such groups be amenable to the laws?
6. Would the cooperative commonwealth compensate private individuals or corporations who presently own land and property, for their loss, and if so, to what extent?
7. How many people in each province would be affected by their private property becoming "socially owned and controlled"?
8. Would such change in land ownership take place in urban as well as rural centres?
9. What are the social means of production and distribution (excluding land) which should be socially owned and controlled?
10. Would movable as well as immovable property be socially owned and controlled?
11. How and by whom would socially owned and controlled means of production and distribution (including land) be managed?
12. How, by whom and for how long would each of the above mentioned managers be appointed?
13. Who would decide the kind, area and location of the land or property to be assigned by society to each individual?

Mr. GOTT: Would the hon. member permit me to inform him that his questions are so hot that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has left the chamber.

Mr. HEAPS: In deference to the hon. gentleman who has left the chamber, I think my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott) ought to have first found out why he left it.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not discuss that viewpoint. I simply wish to put my questions on record in Hansard in order that everyone may take cognizance of them. My next question follows, giving first the question:

"Major services and utilities and such productive and distributive enterprises as can be conducted most efficiently when owned in common (should be owned—and controlled?) by public corporations responsible to the people's elected representatives."

Questions:
1. What major public services and utilities could be conducted most efficiently when owned in common?
2. Would socially owned and controlled social means of production and distribution (including land), and mentioned in the first place, be owned in common?
3. If so, what would be the difference in ownership between (a) the aforesaid socially owned and controlled social means of production and distribution (including land), and (b) such productive and distributive enterprises as could be conducted most efficiently when owned in common?
4. Would the voluntarily organized groups of producers and consumers aforesaid mentioned be (a) public corporations and (b) responsible to the people's elected representatives?
5. If so, what would be the difference between "socially owned" and "owned in common"; and "socially controlled" and "controlled by public corporations"?

[Mr. Pouliot.]

6. How many groups of producers and consumers would be organized voluntarily in each province and for what purposes?
7. How many public corporations would own and control such productive and distributive enterprises in each province, as could be conducted most efficiently when owned in common, and how and for what purposes would each of such public corporations be organized?

Next I ask this, with "the establishment of a cooperative commonwealth, with production for use and not for profit as its economic basis," or with "a federation of organizations whose purpose is the establishment in Canada of a cooperative commonwealth in which the basic principle regulating production, distribution and exchange will be the supply of human needs instead of the making of profits," what would happen? I cannot tell the house, but I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, when he speaks again, will give answers to the following questions:

1. Would the whole retail and wholesale trade be "socially owned" or "owned in common," and "socially controlled" or "controlled by public corporations"?
2. In the latter case, would such "public corporations" be "freed from the domination of irresponsible financial and economic power"?
3. By what process and how would all the stores and trades now privately owned be turned into the cooperative commonwealth?
4. Would the cooperative commonwealth compensate the private individuals and corporations who presently own stores or trades, for their loss, and if so, to what extent and how?
5. Would all natural products be turned from "voluntarily organized groups of producers" to "voluntarily organized groups of consumers," without any profit to the producers?
6. What, if anything, would the groups of consumers give to the groups of producers in exchange for their means of production and how would it be done?
7. How would the social means of production be distributed by the consumers groups to private individuals?
8. What would be allowed to private individuals forming the groups of producers for their work and how and by what means would it be done?
9. Who would enact the regulations relating to production and distribution of primary products and what should they be?
10. Would the production of primary products be based upon the annual consumption in order to be distributed only to the consumers in this country?
11. If so, would such policy prevent any exports of home products?
12. Without any exports, would it be possible for the cooperative commonwealth to trade with foreign or other countries who have not adopted the cooperative commonwealth system; in other words, would it not mean the end of all foreign trade?
13. What industries would be "socially owned and controlled," on one hand, and on the other hand "owned in common by public corporations responsible to the people's elected representatives"?
14. Would the system for the distribution of primary products be the same for manufactured products?

15. Would all private and public industries be turned over to the cooperative commonwealth?

16. Would the cooperative commonwealth compensate the owners of private or public industries for their loss and if so, to what extent and how?

17. Would it not be the policy of the cooperative commonwealth to abolish and repudiate all federal, provincial, municipal and other public and private debts and obligations?

18. Would the cooperative commonwealth supply free shelter, food, clothing and medical attendance to every man, woman and child in this country?

19. What would be the reciprocal obligations of every man, woman, and child to the cooperative commonwealth and vice versa?

20. What would be the kind and the length of work to be done each day by each private individual?

21. Who would assign same to each one?

22. What would happen: (a) to the amounts of money deposited in chartered banks by private individuals; and (b) to life insurance held by them?

23. If "the supply of human needs" instead of the making of profits were the basic principle regulating production, distribution and exchange, would there be any necessity for any kind of currency?

24. If so, what would be the standard of such policy or means of exchange?

25. Would there be any kind of private ownership in the cooperative commonwealth?

26. If so, what would it be?

27. Would the cooperative commonwealth demolish all churches, as has been done in Russia?

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) upon the list of very practical questions he has submitted to the leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. That body found its birth in the city I have the honour to represent in this house. It is fitting therefore that I should have something to say in the debate on this resolution. Our city is one of many parts. In August last this foundling, as we may call it, was left on our door step and, I must admit, was taken into our city and tendered hospitality and more or less kindly treatment. It grew—there is no question about that—until it would seem that it almost assumed that the rest of the community had very little business in the city, and consequently must be crowded out. However on the nineteenth day of last month the members of the household instructed the new foundling that it was no longer welcome, and by a majority of about 2,600 votes it was told to transport itself to some other parts. I may add that that city, in earlier days, was the place where the convention was held at which the torch was lighted which started the 1919 troubles in western Canada. At that time we were broadminded enough to allow those gentlemen to come and talk in revolutionary terms. Despite these facts there has never been any wavering on the part of the citizens of Calgary in respect to their established principles. Over thirty-five years ago a young man came to that city, and was taken in as one of its sons. He was trained and educated in business, finance, politics and economics, and as a result we have the honour of having presented a Prime Minister to the Dominion of Canada.

The federation involved in the resolution before us, according to its own literature, embraces labour, farmers, and socialists—rather paradoxical bed fellows. As the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) pointed out last fall, there would seem to be difficulty in labour and farmers associating themselves in that intimate manner necessary to effect the socialism which is the basic principle of the federation. I am not going into a full discussion of that question. But class is the root principle of this federation. Its very existence depends upon class. As the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) pointed out, comparing the wages of the farmer to-day with 1913 and comparing the wages of labour now with 1913, they stand as four is to one. The farmer wants manufactured products at less cost; labour claims, and rightly, that it should receive its just wages. Well we have the two extreme lines of thought being brought together by the master minds of this organization, and then all associating itself with socialism. I have here a copy of the pamphlet which sets out the socialist platform. The first clause says:

> The irrepressible conflict of interest between the capitalist and the worker necessarily expresses itself as a struggle for political supremacy. This is class struggle.

Those are the specific terms of the first clause; "this is class struggle." That, as I said before, is the very essence of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, it depends for its very life upon the class struggle. Now it assumes, and so does the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation assume, that there are only two classes in this country, the wealthy capitalist and the poor worker. That assumption is altogether erroneous. There are all the rest of us who have some place in this country, who do not belong either with the wealthy capitalist or the poor wage earner. We have our homes, we have our little properties. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore), made this statement in a public address not long ago, that the farms, the urban real estate, the household effects and the automobiles of the people of this country represent an aggregate of 59·3 per cent of the total wealth of Canada. If that statement is correct, it shows that a very substantial part of the wealth of Canada is in the hands of the bourgeois, the small capitalist, of whom the farmer in this country is one of the outstanding examples, the great middle class, the average citizen. After all is said and done, "the average citizen," is the law-abiding citizen, the citizen who does not get out and make a big noise on the public platform, is not out agitating or creating a struggle between class and class, is carrying on the industry of this country, and he is not included under socialism.

I think it is not unfair to the other members of the group of socialists to say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) is the moving spirit of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. He is the leader, he is the man who is directing public thought to a very considerable extent to the principles they enunciate. I am not depreciating his associates, but I think they would be the first to admit that he is the master-mind if you like, the man whom the general public recognize as such. May I say that he is also the moving spirit in regard to socialism, and has been for a number of years. He is looked upon in this country as the outstanding exponent of the principles of socialism. So you have them combined, the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is socialism, and the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation must accept responsibility for what socialism offers to this country.

How has that been expressed? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has certainly given expression to it through this Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. In 1919 it was expressed in western Canada through the One Big Union. It was expressed in the city of Winnipeg in no uncertain terms. It is not necessary for me to go into details of what took place in those days, but socialism as the people of Canada understood it in 1919 gave itself very tangible expression; and the people of western Canada, indeed, I think the people of all Canada, know exactly how the moving spirit in those days expressed it in Winnipeg and in western Canada. Well we have this expression to-day. In 1919 the farmer was not appealed to; there were other fish to fry. The farmer in those days was getting probably $1.50 to $2 a bushel for his wheat, he was then a capitalist. But in these days when he is faced with economic difficulty, he has to accept 20 or 25 cents a bushel for wheat at his own station, the situation is different and the appeal of socialism is being made to western farmers who are now in economic distress. I do not think it is going too far to say that we must judge the performances of socialism in the future by what it has done in the past. We must judge the actions of the leading spirit of that socialism in the future by what he has encouraged people to do in the past.

What are the objects of this Cooperative Commonwealth Federation? We are told it is to introduce a revolution in this country. It insists it is a mental revolution or a bloodless revolution, but it is revolution; it is a turning upside down of the economic and social structure of our country. Or to put it in the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre himself:

> The ultimate object of the party is the collective ownership and democratic operation of the means of wealth production. This involves a complete revolution in our whole economic and social structure.

—a revolution to introduce collective ownership, or as Zinoviev, the leading socialist in Russia calls it, "the industrial commonwealth." He insists that the only means whereby an industrial commonwealth can be introduced into this country is by a proletarian dictatorship.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman has said that he wishes to be fair. He will make it clear that what Zinoviev says is not what I say.

Mr. STANLEY: I think that anyone in this house has ears to hear, and by no twist of one's imagination can it be suggested that I have put into the mouth of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre anything that Zinoviev has said. Now, as the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) so well pointed out, in order to accomplish the purposes of this organization property must go into the possession of a proletarian dictatorship, if you want to put it in the words of Zinoviev, or there must be collective ownership, if you want to put it in the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Property must be possessed; the land must go. But remember this. The agency through which this socialism is being expressed on this occasion is principally our U.F.A. friends in this country. Oh, that is a different consideration. Therefore they say: "When we get out a platform, we must bear in mind the fact that a great number of the farmers are to be appealed to, and we have collective ownership advocated." Oh yes; but they note in brackets down below that "use-land" will be exempt. All other lands are included in the collective ownership except "use-land"; and as to the interpretation of "use-land," who is going to determine what comprises such land? That interpretation is left for someone to determine later but in the meantime what is required is the support of the farmers. Their political support is needed, their votes are needed, and in the meantime, to carry out in its entirety the collective ownership of the socialist party, they can afford to exempt such land. For the time being at least use-land will be exempted. That is the sop that is being given to our farmers.

How is this revolution to be accomplished? Ah! that is the rub, politically speaking. How is it to be accomplished, I ask? Well, by the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. And that will express itself for the time being as "all things to all men." We have various degrees of socialism running up and down the colour line. I belong to the medical profession, as most hon. gentlemen know, and in the laboratory we have what we call the Fehling's test. We have a glass of blue solution for testing for sugar. If you have the least little tinge of sugar you will get just a little tinge at the bottom, a tint of pink, and as the sugar is increased it goes on up the line until, when you have a considerable quantity of sugar, you get a scarlet red. I do not know how better you can express the degrees of socialism. You can take it from a faint tinge of pink at the bottom to the flaring red scarlet at the top.

