COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON LABOUR AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. G.-C. Lachance (Lafontaine) presented the first report of the standing committee on labour and employment.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON INDUSTRY, RESEARCH AND ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Québec-Montmorency) in the absence of the chairman and with the consent of the house, presented the first report of the standing committee on industry, research and energy development, in both French and English.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PAYMENT FOR HAIL DAMAGE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-187, to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act (hail damage).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Woolliams: This bill proposes an amendment to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Under this act, where the average yield of wheat, etc. is under eight bushels per acre in an eligible block of land, the farmers in that area receive payment. This amendment proposes that when crop loss is due to hail the block provision will be eliminated and payment will be made on an individual basis to the amount of contributions made by the farmers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORT

SEAWAY AND CANAL TOLLS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Forbes) to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of public importance, namely the proposal of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to recommend the adoption of a new tolls tariff commencing in the 1967 navigation season, such tariff involving an increase in the present tolls of approximately 10 per cent on shipping on the seaway and an escalating lockage charge per vessel using the locks, which will have an adverse effect on Canada's exports. In particular it will lead, according to Mr. Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, to a reduction in the returns to western wheat producers by 1¼ cents per bushel.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to invite hon. members to offer advice to the Chair on the question of urgency of debate.

Mr. Cantelon: In my view this matter is urgent since the board's decision may well be made known within a matter of a few days. The public hearings into the proposal, which started yesterday, I believe, were concluded this morning. It is a matter of importance since the inevitable effect of the tolls will be to increase transportation costs on everything entering and leaving western Ontario and western Canada. It is a matter of urgency since it is quite apparent there are only a few days left before the board will make its decision. It is important that this house should record its views on this matter, so that the feelings of the people in the country may be taken into account by the board prior to a decision being made.

We are concerned, and it is a matter of importance to us; because on two previous occasions I have introduced this matter into the house and have been unable to secure an assurance from the government that this question would be brought before the house for discussion. I consider it is urgent, therefore, and must be attended to immediately because the government can introduce these changes by order in council without giving the house an opportunity to debate the matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the question of urgency is concerned, the hon. member has referred to the fact that the hearings have taken place, and these hearings are a prerequisite to any decision being made in respect of a matter that is of great importance to all Canadians, particularly those who are engaged in the export trade. If any addition is granted to the present rates this would be a further interference with our export markets.

Mention was made of the fact that representations have been made; but the decision is a decision of the government, not of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. If you will turn to Hansard for May 9, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport as reported at page 4866 stated:

> It is not a matter for decision by the authority at all; it is a matter for decision by the government, and the government is going to await the hearings.

Then the minister made reference to a statement by Mr. Delmer E. Taylor, a member of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, to the following effect:

> There has already been considerable support for the toll increases proposed by the authority.

To this the minister replied:

> But it does not seem to me that is any reason why a member of the authority should not point out what the law now is.

This is a matter, Mr. Speaker, that can be simply decided by the government without regard to parliament. The western provinces have already been struck a body blow by the reduction in the price of wheat during the last year of some 17 cents. As already pointed out Mr. Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, has stated that over a period of time an increase in tolls of this size will mean 1½ cents per bushel. In other words, Mr. Speaker, in spite of objections taken to this increase by various organizations another body blow will be struck at the western farmer who is producing wheat, in addition to the effect on all other industries.

This question is urgent, Mr. Speaker. If the matter is not pursued by the house it can be determined by the government behind closed doors, and a determination will be made on an economic matter that is of first consequence. We should have been given the assurance that there would not be any increases without parliament being given an opportunity to discuss the question. That we have not had. Under the circumstances I suggest the matter is urgent, for any moment now the government can act.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party believe that the question submitted by the hon. member for Kindersley is of the utmost urgency. As a matter of fact, if this matter is not of the utmost urgency I cannot conceive of any matter which is.

The situation briefly is that the seaway authority is today completing its hearings. Members of that authority have publicly advocated an increase in tolls, and in addition, the introduction of a lockage fee for that part of the Welland canal which is operated by the seaway authority. The effect of this has very serious economic implications for many sections of the Canadian people.

Mention has already been made of what it will do to the farmers by increasing their costs by something in the neighbourhood of 1¼ cents per bushel on wheat shipped through the seaway. This will mean a loss in income of very considerable proportion to the wheat growers of western Canada.

For the industries in central Canada it will also have serious implications. I am told it will mean a transfer of iron ore shipments in the neighbourhood of one million tons per year to United States seaports on the Atlantic coast, with a consequent reduction in employment opportunities for Canadians in central Canada. Inevitably, because of the increased cost of shipping goods, it will mean an increase in the price of goods to Canadian consumers and an increase in the cost of our exports which will have a harmful effect upon the growth of the export industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member is now debating the substance of the motion which the hon. member for Kindersley proposes to advance. I ask him to limit his remarks to the question of urgency of debate.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I simply endeavoured to point out that this matter is urgent because it affects such a large segment of the Canadian people. It affects the people in western Canada as well as those in central Canada. It will affect the industrial life of Canada, and will have very harmful effects upon the consumer.

As I understand the situation at the moment, when the hearings are concluded today the seaway authority will then be making its recommendations to the cabinet through the Minister of Transport. The cabinet then has the power, by order in council, to increase the tolls and impose the lockage fee which will have all the effects I have previously outlined.

It seems to me most imperative that parliament have an opportunity to express its opinion with respect to the effects which any increase in tolls would have. It is important that this question be discussed now rather than after the government has made a decision and has imposed these increased tolls, if the seaway authority makes such a recommendation, which preliminary statements indicate it is likely to do.

We in our party therefore feel that a discussion of this matter at this time is necessary, because this is probably the only opportunity we shall have of discussing this question before the cabinet meets in order to determine whether or not it will implement the recommendations of the seaway authority.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the motion moved by the hon. member for Kindersley invoking standing order 26, I suggest that that motion meets the several conditions laid down in citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

The first condition the motion meets under standing order 26 is that the motion involves the administrative responsibility of the goverment. Second, I suggest that this motion meets the condition under paragraph 2 of the same citation, in that it is a matter so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention. I think the hon. member for Kindersley, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam have already explained how the public interest will suffer if this matter is not attended to.

I further suggest that under paragraph 3 of citation 100, dealing with the matter of urgency of debate, this motion meets the conditions set out there also. That paragraph says that urgency within the rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means urgency of debate when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought up for debate. Looking at the order paper, Mr. Speaker, and looking at the business that has been announced and the time available for that business, it does not seem that there will be an opportunity to debate this very important matter before the cabinet may make its decision.

I suggest if the government were to give an undertaking that it will provide an opportunity for this matter to be discussed in this house before authorizing an order in council which would increase these tolls, that would satisfy the matter of urgency of debate. However, in spite of a number of requests by members of the opposition, the government has not so far indicated whether an opportunity will be provided to discuss this matter in the house before the order in council authorizing an increase is made. Unless and until the government does give such an assurance I suggest the motion does meet all the conditions outlined in citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, this is one occasion on which it may truly be said that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. The house is faced now with this motion put forward by the hon. member for Kindersley. We have heard the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and by the hon. member for Medicine Hat based on citations from Beauchesne. I do not see how an immediate discussion of this subject can be avoided unless the government can suggest an alternative means by which hon. members may make their views known. If it were possible to give an assurance to the house that such an opportunity would be forthcoming, we might possibly be able to dispense with the particular debate which is now being demanded.

It is my belief that the motion before us fulfils all the conditions laid down in the rules. The importance of the subject cannot be questioned, since it affects virtually the whole of the Canadian economy.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): This motion to adjourn the house under the terms of standing order 26 does not, in my view, meet the requirement of citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, for various reasons.

First, as to the question of the urgency of debate, let me say that the procedure with which we are concerned here is set out in the legislation enacted by parliament. The step now being taken is for public hearings to be held by the authority. These public hearings have been going on for some time and are not yet complete. After they have been completed the procedure is for the authority to make its report. To attempt to debate the subject now, before there has been any opportunity for the report to be made, would constitute an unrealistic approach to this important matter.

I do not understand the proposal that this matter should be debated before the facts are known, or before the information obtained at the public hearings is made available to members of the House of Commons. I am at a loss to understand the argument that this house should set aside the business appointed for today in order to debate this matter without the information given at the public hearings being available to hon. members.

The procedure being followed is set out in section 15 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act and in section 53 of the Railway Act, where provision is made for the authority to take action in the manner I have indicated. Then the legislation provides that the matter shall go before the governor in council. Surely the governor in council cannot consider this question before the information has been made available, and surely we cannot debate the subject in this house in the absence of this information.

The Leader of the Opposition has suggested that, because the act sets out the procedure I have indicated, the act is a poor piece of legislation and should not be followed—

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never made any such suggestion.

Mr. McIlraith: —and that this house should have the governor in council bound by the wishes of the house in advance of any information coming before the governor in council on the subject.

In addition, there is another reason the subject matter is not proper for an adjournment motion under this standing order, namely that the opportunity for debate is adequately and fully provided in the proper forum on the estimates of the Department of Transport. The estimates of the department were referred to the standing committee on transport and communications on March 22. They are now before that committee, and when the evidence taken at the public hearing is available to hon. members I am quite sure they will wish to discuss the matter rather fully in that committee, and subsequently in the house when the minister is here to deal with his estimates.

There being adequate opportunity for debate on the matter the proposed motion fails on that ground as well as the others.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are two points which the Minister of Public Works has overlooked. The first is that he has not given us the assurance that this matter will be up for debate in the house before an order in council is passed by the government approving whatever recommendation comes from the seaway authority. A discussion on estimates after the matter has been decided is not satisfactory. The other, more important, point is that the seaway authority has publicly issued a summary of future traffic estimates and toll requirements, which is in our hands. It is in answer to that summary that representations are now being made and have been made to the seaway authority.

Our suggestion is that the opinion of the House of Commons should be made known to the seaway authority at this stage of its proceedings, so that when the members of that body come to make their final decision and presentation to the Board of Transport Commissioners and to the government, they will have the benefit not only of the submissions made to them by private firms throughout this country but of the opinion expressed by parliament itself. That is why we want to discuss the matter today.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had thought the case was so clear that this would be one of those occasions when the government house leader would stand up and say he agreed with the points of view expressed from the opposition side of the house. Since he likes to save time, this would have been a good way to save it.

The Minister of Public Works argues that because this matter is being considered by the authority, therefore the house should wait until the authority has expressed its views. I submit, knowing this government, that if we waited until such time as we knew what the recommendations of the seaway authority were, and if we then tried to raise this matter in the house we would be told that we should wait until the government acted by order in council.

What is involved in this motion today is the right of parliament, through its members speaking for the whole country, to be heard on these issues that are under consideration. I submit that the arguments of the Minister of Public Works as to why parliament should not debate this matter now, and should not debate it then, all add up to ways and means of preventing parliament speaking on this issue at a time when it may have some effect. The urgency of debate is that we should be given an opportunity to express our views at a time when their expression might have an influence.

The suggestion that this matter might be discussed when the estimates of the Department of Transport are before a certain committee is no guarantee that that will actually happen. I can see a member trying to raise this question on the estimates of the Department of Transport, and I can see an ingenious chairman saying that there is not an item in the estimates specifically relating to this, so that members seeking to raise this issue would find themselves out of court. I agree with those who have spoken from each of the parties on this side of the house that there is urgency of debate on this issue at this time, and I hope Your Honour will so find.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would like to indicate to hon. members that after listening to both sides of the house I am now in a position to reach a decision on the motion submitted by the hon. member for Kindersley. There is, of course, merit in the proposition advanced by the Minister of Public Works to the effect that this matter might be considered by the appropriate committee dealing with the estimates of the Department of Transport, but to my mind this does not meet the situation entirely.

I believe a strong point has been made by the hon. member for Kindersley, supported by other hon. members; and, as a few hon. members have said, if standing order 26 is ever going to be used, if there is any time when it is to provide an opportunity to members to adjourn the proceedings of the house to consider a matter which in the opinion of a large number of members is of urgent importance and should be debated, then I believe this is the type of situation, and I would allow the hon. member to proceed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cantelon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Cantelon asks for leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance. Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cantelon: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for the sense of justice which has led to your acceptance of this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot comment on a decision of the Chair.

Mr. Cantelon: On February 10 and again on May 20 I had some comments to make on this particular matter. I said that the western Canadian sees the great lakes waterway as his doorway to the sea. I want to emphasize that point very strongly. This is indeed the way in which he looks upon the St. Lawrence seaway. It is true that he now moves a lot of goods through the Pacific ports, and some through Churchill, but he still thinks of the St. Lawrence seaway as the main route. So he is very concerned when he is faced with any thought that there are liable to be increases in the costs of what he ships and what he buys.

When Canada was being created throughout the nineteenth century the development of the St. Lawrence waterway system was undoubtedly one of the most important factors to tie the west to the rest of Canada. Cheap transportation through this system made it possible for western Canadians to market their grain at competitive prices on the world market. Also because of it, central Canada was able to ship its manufactured products to the west at cheap rates to meet the growing needs of that area of this great country. I question very much whether the prosperity that is so much in evidence now would be in existence without that waterway.

It is questionable whether the rapid development of the west which took place in the 1890's and the early 1900's which raised the population of the prairie provinces from something like 419,000 in 1901 to 1,328,000 in 1911, could ever have happened without the waterway. The western Canadian is not liable to forget this. Many people went to western Canada because of that waterway. They know the effect it has had on their development and the effect they hope it will have on their future.

However, they now feel that hope is imperiled by the suggestion that the waterway rates should be raised now and possibly raised again in the future. If they are raised on the grounds that we need the increase to meet rising costs, then we can be sure this will happen again some time in the future. So Canada's long held principle, when the waterway first went into operation, that it should be toll free will be gone by the board forever.

It is possible too that this imposition of tolls would lead to some restriction of traffic along the seaway. If it did it might force traffic into other methods of movement and this again would lead to an increase in the cost of living; not only in western Canada—let us not suffer from that delusion—but also it would lead to an increase in the cost of living in eastern and central Canada. Because the articles which you ship could not be sold as readily in western Canada, it would lead to a decrease in the quantity of business that would be done. Therefore the business that is left would have to charge more for its products, and the cost of living would be bound to rise.

People in all parts of Canada should view with suspicion any attempt to raise the tolls on the waterway. For a long time, while the seaway was being built, it was our traditional policy to have toll free waterways. Sixty-three years ago Canada abolished all tolls on the waterways. In 1909 the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act declared:

> All navigable boundary waters shall forever continue free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants, ships and vessels of both Canada and the United States.

But what do we find has happened? In 1959 we find that the seaway had tolls imposed, by the agreement of 1951. I know, and everyone knows, there were very powerful forces operating to see that these tolls should be charged, and those powerful forces still are in operation today. I do not need to name them; I would hesitate to do so, but I am sure those who are familiar with the situation—and I think everyone in this house is familiar with it—knows what areas and what types of persons would like to see these tolls increased.

If the tolls are increased these persons know it will help their business; but it will not help western Canada, and it will not help central Canada. I should like to say right here that I do not think it will help any part of Canada. It will not help the Atlantic provinces. The danger to the Atlantic provinces does not lie in seaway tolls or in a lack of tolls; the danger to the Atlantic provinces lies in the period during which this seaway operates, and in particular the time the port of Montreal operates. I do not think there is any loss to the maritime provinces through seaway tolls.

In 1959 these tolls were imposed in an attempt to do two things. First of all they wanted to recover the cost of operation of the seaway and, second, they hoped that in a period of 50 years they would be able to recover the cost of building the seaway. Forecasts seemed to indicate that this could be done, but they were much too optimistic. We find that the traffic has not been sufficiently heavy to do this. Nevertheless, whether or not this actually was successful, it avoids the main point. The main point is that there should be no tolls at all, and that so far as this nation is concerned it is greatly to our advantage to have a toll free waterway. As I hope I have to some extent indicated, it is to the advantage of all Canada that this should be so.

On more than one occasion in this house it has been pointed out what the cost of this will be to the farmer. Mr. Charles Gibbings has suggested it will be 1¼ cents a bushel. If this is true—and I do not see any reason that his figures would be very far out—then we can expect that the cost to the farmer will be something in the order of $5 million a year. The individual farmer who, after all costs are taken off, has been getting, about $1.40 will find he is not getting $1.40 but rather $1.39. He will be losing 1 per cent of his gross income in grain; and 1 per cent is a very serious matter, because actually when you take the net income that 1 per cent is magnified greatly.

These I think, Mr. Speaker, are some of the reasons it is so important that this matter should be debated and that the importance of this proposal should be emphasized for all to hear. Definite detailed arguments have been presented to the Board of Transport Commissioners, and I do not intend to reiterate those arguments. I am sure, however, that you will hear some of them as this debate continues this afternoon.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think this is one of the first occasions on which members of parliament will have an opportunity to express their views about some proposed action by an agency or commission which is responsible to or reports through the government for its activities. I believe it is appropriate that today should be our opportunity to make comments in this regard because, as I understood the minister, he said the hearings of the seaway authority still are in progress, although I suspect perhaps today is the last day and that the hearings on the proposed toll increases are about to conclude. So it is fitting that we should be able to give the authority the benefit of the reaction Canadians have to the proposed toll increases.

As we all know, probably no one is more sensitive to the reactions of the Canadian public than a politician; because if he is worth his salt at all he must keep in touch with people, keep his finger on the pulse and find out what they think concerning the effect of any proposed action such as this.

The applause from all sides of the house when the hon. member for Kindersley first raised this matter indicates the deep concern Canadians have about this proposal. I hope today's discussion is more than an exercise in expressing views. I hope it will have an impact upon the seaway authority and cause the authority to reverse its decision. I hope at least it will leave the toll structure as it is at the moment, and take steps to reduce the toll structure to the point where we will have a toll free system. It is my understanding that this is the only place in North America where tolls are charged for—

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question for clarification. I understood him to say that the seaway authority would reverse its decision. My understanding is that the matter had not yet come up for decision and that the seaway authority is conducting public hearings prior to making a decision and a recommendation.

Mr. Howard: In a technical sense this may be absolutely correct, but it is a fact that officials have been making quite a number of public declarations in support of their proposal to increase tolls. In view of the manner in which this organization operates there is no question in my mind that the authority has made up its mind about this particular proposed increase and is merely going through the motions of listening to argument before it formally announces the verdict.

In this regard I should like to quote from a telegram apparently sent on May 6 to Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, Minister of Transport. It says:

> The Canadian Press on May 5, 1966, carried a Winnipeg despatch quoting Mr. Delmer E. Taylor, a member of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, as saying: "There has already been considerable support for the toll increases proposed by the authority". In light of the numerous assurances you have given to parliament that no decision with respect to recommended seaway tolls and Welland ship canal lockage fees will be reached by the cabinet until after the conclusion of public hearings scheduled to commence on May 25, the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association vigorously protests this reported effort of an official of the authority to influence public opinion in favour of higher tolls.

That telegram is signed by Stuart Armour, president of the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association. It was for this reason that I said the authority had made a decision, and that perhaps this discussion in the house today will help it to reverse that decision and not recommend that the proposed tolls be put into effect.

In the last couple of days numerous corporate organizations and public spirited bodies such as chambers of commerce, and the union in one instance, have appeared at the hearings of the seaway authority and presented their opposition to the proposed increase in tolls. Of the many, many briefs which were presented, some merely filed with the authority and others presented orally, there was only one which favoured the increase in tolls. That brief was from the Railway Association of Canada. I think it is significant that this one group in Canada with a particular axe to grind would favour the proposal to increase tolls.

I submit that all that one exception does is underline and underscore the virtually unanimous opposition that exists in this nation to the proposal of the seaway authority to increase the tolls. The seaway authority published a document called "Summary of future traffic estimates and toll requirements" under date April 13, 1966, with respect to toll increases. I should like to quote from page 3 of this document a sentence that appears under the heading "Traffic forecasts and their relation to the proposed tolls increase":

> In order to examine as objectively as possible the tolls question prior to reporting to governments by July 1, 1966, the two seaway entities agreed that each would obtain the services of independent economic consultant firms to make estimates of traffic development on the Seaway and to assess the impact upon such development of possible increases in the existing level of tolls.

Those consultant firms carried out their studies and made reports to their respective principals. I think it is significant to note that to date those economic surveys and studies have been kept secret by the seaway authority. I submit that they have been kept secret because the studies partially give reasons why tolls should not be increased and because they point out the potential detrimental economic effects of increasing the seaway tolls. The authority, on the one hand proposing an increase in tolls, did not want to release any information contained in these economic studies which would be deleterious to the proposal of the seaway authority.

However, sometimes such studies are not as secret as one would like them to be, because an extract from one of the economic surveys provided for the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the following to say with regard to the commodity studies. This was with respect to iron ore movement, and I wish to deal just briefly with this matter. The study deals with the impact of toll increases and whether they would affect the competitive position of hauling through the seaway as compared with hauling cargoes in some other fashion, and one comment is as follows:

> The one significant borderline situation is the ore movement through the seaway and lake Erie ports into the Pittsburgh area. This area can be supplied for about the same price via U.S. Atlantic ports and currently about one million tons of Canadian ore moves into this area through Conneault.

In the main conclusions of the study we find the following with respect to iron ore shipments:

> Currently, there is about one million tons of ore routed through the seaway for steel mills in the Pittsburgh region which could almost as easily use the Atlantic route.

In other words even a 10 per cent increase in toll charges could have the effect of diverting what is now about one million tons of iron ore from one route to another. As a consequence, not only would the seaway lose the income on the traffic but I do not know how many people would lose jobs because this particular method of carrying the ore would not be used.

The matter was gone into quite extensively by the hon. member for Kindersley and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, my leader, when he spoke on the question of urgency of debate. It has been gone into extensively with regard to the movement of grain. Even an increase of 1¼ cents a bushel which will be extracted from the pockets of western grain farmers is a kick in the teeth to those farmers, who have a difficult enough time as it is.

I submit that the amount of money which may be realized by increasing the tolls on the movement of grain through the lakehead and the seaway is insignificant in itself in so far as the operation of the seaway is concerned, but means quite a bit to the individual farmer on the prairies who will have to dig up the extra money to pay these freight charges. After all, he is the one who pays in the long run.

There is the question of the secondary effect on manufacturers who will have to find the money to pay for the increased tolls. We all know that in our economy there is only one individual who pays for anything and that is the consumer. All of the industries whose operations hinge to a certain extent upon shipments through the seaway will pass on the increased toll charges to the consumer who will again be the victim. This may be an inflationary measure and another method of extracting purchasing power from the man on the street. In my view this is not compatible with our desire to develop our economy and make it as progressive and virile as we can. If this measure is adopted the seaway will be the only place in North America where tolls are charged for ship movements. I could make extensive additional references to the economic studies which the seaway authority has kept secret, and bring forth a variety of statistics to show that the proposed increases are not necessary.

Let me sum up in a few words. We have a tradition in Canada of toll free waterways. We now have the desire to return to that situation. If the seaway authority and the Canadian government had any real concern they would not be thinking now of increased tolls and increased charges to the consumer and the western grain farmer and the resulting potential loss of jobs for Canadian sailors and others. They would be thinking in terms of working out an arrangement whereby tolls could be decreased as quickly as possible and eventually eliminated. I submit that this is the only course which the seaway authority can take and, if it fails to take it, the only course which the Canadian government can take.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I believe the reason for this debate today is to allow members of the house to have an opportunity to express the point of view of the people they represent who are, of course, all the electors in Canada. We should like to consider this matter before the seaway authority makes a recommendation to the federal cabinet and it passes an order in council authorizing this increase in the tolls.

It is true that this matter is now being considered at a hearing taking place today in the nation's capital. I suppose it could be argued that neither this house nor the government should concern themselves with this matter before the completion of the hearings and before recommendations are made to the government. It has happened before that recommendations to the government were taken under advisement by the cabinet and nothing more was heard of them until a decision was taken and an order in council passed. I therefore hope that the government will take serious cognizance of the views expressed here today because of the widespread impact which such a measure might have on the whole economy and the whole price structure in Canada if in fact the tolls on the seaway are increased by 10 per cent.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) when he opened the debate, a great deal of discussion took place before the seaway became operative with regard to whether it should be a toll free system. It is interesting to look back on some of those discussions. For example, we find that in 1957 the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), a former minister of transport, is reported to have made it clear that the Progressive Conservative government "believes the imposition of tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway is mandatory." That may have been the opinion of the government of the day but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that a large number of organizations and individuals in Canada held the opinion that there should be no tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway.

I think this matter is urgent, as do most people who are acquainted with the cost-price squeeze affecting the western farmers. This is not the time to allow any changes which will further aggravate the cost-price squeeze. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics and several farm organizations have gathered information and compiled statistics to the effect that the cost of production in the field of agriculture in western Canada is going up much more rapidly than the returns to the farmers. To allow at this time a further decline in receipts from wheat in the amount of a cent and a quarter a bushel will certainly aggravate the cost-price squeeze.

Not very long ago we had a debate in the house regarding the effect which this might have on the farmer. I will not go over those statistics at present. However, I submit that it is not only the farmer who will suffer as a result of an increase in the tolls on the seaway. I am sure that every member in this house—and this has been mentioned almost every day—is aware of the concern of Canadian consumers respecting the rising cost of living. I know that my mail has contained far more letters during these past few weeks expressing concern about this matter than at any time since I became a member of this house.

The statistics provided to us by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics show an increase in the cost of living almost every month. In fact, it has gone up several percentage points in the past few months and certainly in the past year. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if parliament and the government can do anything to slow down the increase in the cost of living, they certainly have an obligation to do so. I suggest that to allow an increase in the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway will ultimately result in an increase in the tariffs charged for moving goods from the lakehead to Montreal and to all the places in between, which in turn will immediately result in a rise in the cost of living.

This is a matter of urgent public importance. It is one that concerns a very great number of the Canadian people, quite apart from the matter of costs in the agricultural sector. I suggest that if there is an increase in the tolls charged on cargoes carried by ships up and down the seaway, there will be a corresponding increase in the rates charged by competitive modes of transport. The result will be an immediate increase in the retail prices of the goods involved. The seaway, Mr. Speaker, is such an important link in our transportation system that I suggest these increases will cover almost all goods in the consumer market to a greater or lesser degree depending on what percentage the cost of transportation represents in the price of these goods.

This could set off another round of the inflationary spiral. I urge the government to consider this matter seriously, especially in view of their claim that they are concerned about the rising cost of living. In the budget speech brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) only a few weeks ago he claimed he was concerned about rising costs. In fact, in several places he mentioned that his paramount concern in drawing up the budget was to hold down rising prices. He claimed that the economy was going at such a rate that it was prudent at least to take our foot off the gas, if not necessarily to step on the brake. He suggested that the end result of failure to do this would simply be higher prices, a higher cost of living and more inflationary pressure.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that allowing action at this time that will result in higher prices for almost everything in Canada is certainly going to set off something that is undesirable. In conclusion I say again that this is no time to allow changes that will add to the cost of almost every item in Canada. It is not the time to allow changes that will further aggravate the cost-price squeeze on the farmers of Canada. I suggest that the government should carefully consider this situation if they are serious about trying to hold down the rising cost of living.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): I am pleased to be able to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker. In April, 1965, during the throne speech debate I devoted a whole speech to the St. Lawrence seaway, the Welland ship canal and tolls on the seaway and canal. Since that time I have not changed the views I expressed in that speech, namely, that I am opposed to an increase in tolls and, furthermore, opposed to tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway and Welland ship canal. I for one would like to see not only this increase disallowed but the eventual abolition of tolls on the seaway.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Macaluso: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: I was quite interested in the introductory remarks of the hon. member and his reference to his opposition. Can he tell us how many of his party take the same position, because if the majority take that position the government will veto any increase?

Mr. Macaluso: I do not understand the hon. member's question. Did he refer to the opposition or my opposition?

Mr. Woolliams: Your opposition. You are opposing an increase in tolls; at least, that is what I understood you to say.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Macaluso: That is correct. I am.

Mr. Woolliams: I am asking the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, how many members of your party agree with you and if the majority agree with you will the government veto the increase?

Mr. Macaluso: I like to see the hon. member for Bow River in his seat. The question really is one that I am sure he knows has no sense to it. I am speaking for myself as a member of this party. I am sure that members on this side who agree with my view will take part in the debate if they wish to express their own personal views. I am not free to state what is in the mind of each individual in this house. So far as I personally am concerned, I oppose the increase and also oppose any tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway.

The hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) mentioned in his remarks the strong pressures from powerful lobbyists in the United States who are not only opposed to any tolls but were opposed to the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway from the beginning. In my speech in April, 1965, I named the people I knew were opposed to the construction of the seaway and I have no hesitation in renaming them. They have some very interesting names. The major opposition to a toll free St. Lawrence seaway from Montreal to lake Ontario was based on the premise that exemption from tolls was equivalent to a subsidy. The leaders of the opposition in the United States are bodies, as I suggested, that bear some very revealing names. They are the National Association for a Non-Subsidized Seaway, which is still in existence; the Maryland Committee for a Non-Subsidized seaway, which is still in existence; the New York and New Jersey Committee for a Self-Supporting Seaway, which is still in existence; also the United States North Atlantic, Gulf and Caribbean Ports Association as well as the Association of American Railroads. They have been long standing opponents of the seaway.

In its submissions to the government of Canada in 1963 and in its annual submissions since the national legislative committee of the International Railway Brotherhood has opposed any reduction in tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. In fact, on occasion they have asked for an increase, which is surprising when you consider the extent to which the railways of this country have been subsidized.

Several members have spoken about the burden the proposed increase will place on the prairie farmer, and this is true. All the wheat pools are opposed to it. The Great Lakes Waterway Development Association, which represents a great number of industries and individuals in Canada, has indicated its opposition. As one who comes from an industrial centre of this country so far as the manufacture of steel is concerned, I certainly want to record my opposition to this increase.

I should like to quote briefly from a submission made to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority at a public hearing by the vice president of the Steel Company of Canada, Mr. Norman J. Brown. He said in part that the low cost of water transportation has been an indispensable factor in the development of the steel industry in Hamilton. This cannot be denied, Mr. Speaker. I quote Mr. Brown:

> Continued growth of the industry will depend on its ability to meet competition which is becoming increasingly intense in both domestic and export markets.
> Higher tolls add to the costs of producing and shipping steel and impair Stelco's competitive position which is being maintained only by continuing massive investments in new plant and equipment.

This is a fact, Mr. Speaker. The Steel Company of Canada, has been investing great sums in the expansion of the steel industry and creating jobs in the city of Hamilton. The Steel Company of Canada accounts for 39 per cent of Canadian steel output. Steel, as you know, is a highly competitive product on a world wide basis. Mr. Brown also said:

> By using bulk carrier ships of up to 100,000 tons, Japanese steel mills received South American ore cheaper than Stelco can lay it down at its docks.
> United States steel mills on lake Erie and Michigan receive the bulk of their materials toll free.

Stelco and Dominion Foundries at Hamilton depend greatly on the seaway, especially on the Welland ship canal, for their raw materials and iron ore from their mines along the lower St. Lawrence valley and in Newfoundland and Labrador. Unless they are able to receive these raw products landed at their docks in Hamilton at a competitive rate they will be unable to be competitive in the market with their rivals in the United States and with the steel mills in other parts of the world. This will be result if we do not receive our domestic raw materials at a cheaper rate than industries in Europe and the United States.

In January of this year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) stated that tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway were required by an act of parliament and that parliamentary approval would be needed to make the waterway toll free. First of all, with all due respect to the minister, tolls were not exactly "required" by an act of parliament but by an agreement between the United States and Canada, which, of course, would have to be approved, I would think, by this parliament. So you might say that they were required by an act of parliament but that is not really so.

The minister also said that tolls were required by the act of parliament which permitted the building of the seaway, that parliament would have to make a change in the act and that there would be opposition from other forms of transportation if there was an attempt to have the seaway made toll free. He also said it would not be very easy to find a majority in parliament who would say that one form of traffic could be carried toll free but not others.

It is difficult for me, and I suggest also for others, to understand why other forms of transportation which are themselves subsidized should oppose a toll free seaway inasmuch as this facility has diverted considerable traffic from United States ports and railroads to the benefit of Canadian truckers and railroads. I feel that any increase in the cost of transportation of raw materials and finished products is certainly going to filter through to the consumer in the end. There is no doubt that the consumer will end up paying for any increase in tolls.

I do not believe that an increase in tolls is going to solve the financial problems of the St. Lawrence seaway. I think that at the beginning the estimate that was made was an erroneous one. The amortization period was too short; it should not have been 50 years. The present level of tolls, if maintained, is sufficient to pay for all operating and maintenance costs of the seaway itself.

I am also opposed to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority imposing fees on the use of the locks by way of a lockage charge. This is another way of getting around the placing of tolls on the Welland ship canal. There really is no relationship between the two because the Welland ship canal was built and financed by Canadians. Why we should make it subject to tolls in agreement with the United States is beyond me, and I do not think it is necessary. In fact, I know it is not necessary. Any extension of the agreement between the United States and Canada with respect to tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway should certainly not be applied to the Welland ship canal. However, they get around the problem by imposing a lockage fee.

I have stated before, as have others, that I do not think the public hearings will change the minds of the management of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. I certainly hope they do, but the speech made by one of the members of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority in Winnipeg last week seemed to indicate that he was not thinking of changing his mind as a result of the public hearings.

In one sense I should have liked to see this matter debated by the standing committee on transport and communications. However, I cannot blame hon. members for bringing up the matter in the house because it is now 15 years since there was a debate on the St. Lawrence seaway. The first and last debate was in 1951.

If I may return to that debate for a moment, it is interesting to note that the then minister of transport, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, made a statement which is reported at page 1576 of Hansard for December 4, 1951. He said:

> Why is the project necessary from a navigation standpoint? . . . Now, it also promises to be the key that will unlock the future for the iron ore fields of Quebec and Labrador. It will open large new markets for these ores in the Great Lakes area, otherwise largely out of economic reach. And on the other side of the coin it will give those interior steel mills the best new source of ore at the lowest cost, a matter of serious concern at the moment.

If it was a matter of serious concern in 1951 to have low-cost water transportation, then it is even more important today if we are to compete in foreign markets and increase our export trade, especially in steel and other finished products.

Mr. Chevrier, whose remarks in 1951 apply equally strongly today, continued:

> What will be the effect on the railways of Canada? I do not think that the fortunes of the railways nor the economy of the railways would be materially affected by this project. For one thing, almost half the seaway traffic foreseen is in iron ore. That is traffic which does not exist at the moment in so far as the lower St. Lawrence is concerned, and in so far as the railways are concerned it is new traffic.

Then at page 1580 he concluded as follows:

> In conclusion, let me summarize the government's view in a very few words. We believe that Canada needs the St. Lawrence seaway and power development at the earliest possible date. We believe that it is important for economic development and urgent for national defence.

I am not interested at the moment in the national defence aspect, but the matter is just as important today, if not more so, from the point of view of the economic development of this country. I do not know where we would have been today, with the large sales of wheat we have made to Communist China, Russia and other countries, had the St. Lawrence seaway not been in operation.

As I said in April of last year, I feel that the Canadian government made a mistake and that it should have built the St. Lawrence seaway at its own cost without help from the United States. We did not really need their help. Facilities are now erected at Cornwall which would enable the seaway to be all-Canadian. I suggest that we should proceed to complete an all-Canadian seaway and be the masters of the seaway because it is more important to our economy than to that of the United States.

It is interesting to note that there is great opposition in the United States to the increase. In March of 1964 Senator Proxmire of Wisconsin wrote to commerce secretary Luther H. Hodges as follows:

> —any increase in . . . tolls will diminish revenues—

Of the seaway.

> —because shipping will drop off substantially.
> Increased shipping in the Great Lakes is vital to our entire economy.

Then Senator Proxmire went on:

> For many products, including grain from the midwest, the Great Lakes should be the most efficient route for distribution, especially to foreign markets. This efficient distribution should not be hampered by the excessive and unreasonable seaway tolls.

We are told, Mr. Speaker, that the tolls are not going to be excessive, that they are not unreasonable. I think we should revert to the Canadian tradition of toll free waterways in this country. I suggest that those who say the seaway if being subsidized look at the extent of discrimination in tolls on the seaway and canal traffic. I submit that no other form of transportation has ever been placed under an obligation to reimburse the national treasury for moneys which have been invested in it under a national development policy, because the seaway was constructed as a matter of policy to stimulate our economic development.

How great this discrimination is has been very interestingly documented in a submission by the Dominion Marine Association regarding seaway tolls of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. They give certain examples. For instance, the Canadian National Railways is subsidized. Then there are the maritime freight rate subventions, the east-west bridge subsidies, the Hudson Bay railway, the trans-Canada highway, airports. None of these is being asked to carry its capital cost so why should the St. Lawrence seaway?

To say that there is a United States-Canada agreement is not enough. I think this is something the government should discuss in the very near future with the United States interests. I am sure that some arrangement could be arrived at that would be in the interest of this country. Then we ought to proceed with an all-Canadian seaway.

We know that traffic on the seaway is increasing but is not yet bringing in an adequate financial return. I believe that the secret of the economic success of the seaway lies in the development of maximum traffic movements of ships bearing additional cargoes. Unquestionably higher volumes of traffic movements, with a higher level of toll earnings, would automatically take care of the liquidation of assets. That liquidation would have to take place over a long period of time and not just within 50 years. I submit that the present levels of tolls, if tolls are to remain, must be considered to be at their maximum. As I said earlier, I think tolls should be abolished.

The director of the port of Chicago, Captain John J. Manley, recently called for abandonment of all tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. I quote his words:

> The U.S. should return to the traditional policy of toll-free waterways and abandon, in the interests of national welfare, the idea of recovering the cost of construction of seaway through tolls.

I submit that applies equally to us. From 1848 to 1959 there was an all-Canadian seaway between Montreal and lake Erie. This seaway was toll free for the greater part of its 111 year history, to the great benefit of our national economy. Today Canada is by far the greatest user of the seaway. This body of water plays a great part in our national well-being. The St. Lawrence seaway, stretching from Montreal to lake Ontario, is the only waterway on the North American continent on which tolls are exacted. This fact places Canadian producers of manufactured and natural products at a competitive disadvantage in the domestic and world markets. I could elaborate on that but I do not think it is necessary. I dwelt at some length on this matter on April 12, 1965.

May I conclude my remarks by saying that although this debate may be somewhat premature I sincerely believe it is worth while. This subject has not been thoroughly debated for 15 years. I hope that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will consider very seriously any recommendations it wishes to make after its public hearings. I hope that the government will seriously consider the authority's recommendations in the light of the burden placed on the Canadian economy by tolls. I trust that hon. members may be given an opportunity, either in committee or when discussing estimates, to delve further into the proposed recommendation to increase tolls.

I have one more criticism. I wish to criticize the seaway authority for keeping confidential and not releasing the economic report it obtained. As hon. members will remember, a great hullabaloo was raised about having independent economists report to the authority. I called the authority and asked for a copy of the report. The secretary who answered me was very polite. He was under orders and was doing his job. He said that the report could not be released as it was considered highly confidential.

How in the world is one to make submissions properly if the economic facts backing up the submissions are not made public? I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, why the authority is trying to hide this report. It will be made available to the government. I am sure that when the matter comes before the committee on transport and communications, the report will be before that committee. I sincerely urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and the acting or associate minister to discuss with the authority the releasing of this economic report in order that those wishing to make submissions may have all the facts. The authority has nothing to hide and is laying itself open to undue criticism.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Macaluso: Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: Could the hon. member inform the house whether the 1951 debate, from which he quoted certain remarks by the then minister of transport, had to do with whether Canada would construct a seaway on its own without the participation of the United States?

Mr. Macaluso: No, Mr. Speaker. The effect of the debate, as reported in Hansard on December 4, 1951, was that if the United States was reluctant in the last analysis to join with Canada in the construction of the seaway Canada would then be prepared to "go it alone". Words to that effect were used in the debate of 1951 by the then minister of transport.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this matter I should say at the outset that hon. members representing constituencies in western Canada, particularly farming constituencies, must take a strong stand in opposing increases in tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. It was refreshing to hear the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) setting out clearly the position that has been reached by most of us on this side of the house. I hope that when the hon. member, either in confidence or in caucus or elsewhere, has the opportunity to speak to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), who by the way is not here today, he will be able to influence him and thereby the cabinet in the very near future to adopt the hon. member's position.

It is true that the cabinet is an independent body and it is within its jurisdiction to make a ruling on this matter. That, however, should not prevent the cabinet from following the lead of the hon. member at the proper time because the executive has the power to say yes or no with respect to this matter. When the hon. member who has just spoken and others in the Liberal party who take the same position are required to vote on this question, I hope that if they are so required they will support their views with their votes instead of just with their voices.

This whole question is of particular importance to the economy of western Canada as well as to the economy of the whole country. I hope to put some facts before the house. In discussing this matter two questions arise: First, the question of increased costs of production and, second, the increased cost of living. Both these problems, and I say this with great sincerity, have not been solved by the present government. I see one hon. member shaking his head. I shall deal with the facts.

I want to deal with the increased costs of production especially as they affect producers in western Canada in their relationship to the export market. Only yesterday I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) a question in reference to the high cost of farm machinery. Hon. members may remember that shortly after the Minister of Agriculture was appointed he made his first trip out west and on his return made favourable statements respecting western farmers. At the present time those statements have remained mere statements, because he said there would be an investigation into the high cost of farm machinery and such an investigation has not been undertaken.

When I asked the Prime Minister about this subject yesterday he said there would be a decision in a day or two. I brought to the attention of the Prime Minister the fact that the profits of the Massey-Ferguson Industries Limited have risen in the last six months from $8 million to $21 million and that the profit per share has risen from 54 cents to $1.34. I asked the Prime Minister whether there would be an investigation into these matters and he said there would be a decision in the very near future.

The high cost of machinery and the high cost of transportation make it very difficult for western farmers to compete successfully in the export market. Canada is probably the only big producer of wheat in the world which does not subsidize its wheat farmers in any way. They are on their own when it comes to competition and any increase in the cost of production threatens the success of our exports and makes the cost squeeze greater. That is why the present debate is necessary.

The hon. member for Hamilton West said there had not been a debate on the subject for 15 years. I agree. If hon. members will look at the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act they will find that section 15 contains the authority which parliament gave in 1951 for the imposition of tolls. Section 15(2) reads as follows:

> The tolls that may be charged by the authority pursuant to this section may be for the use of the canals and works administered by it as a whole or for the use of any particular part thereof—

In other words, in 1951 parliament gave authority for tolls to be charged for the use of the seaway.

When we are talking about grain it is well to remember that it is the port of Vancouver through which most of the grain from Alberta has found its way in the deals with China and other communist nations. Then we have the port of Churchill and the facilities along the St. Lawrence. In winter, when these are not in use, grain is moved by rail to other ports in Canada. There is a large difference between the sale price of wheat and what the farmer actually receives. The export price at Vancouver several months ago was between $1.96 and $2 a bushel. The price at Fort William differs by a few cents. In negotiating deals such as were made with China the wheat board arrives at a contract price. Otherwise the price may be fixed under the international wheat agreement. What the farmer receives is a sum based on those three prices less costs. In the end he is lucky to get a cut amounting to about $1.20 at a time when wheat is selling at $2.00 a bushel.

Any increase in freight rates is bound to increase the cost of production and this in turn leads to an increase in the cost of living. The rapid rise in the cost of living constitutes one of the most important problems facing the government today. Yet no attempt has been made to curtail inflation and halt the rapid rise in the prices of the commodities Canadian consumers need.

Every member of this house must be getting a great deal of mail on this subject from Canadians right across the country. People realize that the government has done nothing toward solving this problem. The budget, which was supposed to help, has not done so. The cost of living continues to spiral. Hon. members opposite talk about boom times. You can go into homes in many areas where people are suffering as if we were in a depression. Even when the head of the family is working the situation so far as the value of the dollar is concerned is almost as serious as it was during the depression of the 1930's. Make no mistake about that.

The people who are concerned with sales and exports realize that there is a movement in the United States today to change the law affecting trade with communist nations, not only with respect to sales of commodities but with respect to the use of United States shipping to carry exports to such nations. If this movement succeeds Canada will be in serious competition with the United States in this field. Any increase in the cost of production which would mean an increase in the cost of grain exported in competition with other nations would have serious consequences for Canada.

I have just finished reading the new book by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), the former minister of finance. In his book the hon. gentleman admits that the imbalance of trade with the United States today amounts to $1,700 million. There is only one reason why it is not worse, only one reason why we have been able to avoid a financial crisis. It is the fact that the previous government negotiated wheat sales with the communist nations, an initiative for which they were criticized by members of the Liberal party and of the Social Credit group. The money derived from the sale of this wheat brought more than $2 billion into the economy of this country in one year, enabling us to avoid a worsening of the imbalance of trade between the United States and Canada.

When the hon. member for Davenport was financial critic for the Liberal party he told us that he and his friends were going to cure the imbalance, but in the last four years it has increased every year. Had it not been for the sales of wheat to which I have referred, had we not been able to produce wheat cheaper than any other exporting nation, the imbalance of trade between the United States and Canada today would be twice as great. Basically, it is the Conservative's sales policy which has bailed out the present government so far as this particular problem is concerned.

I emphasize that the farmer gets a pooled price. It may be that a bushel of wheat can be shipped through Churchill cheaper than through the seaway or in certain areas of western Canada it can be shipped more cheaply through Vancouver. All the prices are averaged and costs are deducted to arrive at the net price the farmer gets.

The reason the wheat board was set up was to arrive at a pooled price for the farmer. The last grain payment was between 10 and 20 cents less than the year before, depending on the grade.

Mr. Rapp: Seventeen cents on the average.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, which is one of the great agricultural areas of western Canada, says that the figure was 17 cents on the average. So the cost has been rising but the price the western farmers have been getting for their grain has been going down. Any increase in the cost of production, whether it amounts to a cent and a quarter or less, puts the farmer into a worse cost squeeze than before.

The only ones who want the tolls increased are the railroads. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was minister of trade and commerce he freely acknowledged that we had lost certain of our grain markets because we had been unable to get the grain to the ports on time. We in the opposition were badgering the minister continually to do something about the tie-up of grain in western Canada. It is hard to explain why in 1966 a nation with a $2 billion industry cannot move its grain to the ports.

When farmers, under a quota, can only market a bushel of wheat per acre for several months, how can they pay their costs of production on time? This only adds to their cost of production. This was an important matter but the government did nothing. The government set up a commission but it did nothing for month after month while wheat was piled up on the western farms as it was in 1956 and 1957. During that time the government did nothing but talk and say that the matter was under consideration, an old, worn-out phrase used by cabinet ministers who are not doing anything. It is only their way of passing the buck.

It seems to me that the C.P.R. of late is almost governing this country. It has an obligation to move the wheat. It was given a charter in most of western Canada, particularly in southern Alberta where it has a monopoly. But the C.P.R. made excuses. It said it had cars in the United States moving other commodities. It should have been moving wheat, the main export of western Canada, which is capable of bringing $200 million into the economy of that region and this in turn is reflected throughout the whole economy of the country.

The recent increase in the profits of Massey-Ferguson and other firms has resulted from the fact that farmers have had to enlarge their production units in order to continue operating and in enlarging them they have had to buy bigger machinery. As a result the money they received for their grain went to the industrial centres of Ontario.

This is a national matter because the production of wheat and the prosperity of the wheat grower are still of primary concern to the country. It is not a regional question or a matter of selfishness. We are becoming an industrialized nation but behind the scenes wheat is still our major commodity and when there is prosperity on the wheat farm it is reflected throughout the whole Canadian economy.

I have dealt with the two main points I intended to cover. I hope that when this matter comes before the government it will take definite action. I hope it will make a decision and follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Hamilton West and other backbenchers on that side of the house who believe there should be no increase in tolls.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

As the hon. member for Hamilton West said, it is not only the grain industry which will be affected. All industries and commodities will be affected and as a result the cost of living. This is one place where the government can say no. The St. Lawrence seaway system is a national project. It was built for all Canadians and the greater part of the cost should not be placed on the wheat producers.

Therefore I say, let us not have any more answers of this type. If the government is not going to do anything, let it say so. If we did not have this debate today it would be too late tomorrow or the next day. Thanks to members from western and eastern Canada, this matter has been brought up before parliament. Now it is up to the government to do its job. We have done ours.

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, any member from Port Arthur, which constituency contains the western terminal of the St. Lawrence seaway system, would be missing a real opportunity if he did not add his voice to the opposition against any suggestion of increasing tolls on the seaway. During the last month or so I have talked to many people in northwestern Ontario and many people west of Ontario and there is no doubt about the fact that they are in agreement in their opposition to this suggestion.

I should like to take this opportunity to deal with some of the arguments presented in favour of increases in the tolls and even the imposition of tolls. The first one is that tolls are required by the act of parliament which enabled us to build the seaway. It is the opinion of many competent people that this is not a correct statement of the law.

It is my understanding that section 15 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act authorizes but definitely does not require the seaway authority to impose tolls. Section 16 of the same act provides that if a decision is made to impose tolls the level of those tolls should be sufficient to effect the purposes mentioned in that section, which implies that the total cost should be recovered and, of course, this is fallacious.

As a matter of fact, on reviewing the act it would appear that the only place where it purports to make mandatory the imposition of tolls is under section 17 in the event of an agreement existing between Canada and the United States calling for the imposition of tolls. We have such an agreement, but international agreements of that kind are always open to renegotiation. In fact, there have already been several revisions of the original agreement between the two countries.

The existing tolls are imposed not by the parliament of Canada but by the 1959 agreement between the seaway authorities of Canada and the United States, and I would not want to pass over that without drawing attention to the significance of the date 1959. Many students who have studied this subject suggest that the 1959 agreement may not be valid at all.

The International Boundary Waters Treaty Act of 1911 provides as follows:

> —all navigable boundary waters shall forever continue free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants, ships and vessels—

Of both Canada and the United States.

Section 28 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act provides:

> Nothing in this act affects the operation of the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act . . . 1911.

In short, the Canadian parliament did not, although it could have done so, alter the rule that the waters should be free to inhabitants, ships and vessels of Canada and the United States. There is, therefore, support for the view that references to tolls in the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act must be construed as authorizing tolls only in respect of vessels, passengers or cargoes other than those of Canada and the United States.

A second argument that is presented is that it would not be easy to find a majority in parliament to say that one form of traffic should be free and not others. This sounds like a reasonable statement but it has no practical application to the tolls problem. In the first place, traffic on the seaway is by no means carried free, even if the tolls are ignored. Charges are imposed for the use of shore installations and services connected with the seaway. Second, the statement seems to imply that some forms of traffic are not carried free. The fact is that all forms of traffic are carried free to some extent. It is no secret to anybody that substantial subsidies are enjoyed by all forms of transportation in this country. It is really a question of degree, and the difficulty lies in assessing the degree of subsidy enjoyed by the various traffic media.

Before anyone could determine whether there should be any tolls at all and, if so, what those tolls should be, surely an analysis would have to be made of the subsidies available to all traffic media. Until that is done any consideration of tolls on the seaway is a blind consideration likely to result in inequities of a dangerous nature.

Another fallacious argument which is presented is that the seaway does not serve all of the country and therefore it would be unfair to support it through the public treasury. I think it is correct to say that such a statement ignores the true role of the seaway. Right Hon. Vincent Massey, one of the greatest statesmen of this country, in a speech in 1964 stated:

> If the maintenance of our east and west links is questioned as a national policy, the doubters are men who fail to understand the land in which they live.

Another great statesman said that this project is of national concern and will benefit Canada from coast to coast. If one takes a look at the trade handled by the seaway, it becomes very clear that the seaway serves all of Canada and not simply the areas contiguous to it. It is one of the main streets of the Canadian economy.

The record cargoes handled in 1965, which represent an increase of 115 per cent over 1959, covered the entire range of Canadian exports—forest products, grain and other farm products, iron ore and manufactured goods. They include large quantities of coal imported from the United States without which Canadian heavy and other industry could not function in the highly competitve world of today. Large shipments of coal from Cape Breton island to central Canada would not be economically feasible were it not for low transportation costs through the seaway. Exports in all major segments of Canada's export trade, emanating from points virtually all across Canada, pass through the seaway, and the low transportation costs are essential to keep our prices at competitive levels in world markets.

Before concluding I should like to bring out a few more points for the consideration of the house. First, the 124-mile St. Lawrence seaway, Montreal to lake Ontario, is the only waterway in Canada subject to tolls. Moreover, it is the only part of the 27,000 miles of navigable waterways in North America which is subject to tolls. Tolls on the seaway and the Welland ship canal mean higher raw material costs to Canadian manufacturers. Obviously this means that they increase prices, thus adding to inflation and making Canadian manufactured goods not only less competitive in export markets but more costly to Canadian citizens and consumers.

Diversion of upbound traffic through the seaway and the Welland ship canal, because of tolls, inevitably would mean higher rates for downbound Canadian grain cargoes from the lakehead. It has been mentioned, and I wish to join in this, that wheat growers pay the transportation costs, a matter in which we at the lakehead are very keenly interested. Our storage capacity is some 110 million bushels a year and a great proportion of the Canadian wheat crop goes through there each year. Wheat growers do pay the shipping costs and therefore the seaway and Welland ship canal tolls also decrease the purchasing power of our prairie farmers and this in turn increases the cost of wheat so as to make it non-competitive.

One important point which should be recognized is that there is really no hope of recovering through tolls the capital cost of building the seaway from Montreal to lake Ontario and in my opinion it would be in the national interest if they were abolished forthwith. This whole subject is a matter of very grave worry to us in northwestern Ontario and I know our worry is shared in western Canada. For the reasons I have stated, together with many more which no doubt will be developed in the course of this debate, we most certainly wish to register our objection to an increase in tolls and ask for the complete elimination of these unprecedented tariffs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, the greatest highways of the world are not the roads the world has built but the waterways which the world possesses, both natural and man-made. Water-borne commerce has made many nations great and influential. In fact, history shows that nations which do not have navigable waterways have not prospered. As a member representing the southern Ontario riding of Prince Edward-Lennox which is situated on Lake Ontario, I rise to support the proposition and principle that there should be no tolls or lockage fees of any kind in respect of ships of commerce on the Welland canal or on the St. Lawrence seaway.

Although I am one who is in favour of tariffs to protect our industry in certain cases and in vital areas and regions of our country, at the same time I will not support the restriction of international commercial traffic on our waterways. Since our early beginning our country was hampered by the rough and wild nature of our mighty river, the St. Lawrence, hampered by the inadequacy of a series of small canals bypassing the rapids which necessitated the use of smaller ships and then transshipment at sea level to ocean-going traffic. The building of the seaway with the taxpayers' money, however, changed all this. Canada's dreams came true and, with the commodious improvements made at the Welland Canal and at the Sault before the seaway improvements on the St. Lawrence were made, we now enjoy the benefits of a great international waterway and the economic benefits which slowly but surely are building a greater and more influential nation.

I make this last statement because out of it arises a point I wish to make. The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has no right to place toll charges on vessels plying the Welland canal. The Welland canal existed before the building of the other navigational facilities on the river section of the seaway and its control should remain free and inviolate. The point has been mentioned elsewhere that the seaway is not paying its way and therefore an increase in tolls and navigational charges is required to bring the seaway out of the red. Mr. Speaker, I submit it is not the only public transportation entity in Canada or in the United States which is not paying. If the taxpayers can subsidize the C.N.R., and they are doing just that, the nation likewise can subsidize the St. Lawrence seaway. Another point is that there is no doubt that more than one United States railway company would like to see the seaway tolls increased because such action would indirectly benefit them by diverting transportation business to those railings.

The St. Lawrence seaway may be summed up in this manner: it is a financial failure and at the same time a commercial success. If business has not reached our expectations we should not be alarmed. The decades will take care of this. That which is and always will be the greatest and best form of transportation, the waterways, will accrue in the future to the benefit of Canada if we do not stultify and discourage it now by taxing the users by means of exorbitant fees and tolls. Additional tolls levied now will not only be a deterrent to our western grain trade but a deterrent also to our Ontario grown grain. We must not forget that Ontario also produces a good deal of valuable grain and cereal products for export. Ontario grown grains are shipped through the Welland canal and the seaway to the port of Montreal for storage there awaiting export overseas. These include winter wheat, soybeans and Ontario corn.

Also, Mr. Speaker, tolls would not be good for the great heartland of Canada, southern Ontario. In my constituency we have a very valuable installation, the iron ore docks. Pelletized iron from Marmora is loaded into huge ore carriers at Picton harbour where Long Reach meets Picton bay and Adolphus Reach, leading to lake Ontario. Most of this iron ore goes up what one might term one flight of stairs through the Welland canal into the Erie basin to Ohio steel mills.

In our district we confidently look forward to the day when Canada will be populous enough to have more steel mills and secondary associated industry in our own heartland. But some of the Marmora iron which is made into steel is sold back to Canada in the form of iron castings and steel in all its forms and tolls on our waterways only increase the cost of these products that we require. In other words, our own action in this instance would only result in a further rise in the cost of living, which I believe is one of the most vexing problems we have to deal with today.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, right beside the iron ore loading docks we have the large and modern cement plant of the Lake Ontario Portland Cement Company producing a fine product for an international market. Much of this product is exported to the United States in direct competition with American cement plants. I will not support any measures that diminish the ability of any of our industries to compete internationally or otherwise with any of their competitors. This cement plant makes a vast contribution to meeting our balance of trade problem. As hon. members know, our trade position with the United States is very much in a state of imbalance. Tolls will only tend to increase this imbalance which for so long has been a source of embarrassment to Canadian governments.

Another point concerns the interests of our small manufacturers who are importing raw materials. Tolls on the seaway only increase manufacturing costs. They also increase feed grain costs to our Ontario farmers who feed western grains in their beef and milk producing activities.

We have no toll roads in Canada; they are a thing of the past. Let us likewise have no toll-charging waterways in Canada. The Trent canal system is free. The Rideau canal system is free. They are, of course, recreational in nature and use. Let us make our great commercial waterway free also. I remind the house that the St. Lawrence seaway will still pay for itself many times over in a different way, from the revenue derived from electric power of which it produces a great deal. Let us make its navigational facilities free to the commerce of the world. I urge the government and our committees to prevent the seaway authority increasing our current costs of doing business.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, as a maritimer I think it is foolhardy courage that has impelled me to take part in this debate, because some of my views run contrary to those which have been expressed over and over again this afternoon by those dealing with the problem of tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. But I think I have a suggestion that might solve the problem and I will present it at the end of a very brief contribution to the debate.

First, when I say that I enter this debate with a feeling of foolhardy courage it is because I am a representative from one of the two great seaports on the Atlantic coast, Halifax. I think I can speak for my colleague from Saint John-Albert in the province of New Brunswick as well as my colleague from Halifax in stating that maritimers have some considerable suspicion of the operations of the St. Lawrence seaway as they affect our particular area. We have seen in Saint John and Halifax the shipping season in the wintertime dwindling by weeks with every passing year; yet as maritimers we have to consider the practical effects of raising the tolls on the seaway.

In this connection I would refer first to item No. 48 of government orders which deals with the Canadian livestock feed board, something that seems to have the support of every party in this chamber and which before too many months will no doubt become an actuality. It would be useless to attempt to solve the problems of eastern Canadian livestock producers if at the same time we were to permit the cost of feed to be increased substantially by reason of raising tolls or any other reason. Therefore we do have an economic interest in seeing that the tolls are kept as low as possible.

Second, Mr. Speaker, there are substantial wheat and flour shipments from Halifax and Saint John. Of course most of this grain comes to us through the St. Lawrence seaway. So on the one side there is the problem of a fear by maritimers that the St. Lawrence seaway is draining us, and on the other side there are some very substantial economic reasons why we should support the ideas of all members who have taken part in the debate so far.

Complicating the problem still further from our standpoint is the delay in bringing in a new Railway Act. We in Atlantic Canada are therefore in the dark whether the subvention system will be continued and whether, if continued, it will be of such a size as to be of assistance to us. Finally, in summing up the problems that are running through the head of this particular maritimer I would refer to the fact that we do not want to appear to be parochial or regional in the opinions we present. We do not want all the advantages on our side. We have come here over a long period of time and made requests for help from other parts of Canada and have been accorded reasonably generous treatment. Therefore, as I say, we do not wish to appear always as suppliants forever asking but never willing to budge an inch from our own particular position.

My suggestion, therefore, is twofold: first, that the authority decide at this time to hold the line on the tolls and not increase them. After all, the amount of debt outstanding on the St. Lawrence seaway development is like a mortgage which really can never be paid off; it continues on and on. So that for the present my suggestion—I presume the authority will be reading today's Hansard to get the views of members of parliament—is to hold the line on the tolls. But I would suggest that the authority review them again after we have had a new Railway Act before us and have passed it.

I would also make the suggestion that the whole problem is bedevilled because we have not have spelled out in this country a transportation policy covering seaway, railway and other operations which have application to the economic problems involved here. Until the government grasps this many-sided nettle and comes up with a transportation policy, so necessary to Canada today, I believe that problems such as tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway will continue to cause trouble. I suggest, sir, that if the government comes up with a transportation policy dealing with the St. Lawrence seaway, the railways and the air lines, it should spell out for all parts of Canada something positive which will not set different parts of the country at loggerheads with each other.

In taking part in this debate today I suppose I was motivated by foolhardy courage. In brief, my suggestion is to hold the line on tolls until the new Railway Act is approved and until a transportation policy is developed by the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to say at once that the speech made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) to which this house has just listened is a tribute to his membership and to those qualities which it is so necessary for members of parliament to possess, namely, a desire to be co-operative, to bring together all parts of Canada and to do nothing that will be harmful to any one part of Canada, showing thereby in our policies and actions that whatever we support shall be for Canada as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I compliment him, and I know his views are shared by the other member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) who has expressed similar views which have certainly merited the consideration of the house.

Having said that, I now want to deal in general with the matter before us. I congratulate the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) for moving this motion. It was necessary, it was timely and I think the discussion has been most beneficial to all of us.

I am rather surprised that there are not more ministers in the house on a matter of such importance to Canada. The presence of only three ministers shows a lack of regard for the seriousness of this problem which I feel should have made their presence in the house obligatory.

I now want to refer in general to the circumstances connected with this matter. It goes back quite a while. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) brought this matter to the attention of the house in February and asked what action was going to be taken. Since then various members have asked the same question but have received no information. On March 24 I raised the question, and the answer of the Minister of

> Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in response to a question a day or two ago, and as is required under the agreement with the United States, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has been carrying on discussions with the St. Lawrence Corporation, the United States entity, with regard to a possible revision of the existing tolls. I understand that the parties to this discussion now feel they are fairly close to agreement as to what they will be prepared to recommend to the two governments.

That is quite an amazing admission on the part of the Minister of Transport. However, no agreed recommendations have been made. He then said:

> If an agreed recommendation is made there willl be public hearings in both countries before any final decision is made; and at those public hearings, of course, I expect that all considerations, including the ones referred to by the hon. gentleman, will be gone into.

What is taking place here is that these two authorities seem to have come to an agreement that an increase in tolls is to take place. They have also agreed that certain lock charges are to be imposed. This is a serious matter for Canada. The government of Canada should stand up and be counted in connection with the strong objection that is widely felt in this country against the imposition of any additional tolls. When we were in office we removed the tolls on the Welland canal in 1962. We did that because we felt that the steel industry and other industries would suffer greatly unless everything was done to reduce costs so that these industries might compete in export markets.

As one hon. member said today, this does not affect the United States very much but it does affect Canada. I am not going to go over the arguments that have been advanced but they were generally to the effect that there should be no increase. We in this House of Commons have the right to take the strongest possible objection to the cavalier attitude exhibited by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority in having prejudged what action should be taken, that prejudgment having been clearly revealed in the words of one of its members when speaking in Winnipeg. Surely this is a case in which we in Canada should not be subject to the suggestion of domination by the United States.

I mention that because it is just one element in the case. One hon. member referred to the strong interests in the United States which were opposed to the St. Lawrence seaway and which have not changed. In the last few days we have had further evidence of potential United States interference in Canadian business. I have before me the issue of the Financial Post of May 28. As you know, sir, it is always dated in advance. This is an article by Knowlton Nash headed "Canada Now A Prime U.S. Target In U.S. War On Dollar Drain". I mention it because I think the increase in these tolls is part and parcel of the ever increasing endeavour on the part of the authorities in Washington to control phases of economic development in Canada. The article reads as follows:

> Canada seems to be developing into the No. 1 target in President Johnson's drive for U.S. balance of payment equilibrium.

• (5:00 p.m.)

We have had enough of these guide lines telling Canada how the laws of the United States should be applied to Canadian corporations, subsidiaries of United States firms. Proposed increase in the seaway tolls is just another element in this picture. I believe this problem is increasing because we have a government in office that believes in diplomatically failing to face the issue of Canada's survival as a nation economically strong and independent.

The article goes on to say:

> United States companies operating in Canada are contributing the largest single-country share of improvements in the American balance of payments, and Canada has provided the largest return of United States short-term money from foreign nations.

This is the result of these guide lines. Then, we are told that a new message has gone out to Canadian subsidiaries of United States corporations as to what the United States would like them to do. In a letter to the presidents of the companies participating in a commerce department program, commerce secretary John Connor has outlined what he wants these companies to do in the future. These instructions, although not mandatory, are clear guide lines for United States owned companies in Canada.

This is interference in Canada's economic development. We have a government that sits idly by and refuses to stand up for this country. Ever since the month of February we have been asking for parliament to have the right to outline its views with regard the claim for additional tolls. If it had not been for the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) we would have had no chance to deal with this matter. The attitude taken by the Minister of Transport was that he did not want to prejudge a thing until it was done.

Well, what would have happened had it not been for this debate, and it may happen yet because this government does not pay too much attention to the wishes of parliament, is that after whatever recommendations are made following the hearing the government would simply have gone ahead by order in council and imposed this extra load on industry in general and on western agriculturalists. It was obvious that the recommendation by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority was going to be to increase tolls. This will impose a burden on industrial concerns that are striving to keep costs down, but they cannot do it in the face of action such as this.

I mentioned a letter. Can you imagine a letter being sent to these firms in Canada advising them as follows:

> Take greater care to assure that export sales efforts and export orders receive suitable priorities, even in the face of high domestic demand.
> Make greater effort to bring home overseas earnings of affiliates not needed in the conduct of their business.
> Make careful scrutiny of direct investment plans and postponement of those which are marginal even though permitted within the program formula.
> Make continued effort to borrow abroad to meet foreign investment needs where this is possible and feasible.
> Make continued effort to bring home any short term financial assets which are not reasonably needed for the conduct of business in other countries.
> Make greater use of American flag vessels and air lines.

What is this? The Secretary of Commerce of the United States sends a letter like this to Canadian corporations with United States parentage. Finally, they are advised, where practical, to hold company meetings in the United States rather than abroad. These revelations are to be found in the Nash article to which I made reference. If you ask this government what they are going to do, you get the stock answer that this matter is receiving the most careful and continuing consideration. One does not have to be bilingual to understand what that means. It simply means that nothing is going to be done. I feel that what is happening here in connection with the toll problem is just one more facet of the whole situation.

I should like to know whether or not there was any secret agreement with the United States in connection with this matter. We know that there was an agreement entered into by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), and apparently followed by his successor, which places on the Canadian consumer added costs in order to assist the United States in meeting its balance of payments problem. We will have a deficit of $1½ billion or more this year. If the United States had the same ratio of deficit instead of the deficit it has it would run to $20 billion or more.

I spoke in Montreal to the conference of American editors and newspapermen. I thought it was a fine thing for them to have their meeting in Canada. They listened to the arguments which were advanced and a number of them said to me after I had spoken: These are things about which we do not know. Nothing has been said about the economic situation in Canada. It is time for parliament to speak out. When I was in office I was condemned as anti-American because I dared to say that Canadian policies were to be made in Canada by Canadians. This has been Conservative policy throughout the years and it is the only policy that will preserve the independence of this country.

I resent action being taken by the Secretary of Commerce of the United States in writing such a letter to Canadians, for that is what these corporations are. We welcome foreign investment but we do not want immigrants with capital coming into our country who intend to follow the laws or even regard the laws of the land whence they came.

In so far as the motion today is concerned, I feel that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority should know that we stand opposed to any increase in tolls. There has not been very much said to the contrary. This increase could only detrimentally affect Canada and will affect the United States but little. If perchance the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has already made its decision even while hearing representations, and one does not have to be suspicious to come to that conclusion after the statement made by one of its members in Winnipeg, then the government of Canada should know what is expected of it. It is for this reason that I expected more ministers would have been here on a matter affecting the economy of this country in addition to the minister of manpower, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) and, above all, the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé). I compliment them for being present, but where are the ministers who deal particularly with the economy? They were here for the orders of the day but have not been here since.

This, Mr. Speaker, has been a worth-while debate. It has enabled the House of Commons, in respect of one board which seems to operate in a vacuum and has the idea that nothing is going to be said about it by parliament, to let it know where we stand. The government did everything it could to prevent any discussion of this matter. The various ministers have refused since February to give any undertaking that the house would have any opportunity of discussing the matter before this decision was made.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) opposed this motion on behalf of the government and produced such a specious argument that I think he must have laughed at it himself. It was so convincing that it convinced nobody. I am glad we are having this debate and I am pleased to see that sporadic participation by Liberal members is taking place. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) spoke with the authority of knowledge and was able to quote what he said in April, 1965. It is apparent, Mr. Speaker, that what he said in 1965 has had no influence on the government. I hope some change is made as a result of the debate we have had today.

Hon. John N. Turner (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) who is unavoidably out of the country representing Canada at the independence celebrations of the new member of the commonwealth, Guyana. I must say, in answer to a charge twice raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) about attendance on this side of the house, that I observed when he made the charge how lonely he was in having so few companions on his own front bench in the house to hear a rather impassioned oration from this own lips.

Mr. Winkler: You look kind of lonely yourself.

Mr. Turner: I know how much comfort he would have derived had he been attended upon at the time he made his remarks by the opposition critic on matters of transportation, and how much better his argument as to the attendance of members in this house would have been had he been able to come to parliament with, as we used to say in court, clean hands.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Have you anything to say about the seaway?

Mr. Turner: I listened with great interest to the various representations made by members on all sides of the house, and it was no surprise to me to find a non-partisan view with regard to certain arguments. After all, transport is one of the crucial factors in the economic development of Canada and the subject provokes certain regional conflicts of interest. Certain parts of the country, no matter which political party may represent them at a particular time, may have certain views on a particular aspect of transportation or on the subsidies granted to a particular mode of transportation which may differ from views held in other regions of the country; and it is quite natural that representatives of political parties of whatever stripe they may be would tend to agree on those regional interests.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it struck me as somewhat surprising that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), to use his own term, had the foolhardy courage to speak on the question of tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. I know, as do other members who were in the house when the question of the St. Lawrence seaway was first broached and negotiated, that the traditional attitude of the maritime provinces toward the original negotiation of the treaty and toward the imposition of tolls was adequately set out at the time by the late and highly esteemed member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings who was a member in 1951 and whose son we are now glad to see taking his place in the house.

That speech, Mr. Speaker, is fully set out in Hansard for the second session of 1951, page 1653 and following. I think his view at that time was one which was widely held in the maritime provinces, namely, that the institution of the seaway which would allow ships and sea commerce to penetrate into the interior of the continent might have a certain harmful effect on the commerce of the maritime provinces. As I say, that was the view taken then and, as I understand it, it is a view which is still widely held.

I have no quarrel with that, Mr. Speaker, because on matters of transportation members are entitled to represent the interests of their own localities and to reflect any conflict of interest in transportation rates across the country.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that despite the importance of the subject I regret that this debate was launched this afternoon by the hon. member for Kindersley

(Mr. Cantelon). I am not criticizing the merits of the motion but I am suggesting to him—and I do not in any way wish to comment on your decision, Mr. Speaker—that an adequate opportunity would have been given him, and indeed will be given him and other hon. members, before the standing committee on transport and communications when it discusses the estimates of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): You should not reflect on the Chair.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear that I was in no way casting any reflection on your judgment, which I accept with all the grace I have at my command; but I do suggest to hon. members that under item F, which deals with the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, there will be ample opportunity for members to make their case before the committee.

Mr. Winkler: But after the tolls are raised.

Mr. Turner: I will get to that in a moment too, Mr. Speaker. We had hoped that this debate, with the greatest of respect, could have taken place before that committee. I understand that one of the reasons for extending the committee system was to allow matters like this of great technical import and complication to be discussed by a committee where the facts could be brought before members in more detail. Members from all sections of the house could then question and comment on the basis of more facts than they would necessarily have before them in the House of Commons.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, as we are having a debate let me outline what I understand the state of the proceedings to be. It is my understanding that the two governing authorities with jurisdiction over tolls on the seaway, namely the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority of Canada and the Seaway Development Corporation of the United States, are jointly conducting hearings as to the state of tolls on the seaway system. The Canadian hearings were concluded today shortly before noon. At the Canadian hearings there was a representative of the U.S. Seaway Development Corporation in attendance. The hearings in Chicago before the Seaway Development Corporation of the United States will take place on June 8, 9 and 10. This, I might say, is fully in accord with the provisions of the international treaty of 1959 which sets out, among other things, the authority for the imposition and collection of tolls on the seaway.

Following the hearings and following a study by the two entities having authority over the seaway, a report must be made by July 1 of this year to the governments of the United States and Canada. Each of those governments will then make its own decision either to implement the recommendation of its own representative body, to rescind the recommendation, or to modify it in any way that that government sees fit. If, as a result of governmental decisions on each side of the border, the toll rates are changed, that fact would be confirmed by an exchange of notes. The changed rates would go into effect at the opening of the navigation season in 1967, so that from the point of view of time there cannot be any immediate or urgent problem because this matter will be amply—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member refers to the fact that there is no emergency. He is putting forward that argument despite the ruling made by the Chair that there is an emergency and that this debate is to be considered an emergency debate. With all due deference, I submit that this argument is a reflection on the Chair.

Mr. Turner: With the greatest of respect, I am not commenting on the Chair's decision. I am merely replying to the question raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) a short time ago and by other hon. members with respect to whether there would be an opportunity when the estimates are being discussed before the standing committee on transport and communications to bring up this problem before a decision is finally made.

I am trying to show, on the basis of the timetable set out by the two government bodies, that there should be in the normal course of business ample opportunity for the matter to be raised before that standing committee.

Mr. Cantelon: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he agree that until the minister made his statement this afternoon no statement was made to the house that this would be done?

Mr. Turner: I suggest to the hon. member for Kindersley that the facts are as I have stated with respect to the timetable of proceedings. Because the estimates of the Department of Transport are now before the committee on transport and communications the facts speak for themselves and need no substantiation by any ministerial announcement.

Mr. Douglas: Would the hon. member permit a question? I do not want to interrupt his speech. May I ask him, has he authority to say on behalf of the government, first, that the report and recommmendations of the seaway authority to the Privy Council will be made public before a decision is made and, second, that an opportunity to debate such report and its recommendations will be provided in the House of Commons?

Mr. Turner: At this stage I can only say in answer to that question that the ordinary constitutional procedures will be followed in this case.

Mr. Churchill: What does that mean?

Mr. Turner: The same procedures will be followed as were followed in the past under the former Conservative administration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You must defend yourselves and not the Conservatives.

Mr. Turner: Let me just recite if I may, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the house the legal provisions surrounding these tolls. I suggest to the house that the leeway allowed to the authority and to the government under the present wording of the statute is rather limited. The operative section of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, chapter 242 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, is section 16 which reads:

> The tolls that may be charged by the authority shall be fair and reasonable and designed to provide a revenue sufficient to defray the cost to the authority of its operations in carrying out the purposes for which it is incorporated, which costs shall include
> (a) payments in respect of the interest on amounts borrowed by the authority to carry out such purposes;
> (b) amounts sufficient to amortize the principal of amounts so borrowed over a period not exceeding fifty years; and
> (c) the cost of operating and maintaining the canals and works under the administration of the authority, including all operating costs of the authority and such reserves as may be approved by the minister.

Mr. Douglas: Read section 15 also.

Mr. Turner: Section 15, with the greatest of respect to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, does not apply. It is section 17 which applies to international agreements. I am suggesting to the house in any event that the operative section of the act is section 16 which makes it mandatory on the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to charge tolls at a rate sufficient to cover its operating expenses as defined within the section.

Mr. Douglas: What about if you act under section 15?

Mr. Turner: I admit there is an argument that in strictly technical terms section 16 would not apply to tolls enacted pursuant to a treaty between the United States and Canada. That treaty may fall under section 17 which reads as follows:

> Where the works have been constructed and are maintained and operated by the authority to provide, in conjunction with works undertaken by an appropriate authority in the United States, the deep waterway mentioned in section 10, tolls may be established pursuant to sections 15 and 16 or by agreement between Canada and the United States and, in the event of such an agreement, shall be charged by the authority in accordance with directions given by the governor in council.

There is a question whether section 16, providing for the sufficiency of tolls to cover operating expenses, would apply to an international treaty consummated under section 17. On the other hand, section 17 does say that tolls may be established pursuant to sections 15 and 16, thus bringing this question within the principle accepted in section 16. Indeed, the Auditor General of Canada has always interpreted that to be the case.

I refer hon. members to the 1964 annual report of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. I also refer to the Auditor General's report of 1964 in which, at page 121 the principle is set out that the Auditor General followed. He points out that section 16 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act requires that the tolls to be charged by the authority shall be fair and reasonable and designed to provide a revenue sufficient to defray the cost to the authority of its operations in carrying out the purposes for which it is incorporated, which costs shall include—and the section is recited. In other words, the Auditor General of Canada, in his analysis of the financial statements of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, has assumed that section 16 applies and that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has a mandatory duty under a statute of Canada to so adjust its tolls as to make it self-sufficient.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister permit a question? In his interesting analysis does he imply that if the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority recommends a toll increase in order to meet its responsibilities under the statute, which interpretation at the moment I am not accepting as correct, the cabinet has to follow the recommendation of the authority?

Mr. Turner: I am not suggesting that in any way whatsoever, Mr. Speaker. I am suggesting that the authority is under an obligation imposed on it by statute to adjust its tolls and that the government of Canada, this house, indeed, must take cognizance of the legislation under which the authority was set up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not accepting the minister's interpretation at the moment but, if his interpretation is correct, do his last remarks indicate that whatever the recommendations of the authority may be the government is merely an automaton and must pass an order in council accordingly regardless of the feeling of parliament?

Mr. Turner: That is in no way a conclusion to be drawn from any statement I have made. The government will, of course, be guided by what has been said at the public hearings, by what the authority recommends to it, and by the climate of public opinion and the facts as established before any committee of this house.

In reply to the right hon. gentleman I think I can do no better than refer to the words of a former minister of transport, now the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees). That hon. gentleman, when he was minister of transport in 1958, advanced the argument I am now advancing in connection with the proposed tolls.

I quote now from Hansard of 1958, volume II, page 1382:

> The suggested tolls, according to the tolls committees, should be sufficient to meet all financial requirements as the anticipated traffic develops. It is believed by the members of the tolls committees that the revenue derived will provide for the annual costs of operation and maintenance of the new seaway facilities and of the Welland canal, and meet interest charges and amortize borrowed moneys over a period covering the next 50 years.

In other words, when the right hon. gentleman was prime minister of this country his own minister of transport took the position I am taking today.

[Mr. Turner.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no. That interpretation is not the correct one.

Mr. Turner: Well, I simply cite his words.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister, if I may, whether he can show me, in any part of what was said by the then minister of transport, a statement that the government must carry out the recommendations of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and increase the tolls should that body so recommend. Does the hon. gentleman suggest the minister said that?

Mr. Turner: Let me say in reply to the right hon. gentleman that the opposition of that day, now sitting on this side of the house, took the position that the proper recourse might have been to allow section 15 of the statute to operate, namely, that there should be the right of appeal to the Board of Transport Commissioners from any decision affecting tolls. In reply to a question by Mr. Chevrier, who was then the opposition critic on transport, the minister of transport of that day, now the hon. member for Northumberland, said, as found on page 1507 of Hansard for 1958, volume II:

> Section 15 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act provides, among other things, that the final tariff and any amendments shall be filed with the Board of Transport Commissioners and any person may, at any time, file a complaint alleging unjust discrimination in the tariff.

In other words, it was contemplated that appeals might be made to the Board of Transport Commissioners when this matter was under discussion in the house at a time when the right hon. gentleman was the head of the government.

This was not done. Instead, the treaty provided for a direct reference from the authority to the government rather than the filing of a tariff with the Board of Transport Commissioners and provision for public hearings protesting against any change in the rates at that stage. The position this party took at that time was that here should have been an avenue of appeal. But this view was rejected by the government of the day. I am reciting what the procedure has been ever since then.

The seaway authority in its best judgment, as I interpret it, on the basis of its duty under the statute, believes that rates should be raised an average of about 10 per cent. This is established in the document which announces the public hearings. The right hon. member has suggested, as have other hon.

members, that the authority prejudged the case in suggesting what the rate should be.

I think that is hardly a fair criticism because under the terms of recommendation six of the treaty, the authority as one of the advisory bodies contemplated must advise its government what the rates and tolls should be. In other words, the authority has a duty under the treaty to suggest what the tolls should be prior to the public hearings. This does not mean that the authority must take an inflexible attitude following the representations made on the Canadian side or when these measures are discussed on the United States' side in Chicago on June 8 and 9.

I wish to say also that the argument the right hon. gentleman used as a means of indicating that this was just another example of knuckling under to the Americans could not be more specious. There are no secret agreements. I am dealing with a public treaty which sets out the procedure clearly. Any raising of tolls, if one were to take place, would be of advantage to Canada in terms of revenue because the division of the tolls ensures that 71 per cent would go to the Canadian authority and 29 per cent to the United States corporation. In other words, any revenue derived from the raising of tolls goes primarily to the Canadian authority. So the inference that the issue is between the United States and Canada, and that influence is coming from the United States side of the border is completely irrelevant within the terms of the treaty.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Turner: I am pointing out that the prior benefit in terms of revenue goes to the Canadian side. I mention this merely because the right hon. gentleman brought it into his argument. I say again that this procedure is firmly established in a public international treaty.

I have set out the nature of the statutory authority and what the responsibility of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority under the statute is. The freedom of operation enjoyed by the authority is to a large extent limited. But the issue which will have to be faced is this: are we to maintain the principle set forth in section 16 of the act, namely, that the authority should be self-sustaining in terms of meeting its own costs or is this theory of self-sufficiency to be abandoned, with tolls no longer covering the cost of operating the seaway? The seaway authority has made it clear that it has failed to earn sufficient revenue to meet its capital debt. It owes $354,800,000 including interest and deferred interest. Its United States partner has a debt of $141,700,000. For this reason the seaway authority estimated it would have to increase its revenues by raising tolls in order to meet its responsibilities under the statute.

I quite recognize that the government will have to make a decision within the statutory climate I have described with regard to whether these tolls should still be sufficient to cover the operating expenses of the seaway. We were invited by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) to take serious cognizance of the situation. I can undertake on behalf of the government that we will.

It may be that Canada should abandon the principle of recovering the costs of the seaway, but I think all hon. members should be aware of what the consequences would be in terms of an imbalance in the revenues of competing transportation media, such as railways and trucks, and as between the various regions, the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and the west. The consequences of abandoning this principle would have effects on every region in the country and on every type of competing media.

The transportation systems, as I have said, are the umbilical line holding this country together, this country which has the major portion of its population stretching along a region about 100 miles deep parallel with the United States. The consequences of tolls and transportation charges and, on the other hand, of transportation subsidies have widespread ramifications, affecting not only the immediate localities in the region of the seaway and the great producing areas of the west but every area of the country.

I am sure the government will take cognizance of what was said at the public hearings, of what was said here in debate this afternoon, and of what I hope will be adduced by way of evidence before the committee on transportation and communications. With that the government rests its case for the moment, and I can do no better than recite precedents of the previous government which took a similar attitude.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all. The interpretation that was made was wrong.

Mr. Turner: I suggest, until parliament decides differently on the principle it has applied to the St. Lawrence seaway since its installation in 1958, that we are bound by certain precedents.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the hon. gentleman one more question? In view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) is completely removed from politics and comes from an area which has the greatest ship traffic in all the world, does the minister think he could soften his heart in this regard and assure that there will be no increase in tolls?

Mr. Turner: In answer to that, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the legislation and energies of this government have made Windsor one of the most prosperous and important commercial centres in the country, and I am sure the people there are very happy with the way they are represented by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member for Rosthern wishes to ask a question?

Mr. Nasserden: No, I wish to speak.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), who spoke earlier, I should like to say at once that my views are those of moderation. We understand the problem that has been raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon). We understand the ramifications, direct effects and implications of an increase in the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. We understand them from the point of view of maritimers, of people who have the honour to represent one of the great ports of the world.

As suggested earlier by the senior member for Halifax, the whole matter before us is simply symptomatic of the lack of clearly defined national transportation policies. We find this lack with regard to our rail facilities. There is no need for me to underline the absence of a regional air policy. Now we are getting down to the point where we have no agreement on our seaway policy. We have conflict. We have positions set up that are at once at odds and in conflict with regional interests.

Being from Halifax I must say that it might be pleasant to have a substantial increase in the tolls on the seaway. This would have the happy and beneficial effect of diverting substantial tonnage to Halifax which we in turn could transship by rail and truck to the rest of Canada, particularly to those areas that lie west of the St. Lawrence seaway system.

It would be very easy to stand up and support the declared intention of the seaway authority but, in response to a sense of fairness to all Canada and to those who must use the seaway, suffice it to say that I trust the government will act in a manner that is going to be most beneficial to all Canadians and at the same time will not in any way further retard our position in Halifax as a national port. I think the same can be said for Saint John because their problems are identical with ours.

The present difficulty appears to be the traditional one of any business that gets itself into trouble by owing more money than incoming revenues will meet.

In the "Notes to Financial Statements" contained in the St. Lawrence Seaway Annual Report for 1964, paragraph 4 on page 14 states:

> In accordance with the provisions of order in council PC 1964-2036 of December 23, 1964, the principal amount of interest-bearing loans received under section 25 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act to finance construction of the seaway, together with interest previously deferred and all other interest now accrued or accruing up to December 31, 1966, is to be repaid, together with current interest thereon, in 43 equal annual instalments commencing December 31, 1967.

The suggestion has already been alluded to by the acting minister that perhaps consideration should be given to forgetting about the capital cost of the seaway. He referred to the effects that this would have, and quite rightly so. There would be immediate and substantial effects, some of them not very enjoyable to those upon whom they would react.

The minister also referred to section 16. In the context of section 16 it is my thought that no matter how much lip service we pay to the capital debt of the seaway I very much doubt that it will ever be retired. Having this in the back of our minds perhaps one solution to the problem might be for the government to look again at section 16 of chapter 242 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. Section 16(b) reads as follows:

> Amounts sufficient to amortize the principal of amounts so borrowed over a period not exceeding 50 years.

If I am in business and I buy a piece of equipment it might be useful to write off that piece of equipment quickly if I have made a lot of money. But I am in the air transportation business and would prefer to write things off over a long period of time in order to reduce the annual outflow of capital funds. Why could the government not amend this statute and any other agreement, international or otherwise, consequent upon it in order to extend the amortization period to 75 years and thus reduce the outgo of funds? Possibly the period might have to be 100 years. Why should one or two generations of Canadians bear the cost of something which is going to last in all likelihood for 1,000 years? I see nothing intrinsically wrong with spreading it over four or five generations. As I mentioned earlier, I am not at all convinced we will ever retire the debt. So wrong were the experts at the outset in their estimate of the volume of the traffic which would use the seaway that I now doubt anyone who would suggest that it is possible to retire the debt.

I do not know whether this would work but it seems to me, if there is a real case to be made against increased tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway, that notwithstanding the debatable question of whether or not the seaway must be self-sufficient the effect of extending the period would be such that it would resolve the present controversy. I believe the western point of view is a very valid one which cannot be overlooked at the expense of the entire region of Canada lying west of the system. It would be a procedure which would not necessarily be warmly welcomed by those people in the maritimes who must derive their livelihood from the ports, but on the other hand I am sure it would be a procedure which would not be vigorously opposed.

In the maritimes, particularly in Halifax, we rapidly are coming to the point of view that we no longer are apt to rise with a cudgel in our hands every time someone suggests some proposition which might reflect on the well-being of Halifax and Saint John. If an icebreaker goes to work on the St. Lawrence we protest, and I think with some justification, but what concerns us is whether the government is doing this to keep the river open or to open up channels for shipping. What we question is the sincerity of the government sometimes in paying lip service to the ports of Halifax and Saint John. If the government means to keep the river open, let them keep it open and tell us they are going to do it. I am sure they will then find us co-operative.

I know that the western members will appreciate that we are not out to belittle their position. Again I say that I recognize the impact of substantial increases in the tolls on the movement of their grain, but on the other hand I would remind them and the government that such a proposal would provide a wonderful opportunity for us to stand up and say: By all means go ahead and do it. However, this would be taking away from one sector of the economy and one region of the country at the expense of another area. This we are not about to do.

Times have changed. We are prepared to accept our role in Halifax and Saint John as east coast ports. In Halifax we now are coming to a point of view where we recognize that our great potential and our great future lie in the depth of our water. In ten years time I suggest it will matter not whether there are any tolls on the seaway. With the new thinking and new concept in respect of boats for the movement of our products and goods, today we are talking in terms of 150,000-ton ships or 300,000-ton ships. Indeed, I understand that some of the oil companies and other concerns in the world are now thinking seriously in terms of 500,000-ton ships. It is only a matter of time before general cargo will be carried around the world in vessels which not only will present no problem to us in Halifax in relation to the seaway but which indeed will not be able to get above Quebec.

If you want to know what our argument will be for the next 300 years, it will not be whether the seaway is doing anything to contribute to the well-being of Halifax and Saint John but rather it will be against any substantial dredging program and opening up of the seaway to accommodate the deep sea shipping that we hope to service in the future.

I should like to leave the one suggestion with the acting minister that perhaps he should have his colleagues look into the possibility and feasibility of extending the period of amortization from 50 to either 75 or 100 years.

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. As most members are quite aware the Welland canal is in the riding of Lincoln and naturally is of great economic importance to our area. I should like to add my voice in opposition to the recommendation of the seaway authority for higher tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway from Montreal to lake Ontario and the imposition of new lockage charges on the Welland ship canal. In fact, I feel that the lower the tolls the less damage will be inflicted on the Canadian economy. The seaway has been a major contributor to the high level of business activity enjoyed in Canada in recent years from one coast to the other. I believe that an increase of more than 10 per cent for the use of the St. Lawrence seaway is not, as has been stated, a moderate one. This certainly would initiate a move toward higher prices. The proposed increase in the seaway and Welland canal charges would encourage the diversion of export grain cargoes from Canadian St. Lawrence ports to Atlantic coast and gulf ports served by rail. Similarly I feel it would encourage the diversion of Canadian iron ore from Labrador to the United States Atlantic ports and shipment from there by rail.

Any increase in seaway tolls would be certain to increase the competitive difficulty of the iron ore producers in the lower St. Lawrence valley. Any resulting decline in upbound movement through the seaway would reflect indirectly on the shipping rates which would have to be charged for moving the grain downbound. Speaking in a local sense, there is much captive industry along the seaway and the Welland canal and many industries in my area need a toll free system in order to survive.

I support the view that the recommended toll increases and user charges in respect of the St. Lawrence seaway and the Welland canal respectively should not be adopted. I feel that the tolls currently applied should be abolished and we should return to the historic free situation which existed until 1960.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman): Immigration —Recognition of professional qualifications of Europeans; the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette): Dominion-provincial relations—Suggested establishment of office of information; the hon. member for Victoria, Ontario (Mr. Scott): Industry—Beaverton, Ont.—closing of auto parts plant.

It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions for production of papers.

• (6:00 p.m.)

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—CONCURRENCE IN EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could have leave of the house to revert to motions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house give unanimous consent to enable the hon. member to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gray: I should like to present at this time the eighth report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, in English and in French, and if the house is willing to give its consent I should like to move concurrence in the report at this time. If I might have the consent of the house I would be prepared to move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Comtois):

That the eighth report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, presented this day, be now concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there unanimous consent to enable the hon. member to present this motion?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman whether this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. Gray: It is a unanimous report of the committee and it is based on a report of the steering committee which was unanimously adopted in the committee itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, now that we are back on motions I should like to move, seconded by Mr. Walker:

That the first and second reports of the standing committee on national defence, presented to the house on Tuesday, May 17, be now concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house give leave to the hon. member to present this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ALBERTA ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports, records or documents indicating the places, dates, and times of public hearings held by the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta and the members of the commission and staff attending each hearing; for a copy of the transcript of the proceedings of each hearing; for a return of the record of each hearing if no transcript was made; for the memorandum provided to members of the commission who were absent from any meeting; and for the résumé or other document prepared by the commission or any of its members setting out the reasons for changes made in the electoral boundaries for Alberta.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion was transferred for debate. In brief we are asking for a copy of the reports, records and other documents in reference to public hearings held by the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta. This matter was before the house yesterday when the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) outlined the situation and said that no minister was answerable to the house as far as the commission was concerned. The Secretary of State said that the commission was set up as a creature of law and therefore no one was responsible for giving us this information with regard to the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

It is rather surprising that after an act has been passed setting up these commissions to hold public hearings the Secretary of State should, as a minister of the crown take the position at this stage that we have created a creature by statute which is not responsible in any way to parliament. We are interested in obtaining the reports and records of these public hearings in order to ascertain what material was before the commission when it decided to create the constituency of Rocky Mountain which stretches 700 to 800 miles from north to south. We wish to ascertain what material the commission had before it in arriving at such a decision. I think all hon. members understand the reason for the minister referring this matter for debate. It is that by the time the debate is completed the report of the commission will have arrived confirming once and for all the boundaries so far as Alberta is concerned.

If this material had been before us at the time we were debating this matter, and according to the statute we had the right to debate it before the report was sent back for final disposition by the commission, we would have been able to come to grips with the matter and present a far better argument in this respect. All members from the province of Alberta, not only the Conservatives but the Social Crediters, took the position that the constituency of Rocky Mountain put the constituency map out of proportion so far as Alberta was concerned. We also took the position that Alberta was deserving of two more constituencies. We said that the population had risen in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton and that if you added the populations of Calgary South and Calgary North and divided this figure by three you would come up with a proper population formula. With regard to Edmonton we said that if you added the populations of the three constituencies and divided this figure by four you would come up with the proper formula so far as population was concerned. All the other constituencies fitted into the population formula and it was our opinion that this suggestion would keep together people with common interests and would not disrupt the constituency map.

We wanted to find out what was contained in the report and what were the recommendations of the representation commissioner. We wanted to find out if the material laid before the commission was completely ignored and it came to its own conclusion in this respect. Surely we are entitled to this information. This is an appalling, shocking situation. I wish some of the ministers were on this side of the house because I should like to have seen their reaction if we as the government had taken the position that no minister of the crown was responsible for giving this information to the house.

The first question that comes to mind is, what are they trying to hide? What is so secret about it? We set up independent commissions so we would have an independent redistribution, but we could not even get the facts in order to debate this issue intelligently prior to the report being sent back to the commission. We do not have the facts even at this stage.

So far as I am concerned the minister has taken an untenable position in referring this matter of debate and has used the rules of the House of Commons to slough it off so that by the time the question is debated the final report will have been sent back to the house and the information contained therein will be useless to us. It would be useless to us even if received at this late stage. That is our position, Mr. Speaker. I do not think there is precedent anywhere to the effect that a minister of the crown is not answerable to the house for the actions of this commission. The minister's name is mentioned in the act and the minister is responsible for its administration and has certain responsibilities so far as the commission is concerned. Yet she has refused to give us this information.

• (6:10 p.m.)

She does not blame herself. She blames the representation commissioner who advised her what the law was and she accepts his view. She put herself in a ridiculous position. I am not going to take any more time of the house. That is our position. We think it is appalling that a minister of the crown would take such a stand. There are other members on this side and maybe some members on the other side who may want to say something. I have come to grips with the problem. So far as I am concerned the minister should give us the information so that we can look at it even at this late date, and the debate should be voluntarily adjourned.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I followed with interest the remarks made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). He is requesting that an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports, records or documents, minutes, etc., concerning the hearings of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta was established under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, 13, Elizabeth II, chapter 31.

That commission, duly constituted, submitted its report last December 13, as stipulated in section 12 of the act. It is obvious that this report does not please the hon. member. I think that he hopes to get a copy of the various documents, used by the commission to find out the reasons, factors or motives which might have inspired the commission's decision. That is a commendable objective. However, the house, and I say this quite plainly, does not have the authority to order the commission to file those documents.

> Each commission shall complete its report not later than one year after the receipt by the chairman from the representation commissioner of the copy of the return referred to in section 11, and upon the completion of such report shall cause two certified copies thereof to be transmitted to the representation commissioner.

Therefore, that section clearly stipulates that the commission must report to the commissioner.

Moreover, section 19 of the same act says:

> Upon receiving the certified copies referred to in section 18 of the report of any commission, the representation commissioner shall transmit one of the copies thereof to the Speaker who shall, subject to subsection (2), cause such copy to be laid before the House of Commons forthwith upon its receipt by him if Parliament is then sitting, or if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first five days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

And subsection (2) of section 19 says:

> (2) Where the copy referred to in subsection (1) of the report of any commission for a province is received by the Speaker during an interval between two sessions of parliament, the Speaker shall forthwith cause the same to be published in the Canada Gazette and a copy of the said Canada Gazette to be sent by mail to each of the members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in that province.

That shows, Mr. Speaker, that the commissioner must submit his report to the Speaker who, in turn, must table it in the house.

Therefore, that commission is not in the same position as the C.B.C. or C.N.R. or any other crown corporation.

Besides, the precedent has already been set, and by none other than the leader of the hon. member who has just spoken, that is the former prime minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), as reported on page 1389 of Hansard, for June 18, 1958

It was question No. 17 put by Mr. Fisher:

> 1. What value and percentage of the grants of Canada Council awarded to universities in the last operational year went for residences or dormitories?
> 2. Is it a requirement set by Canada Council that such residences contain a library?
> 3. If so, what requirements are there as to size, type of bookstock and catalogue facilities?
> 4. Has Canada Council a classification of the kind of university capital expenditures to which it will consider awarding grants?
> 5. If so, what is the classification?

Mr. Speaker, I can quote the complete answer given by the then prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition, which clearly creates a precedent. Here is his answer:

> Mr. Speaker, these questions have to do with the Canada Council. Last autumn, on November 27, a question was asked by the hon. gentleman respecting the Canada Council and I refer to the answer appearing in Hansard at page 1558, where these words in particular are found:
> Paragraph 23 of the act clearly specifies the manner in which the council is to report to parliament annually.
> I should like to remind the hon. gentleman that when he asked that question last fall concerning the Canada Council it was pointed out that the council is not an agent of Her Majesty and that the Canada Council Act clearly specifies the manner in which the council is to report to parliament annually. The hon. member communicated with my office in order to ascertain how the information that he desires to secure might be procurable. I felt that it would be possible to make the request for the information to the council and for the council to be able to furnish it. However, the government does not have in its records the information requested, nor does it consider that it has the power to request information from the council other than that which will appear in the annual report.

It is therefore clear that the then prime minister refused to insist upon an answer from the Canada Council, because the latter is not an agent of Her Majesty and it must report to the house in a certain manner.

However, section 23 of the Canada Council Act reads as follows:

> The chairman of the council shall, within three months after the termination of each fiscal year, submit to the member of the Queen's privy council for Canada designated by the governor in council for the purpose a report of all proceedings under this act for that fiscal year, including the financial statements of the council, and the auditor general's report thereon, and the member so designated shall cause such reports to be laid before parliament within fifteen days after the receipt thereof or, if parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that parliament is sitting and provision shall be made for a review thereof by parliament.

Consequently, even if the Canada Council Act requires the council to report to the government through a minister, the then prime minister refused to demand the information from the council.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is all the more true as far as the Electoral Boundaries Commission is concerned; it is not in any way required to report to parliament through a minister. It must therefore be concluded that the government does not have and cannot demand from the commission the information supplied to the Speaker by the representation commissioner. The only information the government is in a position to require of the commission, as I have said, is information already in the hands of the members of the house, and which has been supplied to the Speaker by the representation commissioner.

On the other hand, it may be that some information pertaining to the operations of the commission are already in the hands of the government or of various government departments. I suggest that such information, if any, should be made available to the members.

In brief, the government is not empowered, does not have the authority to demand from the Alberta commission or from any other Electoral Boundaries Commission, any information other than that already turned over to the Speaker and which is already in the hands of the members.

[English]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to follow the interesting argument presented by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé). While his argument may have been logical in one sense I submit that the whole of it was based on a false premise inasmuch as he implied that the resolution says something which it does not. The notice of motion asks that an order of the house do issue for certain documents. It does not request that the government do anything. If it were a request to the government to table documents not in the possession of the government, I think his argument would then have some merit.

I make this comment because I listened to the earlier discussion that took place on this subject between the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I felt at the time, and this is really what I am rising to say, that the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West was very well taken. Even granting the argument of the Secretary of State that the members of the government do not have authority under the act to require the Boundaries Commission to provide these documents, these bodies are set up by an act of this parliament and are responsible to parliament. If we deem it advisable to require the tabling of certain documents, then in my view we are within our rights in so requesting.

Having said that, I feel I must add that perhaps what we have here is what one might call an unprovided for case. In other words, if at the time the legislation was before the house we had had the foresight to realize that such a request might be made, we could have made provision for it in the legislation. We should have required that the commissions maintain the kind of records requested in this motion. Since we did not do that, although we are quite within our rights in making such a request I think it is inadvisable that we should seek to require the commission to do something which we did not anticipate in the legislation. In other words, as I understand the legislation all that was required was for the commissions to submit their findings to this house in respect of the proposed redistribution of constituency boundaries.

It is for that reason only, Mr. Speaker, that I do not feel I can support the motion. At the same time I think that any argument advanced by members of the government or by any other hon. member that it is not within the power of parliament to make this request, is not founded on fact. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) has pointed out that he and some of his colleagues from Alberta are concerned about getting more information on what appears to them to be a rather mysterious proceeding on the part of the commission in that province in the establishment of a certain constituency. Perhaps consideration should be given to some amendment of the act which would clarify this situation. Then, if it is desired by parliament, certain records and certain forms could be kept by the commissions in respect of their hearings. In addition, and this pertains to the point raised by the Secretary of State, if we are going to do that perhaps it might be desirable also to spell out in the amendment the channel by which such documents would be laid before parliament.

My own feeling is that if any such amendment were being considered by parliament, in view of the fact that these commissions are not bodies responsible in any way to the government of the day it would be more appropriate perhaps that the channel be through His Honour the Speaker rather than through a particular member of the government. I feel that in a sense these bodies are different from any other. I simply throw out this suggestion, although I can see no real obstacle to parliament selecting the Secretary of State as the channel of communication with commissions on matters of this kind. As I say, Mr. Speaker, while I agree we are within our rights I for one do not feel it desirable that we pass a motion at this time to do what is requested.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have listened with interest, Mr. Speaker, to the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé) and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). I feel that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has adopted a bit of a humpty-dumpty attitude. I think if he examines the resolution he will find that some of the arguments he has advanced against the resolution would support the terms of the resolution. This motion does not directly order the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) to produce any documents. It does not order the government to produce any documents. It does not order Mr. Speaker to produce any documents. It does not name any particular person. However, I would challenge anyone to assert that this house does not have legal authority to require the production of certain documents.

This house has not created any celestial body beyond the reach of a resolution of this house regarding any of the documents of the house. It has not been provided for in the statute that such production will not be the case. Therefore I find it most astonishing that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska fell back—and this is a cardinal error for him as a lawyer—on a precedent in a matter that is totally different. He knows better than to cite the precedent of a case that is not on all fours with the present case. For that simple reason his argument falls to the ground.

The government is not being asked to do anything in particular as a result of this resolution. This resolution had its origin in two questions which I put on the order paper early this session and which the government, through the Secretary of State, delayed inordinately in answering, finally citing by way of reply the Canada Council precedent. That was a very arguable matter.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State was asked to reply to two questions, she being the normal channel for inquiries of this sort to be made in the house. It is not an inquiry which should be made of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or of any other minister. The reply may be a composite one and therefore comes through the Secretary of State who is the normal channel.

In further fact, it is improper to ask a question, whether oral or written, of Mr. Speaker. Therefore the other argument that was advanced to the effect that this information should be directed through Mr. Speaker is wrong. It is contrary to the rules of this house.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Lambert: I will in a moment. It is wrong to say that we must act through Mr. Speaker. Therefore hon. members must have recourse to the only channel through which they may act, and this recourse was had. A reply was given. Frankly, I confess I received an informal intimation that the information was available and that if the request were put in the form of a notice of motion for production of papers there would be compliance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, low and behold I find that the Secretary of State, though she was not bound by the informal information, about which I make no suggestion—I do not even suggest it emanated from her department—taking this course. I say to her that it is not the wish or the desire of the representation commissioner which shall be binding in this matter. We are asking through the medium of this resolution to have an order of this house made that certain documents shall be produced. There is no official or commission in existence in this country, Mr. Speaker, which can oppose or deny an order of this house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us see what the motion seeks. It seeks what is a matter of public information—the places, dates and times of public hearings held by the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta. The commission proposed that it should hold certain sittings. We are interested in finding out whether they did hold those sittings.

There is also the question of which members of the commission attended which hearings. After all, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) pays through the Treasury Board the members of the commissions, and to that extent we exercise control. If we are to authorize payment, since the commissioners are being paid on an attendance basis this house is therefore entitled to know who attended where and when.

We should like a copy of the transcript of the proceedings of each hearing. That would have been most pertinent to the last debate held regarding these commissions. But no, the government saw fit to delay the matter and delay it inexcusably. If no transcript were made, which is conceivable, then what were the minutes which were taken? Was there a sort of votes and proceedings of the hearings?

We should also like to know what advice was given. What information was provided any members of the commission who were absent from the hearings? We know that certain commissioners were absent. One of the commissioners in Alberta unfortunately had a rather serious heart attack part way through the hearings, and I would be interested to know whether he participated in the sessions in which they drew up the initial report. I would also be most interested to know whether he will sit during the present deliberations.

Another question which might be asked is whether the representation commissioner attended the various hearings and, if so, how many. These factors apply to Alberta and to every other province.

Without conducting a witch hunt with regard to this resolution, according to the Representation Act certain constituencies were drawn up in this country. Commissions were set up to amend the boundaries of those constituencies. These commissions are under the chairmanship of a superior court judge. Logically it is mandatory that he who would propose change must justify the change. These commission reports do propose changes. Surely to goodness the public of Canada, for whom we here are the spokesmen, are entitled to know the commissioners' proposals for certain changes. They have not been given an absolute mandate from on high to play ducks and drakes or tic-tac-toe across the map of this country and then to tell the people of Canada: we propose changes, you prove now that we are wrong, the burden is on you. This is not the purport of this legislation, and I believe that I would get general agreement in this regard from both sides of the house.

The legislation sets out the principles upon which redistribution is to take place. But what this house is entitled to know and what the people of Canada are entitled to know is whether these principles were followed. If so, why? If not, why not? The act does not give dictatorial powers to any commission which would render them not subject to justification. Certainly the people of Canada, whose spokesmen we are, are entitled to receive something better than they have received.

I am using my own province as a vehicle for this determination. It applies equally to all provinces. The results of the recent debate in this regard and the number of objections —there is a whole folio of them—with regard to almost every province indicate that there is a great malaise with respect to the reports. In some provinces, there is a reasonable measure of agreement. The commissions in those provinces are to be congratulated. Perhaps their problems were not quite so severe. But in other provinces—well, I will moderate my language and contain myself in my description of the results.

I repeat, in this particular motion there is no direction that the government shall provide anything. But an order of this house is sought to do certain things and whoever is responsible must provide what this house asks for. This is not to be some sort of Gaston and Alphonse performance. These documents and records exist. We must therefore have an affirmative reply.

I know that other hon. members wish to address themselves to this motion and I conclude by supporting most strongly the motion put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am very fortunate that the previous speaker was the second and not the third to speak because he might have talked this matter out. I was glad to hear a good presentation of a Conservative viewpoint and I must say that in part I agree with much that the hon. member who preceded me said. I agree that the analogy used by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé) was not on all fours with what is before us but in my opinion it is nevertheless relevant. As hon. members versed in the law know, a judgment by a good judge is a precedent to follow. Such a judgment or opinion becomes an authority. I am sure that hon. members will not mind my quoting former prime ministers of this country because they are very good authority. I refer to Hansard for the 1957-58 session, page 1559. On that page, as on the previous page, there are slightly different authoritative statements.

In so far as these questions are concerned, we do not have in the records the information requested, and we have no power to direct the council to furnish that information. It will be recalled that when the now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) moved the resolution he emphasized this aspect of the legislation, and stressed that the council should be made as free as possible of possible government interference.

[Mr. Lambert.]

This obviously must be good authority because it refers to two previous prime ministers.

As was pointed out by the previous speaker, many provinces and many hon. members are dissatisfied with things as they are. However, as was rightfully pointed out by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) I think that more desirable ways than that proposed are available to correct this situation.

We have set up such commissions before. We went into this with our eyes open. It is certainly clear that the government has no authority in this field. It has also been pointed out that perhaps the analogy drawn may not be on all fours—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is he aware that this motion contains no order to the government?

Mr. Cashin: I agree with that. I merely say that the analogies which have been drawn are not on all fours with the present situation. The first opposition speaker gave the impression that he was not aware of the legitimate use of analogies. I think we all agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that what is proposed is something that the government cannot do. As an alternative it is suggested that the house still has the right to pass this motion and that it in no way reflects on the government or anybody else. This I think is correct. Technically such an action could be taken.

Nevertheless, in view of the difference existing between such commissions as contemplated here and crown corporations, a difference that has been acknowledged by two former prime ministers, it seems to me that this motion affects members of parliament personally.

We must be careful not to do the wrong thing. If we were dealing with the Canada Council, to which a previous speaker on the government side referred, the government would have no authority to do anything but pass on the report. To do anything else, to go into greater detail, would be an undue interference with an independent commission.

In this country many people may feel they have been wronged in not receiving a grant when they have made application to the Canada Council. I know in my constituency, as in other constituencies, were the motion of the hon. member for Bow River to carry they would have the right to look into such questions. A great many ramifications could flow from such a motion. I think this motion ought to be debated and looked into thoroughly.

I realize that when I refer to and perhaps adopt Conservative philosophy as propounded by the hon. member for Edmonton West it may be somewhat unusual. The hon. member said that he who proposes change must give a good and logical explanation for such change. In fact, the hon. member is proposing change because he is proposing that in our dealings with independent commissions we establish a difference between the Electoral Boundaries Commission and say the Canada Council.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, no.

Mr. Cashin: It is a change.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Read the Canada Council Act.

Mr. Cashin: The hon. gentleman must have read the words of his own leader when he said that the government could not provide the information that was sought at that time. Section 23 of the act then referred to by the right hon. gentleman is similar to section 10 in the act we are now discussing. In that sense this is a completely analogous situation. The hon. member should be cautious about any change just as he would have cautioned his government against any change.

We were happy to listen to the hon. member for Edmonton West. We cannot really listen to the hon. member for Bow River when he advances arguments different from those advanced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I submit that one cannot arrive at one position with respect to the Canada Council and at another with regard to the body affected by this motion.

There is an analogy here. We passed this legislation with our eyes open and it is a little early to say that we are not satisfied with the job we did. In some of these areas I believe certain things were done which would not have been done had redistribution been carried out by members of parliament.

Redistribution is never popular among members of parliament. But that is not the issue. The issue is whether we should now try to change the authority which has been given and enforce by means of a motion something which was not put in the original act. If the example given by the previous speaker is at all valid we need to examine the right of parliament to pass such a motion as this one. Before we alter our approach to independent commissions we should, as suggested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), give the entire question more thought.

Underlying this motion is a certain dissatisfaction. I do not entirely disagree with the hon. member; it is a matter of individual judgment. But we all realized when this matter was decided that the machinery used could lead to unpleasant or illogical results. This is something we have to take together with the package. I would suggest that the hon. member for Edmonton West should follow his own advice and make a more logical argument before he proposes to make a change or else, like Humpty Dumpty, he too may fall.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my inferiority complex comes to the fore when I see so many lawyers taking part in a debate. I do not belong to the legal profession as does the learned gentleman who has just sat down and for that reason perhaps I find myself in disagreement with him. I see little wrong in making available to hon. members any information which the department has in its possession on this subject and I do not think this would necessarily interfere with the degree of independence we wish to grant to the commissioners. I do not believe the independence of the commission would be jeopardized by the tabling of such information if it is in the hands of the government. But I am only one voice in parliament and this is only my opinion.

What does concern me is what I believe to be the intent of this notice of motion. Regardless of whether such documents exist in the files of the government by virtue of its normal relationship with the commissioner, the point, as I see it, is that for the first time in history we have removed responsibility for redistribution from the hands of the politicians.

This move was heralded throughout the dominion with a great sigh of relief on the part of politicians and with unanimous approval on the part of editorial writers across Canada. If this debate were to continue—and it is almost ended, I see—we might create an unfortunate impression that once again, having on a rare occasion agreed regardless of our political affiliations that the question of redistribution should be removed once and for all from the hands of politicians, too many of us were upset with the results obtained from the independent commission and wished to alter its findings.

This motion by inference criticizes the commissioners in Alberta. We might find ourselves dealing with separate notices of motion, similarly worded, concerning all the provinces in Canada, with just the name of the province being changed in each case. It creates the impression—and I do not want to have any part of it—that having taken this question out of the field of politics we as members of parliament are not big enough to stomach the inevitable results.

This is the first time redistribution has been carried out by independent commissions. Mistakes of commission and omission were bound to occur. In Alberta at least some of the commissioners sinned by omission. I would suggest to the hon. member for Edmonton West that we swallow our pride and anger in this instance and wait to see what happens in six years time when on the strength of the experience we have gained different conclusions will no doubt be reached. We should give the commissioners a vote of confidence rather than a vote of non-confidence as I take this motion to be. It is logical, I think, to say that at least we should have the grace not to criticize the role of the commission until it is complete.

Mr. Speaker: I regret I must interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

TRANSPORT

SEAWAY AND CANAL TOLLS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

The house resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Cantelon) for the adjournment of the house under standing order 26.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) has rendered a valuable service in moving the adjournment of the house to discuss the question of higher tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway and the imposition of lockage fees on the Welland canal.

Let us make no mistake about this, there are great numbers of people in Canada who will be affected by any action taken as a result of the hearings held during the past few days in Ottawa by the seaway authority. I had hoped that a spokesman for the government would outline what the government's policy is with respect to tolls on the seaway and would have told the people of Canada and this house what it intends to do to cope with the problem of rising costs, and what it proposes to do to make it unnecessary to increase further the tolls on Canada's great inland waterway. Instead of that all we got from the Acting Minister of Transport (Mr. Turner) was a counsel of despair.

His argument was a weird and wonderful one. He told the house that under section 16 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act the authority was required by law to increase its tolls in order to be able to meet its obligations, and that the obligations set out in section 16 are that it must meet its payments with respect to operating costs, it must meet its amortization payments, and also meet the costs of interest and servicing for outstanding debt.

If that is the sum total of the government's case, and if the seaway authority has no option to do other than to increase its toll rates because of the fact that its costs have gone up, then I would like to ask why the seaway authority is holding hearings. Surely these hearings are a farce? If the minister is right, that the authority has no choice other than to impose increased tolls because of increased costs, then why the hearings? Also why is this matter then referred by the seaway authority to the governor in council, for if the statute requires the rates to be increased because of rising costs, then automatically the cabinet has no choice but to approve those increases.

Therefore we are simply going through a hypocritical farce in talking about public hearings and in having the government say that this matter is not decided because it has to come before the Privy Council. My contention, of course, is that the acting minister has overlooked section 15 of the act, because that section says that the authority may—> —subject to sections 16 and 17, establish tariffs of tolls to be charged by it with respect to—

And it sets out the basis on which these tolls may be charged. Subsection (2) says:

> The tolls that may be charged by the authority pursuant to this section may be for the use of the canals and works administered by it—

And so on.

I maintain that section 15 gives the authority to the seaway to charge tolls but does not require it to charge tolls, and if the government decided not to apply tolls it has the authority under the act to do that. It is true that in section 17 there is a provision that the question of tolls is subject to any agreement with the United States. It is true that there is an agreement into which Canada has entered, requiring the charging of tolls; but this is an international agreement which is subject to renegotiation.

International agreements have previously been renegotiated. I submit that this international agreement can be renegotiated now and the government, if it wants to, has the power, subject to the renegotiation of the agreement with the United States, to change the basis entirely so that we could have toll-free service on the seaway, or some modified form of tolls that would cover only part of the cost. That of course would require amending section 16.

The most disappointing thing about this whole debate is that while hon. members, particularly backbenchers in all parties, have expressed their opposition to increasing the tolls on the seaway, the government has not come forth with some clear statement of policy, because this matter of the tolls on the seaway is much larger than the immediate issue before the house. It has to do with the entire concept of transportation. It calls for a clearly defined transportation policy on the part of the government, but the fact is that the government has not got a clearly defined and clearly stated transportation policy.

Someone has said that the history of Canada is a long and constant struggle with geography. Long before confederation our forefathers struggled with the problems of a young country, a population strung along the international boundary of the United States for a length of 4,000 miles, sparsely settled people who had two major problems, one, how to get their products to the world markets at prices that would be competitive and, two, how to bring in the commodities which they could not produce themselves at a figure that would enable them to be competitive and to maintain a decent standard of living.

Consequently transportation has been at the heart of almost every great parliamentary debate since confederation. It was early recognized that we had to decide in Canada whether the entire cost of transportation was to be borne by the users or whether, as a matter of national policy, some part of it should be borne by the country as a whole. This is why until recently, for over 60 years it has been a matter of government policy that our canals and waterways should be toll free.

As early as 1903 Hon. W. S. Fielding, who was himself a maritimer and a minister of finance in the Laurier government, said in the House of Commons:

> There is room for some doubt whether the tolls that are charged are large enough to be a serious obstacle to traffic. But while this doubt exists, we do not feel that they are such as would prevent us giving the proposal to abolish them a fair trial. The revenue, though considerable, is not large enough to prove a disturbing factor. We would gladly yield up this item of our receipts if we could feel assured that it would have the great effect of encouraging business. The government have therefore determined for a period of two years to suspend the charges for tolls and make the entire canal system of Canada absolutely free to all.

That policy was continued over a long period of years.

In 1934 Hon. R. J. Manion, who was minister of railways and canals in the Bennett government, said this:

> I entirely agree with those from the west who say that the western Canadian grain grower cannot stand (the proposed toll) added to his present cost. It is important that we should have the lowest possible rates in order that we may compete with countries whose grain fields are closer to the seaboards than are the fields of Canada.

Interestingly enough the head of the government of that day, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, in the same year said in the House of Commons:

> The reason the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier removed the tolls in 1904 was that they imposed an additional burden upon the grain growers of the west; that is the real reason . . . The real reason for this arrangement, one which some people thought was misunderstood philanthropy, was really an effort on our part to lessen the charges on the movement of wheat from Fort William and Port Arthur to Montreal, destined for export to the markets of the world.

So, for a long period of time traffic on the canals and waterways of Canada was toll free in recognition of the fact that our primary producers, who have been buying in a protected and costly market, might have the lowest possible transportation costs in order to get their goods to market at competitive prices and in order to give them a fair return for their produce.

We all know of the long and bitter opposition in the United States to the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. It was opposed by powerful interests in the United States, for long periods of years. It was only when the government of Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent threatened to go it alone, and to have Canada assume the entire cost of building this great inland waterway, that President Eisenhower agreed to participate and the United States and Canada began this great project. When that project was nearing completion, and when it was suggested there should be tolls upon it, submissions were made from all over Canada asking that the policy of toll-free waterways be continued. In 1958 the government of Saskatchewan made a submission to the government of the day, headed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). I have in my hand a copy of that submission, of which I think this paragraph sums up the case:

> The fact that economic development in Canada could proceed only as fast as provision was made for adequate transportation facilities has always been apparent. Canadian statesmen for more than a century have realized that because of the great distances and sparse population of the dominion, the resources of the state would have to be thrown into the task of assuring essential transportation improvements either directly by way of unremunerative state enterprise or in subsidies to private enterprise. This has been true of all transportation facilities whether roads, railways, river improvements or airlines.

May I just pause to point out that this statement can be documented with comparative ease. The taxpayers of Canada have subsidized every form of transportation, whether it be the publicly owned Canadian National Railways which has been subsidized by the taxpayers in order to provide transportation facilities to the people of the outlying areas of this country, whether it be the large sums of money and land grants which were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or whether it be the subsidization of air transportation in the form of many, many millions of dollars which have been put up by the taxpayers to build terminal facilities, airports, and airstrip facilities, or whether it be the large sums of money spent by both federal and provincial governments for the construction of highways for motor and automobile transportation.

No one can quarrel with a policy which recognizes that Canada's greatest problem is geography. If we are to get our goods to market at competitive prices, if we are to handle the transportation of a lot of our own goods in Canada rather than have them go through United States ports, it is necessary to subsidize much of our transportation. If this can be done, it should be done as a matter of national policy and not on a hit and miss haphazard basis.

The brief to which I just referred, which was presented by the government of Saskatchewan to the prime minister and cabinet in 1958, concluded its remarks by saying this:

> The Government of Saskatchewan looks at the whole question of tolls in the light of these facts and in constant awareness of certain conditions which must continue to be of vital importance to the welfare of the province. Among the latter the most prominent and persistent are the inescapable dependence of Saskatchewan on overseas markets for wheat, the intensity of competition which characterizes these markets, the distance of Canadian producers from consuming centres, and the consequent handicap of heavy transportation costs which must be borne by our wheat. The savings in transportation costs which may result from the seaway improvements are, as yet, uncertain, unproved, and theoretical.
> On the other hand, tolls will increase shipping costs by their full amount above the level which would be possible if tolls were not imposed. The resulting burden to the prairie producer will be certain, immediate, and real.

I can only regret, of course, that our plea in 1958 to have the St. Lawrence seaway made a toll free waterway was not acceded to, and that the agreement entered into with the United States required the collection of tolls, because the same powerful interests in the United States who had for decades opposed the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway then had moved to a second line of defence and demanded tolls which would cover not only the operating costs of the seaway, not only the servicing of the debt, but the amortization of that debt over a period of time which was the shortest period of time ever undertaken for any project of this kind anywhere in the world.

Even with the tolls, the farmers of western Canada, as a result of the St. Lawrence seaway being constructed, gained. Prior to the seaway being opened the cost of a ton of grain moving from the head of the lakes to the seaport was $5.33 a ton or 16 cents a bushel. When the seaway came into operation, even with the tolls, the cost was reduced to $4.43 a ton, a saving of 90 cents, and the cost per bushel was reduced to 13 cents, a saving of 3 cents per bushel. That meant a great deal to the farmers of western Canada, and particularly that part of Canada where their grain moves eastward rather than to the Pacific coast.

If the proposal which the seaway authority has made that the rates now be increased by

10 per cent is allowed to stand, then this will mean, as Mr. Charles Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has stated, an increase in the shipping costs to the prairie farmer of roughly 1¼ cents per bushel. I do not need to detain the house by elaborating on the predicament in which the prairie farmer has been since 1951 when his costs have steadily mounted, whereas the general price index for the things he has to sell have remained more or less stationary. The farmer has been caught in a cost-price squeeze. His net income in relation to other economic groups in the community has not advanced. He has been caught in a cost-price squeeze and that squeeze will be further accentuated if the cost of shipping his grain to seaboard through the St. Lawrence seaway is increased by another 1¼ cents per bushel.

It is not only the western farmers who will be affected. This increase will affect industry in central Canada. As my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), pointed out this afternoon, on the basis of information and research which has come to our attention there are about one million tons of iron ore with regard to which the cost of shipment is so close that any increase in the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway could divert these one million tons of iron ore to United States ports on the Atlantic. The result would be that a good deal of business would be lost to the industries in central Canada and there would be a loss of job opportunities to Canadian workers.

Of necessity, since the traffic on the St. Lawrence seaway is a two-way proposition, the price of goods coming into the country, raw materials for industry and consumer goods, will go up. All this is bound to start another round of rising costs. We have all been deluged, I am sure, with the constant complaints of people in this country who find their living costs going up much more rapidly than their income. This means that their standard of living is being reduced. We have been trying to get the government to concern itself with this problem. Even if they are not going to tackle the problem of prices, they could at least alert themselves to what will happen if the tolls on the seaway are increased and living costs in this country go up further.

The cost of living has gone up by over 4 per cent in the last 12 months, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) in his budget estimated it will go up at least another 3.5 per cent this year. My own opinion is that it will be more. All this sets in motion labour disputes and strikes, because wages inevitably lag behind the rising cost of living. The government here faces a very critical situation and one would expect they would have something more constructive to offer than what was presented to us this afternoon, when a minister merely told the house that under section 16 of the act the seaway authority has no choice but to raise the rates if their costs have gone up. I presume from this that the cabinet will have no choice but to approve that increase since they, of course, would not want to run counter to section 16 of the act.

There is another aspect of this problem, and that is the effect which increased tolls will have on the seaway itself. The seaway is not yet operating at full capacity. Some experts have said it will probably be 1980 or 1982 before it will reach the full capacity of ships which it can handle. Everyone knows of course that it is only when you have a project operating at full capacity that you get your per unit costs down and operate efficiently at the lowest possible cost. If tolls are increased, surely the tendency will be to reduce the traffic, or at least to prevent the traffic on the seaway increasing as rapidly as it would otherwise do; and it may well be that by raising the tolls 10 per cent the gross return to the seaway authority may not be any greater than if it had left them where they are now.

Therefore I think that the economic implications of the action being proposed by the seaway authority are so far-reaching that the government has to do a great deal more than anything they have indicated they are willing to do at the present time. As a long term view, of course, I think they ought to renegotiate the agreement with the United States and move steadily toward eliminating the tolls entirely. As a start they might base the tolls on the operating costs of the seaway and let the Canadian people as a whole assume responsibility for the outstanding debt and the servicing of that debt. But I recognize that this will take some time, and I do not expect the government to announce that it is going to start that tomorrow morning; I have never been alarmed about their showing too much haste on any critical matter.

However, I want to reiterate what we are asking for now. A few days ago on the orders of the day I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) if he would assure the house that when the seaway authority made its recommendations to the government the latter would provide an opportunity for debate in this house before any decision was made by the cabinet with respect to increasing tolls. I was told by the minister that this was a hypothetical question. Of course, it is not a hypothetical question at all. Unless we receive some assurances from the government today or within the next few days, the following will be the course of events. The seaway authority completed its hearings this afternoon. It has already stated publicly that its increased costs make a 10 per cent increase in tolls mandatory. Therefore there can be little doubt about what it is going to recommend to the cabinet; and if one may judge from the statement made by the Acting Minister of Transport (Mr. Turner) this afternoon, the cabinet, looking at section 16 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, is going to approve the increase. Then we will have an announcement some day on motions or on the orders of the day that the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway have been increased.

This is not good enough, because these increases will be made by order in council and not by act of parliament, and there will be no opportunity for members of parliament to express their opinion or suggest any alternative course of action. The Acting Minister of Transport this afternoon said that this question can be discussed in the transport committee. That is a ridiculous proposal. In the first place, as my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, the chairman of the committee can, quite properly, say that the only items which appear in the estimates of the Department of Transport have to do with the servicing of certain loans and payment for the maintenance of certain canals, that these matters are not concerned with tolls and the committee has no authority to deal with tolls. In any event, the government has a majority on the committee. Even if the committee is permitted to discuss this question of increased tolls, and that is doubtful, can anyone assure this house that the discussion will take place in the transport committee before the order in council is passed increasing the tolls?

I think most members here would be willing to take a wager that the order in council will be passed long before the committee on transportation ever gets around to discussing estimates. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter just for a committee of the house; this is a matter for parliament itself. It is a matter of such vital importance to the economic well-being of Canada that the whole house should have an opportunity to discuss it, and discuss it from every conceivable angle.

Therefore I want again to ask the government the two questions which I asked the ministers this afternoon: First, will they assure the house, before the debate is finished, that when the seaway authority makes its report to the government, that report and its recommendations will be published. This would make it possible for us to know what the recommendations are. Most of us have a pretty good idea what the recommendations are likely to be, but I think we have a right to know definitely what those recommendations are and what arguments are advanced by the seaway authority for proposing an increase in the tolls. That report should be made public before the government reaches any definite conclusion. I think we have the right to ask the government for that assurance.

The second thing we have the right to ask is that, having had access to the report, the government will not act on it until this house has been given an opportunity to debate the report fully, and the effect which those recommendations would have on the welfare of the people of Canada and the economy of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am making unreasonable requests. I think this is the very least the government can do. If it is not prepared to stand up at this time, as I had hoped it would be, and say to the house that because of the rapidly rising cost of living, because of the necessity of getting our goods to the world markets it can assure the house that it will find ways and means by which it can prevent an increase in tolls at this time, surely the very least it can do is, first, to let us have a copy of that report as soon as they receive it and before they make a decision and, second, to give the members of the house an opportunity to debate the whole question. We would rather see that done than have the cabinet make a decision in secret affecting the economy of this nation, and then tell the people of Canada what they have done.

I think it is not enough to use parliament merely as a place where we make protests. If democracy means anything, it means an opportunity to participate in the making of decisions. If parliament means anything at all, it is a place where the government asks members—particularly in a house of minorities—to give their views and their suggestions before the government commits this country to a course of action which could have detrimental results for the Canadian economy.

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the recent announcement that the St. Lawrence authority and its United States counterpart are proposing increased tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway and new tolls on the Welland canal, was of great concern to many Canadians.

Although the Canadian and United States governments will make the final decision in this matter, this declaration of intent has caused alarm in many circles. Lack of time prevents me from giving you a detailed analysis of the conflicting arguments as to the desirability of tolls—and there are conflicting arguments. Basically, those who believe we should have tolls on the seaway contend that if we do not, foreign shipping will in effect be subsidized, and commerce which uses the waterway should pay for its construction and maintenance. However, there are many formidable arguments for a toll-free seaway and in my opinion they are conclusive.

The gist of my argument is that the St. Lawrence seaway is of national importance and benefits Canada from coast to coast as wheat from the prairies, general cargo from industries in central Canada, coal from Nova Scotia and iron ore from Newfoundland are carried through it and help this country to prosper and develop.

Those who oppose tolls argue that if tolls are increased, not only will industry be forced to increase prices, thereby causing domestic financial hardship, but that the goods will be priced out of foreign markets at a time when Canada is desperately striving to improve its export position. It is further argued that other national forms of transportation, the C.N.R., the trans-Canada highway and Air Canada, are heavily subsidized by the federal government, and a national water artery such as the St. Lawrence seaway should not be discriminated against.

Those who are in opposition to tolls cite the fact that the United States Association of Railways and the United States Eastern Ports Association have been lobbying continually in a determined effort to have tolls increased on the St. Lawrence seaway so as to place United States interests in a more competitive position to capture a greater share of the carriage of bulk cargo, especially wheat and iron ore, with a resultant benefit to the entire U.S. economy and a detriment to Canada.

Hundreds of industries, many located in the Niagara peninsula, are adamantly opposed to tolls, and many chambers of commerce across Canada have forwarded strong briefs to the government opposing any increase in tolls. The eventual government policy in this matter is of prime concern to all of us. The preponderance of evidence in my opinion clearly demonstrates that Canada's best interests will be served if any proposed increase in tolls is denied.

Mr. R. E. Forbes (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, as seconder to the motion made by my colleague, the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon), to adjourn the business of the house to debate this urgent and important public question, I appreciate the excellent contributions that have been made by previous speakers on this important subject, and my comments will be brief. The urgency in this matter has indicated that if the request of the St. Lawrence seaway is granted, the new rates will come into effect on July 1, 1966. I cannot think of any other action by our transportation system that is as far reaching in its effect on the economy of Canada and particularly on the grain producers of western Canada.

It has been estimated by authorities that the proposed increase in tolls will cost the producers of grain one and a half cents per bushel at a time when wheat prices have been reduced by an average of 17 cents per bushel during the past year; and I wish to emphasize this point. Also at a time when the costs of production have risen to an all time high, if the increase in tolls is allowed on iron ore this extra cost will be reflected on the price of machinery purchased by farmers. The farmers have no way of passing on their increased costs to the purchasers of their products.

Much of the current high level of business activity in Canada is due to the building of the St. Lawrence seaway and the deepening of the Welland canal, for without these two vital transportation facilities, both largely due to Canadian initiative, it would not have been possible for the government of Canada to contract to supply Russia and other European countries with wheat on the enormous scale that has been evident in the past three years.

Seaway and Canal Tolls

If canal tolls are imposed, every one of the 200,000 or 300,000 grain producers on the prairies will have to accept lower prices for his wheat and other grains exported. Let us review very briefly the history of water transportation with respect to tolls. In 1904 Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that if tolls were imposed they would be an additional burden on the grain growers of the west. This was interpreted as favouritism to the west, although it really was an effort to lessen the charges on the movement of wheat from Fort William and Port Arthur to Montreal, destined for the markets of the world. When George P. Graham was minister of railways and canals, he stated:

> It cannot be denied that every dollar you impose in tolls must come out of the produce or the cargo. There is no other way to pay for it.

I wish to quote again from the MacPherson report on transportation, volume 2, page 195:

> We would not wish, in other words, to encourage the Canadian public to believe that a country such as ours can expect to obtain the kind of transport facilities, designed to fulfil national policy objectives that transcend commercial consideration, without a continuing outlay of public funds of a considerable order of magnitude.

The seaway between Montreal and lake Ontario is the only section of over 27,000 miles of navigable waterways in North America upon which tolls are levied. If the St. Lawrence seaway is to achieve its proper status as Canada's sole means of access by water to her heartland, it must not be impeded by a crippling toll structure. Similarly the Welland ship canal, located in the very heart of Canada's major industrial zone, must be permitted to function without the obstacles of tolls.

I wish to impress upon hon. members once again the fact that low cost water transportation is essential to the continued progress and prosperity of Canada. Not only does it increase the movement of primary and manufactured goods from one part of the country to the other, but it also assists the sale of Canadian wheat and other exports in the highly competitive overseas market.

In further substantiation of my argument against the imposition of tolls, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a statement made by the three western grain pools, and I quote:

> Another reason why farmers oppose seaway tolls is because the toll structure seeks to recover capital investment and this the farmers do not think is desirable for a publicly-owned transportation utility. Farmers do not find justification for the recovery of capital investment from seaway users by a government which through the years has made many kinds of public investment in transportation facilities without there being any direct obligation for the users to repay the investment. Consider, for example, the following list of public investment in transportation which was compiled by Mr. Justice W. F. A. Turgeon when he was chairman of a 1951 royal commission on transportation. The list included:
> (i) The construction of the National Transcontinental Railway to encourage the shipment of goods through Canadian ports;
> (ii) The construction in central Canada of an extensive canal system which became toll free, built at a cost of about $328 millions and maintained at government expense;
> (iii) The granting of substantial areas of land and subsidies to encourage and assist railway construction and the opening up of the country.
> (iv) The taking over by the country in the years between 1918-23 of the bankrupt railway lines and the welding of them along with government lines into the Canadian National Railway system;
> (v) The construction of Hudson Bay Railway and the development of the port of Churchill;
> (vi) The subsidization of coastal shipping services and large investments in harbors and other navigation facilities; and
> (vii) The large investment in and operation of Trans-Canada Air Lines and assistance given to other air lines.
> The learned jurist said this government activity in the transportation industry indicates "the continuous concern of parliament with Canada's transportation problems including the problem inherent in great distances and sparse population." The wheat pools do not believe the government sought recovery of its investment from the users in the previous instances and cannot support the attempt to recover Seaway investment through user tolls.

[Mr. Forbes.]

I am firmly convinced that any increase in tolls will be detrimental to the expansion of our international trade and should not be allowed.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) on bringing forward this motion today. During the three years he has been in the house he has become recognized, not only as a specialist on pension problems but also on transportation problems, so it is very fitting he should be bringing forward this motion today. The hon. member who preceded me in the debate, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Forbes), has been in the house for a considerable time. He has won four consecutive general elections with good majorities, and all of us have a tremendous appreciation of his work on behalf of the people in agriculture. I congratulate him for seconding this motion.

When I look at you, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but think of the great city of Cornwall, sitting like a jewel on the St. Lawrence waterway in the midst of that great industrial complex of this nation. I am sure you are taking more than a passing interest in this debate.

Listening to the Acting Minister of Transport (Mr. Turner) this afternoon, I could not help but feel that I should congratulate him upon his acting. He was at his very best, in spite of the poor case he had to present. The members of this house witnessed a spectacle this afternoon that has been seen in this house with recurring frequency over the past three years, namely a government coming to the house without a national policy with regard to the important problem of transportation. The Minister without Portfolio told us, if he told us nothing else, that the government does not have a national transportation policy to offer parliament or the country at this time. Despite the fact they have been in power for three years, despite the fact that they came into office boasting that they were well prepared and the pigeon-holes were filled with plans to put this country back on the rails, we have no transportation policy. It is significant that at this time we should have from the Minister without Portfolio this admission of the failure of the present government to deal with this important matter.

One could almost think of that phrase, I do not recall whether it was decision or indecision, but I know that hon. gentlemen opposite know to what I am referring, as they have had reason to think back about the stand they took in that regard in the past. I was interested in noticing that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has not graced us with his presence in this debate. Perhaps he has a good reason for being absent, and I would not want to do him an injustice. However, there is no more important matter that could come to the attention of the Minister of Finance than the one which is before us today. I contend, sir, that an increase in tolls of the order of 10 per cent could very well affect the balance of payments position with the United States. When I say that, I am not referring to the effect on grain growers but I am referring to the movement of iron ore to the United States of America. This is one of the reasons that I believe the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) should have been here to deal with this particular matter.

Canada is emerging today as an industrial nation. There is no factor more important than exports, to the growing industries of our country, but to hear the Minister without Portfolio and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) as they sought to deny this debate—

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is a misstatement of my position. What I sought to do today was to prevent the regular business of the house being taken up this afternoon on this matter, which could have waited to be discussed on interim supply, or the appropriate place.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nasserden: All that the Minister of Public Works has done is to strengthen the argument that not only we in this party but those in other parties on this side of the house have maintained today. The minister sought to deny the House of Commons the opportunity to discuss—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot allow the hon. member to continue this trend of thought. There is a motion before the house. A ruling was made by the Chair and the hon. member has no right to go behind the ruling and argue the question all over again.

Mr. Nasserden: I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker; I was just trying to answer the Minister of Public Works and I will not pursue the matter, I assure you.

We in western Canada are interested in the price of steel, of iron ore and of farm machinery which we purchase in Canada or from the United States of America. We buy a lot of farm machinery and production machinery not only in western Canada but in eastern Canada. To listen to ministers of the crown refer to a 10 per cent increase in such a cavalier manner as has been the case today of one of the factors which enter into the cost of production cannot help but make us question seriously whether they have read the budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) a few weeks ago, in which he drew attention to the important problems facing this country with regard to the cost of living, the costs of production and also the balance of payment problem with our friends to the south of us.

One of the most important factors in the production of grain in western Canada is the cost of farm machinery. Another important factor is the availability of men and women for work on farms in Canada. Only yesterday we had the spectacle of the government bringing forward a measure which would reorganize the departments of government. In this legislation the department of immigration is relegated to third position. Almost as an after thought, responsibilities for immigration are included within the new department of manpower. Surely this is part of the entire problem we are facing today and is of some significance when we are thinking about the cost of production and the need for machinery, much of which is purchased today, even at inflated prices, in order to overcome the scarcity of labour in this country.

The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) referred to some of the statements which were made at the time the legislation governing part of the matter which is before us came before parliament in 1959. I would remind him that a great deal of what took place at that time was the result of the legacy passed on to us from the administration that preceded us. I cannot help but remember the glowing terms in which members of the party opposite during the election campaign at that time paraded before the public the benefits which would accrue not only to western Canada but to all of Canada with the construction of the seaway, proudly boasting and claiming as their right, part of the credit for the construction of the seaway in the first place. It is very strange indeed, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman should question part of that legacy which was passed on to the administration that followed.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso), the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty), the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Tolmie) and the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras) for the contributions they have made in this debate. I think they have welcomed this opportunity, despite what their front benches said during the initial stages when we were trying to establish the merits of having a debate at this time. They showed that they came well prepared to fight the battle. If the decision of the Chair served no other purpose, it gave these backbenchers on the government side an opportunity to voice their opinions where they could be heard, and where they could serve some useful purpose in regard to bringing this question not only to the attention of the cabinet but also to the attention of the country and the people of their own constituencies.

I have said before, and I want to reiterate, that the proposed 10 per cent increase in tolls is a very serious one, particularly as it affects the export trade of our country. Grain sales during the last several years have been one of the mainstays of our economy. All of us in western Canada have felt very downhearted at the reduction in the final payments for wheat during the past year. Hon. members in all parts of the house, whether or not they come from agricultural ridings, whether they are in business or in agriculture or just carry a dinner pail, cannot help but know something about what it means to chop off almost 15 per cent of the take-home pay which one has enjoyed in years previous. In view of a reduction of 13 to 17 cents per bushel, and being faced with the prospect of a further reduction which would almost cut in half the benefits brought about by the seaway when it first came into operation, the producers of grain in Canada cannot help but express their indignation and concern. In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, the grain producers are faced with tight money, higher interest rates and a high cost of living. This is reason enough for any parliament to concern itself with the problems before it.

I recommend to the cabinet the proposal put forward by one of the members from Halifax to amortize the capital costs of the seaway over a much greater period of time than is presently the case. The seaway has been in operation for only seven years, which is a mere drop in the bucket to the number of years we hope it will be in operation. I think with any business in the initial years of operation you must expect your returns will not be as great as they will be when the business is at full capacity. It is a fact that at the present time the seaway is operating at something less than two thirds full capacity. There is also the prospect that as the capacity is reached other avenues will open to increase the capacity of the seaway if traffic on the seaway so warrants. Those who brought forward the idea of an all-Canadian seaway were perhaps voicing something that will one day be a reality.

I do not think I can add anything else to the debate, but I should like the members on the treasury benches to give parliament an opportunity to discuss the decision reached in this matter before it is made final. I think this is an important matter that affects not only the cost of transportation, but the whole business cycle in our country, and also our trade with other nations. As such I feel that this matter deserves consideration by the cabinet and by parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the matter of tolls on the seaway, because I represent a municipality where grain elevators are located and which is involved in extensive shipping, even in winter, in spite of the objections of our colleagues from the Maritimes.

By the way, I must say that our winter shipping does not deprive them of anything; on the contrary, I think it helps to speed up the handling of goods in riverports and seaports. But the matter is not being discussed this evening.

After listening to earlier remarks, Mr. Speaker, I ask myself two questions, and I must say that I do not feel capable of settling the matter. If I take part in the debate, it is precisely because my district is involved and, as its representative in the House of Commons, I am interested in knowing what might be the effects of an increase in tolls on the Canadian economy.

I was amazed to note how strongly some members objected to increased tolls, especially the great number of government members who spoke freely, in a way which should be stressed and encouraged in this house as often as possible.

Today's papers report numerous protests against increased tolls on the seaway, protests which, according to a French language paper this afternoon, "submerged the public hearing". This means there were many.

I wonder where those protests come from. First of all, were they all made by people intent on protecting their business or by some who consider primarily the consequences of increased tolls on the Canadian economy, because, after all, this should be the main concern, in my opinion.

I have nevertheless observed that most insisted that they felt the Canadian economy was at stake and that tariff barriers should be brought down.

I was struck, Mr. Speaker, as doubtless all Canadians interested in this question are, by the fact that last year, the debt of the St. Lawrence seaway was about $24,700,000 and that the Canadian share was $18 million. I wondered: Who will be paying this debt, because someone will have to pay.

Some claim the ships using the seaway should not have to pay. I have no objection, mind you, Mr. Speaker, but I should nevertheless want this position to be demonstrated to me. Such are questions that I should like to put to those in a position to answer and I should like to be shown that it would be beneficial to have this paid by the Canadian people.

Is it true that rate increases will reduce traffic? Is that not a slight exaggeration? I wonder. Is it true that the rate increase will cause considerable loss of jobs here in Canada? Can anyone anywhere imagine that the full investments in the St. Lawrence seaway should not be reimbursed?

A colleague suggested a while ago that the refund of the debt should be extended over a period of 75 to 100 years. I am aghast at the thought of the interest that Canadians would have to pay, at current rates, if such amortization of capital were to be spread over a period extending from 75 to 100 years. There is obviously something out of kilter in that.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, someone will have to pay. Who will that be? That is the question.

While we were discussing these things just now, I read the editorial of a newspaper which, I believe, came out this afternoon, whose author seemed to be well-versed in maritime matters. I shall quote this article from the Canadian Sailor, which reads as follows:

> What irritates us—and should irritate any thoughtful Canadian—

And I quote:

> —is that almost 28 per cent of cargo on the seaway is carried by ships bearing flags other than Canadian or American, and almost all these foreign ships are subsidized by their respective governments. We have no such subsidies—

Mr. Speaker, if tariffs are to be kept low so as to allow ships operating under foreign flags to compete with our own, something is obviously wrong somewhere.

Therefore, I should like to ask the following questions. Who will pay this interest and this amortization of capital? Is it right to ask all Canadian taxpayers to do so? If so, it will have to be proved that this is an incentive or an encouragement for the Canadian economy. Otherwise, this would be unfair, and the cost should rather be borne by all those who use the seaway. It would have to be proved beyond doubt that these tariffs which we are going to impose on the national budget, which all Canadians will in fact have to reimburse, will stimulate the whole Canadian economy, not just a sector or an industry.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the fact that I lack the necessary competence to settle the debate, but I might be allowed to submit one thing to the attention of the house. I am not convinced that the solution proposed by the hon. member for Halifax is the right one, but if it can be shown to me that the Canadian government, in short the Canadian people, must help, give a boost to that sector of the Canadian economy, that is to the maritime traffic which uses the St. Lawrence seaway, I would like to submit the following.

Let the government increase those rates to the greatest extent possible and reasonable, but in order not to hurt Canadian shipping, ships which operate under the Canadian flag, not to create any deterioration in waterway or seaway transportation, which would probably have repercussions such as unemployment and possibly a slow down in the shipments of western grain, as well as some harmful consequences in our region of Trois-Rivières, I make a suggestion before quoting a statement in support of my argument. Would the government not be ready to study the possibility of giving reasonable and reasoned subsidies to ships registered in Canada, to allow them to compete with ships registered elsewhere and using the St. Lawrence seaway?

I see here in Hansard that on April 2, 1965, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) said this:

> The seaway did better last year than it did the year before—

We were in 1965, therefore, he was talking about 1964.

> —and we hope it will do still better this year. We hope it will get into balance in due course. Traffic is increasing steadily.

That was on April 2, 1965, as I said before.

> I hardly dare hope for quite as big an increase this year as there was last year because we had this tremendous wheat traffic, but the prospects look very good.

If the prospects are very good and if eventually the seaway will be an economic operation, why not use grants to amortize the capital of $500 million plus the interests in order not to harm our maritime transportation and enable it to compete with foreign transportation?

Will the increase of rates drive away ships flying foreign flags? Once again, I do not claim to be an authority on the matter, but those ships come here because it is beneficial to them. Increasing the rates by 10 per cent will not prevent them from coming here to transact their business.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Does this 10 per cent not correspond in general to an increase or decrease of the dollar value, to a sort of inflation which took place here since the building of the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. Speaker, you noted my suggestion. I believe it is valid and interesting. Once again, the whole economy of the area I represent and that of several neighbouring ridings are vitally affected by this seaway shipping. Our grain elevators represent an important asset in our economy.

This would perhaps be a temporary solution that should not last too long, if I can trust the statements of the minister. As I said, until this is economic, certain subsidies could be granted in the meantime to ships flying the Canadian flag, and this could serve as an outlet for our Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in the debate this afternoon concerning the possibility of increased tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway, and the increase of fees on the Welland canal. There has been a wealth of participation today, expressing views held across this nation. I have listened to the western members making a logical plea on behalf of the grain industry. I have heard Ontario members speak of the problems which higher tolls would create in central Canada. We have heard the point of view of members from Quebec and the maritimes. It is evident that this debate was extremely necessary and of importance to the Canadian economy.

The proposition for increasing revenues from the St. Lawrence system is twofold. First, there is to be a 10 per cent increase in tolls. We now understand that this was in the program when the initial legislation was passed. The secondary method of increasing revenues is to be the imposition of lockage fees in the Welland system, the Canadian-operated part of the system.

I think the authority, as well as the government, would be well advised to investigate the legality of imposing lockage fees in the Welland portion of the system. These fees will represent a considerable amount of money to shipowners. I believe they will cost some $160 a vessel next year, rising to $800 in 1971. It may be found that this secondary proposal for raising revenue is legal, but I am sceptical about it. However, the revenue is raised it must all be considered as coming from increased tolls on the system. I feel that this method of raising revenue is unjust and, possibly, illegal. Since the projected sum involved amounts, roughly, to $100 millions, an investigation would certainly be worth while.

I understood from the words of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) that we might expect an increase in tolls almost as a foregone conclusion. I was sorry to hear him give this impression. I was sorry to note the lack of hesitation with which he seemed to argue there was no other way of handling the situation.

It appears that the pleas made by two of the backbenchers on the other side, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) and the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Tolmie) will go unheeded, though they put forward their arguments not from a parochial point of view but, it seemed to me, with the best interests of the entire Canadian economy at heart. Indeed it would have been odd had they spoken otherwise.

It is interesting to note that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) was in the house for a short time, and then left. It would be interesting to hear his views on this question—to hear whether or not representations had been made to him on behalf of heavy industry in his part of Ontario. I am sure we all know what the answer would be. Anyone who is familiar with the situation knows what the effect will be on the Canadian economy as compared with the United States economy.

We heard the hon. member for Welland say that strong lobbies are being built up in the United States in favour of the institution of tolls. Why not? The benefit on the United States side would be felt largely on the upper great lakes. Those areas will be toll-free. But in southern Ontario, the area from Windsor eastward to lake Ontario, Canadian heavy and secondary industry will have to bear not only an increase arising from higher toll charges but also an increase arising from charges in connection with the Welland canal. Thus will Canadian industry be placed at a disadvantage and United States industry will once again have an advantage over us in a comparable field. This is an important and serious matter in so far as I am concerned.

I come from a part of southwestern Ontario where we are endeavouring to attract secondary industry, but much of the secondary industry we want to attract would be completely submerged if 1 per cent of the production of similar U.S. industry were allowed into the Canadian market. Why should the government, or any agency of it, be permitted to consider even a fractional increase where it disadvantageously affects Canadian industry? This is ridiculous, particularly under present circumstances.

At the present time in the province of Ontario an ambitious program for regional development is being undertaken. But in our part of the country we have witnessed the utter disregard of some ministers in the federal government for areas that need assistance and support. Now we have another instance of the government's failing to move into the area of common sense where Canadian industries are concerned.

The proposal to increase tolls will affect to a large degree development areas in western and northern Ontario, and particularly the shore areas along the seaway and the Welland canal, because the charges will be spread over small ships as well as large ships, and there is no question but that small industries and small centres will be affected in a detrimental way.

We would like an assurance from the government that it is cognizant of the effects of such action by the authority. The least it can do is defer any final decision by the authority. After having been here for some considerable time I am now coming to the opinion that the Canadian people are fed up with being governed by commissions, boards, authorities, and such things, with the ultimate responsibility being taken away from parliament. This is a view which is not held only on this side of the house. From what was said today I know it is also the view of some government supporters who know what the effect of increased charges will be. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is a known fact that such arbitrary decisions are taken without the benefit of discussion in parliament and without the benefit of discussion by people from the areas directly affected. We should have something to say when this happens.

Not many weeks ago we sat here and listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) delivering his budget speech. He mentioned inflationary pressures and said we should cut out this and that. Yet if this proposal is adopted the government will be placing a further harness on industries in southern Ontario, and to this I take exception. This afternoon we heard that this proposal will also affect the primary producers in western Canada. We are interested in every aspect of the Canadian economy and we must have something to say in regard to what the authority is going to do when its proposals affect our economy from coast to coast.

I noted in an article a day or so ago that this matter was discussed in the Ontario provincial legislature, and I agree totally with the views of the prime minister of that province who spoke in very strong terms against the proposal. The headline on the article read, "Robarts Denounces Seaway Proposal to Levy Tolls on Welland Lock Traffic." I object generally to the application of such a toll because of the effect it will have on the province of Ontario. If we had the opportunity to present the views of the western provinces, of the central provinces and the eastern provinces, in view of the economy as it stands today we could come to no other conclusion than that the lockage levies on the Welland canal should not be tolerated.

The other day when making a statement in this house a government minister said that a certain situation had to change because we are living in 1966. Simply because the initial levying of charges by the authority was authorized some years ago, in order to conform to a certain program, is no reason why we should continue with them today, particularly since we would be acting counter to some of the policies and programs launched this year by the government. This is a responsibility of the government.

I disagreed with what the government house leader had to say. I do not wish to speak on the urgency of debate or other things which have been determined, but I am not prepared to accept the contention that we could have treated this legitimately through some other method of debate. The government has a practice of waiting until it can pull the wool over our eyes, and I am very pleased that we had this opportunity to have this debate today.

I am not being proud or boastful, or anything of that nature, when I say that the province of Ontario contributes more to the coffers of this nation than any other province in the Dominion of Canada, and we in Ontario need every consideration to ensure that our competitive industrial position is not affected. The people in western Canada need the same protection. I have the same feeling with respect to secondary industries in the province of Quebec, although this proposal may not affect them to such a serious degree. I also welcome the contributions made to this debate by members from the maritimes.

We simply cannot tolerate to have any outside authority make arbitrary decisions on something that will affect the economy of this country in such a serious way as the proposed toll charge increases. I hope members of the government will have the intestinal fortitude to back policies that will assist our primary and secondary producers, instead of selling them out to someone else who then will have an advantage over us.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, coming from western Canada and representing a farm area I feel impelled to make my contribution to this very important debate this evening. Before continuing, however, I want to join with the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) and other preceding speakers in congratulating my Saskatchewan colleague, the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon), for moving this motion, and its seconder, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Forbes).

We are experiencing today a worth-while debate which is in the best interests of Canada as a whole. To emphasize the importance that I place on this question, for the sake of the record I would like to draw the attention of the house—even though I am always reluctant to quote myself—something which I said in this house on February 10, 1966, as reported at page 1042 of Hansard, during a debate on transport, when we were dealing with other matters such as box car shortages:

> I should like to mention in passing another matter which has exercised us in western Canada recently. This is the suggestion that the St. Lawrence tolls be increased. I am not going to deal with this but I do want to say this for the record in passing.
> The Canadian wheat producers see higher seaway tolls as a direct charge against the farmers' take home pay. Mr. Charles W. Gibbings, president of the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pools made these views known as spokesman for 160,000 prairie farmers in a brief presented to the seaway authority recently.
> As I say, this is a matter of deep concern to western Canadians and I hope that the minister, when he is formulating his policy on this question, will take this into consideration, as well as what I have said with reference to the shortage of box cars, with particular emphasis on this excessive use in the United States.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The subject matter is important not only to the population of western Canada but to the whole Canadian economy. I wish to join with those who have gone on record in this debate as being opposed to the imposition of tolls and the general increase of 10 per cent on lockage fees, as well as the increase in tolls. In speaking this afternoon the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) pointed out something which is very important in respect of this debate. I refer to the fact that he pointed out to the house that it was necessary to have this debate at this time, and that the matter of urgency revolves around the fact that the present government, in its wisdom and if it so desired, could have agreed to these tolls by order in council. In this way the matter could have been dragged under the table without anyone taking due notice of it. He was supported in this contention by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

I think we have done a service by discussing this very important matter this afternoon. My main concern is the fact that any increase in seaway tolls would directly and seriously affect the economy of all the farmers in eastern Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I should emphasize, as has been pointed out previously, that the people in western Saskatchewan and Alberta do have access to the Pacific port facilities, which is a help in relieving the congestion, but we in eastern Saskatchewan and Manitoba are affected very seriously by any proposed increases. This proposed increase would amount to approximately 1¼ cents per bushel on grain or, calculated on the basis of total grain movement, would cost the farmers of this country between $4 million and $6 million per year, depending on the total annual yield. Add this $4 million to $6 million to the loss incurred in the last crop year by reason of the 12 to 20 cent per bushel loss in the price of wheat, which amounted to some $75 million, and one can understand the concern expressed by our Canadian farmers in this government's indifference to their economic welfare.

Compare the farmers' position, in respect of the increased tolls, to the position of private industry. Industry is able to add this extra cost to the retail, wholesale or the manufacturing price, and pass its on to the consumer. The farmer however has to stand by helplessly and absorb the decrease in his income due to the seaway toll increase, and then absorb a double wallop through having to pay the increased consumer price on the products he purchases which are shipped through the seaway.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner), the Minister without Portfolio, referred to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition as having advanced a specious argument when he referred to possible United States influence in respect of the decision of the seaway authority to recommend the increase in tolls. The minister seemed to be the only speaker in the house today who threw sort of a storm cloud over this debate. I do not think he convinced any member that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was making a specious argument. Rather the minister would be better advised if he and his cabinet colleagues, who have the responsibility for building a greater Canada, would pay more attention to Canada's interests in those areas of common economic development between our two great countries.

In view of what has been said in this debate so far, I cannot say I agree with the pessimistic outlook of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) to the effect it is a foregone conclusion that the government will accept the recommendation of the seaway authority to increase the seaway tolls by 10 per cent. After the strong argument made by members on this side of the house, plus the strong opposition in government ranks spearheaded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso), I feel the government has no alternative but to hold in abeyance any decision on this matter until it can be brought before parliament for further consideration, and finally be decided by a vote of this House of Commons.

Mr. Norman Fawcett (Nickel Belt): After what has been said today, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a great deal left for me to say except to enlarge on a couple of points. One is the point my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), raised with regard to the handling of iron ore. Since I come from a riding in northern Ontario which already is affected adversely by high transportation costs, naturally I am very much interested in anything which might increase transportation costs, even though this may be very minimal. I believe the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam mentioned the fact that iron ore mines which could be considered marginal operations might find themselves in difficulty with regard to this suggested increase in the tolls.

I come from an area in which we have what could be considered as a marginal iron ore mine. I know that they negotiate the rail rates for the shipment of this iron ore to the closest port on the great lakes where facilities for unloading it are available. They negotiate the rates with the Canadian National Railways. I am quite sure that if they were unable to obtain the rate which they feel they require, and which is acceptable to the Canadian National Railways, they would not be in operation today, because their profit or margin is so low that they are not in a position to pay high transportation costs. I do not wish hon. members to think I am suggesting that the increased toll rates would affect this particular company, because I do not think this is the case. They ship directly across the great lakes, and I do not think their shipments would be affected. I would be very fearful, however, that there are many of these so-called marginal iron ore mines which may be affected. These mines operate on an over-pit basis. It is possible for them to move great quantities of low-grade ore so long as their transportation costs are within reason.

Generally the people who are engaged in mining the ore are the same people who convert it into steel. They are satisfied with a very low profit on the ore, because they are in the position to make up for this in the production of the steel. I would be fearful that these suggested higher tolls could result in some of these mines being closed down, with the resultant loss of employment. I believe I speak for all of northern Ontario when I say there are a great number of potential iron ore mines in this area. I believe some of these would be in operation were it not for the fact that the rail haul is too long and therefore the transportation cost is too great.

While these additional tolls may not have any affect on this situation, there is the possibility that they could. Northern Ontario perhaps is affected more by automation than many people realize. The number of lumber workers has been reduced to a great extent; the railways are continuing with the process of automation, and this too is reducing employment. If there is any possibility that these potential mines might be put into operation, we do not want to do anything which will discourage them, since this would have an affect on employment and on the economy as a whole.

I wish to say a few words about the movement of grain. At the outset I should like to say that the mover of the motion today represents a riding in which I was born and grew up, so grain is not entirely new to me; I do know a little about grain farming. I should like to make this point also. As a result of working on the railway I found that railwaymen generally assessed the economic situation of the western farmer by the business offering on the railway. If the western farmer had money to spend, the railroader was busy; if he did not have money to spend, the railroader was not busy. When I say this I do not mean that if the western farmer was not shipping grain over our line, we were not busy. The point I am trying to make is simply that even though we did not get a great portion of his grain, when the western farmer had the grain to sell, and when he had the dollars in his pocket, he was buying implements, automobiles, and everything else. As a result, the railroad was very busy.

Therefore even though this suggested 1¼ cents a bushel extra toll on grain appears small, on the whole I think it would have a very serious effect on our economy. I think we would certainly see its effects on the manufacturing industries, the transportation business and, I would say, the oil and petroleum industries as well. I do not intend to take up any more time, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to say that as far as I am concerned I thoroughly support everyone who has spoken in this house in opposition to any suggested increase of tolls on the seaway.

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to recapitulate the debate that has been going on this afternoon. I think all members of the house and the public are well aware of the history of the seaway and the reason for its being built. It was a dream 80 years ago. Let us look at what happened to it. We had to use a bit of blackmail. The Canadian government—and let me pay tribute to the Liberal government of the day—said to the Americans, "If you do not join us, we will go it alone." Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry we did not go it alone. We should have twinned the Eisenhower locks when they built them.

I am not going to argue about whether the western wheat farmer will lose 1¼ cents a bushel or whether our loss through not shipping iron ore will ultimately be borne by the consumer. The basic principle is simply that this increase in tolls represents a lack of faith in our country. It is a 50-year write-off. If you think this country is going to stand still, you have less faith in it than I have; because it is not standing still and we are going to move forward. I had a speech written out, Mr. Speaker, but if I read it I would just be reiterating everything that has been said in the debate so far. So in conclusion I say, let us have faith in this country.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we have an opportunity to express our views on the proposed 10 per cent increase in tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. I consider it the duty of as many members as possible to participate in this debate. The vital importance of the question is demonstrated by the fact that the regular business of the house has been adjourned so that the problem can be thoroughly discussed. I think we have had a very full discussion today, although there are probably enough speakers to continue the debate for another day.

Reference has been made to the public hearings in Ottawa in the past two days. As I understand it, the purpose of these hearings was to test the public attitude and public reaction to any toll increases. I believe the public attitude has been very clearly demonstrated in the two-day hearings, and it certainly has been demonstrated very clearly in the debate we have had today.

Earlier speakers expressed very clearly the viewpoint of western Canada. I do not believe it is necessary to repeat the arguments they have presented, but I should like to refer to the brief presented by the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited at the hearing yesterday. Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited represent the farmer-owned wheat pools of the three prairie provinces and certainly this organization speaks for the majority of western farmers, particularly wheat farmers. Mr. Gordon L. Harrold, president of the Alberta Wheat Pool presented the brief, which recommended that the tolls cover operating costs only. In this regard he expressed the opinion that the present tolls were more than sufficient to cover the operating costs. The government of Saskatchewan also presented a brief which was placed before the hearing by the minister of highways and transportation of that province, Mr. Grant. It endorsed the stand put forward in the brief presented by the wheat pools.

I just want to re-emphasize the vital position of the prairies as the inland portion of Canada. I will not present the map to the house, but it shows how we are dependent on the seaway for a great deal of our traffic. I was happy to be on the first ship that passed through the seaway after the official opening on April 25, 1959. I should like to read what I reported to my constituents at that time:

> The seaway will bring huge freighters more than 2,500 miles inland to the lakehead.

That was at the beginning of my speech, and later on I said:

> It is not too clear, as yet, just how great will be the benefit to western Canada in having freighters calling almost at the west's doorstep. The saving in shipping costs for prairie wheat will be at least 5⅜ cents a bushel because this much has already been announced by the Canadian Wheat Board and has been added to the lakehead wheat price. This means extra cash to prairie wheat growers on wheat shipped from the lakehead.

It was encouraging to hear very strong views expressed by speakers on the government side of the house in support of our arguments against any increase in seaway tolls. I trust that these comments from his own colleagues will be drawn to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). In fact, the Minister of Transport himself made a statement in the house that I consider to be in support of our arguments against any increase in the cost of exporting wheat such as would result from higher seaway tolls. On September 14, 1964, the Minister of Transport made this statement as reported in Hansard:

> We consider, as every government has considered—at least for a generation—that one of the national interests of this country is to maintain the tremendous grain export business that has been one of the main sources of income for the Canadian people in the whole of the twentieth century.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that he was referring at that time to the Crowsnest pass rate, and he stated that the government had no intention of removing these rates which helped the export of our wheat. However, I think that the argument is just as convincing for the seaway tolls.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking in particular for wheat exports and the movement of wheat. Other speakers have spoken for other exports and other movements through the seaway. I should like to refer to the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board which states the following:

> The sales policy of the board was directed to obtaining the largest possible share of the reduced world import requirements.

Further on it states:

Pursuant to its obligation to promote the sale of grain produced in Canada in world markets the board endeavoured to keep its prices for export wheat competitive at all times—

The board quoted separate daily asking prices for wheat (a) in store Pacific ports, (b) in store Fort William/Port Arthur and (c) in store Churchill. Export selling prices c.i.f. St. Lawrence ports, c.i.f. Atlantic ports and, as required, in store at intermediate seaway ports were also announced by the board.

The purpose of regional pricing was to maintain the competitive position of export wheat in major commercial markets irrespective of the port of shipment.

Further on it states the following, and this applies to the 1964-65 crop year:

Shipments from Fort William/Port Arthur—380 million bushels.

As other speakers have stated, the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool estimated that a 10 per cent increase in seaway tolls would mean an additional 1¼ cents a bushel in the cost of exporting wheat. Moving 380 million bushels of wheat through the lakehead at an extra cost of 1¼ cents a bushel would mean roughly $5 million out of the farmers' pockets. I think this is a very good argument against increasing the seaway tolls.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a statement made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. This statement was made in 1964 at which time there was pressure from U.S. interests to increase the seaway tolls. I think it should be put on the record because I do not believe that it has been put on the record so far. I will just read part of it:

The federation delegates took another look at the organization's policy position on St. Lawrence seaway tolls at this year's annual meeting. They resolved to strongly oppose any increase in tolls on the section of the seaway from Montreal to lake Ontario, to oppose any toll charges whatever on on the Welland canal, and to oppose the principle of recovering capital costs of the seaway through the collection of tolls.

This will strengthen the arguments of the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler).

The report states further:

In making these decisions, the federation delegates had these considerations in mind. First, they recognized that the seaway was built to benefit all Canadians through lowering costs of products moving through the waterway for both the domestic and export markets. Second, it was pointed out that the Montreal to lake Ontario section of the seaway is the only waterway in North America which is subject to tolls. Third, that while there may be some obligation and justification for attempting to recover operating and maintenance costs by charging tolls, any attempt to recover capital costs in the same way would defeat the purpose of the seaway by making its utilization uneconomic for many users.

There is one more paragraph which stresses the point I am trying to make. It says:

Tolls on the seaway, of course, affect farmers in two ways.

Then, speaking for western grain farmers, it continues:

Export grain transported through the waterway loses some degree of competitiveness in world markets, or farmers receive less returns for their product. In the second place, the costs of goods that farmers buy stand to be higher, whenever such goods, or the materials from which they are made, are transported through the seaway.

That is the point which I was trying to emphasize, that any increase in seaway tolls would affect the prairies. Of course, it also affects other parts of the country. It would affect us in two ways.

As I stated at the outset of my remarks, this debate has been most necessary because it made it possible to put on the record arguments that must be carefully considered by the government and by the seaway authority. These arguments against increased seaway tolls must be pressed home now. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has clearly stated that a decision will be made soon. I will read what he said as reported in Hansard on March 24 at page 3086. He is referring to discussions between the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the St. Lawrence Corporation of the United States. He speaks about the possibility of a revision of the existing tolls, and says:

I understand that the parties to this discussion now feel they are fairly close to agreement as to what they will be prepared to recommend to the two governments.

To me that indicates that a decision has been taken and a recommendation will be made to the government very shortly.

In briefs presented to the standing committee on transport and communications recommendations have been made for a transportation authority which would have the power to work out an over-all policy for all transportation by rail, by air, by bus and by water. I believe it is necessary to have such an over-all transportation policy. I believe such a policy will evolve eventually. In the meantime I support the arguments presented today against any increase in seaway tolls.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for a few moments on the subject of the possibility of toll increases on shipping on the great lakes. Some time ago I asked the Minister of Transport what was the position of his government with respect to these increases. His reply was that in due course the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority would ask for briefs, brochures and other representations from various organizations. When the facts were made known to them, they would make a decision and inform the government of it. Nothing up to that point would become mandatory or operative until the government, in turn, passed an order in council implementing the recommendation.

The purpose of this debate today is to give parliament an opportunity to talk and make representations to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority before they make their decision. It was extremely disturbing to me when the house leader on the government side tried to find some means of putting off this debate under standing order 26, by means of which we sought to discuss these tolls. I am glad that it has been going forward. I have listened to many of the speeches this afternoon and I must say that if these representations reach the ears of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, they should have the desired effect.

Who is going to make these representations to the authority? Well, it may be the wheat pools or it may be the United Grain Growers in so far as wheat is concerned. This dispute affects not only grain shippers but every type of shipper. What is the implication of an increase in rates? Anyone knows that when you set rates on the lakes or any other transportation system, that changes and moves a lot of other things. What formerly looked like a good market could now be out of reach of a particular industry simply because of the increase in rates. This could happen.

It is no wonder that many people are exercised about what is going to happen to the rate structure which has been in effect for a number of years. If these rates are to be increased, as is proposed, by a cent and a half or whatever it is, this would cost the farmers of western Canada roughly $5 million in extra transportation charges on their wheat going through Fort William or Port Arthur. This would be $5 million they would not get. The only way you can look at the situation is that this sum comes directly out of the pockets of the farmers of western Canada. It will be money they will not have to spend. It will reduce their standard of living, and many have incomes which will not stand this additional charge.

We hope that this discussion will cause the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to pause and reconsider any recommendations which they might wish to make to the government. We would expect, therefore, when the decision is made it will be amply supported. If that is not the case, then it will be the duty of this government to ascertain the facts and decide what they intend to do. We do not feel like leaving it to this government because they do not have too good a reputation for taking action on matters of this kind in favour of the producers and people of western Canada.

There is another aspect to this entire question, namely, why not balance the raising of tolls on the great lakes against a possible reduction in volume, if you raise the rates If the rates are raised, someone is going to decide that he cannot afford to pay them and will not ship. What do you want? You cannot have it both ways. It would be better to leave the rates as they are and increase the volume. This would bring in a certain sum of money. If, on the other hand, you raised the rates and had less shipping you might end up with the same amount of money.

From an economic point of view, and from the point of view of the good of Canada as a whole, I think there is no question but what an increase in the volume of shipping and keeping the toll rates as they are would produce more money than the raising of rates and the curtailment of shipping. I hope therefore that this St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will take this point into consideration and think twice before they raise the rates on the great lakes system.

I am glad that this debate in parliament has given everyone who is concerned with this problem an opportunity to express his views. I do hope that in due course the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will make their recommendations and that those recommendations will be of a nature which will not raise the tolls on the great lakes system.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I do not want to be repetitious, Mr. Speaker, but I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I did not speak on this matter of raising tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. This proposal is made at a time when our farmers are caught in the price squeeze and when they are receiving less and less for their products. This threatened increase amounts to about a cent and a half per bushel on the grain that is shipped through the St. Lawrence ports. On the other hand, this situation may be an eye opener for some of our farmers, particularly those in northern Saskatchewan who could make much greater use of the Hudson bay route for shipping grain to Europe. St. Lawrence tolls have no effect on grain shipped through Churchill. It is a saving for the grain growers in northern Saskatchewan, and more use should be made of this.

Long before this question came up in the house, I received many letters from my constituents. Every one of them drew my attention to the fact that this proposed increase in tolls would be a hardship on Canadian farmers who must ship their grain through St. Lawrence ports. A few years ago we only had to contend with wheat and flax, but now rapeseed is going through this route. At a time when we want to establish this industry strongly should we be faced with an increase in freight charges which may be a mortal blow to this new grain industry?

I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that you allowed this debate to take place today. It is a very important one and had to take place today for the simple reason that, if it had not, many millions of dollars would have been lost merely because our views would not have been brought strongly to the attention of the government.

Many of the Saskatchewan members stressed this point very strongly, for the simple reason that almost without exception our trade must be carried along the St. Lawrence seaway. I do not want to be repetitious or to delay this matter, because I know other hon. members from the west want to make a strong appeal to the government. I ask that they pay attention to our pleas and see that this increased toll does not come into being. I realize there are some areas of the country which would like to see an increase, but it would be a very serious matter for the western farmer who must ship his grain through the seaway.

I see Mr. Speaker, who made the decision to allow this debate, is now in the chair and I should like to direct my personal thanks to him for allowing us to discuss the matter.

Another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the house is that even though an increase in tolls on the seaway might be requested by the tolls commission, we should never allow matters to reach the point where the government alone would see fit to increase tolls.

That is all I have to say at the present time. Other members from the west wish to have an opportunity to express their views and the views of the people they represent here in parliament.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the debate this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in his usual fashion made an unwarranted attack on the members of the cabinet for, as he claimed, not being present during this important debate.

Mr. Churchill: Where were they?

Mr. Knowles: Yes, where are they?

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) has asked, where are they?

Mr. Churchill: North Centre asked, where are they?

Mr. Byrne: I am about to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, where were the front benchers of the former administration, the members of the cabinet of the former Conservative government, when the right hon. gentleman was speaking? Not one of those former cabinet ministers was sitting in the front benches. Significantly absent was the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and a number of others who certainly should have been interested in this important debate.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member has lost two cabinet ministers while he has been speaking. They walked out on him.

Mr. Byrne: There was a noticeable lack of western members on the front benches, and that cannot be denied. Furthermore the members of the opposition were forewarned that this debate was about to take place. However, members of the cabinet had made other commitments—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member said that members of the opposition were forewarned that this debate would take place. You, sir, had nothing at all to do with that. You did not tell us in advance. In fact, you took us by surprise.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I will have unquestionably to accept the statement by the hon. member. However, you will bear with me if there are some lingering doubts in my mind on this question.

Mr. Churchill: That is a reflection on the Chair.

Mr. Byrne: It was not my intention to argue extensively the question whether tolls should be increased or whether there should be tolls of any description on the St. Lawrence river and its related facilities. However, I think it has been pointed out this afternoon by a number of speakers, and in particular by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner), that this development was the result of an international agreement which was finalized by acts of parliament and by Congress.

I should like to quote the words of a former minister of transport, the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), when he answered a question in the house on November 7, 1957, which was posed to him by the then hon. member for Meadow Lake, as reported at page 847 of Hansard:

> With respect to the hon. member's reference to a decision to impose tolls, I should perhaps remind the house how this matter came about. It is well known that for many years the executive branch of the United States government was unsuccessful in obtaining approval from Congress for an agreement with Canada for the construction of navigation works in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence river.

Then the hon. member went on to describe the difficulty the President was experiencing in getting this matter to Congress, and he concluded with these words:

> Both of these acts provide for the establishment of tolls to make the project self-liquidating.

I think the significant words there, Mr. Speaker, are the words "self-liquidating". This was and is an international agreement. The Leader of the Opposition in this abrogation of international agreements is following a pattern. We have the Columbia river treaty which he failed to consummate. Then there was the treaty on atomic weapons which he failed to carry out. We now have the suggestion that this agreement with the United States be not concluded.