Now, how is socialism expressing itself? Well. we have various brands or degrees of socialism. First we have that highly cultured university socialism called the League of Social Reconstruction, represented by some of the eminent university professors—Professor Gordon, Professor Alexander and other such gentlemen. That is the class of people that belong to that grade of socialism. Then we have what is called in the various countries of Europe "tamed" socialism. To that class I think belong our friends of the U.F.A. and other Progressive members. Then we have the socialism that belongs to political labour. An hon. member has pointed out the difference between labour unions, trade unions and the political labour party. We have those also, and we have the socialism which found its expression through the Rev. Mr. Ivens in the O.B.U. back in 1919, or through Bob Russell, in such organizations as the I.W.W. Then we have the bolshevik socialism, and again the all-inclusive, all-embracing socialism which is so well represented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which takes in all. How does he express himself to-day?—You find him in this position. First he is the honorary president of the League of Social Reconstruction, and he is the leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation; he is also a member of the house here, representing political labour. He was one of the outstanding leaders in the O.B.U. activities.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. STANLEY: Allow me to finish my statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member rises to a point of order and he has a right to state it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The point of order is that the statement just made by the hon member is absolutely untrue and I ask that it be withdrawn.

An hon. MEMBER: He has not finished the statement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I ask that it be withdrawn. I was not among the leaders of the O.B.U., never belonged to it, and was not one of its leaders. I ask that the statement be withdrawn.

Mr. STANLEY: I made no such statement as that the hon. member was a member of the O.B.U. I said he was one of the leaders in the O.B.U. activities.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was not one of the leaders in those activities and I ask that the statement be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will have an opportunity to reply to statements such as that when he comes to make his reply in this debate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I deny the statement just made and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member can state the truth as he sees it when he comes to reply.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. STANLEY: May I say this then. When the O.B.U. were in the height of their activities, when all the turmoil and troubles were going on in Winnipeg and in western Canada, headed by the O.B.U., my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre was one of the outstanding public men defending those who were in the activities of those times. Now, I think I am perfectly fair in saying that the all-embracing socialism of to-day comes under the leadership of my hon. friend. Let us go on. Let us put in front of us again the colorimeter, the name we give to the instrument which determines the various colours in the test of which I spoke. The degrees and grades of socialism as expressed by the apostles of socialism in years gone by and in more modern times, are these. First we have these university professors to whom I have referred. Of course, they have dignified ideas of socialism. They say that this collective ownership, this industrial commonwealth will be introduced by a process of education and intelligent voting—I would say that is the pink variety of socialism. Passing on, we find that another member of the group opposite said recently that "revolution is not only utterly unnecessary, it is utterly ridiculous"—I would call that the tamed-down red variety of socialism. Another hon. member of the same group advocates a bloodless revolution—that would be the bloodless red variety. Another hon. member stated in the house that you can plan only when you have control of the economic situation, and that they proposed to take that control—I would call that the all-controlling red variety. Then in the city of Calgary, according to the report of the Herald, the hon. member himself said: "Why not buy out an industry for, say, a hundred thousand dollars and then tax it all back"—that would be the super-tax variety of socialism. Then we have the Reverend Mr. Ivens, one of the outstanding apostles of socialism, making the statement in Winnipeg that "all you have to do is to walk into an industry, tell the owner you are going to take it over and it is done"—that is the genuine red variety. Then the British Columbia Federationist, the socialistic organ, made the statement that "it is impossible to demand too much because nothing short of the whole shooting-match is of any use." I would call that the scarlet red variety. The Western Labour News of which Mr. Ivens was once editor, followed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, states that "one big union is greater than one big army and more effective than one big government; one big union has but to name a day, an hour, a minute, and behold, as the smallest unit of time is reached, a whole nation is paralyzed." I would call that the fiery red variety, it is the real stuff. Mr. E. T. Kingsley of Vancouver, president of the British Columbia Federated Labour party told an audience in Calgary, my own city, that "we all ought to be in one big union and its purpose should be the mastery of the earth and everything upon it." That is what I call the ultra-violet red variety or the ultra-violent red variety.

All down the colour scale an attempt is being made to appeal to the electors of this country. They say that they must control political power, they can start at the pink and go right up to the scarlet red and get them all, up and down the line. We see the appeal to socialism which can be made to the electors of this country. But what was the attitude of the trade unions when they considered this matter? At the thirty-sixth annual convention held at Hamilton after a discussion of the disturbances which had been stirred up in 1919 by socialism, the executive council had this to say:

> The futility of the one big union method should have been apparent from the beginning, founded as it was on force and intolerance of the chosen leaders of the labour movement, repudiating the organization from which they drew their financial and numerical strength, preaching class hatred throughout the country, and gambling their whole future on the success of sympathetic and national strikes. . . .

That is not an expression by over-wealthy capitalists; it is the expression of a labour group at their annual convention. The president, Mr. Tom Moore, cautioned the people by saying that there were the labour trades unions, and the political labour party; "that the political labour party was in no way representative of organized labour in Canada." That is a point which should be emphasized to the people of this country, that the expression of socialism by the so-called political labour party is not the expression of a large portion of labour in this country.

As the president and the executive of the labour unions pointed out, in 1919 there were two classes of labour, those who were organized to look after the interests of labour, to use every means to maintain the standard of living, to use the strike legitimately if it were necessary, law-abiding citizens who believed in the institutions of this country and the constitution of the land; and another group which had received so much support from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a group which caused disturbances and violated the law as we understand it, which created dissension and class hatred and stirred up unfruitful sentiments in the minds of those who were facing economic distress at the time.

How much force will be required to create this collective ownership, to bring about this industrial commonwealth? The hon. member for Temiscouata has asked a number of questions and I think the answers to those questions will give us our answer. What control of property is to be taken? What property is the commonwealth to acquire? Is it to acquire all property with the exception of this "use land" which is excluded or exempted for the time being? If it is to possess property, how is that to be done? When is it to be done? Are the owners of property to be dispossessed? If so, how and when? Are the lands to be expropriated from ownership or is their property to be confiscated holus bolus? I suppose all this will depend upon the colorimeter. If such a thing were to happen as my hon. friend being asked to form a government in this country, I suppose the colours would have to be inspected in order to find out how far up the scale he would be able to go.

I do not know of any hon. member who talks about force so frequently and disclaims force so vigorously as does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He was the first to introduce this question and I think I am correct in stating that he has talked more about it than all the rest of the members put together. Let me quote a few of his expressions. Speaking about the creating of this industrial commonwealth or collective ownership, he is reported as having said at Port Arthur:

"Can this thing be brought about?" He asked in conclusion. He answered it by saying that it had been done in Russia, but with loss of millions of lives and untold suffering. He hoped that would not be necessary in Canada.

If the cardinal principle of socialism is to be accepted, collective ownership has got to come. He hopes it can be done "without the loss of millions of lives and untold suffering." At Calgary, just a day or two before we left, the hon. member spoke there and, according to the report, he said:

Violence may come. I am warning my people, again and again I have begged for action to prevent violent methods being used. My earnest desire is not to have that happen which happened in Russia which involved a great loss of life and suffering.

That came from my own city of Calgary and I want to give that for the benefit of my fellow-citizens. According to his dictum, violence may come, but he hopes the change can be brought about without a great loss of life and suffering.

In the House of Commons last year, as reported on page 2808 of Hansard, he said:

There is something to be said with regard to those who are trying to bring in reforms by means of force.

Then he goes on to elaborate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. member conclude that passage. He is taking a detached sentence.

Mr. STANLEY: The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to give the whole thing. The words as quoted are absolutely correct.

At Saskatoon, on his way through, he delivered an address to the farmers there and this is a stenographic report. He said:

Now, how are we going to attain that power? I think that is a practical question. There are a few people in our labour movement, as well as in the farm movement, who say that the only possible thing for us to-day is to win that power by force, to resort to force of arms, or violence or something of that kind. Of course, since the Dominion government has been taking such an active part in suppressing the advocates of open force we have not heard quite so much of that openly expressed. At the same time there are those who quite conscientiously and firmly believe that is the only way in which we can obtain our ends. I am not so shocked as some people are at that because if it is right to obtain victory of one nation over another nation by means of force, it is right to obtain victory of one class over another class by means of force.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the hon. gentleman conclude the statement?

Mr. STANLEY: I have only a few minutes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the hon. gentleman finish the statement?

Mr. STANLEY: Yes, I shall finish it.

Mr. SPEAKER: When an hon. member is speaking, no other member has a right to interrupt him except on a point of order.

Mr. STANLEY: I have only a few minutes left. The hon. gentleman, according to the report of Mr. Sandwell of Toronto Saturday Night, repeated practically the same thing and Mr. Sandwell gave him the honour of an editorial in regard to it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order. The statement as made by Mr. Sandwell was a detached sentence which had been definitely repudiated by the president of the association before which I spoke.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is not a point of order.

Mr. STANLEY: These poor press reporters who become deaf just at convenient moments are not the kind that I meet. Those whom I meet generally get what is said. But may I say this, that if it is right, as the statement of the hon. gentleman claims, for one nation and so forth to use force, it is quite true the nations are using force or they are prepared for doing so. Then as long as that is considered right, the hon. gentleman says it is right for one class to use force against another class. But the hon. gentleman says it is not right for individuals to do that. Of course it is not. The logical conclusion is that the right thing for an individual to do, if he wants to use force, is to get into a class, and when that class is built up so strong that it can overcome all other classes, then he has at his feet "the world and all that is on it." That is the situation.

May I quote just one statement which the hon. gentleman made at Moose Jaw away back in the time of the troubles of those days. He said:

> The federal authorities control the military and the courts, and labour is not going to get what it wants until it in some way gets control of the military and the courts.

In this house in my hearing the hon. member said "that the military were here not for the repelling of some foreign enemy but to shoot down our Canadian citizens."

So I could go on quoting from some of the other trusted associates in socialism during the troubles of years gone by. This is what Kingsley said in his Vancouver speech:

> "I stand for one big union—for the specific purpose of conquering the reins of power by peaceful means if possible; and if not, by some other means."

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, if some of us have seemed to others to be somewhat reluctant to take part in this debate, this has been for the very good reason that we were hoping to the very last minute that some hon. member of this new-old cult would tell us exactly what this motion of the hon. member (Mr. Woodsworth) means. I may say that I have not so far been able to fathom it. Nobody has yet supplied the key. Being in that position, I am obliged to go outside this house to find what the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation are saying there so that then we may be able to understand what the motion really means. I know what it means, but it is not stated in the motion.

Mr. SPENCER: May I remind the hon. gentleman that I put it on record the other day?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not catch that. Will the hon. member excuse me because I need the whole forty minutes to say what I want to say. If my hon. friend will speak a little louder I shall be glad to answer.

One thing we can understand is the somewhat comprehensive and, I might say, the presumptive name they have appropriated to themselves—Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. I do not think any party in the house has a right to monopolize all those names. Another thing I can understand is that this new party, so called, wants the government, the opposition and all the rest of us to set them up. Those are the words of the motion. Well, they may be set up later on, but not in the way they expect. But they want to be set up. The motion calls for the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) wants to be a party to setting up our hon. friends to my left. None of the speakers who have shown their attitude in this regard has given any indication of that, but in any case I wish to inform the house that whatever the government may do, I am not going to be a party to setting up the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation.

We have had these new parties for many years, and I am not going to say for how long back. I shall not say that they have all been in vain or that some of them have not at some time served a useful purpose. But we do not need to try a new experiment to find out what they are likely to be because right in this country, as well as in others, we have a history of them dating back for a considerable number of years. The first demonstration of vocational government was in the province of Ontario when the Drury government came into power. What marvellous things were expected of him when he was taken from the plough tail and put into the premier's chair in the biggest province of this dominion! But lo and behold, one of his ministers found himself in the penitentiary before two years had gone by. Is that the new social order that we are to follow? Is that the new day that is about to dawn upon us? May we expect hon. gentlemen to the left to follow such an example of the new cult that I have just mentioned?

But let us go out to the west, and take a look at Alberta and Manitoba. They have two farmer governments there, and as a whole they are fairly good governments. They did not undertake to perform any miracles. But both of them are giving reasonably fair government. The one in Manitoba, however, before going to the country last summer, thought it advisable to ask for the cooperation of all parties in the house. Two of them declined, but the Liberals accepted, and consequently we have in Manitoba to-day a coalition government composed of two parties, the Progressives and the Liberals. In my estimation they never should have been separated in the first instance. But they came together again in that way, and I rather approved of it myself, notwithstanding that I do not like coalition governments as a rule.

In Saskatchewan we have a Conservative cooperative government. There are eleven nondescripts there calling themselves by any name that is convenient for the occasion who hold the balance of power. In this House of Commons at Ottawa, in the corner to my left, any two of those gentlemen held the balance of power for ten months 1925-26. What a wonderful sensation it must be to hold this entire House of Commons in the hollow of two hon. gentlemen's hands! It is the most vicious form of government that could be conceived of.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then why did you permit it to go on?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am getting along fine thank you. I anticipate that that is what our friends to the left are again aiming at now. They certainly do not expect to be called upon to form a government, for otherwise they would have never made themselves responsible for such extraordinary things as they are saying and promising outside of this house.

If time would permit, we might go to the Antipodes for further examples. But there is nothing to indicate that either Australia or New Zealand has benefited sufficiently by a Labour government to write home about it.

I come to my last illustration, in the homeland. There we had probably the best Labour government that has ever been formed in any part of the British commonwealth. I am a great admirer of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, the present Prime Minister of Great Britain, but when the Labour government of Great Britain came up against a real crisis about two years ago, and they found that their trade union bronchos would not follow them in the great reforms which they felt it necessary to make to meet the economic crisis, Mr. MacDonald was obliged to turn to the two old parties and form a national government to meet the situation at that time, and that was the end of the Labour government there.

Now what is the use of us trying another such experiment in this country with all this experience within our ken, right under our eyes, within our own time? It is quite true that our friends to the left have assumed a new name, but a new name does not mean very much. A new name without a change for the better does not mean anything at all to me. To me our friends to the left still remain the same old sixpence, notwithstanding their new and cumbersome name.

Just a word about that name—the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Saskatchewan leaders of the farmer-labour party have done more harm in pulling down cooperative enterprises within the last three or four years than the whole gang of them have done in their lifetime in building it up. The United Farmers of Canada—the Saskatchewan section—brought Sapiro to Canada, I think it was in 1923, and he went around that province in a sort of cyclonic crusade on behalf of the pool method of selling wheat. While prices were going up that method proved to be fine. I think it was the most magnificent wheat cooperative superstructure that I have known anywhere. But in Saskatchewan this movement was built on a comparatively unknown foundation, and that was not sound. The foundations were not strong enough to uphold the wonderful superstructure; that is, the success of the pool method of giving an advance payment followed at intervals by two or three other payments depended largely on keeping the advance payment safely low. While this was being done, another great institution called the Saskatchewan Cooperative Elevator Company was carrying on successfully. It had been organized in 1911, and was financed eighty-five per cent by the government of the day in the province of Saskatchewan, and they also had a line of credit guaranteed to the extent of sixty per cent. Never a dollar was lost to the treasury of Saskatchewan as a result of that great enterprise. It was absorbed by the new pool overnight, quite constitutionally, it is admitted, but nevertheless terribly ruthlessly. Now the pool, as you know, has met with a terrible financial disaster. You may ask me, how do I know but what the same fate would have overtaken the old Saskatchewan Cooperative Elevator Company if it had not been absorbed? My answer is that the United Grain Growers, another cooperative enterprise in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta, operating outside of the pool, has weathered the present economic storm and is in good shape financially. Consequently I come to the conclusion that if things had been left as they were for a while in Saskatchewan, the Saskatchewan Cooperative would have weathered the financial storm also. But this pool method of salesmanship was adopted because of the desire to jump away ahead of their time, not being content to grow gradually by natural evolution, as all reforms should be brought about. They did not even take advantage of the provision in the old Saskatchewan Cooperative Elevator Act which provided for patronage dividends. No, they must have something new and different entirely—scrap the old and start anew. Destruction almost followed due to over advance payments and rapid drop in wheat prices. There is only one way to rebuild this once great wheat pool, and that is by keeping it entirely outside of politics, but I am afraid that the U.F.C. is dragging the pool down again by that dangerous avenue. So much for the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation's claim for the name "cooperation" along commercial lines.

What kind of cooperation did we get politically from this body of hon. and enterprising gentlemen? It is not so very long ago, in 1926, as many hon. members will recall, that one old political party one dark midnight had its throat cut like this, from ear to ear by these hon. gentlemen, and three days afterwards the other old party had its throat cut like that, and both were left gurgling in their own gore. That is a kind of political cooperation which its victims do not appreciate very much.

We had further evidence of the sort of political cooperation they give when the Great Britain-Canada Trade Agreement bill was before the house. Our friends to the left made a number of hearty and valiant speeches against it on the first reading, but I have searched Hansard in vain for any evidence that a single member of the farmer wing of the party to my left voted against that bill on its first reading, although they spoke valiantly against it. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) in particular made a very excellent speech against the first reading of this bill. I always like to hear his speeches for, whatever may be amiss in them, they always make good reading and listening to. We do not always agree as to their substance, but on that occasion I agreed with the substance of his speech entirely. Then imagine my disappointment to find when the vote came and cooperation was urgently needed, his cooperation consisted of retirement behind the curtains or into the neighbouring lobby—and he an Irishman! Irishmen, as I know them, are always looking for a fight, but when the division bell rang, the zero hour was nigh and my halting friend was due to go over the top, he retired to the rear. I was disappointed—yes, very much disappointed indeed. Hon. members will see that that type of cooperation does not give this Cooperative Commonwealth Federation party the right to be called the Cooperative Commonwealth party of this dominion.

And now, a word or two about "federation". This name, apparently has been accepted because of a word dropped by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. They have chosen to call it a federation rather than a party. The hon. member and his colleagues have never liked to be called a party because it seems they are reminded so they say, too much of the old parties, and characteristically they want all things new. So they call themselves a federation,—a federation of disjointed units which have very little, if anything, in common. If I had time I do not think I would have much difficulty in showing that. They are bound by what? By the desire that I suppose we all entertain to a greater or lesser degree, namely to make their calling and election sure. That is what it all means, when the mask is off.

I cannot be accused of liking over much the policies of my Conservative friends, but at the same time I should rather be with them than accept the present alternative. In the election of 1929 the people of Saskatchewan were stung by the Ku Klux Klan, the leader of which is now in jail at Edmonton. In 1930 we were stung again by the voluminous promises of the present Prime Minister of Canada. Now it would seem as if Canada was in danger of being stung a third time, in the same place. Surely not,—surely not. When the farmer-labour party's land and economic policy is understood, it will be deserted like rats from a sinking ship.

Then, about the word "commonwealth",—who has any monopoly on that word? What does it mean? Some years ago I heard Austen Chamberlain give a definition of it in the railway committee room. I notice the dictionary does not give the same meaning, but I recall he indicated that commonwealth meant common weal, and commonweal meant the weal of the common people. I think all parties in the house would claim they constituted a commonwealth, because we all contend, no matter how much we may be mistaken or whatever justification we may have for our contention, that we are representatives of the common people. So the house will realize that there is no reason why this long name should be grasped at and monopolized by our friends from the left. Of course, so long as we allow them to do so it is all right. I am reminded of another triple name which was generated just after the demise of the Union government. I believe it was my old friend Senator Calder who worked out the name of the National Liberal Conservative party.

Mr. CASGRAIN: "And" Conservative.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes; probably it was the National "and" Liberal "and" Conservative party. I think that is right.

Mr. CASGRAIN: But it did not survive.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Anyway the word "national" was intended to be attractive to all nationalists; then there was the old name dating back to the time of Sir John A. Macdonald, and the time when an attempt was made to dish the Grits by misappropriating the Liberal name. I may add that that has not done the party opposite much good. It is out of place entirely. There is no similarity between the two old parties. So it would seem that the name now before us the Cooperative Commonwealth federation, is about as great a distortion and monstrosity as the one to which I have just referred.

Mr. McINTOSH: I think it is worse.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think if they had added the word "humbug" to these triplicates they would have been more easily recognized.

Although I am not in the habit of reading clippings from newspapers I feel on this occasion I must do so, as it is necessary for me to be candid. I believe when any man throws down a challenge, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has, those who do not agree with him should accept that challenge and deal with it accordingly. This is the time, and, in my estimation, the proper place to deal with it. As I read the article before me hon. members will realize the amount of provocation which has developed both in and out of the house. Listen to this: "The Liberal party was the Judas Iscariot of political life." Who will agree with that?

Mr. McINTOSH: Who is the Judas who said that?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, who said that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thanks—I had just forgotten to mention that. In the first place, this article is taken from the Western Producer of August 19, 1932, the official paper issued by the pool. Hon. members will realize the danger the pool is in when it is used by a political party to give voice to such diatribes as I have read. I shall read the head note of the article before me:

Williams and Coldwell on Farmer-Labour action at Saskatoon convention.

This refers to the time when the farmer-labour body came into existence at Saskatoon, and has reference to a speech by Mr. Williams, honorary president of the Saskatchewan section of the United Farmers of Canada, and who is now a candidate for the provincial legislature. He will run, no doubt, under whatever name they wish to call themselves when election time arrives. I shall read again this article which refers to the farmer-labour party of Saskatchewan, now affiliated with the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. Hon. members will please note carefully that the Labour-Farmer party of Saskatchewan has been affiliated with the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, that body which had its birth in Calgary last August. The article reads:

"The Liberal party was the Judas Iscariot of political life, promising much and giving little" but, said Mr. Williams, if he criticized the Conservatives less than the Liberals it was not that he had greater love for them but that he feared them less. "One does not beat a dead dog" he remarked, and added that the result of the Conservative policy on the prairies was too apparent to need comment.

Mr. Coldwell uses similar objectionable language and makes use of terms quite as irrelevant and untrue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I shall not say untrue, but shall maintain they were not justified. I am afraid hon. members have had the laugh on me this time, so I will correct the word "untrue" because it is unparliamentary, and because I wish to speak in as mild terms as I can, consistently with getting out the facts.

How can we remain silent longer? The gauntlet has been thrown down by the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation; the dogs of war have been let loose. We had hoped that this kind of internecine strife between Liberals and farmers might be averted in the future. In four out of the five federal elections in which I have taken part, I have had three-cornered fights, with a farmer as one of the candidates. I had hoped that at some time that condition might be changed. Year by year the farmer groups have been disappearing off the map, and I had hoped that if these unnatural divisions could not be averted in one way it might in another. But, lo and behold, in my maturer years this condition still confronts me, and I am not going to wait until it is too late to deal with the matter. I am not going to give Mr. Coldwell the publicity of Hansard by reading his comment. Some day out in the west I will discuss the matter with him. These gentlemen have not only been making statements but repeatedly have brought my name into their discussions in a quite unwarranted manner. So you see, Mr. Speaker, we have had lots of provocation outside if not inside this house.

Now we will come to some more of what these Cooperative Commonwealthers are saying outside. I am afraid I will have to advertise Mr. Coldwell a little after all. Here is a speech of his as reported on December 23 in the Regina Leader. Now we will get what they mean. Speaking of planned economy:

Such a plan would mean the scrapping of the system of private enterprise. We have got to plan and we must plan apart from the idea of ownership. Profits and ownership have to go.

Any of you who hope to make a little profit to help get out of the hole, I would advise you not to set up this commonwealth, because there is to be no more profit after this.

There is no way out until we have discarded these.

Profits and ownership.

It was now too late for palliatives such as unemployment insurance, he said, citing statistics that if production were now geared to the 1929 speed, 55 per cent of the unemployed would remain unemployed.

Mr. Coldwell declared that human beings must stifle the psychology of thrift—

I am afraid my good friend the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) has probably been reading this, or Mr. Coldwell has been reading the speeches of the hon. member for Southeast Grey on that point. I thought thrift was just what we were lacking in. We are told that one of the causes of the depression is lack of thrift.

—a psychology that was a legacy of the past, of the age of scarcity when saving was a virtue.

Saving was only a virtue in the past, during the period of scarcity. Apparently it is thought to be a vice now. If it is not a virtue it must be a vice, or a negation of some kind. And he goes on:

We must have a mental revolution, he said, or we shall have a physical revolution.

Now what does all that mean? We are not only to scrap all the past back to the time of King John in the evolution of our parliamentary system, our constitution and our institutions generally, but we are to forget all about ownership, all about thrift, things that we used to be taught in our youth were virtues, and take on this new order, this nebulous thing that no one can catch hold of; all we know is that we are to discard the old and tried and grapple with something that is so visionary that no one seems to understand it so far as the motion before us goes. Talk about buying a pig in a poke! I do not know how you would describe this; you would be buying without seeing either the pig or the poke.

Now we will deal in a Toronto speech with another noted gentleman in the left-hand corner. I think this is taken from the Globe, a paper that has grown in some respects quite irresponsible I admit:

Garland states the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation platform. Standard of living for the working classes raised five hundred per cent, he says.