• (9:20 p.m.)

As I said, it was not my intention to argue one way or another the need for an increase in tolls on the seaway.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): We realize that.

Mr. Byrne: I have come across a number of inaccuracies which should be referred to. The motion states that Mr. Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, indicates that the net return to western wheat producers will be reduced by $1\frac{1}{3}$ cents per bushel, should tolls be increased.

I am told that the increase in tolls amounts to 11 cents per ton. The total shipping charge from a point between, say, the midwestern prairie and Montreal is $18.43 per ton, this figure including handling at the lakehead, railway transportation and lake shipping. The figure will be increased by 11 cents per ton to $18.54. One will bear in mind that there are approximately 33 bushels to the ton. I note the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) watching me carefully to see if I know anything about wheat.

When shipping began in 1959, with the advent of the St. Lawrence seaway as an operational project, the wheat board increased wheat prices at the lakehead by $5\frac{5}{8}$ cents a bushel. I will not get into too small fractions, but I think that we still have more than a 5 cent per bushel advantage as a result of the St. Lawrence seaway project—

Mr. Nasserden: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Byrne: Indeed, I would.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the hon. member not agree that this is an increase in the cost of production?

Mr. Byrne: There is no question about that, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the extra charge involves an additional $\frac{1}{3}$ of a cent per bushel in the delivery charges to Montreal. That is self-evident, and I am surprised that the hon. member asked such a simple question.

My principal reason for entering the debate is because this motion was introduced primarily for the protection, if you will, of the wheat growers of western Canada. It has been said by hon. members taking part in the debate that the government has no transportation policy, and that it has done nothing to assist the western farmers.

Because of the terms of the motion, I want to go somewhat into the history of the movement of wheat from western Canada to the lakehead; from the lakehead to Montreal and, of course, to the Atlantic coast. I point out that under the Liberal regime of the Right Hon. Mackenzie King in 1922, the grain delivery rates were first governed by statute.

An hon. Member: Was that 1922?

Mr. Byrne: The then prime minister set up a special committee of the house and the Senate.

An hon. Member: There was no seaway in 1922.

Mr. Byrne: That committee went into the then existing agreement known as the Crowsnest agreement, which among other things at that time provided that the shipment of grain from western Canada should be at the rate applying in 1897. Until 1922, under the Crowsnest agreement, the freight charges respecting many commodities were not by statute but by agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Included were 13 items which were practically all essential to the western farm community. This agreement to which I have referred applied to all commodities moving westward from the lakehead, while the rate applying to grain was on the eastward movement to the lakehead.

It was determined by the committee set up by Right Hon. Mackenzie King that the Canadian Pacific Railway could not continue to operate under such stringent regulations. In passing, may I point out that this rate applied to the rail lines which had been constructed prior to 1897, being approximately 7,300 miles in length. By 1922 the rate applied to approximately 13,000 miles of railway on the western prairies. It followed, therefore, that the rate could not apply to 7,000 miles of prairie railway, and not equally apply to the other 6,000 miles.

In the end result the railways were effectually required to make these rates effective on the additional 6,000 miles. The committee found that unless the government were to take over the railway line and operate it on the basis of those rates the company could not carry on. The committee recommended that the C.P.R. should be absolved from carrying the commodities named in the Crowsnest agreement, except in the case of wheat destined for export. This means and meant at the time, that the rate for shipping western Canadian wheat was held at the rate which was in existence in 1897. That of course is where it stands today.

I do not want hon. members to misunderstand me—

Mr. Churchill: You want to raise that rate, do you?

Mr. Byrne: I have lived on the prairies myself and my family has lived there for years. I know what the difficulties of farmers are. I simply want to make it plain that this administration and past Liberal administrations have been cognizant of the difficulties inherent in wheat growing in western Canada.

I said earlier that when the great lakes shipping channel was deepened to 27 feet and became operational in 1959, the price of wheat was increased by just under six cents a bushel. The increase now proposed, if it should come into effect, would amount to ⅓ cents a bushel. I believe the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) said this would mean some $5 million loss to the western farmers. That is unquestionably a great deal of money but I would ask hon. members to consider with me whether the policy which was adopted by a former Liberal administration and which has, of course, become public policy since, that grain movement in western Canada which sometimes reaches a volume of half a billion bushels a year, moving at a rate which was set in 1897, does not bring some real benefit to the farmers of western Canada.

Take the rate from Lethbridge to Fort William.

An hon. Member: We do not ship wheat that way.

Mr. Byrne: I am reminded by the hon. member for Assiniboia that we do not ship wheat from Lethbridge to Fort William. This brings up another aspect of the Crowsnest rates which I am sorry I have neglected to relate. The agreement, as the hon. member well knows, provided that these rates should apply to eastern movement only. But after the statutory rates were put into effect in 1922 it became clear that the difficulties of hauling loads over vast mountains were not as great as had been predicted and that grain could move to ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert. And, of course, a market developed in that area. It was therefore decided by government under the guise of the Crowsnest agreement that the same rates should apply to the western movement. Hence the shipments today from Lethbridge to the Pacific coast through the Crowsnest Pass and by way of the Columbia valley to the main line, thence, to Vancouver. This, of course, is another benefit of the initial agreement and the statutory rates which were set in 1922 by a Liberal administration.

I was about to say when I was interrupted that I suspect the cost of shipping grain in Canada today as compared to the rates applying south of the border in the United States would be about one-third of that incurred by our neighbours.

I am not sure of the actual figures but when I inquired into this question some 15 years ago, this proportion applied. As a basis I took the freight charge from Coutts in Alberta to the lakehead. I believe it was 20 cents a bushel on the Canadian side. The comparable distance in the United States was from Sweet Grass, Montana, to Chicago. The rate there was about 60 cents a bushel. This is, of course, a significant differential, so much so that some enterprising American—I was about to say "Yankee" but I do not think that term is a complimentary one—began to purchase wheat in Sweet Grass, truck it to Coutts, ship by rail to the lakehead and from there to Chicago, making a handsome profit of some 35 to 40 cents a bushel. No doubt it would be interesting to hon. members if I were to relate what happened when the C.P.R. attempted to stop this movement by telling this enterprising individual that no cars could be provided. We often hear this complaint from members of the opposition —that cars are not available.

Mr. Nasserden: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is this: I wish to ask when the hon. member intends to deal with the increase in tolls on the seaway. This ancient history concerning freight rates over the years is very interesting, but all we on this side of the house have been able to gather from it is that the Liberal party has changed a great deal since those days.

Mr. Byrne: Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party changed for the better as time went along and I want to assure the hon. member that the Liberal party has the very highest regard for the western prairie farmer and his problems.

Mr. Baldwin: It is not reciprocated.

Mr. Byrne: If you just look at the MacPherson commission report you will find that the public policy of the Crowsnest rates will continue to apply, as recommended. The hon. member has called this ancient history, but I do not think it is ancient history. I believe it is current history. It is important that these grain rates stay at a relatively low figure so that we can remain in the world market.

The hon. member raised the question of whether or not I was in order. That question need hardly arise, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour had the pleasure this afternoon of hearing the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) quote extensively from a report by Knowlton Nash, in the May 28 edition of the Financial Post, dealing with matters completely extraneous to the question of wheat movement which, after all, is the matter that is before the house, involving an increase in the cost of delivering wheat to Montreal of something like 1⅓ cents per bushel.

The Leader of the Opposition I submit went much further afield than I have. I am dealing essentially with the question of the rates on grain and whether or not the charges that have been made by members of the opposition, that the Liberal party does not have a policy with respect to freight movement and gives no thought to the western farmers, are correct.

When I was so rudely interrupted—I retract that statement because I have a high regard for the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden)—when I was so interestingly interrupted I was about to recall that the box car controller in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at that time told these enterprisers that the company was unable to supply the box cars required for the movement of wheat from Montana to Chicago, but could provide them with cattle cars only. The company did not reckon with the ingenuity of one enterpriser in Montana who took delivery of the cattle cars, simply lined them with three ply, and went on about his business making something like 30 cents a bushel in the transaction.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the motion deals with the question of increased costs of producing and marketing a bushel of wheat. There is no doubt that other commodities will suffer in proportion. I do not have the figures of the proposed increased cost per ton on iron ore. If they are in the same proportion to the cost of moving a ton of wheat, then I hesitate to believe the suggestion that iron ore from Quebec and Labrador will be going over another route to New York and on into the industrial heart of the United States by rail.

There is no question but that the lowest possible shipping costs are obtained by movement on water, even though some lockage charges may be involved. I do not have all of the evidence that was placed before the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority in its recent hearings. Perhaps some hon. members who have spoken today have had the benefit of reading some of the briefs that were presented, but I personally have not. I think we should wait until we hear the report of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, and when it has made its recommendations to the cabinet I am sure the government will act in the best interests of all Canada, and that includes the wheat growers of western Canada.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the one remarkable statement I heard from the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) was his expression of the high regard which the Liberal party had for the farmers of western Canada. I say that the good people of Canada should pause once in a while to see how fortunate it was for Canada that the farmers of western Canada do not have the same regard for the Liberal party. Today has been a pretty good illustration of that.

While this issue involves far more than the western farmers—and it does affect them intimately—we have had an illustration of member after member from the west rising, and with golden words of wisdom which, looking at the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) I am afraid fell on stony ears, indicating the reasons why this proposed increase in tolls should not be put into effcet.

The hon. member for Kootenay East said something about there being no member from western Canada in the chamber at one time. As one member from western Canada I should like to say I was attending the public accounts committee to salvage something out of the pitiful mess of overpayments, extravagance and waste flowing from the actions of the government. Now I come back to this chamber and find that our efforts are going to waste because the Minister without Portfolio, on behalf of the government, is going to impose this additional sum of money on the overburdened taxpayers of the country, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. Turner: That is not what I said at all.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: I consider it is significant that the hon. member who just sat down did not in one sentence, if I heard him correctly—and we will look to see whether we can glean some golden nuggets tomorrow—indicates in any way his support for the position taken by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner). There stands the minister like Horatio at the bridge, only for a very much worse cause. He is the only man who has seen fit to stand up and support this nefarious program of increased tolls. I say to the minister, after listening to what has been said on this side, that if he had tears surely he would be prepared to shed them now, but I doubt after the long list of errors, accidents and mistakes which have come from the government over there that he has any tears left.

In dealing with the issue for one moment, I should like to say that I would not have spoken at all had I looked across at the minister and seen some capability of bending or some indication that he is prepared to accede to these very reasonable requests. As I read the St. Lawrence seaway legislation I find it is very vague and ambiguous to some extent; but when the minister suggested earlier this afternoon that there might have been or could have been access to the Board of Transport Commissioners, I suggest this is entirely wrong. As it stands now, if under section 17 the tolls are imposed by the Canadian government acting through the seaway authority in conjunction with the government of the United States, through its corporate emanation, sections 15 and 16 have no application at all, and so far as the tolls established with regard to the deep water construction are concerned there is no opportunity for the Board of Transport Commissioners to function. But if they did function with regard to other tolls which were set, it would not be by way of hearing and appeal.

I may have misunderstood the minister, but in discussing what was said in 1958 by Mr. Chevrier at the time the announcement was made by the minister of transport, he made the suggestion that Mr. Chevrier had indicated this. I say this is not the case. Even if it were, all that the Board of Transport Commissioners can do is to consider the question of discrimination. The question of discrimination as applied to the Board of Transport Commissioners has had a long history. The board cannot consider the economic consequences but, as between two individuals or two corporations whose goods are being carried by this particular carrier, it can come to a decision in respect of whether or not there has been discrimination.

I think it is quite wrong to suggest that any time, under the legislation which was brought in in 1951 by the then Liberal government, there could have been any opportunity for the Board of Transport Commissioners, in respect of the tolls, to do other than deal with the question of discrimination. I think this is what they are limited to. Quite recently in the public accounts committee we had the opportunity to have some of the officials of the seaway appear before us. I am not in a position to quote from the report of the committee, but I can act as a pipeline and give some of the impressions I received as a result of what was said. The tolls were established as a result of a projection made by a tolls committee which was set up I believe in 1957. This committee considered the matter. It was a joint committee established by the United States and Canadian governments. It made certain estimates as to the possible revenue and projected expenses. Their recommendation was made to the two governments and the tolls were then set. Since that time it has been discovered that this projection was so far out that over a period of years from the time the seaway came into operation there has been a shortfall of some $32 million.

Today it is proposed that the new tolls be established as a result of a projected economic review made by another committee. What is there in this projection for us to accept as assurance that their estimate will be any more accurate than that of the committee which made its report in 1958? It is suggested that this increase of 10 per cent in five or six years somehow will result in there being equalization of the expenses and the tolls. I doubt this very much. In the last few years, with an expanding economy it has been impossible to make the tolls meet the cost of operation and the interest charges which, under the act, must be taken into consideration.

Under these circumstances I suggest the sensible thing would be for the government to urge the seaway authority not to project these additional tolls at this time but rather to let the matter be delayed so that the whole issue may be brought into parliament and considered in connection with an over-all transportation policy for the good of Canada. I would suggest that this is a matter for this house, for parliament, and not for the government or any crown corporation. The proper thing to do is to put a stop to this proposal. Let us continue under the same rates which have been in effect, and then let the whole matter come to parliament to receive proper discussion so that we may be able to reach a proper decision.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members citation 100 paragraph 12 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> The debate on the urgent matter referred to in standing order 26 cannot be adjourned, as the motion actually before the chair is "that the house do now adjourn". Once the house rises, the motion is carried.

Normally, according to the standing order I should leave the chair now, but I believe I should bring to the attention of hon. members that there is a long list of questions which are pending now for the adjournment debate. If hon. members wish to give unanimous consent that the Speaker do not leave the chair at this moment, the three questions which have been placed on the program for the adjournment debate could be heard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, may I state the business for tomorrow. We will begin with an interim supply bill for one month. Then we will proceed to the estimates of the Department of Labour, the Department of Industry, the Department of Defence Production, Legislation and the Privy Council.

Mr. Knowles: In that order?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—RECOGNITION OF PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS OF EUROPEANS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday of last week I raised the question concerning immigrants in Canada who are forced to take menial work although they have professional qualifications. My question arose from an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of Thursday, May 19, headed, "Graduate Becomes Sweeper." The article pointed out that university trained, professional men and women from Europe are working in Canada as dishwashers, labourers and technicians because professional associations will not accept their credentials. The article says that an Ontario Welfare Council discussion group was told this in Toronto. The article gives some examples to this effect and continues:

> Zlata Bartol of the Family Service Association said she knows of New Canadians with double doctorates who have been forced to work in the woods. She said universities have refused admittance for qualifying or refresher courses.

• (10:00 p.m.)

I do not know whether the charges made in this article are true, but this is not the point in my participating in this adjournment debate. We have heard of many cases of this type in the past and my concern is that in view of the serious shortage of skilled professionals in Canada, the acknowledged shortage of the people who are so vital to keep our employment going, it is incumbent upon the department of manpower to look into these charges to see whether they are true. If they are true and people with special training and qualifications are being prevented from using their talents in this country, it is certainly a most serious matter and one that calls for an investigation on the part of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I should like to quote from an editorial that appeared the following day in the Globe and Mail. The heading of this editorial is, "A Waste" and it says:

> Immigrants with degrees from European universities are often reduced to working as dishwashers, labourers and lumberjacks—

Then it goes on to say:

> According to Mr. Sametz, immigrants who go through some suffering to regain their professional status benefit by feeling a sense of achievement—

Then Mr. Sametz made this great comment:

> —some people make it, but some have been broken in the process.

The editorial continues:

> Good stern stuff and straight from the shoulder. What would be better for a doctor or an engineer than a few tough years in the bush? Indeed, the idea might well be extended to include the graduates of Canadian universities. No doubt that some suffering would also increase their sense of achievement.

I do not know whether you need this kind of suffering to increase the sense of achievement, but I do know there is a serious shortage of skilled people. We have asked immigrants to come to this country and I would certainly hope we would honour their credentials and enable them to perform the functions for which they were trained, not only for their own sake but for the benefit of this country. I would ask whoever is to speak for the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to provide an answer as to why these charges have not been investigated in the past, and also what the department intends to do about some of the charges that are being made today.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have noted the comments of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman). The Globe and Mail article to which he referred does not, of course, mention names. The effort can be made, and will be made, by the department to ascertain the names of the people who are referred to but are not named in the article. I think the hon. member and the house should bear in mind, though, that this happens in respect of a relatively small minority of immigrants who come to this country. Even if it is a limited few, I agree we should do everything possible to avoid its occurrence.

The hon. member is no doubt also aware that recognition for professional qualifications is under the jurisdiction of provincial licensing bodies. Immigration officials overseas have comprehensive information on the requirements which must be met in each province for entry into all of the major professions and skilled trades, and immigrants are given thorough counselling about the difficulties they are likely to encounter if they do not meet these requirements.

Immigration officers overseas are instructed to give this type of information, to warn of difficulties in this regard, and I do believe they sincerely undertake that task. They are also given direction to enable the immigrants to find out the chances of meeting the requirements directly from the appropriate licensing body. Again I would remind the hon. member that this falls under provincial jurisdiction.

Professional people, even those who are likely to have difficulty in obtaining recognition in Canada, can normally qualify for admission as immigrants by reason of their general education and the availability of employment opportunities for persons with training related to their professional field. Such persons cannot be refused admission, but they are informed overseas that they must expect either to have to take further training before being accepted into a professional association in Canada, or be willing to accept alternative employment outside of their profession.

The Globe and Mail article mentions misinformation given by immigration officials about housing in Toronto. We do not want to make any particular reference to that tonight, other than to say that this is information given by immigration officials which is usually obtained from the Department of Labour publication "Living and Working Conditions in Canada", which the department has always found to be extremely reliable.

INDUSTRY—BEAVERTON, ONT.—CLOSING OF AUTO PARTS PLANT

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): My question to the minister of manpower is as follows: Would the minister inform the house if he has received a telegram from Mr. Benson, international representative of the United Automobile Workers of America, in respect of the shut-down of Lake Simcoe Industries at Beaverton, Ontario, and if so what action will be taken to alleviate this serious situation set out in the telegram?

Lake Simcoe Industries is a small auto parts manufacturing firm owned by Attwood Vacuums of Rockford, Illinois. This industry employed directly approximately 225 people, and indirectly many more, such as transport employees, outside tool and die makers, as well as contributing largely to the economic life of this small community whose population is around 1,200 people. Its employees were both male and female, with many ranging from 45 to 60 years of age. These older people find it very hard to relocate in jobs of the nature to which they have been accustomed for the past 13 years while working for Lake Simcoe Industries, which has become a casualty of the free trade agreement in autos and auto parts.

A group of key personnel of this factory formed a company and endeavoured to purchase the now existing plant. In this effort they contributed a considerable amount of their own capital and applied to the Adjustment Assistance Board for a loan. This application was refused. They are now left in a situation where there is no possibility of this plant's carrying on operations after June of this year.

I request the minister to give consideration to this telegram sent by Mr. Benson and to use all the facilities in his department to assist these people to find suitable alternative employment.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Scott) may be happy to hear certain facts which may allay his fears. Our information is that the major layoff is due to commence on June 13. In accordance with arrangements made earlier 182 employees, 92 male and 90 female, were registered for employment on May 9 and 10. Of these 132 have indicated they could travel to new employment. The applications of 126 of these employees, 74 male and 52 female, are currently under consideration for comparable jobs at Lindsay, which is within commuting distance of Beaverton. Other employment is also reported in prospect in the Parry Sound and Peterborough areas.

Following the official announcement of the impending closure of Lake Simcoe Industries on April 29, an officer of the regional office of the National Employment Service at Toronto met with Mr. Benson, the international representative, Canadian region, of the United Automobile Workers to discuss the arrangements that were being made to assist the workers, and the prospect of alternative employment with firms in nearby areas. The possibility of employment with these firms is being actively canvassed on behalf of the Lake Simcoe employees.

I think the information I have just given should be quite encouraging so far as most of these workers, if not all, are concerned. Certainly there is hope of a great number of them finding alternative employment within commuting distance of their present residence. The hon. member would be pleased also to learn that Mr. Benson is meeting with the minister, I believe this month, and it appears likely as a result of the work being done by the government that those workers prejudicially affected will be brought under the transitional assistance benefits program.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 27, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

INQUIRIES ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PUBLICATION OF EVIDENCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-188, to amend the Inquiries Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to correct some of the deficiencies in the Inquiries Act. The bill provides that inquiries or royal commissions, as they are sometimes called, may continue to secure evidence from any available source in order to get at the truth of any matters into which they are inquiring, but it provides that material introduced at the inquiry, if it is defamatory of individuals, must not be published unless first of all—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: —unless it is relevant to the inquiry and would be admissible in a court of law. Recent episodes and the whole history of inquiries reveal the need for this type of legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FARM MACHINERY

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I request permission to table order in council P.C. 1966-978 appointing Dr. Clarence L. Barber, head of the department of economics, University of Manitoba, as a commissioner under part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire into the cost of farm machinery and repair parts. The terms of reference of the commissioner are contained in the order in council.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION FOLLOWING REPORT OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, since delivery to him of what might be described as Stuart Keate's commentaries, he has talked with the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or any of the senior executives. Have they given any indication that they are willing to compromise on their decision of dismissal in connection with the Leiterman program, and to bring about the suggested procedures to be followed in connection with dismissal of producers and other personnel?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report which Mr. Keate submitted to me was referred by me at once to the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and a representative of the producers' association. I hope this report will assist in the parties concerned getting together and resolving the dispute between them. I know my right hon. friend will share my expression of appreciation for what Mr. Keate was able to do to help in this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I share it, and I only hope that the words ascribed to the poet John Keats: "writ on the wind", would not apply. I should like to ask the Prime Minister now to answer the question. Has he communicated with the president or any senior member of the C.B.C., and have they shown any attitude of reasonable compromise?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I communicated the report to the president, as I have already indicated. It is now for the president and the producers association to discuss the report. I hope in their discussions they will be able to resolve their difficulties.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to refer the Prime Minister to the report of Mr. Keate, and in particular to a very short statement which appears at page 1, namely:

> The producers association suspended their strike threat and the show went on, opening with the statement that "This hour comes to you through the courtesy of the Prime Minister of Canada".

Does he take from those words the suggestion that either he or his government have shown some direct interference in the management of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is argumentative.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Does he intend to wait for the report of the parliamentary committee now studying the case of "This Hour Has Seven Days", before the producers association or management of the C.B.C. reach decisions?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the consideration if any, to be given by the committee to this report is a matter, of course, for the committee itself to decide.

TRANSPORT

SEAWAY TOLLS—HOUSE CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread concern over the proposal that the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway be raised, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he can give the house an assurance on two counts; first that the recommendations of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will be made public before any decision is made by the cabinet; second, that there will be an opportunity to discuss these recommendations in the House of Commons prior to any order in council being passed which would increase the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house has already been given an opportunity to discuss this matter. In regard to the procedure to be followed in the future, I would only assure my hon. friend that the appropriate constitutional procedure will be followed. I know this procedure will be such as will respect the rights of parliament and also the responsibilities of the government.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he can be more specific and clarify his statement. Is the Prime Minister now telling the house that the order in council will be passed without parliament being given any opportunity to discuss the recommendations of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, though I am not sure whether this is within the authority of the government. If not, would he approach the seaway authority to see whether the authority would make public the economic studies which it commissioned and upon which it bases its proposals?

Mr. Pearson: I should be glad to look into that question, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—APPOINTMENT OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLE INSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

On March 7 last, almost three months ago, the Canadian Fruit and Vegetable Wholesalers Association asked the Department of Agriculture to appoint additional federal inspectors in Quebec.

Can the minister tell us today if additional fruit and vegetable inspectors will be appointed in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: That question should be put on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture?

Is he in a position to tell us whether he is considering at present the possibility or advisability of appointing fruit and vegetable inspectors in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: That question has just been rejected.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would not want the inspectors to be placed on the order paper but rather appointed in the province of Quebec to deal with fruits and vegetables.

[English]

FARM MACHINERY

CONSIDERATION OF PRICE INCREASES BY AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of the order in council he tabled a few moments ago. May I ask him, in view of the fact that a one man commission has been set up to inquire into the prices of farm machinery and repair parts, whether this is an indication that the minister does not intend to ask that this subject matter be referred to the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development of this house, so that body can continue the work it began several years ago in this regard.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the committee of course are masters of their own procedure. They can, if they wish, continue any discussion. Having reviewed what the committee has done in these past several years, it seemed to me that a more useful result, and a more beneficial one to the farm community in the long run, could be achieved by having an all pervasive inquiry conducted by a prominent agricultural economist such as Dr. Barber. It seems to me that such an inquiry into the entire subject matter by Dr. Barber is preferable, rather than having this done through the medium of the committee. I think the committee had a very difficult time, according to my reading of the reports, in coming to a conclusion.

I hope, having heard the representations of various parties and hon. members throughout the house in this regard, this proposed measure will be a more useful one in the long run.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): A supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture in connection with the appointment of a one man royal commission to investigate the price of farm machinery. This is something I advocated a long time ago, and I am very pleased—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rapp: I want to ask this question. Is the minister in a position to say why this is only a one man royal commission, and not the usual commission with two, three or more members?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this particular question, whether it should be a one, two or three man commission is not so important that it should be asked at this time.

Mr. Rapp: With respect, I think it is very important.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member could place this question on the order paper.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Minister of Agriculture, in connection with this commission, set any time limit within which we shall know the results of the commission hearings?

Mr. Greene: No, Mr. Speaker. I think we should give Dr. Barber every opportunity of going into this question in depth, as he sees fit. I do not wish to tie him down in any way, because I think all hon. members of the house would like to have the most comprehensive inquiry possible.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister assure the house that Dr. Barber will continue his investigation for several years; because during the course of the investigation by the House of Commons committee, which lasted for several months, the price of farm machinery never rose.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask hon. members to limit their contributions to questions at this time.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STILBESTROL—SUGGESTED BAN ON USE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the United States food and drug administration has recently recognized stilbestrol as a cancer causing agent, would the minister give early consideration to the banning of its use in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is doubt in my mind whether this question is so urgent that it could not be placed on the order paper. I recommend that course to the hon. member.

Mr. Noble: I think this is an important issue; it affects our health and welfare, and this material is being used promiscuously in Canada now. I think the minister knows something about it.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the minister knows something about it, and trust he will be able to indicate that in a written reply.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): My question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the worsening situation in connection with the strike of longshoremen at the St. Lawrence river ports, is the minister in a position to place before the house the optimistic possibility of an early settlement of this dispute? What does the government intend to do about it, with the ships piling up and exports being held back?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am not in a position to make a report at this time, optimistic or otherwise. The government has seen fit to appoint an experienced mediator, who enjoys the confidence of both sides in this dispute. That mediator is sitting in Montreal at the moment, and I do not think the government should be asked to state what action—one way or the other—may be required until we have had a report from him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the minister mean by that? Does he mean the dawdling on the part of the government is to continue? Is that what he means?

Mr. Nicholson: There has been no dawdling.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Labour.

Has the ministerial committee looking into the conflict between the C.N.T.U. and the C.L.C. at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reached a decision, and if so, could it be known?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I announced the other day that there would probably be an adjournment of the meeting which had been set for this morning. A new date has been suggested for that meeting; it will probably be held on June 15 of this year. I have not yet had a chance to check with the chairman of the ad hoc committee since his return, but we are working toward that date.

[Mr. Speaker.]

BANK OF CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to take this opportunity to thank the Minister of Finance for giving notice in Votes and Proceedings this morning of a bill to amend the Bank of Canada Act. May I ask the leader of the house whether we can expect this bill to be placed before us for discussion next week?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I have no way of knowing that. All the government can do is indicate the business it proposes to submit to the house. I am afraid that last night I had to indicate that we were in exactly the same place with regard to legislation as we were a week ago Thursday night.

Mr. Diefenbaker: For which the government is to blame.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winkler: If I assure the leader of the house of my co-operation can he assure me that this matter will be up for discussion next week?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, having given him notice five minutes ago. In view of the reported announcement by the Prime Minister of Great Britain that the policy of sanctions with respect to Rhodesia has failed, and in view of his reported decision to accept in effect the recommendations of the Conservative opposition to proceed to negotiate with Mr. Smith, the Prime Minister of Rhodesia, with a view to bringing about a settlement, has the minister any comment to make in connection with this important development?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I cannot accept that the British Prime Minister has made any such announcement as is suggested in the question. I assume that my hon. friend's question is based upon a story carried by the New York Times service this morning.

The informal exploratory talks between British and Rhodesian officials, which were adjourned last week for a short period, were designed to see if a basis for negotiations exists. These talks began last month, and the British Prime Minister told the British parliament on April 27 that the British position remained that:

> —none of us in the house was prepared to accept a settlement which condoned an illegal act or which failed to satisfy the principles which were laid down by my predecessor when he was prime minister and by the present government.

The sanctions program is continuing in full force. The exploratory talks in London took place without any commitment and without interference with the course of the economic pressure that is being put on the illegal regime in Rhodesia.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is in connection with Rhodesia. Does the minister consider that a massive program of education for the native Africans would be helpful in order to bring them up to the educational standards required for the franchise under the present constitution?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion, and his question is of a very general nature which cannot be accepted.

Mr. Churchill: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question. Now that sanctions obviously have failed, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what proposals he has to help solve the problem in respect of Rhodesia.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot admit that the sanctions program has failed. I hope my hon. friend will accept my view that this does not seem to be the situation. The hon. member will recall that at the conference in Lagos, attended by the Prime Minister, this was one of the proposals made to help bring about, in the long term, a solution to this problem.

Mr. Churchill: The minister now has said that educational assistance to the native Africans in Rhodesia was one of the proposals made at the Lagos conference. Would the minister then reverse the program he undertook earlier this year of withdrawing Canadian educational authorities from Rhodesia; would he return them to this area so that they can assist in this program?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Canadian government certainly has no objection to continuing its technical assistance program for Rhodesia. There were nine Canadian advisers involved in that program. This was not entirely the result of a decision taken by the Canadian government. Rather, the security considerations involved prompted the persons concerned themselves to take the initiative.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

GRANTS FOR RECREATION CENTRES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can consideration be given by the Department of National Health and Welfare to recommending grants for the construction of social and recreational centres for senior citizens equal in amount to grants by any province under an act of the legislature for such purpose?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is difficult to interpret this question. I am not sure if the hon. member is asking for a legal opinion, but in any event the question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Brown: Ten o'clock.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Has the minister received a telegram from R. O. Blanchard Ltée which reads as follows:

> Alarming situation as a result of the longshoremen's strike—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that under the rules he cannot read a telegram in such a way when asking a question. He can ask a question concerning a telegram, but he cannot read the message itself.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Ricard: Has the Minister of Labour received a telegram from R. O. Blanchard Ltée, of Saint-Germain, in which the company advises him that the lives of thousands of head of livestock are threatened unless that strike is settled within 24 hours?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question is rather of local interest. I take for granted that the minister has taken note of the hon. member's representations.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I abide by the ruling you just made with regard to the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). He is merely asking the minister whether he has received a telegram. It is not only a matter of local interest, but of general interest throughout the province of Quebec.

Will the minister say whether or not he has received telegrams from Quebec farmers' organizations concerning feed grain?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is putting forward the same argument as the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot. It is not a matter of general interest to inquire whether or not the minister has received a telegram.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): I found out, in the past three years, that questions regarding western grain and amounts or subsidies paid for western grain are accepted. On the other hand, when Quebec agriculture is involved, such questions are never accepted, while those concerning western grain always are. Could you tell me why? Is agriculture in the province of Quebec not important enough?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I shall take the hon. member's question as notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: May I bring this up at ten o'clock?

Mr. Caouette: On another point of order. You claim there is no urgency, Mr. Speaker, but on the other hand all the telegrams we are receiving state that the farmers are out of feed grain for their cattle. It seems to me this is emergency enough for the minister to reply.

Mr. Speaker: What I suggested to the hon. member is that the minister has noted the representations. I take it for granted, once again, that all the necessary steps will be taken in view of the representations made by the hon. member.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the reported shortages of feed grain in the province of Quebec, can the minister tell us what has happened in respect of the government's feed grain supply and storage policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is of a very general nature and is one which cannot be asked at this time.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the very serious and dangerous situation which has developed in Quebec among farmers raising cattle as a result of the shortage of feed grain, to which reference was made initially today by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), will he get in touch with the minister of agriculture of Quebec and, in co-operation, do something to meet this emergency which will have serious consequences if the strike continues, as apparently it will.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is obviously the same question asked by a number of other members although it is, of course, couched in different language. It may be that the question as now asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition conveys a greater sense of urgency. The Chair would be placed in a very difficult position if this question were allowed, in view of the fact that the other questions were ruled out of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may speak to that point. In no way was I trying to ask a question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did I hear someone say "oh"?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me suggest to hon. members that this situation is serious, and that is why I directed my question to the Minister of Agriculture. The other questions all led up to this situation. There were various reasons why other questions were not allowed, but let me point out that today is

Friday and the situation is serious, according to the information received. I am simply asking the Minister of Agriculture whether he will do something to alleviate this emergency situation. If the government's attitude is represented by those "oh's" and "ah's", well—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Is the hon. member for Lapointe rising on the point of order?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, although we tried in the past to ask this question and although it was rejected because it was not urgent, we think that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), with his parliamentary experience, succeeded in putting it properly, and in pointing out the urgency, and we would be pleased, although you ruled out this question earlier, if you allowed it now, because we think it is urgent. We thank the right hon. Leader of the Opposition for putting it as he did, in conformity with the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I am indebted to the hon. member for Lapointe for his generosity and I ask the Minister of Agriculture to answer his question.

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand that action is being taken. In view of the urgency of the matter I will certainly look into it immediately after orders of the day, and do everything I can to help meet the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

AIR CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of information to the effect that the parties to the Air Canada dispute are prepared to meet with each other, will the minister consider offering to the parties at an early date the appointment of a top flight mediator?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am still awaiting the report of the conciliation board.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Has the report of the conciliation board not been turned down, and have we not reached the stage where the next step must be anticipated?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the minister first has to get the report. I have not received it yet.

Mr. Knowles: Page the Postmaster General.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister could tell us approximately when he expects to receive the Carter report and make it available to the house.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my office has been in touch with Mr. Carter, the chairman of the royal commission, within the last few days, and I understand from him that the English text of the report should be available in the latter half of June. It had been his intention that the French text would be available shortly thereafter, but unfortunately the chief translator for the commission became seriously ill and had to retire. As a result the French text will be somewhat delayed.

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand that the English text will be made available to the members of the house as soon as it is ready rather than await the French translation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in ordinary circumstances I would have answered in the negative. However, when the report is available, the government will have to consider this question. Because of the very special circumstances surrounding this report and the great public interest in its contents, as well as the urgency in respect of making it public, we have not made up our minds as to what course to follow.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I am wondering how soon the minister expects to be in a position to table the white paper on broadcasting. This is awaited with eager anticipation across the country.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): As I told the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts about a month ago, and as I anticipate since then, it will be before the committee by the end of June.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TRAINED PERSONNEL FOR HOSPITAL RECOVERY ROOMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware that there are anaesthetic recovery rooms in Canada, operated under the hospitalization plan, which do not have in attendance trained personnel? I should like to ask what plans the government has in view to overcome this grave and extremely urgent situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Brand: With all deference to you, Mr. Speaker, I might suggest that if you or any member of this house were in the recovery room, the urgency of this matter would become readily apparent.

MEDICARE—BASIS OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to readdress a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Notice of this question has been given, and it is based on the new medicare proposal made by the minister. Will the federal government be contributing on the basis of the national average cost or on the basis of the actual cost in each province?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that this question is one which should be asked at this time. It is of a very technical nature, and I suggest that the hon. member might place it on the order paper.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, last Tuesday I asked a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare on this same point I have raised today. That question was accepted. I just wanted you to know that it was accepted and taken as notice.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might have indicated that in the first place. It certainly would have strengthened his case.

Mr. Churchill: Let us have a reply.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member asked a question which was allowed at the time and which was taken as notice, I am sure the minister would wish to reply now.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend's question I should like to say that the federal government will contribute the average per capita cost calculated from the aggregate cost in the participating provinces.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the premature announcement made by President Johnson of the United States which enabled speculators to make a pile of money on soybeans, and since the minister is an expert in this area, can he tell us what effect this will have on the soybean situation in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether you are objecting to my response to this vitally important question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the question is one which can be accepted.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—MEETING OF MINISTER WITH OTTAWA UNIVERSITY DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has nothing to do with his expertise in agriculture. Has the minister received a delegation of professors from the University of Ottawa who have made a request concerning the Viet Nam situation and recognition of communist China.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is out of order.

ASSISTANCE TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES IN POPULATION CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement yesterday by the director general of Canada's foreign aid program that the most serious single problem in developing countries is population growth, will he inform the house as to the policy of the Canadian government in regard to assisting developing countries with problems of family planning and population control?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question relates generally to policy and should not be asked at this time.

WINTER WORKS

PROTESTS RESPECTING REMARKS OF MEMBER FOR MÉGANTIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-P. Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

I should like to know whether, as a result of the protest from the mayor, the district coroner and the parish priest of the municipality, published in Le Devoir this morning, censuring the utterances made in the house by the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) concerning charges of fraud arising out of winter works, the minister has received a telegram from the municipality in question censuring the hon. member for Mégantic and blaming him for besmirching the reputation of the municipality of Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe and for playing petty politics—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is along the same lines as another one raised a minute ago. It is not in order to ask whether or not a minister has received a telegram.

[Later:]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the future minister of manpower?

In view of the serious accusations which have been made connecting seven suicides to the winter works program, does the minister intend to order an investigation in this connection?

Mr. Speaker: I suggested a moment ago that this question should be put on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Choquette: I am under the impression that this situation should be cleared up now. Either the member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) uttered a wanton accusation, or it is a very serious accusation. I feel the minister should answer, because the population is alarmed by the statements of the member for Mégantic and, in the circumstances, they would like to know whether or not the accusation is serious.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have already made a ruling on this point. I must point out to hon. members that the question period has now expired.

HOUSING

HULL, QUE.—REQUEST FOR RELAXATION OF RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on May 24 and, I believe, on an earlier occasion when I was not in the house, the hon. member for Villeneuve inquired about the availability of mortgage financing under the National Housing Act as administered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in relation to the housing industry in the province of Quebec, and more particularly in western Quebec, in the Hull area.

I am pleased to advise that from January 1, to May 16, 1966 there has been a 20 per cent increase in direct and insured lending in the Hull area compared to the same period in 1965. I cannot give the assurance that the increase can be maintained at such a substantial level but, as indicated in my statement of May 3, the volume of direct lending in Hull will be as substantial in 1966 as it was in 1965.

I am also informed that in all probability this provision of funds will be sufficient to meet the basic housing requirements in the Hull area. To date only those who could not meet the basic credit requirements essential to become a home owner were refused mortgage loans.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wanted to direct to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I should like to direct it to the acting minister. It is related to the important question asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar regarding the equalization of grain shipping quotas. Will the Minister of Transport confer with railroad officials with a view to having them place special emphasis on several seriously congested shipping points in Saskatchewan? This situation is urgent because there are only 43 more shipping days before July 31. As an example of the congested areas to which I refer let me mention Alida, Saskatchewan.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly refer this to the minister.

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to preface my question to the Minister of Agriculture by saying how pleased I am to see him back. I know that he will now be in a position to make a favourable decision about the extension of grain elevator facilities in Prince Rupert, which was postponed some time ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please ask his question?

Mr. Howard: I just asked the question. I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture will enlighten the house as to the government's position in respect of this matter.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, may I say that during what I hope was a very useful trip the only thing that gave me concern, spoiled my enjoyment and caused me worry was the elevator situation at Prince Rupert. This matter certainly will be given due consideration.

EXPO '67

PROVISION OF ACCOMMODATION FOR VISITORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the difficulty in obtaining accommodation in Montreal hotels during the Expo season in 1967, have any plans been made to set up some bureau of accommodation to relieve the situation, not only in respect of hotel accommodation but also in respect of restaurant and service accommodations, which are already becoming very pressing?

[Mr. Southam.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. On May 3 last the Prime Minister made a very welcome announcement to the effect that the main item of business on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference to be held in Victoria commencing June 16 will be the subject of federal assistance to university education. On May 9 the President of the Privy Council stated that the Prime Minister would be making a statement on this matter shortly, and I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is now in a position to tell the house what other matters will be subjects of discussion at this conference.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the exchanges with the provinces have not been completed as yet, but we expect they will be by this week end. I hope to be in a position early next week to make a statement in respect of any additional items that may be or have been suggested.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can tell the house how soon we may expect to receive the report of the committee on election expenditures. This is of great interest to the house and to the country.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State and I have been in touch regularly with that committee with the hope that by so doing we might expedite receipt of the report. I understand the committee is meeting today to work on the final drafting of the report, and I certainly hope it will be presented to the house in the month of June. The only assurance the committee has been able to give so far is that they expect to have it completed in June.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, That a sum not exceeding $450,944,478.01, being the aggregate of—

(a) One-twelfth of the total of all the Items, except Transport Item 103, set forth in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967 laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, $408,953,242.58;

(b) an additional eight-twelfths of the total amount of Loans, Investments and Advances Item L40 (Schedule A) of the said Main Estimates, $11,666,666.67;

(c) an additional three-twelfths of the total amount of External Affairs Item 35 (Schedule B) of the said Main Estimates, $21,025,000.00;

(d) an additional two-twelfths of the total amounts of Finance Item 15, Mines and Technical Surveys Items 80 (Schedule C) of the said Main Estimates, $4,285,833.34;

(e) an additional one-twelfth of the total amounts of Fisheries Items 5 and 20, Forestry Item 15, Legislation Items 5 and 15, National Health and Welfare Item 25, Northern Affairs and National Resources Item 15 (Schedule D) of the said Main Estimates, $5,013,735.42, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967.

[English]

He said: Perhaps I should take this opportunity to give the usual assurances to hon. members of the house. The proportions requested in this resolution and the following bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to June 30, 1966.

In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by this bill. The form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills. The passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in the committees set up to deal with departmental estimates or in committee of supply, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Interim Supply

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967 the sum of $450,944,478.01, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I regret to intrude on your busy schedule but I think at this time, when we are on interim supply, I should raise this question which is of general interest to the nation. I think the lot of the consumer should be brought to the attention of the house and the committee.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, each of us in this country is a consumer. Present day government policy and the consequent high cost of consumer goods is storming the last bastion of individual hope and the individual right to live within one's means. It is now practically impossible for the head of a family, father or mother, individual or married couple, to make their modest salaries support their families from one pay day to the next.

Prices have skyrocketed all along the line in food, rent, clothing, fuel, transportation, medical bills, insurance, taxes and capital cost of housing both new and used. In this rapid and cruel escalation of costs this government has been a steady partner. Even its policies glaringly point to that fact. It is readily apparent that its policies support the super corporations which profit from and control our buyers' and consumers' economy.

In addition, this government maintains the most unjust, unfair and discriminatory taxing budget in the history of Canada by which they will gather millions of dollars a year at the expense of the consumer in the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery. Take building materials. The 11 per cent tax on lumber at the manufacturer's value becomes a markup of over 20 per cent in the retail value in the end use of the lumber because of the fundamental fact that all business must calculate its markup on total investment. For instance, spruce lumber at $60 per thousand at a British Columbia mill, which is a low price, would yield a tax to the government of $6.60 per thousand. The markup plus the tax on the lumber sold here in the east then puts the spread to about 20 per cent before the retailer even makes any profit on his investment, plant and other operations.

Even our freight rates are unrealistic, discriminatory and unfair to the consumers of this country. I have here, Mr. Chairman, a photostatic copy of a C.N.R. freight bill for a carload of spruce lumber shipped from Burns Lake, B.C. to the R. W. Kimmerly Lumber Co. of Napanee, Ont., which is a family firm owned by two of my brothers and in which I was a partner before I was elected to parliament. It cost $1,008.06 to ship this carload of spruce lumber from Burns Lake, B.C. to Napanee, Ont. This is not even all the way across Canada, since Napanee is at least 1,000 miles from Halifax and Burns Lake is somewhere in the interior of our great west coast province.

There were 63,400 lbs. of lumber at $1.59 per cwt. This amounted to about 30,000 board feet of lumber, which puts the cost of this material at about $33 per thousand board feet for freight alone. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sure you will agree that this has gone beyond all reason. Here, we have the Canadian National returning huge deficits each year against the taxpayers' account and having to charge such rates as these for cross country carload freight. I wonder what rates they would have to charge to break even, let alone show a profit? Again the poor unfortunate consumer is the one who has to pay the cost.

Let me speak briefly, Mr. Chairman, for one helpless type of consumer, the old age pensioner, the one who is receiving assistance through the Old Age Assistance Act. On three occasions since February 24 of this year, I have asked the Prime Minister and his government if they would do something to assuage the plight of our elderly people, those who are caught in the cruel claws of this Liberal cost of living and who have to attempt to live on a meagre $75 per month pension. I spoke also in this regard about the inadequate pension for widows of our war veterans who are in a similar plight. The Prime Minister told me on March 15 that if I would just wait until the budget was brought down this question would be taken care of.

Nothing has been done. These consumers I have mentioned are still entangled in the web of want because they cannot possibly run their personal business within their means. The same remarks apply to our farmers who form a large section of the consuming public. They are caught between the low prices they receive for many of their farm products and the cost of production which is composed of taxes, the cost of equipment, farm machinery, animal husbandry transport and all the other factors that make up what it takes to operate a producing farm.

I could go on, Mr. Chairman, but I know there are others who wish to voice similar opinions concerning the problems of consumers. The small businessmen and retailers are in a very precarious position because of the inflationary escalation of wholesale prices as quoted by large corporations. The small town retailer, be he an independent grocer, hardware merchant, fuel, furniture, clothing or farm supply dealer, never knows from one month to another what the price will be on the next invoice for goods. He is sometimes unfairly criticized by the consumer because he happens to be the last man on the ladder.

Quite often because of commitments that he has to make with the consumer to assist his sales, he is left with a small return. He is forced to provide a lot of services at very little profit, and often loses money on transactions as a result of the inflationary tendencies this government is allowing, and even encouraging, by their policies.

I have one more point to make with regard to consumers. This relates to consumer credit. It is almost impossible for any family to operate without credit. There is a generation of citizens growing up in this country, a generation who are now fathers and mothers of millions of Canadian children, who hardly know what a chartered bank is. Because of a lack of basic credit, because of a lack of security, they have been conducting their business with the finance companies. This generation I have mentioned need to be extricated from their financial entanglement of high interest rates and seemingly never ending payment plans of these finance companies.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, what chance of financial solvency does a mother or father have if they yield to the television ads with which they are nightly bombarded suggesting that they apply to their friendly finance company for a bill-payer loan at roughly up to 18 per cent interest? We have already waited a long time for the amendments to the Bank Act. These should have been a matter of first priority. We should have completed this legislation long ago. A few minutes ago I mentioned retail businesses in our typical Canadian towns and villages. The chartered banks have always been a ready and reasonable partner in the building of Canada and in the building of its communities.

We await the Bank Act amendments, and they should be such that our local branches of the chartered banks could compete with the finance companies. In this way, the banks would be permitted to serve at reasonable rates of interest those sections of our consuming community. The banks of course would have to raise their interest rates to compete and to play this lucrative outfield that for years has been the exclusive stamping ground of the finance companies. Let us put an end to the exploitation of this vast section of the consuming public by legislation that will allow the chartered bank on the downtown corner to serve all classes of consumer credit.

Let us put an end to the exploitation of these people, put an end to these 18 per cent and 20 per cent interest rates which are paid on the purchase of cars, furniture and household appliances—yes, I have even known interest rates that high on building mortgages. I know that credit is a two way street. As a Conservative, I contend that if we allow the banks to raise interest rates on moneys advanced for consumer credit, they will also be obliged to pay more on money on deposit. Let us, as soon as possible, introduce legislation that will improve the lot of consumers in Canada. The consumer is the person who keeps Canadian business prosperous.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I realize there is a general understanding that the interim supply bill might pass very quickly, but I want to congratulate the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox upon raising this issue this morning. I want to support him as strongly as I can and I would hope that members of the opposition in all parties would take advantage of this opportunity to redress this grievance against the Canadian public by exercising the traditional right of parliament to refuse supply to this government until we receive some substantial statement as to what the government intends to do to deal with the crushing burden of the high cost of living. Nothing, I suppose, is more important in the minds of the public than the high cost of living. I suppose there is not a member in this house who does not receive letters every day from old age pensioners, from people on low incomes, pleading that something be done, that this government give positive leadership to deal with this question.

I do not want to take the time now to deal with the tales of fantastic hardship from which these old age pensioners suffer because of the increased cost of living. Only this morning, Mr. Chairman, the Montreal Gazette carried a story to the effect that Canada faces more serious labour disputes now than at any time in the last decade. One of the main contributing factors to unrest in the labour movement is the spiralling cost of living. Workers' wages simply cannot keep up with the increased cost of living, and consequently they are attempting to negotiate higher wages. This increase in cost of living is one of the root causes of labour unrest at the moment.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox discussed the various groups in our community who are adversely affected; and the other day the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway presented to the house a concrete proposal that we thought would have contributed to a solution of this basic problem. But, Mr. Chairman, one despairs at times of ever being able to move this government. One wonders what degree of eloquence or what facts and statistics are required to get through to the treasury benches of this house. We are now facing a problem, as I have said, which affects every Canadian. How does one convince the government that the Canadian public simply cannot continue in this way? They are getting desperate because of the spiralling cost of living.

This government, Mr. Chairman, seems to have cash registers for hearts. It seems to be a waste of time appealing to them to take action of a concrete and constructive nature to deal with this problem. How does one convince the government? I for one despair. I would have thought that all the debates which had taken place in the house since we reassembled after the election, and the numerous occasions upon which the opposition, and I am sure in private members of the government, have tried to emphasize the nature of the problem, would have had some effect. Instead every time the matter is raised, either on orders of the day or by motion, it is sloughed off by the government.

We have not yet received the report of the Economic Council of Canada for which we have been waiting over a year. I think it was in March 1965 that the Prime Minister, in response to my leader, said that he had referred the whole question of prices, price controls, etc., to the Economic Council for a special study to be made. In view of the urgency of the problem it seems to me fantastic, it now being the end of May 1966, that we still have not had even an elementary report from the Economic Council of Canada on the subject.

It is about time that the Canadian public began to realize that this government does not care about the high cost of living. Or if it does care, it is not prepared to do anything concrete about it. It is about time the public realized that the government of this great Liberal party is essentially reactionary and lackadaisical. I think back to the last election campaign and the promises made by Liberal candidates. Even the Liberal candidate in my own constituency, a very fine candidate and a very able person, went around telling the people about the wonderful things that his government would do if re-elected, particularly in the area of the high cost of living.

Mr. Nicholson: Especially if they had a majority.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): There we go, Mr. Chairman; the old jazz all over again, that the government must have a majority. They have a de facto majority in this house and have had ever since they were elected in 1963. It is a lot of nonsense to pretend that the lack of a majority has prevented the government from governing. The only thing which has prevented them from governing is that they do not know what they want to do, and are not prepared to give any leadership to the country. That is why they cannot govern.

Mr. Douglas: They cannot make up their minds.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Well, Mr. Chairman, one wonders at times whether they have minds to make up. Yet there has not been a single constructive piece of legislation, let me tell the Minister of Labour, which has not met with the general approval of this house. Indeed the opposition spends most of its time urging the government on to greater activity and action, pleading with it to give some leadership.

During the last election campaign, those of us who had an opportunity to travel in Canada found ourselves being asked by the people: Where is the leadership in Ottawa? Why cannot we have leadership from the government? This is just as true today, Mr. Chairman, as it was in the election campaign.

An hon. Member: Same old bunch.

[Mr. Scott (Danforth).]

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Someone to my right says "same old bunch". I do not know whether it is the same old bunch; I hear that phrase so much that I do not know what it means any more. I do not know which "old bunch" is being talked about. Because in 1962 when the Liberals were in opposition and the Conservatives were in power the same old cry went back and forth about the same old bunch. So I suppose it applies to those who occupy the treasury benches at any given moment.

However, Mr. Chairman, I have digressed a little from what I wanted to say. I suggest that one of the problems of the high cost of living is knowing what type of proposal one should make. I would suggest to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox, who I know is concerned about the problem, that he does not go far enough when he talks merely of removing the 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery and building materials. This is an important issue, one on which the opposition has carried the fight for several sessions now. However, if you really want to try to do something about the cost of living, Mr. Chairman, it seems you will have to go a lot further.

Great jurisdictional problems are involved in this problem, of course, since any effective price control system would probably require co-operation and concurrent legislation on the part of the provincial governments. There are things which the government could do but which it has steadfastly refused to do. On various occasions we have proposed that at least one step in the right direction would be the creation of a department of consumer affairs. I should like to see it broadened into a department of urban affairs, but one step in the right direction would be the creation of a single department presided over by a full-time minister, who would devote all his energy to the whole area of consumer affairs in Canada.

After all, Mr. Chairman, $26 billion a year is spent by the consumers, so it is a matter of more importance to the general public than any other government department, whether it be health and welfare, national defence or labour. Yet we have been totally unsuccessful in trying to convince this government to take this first step. Every other pressure group in Canada has a department to speak for them. There is the Department of Labour, the Department of Industry, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Agriculture. All of these departments look after the interests of important groups, and these groups have a department to speak for them. But who speaks for the consumers? Who represents them? Who represents them not just against the business community or the economy itself but against other government departments? All you have at the moment, Mr. Chairman, is a proliferation of small branches of each department devoting some of their time and attention to consumer matters. But nobody knows what the other is doing. There is no co-ordinated policy. In fact there is no policy at all in Ottawa in this particular area.

That is the first suggestion we have made and will continue to make. We also want to ask the government to set up a prices review board. A board of this nature should have the investigatory powers to examine price increases to see whether they are legitimate. Undoubtedly some price increases are, but such a board would have the power to look into price increases to see whether they are legitimate and to publicize widely its findings. So that while the consumer is getting rooked, at least he knows the extent to which he is being taken advantage of by these people who continue to raise prices. A prices review board would be an effective weapon at the present time.

Third, we should like to see some broad explanation given of the area covered by the Combines Investigation Act. At the present moment you can drive a 10-ton truck through most of the provisions of that act. It is a totally ineffective piece of legislation which should be completely redrawn and provided with a considerable amount of teeth in order to be effective in protecting the consumers of this country.

We could go into the whole field of consumer credit, as the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox has done, and as our select committee with the other place has been doing for two or three years. This is another area where the Canadian public is being gypped, extorted, rooked and taken advantage of. When you come to Ottawa, to the House of Commons, which is supposed to speak for the people, if you raise this problem, all you get is total inactivity and total indifference.

I hope we do not pass this supply motion right away. The high cost of living is working such hardships on the Canadian public that we must get action, we must get some statement from this government. We cannot permit this situation to continue where week after week the cost of living rises, where the public is being subjected to greater and greater exploitation, and where there is total inactivity and indifference on the part of the government.

I appeal to hon. members of the back benches. I know they are concerned about this. Many of them have expressed their concern to me. Why are they not on their feet? Why are they not raising this matter in the house? Why are they not trying to protect the population of this country? Is this the new Liberal party? Is this the shift to the left that we have heard so much about?

Mr. Nielsen: The party that cares.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): The party that cares, was the slogan used. Is this the kind of activity we expect from that party?

I hope that the opposition exercises its traditional right of withholding supply, until we hear from the government as to what action it proposes to take in dealing with one of the most pressing problems that we face in Canada, namely the high cost of living, and the resultant hardships under which consumers are living.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, when the house was considering Bill No. C-178 on Wednesday it had been my intention to comment on the bill. I wanted to speak about the transfer of the Canadian Citizenship Act to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. Then when the bill, set aside for discussion yesterday, was rescheduled for Monday, that left me in the position of not being able to speak to it in the house on Monday, because of prior court commitments. Today, on interim supply, I am speaking on a subject that I intended to discuss under Bill C-178. That subject has to do with Canadian citizenship, and with the awarding of titles, and foreign decorations.

On November 3, 1964, the Toronto Globe and Mail carried this very interesting statement. The heading one column across is: "Greek Monarch Gives Lesage Phoenix Cross". I quote:

> Athens (Reuters)—Premier Jean Lesage of Quebec yesterday was awarded the Grand Cross of the Royal Order of the Phoenix by King Constantine.
> Mr. Lesage is on a short visit to Greece.
> The cross was handed Mr. Lesage by Greek Foreign Minister Stavros Costopoulos when the Quebec Premier called on him to bid farewell. Mr. Lesage leaves Greece today for Vienna.

Mr. Lesage and his wife spent the week end visiting archaeological sites at Delhi, Corinth, Mycenae, Epidavros and Sounion.

At noon yesterday Mr. Lesage was the guest at an informal luncheon organized by 500 representatives of Massey-Ferguson Ltd., a Canadian farm implement manufacturer, who are meeting in Athens . . . Mr. Lesage said: "Canadians do not customarily accept decorations. However, because this decoration has been bestowed on me by a king and not by a government, I consider it my duty to accept it."

I was quite interested in this act by the King of Greece in offering a decoration to Premier Lesage of Quebec, because a friend of mine, a Canadian of Italian descent, had been offered a similar decoration by the Republic of Italy some time prior to this. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs if it would be in order for my very close and good friend, who has been for 45 years a naturalized Canadian, to accept a decoration from the Republic of Italy which had been offered to him.

This particular friend and I were a little concerned over this matter, because when another very good friend of mine—and when I refer to Lord Thomson of Fleet as being a good friend of mine; I am not a Johnny-come-lately in his entourage of friends, because I have known Roy Thomson for over 35 years and I have liked him every day of that long friendship—when Mr. Roy Thomson, a native born Canadian, born in the city of Toronto, was given an honour by the Queen of Canada, he lost his Canadian citizenship.

It was of some concern to my friend of Italian descent whether he would lose his Canadian citizenship if he accepted the honour from the Italian government when, as a native born Canadian, Roy Thomson had lost his Canadian citizenship when he accepted the title of Lord Thomson of Fleet.

As a result a formal approach was made to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and under date of June 4, 1964 I received this letter:

Protocol...

Thank you for your letter on May 29, regarding the award which the Italian Government wishes to make to Mr. DeToro.

Mr. DeToro is quite right in his assumption that foreign decorations should not be accepted by Canadians without the permission of their own government and it has been Canadian policy, for many years, to refuse such permission unless the award is being offered in connection with the saving of human life.

The diplomatic missions in Ottawa have been informed of our policy in this matter and have been asked, if their governments wish to nominate Canadians for awards, to have such requests sent through the Department of External Affairs. We would expect to have such requests forwarded to us by the embassy concerned.

Yours sincerely,

And the original copy is signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Because of this very formal statement that it has been Canadian policy for many years to refuse such permission unless the award is being offered in connection with the saving of human life, my good friend, Mr. DeToro, advised the Italian government that he considered it in his own best interest not to accept the profferred honour.

The letter to which I referred is dated June 4, 1964, and the news item to which I referred regarding the Royal Order of the Phoenix from Greece for Premier Lesage is as of November 3, 1964, about five months after the letter. I then went to the Department of External Affairs and asked if permission had been granted to Premier Lesage to accept this foreign decoration because he had saved human life. I received no answer whatsoever.

I then found it necessary on March 7, of this year, when we were passing the estimates for the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to query the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, whom I wish to praise highly because of his openness in answering, in the manner illustrated on page 2321 of Hansard of March 7. I shall read the question in part, and would read the whole thing, were there time. I quote:

Here is the third question. A very close friend of mine who is a naturalized Canadian has been offered a senior decoration by a foreign government and hesitates to accept it because he does not wish to lose his Canadian citizenship. When we deprive a native born Canadian like my friend Roy Thomson of his citizenship because he accepts a peerage from the Queen of Canada, what hope is there of a naturalized Canadian retaining his citizenship if he accepts a foreign decoration from the head of another government? My friend is fearful on this score because he recognizes he is a naturalized Canadian whereas Roy Thomson and Premier Jean Lesage are native born. Which example would we follow, the one set in the case of Roy Thomson or the one set in the case of Jean Lesage, if my friend accepts a foreign decoration this spring?

The answer is to be found, in part, on page 2328. When supply is voted, the minister replies at the end of the debate. Here is the first part of the answer:

The hon. member for York-Humber asked some questions about Lord Thomson. I do not know this case personally but I am informed he voluntarily became a British subject and this is why he lost his Canadian citizenship.

Then, on page 2336, commenting on the minister's statement, I said:

An hour or so ago I asked the minister a three part question regarding foreign decorations. I received a passable answer to the first of the three questions. I was told that Lord Thomson of Fleet, who was decorated by the Queen of Canada, had chosen to become a British subject. I also asked a question as to what happened in the case of Premier Lesage of Quebec who accepted the Order of the Phoenix from the King of Greece. Did Premier Lesage become a citizen of Greece?

To which the minister answered: "Not that I know of."

That interchange occurred on March 7. I wrote a letter to the minister under date of April 6. I will read it into the record so that the country may know the position the cabinet is taking on the question of titles and foreign decorations.

Ottawa, April 6th, 1966

Hon. Jean Marchand,
Minister of Citizenship
and Immigration,
Ottawa, Ontario.
Dear Sir:

On Monday, March 7th, when your estimates were before the committee, I asked some questions regarding Lord Thomson of Fleet, Premier Lesage of the province of Quebec and an unnamed friend of mine. You will find comments on this on pages 2320, 2321, 2328 and 2336 of the House of Commons Hansard for March 7th. I am very appreciative of your statement on page 2336 that Premier Lesage of Quebec has not become a citizen of Greece.

As I pointed out in my questions, I am intensely interested in ascertaining how Lord Thomson of Fleet lost his Canadian citizenship. Did he write a letter to the Canadian government advising them that he was now a British subject (which I always understood a Canadian citizen to be) or did the Canadian government write Lord Thomson a letter?

It is amazing to me that you advised that Premier Lesage is not a citizen of Greece, but is still allowed to hold the Order of the Phoenix. This is the highest honour available in Greece to a civilian citizen of a foreign country.

In the case of my friend who has been asked to accept a very high decoration from the country in which he was born, I am concerned lest he lose his Canadian citizenship if he accepts the honour.

A year or two ago, Hon. Walter Gordon honoured his friend, Mr. Grittani, of Toronto by having him appointed to some Board of Directors connected with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This man is of Italian descent. During the last World War, the father, Mr. Grittani Sr., was interned by the Canadian Government along with Mr. Franceschini. The authorities told Mr. Grittani Sr., that one of the proofs they had that he was an enemy alien was the fact that he had been decorated by Il Duce, Benito Mussolini.

Since Mr. Grittani Sr., was interned on the grounds he had accepted a foreign Government's decoration, my close friend is adverse to accepting this proffered decoration until he is assured that he will not lose his Canadian citizenship now or in the future.

Would you be kind enough to advise me as to whether or not my friend, a naturalized Canadian citizen, can accept this foreign decoration without losing his Canadian citizenship in the same manner as Premier Lesage has been allowed to accept the Greek decoration and still retain his Canadian citizenship?

A prompt ruling on this matter will be much appreciated as the foreign government will make the presentation whenever they are advised that the recipient is willing to accept it.

Yours sincerely,
R. B. Cowan, M.P.

In reply I received a most interesting letter dated April 20, 1966—two weeks later. It reads as follows:

Minister of Citizenship
and Immigration
Ottawa 2,
April 20, 1966

R. B. Cowan, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.
Dear Mr. Cowan:

I have your letter of April 6th regarding Lord Thomson of Fleet and the general question of acceptance of foreign decorations by Canadians.

When I replied to your question in the house regarding Lord Thomson, I indicated that he lost his Canadian citizenship by voluntarily becoming a "British subject". I must confess I was technically incorrect because I should have used the term "a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies". The status of a British subject is enjoyed by citizens of commonwealth countries in addition to their respective citizenships. Therefore, as a Canadian, Roy Thomson was also a British subject and although under the Canadian Citizenship Act he ceased to be a Canadian by acquisition of United Kingdom citizenship, he remained a British subject under our act.

So far as I am aware, Lord Thomson never formally notified my department of his change in status. But with the announcement of his elevation to the peerage it was ascertained from the United Kingdom authorities that he had applied for and become a United Kingdom citizen on June 5, 1963, at which time he ceased to be a Canadian. This is because Section 15(1) of the Canadian Citizenship Act provides as follows:

"A Canadian citizen, who, when outside of Canada and not under a disability, by any voluntary and formal act other than marriage, acquires the nationality or citizenship of a country other than Canada, thereupon ceases to be a Canadian citizen."

The law operated automatically in this case. Lord Thomson, therefore, was not a Canadian citizen when he accepted his peerage.

Here is the heart of the letter. This is what I should like hon. members to note:

The Canadian Citizenship Act does not provide for loss of citizenship when Canadians are honoured by other countries. This explains why Premier Lesage did not cease to be a Canadian when he accepted the decoration to which you have referred and I can confirm that your friend will not jeopardize his Canadian citizenship by accepting a high decoration from another country.

Yours sincerely,
Jean Marchand

I have given that original letter to my friend as a surety that by accepting a decoration from a foreign government he does not jeopardize his Canadian citizenship, as was the case with Lord Thomson.

I have looked up the Nickle resolution, as it is known, which is supposed to be the guiding factor in cases of the award of titles or honours by foreign governments to citizens of Canada. There are several very interesting angles attached to this resolution, which I have had photostated from Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, May 22, 1919 page 295. This is the official report of the action taken by the House of Commons on the report of a special committee. Here is the preamble:

The special committee appointed to consider and report upon the propriety of presenting an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, praying that His Majesty may be graciously pleased to refrain hereafter from conferring any titles upon such of his subjects as are domiciled or living in Canada.—

This is the preamble. Hon. members will notice that it refers to conferring any titles upon such of the King's subjects "as are domiciled or living in Canada". I read on:

Your Committee are of the opinion and recommend that an address be presented to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, in the following words:

"To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Most Gracious Sovereign.

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased:

(a) To refrain hereafter from conferring any title of honour or titular distinction upon any of your subjects domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada—

That is the limitation placed on Canadians accepting honours from the Queen of Canada—or from the King of Canada for that matter. And when Mr. Thomson was being considered as a recipient of an honour from the Queen of Canada he was not domiciled in Canada; he was not ordinarily resident in Canada.

But the Queen, this being a constitutional monarchy, will not confer an honour except upon the advice of the head of the state in that part of the commonwealth in which the British subject resides.

[Mr. Cowan.]

Well, Roy Thomson was not domiciled in Canada and he was not ordinarily resident in Canada in 1963. But the Canadian government would not recommend him for the title which he understood was awaiting his pleasure. No recommendation came forward from the Canadian government in this regard. Do not forget, Mr. Chairman, that Canadians are wandering all over the earth, picking up foreign decorations where they like. But we are now talking about Britain. Let me read on from this Nickle report.

Your Committee further recommends that appropriate action be taken by legislation or otherwise to provide that hereafter—

—this was in 1919—

—no person domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canadian shall accept—

—notice the word "accept"—

—enjoy or use any title of honour or titular distinction hereafter conferred by a foreign ruler or government.

On motion of Mr. Nickle, the said address was ordered to be engrossed.

On motion of Mr. Nickle, an address was voted to His Excellency the Governor-General praying him to transmit the foregoing address of this house to His Majesty the King in such manner as His Excellency may seem fit in order that the same may be laid at the foot of the Throne.

Hon. members will notice the words—

—hereafter no person domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada shall accept, enjoy or use any title of honour or titular distinction hereafter conferred by a foreign ruler or government.

• (12:40 p.m.)

I ask this question: When the rank of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour is conferred on anyone, is that a titular rank or is it a title of honour—or is anyone going to say it is only a medal and therefore exempt from the provisions of the Act? We have quite a few people in Canada upon whom the title of Chevalier of Honour has been conferred by the French government. As a man born in Ontario, raised in Ontario, and representing an Ontario constituency I have been quite interested to notice how often people in the province of Quebec are created Chevaliers of the Legion of Honour of France, and I do know that they have not all saved human lives.

The Chief Justice of Canada is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. At page 834 of the 1966 Canadian Parliamentary Guide we find the following:

Taschereau, Hon. Robert . . . at Quebec, Que., Sept. 10, 1896 son of Hon. Louis-Alexander Taschereau, Quebec Prime Minister, 1920-1936 . . . created Chevalier of Legion of Honour by the French government in 1947.

At page 96 of the same Parliamentary Guide, if I am allowed to refer to a member of the other place, we have a reference to Hon. Leon Mercier Gouin:

—son of the late Sir Lomer Gouin . . . . Quebec Prime Minister . . . . Chev. de la Légion d'honneur (France).

At page 124 of the same Parliamentary Guide there is a reference to another member of the other place, Hon. Thomas Vien—

Mr. Choquette: A former member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Cowan: —who is described as:

Knight of the Legion of Hon. (France). Knight Commander of Royal Orders of: Phoenix (Greece)—

Notice that, of Greece, and also:

—Knight Commander of Royal Order of Orange Nassau (Netherlands); Leopold II (Belgium).

I am not decrying these men accepting these titles, but I would like to know why they are allowed to take titles from Greece, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, and now Italy, because it is apparent from the letter received from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) that my Italian Canadian friend can accept the rank of Cavalier of the Order of Merit of Italy, but when the Queen of Canada wants to confer a title on a native born Canadian, not domiciled ordinarily in Canada, that a Canadian cannot get it on the recommendation of the Canadian government, and in order that the Queen may confer it upon him he has to apply for citizenship of the United Kingdom and become a citizen of the United Kingdom and the Colonies. In the case to which I make reference the Queen then confers on him the title of Lord Thomson of Fleet.

An interesting corollary to that is that Roy Thomson had three Canadian born children. We all regret the death of one of his two daughters last month, whose burial and funeral service took place in Toronto. His children are all native born Canadians and they have the right since their father is Lord Thomson, of using the title Honourable. We have Hon. Kenneth Thomson, his son, the president of a large Canadian corporation and director and officer of many other corporations controlled by Thomson money. We have the two daughters both given the courtesy title of Honourable, yet their father is not a Canadian citizen.

The interesting thing about Lord Thomson of Fleet is that if he comes back to Canada and stays here for one year he can vote in our federal elections. He can vote to elect a federal member of parliament, and in that way help to elect the Prime Minister of Canada; but he is not a Canadian citizen. He will only be a British subject one year resident in Canada. But after he has been in Canada for one year and is willing to swear that he is going to make his permanent domicile in Canada, he can apply for Canadian citizenship under the Canadian Citizenship Act.

The thing gets more and more ridiculous if you consider that a native born Canadian is not allowed to accept a title from the Queen of Canada as a Canadian citizen, but other Canadians, native born, as in the case of Jean Lesage—

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cowan: Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: I just wonder if the hon. member consulted the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) on these interesting questions that he has raised?

Mr. Cowan: I have correspondence here from so many departments of the cabinet that it would take half an hour to read. I do not think there is any agency of the government that I have not consulted in the past 12 months while I have been digging up facts and figures on this matter. I have envelopes here from the Department of the Secretary of State, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of External Affairs. I think I have correspondence from every department of the government that might be connected with the matter. I received nothing but the utmost co-operation from all of the civil service staff in my researches on this matter, and I can assure you of that, sir.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Cowan: Certainly.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member is giving us a most philosophical address with respect to titles and we are all expecting the Secretary of State to reply. But I have recently been informed, in fact recently I have seen the picture showing where our Speaker has been created a Knight of the Military and Hospitaller Order of Saint Lazarus of Jerusalem in Canada, and I understand this is conferred by letters patent of a Canadian institution. In accepting the title of this order is he entitled to be called Sir?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, sir, I am sorry I cannot make any comment on that matter. I am not aware of the situation. It is rather interesting though, that the Order of the Phoenix which so many Canadians now hold, refers to some bird, or something, that arose from dead ashes. Now the hon. member talks about the Order of Saint Lazarus. He also arose from the dead. It looks like titles are arising in Canada again, but they are not British titles. They can be Belgian titles, Netherlands titles, Greek titles or Italian titles, but not British. I thank the hon. member for the contribution he has made to my argument, but regret I cannot give any information on the question he raised.

Mr. Knowles: While the hon. member is having his question period may I ask him one too?

Mr. Cowan: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: I notice that the hon. member has referred a number of times to Lord Thomson's having been created a lord by the Queen of Canada. Would it not be more appropriate in this connection to refer to this action as having been effected by the Queen of the United Kingdom? Granted, it is the same person—the Queen of the United Kingdom and the Queen of Canada—but is it not incorrect to suggest that the Queen of Canada has appointed someone to the House of Lords of the United Kingdom?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. member for his comments on that score. I am very happy he made this distinction between the Queen of the United Kingdom and the Queen of Canada. I know that that distinction exists although the person is one, and we can use it as a precedent when we are told in the future that we cannot criticize Mr. Justice Spence because he is a judge of the Supreme Court, when all we want to do is criticize him as a commissioner. I am glad to note that the Queen is two or three persons in one body and that we can make comments on her activities in one particular field.

Quite clearly Roy Thomson was created Lord Thomson of Fleet by the Queen of the United Kingdom and the Colonies, but the point I want to raise is that Lord Thomson is a celebrated Canadian. I do not know any more hardworking individual than Lord Thomson. He has been a credit to himself, he has been a credit to his family, and he has been a credit to the city of Toronto where he was born. He is the publisher of a large number of Canadian daily and weekly newspapers, and is the owner of radio and television stations in Canada, and of many other businesses.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Why should Canada deprive him of his Canadian citizenship? It will be said that it was done voluntarily, that he himself became a citizen of the United Kingdom. He did become a citizen of the United Kingdom, but he did not lose his status as a British subject, because all Canadians are British subjects.

It seems rather odd that Lord Thomson should have to give up his Canadian citizenship, after being a native born Canadian, in order to accept a title from the Queen, and it is even more odd when you realize that by returning to Canada, residing here for 12 months and filing a declaration that he will make his permanent domicile in Canada thereafter, he can regain his Canadian citizenship.

I have here application forms for Canadian citizenship that I have received from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I have the form that Mr. Thomson filled out to become a citizen of the United Kingdom, and nowhere does it denounce Canada on any point or in any particular.

• (12:50 p.m.)

He is a loyal British subject; he is a loyal native born Canadian. Lord Beaverbrook dead was considered a Canadian: Lord Thomson alive is a blighter. In the case of Lord Beaverbrook, I must point out that he carried a permanent Canadian passport and never gave up his Canadian citizenship. The only reason Lord Thomson had to give it up was because in the 1940's the Canadian government brought in the Canadian Citizenship Act. Under this act, Lord Thomson could not accept the title without losing his citizenship. Lord Beaverbrook had been created a lord long before this act was brought in. I should like to thank Hon. Jean Marchand for clarifying the situation, by pointing out that the premier of Quebec is not a Greek, and by pointing out that my friend can accept a title from a foreign country without jeopardizing his citizenship, or can accept a decoration from another country. It is nice to have this situation finally clarified. But why not let the wheel go full cycle and make it possible for Canadians to accept honours from the Queen, since Canadians now can accept honours from the King of Greece, the Republic of Italy, the Queen of the Netherlands and from Belgium, as is shown by the Parliamentary Guide and, as I understand from the hon. member for Kootenay West, can even accept a title from Saint Lazarus. But I do not know anything about that last one.

I should like to ask the cabinet to consider the restoration of Canadian citizenship to Lord Thomson, a man who has brought honour and credit to his native land.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the hon. member. May I ask it in French? I know the hon. member is a perfect bilingualist and does not need the help of the translation system. This is my question.

[Translation]

Is the hon. member aware of the fact that, in order to become right honourable, that is more honourable, it is necessary to become a member of the privy council of England? Does he not think that this is a bondage, since one must become a member of the privy council of a different government in order to become right honourable? Would he deem it advisable to change such a situation, since the Queen of England is also the Queen of Canada? We could become right honourable by becoming members of the privy council of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, in replying to the very penetrating question of the hon. member for Lotbinière, I should like to emphasize that personally I am opposed to the granting of titles and honours of any kind, either domestic, foreign or British; but when I find that the Nickle resolution of 1919, which I endorse 100 per cent, is being circumvented by the Canadian cabinet, I feel that if they are going to circumvent the Nickle resolution they should circumvent it 100 per cent. They should either restore its effect or throw it out the window. It is being eased out the window at the present time. I agree 100 per cent with the intent and purpose of the question by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few brief comments. I was quite impressed by the speech made by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox and by the hon. member for Danforth. In this land of affluence, I think far too often we forget the people who are living marginally. I think also we forget the intrusions the government has made in respect of the taxpayers' money. Within the last year municipal taxes have gone up, provincial taxes have gone up; federal income taxes have gone up and, along with that, the government is causing a further drain because of the Canada Pension Plan, since this not only means a further cost to the individuals, but also, because the employer has to pay his share, the taxpayer has less to take home. This is illustrated very dramatically by the savings of the people today being down and by the increased demand for credit. There has been a great increase across Canada in credit buying. The reason is that these people simply do not have sufficient money to make both ends meet. The 11 per cent sales tax adds to this, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox. This increases the cost about 20 per cent at the retail level.

The consuming public pays and must pay these costs. These people are harassed. Not only that, it is making the cost of business higher and higher. Over and above that, you have the people who are working as employees needing and demanding more money because they cannot make ends meet. This means that in labour you have people who threaten strike action in an effort to obtain more money than they need but I wish to speak particularly about those people who are on fixed incomes, the pensioners. I do not believe this government is taking cognizance of what they are doing to the person who is on a fixed pension. When you consider that the dollar of 1950 now is worth about 60 cents and when year after year we have eroded the money—and I say "we", because we are the parliament—and when you consider that in the last year alone the price of food has increased 10 per cent—and we must remember that food is a staple article, the most necessary thing in the world—how do we think the fellow who is on a fixed pension is going to meet his needs. He is pinched, unless he happens to have a very considerable pension.

I should like to go a little further and ask what we are doing to the old age pensioner; what are we doing to the person 70 years of age or over. Maybe there are not sufficient in this group, among the voting public, to alarm the government, but I should like to say this, that mercy and justice to all should be the dominant consideration in any government. These people are just about forgotten. When the government says "oh well, a lot of them have other income", let me say that 70 per cent of all the women 70 years and over across this land will have no income whatsoever, except their old age pension. This should be striking evidence of the position in which we are placing these people. Just the other night I went down to the House of Commons post office, and while I was getting my mail I looked at the bulletin board and saw a notice advertising a bed-sitting room for $90 a month.

In this affluent Canada of ours where we have the second highest standard of living in the world, we are giving these people, this 70 per cent of all the women across the land, $75 a month. Mr. Chairman, I wish to appeal to every member of parliament here. Is this justice; is this justice to the people who have helped to make this country? I should like to go a little further and say that 60 per cent of the men, aged 70 and over, will have no income other than their old age pension.

These pensioners are in desperate need. If a pensioner lives alone in the city of Toronto he finds that he requires $120 per month as a minimum in order to survive. In spite of these facts we expect these people to live on $75 per month. We on this side of the house have asked over and over again that the old age pension be increased to $100 per month, but nothing has been done in this regard. We are being completely unjust to the elderly people who built this country.

Let me go a little further and suggest that these elderly people are the people who have more sickness than others, because as they grow older they develop diseases and require more care, drugs and better foods containing more protein. The very things of which they require more have increased in price by at least 10 per cent in the food line in the past year, yet what are we doing about this situation? We are still imposing the iniquitous 11 per cent tax on drugs, which means a 20 per cent increase in cost at the retail level on the people least able to afford it.

I close my remarks with an appeal on behalf of these forgotten people—and they have been forgotten or something would have been done for them long ago.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? I am sure he is aware of the fact that the government has indicated it will take action on any recommendation by the drug committee, which will be holding meetings very soon, to the effect that the tax should be removed as a step toward reducing the cost of drugs.

Mr. Rynard: All I have to say in answer to that remark is that as far as the people across Canada are concerned, this is an iniquitous tax and has increased the cost of drugs used by those people who are the least able to afford them. Surely it does not take any recommendation of a committee to make us realize that this tax should be removed.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister of National Revenue indicate the recommendation which was followed when the 11 per cent tax was imposed?

Mr. Benson: The 11 per cent sales tax on drugs is not a recently imposed tax, but one that has been in existence for many years. Perhaps I should also point out that it was not removed by the previous government during its term in office.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to remind the minister that I advocated the removal of this tax when this party was in power.

[Translation]

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss a piece of legislation which is of great interest to me as mayor and reeve of the county of Beauce. It deals with the winter works program and is administered by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

You will recall that when this legislation came into force, 50 per cent of the payments were made by the federal government, whereas the contribution of the various provinces amounted to 40 per cent. At that time, our municipalities had to absorb the difference, that is 10 per cent.

A little later the province of Quebec agreed to contribute 50 per cent, so that today the winter works carried out in our municipalities are paid in full by the two governments.

However, thanks to the experience gained in the last few years, I feel that this legislation should be amended to allow the municipalities to benefit from part of the grants and use them for the cost of materials.

We know how winter works are carried out in our various municipalities. Sewer systems are installed, ditches are dug with pick and shovel when it would be easy and much cheaper to use bulldozers.

While expressing this wish, I also feel that if the various governments granted a percentage on materials, we would see in each of our municipalities new buildings which would be very useful to the people and would, at the same time, help to pay the same salaries during the winter off-season.

Each year, at the end of the season, the cost of the winter works carried out in our municipalities is checked by experienced auditors, at least in the province of Quebec.

Well, yesterday in this house it was suggested that from now on the R.C.M.P. should make those investigations in our municipalities. This implies that the auditors in the province of Quebec are not competent to make those examinations. I strongly object to that because my municipality and surrounding ones saw, in some cases and on account of unintentional irregularities, the various government grants decrease following audits made by the provincial government authorities.

I wonder if the member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois), when he made that suggestion, did not merely want to return to Ottawa what we now have in the province of Quebec.

I therefore hope that the Quebec provincial authorities will continue to administer the winter works program and that, as in the past, the municipalities will also endeavour to make those works as profitable as possible. I also hope that the government will consider my request for the provision of a grant for materials since that would be quite an asset not only for the municipalities but also for the province and the entire country.

Now, I do not want to repeat what has been said. I would like, however, to refer to page 5516 of Hansard for May 25, where the member for Mégantic stated, with regard to the Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe parish, and I quote:

> Let me tell hon. members something about this municipality which might open their eyes. Within a year and a half there have been seven suicidal hangings.

Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, the local newspapers at Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe, and those of the province of Quebec and even Ontario published reports on this matter.

For instance, Le Droit published the following headline:

> Seven suicides linked with the program—

That was in the May 26 issue of Le Droit.

The Toronto Star said:

> Link winter works, suicides.

The Telegram said:

> Village under reign of terror—

And so publicity went, not only throughout the province but across the country.

According to the Le Devoir of May 27, the mayor of the municipality absolutely denied those suicides, which rumour was detrimental to the good reputation of one of our neighbouring villages. And I quote:

> The district coroner, Dr. Laurent Roy, physician at La Guadeloupe, has, however, denied that information. He stated explicitly that he had registered only one suicide at La Guadeloupe in his six years as a coroner, and this suicide dates back to 1962.
> The parish priest also stated that, to his knowledge, there had been no suicide since the one in 1962.

And he added:

> I do not know who claimed that there was such a wave of suicides in the parish, said he, but that person is talking through his hat.

Of course, he was speaking of the hon. member for Mégantic:

> As for the coroner and the provincial police, they confirmed the murder.

I am somewhat concerned by that statement, because it certainly causes some pain to the families concerned. If sickness affects families, not only should we refrain from ridiculing the fact and trying to take political advantage thereof, but we should especially, I think, sympathize with these families. And I repeat that there has been only one suicide in La Guadeloupe; the other cases were distressing murder cases. As the relatives of these persons still live in La Guadeloupe, I am sure they did not appreciate or admire the behaviour of the member for Mégantic.

As can be seen in Le Devoir, the member for Mégantic states among other things:

> Nothing has been done, claimed Mr. Langlois. The municipality is still without appropriate sewers.

Now, a newspaperman from the Globe and Mail went yesterday to La Guadeloupe to question the alleged informant of the member for Mégantic. Here is what he said:

[English]

> Mr. Beaudoin said yesterday: "I had nothing to do with that story about the suicides."
> However, he admitted that he and a few others had gathered information for Mr. Langlois. He said he had done it to block the waterworks project.

• (1:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

This means that, if there are no sewers or watermains in La Guadeloupe, it is simply because the taxpayers of that locality are entitled to their opinion, as to whether or not they choose to build waterworks. I do not think it behooves the hon. member for Mégantic to interfere with the municipal affairs of a community.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in parliamentary immunity, but I believe also that any abuse of that immunity is wrong. The rights of parliament are often referred to in the house. You know, Mr. Chairman, the rights of parliament.

The dismissal of a single civil servant is enough to launch an investigation; however, in the case of honest citizens' families, I object to and dispute the validity of the statement made Wednesday in the house by the hon. member for Mégantic. I wonder whether this is what he means by respect for the human being, which he has advocated in his riding for many years.

I shall not labour the point any further but I hope that the hon. member for Mégantic will have enough intestinal fortitude to withdraw his remarks, but in any case he should apologize to the village and to the honest and industrious people of our area; he should apologize also to the families who are really hurt by the statement he made in the house, which statement is inaccurate and quite unworthy of a member of parliament.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that this debate is taking place today and I hope that something will come of it. I am aware of the fact that there is reluctance on the part of many members to get involved in this particular discussion because of the limitation which is put upon us by our rule relating to the 30 day limit. However, I think the subject which has been raised by the member for Prince Edward-Lennox is an exceptionally important one. If this parliament were to concentrate only on that particular subject and was able to do something about it, then they would probably win the eternal gratitude of many of the people of this country.

I think this matter has been raised by a number of persons who have strong personal feelings about the increase in the cost of living which has a detrimental effect on a very large segment of our Canadian population. It is interesting to look at the person who raised this subject. He is a member who comes from an area where the average income is not very high. His knowledge of the farming problem in his area is considerable, and he knows that as the cost of every commodity rises his people suffer from it more and more and are helpless to do anything about it.

The same is true with regard to the member for Danforth, who supported the proposal made by the member for Prince Edward-Lennox. He used to provide voluntary legal counsel in his riding in Toronto to a large segment of the population who were not able to afford this type of service. I am sure that he is aware also of the thousands and thousands of people who are in serious difficulties owing to the disparity between their income and their need to maintain a decent standard of living. I believe his feelings for those people are deep.

I think the other member who spoke on this subject comes from Simcoe, a small riding in the central part of southern Ontario. He is a doctor who has for many years been connected with people of modest means. His profession makes him well aware of the great number of Canadians who are in desperate need of medical attention but cannot receive it. I myself know of people who have been able to go to a doctor because of the present medical insurance plans, have been given a prescription and then could not afford to buy the drugs.

Anyone here who has had a cold is well aware of the fact that when one goes to a drugstore to fill a prescription to fight off the effects of flu which has been prevalent in Ottawa, the bill for the 12 pills prescribed by the doctor will be anywhere from $6 to $12. This is away beyond the reach of many of those who are similarly afflicted and cannot afford drugs.

I am sure the Minister of Finance is interested in this problem. I am quite prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt—and it is doubtful at present, because we are not familiar with what he is really doing in this matter. I really think he is not the finance minister of this country at all. I do not think we have had a true finance minister for years. It is the establishment which runs the Department of Finance in Ottawa. This is a fact. I think it is also true of the other departments concerned with consumer affairs. I am positive that the minister has been advised that the interest rate on bank loans should be increased, and I am sure that this advice was given to him by the establishment. I am also aware of the fact that his caucus told him that if he did this, he would have to look for another job.

Mr. Knowles: He used to be part of the establishment.

Mr. Peters: He is in a better position to know this than I. I know he was not included among those 12 whom Maclean's magazine thought constituted the establishment. I am thinking of the gentleman formerly in his department who is now one of the establishment. I cannot remember his name, but I think it is Isbister. I am speaking of those gentlemen who always dine at the Rideau Club and make the decisions for Canada. They have no knowledge of, no interest in, and they are in no position to decide what are the needs of the Canadian public. I think that we as politicians who every day receive dozens of letters from people of poor means are better able to evaluate the problem. One hears of many people who cannot send their children to school, often because they have not been able to receive proper medical attention. They cannot provide them with eye glasses, and in many cases are living on welfare because the bread winner of the family has died. Anyone receiving these letters is well aware of the fact that the Department of Finance has based the economy of Canada on the $75 allowance and that everything is going to be kept in relation to that $75.

I am saying to the minister that I do not think it would have mattered if he had raised this to $100. A long time ago, in negotiating contracts for labour unions I found out that we based our requests on the needs of the workers. We found that in most cases the wage increases we were seeking for the employees of a particular company were always trailing far behind the increases in the cost of living and the standard of living that should have been maintained. I think the minister made a major mistake in his budget when he tried to maintain this $75 basic pension. There is a large proportion of our population dependant on that basic pension. I agree entirely with the three members who preceded me that this is the major problem in Canada today. We should be providing a pension which would allow these people a decent standard of living. If we are not capable of doing that, then all the riches that go to the people at the top level are not going to be of much value. Certainly, we are not going to improve the image of parliament.

The Minister of Finance has stated he expects a 3.5 per cent increase in the cost of living this year. This will not necessarily mean 3.5 per cent across the board, and it will not be 3.5 per cent for those who are on the $75 pension. It will probably be 10 per cent or 20 per cent so far as that class of citizen is concerned. The previous speaker indicated that this 3.5 per cent increase would really mean an increase of 10 per cent in the cost of food. I think we will be lucky if we find food prices have increased by only 10 per cent at the end of the year. Once again those on disability pensions, old age pensions and other retirement pensions will find that the basic food commodities they have to buy will have increased in price by more than 10 per cent. The increase will have no relationship to the 3.5 per cent which the Minister of Finance indicates he expects the Canadian economy to rise.

The people in this category are not the ones who will be making purchases in the automobile field or for basic steel. Their purchases are in the field of houses, clothing and food. These are the only things old age pensioners and those living on fixed incomes are going to be interested in purchasing. I do not expect a representative of the government to stand up and say what they are going to do about protection for consumers. I realize that this problem is developing in other countries as well. I believe the Minister of Finance is perhaps more responsible for this situation than any other minister. I am well aware of the fact that other ministers are finding responsibilities in other fields such as the supply of labour, keeping our people at work, retraining a portion of our population to meet the needs of a changing society, housing, and so on. I know there is going to be another debate on this subject, so I do not intend to pursue it.

However, I believe the Minister of Finance will have to give very serious consideration to this particular matter because he made the decision. I do not believe the cabinet made it. I am sure the Liberal party did not make it, because I listened to the speeches of the candidates during the election campaign and they professed to be interested in the little people, the people who are not able to be retrained to change jobs, and who are in a position where they have to depend on a fixed income. When the minister set a basic pension of $75, then in my opinion he had an obligation to maintain the cost of living at a level which would permit the $75 to meet the reasonable requirements of these people.

I do not know how the government is going to face the establishment. I do not know if they are ever going to do so. I am quite surprised that this government does not seem to be concerned about that. I was always quite pleased when I heard the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, when he was a minister, stand up and say the establishment in his department was an almost insurmountable barrier to his doing anything in his department. I believe that if other ministers in the government had been consulted there would have been others who would have agreed that the establishment represented a large, blank wall which they could not penetrate.

In my opinion, the present government is not trying to penetrate it because they believe this is the way government should operate. I feel the public should know this soon, or they will fail to realize why members of parliament are not able to do the things members are expected to do. The public have a preconceived idea of what members of parliament should be accomplishing. Under the system we have, members are not going to be able to accomplish these things. This raises the whole problem of how we are going to supervise the establishment when it is insulated in the cabinet and inside parliament itself—as it obviously should not be, because the minister will be protecting people and philosophies over which he has no control. Many members do not even realize this situation exists.

I should like to change the subject for a moment to refer to a situation about which hon. members may be unaware. Several months ago a number of meetings were held with members of the Internal Economy Commission. It was decided that some change would have to be made in the method of obtaining typewriters for this establishment. Most members of parliament could not care less about typewriters in any office. I sympathize with them because that is about the way I feel. I use the Biblical method of typing: Seek and ye shall find.

Hon. members may not know, but a few years ago it was decided the House of Commons would use typewriters to be supplied and serviced by the printing bureau. These typewriters were to be replaced every year. They were to be moved from this section of government into other branches of government. Of course this method broke down. The House of Commons found itself in a position of having to replace the typewriters at the end of their contract. It was decided, too, that members would be able to apply for electric typewriters.

[Mr. Peters.]

After the price range for typewriters was decided, a demonstration of a number of typewriters was arranged. In my opinion, one of the companies abused the confidence of the house. The I.B.M. Company demonstrated two typewriters, one of which was a 15 inch model, similar to the typewriters now in use. The other typewriter companies demonstrated this type of machine and the secretaries went to look at these typewriters. They decided what type they wanted. It was agreed that the companies would not pressure individual members or their staff in the offices to take a particular type of typewriter over some other make. This agreement was broken by the representatives of I.B.M. That company had as many as a dozen salesmen going from office to office putting pressure on the members. I do not think this should have been done.

Difficulty arose when orders were given to the various companies. The I.B.M. Company decided that they could not supply a 15-inch model in the particular price range, but only their 11-inch model. The 11-inch model is a little bigger than a Hansard envelope, though the Hansard envelopes are not first class envelopes and vary in size. Some of them fit, some of them do not.

I suggest that this company came before members of parliament and their staff and demonstrated a 15-inch machine of one particular type. Then when orders were submitted the company said that only an 11-inch machine was satisfactory, a machine which no one was shown and which was not demonstrated. In my opinion they misrepresented the situation very greatly.

I suggest to hon. members that they should inform their staffs to cancel these orders. I am sure that the Internal Economy Commissioners of the house would be willing to cancel the orders for these typewriters because they will be unsatisfactory for the jobs the secretaries of members are being asked to perform. In one or two cases members have agreed to do this, but I suggest that every member should so inform his staff if this typewriter, which they have not seen, is unsatisfactory.

There is a model in the stenographic pool. If they are not satisfied with the other machine, they should so instruct the Director of Administration and cancel their orders for the machines they are going to purchase. If this company is dishonest with members of parliament I suggest that it is perhaps dishonest with all government departments. We are not paying patronage here and are not going to be pressured or subjected to misrepresentation without making some complaint.

I should like to use this illustration as an example. If you go into an automobile showroom and look at a Chevrolet Impala, you may decide you want to buy that Chevrolet Impala, which is being demonstrated in the showroom. You fill out a form with several details on it, such as model number and so on. Then having been shown that particular Impala model, if the salesman delivers a Chevy II from the back door, I am sure you will all agree with me that gross misrepresentation has taken place. The car that you were shown is not the car which is delivered. The car which you were delivered, could not be substituted, so far as specifications are concerned, and do the same kind of job as the car demonstrated.

I think the I.B.M. Company has taken advantage of members of parliament. It is time that more members of parliament paid attention to some of the things which happen and did something about them. That is why I raise this matter as a point of information. There are about 102 members of parliament who have indicated that they wish to buy this particular type of I.B.M. machine, which is not the machine which was demonstrated. Therefore I suggest they take a look at the situation, because they may find themselves with an unsatisfactory machine, one which was not demonstrated, but which members can do nothing about.

I raise this matter only because I expect we will be using these machines for the next ten years. Therefore it is important to us and those who follow us that we pay close attention to this very valuable piece of equipment that we are purchasing.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I will merely take three minutes to set the record straight.

First of all, I shall say that I was very surprised to hear the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) whose reputation is that of an intelligent man, a genuine parliamentarian, speak for half an hour in the house about typewriters. It seems to me that the member should have chosen a more important topic particularly when he is an outstanding man for whom I have much esteem.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I suggest that the Chair has been given a very serious affront. We are all aware that there is a time limit to this debate. If you allow me to take as long as I have on this particular subject, after having already spoken for a considerable time, the affront would be to you, not to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: I shall deal with the subject immediately and briefly.

A few minutes ago, in a short and very forceful speech, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) told us of somemost unfortunate statements made in the house by the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois). The newspapers made a great to-do over the serious and unfortunate charges made by the hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that serious charges without solid proof are wildly thrown in the house. This is not the first time we hear violent attacks against persons who are not in the house.

I remember the accusations made last year by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) against the R.C.M.P. They were referred to the committee on privileges and elections. My friend the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) knows what I say is true. The committee on privileges and elections inquired into the charges made by the hon. member against the R.C.M.P., and its report clearly established that they were false.

The house will remember that the hon. member had protested that he had been molested by the R.C.M.P., which had abused his rights and even damaged some personal belongings. The report of the committee was clear and definite: the accusations were false.

Now, the member for Mégantic, in an uncontrolled outburst, attacked the municipal authorities of Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe, Frontenac county, province of Quebec. He even said that several suicides had been committed in connection with the mismanagement of the federal-provincial program of winter works. What a joke, what a great big joke. How can a responsible man say such wild, extravagant and foolish things?

Go down in the street and ask the young people what they think about members of parliament. They are rather puzzled, fairly sceptical as to the qualifications, the earnestness and the capacities of parliamentarians, and for the very reason that members of parliament take advantage of the immunity from arrest to bring any accusation against persons outside the house.

We are here to illustrate democracy, whereas statements like the one made by the member for Mégantic do nothing else than ridicule and downgrade democracy. This is really unfortunate, Mr. Chairman.

When the member for Mégantic attacks municipal authorities, quoting embezzlements and frauds, does he fully realize the seriousness and the significance of such accusations? Is he fully aware of the fact that he is tarnishing the good name of reputable people and that, being himself protected by his immunity from arrest, nobody can take legal action against him?

I say to the member for Mégantic that he is the House of Commons' own Yves Gabias, and since he is the Gabias of the Commons, we should take action against him. In the circumstances, the only action that can be taken is to have his case referred to the committee on privileges and elections, and to bring before it the statements and the accusations made by the member for Mégantic and have the committee report to the house on the conduct of the member.

I claim, Mr. Chairman, what we are going to have a second Yves Gabias case, at the federal level instead of the provincial.

So, I deplore the charges made by the member for Mégantic, I deplore his excessive language and I say that if the prestige of parliament is to be maintained, we should take action against those who are not conscious of their own utterances and who lack a sense of responsibility.

We know that the parish priest, the mayor and the coroner of Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe formally denied the utterances of the member. There must be something to such a denial. We must clear up the whole matter. I repeat that, in order to maintain the luster and the prestige of parliament, we should take whatever means required to prevent members from making such wild statements which cannot fail to tarnish our reputation. So, let there be light, and let the commons' own Yves Gabias be called before the committee on privileges and elections.

• (1:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak very briefly on the subject that has been dealt with by several hon. members in the course of this debate. A supporter of the government, when that government was charged with failing to meet the challenge of the increasing cost of living, excused the government because it is in a minority position.

Several months ago the government went to the people with a clear call for a majority, which was rejected by the electors of Canada. It was rejected, I suggest, because the people of Canada did not have sufficient confidence in the Liberal party to give that party a majority, believing that it was necessary to have others in the house, presenting other points of view, and calling the government to account for matters in which it was delinquent.

I do not believe that the failure by this government to meet the challenge inherent in the increasing cost of living can be excused because the government has no majority. We in this party suggest that when the government is prepared to bring in legislation to assist in reversing the cost of living trend in this country, it will not have to be concerned about its lack of majority, because that majority will be assured inasmuch as members of parliament would like to assist the government in reversing such a trend.

Across the country there is a general concern about the continuing upward spiral in the cost of living. This topic of conversation is ever present when one speaks to ordinary persons from day to day, either on the street or in the stores. Housewives who go to shopping centres, taking carts around the aisles, trying to fill their weekly grocery lists constantly object to the ever decreasing purchasing power of their dollar. Communications coming to the desks of all members of parliament call attention to this serious situation pleading that something be done to check the cost of living increase. That increase is continually reducing the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar.

When we pick up our newspapers and magazines we constantly see articles referring to this situation. The writers wonder just how far it is going to go, and why something is not being done to correct it. I believe it is the responsibility not only of the present administration but of any administration in a similar position, to carefully consider this problem, to weigh it in all its ramifications, and then to set out on a deliberate course to reverse the present trend, guaranteeing to the Canadian people that in the days to come they will not be victimized as they now are victimized.

Reference has been made to the fact that the cost of living will continue to increase. This accentuates the need for something definite and concrete to be done in order to meet the situation. It has been pointed out in the debate that persons in certain categories are seriously affected by the continuing trend in the cost of living. I suggest that those on fixed incomes are in serious difficulty. They are facing insurmountable obstacles in their endeavours to make their small incomes provide the necessities of life. Yet it seems as if those in authority are little concerned about this matter, and that they use various excuses to justify their inaction. There has been correspondence with various departments and various ministers about individuals who are finding it absolutely impossible, because of the cost of living, to meet their obligations. Such persons are on old age pensions, veterans pensions, civil service pensions, and other types of fixed income. Concerted attention does not seem to have been given to the needs of such people. The present government stands condemned because it has failed to give adequate consideration to this problem.

In addition to individuals in the categories I have referred to, who are affected by high prices, I submit that consumers in general are becoming perturbed about the trend in the cost of living index. We must recognize that the taxpayers of this country have to pay the shot for government expenditures. They have to assist in meeting the costs of services given to the people; they have to make contributions so that those unable to provide for themselves are provided for. Yet the taxpayer's income is reduced by the increased cost of living, as well as by government policy in this regard.

The time will come when the taxpayers will not be able to meet what is needed of them, when they will not be able to provide for themselves, let alone for the services of others. Not only are the pensioners of this country facing problems, but so also are the taxpayers and the consumers. I am therefore in sympathy with the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox and with other hon. members who have raised this question. I sympathize with all those caught in the squeeze of rising prices. The time has come when something must be done about that.

The suggestion has been made that there should be a department of consumer affairs. One hon. member pointed out this morning that there is a complete absence of co-ordination of endeavour to meet this problem of the increasing cost of living. Various departments may have some concern about it, the minister may be doing a little, but there is no co-ordination of these efforts.

An illustration was placed before us recently of what can be done in such a situation. Time and time again it has been pointed out that the various aspects of education with which the federal government is concerned are spread out among a number of departments. Now we find there is a group of individuals upon whom has been placed responsibility for co-ordinating activities and responsibilities in the field of education. We welcome this step. If this can be done in one area of our national life, why should it not be done in others?

I do not know whether I would go to the length of supporting the establishment of a full department of consumer affairs but I do believe there should be some agency of government charged with responsibility for paying attention to the many and varied problems facing the consumer today, specifically those presented by the cost of living.

For all these reasons I join in raising a protest against the present situation. I join in asking the government to take positive action to ensure that something is done to prevent this cost of living spiral from continuing, and further depreciating the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar. I do so in order that our people may be able to provide for their own needs and make their contribution to the national economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief, because I understand that the house in anxious to pass those estimates. However, I would like to make a few remarks which might seem a little disconnected.

First of all I wish to support what the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) said about winter works. That legislation certainly needs to be amended, at least as far as the province of Quebec is concerned. I will not say more, I just want to support what he said.

A little earlier I listened to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) and, as I see that he is now listening to me, I will tell him that he reminds me of St. Michael the Archangel who went around in a suit of armor to fight an evil dragon. I had the pleasure of reading a biography of his grandfather, the late hon. P. A. Choquette, entitled: "Fifty years in politics." In my opinion, there is no doubt that the present member for Lotbinière is, as the Americans say: "A chip off the old block."

Mr. Knowles: In French, please.

Mr. Mongrain: I cannot find words to say that in French.

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not like it so much when the hon. member for Lotbinière mentioned several times in a libellous tone the name of the provincial member for Trois-Rivières, Mr. Yves Gabias. I am not involved in any way in the present provincial election and I am very happy, as a citizen of Trois-Rivières, to say that we have two very good candidates, namely the hon. Léon Balcer, who sat in this house for a long time, and Yves Gabias who has been for two terms a member of the Quebec legislature. I have so little to do with it that I have decided to remain in Ottawa until voting day, precisely not be become involved. On the other hand, as a citizen of Trois-Rivières, if I let pass unnoticed facts or allusions, not to say the running down of Mr. Gabias, even if they come from my very good friend the hon. member for Lotbinière—

Mr. Choquette: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Mongrain: Certainly.

Mr. Choquette: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that the committee on privileges and elections of the Quebec legislature applied strict penalties against Mr. Yves Gabias? Is the hon. member also aware that it has taken very serious sanctions against Mr. Yves Gabias who made completely unfounded charges against Judge René Hamel? Does the hon. member know that?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lotbinière knows very well that I am perfectly aware of what he has just said. With his intelligence and background, he knows very well that I am not trying to overlook a mistake which the provincial member for Trois-Rivières might have made. I remember that it is said in the Gospel: He that is without sin among you, let him cast a stone.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the member for Trois-Rivières, but I think that he is discussing a matter which is not relevant to the issue now under consideration, namely Mr. Gabias who has been mentioned by the member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your advice. You have noted just the same, that it was my colleague for Lotbinière who asked me a question and I thought that it was only proper to answer. He was the one who brought up the Gabias case. I ask the House of Commons not to become involved in provincial elections. I do not interfere myself. We have two excellent candidates and I do not want them to be slandered here.

I shall now pursue my remarks; anyhow, my intention was not to talk about that. What I wanted to say when the hon. member for Lotbinière gave one of our colleagues a verbal thrashing, is that I am not holding it against him. To my mind, we should avoid such excesses of language which are heard by the people and only discredit their authors.

I should like to stress another case which was mentioned yesterday and against which the house should protest. It happens too frequently. I was given a copy of a newspaper from which I quote:

> The present electoral system is under the control of the enemies of the peoples: free-masonry, financiers and communists. In order to be elected to parliaments, one must be previously bound to the powers which are active behind the scenes. None of those who claim to enact the laws and apply them, members and ministers, are really responsible for nor in a position to change their ways.

The article bears the signature of that vestal virgin of moral equality, Gilberte Côté-Mercier. I, for one, rise against such an irresponsible statement. I think parliament is not any closer to perfection than the "Bérêts blancs," but a large majority of members of this parliament, if not all, fulfil their duties with all the professional conscience they are capable of and they do not deserve such remarks. I shall not dwell on that, except to say that, to my mind, it is a case of contempt of parliament, if there is any law in that connection.

I come now to the cost of living, which is deemed out of control and which was mentioned by my colleagues. I think they are right. I will not look at it in the same manner; I want to mention it from another point of view.

It is true that the people are currently alarmed due to the increased cost of living. It is an international phenomenon; it is not limited to Canada and goes beyond our government's capacity. Nevertheless, it is a challenge to the present government and it must be met, as far as Canada is concerned, by extraordinary measures.

I should simply like to mention two consequences which will occur unless the government intervenes with global and spectacular measures.

In my province, Mr. Chairman, there are people who support the separatist movement. Their best argument when they preach their gospel of division is precisely the fact that the cost of living is increasing. They travel about the province telling the farmers: We will separate and settle all that. They tell the workers: You are on strike because your are not paid enough. They go through the entire catalogue of human miseries which are all a result of uncontrolled cost of living, to incite people to vote in support of the separatist ideas. It is a special challenge.

There is another challenge which I may bring up as an independent member. As all members of the house are aware, Canadians of all classes and levels of society are disappointed and disillusioned with their government. The men in public life who are most affected are the members of the two old parties who in turn head the government. The population expects of them a basic program capable of checking the rising cost of living. Governments change but no radical legislation is introduced, or at least that is the impression the people have. Both old parties seem to have about the same economic philosophy. It seems to change with circumstances. I am not saying that governments have done nothing. I admit the Liberal government has passed numerous and very generous pieces of social legislation, but frequently it was done by rule of thumb and without solving the fundamental problem. My colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) spoke of the establishment and said that financial influence was paralysing both parties.

If this goes on too long, if the government does not take drastic steps to remedy the situation, splinter parties will take the lead and we will wake up with a minority government which will be forced to form a coalition. Will that be good or bad? I do not want to prejudge. Still, I challenge the present government to roll up its sleeves and face the situation.

The backbenchers were mentioned. Several of them are intelligent, on the move and want to accomplish something. If the backbenchers want to help their party, let them spur it on. I say this constructively. I am not speaking of revolt but I am thinking of the young Turks who wanted at least a moral revolt. So, let them spur their party on and wake them up to the fact that this is 1966, that everything has changed, that the Canadian people are more exacting than ever, that they expect fundamental, drastic steps; otherwise, splinter parties will gain ascendancy over the people and will have to be reckoned with. That would, of course, create problems for the party in power, whether Conservative or Liberal.

I close on those words, pointing out again that the government faces two challenges: that of separatism, of those young people who use the rising cost of living as an argument, and that of the growing splinter parties who offer an alternative—whether good or bad is not for me to judge—to the Canadian electorate.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a few words to inform the house about an alarming situation that prevails at present in the province of Quebec, more particularly in the field of agriculture.

It has to do with the state of urgency created by the strike of the longshoremen in our national harbours. This morning I tried to point out this situation to the house. To my great astonishment, I heard many objections from Quebec members and yet they should have supported me instead of trying to get me into trouble. For all practical purposes, I could not express my views at that time.

At this stage, I should like to read the telegram I got from a person interested in animal breeding and who foresees the future with pessimism unless action is taken at once. Mr. Chairman, I received the following message from R. O. Blanchard Ltée of Saint-Germain:

> Situation alarming re longshoremen strike stop. Thousands of animals in danger of death if strike not settled within 24 hours.

Also, another message from the secretary of Bon Matin Farm Inc. complaining about the danger of this strike if it is not settled or if a solution is not found forthwith.

Many meat cattle breeders as well as farmers interested in poultry breeding can foresee the day, in the near future, when they will have to sell their livestock and poultry because they will be out of feed grain. This is an emergency, and I think the government should do everything it can to settle this situation.

If that happened, the rural and farming economy of the province of Quebec more particularly would suffer considerably. Finally, the consumer again would have to pay.

Therefore, I would ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) to make every effort to settle as soon as possible the labour conflict now paralysing our harbours. I know that the Minister of Labour is deeply concerned about the present situation, more especially as it could entail all kinds of conflicts. Violence is sometimes involved.

We have every reason to deplore such a strike. I ask the Minister of Labour and all the other ministers of the cabinet to make superhuman efforts to settle the matter in the shortest possible time, in order that it does not develop into an urgent national situation which would have disastrous effects.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates; the expenses of the International Labour Conferences and the promotion of labour-management co-operation, $14,569,100.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before the minister begins, may I raise a point of procedure. This is a matter which was discussed at a meeting of the house leaders; namely the question of any discussion we might have on the subject of housing, which comes under the minister but not in his capacity as Minister of Labour. I think it is fair to say there was a consensus among the house leaders that when item 1 is before us we should deal only with matters relating to the Department of Labour at that time, but that when discussion on item 1 is concluded the item might be allowed to stand and then later we would go back to the item to discuss the matter of housing. Could this be understood?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I think the suggestion made by the hon. member is a good one. I believe it is well known that the estimates in respect of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation come before this committee only once a year, and that is during the discussion of the final supplementaries. Under the circumstances, and since under item 1 it would be possible to discuss housing and building, as part of the works of the Department of Labour, particularly the matter concerning employment of tradesmen and others during the winter months. I believe this could be dealt with in the way suggested by my hon. friend.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there concurrence in the house in the proposal made by the member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, in the past when estimates of a department of government were presented to this committee for consideration, certainly during my first two years in this house, it was customary for the minister concerned to make at least a short introductory statement in which he outlined the work of the department and its program for the year. As a relatively new minister in the Department of Labour, I gave consideration to what should be done at this particular time and I could not resist the opportunity to say how much I have been impressed by the accomplishments of the Department of Labour and in particular the dedication of its officers. However, in view of a combination of circumstances I will endeavour to be as brief as possible in my introductory statement.

I think that it is safe to say that the Department of Labour under the leadership of my illustrious predecessors—and here I use the plural word advisedly—has made significant advances with the introduction of programs of lasting value, especially during recent years. I refer for instance to the winter works program which provides essential employment in a country such as Canada during the difficult winter months. This program was introduced not by my predecessor but by his immediate predecessor. I also wish to refer to the comprehensive Labour (Standards) Code, the establishment of the manpower consultative service, and the introduction of the winter house building incentive program, just to mention a few programs in which the Department of Labour has been interested over the past decade.

Partly as a result of the services which the department was able to develop, these services now have been divided between two departments. Since the first of January this year the National Employment Service, the Technical Vocational Branch, along with the manpower functions of the Department of Labour have been transferred to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, soon, I hope, to be a part of the new department of manpower. I say this because it affects the estimates which are to be discussed by the committee this afternoon. In the light of these changes, my officers have been giving consideration to the organization which we believe the department should have in order to carry out its direct responsibilities in the field of industrial relations.

In the field of labour management relations, I include labour standards and safety, research, information services, and also international labour affairs. In connection with my references to international labour affairs I think the house should know that the Minister of Labour had hoped to leave for Geneva tonight along with other members of the house to participate in the annual meeting of the International Labour Organization. This meeting opens on the evening of Tuesday next, and I am pleased to say that a strong delegation including members from all parts of this house is due to leave for Geneva over the week end. It appears to be extremely doubtful whether the minister will be there, at least for the first week of this very important international conference. I will go if I can, but the chances of my getting away for the next four or five days are extremely doubtful, because of a combination of circumstances to some of which I will refer in a moment.

The bulk of the work of the department as presently constituted—that is since January 1—aside from administrative services has been divided into three main sectors, and I think an examination of the estimates that we will be considering this afternoon will show this very clearly. Each of these main sectors will be headed by an officer with the necessary high qualifications and the rank needed to supervise and take responsibility in these fields.

The three sectors are: labour management relations, labour standards and benefits, and research and development. I will try to answer any questions that may be asked in connection with these three sectors of the department.

Before discussing even briefly the activities of the Department of Labour, having in mind the field of responsibilities that remain with it since January 1, I think it might be well if I made a very short statement about the general economic situation we have in Canada today, and more particularly about those aspects of this general economic situation which are of special interest to Canadian workers and employers.

I would not be frank if I did not say to this committee that I, as minister, and my department, have been plagued with a flood of disastrous strikes over the past few weeks. These strikes all seriously threaten the Canadian economy, and I urge all members of this house, regardless of party, to apply their minds to this serious situation which threatens our basic economy. We should be applying our minds in an attempt to find some corrective formula or solution which will prevent matters from getting completely out of hand.

In my own province of British Columbia we have a particularly serious situation which, at the present time, is not the direct responsibility of the federal Minister of Labour, but a responsibility that none of us can ignore as Canadians. We have the threat of a massive strike which will affect the economy of the province, and its forest industry. Nearly 50 cents of every dollar earned in the province comes from the forest industry. The situation is very serious.

We are faced with the situations that have been referred to in the last week, namely the dock strike in Montreal, the threatened strike in Air Canada, the railway problems and others which are particularly serious. I really think that we should apply our minds in an attempt to find some solution to this extremely grave situation.

I have not been in this office long enough to be able to say whether the solution lies in the establishment of arbitration or of labour courts, such as those that have been set up in Australia and other countries of the world. The answer may lie in that kind of action because, while they have had divided success, on the whole they have been successful. I throw that idea out as something that merits the serious consideration of all members of this house and of all Canadians.

It is quite obvious that part of the difficulties in which we find ourselves today results from our prosperity. We are enjoying a period of unprecedented prosperity in Canada. During 1965 total employment increased in Canada by over 250,000 people—one quarter of a million. This is the first time this has happened since long before the outbreak of the second world war. I think it is worthy of note that the increase in employment of young people under the age of 25 has increased. This is most gratifying, especially in view of the number of young people who will be coming forward to enter the labour force in the next few years.

Employment is well over seven million in Canada today. Not only has employment increased but, happily, unemployment continues to decline, in spite of the problems to which I have referred. The unemployment rate has, as recent figures show, declined to just slightly above 3 per cent of the labour force, which is the figure that the Economic Council of Canada proposed as the annual target for Canada on a seasonally adjusted basis.

There is another very significant matter, and this is a sign of our prosperity. The average weekly wages and salaries of Canadians between 1964 and 1965 increased by 7 per cent. As the consumer price index rose by only 2.4 per cent there certainly has been a substantial increase in the real, the genuine, purchasing power of Canadians. Working conditions in Canada have also continued to improve. A survey of my department covering over two million workers in non-agricultural industries indicated that the members of the Canadian work force generally now have a five-day, 40-hour week. In addition to this they enjoy a two-week paid vacation, with a third and sometimes a fourth week for workers with longer periods of service. They also have six or more paid holidays a year, and under the Labour (Standards) Code they have eight paid holidays. In addition, many of them enjoy pensions and other welfare benefits.

I would be the first to concede, of course, that these are average figures and that not all workers enjoy these benefits. Unfortunately some enjoy less than the average, but I can say with ample justification that the Labour (Standards) Code, which was passed by this house and by parliament last year, is having a very important and significant effect in this respect.

One other rather significant fact comes to my mind. A study of collective bargaining made by my department showed that of the 240 major collective agreements that were signed in 1965, and that is a very significant number, almost one half were for periods of three years or more, rather than the usual one or two year maximum periods. It is interesting to note that this study revealed that clauses on technological change have become more common in 1965. These clauses generally have taken the form of requiring an employer to give a union advanced notice of technological change, and to set up labour-management committees to deal with all the problems that are associated with these changes.

Over the past two and a half weeks many questions have been asked in this house concerning the dock strike in Montreal. It is a very serious situation. Of the incidents to which I have referred earlier, it is perhaps the most serious problem confronting us in the economic field in Canada today. We have to find a solution, have to bring about a settlement of this strike in Montreal, and we have to find it in the shortest possible time because there are huge quantities of wheat to be shipped from Canada. There are also essential food products which must be moved from western Canada to Quebec to supply feed for the chickens, pigs and other animals that need food in that particular province. They have to rely on us westerners for some help in the matter of food supplies.

All these are serious problems. We also have problems to solve in connection with Expo '67 and the goods that are needed to meet their target date of early next year. We have to find a solution to this problem. If we could have found a solution to it a week or two ago, we would all have been very happy. However, I doubt if 10 per cent of the members of this house know that this problem arises largely from technological change. How many people realize the difficulties that are involved? We have about 4,500 workers involved, stevedores or longshoremen, in the three ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. As a result of new changes in the handling of cargoes that are to be loaded and unloaded, you can get along today with modern equipment with a cut of a minimum of 10 per cent in the work force. This is the same kind of technological change that concerned us all when we were considering the Freedman report. Herein lies the basic difficulty—the difficulty that lies in finding a solution to this very serious problem in the ports of the province of Quebec.

We have been fortunate in the dock strike in having one of our most experienced, patient and respected men—I do not know how to describe him because he was not acting as a jurist but as a mediator—in the person of Judge Lippé to act in this dispute.

During the short period that I was away from the house between the question period this morning and this afternoon, I have received another interim report, perhaps I should say the fourth interim report but the second of two extended reports, from Judge Lippé. The negotiations seem to have reached a stalemate, which arises out of nothing more than technological change. The longshoremen naturally are concerned with the possible loss of jobs. The shipping federation are naturally concerned with competitive costs when they are faced with possible competitive shipments from Portland, Boston, New York, St. John's Halifax or other ports. They have to consider their position in this highly competitive age. If the longshoremen crews, which have for some years numbered 18, have to be reduced to 15 or 16 as a result of technological change, in my view, the ship operators are not to be blamed for trying to reach that objective. On the other hand it is not surprising that the longshoremen are concerned with their future and their families. Naturally they want to see a study made and a solution found which will not work too great a hardship on the workmen.

At the suggestion of the mediator, I am meeting this afternoon at five o'clock here in Ottawa with the bargaining representatives of both the shipping federation and the longshoremen. I hope that out of this meeting a recommendation or an agreement on a course of action will be arrived at which will enable us to find a peaceful settlement of this dispute. You will appreciate how very serious is the situation when you have to consider 4,500 longshoremen. As you know, in general there is a surplus of longshoremen because of the short season that prevails in the ports of Montreal and Quebec. It appears that there is always a reserve of longshoremen. You might think that over the life of a two-year contract, two extra longshoremen per gang could be absorbed. However, it is not as simple as that. If you have a crew of 18 longshoremen out of 4,500 and you want to reduce the number to 16, it means a reduction of, say approximately 450 persons. However, if you have a reserve crew of 900, then because of the peculiar situation of the St. Lawrence which only moves wheat seven or eight months a year, you are not just dealing with 450 men through attrition or otherwise, because you have to take into consideration the 900 people who are kept in reserve.

I only hope that over the week end we will be able to find a practical solution because it means so much not only to the people of Quebec, to the farmers of Quebec, to Expo '67, but also our prairie farmers, particularly the farmers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, who have to move their wheat during the open season of navigation on the St. Lawrence.

Technological change is one of the most serious problems with which we will have to cope in Canada in the months directly ahead. I say also that one of the most important documents—I say this advisedly—which we have had to consider as members of parliament in the past several years, certainly in the relatively short time that I have been here, is the Freedman report. Mr. Justice Freedman undertook to serve as chairman of an industrial inquiry commission on the run-throughs on the railways. The proposals which he made following his penetrating and comprehensive analysis are now the subject of a very widespread discussion not only in this house but by industry, particularly the railways, the unions and government circles on all levels. This report is a most significant document. While you may question some of the philosophical observations made by this learned jurist—and he does embark on some philosophy he deserves the very sincere thanks of the Canadian people for an excellent job well done.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: It may not be necessary for parliament to deal with that report. I hope it will not be necessary because he has made a recommendation that the railway and the unions concerned try to find an agreeable formula to be incorporated in a collective agreement. I have been assured by the railway brotherhood and by both railways that they are working toward this objective. If that is not possible, the government and parliament may have to take greater responsibility, but I hope that may not be necessary. I believe encouraging progress is being made along the lines first recommended by the commissioner, Mr. Justice Freedman, in his report.

I referred a few minutes ago to the Canadian Labour (Standards) Code. I think the introduction of this code during the past year has given rise to intense activity in the Department of Labour. It certainly has made the Minister of Labour work a few hours longer than he normally would daily, certainly longer than when I was minister of forestry. This new code has created a large number of difficulties. Extensive use has been made of provisions by which submissions can be made for deferment under Part I, that is the hours of work, and to a considerably less extent submissions have been made for deferment under section 11, minimum wages.

I can assure hon. members that the question of deferment with regard to wages does not present too great a problem. With regard to deferment of hours, each particular industry and in some cases each particular industrial operation, has to be studied and a decision made on its merits. They are all being dealt with as rapidly as possible. In dealing with these deferments, we have urged the parties concerned to work out a satisfactory basis for adjusting the hours of work over a reasonable period of time, that is where the hours of work are in excess of the period fixed by the new code. I know a number of questions that were put to me seemed to be critical, and some of them sought information, about why the Ministers of Labour did not intervene sooner in the Ontario truckers strike.

The answer to that is simple. It was not uncommon for truckers in most parts of Canada, more particularly in central Canada, to work 70 hours a week and in some cases 80 hours a week or even more. Then as a result of the passage of the national code they will be forced to drop down to a 40-hour week, more than a 100 per cent curtailment within a matter of months in some cases. I am happy that my view proved to be the correct one, that if we could get the operators of the trucks and the employees to find a formula themselves that would reduce the hours of work to a 40 hour week within a reasonable period of time, it was far better than having the Minister of Labour use a big club.

As a result of difficult negotiations led by competent officials of the Ontario Department of Labour, and my department, we were able to bring about a very desirable conclusion. We have now got a work week that will, quite shortly, come within the letter of the Labour (Standards) Code although it is now within the spirit of it. The parties have found, I may say, that by averaging out over the 52 weeks every year, and using the other flexible features of the code, the results have not been quite as bad as they thought they were going to be when they were making their representations to members of this house about a year ago.

I can say this, that the code has already had a very important effect in eliminating pockets of substandard wages as well as excessive hours and unfair treatment of labour in many parts of Canada.

I should like to refer also to an increased activity in the women's bureau of the Department of Labour. This provides a continuing focus in our department on policies and programs relating to the standards and conditions of work of women. The bureau aims at bringing about a wider understanding of the role of women in the labour force, and to promote working conditions in every industry throughout Canada that are conducive to the well-being of the women, and efficient production. The role of this women's bureau is becoming increasingly important as more women, both married and single, enter the labour force.

There are other aspects of the work of the department to which, if time permitted, I might refer. I think perhaps I should refer briefly to the legislation that has to do with safety in employment. You will recall that, in the speech from the throne this year, as well as last year, reference was made to a new code dealing with safety in the fields in which the federal government has responsibility. Such a bill, as you all know, I am sure, is now in the other place. Its purpose is to ensure the safety and well-being of persons employed in industry within the federal field of jurisdiction. We have had several discussions, I might say, with provincial officials to develop a co-ordinated safety service in Canada. They have been very satisfactory, and I have been greatly encouraged by the support and encouragement we have received from all ten of the Canadian provinces.

The departmental program of studies of collective bargaining is also making progress. I hope we will make a great deal more progress because of the situation existing in Montreal, Vancouver and in other parts of Canada.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Order. I regret having to interrupt the minister but it is my duty to inform the committee that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: Thank you, I will be brief, Mr. Chairman. Included in this program is a study of the impact of economic and technical change on collective bargaining. I have already made some reference to an examination of the structure of collective bargaining and a study of the extent and nature of pattern bargaining. Now, studies of wages, costs of production, prices and the relationship between wage behaviour in Canada and her international competitive position were also expanded. Perhaps a classic example of this is the situation involved in the dock strike in Montreal. What effect will it have on our competitive position, the competitive position of Canadian ports, if we do not take advantage of technical change when technical change has been introduced in the ports directly to the south of us, and ports on the west coast.

At the same time, we do have to take into consideration the rights of the employees who are affected. Surely over a period of a year to two years, if necessary, provision could be made to take care of such a situation. There is one other point to which I would like to direct the attention of hon. members, Mr. Chairman, and which I am sure will be of interest to them. The International Labour Organization, which meets in Geneva on Wednesday next, will hold its eighth annual regional conference in the Americas in Ottawa next September. The opening meeting, we hope, will be in this chamber. This will be the first such meeting outside Latin America that has ever been held. It is an important event in Canada's international relations for the year 1966.

There is another matter to which reference should be made because it has come up on more than one occasion in this session. I refer to the vigorous program of information and publicity that has been undertaken by the Department of Labour, particularly the new, livelier format adopted by the Labour Gazette. This is the first change in the format of that paper in its 66-year history. I hope you like it; I certainly do. It is much more attractive and it seems to interest people much more than it did in its earlier form.

I might say that it is my hope that by the end of this summer the long-standing objective of simultaneous publication of the Labour Gazette's editions in both English and French should be achieved. We have made good progress over the last year and I hope that not later than the coming September this objective of simultaneous publication will be achieved. This is made possible through the strengthening of the department's French editorial staff and the co-operation of the Queen's Printer.

Now as to the specific votes before us, Mr. Chairman. The committee is being asked to approve $10,513,400 in the main estimates, of which $3,127,000 are statutory items. Page 200 of the blue book shows this amount of $10,513,400 as being a decrease of $23,556,700; so it should not take very much time to get the estimates through, because they are being reduced by $23,556,700. However, I must again be frank—and I think frankness in this house commends itself at all times—and say that the 1965-66 figures in the blue book included $19 million for the winter housebuilding incentive program, which may or may not be proceeded with, having regard to what the conditions may be this fall.

It will also be noted that there is a substantial reduction of $3.5 million in the vote for payments of transitional benefits for workers in the automotive manufacturing and parts industries. There is every indication that the larger amount that was needed to take care of this situation in the first year of operation of the agreement can be safely reduced by $3.5 million in the second year of operation.

These two items, Mr. Chairman—the winter housebuilding incentive program and the technical assistance program—account for the apparent seemingly large reduction over the past year. With the new developments which are taking place and with the continuation of its present functions, I am firmly convinced that in the fields that continue as its responsibility the Department of Labour can be counted on to make a greater contribution to the economic and social development of this country.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, may I just ask one question. What effect does the longshoremen's strike have on the loading of the grain? I understand that as far as loading of grain is concerned all that has to be done is to stick a spout in the boat, pull a string and down it goes. However, will the longshoremen's strike affect the export of our grain?

Mr. Nicholson: That is not an easy question to answer, Mr. Chairman. The strike has occurred during the early part of the shipping season. I would be hopeful, if we can get this very disastrous strike behind us, that we may be able to make up the 19 days during which shipping activities have been interfered with. But any long protraction of the strike certainly will have very serious adverse effects on the movement of grain.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question while his mind is still on the point. Has consideration been given by his department to the use of compulsory arbitration as a means of settling disputes, rather than resorting to strike action, as has been the case for many years?

Mr. Nicholson: I am going to suggest that I take note of questions and deal with them perhaps at the end of the period. However, I think this particular question merits a special answer and I would be glad to give one.

Very serious consideration has been given to this matter by the department and by experienced departmental officials over a period of several years. As a member of cabinet I know something of the difficulties that we have had in trying to work out and find an acceptable formula. If you really believe, as I happen to, in the importance and the significance of collective bargaining, which enables management and labour to sit down on opposite sides of the table and unburden their hearts and take strong positions if necessary, it is difficult to say in all cases compulsory arbitration would be necessary, or advisable.

On the other hand, I think—and I am speaking only for myself, certainly not for the government, nor do I even express the consensus of my department—there are many cases where the national interest is at stake. I can think of safety and security in the air line industry, for instance, where weather services have to be maintained. Then there is the movement of passengers and freight in many cases on our railroads. It is just as important perhaps, in my view, to have compulsory arbitration in these fields as in certain aspects of civil service activities, as proposed in the legislation that is now before this house.

I cannot give the hon. member a definite answer, but I can assure him—and this is why I made the appeal earlier today—that any constructive suggestions, which any member of this house or any other person may have to make as to how we might solve this extremely difficult question, when our national interests and economy are at stake, would be very welcome.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman—

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Are you making your main speech?

Mr. Caouette: I was recognized by the Chair and I should be given the opportunity to say what I have to say.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I think thus far you have recognized a couple of members who have just asked questions. If we are now to have the round of main speakers, do we not follow the usual routine and hear from the Conservatives first?

Mr. Caouette: I have been recognized.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): I have recognized the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have raised this matter on several occasions and I will continue to raise it. The Conservative opposition of this house constitutes 96 members. We are entitled to recognition in greater numbers than the members of a small group of eight or nine. I think in a case like this, when the minister has made a statement on his estimates, the first person to make a reply should be a member of the major party in opposition in this house, and others should take their turn.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say what I have to say in English so that my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre can understand, because if I speak in French he will not understand.

Mr. Churchill: We have a translation system.

Mr. Caouette: When he refers to small groups of eight or nine people, may I remind him that there is more intelligence among the members of our group than there is among the 96 members of his group who up to date have been recognized. I think I have the right to be heard as well as the member for Winnipeg South Centre, without any discrimination or reference to his strong 96 members in the House of Commons. I have been elected, as well as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and perhaps with a stronger majority than he; so I have the right to be listened to in the House of Commons.

Mr. Churchill: We all know how smart you are; you do not have to keep telling us every day.

Mr. Caouette: I hope in the future you will remember.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Order, please.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order. It has not been ruled on. When a minister of the crown makes a statement in this house the opportunity of reply should go first to the opposition and not to somebody in the far corner, no matter how excellent he is in his own opinion. I do not share his opinion of his excellence by any means.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, may I speak on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I believe that the hon. member for Villeneuve has as much right as anyone to speak in this house. Nevertheless we must bear in mind that, the minister having just completed his opening statement, the first questions directed to him should come from the Conservative party, a member of which should have been given the first opportunity to speak. That, I think, is the established practice. The Chairman, of course, may not have seen a Conservative member rise immediately following the minister's statement. I am sure that this whole thing has been unintentional. However, I think the practice that has been established for the past several years ought to be maintained.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Order, please. I appreciate what has been said. The first hon. member recognized by the Chair was from the official opposition, but then the hon. member for Villeneuve rose and the Chair recognized him. As soon as he has finished the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon.

Mr. Churchill: That is discrimination, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, my comments on the explanations given a few minutes ago by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) will be brief. His explanations boil down to this; his department is becoming less important, even though the labour question is gaining importance and ground throughout Canada. As for the minister, he is losing ground. That is precisely what he just told us. His department, which spent $34,070,100 last year for labour organization, sees, this year, its estimates cut down by $23,556,700. And the Minister of Labour tells us that this is due to a large extent to the estimates which the officials of his department were unable to study concerning house building in the country or in any province.

In fact, for 1966-67, the expenditures of the department amount to $10,513,400 compared to $34,070,100.

I put a question last week to which the minister answered at noon today, saying that the amounts granted as loans for house building remained the same.

Last night in the town of Gatineau I met housing contractors who said bluntly: "We cannot obtain anything from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This puts us in a difficult situation".

[English]

Mr. Churchill I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Nicholson: Was the hon. member not in the house when it was announced that housing would not be discussed when we dealt with the main estimates, but at a later time, partly because there are no estimates respecting Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation before the house?

Mr. Churchill: No. He was not here.

Mr. Nicholson: I did agree, since the subject of housing affects employment and labour, that housing might be discussed after the labour estimates had been dealt with. I was sure that that was the agreement reached by all parties in the house.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it was not only agreed to by the minister but it was made an order of the house.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. If the member for Villeneuve allows me, the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggests that we study housing problems after the estimates of the Department of Labour.

At the present time, we should neither discuss housing nor speak of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation but we should deal with the problems relating to the Department of Labour.

Mr. Caouette: Very well, Mr. Chairman. I was not here when this agreement was reached between the various parties in the house. I will relate my remarks to the subject matter, that is the estimates of the Department of Labour, without speaking of housing or the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Naturally, we will come back to this when the minister is ready to discuss it.

However, we are going to talk about labour matters and management-labour relations, and particularly, as far as the Department of Labour is concerned, about dock employees on the St. Lawrence, at Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Chairman, I tried to put a question this morning in connection with the farmers who are now making representations to the federal parliament.

I received at noon a telegram from Quebec from Mr. Georges-Henri Blouin, manager of the agricultural co-operative of the Orleans island. This telegram read as follows:

> We have no more feed grain for our livestock. They are starving to death. Stop. Asking for immediate government action in this national harbours conflict referred to as very serious by our farmers. (Signed) Georges-H. Blouin.

This morning, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) put a question along the same lines.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Nicholson: Did the hon. member not hear the assurance I gave the house earlier this afternoon—

Mr. Churchill: He was not here.

Mr. Nicholson: —that at the request of the mediator, Judge Lippé, I am meeting with representatives of the Longshoremen's Association and the Shipping Federation at five o'clock this afternoon in Ottawa to discuss among other matters this very problem?

Mr. Caouette: I will take the minister's word for that. But will the minister tell me that the matter has been solved so that the farmers can get their grain moved from the ports of Montreal and Three Rivers? Can the minister not inform me as to what is taking place now?

An hon. Member: It is Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Churchill: He does not understand what has been said. Would the hon. member use the translation system.

Mr. Nicholson: I was asked a question by the hon. member. I cannot tell him that the very point dealt with in the telegram has been the subject of discussion this morning. However, at the request of the chairman, representatives of the two parties are coming to Ottawa to discuss this problem further this afternoon. I cannot say that a solution will be found. I can assure the hon. member that the government will do its best to find a solution and to find it within the shortest possible time.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Because the hon. member for Cochrane is applauding does not mean that an answer has been given. The minister says that discussions will take place. We all know that discussions have been taking place in the House of Commons for the past four years without coming to any solution. The farmers of Quebec are now asking for a solution to this problem. They are fed up with discussions in the House of Commons. They want a response in their province. This is what I want the Minister of Labour to understand. I know that people from Montreal and Quebec are coming to Ottawa to meet with officials of the Department of Labour. Where is the consolation? In the meantime the farmers are asking for action; they are not asking for discussion.

[Translation]

Hogs and cattle in the province of Quebec are not waiting for government discussions, but rather for grain so as to be properly fed.

Mr. Chairman, there is always a limit to having wool pulled over our eyes and being told tall tales by cabinet members. We have enough of this.

That is why I say that according to the estimates we are being asked to vote, the Department of Labour is becoming a helpless department, no longer able to assume any responsibilities. The department is granted estimates to settle labour disputes in Canada, but afterwards, they are reduced and the department is told: it is no longer your business. Let us bring people from Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver to discuss matters in Ottawa and, during that time, people in need are awaiting results from the government. The department is aware of this.

But nothing is done about it. We are told: people are coming to Ottawa to study matters. We have been told for four years that people are coming to Ottawa to study and the minister knows exactly what I mean. He is also aware that I am speaking the truth. He said so himself earlier when he stated: my department is becoming less important; we get $23 million less this year to run the Department of Labour.

Mr. Chairman, labour and management relations in Canada or in the province of Quebec are more important than the estimates now under consideration. And when the minister tells us: such and such labour organization—the C.L.C. or the C.N.T.U. or any other—is talking of meeting with the employers to look into the situation, then the Minister of Labour himself or one of his officials should intervene directly in those disputes without delay, instead of waiting until it is too late and the damage is done. He should delegate some departmental official, not to make matters worse between employers and workers but to act as a mediator, as a man talking to other men and getting them to agree among themselves, in the best interests of Canada and its people.

This is what is lacking within the Department of Labour as in most departments. But since we are dealing with the Department of Labour—and I am sure the minister understands the situation—I suggest that mediators be sent to settle disputes between management and labour, so as to promote conciliation instead of adding fuel to the fire and stirring up hatred, as is too often seen between certain labour leaders and some employers in industry, trade or any other segment of the economy.

Mr. Chairman, I, for one, am not afraid to talk to a labour leader. Whether they are called Jodoin or anything else, I am not afraid to tell them what I think of them; but, at the same time, I am not afraid to tell employers what their duties are toward their employees.

Only, the employer is not the one who is going to settle the labour problem; it is the federal or provincial legislation in the province which will help to solve the labour problem, so as to avoid, in the years to come, those costly conflicts, those useless conflicts, those strikes which are breeding hate instead of understanding.

It is the first responsibility of the hon. Minister of Labour to see that such an agreement exists between management and labour. That is why I would ask him to spend the small amount he has left, namely $10,513,000, provided it does not disappear within six months, not on useless inquiries, but with a view to creating a climate of agreement, understanding and co-operation between the various sectors in this country, in order to increase our national productivity and keep on ensuring for our labour force, our labourers, security as well as freedom.

Then, the federal Minister of Labour will have done his duty; he will not have encroached upon the rights of anybody, but he will have contributed to respect for the rights of everyone in Canada.

These, Mr. Chairman, were my comments and remarks concerning the estimates of the Department of Labour.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Churchill: He has to catch a train.

Mr. Caouette: I will catch you before I do.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to ask the hon. member for Villeneuve this question. If he were Minister of Labour and the workers would not do what he told them to do, would he put them all in jail or would he line them up and shoot them?

Mr. Caouette: What does the hon. member mean—"line them up and shoot them"? I have been in Russia and in Czechoslovakia. They are shooting people there, but Social Crediters will never shoot anyone.

Mr. Forrestall: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to lead off at last in reply to the minister's opening statement.

We in the Conservative party along with all members of the committee, I am sure, are most hopeful that the events of the next two hours will turn out favourably. We are most hopeful that the meeting at five o'clock will be useful and serve to bring about the result which every member of the house desires to see, a settlement of the serious dispute at Montreal and other Quebec ports. We are hopeful that settlement will come out of this meeting. Most of us recognize that when it is possible for government to stay out of labour problems this is the best course to follow. However, where government is able to mediate and assist in the reaching of a settlement between management and labour, such assistance should be forthcoming. Again I express to the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, good wishes for the meeting this evening.

In the stage of history we now appear to have reached it would seem that strikes and labour disputes are with us with the persistency and certainty of the seasons of the year. We have had some serious labour disputes already this year, the oil refinery strikes in the west, the pending air line strike, the Ontario truckers dispute and now the serious situation affecting seaway workers. In my own area of Halifax there is a serious situation involving workers employed by the Department of National Defence.

The remarks I wish to make this afternoon centre around the situation in Halifax, and I express the hope that in this particular labour matter the government will take every means available to it, having had the benefit of ample forewarning of the impending action threatened in Halifax, to overcome the difficulties that exist in the very critical field of national defence. The matter involves labour policy. It also involves dollars and cents. I am not going to suggest that the government should intervene in a situation that possibly should be handled internally or by the treasury board, but I suggest that the government, having been forewarned of the impending action, will be held morally responsible for what could happen in eastern Canada if a strike takes place.

I share the hope of all hon. members that the Department of Labour is not about to disappear entirely from the scene. I hope that the reduction in estimates which the minister has outlined will not mean the complete abolition of the department. Its role and function in our society are too important for that to happen.

We share the minister's sentiments with regard to the work of Mr. Justice Freedman with respect to the railways and railway unions. I spoke of the government taking steps beforehand to overcome impending labour difficulties. This was an excellent example of how meaningful preparatory work can bring labour and management together before a strike so that Canada benefits. When that is not possible it is Canada that suffers.

In this context the same effort should be made in the Halifax area because the workers there have already engaged in a strike vote process among the several unions involved in the Halifax Dockyard Trades and Labour Council. Now is the time for the government, within its internal machinery, to move quietly to do those things which will preclude the necessity of government intervention after a strike has taken place.

I know the difficulties which the minister faces in the Montreal situation. I am one of the 10 per cent he referred to who are familiar with the technological problems. Just recently at Halifax and Saint John we went through the process of reducing the number of men in longshore gangs and the result has been effective. I am hopeful about the meeting that will take place later today with respect to the Montreal situation. We all agree that the strike must be settled because its disastrous effect on the economy is almost beyond description. It will take us years to recover the ground lost if the strike is prolonged further.

The labour safety code is now being considered in the other place. It is of great concern to us in the maritimes. We have a great shipbuilding industry, but when vessels come into our yards for overhaul, repair, modification and so forth we seem to lie in that area of shadow where there is always a question whether the provincial or federal authority has jurisdiction. We hope the safety code will provide an answer to that because people in the shipbuilding industry have for a long time been seeking meaningful guide lines on jurisdiction.

The minister has mentioned that the Canada Labour (Standards) Code has presented problems with respect to certain deferment requests concerning standards of wages and amounts paid. I am sure that when the code is fully implemented it will have long-awaited desirable effects. I understand that Part I of the code is subject to much easier scrutiny by the department when requests for deferment are made. Only time and experience will tell whether this implies that there have been a lot of requests for deferment or that Part I of the code is not strong enough. If there is misunderstanding of the work loads that are necessary in certain sectors of our private economy, then perhaps the minister may introduce amendments to the code.

I shall conclude by again expressing the hope that the meeting at five o'clock this afternoon will result in an announcement that the serious situation at the river ports has been overcome and that the dockers will be back at work soon.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, we are in one of the most difficult years in terms of labour-management relations that we have experienced since the end of world war II. The minister has mentioned that the longshoremen in Quebec are on strike. Other strikes are likely to take place affecting our air lines, railways and flour mills, to mention just a few of the industries which come within federal jurisdiction. Tough negotiations are also in progress which may well lead to strikes in the steel, packing house and lumber industries, to mention just a few of the important, large groups of working people who are covered by provincial labour jurisdiction.

It is not surprising, Mr. Chairman, that this situation exists at the present time. It is not surprising that workers who have organized in unions have been rejecting tentative agreements which have been worked out by their union officers. Probably the best agreements ever negotiated by these officers are being rejected by the workers because they know what is happening to the cost of living. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, last year the cost of living rose by just over 4 per cent. That does not appear to be very much, but I am sure the ordinary housewife will not believe such figures are correct because when she goes to do her shopping, whether it be in my city of Winnipeg, the city of Ottawa or the city of Vancouver, she is likely to find a different situation. I should like to illustrate it by quoting from a letter I received a week or so ago from a woman in Calgary. I am sure the illustrations she gives are no different from what they would be in any other city in Canada. She points out that in February, 1965 bacon was 59 cents a pound and a year later it was $1.19. Strawberries in February, 1965 were three packages for a dollar and in February, 1966 were 53 cents a package. In February, 1965 soap was $1.29 per box and in February, 1966 it was $1.85. In February, 1965, grade A large eggs were two dozen for 69 cents and in February, 1966 they were 61 cents a dozen.

Is it any wonder that the workers become restless and want large increases in pay? I am sure that the working people of Winnipeg whom I represent would not mind so much if they could believe the increases were due to an increase being received by the producers, because in that event at least somebody who is working would be receiving the benefit. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the bulk of the increase is going not to the producers but to the middleman, the distributor.

Working people are not concerned just with the cost of living. They can read papers like the Financial Post just the same as businessmen and members of parliament. I have a page from the May 14, 1966 issue of the Financial Post which shows the profit picture for 354 Canadian companies. I am not going to read the figures in respect of the 354 but I should like to refer to a few examples among well known companies. This may indicate the reason workers in Canadian industry who are asking for increases in pay are willing to go on strike in order to obtain these increases. Let me give a few examples. In 1964 the net profit of Imperial Oil was $79 million and in 1965 it rose to $86 million. In 1964 the net profit of International Nickel was $135 million and in 1965 it was $143 million. Canadian Westinghouse in 1964 had a net profit of $3,489,000 and in 1965 it was $4,238,000. Simpsons Limited, a very good illustration, in 1964 had a profit of $7 million and in 1965 it was $8,600,000.

If I were to take the profits of the food chains I am sure they would show even more dramatic increases. This is the reason the workers are demanding pay increases and the reason they are determined to get them regardless of the difficulty and the fact that it may mean a strike. This is the reason the Minister of Labour is probably going to have the busiest year any minister of labour has had in the last 20 years. It is not enough to wait until a strike is called. The government must take very strong and very definite action. I am not going to go into the details because earlier today we had consideraale discussion about the increase in the cost of living.

It is not enough to have the kind of platitudes which we have been receiving from the government. The people of Canada require a prices review board to examine the large-scale price increases which are taking place even while companies are showing the largest profits they have ever had. We need a really aggressive and successful crackdown on the combines which are milking the people of this country. It is necessary that the government call on Canadian business and industry to be reasonable and not increase prices at a time when their profits are at an all-time high. If such a policy is not instituted by the government, the minister will be busy 24 hours a day.

I wish to deal specifically, Mr. Chairman, with two or three matters which come directly within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour. As I listened to the minister today discuss the Freedman report and the strike of the longshoremen, it seemed to me that the minister really could not have read, or if he did read really did not understand, what Mr. Justice Freedman said. What he said in his report was that labour and management should negotiate changes in working conditions which affect workers as well as management, even when they take place during the lifetime of a contract. Surely Mr. Justice Freedman made it clear that if negotiation could not take place voluntarily, as often is the case, the government should bring in legislation to bring about that kind of negotiation.

In the speech the minister made today and in speeches he has made on other occasions, there has been nothing to indicate that the minister accepts this basic proposal made by Mr. Justice Freedman. How can you have voluntary agreement to negotiate this kind of change when industry, almost unanimously, has rejected the proposals made by Mr. Justice Freedman? In today's Globe and Mail there is a report of a conference held in Toronto. The story is written by Roger Newman and is headed "Freedman Proposal Would Impede Economic Progress, Executive Says". I should like to read a few paragraphs from this article:

> The federal government will be blocking Canada's economic progress if it implements legislation based on a recent report by Mr. Justice Samuel Freedman of Manitoba, a vice president of Canadian Westinghouse Ltd. said in Toronto yesterday.
> J. W. Henley, who directs Westinghouse's personnel division, said the Freedman report—which says employers should consult employees about technological changes—would force manufacturers to defer innovations. He was speaking to a law and industrial relations conference sponsored by Osgoode Hall and the University of Toronto's centre for industrial relations.
> Mr. Henley said the changes brought about by technological innovations should be handled through social legislation, not contract bargaining. He said that if the government adopts the Freedman report, it would mean that manufacturers would have to postpone technical improvements until the next time they negotiate labor contracts with their employees.

First of all, I wish to say that what Mr. Henley says is not true. What is true is that his words indicate the hostility of industry in general to the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Freedman. That being the case, it really is preaching in the wilderness for the minister to say that he hopes and trusts these things can be done voluntarily and thinks it would be much better if they were. In my opinion it would be better if these things could be done voluntarily, but because they were not in the case of the C.N.R. there was a stoppage of work when the railway attempted to implement drastic changes.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is it not a fact that Mr. Justice Freedman made this particular recommendation in his report, and is it not a fact that when I said I thought there had been encouraging developments I was referring to the negotiations between the railway unions and the railways but not in the field generally about which the hon. member is speaking?

Mr. Orlikow: Of course Mr. Justice Freedman said that he thought they should try to negotiate these things. I agree that there may have been encouraging developments, but what did take place in that industry is only a sample of the kind of thing which other industries will have to face in the future if corrective measures are not adopted. This same kind of situation brought about the problems which have been created by the longshoremen's work stoppage.

What Mr. Justice Freedman said was that since it is not likely that voluntary agreement can be obtained through negotiation, legislation is necessary. I will quote the relevant sections of his report for the benefit of the minister if he is not as familiar with them as he ought to be.

It is not true that labour has been able to stop technological change. One of the best illustrations of this fact is the situation in the railway industry regarding the reduction in the number of employees. In 1952 the railway non-operating unions represented 152,000 workers whereas in 1966 the railways are moving more traffic than ever before with only 90,000 workers. This represent a reduction of 60 per cent. It is obvious that the railways have been able to reduce their staffs through technological change. The unions have not prevented this change, but what they have said and will continue to say with justification is that the changes must be worked out through consultation so that the workers will not have to bear the entire burden.

I should now like to quote a few lines from the official summary of Mr. Justice Freedman's report prepared by him. He said at page 3 of his findings and conclusions:

> Assuming voluntary agreement between the parties is not possible for the purpose of giving effect to the commission's recommendation, legislation would be required. Either the Railway Act or the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act could be employed. If the latter were used it would be possible to provide, by an appropriate amendment, that any technological innovation, development or change proposed by the employer which would materially and adversely affect the working conditions of the employees should either be deferred for negotiation at the next open period or be dealt with in the same way as if it were a provision falling within the scope of subsection (2) of section 22 of the act.

He goes on to spell out what this means in a technical way:

> Amendment through the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act would have the advantage of closing a gap in the statute which technological advance has revealed.

It is not good enough for the minister to make nice speeches here or speeches of the kind he made on May 19 in Vancouver to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. At that time he ostensibly dealt with the Freedman report but did not once mention the fact that Mr. Justice Freedman had suggested changes in the legislation. I think this bears out the suggestion that an individual can take out of any report exactly what he wants to take out of it.

It is time for the minister and the government to face up to the implications of technological change and what this means to working people. They must also face up to the implications of the recommendations of Mr. Justice Freedman and bring in legislation which will permit real bargaining and orderly and sensible changes in working conditions so that the whole burden does not fall upon the shoulders of the working people of Canada. That is all they want, and if the minister brings in such legislation I assure him that the members of this group will give him the majority he needs, the lack of which he was complaining about earlier. If the minister brought forward that kind of legislation he would remove one of the greatest reasons behind the strikes which are taking place today.

I want to deal with just one more matter at this time. The minister spoke with a good deal of pride about the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. If ever there was a hoax perpetrated on the people of Canada it was that perpetrated by the implementation of this code. I do not understand why the minister and the government continue to be proud of it. In answer to a question I placed on the order paper early this session we were told that the federal government spent over $185,000 in advertising the provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. The provisions were explained by the use of newspapers, magazines, radio and television, and I am sure hon. members will remember the full-page advertisements which included a picture of the former minister extolling the virtues of the act. It was not actually a picture of the minister but a drawing which looked remarkably like him. What has been accomplished by this measure? Let us be realistic about it. Roughly 500,000 workers in Canada who were already receiving $1.25 per hour before the code was passed come within the jurisdiction of the federal government. The $1.25 minimum wage provision has therefore had virtually no effect. The other main provisions of the code relate to the 40-hour week and time and a half for overtime.

After a great deal of digging and study we now have a list of industries and companies which asked for deferment of the 18-month period in respect of hours and overtime. I am not going to read the entire list because it would take me all day but I will indicate the type of industries that are listed. In respect of the minimum wages provision we have listed flour and feed mills, the highway transport industry, the radio and television industry and the shipping industry. In respect of hours of work and overtime—it would take me longer to read this list—we have almost every air transport company except Air Canada, the banks including the Royal Bank, the Bank of Montreal, the Imperial Bank and the Toronto-Dominion Bank, and Crown companies including Atomic Energy, Polymer, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and several others. There is also listed a large number of flour and feed mills.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. member is not suggesting that because these companies applied for a deferment they received one?

Mr. Orlikow: One could get into a fine argument on semantics in this regard, but let me state that because they did not receive a deferment in no way means that they are now living up to the provisions of the code. This simply means that the provisions of the act have not been put into effect. If I am wrong in this regard I would be glad to have the minister correct me.

Mr. Nicholson: Does the hon. member not realize that parliament said this was the minister's responsibility and that a limited time would be allowed in which this had to be accomplished?

Mr. Orlikow: Of course, Mr. Chairman, the minister is 100 per cent correct. If the government of the day had said: We are going to pass an act but we tell you right now it is going to take at least 18 months before anybody will benefit from it, I would have no objection. What I do object to is the hoax of going to the people, not with the Liberal party's money but with the money of the people of Canada, and spending $185,000 to tell them of benefits which will not be given to them for another year. I object very strenuously to that.

I would like to continue, Mr. Chairman, because I think the public should be interested in some of the other industries which have not been brought under the act yet because their applications are still being studied or have been deferred. In all cases the effect is the same; the workers are not covered. They include the C.N.R. hotels, the pipe line companies such as Interprovincial and Trans-Northern, the Post Office Department's mail contractors, practically every private radio and television station, trucking firms in British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, and so on.

I pause in reading the list to say that I completely disagree with the course the minister took in regard to the trucking strike in Ontario. I am satisfied that if the minister, at any time after the strike started, had made an announcement that he would implement six months hence the provision of the code regarding hours, the strike would have been settled in half the time that it took because this was one of the biggest bones of contention. However, the minister refused to take the responsibility which I suggest he had.

The telephone and telegraph companies have not yet been covered nor have the railway companies and the Canadian Trucking Association. Quebecair is also not covered. I could go on and on.

I have examples of the companies and industries which are not yet covered. To the worker involved it does not really matter whether the reason he is given is that the implementation of the provisions was deferred or that the matter is still being considered. I would like the minister to tell hon. members how many workers and how many companies are covered because I suggest that to a large extent we have been and are up against the delaying tactics of the Liberal party.

I want to deal very briefly now with one other item. It is good to know that we are finally going to get some safety legislation to cover workers who are under federal jurisdiction. I am surprised that the bill was first introduced in the other place. It is good to know we are going to get this legislation and I hope it will come here soon. However, I hope that once it is passed the government will not forget about it. What I mean is simply this. I am sure that many other members from urban constituencies have received questions and complaints from railway and other workers who are under federal jurisdiction, people who work in diesel and machine shops who have complained about the smoke hazard, the fumes, bad air and poor lighting in their working areas.

I hope that when the legislation is passed the Department of Labour will hire sufficient inspectors to see that the law is lived up to or, if it is possible, that arrangements will be made with the provincial departments of labour to ensure that the act is adhered to. I hope that care will be taken to make sure that the provincial labour departments which are given this job obtain the necessary staff because, as one who served in the provincial legislature before coming to this house, I know that in my own province—and this is true of every other province—the provincial labour departments are badly understaffed. I hope that either the federal department or the provincial departments of labour will make sure that sufficient staff are hired so that the provisions of the new act will be adequately adhered to in order to protect the health and well-being of the workers.

There are a number of other questions which I could raise and I am sure they will be raised by other members of the committee. I hope that with regard to the implementation of the Freedman report and the full and complete implementation of the Canadian Labour (Standards) Code we will have a good deal more action from the minister and his department in the next 12 months than we have had in the past year.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, there is just one main point I wish to make in so far as representations from this party are concerned respecting the estimates of the Department of Labour.

As has been pointed out by a number of hon. members this afternoon, 1966 appears to be a year when there has been a greater degree of labour strife than we have had in Canada for some time. If we look into the future, even at the balance of this year, it appears that it will increase. At present we have the difficulty with the longshoremen. The seaway workers appear very nearly ready to take strike action unless something happens. We have had problems with the teamsters, and some of the air-line workers are ready to take strike action unless something is done to conclude the contractual negotiations which have been taking place. The contract of the non-operating workers on the railways has not been settled yet.

The plea I wish to make to the Minister of Labour this afternoon is that the Department of Labour should be involved more closely in these matters before strikes take place. As I said, there are other sectors of the Canadian economy where contracts are due to expire later this year and something should be done to prevent the breakdown of negotiations. Strikes are called and days, weeks and sometimes months go by before the Department of Labour moves in and appoints a mediator.

This is something about which we should be extremely concerned. I believe that the minister and the Department of Labour should appoint mediators before strike action is taken so that they can familiarize themselves with both sides of the issue. It may be that we need new legislation to provide for a cooling off period such as the President of the United States can order in some situations. There is no disputing the fact that these strikes hurt workers and industries as well as innocent persons and the whole country in general. This is well recognized and accepted by the minister as well as by everyone else in the country.

There are some people even in the labour unions who believe that strikes as a weapon are obsolete and outmoded. However, I do not believe that the workers are willing, and quite rightly so, to give up the strike weapon as a last resort unless their interests are protected in some other way.

So, Mr. Chairman, perhaps we need new legislation in this area as well. In any event, I wanted to urge the minister to give immediate consideration to what action he can take under existing legislation to become far more actively interested in the negotiations before they reach crisis proportions. We certainly do not want a repetition of what happened, for example, last year in the grain handlers' strike or what happened recently in the teamsters' strike.

When the minister was appointed to this office the people of Canada, and I think members of this house, had a lot of confidence that he would deal with these matters fairly, knowledgeably and firmly. We wish him well. What is more, Mr. Chairman, we are prepared to support him if he will do these things in advance of a crisis so that he will be able to ascertain the arguments on both sides of the question. we will support him in that respect. However, we will not be satisfied to sit back and allow these problems to grow and grow until a strike is called.

This is the one plea I wanted to make. I think the Department of Labour should be more active in the negotiations before a strike. As I said, I am not entirely sure whether the minister has sufficient authority under present legislation to do these things. If he does not, we hope he will introduce the kind of legislation necessary to give him that power. We would be prepared to support it. In closing, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question. I am sure we are all interested in what he is saying. Perhaps I have two questions. First, when he says it would be a good idea to find some other way than the use of the strike by labour to enforce its wishes, has he any precise suggestion to make? Second, when he advocates that the minister get into the negotiations at an earlier stage, is there not some fear that this could be interpreted as government interference in free, collective bargaining? I use the phrase "free collective bargaining" because it is something I value, but I will also use a term that appeals to him and refer to interference with free private enterprise.

Mr. Olson: I quite appreciate the hon. member's position. In answer to the first question as to what could be done to protect the workers' interests if the strike weapon were not used, I suggest there is another factor, namely, the general public interest, that is becoming far more important in these labour-management disputes. I suggest it is up to the parliament of Canada and the Minister of Labour as the administrator of the policies of this parliament to protect that public interest. Even though it may not be acceptable to management in some cases or labour unions in other cases, I feel we have probably reached a stage in our economic and social development where we are going to have to accept some form of arbitration by the federal government. In the first instance, of course, it would have to be authorized by the federal parliament and its elected representatives who are the spokesmen for the public interest.

I am not suggesting that this can be done at once. I am not going to suggest that I know all the answers. However, I am going to suggest that the public interest has been hurt a sufficient number of times in the past that we should have come to the point of realizing that perhaps some form of compulsory arbitration is going to be necessary in the future.

In so far as the other question is concerned and the hon. member's point about interference in free collective bargaining, may I say I did not suggest that the minister should start directing which way the negotiations should go, but it seems to me that all too often no mediator is appointed until several weeks after the strike. I can appreciate the difficulties involved here because we would hope that management and labour unions would get together and solve their problems without having the government move in.

The point I want to make is that even after a mediator is appointed it usually takes at least a few days, and in some cases several weeks, before he can familiarize himself with the positions taken by the labour union and management. No one can deny that this is a fact. I suggest that a great deal of this lost time could be saved if the Department of Labour would take an active interest and follow the negotiations right up to the point where they break down. Then there would not have to be a waiting period while the mediator familiarizes himself with both sides of the dispute. I do not know whether that answers my hon. friend's questions satisfactorily but in any event that is my answer.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether it answers the hon. member's own question?

Mr. Olson: I think it does. In closing I simply want to say again that the public interest has been harmed by strikes so many times in the past I think we should recognize that something needs to be done. I believe the first step would be for the department or the minister to follow the negotiations more closely, having in mind some person to act as mediator immediately a strike is called. If we require new legislation to give effect to the suggestions I have made, we in this party are prepared to support the minister if he presents such legislation.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, in entering this debate for a few moments I should like to make some comments about the Atlantic economy and in particular about the degree of unemployment that exists there at the present time, has existed and will continue to exist unless the government takes some action other than that indicated to date in legislation and in the budget. It is small comfort for the people who reside in the Atlantic provinces to be told about the low level of unemployment in Canada. When there are no jobs to be had, when there are long line-ups of people looking for jobs in many areas of the Atlantic provinces, there is not much satisfaction to be gained from the fact that there is low unemployment in Ontario, British Columbia, the western provinces or wherever the minister desires to point.

This government has deserted the Atlantic provinces in so far as any proposals have been made that would be of benefit in a special way. The government has deserted the area, ignored it and endeavoured under one of its programs to move the people to other parts of Canada in the hope it will get rid of the problem.

Since it took office in 1963 it has not faced the fact that the situation in the Atlantic provinces is different from that in the rest of Canada. It has not come forward and proposed the special kinds of programs suggested to it, the kind of programs which were adopted in the five years prior to 1963 when the Conservative administration held office. This is our great plea in endeavouring to make the government aware of the situation which exists. Apparently they are not aware of it or if they are they forget about it, ignore it and ask what difference it makes because the area is too small to worry about anyway.

I see that the Minister of Fisheries is now in the house. I often wonder what he does at cabinet meetings when proposals which have been made by various organizations in the Atlantic provinces to stimulate employment in the area are discussed. Let me take, for example, the designated area policy which excludes certain areas in the Atlantic provinces. Where was he when they were first considered in cabinet? Does he agree with the decision of the government? Does he agree with the policy that excludes Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton? Does he think that leaving these areas out is good for employment in the Atlantic provinces? We never know.

Mr. Robichaud: Go back five or six years.

Mr. Coates: It would be much better for the Atlantic provinces if we did. At least we would get some attention from the government.

Mr. Robichaud: How blind can you be?

Mr. Coates: The great difficulty, Mr. Chairman, is that those from the Atlantic provinces in the Liberal cabinet all seem to be blind because they never seem to be able to convince their colleagues that anything which will specifically benefit the Atlantic provinces should be adopted by the government.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There are none so blind as those who will not see.

Mr. Coates: As my colleague from Carleton says, there are none so blind as those who will not see. Certainly the Minister of Fisheries has ignored the problems facing the Atlantic provinces, and there is no place where those problems are worse than in his own constituency.

Mr. Robichaud: I invite the hon. member to come and see for himself.

Mr. Coates: I thank the minister very much but I visit his area probably as often as he does. I suggest to the minister that he had better go there more often if he thinks things are not bad in his area. I should like to know what are the unemployment statistics for Gloucester and also for Restigouche-Madawaska. They are shocking, and he knows it as well as I do; there is no doubt about it. But he would like to brush the matter off and ignore it.

I did make mention of one program, Mr. Chairman, but I should also like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether ne agrees with the action of the Minister of Finance in rescheduling, as he so calmly put it, the construction of the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island causeway. Was the minister in the cabinet when the decision was made to set it back and perhaps forget about it?

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware that tenders have been called for the second phase of the Northumberland causeway?

Mr. Coates: I am aware that they have been called, Mr. Chairman, but I am also quite sure they can be cancelled just as easily as the project could be rescheduled. I would ask the minister whether he was in agreement with the Minister of Finance in the rescheduling and setting back of the construction of the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island causeway. This is a pretty important project for New Brunswick, and the minister is the representative of New Brunswick in the cabinet. I should like some idea of where he stood on the question. I should like some idea of where the Atlantic provinces ministers stand on these special programs which are presented to the cabinet but ignored time and time again by the government.

I should also like to know where the ministers from the Atlantic provinces were when the budget was prepared, a budget which completely ignored the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada that special fiscal policies should be applied to the Atlantic provinces in order that tight money would not do the irreparable damage now being wrought in our area of Canada.

We cannot find out from anyone in the house what is going to be done with the coal industry of Nova Scotia. Members of our party have asked questions of everyone who could possibly be asked on the government side concerning the Donald report, but no one in the government seems to want to take responsibility for the report or for informing the house what recommendations have been made, if they have been placed before the government.

This, Mr. Chairman, is especially irritating to me because in the election campaign of November, 1965 I listened to the programs presented over radio and television by this government which was going to do wonderful things for the people of the Atlantic provinces. I listened to the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the people of Nova Scotia how he arranged $25 million for the coal industry. You would think it was a blank cheque that we could have filled in for any amount, $25 million, $50 million or $100 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What happened to that $25 million?

Mr. Coates: The cheque bounced. It was a bad cheque.

Mr. Robichaud: What about your Atlantic Development Board fund?

Mr. Coates: The Minister of Fisheries asks about the Atlantic Development Board fund. Let him tell me what happened to the $20 million designated for the use of Nova Scotia and which the government did not give Nova Scotia for two years. When we were in office we set up the Atlantic Development Board and put all of the resources of the government of Canada at the disposal of the board for projects which would be of benefit to that area.

But what has happened now, Mr. Chairman? The fund is bankrupt. The $100 million has gone. The money has either been spent or committed. The Minister of Transport said we would get more but a perusal of the order paper reveals nothing to that effect. Let the minister tell me where there is any resolution on the order paper to provide an increase in the fund. A minister from the Atlantic provinces should know this.

The agricultural industry of Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces has been waiting for a resolution on feed grains to get off the order paper but it does not seem to move. We have been waiting three years for it but nothing has happened. The farmers of the Atlantic provinces still have the same problems they had the day this government took office, and they will continue to have them just as long as this government stays in office. There is no doubt in the minds of the people in the Atlantic provinces with regard to this fact, and they indicated their feelings in no uncertain terms in the last election campaign. If there were another one tomorrow they would indicate their feelings even more strongly than the last time.

While this government is in office we in the Atlantic provinces are in the position of having no place to go but down. The government will not do anything for us. We were kicked around by the Liberals for 22 years from 1935 to 1957. The people were given the opportunity to do something for themselves after that time. They did not have to come hat in hand to the government as was the case when Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Mackenzie King were prime ministers of the country. They came forward with proposals which were recognized, and action was taken as a result which was beneficial to the people of the Atlantic provinces. Where are we now? We are right back where we were during the 22 years when the Liberals were in office before.

Today we have some fairly aggressive premiers in the Atlantic provinces. They have banded together and are endeavouring to do as much as they can for their provinces. Anything happening today in the Atlantic provinces is a credit to the premiers in that part of Canada and is no credit to the federal government which has done nothing but damage to our economy every time it has introduced a piece of legislation.

To give hon. members an indication that I am not alone in thinking this way let me quote from an article in the Fredericton Gleaner of Wednesday, March 30, 1966: The article deals with the budget in these words:

> —we have once more the frustration thrust upon us of having a "boom-busting" budget applied to our area which lags grievously behind the rest of Canada by every measure of comparison.
> The gap between the average income in Atlantic Canada and that in the rest of Canada is not closing. And in this area deflationary policies must be deadly in their adverse effect.
> The setting back of the Prince Edward Island causeway is a case in point. It is a cynical act which belies the federal government's pretense that the Atlantic economy is to be raised by federal policy to a fair sharing with the rest of Canada.
> Mr. Sharp has shown no realization that his "brake on the boom" measures are totally unrealistic when applied to the Atlantic provinces where unemployment stands at almost 11 per cent of the working force.

An hon. Member: Eleven per cent?

Mr. Coates: Eleven per cent. We hear the Minister of Labour telling us about the wonderful figures respecting unemployment. No one will say that there is an 11 per cent average unemployment rate throughout Canada, but I am saying that the unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces is 11 per cent and a government worth its salt should do something to eliminate that.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he seriously suggesting that there is an unemployment rate of 11 per cent, or even anything like that, in the province of New Brunswick to which he specifically referred? Is he seriously suggesting that?

Mr. Coates: I am seriously suggesting that according to the last figures I saw the average unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces was 10.9 per cent of the labour force.

Mr. Nicholson: When was that?

Mr. Coates: March 11.

An hon. Member: That was an average of 11 per cent?

Mr. Coates: Nearly.

An hon. Member: What year was that?

Mr. Coates: In 1966. Is the minister indicating by his attitude that we have not much to complain about in the Atlantic provinces? Is the minister going to tell us that the unemployment rate is 2.4 per cent or 5 per cent? No, he is not, because he knows it is a great deal more than that. No government should accept an unemployment rate of over 5 per cent as a satisfactory state of affairs.

An hon. Member: You accepted it in 1960 and 1961.

Mr. Coates: We did not accept it and we did all kinds of things about it. Unemployment in Canada is as low as it is because of actions taken when we were in office. In reading the writings of any economist or even reading the report of the Economic Council of Canada established by the Liberal government it will be seen that the present boom started in 1961. I will tell you what started the boom. It started at about the time we devalued the dollar. We were ridiculed and made fun of by the Liberal party, which today embraces that measure and says it is the most wonderful thing that ever happened. What did the former minister of finance, the present hon. member for Davenport, say about it? He said: "It is great, wonderful". Yet he was the man who conceived the "Diefendollars". He told the people that their money was worth only 93 cents. He said: "It was the right thing to do but you did it the wrong way".

I am going to read to the Minister of Labour, since he is so concerned about the figures I am quoting, a statement from the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council report. I shall read from the April issue. I am sure the minister will not argue with the figures given here even though he seems anxious to argue with my figures. I quote from page 5:

> —the regional unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces averaged 7.5 per cent in 1965. This was more than twice the rate of 3.6 per cent for the other six provinces, and even higher than the national rate of 7 per cent during the 1960-61 recession years when the national economy was operating at 91 per cent of capacity. Last year the ratio of national output to the economy's potential was 97 per cent.

I say to the Minister of Labour and his cabinet colleagues, especially those from the Atlantic provinces, that the Atlantic provinces cannot afford to have every proposal we put forward to the federal government turned down and ignored, as has been done repeatedly since this government took office. The government must wake up and realize the special problems existing in the Atlantic provinces which it is the government's responsibility to cure. Realistic proposals have been made to the government. These should be looked into because they are of value and would benefit that part of the country.

One special project I should like to mention is the harnessing of the Bay of Fundy tides. The government has dragged its feet with respect to this proposal ever since it took office. By contrast, when I was in Tennessee last week I saw the tremendous job that the Tennessee Valley Authority had done on a project started under President Roosevelt. Harnessing the Bay of Fundy tides would provide power and do the same sort of thing for the Atlantic provinces that the United States project to which I have referred did for the state of Tennessee. If the Bay of Fundy project were endorsed and implemented with the speed one would expect from a government that should be as concerned as we are about the high unemployment rate and the lack of prosperity everywhere in evidence in the Atlantic provinces, many of our problems would be ameliorated. It is this sort of thing that the Minister of Labour will have to take cognizance of if he is to do the job I am sure he wants to do.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the Minister of Labour would prefer to wait until all the speeches are made before he answers individual questions. But I wonder if I could not persuade the committee to alter this slightly with respect to the question I put to the minister this morning on orders of the day. I should like to put that question to him again and perhaps the committee would permit him to answer it. After that perhaps I might be permitted to make the rest of my remarks, although they will be brief.

On orders of the day this morning I asked the minister whether he would consider offering to the parties in connection with the Air Canada dispute the services of a top-flight mediator. The minister replied to the effect that he had not yet received the report of the conciliation board. I confess that when he made that statement it took me somewhat aback because, like some other people, I was relying on what I had read in the press and I understood that the report had already been approved by management but rejected by the employees. It therefore seemed strange to hear the minister say he had not received it despite the references to it which have been made in the news in the last day or two.

My question is one which perhaps I can repeat. In the hope that this dispute may not go right down to the wire, I wonder whether it is not possible for an early offer of a top-flight mediator to be made to the parties in order that this dispute may be settled at an early date. I would appreciate the minister answering that question. After he has done so I should then like to make a few more remarks.

Mr. Nicholson: In spite of the request I made to the committee earlier I would be pleased, with agreement, to deal with this particular question. It is not unusual when a board of conciliation has finished its deliberations for the representation members of the board, generally with the encouragement of the chairman, to try to work out a settlement along the lines of the report itself. Then they are able to report a settlement as a fait accompli.

I cannot say definitely in this case what the situation is. I made inquiries repeatedly yesterday in consequence of a question put to me by a member of the hon. member's own party. I made careful inquiries and found that the report had been typed and signed by at least one of the conciliation board members. But it certainly had not reached my office when I entered this chamber today. Whether it has done so by now I do not know.

However, I can assure the hon. member that when this report comes to hand both the minister and the senior officials of the department will be very glad to consider the appointment of a mediator to tie up any loose ends and do anything constructive which may prevent such a strike, as has been suggested.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the minister for making that reply. I am sure all of us hope that the steps which the minister is prepared to take will result in an early settlement of this dispute.

While I am on my feet may I express a few thoughts for the minister to mull over in his spare time between his handling of labour disputes, going to the I.L.O. conference in Geneva, and so on. First, I want to support the contention which has been made by others that every effort be made by the minister and his department to secure at the earliest possible date full implementation of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code as passed by parliament last session. It took us a long while to get this legislation on to our statute books. We hope it will not be too long before its provisions are fully implemented.

I would also urge the minister not to regard the implementation of the code in its present terms as the last word. He knows that when the bill was going through the house we urged that some of the minimums ought to be higher. I urge him even now to begin thinking of the desirability of raising the minimum wage rate from the $1.25 figure now in the code to a figure not less than $1.50. I remind him of the news report from Washington a few days ago that steps are to be taken by the present United States administration to raise the minimum wage in that country to $1.60 an hour. I support those who believe there should be parity of wage rates between our two countries. It seems to me that to ask for $1.50 as a minimum rate in Canada is little enough.

I would urge also that another look be taken at the length of vacations provided in the code. The minister spoke with some pride, not as a cabinet minister, I think, but as a Canadian, in the fact that we have made progress in the last few decades and that we now provide holidays for the workers of this country to a far greater extent than we did a few decades ago. It appears to me that bearing in mind the tempo of modern living, the effects of automation and so on, we should begin to think in terms of the desirability of longer vacations than those we have yet provided by law.

It seems to me that the least the minister might do would be to steal a couple of bills which are on the order paper in my name. One asks that the minimum wage rate be raised to $1.50 and the other calls for a minimum paid holiday of three weeks after a few years of employment. This is one form of theft to which we do not object. I would even facilitate the minister taking over these bills. However, if he does not accept the offer we shall debate them one of these days during private members' hour.

I am glad to know that steps are at last being taken to deal with the proposal that Canada should have a labour safety code. It is an ironic touch, and I am not too happy about it, that a piece of labour legislation is being started in the other place. I shall not expand on that at the moment. We are just glad to get it.

There are many shops and factories in this country where because the type of employment comes under federal labour jurisdiction there is no right of the province to supervise health and safety standards. Many people suffer because of this situation. The need for supervision of health and safety standards in plants coming under federal jurisdiction is clear and I hope this legislation, when we get it, will meet the need.