Toronto, Feb. 1.—Under the platform of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, the standard of living for the Canadian working classes will be raised five hundred per cent, E. J. Garland, M.P. for Bow River, Alta., declares.

Now there is something definite; that looks pretty good. It will need to come pretty near that in some cases to be what we would desire, but anyhow that is definite.

The banking system will be "socialized," he said,—

I wish someone would tell me the difference between socialization and nationalization.

—along with all health services, while every worker and farmer will have the opportunity to own his own home and private property for himself.

Behold the difference! Mr. Coldwell, who is a labour man, the hon. member for Bow River who is a farmer, or farmer-representative—one takes a diametrically opposite direction to the other, yet they both belong to the same party. How are you going to make a government out of such disjointed and dissimilar units?

Mr. GOTT: It will never be done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches know by this time it is hard enough to form a government out of one party, without trying to merge twenty or thirty divergent units and call it cooperative. Listen to this:

And if it proves necessary for the state to take over industry the state will do it, and "not at the public expense, either," said Mr. Garland.

Now you capitalistic people over the way, watch out. The hon. member for Bow River is not going to pay for it out of the treasury; he is going to do what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was going to do with the Beauharnois waters—seize them, take them. Well, as the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) well said, that would not be any different from any other form of burglary.

And if it proves necessary for the state to take over industry, the state will do it, "and not at the public expense, either," said Mr. Garland.

I wonder how? He left it to our imagination, just as the motion leaves it largely to our imagination. But there is only one other way that I know of, and that is by expropriation, seizure—just take it.

This was the reply of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation to those who said the movement had no platform, Mr. Garland declared.

In the past we've voted for our enemies, beneficiaries of the capitalist system. Now we can vote to kick them out. The powers that be are terrified. They are frightened out of their shirts. I wouldn't be surprised to receive, any day now, an invitation to form a national government.

I am sure if that idea ever dawns upon the government, that they want a national government—and that has been rumoured around—I can see from some signs that they will make a bee line for the party to the left. I think I am right in coming to that conclusion, because when they wanted to get the best man that could be found, so we are told, as vice-chairman of the tariff board—the government sought out Milton Campbell.

I have some more here. Here is the real Kildore, the real official platform of the farmer labour party of Saskatchewan. I am going to give it the publicity of Hansard. This is also the economic policy of the Saskatchewan Farmer Labour group, and that group is affiliated with the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation:

The supplying of human needs instead of the making of profits.

Now I think the time will come when man will entertain the idea of living for humanity and forgetting about himself, but that will be just preceding the millennial dawn, and we are a considerable distance from that yet. Some of our friends on the left may have attained to that high eminence, but I must admit I have not. And I do not think the majority of the people of Canada have. If we are to have representative government it must be a government that represents the conceptions of the people of to-day on public questions. This is quite beyond the average man to-day, and to that extent our friends on the left, I think, stand pretty nearly alone. I have met people, I could count them on the fingers of my two hands who have gone so far in helping humanitarian activities, churches and hospitals, that they hurt and forgot themselves, giving away what belonged to them and what a great many people thought they should have kept for themselves. But there are not many, and we are not now legislating for the millenial dawn but for the present day, for human beings such as they are now. And they are not too bad. After two thousand years of evolution from the time of the Christian era, I feel we are a tremendous improvement on those early days. I do not know how many thousand years it will take to prepare us for the millenium, but our friends to the left are ready now, apparently. Well, perhaps they are, but I have not been able even with my best glasses on to detect any evidence of it. I think it is meant to be taken as semi-religious, and I note the church papers are taking it up in that light. All I can say, therefore, is, dear help the men who are engaged in this kind of propaganda if it is not genuine. Whether it is genuine or not I leave to each individual member of this house to decide. Let me quote further:

1. The establishment of a planned system of national economy for the production, distribution and exchange of all goods and services.
2. Socialization of the banking, credit and financial system of the country, together with social ownership, development, operation and control of utilities and natural resources.

Well, there will not be much left after that is all scooped in under the system of nationalization. There are some real authorities on this subject. I really do not know where our friends have got their experience in these matters, but I can say for myself that I am not an authority on them, and in a case such as this I must go to those who are universally regarded as authorities. Now what do we find? We find no less a person than Philip Snowden, now Lord Snowden, at one time Chancellor of the Exchequer in Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's Labour government, making this statement with regard to the socialization of banks:

But it is clear from the discussion that the purpose of this demand is to get the financial control of the Bank of England, the joint stock banks and the financial houses in order to use these institutions for political purposes. The control of financial policy is to be handed over to the House of Commons. Nothing could be more dangerous than to introduce political influence into financial control apart from the incompetence of an honest parliament to deal with such a matter.

That is rather frank, and I must say that so far as I am concerned the imputation is correct. The man who makes the statement I have just quoted is not big in stature but he is a giant in intellect and I am compelled to accept his surmise of what is likely to happen if we adopt the principle of the government handling the banks entirely by itself. What a great jamboree our friends to the left would have with state operated banks prior to an election. We have only to turn to the many farm loan boards in this dominion, the provincial farm loan boards, to get some idea of what would happen. After borrowing all we could from private persons, banks and mortgage companies, the public forced the various provincial governments themselves to enter upon a system of loaning, and from that to the dominion system also. We find nothing in all this but a grand orgy, a grand spree of borrowing and spending with pay day yet to come. And now the whole thing is to be taken over and socialized and administered by our very innocent friends to the left, who know no wrong nor evil nor see the obvious danger pointed out by Lord Snowden. Let me continue quoting:

3. Social legislation to secure to the worker and the farmer: an adequate income and leisure with an effective voice in the management of his industry.

How will the worker have an effective voice if he becomes tenant and the government landlord? That is what I want to know. It is all things to all men, but particularly for themselves.

Remove the burden of debt which hangs so heavily over society at the present time.

Isn't that alluring? Wouldn't everybody like that? But how is it to be done? They do not tell us. Are they going to repudiate debts or cancel them or what? Of course, something must be done, and I personally should like to know the way out. No one would follow that path more readily than I, but this is too indefinite to induce me to take a leap in the dark. The next item is this:

The development of Churchill as a free port of entry for western Canada.

This is a local matter, but it reminds me that when I was on the other side of this chamber and advocated Churchill as the port of entry instead of Nelson, these lefters are the very boys that opposed me; they charged me with throwing a monkey wrench into the whole machinery. Yet they are now talking about developing Churchill. The port would not have been at Churchill if it had been left to them, and now they come along with all their nonsense and flim flam. I cannot go into all of it because my time is running short.

Still another policy is presented to us, an agricultural policy from the same source. I am sure our left wing friends must have great faith in that old dictum of Barnum, that the people like to be fooled, and apparently some do; but on the other hand I have just enough faith in the intelligence and discernment of the electors of Canada to believe that if you give them time to think these questions over, they will not be humbugged with all this propaganda, especially when they remember what the nationalization of land implies. We were all brought up with the idea that it was the highest aspiration of a man to own the roof over his head, and every labouring man was encouraged to achieve that end—a little piece of God's earth which one could call his own, not as tenant but as owner. This idea is to be scrapped—by whom? Some of these Labour gentlemen leaders especially in Saskatchewan, who advocate these new theories could not go to a farmer's home and start a fanning mill or turn a grindstone or set a clucking hen, so far as agriculture is concerned, and yet they want us to hand over all the affairs of the nation to them, with all this evidence of their incapacity. They have not been able to do what they were entrusted with. Consider what was done through the agency and influence of the U.F.C., as already recited in connection with Wheat Producers Limited. Look at the prostrate condition of that great undertaking to-day. The government is trying to salvage its mountains of wheat having to be taken over and further mountains bought to bolster up the price. We find trouble all along the line as a result of not leaving the Saskatchewan cooperative elevators to serve their end as they would have done until further steps could in safety be taken by adopting the policy of patronage dividends.

The farmer labour land policy in Saskatchewan is so vague that I hesitate to put any interpretation upon it, but my understanding of it is that those who have mortgages on their land, and that means a good many of us, will have these mortgages taken over by the provincial government. Provincial bonds will be given in exchange for mortgages. I do not know whether the mortgage companies will be agreeable, but that is what is proposed—some say the bonds will be non-interest-bearing while others say they will bear interest. Both ways have been mentioned and I do not know which is right. Then the farmer is to be tenant and must pay rent to the government, and when he has paid sufficient rent that is to be set aside to redeem the before-mentioned provincial bonds. I do not know how long that will take but finally the ownership, according to this document, as I and others understand it, passes not into the hands of the farmer but into the possession of the state. What a prospect and what a landlord.

Mr. L. DUGUAY (Lake St. John) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty to make a few comments with reference to the resolution under consideration. May I, first, state that I admit with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that the present world wide depression points to fundamental defects in our economic system; however, I must add, sir, that I do not share his views as to the remedies and means to which he wishes to resort in order to cure or reform our present system. May I further state that, if it is unfortunate for social order and peace to be called upon to discuss a motion such as the present one, capitalism, which has replaced justice, is the cause; moreover, those who have uprooted our rural population to transplant them into cities have prepared the advent of communism in Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): I am not opposed to capitalism. Larousse defines the word capitalist: "one who has capital, especially capital invested in enterprises." According to this definition, we can state that the small property owner who has lodgments to rent and the farmer who works his farm to earn an income necessary to a livelihood, are equally capitalists. The manufacturer who operates larger industries for the benefit of his fellow-citizens and makes reasonable profits, even if they are large, is a capitalist who deserves, like the two first, the protection of the government and the respect of the people. This kind of capitalist is necessary to the fundamental existence of nations, and no one is allowed, in my humble opinion, to pass any measure which might tend to dispossess them of such capital. That is why I shall vote against the present resolution which states:

> . . . the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

This would inevitably dispossess the property owners I referred to.

As I previously stated, the promoters of over capitalized companies or enterprises who have assumed the rights of small property owners, either legally or otherwise, are responsible, to some extent, for this general depression, and foster ideas like those advocated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which spread and find supporters.

One must remember, sir, that, even in the province of Quebec, many people share these more or less advanced ideas, and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was right in saying:

> "Well, after all, bolshevism is in Russia; it is far away, but we know what we are suffering from and we are not going to be satisfied with denunciations of bolshevism all the time. What we want is some alleviation of our own evil."

Take, for instance, the situation created by capitalists in the district of Lake St. John. Some fifteen years ago, the people of that section lived happily and peacefully, each on his own small farm; the day, however, came when these magnates of finance who, with the cooperation of the provincial Liberal government, ruined everybody, even more, they usurped the rights of property owners, legally, if you wish, but nevertheless unjustly.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): Did they pay for them?

Mr. DUGUAY: . . . legally, but abusively. Some will contend that I wish to raise the bugbear of the Lake St. John flood. . .

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): It is out of fashion.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): Some will also state that the dispossessed farmers were compensated. That is also true.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Not all.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): However, the fact remains that, willingly or not, they were forced to give up their property to these promoters of large undertakings.

The Quebec government, by fostering these large industries uprooted our country people from their farms and herded them in cities in industrial centres; even more, our national patrimony has been parcelled up with the concurrence of our municipalities which were loaded with the whole cost of their administration, in order to enable these gentlemen to found small independent towns. These gentlemen soon forgot the great sacrifices made by the people of that district, and to-day, we witness the offsprings of these pioneers who settled that part of the country, crippled with debts for years to come. What has been the result of these large undertakings, if not to spread poverty? Owing to unfair competition, we witness, to-day, one of our oldest established firms, Price Company, forced to close their doors, notwithstanding the fact that this company had greatly contributed to the development of the Lake St. John region and Quebec.

In order to conceal the fate inevitably reserved to our people, our legislators, both present and past, have always waved the political flag, to conceal from people the outcome of their want of foresight.

May I, sir, set forth the best proof of such a statement.

On October 13, 1932, one of the oldest members of this house, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), on page 181 of Hansard stated:

We have had no shanties in eastern Quebec for the last two years. Thousands and thousands of our young men who every year go into the lumber woods were idle last winter and the winter before, and they are going to be idle again this winter. Every saw-mill from Rimouski down the Matapedia valley along the coast of Bonaventure and Gaspe has been closed, with one exception. The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix) has a saw-mill where he is sawing a quantity of logs so that they will not be completely lost, but he says that he can find no market for his product. Therefore in the lumber industry there has been complete stagnation. In the town of Campbellton, which is the leading town of northern New Brunswick, all the mills with one exception are closed down; between three and four thousand men are idle and the people do not know where to turn and how to get food and clothing during the coming winter. We all received some days ago two or three slices of bread that were sent to us by mail—bread for the Chomeurs, for the unemployed. Those are the rations that are being given to good Canadians who are willing to work. If this government could implement only half the promises it made and find a market for our farmers and work for our mechanics, all our troubles would be settled.