Another area in which action has long been promised, certainly since the present Liberal government came to power, concerns the Unemployment Insurance Act. There are a good many spots in this legislation which need to be overhauled. We were promised a couple of years ago that this would be done soon—that is a standard phrase we get from the other side of the house. I hope the present minister, who has shown signs of wanting to get things done, will try to get some action with respect to improvements in this act.

I would remind the minister also, though perhaps he was referring to this earlier today, of his longstanding promise to do some basic research into the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. I believe his predecessor promised us a couple of years ago that he would get moving on this legislation, but we have not seen any signs of this yet. I hope the hon. gentleman will get on with it soon.

I should also like to urge that there be some concrete action with respect to the recommendations of the Freedman commission. The minister today extolled Mr. Justice Freedman on the tremendous job he did in producing this report. I share in the accolade paid to Mr. Justice Freedman but I was rather disturbed when the minister, as I thought I heard him, said we might not have to deal with that report in this house. I cannot read all of the speeches that the minister makes to various bodies around the country because he and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State are sending us their speeches all the time and we just cannot keep up with them. But it seems to me I read in a speech which the minister delivered before a labour body not many days ago a suggestion that early action in the house on the Freedman commission report might be necessary.

In my view he was perfectly right in referring to the subject matter covered by that report as an important one, a key one for our times. Let us not wait 10, 20 or 30 years to deal with the problems outlined in the Freedman report. It took us that long to get some of the things which the Liberals promised in 1919—nearly half a century in some cases. Here is something that should be dealt with now.

The only other comment I would like to make relates to the exchange between the hon. member for Medicine Hat and me, when he was speaking on the question of what labour can do to win the things it seeks on the economic front. There is no doubt in my mind that people generally hold the opinion that strikes are unfortunate. It would be desirable if we could find some other way to deal with industrial disputes when they go down to the wire rather than by having strikes. But it seems to me that those who say we must find some other weapon face the obligation to tell us what that other weapon could be.

I do not like strikes any more than anyone else does, but neither do I want workers to be put in a position where they have to take what is handed to them without any means of expressing the rights we enjoy in a free society. I thought it was interesting that the hon. member for Medicine Hat, in his honest effort to come up with some answer, could only suggest arbitration, indeed, compulsory arbitration. When one starts to talk about that I do not see how one can get away from the fact that this is interfering with the process of collective bargaining and all the procedures of freedom generally.

I am ready to go along with those who say let us find some better way, but until people have found a better way I do not think they have the right to suggest that the strike weapon should be outlawed. We shall return to this subject when we discuss the civil service collective bargaining bill because, in presenting that legislation, the government has to some extent recognized the right to strike in an area where it has not previously been recognized, and I shall have something to say about the matter when we discuss that bill.

I merely urge that when we talk about labour relations and ways of settling disputes between labour and management it should not be idle talk. It should be the kind of discussion that results in something specific, and in the absence of some other way let us not for a moment consider departing from ways that recognize the just freedoms we enjoy in our kind of society. These freedoms are enshrined in the right to organize and in the right to free collective bargaining and nothing should be done to abolish those rights. I am not criticizing the minister. I am just dealing with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

I thank the minister for his answer on the Air Canada situation and I hope that in his free time he will think pretty seriously about some of the things I have suggested to him.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting to me to take a look at what has happened in this country over the past several years and to see the changes that have taken place with regard to the labour situation in various parts of the country. I recall the years when the leader of my party was prime minister and unemployment was a problem, and I recall some of the actions taken at that time to try to meet the challenge of that situation. I refer particularly to the vocational training and vocational school building programs and to some of the results which have flowed from them.

Because of the training that has taken place and because of the promise of the South Saskatchewan River project, the province of Saskatchewan is experiencing a definite shortage of domestic help and farm labour. This is significant at a time when the number of farms in the province is declining at a greater rate than ever before in our history.

I have here a letter which I received from a lady the day before yesterday in which she says she has been trying for five months to get domestic help to assist with her family and home. I got in touch with the national employment office in Ottawa and asked if people were available for this type of work. Their answer was that there are 175 applications for domestic help in the city of Ottawa that cannot be filled, and I imagine that situation is common in many areas across the country.

Canadian farmers are finding it almost impossible to secure the help they require, and I take this opportunity to urge the minister to use his good offices to impress upon the government the need of bringing greater numbers of people into Canada who would undertake this type of work.

Farm operators in Saskatchewan and other areas are looking for legislation that will allow people who have unemployment insurance books to take jobs on farms and secure stamps for such employment. This is a cautious, first step that could be embarked upon without any great danger of the abuses feared by those who have considered this problem in the past.

I would also like to stress to the minister the need for providing more training for the retarded, the blind and the disabled. It is interesting to note that item No. 45 on the order paper, the Canada Assistance Plan legislation, is to provide assistance in this direction. I would like the minister to tell us whether this means that the problem of training or retraining people in these categories is now going to become a responsibility of the Department of National Health and Welfare rather than of the Department of Labour.

Mr. Nicholson: The department of manpower possibly.

Mr. Nasserden: It is being introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The other problem which exists in the province of Saskatchewan, and I believe also in other provinces, is a matter which was brought to the attention of the house some time ago by the hon. member for Saskatoon. It has to do with hospital help and not only in respect of hospitals but also homes for senior citizens. There is a real need in this regard. I believe the government knows there also is a shortage of nurses and that programs to try to meet this problem are required. With the advent of a national health program such as apparently is envisaged by the government, this need will become more acute. I believe a great deal more attention should be given to this problem than has been given to it up to the present time.

In closing I should like to impress upon the minister how urgent I think it is that something should be done to bring some of the people who are engaged in farm labour under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I know this is not one of the easiest problems in the world to solve. There may be a fear that there will be some abuse, but certainly the farm labour situation in this country today is such that it merits the government giving consideration to the extension to farm workers of the same benefits extended to those employed in any other vocation.

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, in expressing our good wishes and our hopes for success in respect of the minister's meeting later this afternoon, we cannot overlook the fact that a good deal of this national grief could have been avoided had the minister undertaken two or three weeks before the fact the efforts he now is proposing to make. These situations do not develop overnight. The influence of automation on working conditions is not a surprise occurrence. Half an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure and we believe that the proper dosage should have been administered a month ago. Having had 20 years experience in negotiations on behalf of management, I know that private enterprise takes a dim view of governmental intervention, but even the most dogged private enterpriser will agree that when national interests are involved the prestige which lies in the person of the Minister of Labour should be welcomed.

We regret that such preventative action was not taken and that such a sobering influence was not introduced in respect of this problem, because not only are the economic effects disastrous but once the strike has started the conditions involved in the settlement always are more onerous to both parties, and the public is called upon to suffer even longer. Therefore, we very gladly join with those who suggest that in cases which have such national consequences the office of the Minister of Labour together with his personal services and the prestige of his office should be offered to the parties involved so that an investigation can be made, first of all, into the very nature of the difficulty and, second, into the general area of agreement and the evils involved in the problem so that proper measures can be taken before, so to speak, the pot boils over.

I was amazed to hear the minister say that we never have been so prosperous. We received the same message from the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. Canadians, apparently, never have had it so good. Canadians, however, really wonder what the ministers are talking about because practically every Canadian I know is broke, is looking for money and is having a difficult time making ends meet. Certainly the same can be said in respect of the older citizens and, in fact, about practically every class of society today. People are up against it. Any increase they may receive in hourly revenue through negotiation usually is eaten up even before the increase comes into effect.

I do not know where all the prosperity is because things are tough. In Montreal we dread the end of the Expo year and the great boost which has been given to the local economy because we have no idea what the government's intentions are in respect of the situation. Plans must be made so that the sudden surge of labour on the local market can be absorbed in a healthy manner. We see tight-money policies being exercised now just as they were in 1956. We know that among the general after-effects of such measures are such things as recession. We know that in 1957 and 1958 this was the follow-up of such policies. Naturally we fear we are going to have a repeat performance. We are very anxious to see definite measures taken now so that we will be in a position to face the music when the problem arises. Mortgage money is not available and interest rates are going to blow up any time now. If we call this prosperity, I really believe we are kidding ourselves. I think we should look very closely at the situation and set up the machinery now which will create the type of conditions that will help us face the music when the time arrives.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

TRADE

PRIMARY PRODUCTS—PROVISIONS FOR EXPORT LICENCES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-7, concerning the exportation of the growth and produce of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I heard someone say "carried". If I thought that were true I would refrain from giving an explanation of the bill. The purpose of the bill is very reasonable. It is to limit, licence and regulate the exportation of basic and primary resources. No licence will be granted until the authority has ascertained that the national interest of Canada now and in the foreseeable future can best be served by such export permit. No primary product can be exported until every effort is expended to ensure the growth of its secondary manufacturing potential in Canada.

This bill is very moderate in that I am not suggesting that the exportation of our natural resources be prohibited, because that would be unrealistic, particularly in those areas where it is economically possible. It is in the interest of all Canadians to be assured that our natural resources be utilized to the greatest extent possible for the benefit of the largest number of Canadians.

Many permits and licences that have been granted in the past under some of our regulatory bodies, for instance, in respect of gas and oil, have not taken into consideration the primary interests of the Canadian public in that secondary industry could have been developed in Canada if the exportation had not been allowed. This fact was very evident in respect of a permit granted by the National Energy Board some years ago allowing the exportation of petroleum condensates. It is true that these are by-products of the petroleum industry, coming off at the heavy end of the processing, and that there was no use for these particular products here, but it is also a fact that if we had decided not to issue that permit many factories would have developed in Saskatchewan and Alberta to manufacture such products as dyes, medicine including aspirin, synthetics of all types, paints and other products which are not being manufactured in areas south of the prairie provinces, particularly in suburban areas of Chicago.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

I am particularly interested in this matter because of the iron ore production in northern Ontario. For many years this area was protected by a decision of the province of Ontario to the effect that the export of pulp from Canada was prohibited in its raw state. Many people thought that this decision would result in an inability to develop the pulp and paper industry in northern Ontario. However, that has not been the case. There are many pulp and paper mills in northern Ontario and many towns have been built and maintained through this development. This would not be the case if the lumber companies had their way because this material would be exported to the United States. This development has been highly successful and brings substantial returns to the people in the areas where the resource is derived.

It is also true that we have not paid much attention to the development of perpetual yields from our forests surrounding pulp and paper mills. If we had paid enough attention we would probably have been able to extend these yields rather than curtail them in some areas. These curtailments were perhaps necessary because of the lack of sales in traditional markets and the difficulty of competing because of the necessity to use road transportation services rather than water transportation.

In northern Ontario there is developing a new industry in the mining field. Many of the communities in northern Ontario developed as a result of gold mining. It is easy to export gold as a finished product in ingot form because the process is simple, and extraction is not sufficient to warrant the shipping of concentrates. This is also true of silver mines.

When iron ore was discovered in northern Ontario a new problem developed, and it is a problem I think we must face. The companies that put money into the development of iron ore in northern Ontario now have a large operation in the Kirkland Lake area. This ore is being shipped by the subsidiary company to the parent company steel mill in Pittsburgh. Anyone who has had any experience with iron ore knows that the production of iron and steel ingots requires a large working force. However, it is a fact that a large percentage of the employees in the iron industry are not employed in the mining or pelletizing field but in secondary development, that is, in steel manufacturing mills.

When considering whether or not the economy of northern Ontario could maintain a steel mill I think it must be obvious to all Canadians that we have a perpetual source of iron ore. It is true that the development at Dane is not large enough to support a steel mill, but it is now supplemented by the new development under the name Sherman Mines of the Cleveland Cliff Company at Timagami.

This is backed up by a fairly limited development which will take place in the Cochrane area. Perhaps the argument can still be made that this is not a large enough development to warrant the establishment of a steel mill in northern Ontario. However, it should be borne in mind that iron ore development in northern Ontario will always be backed up by the immense resources of iron ore which are known to exist in the Belcher island and whole lower James bay areas. These deposits appear to be large enough to support an iron industry of great magnitude for a very long period of time.

I have dug up some of the decisions that have been made by the Liberal party in the past. Many of them are fluid in nature, but I should like to refer to the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. In portraying the future exports of Canada this commission foresaw that future exportation would depend to a great extent on the export of raw material.

At page 355 of the commission's report the following is said:

As to the structure of exports . . ., the future list will probably be dominated by a number of important staples of the present day—pulp and paper, lumber, non-ferrous metals, and asbestos. The big changes are likely to be the relative growth in exports of crude petroleum, natural gas, and iron ore, and the continued decline of the proportion due to agricultural and animal products.

A guess as to the future geographical distribution of Canada's exports is even more hazardous than one concerned with the commodity composition of the trade. It appears much more likely that the proportion flowing to the United States would increase than decrease, with that flowing to the United Kingdom and Western Europe probably decreasing.

I was interested in what the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), the former minister of finance, had to say in his new book "A Choice For Canada". I refer to page 107:

The tariff should be re-examined, not with a view to increased protection, but in order to encourage further processing of certain raw materials in Canada, in part for domestic purposes, but primarily for export. In the case of aluminum, copper, lead, and zinc, we export ingots. And with fairly high tariff protection, we produce semi-fabricated products for the home market. Our objective should be to become exporters not of ingots but of semi-manufactured forms.

Further on he said:

As already noted, American parent corporations export far more proportionately to their subsidiaries in Canada than to subsidiaries in other countries.

He then said:

This would be directly to our disadvantage. Therefore, we should use every tool at our disposal, including a more vigorous application of customs' procedures, to counteract what has now become official American policy. In doing so, a great deal more publicity should be given to all aspects of the operations of foreign-controlled subsidiary companies in Canada.

I believe that if this bill is passed, the tariff board will have to make a decision every time one of our primary raw materials is exported.

I have already spoken of some of the commodities which I believe it is agreed will become our largest exports in the future. However, I think we should give some consideration to a number of other major exports which cannot be so readily assessed at the present time. We have been recently faced in northern Ontario with the thought of diverting water from the Arctic watershed through James bay and the connecting areas into southern Ontario so as to raise the water level of the great lakes and allow the expansion of industrial development in areas adjacent to the great lakes. According to what we heard in the discussion that took place yesterday, the development of secondary industries along this waterway has proved to be a disadvantage to Canada and an advantage to the United States.

I think that before we start any diversion or export of water or any extension in the sale of gas and oil, we should first consider the interests of Canada. We are immediately faced with the problem that we have already engaged in long-term projects such as the Columbia river development by which we have diverted a large amount of our water resource to the United States without retaining any control over waters which will be necessary to Canada in the future. I am well aware of the fact that we had to ensure the operation of United States companies for a period of years, but I think that our primary responsibility is not to United States industry but to the Canadian public, and we should develop secondary industries in those areas in which this resource exists. I therefore think that our exports should not be in the field of raw materials but in the field of semi and wholly manufactured products.

I know that the government is giving consideration to these matters, as are all Canadians. I think we have gone beyond the stage of being a colony of Great Britain, not because we terminated our relationship with Great Britain voluntarily but because of the changing economy and because the economic markets of Canada no longer lie in western Europe but in the United States. I think the day has now arrived when we should assess the situation in terms of the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations to enable Canada to negotiate the trading of manufactured goods rather than raw materials. I believe that this is the responsibility of all the members of the government and that all civic-minded persons in Canada should have this uppermost in their minds every time a long-term arrangement is made resulting in a loss of our resources which could be used for the development of Canada. I believe we should no longer consider ourselves as hewers of wood and drawers of water but should consider ourselves fortunate in the possession of the resources we have and be prepared to develop them to the utmost.

As I have said, this is a very moderate bill. I do not say we should cease to export raw materials. What I say is that the tariff board should license all exports of raw materials at the appropriate time and according to the needs of our nation.

In closing I would like to remind hon. members that members on the other side are also concerned about this matter. I was quite impressed with what was said by the member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) in the discussion that took place in the last few days. He was very concerned about the fact that copper supplies are more easily obtained by the Westinghouse Company from other countries than from Canada. They find great difficulty not only in meeting the price of copper, which is obviously an economic consideration for any secondary manufacturer, but also in obtaining supplies. They have found that it is difficult for them to obtain a reasonable supply of the copper which is being produced in Canada and exported. Of course, as the hon. member for Davenport has pointed out, this hinges on the subsidiary position of most of the companies in Canada and it applies as much to Westinghouse as to most other companies.

Let us not belittle the problem in relation to those areas where we have not exercised in the past any restrictions on the development and exploitation of our national resources by subsidiary companies totally owned and operated by foreign countries. For example, take the case of Jones and Laughlin's Adams Mine in Kirkland Lake. It will be very difficult to say, now that they have built their plant and started their operation of feeding the steel mills in Pittsburgh, that we are going to take over and operate a steel mill in Canada. I agree that this would cause a considerable problem which would parallel the situation of Cuba in relation to the United States. Cuba said, "We will buy your plant and give you long-term bonds". The United States replied that they were not interested in this, that what they really wanted was to continue operating their subsidiaries in Cuba. Canada, which is much more polite and less hot-blooded than those banana republics, would approach this problem in a different manner.

I think we are going to have to face the problem with a view to the future. Sooner or later we will find ourselves in the position of supplying all our raw materials to the United States and buying them back in the form of manufactured products. If this were to happen, Mr. Speaker, it might be better for us to join the United States and undertake our own secondary development on a continental basis rather than a regional one.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will get support from the government. I know that we cannot hope for anything but having it talked out. For this reason I hope that those who participate will give sympathetic consideration to some of the problems we have tried to raise. I hope that those who are similarly inclined to the hon. member for Davenport will give consideration to these problems along the lines of his assessment of Canada's economic future.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) for introducing this subject because it is a vital and very important one to Canada. I do not agree with all the wording in Bill No. C-7. However, I do agree substantially with the intent of the bill. We must do more processing of our natural resources in this country. I do not believe it is possible, and I do not believe it is practical, for us to licence the export of all raw materials and processed materials from Canada at the present time or in the future.

As he well knows, there are a number of commodities whose export is licensed. I am thinking more particularly of commodities sold on a long-term basis like electricity and natural gas. There are other commodities such as lead, zinc, pulp and paper, lumber and so on which are traded on the open market. These are not licensed or are only licensed in periods of acute shortage such as wartime.

It is perhaps a platitude to say that Canada is a country full of raw materials. We have got a lot of natural resources but we have very few people. Our most efficient industries are those which process raw materials with a great deal of plant and equipment and the employment of relatively few people. These industries are amongst the largest and most efficient in the world. Often they pay the highest wages in this country. These industries also pay taxes, thereby paying for many of the services which we and the rest of the citizenry of Canada receive. They are industries which I believe should be fostered.

By encouraging more we will reinforce the arsenal of bread and butter industries in this country. It is the direction in which we must go about which I am concerned, and we may follow two broad courses. I am concerned about the steps that we must take in order to process more of our resources. We must have a two-pronged approach or a twofold policy. One, and this applies to commodities which are traded relatively freely, is in the direction of freer trade. The other is in the direction of greater interest, certainly greater knowledge and information in government circles, in respect of the conditions under which other commodities are traded, particularly commodities sold on a predetermined basis over a period of years.

More and more of these commodities are moving in this form, either under contract for the commodity lasting over a period of years or simply because the plant involved in processing them is immensely expensive and was built to serve a given market which is predicated upon the sale sometimes to a parent company. These terms of sale are not sales of the moment. They are sales which last for months, years and sometimes decades. These terms of trade, the conditions under which these commodities move, are of great interest to all of the citizens of Canada in terms of tax yield, in terms of salaries and wages paid and in terms of the employment opportunities which these new industries afford.

I want to say a word now about the problems which we encounter and also about costs in Canada. There are major costs which tend to be against us or else tend to be higher than in the United States, for example. The cost of capital, and more particularly the cost of machinery and equipment, is unfavourable. I want to give some indication of how unfavourable it is. The costs associated with machinery and equipment are high. Interest on bonds, for example, is important. Since the interest rate spread between Canada and the United States has been of the order of 1 per cent, this is a substantial item of cost which is unfavourable. Equity money also costs more and the disadvantage in terms of interest rate here is about 2 per cent.

In addition, one has to look at the impact of these charges on the final cost of the product. The additional cost may be of the order of one-quarter or one-half of one per cent of the end cost of the product at the factory gate. Interest, therefore, is not a major consideration. The cost of equity capital, roughly twice as high, may be at the most one per cent. The cost of capital, then, is perhaps of the order of 1 per cent. It is not more, and it is probably less in the case of most processing plants and factories.

Machinery costs a lot more in Canada. It costs more because it is often imported. We have import duties. The duties themselves range between 10 per cent and 20 per cent and, on the average for processing plants may be said to be of the order of 15 per cent. Once this is worked out, first in terms of the lesser impact on all plant and equipment and then as a fraction of total costs of the delivered product, it is less than 1 per cent.

The 11 per cent tax on machinery and equipment is of a similar order of magnitude. It could be said to be between a half and 1 per cent of the delivered cost of the manufactured article. This tax, incidentally, will be coming off again. I want to give these figures only to show the order of magnitude and give an impression of the disadvantage, if you like, of processing in Canada.

Construction costs, other than machinery costs, are equal to or lower than United States costs if one confines his attention to buildings, structures, land and so on. Consequently, construction charges other than those involving machinery itself, are not disadvantageous in Canada. The total impact of these various considerations, the higher cost of money, the higher cost of machinery, the higher cost of buildings, does not add up to more than 2 per cent of the price of the manufactured article. These are not, therefore, major considerations. Certainly they are not major disabilities in so far as processing in Canada is concerned.

I want to contrast this last 2 per cent figure with the United States tariff on typical processed materials entering the United States which may be anywhere between 10 per cent and 40 per cent. Obviously a tariff which is in the order of 10 per cent to 40 per cent is of greater importance. It has a much greater influence on the competitiveness of Canadian processed raw materials in a market like that of the United States, a much greater impact than the cost of money or the cost of machinery and equipment. We must be very much concerned, therefore, with the level of tariffs. We must try to eliminate these tariffs not only because they are discriminatory but because they have a substantial impact on our costs.

I want to underline another problem in respect of tariffs. Tariffs can be reinforced with quotas. Some of these are not only high and represent a substantial element of the delivered cost but they can change. They therefore introduce a major element of uncertainty. Once you have uncertainty, you tend to undermine the conviction of people who might otherwise invest a large amount of money in new plant and equipment, a plant that may run into not just tens of millions but possibly into hundreds of millions of dollars. I would point most directly to the tariff as being the major obstacle to processing in this country, much more than the cost of capital and the higher cost of machinery and equipment in this country due to the fact much of it is imported.

I should like to give one or two examples of tariffs. Raw materials for furniture manufacture, industrial wood components or machined pieces of wood on entering the United States face a tariff in the order of 16⅔ per cent. This is a substantial obstacle. In the United States today there is a tendency for these machined wood components to be made at or near the raw material source, to be made in the forest by extending the production lines of many sawmills. These machined products go to the furniture factories and construction sites in relatively finished form, and the final article is assembled in much the same manner as an automobile is built from component parts.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, it is very much in Canada's interest to eliminate the discriminatory tariffs existing between Canada and the United States in respect of these manufactured, or perhaps I had better call them semi-manufactured, wood products. The tariff, I should like to reiterate, is the principal obstacle in terms of cost to trade of this sort.

One can broadly generalize and say that in respect of such trade as does occur, the main offsetting factor which makes Canadian processed goods competitive, that is, where they do in fact hurdle the tariff into the United States, is wage rates and wage costs. In general the income of the hourly worker in Canadian manufacturing industries is about 25 per cent less than that of his opposite number in the United States. So I would say that the offsetting factor is largely wage rates, and that lower wage rates in Canada are often a direct result of the tariffs imposed by importing countries, particularly importing countries with which we trade in large volume like the United States.

I have been arguing so far for freer trade and in terms of cost, but I wish to recognize—and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) made this point—that there are are other situations where long-term contracts are involved, where immense investments are also involved, and where government must be concerned in the broad public interest about prices and other terms of sale.

We in Canada like to think that we have low-cost energy. In fact, we have a higher energy bill. Our energy costs on the average are higher than those in the United States. The margin used to be very much higher. The difference between energy costs—that is, delivered at the factories—has been narrowing but energy prices here are still higher than in the United States.

This trend is reflected in the fact that we are exporting more oil and gas, for example; but today we still import more energy, in total than we sell abroad. This is another indication of the fact that in many areas we are not as competitive as the United States in energy terms. Therefore we have a cost disadvantage in respect of energy which must also be removed, and I think it will be removed, particularly in western Canada as the great resources there make themselves increasingly felt on the delivered price structure of various forms of energy throughout that part of the nation.

There are particular situations in Canada where the national government and the provincial governments can, through regulation, affect the delivered price of energy. A good example is the price of natural gas exported at Emerson, Manitoba, which is immediately south of Winnipeg. One of the considerations of the federal government in office in the middle 1950's was that the export price at Emerson should be higher and not lower than the delivered price at Winnipeg; and that is still the case today.

Natural gas, again originating in Alberta and exported through eastern Canada into northern New York state, for example, is higher in price at the border point than it is at the city gates of, let us say, Toronto, Hamilton or Montreal. This is as it should be.

However, Mr. Speaker, we have in British Columbia an anomalous situation, one which has concerned me personally and I am sure has concerned many consumers of natural gas in that particular province. The price of natural gas at the border of British Columbia, as a result of a contract authorized ten years ago, is still appreciably below the price of natural gas delivered to the city of Vancouver. The take-off point is a few yards away from the take-off point into the United States. This came about as a result of decisions made by the United States Federal Power Commission, and one can explain this in historical fact in terms of the bargaining position enjoyed by the United States in the middle 1950's.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are in another decade. We have a new opportunity in respect of further exports of natural gas and we must ensure that the export price is not lower than the price of natural gas made available to consumers in Canada. Again, we have some extremely anomalous situations in British Columbia, where the delivered price of Canadian natural gas at Trail, B.C. for processing purposes is markedly above the export price of natural gas a few miles away, gas destined for San Francisco.

Mr. Herridge: I have said that a hundred times and did not get anywhere.

Mr. Davis: This has come about largely as a result of a permit for export granted by the previous administration.

Basically, the fault lies with the natural gas industry which views its development on this continent as continental in nature. It pays the competitive wellhead price. Then it charges a cost of transportation which includes what it deems to be a reasonable rate of return. The net result is that the price at the border reflects costs and costs only. It does not reflect Canada's bargaining position and I think this brings out quite vividly the difference between the national approach or the national interest and what might more generally be termed the continental approach to energy development.

Mr. Herridge: Which means the United States approach.

Mr. Davis: I think it must be increasingly shown—and this more a matter of politics than economics, certainly the strict economics of an industry—that Canadians charge prices which essentially reflect our bargaining advantage and not merely reflect pure cost plus a minimum rate of return on the capital invested in the pipe line in question.

I think we should draw on gas reserves in western Canada, for instance, which help develop the northland. If United States consumers have to pay for a longer pipe line and therefore have to pay a somewhat higher price at the international boundary, that is too bad. That price obviously will have to be lower than the price of the competitive alternative in the United States. But I suggest that we should only shave the United States price. We should not be making gas available to people in areas like San Francisco at bargain basement prices.

I do not want to dwell too long on the question of pricing, but I should like to recall one submission which was filed by one company in the United States importing natural gas—I believe it was the first case of gas export from Canada—before the U.S. Federal Power Commission.

In those days we had no board of control or national energy board in Canada. The submission was to the effect that gas was priced as low as it conceivably could be priced at the international boundary between Alberta and Montana and that nothing was left in terms of profitability in Canada—that is, in terms of income tax yield for Ottawa—but that the total income tax yield would go to United States capital in Washington.

This was one of the substantial arguments the company used in Canada in order to obtain an import permit into the United States. This sort of thing has ceased. We no longer have extreme cases like this where there is no profitability in the Canadian captive operation. But we do have to go further than merely recovering costs plus a "reasonable" rate of return on capital in Canada; we must have a substantial rate of return, a rate which among other things reflects our true advantage as a resource-rich country with reserves conveniently located with respect to United States markets.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I have been accused occasionally of being a continentalist in respect of matters such as water.

Mr. Herridge: Ah, but you are converted now.

Mr. Davis: I am a nationalist first and a British Columbian second. Perhaps third or fourth I may be a continentalist in my order of priorities. However, above all, I want us to be more businesslike in these matters. We must be competitive, and we are going to be competitive, but we do not need to be much more than competitive. We do not need to settle for prices that are markedly below the best alternatives to importers of gas, power or oil, or indeed with respect to any other commodity, in the United States or in any other country. In other words, I say we should be as businesslike as we possibly can be.

Respecting water I want to refer to what I think is a classic case. It dates back to the early 1950's when aluminum and other metals were in short supply. This was during the Korean war period when the United States government was busy building stockpiles not only of scarce metals such as nickel, titanium, lead and zinc but also aluminum. The Aluminum Company of America proposed building a large refinery at Tidewater near Skagway in the Alaskan Panhandle. That company proposed taking water from the Yukon River—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I interrupt the hon. member because the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Davis: I shall only be one or two more minutes.

An hon. Member: Let him continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is that agreed to by hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Davis.]

Mr. Davis: The classic case involving the Aluminum Company of America was essentially an export of water from Canada, from the northern region of the Yukon river in British Columbia, involving a drop of several thousand feet to tidewater near Skagway in Alaska. The Canadian contribution toward the project would have been water. The United States contribution would have been generators, transmission lines, factories and so on. The Aluminum Company of Canada had a competitive project under way at Kitimat, British Columbia. Because Canada had been unable to obtain access to the United States stockpile, the Canadian government of that day turned a blind eye to the application of the Aluminum Company of America to export water through the Alaskan Panhandle.

Mr. Herridge: That involved Hon. C. D. Howe.

Mr. Davis: The Alcoa project never did go ahead. It was directly competitive with the all-Canadian project at Kitimat. This is the type of situation with respect to water that we must not be caught in. We might have seen a dam and a tunnel built, and that would have been an end to it.

I have been concerned in recent days to see the amount of interest displayed in the Tiaya project. This is another Alcoa-type project. Again, the government of Alaska would like to see a big metallurgical development take place near Skagway in the Alaskan Panhandle. This would involve the co-operation not only of the government of British Columbia but also of the federal government in Canada and the federal government in the United States. I would urge that our federal government take a long, hard look at this project before it considers discussing the matter with the United States let alone granting any permits for construction. Certainly, this sort of project would have to be seen to be favourable in a much larger context, if it were ever to be beneficial to Canadians in general, and British Columbians in particular.

I think I have said enough on this subject. I hope I have underscored the fact that I am not a continentalist. I am a Canadian who would like to see his part of the country thriving, because it has lower costs and gets better prices from neighbouring markets in the United States. I should like to see the same thing hold true across the country.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis).

I wonder whether he would not find himself more comfortable on this side of the house in view of the sentiments he expressed.

An hon. Member: This is his day of repentance.

Mr. Baldwin: I was interested in what he said about the proposal made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). There was some discussion about the cost of capital. I think that is an important factor to be considered. Questions to do with that are involved in the proposal contemplated by the government with regard to the Canada Development Corporation. May I point out that many years ago when I was first here I conceived of a similar idea and advanced it in this house and elsewhere. I did not envisage my proposal as having anything to do with such proposals as the Canada Development Corporation using funds raised in order to permit Canadians to buy up United States held equities.

My view was that the fund should be used for the development of industries in areas where, because of the incidence of risk involved, private capital would not normally go. I am thinking of areas such as my own part of the country, or even northern Ontario and northern Quebec where a northern development fund rather than a Canadian development fund might usefully be employed for the purpose of providing an adequate supply of capital at a reasonable interest rate to aid in the development and building up of secondary and tertiary industries. This would apply to areas where conditions would not normally invite private capital.

With regard to machinery and tariffs, I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member. He should do a little missionary work on members of the cabinet. Certainly, the tariff on machinery coming into this country for the purposes of developing industry goes hand in hand with the United States tariff on processed goods leaving Canada and going to that country. I do not believe that enough people in Canada or the United States realize the extent to which the accelerating cost of goods is affected by taxation and more particularly by tariffs. We see lip service paid to the solution of such problems by the present government but I am convinced that nothing concrete will be done.

I agree with the principle set out in the bill evolved by the hon. member for Timiskaming. I have not looked at the bill in detail and I do not know whether it will achieve what he has set out to achieve. However, I am satisfied that the principle of the bill is correct.

Is there a sorrier sight than to see old, deserted communities dozing in the sun; communities which have seen happier days and which hope to see those days revived so that they may once again thrive? We have many of those in Canada and we shall have many more which will have served as the focal points of exploration, discovery and exploitation of natural resources or of a primary industry. Unless something is done about it I think that sort of thing will continue to take place in the future.

I should like to refer to a very interesting article which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of April 19. Mr. Charles Campbell is the author. I should like to read as much of it into the record as time permits because Mr. Campbell says some interesting things.

The headline is: "Minerals—A Sacred Trust In Peril". Subheadings are: "We Plunder The Future"; "We Export Our Heritage"; "Production Is Depletion"; "Will We Reap Curses?" The article states:

> According to the record, the founder of the Christian religion consigned the servant who buried his talent to "outer darkness". It was then given to the servant who knew how to use it.
> Canada has a mineral "talent".
> We dig it up, export it, and boast about record "production". As it was produced when the world was made, the correct word is "depletion". We must, therefore, get all possible for this ore.
> Instead, we welcome all interested to come and help themselves. Our return is the minimum and it is "dissipation" that rules.
>
> Already the clouds are gathering.
> "A mine" said Mark Twain, "is a hole in the ground and its owner is a liar".
> To remedy this, Great Britain and the United States, early in the century ruled that an ore reserve meant, definitely, measured ore. Possibilities for more would be reported and with further work, estimates would be revised.

The writer draws attention to the great hopes which were held out for the development of the Northwest Territories. We all know people who make trips into the north country and then talk about our glorious heritage. They fly over the area once, talk about what is happening and then tell everybody that we can look forward to great developments in the future in the north.

Only a few days ago we were discussing in this chamber the question of providing for self-government in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. We discovered that the population in those areas is so small that it may be some time before this objective can be brought about, according to the minister in charge of the legislation. In another 20 years we shall be saying the same thing unless we take concrete steps to see that the exploitation of our primary resources is checked and measures are taken to introduce secondary and tertiary manufacturing and processing.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) have quite properly said there are some industries, having regard to our own foreseeable needs and the part we play in world affairs, whose products may be exported without limitation. The Conservative government arranged a national oil policy which worked reasonably well in all the circumstances. However, there has been discovered in my country the great Rainbow Lake oilfield. This has introduced a new factor which should be taken into consideration in connection with this national oil policy. Despite what the minister in charge of this program has indicated I think we need to take a serious look at the contention that we might be compelled to provide a pipe line to Montreal. The facts of economics have to be taken into consideration.

Pine Point is another matter. The former government sensibly entered into a partnership arrangement between the national railway system, private industry and government to provide for the construction of this railroad and the development of local resources under the terms of the agreement. But we should now consider whether it is enough simply to provide for the concentrates to be taken out of that community and exported to British Columbia and elsewhere in the world.

I would go further than did the hon. member for Timiskaming. If it is essential for the processing to be done elsewhere, then the industry which extracts and takes away the resource should be compelled to provide some form of compensating industry. I shall not spell this proposition out in detail. But I think it is time we stopped thinking of this country as consisting of a relatively small and thickly populated area along the St. Lawrence plus a few large cities elsewhere. When people come to the north they consider they have embarked on an economic safari; they hope to return when it is over and live out their lives in luxury in other parts of the country. Industries which develop resources of a kind which must be taken elsewhere for processing and refining should be compelled so to conduct their affairs that some other industry is provided for the area from which the resources are taken. Thus, if the resource is a definitive one, when it is depleted something will be there in its place.

I shall not develop this argument further now. I support the principle behind the proposal in every way and hope that in due course something along these lines will be acceptable to the house. I resume my seat while there is still an opportunity for a spokesman on behalf of the government to indicate his acceptance of the principle we have been discussing.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, as I read this bill and consider the remarks made by the hon. member who introduced it, I find little I can approve. I support the argument of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) when they talk about the need to expand secondary industry in Canada. There is no question about that. But that is not what the bill says. The bill asks us to impose restrictions on the export of raw materials and natural resources from Canada.

Mr. Peters: Rightly so.

Mr. Olson: I believe it is a completely false assumption to think it is possible to promote secondary industry by restricting primary industry. The history of economic development in the United States, in Canada and in all the other industrial areas of the world has followed a consistent pattern. Primary industry is developed first and secondary industry follows. There is no argument at all about the need to promote secondary industry in Canada not only for the benefit of our domestic markets but for export as well. But I am certain this cannot be achieved by closing our doors against the export of certain raw materials. There is already severe restriction on exports in these areas.

It is not so long ago that some people were telling us that if the export of natural gas from Alberta were allowed dire consequences for Canada would inevitably follow. As events turned out the prediction could scarcely have been less correct. Not only has there been an increase in the prosperity of the whole industry but the reserves in that particular oil field have doubled, even quadrupled.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May we have an announcement of the business for Monday and Tuesday.

Miss LaMarsh: I am informed that the business for Monday will be as follows: First, the resumption of debate on government order No. 56, the government organization bill and then, should that be concluded, three bills arising out of arrangements for collective bargaining in the public service—item No. 47 concerning staff relations, item 58, an act respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada, and item 59, an act to amend the Financial Administration Act. Should these items be disposed of before the end of the day on Monday the next to be taken would be the resolution preceding the bill to amend a number of superannuation acts consequent upon the Canada Pension Plan. That is government order No. 51.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 30, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

INDUSTRY, RESEARCH AND ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West) moved that the first report of the standing committee on industry, research and energy development, presented to the house on Thursday, May 26, 1966, be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On division.

[English]

Motion agreed to on division.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DIRECTION OF MONETARY POLICY, CASH RESERVES, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Sharp: A bill to revise the Bank of Canada Act was introduced at the last session. It received second reading and was referred to committee but lapsed with the ending of the session on June 30. The present bill is identical with that introduced a year ago except for one minor addition.

The principal change in the Bank of Canada statute which is being proposed is for the purpose of clarifying the relationship between the government and the central bank by authorizing the government, under conditions which are specified in the bill, to give the bank a directive concerning monetary policy.

Another important change is to authorize the bank to impose and vary a minimum secondary reserve requirement for the chartered banks in place of its present power to vary their minimum cash reserve requirement. A number of technical changes are also being proposed and some revisions to eliminate obsolete provisions of the act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Mr. Caouette: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the first time.

RADIO AND TELEVISION SERVICE

Question No. 1,030—Mr. Laprise:

1. In Canada, how many districts with a population of 500 people and more are not yet adequately served by private or state radio and, of that number (a) how many of these districts are inhabited by a majority of Canadians whose mother tongue is French (b) how many are inhabited by a majority of Canadians whose mother tongue is English?

2. In Canada, how many districts with a population of 2,000 people and more are not yet adequately served by private or state television and, of that number (a) how many of these districts are inhabited by a majority of Canadians whose mother tongue is French (b) how many are inhabited by a majority of Canadians whose mother tongue is English?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC as follows:

1. At present, 89 areas with a population of 500 or more do not receive adequate national radio network service. In 12 of these, French speaking Canadians are in the majority; English speaking Canadians are in the majority in the other 77. However, in some areas the majority language population is receiving service while the needs of the minority are not yet adequately served. Taking this into account, the breakdown is 37 French-language and 52 English language relay stations planned by the corporation.

2. At present, 106 areas with a population of 2,000 or more do not receive adequate national television network service. In 17 of these, French speaking Canadians are in the majority; English speaking Canadians are in the majority in the other 89. In terms of general station planning, the breakdown is 33 French language, 73 English language.

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING POTASH MINES

Question No. 1,088—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the government of Saskatchewan asked permission from the government of Canada to table in the Saskatchewan legislature all correspondence between the premier of Saskatchewan and the Minister of Finance for Canada concerning a request for changes in the application of tax regulations as they affect potash mines using the solution method of mining?

2. If so, on what date was the request made?

3. Has approval for the tabling of this correspondence been granted by the federal government?

4. If so, on what date was approval granted?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1 and 2. As of March 18, 1966, no such request had been received. However, subsequent to that date a request along the lines indicated in the question was received and later withdrawn.

3. Not applicable.

4. Not applicable.

C.B.C. FILM "RIVERS OF CANADA"

Question No. 1,110—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Who is responsible for the production of the C.B.C. television series "Canada 99"?

2. Who directed the filming of the Rivers of Canada, featuring the Saint John river, the Margaree river, and the Humber river, which appeared on the C.B.C. network Sunday, February 6, 1966, and (a) who wrote the script for this production, particularly the portion on the Margaree river (b) what was the cost of this program?

3. What is the name of the young lady who appeared in the scenes about the Margaree river, and (a) is she a native of (i) Cape Breton island or (ii) the province of Nova Scotia (b) what was her salary for that role?

4. Has the C.B.C. received any complaints or petitions regarding the above mentioned program and, if so, how many?

5. Did the cameraman filming the scenes of the Margaree river have difficulty locating the Margaree river?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. The special features department of C.B.C.

2. (a) The filming was directed by Michael Rothery and the script was written by Clement Perron. (b) Approximately $20,000.

3. Miss Antonia McGrath. (a) No. (b) She was paid regular union scale.

4. The corporation is not aware of any petition. Unfavourable audience letters and telephone calls totalled 79 nationally.

5. No.

WHARF AND WAREHOUSE REVENUE, PUGWASH, N.S.

Question No. 1,326—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the total revenue received by the government from the public warehouse at the public wharf at Pugwash, Nova Scotia, for the years 1963-64 and 1964-65?

2. Does Maxwell Allen occupy space in the public warehouse on the Pugwash wharf, and, if so, did the government receive a rental fee from him for the years 1963-64 and 1964-65?

3. What was the total revenue received by the federal government for the use of the wharf facilities at Pugwash, N.S.?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. 1963-64, $106.66; 1964-65, nil.

2. T. M. Allen occupied space in the shed during 1963-64 and a rental fee was paid.

3. 1963-64, $9,929.75 (gross); 1964-65, $21,384.81 (gross).

TRAINING PROGRAM, AGENCE MARITIME INC.

Question No. 1,339—Mr. Béchard:

1. Has the government been informed by Agence Maritime Inc., Quebec city of the existence of a financial assistance program to encourage its deck and engine room personnel to obtain certificates of competency and, if so (a) of what does this program consist (b) when was it started?

2. Have periodic reports been received by the government from Agence Maritime Inc. on the operation of this training program and, if so (a) how many members of its deck and engineroom personnel were reported as having taken advantage of the program during the 1965-66 winter season (b) how many of these members of its personnel have during the same period obtained certificates of competency as deck and engine room officers (c) what certificates of competency were obtained in each case?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. When Agence Maritime Inc. began using larger ships in 1964, they required exemptions under section 137 of the Canada Shipping Act because of the unavailability of duly certificated officers and the company, when applying for such exemption in June 1964 informed the department that the company had initiated a training program to bring up the standards of its officers. In December 1965 the department was informed that the program consisted of granting employees leave, with pay, to attend training courses and examinations.

2. Agence Maritime Inc. reported to the Department of Transport on 18 April 1966 that four of deck personnel and one of engine room personnel had taken advantage of the program. The records of the Department of Transport show that two of these have obtained certificates as master of a home trade steamship and one has obtained a certificate as third class engineer and it has not been necessary to issue any further exemptions in respect of deck officers.

Questions

TRANSPORTATION CONTRACT WITH TRANSOL INC.

Question No. 1,386—Mr. Ricard:

1. Was a contract signed between Transol Inc. and the Canadian National Railways on October 9, 1963 and, if so (a) has it been modified since then (b) did this contract specify whether the equipment used for transportation was the property of the C.N.R.?

2. Who is the present owner of the equipment now being used by Transol Inc. in carrying out its transportation contract between Lévis and Rivière-du-Loup?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian Nationals Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes. (a) No, (b) No; pursuant to the contract the contractor is required to supply the equipment.

2. It is not within the knowledge of the company as to who is the owner of the equipment used by the contractor.

USE OF SEAWAY BY RUSSIAN VESSELS

Question No. 1,402—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

Are Russian vessels now being refused permission to sail up the St. Lawrence seaway to the lakehead?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows:

No. All applications for pre-clearance of Russian vessels filed to date have been approved.

GRAIN STORAGE IN LAKE VESSELS

Question No. 1,404—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

1. How many lake vessels are being used and have been approved for storage and how much grain is being stored in them under the authority of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Forestry?

2. Is any grain now being stored with the approval of the Minister of Forestry in storage facilities other than the lake vessels or licensed elevators in eastern Canada?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. None. The storage assistance program expires on April 15 of each year. Last winter, under the feed grain assistance policy, seven lake vessels were approved by the Minister of Forestry for winter storage of feed grains, 2,661,000 bushels of feed grain were stored in such vessels.

2. No. However, during the time the program was in force this past winter the Minister of Forestry did approve non-licensed facilities at three Atlantic ports as supplementary storage.

[Mr. Laing.]

COST OF INCREASING BLIND PERSONS ALLOWANCE

Question No. 1,410—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has any estimate been made by the government of the total annual cost of the federal share of increasing allowances under the Blind Persons Act to (a) $100 per month (b) $125 per month (c) $150 per month?

2. If so, what are such estimates?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) (b) and (c)

No such estimates have been made. Under the Unemployment Assistance Act recipients of blind persons allowances can receive additional amounts based on need as provided in that act.

2. See answer 1 above.

AIR CANADA SERVICE TO RUSSIA

Question No. 1,422—Mr. Allard:

Will Air Canada set up the first direct airline connecting Russia with North America?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The answer to this question is not known with certainty at present. Air Canada is engaged in inter-air line discussions with Aeroflot. If these discussions and the necessary intergovernmental negotiations between the two countries which must also take place are concluded satisfactorily, a service between the U.S.S.R. and North America will be established.

WORK HOURS, COAST GUARD VESSELS

Question No. 1,427—Mr. Douglas:

1. How many days on the average does the crew, other than masters and officers of the Canadian Coast Guard vessels Racer and Ready work each year?

2. How many hours per year does this average out to?

3. How many days off does the crew, other than masters and officers, receive in addition to annual leave and statutory holidays?

4. What is the rate of pay for the crew, other than masters and officers, on the Racer and Ready?

5. When on leave, is the crew, other than masters and officers, of the Racer and Ready required to be on a standby basis?

6. In compensatory leave granted to the crew, other than masters and officers, of the Racer and Ready for Saturdays and Sundays worked?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. An average of 225 days per year.

2. and 4. Because of required standby and readiness arrangement, the crews operate on a two watch system of six hours on and six hours off for 28 days, followed by 14 days off duty ashore. This 42-day cycle averages out to 56 hours per week, and salary rate has been established on basis of a 56-hour week: seaman, $392; oiler, $401; steward, $399.

3. Crew members are off duty 121 days per year exclusive of annual leave and statutory holidays.

5. No.

6. No, because of the special arrangements described above regarding the work cycle.

INQUIRIES BY INVESTIGATION AND RESEARCH BRANCH

1. Has the government of Alberta requested the investigation and research branch of the Department of Justice to investigate the Canadian underwriters association for price fixing in the field of automobile insurance and, if so, is such an investigation being carried on and when is it expected that a report will be made?

2. Did the city of Winnipeg ask the investigation and research branch of the Department of Justice to investigate identical bids and a possible combine in the sale of concrete and, if so, is that investigation being carried on and when is a report expected?

3. Did the Winnipeg school board request the investigation and research branch of the Department of Justice to investigate identical bids and a possible combine in the field of electric light bulbs and, if so, is that investigation being carried on and when is a report expected?

4. Is the investigation and research branch of the Department of Justice investigating the recent uniform price increases in newsprint inaugurated by Canadian newsprint companies, on the grounds that these and earlier identical increases indicate the operation of a combine?

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): 1. Such a request has been received. The general practice, however, is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry has been or is being pursued with respect to a particular group of companies or individuals unless and until a report is published or court proceedings have been instituted.

2. Same as 1.

3. Same as 1.

4. In accordance with the usual practice, the combines branch carefully considers price increases in important commodities such as newsprint in order to determine whether the situation is such as to warrant formal inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act. The general practice, however, is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry has been or is being pursued with respect to a particular group of companies or individuals unless and until a report is published or court proceedings have been instituted.

AIR CANADA STEWARDESSES

Question No. 1,472—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

1. Does Air Canada now make a practice of employing one less stewardess on flights from the maritimes to central Canada than it regularly employs on its cross-Canada flights?

2. Was there only one stewardess on Viscount flight No. 433 on May 3, 1966 and only two stewardesses on Vanguard flight No. 701 on May 8, 1966 and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advise as follows:—

1. No. Flight crew complements are established by aircraft type, the in-flight service to be provided, and the flying time available to provide that service, without regard for geographic areas.

2. Yes, one stewardess on Viscount flight 433 Moncton to Montreal; no, there were three stewardesses on Vanguard flight 701 St. John's to Montreal.

RENAMING OF POST OFFICES AT DEFENCE ESTABLISHMENTS

Question No. 1,484—Mr. Barnett:

1. Has official action been taken to rename post offices associated with defence establishments in Canada since renaming of national defence establishments was introduced?

2. If so, what are now the names of such post offices?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. The Post Office Department and the Department of National Defence have agreed to the use of civilian names in the renaming of postal installations associated with defence establishments. At the present time names are being selected by the Department of National Defence which is submitting the individual names for consideration and implementation by the Postmaster General.

2. While no name changes have yet been settled, the Post Office Department is now clearing a number of suggested name changes with the Canadian permanent committee on geographical names.

Questions

EXEMPTIONS FROM SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIAL

Question No. 1,491—Mr. Caouette:

What wood materials are exempt from the 11% sales tax on building material, machinery and equipment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Lumber and wood building materials are subject to sales tax except those building materials provided for in section 29(2b) of the Excise Tax Act. Goods referred to in this section are taxable only with respect to the raw material content. Section 32 of the Excise Tax Act provides exemption for logs and round unmanufactured timber.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENTS, ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,507—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many officers and other ranks of the Canadian armed forces made applications for pensions arising out of injuries received in motor vehicle accidents since 1956?

2. Of these, how many were turned down on the grounds that the accidents did not occur during performance of military duty?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1, 2. This information is not available as statistics are not kept on the number of claims arising from motor vehicle accidents.

CHLORDIAZEPOXIDE HCL

Question No. 1,510—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Did Chlordiazepoxide HCl appear on the market in the past month under the name "Nack"?

2. If so, did the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare approve the labels in conformity with the C.03.014 regulation and when did it do so and, if not, for what reason?

3. Is the dosage of this product inscribed on the samples distributed to doctors?

4. Is the active ingredient of this product of Canadian or foreign make and, if the latter, what country does it come from?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. Draft labels were submitted for review in January, 1966 and corrections were indicated to the manufacturer at that time. When the drug appeared on the market recently, the manufacturer was requested to make additional changes.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

3. The dosage of the drug is not inscribed in the samples distributed to physicians, but the package label carries a statement that the dose should be in accordance with the doctor's prescription. This drug is sold only on prescription.

4. The active ingredient of this drug is manufactured in Canada.

IRRADIATED FOODS

Question No. 1,512—Mr. Schreyer:

Have any studies been made by the food and drug directorate relative to the effects and possible dangers of the sale of irradiated foods?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. In addition to studies which were carried out in the laboratories of the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare, extensive research data from other institutions dealing with the safety of irradiated foods were reviewed.

*SUFFERANCE WAREHOUSES, TORONTO

Question No. 1,523—Mr. Irvine:

1. Is it the intention of the government to establish another sufferance warehouse in the area of metropolitan Toronto?

2. What is the average length of time required to clear merchandise at the present two sufferance warehouses in Toronto?

3. Under whose control and by whom are these two sufferance warehouses operated?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): The answer is in three parts. The answer to the first part is no. The answer to the second part is, within 24 hours. The answer to the third part is Midcontinent Truck Terminal Ltd., and Toronto Sufferance Truck Terminal Ltd., respectively.

FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT PROJECT, BIG QUALICUM RIVER, B.C.

Question No. 1,532—Mr. Barnett:

Did the Department of Fisheries move or have moved on its behalf at or below high water mark any gravel or other material from a spit or other shoreline adjacent to the mouth of the Big Qualicum river in connection with the fisheries development project on this river?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): No.

PAYMENTS TO COMMISSIONER AND COUNSEL, SPENCE INQUIRY

Question No. 1,539—Mr. Gundlock:

1. What honorarium or allowance is being granted to the commissioner in the Spence Commission?

2. What is the rate per day of pay and allowances for counsel to the commission (a) while in attendance at commission hearings (b) for preparatory work, including interviews?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. No honorarium is being paid to the commissioner in the Spence commission. Authority has been obtained, however, to pay the commissioner a non-accountable per diem living allowance of $60 and actual transportation expenses while in travel status from his normal place of residence in connection with the conduct of the inquiry.

2. (a) John L. O'Brien, $400 per day; John J. Urie, $250 per day. (b) John L. O'Brien, $40 per hour; John J. Urie, $25 per hour.

In addition to the above, both counsel may be paid a non-accountable per diem living allowance of $25 and actual transportation expenses while in travel status from their normal place of residence in connection with the conduct of the inquiry.

BILINGUALISM SECRETARIAT, PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

Question No. 1,543—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has a special secretariat on bilingualism in the public service been established in the privy council office?

2. If so (a) what are its functions (b) who are the officers of the secretariat?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1 and 2. As indicated to the house by the Prime Minister in his statement of policy respecting bilingualism, Hansard of 6th April, page 3,915, a secretariat on bilingualism will be established in the Privy Council office. The Prime Minister outlined the function of the secretariat, at page 3917, Hansard, April 6th. Appointments are now under consideration and announcements will be made shortly.

HIGHWAY FROM GOOSE BAY TO ST. LAWRENCE

Question No. 1,560—Mr. Brand:

1. Is the federal government aware of a press release of Canadian Javelin Limited concerning a $35 million paved highway to connect Goose Bay with the gulf of St. Lawrence and, if so, has the government anounced its intention to build such a road?

2. Has the said road been approved by the government and (a) if so, when (b) if not, what is the present position of this project?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. The answer to both parts is no.

2. No such project has been approved by the government.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

RESTORATION OF LOUISBURG FORTRESS

Question No. 1,056—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Since the commencement of the restoration of the Louisburg fortress, what contracts have been awarded under the project, on what dates, to whom and for what amounts?

2. Since the commencement of the restoration of the Louisburg fortress, what contracts have been awarded under the project without the calling of tenders, on what dates, to whom and for what amounts?

Return tabled.

*PAYMENTS TO ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS

Question No. 1,398—Mr. Irvine:

Have any payments been made by the comptroller of the treasury for services rendered to the electoral boundaries commissions or any members thereof and, if so (a) what were the amounts of such payments (b) to whom were the payments made in each instance (c) does the amount paid include cost of advertising or publicizing the program in (i) newspaper (ii) radio (iii) television (iv) other media, and, if so, what is the amount for each (d) what is the estimated amount of any such payments outstanding to complete the entire program?

Return tabled.

CENSUS OFFICIALS, SASKATCHEWAN

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANGLOIS (MÉGANTIC)—CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT RESPECTING WINTER WORKS

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. If I do so at this time, it is because of a statement

I made in this house on Wednesday, May 25, that is, last week. I must apologize at once to the house if my remarks created some confusion or were misinterpreted. I never intended that my remarks should be interpreted as they were. First of all, it was never my intention to involve or connect the suicides in the Guadeloupe area with the winter works program and even less with the municipal council of the parish. Also, when I mentioned that those suicides had been committed, I had in mind localities surrounding Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe, because I asked the future minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand) to conduct an investigation in the case of parishes surrounding Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe.

It is unfortunate that this happened, but if it turned out that way, it is because I said the R.C.M.P. could inquire into the matter of winter works, since charges of fraud have been made, and that such offences come under the Criminal Code. I also referred to the matter of suicides, because I felt the R.C.M.P. might conduct an investigation in that connection.

I apologize for not having made the difference, for there is no relationship between winter works and those suicides. I had mentioned seven suicides by hanging and now Le Devoir sought information from the local coroner and there may have been at least a dozen, in the past six years, as mentioned in Le Devoir.

It is then not a question of suicides. I wanted to mark the difference and to enlighten the house on this question because I never intended to relate such suicides to the question of winter works. I apologize to the house if a misunderstanding occurred; I apologize to the people concerned but, on the other hand, I relied on information supplied by the minister to a question on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member does not have a question of privilege and I do not believe he should pursue the matter further.

It may be that he was entitled to set the record straight but I respectfully and humbly submit that there is no question of privilege involved and that he should not pursue the subject any further.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lotbinière and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) asked the house for an explanation. Last Friday the hon. member for Lotbinière violently took me to—

[Mr. Langlois (Megantic).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is aware of the fact the speeches he is referring to were given in the course of a debate on the estimates of a department or on interim supply and although the hon. members have suggested that an explanation should be given by the hon. member for Mégantic, I believe such explanation should not be given under the guise of a question of privilege.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There cannot be a debate since there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member says he wants to rise on a question of privilege concerning what may have been published in Hansard.

I suggest to him that he should have given advance notice to the Chair and I ask for his co-operation in allowing the Chair to proceed with the business of the house and, therefore, I recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Labour to give us a report on the abortive proceedings regarding settlement of the longshoremen's strike, and after he has given his report I hope to ask him some supplementary questions.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will pardon me if my answer is a little longer than it normally would be to a question on orders of the day.

Together with two of my colleagues, the Minister of Industry and the President of the Privy Council, as well as Judge René Lippe, the government appointed mediator, my deputy minister and other senior officials, I met here in Ottawa with representatives of the two parties to the dispute on the evening of Friday last. I might say that the meeting lasted several hours and the discussions were both informative and useful.

The Minister of Industry and I met again with these groups on Sunday afternoon and evening in Montreal. I might say that the longshoremen's association had made certain proposals late in the week which were considered by the shipping federation over the week end. The federation indicated that they were prepared, inter alia, to agree to a very substantial increase in pay in order to bring about a settlement; but they stressed, I think quite properly, the desirability of higher productivity during the second year of the proposed agreement.

In the course of the meetings I made some suggestions which were discussed at length. Unfortunately no solution was reached.

While the discussions terminated without a solution after many hours of earnest and frank debate, there were some important accomplishments, and at least the differences between the parties with reference to wages and fringe benefits were narrowed. I believe that with further serious discussion and, if necessary, further mediation a solution will be found within a reasonable time. Judge Lippe is closely following the situation, as I am, and our good offices—that is the way the parties described them last night—are available to both parties at any time if requested.

Mr. Speaker, as I said in the house on Friday last I believe that in most industrial disputes the natural process of collective bargaining brings about the best and most effective solution. In spite of the seriousness of the present situation I remain convinced that with a sincere desire on the part of both parties to bring about a solution, the remaining differences will be resolved within a reasonable time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would now ask the minister what he means by a reasonable time, because this has been the explanation all along as they have dillied and dallied. I should also like to ask him, in the choice of those who would meet with the ship owners and the longshoremen, why it was that men like the President of the Privy Council were chosen to be with the minister rather than the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who understands labour problems.

Mr. Nicholson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to that is very simple. Nearly 3,000 of the workers involved live and work in Montreal and I had two of my colleagues from Montreal with me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is not the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration from Montreal?

Mr. Pickersgill: He is from Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of Labour whether the main obstacle has to do with the insistence of the shipping federation that the work gangs be reduced, and whether it is correct that the federation is prepared to guarantee jobs to only 85 per cent of the men at that time.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that is hardly an accurate summary of the situation. There is more than one point still outstanding, though admittedly the question of productivity during the second year of the contract is an important one. As I have said, very substantial increases—some say fantastic increases, I would suggest—in pay were offered. In return for these, the shipping federation has suggested, and I think properly, that they might expect increased productivity during the second year of the agreement.

Perhaps I should say at this point that one of the suggestions that I made, which seemed to have been received favourably by both sides, was in inquiry into working conditions in the three St. Lawrence ports concerned, which would include an objective look into the matter of increased productivity and not only the structure and size of the work gangs but also the use of new equipment and other items of that nature. This was accepted in principle by both sides, and it was generally agreed that if such a commission were set up that they would look into all aspects of working conditions. A second substantial increase would take place with the implementation of any recommendation which might come out of this.

In fact, if no recommendations were to come out of it there still would be a further increase; but in connection with the proposal for reorganization of the gangs, the suggestion was made that there might be some lay-offs involved. The shipping federation offers job security for all the people who had worked for more than a given period of last year; in fact they offered job security for all those who had worked, I think, for more than 15 or 16 weeks. That was put forward for consideration. This is where the figure of 85 per cent comes in. I am advised that the other 15 per cent or less comprises the casual groups, such as the taxi drivers, students and those who work for a limited period each year.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement just made by the minister, in which he expressed hope that a settlement may now be closer and that appreciable progress has been made, does he not now feel that it might have been better had the government carried out the type of intervention that has just been made considerably earlier, so the strike might now be settled?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is argumentative.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he received a telegram from Mr. Gerard Tremblay, who is the Atlantic regional vice president of the international longshoremen's association, stating that the main obstacle to a settlement is the insistence of the federation on wiping out the jobs of some 15 per cent of the employees? Do I take it from the minister's statement that he is agreeing with that position on the part of the federation, and does he not think that in this instance the Freedman principle ought to be applied?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, during the course of the full and frank discussions that took place I stressed at some length parts and the significance of the Freedman recommendation, but even Mr. Justice Freedman did not suggest that casual employees should be looked after, in the way suggested in the telegram.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour in relation to this point under discussion. During the discussions that took place did the minister make the suggestion that the new contract should include the type of provisions that have been put into contracts between the longshoremen and the shipping federation on the west coast regarding automation, which is a main consideration in respect of productivity, under which the men are guaranteed compensation for lay-offs? As the minister is probably aware, these lay-offs occur at the higher range among senior members rather than at the lower range among junior members.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, without going into too much detail, there was no suggestion on the part of the shipping federation to indicate that they were not prepared to take care of permanent and normal I.L.A. members for the term of the duration of the contract. The 15 per cent figure referred to in the telegram mentioned by an hon. member refers to what I term casual employees, workers who are employed for terms of 15 or 16 weeks per year.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In the event that discussions break down in the immediate future, and in consideration of the fact that at best this can only be called an illegal wildcat strike, has the government given any consideration to making a more direct intervention?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, this is not an illegal strike; it is a legal strike.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the original statement made today by the minister he said that as a result of his intervention and discussions with both parties to the dispute some progress was made. I should like to ask him why he is not continuing this intervention and participation in order that a final solution may be brought about.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, if one really believes in the principle of collective bargaining, which I do and have advocated for many years, both as an employer and as a practitioner of law, he can only come to the conclusion that the government should not step in at the early stages of a dispute and certainly should not intervene until all parties have had an opportunity of seriously discussing the issues. The final proposals in respect of which there was an intervention were only submitted last Thursday night.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, was the minister not engaged in collective bargaining when he met with both parties?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nicholson: I will not say that I was not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative. Does the hon. member for Northumberland wish to ask a supplementary question?

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was a very distinguished and able labour leader in the province of Quebec, would it not have made good sense to include him as a member of the delegation that attempted to solve this problem over the week end?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nicholson: If the hon. member had listened to my statement he would have heard me say that the gentleman was part of the delegation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will hon. members kindly resume their seats.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour.

Last Friday I directed a question to the Minister of Labour concerning the strike which is continuing in the national harbours on the St. Lawrence, in Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières.

The minister told me then that a delegation was coming to Ottawa to discuss with the department the possibility of settling the conflict in these national harbours.

I would like to know today, at a time when the farmers of the province of Quebec are lamenting and asking the federal government to take action so as to give them satisfaction and enable them to obtain feed grains for their animals, whether the Minister of Labour is in a position to tell us that a solution has been found, so that the farmers of eastern Canada, or the province of Quebec, are given satisfaction by the federal administration.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased that this question has been asked. This point was raised during the course of our discussions. This is a legal strike, and peaceful picketing is permitted during such a strike. During peaceful picketing it is not likely that a union member would drive through a picket line. However, there is nothing to prevent a farmer from driving his truck in to an elevator to get feed grain if he so desires.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of bringing this transportation tie-up to an end as quickly as possible, why has the natural ability of the Minister of Transport as a mediator been ignored?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. The Minister of Labour has referred several times to the fact that the 15 per cent figure embraces only casual labour. When he describes the 15 per cent as casual labour is he giving us information he obtained from the shipping federation, or is this information with which the longshoremen's union is in agreement?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, this information was furnished by the shipping federation, which has offered to submit it to the longshoremen's association for analysis.

Mr. Lewis: Has the longshoremen's union agreed with this descripition of the 15 per cent as being casual labour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In view of the fact that we have been dealing with questions on this subject for approximately 20 minutes, it seems to me that it would be advisable at this time to move on to another subject. I will recognize the hon. member for Halifax, however.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour one final supplementary question. Can he advise the house whether there is any danger of this strike spreading to other ports by way of support strike action, for instance at the yards at Halifax, Saint John, on the west coast or at Toronto?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I would think not in view of the fact that an agreement has been signed at Halifax and negotiations are well advanced at Saint John.

IMMIGRATION

MANITOBA—OFFER OF FREE PASSAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether his department is collaborating with the government of Manitoba in the free passage program to attract immigrants to that province, which has just been announced; and will the minister give consideration to the establishment of a general national program for this purpose?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question of very general nature in respect of general policy. I suggest that the hon. member may wish to put it on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN DEPORTATION OF YUGOSLAV SAILORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the mass meeting that is being held tonight in Toronto to protest the deportation of two Yugoslav sailors who left their ship, has the minister any statement to make in respect of their future position?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the only statement I can make is that the two Yugoslav sailors have not been deported; the decision will be reviewed when a judgment is rendered in two similar cases. I think the meeting tonight will enable us to know the feelings of the people who will attend but nevertheless I must wait for the decision of the appeal court.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I would ask him whether the Donald report is yet available to the government and, if so, when it will be released.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not yet available. I understand it is being delivered this week.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I fully realize that when members ask ministers questions we must accept the answers, and that the minister himself is not necessarily obliged to answer; in other words he does not need to answer at all. But I would point out to you, sir, that on May 22 an answer given to me was to the effect that it was on its way; later, on the 25th of the month, the same answer, "It is on its way."

I protest very strongly the attitude of the government and the ministers in this type of answer in respect to a matter of great concern to the miners of Cape Breton.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to ask the Prime Minister when it is the government's intention to activate the policy statement in respect of the $25 million aid program for the Nova Scotia coal industry, which was referred to by the then minister of labour as emergency aid?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We will be dealing with that problem before long, I hope.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

AKLAVIK, N.W.T.—CLOSING OF FEDERAL DAY SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of what I understand is the closing by recommendation of an engineer of his department of the federal day school in Aklavik, is the minister's department taking some action to ensure that the children who attended that school can continue their education at least for this term, and will the department take steps to rebuild the building next year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the minister responsible has noted the representations he is now making, and I would think this is not the type of question that can be asked now.

YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct an urgent question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in view of the fact that the office of commissioner of the Yukon Territory will be vacated tomorrow. Can the minister now announce to the house the name of the commissioner's successor?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is difficult for the Chair to ascertain whether an appointment must be made immediately upon the resignation of one of the members of a commission. I suggest that the question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the complexities of government escape Your Honour's attention. The commissioner's office will be vacated tomorrow. The urgency lies in the fact that he is the head of the government there, and I am asking the minister when that head will be replaced.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the problem is under very active consideration.

WINTER WORKS

NOTRE-DAME-DE-LA-GUADELOUPE, QUE.—AMOUNT OF FEDERAL EXPENDITURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his capacity as future minister of manpower.

Further to certain statements to the effect that the Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe municipality did not get $400,000 for winter works since 1961, and in view of the fact that the hon. minister indicated that the amount of $300,855 had been paid, does the minister intend to check the matter and find out how come such an error was made?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I did not quite get the question. Would the hon. member for Mégantic kindly tell me exactly what he wants to know?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I heard the question of the hon. member for Mégantic. It might give rise to a question of privilege or a point of order, but this is certainly not the time to bring it up. I suggest that the hon. minister should take note of the representations of the member; he might give an explanation later on.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The figures I mentioned were given to me by the minister in answer to a question I had put on the order paper. As the municipal authorities in question deny categorically the figures given, I was merely asking the hon. minister if he intended to look into the matter and find out where the money went.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me I was quite generous in my interpretation of the question of the hon. member; he should not try to pursue it further.

[Later:]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the future minister of manpower.

In view of the fact that the hon. member for Mégantic caused a political suicide by the statement he made recently, are there federal investigators at Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe, checking up on the truth of the recent accusations with regard to winter works?

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Ten o'clock.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WORK OF GROUP OF TEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the house of the progress being made by the group of ten in working out ways of augmenting and supplementing the resources necessary for financing world trade and aid?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This appears to me to be a question of a very general nature and should not be asked at this time.

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING HAIL DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of my colleague the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), who is unavoidably absent at this hour. Is the minister aware of the disastrous hail storm in the area of New Denmark, Victoria county, New Brunswick, which yesterday wiped out nearly 60 per cent of the 1966 potato crop? If so, will the federal authorities co-operate with the New Brunswick provincial authorities in carrying out a survey to determine the extent of the damage, and render any other assistance which may be within the power of the federal government?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I have not yet heard from the provincial authorities in this regard, but the hon. member may rest assured that we will give the matter every consideration when we have heard from them.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN SETTLING LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is he in a position today to make any further statement concerning the Air Canada dispute? Has he yet received the report of the conciliation board? Can he say whether the parties are meeting?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the report has not yet come in. I assured the hon. member in answer to a question that was put during the discussion on the estimates last Friday that I would give prompt attention to his suggestion when the report comes in; but it has not come in as yet.

HOUSING

INTEREST RATE ON NON-PROFIT AND PUBLIC PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in virtue of his responsibility for matters arising under the National Housing Act. In view of the concern of our senior citizens over the increase in the cost of living and particularly the increased cost of construction, will the minister reconsider the recent increase in the N.H.A. interest rate for non-profit and public housing from 5¼ to 5⅞ per cent?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Having regard to the cost of money today, I think it is a very reasonable charge.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—IMPOSITION ON MONEY FOUND BY CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. As I do not see him, I shall put it to his parliamentary secretary.

Following the discovery by children of the Lake St. John area of three hundred $100 brand new bank notes bearing serial numbers AJ8065600 to AJ8065900, would the minister launch an investigation with regard to income tax, in view of the fact that Mr. Justice Toussaint McNichol contends that he lost those bank notes?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REFUSAL TO RENEW CONTRACTS OF "SEVEN DAYS" STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that he had Mr. Keate go into the question of the program "Seven Days", whether he has been advised that the C.B.C. has refused to renew the contracts of the "Seven Days" staff—that is directors, story editors, researchers including Mr. Zolf and Miss Beryl Fox, some 12 or 15 in number—for the next year, and has offered them contracts for the next three months only. Will the Prime Minister also say whether this is in keeping with the recommendations of Mr. Keate and the criticism of the highhandedness of the C.B.C.?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received no information in regard to those matters, and I would assume that if there was information which should be submitted to parliament on this matter it would be through the Secretary of State. Meanwhile, I have received none.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister simply because he seemed to have taken the matter over. I now ask the Secretary of State, has she received any communication along the line indicated?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the previous question I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether, in view of the C.B.C.'s willingness to improve relations between producers and management as outlined in the Keate report, it would be possible for the C.B.C. officials to review the negotiations pertaining to all contracts renewable after January 1 this year.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is of a purely general nature. There does not seem to be that much urgency to the question that it should be asked at this time.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to address my question to the honourable and gallant Secretary of State.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: My supplementary question is simply this. Is the matter referred to by the hon. member who has just asked the question, part of the iceberg that she referred to in a previous speech?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REPORTED USE OF DRUG IN SCENE FOR "THIS HOUR HAS SEVEN DAYS"

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Solicitor General and ask him whether it is a fact that his department has received a report from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police regarding allegations that certain C.B.C. personnel were involved in giving drugs to teenagers or taking pornographic scenes for a youth program. As a result of investigation by the R.C.M.P. has it been found that no charges should be laid, and that the C.B.C. personnel to whom reference had been previously directed have been completely exonorated?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I was advised, Mr. Speaker, that a certain report had been brought to the attention of the R.C.M.P. I was speaking with the R.C.M.P. on Thursday evening last. I have not received their final report, so I will take the question as notice and reply to the right hon. gentleman later.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government intends to set up a commission to inquire into all aspects of fraudulent bankruptcies.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The question of bankruptcies will be before the house when the Senate finishes its consideration of a bill, and this matter can be discussed then.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister give consideration to referring that bill to the committee on justice and legal affairs so that representations which have been received can be made directly to that committee by the authors thereof?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to give consideration to that suggestion.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration what is causing the delay in the publication of the white paper on immigration, and if he can now make a forecast as to when it might be tabled in the house.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is probably the same reason which caused all the delay in the publication of that white paper. I hope that, in the near future, we will be able to submit to the house new elements in that field which I have no doubt will win the approval of the hon. member for Carleton.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PAYMENT OF SALARY INCREASES TO SCHOOL TEACHERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. When can the teachers employed by the department of Indian affairs expect to receive the salary increases which were authorized in March of this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Nasserden: Perhaps I could rephrase my question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can he tell us the reason for the delay in sending out supplementary salary cheques to the members of the teaching profession engaged by Indian affairs?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): There has been a major reclassification of both teachers and salaries under way in respect of approximately 1,060 teachers in Indian schools. It will be completed before June 30 and the salaries will be made retroactive to the beginning of the current year, which commenced on September 1 last.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO MEDALLION FOR STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the government has any plans to have a medallion struck for the distribution to students of Canada to mark Canada's centennial.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, that matter is under consideration. The Secretary of State will be in a position to make a statement about it very shortly.

DIVORCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I intended to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works as house leader, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister indicate when steps will be taken to set in motion the joint committee on divorce which was established two and a half months ago, in view of the very great interest which has been taken in this committee?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall have to take the question as notice and look into it right away.

EXTENSION OF FRENCH RADIO AND TELEVISION SERVICES IN WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

We have been asking for two years if the government intends to extend the C.B.C. television and radio service to British Columbia, and the minister has kept telling us that the Fowler commission will decide if it is advisable for the government to take such a decision. Is the minister in a position to tell us today whether the French Canadian population in British Columbia will be served in French by the C.B.C.?

[Mr. Laing.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has just said that he has been making that suggestion for two years; he will therefore be able to put that question on the order paper.

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Having in mind that on at least a half dozen occasions the Prime Minister has mentioned that he expects to be able to announce the appointment of a royal commission on security, can he give us any indication when he may make this announcement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I apologize to my hon. friend; I know he has asked this question a good many times. I can only repeat what I said the other day, that the difficulty is getting a suitable commission and appropriate terms of reference, so that this commission, which is going to be a very important one and is going to take quite a long time to do its work thoroughly, will be set up on the best possible basis.

HATE LITERATURE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether at the present session the government will bring before the house amendments to the Criminal Code to cover the question of hate literature and hate programs in general? He gave an indication some months ago that the matter was urgent and would receive the earliest attention. I ask him now, is this going to be proceeded with at this session?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Immediately after the receipt of the report on this matter a committee of officials under the auspices of the Department of Justice was set up to go into the practicability and desirability, from the official point of view, of implementing its recommendations. I understand the committee has just about completed its work and will be in a position to make a report to the cabinet very shortly. The cabinet will then consider that report and I will be glad to answer my right hon. friend's question at that time.

LOANS AND GRANTS FOR CLASS "A" FAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): I should like to address my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of requests from municipalities for long term loans and grants for class A fairs, can the minister say whether he intends to introduce legislation to meet these requests? If so, when might we expect the legislation to come before the house?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. This is a matter of government policy, and if it is to be adopted will be announced in the normal manner in due course.

FARM MACHINERY

POSSIBLE TIME REQUIRED FOR INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the establishment of a commission of inquiry into farm machinery prices on Friday we have learned that the commissioner intends to take up to two years to make this investigation. I ask the minister if he is satisfied with this time factor, or if he intends to issue any request or directive to the commissioner to have the inquiry completed within a more reasonable period of time.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that question be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CURRENT TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister anything further to report with respect to the discussions between representatives of the government of Great Britain and representatives of the government of Rhodesia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can say it is now agreed that the group that met in London as a result of an initiative taken by Mr. Smith will resume its discussions in Salisbury, this time at the instance of the governor of Rhodesia. In announcing this I can say, as I said on Friday, that the British Prime Minister has noted that this is without any commitment, and all that is involved are talks to inquire whether or not there is a basis for negotiation.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate to the house the immediate situation in respect of the shipment of ore from Zambian mines, and can he tell us whether Canada is participating in any way in respect of meeting the problem which I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I fail to see how this aspect of the matter is so urgent that a question should be asked at this time.

TRANSPORT

SEAWAY TOLLS—REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF REPORT OF CONSULTANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport on his return to the house. Is the report of the independent consultants in connection with the seaway ready, and will it be made public?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that on Thursday last it was indicated by a number of hon. members that they would like an opportunity to consult the report made by the independent consultants. The report, of course, was made for the seaway authority, but I can see no reason, except for its volume and cost, why it should not be made available to anyone who seriously wants it.

The seaway authority is going to have a reprint made. The report consists of about 350 pages and as soon as the copies are ready the authority will be willing to supply a copy to any member of the public who is interested for the price of $5, which is quite a bargain. In the case of members of parliament I have persuaded the authority not to charge anything, but I hope members will not sell them after getting them.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

NEGOTIATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES RESPECTING RECIPROCITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which is supplementary to the answers given today by his parliamentary secretary to three of my starred questions. Can he give any indication when a report will be made to the House of Commons concerning the negotiations referred to in those questions?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture?

Now that the minister has had the opportunity to look into the difficulties facing the farmers because of the longshoremen's strike, would he tell the house what he intends to do so as to assist these distressed farmers who do not have any feed grain?

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Labour stated earlier, following the discussions between himself and other governmental officials yesterday the facilities are now open and trucks are entering and delivering feed grain today.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Is that all the Minister of Agriculture intends to do with regard to this question?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, May 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 4—Duties of Solicitor General of Canada.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Wednesday, May 25, 1966, clause 4 of the bill, with an amendment thereto proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood, was being discussed. The question is on the amendment. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make this comment before the vote is called and then I will leave the matter entirely in the hands of the committee. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood would entail, if it is carried, consequential amendments. It is a matter of procedure, of course, but clause 37 makes provision for certain acts set out in part I of the schedule to be administered by various ministers. The schedule itself makes reference, for example, to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police legislation.

In other words, if this amendment should now be carried we would find ourselves in the position that certain provisions would still be left in the bill which would have the effect of carrying out the objective which the hon. member for Greenwood is seeking to eliminate. I would call that to your attention, Mr. Chairman. It means that we may have to go through this whole procedure again in the event that the amendment is now carried.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, if I may say a word on behalf of the hon. member for Greenwood, who is not able to be here at the moment, the point taken by the hon. member for Peace River is well taken but is a point that my colleague has in mind. At the moment clause 4 of the bill is before the committee, to which an amendment has been proposed. If the amendment carries we think there are two places where consequential amendments will have to be made and we will have them ready at the appropriate moment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two in support of the amendment before the question is put. My position was made clear on the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Justice for the year 1965-66, which were debated earlier this session. I took the opportunity at that time to refer to the proposal to divide the duties formerly discharged by the Minister of Justice between three departments.

My view then expressed was that instead of this division, which I believe will increase the difficulties of co-operation and co-ordination between the various branches and services that now report to the Minister of Justice, co-operation and co-ordination which are vital and are becoming more vital, the reorganizing and strengthening of these functions would best be served by maintaining one ministry and Department of Justice but providing for three deputy ministers, with three divisions or main branches in that department. There would be a deputy minister in charge of over-all administration who would be directly responsible for the present functions of the department, giving legal advice to the government, the drafting of legislation and those functions which might be termed strictly the departmental functions of the present Department of Justice.

Second, there would be a deputy minister in charge of a division of enforcement which would include the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the combines investigation branch and the bankruptcy division.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Third, it would include a deputy minister in charge of corrections, including the penitentiaries branch, the parole services and the functions related to the correctional program.

Mr. Pennell: Would the hon. member permit a question? Do I understand his suggestion to be that there ought to be three deputy ministers, in other words, that there should be, in addition to the present deputy minister and an associate deputy minister, one more deputy minister?

Mr. Fulton: My suggestion is that there ought to be three deputies, one to be known as the deputy minister of justice, the other to be known as the deputy minister of enforcements and the third to be known as the deputy minister of corrections, all reporting to the one minister of justice. The deputy minister of justice would be responsible under the minister for co-ordination of the three divisions, with the minister, however, having responsibility in cabinet and a concomitant responsibility therefore to parliament and to the country for the co-ordination and effective discharge of all the services and duties of the Department of Justice.

In my view this would be a far more effective way of ensuring co-ordination than the present proposal. I agree with the solicitor general that the duties of the Minister of Justice have increased. This is inevitable with the growth of the country. But in my view the way to assist him better to discharge the increase in responsibilities would be by a reorganization along the lines I have suggested.

I must say that, to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood on Wednesday dealing with this proposal the Solicitor General made a reply which, while I accept the logic in it, in my humble submission did not take account of the facts. I assure the minister that I do not wish to be in any sense improperly derogatory about the argument he has used. But it does seem to me that it is an argument which is attractive in theory more than it is sound in fact, in the light of the realities of the situation. There is enough difficulty now in ensuring co-operation and co-ordination.

In his reply the minister based his position in part upon the experience in the United Kingdom. Although I am very much impressed with the desirability of studying the precedents and examples set by the oldest existing parliamentary democracy in the world, I respectfully suggest that the position in the United Kingdom is not in this case as valid a precedent for us to follow as in some others, because of the peculiar problems which, in the field of the administration of justice and enforcement of law, are created by the differences in governmental jurisdiction in Canada, because of our division into a federal and ten provincial governments, a situation not paralleled in any respect in the United Kingdom.

The particular situation in Canada involves constant problems of co-operation and consultation with provincial governments and the very frequent consultations between the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada with provincial Attorneys General not only with respect to constitutional matters but with respect to legal matters and those having to do with law enforcement generally. We are entering a period when the problem of combating organized crime in this country is assuming ever more serious proportions and involving ever more serious responsibilities of government. A special responsibility is imposed on the federal government by reason of the fact that since there are people who are prepared to organize crime on a national basis it surely follows that the fighting of this trend should be nationally co-ordinated.

Indeed, it seems to me that many measures ought to be initiated by the central government on behalf of the people of Canada generally in order that our program to counter organized crime is as effective as the program of those who organize crime on a national scale. This must involve increasing consultation and co-ordination with provincial Attorneys General and law enforcement agencies, and also involves the constitutional aspect.

It seems to me, however, that by the step taken here, we are inevitably creating a multiplicity of channels of communication and increasing the difficulties of co-ordination and co-operation, whereas if there were one minister of justice responsible for the co-ordination of all these functions many difficulties would be avoided.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about the situation respecting the R.C.M.P. In what I have said before and in what I am about to say, the solicitor general knows that I make no reflections upon him personally. I express the hope, if the government goes ahead with the setting up of this department, which I am opposed to, that the minister will be able to ensure that the prestige and function of the force are maintained at the highest level.

But I doubt very much that the Department of the Solicitor General can or should achieve the standing and prestige of a properly constituted and administered Department of Justice, which in my view, by the very nature of its primary function, is one of the most important departments of government. It is the department responsible for advising the government generally and for ensuring that all actions of the government conform to the law and are of the proper standard. It is the department responsible for ensuring that government actions are in accordance with constitutional responsibility and authority. All these functions plus many others which have traditionally been discharged by the department and its minister over the years have by their very nature ensured the seniority of this department, not because of the persons involved in it but because of the function of the department and its head.

For this reason I think it is an undesirable development for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which has traditionally been responsible to the Minister of Justice, to be taken out of or removed from a relationship with that department. I feel that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has not been well served in recent years by certain developments, the details of which I do not propose to go into at this time. Through no fault of its own the prestige of the force has suffered. I think it is incumbent upon the government to take every step to ensure that the prestige of the force, which remains ready and able to discharge its responsibilities and to live up to its standards and prestige, is restored and not diminished.

[Mr. Fulton.]

At another and more appropriate time I propose to discuss specific proposals by which that can be done. I am talking now only about the proposition of removing the force from the Department of Justice and placing it under the proposed Department of the Solicitor General. This, I think, is again a move against the trend which I think should be followed, the trend of supporting, reinforcing and re-elevating, if you like, the prestige and stature of Canada's central law enforcement body.

• (3:50 p.m.)

It will therefore be seen, Mr. Chairman, that while the amendment itself does not go far enough it should nevertheless have the effect of preserving the relationship between the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Department of Justice and Minister of Justice. To the extent, therefore, that it removes one aspect of the proposed division I support the amendment although, speaking for myself and for the members of this party, whether or not the amendment carriers we shall oppose the clause which gives effect to the other division of the functions of the Minister of Justice.

Amendment (Mr. Brewin) negatived: Yeas, 42; nays, 66.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Fulton: On division.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Department established.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, this bill is, of course an attempt to reassess the functions of government and to devise government machinery capable of handling those functions. Since the beginning of this debate it has been clear to at least some members of the government that these reassessments and changes are not necessarily final. The Prime Minister himself, in his introductory remarks strongly indicated that the machinery of government will be changing continually because of the needs of the times in which we live.

We in this party believe there is one change which should be made without delay. Both in this chamber and in various parts of Canada outside this house, attention has been called to the need to establish a department of government to protect the affairs of consumers. A former minister of the crown, speaking in Toronto, pointed out the need which he saw arising in the near future for the establishment of three departments, one of which would be a department of consumer affairs.

I see no reason why the government should hesitate to proceed along these lines while this legislation is in progress. Demands for such a department are being made continuously in all parts of the country and will become increasingly heavy. I suggest, therefore, that it would be wise to make the change now without waiting even for another year, by which time the demand will be even greater than it is today.

In an attempt to avoid a solution which would mean the setting up of an entirely new department and involve large expenditures of money and so on, alternative suggestions have been made. I believe we have found a solution which is workable and which would be acceptable to the government. Indeed, this approach was opened up by the Prime Minister himself speaking in this debate the other day. The proposal I have in mind is nothing more or less than the utilization of an existing department which could be called the department of consumer affairs and which would gather together all the work in this field now being done by many government departments.

I should like to read from the speech which the Prime Minister made on May 24 in the course of this debate, as reported at page 5430 of Hansard. I believe his words in this connection were significant and very much to the point. He said:

> One of the matters which will have to be considered early in the establishment of the department of the registrar general is to what extent it can further assist and protect the Canadian consumer, which is a matter that was mentioned in the discussion on the resolution, especially by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). The Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the Department of Agriculture—

The right hon. gentleman might have mentioned several other departments as well:

> —now have active consumer protection roles within their own departmental areas of responsibility, but there may be other areas in which the federal government can develop consumer protection programs and there may be a real need to co-ordinate what is being done now in a number of departments.
> It is the government's intention to ask the Economic Council to look at the field of consumer affairs, along with some of the other functions now to be undertaken by the registrar general under the legislation before us, with a view to providing advice as to the courses of action that seem best suited to meeting the needs of the Canadian people and the Canadian economy in the consumer field.

I have no doubt that the Prime Minister and the other members of his government are fully aware of the need for a department of consumer affairs. We can understand their reluctance to create a new department with all that would be entailed in the recruitment of staff and so on. But we echo the words of the Prime Minister himself in this regard. There is already in contemplation the setting up of a department which would have a large measure of responsibility for consumer affairs—the department of the registrar general. It is to this department that we wish to direct our amendment this afternoon.

• (4:00 p.m.)

In our party, we are quite used to making the ammunition and seeing the others use it.

The main thing is that the well-being of our consumers be protected as effectively as possible and with the least possible delay.

Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman), I propose the following amendment:

> That Bill C-178 be amended by changing the heading preceding clause 6 from "Department of the Registrar General" to "Department of Consumer Affairs", and that clause 6 be amended by changing the words "Department of the Registrar General" to the words "Department of Consumer Affairs", and also by changing the words "Registrar General of Canada" to the words "Minister of Consumer Affairs", wherever the said words appear in subclause (1) and subclause (2) of the said clause 6.

[English]

Mr. Chairman, I have copies of the amendment in both French and English.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, following the remarks of the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—in her case, I should say Vancouver-Queensway—and the amendment she moved—

An hon. Member: That is good.

Mr. Favreau: —and the statements or suggestions made concerning the nature of the department, I should like to say a few words about the new proposed department, that of the registrar general of Canada. I shall attempt to prove that the meaning of the title proposed in the amendment is too restricted in relation to the duties the department will be called upon to perform, but that, on the other hand, what should be determined is precisely the essential and actual nature of the powers devolved to the new minister. I feel that after studying the wording of the proposed legislation, as well as the powers suggested for the Registrar General, everybody will be satisfied that such powers include, in addition to others, those designed to protect the interests of consumers.

[English]

The new department of the registrar general groups together a number of agencies whose primary responsibilities can be described as reflecting public policy toward business organization. The principal agencies are the office of the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act and the related Restrictive Trades Practices Commission, the office of the Commissioner of Patents, having jurisdiction over patents and copyrights, the office of the Registrar of Trademarks, the office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy and the corporations branch.

All of these agencies have been engaged in the administration of the ground rules established by parliament for the conduct of those engaged in business under our free enterprise economy.

Each of the laws has developed over the years, starting with fairly primitive controls to prevent frauds and other flagrant abuses. The various bodies of law, such as the anti-combines law and patents law, tended to develop independently of each other, to be the object of separate disciplines, and to be administered by different government departments. As our economy became more advanced and more complicated, corporations took on and continue to take on a greater importance in relation to the national economic objectives. It is essential that the legislation which provides the ground rules within which corporations must operate is designed and co-ordinated in such a way as to encourage maximum efficiency and responsiveness to the needs of the public at large.

These laws provide the basic framework for corporate activity and as such they are laws of general application. They are readily distinguished from legislation which arises out of economic policies designed to improve the performance of particular industries or to influence particular activities in the economy. They are, nevertheless, an integral part of the economic fabric of the country and it is important to recognize that each agency is affected by and affects economic policy in other areas.

As these are laws of general application, their economic impact ordinarily becomes apparent only in the long run; but they are no less important for this reason than economic policies which have a more immediate impact upon the economy.

There are a number of important reasons for grouping these agencies in the new department. Each agency shares the same ultimate goal of encouraging the corporate sector of the economy to work more smoothly and efficiently while remaining consistent with the public interest. Each agency is linked in a direct and special way with at least one of the others. The work of each agency is based on detailed statutes and a large body of case law. For this reason the agencies are administered to a large extent by lawyers. There is a danger that, in isolation, the legislation may be administered and revised with a purely technical bias rather than in terms of its fundamental social and economic purposes.

The Combines Investigation Act is based on the principle that under normal circumstances competition provides the greatest spur to efficiency and to the best allocation of economic resources in the private sector of the economy. This is sometimes forgotten in the more immediate concern about possible exploitation of consumers or about the inequitable treatment of some economic units by others. Where competition is effective, efficiency is rewarded and inefficiency is penalized. In the long run, efficient corporations grow and inefficient ones decline. Scarce resources are therefore channelled into the hands of those who use them best.

Combines policy is closely linked with other government economic policy. For example, it is evident that if economies of large scale in a particular industry are such that the Canadian market cannot sustain enough producers to provide effective competition, appropriate tariff policy may make it possible to solve the problem by encouraging concentration while at the same time expanding competition from foreign companies. This would transfer to the public some of the gains in efficiency arising out of the consolidation of the industry into a few large corporate units.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Although legal proceedings are necessarily important in the administration of the Combines Investigation Act, the objectives sought by the legislation are economic. For these reasons it is most desirable that the Combines Investigation Act be administered in a department more directly concerned with economic policy. The Canada Corporation Act, in conjunction with its provincial counterparts, provides the basic framework on which modern corporations are constructed. Although the federal act recently has been amended the proposed Ontario legislation probably will be making still greater advances which most likely will require a review of the Canada Corporation Act to make sure not only that it is fully co-ordinated with the government's economic objectives but also that it keeps pace with legislative advances in this field.

Incidentally, the proposed Ontario legislation stresses the close relationship between corporate affairs of a continuing nature and those relating to the issue and sale of securities. Through adequate disclosure requirements and regulations of such matters as insiders' trading, this legislation in conjunction with similar provincial legislation can make an important contribution to the efficient allocation of resources in the economy. This will happen in a number of ways. Lack of information and unregulated insider transactions cause investors to mistrust company directors and officers. Potential investors are thus less likely to invest or their funds are unlikely to be well invested. Shareholders have great difficulty in forcing management to be efficient if they do not have access to well prepared and complete company accounts. The absence of information may lead to a failure to identify those sectors of the economy which are inefficient as a result of restrictive practices or lack of new competitors. A federal-provincial meeting of officials will be held on June 27 and 28 and will consider the whole field of financial disclosure and securities regulation. These are areas in which the federal government may assist and in this respect the registrar general's department will have its role to play.

The principal justification of the patent system is that it encourages research and development and thus contributes to the acceleration of economic progress. It will do this, however, only where it harmonizes with other economic policies. A patent is a temporary monopoly granted to the inventor by the state; and government policy on patents clearly must be co-ordinated with government policy on competition. The close connection between the two has been recognized in the past and there are references in the Combines Act to patent and trade mark abuses and in the Patent Act to restraint-of-trade abuses. In addition, the Trade Marks Act by its nature, is concerned with what is termed unfair competition such as when attempts are made to pass-off as the same, goods of a different origin.

The patent system should not be permitted to frustrate any benefits anticipated from a reduction in other obstacles to trade. Strong views have been expressed that as trade barriers are reduced, industrialists are likely to place greater emphasis on industrial property rights to replace the geographical protection lost by the reduction of tariff barriers. The patent system should not encourage the creation of an inefficient structure of Canadian industry by compelling the working of patents in Canada when it is otherwise uneconomic for production to take place. The Ilsley Commission on Patents devoted considerable attention to this particular matter. A very high percentage of all Canadian patents are owned by non-residents and there is danger where patents act as a barrier to the entry of new firms, that the patent system will increase unnecessarily foreign control of Canadian industry.

[English]

The new department will have to consider also the implications of the registered user provisions of the Trade Marks Act. These provisions are comparatively new and are a departure from the theory that a trade mark should identify a single origin. Problems may arise where other Canadian companies must compete against a registered user in Canada of an American trade mark because the registered user normally will benefit from overflow advertising from the United States. All of these matters have been or will be considered by an interdepartmental committee which has been studying the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Patents.

The smooth and efficient working of the economic system obviously is injured by the economic dislocation and waste which results from unnecessary bankruptcies. Perhaps more important, unnecessary bankruptcies tend to produce a general decline in investor confidence and a greater reluctance to take risks and to innovate. To the extent that adequate disclosure requirements and securities regulations are introduced in Canada, the number of needless or fraudulent bankruptcies may be reduced and the work of the bankruptcy branch made more effective. Close liaison between the bankruptcy branch and the corporations branch will make it possible for more effective action to be taken against those dishonest persons who hide behind corporate laws.

The role of the registrar general initially will be to administer existing statutes along these lines to ensure that they are well co-ordinated with each other and with the general aspects of government economic policy. The field of consumer protection has been the subject of a good deal of research in many jurisdictions and in some has given rise to new legislation. These developments are being followed with interest and may point to the possibility of fruitful action at the federal level in the interest of the consumer and the investing public. The importance which the house attaches to this problem has been reflected in the establishment of a special committee on the price of drugs, a joint Senate and House of Commons committee on consumer credit, and in many other expressions of opinion within parliament in recent years. At present there are, I think, 13 private members' bills or measures which concern either consumer credit or in some fashion the interests of the consumers.

To the extent that there has been any tendency to create industry oriented departments without providing a corresponding organization to have particular responsibilities for the consumer and the public at large in corporate matters, the new department presents an immediate opportunity to correct this deficiency. The registrar general will have a voice in the development of the government's economic policy and he will have to see to it that as policy develops it is in harmony with the philosophy of the statutes for which he is responsible or that decisions are made to modify the statutes.

[Translation]

In other words, I believe it will be readily understood that the new department of the registrar general will, on the whole, be entrusted with co-ordinating, in the interest of the depositors as well as the consumers and any other party interested in either of those fields, such federal legislation concerns the application of the major economic policies of the government.

In this sense, it can be understood that this department, although one of its functions will be to safeguard the rights and interest of the consumers, will have broader duties which will also comprise the application of the statutes to other areas.

For those reasons, I believe that limiting the title to that of department of consumer affairs would be unduly to restrict the scope of the jurisdiction of this new department. I think that the title of registrar general, which immediately gives the idea of registration and control as concerns federal affairs, is closer to the very character of the department than the name now suggested.

Be that as it may, for want of a name more closely adapted to the character of the functions proposed for the new department, I believe that what matters is to ascertain in depth the very functions of the new minister. On this score, I feel the title is much less significant than the substance and it would be proper for the house to maintain the suggested title of registrar general which is one of long standing in the traditions of government, one that has always been in existence and one which reflects adequately enough, at least an important part of the role of the one responsible for the new department.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the minister has dealt with this matter as though we were considering clause 1 of a separate bill and I propose to deal with it in the same way. I have said before and I repeat that, like the hon. member for Kamloops, I believe the only method by which organized criminal activities in this country can be combatted at all is on an organized basis. For that reason it is heartening to note that bankruptcy legislation once again will come under the same umbrella of jurisdiction as companies and winding-up legislation because these things are inseparable. However, as I see it, there still exists a great gap in that the enforcement agency will come under a separate minister.

When organized rackets exist in more lucrative areas, namely, in respect of bankruptcies, surely the enforcement of federal legislation should come under the jurisdiction of the same minister who is responsible for the administration of that legislation in breach of which these frauds are perpetrated. As the hon. member for Kamloops has mentioned, there is a responsibility and indeed, an urgent necessity for federal authorities to co-ordinate all activities in this regard. This has been suggested in respect of fraudulent bankruptcies and bankruptcy legislation under the jurisdiction of the new department.

I should like to refer to one specific aspect of this matter which has been raised by the press, in comments both inside and outside this house and by the Minister of Justice in correspondence he has had with me. This matter relates to fraudulent bankruptcies and the proper course, if I may condense it in that fashion, to be followed by individuals who are interested in seeing a discontinuance of fraudulent activities by any person.

On May 11, 1966, I received a letter from the Minister of Justice which I propose to read into the record in order to make sure that the facts are stated correctly. It is dated May 11, is under the letterhead of the Minister of Justice, and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Nielsen:

A Canadian Press story in this morning's edition of the Globe and Mail states that you told reporters in Windsor, yesterday, that you had information on the involvement of federal officials in fraudulent bankruptcies.

I am writing to you as the minister responsible for matters relating to bankruptcy, and respectfully request that you provide me or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with any information you have in support of these allegations.

I assure you that my department and the federal government is anxious to ensure that no federal officials shall be a party to any wrongdoing.

Yours very truly,

Lucien Cardin,
Minister of Justice

I did not reply to that letter between that date and May 16, which was the date of a second letter directed to me by the Minister of Justice on his stationery. For some reason this one was registered. It stated:

Dear Mr. Nielsen:

A Canadian Press story in the May 11, 1966, edition of the Globe and Mail states that you told reporters in Windsor, last Tuesday, that you had information on the involvement of federal officials in fraudulent bankruptcies.

I am writing to you as the minister responsible for matters relating to bankruptcy, and respectfully request that you provide me or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with any information you have in support of these allegations.

I assure you that my department and the federal government are anxious to ensure that no federal officials shall be a party to any wrongdoing.

Yours very truly,

Lucien Cardin,
Minister of Justice

In view of the fact that this matter has been raised by members of this house, the press and the minister I have had considerable difficulty and I have discussed my difficulty with the Solicitor General. It relates to the obligation of a member of parliament to this institution, the freedom of access of citizens to members and the information which comes to members as a result of that access accompanied by a request that it be kept confidential and that the names of these people not be disclosed.

I am glad to see that the President of the Privy Council is paying attention to what I have to say at this time. I should like to deal with two other facets of this matter. The first relates to the knowledge which the Minister of Justice had or should have had before he wrote the two letters which I have read. He knows, for instance, that I disclosed of my own volition certain information which was of substantial assistance in the Banks case. He knows too that I had discussions with officers of the force with respect to fraudulent bankruptcies before he wrote me these letters. Since that time I have had further discussions at the request of the informant. Therein lies the important difference between the obligation that a member has of his own volition, the obligation that he owes to the citizen to maintain free access to his member and the obligation the member has with respect to the institution itself.

But, sir, I would suggest to the minister who will likely be the new registrar general that there are certain investigative procedures that should be followed, and followed now, in cases such as fraudulent bankruptcies. There is a chain of investigative processes that parliament has authorized the Minister of Justice to follow in an inquiry into bankruptcy matters under the minister's jurisdiction, and we will clothe the new registrar general with the same kind of authority because these matters are imminently to come under this minister's jurisdiction if he indeed is going to be the registrar general as I anticipate.

He should follow these procedures and not, I suggest with respect and with no intention of innuendo or anything else with regard to the Minister of Justice, write members of parliament letters which in effect can be interpreted as "lettres de cachet", as I think they are referred to in French. When the minister wishes to investigate the conduct of any of the public matters with which he is charged by parliament the procedure for him to follow is clearly laid out for him by parliament. This was one of the purposes of my asking the Prime Minister the question I did at the opening of the sitting today.

Under the Department of Justice Act, chapter 71 of our statutes, "The Minister of Justice shall have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces." Under section 91 (21) of the British North America Act the federal government has exclusive legislative authority over bankruptcy matters. As the minister well knows, under this authority parliament has made the Minister of Justice responsible for the administration of the Bankruptcy Act. That is to be found in chapter 14 of our revised statutes. According to a government booklet entitled "The Organization of the Government of Canada":

> The administration of the Bankruptcy Act is under the supervision of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, whose duty it is to ensure the efficient carrying out of the provisions of the act, who has certain powers of control over the trustees throughout Canada in the discharge of their duties, and who generally investigates and reports to the Minister of Justice on matters pertaining to the administration of the act.

In particular, parliament has given the Minister of Justice the exclusive power to authorize, if he considers it will be of public advantage so to do, the issue of a licence to a person to act as a trustee. The minister is thus solely responsible for the conduct of a trustee while the trustee holds that licence or any renewal thereof. I do not think it can be argued for a moment that a trustee is not a federal official appointed under the provisions of the bankruptcy legislation.

To counterbalance the responsibility thus placed upon the minister, under section 3, parliament has given the superintendent power to make or cause to be made investigations outside his office, and when it appears a licensed trustee has been guilty of any improper conduct the superintendent may report and make recommendations to the minister. The superintendent may report that his powers of investigation are not enough. In such case he may recommend to the minister that the minister avail himself of the more extensive powers that parliament has given to the minister under part II of the Inquiries Act, chapter 154 of our statutes. Section 6 of that act provides:

> The minister presiding over any department of the civil service of Canada may appoint at any time, under the authority of the governor in council, a commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state and management of the business, or any part of the business, of such department, either in the inside or outside service thereof, and the conduct of any person in such service, so far as the same relates to his official duties.

I take it that the same provision will apply to the new position and department of the registrar general. The commissioners are given power to take evidence under oath or affirmation, to issue subpoenas for persons and documents, and to refer contempts to the judicial courts for punishment. If these powers are not enough, parliament provides that the minister may take the matter to his colleagues and, if they so recommend, the governor in council may cause inquiry to be made on a broader frame of reference under part I of the Inquiries Act.

These are the methods that have been approved by parliament and these are the powers given by parliament to the Minister of Justice as the methods to be employed by him and the powers to be exercised by him in investigating the administration and the conduct of the public business entrusted to him by parliament. These methods and powers are investigative and in some aspects inquisitorial beyond the processes of the common law. Parliament has given them its imprimatur but has provided that the minister shall be responsible to parliament for his use or abuse of those powers.

The minister exceeds his powers and is in breach of parliament's intent when he issues the kind of letters dated May 11 and May 16 which I have read into the record. I would hope that the new registrar general, whoever he might be, would follow the proper course in administering any investigative processes coming under the bankruptcy legislation, or indeed any other legislation which might come under his jurisdiction, rather than following the course that has been followed here.

None the less, while I was not in a position, having regard to the privileges of members of this house and of the institution itself, to comply at the time, with the minister's requests set out in those letters, I have since receiving them been placed partially in that position and information respecting four companies has now been placed in the possession of the R.C.M.P. Until a few days ago I was not in that position, not wishing to breach the confidence of the citizen who brought me the information, a privilege to which he is entitled in terms of the confidentiality which must exist between the citizen and his member if the citizen so desires it, but even more important, the obligation of a member of parliament to maintain that freedom of communication between the citizen and himself that is so necessary if this institution and its members are to stand for anything with respect to those freedoms.

I replied to the letter of the Minister of Justice in the following terms, and I think the record should be made complete by placing my reply on Hansard. My letter to the minister was dated May 26 and was directed to him as Minister of Justice:

Dear Mr. Minister:

I have received your letters of May 11th and May 16th, the latter for some reason, under registered cover.

You may be certain that I will continue to pursue all proper means to ensure that no federal officials shall be party to wrongdoing.

• (4:40 p.m.)

As you are no doubt aware, I have on more than one occasion communicated information to the R.C.M.P. which has been of substantial benefit to criminal investigations. I shall continue to follow this course wherever, in doing so, it will not be in conflict with my obligations as a member of parliament and to parliament, its privileges and those of its members.

I have spoken with your colleague the Solicitor General last May 24 and May 26.

I had not intended to participate in this discussion at all, sir, had it not been for the importance of the matter raised by the form of communication which was adopted by the minister. Every member of this house is constantly faced with the conflict which exists because of his obligation as a citizen with that which exists because of his obligation as a member of parliament. I am not inferring that this was done, but it does not behoove any member of the treasury benches to bring any form of pressure whatever upon a member of parliament with respect to his obligations which will harm the freedom of access of the citizen to his member.

This is what has happened here. I can refer the minister to my question No. 577 which I placed on the order paper many months ago. The last suggestion made to me by the minister in connection with that question was that if I, as a member of this house, would supply him with the names of the companies with respect to which specific answers should be made he would be delighted to provide the information. This suggestion was made notwithstanding the fact that on February 28 last he had information which I placed on Hansard with regard to five specifically named companies. No reference was made to this. I can tell the minister that in my files there are some 30 to 50 companies which require investigative procedures, the names of which companies I cannot, because of the obligation I feel as a member in protecting the confidential nature of communications passed to me, provide in this house. Otherwise they would have been disclosed.

An hon. Member: Then do it as a citizen.

Mr. Nielsen: I would dearly love to. Notwithstanding the fact that a constituent comes into my office, gives me information and then says, please do not disclose my name because I fear for my life, I do not want to wind up in a lime pit, is the hon. member advocating that I should disclose the information? If he wants to destroy that relationship, that is what we should do. If this house imposes that obligation on me and if I see it that way, that is what I will do. I do not believe that is the obligation of a member. I think his obligation is to maintain absolute freedom of access between the citizen and himself. If you breach the trust a constituent places in his member in communicating information of this kind, that relationship is utterly destroyed.

There is one manner in which these matters can be gone into properly and thoroughly and that is by following the investigative process with which parliament has clothed the various ministers. This involves setting up a proper inquiry under either part II or part I of the act. Once this is done, once you provide the vehicle, not only members but citizens of this country, industrial and commercial organizations, dozens and dozens of which have been making representations to me, to other members of this house, to the minister himself, to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, will have access to the proper forum for investigation of these various complaints.

Mr. Cashin: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly.

Mr. Cashin: As I understand the hon. member, he is defending the right of a member of parliament and the informant or whoever it is to have a confidential relationship. Will the hon. member not agree that by making a public statement he changed the complexion of this problem and in fact made it a different situation? Once the hon. member made a public statement, did he not really prejudice this relationship and cast aspersions or doubt and therefore a member of parliament or anyone would be quite within his rights in questioning the statement because it put a number of people in a difficult position?

Mr. Nielsen: Not at all. I do not know whether the hon. member has had this experience but time after time I have had people write to me or see me in my office, as they did in connection with the Norris commission, and say, I am not going to say anything until I have the right to appear before a commission set up to make an inquiry into this matter and have the assurance of the protection of that commission. You remember what happened in connection with the Norris commission. Nobody would talk until the commission was set up. Once it was, once the ice was broken, you had all sorts of evidence adduced from people who were theretofore afraid to make disclosures. This is precisely the situation here, and that is the reason I have been urging specifically that this kind of proper investigative process be followed to inquire into the fraudulent bankruptcies which exist not only in the province of Quebec, as I said before, but in every province. As the R.C.M.P. report indicated, wherever there are densities of population you will find this type of racket. It is not a proper course to follow to get members to breach the obligation which exists.

Mr. Cashin: I am following the analogy the hon. member has just given the house in the case of the Norris commission and applying it to his own circumstances. He feels an inquiry is needed. He makes this statement and leaves the matter hanging in the air. There is an obligation on the public authority, be it a minister or anyone, to ask for that evidence so it can be used as a basis for the kind of inquiry which would be analogous to the Norris commission. Unless the hon. member is prepared to do that, then his analogy to the Norris commission is incorrect.

Mr. Nielsen: I suggest this is a new version—I will not put it that way because it will arouse political passions. What I will say is that the hon. member places a misconstruction on the analogy. It is not a proper course for any minister to follow to make inquiries of members, which I suggest he should know should not be made, when he knows there is a proper investigative procedure set down by parliament which should be followed. It has not been followed in this case.

[Mr. Cashin.]

I will leave the matter with this comment and then sit down. One of the most important rights or freedoms of any citizen of this country is the freedom to untrammeled and confidential, if he wishes, access to his member of parliament. Destroy that and the institution is no longer worth anything, nor the members sitting in it. If a citizen comes into your office or writes to you and says, I am in fear of my life if I make a disclosure in connection with this case, even if the circumstances are mentioned my life is in danger, then what is a member's obligation?

Even if the minister was correct in making an inquiry, what is his obligation? I suggest that the proper obligation is for the government in power at the time to follow the investigative procedures which parliament itself has provided to cover circumstances of this nature, and that it should do so under the new department which is being set up. That is one of the very first things it should do. You will find, Mr. Chairman, that once that happens people will come forward. Commerce and industry in this country would welcome it with open arms and so would many individuals who, as the minister pointed out, have been hit and hit hard not only by isolated instances of individual frauds in bankruptcies but by the organized rackets which exist today. That is the only way you are going to get as full disclosure as possible.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in which she suggested that the name of this department be changed to the department of consumer affairs and that the minister of the department be known as the minister of consumer affairs.

The President of the Privy Council, in replying to the arguments put forward in support of the amendment, suggested that the proposal of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway would narrow the powers of the proposed department. Then the minister proceeded to demolish most of his own arguments by outlining the functions of the various branches which will make up this department. He pointed out that the purpose of this department, which the government desires to call the department of the registrar general, is to bring under one minister the public legislation relating to business organizations.

He also pointed out that the minister would have under him the administration of the anti-combines legislation.

The minister said that the purpose of this legislation was to provide competition which would be a spur to efficiency. What is the purpose, Mr. Chairman, of having efficiency in business organization if it is not to lower the price of the product and provide cheaper goods for the consumer? Surely the anti-combines legislation and the restrictive trade practices commission have been designed for years to act as instruments for the protection of the Canadian consuming public.

The minister also mentioned the patent law and the Trade Marks Act which primarily are designed to protect the consumer. He also made reference to bankruptcy. We in this party would prefer to see the bankruptcy and insolvency legislation under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice for the same reason that we argue that the R.C.M.P. should be under the direction of the Minister of Justice, namely, because the enforcement agencies that would implement the basic purposes of the bankruptcy legislation ought to be under the Minister of Justice. But even assuming that the bankruptcy and insolvency legislation are left with the proposed minister of consumer affairs, surely the purpose of bankruptcy and insolvency legislation is to protect the consumers. If there are losses owing to frauds in bankruptcy, ultimately the cost is passed on to the consumer.

The minister spoke of the Companies Act legislation for the supervision of the activities of companies. Again I point out that these companies exist specifically to serve the community and to sell to the consumer. Every piece of legislation which will come under the supervision of this new department ultimately has to do with the consumer. Therefore it is completely fallacious to argue that calling this department the department of consumer affairs will narrow its functions.

On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, we propose that its functions shall be widened. We cannot make this proposal under clause 6 but when clause 8 comes before the committee we shall propose that the clause be amended so as to give to the department and to the minister of consumer affairs powers with regard to two very important matters, one of which is to provide consumer protection.

The minister has already said that some 13 private bills are before the house dealing with consumer credit. Surely, Mr. Chairman, that underlines the tremendous interest and concern existing in Canada today with respect to the exploitation of the consumer which is now taking place on the part of small finance companies owing to the failure to disclose interest rates properly. Surely the time has come to set up a department to which the necessary powers will be granted to protect the public from small loans companies and loan sharks, to protect the housewife against misleading advertising and packaging and to guarantee the safety and quality of goods sold over the counter. If this department is going to serve the consumer, these are the kind of powers it will require.

Most important of all, Mr. Chairman, we think that such a department would have to have power to review consumer prices. This is something which the members of this party have been talking about now for at least a year and a half. We have drawn the attention of the government to the fact that the cost of living is spiralling at an accelerated rate.

The cost of living has gone up 4 per cent in the past 12 months and there is every indication that it will go up another 4 per cent in the coming 12 months. The Minister of Finance has himself budgeted on the basis that it will go up 3½ per cent, but that does not tell the whole story. The 4 per cent increase during the past 12 months is over the whole range of consumer goods.

For example, if one takes the list of 20 or 30 commodities which the average family must buy in order to maintain a minimum standard of decency, then the increase is much more than 4 per cent. In comparing April, 1965 with April, 1966 I noticed that while on all consumer items the cost of living went up 5½ percentage points, on food the cost went up 10.3 percentage points.

Items like food, clothing and drugs are items which the average family must buy. There are other items which they can postpone buying or which they can forego, but things like food, clothing, drugs and the payment of rent must be budgeted for and the increase in these costs has been a great deal more than 4 per cent.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The tragedy is, Mr. Chairman, that the government refuses to be concerned about the rising cost of living. So what happens? There are two categories of persons who are affected. Some persons, those in the first category must live on fixed incomes. They include those who have retired on a pension, who have an annuity or who draw the old age pension. For them an increase in the cost of living means only one thing, a reduction in their standard of living. They are number one victims of the government's callous apathy and inaction.

The second group of persons are those receiving wages and salaries. The only way they can cope with the rising cost of living is to ask for more money. This is why we now have a rash of labour disputes from one end of Canada to the other. This is why the Minister of Labour is being harassed with the longshoremen's strike, with the dispute between Air Canada and its employees, with the dispute between the seaway employees and the seaway authority. In almost every province of Canada today strike votes are being taken and labour discord is rife, not because workers are anxious to go on strike—anyone who has that illusion ought to try walking the streets or manning a picket line week after week without any income to realize that going on strike is no picnic—but because they have no other recourse.

Unless workers can have more wages their standard of living must go down. Wages have lagged behind the rising cost of living and increased productivity. Workers in all parts of Canada are now asking for increased wages as they negotiate new collective bargaining agreements.

The government, which would not do anything about the rising cost of living, now finds labour disputes on its doorstep. You see, Mr. Chairman, in the period this government has been in office it has never faced its problems. It has thought that it could solve its problems by sweeping them under the rug. Anybody realizes that when you sweep problems under a rug they multiply. Instead of having one problem you end up with six. That is exactly what has happened to the government. It is faced with labour discord, strikes and threats of strikes which loom up all across Canada, because during its 18 months in office it has turned its blind eye to the problem of rising living costs.

I suppose, following the statement of the Minister of Labour on Friday, the government thinks that the answer lies in putting the cork into the neck of the bottle and stopping these requests for higher wages. The minister spoke the other day about the possibility of setting up labour courts. I think the government may as well know that the working people of Canada will never stand for any government allowing somebody to adjudicate the price of their labour while at the same time refusing to adjudicate on the prices the monopolies and combines demand for the products they sell in the consumer market. You cannot have a free market for the large corporations and a fixed, determined market governing the price which people get for their labour.

That is why we want to see a department of consumers affairs established. That is why we want set up under such a department a prices review board that will examine prices. If there is justification for setting up conciliation boards and arbitration boards to determine whether an increase in wages is justified, surely there is a case for setting up a tribunal to determine whether an increase in prices is justified. That is all we have been asking.

If the government once more turns down this suggestion it need not be surprised if labour disputes continue, if more farmers, as in Quebec, wheel their tractors out on the highway declaring that they will not pay their taxes. The government need not be surprised if the farmers on the prairies, finding that wheat, the main commodity they have to sell, has gone down in price while their cost of production has gone up, cry out in protest.

That is why we feel that this amendment is more than merely changing the name of a department from department of the "registrar general" to the department of consumer affairs. This amendment asks the government to set aside one department which, in addition to the duties already outlined by the minister having to do with anti-combines legislation, bankruptcy, the Trade Marks Act and the Companies Act, all of which concern consumers directly or indirectly, shall be charged with the positive and definite responsibility of protecting the consuming public of Canada against exploitation, against deception and against selfish and greedy profiteering.

I make a plea to the government to heed this request and consider this amendment. If the government fails to do so the troubles which today concern the Minister of Labour, and I am sure they do concern him, involving the discord and strife which have already appeared on the horizon of the labour front, will multiply in geometric progression and this country will face a very serious situation in the next 12 months.

If the Minister of Finance is right in his prediction that the cost of living in the next 12 months, as it has done in the previous 12 months, will rise by 3½ to 4 per cent, then we have only begun to see the discord and animosity which will arise in employer-employee relationships. The government now has a chance to act before it is too late. If it fails to act now I suggest it will reap the whirlwind of labour discontent in this country.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few brief remarks about the amendment. I certainly do not intend to range far and wide, as did the last speaker. I am convinced, despite the last speaker's opinions, that this amendment merely changes the name of the department. I do not think one can help but appreciate the objective of the amendment and we understand it. Personally, and here I am speaking for my party, I do not believe that the amendment will achieve what the hon. member has in mind. I think that the proposed name, "registrar general" expresses far more clearly the duties, activities and objectives of the department. I am not in favour of any change in the name.

Consumer affairs are much too important to be involved with a great many other considerations. With much of what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has said I agree, though, of course, he said other things with which I do not agree. I do not think the amendment would enable us to reach the objective which many members are seeking. I believe we should place consumer affairs on a completely separate basis. There should be a much wider consideration of the whole field, including consumer credit.

It is not enough merely to suggest that the name of a department be changed. The last speaker indicated that there would be other amendments to put more teeth, as it were, into the proposal now before us. But consumer affairs are much too vital to be handled in connection with the many other items listed in this and following clauses. For these reasons we intend to vote against the amendment.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Greenwood. When I first read the title of the proposed department, department of the registrar general, I at once connected it with the department of the registrar general in Ontario which deals with vital statistics and lists births and deaths. I would not want people from Ontario to become confused about the names of these departments.

Miss LaMarsh: I wonder whether the hon. member knows that the Secretary of State is also the Registrar General of Canada at the moment.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you very much. I am sure the hon. lady knows we have a registrar general in Ontario who records births and deaths. That is the point I was making. I would not want the people of Ontario to become mixed up in this regard, which is a good reason for changing the name of the department and calling it the department of consumer affairs.

Looking at the list of the duties and functions of the department one finds a close relationship with the interests of consumers. The handling of corporate affairs affects not only the particular companies concerned but all the people of Canada. The question of copyrights and patents also affects all Canadians, as do bankruptcy and insolvency, the important subject with which the hon. member for Yukon dealt so fully. I hope the government will pay no attention to his suggestion that when the bill comes to us from the other place it should be referred to the committee on justice and legal affairs. I am sure that measure has received full consideration in the other place and it is my view that it should be given speedy passage through the House of Commons. The Canadian people, more especially Canadian businessmen, believe that fraudulent bankruptcies demand immediate attention. To refer this legislation to a committee, thereby holding it up for some considerable time, would not be fair to Canadian businessmen or to those who have been adversely affected by bankruptcies.

As to combines, mergers, monopolies and restrictive trade practices, it is hardly necessary for me to say that this field directly affects Canadian consumers. If we look at the cost of living index for February, 1965, we find that it stood at 137.1. By February, 1966, it had risen to 142.5, an increase of five points or 3½ per cent. Since then the increase has gone to 4 per cent.

When I heard the Minister of Labour suggest on Friday that perhaps the time had come for the imposition of compulsory arbitration in certain areas of labour relations I was prompted to say immediately that the time has come to set up a department of consumer affairs, particularly a prices review board. Both shoes must be worn at the same time. You cannot ask for restraint and control in connection with wages without imposing similar restraint and control with regard to prices. It is important for the President of the Privy Council to realize that the combines legislation has not been effective in the past. We say that teeth should be put into this legislation in order to make it more effective in checking some of the practices which have been carried on by corporations across the country.

The Canadian consumer is also concerned about false advertising and packaging. These are matters which could be effectively dealt with by a department of consumer affairs. I agree with my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway that a lead was given by the Prime Minister when he made his opening remarks on the subject of government reorganization and recognized the need for a department to deal with the many problems of vital interest to the consumers of this country. We say the time for action has now arrived because of the tremendous increase in the cost of living.

There is one other matter on which I should like to comment. As the minister knows, there are dominion companies and provincial companies, the latter coming within provincial jurisdiction. In Ontario companies fall within the responsibility of the provincial secretary. Form now on, the department of the registrar general will have responsibility for federal companies. I entirely agree that the department must be headed by a person with legal experience. This is inevitable bearing in mind the many conflicting aspects of a registrar's functions. A colleague of mine says that possibly we need a layman in charge who would clear up the confusion, but I suggest it would be compounded by having a layman as the head of the department. We need a person with legal training who can cope with the intricate problems involving bankruptcies, combines and so forth.

The leadership with regard to consumer affairs must come from the government. It would be a sad mistake for the President of the Privy Council to say that consumer affairs are a provincial matter and that the federal government operates within a very narrow area. I suggest to him that it is the federal government which has to give leadership in this field, and it is to him we look for that leadership. He cannot shelter under the umbrella of alleged provincial jurisdiction. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I fully support the amendment and urge that it be supported by all hon. members.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I believe that to call the department the department of consumer affairs would be a mistake and I would have to vote against the amendment. I suggest that if the mover of the amendment wants consumer affairs incorporated as part of the responsibilities of the new department the words "consumer affairs" could be added as paragraph (e) of clause 8. This would give substance to the intent she has in mind and I would be willing to support such an amendment.

Mr. Brewin: In response to what has been said by the hon. member for Rosthern I should like to inform him that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway intends to propose an amendment to clause 8 as he suggests, but clause 6 comes first and we have to deal with it at the start.

I want to plead with the government to accept the hon. member's amendment. If the arguments put forward by my leader and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway do not carry weight with the government, then I plead with the government to pay attention to the amendment on the grounds of poetry, psychology and public relations. The term registrar general conjures up some official putting away dead documents, in other words, a keeper of musty records.

I believe that the President of the Privy Council holds a title which has some degree of romance and interest in it. Likewise the Minister of Justice has a title conjuring up something which makes sense, as have the Minister of Industry and the Minister of National Defence. Surely when naming a department which is to have important functions of government we do not want to give it a meaningless, dry as dust title.

It is not simply a matter of nomenclature or words. The purpose is to give notice to the long-suffering consumer that at last parliament, through the government, is concerned about the affairs of consumers. I am not going to repeat what has been said by other hon. members, but we all know that the consumer is the forgotten man and, even worse politically speaking, the forgotten woman when it comes to dealing with problems of government.

It has been suggested that we cannot discuss clause 6 intelligently without relating it to clause 8. Clause 8 gives the proposed registrar general responsibilities relating to combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade. Why are we concerned with these subjects? It is because we are concerned that the consumer shall not be gypped. Under paragraph (b) his duties relate to patents, copyrights and trade marks. The law we have on our statute books at present deals with trade marks and unfair trade practices. What we are urging is that the concept of unfair trade practices be enlarged so that we may have a department and a minister responsible not just for dealing with patents, copyrights and trade marks but for dealing with all unfair trade practices.

What allies these subjects is the protection of the consumer. I do not want to deal with the question of bankruptcies and insolvencies because that should come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice, but the trouble with corporate affairs at the present time is that the consumer has been forgotten. All sorts of people have manipulated corporate affairs and have forgotten that corporations exist in order to serve the consumer.

As I understand the concept of this department, as explained by the Prime Minister, it is that we should have someone in government concerned primarily to speak within the cabinet for the great body of Canadian consumers. Do hon. members believe that organizations like the Canadian Association of Consumers, which contains in its ranks a vast number of thoughtful, politically-minded women, would ask for this department if they did not think it had any meaning? I suggest that they are among the most practical-minded people in the whole community. They have asked for this department and for this name in order to stress something which hitherto the government has overlooked to a considerable extent.

If I had been on the government benches I would have accepted the hon. lady's amendment as a good piece of advice. I would have said, let us do this in a way that indicates a concern about consumer affairs and indicates to the people of Canada that we are taking a new look at this matter, instead of selecting a title like "registrar general."

With all due respect to the present registrar general, the title is one without poetry, without romance, with no evocative implications whatsoever. I say that for the sake of a more imaginative name, for the sake of psychology, for the sake of public relations, the government should accept a sensible amendment of this sort and indicate its intention to deal with consumer affairs. It is not a matter of words alone.

I was happy to read this morning that the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean, the former secretary of state, said when speaking in Toronto that several federal departments should disappear. I am sorry he is not in the chamber at the moment and so I cannot ask him which, but he said that a new department of scientific, consumer and family affairs should be formed. I say that the hon. member was speaking with good sense and I urge his colleagues to pay attention to his words.

I cannot see why this amendment should not be accepted. I repeat that it is not just a matter of title or name. If the title is changed in clause 6, then in clause 8 we can add more specific direction to the government showing that we want the affairs of the consumers to have priority, and this is the only way we can show it.

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to say just a few words, Mr. Chairman. Mention of poetry always is a challenge to any member of this party which has a great deal of poetry in its make-up. The suggestion of the hon. member for Greenwood that the title should be changed because the proposed title would be more imaginative and more romantic makes me take the position that if this amendment were carried I think in the result the new name of the department would contain an indication to the general public that it was far more involved in the subject than actually would be the case. While I have every sympathy with the motives of the member who moved the amendment and others who have spoken in favour of it, I must say I feel compelled to vote against it. I do this with the full knowledge of the truthfulness of so much of what has been said, but I think the suggested name would indicate to the average member of the public that the federal government was assuming responsibilities which it in no way could undertake to fulfil or carry out.

The questions of interest disclosure and consumer prices are tremendously important at the present time, but how is it possible for the government, even if a prices board were established, to deal with this matter? By the time the board had been established, hearings held and the inquiry made, the prices would have been so interwoven into the economic fabric that it would be far too late. If such were possible, I like the idea proposed by the Labour government in the United Kingdom shortly before the election to set up a board and make it mandatory for notice of proposals to increase wages and prices to be given. This would permit a period before the increases became effective in which there could be a valid inquiry. Of course, you would have to relate this to the Criminal Code because unfortunately in our distribution of constitutional responsibility the federal government finds this difficult except in the case of emergency. That has been the jurisprudence.

I offer the suggestion to the government that if members of the legal staff of the department are interested in trying to suggest that an emergency does exist they might say that so long as the present government stays in power there is a national emergency. This might form the basis for a solid argument because, of course, a national emergency would give them the right to intervene and deal with prices as in wartime. I doubt, however, that this advice is acceptable.

I do feel that imagination and romance would not recommend themselves to those in the department who say that the new department of consumer affairs would fail because it would be giving to a department of the federal government rights which it should not have. Much as I am in sympathy with the amendment, under these conditions I do not feel I can support it. For example, we have the suggestion that patents, copyrights and trade marks would be involved in the work of this department. I have had some discussion with the President of the Privy Council about this previously. Because this branch of our jurisdiction is founded on a narrow application of the criminal law it has been established as a result of a number of decisions that it is almost impossible for there to be that form of tracing of prices under the guise of combines, mergers and monopoly legislation that the government and the people may require.

Some time ago the minister indicated that some consideration was being given to an attempt to broaden the jurisdiction by seeing whether it could not be founded as well on trade and commerce. The very fact that the subject matter is now assigned to the department of the registrar general and not under the control of the Minister of Justice indicates that the government may be moving in that direction. The minister has not said anything. I do not know to what extent the officials of the department have considered this point and to what extent the law officers of the crown or officials of the restrictive trade practices branch have made progress in an attempt to find an acceptable formula which would meet the constitutional law. It would be a very considerable step forward if something like that could be found. The fact that this subject matter is assigned to the registrar general is of some significance, but although I have every sympathy and find that for these reasons I cannot support the amendment. The suggestion by the hon. member for Rosthern might have some value if by the time we reach clause 8 there is a further amendment.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the discussion which has taken place on this amendment. I should like to advise my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood, who said it was very difficult to understand why the government could not accept the amendment, that he might have understood if he had looked at the civil servants in the gallery and had noted the consternation expressed by them in the last few minutes and the exchanges which have taken place. I am sure he will find that the government really cannot deviate from their policy because there is no one here who could authorize a deviation even if they wished to. I think also there is some indication now that the minister has been picked. I did not realize this previously.

If a consumers' department were established I should like to see the two ladies on that side involved in it. I should like to see the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare take over the consumer affairs department as minister because, although the government may not know it, half of the people in Canada are women and half of the voters are women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: They may not have realized this, but I think the women of Canada will be very much interested in the idea put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. She says that all the consumers of Canada are interested in having a department which would supervise many of the things which they think are not being supervised at the present time. It is quite true that no matter who might be the minister of this department he or she would be capable of doing something in this field, but I suggest that a woman would be much more capable in supervising the problems of consumers for the very simple reason that we in Canada seem to turn over to the women of the nation most of the problems which concern the consumers of the nation.

We allow the women to do the buying. They are the ones who have to make the payments on the car. They are the ones who buy the groceries, pay the telephone bill and know when the taxes have gone up. The poor breadwinner is out working so hard that he cannot be bothered with these routine problems.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member for Timiskaming whether the ladies in the house would not be likely to feel better with regard to the general argument he is now putting forward if he would first deal with the cogency of the argument just advanced by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Peters: Not being a lawyer I am in a very fortunate position; I do not have to become involved in the legal arguments raised in the house. There are others who are in a better position to do this than I. It would be rather foolish for me to argue here whether the establishment of a department of consumer affairs would interfere with provincial rights.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he concedes that the legal situation is at least of some relevance?

Mr. Peters: Certainly I agree and I have no argument in that regard. However, the hon. member must realize that sooner or later, and I suggest that the sooner the better so far as the Canadian people are concerned, the government is going to have to face up to the fact that the consumers have some rights, and is going to have to get around the legal problems. The argument about legality in my opinion is more often abused than used.

I note that various members of the government department concerned are in attendance today and I am sure they could advise my colleague why the department is taking the stand it apparently is taking today. It is unfortunate that the government could not meet and decide upon their reasons for not accepting this amendment which would change the complexity of the contemplated department. In my opinion the amendment is not so involved that it cannot be understood.

In view of what the President of the Privy Council has said about the responsibilities and duties of this department, there seems to be some similarity between the department and a consumers department such as we have suggested. We believe this department should concern itself with the problems that arise in regard to bankruptcies, copyrights, trade marks and restrictive trade practices. There seems to be a difference between our thinking and that of the government in that we are looking at the whole situation from the point of view of the consumer and the government seems to be looking at the situation as it affects corporate bodies and the legal interpretations that are involved.

In the result the consumer is the individual who always is hurt as the result of bankruptcies and the disadvantages which arise from restrictions in respect of copyrights. These are the people who are the victims of any non-competitive system of trade such as is allowed to develop in this country as the result of the structure of many of our corporations.

One of my colleagues referred to the serious labour difficulties that have been experienced in Canada this year. I should like to echo his sentiments and add that in my opinion the situation will become worse before it becomes better. It will worsen because most trade unionists are also consumers and know that if there is a 3.5 per cent increase in the consumer price index the retail consumer price will probably increase by 10 per cent. In this regard it is interesting to note that when one of the larger unions was presented by its bargaining committee with one of the best contracts ever negotiated on the North American continent it told the committee to renegotiate and get a better contract. No doubt this happened because they were aware that recent financial figures indicate that corporations are making higher profits than ever before and are being allowed special concessions for depreciation and expansion programs. The workers of this country realize that they are in a good bargaining position to obtain a fair share of the spoils.

We hope that some protection will be extended to all purchasers in Canada. As the former Conservative government often said, we should have competitive enterprise. So far as the consumer is concerned there is no such thing in Canada as competitive enterprise. Most of the enterprise in Canada is monopolistic rather than competitive. All one has to do is drive down the street and check the price of gasoline at various service stations to realize that the price is always the same regardless of the overhead involved. Anyone who has any kind of business experience must realize that overheads vary and therefore prices should fluctuate. We all know that if Weston Bakeries increases the price of a loaf of bread all the rest of the bakeries follow suit. This fact is true of many other companies. For instance, if the price of sugar is raised by one of the largest companies the rest of the companies increase the price of sugar.

Apparently there is no supervision on the part of the government in regard to consumer prices. Many people were surprised to find this year that their telephone bills continued to increase in spite of the fact that the dividends paid by the Bell Telephone Company were the highest in history. They were so high that a government board investigated the situation and recommended that there should be some limitation. Surely this type of curb should be applied to all unreasonable or unrealistic increases in the price of consumer goods.

The type of department we have in mind could consider many things and supervise in fields in which the government has not been involved before. There seems to be an attitude on the part of governmental officials that if they become involved in fields with which they have had nothing to do previously it will shock the sensitivity of provincialists. We in this party believe that the minister of a department of consumers affairs, particularly if the minister were a woman, could look into the problems which housewives face in respect of varying sizes of clothing. Let me outline the problems I have in mind.

There is a tremendous variation in the actual size of children's clothes and shoes manufactured by different companies. It is obvious that all ten year old children are not going to be able to wear the same size pants, nature being what it is, but it would be nice if a mother could order a certain size and always get the same size regardless of the manufacturer. A pair of size 10 pants today should be exactly the same size as another pair tomorrow or next week. A department such as we have in mind could develop a Canadian set of standards so that all sizes would be uniform and so that when a company labelled an article of clothing as being shrink-proof it would be just that and would remain the same size after it was washed.

Something similar should also be done with regard to canned and packaged goods. How many housewives get hosed every time they buy so-called bargains at the grocery store? For example, usually the housewife will buy a 13-ounce can of peas, but when they are put on sale at perhaps six for a dollar they are actually 5 or 6 ounce cans with the result that she is not getting a bargain at all. These goods should also be standardized as to size.

Miss LaMarsh: What about frozen goods? They all come in standard sizes.

Mr. Peters: I did not know that frozen goods came in uniform sizes, and perhaps what the hon. lady has said strengthens my argument. Frozen goods are sold by the pound and therefore they are the same in size. If this were true of all canned and packaged goods I am sure that the housewives of Canada could budget their money and make it go further than it does today. In my opinion, if this kind of advice were given to the housewives of Canada it would make their budgets go a lot farther than is the case at the moment. This is the kind of thing that consumers would expect from a consumers' bureau.

Perhaps the government is not interested in the housewives of this country. Perhaps they are not really interested in consumers at all. But I suggest they had better think about this question because the housewives are very vocal in this regard. They certainly are to me. Every time I walk into a grocery store at home I believe I talk to every housewife in the store about this subject, not because I want to do so, because I would like to sneak in sometimes and buy something and leave. But that is not possible. If I go into a grocery store I know I will hear from every housewife there about the increase in prices since the last time she shopped.

I believe the government will have to face this problem because sooner or later the housewives will decide that they are going to do something about it. Certainly organizations such as the Voice of Women, the consumer groups, the better business bureaux and others are now finding that the people are not just willing to talk at meetings but are interested in finding out what they can really do to solve these problems. They no longer are satisfied with talking about mundane things which have been brought before parliament in the past, and they will be putting before us matters of substance about which something should be done.

I would also like this consumers' bureau to have something to do with public utilities because I think this is a field that such bureau would want to take a close look at.

We are finding that there is no competition in most of the public utility fields. In many ways we have established national monopolies in this respect. There is very little supervision over these public utilities and the agencies which have been created are certainly not capable of supervising them.

This is obviously true in the case of the Board of Transport Commissioners, which has looked at the operations of the Bell Telephone Company and has not been able to decide whether the Northern Electric Company should be divorced from the parent company although it knows full well that there have been many write-offs between these companies which have worked to the disadvantage of Canada and have provided no advantage to telephone subscribers. We have found that the subscriber has had to way of bringing his complaints to the attention of the company except by writing to the president. I was very surprised to hear the president inform us when he appeared before a committee not long ago that all complaints of subscribers of the Bell Telephone Company went to him. I presume the company runs itself and all he has to do is act as a clearinghouse for complaints. This is obviously a field in which the government should be interested, becauses we should be able to have as cheap telephone service as possible, allowing for a reasonable profit to the company and a reasonable amount of accumulated capital for whatever expansion is deemed necessary.

These remarks also apply to bus services in the various communities. There should be some type of control over such utilities which will provide at least a yardstick for assessing whether the consumer is getting a fair shake. The government is now toying with the idea of doing something in respect of the problem of car safety. They are being dragged into this problem by the scruff of the neck and the minister is fighting vainly to withhold action in this regard. I believe this is a field in which consumers are vitally concerned and will one day decide to so something about it in an election. It seems that the only way of changing the mind of government is for its members to travel about the country and at each meeting they attend a terrific bombardment in respect of these maters. During an election campaign the people are told that policy changes will be made but when we leave the election period the reluctance to continue a particular investigation is obvious.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I do not expect that the government will consider the problem of consumer affairs. I do not think they will consider it simply because they did not think about it before the senior civil servants made up their minds what was going to be included in the new department. I believe this is a sad state of affairs and something the cabinet should think about. They should be in a position to make some decisions on their own; they should not have to wait until the senior civil servants decide for them whether they are going to do certain things. They should think about this question and be very cautious in choosing ministers for the various departments before the bill is passed and the departments are established.

I say this, Mr. Chairman, because I honestly think that if this change were made it would be very much appreciated by the Canadian public. I think the government would find that this department would bring in a great deal of good legislation which would provide an outlet for many of the complaints that will occur in the next few months as the cost of living continues to spiral. Consumers have not the right to strike; they have not the means with which to strike. No consumers' campaign in this country, including the one carried out with respect to bacon, has been a success in my opinion. It took five or six years before anything was done in that case.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Nicholson: Is it not a very good thing that somebody has not the right to strike?

Mr. Peters: I agree with that, Mr. Chairman, but I have always thought that a consumers' strike would introduce a new element into the picture. From the point of view of the Minister of Labour it is certainly a good thing that some people have not the right to strike, but I believe he would agree that the reasons behind consumers taking this kind of action would be unlike those of people in other fields.

Therefore I hope the government will give consideration to this matter. I know that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has been very interested in the problem. I know that all women are very interested in it. I believe it is very difficult for a member of parliament, unless he is badly henpecked —certainly nobody is going to get up and say that he is—and goes to the grocery store and does the shopping, to be fully aware of the problems in this regard.

However, the housewife is well aware of the fact that every time she goes shopping prices increase by one or two cents and that often the produce she buys is subject to sleazy merchandising, improper labelling and in many cases fraudulent advertising. I do not know the legal situation in this regard. If I were a lawyer I might not feel the same way about these things. In my opinion there may not be a federal case for the courts, but with regard to most consumer goods we are receiving representations that in my opinion are justified. The quality of products is not in conformity with the advertising. This is true, of course, with respect to soaps and many other things. Each manufacturer says that his product is the best, and being a layman I wonder how every product can be the best and none can be inferior. I believe the consumer will demand that certain things be done in this field.

I know that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway will continue to press for action in this area, and as she continues to press for action the women of this country will learn that they have a voice in this house and a defender of their rights in the political arena. In time we will find that the women of the country will become more and more vocal in this respect and something will have to be done to solve their problems. Attention will have to be paid to their requests. I suggest to the government that they will in the future find themselves in a much better position if they accept this suggestion and do something about it. They should take this suggestion under consideration and at least be willing to put these two departments together, namely, the department of the registrar general and the department of consumers' affairs. If they wished they could have an associate minister of that branch because I can see some difficulties in uniting these two branches without a major change in clause 8.

I hope the government will give consideration to the proposal. More important, I hope the senior civil servants, who are already wedded to the bill they have prepared, will give some consideration to it because I am sure their wives will tell them that this is a very important matter. I have been here long enough to know that if there are good arguments supplied by some of the senior civil servants the minister is generally quite prepared to adopt them.

Mr. Saltsman: I should like to call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF MOTION NO. 38 TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask consent of the house to make two motions to refer subject matters to a standing committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Before we agree, what is the subject matter?

Mr. Stewart: In one instance we have a motion dealing with the matter of highway safety. This is similar to several other motions that have been referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs. The other is the subject matter of Bill No. C-176, which appears on page 22 of the order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to move these two motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the subject matter of private members' notice of motion No. 38 be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask as a matter of information—I assume this is so—whether the mover of the motion has consented?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the fact.

Motion agreed to.

REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-176 TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the subject matter of Bill No. C-176 be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the two motions moved by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works, I ask on behalf of my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood if the parliamentary secretary would consider also moving that the subject matter of Bill No. C-105, order No. 68, be referred to the same committee?

Mr. Stewart: I shall be glad to look at that particular order to see if it cannot be treated in a similar way.

Mr. Knowles: It deals with insanity too, so let us get it off the floor.

PROCCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), Agriculture—importation of eggs into Canada; the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), Trade—Canada-West Indies—steps to bring about improvement; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), External Affairs—assistance to developing countries in population control.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO BOARDS OF DIRECTORS

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre) moved:

That, in order to provide elected representation on the boards of crown corporations and other companies as may be owned, operated, or controlled by the federal government, this house is of the opinion that the government should consider the advisability and the expediency of taking such steps as will provide for the appointment from time to time of members of this house as unpaid directors of some or all of such crown corporations or companies for a term not longer than the life of one parliament.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will be as amiable in dealing with this resolution as it has just demonstrated it can be in dealing with the two motions put forward by the parliamentary secretary. Before I commence my remarks on this subject I should like to say a word of encouragement to the new members of parliament in connection with any bills or notices of motion they may put on the order paper. In February, 1964, I put this motion on the order paper. Since that time a number of sessions as well as an election have intervened and a new parliament is in progress.

I can only suggest to new members, who feel some discouragement about their particular ideas which they would like to be discussed publicly, that they should not be discouraged but put them on the order paper and some day, as a result of that famous draw for position that takes place in the Speaker's office in connection with motions and bills, they may get up to No. 17. This will mean that they will be able to air their views.

I suggest that the motion today is an interesting one, not just because it is in my name and seconded by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) but because it does cover an area of increasing public concern. Regardless of the disposal of this motion today, Mr. Speaker, I hope we have a good discussion of it. I hope we can have a non-partisan discussion because a reading of the motion will indicate there is no mention of the fact that representation on these crown corporations should be only by the members of one party or those representing the government side of the house.

There are three purposes underlying the notice of motion and I should like to put them forward for consideration. The first is that such representation on the boards of directors of crown corporations would serve as a taxpayers' watch dog. Second—I will elaborate on this as I go on—there is an opportunity provided for involvement and participation on the part of members of parliament. I believe that this involvement and participation is very much in line with the thinking of most of the private members of parliament these days is something which could be raised, and we should be working toward that end. This raising of the status of private members is the third purpose of the notice of motion.

With regard to the first point of having what I call a taxpayers' watch dog on various crown corporations, and they fall into different categories, this is doubly necessary at a time of increasing expenditure on the part of public bodies which largely are cut off from any direct responsibility to the taxpayers, the people who in some instances are subsidizing their very operation.

I might not have put this motion on the order paper if that trend toward indirect spending had been diminishing rather than increasing, but there is an increasing trend toward what I consider to be a deflection away from the principle for which parliament was originally set up. Basically, I think the original and perhaps only purpose of parliament was to make a very close examination and give final approval or rejection of the spending of tax dollars. I have heard it said in this house that really this is the main purpose of the House of Commons, to pass estimates and approve the spending of tax dollars.

The matter which concerns me, Mr. Speaker, and I believe should concern every member of the house, is that increasing amounts of tax dollars are being put at the disposal of non-elected people and bodies whose only responsibility to the public, through this house, is to a minister of the crown. We all know the position of ministers of the crown who report to the house on behalf of crown corporations when questions are put to them. I suggest that the only reply they can make is that they will refer the questions to the crown corporations concerned and will report back to the house. The min ster really only serves as a channel to obtain the opinions of people serving on a non-elected board.

May I, Mr. Speaker, in case we do not realize the amount of money involved quickly run down some of the figures about which we are talking today. If I might digress a little, when this motion was placed on the order paper a little over two years ago considerable attention and publicity was given to it in the press, and some interest by way of correspondence was also shown.

I am not saying that the motion is perfect in all respects, but the idea of more direct control over spending by the House of Commons did seem to receive quite favourable comment and commendation in the press. At any rate, one article outlined the three types of agencies or corporations. There were three groups: the agency corporations, the proprietary corporations and other corporations.

In the first group appear such giants as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, with a budget of $62 million. Then there were Crown Assets Disposal Corporation with a budget of $6.5 million, the National Capital Commission with an $84.4 million budget, the National Harbours Board with a $470.7 million budget, and Northern Canada Power Commission with a budget of $28.5 million.

The figures in the second category are as follows, and I presume that these figures are now two years out of date. There are such proprietary corporations as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with a budget of $108.3 million, the Canadian National Railways with assets of $3,754 million, Overseas Telecommunications, $61.8 million, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $2,000 million, St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, $507.3 million and, of course, there is the Bank of Canada with assets of $3,300 million.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that these are terrific sums of money which have been placed in the hands of corporations some of which operate at a profit. Of course, profit is a relative thing, so I do not think that is a great point; but some of them do operate under a deficit, and I think that is a very pertinent consideration. We have placed huge sums of money at the disposal of these corporations, some of which are subsidized with the taxpayers' money, but no direct control over them is exercised by members of parliament.

My understanding as a representative of a constituency is that one of my duties here is to keep track, as much a I can, of taxpayers' dollars and how and where they are being spent. Some people fear the political control which one member of parliament might exert over the board of directors of one of these crown corporations. However, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is a fallacious argument against this proposal. I cannot see that one member of parliament, even if he be most loquacious, in the minority position he would be in on a board of 15 or 20 directors would have a very disastrous effect on that board.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. Walker: Yes, sir.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member not be disturbed if, say, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) became a director of the C.N.R.?

Mr. Walker: No, Mr. Speaker, I would not at all. I say that because, in the limited way in which we examine these crown corporations in our house committees, the hon. member for Lapointe has in my judgment done a very good job. I believe that besides such examination in committee any member of this house should be permitted to bring a public opinion before a board of directors of a crown corporation, something which in my judgment is now lacking in light of some of the decisions which have been made.

One of the problems created by the policies of crown corporations is that inevitably, if the policies are good, parliament does not get any credit for them. However, if they are bad policies, parliament and the government, whether it be formed by those on the opposition benches or by us on this side, get the blame.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it is pretty galling to me when as a member of parliament I return to my riding to be blamed and criticized by taxpayers for some decision taken by a crown corporation over which I or this parliament have no control and no opportunity at the policy-making level at least to present a point of view. I see no danger in one lone member of parliament ruling a crown corporation.

Mr. Whelan: Do not forget the I.D.B.

Mr. Walker: My hon. friend from Essex South suggests that the I.D.B. might well use the services of a member of parliament. I do not exempt the I.D.B. or any crown corporation or board from having the benefit of an hon. member serving with it, without pay.

My next point has to do with raising the status of members of parliament. There has been a move in the last few years around here, not just by public relations and press releases but by making possible new areas of opportunity, to raise the status of the member of parliament and to attempt to employ more of his experience. We have a tremendous amount of experience in this house springing from the municipal level, the legal and engineering fields and other fields. There has been quite a move to try to raise the status of members of parliament. I suggest one of the best ways this can be done is for a member of parliament to have an opportunity, on behalf of parliament and the taxpayers, of becoming involved at the director's level in the operation of some of our crown corporations. I do not see any objection to this sort of thing.

One of the problems that the backbencher or member of parliament has to face is that he has to try to cover a whole field of knowledge and try to know a little about everything. My own view is that a parliamentarian could carve out a career for himself by becoming expert in one or two fields, thus being of great assistance to this house. If we had hon. members from any side of the house who in debate could give us facts that we do not always get now, it would be to the benefit of this house. Sometimes when a minister has to report to the house he is only reporting information that in my judgment could be called hearsay, although such report is often written and comes from a crown corporation.

May I mention another thing that may not be generally known. Many crown corporations do not come under the control of the Auditor General. I understand that many crown corporations, especially the ones running at a deficit, do not use the services or come under the aegis of the Auditor General. The Auditor General of Canada does not have the same authority with respect to crown corporations in the examining of their books as he has with government departments. In that regard the crown corporations are doubly cut off, so to speak, from public scrutiny in the expenditure of money.

Some other countries do not employ the techniques I have suggested and I am sure that other speakers will mention this fact. I can only tell hon. members of one country where they go much farther in these matters than my suggestion. Members of the two chambers of the Swedish parliament are elected by parliament as members of the boards of directors of two institutions in Sweden which are placed directly under parliamentary control, namely, the Bank of Sweden and the National Debt Office. The members of parliament are elected for a period of three years. They represent all the democratic political parties represented in the Riksdag and are members of considerable experience in parliamentary life. Members of parliament are appointed by the government to the boards of directors of more important government-owned corporations in Sweden as, for instance, the Ore Mining Company of Kiruna, the Tobacco Monopoly, the Kreditbanken which is the state bank for commercial transactions, the Scandinavian Airlines System, and the like. Members of parliament are also elected by the government to the boards of directors of privately-owned insurance companies in Sweden. I do not suggest that we in this country go as far as this.

I believe that a careful reading of my resolution will allay any fears on the part of those people who think that what I propose would go this far. I suggest that my resolution would return to the members of this parliament one of the basic rights and basic responsibilities that we have, which is the right of knowing what is going on before we are faced with a fait accompli.

I do not suppose in this one hour this afternoon we are going to make any decisions about this matter. I think that the house, by leave—and I know what Beauchesne, citation 202 (6), says about moving motions—might do certain things. I think that the house might allow this resolution to be considered by a new standing committee that we have set up, the crown corporations committee. I see no danger in this, and the matter could be gone into more fully. The dangers that some people think exist in this resolution could be examined, as could some of the advantages.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis), who I understand is here, that:

The standing committee on crown corporations be empowered to consider private members notice of motion No. 17 and report back to the house.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member himself has pointed out, there is a requirement for unanimous agreement before the motion can be considered in the house. There is also a procedural flaw in that the hon. member having proposed the original motion cannot propose the amendment. Nevertheless hon. members may want to indicate their views in connection with the amendment now moved by the hon. member.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to enter this debate until I first considered who was moving the motion. However, after listening to the very interesting comments of the hon. member who has just spoken I think I should say a word or two. At the outset I cannot think of any reason why this matter could not be referred to the committee that the hon. member suggests. There would be greater opportunity for considering his proposal in committee because our time is limited here.

I throw out just a few ideas with regard to the motion. It is attractive at first glance. How practical it is is something that would have to be considered.

I think the hon. member is quite right when he says that the main function of parliament, which still subsists, is to determine how much money shall be exacted from the people by taxation and then to scrutinize very carefully how that money shall be spent. Although that purpose still lies with parliament and although we try to exercise it, we all know it is very difficult to maintain that supervision over taxation and expenditure that we should like. On the other hand, I do not think it is quite right to suggest that many of these crown corporations are not subjected to rather careful scrutiny. I had a fair bit of experience with this in days gone by, particularly with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for which I reported to this house for about six years.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is not a profit-making organization; it is one of those in which we invest money year after year. We have done so regularly with general approval, as well as with great success judging by the results that have been achieved. My point in this connection is that as the minister responsible for this corporation I was obliged, after meeting with the directors and hearing their views as to their requirements, to put their suggestions before treasury board and before the cabinet. So an examination of the expenditure contemplated by the organization was carried out by channels competent to consider the matter.

Treasury board, which is a committee of ministers of the crown assisted by officials, is very well qualified to examine requests for money. From my own experience, sometimes treasury board can be ruthless in rejecting even the soundest arguments for utilizing tax money in certain directions. My recollection is that a careful examination of requirements was made by treasury board and by cabinet before the government consented to present to parliament a request for an allocation of money to be made to Atomic Energy of Canada.

I believe this applies to all the crown corporations the hon. member mentioned. So although members of parliament are not sitting on the boards of these corporations numerous members of parliament, particularly those in the cabinet, are directly concerned. They, treasury board and finally the whole cabinet have a chance to look carefully at the proposed expenditure. In this way there is a review of expenditure.

On the other hand, it is true that parliament as a whole does not have the same opportunity for detailed study as is given to members of the cabinet. Whether or not the hon. member's suggestion would result in an improvement, I do not know. If members of parliament were appointed to these boards it would certainly provide opportunities for them to become more or less expert in the operation of some of these organizations. This would obviously be an advantage. However, at the moment I do not consider that parliament as a whole would gain appreciably. One or two members might learn a lot about the operation of Atomic Energy of Canada or Polymer or C.N.R. or the National Capital Commission but I am not sure whether their contribution in the house would be greater than that made by those members of the cabinet who have responsibility for these organizations. And we all know that opportunity to discuss such matters, whether in committee or not, is limited.

I ask the hon. member this question. How does one guard against the involvement of a member of parliament sitting on a board of directors which is spending money and letting contracts in respect of which decisions have to be made by the board? Would the member of parliament have a vote in connection, say, with the letting of substantial contracts to some firm? And if he were involved to such an extent, would this be wise? Suppose some difficulty arose in a corporation—fortunately, we have been free from this and I hope we shall continue to be free from it—because of a mistake being made or because funds were misappropriated. If, following some quite innocent action or ignorance or inertia on his part, something went wrong with the affairs of the corporation, he might be very much embarrassed. I put this forward for the hon. member's consideration.

Mr. Walker: Is that a question?

Mr. Churchill: Would you like to answer it now?

Mr. Walker: Without closing the debate, may I simply say I think these are the very questions which might be discussed in detail in the committee if the subject of this resolution is sent to a committee for consideration. It might well be that an hon. member should not vote on such a board, that he should simply put forward his view. As I say, these are questions which it seems to me might best be put forward and answered in committee.

Mr. Churchill: That is why I am raising them, as a guide for committee study. I was interested in what the hon. member had to say in regard to the status of members of parliament, particularly the status of so-called backbenchers. This is often mentioned; people talk about raising the status of members of parliament. I confess that this is one problem which has never worried me. It never bothered me when I first came to this house and sat against the curtains at the back, a position in the house which I found much more agreeable than any other place I have occupied because you are not under the same amount of observation and you can ease yourself out of the chamber without being noticed, whereas when you get to the first or second rows it is noticeable when you rise and leave.

I have never been bothered by this question of the status of a member of parliament. When I was a backbencher it did not bother me. I do not know why it should bother anybody. As all of us here know that it is a considerable achievement to get elected. Not only has a member of this house to be selected by the people in his area but he has to win a nominating convention, which is often more difficult than winning an election. After that he has to win an election. So it appears to me his status is fairly well established simply by belonging to this institution for which I have such a high regard.

It is not necessary to raise the status of members of the house by putting them on the boards of crown corporations. Status depends on the individual, on the contribution he makes here. A member who makes himself an expert in any field generally gets the ear of the House of Commons. In my experience it is up to the individual member to do the work, get the information and acquire the knowledge so that he is listened to by his colleagues in the house.

I am not at all certain that raising the status of a member of the house is one of the factors that should be considered in this otherwise interesting proposition. Status rests with the member himself. Members who are diligent in attendance and competent in their work acquire a status at least within their own party, though not necessarily in the eyes of the people who sit opposite them.

When a matter comes up in the house upon which a member is recognized as somewhat of an expert he is immediately called upon to represent his party and participate in the debate. I would not use the matter of status as an argument in connection with the motion before us. I have thrown out these suggestions as points that should be considered before the motion is pursued further. As I said in my opening remarks, if it is advisable to send the motion to a committee for further study then I see no great objection to that, but I think it should not be passed in the house without that step being taken.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I listened sympathetically to the arguments advanced by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) because I realize the growing problem of giving adequate scrutiny to the work of government. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) referred to the necessity for scrutinizing the expenditures of government, a task which falls to members of parliament. It is a difficult task to perform adequately, and it is because of that that the hon. member for York Centre has moved this motion seeking to place parliamentarians on the boards of crown corporations which perform various tasks on behalf of the crown.

To give hon. members some idea of the increase in the size of the task which falls to a house which has not enlarged its own size very much, we might note that the whole central services of government, including parliament, were contained in the three buildings on this hill in 1867. Of course the three buildings of that time were not as big as they are now. The old parliament building itself had one storey less than at present. It contained its own heating system.

The east and west blocks were about half their present size and these three buildings represented parliament and the whole central civil service of the Canadian government of that day. It was not until about 1885 that the first building containing government offices was built off the hill. That was the Langevin block on Wellington at the corner of Elgin street. The only other off the hill building for the civil service before world war I was the Connaught building on Mackenzie avenue. The museum, mint and archives had been built but did not contain departments of government.

Let us compare that with what is contained in some of the notes on the size of government in the opening paragraphs of volume I of the Glassco report, page 19, describing the scope of modern-day government. At the time of its publication it identified a total of 116 departments and agencies, the armed forces, 21 statutory boards, 42 corporations and 29 miscellaneous statutory officers, commissions and councils. It said that the government in 1960, occupied 180 million square feet of building space, the equivalent of over 100 buildings each the size of a football field and 28 storeys in height, with the value of real estate holdings estimated at $4 billion. That is the size of government and crown corporations which members must cope with when examining expenditures which today are between $6 billion and $7 billion per year.

If we were to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for York Centre of sending parliamentarians to serve on the boards of crown corporations we would be breaking new ground among commonwealth parliaments because this is not a practice which is followed in the parliaments of the old dominions. I am grateful to the hon. member for giving me an opportunity to look at some of the material which he collected on this subject over the course of some two years during which he was waiting for his motion to creep forward on the order paper and take first place for discussion today.

I want to refer first to a letter from the office of the High Commissioner for the Commonwealth of Australia which reads in part as follows:

> The Postmaster General's department has advised that in no case is there provision for a member of parliament to be an official or an ex officio member of any of the boards or commissions which come within the province of the department.
> The Attorney General's department has advised us that there are two bodies on which members of the commonwealth parliament may serve, such provision being made in the legislation which established them. These two bodies are the National Library of Australia and the Australian National University . . . .
> In the case of the Australian National University, the act provides that the council shall include two members of the Senate elected by the Senate and two members of the House of Representatives elected by the house. No member of the council is paid any remuneration for his services on the council.

Then there is correspondence from the British High Commissioner which reads:

> —the membership of almost all such public boards, or boards of directors of government-owned companies, automatically disqualifies a member of the House of Commons from continuing as a member of the house. He could not normally escape disqualification by declining to be paid a salary, since in general the offices which disqualify a member from membership of the House of Commons are those for which salaries either will or might be paid.

This was the view of Sir Henry Lintott on the subject. There is further correspondence on the subject from the High Commissioner of New Zealand. He writes:

> —it has not been the practice to appoint serving members of the House of Representatives to serve as unpaid directors of crown corporations. I would think that possibly the State Advances Corporation corresponds in some measure to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, while possibly the Bank of New Zealand may be similar to the Bank of Canada. The boards of these institutions however do not comprise serving members of parliament. A somewhat similar position obtains in respect of producer organizations, though of course on occasions persons who have been past members of the house have been appointed. It is correct that the Minister of Works is chairman of the National Roads Board but this is a statutory body of a somewhat different character and the work of the roads board is of course carried out by officers of the Ministry of Works.

Finally, I should like to make reference to a letter which comes from the office of the embassy of the United States. They express a somewhat similar view. They make reference to the case of Springer v. Philippine Islands of 1928 in respect of which the United States Supreme Court ruled, six justices to three, that a statute of a territorial legislature which authorized the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of the said legislature to serve, without compensation, on a committee of three empowered to vote the stock owned by the territorial government in a bank and in a coal company chartered by the legislature was void by reason of conflict with the principle of the separation of powers. This is the stand of the government of Great Britain and Canada and is the parliamentary philosophy to which we adhere. Nevertheless the balance of the case which is cited perhaps is of interest to the house:

Consistently with that principle, according to the court, "members of the legislature . . . (cannot be) charged with the performance of" non-legislative functions. "Assuming, for present purposes, that the duty of managing this property . . . is not sovereign but proprietary in its nature, the conclusion must be the same."

I think this is the argument the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was making, that is, that there is a proprietary interest here even in a crown corporation.

"The property is owned by the government, and the government in dealing with it whether in its quasi-sovereign or its proprietary capacity nevertheless acts in its governmental capacity. There is nothing . . . to suggest that the legislature in acting in respect of proprietary rights of the government may disregard the limitation that it must exercise legislative and not executive functions.

Whether the members of the committee are public officers in a strict sense we do not find it necessary to determine. They are public agents at least, charged with the exercise of executive functions, and, therefore, beyond the appointive power of the legislature."

I do not know whether such a decision would apply to the House of Commons of Canada if this matter were referred to a committee of the house, but in any event one sees that to work out such a procedure certainly is not an easy thing for this house to do. There is no deep precedent in Australian, British or United States parliamentary practice and undoubtedly we would find difficulty in setting up such a procedure here. Nevertheless I should like to repeat what I started out by saying, that there is great difficulty for the parliamentarian to scrutinize the work of a growing number of crown corporations. Any member of parliament who has served, for example, on the committee on transport and communications has seen how difficult it is to come to grips with any comprehensive examination of the Canadian National Railways. He knows precisely how difficult it is to find out what goes on within the heart of a crown corporation. When Donald Gordon and the officials of the Canadian National Railways appear before the committee on transport and communications, so often we are told that it is not in the interest of that crown corporation for us to probe into the matter of the rates and the trucking aspects of Canadian National Railways because this would put them at a competitive disadvantage vis-à-vis their various competitors.

If we begin to examine the corporation to find out what it does on behalf of the people of Canada, administered as it is on behalf of the crown, we find that the pullman curtain is pulled shut and only the bare tiptoes of Donald Gordon's slippers slip out from beneath the pullman curtain and, try as we will, we cannot see what is behind it. So we see removed from us, as explained by the hon. member for York Centre, a growing number of crown corporations and members do not have an opportunity to give close scrutiny to the expenditures and actions of a large section of the crown and the government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, and I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member for Rosthern that it is not quite seven o'clock, but I interrupt the hon. member who now has the floor so that I may refer to the purported amendment moved by the hon. member for York Centre. There are a number of difficulties concerning this amendment. For one thing we would need another mover of the amendment. Has the hon. member thought of this difficulty? Does he propose to have the amendment moved by someone else?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I would rather have the bill go down because of an incorrect amendment than have it talked out.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure this is the reason it is not being put to a vote but in any event the hour assigned to the consideration of this matter has expired.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Speaker, could we invite some other hon. member to move the amendment, because it is an interesting one?

Mr. Speaker: I was going to suggest that even if it were moved by someone else we would have difficulty because it would be a substantive motion to have it referred to a standing committee and would require 48 hours' notice. The difficulty might be surmounted if there were unanimous consent, but in any event the hour reserved for private members' business now has expired.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 6—Department of the Registrar General established.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take up much of the time of the committee tonight. However, I should like to make two points regarding the formation of a consumers department. Some question has been raised regarding the constitutionality of such a department and the role of the federal government in the affairs of consumers. I for one would be the last to minimize the difficulties involved in the establishment of such a department. However, I think there are many things that could be done by the federal government in this area and I want briefly to indicate some of them.

I introduced a private members bill calling for the establishment of a prices review board in which I asked for an amendment to the Combines Investigation Act which would give the administration the power to cause an inquiry to be made in respect of any increase in the price of a commodity, with a view to determining whether the increase in the cost of materials and labour warranted the imposition of such a price increase on the public.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I believe such an amendment would be in order, but I am not sure that one would be necessary in view of the powers now contained in the Combines Investigation Act. The MacQuarrie committee report of 1951 recommended that the department be divided into two sections. It specifically recommended that the powers of investigation and research be strenghtened in order to get rid of the cops and robbers attitude, and to provide more information to the public and the government in terms of the economic implications of what is taking place in Canada.

In consideration of what a consumers department might do, I think the most important function would be that of supplying information after investigation. I am not sure that the envisaged department should have the power of enforcement, because I think if the consumer is sufficiently informed after an extensive investigation into economic situations he will probably be in a position to take the situation in hand.

One of the greatest difficulties in obtaining justice for consumers relates to the dispensing of publicity, keeping the consumer informed. Some very good moves have been made in this direction, but a consumers bureau could do much more to ensure that this type of information is made available to the public. In this regard I should like to quote from Hansard of May 8, 1923 at page 2605. At that time Mr. Mackenzie King was dealing with the question of providing information to the public, and pointed out the importance of keeping the public informed. He said:

> What is the power of the Criminal Code to prosecute some particular person or group of persons in comparison with the power of spreading broadcast throughout the land accurate and true information with regard to a situation which is inimical to the public interest, and which the people themselves are certain to be concerned in remedying.

That statement was made quite some time ago and I think there has been a tendency since then to forget this great truth. If the public is to make intelligent decisions it must have information at its disposal, and it is our hope that a consumers bureau could supply this kind of information.

Some work of this nature is being done at this time. Just recently I saw a booklet published by the food and drug directorate. That was an excellent booklet and is a step in the right direction, but we need far more of this sort of thing. We must have a department to make sure that information of this kind is published in respect of consumer goods generally, rather than in an isolated and spasmodic manner.

The Consumers Association of Canada has approached the government on many occasions to indicate its point of view. This is a voluntary group which has tried to help the consumer by making certain information available to the consuming public. It is significant to note that that association feels it cannot do the job by itself, but requires the co-operation of the government.

I should like to read from a letter on the letterhead of the Consumers Association of Canada over the signature of Beryl A. Plumptre, national president, dated April 12, 1966. In part she says:

> Our association feels strongly that there should be one minister of the government whose chief responsibility should be to safeguard the economic position of consumers and to ensure that in discussion of government policy due consideration will be given to the effects of this policy on consumers.

Perhaps the name of this department is not important and if we were just talking about a name this discussion would be academic. The debate raised today and the amendment that has been moved concerns far more than a name, but rather the emphasis that should be placed on the proposed department. If the government wants to do a good job in respect of consumers affairs there is no reason why such a department could not be named in the suggested fashion and made directly responsible for things relating to consumers, under the head of one minister, rather than as an adjunct to another department with other duties.

The suggested reorganization with the responsibilities that have been drawn together are, with a few exceptions, satisfactory and relevant to the entire question of consumer protection. I listened with interest and admiration to my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway the other night when she spoke about four particular needs of consumers. Many consumer needs have been enunciated by other members who have participated in this debate and I should like to refer specifically to one, that the consumer must have the right to be heard. We do not feel that the consumer's voice is heard loud enough in the councils of the cabinet. I do not attach blame to anyone particularly in this regard, but by the very nature of cabinet organization the voice of the consumer becomes submerged.

Theoretically everyone is interested in the consumer because all of us are consumers. Theoretically everyone is speaking as a consumer and for the consumer, but in practice cabinet ministers have specific responsibilities in respect of specific elements of our society. As has been pointed out, we have a Department of Industry the chief concern of which is, and certainly should be, the efficient operation and encouragement of industry in Canada. We have a Department of Trade and Commerce with its responsibilities. We have a Department of Labour with its responsibilities. We could go on in this particular fashion. We also need a department of consumer affairs because the consumer has an important role to play in the deliberations that take place in the cabinet. We could resolve many of our problems connected with tariffs and taxes if the voice of the consumer could be heard.

I should like to give the committee one indication in this regard. In Canada we have a national oil policy that has been devised over a number of years. It is a policy shrouded in vagueness. Even the person responsible for its administration has to admit on occasion that it is difficult to define and not easy to understand. There may be nothing wrong with the oil policy for Canada; I am not prepared to say. What I am prepared to say, though, is that when the national oil policy for Canada was set up, it was set up at the urging of certain interests and I question whether the implications to the consumer were fully understood, fully appreciated or fully taken into consideration.

I have received a copy of a letter that was sent to Hon. Mitchell Sharp, Minister of Finance, in connection with the national oil policy, in which the writer indicates the effect this policy is having on consumers in Canada. He is asking for a repeal of some of the orders in council that established fair market value for oil and gasoline products coming into Canada. He says:

> The order only increases profits for the integrated companies in Canada, it withdraws more than $1 million from the Canadian income tax volume, it eliminates market competition and only helps to strengthen the oil and price monopoly of the integrated companies, and punishes the Canadian consumer with excessive prices. We have made computations which show that the Canadian economy would save approximately $500 million per year for motor gasoline, if the market would be freed from the price control of the integrated companies which at the present time is supported by your government—
> It is also clear that the "fair market value" in the U.K., Aden, Germany, Italy—and even Venezuela—is around 7 cents per gallon. The difference to the protected U.S.A. price is roughly 10 cents (and Canada has the same level due to the fact that the oil market is controlled by and geared to the U.S.A. market). Multiplying these 10 cents per gallon with the Canadian motor gasoline volume (not counting aviation gasoline) of approximately five billion gallons per year gives the staggering overpricing of the Canadian customer in the range of $500 million per year. The only way to bring that figure down is restoring competition in the Canadian oil industry by exposing it without any protection to the world market.

He goes on to quote prices and other statistical details. Then he says:

The assumed reason for setting the price of imported motor gasoline at 10.5 or 12.5 cents per gallon was according to the order in council for an import at fair market values "that it affected the interests of Canadian producers or manufacturers prejudicially or injuriously".

In other words, the interests of Canadian producers or manufacturers were taken into consideration, according to what this gentleman writes in his letter, rather than the interests of the Canadian consumer. I am not prepared to say whether the national oil policy that we have in Canada is good or bad for Canada generally; I just do not know. But I do think that if there had been a cabinet minister responsible to consumers and concerned about the interests of consumers, the results might have been different.

They are very serious charges that are made in this letter to the minister. They have not been answered. I understand that these charges are provable and that the man involved is quite prepared to back them up in any way that he is asked. It may be that $500 million out of the consumers' pocket is the price we have to pay for national identity; but if this is so, the consumer should know and it should be his or her decision to make, rather than the decision of others acting in what they think is the best interests of the consumer. When we talk about tariff policies in Canada, when we talk about import duties in Canada, the voice of the consumer should be heard as a countervailing force against the other interests that call for these considerations.

I hope the government will seriously consider the suggestions we have made with respect to establishing a department of consumer affairs, with a minister responsible to parliament and the Canadian people for the operation of the department. Like many other things, this will also come to pass. I only hope that it will not go to the last minute and we do not become involved in cliff-hanging decisions. This is a propitious time, when the legislation in respect of government reorganization is being dealt with, to deal with this suggestion also. We are not asking for full-blown powers, research projects and disclosure projects immediately. We are asking that a start be made, that this responsibility be assumed, that the importance of the role of the consumer in our society and the importance of the right of the consumer to be heard in the cabinet council be recognized.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity of saying a few words—and I will be very brief, as I usually am—in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I am gravely concerned, as are many hon. members, about the fact that there does not appear to be any department whose authority it is to investigate and take the necessary action to protect the rights of the consumer. But if I am mistaken and some department has been delegated such authority, I can only say that it has been entirely remiss in its duties. However, taking into account the very obvious fact that the consumers' interests have been so completely neglected, I feel it is substantially correct to say that there is not at the present time any government authority established which is designed to take the long overdue steps necessary to protect the consumer from misleading and exaggerated advertising, unrealistic costs of financing—which in some cases is out and out robbery—deceptive packaging, inferior quality goods and all the gimmicks now being used to influence and dupe consumers into thinking that they are getting something for nothing, while in reality they are paying exorbitant prices for necessary goods, mainly because of such expensive and exaggerated advertising as well as the outlandish gimmicks to which I have referred.

May I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the prevalent rash of strikes which are seriously affecting our economy, the very alarming increase in cases of mental illness and the general feeling of unrest that appears to prevail, are all directly related to the insecurity and frustrations of people who find they have become entangled in a situation over which they have no control and over which no government department seems to have any jurisdiction.

May I further submit, Mr. Chairman, that the incidence of strikes, legal or illegal, will continue as long as our citizens are compelled to remain in this area of ever spiralling prices, of trying to stretch the pay cheque to cover the cost of every day living requirements. I do not even need to mention the thousands of our citizens who are on fixed incomes, such as meagre and insufficient pensions, old age security, and so on.

Citizens as a whole do not relish strikes, whether or not they are directly involved. Strikes, however, are about the only method of protest the average wage earner has to bring his plight to the attention of the authorities. They are caused chiefly by the fact that the wage earner, who is also the prime consumer, finds that the requirements of a decent mode of living are getting beyond the reach of his or her income.

Let me direct the attention of hon. members to the heading of an editorial which appeared in the Gazette under date of May 30, 1966. The heading is, "Completely Out of Hand", and the editorial deals with the unsatisfactory and alarming situation now prevailing across our country with respect to strikes in general and the so-called illegal strikes in particular. I cannot say that I agree with all that is contained in the editorial I have mentioned, however, I do agree with the emphasis that has been placed on the increasing seriousness of the incidence of strikes in general.

The Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but I feel he should restrict his remarks to the amendment now before the house.

Mr. Fawcett: With deference to you, Mr. Chairman, I hope to show you that these remarks are relevant to the general subject. It is my humble opinion that the situation will become more alarming each successive week and each successive month, unless concrete action is taken by some authoritative body to investigate the apparent gouging of the consumer and to take some effective action to provide the kind of protection that is so urgently needed.

My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, when speaking to her notice of motion on a subject which is directly related to the amendment, quoted a resolution which was adopted by the town council of Espanola, requesting just such a department of government as is suggested in the amendment. In this regard may I suggest that a great number of northern Ontario municipalities and town councils endorsed that Espanola resolution. I received a copy of the resolution, as well as a great number of letters from municipalities and town councils endorsing it. Every time I return to my riding I am faced with a barrage of questions about what has been done by the government to cope with the increasing costs of the necessities of life. This seems to be the main concern of all.

In addition, I receive numerous letters of complaint regarding the lack of action on this matter. I can be reasonably sure that many hon. members on the opposite side of the house also receive letters of this sort. Until some authority of government is directly charged with the responsibility of protecting the consumer, Mr. Chairman, I humbly submit that the grave situation with regard to strikes will worsen and could ultimately result in complete economic chaos. Surely, if we are to give human values the consideration they justly deserve we cannot deny the necessity of supporting this amendment. Let me say in conclusion that I welcome just such an opportunity tonight.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mrs. MacInnis) negatived: Yeas, 8; nays, 28.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 6 carry?

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Duties of Registrar General.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, clause 8 sets out the duties, powers and functions of the registrar general of Canada. The house has rejected our suggestion that the name of this department should be changed, but I think it is not being unfair for me to say that some of those who spoke against our amendment to clause 6 were not unalterably opposed to the idea of the department of the registrar general including amongst its functions some concern about matters of interest to consumers. We have made our position clear. We would prefer a department whose major responsibility was with respect to consumer affairs, but we are accepting the decision of the house on that count.