An effort was being made to convince the people of my native district—being a native of Gaspe—that, if they were out of work and suffering hardships, it was due to the Dominion government not fulfilling its pledges; while the true cause was communicated and published in the press of December 15, 1932, by the Hon. Mr. Kelly, legislative councillor.

It is as follows:

In the interest of my fellow Gaspesians and in fairness to myself, I feel that I should tell the public what I have often told Mr. Taschereau especially during recent months.

Until a few years ago Gaspe was a happy contented country. Its population of 75,000 souls consists of small farmers, fishermen and labourers. The farming and fishing not being sufficient to provide for their wants the young and middle aged men went to the lumber camps during the winter and the old men took care of the home. There were then numerous mills operating on many of our Gaspe rivers. Then came the days of amalgamation and overnight these mills were controlled by a few large companies. The International Paper purchased the limits—Champoux or Chaleur Bay Mills and closed the mills at Cross Point. It purchased the Montgomery Mills, at New Richmond and demolished them. At Cascapedia the Bathurst Paper Co. took over the control of the limits of the Grand Cascapedia and the mills were demolished. The same company took over the Edwards and McLean Mills, at Bonaventure, and here also they were demolished. The International purchased the Shephard and Morse Mills, at Gaspe, and closed their doors. The Howard Smith demolished its mills at New Carlisle and closed its mills at Gaspe.

The pulp mill on the Madeleine river was purchased by Brown Corporation and the machinery was taken away. Two other mills remained: the pulp mill at Chandler and that of Lacroix at Carleton, both are now closed. As a result of all this the Gaspe people were, in a short time, deprived of their main means of earning a livelihood. The potato crop remained but owing to the heavy rains it also was a failure this year. There still remained the fisheries, unfortunately this also was a failure. The consequence of all this is that a large percentage of the people have not a copper with which to buy food and clothing and the Gaspe winter is now on. Only government assistance and lots of it, can cope with the present situation.

That is the real cause of all hardships. and what the Hon. Mr. Kelly says with reference to Gaspe, can also be said about the whole country.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. member might perhaps give us a list of the grants they received.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): I am not discussing at present whether the government made grants, but I wish to state why it is obliged to make grants.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): The hon. member for Lake St. John is not here to champion the Taschereau government!

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): Then why raise the question? If the hon. member will permit me I shall proceed with my remarks.

In connivance with the provincial government the federal Liberal members of Quebec are responsible for the situation such as it exists in Quebec, and it is with reason that the hon. member for Labelle stated in Montreal, some time ago, that Quebec was the paradise of capitalists. We are, therefore, compelled, to-day, so as to reestablish order, to give our rural districts a larger population as compared with that of cities which spend millions of dollars. When the Bank Act is again submitted to parliament, next year, we shall be forced in order to keep our people on the farm, to enact measures so as to reduce the rate of interest on loans made to them.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): We shall see what will then be your attitude.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): The future will tell. I am not pointing out these facts, sir, simply to criticize. If I have mixed some politics with them, it was simply to render to Caesar the things which are Caesar's.

The situation is not irretrievable. I feel confident that the subversive ideas proclaimed by alarmists will not prevail in Quebec, because our rural population, from whose midst are recruited our priests and nuns, is the safeguard of order and property rights, and will, with the help of our church, withstand the shock, and when the crisis has passed over, it will once more have proved that, faithful to its traditions, Quebec will have contributed to make of Canada a bulwark of moral and social order.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, for two days last week I listened patiently to the speeches of hon. gentlemen in the corner to my left advocating the policy, of this new party, in the hope that I would get some understanding of the policy they advocate. What do they tell us? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), leader of the party, the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis), the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), all spoke in support of this new policy, and yet I do not know what their plan is. In graphic pictures they painted before us the deplorable condition of the unemployed, the distressful situation under which many of our people live. That could be done by a supporter of any party in the house. They told us that the capitalistic system is tottering to its fall; that nothing could be done to save it and that they were the only party in the house that had a definite plan to put something in its place. We have waited patiently, but in vain, to learn what that plan is, and so far as I can find out, all the plan they have is that they are planning to make a plan.

Supposing, sir, a gentleman were to come into your office to-morrow morning and tell you that the house in which he is living is an old tumble-down shack; that the foundations are falling into decay; that the house is drafty, dark, unsanitary, overrun with vermin, if you will; that it is likely at any time to fall on the heads of the inhabitants and that he is planning to build a new and better house. Supposing you were to ask him what kind of house he intended to build, and he were to tell you that the was going to build a beautiful house, large, bright, sanitary, comfortable, convenient, with a room in it for everybody and every room designed to suit the exact needs of the occupants and located in the exact part of the building the occupant most wanted. Suppose you were to ask him to show you the plan of the house and he replied that that was the plan which he had already described. Then supposing you asked him further how he planned to finance the building of the house, you knowing he had no money, and he told you that he would pay for it by issuing notes payable on demand to bearer. Supposing you asked him how he proposed to redeem those notes when they were presented for payment and he told you quite cheerfully that he did not intend to redeem them; that when the lumberman, wanting money to pay for coal to put him through the winter, presented his note, he would tell him to take the note to the coal man and buy coal with it because it would be honoured by anybody; that when the coal man came and asked that the note be redeemed for cash, he would tell him to to take it to the grocer and pay for his groceries with it, and when the grocer came for his money, he would tell him to take the note to the coal dealer to buy his coal with it and so on. If a man were to tell you such a story as that, you would be more impressed with his cheerful optimism than with the practicability of his plan.

These gentlemen who are supporting this new movement ask us on the Liberal side of the house why we are not taking part in this debate. They say: Why are you folks sitting back and not discussing this plan of ours? The answer is: We are waiting to hear what the plan is. Let them show us their plan and we will examine it. Look at the speeches they have made. Reference has frequently been made to the style of their speeches with their long quotations and extracts from the utterances of others, extracts from speeches of Reginald McKenna, John Maynard Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Sir Basil Blackett and others. They offer no argument of their own, no explanation of their plan, no proof of anything they say, simply quotations from these gentlemen. When my turn comes to knock and seek admission at the pearly gates, if it should be asked of me why, when I was a member of this house, I supported certain policies and opposed others, I hope to have a better reason to offer than to say: Sir Basil Blackett said that it would be a good thing or John Maynard Keynes said it would do no harm.

If I were to offer such an excuse, St. Peter would ask me: Where was your own head? What were you elected for? Were you not supposed to exercise any judgment of your own?

Perhaps this attitude on the part of hon. gentlemen in the corner to my left as compared with ours illustrates as well as could anything else the difference between a Liberal and a Progressive. The Liberal says: Show us your plan, and we will examine it and form a judgment; he analyses. The Progressive memorizes. I might add that the Tory fossilizes. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine)—I am sorry he is not in his seat—did say something about the foundation of the new structure. He did not outline the plan. He said that the foundation is to be laid on the bedrock of abundance. I ask: Abundance of what? Abundance of grain from which to make bread? Yes. Abundance of beef, pork, mutton? Yes. Abundance of fuel? Yes, but not all where it is handy. Some of our fuel is thousands of miles from the market where it is most needed. Abundance of lumber? Yes, if we are satisfied to use only the kind of lumber we have. Abundance of wool to make clothing? Yes, abundance of wool, but not the kind of wool we use in our clothing. If we are going to be restricted to the wool produced in Canada, we are not going to wear the kind of clothing we wear now, nor the kind these hon. gentlemen at present wear. Abundance of cotton from which to make cotton clothing? We have none. Abundance of tea, coffee, oranges, lemons, bananas, currants, raisins? We have none of these things. Where is the abundance? We have abundance of certain things which we can produce in vast quantities. We have none of other things. Under our capitalistic system, which my hon. friends condemn, we seek to exchange our surplus of the products which we have for the things which other people have in abundance and which we do not produce. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin said the other night that capitalism cannot continue without foreign markets. Perhaps some hon. member in the corner to my left will tell us how the new cooperative commonwealth is to go on without foreign markets. The hon. member for Bow River told us last session that normally two-thirds of our national income arises from the export of raw material. Under this new commonwealth scheme we would cut off our foreign trade, live within ourselves, so according to their own figures we would cut off two-thirds of our national income and they think we can get rich by living on the other third.

[Mr. Young.]

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: We have no markets now.

Mr. YOUNG: We have this year marketed a considerable portion of our crop. They call this the Farmer-Labour party; it is a party composed of farmers and labourers, an alliance of these two groups to bring about a new world, a new condition in which there will be justice to everybody. Last session I quoted figures—they were repeated this afternoon by the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley)—showing that the farmer, when he goes into the market to exchange his labour for that of the industrial worker, is required to give four days' work in exchange for one. That was true last year. It is doubly true to-day. The farmer is not now getting one day's work of the industrial worker for four days' work of his own. If this new party gets into power, is it going to perpetuate that condition or bring about a new deal? Is the farmer to be compelled to give four or six or ten days' work for one day's work of the industrial workman?

Speaking of wages, I have under my hand a "Memorandum submitted by the National Railway Labour Unions of Canada, with respect to Bill A, introduced in the Senate of Canada by the Right Honourable Senator Meighen. Presented by A. R. Mosher, president of the All-Canadian Congress of Labour and of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees." This is what Mr. Mosher says:

> Restrictions on railway revenues should therefore be removed and the railways allowed to charge rates which would return them their costs plus reasonable profits. An increase in freight rates to the same level as that which now prevails in the United States would remove any financial difficulties from which Canadian railways may suffer.

Further on he says:

> If the revenues of the railways are not sufficient to meet their requirements, freight and passenger rates should be increased.

That is the opinion of Mr. Mosher, speaking for the railway men. Who is Mr. Mosher? I have before me another document entitled "The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, the new national movement launched at Calgary, August 1, 1932." The national council consists of the president, Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, M.P.; Secretary, Norman F. Priestley; provisional executive: George H. Williams, Saskatchewan; J. Queen, M.L.A., Winnipeg; Mrs. B. Latham, Edmonton; A. R. Mosher, Ottawa, representing the Canadian Brotherdood of Railway Employees; William Irvine, M.P., Wetaskiwin; Angus MacInnis, M.P., Vancouver; and Mrs. J. Lucas, president of the women's section of the U.F.C. (Saskatchewan section). I would ask the president of this new political party which is seeking to bring about equality, if he is supporting Mr. Mosher in his demand for higher freight rates.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer.

Mr. YOUNG: He does not answer. I am sorry the hon. member for Wetaskiwin is not in his seat, or the hon. member for Bow River. The hon. member for Bow River told us last session that one of the greatest handicaps from which the farmer is suffering to-day is high freight rates, and he cited the case of a farmer who shipped 21 fine pullets to market and found that the entire price he received was absorbed in freight rates. I would ask these hon. gentlemen if they were here if they support this party in its demand for higher freight rates.

I have here the proposed program of this new party. The first plank is the establishment of a planned system of social economy for the production, distribution and exchange of all goods and services. This is the famous production-for-use program. We are to produce for use. As a farmer, I know from my experience, and I believe the experience of every other farmer in Canada has been the same, that during the past three years I have been producing for use. Every bushel of wheat that we have raised, every steer that we have fattened, every hog that we have fed, every egg that our hens have laid, have all been produced for the use of society. Society has used them, and we have had no profit. Frankly we are getting tired of it. We would like to produce for profit for a change. We have had plenty of producing for the use of other people.

Although hon. members to my left have refused to discuss the particulars of their plan, there is in Saskatchewan one man who seems to have more faith in the program than they have, or at least faith enough to be willing to discuss it. Some two or three weeks ago at a meeting which was held in Regina I heard this gentleman discuss "Some Phases of Planning." He said: There is no use in growing wheat for the world's market because you cannot sell it, and the only way to restore the price of wheat to what it ought to be is to curtail production. Under the present system, he said, if some farmers reduce their acreage in order to curtail production, others who refuse to do so will reap a double benefit due to the sacrifice of their neighbours. That will not do at all, he said. The whole thing must be controlled, and this is what he proposed to do. A planning board must be set up composed of scientists, engineers and economists. There will be no politicians on it, no members of this house, because politicians are not competent to make a plan. All that he is going to entrust the politicians with is the more difficult task of choosing the planners, and as far as I understand the program, that will be the sole function of the House of Commons under this scheme—simply to choose the planners who will make the plan. We will be reduced to the status of a sort of electoral college. We will be elected for four years, and will come here and choose the planners who will make the plans under which we are going to work. This planning board will make a survey of all the requirements of our people, and will decide how much food of different kinds we need, how much clothing, how much fuel, and lumber and furniture, and so on. Then they will call in the technocrats who will tell them how many men will be required working so many hours per day and so many days per week to produce those goods. And then, he said, we will mobilize the man power of the nation as was done during the war, and we will set every man to do the work for which he is best suited. The machine will then start operating, and in this way, he said, we will produce abundance of everything for everybody, and we will work only four or five hours a day.

Of course, he produced no evidence except the statements of the technocrats. I think the hon. member for Wetaskiwin stated in the house the other day that one hundred men operating a modern brick machine could produce all the bricks that are required in the United States. I suppose that if a machine of that sort were set up in Canada only eight or ten men would be required to produce all the bricks that are needed in this country. Now the principal factor in the making and marketing of bricks is the freight. Are we going to set up these costly machines in every province of the dominion, or are we going to have only one in some central place? There is nothing practical about it at all. The technocrats have told us many startling things about the possibilities of industry, but every statement made by the technocrats has been exploded already. We have been told that technocracy and socialism are identical. Well, if they are technocracy has gone by the board.

We are going to work only four or five hours a day under this system. Perhaps some of the farmer members of this new group will tell us how the farmer, working only that number of hours a day, is going to get in his crop. Perhaps that difficulty could be solved by sending more men on to the farm. But what about the farmer's wife? Where does she come in? The farmer may work only four hours a day but his wife has to cook him three meals, and she cannot cook all three and have the dishes washed up and do all her other work inside of four hours. If we are going to have equality of status between men and women under this new regime, the only solution that I can see is to allow every farmer three wives, one to cook his breakfast, one to cook his dinner, and another to cook his supper. I do not know whether the technocrats can arrange that.

The second plank of their platform is that dealing with the banking, credit and financial system of the country. That phase has been dealt with by other speakers. I am not going into the question of the desirability or undesirability of socializing our banking institutions, but I can tell you what happened in the state of North Dakota where it was tried. They set up a farmers' government there a few years ago, a Non-partisan League. One of the planks in their platform was the establishment of a state bank for the same reason for which it is being advocated in this country, because the other banks were not lending money to those they thought should get it. They set up this state bank, which loaned money, and loaned to those who could not borrow in other banks. In the course of time these farmers' notes became due and were not paid, and the state bank took possession of their land. The state bank like any other state institution does not pay any taxes, and every quarter-section of land that was taken over in that way was removed from the tax roll, leaving the full burden of taxation to be carried by the other lands. In one single school district no less than nineteen quarter-sections were thus taken over and removed from the tax roll. The consequence was that the whole burden of taxation fell on the other lands, and the taxation in that school district rose to four dollars an acre. I wonder if my hon. friend will tell that to the farmers?

Then we find the expression "social ownership, development, operation and control of utilities and natural resources." All our utilities are to be publicly owned and operated. Well, we have on our hands one experiment in public ownership, namely, our railways. Do hon. members think we should go any farther along that line? Do they not think it would be a good idea to wait until we have given this system a thorough trial? Has the public operation of our railways been such an outstanding success that all at once we must take over everything? Would it not be well to go on with the public ownership that we have, and wait until we have thoroughly mastered the technique of running a railroad? When we meet with success in that one particular, probably we may consider going further and taking on other obligations.

[Mr. Young.]

Then they are going to have "security of tenure for the farmer on his use-land and for the worker in his own house." "Use-land" refers to the land used for purposes of production. They are going to dictate to the farmer how much grain he shall grow, how many cows he shall milk, how many hogs he shall fatten, how many eggs his hens shall lay. All this is to be planned, and the farmer is to be directed as to how he shall do it. They will say to each farmer: "You must leave a certain portion of your land idle." We know that all land lying idle will grow weeds; it will cost money to keep those weeds down, and the land will not be producing anything. The cost of fighting those weeds will have to be borne by the farmer. All that land which is taken from him will not be secured to him. They will give him security of tenure on his use-land only, or that which they permit him to use. All the burden of taxation will fall on the use-land acreage. To cover all these services an enormous increase in taxation will be necessary, and those taxes must be levied against the lands which they say they are not going to take away from the farmer. I want them to tell us how they will collect taxes. If the farmers will not pay or cannot pay, the security for taxation is in the land. How will they proceed to get those taxes, without impairing the tenure of the farmer on his use-land?

Then we come to clause No. 4,—

> The retention and extension of all existing social legislation and facilities, with adequate provision for insurance against crop failure, illness, accidents, old age and unemployment during the transition to the socialist state.

"Insurance against crop failure",—any man who has any practical knowledge of the risks run by the farmers who put in their crops, who has any practical knowledge of the cost of insuring those crops, will immediately ask this question: Who is going to pay for it all? Where is the money coming from to pay insurance on all the crops which might fail? Take, for instance, the situations which arose in southern Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta in the last three years. Throughout hundreds and thousands of square miles they have experienced total crop failure. But in this clause we find the expression "insurance against crop failure"; where will the money come from to pay for all this insurance?

An hon. MEMBER: From Mr. Woodsworth.

Mr. YOUNG: There is only one source from which it can come—from the farmer himself. The farmer cannot pay it. Hon. gentlemen in the corner of the house know perfectly well that is not a practical suggestion, and cannot be applied. They may get some votes from the unthinking by stating they are offering crop insurance, but the impracticability of the scheme is apparent to anybody who stops to think for a moment Then there is to be insurance against "unemployment during the transition to the socialist state." That is a provision for unemployment insurance. The farmer to-day is giving four days of his labour in exchange for one day of the other fellow's labour, and because he is no longer in a position to hire that other man to work for him we are going to make that farmer pay the other man unemployment insurance, without work.

Then in clause No. 5, we find: "Equal economic and social opportunity without distinction of sex, nationality or religion." Have we not that now? That plank could be in the platform of any political party in Canada. Our friends have no claim or monopoly on it.

Then clause No. 6: "Encouragement of all cooperative enterprises which are steps to the attainment of the cooperative commonwealth." Perhaps another speaker, whom I do not see in his seat to-night, will deal with this clause. One can easily demonstrate that cooperation and socialism cannot exist side by side in the same state. If we are going to have cooperation, as we understand it, we cannot have socialism.

Clause 7 provides for "socialization of all health services." Who is going to pay for all this? Those services must be added to the taxation. I said that in North Dakota taxes amounted to $4 an acre; if all these things are done, what will they be in Canada. Fourteen dollars an acre would not cover it.

Then, clause 8: "Federal government should accept responsibility for unemployment and tender suitable work or adequate maintenance." I wonder what is meant by "adequate maintenance"? I suppose that means living under what we know as the present standard of living. I think it is generally recognized that the present standard of living is a little higher than we are going to be able to maintain; we will have to settle down to a lower standard. But our friends of the new party say that the unemployed shall have this adequate standard of living, regardless of the fact that when the total wealth production of the country is divided among all the people there will not be sufficient to give us all an adequate standard of living.

Mr. MITCHELL: Why?

Mr. YOUNG: Because we do not produce it.

Mr. MITCHELL: What are we doing now?

Mr. YOUNG: We are not producing it now. There never was such a scarcity of real wealth in the country as there is to-day. Take the total wealth production of this country, and subtract from it all that is necessary to maintain the equipment. Take that portion which is left available for human consumption and divide it among the population, and you will find there is no such figure available for consumption as hon. members in the corner of the house suggest.

Mr. HEAPS: Does the hon. member interpret wealth only in dollars and cents?

Mr. YOUNG: Measure it any way you like; dollars and cents offer the only yardstick we have at the present time. If the hon. member objects to measurement in dollars and cents, will he explain why Mr. Coldwell, the apostle of the new doctrine in Saskatchewan, tells the people that they will have the equivalent under the new scheme of $20,000 income per annum? Why does he measure it in dollars and cents?

Speaking a few days ago the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) made a definite suggestion as to what they would do. He said that if necessary they would print $200,000,000 new money.

Mr. HANBURY: Why stop at that?

Mr. McINTOSH: Why not drive on?

Mr. YOUNG: He suggests they would print $200,000,000 new money, and that it would be given into the hands of the people. That action he describes as establishing purchasing power. He would get it into the hands of the people by granting wheat bonuses, building houses, building hydro-electric plants, highways, and so on. He states that he would be placing purchasing power in the hands of the people. What is purchasing power? Some people seem to think that money is purchasing power. Money is purchasing power only when it will purchase goods. Purchasing power I take it, is the power to give one form of wealth in exchange for another form. Money is not wealth; it is only a certificate of title to wealth. Money is no more wealth than the deed to a piece of land is, in fact, the land. You cannot increase the land in a country by issuing more deeds; you cannot increase the wealth of a country by issuing more money. Money is only a certificate to title. I cannot create an island in the Atlantic ocean by simply issuing a title deed to the land of which it is supposed to consist. Neither can we create wealth in this country by printing new money.

The hon. member is going to print this money and spend it on public works. Let us see what this means. You give employment to the unemployed and pay them with this printed money. This printed money is a promissory note, secured against the created wealth of the country. The unemployed will take that money to the farmer and with it will buy wheat, meat, dairy products; he will take it to the miner and buy coal. But what is the net effect of the whole transaction? It is that those who are engaged in the production of wealth will be feeding, clothing and housing, men who are producing something that they, the primary producers, do not require and cannot use. They say to the farmer: You must, out of the meagre returns you are getting, feed and clothe all these unemployed, not while they are producing something that they can give you in exchange, but while they are building houses for themselves to live in, hydro-electric plants to light and heat those houses, making parks for themselves to sit in, roads for themselves to drive on and that the farmer will never drive on, houses he will never dwell in; you are making him support people who are making these things for themselves. Not only that, but so long as the farmer lives he is going to be taxed to maintain these improvements. Not only has he to feed and clothe the men while they are building these things for themselves and get nothing in return, but as long as he lives he is going to be taxed to maintain them.

My hon. friends argue that if they print this money it will inflate our currency, in other words depreciate its value, so that we will get more Canadian dollars for the goods we ship to England, with which we can pay more Canadian debts and do more business in Canada. They say that will act as priming to the pump, and industry will flourish. Would it? Let us see what has been the effect of inflation so far. Our dollar to-day is down to about 85 cents. They say we should depreciate it to the level of the British pound, so then it would be down to about 70 cents. What good has it done to bring it down 15 cents? Will any hon. gentleman here say that we have reaped any benefit from the present depreciation of the dollar? Is wheat any higher, are cattle any higher, have markets improved because of this?

An hon. MEMBER: Have wages gone up?

Mr. YOUNG: Have they? The immediate effect of inflation is to cut wages; perhaps the labour members will remember that. On November 1, 1932, the Canadian dollar stood at 90 cents. On that date the price of wheat in Winnipeg was 46⅛, in Chicago 44⅛; Chicago being on the gold basis, the price there was 2 cents lower than in Winnipeg. The price in Liverpool was 57⅝ cents. One month later the Canadian dollar had declined to 85½ cents, down 4½ cents. By all the reasoning of hon. gentlemen in the corner, that should have had the effect of raising the price of wheat in Winnipeg 2 cents. But the price in Winnipeg then was 44½, down nearly 2 cents; 42½ in Chicago, the same drop as in Winnipeg. In Liverpool the price was 58½. It went up in Liverpool and down on this side of the Atlantic. What good did that inflation do us? When a 15 per cent inflation of our currency has done us no good, what reason have we to suppose that 30 per cent inflation will do any good?

An hon. MEMBER: Or 75 per cent?

Mr. YOUNG: Or 75 per cent. My hon. friends say we should inflate our dollar to the level of the British pound, but all the arguments they advance are in favor of inflating it to the level of the Australian. They are not consistent. If they really believed what they argue they should ask that we depreciate our dollar to the level of Australia. But no, they say to the level of the British pound.