However, we do feel that at least a bit of consideration might be given to our point of view and that the committee might be willing to amend the duties, powers and functions of the registrar general so as to include some of the things about which we have been talking. We have spelled out our position in a number of speeches that have been made, so it is not necessary for me to repeat what has been said. Therefore, I move:

That clause 8 of Bill No. C-178 be amended by inserting therein immediately after subparagraph (a), the following new subparagraph:

"(b) Review of prices and matters of concern to consumers", and by relettering the subsequent subparagraphs (b), (c) and (d) as subparagraphs (c), (d) and (e).

I have copies of this amendment in both English and French, and I hope that it will commend itself to members in all parties. As hon. members will note, our suggestion is with reference to a review of prices and matters of concern to consumers, and we feel it would more logically come immediately after subparagraph (a) which deals with combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade.

This is the reason for putting this new subparagraph in right after subparagraph (a), and then suggesting that the other subparagraphs (b), (c) and (d) might be relettered (c), (d) and (e). As I say, the arguments for this position were made when we contended that the department as a whole should be geared to this important function. This idea was not accepted, but surely even those who spoke against our previous amendment will agree that there ought to be in the statute some provision making it clear that the department of the registrar general is the ministry in the government to be concerned about such things as the review of prices and matters of concern to consumers.

Mr. Benson: I presume I can obtain the support of five members, but I should like to defer the vote on this matter until eight o'clock.

• (7:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order. The Chair has some doubt whether it can really put this amendment to the committee. First, I would say that it does not appear to be relevant to the clause before the committee. Second, I would refer hon. members to May's seventeenth edition, page 549, paragraph (2), which reads as follows:

An amendment cannot be admitted, if it is governed or dependent upon amendments which have already been negatived.

Paragraph (3) on page 549 reads as follows:

An amendment must not be inconsistent with, or contrary to, the bill as so far agreed to by the committee, nor must it be inconsistent with a decision of the committee upon a former amendment.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, are you ruling before listening to argument?

The Chairman: I will hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you, sir. May I suggest that there is an answer to each of the points Your Honour has been presenting to us. First, may I suggest that the subject matter of this amendment is certainly relevant to the whole function of the registrar general. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister himself when he spoke on second reading of the bill referred to consumer affairs as something which, if dealt with anywhere, might be dealt with by an extension of the powers of the registrar general.

Likewise, the President of the Privy Council, in speaking to the amendment proposed today by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, dealt on his own initiative with the whole question of consumer affairs and with what might be done for the people under this heading. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is not introducing something brand new into this area; this is simply expanding a concept which, in the words of the Prime Minister and in the words of the President of the Privy Council, is already there.

The second argument Your Honour has tossed at us is the suggestion that we cannot move as another amendment a subject which has already been the subject of an amendment which has been negatived by a previous vote, or by a vote under some other heading. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the vote on the amendment to clause 6 was merely a vote on the change of the name of the department. There is no reference in clause 6 to the functions of the department of the registrar general. Clause 6 of the bill merely gives a name to the department. I submit that an amendment that sought to change the name, having been defeated, is not a decision on the part of the committee as to what should be the funtions of the department.

Then Your Honour suggested that an amendment of this kind should be consistent with the provisions of the bill which have already been agreed to. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in line with the statements made by the Prime Minister on second reading and in line with the statements made today by the President of the Privy Council, this amendment is certainly consistent with the provision of the bill.

I should also remind you that on an earlier point of order Mr. Speaker gave a very interesting ruling which is pretty close to the point with which we are now dealing. Hon. members to my right in the Progressive Conservative party raised a point of order as to whether the bill was in good form in view of the fact that it had something in it which had not been mentioned in the resolution. After considerable study of this matter, Mr. Speaker ruled that the resolution need only give the general intent of the bill, making sure of course to cover any of its financial provisions. I read again today that ruling of Mr. Speaker, in preparation for anything which might arise on this occasion, and I found it a most interesting ruling in that it seemed to make it clear that so long as the bill was in line with the general intent as set out in the resolution the bill was all right.

If it is all right for the government to bring in a bill which has in it some things which are not named in the resolution because they are in line with the intent of the resolution, then I submit that that same right should be extended to the opposition or to members in any part of the house who seek to move amendments.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, because this amendment is relevant to the bill, is consistent with it, and has not in itself been previously decided on but simply seeks to expand the concept that is in the bill, I contend that Your Honour should allow it as in order.

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the validity of some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I recognize too that during the debate on this particular bill on second reading reference was made by other members of the house to this particular problem. However the Chair is guided not by what was said on the other occasion but by the contents of the bill and the rules governing amendments thereto.

I think we would be going a little far if we were to consider the debate on the amendment to clause 6 as dealing with only a change of name. During the debate there was considerable discussion of matters concerning consumer prices. I would read again the citation which appears at page 549 of May's Parliamentary Practice, seventeenth edition:

> An amendment must not be inconsistent with, or contrary to, the bill as so far agreed to by the committee, nor must it be inconsistent with a decision of the committee upon a former amendment.

I recognize that the previous amendment had to do with a change of name, but the debate surrounding the amendment had to do with consumer prices. I would therefore consider the amendment out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, but because I feel I must do so, I appeal your decision to Mr. Speaker under the terms of provisional standing order 59(4).

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, with the support of five other members, knowing that a vote must be taken in this regard, under the new rules I would object to this vote taking place.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Knowles: I think the Minister of National Revenue is under one of his misapprehensions. We have the right of appeal to Mr. Speaker. We have no right to vote with regard to the decision.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has appealed the ruling of the Chair. I think it is now the duty of the committee to go through the regular procedure.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

> Mr. Speaker, the question is an appeal to you, under the terms of Standing Order 59(4). In the committee of the whole when clause 8 of Bill C-178, respecting the reorganization of the Government of Canada, was being considered the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proposed the following amendment: that clause 8 of Bill C-178 be amended by inserting therein immediately after subparagraph (a) a following and new subparagraph (b) reading: "prices, and matters of concern to consumers", and by relettering the subsequent subparagraphs as (c), (d) and (e).
> Using paragraphs (1), (2) and (3) page 549 of May's 17th edition the Chairman ruled the amendment out of order on the following grounds:
> (a) that the substance of the amendment was not relevant to the clauses of the bill,
> (b) that in substance the amendment was in reality the same as one which was negatived earlier in the committee proceedings, and further
> (c) that the amendment was inconsistent with a decision of the committee upon a former amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure that we have employed this new rule very often. I was not sure whether one would have the opportunity of presenting argument to Your Honour, but I believe we do have that right and I am glad that Your Honour sees it the same way.

It is quite clear that under standing order 59(4) it is in order for an hon. member to appeal a ruling from the Chairman to Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless once Your Honour has ruled, that ruling cannot be appealed to the house. I should therefore like Your Honour to give consideration to the arguments which I advanced when we were in committee of the whole, in response to the points raised by the Chairman of the committee of the whole.

It was suggested that the amendment I moved, which seeks to enlarge the written powers of the department of the registrar general, was not relevant to the clause. I argued, Mr. Speaker, that clause 8 spells out the duties, powers and functions of the department of the registrar general. There is already in the bill as drafted reference to such things as combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade, not forgetting such things as patents, copyrights and trade marks, all of which have a bearing on consumer affairs.

I also sought to point out when we were in committee of the whole that the Prime Minister in his speech on second reading, and the President of the Privy Council today in committee of the whole, alleged and even claimed that there is at least some provision in the composition of this department for dealing with consumer affairs.

I suggest therefore that far from this matter being irrelevant to the clause, it is highly relevant to pin down the duties, powers and functions of the registrar general, and to make it clear that these duties, powers and functions include the possibility of reviewing prices and looking at all matters of interest to consumers.

The second point that the Chairman drew to our attention was a very well known rule with which I am very familiar and which I have often quoted, to the effect that one cannot by an amendment reopen a matter on which a decision has been taken.

The Chairman was of the opinion that an amendment we moved to clause 6 of the bill, which had been voted down not many minutes before, was the same in substance as the amendment that I proposed to clause 8.

I submit this is not the case. The chairman said that whatever the wording of the amendment to clause 6 may have been the discussion ranged all round it. Well, Your Honour knows this often happens—discussion gets all over the waterfront. But when it came to a vote, what we were voting on was a very clear and limited proposition, namely that the name of the department be changed to the department of consumer affairs and that the title of the minister be changed to minister of consumer affairs. There was no suggestion in the amendment to clause 6 as to what the functions of the renamed department might be. We had no right to do so on clause 6. The only thing we could do was to deal with the name. And this is all that was done in the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway. I suggest that however far afield the discussion may have ranged, the decision with regard to clause 6 was to turn down a suggestion for a change of name.

The third point the Chair used in ruling my amendment out of order was that it was inconsistent with a decision already taken. It seems to me that in this respect it is worth while looking at the ruling Your Honour gave on May 24 with respect to the way in which this whole piece of legislation was brought before us.

Your Honour will recall, because you indicated it took a great deal of study to reach this decision, that it was your opinion that so long as a resolution gave the intent of the bill which was to follow, and no new financial obligations were imposed, it was appropriate for the government, in the wording of the bill, to bring in anything which was consistent with that purpose. The particular case in point was that no reference had been made in the resolution to the department of forestry and rural development, whereas in the bill itself a number of clauses referred to this department. Your Honour suggested this was only a change in name and that it was not out of line with the intent or purpose set out in the resolution.

I submit to you very strongly—indeed I put it to you as an appeal—that if the government had the right in the bill to include things which were not mentioned in the resolution but which were in line with the intent of the resolution, this right ought to extend to other members of the house whether on the government side or on the opposition side.

What we have proposed is in keeping with the intent of the resolution and the intent of the legislation, namely the reorganization of the departments of the government and the recasting of their functions. If the government, without mentioning the department of forestry and rural development, had the right to put in several clauses on that aspect, I suggest that we have the right to ask that the several functions of the department of the registrar general be enlarged so as to include a review of prices and other matters of interest to consumers.

I submit that the case is a clear one on our side. Indeed, I confess to some amazement that the Chair found difficulty in accepting this amendment. I hope Your Honour will consider the arguments I have advanced and that you will find that this amendment, is, in fact, in order.

• (8:00 p.m.)

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I will just say a few words to support the arguments raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) about the validity of the proposed amendment.

It is true that an amendment to clause 6 was presented but that amendment dealt only with the title and not with the duties of the new minister.

Those are therefore two separate things since the amendment to clause 6 dealt only with the form of the bill whereas this proposal deals rather with the substance of the bill, which is quite another matter.

Clause 6 was meant only to change the name. It would probably have been a good thing because I think that a complete lack of imagination was shown in giving that title to the new minister.

I think that whoever suggested to call it the department of the registrar general showed a lack of imagination; his vocabulary is limited and he is not familiar with the dictionary or something like that. I can see myself asking a question to the minister of the solicitor general; it does not sound right. He is not called the minister of the solicitor general but the Solicitor General.

It seems to me that whoever drafted the bill should have a better vocabulary and know the dictionary better, or that the President of the Privy Council should change the name of that department, especially if he is to be its first head. I wonder how he would like to be called Mr. Registrar General? He would not be a minister but only a registrar. But the government did not want to accept that change.

But there is no mention of the name in the new amendment; it deals only with the substance of the bill, that is to say it proposes to add another duty. And now I would like to support also the second argument after supporting the first one.

It is that the proposed new role to be given to the minister does not contradict the one that is to be given to him under clause 8, as it stands now, since it is said in subparagraph (a):

Combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade;

The amendment seeks to add:

(b) Review of prices and matters of concern to consumers.

Well, there is a direct link between the matter of combines, monopolies, restrictive practices, and the review of prices which interest the consumers.

Therefore the amendment does not go against the provisions of the clause of the bill. On the contrary, it completes it. The amendment only makes things clearer and I wonder why it should not be accepted, not only from the point of view of the rules but also because it adds something important to the bill.

Clause 8 is intended to prevent combines and monopolies. The consumer should not be overlooked. That is precisely the object of the amendment and I wonder how anyone could object to it.

Third, why the amendment should be in order? The government now submits to us for discussion a bill to set up a new department that of the registrar general. If, at any point a member realizes something is lacking and makes a suggestion with a view to improving the new department, I fail to see how this could be out of order. It behooves the members to amend bills so as to perfect them. That is the business of the members of the opposition.

I feel the amendment proposed by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is intended to improve the new department we are asked to institute today. We are not dealing here with a mere question of title but with the study of prices and questions of consumer interest. This would not only improve the role of the department or its contribution, but our whole legislation as well.

That is why we feel the amendment is in order and that the arguments brought forward previously did not take into account all that happened when the first amendment was moved. We therefore ask the house to pass it. I would ask the President of the Privy Council, if he is going to be appointed registrar, to change the title. Surely a better title than that can be found.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words on the question of the admissibility of the amendment because, with respect, it seems to me that instead of the amendment's being inconsistent with anything, it was the Chairman who was inconsistent with himself—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that these words are entirely uncalled for.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, without hesitation or reservation. I meant no offence whatsoever to the Chairman and if my language was offensive I apologize to you, and to the house, and to the chairman of the committee of the whole.

What I meant to say was that there are two kinds of reasons given for this amendment's being out of order. One was the question of whether it was relevant to the bill and inconsistent with some earlier decision that was made, and the second was whether it was contrary to the first amendment, which was defeated.

It is my submission on the first two points that the fact that the first amendment was accepted admitted the relevance of the subject matter and its consistency with an earlier decision by the house, because the earlier amendment to clause 6 of the bill dealt with the subject matter of consumer affairs. It seems to me that once that was admitted as a valid amendment, then the subject matter becomes valid for all other propositions respecting amendments to the bill.

The second point I want to make is that the first amendment which was defeated dealt, as has been said, only with the name of the department. It seems to me it is not entirely logical to suggest that because the committee defeated an attempt to create a department of consumer affairs it necessarily meant the committee was opposed to adding consumer affairs as one subject, among many others, with which the department may deal. For those reasons I urge you to accept the amendment.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I submit that if the proposed paragraph (b) is not redundant to paragraph (a), then it is out of order on the basis that a decision of the house has already been taken with respect to the question of consumer affairs. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was inconsistent when he suggested that in an earlier ruling you indicated that all related matters had been covered by resolution.

The earlier amendment was to change the name of the department of the registrar general to that of the department of consumer affairs. If that were done surely it would mean that the department would be dealing with matters of concern to consumers. Otherwise the amendment had no meaning whatsoever. It was naïve of the hon. member to suggest that the proposed department of consumer affairs would not concern itself with matters of concern to consumers. The house has already registered its disapproval of a change in name to consumer affairs, and I suggest on this ground alone the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I might say that when we had a similar appeal last year in the last parliament the Speaker was in a much stronger position because he was ruling on his own judgment, and perhaps I should not have answered the call but allowed my associate, the Deputy Speaker, to rule on his own decision.

I would like to comment briefly on the different points raised by hon. members in the course of the very interesting arguments that have been submitted. I might say that very strong argument has been advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), supported by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), to the effect that adopting this amendment would not be inconsistent with the previous decision of the house or of the committee of the whole. There might be some question as to whether there is inconsistency between the two matters. I am impressed by that argument, but I shall not rule on that basis.

I shall go to the second argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, where he refers to the second and third reasons for judgment proposed by the Chairman of Committees. I might say I am not as impressed by the hon. member's suggestion that if the government has the right to include something in a bill that is not specifically in the prior resolution, this means that a member has the same right as the government. I have very serious doubts about this proposition. In other words, what the hon. member is suggesting, if I understand his argument correctly, is that if the government has the right to include certain detail in a bill, then a private member should have the same right.

I cannot agree with this, because a resolution cannot be expected to include everything that is in a bill. A resolution is always of a very general nature and invariably there are a number of clauses and matters that appear later in a bill that do not appear in a resolution.

The fact that the government has the power to do that does not give a member of the house the right to move an amendment —which might otherwise be out of order —simply because the government has this power. To my mind the position taken by the Chairman of Committees in the first objection he has to the proposed amendment, in which he refers to the question of relevancy, is very sound.

Hon. members know by experience, much longer experience than I have—and this applies particularly to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—that it is not easy to move an amendment of consequence that is relevant to a clause of a bill. In this case I do feel that the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is beyond the scope of the clause or article of the bill which he seeks to amend, and I refer him, as did the Chairman of Committees, to paragraph 1 at page 549 of May's seventeenth edition.

It is my belief that the amendment advanced by the hon. member goes beyond the scope of the clause, that the amendment adds substantially to what is being proposed in the government's bill, and for this reason I must agree with the Chairman of Committees that this amendment is irrelevant and cannot be considered. I therefore confirm the decision of the Chairman of Committees.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee was discussing clause 8, and an amendment was made thereto which the Chairman ruled out of order. Mr. Speaker confirmed the ruling of the Chairman. The committee now is on clause 8.

On clause 8—Duties of Registrar General.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to either the Minister of National Revenue or the President of the Privy Council, depending on who is in charge of this clause in the bill. In considering the functions of this department, did the government give any thought to including among its functions a review of prices or consumer affairs and, whether it did or not, will the government now consider moving, itself, the appropriate amendment to enlarge the functions of this department?

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) spoke on the second reading of this bill—and I refer to page 5431 of the English version of Hansard for May 24, 1966—he made quite clear that the government intended to explore as widely and as deeply as possible the jurisdiction of federal authorities in the consumer field with regard to those areas in which such jurisdiction has not been defined up to now. He added that the government also intended to ask—and such request has already been made to the Economic Council—for a study in the areas or spheres where federal intervention would be justified or necessary.

I said in my own remarks that the very wording of the legislation clearly reflects or indicates the government's intention to regroup under a single administration or within a single department, the statutes and organizations dealing with business matters and also with the interests of consumers.

This intention, as reflected in the present bill, indicates beyond doubt the interest taken by the government in consumers as such. Furthermore any additional piece of legislation likely to affect the consumer field shall have to be passed in the light of the recommendations made by the Economic Council, and any regulations to this effect or any regrouping of additional jurisdiction or responsibility, will have to be made after the views of the Economic Council have been submitted to the government.

On the other hand, there is something specific which has never been included in a piece of legislation up to now: the Prime Minister made clear that since there will be a minister, it will be one of his duties to speak on behalf of consumers and to protect their interests.

I repeat that in order to introduce a more precise wording of the act to the house, if necessary, the views or recommendations of the Economic Council will have to be taken into consideration.

There are other areas—and some have been considered during the debate—many areas where federal jurisdiction is being applied in the interest of the consumer. I believe, and I say this as strongly as I can, that the present act, by regrouping under the authority of a single department or a single minister, all the legislation concerning the economy and such important acts as combines investigation, bankruptcy, patents, copyright, trade marks and companies, will allow for a constant supervision of the consumer's interest and the application of the present act will allow to co-ordinate them all with a single economic policy. As a result, an immense step forward is being taken as far as the interest of the consumer is concerned.

When we object to changing the name of the department, such objection should not, directly or indirectly be construed as government objection to legislation favouring the interest of the consumer. We have simply tried to avoid a misrepresentation of the true powers, of the actual powers if you will, vested upon the new registrar general or the minister in charge of the new department.

It is clear that if, from several angles, in some of those important areas, the responsibilities of this department are directly related to the interests of consumers, the interests of corporations and commercial and industrial concerns are also involved. Consequently, I believe that simply to call this department the department of consumer affairs, would be to a certain extent, misrepresenting the facts and the departmental jurisdiction. We thought it was simpler and more appropriate to give it a traditional name, as I say, namely that of the registrar general of Canada, who already carries out extremely important responsibilities in the administration of the nation's business.

But I do want to emphasize that the important point is to see what powers and what jurisdiction are conferred by this statute. That is where one realizes, by looking at the facts, that, to a very large extent, the government is concerned with preparing and maintaining for the future, the continued protection of the consumers' interests.

This argument applies to the change in name and it must also be used to assure everyone that, by refusing to amend clause 8 of the bill, as proposed, the government does not have, as I say, any intention which is, even indirectly, inimical to the interests of the consumers.

[Mr. Favreau.]

Besides, one of the dangers of the proposed amendment was, among others, this reference to the question of prices. One realizes how dangerous this may be from the constitutional point of view.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the minister, but he is commenting on a decision that has been made.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I must say that the minister's reply represents Liberalism at its best. He is trying to tell the committee how concerned he is about consumers, and that the reason the government cannot accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is not because the government is not interested, not because it is hostile toward the consumers, not because it is hostile toward doing something for them, but because three things stand in its way.

He tells us that a study must be made. This government has been in office for three years and I have noted that almost every major issue that has confronted it has been postponed because a study was under way. It has told us that it is waiting for reports, for white papers, for the results of inquiries: We are always waiting. This is a government of tomorrow; it is always going to do something tomorrow when it receives a report, completes a survey or when somebody makes up his mind as to what should be done and passes it on. It will do something, but now is never the time: Always put off till tomorrow what is facing you today. That apparently has become the slogan of this government.

The minister tells us that the Economic Council of Canada must make a report before action is taken. Surely he is aware of the fact that the Economic Council of Canada is not making a study on this question of prices but simply going to make a long-term projection as to the relationship between wages and prices. It is doing nothing by way of a thorough and definitive study into price rises and whether or not they are justified. I invite any minister here to stand up and tell me that this council is making a study into the justification of price increases.

The hon. member for Outremont-Saint Jean shakes his head.

An hon. Member: You are wrong.

Mr. Douglas: I happen to know that I am right. I have a letter from the Prime Minister in which he states that the Economic Council of Canada is not making a study as to whether or not price increases are justified, and that their special reference does not cover such a study. The government should make up its mind as to where it is going. I do not know whether by moving far to the left the hon. member's lines of communication with the government have been cut off, but the information I have from the Prime Minister himself is to the effect that that is not the purpose of the study being made by the council.

I asked the Prime Minister a question on the orders of the day, and he wrote me a letter to make it clear that there was no study being made by the Economic Council as to whether or not price increases are justified or whether they are the result of excessive profiteering. What the government is doing in this regard, as in regard to everything else, is merely stalling, using another commission of inquiry or agency to put off the day of reckoning. The day of reckoning is getting closer every time another strike occurs or a labour dispute erupts. We are kept waiting for everything, just as we are kept waiting for the Secretary of State's white paper on broadcasting.

Miss LaMarsh: It is not June yet.

Mr. Douglas: The second excuse for not accepting the request made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre relates to the legal aspects. There is no constitutional obstacle to the government's studying prices with a view to determining whether or not increases are justified. If the government were going to endeavour to roll back prices or control them, then concurrent legislation with the provinces would be required. However, to conduct a review of prices and price increases to see whether or not they are justified, and to make those who are increasing prices come before the bar of public opinion to justify their actions, does not require any power which the federal government does not possess.

The fact is that this government has been hiding behind the constitution for as long as I can remember. Whenever it does not want to do anything it finds a constitutional difficulty—the constitution always stands in the way of anything that needs to be done—except, of course, during election campaigns, at which time the government is prepared to do everything. Whenever the government comes back and sits in this house, the good old constitution is trotted out again to provide an excuse for continuing the policy of inertia and inaction.

Finally the President of the Privy Council tells us not to be too disappointed about the fact that the government is not prepared to change clause 8 to give the new department wider powers to assist the consumers. He says there is a good deal of power and legislation which will give new administrative authority to this new department which will be of great benefit to the consumers.

The minister has referred to the anti-combines legislation. This legislation has been in existence for a long time, and for a long time it was under the jurisdiction of the minister who is now talking about it. Fairly soon it will probably come under his jurisdiction again. I should like to ask him how much good that has done the consumers over the last quarter of a century. The combines legislation has not helped the consumers. Investigations have been conducted into a score of commodities in respect of which the consumers of this country have been exploited, yet the consumers have not been protected. The minister tells us that we should be of good cheer because legislation will be forthcoming which will help the poor down-trodden consumers of this country. I say to him that if this legislation is not any better in the future than it has been in the past, heaven help the consumers. If the minister is not able to take any more aggressive action on the basis of this legislation over the next few years than has been the case in the past three years, the consumers are going to be no better off.

Mr. Chairman, the consumers of this country will not be fooled by the oral tributes which are being paid to the government today, nor by the lip service which is being foisted upon them. The consumers of this country want action, and all we are asking is that clause 8 be changed to give the minister some authority to do something for the them. We are not asking for legislation at this time, but simply that the minister be given authority when he takes office to do something under the provisions of whatever legislation the government will introduce. It is quite clear that the government is not prepared to take this simple but forward step. With friends like those in the government, the consumers do not need enemies.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, after listening to the minister a few minutes ago I could not help coming to the conclusion that the government is really interested in the consumer, and consumer affairs in this country. Looking at the clause that is before us, I cannot help feeling that if the government wanted to translate their thoughts into something tangible, a paragraph "(e) consumer affairs" could be added to the clause, which would leave the matter quite wide open. I ask the minister whether the government would be willing to add to this clause, "(e) consumer affairs."

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I was eagerly waiting for us to proceed to consideration of clause 8, that is the clause dealing with the duties of the registrar general, as mentioned in the margin, because I thought that according to clause 6, a new department was being established.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was quite surprised when I referred to the Larousse dictionary. On the other hand, I was not surprised, because there was something wrong. When I consulted the Larousse dictionary, I realzied that the word "registraire" did not even exist.

I wonder what the President of the Privy Council thinks about that? He should listen, since the name to be given to the new department is not even mentioned in the French dictionary.

Therefore, we would like to know if the government wants to create a new word. When I refer to the English dictionary, I find the word "registrar". That word exists.

But the government has the habit of translating literally without checking if a word exists. Are we going to translate "registrar" by 'registraire" when this last word is not even mentioned in the Larousse dictionary?

What will we do then? Is a new word being created? This word does not exist.

When I found that the word did not appear in Larousse, I consulted another dictionary, the unabridged Littré in several volumes, and found the word "registraire", but it is an old word, fallen into disuse, which meant:

Formerly, public keeper of registers.

And when I see the definition of the word "register"—at the time when it was being heard long ago and this should be the function of the new registrar, well, it was:

A device provided in the outlets, for smoke, gas, ovens or fire-places, to set the draught and control combustion by regulating the opening.

Well, Mr. Chairman, someone has just been appointed to the job. But the word "register" has another meaning, because the registrar is the keeper of the register. What was it in the administrative sense? It is:

A registry of large fruits.

These are large fruits.

An hon. Member: The big shots.

Mr. Grégoire: Well, now. Are we to establish a department of agriculture or a department of fruits? Mr. Chairman, what will the person appointed as registrar have to do apart from being the keeper of the registry? There is another definition. In the archaeological sense, it is:

Each of the areas in which is sometimes divided the surface of a bas-relief, a stele, a painting, a vase.

So that is what he would be the keeper of? I have all the definitions here. And it is dutifully explained that the word is obsolete, that it was used long ago. And in the new Larousse dictionary, it does not appear. The word no longer exists.

What are we to do, now? That reminds me of the words Solicitor General. It was translated from the English Solicitor. Go and see what it means in French. It does not mean the same thing at all.

And then, they come up with such words. French words are made up and translated from the English by sound, even completely meaningless, even more non-existent.

Just wait; here is the definition of "solicitor general", according to the French dictionary:

Solicitor: a person who applies for a job, who begs for a favour, a service.

Hence, the man appointed there, is the man who has begged a favour, a service, in short who has applied for a job. This proves, Mr. Chairman, that when the government comes to us with legislation, or with the names of ministers, translation is made by ear, by sound; it sounds the same, doesn't it? "Solicitor", solliciteur"; "registrar", is simply translated by "registraire". It is not even in the dictionary; that does not matter, let us go ahead.

What shall we do, Mr. Chairman? Shall we agree to the creation of a new word simply to create a new department. I am against it.

Something is wrong somewhere. The government will have to take a decision. Has the Canadian government decided to create other words? Will they invent a new dictionary? And there, we are told that the registrar—even though we accept what it is, the word is not in the dictionary—is the man who will look after combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade.

Now, formerly in Latin texts the word "registraire" was used. The word "register" exists and it is correct. But, the "registre", in the past, was a collection of books where were kept the memoirs and letters of various Popes. They were books and letters where the memories of Popes were recorded. It used to be French. They have done away with all that.

The Registrar is asked to deal with monopolies, patents, bankruptcies. The Pope is mixed up in bankruptcies and insolvency.

Mr. Chairman, I tell you very frankly, I ask the President of the Privy Council to change the name at least. We are told that he will be in charge of corporations, combines and that he will bear the title of "registraire". Those who bore it before him were dealing with equipment used in furnace flues or gas apparatus. The President of the Privy Council is going to take this very title.

Mr. Chairman, it seems that I should leave it at that. The President of the Privy Council should perhaps ask the committee to adjourn its business so as to find another name that exists really instead of being satisfied with an obsolete name.

Miss LaMarsh: I am at present Registrar of Canada.

Mr. Grégoire: You are going to be registrar?

Miss LaMarsh: I am at present.

Mr. Grégoire: It is a name that does not exist, that is where the difficulty lies; you do not find it in the dictionary.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the President of the Privy Council is ready to make up his mind, and have the name changed. I feel that it is time to stop translating English words in French consonant words. A "solicitor" is called in French a "solliciteur". We know quite well that both words have not the same meaning. "Registrar" appears in the English dictionary, it is true, but not in the French dictionary. Another word should therefore be substituted and new names which cannot be found in French should not be used. This is not bilinguism, rather it is an attempt to create words, and this is prejudicial to the French language. I do not think that such is the wish of the President of the Privy Council and this is why I am asking him to move an amendment in order to change the name of the new Department and give it a more proper one.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: I wonder if I could ask the hon. member whether the word "separatist" appears in his dictionary?

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps we could have this dictionary placed in Hansard.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I am ready to answer that question.

Separatism: a desire of the inhabitants of a territory to secede from the State to which it belongs.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the use the hon. member for Lapointe is making of the dictionary is less successful than the marvellous applications he has been known to make in the house, of quotations from Pascal.

I could say this to him, which might not be based on precedent but could still be put forward as a precedent. In reply to an interlocutor who blamed him for having used in one of his works a word which, according to that man was not French, Victor Hugo replied: "If it was not, I have used it and so it has become French."

Mr. Grégoire: If the minister will allow me, the word already exists in English and it is being gallicized. That is not the same thing. French words are being created. The French language is beautiful enough, colourful enough, to create new words without having to borrow English words and Frenchifying them.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, seriously speaking, the expression "Registrar General" has been accepted for decades among French speaking Canadians. The role of the Registrar General is in Canada a traditional one; it is now part of the functions of the Secretary of State, as the Registrar General of Canada pointed out a while ago. I do not feel that maintaining it in our own vocabulary is an affront to the French language in Canada, for we too have a right to our own expressions; this one has already been sanctioned by usage in this particular meaning.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I have here a copy of "Le Dictionnaire Canadien" (The Canadian Dictionary), published by Messrs. Jean-Paul Vinay, Pierre Daviault and Henry Alexander who co-operated in its preparation. I could read a complete list of three pages of professors of universities who have also co-operated in the preparation of this dictionary in which the word "registraire" is defined as follows:

[English]

Registraire general du Canada—Registrar General of Canada—to keep a record of—minutes—trade registrar.

Then, the expression "Registraire du Canada" is quite Canadian, and I prefer to rely on the opinion of those who prepared this dictionary than on that of the member for Lapointe; so I hope the latter will bow to the Canadian Dictionary.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member for Cochrane has just said confirms precisely what I put forward some time ago. The new department will be called the department of the registrar general of Canada. Care is being taken to say "Registrar General of Canada" and to define the thing in English. The English words are being translated into French. Nobody seeks to find some typically French expression. People rather wish to Frenchify some English expressions. This is what the hon. member for Cochrane proves through the definition he has just quoted from the dictionary. It is quite evident that, at the present time, the Secretary of State, who is actually the Registrar of Canada, at least according to the expression used, will not object if some current expression as "go-go girls" is chosen and translated into French, but this does not mean that the expression has a French character.

I object to the idea of people picking up an English word that they try afterwards to Frenchify. Let us choose some French word that we shall apply according to the true tradition.

Mr. Choquette: May I ask a question to the hon. member for Cochrane? Is he aware that the word "créditiste" is an Anglicism and that it tends to disappear?

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I was not aware that the word "créditiste" was an English word, but I know perfectly well that the hon. member for Lapointe accepts gladly to travel in a "yacht" and that such word is not a French word.

[English]

The Chairman: Perhaps it is about time the committee got back to clause 8.

Mr. Schreyer: I do not wish to imply that the purity of the French language is not important, but it seems to me that while we are fiddling here with the translatability of the words "registrar general", the problem of inflation in this country is slowly becoming more and more acute. Perhaps I should not have used the word "slowly", the problem is a burning one across the country.

The Chairman: Order. I should like to ask the hon. member for Springfield if he is going to relate the remarks which he is making now to clause 8?

Mr. Schreyer: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to relate my remarks to clause 8. I was about to say that in the course of the last few days I have had the opportunity of returning to the constituency which I represent and of speaking to a good many people there. I was able to determine, as I am sure many other hon. members here have, that there is mounting concern about the rising cost of living. So far nothing in the way of tangible, effective action has been taken or even suggested by the government.

I do not believe it was too much to expect that the government would have seen fit to include in the powers and functions given to the registrar general under clause 8 the responsibility for looking into matters affecting prices in this country. I do not believe I would serve any useful purpose if I were to speak at length on this matter of the proper powers and functions of the registrar general. If there is any place in the organization of government in this country for responsibility for consumer affairs and matters relating to prices, then logically that place is in this new department being set up under the authority of clauses 6 to 10 of the bill before us.

If there is any sincere desire on the part of the government to translate into action the good intentions expressed a few minutes ago by the President of the Privy Council, then possibly the government will introduce ancillary legislation some time during the course of this session. The people of this country are getting fed up with the steady increase in the cost of living, and with their continual abuse in the marketplace in the form of improper packaging and advertising practices which merely perplex and confuse them. They are now expecting concrete action and will not put up with constitutional excuses for much longer.

If the government sitting across the way find themselves losing touch with, and the sympathy of, the Canadian electorate, it is because in the course of the last few months the cost of living has been surging upward, with no sincere demonstration on the part of the government that they intend to do anything about it. The government have had their opportunity in this bill to show that they mean action. Obviously they are not prepared to accept the good suggestions they have been given.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council could answer the question I asked him a minute or two ago.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question which has been put I repeat what I said before. It is not the intention at this time to modify the clause. Any consideration as far as the government is concerned that might be given to changing the text of the bill, if it is enacted, will be given once the report of the Economic Council has been received.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council a question about the speech made on Saturday by the former secretary of state, the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean, in which, among other things, he said during a question period that several federal departments should disappear and new ones, such as science, and consumer and family affairs, be formed. He said that there must be a major overhaul, much more than has been done in the last few months; that changes must be made in the organization of the cabinet; and that the economy needs a major overhaul. I am wondering whether the President of the Privy Council associates himself with these remarks and is prepared to make the necessary changes in line with the thinking among the left wing of his party?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, every member of this house has the right to express himself in his own words both inside and outside this house. I know my hon. friend who made these statements—at least I presume he made them in Toronto—is writing a book, and undoubtedly in his book he will outline all his ideas. We will all be able to give them consideration in due course.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council a question in light of his remarks a few moments ago. Since the beginning of the session I and a number of others have received letters from people across the country in which they ask various questions about prices, the elements which go into price increases and the justification or otherwise for them. We have been asked questions in regard to protection along various lines, such as advertising, packaging and so on.

When we have put these questions to the government before orders of the day are called we have been sloughed off, usually without any answer being given, or we are told there will be investigations made later on in the year. More recently I have had questions sent back to me with the statement that no department of the government is responsible for answering such questions, or words to that effect.

I should like to ask the minister whether I would be justified in assuming from the remarks he has just made that when I receive letters and inquiries of this kind his department is now a suitable department with which to take up these matters, and that he will be the suitable person to answer such questions.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I cannot say whether I am the suitable person, but I can say it is correct to assume both from the statement made by the Prime Minister and by the statement I made in the name of the government that the registrar general will be the minister with jurisdiction in this regard in the future. I think both the statement of the Prime Minister and my own can be interpreted as meaning that, to the extent there is federal jurisdiction and responsibility, this will be the department which will be concerned with these matters.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 9 and 10 agreed to.

On clause 11—Department of Manpower —Department established.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, at the resolution stage I stated emphatic opposition to the marriage of the department of immigration and the major portion of the Department of Labour. In my view it will be detrimental to immigration policy and, perhaps even worse, to the labour policy of this country. Based upon my experience, sir, as a minister of citizenship and immigration, and upon detailed observations in other countries where labour and immigration departments have been married, I believe this proposed department of manpower will be a department warring within itself. In such circumstances and within such a framework Canada cannot achieve a rational, balanced, aggressive immigration policy, and I predict that immigration will suffer, and suffer greatly, with consequent grave disadvantage to our economy.

These are views, sir, which I asserted on the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and on the resolution stage of the bill, without apparently being able to convince the Prime Minister. I do not propose tonight to pursue the arguments further, except to reiterate that I am convinced that this is a grave error of national policy which will deprive this country of a consistent, expanded, long-range immigration policy, a policy urgently needed at this very time.

I add tonight that it would have been very helpful indeed to the committee to have had before it the white paper on immigration. I urge the minister to end the lead swinging that has been going on in this respect, and to bring forward the white paper on immigration which has been delayed now since it was first promised by the Prime Minister in December 1963.

There is the further fact that the Prime Minister's proposals leave the old Department of Labour so completely emasculated as really not to be a department at all. Except for the fact that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has retained his responsibility, which he had in other portfolios, for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, he would be, at least during periods of industrial peace, virtually unemployed. He would have the smallest, the most attenuated department of government of all.

In my view, Mr. Chairman, this is turning back the clock. How it must disturb the celestial peace of Mr. Mackenzie King. For sir, it was he, under the aegis of Sir William Mulock, who established the Department of Labour, and that department was always his special pride and joy. Mulock, Lemieux and King himself were the first ministers of the Department of Labour and established, in my view, competent, imaginative leadership in that portfolio. Parliamentarians of distinction and prestige of Gideon Robertson, Wesley Gordon and Norman Rogers added lustre to the ministry till the hon. member for Ontario, one of the greatest ministers of labour of all time, brought it to its highest authority within the government and within the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All this tradition has been thrown away.

Miss LaMarsh: He had more people out of work than anybody.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am sorry; I do not hear what the hon. lady is muttering at this time.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the hon. gentleman might agree with me that the hon. member for Ontario probably had more people out of work, to work with, than any other member of this house ever had.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I want to say to the hon. lady that there were fewer strikes when the hon. member for Ontario was in charge than at any other period in the last 15 years, and that there are many workers who owe a great deal as a result of the vocational training plan—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There are a great many young people in the city of Niagara Falls and in other parts of the country who have a great obligation to the hon. member for Ontario.

Perhaps the hon. lady would hold her peace. She will have plenty of opportunity to speak later on. Her colleagues have been giving her a wonderful example of how to talk out government legislation. They have done that all day. They are experts. I suggest that the hon. lady should not join with them in that.

I want to say that this Department of Labour is the department which bore the brunt of the struggle against the depression in the 1930's. This is the department which initiated so many of the policies which overcame the recession in the 1950's. This is the department which has been especially chosen by the Prime Minister for the guillotine. What is the reason for this? Let us be frank about it. It was simply to tailor a department for the hon. member for Quebec West, and for Mr. Tom Kent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The Prime Minister of Canada believed that because of the background of the hon. member for Quebec West, the hon. member could not be charged with responsibility for industrial relations, conciliation services, and for the other services retained in the Department of Labour.

I think the Prime Minister took very much too seriously the hon. gentleman's background as a union leader in one phase of Canadian unionism, and apparently believed that other unions and employees would not accord him full respect as Minister of Labour.

Sir, I have no desire to be the devil's advocate for the hon. member for Quebec West, whose considerable oratorial talents have become known to us. I think the Prime Minister did for the hon. member for Quebec West much less than justice. As a cabinet minister, I believe the hon. member could achieve an objectivity and impartiality equal at least to that of the hon. gentleman for Vancouver Centre, who has always been an executive of businesses which are not insubstantial.

Far be it for me, sir, to advise the Prime Minister on his choice of colleagues. It would have been far better, I say, to make the hon. gentleman for Quebec West Minister of Labour in the old Department of Labour and to return the hon. gentleman for Vancouver Centre to the portfolio of citizenship and immigration, or even to reverse the matter, than to bastardize both departments and to create two political orphans to be known as the departments of manpower and labour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, and to choke immigration in the process. That, sir, is what I believe will happen.

Sir, the attenuation, the almost total diminution of the Department of Labour, coupled with the placing of immigration in a secondary policy role, induces me to plead tonight with the government. I wish the Prime Minister were here, so that I might plead especially with him tonight for a restoration of the status quo ante.

I believe that this committee should strike out the provisions for the department of manpower which are contained in clauses 11 to 14 inclusive, and when we reach clause 34 dealing with the Department of the Secretary of State, the committee should strike out subclause 1(a). Thereupon the old and generally satisfactory status would be restored.

As I can only move one amendment at a time to one clause, I intend, sir, to move that clause 11 be struck out, and if this motion should be carried, I will move subsequently to strike out clauses 12 to 14 inclusive, and later to amend all dependent and consequential clauses. The net result would be to restore the old Department of Labour, and I would hope to have it strengthened into a genuine department of manpower. I would hope to establish the Department of Citizenship and Immigration into a department freed from the responsibility of Indian affairs, so that the minister and his officers could establish and continue a long range immigration policy coupled with a real program of citizenship education and evaluation, which I do not believe will happen under the Secretary of State.

Therefore, sir, as a start to this general proposal, I move.

That Clause 11 be deleted and all clauses thereafter be renumbered accordingly.

This is the only motion that I have ever moved or ever expect to move in the chamber which would have made the Right Hon. Mackenzie King happy.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that this motion is out of order. The principle of the bill which includes the creation of the department of manpower was approved by the house at second reading. Therefore this motion which has been introduced by the hon. member for Carleton is directed to the principle of the bill, and therefore, I submit, out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I speak to the point of order. I agree with the Minister of National Revenue that the amendment is out of order, but not for the reasons the minister gave.

I submit that it would be quite within the power of the committee to vote down a clause, or several clauses, even though they were supported in principle on second reading. Where this amendment fails is that it is what is sometimes called an expanded negative. All that is necessary, for the Conservatives to strike out clause 11, is to muster enough votes against it. You cannot by an amendment move to strike out something that you can resolve by voting one way or another.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: May I draw hon. members' attention to Citation 398 in Beauchesne's fourth edition:

An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order.

I declare the amendment in this form is out of order. It will serve the same purpose to vote against clause 11, as such, instead of bringing forward an amendment.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I think there is more than one way to conceive of government organization. I am not mistaking this for a metaphysical proposition, but I feel that different propositions could be made, possibly all sensible, and the only defence I have to offer is based upon reason and chances of success.

It was indicated that the Department of Labour had been stripped of all meaning and that the new department, as it would be set up, could not fulfil the role that should normally be expected of it.

I should like to point out to the house that in the field of labour, there are two different realities. One is concerned with employers-employees relations, which we call industrial relations and which are basically different from manpower, manpower training, manpower classification and all other services that may be offered to workers and industry in the field of technical training.

This is so true, Mr. Chairman, that when the federal government set up or created, if you wish, what we have called the Labour-Management Co-operation Committee, it was taken out of collective labour agreements. They did not want the two to be mixed together. That is to say, there was a special committee to discuss with management questions of productivity, questions of production, questions of manpower training, and those committees were never incorporated into what was called the industrial relations set-up in the company.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is a sacrilege. One may very well think that it should be otherwise, but to go as far as to indicate that this takes all meaning out of what was established by Right Hon. Mackenzie King or hon. Mr. Lemieux appears to me as pushing conservatism to the point of placing it in jeopardy.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to talk too long on this subject. I might have the opportunity to come back to it when particular legislation is considered, but let us say that, independently of government measures, it remains that manpower in Canada is our main resource and we should all agree to try and improve it, to make it more productive and particularly to help the workers to develop fully as far as technical skills are concerned.

A few years ago in the United States a great economist tried to establish what could be the value of the human capital, of the workers. He set the economic value of the work of men in a society at over $1,000 billion, whereas the financial capital barely reached $700 or $800 billion, which means that the value of the men in strict economic terms exceeded by $500 billion that of the financial capital.

Everyone knows that the increase in production since the beginning of the century is due to a large extent—I would say 85 or 87 per cent—to the improvement of industrial technology which is based itself on the work of men.

Therefore, it is important that we should give special attention to the training of our manpower, to enable it to meet the needs of the enterprise and at the same time to enable the men to develop, to improve normally.

Now, I could answer questions if hon. members deem it advisable to ask some about the constitution of the department. But before resuming my seat, I would like to talk about immigration.

Some fear that immigration will suffer because it comes under the Minister of Manpower. There is no basis for that. It will depend on the government and probably on the Minister of Immigration. It is quite possible to have a department concerned exclusively with immigration and the government through its policy, or the minister, make immigration difficult. There is no relationship between the two.

Here is proof of what I say, Mr. Chairman. I am in favour of having immigration with manpower and I see that last year 140,000 immigrants came to Canada, whereas this year there will be almost 200,000 of them. There has been an increase of 30 per cent in each of the first four months this year, whereas when immigration came under the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), only 75,000 immigrants came to Canada that year.

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The member for Carleton put into effect the policies which are now bearing fruit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Now, if this were actually the case, I hope the member for Carleton will wait a few years in order to ascertain the results of the immigration policy we are now implementing.

At any rate, immigration must surely, but not exclusively, be related in some way to the requirements of the labour market.

Besides, when we ask immigrants to come to Canada, we are dealing with men who have relatives here and who want to make a living in our country. I feel that to restrict immigration exclusively to the requirements of the labour market in Canada would make for an inhuman and unacceptable policy. It is not our intention, therefore, to restrict immigration in this manner. Besides, I hope we shall be in a position very shortly to introduce in the house amendments which will no doubt enable the member for Carleton to sleep peacefully and to feel reassured about Canada's future.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a few members made remarks; first, the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), who is not here—

Mr. Grégoire: No, I am here.

Mr. Marchand: No, he has not gone. We did not have too many translation problems. We thought, of course, of translating "manpower" by "puissance de l'homme," but this could have created some confusion, or would have constituted a misrepresentation.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, if the future minister of manpower allows me, throughout his statement, he used a very appropriate term which he chose himself and which, I feel, would enhance even more the part he has to play. It is human capital. It is capital rather than manpower. Manpower designates something more finished, whereas human capital indicates a power. Since the minister used the term "human capital" all the time, I think that term might have been properly used.

Mr. Marchand: I thank the hon. member, but there is something else that is more important. Anyway, sir, that is not what I want to undertake.

It was indicated during the debate that the word "immigration" was removed from the title of the department. I listened with attention to those who spoke about it, including the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and several others. I was impressed, not because I think that the name can change the policy or structure, but this emphasizes a reality which we all follow very intently.

Since there is no point in having useless discussions simply to win an argument or imagining that because something was done once, it would be wrong to amend it and to weaken our position. I am ready to move that the new department be named "the Department of Manpower and Immigration".

Mr. Fulton: Has the Prime Minister appointed you ex officio?

Mr. Marchand: I will see him early tomorrow morning, before you advise him.

I therefore move:

That the words "Department of Manpower" in subsection (1) of clause 11 be replaced by the words "Department of Manpower and Immigration" and "new Minister of Manpower", in the same clause, be replaced and that the same amendment be made wherever the words "Department of Manpower", "Minister of Manpower and Deputy Minister" are found, more particularly in subsection (2) of clause 11, as well as in clauses 12, 13, 14, 33, 35, in paragraph (d) of clause 36, in subsections (1) and (2) of clause 39, in Schedule A and Schedule B.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I second the amendment in question.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, was it necessary that some other minister move the amendment? After all, the bill is in the name of the Prime Minister and it is perfectly in order for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to move the amendment. The second point of order I wish to raise is whether this is a proper form in which to amend several clauses of a bill. After all, we have only clause 11 before us at the moment.

Mr. Fulton: By unanimous consent.

Mr. Knowles: If it is done by unanimous consent I am willing to join in that consent. But there is another point. Should the amendment not have in its earlier lines some reference to the heading that appears in the bill preceding clause 11? Let us change not only the language of the bill but the heading which precedes clause 11. I suggest this could be done by altering the amendment at the beginning to read, that the heading preceding clause 11 be amended to read "Department of Manpower and Immigration" and that this name be used in the following clauses. I suggest that this be done either by unanimous consent or by someone moving a subamendment.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I would submit it can only be done by unanimous consent, and certainly we on this side would be most happy to extend unanimous consent. If the hon. minister had not moved this amendment we on this side would have done so, and had intended to do so. I think the hon. member for Hamilton West is to be congratulated and I wish the government had given him a chance to move the amendment. He was one of a number of people who had the same idea. I hope the inclusion of the words "and immigration" in this portfolio title will mean something more than lip service to immigration. I hope it will mean that this department is going out specifically and definitely to promote immigration and establish a proper policy. I hope the minister will get rid of the lead swinging he has been guilty of since last December in keeping the white paper under wraps.

[Translation]

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, when the minister moved his amendment, I was wondering whether that was necessary because, according to the bill as it is drafted, the minister holds his office during pleasure. He could have been taken from one department and placed in another without having to change the whole act. This way, the act will have to be changed if part of the department is to be transferred to the Department of Labour or another one. I think that is useless.

If the member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) said he would move that amendment, it is proof that we would make a mistake in moving it. I submit that basically it is unnecessary.

I will not object further. I do not understand the reason of such a change which is not absolutely necessary and which could well have been made without this amendment since the minister holds his office during pleasure and could readily have been transferred from one department to another without the house having to change the act.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that this amendment be carried?

Mr. Knowles: Yes, provided there is a reference to the heading preceding clause 11.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The Deputy Chairman: Yes, and we thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for the new title and for its inclusion in the following clauses and subclauses.

Mr. Knowles: In both languages.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Before clause 11 carries may I ask the minister if he has given consideration to the problem that I know has been raised with him by the organization known as Manpower Services Limited? I think many hon. members have had communications from this private and long established corporation. I agree that national interest must always be predominant, but I do not think we should suddenly go in and take over what has been a very long established name, I believe of international reputation. Before we proceed further I would like the minister to comment on this, and we might wish to pursue the matter further if his comment is not satisfactory.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, we have of course taken that point into consideration. We do not have any interest in creating more confusion than is necessary, and so I hope we will find a name that will avoid this confusion and respect the rights of those who have rights in Canada.

Mr. Nielson: Will the minister also make a recommendation to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to the effect that he pass on an alternate name to the city of Edmonton?

Amendment agreed to.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, there is a point on which the minister—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member dealing with clause 11 or clause 12?

Mr. Grégoire: Clause 11, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The hon. member still has something to say concerning clause 11?

Then clause 11 is not agreed to.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I thought we were being asked to agree to the amendment. We agreed to the amendment but not to the clause.

Precisely, before agreeing to the clause, I would like to hear a statement from the minister on a matter he evaded; I do not know whether he did it deliberately or not, whether he forgot it or whether it was to avoid discussing the subject at this time, but there is a matter on which we would like to have an explanation.

In the province of Quebec, I think—in fact, I am convinced of it—there is an ideological dispute concerning the role of the minister of manpower, namely concerning encroachment on certain fields of provincial jurisdiction.

Thus, when it is contemplated, in the field of manpower, to move a worker from one area to another, from one province to another, then certain problems may arise. The minister is aware of the statement made by the Quebec minister of labour not long ago. Could we have an explanation, from the federal minister concerning that statement? What are the intentions and what will be the role of the federal minister of manpower in that connection?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I do not see how I could be compelled to speak about constitutional problems while discussing the alteration of the name of a department. This question could be directly put to me and I do not think that I can be accused of trying to avoid the subject.

Anyway, we know that in that field, there is undoubtedly a provincial jurisdiction, that is all matters concerning vocational training such as the establishment of programs, of lectures come under provincial jurisdiction and are related to education. We do not intend to encroach upon that field.

There is the entire field of employment offices which has been under the federal jurisdiction for many years, namely for 25 years, and which the province in its turn would like to invade.

Therefore in this case, Mr. Chairman, I submit we do not face the threat of federal encroachment upon provincial jurisdiction, but that of provincial ipso facto encroachment upon a field which has been under federal government jurisdiction for 25 years.

Anyway, this is not a constitutional argument, but merely a field which has been occupied, and it does not necessarily mean that the government has exclusive jurisdiction in this field. This is a field in which we are really ready to co-operate with the provinces, taking into account the fact that Canada is a country united under a consitution and that, for the common good, the Canadian population, the workers, have the right to be protected and to receive the best possible service, in any province.

There has been talk about manpower mobility. Neither the minister of manpower nor the government has ever intended to move Canadians without reason from Halifax to Vancouver or from Quebec to Toronto. These policies of manpower mobility obviously apply within a certain natural region where people have roots and want to stay.

I think we will respect this wish of the population and this holds true not only for Quebec, but for people living in Newfoundland or British Columbia; in other words, as far as possible, everyone will be able to go on living in his own town, village, region or province.

A manpower mobility program which would not take this fact into account would be a failure, and we intend to consider it; we are ready to co-operate with all the provinces, and particularly with Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to deal with this matter later on when we reached clause 13, but since it has been raised I might as well deal with it now. I think it can be related to this clause 11. I should like to preface my remarks by saying that I agree with what already has been said on second reading with regard to these subclauses. Most of this bill simply is window dressing, and as a matter of fact I think the government could have been prosecuted successfully under the Criminal Code for misleading advertising. There is however one exception. They attribute to the new department of manpower the development and utilization of manpower resources in Canada. I was going to ask the minister precisely the same question which has been asked. Is this to be taken, in its ordinary meaning and interpretation, as conveying to the government in the fullest sense the powers which are indicated by implication in that particular phrase?

We cannot look at that without having some regard for the history of that particular aspect of federal jurisdiction and the attempt by the Bennett government in 1934 to pass good legislation which subsequently was declared invalid by the Supreme Court and confirmed by the Privy Council and the amendment of the British North America Act in 1940 which simply was giving to the federal government and to parliament the right to deal with the matter of unemployment insurance. The passage of the Unemployment Insurance Act that year contained reference to an employment service and dealt with the principle of unemployment insurance itself. Today we come to the proposal that parliament vest in the government the right to deal with the development and utilization of manpower resources in Canada. This having been passed, parliament then has occupied the field.

I believe, and have said so in this house, that in order for this parliament and this government to function properly in areas such as this, there can be uncontestably only one authority, and that authority should be the federal parliament. If these words are taken in their ordinary everyday meaning, the federal government and parliament having occupied the field there can be no question of provincial jurisdiction. True enough, the minister and the government will have to consult with the provincial governments. This is only proper and right, but I would discard all the rest of the legislation. However, I would be prepared to support the government in this one particular aspect of its plans in connection with this bill. One tries very hard to find something to praise the government about, and no matter how hard he tries very seldom is he able to do it.

An hon. Member: Don't try too hard.

Mr. Baldwin: I have been trying to do so for three years and always have come up with a zero.

An hon. Member: All miserable failures.

Mr. Baldwin: How this happened to creep into it I do not know. The law officers of the crown who chose these words are to be commended, because in my opinion, in this area where juisdiction must be established essentially in the federal government, it is about time this government moved, and in this one particular aspect it seems to have done so. I understand from the reply just made by the minister to the hon. member for Lapointe that it is the government's intention to give this phrase the very widest possible meaning.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Clause agreed to.

Clause 12 agreed to.

On clause 13—Duties of minister.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should first of all like to say that I support this bill whole heartedly, as I think it represents a good move on the part of the government in putting manpower and immigration together. I should like to ask the minister one or two questions in respect of clause 13. What reorganization will be required in local offices throughout the country in order to give effect to this change, if it is adopted?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, we intend to co-ordinate all the services related to manpower, including retraining, mobility allowances, placement and special services for youth, women and handicapped. I do not know what the name of the new service will be, but we will find an appropriate one. In any event, all these services will be under the one head.

Mr. Herridge: I have one more question I should like to ask. Will this move necessitate the recruitment of specialized staff trained to do certain work not previously done by the department?

Mr. Marchand: Are you referring to trained personnel for the department or for employers?

Mr. Herridge: I refer to personnel for the department.

Mr. Marchand: There is no doubt that we will have to train new personnel, and we are carrying out that training program at this time.

Mr. Starr: When the original transfer of the national employment service from the Department of Labour to the department of manpower was made, examinations were given to the employees transferred. They were advised that those examinations were void and had no meaning. Will the minister explain what happened in this regard.

Mr. Marchand: The results of the examinations held are not void or without meaning. They are still in existence and valid, but are not being used in themselves to evaluate the abilities of each employee. Many other criteria are being used in this regard. The results of these examinations are not being used exclusively in evaluating the abilities of these people.

Mr. Starr: Will the minister indicate what other criteria are being used, in addition to these civil service examinations?

Mr. Marchand: The other criteria being used include the known competence of employees, their experience in the department and other qualities which do not show up as a result of the examinations.

Mr. Starr: Does that mean that the deputy minister in charge of administration will select these people for future positions?

Mr. Marchand: No. A committee will be formed to deal with selections. I do not know exactly the composition of this committee, but I am sure the Civil Service Commission, the national employment service and the department will be represented. If you wish further information in this regard I will let you know tomorrow exactly how this committee is to be formed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 14 and 15 agreed to.

On clause 16—Deputy minister.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this clause provides for a deputy minister of Indian affairs and northern development. I should like to take one minute to say that for some years I have been strongly of the belief that there should be a separate deputy minister for Indian affairs whose jurisdiction would be related exclusively to Indian affairs. I doubt that one deputy minister can give appropriate time to both Indian affairs and northern development. I believe that in the past the detailed administration of immigration has robbed the deputy minister of citizenship and immigration of an opportunity to give as much time to Indian affairs as the importance of this subject deserves. I urge the government to amend clause 16, perhaps not tonight, but during this session, so that there can be a deputy minister of northern development as well as a deputy superintendent general of Indian affairs. If it were within my rights as a private member I would move such an amendment myself.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 17 to 26 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 27—Department of energy, mines and resources—Department established.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the minister designate of this department is not here so I do not know whether it is the desire of the committee that the clauses under this heading stand until he is in the house, or whether we should move on to something else. Perhaps we should proceed now, in which case I have some observations and amendments to put forward. I am not sure this would be appropriate in the absence of the minister, but perhaps some spokesman for the government could give me an indication in this regard.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I think that we should proceed at this time in view of the fact that while the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is unfortunately but unavoidably absent, his parliamentary secretary is in attendance, as is the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I am sure both hon. members would be pleased to deal with these matters in view of the fact there is some disposition to get on with this legislation this evening.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the amendment I wish to propose relates primarily to clause 29. I shall be glad to comply with the suggestion of the hon. minister, and I will confine my remarks to the applicable clause.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 28 agreed to.

On clause 29—Duties, powers and functions of the minister.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, in considering the constitution of the new department of energy, mines and resources, I should like to remind the committee that the view of the official opposition was expressed by us when the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for 1965-66 were under consideration. We approve wholeheartedly the concept of co-ordinating policy in the field of energy and resources under one department and one minister. At that time I expressed the reservation in respect of the proposal as it was reflected in order in council 1965-2281, to the effect there should be exempted from the jurisdiction of the minister certain main areas, but primarily the areas of planning and co-ordinating of policy regarding the north and the whole of the continental shelf, which has been allocated to Canada in accordance with an international agreement arrived at in Geneva in 1958.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I should say that nothing that has developed or has been said since has caused us to change our views. Indeed the statement of the Prime Minister on second reading of this bill, especially as contained in pages 5431 and 5432 of Hansard, have very seriously heightened our apprehensions regarding the serious consequences of the omissions from the powers and jurisdictions of this proposed department. We were so concerned about the matter that I took the trouble, on the discussion of the estimates, of raising with the minister expressly the basis of our concern. He was kind enough to write me on March 25, 1966, as follows:

> When the 1965-66 estimates for my department were being debated in the house on March 3 last, you asked my colleagues, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Minister without Portfolio whether one of them proposed to make an opening statement with respect to the work of the department "and particularly with respect to the policies which will guide the government as it sets up and administers the new department of energy, mines and resources."

He went on to say:

> My colleagues and I are having regular discussions on the concept of the new department of energy, mines and resources, and senior officers of my present department are also intensively engaged. The enabling legislation is being drafted and it is our hope that, within the not too distant future, we shall be able to present our proposals to parliament.

I replied as follows by letter of April 5:

> Thank you very much indeed for your letter of March 25th—

—etc. Then I said:

> I appreciate your keeping me informed. I hope I may be permitted to make reference again to my feeling that in setting up the department, it would be a pity if responsibility for development and co-ordination of resources policy in an area of utmost importance to Canada and within the jurisdiction of the federal government, namely the Territories, was not entrusted to the new department. It seems to me that, if it were not, this would create a most conspicuous and lamentable gap in what I am sure will otherwise be generally supported as an admirable and progressive step forward by way of co-ordination of policies in these fields.

As I say, I should have added to that general observation or reservation the expression of concern with regard to—

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Laing: Might I ask from what correspondence the hon. member was quoting?

Mr. Fulton: I was quoting from a letter to me from the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I thought I had identified the correspondence, and I am sorry if I did not. I also quoted my reply to him in that capacity.

Mr. Laing: Of what date?

Mr. Fulton: I think I gave the date. The letter to him was dated March 25 this year; my reply was dated April 5.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I should have added to that expression of concern the omission from the jurisdiction of this department of jurisdiction over the territorial waters and the continental shelf, in so far as these waters have been assigned to and are under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. Our concern in this regard was, as I have said, heightened by the references to this subject made by the Prime Minister in his speech on May 24 on second reading of the bill. I refer particularly to the passages found in the last paragraph of the first column of page 5431 reading as follows:

> We all contemplate that at some time in the future we shall have in this country one or more provinces in the north. That situation will come, however, only after there has been substantial growth in population and in resource development. The encouragement of that resource development will be the responsibility of the minister of northern development. In a sense the minister will be acting in that, as in many other respects, as a trustee for provinces of the future.

With that statement by itself we have no quarrel and to it we take no objection. But it is important in this context to realize that the role described for the minister of northern development is that of a trustee for future provincial governments, and that therefore there are indications of very serious and practical limitations upon his role in this field. The Prime Minister went on to say:

> The minister of energy, mines and resources, on the other hand, will be exercising responsibilities that are essentially, if I may use that word, national in their character. By that I mean he will be responsible for the kind of things that do not relate to any particular province but rather involve elements of jurisdiction that are federal in nature and aspects of policy that affect the country as a whole.

Again, to that statement in isolation there can be no objection and with it we take no exception as a statement in isolation. The aspect of it to which we do take exception is that unfortunately there is a large area of resource policy and responsibility for planning resource programs which is national in nature, and which has not been entrusted to the new minister and the new department, but rather has been divided between the minister of northern development and the minister of energy, mines and resources. This can only create confusion, and because of the importance of the exception it creates a substantial and lamentable gap in the proposal to set up a new national policy and move forward with national programs and concepts of development and resource policy, and particularly a water use policy.

I see, Mr. Chairman, that it is ten o'clock. As I intend at this stage to go into the detail of our objections and reservations, perhaps I might move the adjournment of this discussion.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the business for tomorrow, it would be our intention to continue with this legislation tomorrow until it is completed, and then immediately continue with the three bills dealing with collective bargaining in the civil service; that is, the collective bargaining act, the public service act and the amendments to the Financial Administration Act. Then we would proceed with the resolution preceding the omnibus bills to amend the civil service pension plans.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue whether following that we will be taking the second reading of the Yukon bill?

Mr. Benson: I should like to defer a decision on that matter, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisonal standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—QUEBEC—PROTESTS AGAINST IMPORTS OF EGGS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, on May 20 last, I asked the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Beer) whether the minister had examined the telegram sent by Messrs. Lionel Sorel and Ovila Lebel, president of the Catholic Farmers Union and president of the Quebec Federation of Egg Producers respectively, and in which they showed their concern about "strange importation of eggs into Canada".

I also asked him whether it was his intention to take steps to protect Canadian egg producers against such importation.

It is known, Mr. Speaker, that for several years prices for eggs have been subject to fluctuations that are always detrimental to both small and average producers, and even to big ones at times. Imports are very often the cause of losses suffered by egg producers in this country.

In its May 18 edition, La Terre de Chez Nous reports that:

> Since the beginning of this year until May, egg imports in Canada totaled 23,548 cases of 30 dozen each, as compared to 1,687 cases for the corresponding period last year. These figures include inspected egg imports and may be found in the last weekly report on the poultry product market published in Ottawa.

These figures, Mr. Speaker, are really alarming and the producers are concerned. During a few months, egg prices remained at levels rather interesting for the producers, but the importers noticed it and the results are and will doubtless continue to be harmful to the Canadian producers.

The minister may tell me, as did the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys earlier last week, that these imports are necessary because production does not meet domestic consumption, or that these imports will be exported after processing. But, Mr. Speaker, our poultry producers are precisely able to increase their production considerably, especially in the province of Quebec, to meet the demand of the Canadian market, if they can be assured of being able to sell their produce at a worthwhile price.

It would also be interesting to know the decision of the Minister of Agriculture concerning the resolution passed last year by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which is requesting a royal inquiry into methods of establishing egg prices. We wish to know what the government intends to do for Canadian poultry producers.

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): With regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), Mr. Speaker, my officials have had an opportunity of looking into this matter and advise the hon. member that, first of all, I did receive a telegram under date of May 10 from Mr. Sorel, President of the Catholic Farmers Union regarding importation of eggs into Canada.

During the past five or six months our egg production has been lower than our requirements, with the result that prices to producers for eggs have been at their highest for the corresponding period for the last seven or eight years. As a result, our egg requirements have been supplemented by an increased quantity of imported eggs. Practically all of these eggs are for the manufacturing trade and have not been in competition with domestic fresh eggs for table use. Despite these importations, the price for domestic eggs has continued well above that of previous years.

The department is, however, keeping a constant watch on any imports to insure that our import legislation is complied with and necessary measures will be taken should there be any evidence of improper importations.

TRADE—CANADA-WEST INDIES—STEPS TO BRING ABOUT IMPROVEMENT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): My intervention tonight refers back to the debate on Tuesday, May 24, with respect to this matter of the West Indies and the questions asked about the West Indies conference that was held in Halifax on May 20, particularly referring to the full summit meeting that is to be held here in July.

May I interject here that it is significant that I am mentioning this subject tonight because the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association is now meeting. I have just come from the meeting where many members have put forward their ideas about the seriousness of the commonwealth situation. The Prime Minister on this occasion made reference to the conference that is to be held and said that an announcement is to be made. That I appreciate; but I do want to take a moment to refer to the conference that was held in Halifax; and I am pleased that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is here tonight because he attended that conference.

Different statements have emanated from the meeting held in Halifax. I would mention in particular the remarks made by a very well recognized authority on the subject of the West Indies, Acadia University political science Professor D.G.L. Fraser, who among other things said that there has been altogether too much waffling by the Canadian government with respect to the West Indies. He also referred to the fact that there have always been promises but that nothing has been forthcoming.

There has been general criticism of the lack of interest in Canada in the Caribbean, going back many years. I have in mind the statements that the Minister of Trade and Commerce made at that meeting. After arguing strenuously in his native province that, he was for anything which would benefit the maritimes, he made the type of general sweeping announcement that means nothing to me. His statement was that these West Indies meetings which are coming up in July were planned to foster more fruitful relations with the Caribbean in economic matters.

[Mr. Greene.]

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that we have once and for all to decide that our interests in the West Indies and the Caribbean area are serious interests. Trade is the big factor. It is the minister's responsibility to stand up and say that he is determined to do something at this conference. We have been having these conferences for a long while now. People in the West Indies are looking to us.

Many members have spoken on this matter, Mr. Speaker, and it has been a favourite subject of mine. The Minister of Public Works has sponsored resolutions many times in the past dealing with this matter. This is our last chance. If we fail this time to do something, the alternative is communism. I am only pointing out in advance the seriousness of this meeting. Something has to be done, and I should like to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce get up and say he is really determined to do something. This is a big challenge to him, now that he is back in politics in charge of trade and commerce, to do something for the maritimes, his native province, and to foster this relationship which means so much to the commonwealth.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been very interested indeed in the remarks I have just heard about the importance of relations between Canada and the Caribbean area. I doubt whether there is a member of this house who has had a closer association than I have had with the Caribbean area, in an economic sense or otherwise, or who has more reason to be interested in the welfare of the Caribbean area. Because as I said in Halifax, had it not been for the trade in fishery products between my native town of Lunenburg and the Caribbean area, my life would have been considerably different, if in fact I would have had one at all. So my sense of urgency in doing something both in the interest of Canada, particularly eastern Canada, and the Caribbean area runs very strong.

I am quite prepared to give the assurance, and I am dedicated to the proposition, that we must tackle this problem, as President Kennedy used to say, with vigour and do something more to add substance to the great many of the words that have been spoken.

I disagree vigorously with many of the remarks that were made at the conference by Professor Fraser. I did not attend all of it.

I did not hear all he said, but judging from reports it was negative. It is quite wrong to attribute nothing but words to what has been done, because there has been a great deal of substance as was pointed out in the speech I made at that time. For example, perhaps no area of the world has received more aid from the Canadian aid program, per capita, than has the Caribbean area. Countries in that area are, however, looking for trade and development.

Since the conference, and even before, I have had many discussions with the appropriate ministers and government officials from the area. I spent considerable time with Hon. Robert Lightbourne at Halifax and today for example I spent several hours in particular with the High Commissioner of Jamaica. This is just illustrative of the close co-operation between the two countries.

I share what I am sure is the fervent hope of the hon. member that the conference in July will actually put flesh on what he regards as the skeleton. It is the determination of this government, supported by my own resolve, to do something to our mutual advantage when the time comes. We are doing the development work to this end now.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—ASSISTANCE TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES IN POPULATION CONTROL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the immediate matter which prompted me to ask this question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs was the statement made on May 26 by H. O. Moran, director general of the Canadian foreign aid program, that the most serious single problem facing developing countries is that of population growth.

From a long way back we have known that the population explosion is becoming more and more serious. For instance, I read the following in the February, 1966 edition of Canadian Hunger Foundation:

> It is estimated that the present population of the world is about 3.4 billion, and that of this number at least half suffer from undernutrition or malnutrition. If world population continues to increase at its present rate, there will be 6 billion people, and some authorities now say 7 billion, by 2000 AD. This will occur within the working life-span of our young people now in high school.

The Commission of Churches on International Affairs at Geneva last year pointed out that along with this existing problem is another important factor contributing to the gravity of the situation, and that is the lag in agricultural development, and the resulting poor harvests. FAO figures for the 1960 to 1964 period indicate a virtual standstill in regard to rates of food production per capita in Asia and Africa, and a worsening situation in Latin America.

Indeed, a member of this house, at a meeting at which Mr. Moran who has returned from India spoke, suggested that there is no reasonable prospect for an end to starvation in some countries unless the rate of population growth is curbed.

I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs the other day as to the policy of the Canadian government in regard to assisting underdeveloped countries with population planning and family control. I feel that the Canadian government is moving slowly, yet none the less moving in the direction of support for the United Nations policies designed to grapple with world population problems. Prior to 1962 and in 1962 Canada abstained from voting at the United Nations General Assembly on questions having to do with birth control, and with population planning. At a meeting of the Economic and Social Council in Geneva, in July, 1965, Canada voted for a resolution which authorized the United Nations and its special agencies to increase its activities in the field of population control.

We note in passing that speaking in Rome last year at a meeting of the Food and Agriculture Organization, the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) seemed to be greatly impressed by the danger of the situation when he stated we were losing the battle against hunger.

I think it is time the Canadian government made it perfectly plain where it stands on this matter. I believe this country is moving forward in its thinking. Two or three years ago there was a definite reluctance to have anything to do with measures of population control. But today even within our own country those of us on the health and welfare committee have found there is a disposition to take the attitude that this should be a matter of conscience and that it should be possible to pass on information and make available contraceptive devices in order to help in family planning and control when help is requested, when this is not forbidden by religious or other beliefs, and when the use, of this assistance is in no way obligatory.

I think the Canadian government should adopt this attitude at the United Nations and make it clear that on the request of governments which desire to have information and birth control devices we are ready to help any plans which might be put forward. There should be no attempt to press Canadian participation where help has not been requested. For example, UNICEF has now decided to defer action on family planning until next year, but it has given the go-ahead signal to its officials to consider limited family planning assistance at the request of governments. I think it would help a great deal if the Canadian government were to declare its readiness to work through United Nations agencies to help solve problems of family planning and population control when requested by the governments concerned. We should do this through our foreign aid program.

Should we not do so, an unfortunate situation might well arise. Desirous as they are of giving external aid to underdeveloped countries, the people of Canada might well conclude, if they see the world population expanding faster than food production and economic development, that sending aid to these countries is like pouring water through a sieve. They might well be tempted to say: We shall not continue, unless we see there is a sound relationship between the resources available to a country and the population they are able to look after and feed properly. Thus, in the interest of building these countries on a sound economic and social foundation we should take this further step in external aid and stand ready to help in the work of population planning and control as requested by the governments of underdeveloped countries throughout the world.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): To round out what has been said by the hon. lady, I would add that between the 1962 and 1965 resolutions Canada was not called upon to vote or express an opinion on this question. However, as the hon. lady has said, in the spring of 1965, Canada, along with other members of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations approved a resolution permitting the United Nations to meet requests from developing countries for assistance in the field of population control. As a consequence of this the United Nations through its assistance program, to which Canada is contributing, has given technical aid to India on population problems.

Therefore it can be said in a multilateral sense that the advice of the hon. lady has already been enacted in policy and that Canada, by her participation through the United Nations, has contributed to attempt to solve the population problems in countries which request this assistance. To the present time Canada has not received any request on a bilateral basis for any specific forms of assistance of this kind from any country.

The policy of the Canadian foreign aid program is to respond only to specific requests from the countries concerned, and of course there could be no question on our part of making a condition of any other aid that these practices be followed and that Canada's advice be taken in this regard. Therefore I think the first principle to be followed here is that we should act only in response to specific requests from the countries concerned. To the extent that a request has been sought through the United Nations agency, Canada, through her participation in the United Nations, has contributed.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—STATEMENT RESPECTING PROVINCIAL POLICE ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): the Opposition): I address this question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with press articles today to the effect that Arthur Vachon, president of the Quebec provincial police association, is a security risk.

I ask the Prime Minister this. Did his government forward to Quebec security information on this matter, and are security files now being made available outside the ambit of federal authority so they may be used against people in this way?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to take the right hon. gentleman's question as notice.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. Solicitor General?

Following the accusations made by the premier of the province of Quebec against the former policeman Mr. Vachon, is it the intention of the minister to hold an inquiry in order to invalidate or support the said accusations?

[English]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has taken notice of a question along similar lines, and I will await the Prime Minister's reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether there has been any change in government policy in that security files are being bandied about and made available in this way to those outside parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question of general policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: It is argumentative and perhaps hypothetical.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was asking a particular question and one which, unless answered, affects the public conscience.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in his capacity as head of security in Canada. Does he agree with the statement of Premier Lesage that Mr. Arthur Vachon is a security risk?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman's question is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. I can see he is just waiting to answer. In view of the fact that members of the armed forces may be disturbed by the announcement made by Premier Lesage with respect to the dismissal of Quebec provincial policeman Arthur Vachon, can the minister inform the house why this man was enlisted by the air force if he was considered a security risk, and why he was later given an honourable discharge.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether he has received a telegram from Mr. Gerard Tremblay, the Atlantic coast district vice president of the international longshoremen's association, denying that the 15 per cent of the longshoremen whom the federation is seeking to dismiss are casual employees and asserting that many of them are workers who are not yet old enough to receive pensions but who are too old to work more than part time. Has the minister, or has Judge Lippe, had an opportunity to examine the statistics which are available in the central records bureau of the St. Lawrence river ports?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I did not receive a telegram along those lines today; I received one yesterday. I think a word of explanation is in order in view of the fact that I mentioned a test of 15 or 16 weeks work yesterday. It has to do with hours worked, not weeks, averaging out. It comes to about 15 or 16 weeks.

This is a matter which could, I think, be referred to Judge Lippe for consideration and advice. I certainly will give it serious attention before I speak to the mediator later today.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether the statement made in the telegram from Mr. Tremblay is correct, that so far the shipping federation of Canada has not replied to the written submission made by the longshoremen's association, that no reply whatever has been made to the offer submitted?

Mr. Nicholson: Technically that may be correct. However, both sides submitted proposals to me and I in turn, out of the proposals which came to me, made suggestions to the two parties which I asked them to consider. I think the longshoremen's association can certainly take it from the remarks I made late on Sunday night that they had received a reply from the shipping federation. There has been a certain amount of by-play, as there is in all negotiations. It was to try to put an end to this that I adopted the course I did.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the minister in reference to his statement yesterday that a fantastic offer of wage increases had been made by the federation, whether he communicated the actual offer by the federation to the union, or whether the offer he made to the association was something other than that about which the federation had privately informed him.

Mr. Nicholson: It is difficult to answer a question of that kind on the orders of the day. I could give an extended answer but I cannot deal with the point in two or three sentences.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Would it not be a good idea if the minister were to answer these various questions and deal with the matters raised in this telegram? After all, I understand that the Prime Minister has received a warning from the Montreal port council that any further delay in bringing about settlement of this strike would be "catastrophic". Would it not be a good idea if the house would permit the minister to revert to motions so that we might hear something about this and ascertain the facts?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Is the minister aware of the fact that the longshoremen's strike could be settled very soon, if he gave them the assurance that there will be no decrease in personnel until December 31, 1967?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that question is argumentative.

Mr. Valade: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to propose to the longshoremen as a solution that no decrease in personnel will be made until Decembre 31, 1967, in order to end the strike?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will admit that it is the same question, put in English.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I want to ask the right hon. gentleman whether the shipping strike is affecting the progress of construction at Expo '67. Did the commissioner general of Expo '67 discuss the difficulty with the Prime Minister last week and, if so, with what result?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the commissioner did discuss the matter with me last week in connection with a ship which has material for Expo '67, and which it has not been possible to unload. As a result of further discussion between the commissioner and the Minister of Trade and Commerce I hope this difficulty has been overcome, but I shall be glad to look into the question.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Could the minister tell us how many grain boats are waiting to load and unload at the port of Montreal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question without making inquiries, but I can say the matter is of the very greatest concern to the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): As a further supplementary question, would the Minister of Finance supply us with those figures tomorrow morning?

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the difficulties that are now being experienced as a result of the strike of the longshoremen in Montreal, will the Prime Minister call the parties involved to Ottawa, to bring them into a different atmosphere so they may proceed to a settlement through the collective bargaining arrangement, under the chairmanship of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), who has a great deal of experience in this type of work?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, everything that can be done is being done to bring this strike to an end. The Minister of Labour is in touch with the situation, as my hon. friend knows, and if and when the time comes that the minister who is dealing with the matter feels the intervention of the Prime Minister would be helpful, naturally he will let me know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a further supplementary, in view of the request which the Prime Minister received from the Montreal port council, in which the council stated that any further delay in settlement would be "catastrophic", is the government going to accede to the request of the council for immediate action to get shipping traffic moving and avoid further economic loss?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, action is being taken.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question somewhat similar to that which has just been directed to the Minister of Labour?

In view of the fact that yesterday and this morning I received reports from my constituency to the effect that elevators have only three-day supplies left and that our mills will have to stop operating, is the minister ready to take extraordinary and drastic steps so that the activity will be resumed on the wharves while negotiations are under way?

Mr. Speaker: The question of the member for Trois-Rivières is similar to that asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, may I bring up that question at ten o'clock to obtain further details.

[Later:]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Labour, concerning his answer given yesterday to a question asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette).

My question deals with Quebec farmers as regards the present longshoremen's strike. The minister told the house that the farmers could go to the harbours in order to get their own grain.

Did the minister receive any telegrams from various firms in Montreal, Trois-Rivières or Quebec city, to the effect that those truckers will find it difficult to drive through the picket lines in the harbours?

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the hon. member has asked this question. I did receive such a telegram this morning, and I should like to clear up a statement that I made yesterday, which related to the port of Montreal only. We have received complaints about interference with the activities of farmers in Quebec by strikers placing trucks to block their access to the harbours board property. The matter is under special study at the present moment, and I may say that the government has been in discussion with the authorities in Quebec about this subject.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. In view of the dire consequences of a continuation of this strike, and in view of the fact that the minister has today said he has information which would take more time to relate than he has available on orders of the day, will he assure the house that he will make a full statement on this matter tomorrow so the house may be fully informed as to the facts relating to this strike?

Mr. Nicholson: I will give that suggestion serious consideration, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It deals with the longshoremen's strike and aims at clarifying the position of the parties concerned.

Does the minister or his mediator intend to assure the longshoremen that there will not be any staff cut before December 31, 1967, so that a settlement can be reached shortly in the present conflict? Does the minister or his mediator intend to take such action?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member asked the same question a few moments ago and the Chair refused it.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. May I refer to citation 178 of Beauchesne's? The second paragraph reads as follows:

[English]

Within these lines an explanation can be sought regarding the intentions of the government, but not an expression of opinion—

I am asking whether it is the intention of the minister to propose that there be no reduction in personnel until December 31, 1967. I believe this question is in order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has already asked this question twice, and I find that I cannot accept it. If the hon. member feels that the question is justified and sufficiently urgent he can give notice and it will be discussed in the adjournment debate.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Valade: Then I request that the question be debated at ten o'clock.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

HEARING OF APPEALS RESPECTING PASSENGER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Because of the urgency of time, particularly relating to summer traffic on the railroads, could the minister tell us whether the governor in council is contemplating the various appeals made by petitioners regarding reduction of passenger traffic on the C.P.R.?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government will endeavour, at the earliest moment convenient to all the parties, to arrange for the oral hearings that many of them have requested. I do not think the hon. gentleman would feel it would be proper for us to try to reach a conclusion without having these oral hearings.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—FRENCH WITHDRAWAL FROM BOTH POLITICAL AND MILITARY ASPECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he in a position to comment on the reported intention of General de Gaulle to withdraw France from the political aspects of NATO as well as from the military aspects?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this question is of a very general nature and of the type which should not be asked at this time.

RUSSIA—PERSECUTION OF UKRAINIAN INTELLECTUALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him what action he is taking with regard to a brief he received on Saturday protesting the prosecution and jailing of Ukrainian poets and intellectuals in the Soviet union.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the importance of the question now being put by the hon. member for Ontario. However, I have very serious doubt whether it is the type of question which should be placed at this time. Although it is a matter of very great importance, it is a general question and I really do not think it should be asked on the orders of the day.

CAMBODIA—SUGGESTED ACTIVITIES OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has seen the statement of the Secretary of State of the United States, as follows:

> We have been very much interested in the suggestion that has been made, I think more than once, by Prince Sihanouk that the international control commission should strengthen its personnel and its capabilities in order to assure the neutrality and territorial integrity of Cambodia.

I also should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has given any thought to, or has contemplated any action in respect of, the move to Cambodia for this purpose of many of the presently underemployed staff of the international control commission who now are situated in Viet Nam.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend will recall, I dealt with this question in the external affairs committee. There has been a suggestion made by Prince Sihanouk of Cambodia but no progress has been made as to whether the other members of the commission would be prepared to accept the suggestion for an expanded role for the commission. The statement of the Secretary of State was noted by me, and we have been discussing the matter with those concerned.

Mr. Harkness: I have a supplementary question. Has the minister discussed with the other members of the joint commission, India and Poland, the possibility of moving a large proportion of that staff to Cambodia where they could possibly perform a very useful function?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not agree with my hon. friend's premise, Mr. Speaker. The question as to what the commission might do in Cambodia would only arise if the request for its use in the particular circumstances was in accord with the Geneva agreement.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When Dean Rusk talked about strengthening the presence of the international control commission during his press interview on May 27, was he suggesting strengthening the presence of the commission by the introduction of troops?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not believe so.

OLD AGE SECURITY

CONSIDERATION OF INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government continuing to give consideration to increasing aid to recipients of the old age pension?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question might be placed on the order paper.

USE OF FUND SURPLUS TO INCREASE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is one of concern to a great many Canadians. Pending action on a permanent basis, will the goverment consider taking the necessary steps in order to use the surplus in the old age security fund to increase old age security pensions by the amount that surplus would make possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is of a very general nature and concerns general policy. Therefore it cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Dix heures.

TELEVISION

COMMUNITY ANTENNA SYSTEMS—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister now delaying the issuing of CATV licences pending amendments to existing regulations, or the establishment of new regulations?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the process that is being followed at the present time is the same process that has been followed for quite some considerable time.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister give an assurance that those people in the CATV business will have ample opportunity to express their views before any amendment of or issuing of new regulations?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will take the hon. gentleman's hypothetical question under careful consideration.

FINANCE

CANADIAN PROPOSALS TO GROUP OF TEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In yesterday's newspapers there appeared a report of a breakdown in the discussions among the group of ten over the question of the reformation of the international monetary system. In view of the fact that the Canadian government advanced some proposals in this regard, can the minister tell us whether any further action is going to be taken on the part of the Canadian government to deal with this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question involves a matter of extreme urgency, or is so urgent that it should not be placed on the order paper. I suggest that the hon. member may wish to put it on the order paper.

TRADE

POSSIBLE DECLINE IN U.K. PURCHASES IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to either the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are they aware of the statement made by Mr. Douglas Jay, president of the British Board of Trade, warning Canada to buy more British goods or face a serious decline in British purchases in Canada, and calling on the Canadian government to remove discriminatory duties on British goods? If so, is any immediate response or action anticipated?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question of general import and cannot be asked at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Olson: I would like to rephrase a question which I asked earlier. I hope, Mr. Speaker, it will meet with your approval. I would like to direct this question to the minister of external affairs. Has the government been warned by the British Board of Trade to reduce the discriminatory duties on British goods or face a significant decline of British purchases in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret very much that I cannot accept this question.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. On Friday last I asked him a question concerning the agenda of the federal-provincial conference to be held in Victoria commencing June 16, and he indicated at that time that he would be in a position early this week to give a reply to this question. I wonder whether the time has now come.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to do this tomorrow.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there a new date for the federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, though certain developments have raised some doubt in the minds of some provincial governments as to whether it will be possible to go ahead on the original date of June 16. But as at present there is no suggestion that this date should be changed.

FARM MACHINERY

CONSIDERATION BY COMMISSION OF TIED SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether the newly announced inquiry into the cost of farm machinery will include any examination of the problem of so-called tied sales in this industry, a problem which I raised in this house on March 31 in a question to the Minister of Justice?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe the terms of reference of the inquiry are sufficiently broad to cover all aspects of farm machinery costs, but I will bring this particular question to the attention of the commissioner.

TRANSPORT

PURCHASE BY RAILWAYS OF NEW TYPE HOPPER CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister inform the house whether the Canadian railway transportation companies, namely the C.N.R. and C.P.R., are planning on purchasing new, specially built hopper cars capable of carrying twice as much grain as the present largest grain cars, such as have been introduced on the United States railway lines?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

AKLAVIK, N.W.T.—CLOSING OF FEDERAL DAY SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I would repeat the question I posed yesterday with regard to Aklavik, and ask whether he is yet in a position to answer it.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the old school building was condemned. We are busy building a new building, which will be ready for September 1. There is no interruption of classes; we have the children in other accommodation at the present time for the balance of the current school term.