If we brought our dollar down to a parity with the British pound, or said we would redeem British pounds with Canadian dollars, as suggested by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), we would be backing the notes of England. British pounds are Britain's promissory notes, as Canadian dollars are ours. When the British pound is below the value of our dollar and we redeem it at par we are backing and paying Britain's promissory notes. Suppose the shoe were on the other foot; suppose the condition of world trade were such that our dollar went below the pound—and in these days, while the pound is coming up the dollar is going down, that might easily happen—would Britain redeem our notes at par? I think not. Why should we give $4.86 for the British pound if she would not give 100 cents for our dollar?

But what is the probable effect of depreciating our currency on the price of wheat—or of world commodities; but take wheat as a specific example. The other day our dollar dropped about four cents. Did it have any effect on the price of wheat at Winnipeg? It should have sent it up two cents, but actually it went up only one cent, and stayed there only a few hours. The dollar stayed down but wheat did not stay up. What is the reason? As near as I can understand, the reason is that there was so much wheat ready to be put on the market that that advance of one cent a bushel drew out vast quantities and forced the market down again. The result was that we were getting the same number of cents, but of an inferior value, in exchange for our wheat. We were selling our wheat on the world's market for really less money than before. When we undertake to sell our wheat for less than before, what does the Argentine do, what does Australia do? In order to sell their wheat they have to meet our price, they come down also. So the net result of the operation has not been to raise the price of wheat in Canada but to depress the price of wheat in the world. That is the net result, as far as I can understand, of trying to depreciate our dollar.

What did we do in Canada when the currencies of other countries began to depreciate? We promptly put on an exchange dumping duty. If the currency of Japan went to half its previous value we raised the duty against Japan enough to make up the difference. Will not other countries do the same? Assuredly they will; they learnt the lesson from us. They learn all their evil lessons from us in these matters. The advantage which my hon. friends hope to get from a depreciated currency in getting their goods into the foreign markets will be immediately offset by the increased duties that other countries put on against us.

What I cannot understand is, hon. gentlemen in the corner were elected to this house in the first instance to fight tariffs, these insuperable barriers to trade. Now they are advocating inflation of currency, which is another form of tariff. When you lower the value of our dollar by 20 per cent you raise the tariff by that amount, and that is another restriction to trade. Those who advocate that policy, whether they know it or not, are advocating an increase of tariff.

Of all the arguments advanced by the supporters of this new policy this matter of inflating currency is the only one they have tried to explain. I wish some of them would explain exactly what they mean by their plans and exactly how they propose to carry them out, so that subsequent speakers on this side may be in a position to deal intelligently with their proposals.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): In considering the resolution before the house I think we should first ask ourselves what our present position is in relation to the proposals made; then we can determine whether our position will be improved in any sense if we accept what is laid down for us. The resolution virtually asks us, if I may use the word, to scrap the constitutional, social and economic machinery of this country and to set up in its place some vague idealistic system which so far has not been explained in this house.

First of all I want to say this, and I say it without fear of contradiction from any side. There is no country in the world to-day where men and women have so great an opportunity for self-expression and self-development as in the Dominion of Canada. There is no country in the world that provides a greater opportunity for men and women to do what this resolution presumes to suggest that we should do, namely, to cooperate. The resolution asks us to set up a cooperative commonwealth. In the first place, in every province in Canada the law makes it possible for citizens to group together in cooperative movements for any legitimate purpose they have in view. They can cooperate in the production of goods, in the sale of goods, in the marketing of goods and in social services of every kind, and I say without fear of contradiction that if there is any legitimate plan of cooperation that can be put forward which is not now provided for, then the parliament of Canada or the legislatures of the provinces will be only too glad to enact the necessary legislation if that legislation has for its purpose the improvement of the condition of the people. We must therefore go outside the realm of cooperation if we want to find out what these gentlemen propose to do, assuming that their object is to improve our condition, because the resolution sets out that the government must at once set up an entirely new system. What that system is has not been explained. As a matter of fact, as stated so well this afternoon by hon. members on both sides, we must go outside the house to ascertain what it is proposed to do. I will give only one quotation which I take from a speech made outside the house by the mover of this resolution, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). He was quoted this afternoon in a speech he delivered in northern Ontario and I will carry on from the point where that quotation ended. This is what he said—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Where?

Mr. NICHOLSON: In the city of Port Arthur. The hon. gentleman asked, "Can this thing be brought about?" That was the conclusion of his speech after reciting all the plans that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation had. He asked that question of the audience, he asked it of the country and he is asking it now of this House of Commons—Can this thing be brought about? Now I ask, What thing? Simply the proposals that he is putting before the country, proposals with which—I say this with all respect to his colleagues—he has deluded a good many people in the country. Can this thing be brought about? He answers his own question. He says:

> It has been brought about in Russia, but with the loss of millions of lives and untold suffering.

An hon. MEMBER: Who said that?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He is referring to this plan which he is presenting to the Canadian people, and he answers his own question by saying that it has been brought about in Russia; but, he adds, with the loss of millions of lives and untold suffering. With that last statement I am perfectly in accord; the lives that were lost were innumerable and the suffering, which is still going on, is intense. As my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Lawson) said, the highest standard of living amongst the peasants and working classes of Russia is not as high to-day as the government of this country, which has been charged with failure to do anything to assist our people, is providing for our unfortunate citizens who to-day, because of a world-wide depression, are out of employment. But for a pacifist, one who in this house and out of it, up and down the country and everywhere, preaches the doctrines of pacifism, the bald statement that this "thing" was brought about with the loss of millions of lives and untold suffering, is a fairly good explanation of the attitude of the hon. gentleman towards all sides of all subjects.

But how will it be brought about? In Port Arthur he told how it was brought about in Russia. How will it be brought about in Canada? He said:

> It may very well be that force may prove inevitable, yes, if the attitude of certain gentlemen is persisted in and the pepole of this country are denied the right—

What right? The hon. gentleman who fosters this plan has not told the house. I ask, what right? If those who intend to put this system into force are met with opposition; if I resist the dictatorship that will be set up in this country to come and take my home from me; if the farmers resist when they come to take their farms from them—I wish my hon. friend from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) were here: how would she feel if this dictatorship undertook to follow the same course—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order. I have never advocated a dictatorship. That is attributed to me; I have never advocated it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not wish to attribute to the hon. gentleman anything that he has not at least implied. He asks how this thing can be brought about. What thing? He answers his own question by saying that it has been brought about in Russia. Well, will he undertake to say that there is not a dictatorship in Russia, the most ruthless, the most cruel dictatorship that has ever been known in history? And he says himself that this thing, which he had been talking about for two hours to the people of Port Arthur, has been brought about in Russia; true, by the slaughter of millions of people and with intense suffering. And he frankly tells the people of Canada, on the floor of the House of Commons, that force will be used by this dictatorship to bring about the same situation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misquoting me; I never said such a thing. I ask that the statement be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not a point of order for one hon. member to contradict another. If the hon. member wishes to deny a statement made by someone else in debate, or to point out wherein he has been misquoted, he can do so when he comes to reply.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have been charged with having made certain statements in the House of Commons, which statements I did not make.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is not a point of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I insist that it is a point of order. A statement has been made which is not true and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no point of order in that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I ask that the statement be withdrawn, because it is not true.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I will read the statement and the house can decide:

It may very well be that force may prove inevitable.

I leave it to the house to decide whether or not I imputed wrong statements to my hon. friend. I do not intend to weary the house with details of the system which they have in Russia, nor shall I quote any further from the remarks of my hon. friend.

I should like to quote from the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), who I am sorry to see is not in the house. He is reported on page 1710 of Hansard as saying:

I regret that no member of any other party in this house has so far taken part in the discussion.

Had he remained in the chamber I am sure that he would have received some enlightenment in this regard during the last two or three sittings when this question was discussed. He went on to quote from something said in the House of Lords, as follows:

The capitalist system is tottering. Unfortunately we cannot be entirely detached because we are affected in the common smash.

The hon. member for Bow River is not anything if he is not a prophet. Some time ago I had the privilege of entertaining the hon. member in my own home in the town of Chapleau. At that time he addressed the Canadian club in the Memorial hall. He was endeavouring to enlighten the people as to the operations and success of the wheat pools in the west. I have no fault to find with the wheat pools; personally I believe that in their inception they were splendid things and that if they had been carried out along sound lines great benefits would have accrued to the western producer. At that time the hon. member was predicting what was going to happen to wheat; he now predicts what is going to happen to capitalism. After outlining the development of the wheat pools and their cooperation in the marketing of wheat, he went on to say: "We have taken one final, last step to complete the whole circle; we have established our sales agencies in Europe." Then in his most dramatic style he said: "Never again will the wheat barons of Liverpool or Amsterdam dictate the price we are going to get for wheat in western Canada." If the hon. member's predictions with regard to capitalism work out the same as his predictions with regard to wheat, I think we will find that the capitalistic system will go on for some time. After all, the question that we are interested in is: What is the capitalistic system and how did it arise? In essence, it is just a system under which the individual may develop his own ideals in life. It provides for self expression and self development of the individual unrestricted except by legal restraint. I should like to quote a Canadian businessman in connection with this system which, after all, is founded upon the gold basis. This afternoon the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson) referred to the development which has taken place under this system. Mr. Robertson, the writer of the book from which I am quoting, says:

Although not entirely free from defect, chiefly that of lacking in the system any provision for periodical reappraisals of its value, so great a contribution has been made to society by gold, that a world which (except for a few such highly-placed persons as the rulers, freemen and clergy), a thousand years ago, was composed largely of penniless serfs, now has been changed into a world of populous nations in which, with the exception of brief periods of money shortages, known as depressions,—about 90 per cent to 98 per cent of all the workers have been so profitably employed that the standard of living of a mechanic to-day is higher than that of a feudal earl in the middle ages.

Any man who has studied the history of the world and of this country, any man who can carry his memory back as far as I can, knows that that statement is absolutely correct. I was rather surprised at certain statements made by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), because as a rule he is very careful in what he says. After asking a question as to what incentive there was for the workingman, such as the man in the railway services, who had given the best years of his life in helping to build up the system in its entirety, he concluded with:

We find, therefore, that these men are thrown into the scrap heap and told to go and shift for themselves, and if they are fortunate enough to reach the age of seventy they will be entitled to five dollars a week.

It was my privilege as a young man to begin my working life in the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no service anywhere which provides a greater incentive for a man to give his best than the railway service of Canada. Every one of the gentlemen who have been presidents of this railway started at the very bottom. In the first instance, Stephen began by trucking freight from the decks of steamships to the docks in the city of Montreal. Van Horne started as a messenger boy in a telegraph office in Chicago. Shaughnessy started as an assistant in the stores department in Montreal. After Beatty had completed his law course in Toronto, he acted as assistant solicitor in Toronto, later being transferred to Montreal. Go through the list from Grant Hall, the vice president, down to the trainmaster of any division and you will find men who began at the bottom. The statement is made that these men are thrown upon the scrap heap and no provision made for them. What are the facts? The Canadian Pacific Railway provides—the Canadian National Railways does the same—that it will pay its employees a pension when they reach sixty-five years of age. This is not an old age pension, as is implied by the hon. member. How is that pension worked out? They get one per cent for every year of their service, based on the average of their last ten years' earnings. How does this work out? There are a number of men living in my town who draw pensions. For a sectionman it works out at about $35 per month; a car repairer $45 to $47; a shop machinist, $78 to $80, and a pipe-fitter, $92. There is a retired pipe-fitter who is a neighbour of mine and with whom I go to church every Sunday morning. A locomotive engineer receives a pension of $116, and so on down the line. In the face of these facts attempts are being made to preach to the workingmen in this country, to try to unsettle their minds and make them think that they are not getting a fair chance. Let me repeat that there is not a country under the canopy of heaven where men and women have as great opportunities as they have in this country of Canada.

I should like to refer to some statements made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) in connection with money and credit. He is reported on page 1698 of Hansard as follows:

> There are two kinds of money, one made with a bank ledger and a fountain pen—a kind very easily made and, unfortunately, unmade. There is another kind of money made of high grade paper and with a printing press, and that is the best kind.

The question of money made with high grade paper and the printing press has been pretty well dealt with in the debate as it has so far proceeded. I want to deal with my hon. friend's statement with regard to credit. He has posed in the house and throughout the country as an authority on credit, why credit is restricted and all that sort of thing. Throughout the country and in the house by implication he makes the statement that all a Canadian bank has to do is to write in the ledger an amount of credit to an individual or a corporation, and that is the end of it. It has no further responsibility in the matter. It does not require to provide any assets behind the credit or currency behind the assets. That is the statement made and it is made on public platforms, in my opinion, for the sole purpose of deluding the people, because no one can convince me that there is in the house a man who does not know better than that.

Just in order that I may give a brief answer to this, while I have not perhaps had the experience that my hon. friend has had with credit inside a bank, I have had some little experience with credit outside a bank, being, so to speak, on the outside looking in. For thirty years I have been arranging credits with banks. I have been responsible for carrying on a business that employs as many as two thousand men, and year after year I have been compelled to arrange at times for very substantial credits. What happens when that credit is arranged? The bank, it is true, notifies the branch manager to place a credit to me or to the concern that I represent, for the purpose of doing what? Producing a salable commodity, producing something that can be sold and for which some value can be realized, at least sufficient to liquidate the bank's credit. After that is done, is that all they have to do? What do I do when I receive the credit? Let me tell you what I have done. First of all, I employ a number of men and put them into the woods, producing the wood. I go round the country and buy from the farmers hay, horses, cattle, hogs, meat, butter and everything else that is necessary. I issue cheques against that credit. What do the farmers do when they get those cheques? They go to the bank, get the cash with which they pay their taxes and all their other bills, and the bank must have the cash right there when the cheques are presented, or what will happen? They will have defaulted on the credit which they have guaranteed to me. I do something else. I employ men and at the end of the period when pay day comes, I pay the men in cash or by cheque. What is the bank's position then? They must have the cash on hand to meet those cheques. This is the position: when a bank sets up a credit to me or anybody else on one side of the ledger, it is immediately compelled by the law of this country to have in its vault currency to meet the cheques as they come in on that credit.

Let me give one other illustration. I have a friend, a merchant, who imports goods from foreign countries. He arranges with dealers or manufacturers in the countries from which he imports for a bill of goods; in order that he may be able to do this he goes to the bank and arranges for a credit to carry him along until he can dispose of the goods and get back his money. That is the way in which business is carried on throughout this country and all over the world. What does the bank do? Does the bank just enter a credit and its responsibility end there? No, the day that man buys a bill of exchange to meet those goods, the bank must provide currency at par in the country of origin of those goods. The situation is this, that as regards every credit for which the bank arranges, it must provide currency behind the credit that it has granted. Where does that currency come from? Where do the balances come from that enable the bank to do this? I have heard hon. gentlemen who advocate this new system and the destruction of the banks and this machinery by which modern business can be carried on, say that they are going to confiscate the savings, the funds that are in the banks; as a matter of fact they are going to confiscate the banks themselves. What will they do when their spree is ended and all the money in the banks is gone?

I have heard it said also, if my memory serves me aright, by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), that savings deposits play no part whatever in the loans that are effected and the credit granted by banks. I took the trouble to find out what was the position of all the Canadian chartered banks on November 30 last, which is the latest date for which I could get complete returns. I found that the savings deposits of the Canadian people in the chartered banks on that day was $1,378,663,124, and the chartered banks in Canada had granted on that same day to corporations and individuals, commercial companies, merchants and all the people who were carrying on business, farmers and elevator companies for the movement of the grain crop in western Canada, credits to the extent of $1,359,475,190, or within less than $20,000,000 of the total of the savings of the people of this country. That is how the banking business is done, and yet hon. gentlemen will say that all that is necessary for banks to do in order to provide this credit is to take a fountain pen and write the credit on one side of the ledger book. As I have stated, these balances with which the bank does these things, the currency out of which these credits are granted, are the savings of the Canadian people, and these are the savings that are to be confiscated. In addition to taking our homes under this dictatorship, they are to take our savings with them.

I want to give just two illustrations as to what that means, because it primarily affects the very people, the farmers and the workingmen, for whom these hon. gentlemen presume to talk. My constituency is divided into sections, groups of people, farmers in some sections, miners, lumbermen and railroad employees. One section, the Manitoulin district, is almost exclusively a farming community. What is their position? When the first victory loan was floated, it will be recalled that a prize was offered for the county in Ontario that would buy the greatest percentage of victory bonds in proportion to the number of its people. The farmers in the district of Manitoulin went to the savings bank and drew out enough of their savings to buy more bonds in proportion to their number than did the people of any other city or town or municipality in Ontario. I live in a town the population of which is composed wholly of railway employees, working men, thrifty men, a majority of them owning their own homes. Their homes are to be confiscated as well as their savings. When the conversion loan was effected not so very long ago, I took the means of ascertaining what the workingmen in that town had done. They had gone to the bank and drawn out a sufficient amount of their savings to buy more than one-quarter of a million dollars worth of dominion conversion loan bonds. This indicates at once just whence the savings come. It has been stated that the banks buy these bonds; that they take advantage of every issue that the dominion, provincial or municipal authorities put out and that they tie up their money in government and municipal bonds. On November 30, while the Canadian banks had $1,359,475,190 out to the public in commercial loans, they had $551,000,000 only in dominion, provincial and municipal bonds and school debentures, and they had their own capital, $480,000,000, against the bonds they had bought from the dominion. Of necessity the banks must carry a certain volume of government, provincial and municipal bonds. If I am not mistaken, one of our cities in western Canada is now in a state of virtual war with the banks because the banks do not want to take a sufficient proportion of its bonds in relation to the credit they are prepared to give.

Just one other word. The business in which I am engaged, and the men who have been working in it in northern Ontario and Quebec —I am speaking for the section of the country that I know—has been hit harder than any other business in this dominion, even including agriculture, by this depression. Working men and their families have been thrown out of employment entirely because this business has become paralyzed, and yet I could go to the bank to-morrow and get credit if I could give security or any assurance whatever that I could sell the product that these working men produce. It is not a question of lack of credit. There is ample credit in Canada for every legitimate purpose. The trouble in Canada, as in every other country in the world, is that our assets are frozen. Frozen by what? There have been many quotations from a book to which six eminent gentlemen have contributed, known as the Halley Stewart Lecture, 1931. The book has already been extensively quoted in the house, and the quotations have shown clearly that you can quote parts of paragraphs of a book and give them any meaning you like. I should like to mention this point in connection with this book, that these six eminent gentlemen fail entirely to agree as to the remedy for this present depression. They are, however, in substantial agreement as to the main causes of the depression and as to the actual condition in which we now find ourselves.

One of these gentlemen, Sir Basil Blackett, who has been much quoted in this house, says this with regard to credit, and it has to do with the whole subject of inflation which is involved in issuing new money. He says that every period of deflation is caused by a previous period of inflation, and that the greater the heights to which the people were carried by the inflation, the deeper the depths to which they will descend when deflation comes. We are now passing through the deflation period. There was not only the inflation during the war, but inflation also from 1924 to 1929 on a greater scale than this world had ever before witnessed. When we work ourselves through the corresponding deflation period we shall arrive again at something like a prosperous condition.

Sir Arthur Salter in this book has this to say:

> The first thing I wish to remark is that this is obviously, in the fullest sense, a world depression. Its causes, certainly, did not originate in any one country, or indeed in any one continent. Its effects extend over the whole of the habitable world. Here and there folly or misfortune may aggravate the position—

[Mr. Nicholson.]

The folly, for instance, of urging the printing, without anything behind it, of a vast sum of dollars, inflating our currency:

> —but one after another all countries have been brought within the extending circle of disaster. The depression is world-wide in its origins and the range of its effects. And it seems to me perfectly clear, too, that any remedies that can effectively deal with the situation must have a world character as well. No national policy alone can suffice. Concerted policy alone will be adequate for the task.

One other quotation from the same writer:

> Next we need reform in monetary policy. I should like to see gold prices brought back to the level at which they stood in 1929 before the depression began.

I shall not weary the house by reading the whole passage, but that in brief is the position he takes. Again he says, and this brings us to another fad which has been preached to us so often, that of a managed currency:

> A managed currency without a metallic basis is perilous and difficult, but it is not impossible.

True, it is not impossible, and when the millennium comes perhaps we shall have a managed currency, but certainly not while ordinary human mortals are the managers. I asked last year across the floor of the house who was going to manage the currency, and I did not get any polite answer, but it has always worried me who was going to manage the currency, and where the manager was going to be located, whether in the Fiji islands, Borneo, Australia or some other country.

Sir Basil Blackett, contributing to the same book, says:

> There is still a strong tendency to stigmatize all talk about stable money—

Stable money, not inflation; not bank credit set up with a fountain pen, but stable money.

> —as unorthodox, visionary, cranky.

I would ask hon. gentlemen what stable money is in a world as complex as our world is to-day.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It is certainly not what we have to-day.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Stable currency is a currency which is accepted at par in any country in the world, but you are not going to get it by any effort on the part of ten millions of people in the face of the whole world, simply by starting to issue fiat money or an inflated currency.

Mr. VALLANCE: You certainly have not got stable money now.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Sir Basil Blackett goes on to say:

If I put stable money in the forefront of what is needed for successful national reconstruction, it is because national planning ahead is so difficult as to be almost impossible without reasonable stability of prices.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Price stability is really stable money.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Price stability will be arrived at when we get stable money throughout the world—then and then only. Hon. gentlemen opposite to my right are always asking for stable money. Sir Basil Blackett says:

With stable money, industry can concentrate anew on bringing down the costs of production.

Sir William Beveridge says:

The third point is that this crisis is a world crisis, a common disaster of all the world. As such, it is a disaster that is only going to be made worse if each nation thinks purely nationally, thinks or acts in a narrow, selfish spirit.

We have heard a great deal about what happened when England went off the gold standard, and England's currency became inflated, as people say. As a matter of fact, England did not go off the gold standard in the sense of voluntarily leaving it. She went off the gold standard simply because she was forced off it.

Mr. VALLANCE: In just the same position as Canada, only Canada won't go off it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: No, she won't as long as we can carry on our business, and as long as we remain sane.

Mr. VALLANCE: Your dollar is fictitious now.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Again, Sir William Beveridge says:

Some people have hailed our going off the gold standard as a means by which we can damage the trade of other people and benefit our own. Going off the gold standard has helped us in certain ways, but it has thrown the trade of the world still more into confusion.

Every step that is taken in that direction to unstabilize currency and world trade makes it just that much more difficult for the nations of the world, Canada included, to get back into the position they were in before. As Sir William Beveridge says:

The small, immediate gain to us on one side has been offset on the other side by loss to the world and to us as in the world.

The trouble is that some hon. gentlemen who in and out of season have demanded that we should broaden our outlook and trade with the world have now come forward with the proposal that we should draw ourselves into our shell and establish a credit and currency system that will be effective and useful in Canada, but of no use whatsoever beyond our shores.

One more word from Sir William Beveridge, and then I shall have finished with quotations from this book:

So I, for my part, come back to seeking a way out of the world's crisis within the frame work of the capitalistic system, by suppressing, through international cooperation, the anarchy of purchasing power—by suppressing the anarchy of purchasing power and keeping and increasing the liberty of production and exchange. That is the way of escape.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) referred to a statement concerning capitalism made in the House of Lords by Lord Marley. In that same speech Lord Marley made statements similar to the one made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre at Port Arthur, that "there is no unemployment in Russia." Another gentleman spoke in the House of Lords—I refer to Lord Snowden, parts of whose speech were quoted this afternoon. In a newspaper article before me he is quoted, in part, as follows:

At such times there have always been those who are proclaiming the collapse of the capitalist system.

Well, the system is not going to end just yet. Some of my socialist friends have never realized the tremendous recuperative power of capitalism.

Some hon. members in this house have never realized the tremendous recuperative power of the individual Canadian who, in his own way, is determined to work out his own destiny and not be subjected to the dictatorship of hon. members opposite. The article continues:

And we shall see ourselves through this crisis, although, mark you, I am not in the least ignoring the importance of changes in—to use the phrase of noble Lords opposite—our plan of national organization and national reconstruction. But I certainly cannot follow the noble Lord, Lord Marley, in going to Russia for an example. The noble Lord said that there are no unemployed in Russia. I do not think he would find many unemployed in Dartmoor jail.

This is the statement of Lord Snowden, the man who has been hailed as the greatest socialist in England. The article continues:

Russia is under a system of industrial conscription. Russia has confiscated all the capital, repudiated all public debts, and yet, starting without any capital liability at all, Russia has ever since been coming to the capitalist countries of the world cap in hand, begging them for export trade and loans.

We have had a recent example of that in Canada, if we can be guided by statements from Serkau and his friends, who have come to us and asked us to buy goods, and pay cash for them.