ELECTIONS ACT

SOLICITATION OF POLITICAL FUNDS BY RETURNING OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Would she tell the house if the returning officer in a federal constituency can solicit financial contributions on behalf of a political party?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for an interpretation of the act. That question is out of order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—REQUEST THAT FURTHER AID BE GIVEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government giving consideration to providing the government of India with additional gifts of wheat to alleviate the famine conditions existing in that country at the present time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will recall that we have already provided assistance to India to meet her very regrettably serious food situation, in the amount of some $75 million for this year. The high commissioner has acknowledged this, as has Mr. Ashoka Mehta, the Indian minister for planning.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that a large portion of the gift just mentioned by the minister is a forgiveness of loans and interest thereon, is the government considering giving additional gifts of wheat, which is something the people can eat?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend, of course, is wrong in his facts. There was a concellation of an indebtedness of some $10 million this year. The $75 million represents a net amount.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATO—POSSIBLE CHANGES IN ORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On April 8 this year the minister discussed in the house the changes in our organization of NATO and the prospect of withdrawing the Canadian air bases from France, and he used these words:

—the government of France does not intend to leave NATO.

I now ask him, has he any information concerning further substantial changes in the NATO organization?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I said, and I repeat now, that the French government has given notice of its intention not to participate in the integrated defence structure of NATO. The government of France has said, however, that it does not propose to denounce the treaty, and will continue to be bound particularly by articles 3 and 5 of the treaty. Formal negotiations on a bilateral basis or between the 14 participating countries and France have not yet been started, but negotiations based upon the determinations of national policy may soon begin.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in view of the expressed intention of the United States to press for the removal of the north Atlantic council from Paris and the support the United States is receiving from Britain, West Germany and some smaller NATO powers, what Canada's attitude is in this regard. With the meeting a few days away, the people have a right to know what stand Canada is going to take in this regard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada have a right to know the Canadian position when that position, after discussion with our allies, has been arrived at. No final decision has been taken as yet by any one country. My right hon. friend based his question on a press report. There will be discussions among the 14 countries next Monday, when this matter will be among those discussed. The general position of Canada in all these matters will be that while we must take action consistent with our belief in a strong NATO, we hope that we will not come to the point of making the organization one that is further removed from French participation.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in connection with these matters I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he is going to leave for the NATO foreign ministers' meeting in Brussels, and whether he is going to take advantage of his presence in Europe at that time to discuss with the French government the terms under which we will be leaving our two air force bases in France.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we have no alternative but to withdraw from the two bases. Where the units will be relocated has not yet been determined. The negotiations could run up to April 1, 1967. I will be discussing a number of matters concerning our bilateral relations with the French foreign minister next Monday.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would it not be possible for the government to give effect to the New Democratic Party proposal to return our forces to Canada for training without denouncing the treaty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It might be possible, but whether it is desirable is another question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF OMBUDSMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the growing concern over the proliferation of judicial inquiries and royal commissions, would the Prime Minister tell us whether the government intends to bring in legislation establishing the office of ombudsman during this session?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will certainly not be early in the session.

TRANSPORT

SEAWAY TOLLS—FINAL DATE FOR RECEPTION OF BRIEFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): May I request some information from the Minister of Transport on the matter of the St. Lawrence seaway tolls. Will the minister inquire from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority whether they would be prepared to receive further briefs on the question of tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway and lockage fees on the Welland ship canal?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has already indicated to me and to one or two persons who have inquired that they would be prepared to receive briefs at any time up to June 20 which under the law, is 10 days before they have to make their recommendations to the government.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister undertake to transmit to the seaway authority a copy of last Thursday's Hansard with a covering letter indicating his approbation of the expression of opinion by the house on the question of the seaway tolls?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the seaway authority are regular subscribers to Hansard and do not need to have their attention drawn to it by me.

WINTER WORKS

NOTRE-DAME-DE-LA-GUADELOUPE, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his capacity as future minister of manpower.

Has he received any reports for the 1961 winter works concerning the municipality of Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe in the last few days and has he conducted an investigation in that connection?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is sufficiently urgent to warrant it being asked at this time.

Mr. Langlois: Then I request that the question be debated at ten o'clock.

GRAIN

REPORTED CONGESTION IN MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Last Friday I directed a question to the Minister of Transport, and in his absence the acting minister took notice of it. Can the minister say whether he has taken any action to advise officials of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railway with regard to the heavy grain congestion in the eastern part of Saskatchewan and Manitoba? This question is of some urgency because we have only 39 shipping days left before July 31.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I understand the information was given to the railways. I also have the impression they are aware of it.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to ask this question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of the encouraging action taken by the government of British Columbia toward combating lung cancer by declaring today, May 31, to be non-smoking day in British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is addressed to the minister of manpower and immigration. Considering the serious charges and the excellent suggestions contained in the study called "Newcomers and New Learning" by Edith Ferguson, can the minister tell us whether he has received this study, whether careful attention is being paid to it, and whether steps will be taken to implement the recommendations contained therein?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will have to read the book before he can decide whether the question is in order.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the strike situation in Montreal, would the minister consider leaving the Air Canada overhaul base in strike-free Winnipeg?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Thank heaven there is no strike yet in Air Canada.

Government Organization

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he would explain his answer of a minute ago, when he was thanking heaven there was not yet a strike in Air Canada. Is he anticipating a strike?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very hopeful that there will not be a strike.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received yesterday or today a communication from the federation of Quebec businessmen's associations asking for a royal commission on bankruptcies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member is not in order in asking whether a telegram or message has been received.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed, from Monday, May 30, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 29—duties, powers and functions of the minister.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Monday, clause 29 of the bill was being considered.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of our consideration of the bill we are dealing with a department which will have as its responsibility perhaps the most vital area for Canada's future, namely, the responsibility on the one hand for developing and co-ordinating policies, plans and programs with respect to Canada's resources in co-operation with the provinces, plans for the development of the resources of the territories, the territorial waters and the continental shelf under the jurisdiction of the federal government on the other hand, and bringing those plans into a co-ordinated whole, thereby giving to this country one of the surest and most important springboards or foundations to ensure the maintenance of our independence, our future prosperity, our growth and survival as a nation, as well as the ability to play an ever more important part in the community of nations.

It is in this context that I want to discuss the deficiencies of the plans and of the organization proposed for this department. I regret that the minister who is designated as minister of this department is not in the committee at the moment because it would be interesting, and I believe important, to have his explanations at this stage and his answers with respect to our criticisms, not of the expressed intent of the legislation but rather of the ways in which it falls short of implementing that intent.

Last evening, Mr. Chairman, I had just finished pointing out the inconsistencies between policy in connection with this new department as stated by the Prime Minister on various occasions and the implementation of that policy as reflected in the right hon. gentleman's speech on second reading.

Let me review the situation very briefly, Mr. Chairman. The object on the government side, as stated by the Prime Minister and others, is to consolidate the responsibility for the development of resources policy. Unfortunately the accomplishment so far as this bill is concerned is a complete division of responsibility in that field between two departments. Indeed, in my submission, never was a policy so good in principle so completely defeated in detail by the results of legislation introduced ostensibly to implement that policy.

Last night I had directed attention to the statement of the Prime Minister which is reported at page 5431 of Hansard as to the roles and responsibilities of the two ministers concerned, the minister of Indian affairs and northern development on the one hand and the minister of energy, mines and resources on the other, and I had pointed out the areas of potential conflict.

This process of outlining conflict and division was continued in the speech of the Prime Minister in the tortured explanation he gave, as reported on the balance of page 5431 and down through the first column of page 5432 of Hansard, including his very inept use of the words "dry land" and "wet land". Well, Mr. Chairman, perhaps his use of those words is not so inept after all; they may be a pretty apt description of the state of the government administration as it will exist after this bill goes through.

Wet land, as I appreciate it, Mr. Chairman, is usually a bog, and if not drained it becomes a quicksand. I have a very acute suspicion that the future course of administration in this field, if this legislation goes through in its present form, will be bogged down in the wet land left by the Prime Minister's proposals and it will need more than the ordinary lifebuoy to drag it out of the quicksand in which it will founder.

I want to direct the committee's attention to the specific passages found at the bottom of the first column on page 5432 and the top of the second column where the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> To avoid confusion the minister of energy, mines and resources will handle the administrative work for the islands in Hudson bay, Hudson strait and Ungava bay, as well as for the underwater areas south of a certain line.
> In other words, as a purely pragmatic administrative arrangement, the water areas have been placed with the land jurisdiction in the Arctic archipelago where the land is the most extensive and important element, and the land areas have been placed with the water in the Hudson Bay area where the water areas are very much larger than that of the islands. The dividing line, so far as the departments are concerned, will run substantially along the south coast of Southampton and Baffin Islands.

So, Mr. Chairman, we have one of the most important areas of jurisdiction in resource planning and development divided in half arbitrarily.

Then the Prime Minister, failing so utterly to appreciate the disastrous consequences of that division, went on to say:

> This division is not reflected in the present bill because it has no legal consequences or significance.

What an abysmal failure, Mr. Chairman, to appreciate the very far reaching significance of what is proposed. The Prime Minister dismisses it in his next words:

> It is simply a division of federal administrative responsibility between two federal ministers about which I thought I should inform the house.

I wish indeed that we could take it as casually as does the Prime Minister. It indicates a complete lack of awareness on the part of the government of any of the significance of this field of resource development, and with the tremendous potential in the northern areas and in the continental shelf it especially indicates a complete unawareness of the importance of co-ordinating policies in this regard. Here we have the most confusing division with respect to administrative arrangements. Did you ever hear of such a half-baked idea of dividing administrative responsibility for areas having the same general problems between two different ministers?

Perhaps even more important, Mr. Chairman, than the chaos created by this administrative division is the fact that the bill is completely silent as to the responsibility for planning and co-ordination of programs for development. It is important that we bear in mind this distinction between responsibility for administration and carrying out plans and physical development on the one hand and the responsibility for making those plans and co-ordinating national policy on the other.

The bill having created chaos by an administrative division, Mr. Chairman, it further confuses the situation by being silent as to the responsibility for planning within the area of the continental shelf. I say that because in clause 17 the minister of Indian affairs and northern development is given responsibility for the territories and their resources and affairs; and while I may have some reservations about the effect of the wording, nevertheless in so far as administrative responsibility is concerned on the whole I think that is sound. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, the minister is in effect acting as trustee for future provinces. This, of course, is acceptable, and in that respect I am sure the territories will co-operate with the minister of energy, mines and resources with respect to the planning and co-ordination of programs in those areas.

However, Mr. Chairman, although the minister of northern development is given responsibility for the territories and their resources and affairs, nowhere is anyone given responsibility for the resources underlying the territorial waters of Canada or the resources of the continental shelf, that is to say, responsibility for the planning, programming and co-ordination of the development programs. In clause 29, the clause now under consideration, no mention is made of these areas or their resources.

Our view is that there must be the clearest definition of administrative responsibility and responsibility for planning and development of resource policy in these areas which, as I have said, constitute a large part of one of the most vital areas of Canadian development and interest. In our view, Mr. Chairman, you simply cannot leave out responsibility for planning in one half the area of Canada—the territories, the territorial waters and the continental shelf.

• (3:30 p.m.)

We therefore propose to move two amendments to rectify this situation. The first would be an amendment to give to the minister of energy, mines and resources responsibility for the administration of the resources underlying the territorial waters within the continental shelf in so far as these belong to Canada. This amendment and its results must be read to some extent, of course as subject to whatever ruling the Supreme Court of Canada may make with respect to jurisdiction in this field.

I pause here, Mr. Chairman, to say that in our view, as we have already expressed it, if the ruling should support the position taken by the government of Canada there must be immediately a discussion with the provinces with regard to a fair apportionment of the benefits of these resources.

The second amendment we will move is an amendment having as its purpose to make clear that the minister has responsibility for planning and co-ordinating programs for all of these resources. Both of these amendments refer to clause 29 of the bill. I say this because I should like to complete my remarks and then speak only briefly before moving the second amendment. We feel that there must be an amendment to make sure that this minister has responsibility for planning and co-ordinating the programs for resources. So far as national responsibility is concerned for co-ordinating these plans and programs, we feel there is at the moment a substantial gap which is not repaired by the inclusion in clause 31 of the bill of the proposed new section 8A of the Resources and Technical Surveys Act.

It should be borne in mind that although there is presently in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act section 7 which clearly delineates the responsibility and authority of the minister for planning in this regard, that section is being repealed. In our view nothing adequate is provided to take its place.

When I move the second amendment I shall go into a little more detail as to why we feel the proposed section 8A of the Resources and Technical Surveys Act is not adequate to fill this gap. I mention the proposed amendment now because I want the committee to realize that the two amendments are complementary. The first one, which I will move in a moment, is to make it clear that the minister has responsibility for administration of the resources of the territorial waters and continental shelf instead of that responsibility being bifurcated as at present.

[Mr. Fulton.]

The second amendment would give the minister of energy, mines and resources responsibility and authority for planning, so far as the federal government is concerned, in this area and of co-ordinating these plans between the federal and provincial authorities. On that basis, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Section 29 of the Bill be amended by deleting the word "and" at the end of subclause (b) and adding thereto the following subclauses:

(d) the resources underlying the territorial waters of Canada; and

(e) the resources underlying the continental shelf in so far as the same are assigned to Canada by the international agreement respecting the continental shelf reached at Geneva in 1958.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to this amendment and say a few words in response to the points brought forward by the hon. member for Kamloops. He told us that a committee of his party had canvassed the situation and decided it was imperative that the resources of Canada, their organization and planning for their exploitation should be held in one department and not more than one. I am quite certain that does not represent the viewpoint of all the members of his own party. The hon. member referred to the regrettable gap that existed, and I think there is a gap in his knowledge of the particular conditions that exist in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I am going to tell him now that no member of a government who had allocated to him the responsibility for the development of Northwest Territories and the Yukon could discharge that responsibility or have any hope of discharging it unless he had control of the resources of these particular areas.

The other day the Prime Minister referred to the minister charged with this responsibility. I am quite certain that these views I am now giving to the hon. member for Kamloops would be corroborated by the former ministers in his party who have had the responsibility that I now have. The first impression one gets when one goes to the Northwest Territories, and to a lesser extent the Yukon, is that there are no resources above the ground. There has been a long-held hope that there are great resources under the ground. I need only remind the house again, to prove that this is the very fortunate case, that in one year from 1964 to 1965, as a result of the building of the Pine Point Railway, the production of metals in the Northwest Territories rose from $17 million to $74 million. In the current year it is going to exceed $100 million. I predict it will go on to many hundreds of millions of dollars because of the development that is taking place there.

The people who reside there are hopeful of creating something other than the type of government they enjoy at the present time. They can look forward to the development of what the Prime Minister referred to hopefully the other day as one or more provinces in an area where the resources are conserved and developed for their advantage.

In order to improve the living standards of the Eskimo and Indian people in the north it is necessary to relate these native people to the resources which lie there. The hon. member has made an unconvincing case. I am sure he would not have attempted it in this house had he made a visit to the territories or been in touch with members of his own party who have responsibilities there.

With regard to offshore rights, let me say that we have in Canada at the present time about 1,400,000 cubic miles of sedimentary rock. Not all sedimentary rock contains oil but all oil comes from sedimentary rock.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Laing: More than one million cubic miles of this rock is in the high Arctic islands entirely apart from the Northwest Territories compared with 135,000 cubic miles to be found in Alberta which is today our great source of oil.

So we are extremely enthusiastic about the development of the north and I as minister have to relate the ambitions, the hopes and the plans of the people who live there to conditions as they exist today. The population in the north wishes its resources to be maintained in order that the people may be able to develop the type of government they want. It will therefore be necessary to refuse to accept this amendment at this time.

Mr. Fulton: The minister has rejected the amendment and advanced an argument in support of its rejection apparently without having read the terms of the proposal. I cannot believe that a colleague of mine in this house from British Columbia would be so incapable of understanding an amendment unless he had failed to read it. I can only suppose that he did not read it and that he is stubbornly determined to oppose it simply because it comes forward as a constructive suggestion from the official opposition.

I was glad to find the hon. gentleman paying tribute to the work started by the Conservative government in connection with the Pine Point Railway. It is unusual to find members opposite saying anything good about the government which preceded their own.

Mr. Benson: There is little that can be said.

Mr. Fulton: Had the minister paused to reflect he would have realized that members of a government which took such an interest in developing the north would scarcely fail to recognize the importance of developing the administrative integrity of the resources in that area.

I should also like to inform the minister, in order to keep the record straight, that I visited the territories on two occasions during the time I had some responsibility in that area in connection with the R.C.M.P. and the administration of justice. I took advantage of that opportunity to talk to the people there and became acquainted with their ambitions and their views. I realize how important it is to the development of their plans that we should maintain the administrative integrity of those resources in the area. I should also like to assure the minister that I have discussed this question with my hon. friends in this party including, of course, the hon. member for Yukon. Unlike the situation in the hon. gentleman's own party, there is no internal dissension within our ranks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: We are not divided by the kind of dissension which makes it impossible for members of the government opposite to introduce some of their most important pieces of legislation, the kind of dissension which holds up the Bank Act.

I have indeed discussed this question with my hon. friends of this party including the hon. member for Yukon. The essential point, and one which the minister has failed to appreciate, is that the amendment I have presented in no way lessens the administrative responsibility of the minister of Indian affairs and northern development in relation to resources within the territories. It changes in no way the provisions of section 17 of the bill. What it does is to straighten out the bifurcated responsibility for the administration of the shelf and of the territorial waters, that is the resources of the shelf outside the land areas of the territories. Whatever the minister may say, this is a desirable and, indeed, an essential development if we are to have a policy of co-ordinated resource development in this country.

Mr. Laing: would the hon. member permit a question before he resumes his seat? Is he saying that the hon. member for Yukon supports this amendment?

Mr. Fulton: Most certainly. And let the minister not pretend that this amendment does what he pretends it is doing. I know perfectly well the game the minister is playing. Let him not pretend that this takes away any degree of ministerial responsibility for the administration of the resources within the land area of the territories. It does not.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, having listened to remarks made by the minister I think I should say a few words. As my hon. friend from Kamloops has pointed out, this amendment was put forward in an attempt to rectify what is in our view a schizophrenic act by the government. The Prime Minister, speaking on second reading, announced that the continental shelf would be divided between two ministers. The effect of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops is to place the shelf under one minister's jurisdiction.

Speaking on second reading I emphasized that in the future the continental shelf would be the subject of hard bargaining with nations like Russia in the west and north and with the countries of Europe to the east while the boundary line was being defined. What struck me as being schizophrenic was that the Prime Minister said that one minister would have responsibility for the shelf north of an arbitrary line while another would have responsibility south of that line. It is my firm belief that responsibility for dealing with foreign powers and for developing policy with respect to the continental shelf should be under one minister.

Had the government been content to leave the whole of the responsibility with the minister of northern affairs there would, I am sure, have been less objection taken here. This is the position adopted by the hon. member for Yukon. He was trying to preserve the resources of this area under the control of the northern development section of the government. Administratively we want to strengthen the minister of northern affairs. But since there is to be a division of responsibility between the two ministers, then at least let us put responsibility for the continental shelf under one or the other.

This could be done without reducing the power of the minister one iota under his part of the bill because there is nothing in that part which precisely implies that the continental shelf will be under his department. We simply had a statement by the Prime Minister on second reading, and under the Transfer of Duties Act it can be placed anywhere without statutory enactment.

What we are trying to do by this amendment is to put into clear, statutory language the fact that we want one minister to have charge of the continental shelf. The continental shelf is in two parts, the territorial section which runs from high water mark to three miles offshore and, second, that part of the bottom of the sea which is beyond the three mile limit and extends halfway across the Arctic, the Atlantic and the Pacific, as far as our jurisdiction will go when these areas are finally divided. What we are trying to do is give constructive help to the government so that there will be one minister to whom we can address questions about the behaviour of the government on continental shelf policy.

That is the essence of our amendment. If any one minister had this responsibility I think that would be satisfactory to most of us. As I pointed out on second reading, I thought from the words of the Prime Minister that the workings of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources were being cut down to a provincial government type operation and I stated that I was a little bit frightened about the personality who was going to look after the other department which the Prime Minister called "national". To keep the legislation itself coherent and logical I suggest that these amendments make sense. There is another matter I intend to raise but I think it will come up more properly after a vote is taken on this amendment.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to speak earlier but I think my remarks will apply equally well to the amendment and to the bill. I have gone back to the statement made by the Prime Minister on second reading at the pages referred to by the hon. member for Kamloops. It concerns me a bit to see statements that at some time in the future we will have one or more provinces in the north, because there are some Canadians who do not look favourably on the idea of having an additional province in an area of small population, with a complete provincial assembly and all the trappings and expense that go with it in order to administer the affairs of a small group of people.

We seem to have set our minds so firmly on the concept of Canada continuing to proliferate in provinces that we have ignored, until it is almost too late to do anything else, the possibility of other arrangements such as expanding existing provinces and thus negating the necessity of setting up others that will be a material drain on the rest of Canada.

I am concerned that this particular aspect of government reorganization has been introduced at this time and that we are engaging in setting up a department of energy at a time when the question of the territorial shelf and offshore mineral rights has been placed before the Supreme Court of Canada by the federal government. The Prime Minister stated:

> The minister of energy, mines and resources, on the other hand, will be exercising responsibilities that are essentially, if I may use that word, national in their character.

If they are essentially national in character I do not think the whole question would have had to be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. If that were the case the situation would have been adjusted automatically. The Prime Minister went on to say:

> This is purely a constitutional question and it has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion.

I submit that it is not purely a constitutional question but is a political question. The confederation of British Columbia with the rest of Canada was at that time a political settlement which of course had a constitutional arrangement, but there are many other factors involved than simply the constitution as such. I would recommend to hon. members an article in the winter 1966 edition of Queen's Quarterly by Edwin R Black, titled "Oil Off shore Troubles the Waters." In it he sets out some of the arguments for the federal case and one of them is:

> —extending Canada's sovereign boundaries westward into the Pacific ocean beyond those boundaries which British Columbia brought with it when it joined the federation in 1871.

When it gets around to tackling this issue the supreme court is going to have an extremely difficult time sorting out the constitutional implications from the political. I am convinced it will not find it a purely constitutional question and that its decision is just as likely, if not more so, to come down on the side of B.C. as on the side of the federal government. The rather pathetic suggestion that if it does we can then make the necessary readjustments, but at the moment we will go ahead and set up the machinery, anticipating the decision of the supreme court, is something which we should criticize most strenuously as a sort of fait accompli being presented by the government and, if anything, it is being assisted by the amendment presented by the hon. member for Kamloops.

I do not know if that was the hon. member's original intention but as the amendment is worded it is going to apply to a great deal more than offshore Arctic waters. It is going to concern the offshore waters of B.C. and I would remind hon. members that B.C. is the only province which has a Pacific coast. There are some aspects of the problem that are quite unique to the province and—

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Johnston: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: From the words he has just used are we to infer that he believes that Canada does not have a Pacific coast?

Mr. Johnston: That is not quite the interpretation I would put on it. I would suggest that B.C. brought its Pacific coast to Canada in confederation and that they are identical. Therefore the development that was going on at that time must be considered rather than any changing of the picture. I think in a way that this part of the bill is out of order. I do not have any legal training. I cannot say that the question is sub judice or use such legal terms, but it does seem a bit improper for this house today to proceed to divide authority over part of Canada when we are awaiting a supreme court decision whether or not we have the power to do that.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, the minister in charge of northern development has intimated that former ministers of northern affairs would not be quite in sympathy with the amendments that have been put forward by the hon. member for Kamloops. I shall speak only briefly because we are anxious to get on with this legislation but I want to indicate without any equivocation whatsoever that I heartily endorse the two amendments. I should like to speak about them together in order to save time.

Mr. Laing: The Yukon is not going to like you either.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to the two amendments because had I had the opportunity last evening to speak on clause 15, I would have pointed out that under the terms of the omnibus bill now before us the ministerial responsibilities which come under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources now are rapidly withering away. As the Prime Minister himself has indicated, the responsibilities of the minister of northern development will be those of a provincial premier. This means that the former important responsibility for national planning of resource development, which was emphasized by prime minister Louis St. Laurent, has been left out in no-man's land to a certain extent. Therefore I heartily agree with the hon. member for Kamloops that in view of the transition taking place under this legislation it should be spelled out in no uncertain terms that the minister of energy, mines and resources should carry on the responsibility for national planning in the resource area which under the former act was delegated to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

I say this because I think the minister of resources has not realized he is assuming a very important responsibility which only recently has been assumed by the federal government. In a speech in Toronto over the week end the minister of resources dealt with national resource planning in the realm of water resources. My attention was drawn to a significant editorial in the Toronto Star of yesterday, May 30, under the heading "Stand Up and Lead, Mr. Pepin". This article scored the minister's speech on national responsibility for water resources for failing to demonstrate the initiative and leadership which is required if Canada is to continue to cope with the crisis in renewable resource development which is now on our doorstep and has been for the past decade or so. So, contrary to what the minister of northern development has said, I heartily support the viewpoint expressed by the hon. member for Kamloops.

Others have given consideration to the anomalies and discrepancies which appear with reference to the administration of the continental shelf and, to use the learned phrase of the hon. member for Kamloops, the bifurcation of responsibility in this regard. Mr. Maurice Western, writing in the Winnipeg Free Press, has drawn attention to this problem in precisely the same terms as the hon. member for Kamloops did this afternoon. Here is how this distinguished journalist points up the problem:

> Mr. Pearson's original idea, evidently, was that Mr. Pepin would be concerned with matters national in character and not relating to any particular province or territory. The 60th parallel would be a convenient dividing line and Mr. Pepin would take over the controversial business of resources on the continental shelf.
> But the problem was not so simple and Mr. Pearson ended with a "purely pragmatic" solution, which he explained in his somewhat laborious speech of Tuesday. He seems to have thought at one point that Mr. Laing might function as a "dry land" and Mr. Pepin as a "wet land" minister. But nothing is much wetter than the north, especially the Arctic archipelago. It was decided that Mr. Laing would have charge of this area on the theory that it is land "interlaced" with water while Mr. Pepin, incredibly, would be responsible for the islands of the bay because they represent "exactly the opposite situation."
> Thus "to avoid confusion" the line is to run "substantially along the south coast of Southampton and Baffin island." In fact, however, the islands south of the line are part of the Northwest Territories. This is a ridiculous situation.

So others are concerned with the problem we are attempting to solve through this amendment this afternoon. A short time ago the minister interjected a suggestion that the hon. member for Yukon would not be in sympathy with the sentiments of this amendment and that the present comments I am making would not go down very well with the people of the Yukon Territory. It already has been spelled out that the administration of the mainland in the north would not be disturbed at all by the amendment. What we are endeavouring to do is to rationalize the anomaly outlined in the comments made by Mr. Maurice Western in his article in the Winnipeg Free Press of May 25.

If it would serve the minister's purpose that he assume total responsibility for the continental shelf, that would get around the difficulty in precisely the same way as the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Kamloops; in other words, he would have the total responsibility. I am sure my hon. friend from the Yukon would be heartily in sympathy with this viewpoint. What we are asking is that the confusion which is obvious at least to most members of the house and to distinguished members of the press gallery shall be ended in one way or another. Either the minister of resources should assume this total responsibility or the minister of northern development should do so.

As a former minister of northern affairs and in view of the rapid withering away of the department of northern affairs I would say, speaking sentimentally, that it might be placed under the jurisdiction of the department of northern development. If the minister cannot accept our amendment, I hope sincerely that in the interest of peace, order, good government and good common sense he will seize the initiative and resolve this difficulty by placing it under his own moral responsibility.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken I should like say two or three words. I listened with considerable interest to the hon. member for Kamloops. The word he used most frequently was "gap"; he referred to the yawning gap between several departments which was developing because of this legislation. He thought this applied particularly in areas of policy. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle got up and said that this responsibility should be in either one department or another. In other words, his primary concern seemed to be with overlapping in the future administration of the government's policies with regard to matters such as water and energy. One speaker from the opposition side is concerned about gaps and another about overlapping. I suggest there is some inconsistency in this regard.

In respect of fundamental matters like water and energy, which nowadays are becoming of increasing interest in this country, there have been various government departments involved. Necessarily there is some degree of overlapping and some degree of co-ordination but this legislation is designed to minimize the degree of overlapping. More of the responsibilities in connection with water and energy have been put together in one new department, the department of energy, mines and resources.

The amendment refers to this matter. The hon. member for Kamloops is concerned primarily with the fact, and this is substantially an interpretation of his words, that the new minister of energy, mines and resources will not have authority over planning, programming and co-ordinating of policies with regard to energy. I respectfully submit that the clause as it now stands does give the minister that power. The clause reads:

> The duties, powers and functions of the minister of energy, mines and resources extend to and include all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction—

I wish to emphasize the words, "all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction." Surely "all matters" includes planning, programming and co-ordinating. Surely this is what policy-making is all about, and I trust that policy-making is still one of the principal functions of the government of Canada. Therefore I would suggest that the amendment to this extent is redundant and unnecessary.

I listened with some interest to the hon member for Okanagan-Revelstoke who, coming from the province of British Columbia and being a member of the Social Credit faith, believes that the offshore mineral resources, at least on the west coast, should come under the jurisdiction of the province as distinct from the jurisdiction of the nation. I happen to hold the contrary view. However, I suggest that wherever the jurisdiction for these resources resides, and I believe it resides with the nation, this subject clearly comes within the terms and wording of the present clause. Therefore the clause does not have to be amended.

Unlike several hon. members on the opposition side who really skated around the issue of whether off-shore mineral rights belong to the province or the nation, I categorically state that I believe these are matters which this clause now covers in its present form. They are certainly covered by subclause (a), energy, mines and minerals.

Reference was made to the present minister and some recent statements he has made. I know that the present incumbent, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is a very intelligent and capable man who has come to understand effectively and quickly not only the administrative details but also the policy implications and responsibilities of his new department. I am convinced that he and certainly this government intend to strike clearcut stances and declare clearcut policies in respect of resources. I think this is vital and important, and I suggest to hon. members that to add more lines to clause 29 would merely proliferate the words and perhaps undermine the power of the federal government. I suggest we should all vote against it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the arguments of the hon. gentleman who preceded me. He seemed to advance them with a certain amount of diffidence. He started off powerfully and ended up almost apologetically. His final words were to the effect that any amendment of this kind would weaken the powers of the department. I find it difficult to understand that argument.

The hon. gentleman referred also to the fact that the members of the opposition were dodging the question of the ownership of offshore mineral rights. The present government of Canada has done just that. The question of mineral rights should not have been submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada. It should have been decided in a truly national way after discussion and consideration at a conference with the various provinces. Instead of that being done the government wanted to get away from its responsibility to make a decision, a course it has followed during the three years it has been in office.

I have a high regard for the minister, but as I listened to his argument to the effect that of the north will strengthen the administra- dividing by arbitrary lines the various areas tion of the great resources to which he referred I must say that I felt it was indeed one of the most unusual arguments I have ever heard. The government is going to say to one minister, this part of the sea is your jurisdiction, and to another minister, this part of the sea is your jurisdiction. Let me suggest that this government needs no assistance so far as being at sea is concerned. I cannot understand what is behind the attitude taken by members on the government side toward this amendment. I would have thought it would be accepted as a serious endeavour to strengthen the department.

I listened with tremendous interest to the minister as he paid warm words of tribute to the Pine Point Railway development.

Mr. Laing: I was trying to hatch your vision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am very glad to find there has been a change of attitude on the part of the minister opposite. When we went ahead with this proposition the Liberals ridiculed it as another example of the weakness of the vision of northern development. That which was heresy when we were in office is now embraced by the present government as an example of its wise foresight in bringing the development of the north to fruition.

[Mr. Davis.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We remember the immortal words of the Prime Minister when the Conservative party spoke of the new northern development. He said: What are they going to do, build roads and railroads from igloo to igloo? There is always hope when there is recognition of wrongdoing, however late. There is always hope for those who adopt that attitude. Imagine the change that took place. They ridiculed this vision and said it was a nightmare. We went ahead in the face of the most bitter criticism on the part of the Liberal opposition of that day and proceeded with the development of the north. The people of northern Canada realize that it is in consequence of our actions that tremendous mineral developments are taking place in the north.

The reference made by the minister to the Pine Point development was what one might call a tribute in reverse. He now admits that the reason he mentioned it without specifically paying a tribute was to assure to the Conservative party a subtle compliment. He hid that compliment very well when he spoke.

Speaking of development, what is going to happen when one minister is in charge of one portion of the sea and another in charge of another portion? Why does the government establish this division and what is behind it? Where is the incumbent minister of this department? Is he away today on some political harangue? Why is he not here when this whole matter is being considered? What possible excuse can there be for his absence?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I know the right hon. gentleman would not wish to leave the impression with anyone that he was unfairly attacking a minister. The minister in question today is in Winnipeg attending a meeting of the resource ministers council of Canada making plans for a convention on the subject of pollution to be held in the city of Montreal in November. I am sure this convention will be of tremendous value to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that indicates how little hon. members opposite have upon which to base their applause when they pound their desks in the manner they have. The place for a minister when a matter dealing with his responsibility is before parliament is here in the house. I think even at this stage there should be a move made to postpone the discussion of this subject until he has returned. Today he is on an important mission and certainly we should not go ahead behind his back to make a determination of an amendment of which he knows nothing and which possibly he in his wisdom might decide is worth while.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: They laugh because they know he has no wisdom.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suggest that this portion of the bill be left over for further consideration. I should like to give an example of the kind of thing that is going on. I cannot understand the division of responsibility that is taking place. The hon. member for Kamloops mentioned divisions a moment ago. One of the finest examples is the shadow-boxing going on between the Minister of Finance and his predecessor. I recall one of Abraham Lincoln's sorties that I think illustrates the situation very well. He spoke at one time of two men, somewhat intoxicated—that does not apply—who got into a fight. Both were wearing overcoats. They fought for over an hour and when it was over each was wearing the other's coat.

As I thought of this example of unity within the ranks of the present government I could not help but recall Abraham Lincoln's story. We do not know what their stand is on the question of northern development. The Minister of National Revenue is fully conversant with these things, but in connection with northern development some questions have been asked of him regarding Mr. John Doyle and they have not been answered.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor now.

Mr. Benson: On a question of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Minister of National Revenue on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, on what point does the hon. gentleman rise?

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition indicated that questions have been asked of me with respect to northern development, which is really not the case. Perhaps he is referring to one question concerning an individual's personal tax affairs which was put on the order paper last Friday. I can assure him that it will be answered promptly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Fine. Now we are making progress. We did get one answer in this connection which shows something about what is going on in these departments with regard to northern development. It is difficult to understand. The question was asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon and is recorded at page 5673 of Hansard:

1. Is the federal government aware of a press release of Canadian Javelin Limited concerning a $35 million paved highway to connect Goose Bay with the Gulf of St. Lawrence and, if so, has the government announced its intention to build such a road?

2. Has the said road been approved by the government and (a) if so, when (b) if not, what is the present position of this project?

This question was answered by another minister, not the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who has to do with northern development. The answer was:

1. The answer to both parts is no.

2. No such project has been approved by the government.

The answer was given by the Minister of Public Works. Mention was made by the hon. member for Saskatoon that he had certain information in this connection. The government has no knowledge of this great developmental plan that will help the Doyle interests, nothing of that kind whatsoever. I have before me a press release of Canadian Javelin Limited which deals with the question of development. We want to know what is behind this. The release describes the developments that are taking place. Mind you, a reputable company such as the one with which Mr. Doyle is connected would not be putting forth things that are not true because even in his present condition he is one of the worshippers of this government, one who, according to those who know, devoted himself in various ways to assuring that this government would actually be formed. This is what the press release says:

The federal government of Canada has announced its intention to immediately build a new $35 million paved highway which is to connect Goose Bay on lake Melville with the gulf of St. Lawrence and the strait of Belle Isle. This highway will permit winter shipments from the proposed mill as it will provide access to a year-round port on the gulf of St. Lawrence. The new road will play an important role in the harvesting and transportation of the wood as it bisects Jubilee-NALCO forest reserves. These reserves contain approximately 50 million cords of valuable black spruce.

Certainly a man of Mr. Doyle's standing would not be placing before the public a completely untrue statement. I can only review this matter, sir, in relation to the development of the northern areas of Canada by saying that there has been too much division opposite. One minister looks after one phase of development and another minister looks after another. The answer given yesterday does not meet the situation and I would suggest that there be a little more consultation.

Returning once more to the question of division of responsibilities let me ask, can anyone contend—it surprises me to find the minister of northern development doing this—that there can be any justification for dividing the areas of the sea between two departments on a territorial line enunciated in a general way by the Prime Minister in the course of his remarks? What is the reason for this? Are our great northern areas going to secure developments that otherwise would not take place? Surely there is no efficiency in this.

The explanation given is that if we accept this, swallow it, somehow or other developments are going to be initiated in northern Canada by those who now are the government of this country, who ridiculed the potentialities of northern Canada throughout the years and now want to go ahead with further developments. Instead of having unity they are going to divide the northern sea areas between two ministers. If division is going to increase efficiency, why have they not distributed the responsibility among three or four ministers? What is the purpose of this? It may add to the number of ministers, but the Prime Minister has said it will not. What is the purpose here?

Why does the minister, so out of hand, brush aside a suggestion that I thought he would have been the first to at least consider? He is not the one who is going to administer these matters; another has been chosen and that other is away today. I suggest that the minister who is piloting this bill through the house might very well postpone further consideration of it. You never know, when the absent minister comes back he might be one of the first to agree, because of the views he has expressed, that what we are trying to do is increase efficiency in this connection. What is being done by the government in taking responsibility for development and dividing it, subdividing it and handing it out to one minister and another will achieve a state of chaos, which is something this government needs no assistance in bringing about.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I have been unavoidably absent from the house during the initial stages of this discussion because of attending a very thought-provoking and useful discussion with the members of the Carrothers commission who are most concerned about matters affecting the north and northern development. I really do not know what all the fuss is about. I do not know what everyone is arguing about because the matters before the house should properly be under the control and jurisdiction of the people of the north, not of this house.

Mr. Davis: You are on the wrong part of the bill.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not on the wrong part of the bill at all. If the hon. member for Coast-Capilano had any appreciation of matters concerning the north he would not make aimless remarks. Clause 17(b) deals specifically with matters about which I am going to speak. So far as divisions are concerned—

An hon. Member: We are on clause 29.

Mr. Nielsen: We are now talking about the transfer of responsibility for resources which lie in the north from one department to another, and I intend to speak about this.

So far as division is concerned, I can remember when those who now sit opposite were on this side of the house and the former minister of transport, now Canadian high commissioner in England, said in one of his speeches—this will give an indication of the kind of attitude displayed toward the development of the north by those who now sit over there—"I am sick to my stomach of all this talk about northern development where nobody lives but Indians and Eskimos anyway".

Mr. Byrne: That is why he is high commissioner.

Mr. Nielsen: Exactly. That was his record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You say that is why he is high commissioner? Those are Liberal rewards.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Kootenay East has interjected before. When the Leader of the Opposition was speaking he said "Don't be so childish". This came from an expert on all things childish. He finds it so easy to change feet when he opens his mouth.

Speaking about divisions existing over there, I say that the minister should look within his own ranks and within his own heart because I know he does not like these changes. He felt very baldy about the responsibility for resources being forcibly taken away from him and given to someone else for whom some position had to be found. The resource responsibility in the minister's department was and is one of the most important. As I understand it, the position being taken on this side is that the administration of those resources should remain with him, and so it should, until such time as we can soften his hard heart and those of his colleagues in the government and get them to transfer the responsibility where it properly belongs. Until that time there can be no argument with the principle that he is acting in all respects like a provincial resource minister. He has the responsibility of controlling these resources until such time as that responsibility is transferred to properly constituted assemblies in the Yukon, Mackenzie and elsewhere in the north wherever provinces may be set up.

Mr. Laing: Would the hon. member speak to the member for Kamloops?

Mr. Nielsen: I have spoken to the member for Kamloops and I can find no division between the policy he has stated and the policy I am stating now.

Mr. Fulton: The trouble is, the minister cannot or will not read the amendment.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure the minister can perceive it but with the propensity he has—and I do not attribute any motivation to him in this connection—of being unable to view things otherwise than in a political light it is sometimes difficult for him to see the unity which exists in constructive suggestions from this side of the house.

We in the north believe that the responsibility for resources should be under one minister instead of being divided in the way that is proposed.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Nielsen: I can think of a reason for the delineation of this arbitrary line which strikes northward from the western boundary of Hudson bay, skirts around the southern edge of Baffin island, over to Resolution island and thence to the eastern boundary of Canada in the Arctic, excluding all the islands south of that line which would come under the jurisdiction of the new proposed department.

That territory is in the north and was hitherto administered by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The minister shakes his head negatively, but this is so. He had responsibility for this resource and now it is being taken from him and, as the Leader of the Opposition put it, with respect to the continental shelf and territorial waters resources one minister has responsibility for one portion of the Arctic ocean and another minister for another portion. It seems completely illogical, and indeed it is. There is no justification for it.

However, I am pleased to see the amendment that has been put forward by this side advocating that resources underlying the territorial waters of Canada and the continental shelf be placed under the jurisdiction of one minister. That does not impair in the slightest way the jurisdiction of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources over his existing responsibilities with regard to administration of resources in the north. That is his one important responsibility and one which we look forward to assuming in due course.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member answer a question? He is even more familiar than I with the geography of the high Arctic islands. I am sure he would admit that over half of the sedimentaries in the Arctic are covered by water.

Mr. Nielsen: I will agree immediately with the minister but I fail to see the relevance of the statement he has just made.

Mr. Laing: The relevance pertains to the fact that the hon. member for Yukon said he supports an amendment which would remove jurisdiction over those waters and the minerals under them from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Nielsen: Precisely; I was speaking with respect to waters above the continental shelf and resources underlying the territorial waters of Canada. This does not impair in the slightest the jurisdiction of the minister.

Mr. Laing: I want to make myself clear. It has been known to Canadians, not only in the time of this government but previously, that over 50 per cent of the oil and gas which we hope and expect to take out of the north is under water. The hon. member is now supporting an amendment to remove jurisdiction over this resource from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I fail to see how the amendment impairs at all the administrative responsibility of the minister if it is accepted.

Mr. Hamilton: This is the key point, Mr. Chairman. When the Prime Minister spoke in the house on May 24 he said that the minister of Indian affairs and northern development would be like a provincial minister. On the other hand, he said that the minister of energy, mines and resources would be exercising responsibilities which are essentially, if I may use his word, "national" in character.

These lands underneath the sea are not provincial. Let that be clear. By international law the lands under the sea have been given to Canada, not to any province. Let us be clear about that. This does not mean that the federal government has to administer every little detail, because I am sure there will be discussions with the provinces and the territories about administration. But as to the silly argument that half the wealth of the north is under the sea, that is not the point at all.

Either the minister is to be, as the Prime Minister said, like a provincial minister or he is not. Either the other minister is to be, as the Prime Minister said, a national minister or he is not. The words of the Prime Minister are so clear, Mr. Chairman, that to try to divide a national responsibility and give part of it to a provincial minister just does not make sense.

We are not giving up one bit of the rights of the province of the future in the north to administer its own resources. They go to the high water mark like those of every other province do. The boundary of the province of Ontario stops short of the high water mark. The boundary of the province of Manitoba stops short of the high water mark. The boundary of the province of Quebec stops at the same point, short of the high water mark. Therefore, why should the Northwest Territories have more than any other province? If we are to be consistent, let us keep this bill consistent. If we are to have a national minister, then give him national responsibilities. But do not divide the cake in half.

[Mr. Laing.]

If we still want to keep the resources of the continental shelf under the jurisdiction of one minister and if it is clearly understood that the continental shelf is to be looked after by the national minister and that the responsibility is delegated to the minister of the north, then that is good enough for me. I am simply making it very clear that a resource which is the property of Canada by the international law of the sea should be dealt with by the national minister.

If parliament wishes to place that national duty upon another minister then that is its privilege. But it should be one or the other, Mr. Chairman. We want that resource dealt with as one unit, as the property of the people of Canada, regardless of negotiations with the provinces or territories in connection with administering it. We will fight hard to keep the power of administration in the hands of the territories so far as administering those resources is concerned, but let me make it very clear that the resources at the bottom of the sea, whether in territorial waters or beyond the territorial waters, are the property of the national government by international law.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I hope that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has helped to penetrate the lack of appreciation on the part of the minister of the point we on this side are attempting to make. I believe that the reason he fails to understand lies in the fact that even though he pays lip service to the idea, as does the Prime Minister, he does not even treat seriously the possibilty that one day there may be a province of the Yukon or a province of Mackenzie. I say that because if at this moment he thought of the Yukon, the Mackenzie, the eastern Arctic and possibly the high Arctic as provinces of the future and treated them in his mind as provinces, then the distinction would become clear at once and he would appreciate the responsibility he has regarding potential future provinces of this nature. That responsibility would be on all fours with the responsibility of any provincial resource minister and is quite distinct from the responsibility he now has with regard to resources under territorial waters and the resources of the continental shelf.

That is the distinction, Mr. Chairman, between the responsibilities, and to me that is the nub of the amendment. It is not difficult for me to think in terms of the future development of the Yukon and other northern areas as provinces because I am from that area. It is not difficult for me to see that this amendment does not impair in the slightest the administrative responsibility that the minister now holds vis-à-vis his function as a resource minister in a provincial sense compared with his functions in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. That is why this amendment should commend itself to the minister but he has so far failed to appreciate the nature of the amendment and has suggested that there are divisions on this side when none exist at all.

Having explained that position, Mr. Chairman, I will resume my seat, believing that perhaps the words of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and my words have finally penetrated the thinking of the minister. I see him in discussion with the junior minister of transport who I suggest—

Mr. Laing: He is being very helpful.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure he is. I am sure he appreciates the point being made on this side, and he is one among the very few over there who has any sense of appreciation of northern problems and the north.

Mr. Turner: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, not quite in the same terms always as the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I am trying to be nice to the junior minister of transport.

An hon. Member: Can you be?

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, yes. I would commend the amendment. Now that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is silent I know that we have got through to him and he now sees the validity of the amendment. He stills looks a little quizzical but I would suggest to him that he take a minute or two to consult his colleague the Minister without Portfolio, whereupon he will see the light and be the first on his side to rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a few words about the amendment. As I understand it, the hon. member for Kamloops is concerned, as are many of us, about the proposal that the continental shelf shall be divided by a line north of which responsibility will lie with the minister of Indian affairs and northern development, with the area south of the line coming under the jurisdiction of the minister who will head the new department of energy, mines and resources. I think that this concern is shared by a great many of us.

If the hon. member were moving, that all of the continental shelf and all of the territorial waters and minerals which lie thereunder should be transferred to the minister of Indian affairs and northern development, then I would certainly support the amendment. But this amendment does not provide that the minister of Indian affairs and northern development shall have such jurisdiction. On the contrary, it suggests that jurisdiction over minerals which are under the territorial waters and over all of the continental shelf shall be transferred to the new department of energy, mines and resources. It seems to me that if the proposal being made by the government is confusing and I think it is, the passing of this amendment would compound the confusion.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: How would it do that?

Mr. Douglas: I want to point out that if we are going to have adequate development of the minerals under territorial waters we will have to work out arrangements whereby they can be developed by the same people who are developing minerals on the land. I believe that the government of Canada must eventually enter into arrangements with the provinces to allow the provinces to administer the development of resources under the territorial waters. These arrangements would include a provision, of course, whereby the federal government would receive a share of the revenue from such development.

If we do not do that, what we will have increasingly will be two kinds of development going on side by side, one on the land and for three miles out under the sea and one set of regulations, one type of permit, one type of drilling regulations, one set of royalties, and totally different administrative procedures established for the territorial waters. This arrangement will not work satisfactorily or efficiently. I believe the time will come in Canada when the administration of mineral development, whether on the land or in territorial waters, will be under the same authority. I believe that it has to come. It may take a long time to work out but I think it is inevitable. If this is true, I suggest that all the minerals under the territorial waters and the continental shelf should be under the minister of Indian affairs and northern development.

If we follow the proposal in the amendment, this is what will happen: In the north applications for drilling permits and all the regulations that have to do with mineral development will be under the minister of Indian affairs and northern development. However, if a company wants to drill three miles off the shore of an island—I do not know how you know if you are three miles off the shore of an island when there is 20 feet of ice—it will have to apply to the minister of energy, mines and resources. If the north is to be developed, surely it has to be developed as a unit.

I do not profess to be any authority on the north, but as a result of visiting certain northern parts of Canada it seems to me absolutely ridiculous to think you can develop minerals in northern Canada by trying to follow a line three miles along the coast. It is true that the hon. member for Yukon said that when the time comes for the north to develop into provinces, as I hope it will, then there will have to be some arrangement between the federal government and the new provinces for the joint administration of the minerals under the territorial waters.

Surely in the meantime these resources ought to be developed as a single entity, under a single minister. If the committee believes we will have confusion under the government's proposal, imagine the confusion we will have if, in the development of the minerals of northern Canada, gas, oil and mining companies have to deal with two ministers merely because one company at one point is drilling through the ice where there is land and in another place the company is drilling through to the water under the ice. Surely that would be a ridiculous and fantastic situation, an administrative nightmare.

I certainly hope that the government will reconsider the suggestion for dividing the continental shelf. I agree with the official opposition that the continental shelf and the territorial waters ought to be under one minister, and that minister ought to be the minister of Indian affairs and northern development. Since this amendment will not accomplish that but rather will further confuse the situation, I do not believe I can support it.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Fulton) negatived: Yeas, 28; nays, 69.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment defeated.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, in my remarks before I introduced the amendment just disposed of I said we felt there should be two amendments to clarify this bill. The purpose of the second amendment is to restore the planning authority to the full extent, that is to say, to the extent previously enjoyed by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I have referred to section 7 of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act which contains three different subclauses giving the minister, first, a general power to formulate plans for the conservation and development of the resources of Canada, and for research with respect thereto. Second, he may co-operate with the provinces and with municipalities in carrying out any surveys or development plans. Third, he may consult with and inaugurate conferences with representatives of industry, universities, etc.

I should say that that section will no longer be at the disposal of the planning and co-ordinating minister by virtue of the proposed repeal of that act. While it is true that there is in the bill before us a proposed new section of the resources and technical surveys act, in my view there are serious areas of difference between the powers and authority conferred by this proposed new section and the powers previously available to the northern affairs minister under section 7 to which I have referred.

Primarily the differences are that the minister is not specifically given authority to confer or co-operate with the provinces in formulating and carrying out a plan and he is not specifically given authority to convene conferences of various bodies with respect to study and research into the use and development of our resources. I am in no way denigrating the powers given under the proposed section 8A but if one studies them and compares them with the powers contained in section 7 of the present Northern Affairs Act, the divergencies will become obvious, and in our view it is desirable that the authority of the minister should not be diminished but should be enhanced by this legislation.

When he introduced the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act Mr. St. Laurent drew attention to the necessity of planning Canada's resources both material and human, and section 7 was in his view, and in the view of parliament at that time, an important provision with respect to the planning authority given to the minister upon whom responsibility for these material resources was conferred.

Accordingly, I move:

That Bill C-178 be amended by re-numbering section 29 thereof as section 29(1) and adding thereafter the following subsections:

2. In addition to the duties, powers and functions outlined in subsection (1) hereof, the minister may formulate plans for the conservation, development and use of the resources of Canada specified in subsection (1) and for research with respect thereto, and, with the authority of the governor in council and in co-operation with other departments, branches and agencies of the government of Canada, provide for carrying out such plans.

3. The minister may co-operate with the provinces and with municipalities in formulating and carrying out any plans under subsection (2).

4. In carrying out his duties and functions under this section the minister may consult with and inaugurate conferences of representatives of producers, industry, the universities, labour and provincial and municipal authorities.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make some comments in connection with the amendment we are now considering. I believe it essential that the department to be set up should give leadership in the development of our water resources and in the war against pollution. In order to achieve this result it must be given the tools with which to do the job. The minister must be able to give the necessary leadership. We need to look at the proposed set-up in order to decide whether this can be done under the terms of clauses 29, 30 and 31. I will direct my remarks to clause 31 which deals with the authority granted to the minister of energy, mines and resources.

While research, co-ordination and inventory with relation to water resources are a necessary prerequisite to action, it is obvious that action must follow if any leadership is to be given on a national basis. I have, therefore, read and reread the proposed new subsection 8A of the Resources and Technical Surveys Act to determine the real intention of the government in this respect. The foundation for any real action is lacking. May I illustrate my point by an example.

Senior levels of government can best give guidance by the initiation of pilot projects. In the case of the United Nations agencies, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Development Association, pilot projects are undertaken in developing countries to indicate the essential worth of an agricultural, industrial or educational project. The actual development of such projects and the subsequent operation of them are strictly within the field of the developing nation itself. The pilot project, however, is financed by the international agency to give leadership and impetus to the commencement of such projects.

Likewise, in the fields of water resources and pollution pilot projects are essential. In the Ruhr valley of Germany water resource co-operative associations have been operating since the year 1904. Whole river basins are controlled by one authority and the cost of pollution control is charged directly to those who pollute the stream in proportion to the extent of pollution. The system has been successful in spite of the fact that the Ruhr valley is one of the most highly industrialized and heavily populated areas of the world.

These associations were given almost complete multipurpose authority over water quantity and quality in entire watersheds by their special laws. They have for up to 50 years made comprehensive plans for waste disposal, water supply, flood control and land drainage. Members of the association are principally the municipal administrative districts and the industrial enterprises, and general public supervision is carried out by a government ministry. They have authority to plan and construct facilities for water resources management and to assist their members with the cost of constructing and operating such facilities.

On February 23, 1966, giving acknowledgement of the need for federal leadership in the urgent problems of pollution control in the United States, President Johnson sent a message to Congress proposing the setting up of pollution control programs for entire river basins. He proposed combined efforts by all means at American disposal, federal, state, local and private, to reduce progressively the pollution of United States waters. He proposed a clean rivers demonstration program which would unite all the pollution control activities in a single river basin from its source to its termination. I have complete details of his proposals and of the federal participation, but they are not essential to the point I am trying to make.

To turn now to Canada's problems, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys seems to be saying in his speeches that the management of water resources and pollution control are a provincial responsibility. He seems to be saying that the federal government should not evolve a national water resources policy or program or a national anti-pollution drive. He seems to feel that he does not have either the constitutional authority or the responsibility for a national program involving water resources.

According to a press report of a speech he made in Toronto on Friday, May 27, he outlined the federal government role in water policy as one of taking inventory, of basic and applied research, of development of nationally accepted pollution guide lines and of continuing liaison with the provinces and the United States. These are all necessary prerequisites to a policy of action on water resources and pollution, but they are not enough. They do not provide for any action by the federal government. They provide no leadership.

The Ontario Water Resources Commission is doing an excellent job in pollution control and so are many other provincial bodies. But the development of industry, increased population and new types of waste are making the race against pollution a losing one for all local jurisdictions. Furthermore, we must make plans for the future and carry them out on a national basis.

A pilot project for a clean water development involving federal, provincial, municipal and industrial co-operation could well be carried out in several areas of Canada. Indeed, we do not need to go very far for the essentials of such a project because one could well be carried out on the Ottawa river. There is a twofold federal interest. First, the river forms a boundary between two provinces and, second, the river flows through the national capital region. There are also strong provincial interests.

On the Ontario side there are two conservation authorities in existence, one on the South Nation river and the other on the Rideau, the latter having recently been formed. However, there is no authority for the Ottawa valley as such and it would be useless to have such an authority on one side of the river if there were not a similar authority on the other. There are extensive municipal and industrial interests because each municipality and industry is interested in receiving clean water from upstream. This is a pilot project in which the federal government could well give leadership. I mention it only as an example but it is a fair example. It is nearby, and the proposal indicates that the federal government can easily undertake leadership in a pilot project.

[Mr. Aiken.]

While we have reasonably good working arrangements for international boundary waters under the International Joint Commission, it is very strange that we have no procedures established for dealing between and among provinces on water resources and pollution. Surely this is a fundamental federal responsibility. Surely this should be a first priority for the new department which we are considering.

We hear a great deal of talk about constitutional problems. These are always present in a federal system such as we have, but while they are present they have not deterred the federal government from taking leadership and responsibility in the purely provincial matters of health involving hospital insurance and medical care, of welfare involving pensions, of education involving university grants and vocational schools. Why then do we tread so timidly in dealing with the urgent national problem of pollution?

Returning again to the powers proposed to be given to the new department under the amendment, I believe that this amendment is necessary in order to give the minister authority to deal with the problems that are facing us. I can find no clear wording in the bill as it stands which indicates an intention to propose and carry out pilot projects under federal initiative. The very wording of the clause which includes the words "co-ordinating, promoting and recommending" but not the words "carrying out", or anything similar to them, indicates the lack of resolution of the government in this field. This is why I rose to speak in connection with this amendment.

I sincerely believe that the problems of water resources and water pollution in Canada are serious and deserve national attention, and to get national attention the leadership must come from the federal government. It is true that there is provincial responsibility. There are indications that the provinces are not only aware of the problem but are doing something about it. I think they are looking to the federal government to take the initiative. I think they are looking for the passage of this bill which to some degree at least will co-ordinate the responsibilities for water resources.

I believe the provinces are waiting for an indication from the federal government that it intends to take the leadership and lay plans for the future. We all know that pollution is not a problem that can be settled quickly but a start on settling it can be made quickly. Pilot projects can be commenced. Policies can be laid down and a start can be made with leadership from the federal government and from the new minister. It is essential that this be done, but what is completely lacking in this bill is any indication that the government intends to give the minister that authority. There is also a lack of intention on the part of the minister to take any leadership.

I hope that the amendment will be given serious consideration. If it is not accepted then there will be an acknowledgement by the government that it has no intention to give the minister any power to do anything more than undertake research, to make plans, to put forward proposals and to co-ordinate activities. These are all essential but following them action will be necessary to deal effectively with the problems of pollution.

No matter how fast we go on this problem, it continues to develop; we cannot keep ahead of it. Quite suddenly the Americans have realized they are so far behind that they may never catch up. Mr. Chairman, we must never let that situation arise in Canada. The only way in which we can ensure that it does not arise here is to start now.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the amendment, if it does what the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka indicates he wishes it to do. In reading it, however, I am not sure it does so. I am concerned that we have to be so legalistic in the wording of amendments to the bill because it makes it exceedingly confused rather than a bill containing a simple statement of what it is sought to accomplish.

I agree that while we were discussing the water levels of the great lakes last year it was very apparent at that time to anyone who was on that committee that there was a breakdown of communication between the various departments concerned with the matter of water. They certainly were not working in co-operation with each other and there seemed to be little understanding of where one jurisdiction ended and another started. It appeared that there was more oversight in connection with the management of water in Canada than there was supervision. It seemed odd to me that the person who measured the water flow was not the person who measured the water depth. On came under the Department of Transport and the other under the Department of Public Works. Rainfall involved another department and the long-term forecasting of water levels and maintenance of water levels involved another department.

I would have preferred a very simple amendment to establish a director general of water, in the person of a gentleman by the name of Mr. Patterson, to solve the whole problem because in every department this gentleman was called on when there was a problem and was able to shed some light not only on what had happened in Canada but also on what had happened in the United States. I was surprised to learn that he sat on a couple of boards which were international in scope.

I agree with the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that the problem is a major one. I am surprised that the officials of the various departments have not decided already to change the jurisdiction of their departments so that they will be able to do what they wish to do and so that much of the overlapping which has not produced any result will be eliminated. I also see another gentleman around at this time who in my opinion has, with justification, been kicked from one department to another. It is my hope that he will not receive any special recognition in the new department which is to handle the energy resources of our nation, because he would do as lousy a job as he has in the past in the two or three departments where he has served. I said the other day, and I still hope it is true, that we do not establish departments for the deputy ministers whom we may be moving around but for the job we want done. I hope that is the case in relation to this amendment. I am not sure, however, whether the amendment does exactly what the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka wishes it to do.

I think the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources particularly, and certainly the Minister without Portfolio, are most interested in the problem of water. In addition there are three or four other cabinet ministers who have been very much concerned about our water resources and the fact that there is no co-ordination and does not seem to be any desire for co-ordination on the part of many of the officials in some of the departments. This type of confusion may seem amusing occasionally because it produces all kinds of odd situations, but it seems to me that as Canadians we should be very shocked when we reach a position where the senior officials in our nation are not able to project long-range water forecasts for a particular water system as important to Canadians as the great lakes and have to rely on the United States army engineers for a long-term forecast of the water situation in the great lakes.

I am not suggesting that we are going to solve this problem all at once. I think the remarks of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka commend themselves to the house, and if the amendment does what he says it will do I think it should receive support. I know the government resists amendments from the opposition, and perhaps rightly so, but I should like the minister, who is familiar with this subject, to give consideration to the amendment to ascertain whether it would put water resources under one jurisdiction so that we could measure the flow of our water ourselves and make the long-range weather forecasts which have a great bearing on this resource. I should think the minister would be wise to give consideration to this amendment or persuade the government to bring in an amendment which would accomplish this purpose.

The minister may be interested to know that in the committee on industry, research and energy development this morning a question was asked along this line and an outline was given to the effect that changes were being comtemplated. I think it is safe to say that in this regard the official indicated some changes had been made but that the changes were not large enough to bring the complete control of the water resource under one branch. I may be unfair to him, but it was my impression that he said he would like to see this whole resource brought into one place so that all the facets of the water problem which face Canada could be handled at the same time and could be solved more readily.

I hope that the minister will consider this before he rejects the amendment out of hand. Having read the amendment I say that I do not think it does what it is hoped it will accomplish, but if there is merit in the proposal made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka I would hope that the minister would consider standing this clause provided it is the intention of the government to establish a director general of water.

In this regard I certainly would recommend Mr. Patterson because I think if we had one person, one department or one section of a department which could co-relate all the things involved we would come much closer to solving the problem than is possible now with the diversity we have in respect of our water resource.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply to hon. members who have spoken. I believe they have taken part in a debate which is extremely valuable because what we are discussing I think in time will be proven to be the greatest resource of all that Canada possesses. Any time matters of this magnitude are discussed in the house there is profit for all of us. I wish to remind hon. members who have spoken that I have had some experience in endeavouring to evolve national programs which are meaningful economically and geographically beyond the borders of the provinces. There are other members here who are familiar with the viewpoints of the provinces, and I am quite sure they would confirm my impression that most of them are extremely jealous of the resources that lie within their borders. This should not surprise us; indeed, if it were otherwise we should be surprised.

It is imperative from the point of view of provincial interests and taxes that they develop and exploit the resources within their borders as broadly as possible. However, I would hope that in most fields of exploitation of the resources of Canada we can prove that by co-operation, understanding and common purpose as between the provinces, in so many instances, we can make the whole greater than the total of its parts.

When I had the responsibility in this particular field I spent as much time as I could speaking to and working with the Council of Resource Ministers. I think this is a vehicle that is not appreciated today in this country, but one that could become very important indeed.

That council is meeting in Winnipeg today and I think Hon. Sterling Lyon, minister of mines and natural resources for Manitoba, has just been elected chairman. He has made a statement in reference to his hopes for the great convention to be held in Montreal in November in respect of water pollution and has stated that over 1,000 people will be present. This is the type of thing that the national government, in co-operation with resource ministers, can stimulate.

It was contemplated by my predecessor that as a result of the resources for tomorrow conference in Montreal in 1961 great things would be done. I should say at once that at the convention at which water pollution will be discussed that in all probability, as a result of requests, representatives of interested parties including municipalities, provinces and, indeed, corporations which realize the costs they are going to be confronted with as a result of the requirements of society in the future, will be in attendance to the extent that they will probably overtax the accommodation that can be provided.

I believe that we can do a great number of things along these lines in the future. I want to give credit to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka for being very consistent in his insistence that something be done in the realm of creating a national policy on water. I draw to his attention that the provinces are particularly knowledgeable and jealous about the tremendous value that can come to their governments as a result of the development of these resources in a regional way, and it will be the responsibility of the ministers, through the resource ministers council, to convince each province that nothing will be lost to any of them but that more will be gained in total and I think this can be demonstrated.

I am particularly happy that the minister has signed an agreement for studies in the region extending from the eastern slopes of the Rockies across the three prairie provinces in respect of the waters which flow across these provinces into Hudson Bay.

I want to pay tribute to the government of Alberta and its officials, who said very frankly that they could take action in that province that would hurt the province of Saskatchewan, which is common knowledge to us all because the placement of dams in Alberta at certain places would bring great economic improvement to Alberta but would hurt the position of Saskatchewan, but instead are now working with the federal government under a new program, signed by the new minister, which will provide 50 per cent of the estimated cost of $5 million to devise a means to use water to the optimum degree throughout the three prairie provinces. Under that program there is contemplated, as a primary estimate, the building of no less than 120 dams of various sizes for the containment of water at various places. The progress in this regard has been very good. This whole problem is much more difficult of solution in respect of the Great Lakes.

The hon. member for Timiskaming, who dealt with a number of points of view in respect of water resources, overlooked the power of prayer. I should like to remind him about that power. In the proposed amendment there are very wide provisions for the minister to work with almost any government, and when I read it I was reminded of the lighthearted composer who spoke of animal, vegetable and mineral, because it seems they are all contained in this amendment.

I agree with the hon. member for Kamloops that probably his amendment spells out more clearly and reasonably what should be done, though I am a little concerned over the fact that municipalities are mentioned. I am sure that any minister or former minister would be concerned, because when we are negotiating with provinces they are concerned with responsibilities in respect of work done in various areas in that the programs should be routed through them rather than developed directly with municipalities.

It is quite obvious that I have now received the word. A suggestion has been made from the other side which will be taken care of, and I understand that the minister has had a discussion with the hon. member for Kamloops in respect of an amendment that may be suitable.

Mr. Fulton: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could say a word or two about the proposed amendment. I have consulted with the hon. member for Kamloops and with the law officers of the crown and an amendment to clause 31 is being drafted in proper form which would in our opinion more properly deal with the situation. The government accepts in principle the idea proposed by the amendment of the hon. member for Kamloops, and I am wondering whether that hon. gentleman will withdraw his amendment so that we can then agree to clauses 29 and 30 and consider the rest of the bill, at which time I will be prepared to move, say at six o'clock, the amendment being prepared.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned earlier this afternoon that I intended to raise another matter and it has a bearing on the minister's suggestion, which I should like to support. Perhaps we could stand one or two clauses of the bill and consider the remainder. The Prime Minister made a promise in the house on May 24 in respect of our consideration of this bill and I should like to quote his words briefly, as reported in Hansard of that date at page 5429:

> During the May 9 discussion preceding the introduction of the bill the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) suggested that it would be helpful in dealing with this legislation for each of the ministers concerned and affected to take part in the debate and in turn deal with that part of the legislation which directly affects his or her responsibility.

The following is the key statement:

> It is the government's intention to follow that procedure. The ministers who are concerned with this reorganization will be present to make statements and answer questions in respect of those matters which have been or are now being transferred to their responsibility. It may be that this could be done during second reading, but it may be found that it would be more effective to do it at the committee stage when the bill will be considered section by section, because each section will deal with particular ministerial responsibilities and the appropriate minister could handle that section.

What I am really proposing here in support of the minister's proposal is that we let this matter stand and consider the other parts of the bill. I think we should do so for two reasons to give the government plenty of time to draft an amendment in conformity with the suggestions of the hon. member for Kamloops and to defer consideration of at least one part so that we can put questions to the new minister.

During the past three months I have informed the minister about the questions I wish to ask, and if we could now consider the rest of the bill we would then have an opportunity of hearing the minister answer those questions. I think we should accept the minister's proposal and let this clause stand.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, just before the amendment is withdrawn, if it is to be withdrawn, and the new amendment is presented to the committee by the government, there are one or two suggestions I should like to make. First of all, I think we need a great deal more information respecting the purpose that this amendment or an amendment to clause 31 is designed to achieve.

I have no disagreement whatever with vigorous plans and programs in co-operation with the provinces for dealing with water pollution and so on. But what is in the amendment does not deal specifically with water resources. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that if this amendment is to have any operative effect it must certainly be confined to the words, "the minister may formulate plans for the conservation, development and use of the resources of Canada."

If the purpose is to grant to the federal government, by means of a clause in this bill, higher or prior authority over that of the provinces in dealing with the formulating of plans for the development of resources in Canada, I am not in favour of that kind of legislation. I think there needs to be a great deal more co-operation and, what is more, more active ways and means must be found of setting programs in action in so far as water pollution is concerned. But there is nowhere in clause 29, the amendment proposed to clause 29, or for that matter in clause 31 dealing with the new section 8A, anything that confines this matter to water resources. If it is to include other resources I think there will be a very serious constitutional problem in this respect. Even if it is only for water resources it seems to me it is the wrong way of granting this superior authority to the federal government.

What I am saying is not intended to take anything away from the desirability of a higher level of co-operation and more active programming and planning. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources mentioned, I believe, that the conference of ministers was meeting in Winnipeg today and agreement had been reached between the prairie provinces and the federal government to co-operate in developing plans and programs for the Nelson River drainage basin. I have no objection to this and in fact I wholeheartedly support it. But we need some better explanation with regard to how this kind of amendment will effectively achieve what the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka claim it will achieve, because it is not confined to water resources.

In so far as paragraphs 3 and 4 of the proposed amendment are concerned, which call for co-operation with the provinces and the calling of conferences and so on, I think they are almost superfluous to the legislation because this is being done by the minister now. The proof of this is to be found in the example stated today. The minister said that agreement has already been reached with the three prairie provinces with respect to draining the enormous Nelson river basin. When the government comes in with a new amendment I think it ought to be fairly clear that if it is designed to give the federal government a superior authority in the matter of setting up plans and programs for the development and conservation of water resources it had better say what it means and not just refer to the resources of Canada.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I think we should carefully consider the constitutional and statutory division of responsibility respecting resources because the provinces have by an act of this parliament full authority to set up plans and programs for the conservation and development of resources. In so far as Alberta is concerned I think the act was passed in 1930. If we are to try now to supersede that authority by a clause of this bill, I think we will be doing it in the wrong way and will perhaps wind up with something that is undesirable in the long run.

I wanted to state those qualifications, Mr. Chairman, if there is any intention to bring in this kind of amendment. I do so not because of the wording of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Kamloops but because of the explanation given by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that this was the purpose of the amendment. I suggest there will be resistance on the part of the provinces in this respect. Furthermore, with respect to the application of this kind of statute, if the provinces do not agree then you run into the constitutional problem of which is the superior authority in dealing with resources.

I wanted to make these observations, Mr. Chairman, and I shall withhold any further comment until we see the amendment which the government brings in. I hope it will not attempt to set up a superior authority with respect to water or any other resources.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, may I express appreciation to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Minister of National Revenue for the indication that the government accepts in principle the amendment that I have moved, although they would prefer to redraft it so that it may appear in an appropriate place under clause 31 of the bill. I agree that this is probably the appropriate place in which to include this amendment. So far as I am concerned, therefore, I am quite prepared for myself and this party to agree, if I have the permission of the committee, to withdraw my amendment and leave it to the government to introduce an appropriate amendment when clause 31 is reached. We also agree that clause 31 should stand at the present time in order to give an opportunity for drafting of the agreed amendment.

May I say just a few words with regard to the concern of the hon. member for Medicine Hat who has just resumed his seat. I would remind the hon. member again perhaps he did not hear me say this when I introduced the amendment—that it is not a new provision. The wording is almost precisely that which is found now in section 7 of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act. In other words, the amendment as I introduced it, and the purpose I have in mind, is simply to preserve in the bill before us the planning and the co-ordinating authority which the present Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act confers upon the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and transfer it to the minister of energy, mines and resources. So there is no new authority in this amendment.

Indeed, as the hon. member said, we have just been reminded that two or three co-operative developments, as far as the federal and provincial governments are concerned, have taken place. They have taken place, if I understand the position correctly, precisely because of the authority and initiative contained in section 7 of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act. That is why I feel it is so desirable to carry this authority and initiative over into the new act.

If we do not do this, then by virtue of the fact that the northern affairs act is to be repealed this authority will be lost, or at least lost in its present form. So I can assure the hon. member that so far as the purpose I had in mind in introducing the amendment and the wording of the amendment in its present form are concerned, it confers no new power. Of course, parliament is powerless to confer on the government of Canada any overriding authority. We can only enact what is within our present jurisdiction under the British North America Act. The provision embodied in my amendment was felt to be within parliament's jurisdiction, and was contained in the act introduced some time ago by that very fine constitutional lawyer, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. Mr. St. Laurent was not very often wrong in his constitutional law, although he was sometimes wrong in his politics.

May I again express appreciation to the government for their willingness to accept the principle of the amendment.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I have been absent on other business since question time today but I am very glad to be here at this moment. I read the amendment introduced by the hon member for Kamloops and I endorse it fully. I will say again that I am glad to note he is now following in our footsteps. I was also very glad to hear him say that the government accepts the principle and purpose of the amendment and intends to introduce an amendment in another place in the bill. I am sure all of us were delighted with that because we all know the circumstances regarding the provinces. Nothing can be done in the matter of water resources except by consultation, agreement and planning with the provinces concerned.

I will be very interested to hear the reply of the Prime Minister to a question which I wish to put to him tomorrow regarding whether he has received a letter from Hon. J. W. Gardiner of Saskatchewan with respect to the water resources policy of the government of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. However, I was very pleased to hear the remarks made by the member for Kamloops, and I am sure we are all looking forward to the amendment which will be introduced later by the minister.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat I would like to say to him that I am perfectly aware of the constitutional problems and the constitutional position. In supporting the amendment my intention was to give the minister power and direction to proceed in this matter within his constitutional authority and no further. I felt that the bill could be more direct and specific in instructing and directing the minister in regard to his duties, but certainly no one would suggest that we can go beyond our constitutional authority. I want to make my position very clear in view of the point raised by the hon. member.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Kamloops has requested the unanimous consent of the committee to withdraw his amendment to clause 29 of Bill C-178.

Amendment withdrawn.

The Chairman: Does the minister wish to have clause 29 stood?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Chairman. We will ask that clause 31 stand.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 30 agreed to.

[Mr. Herridge.]

On clause 31—Short title.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I hope I will be here before clause 31 is called again because I am very interested in the amendment which the government wishes to introduce after the drafters have gone over it. I have asked the minister to give consideration to this matter.

With leave of the committee I should like to anticipate schedule A for a moment. I should like to raise a question as to whether part 5 should not include the measure known as the Dominion Water Power Act. If I recall correctly, it is referred to in the order in council of December 22, 1965, which was tabled here on January 18, 1966, but it does not appear among the list of statutes which will come under the authority of the minister of energy, mines and resources.

I see it is in part 4. My question then would be whether it should not be in part 5 rather than in part 4? In other words, should not the act be administered by the minister of energy, mines and resources rather than by the minister of Indian affairs and northern development? I would be grateful if the minister would look into that question and perhaps give us the answer when we consider clause 31.

Mr. Benson: I will be very glad to do that.

The Chairman: Shall clause 31 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

On clause 32—Treasury Board.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister give us a very brief statement about the proposal regarding the treasury board? May I ask in particular if it is to become a department such as other departments of the government? I notice it is to have a president who ranks as a cabinet minister, a secretary who ranks as a deputy minister, and such other officers and employees as may be necessary.

Mr. Benson: I will answer this question very briefly as I do not wish to take up too much time of the committee. The intention is to make the treasury board a separate ministry with a separate deputy minister and its own staff. As you know, at present the staff of the treasury board is not large. The intention is to let the privy council office administer the staff, the handling of their salaries and office expenses and so on rather than to set up another department under another statute.

I should like to add further that the recommendations for the establishment of the treasury board are identical with those made in the Glassco commission report. May I refer the hon. members to pages 53 and 54 of the plan for management which appeared in September of 1962 concerning the role of the treasury board as the central management agency of the government of Canada and the ways in which this role needed strengthening and reinforcing. This is almost carried out to the letter except for the fact that in this recommendation a separate minister was to be appointed with no other responsibility. The Prime Minister has indicated that for the present I will act as the president of the treasury board as well as the Minister of National Revenue.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 33 agreed to.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), Television—offer of Northern Quebec Telephone Company Ltd. to serve Chibougamau-Chapais; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Education—inquiry as to abolition of university fees; the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown), Health and Welfare—grants for recreation centres for senior citizens.

• (6:00 p.m.)

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

GENERAL MORTGAGE SERVICE CORPORATION OF CANADA

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-8, respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada was incorporated by this parliament in 1961, being chapter 78 of the Statutes of Canada 1960-61, and its charter was amended by this parliament in 1963, being chapter 72 of the Statutes of Canada 1963.

It is now desired to change the name of the company to that of General Mortgage Corporation of Canada and to provide that the corporation may use in the transaction of its business either the name General Mortgage Corporation of Canada or the name Société Générale d'Hypothèque du Canada, as and when it so elects, and that it may sue or be sued in either or both of such names.

It is further desired that chapter 78 of the statutes of 1960-61 as amended, being chapter 72 of the statutes of 1963, be further amended by substituting the words "series A bonds" for the words "series A mortgage bonds" wherever the words "series A mortgage bonds" appear therein, and by substituting the words "series B bonds" for the words "series B mortgage bonds" wherever the words "series B mortgage bonds" appear therein.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I did not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman when he was introducing his bill but it would have been helpful to know the ownership of the company. It is always a matter of consideration to us whether a company like this is a so-called Canadian company or whether its ownership, either effectively or absolutely, rests in the hands of a company in some other country. I wonder whether I could pose that question to the hon. gentleman before he concludes his formal remarks on second reading, if the information is readily available.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the house would give the hon. member for High Park permission to speak now without prejudicing his right to speak again on second reading.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), to the best of my knowledge this is an entirely Canadian corporation. Its business consists simply in issuing bonds to persons who are inclined to invest their money in that type of security and using the moneys thus produced to buy additional bonds. It is an authorized lender under the National Housing Act and kindred acts. The series B bonds are issued in the ordinary field of general mortgage lending as provided for under the law and in accordance with the Canada life assurance act.

If it is appropriate for me to mention this, Mr. Speaker, the officers of the company are a Mr. L. J. Whitney, who is a solicitor and has been connected with Dominion Life Insurance Company for many years, Hon. C. P. McTague, and others. Based on information I have and from personal knowledge of these gentlemen, I can assure my hon. friend that this is entirely a Canadian undertaking and a Canadian corporation.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I want to express appreciation for that information and for the fact that the house gave the hon. member for High Park the opportunity to supply it without interfering with his rights under the rules.

Some of us have a different attitude toward Canadian-owned companies as distinct from those that are foreign controlled. In fact, I understand that within the hon. gentleman from High Park's own group in this house there is a raging controversy now taking place over whether or not we should enhance Canadian ownership of our industry and our service companies or whether we should rely more heavily than in the past on investment and ownership by groups or companies in foreign countries, notably the United States. I do not want at this moment to inject any of the controversy within the Liberal party into the debate on this bill. I simply make passing reference to it and say that there are members of the house who would be interested in knowing whether or not this particular company fell within the one category or the other.

The fact that it is at the moment a Canadian company, or is owned, operated and controlled entirely within Canada, is of course no guarantee that this situation will prevail in the future. In fact, with respect to General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada I think we are entitled to speculate about the possible outcome of the difference of opinion which sharply divides the cabinet on the question of Canadian or foreign control of companies in this nation. Depending on the outcome of that split within the government this particular company may or may not be affected.

I for one am not too partial to the view expressed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) probably to a slightly lesser degree, that we must rely heavily upon investment funds from other countries in order to maintain our economic equilibrium and growth. I rather subscribe to the view of the previous minister of finance who was unceremoniously fired from the cabinet as a result of that difference of opinion. Nevertheless it is something with which I think the house is entitled to concern itself, because even though we are simply being asked with respect to General Mortgage Service Corporation to make a slight alteration only so far as the name is concerned and another slight alteration so far as particular words appearing on certain of their bonds are concerned, I think we are duty bound to look a little beyond the present position and to wonder about the actual operations of the company itself.

This bill came before the house during the last session of the last parliament and was one of those which got the axe, as it were, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) decided to call the election, thus wiping everything from the order paper. The hon. member for High Park can at least find a little comfort in the thought that had the election not taken place he would not be sponsoring this bill at this moment, because in all probability it would have received assent some time last fall had everything gone as planned. But, Mr. Speaker, this did not come about and accordingly we have again to consider the bill and all the implications inherent in its passage.

Again we have to look at the situation. It was not sufficient that the time of parliament should have been wasted last session in dealing with such an insignificant matter as the deletion of two words in the name of a company; we have to do the same thing all over again. The degree of interest shown in this bill was evidenced by the very cursory examination given to it in the Senate, both this session and last session, involving a simple explanation by the sponsor of the bill and the acceptance thereof by the Senate and others as sufficiently satisfactory to give approval to the bill. There were no committee proceedings or any hearing on the bill so far as I have been able to discover. There is no indication that the banking and commerce committee of the Senate gave more than the usual polite, surface examination of the change in name.

I believe we have to go a bit beyond that both from the point of view of the eventual operation of the company and from the point of view of whether or not parliament should meekly accept applications of this sort. Should we rubberstamp this bill because the change happens to be requested by the corporation itself? I submit it will not make one iota of difference to anyone except perhaps the printers who may have to print some bonds or the typists who may have to type some letters for this company. Other than that, it will make no difference whether or not the bill passes. The company will remain in business. It will continue to engage in the practice of borrowing money at a certain interest rate in order to lend it at a higher interest rate and thus be able to keep the difference.

It does seem rather illogical that the time of the Senate—perhaps it has nothing better to do—should have been spent on this bill and that it should come to the house and we should consider the matter and pass it on to a committee for whatever examination that committee wants to make. Then the bill would be reported back here for committee consideration and would be given third reading. This procedure would seem especially illogical, at least on the surface, when the principal point of the bill is so insignificant, particularly in relation to the economy of Canada. It may well be that unless some other course of action is taken by the government this bill may not reach third reading. At the end of this session it and a number of other bills may have died on the order paper.

Even although there may be something illogical about this statement, I submit it should not be our business to concern ourselves with this matter. One may argue that if it is so insignificant why should I bother taking up the time of the house talking about it? Why should we not simply give it our stamp of approval and allow the bill to be rushed through parliament without any concern on the part of anyone? I submit that to do that would detract from the principal objection and that by acquiescence in an obsolete procedure we would be endorsing that procedure. About the only way attention can be drawn to the ridiculous situation is for me and others who are concerned to proceed—

Mr. Fairweather: To make speeches.

Mr. Howard: —to make nuisances of ourselves. I did not catch the interjection but perhaps I caught the sense of it.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question?

Mr. Howard: I would be more than happy to answer a question.

Mr. Churchill: Has the hon. member received any indication from the government, any response to his repeated requests for a change in the procedure with regard to these bills?

Mr. Howard: The simple answer is no, none whatever. It is as if one were talking in a vacuum. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, with the experience he has had in other fields of endeavour, will say that it is not a unique situation for this government to give no consideration to this situation because this is the policy they seem to follow in connection with other matters as well.

We have had no response, no indication of support for the contention that this type of bill should not come before parliament. There has been no acknowledgement of our suggestions, not even a rejection of the idea. However, we have received endorsation of our ideas from a number of private members on the government side. Without drawing individuals into this debate I may say we have received support from those who happen to be sponsoring particular bills. I do not say that this support has been occasioned by that fact. I believe it is an indication of general concern on the part of private members.

By persisting in this action we hope somehow to get the government to act. The government has control of the order paper and if it so desired would be able to introduce a public bill to deal with this matter. As we know, this particular authority is vested only in the government and not in the hands of a private member. Our only method of prevailing upon the government to listen to the pleas we make, therefore, is the course we are following. I am sure that if the government asked each member of the house they would not find one member who would desire to preserve the present system and there would be almost unanimous approval for bills of this type not being brought before parliament.

What does it matter whether this company is called General Mortgage Service Corporation, General Service Corporation, General Mortgage Company or any other combination of the variety of adjectives that are contained in its name? What does it matter what sort of title they put on their mortgage bonds or whether they call them mortgage bonds or some other type of bonds? It does not matter a bit. The claim is that it is necessary because the word "mortgage" in the title or on the bonds is something of a misnomer since the expression "mortgage bond" is generally used to describe a mortgage secured directly by real estate whereas these bonds are secured by the mortgagors themselves. But what does it matter, even though the name may not be precisely applicable? It does not matter a pinch of salt whether we pass the bill.

I suggest it does matter, however, that this corporation has come to parliament with a petition, spend I do not know how much money to have a private bill introduced, put down its deposit and put the whole antiquated machinery of parliament in operation to deal with the insignificant matter of changing a name from one thing to something else. We could react to this ridiculous state of affairs by defeating the bill, in which case I venture to suggest that General Mortgage Service Corporation would not be affected by one solitary cent. It would still be in business borrowing money from someone at a low interest rate in order to lend it to someone else at a higher interest rate. It would still be one of the elements driving consumer interest rates ever higher. It would still be one of the elements withholding loan money in the hope that interest rates would rise and that the corporation would find itself in a more lucrative position. It would still be one of the elements which would desire to bilk the individual home owner of every cent it could in interest rates on mortgages. The defeat of this bill would not affect the corporation's attitude or activities one way or another.

In addition to the general obstinacy of the government about recognizing a valid argument there is another reason why, regardless of the outcome of the more general matter concerning a wider principle, Bill No. S-8 may be still on the order paper when parliament prorogues at the end of this session, just as was the case last year. And I submit it will make no difference to anyone.

I realize that the time allotted to me is fast running out, if it has not already done so. I sincerely hope the government will take cognizance of what we have requested and make some public declaration in the near future about its intentions so that we may cease spending this hour talking about the inconsequential things we have been discussing and being talking about the public business instead.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I asked the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) whether there had been a response from the government in the face of repeated suggestions by him and other hon. members that the method of procedure in regard to such bills should be reconsidered and perhaps some other method introduced. I was astonished to learn that no notice whatever had been taken of that request.

It appears to me that when there are 13 private bills before the house awaiting consideration, all of them with one exception from the Senate, the government should pay some attention to what is after all a reasonable request, namely, that the procedure should be re-examined. To ignore this request completely strikes me as discourteous; it is certainly not helpful to getting business through the house.

As I understand the hon. member for Skeena and others who have spoken in similar vein, they are not disposed to prevent the passage of most of these bills but they are trying to find a method by which procedure can be changed. As the hon. member for Skeena has said, this rests with the government.

We have had experience in the past of the methods, and they are legitimate, by which hon. members can hold up the passage of private bills until some proposal of their own has been considered. Here is an instance where the government should at least recognize the fact that a reasonable suggestion has been made by those who have been discussing these bills and that a conference should be held to see whether a suitable change cannot be made. Consequently I rise to support the plea of the hon. member for Skeena and those who have made a similar plea in the past that the government take notice of this request and endeavour to take some action.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am taking this opportunity to congratulate the mover of Bill S-8. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has just remarked that it is not a very important bill, but in spite of the minor importance he attaches to this bill, we think that it is worthwhile mentioning that a company founded several years ago and probably organized to do business in English-speaking Canada, has suddenly realized that a French title must be adopted in order to become bilingual.

I hope all our companies will follow the example of the General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada, because as long as companies continue to operate throughout Canada under a unilingual title, such companies will not deserve to be called Canadian companies in the true sense of the word.

• (6:30 p.m.)

To my mind, even if the bill were to be adopted in the house only to give the company a bilingual character, I think it would suffice to make it important.

I do not quite understand the argument of the hon. member for Skeena who does not find it important, because I believe he is also for a bilingual Canada. I believe that all Canadian companies should try to do the same for the 1967 Centennial.

As to the manner of introducing the bill, and all other bills introduced here, I agree with the hon. member for Skeena, and once again I wonder how long this overlong parade of bills is going to keep coming from the Senate to the House of Commons, going from the House of Commons to the committees, from the committees to the house and so on. The time wasted in such futile procession is unthinkable.

A while ago the member who spoke before me asked the hon. member for Skeena a question to find out what answer the government had given to his request to improve that procedure. And to think that the same member was a minister in years past. He never thought of improving that procedure and now he is urging the government in office to do it.

When will we see the end of this game where each side blames the other and when will me make a concrete improvement? I feel that it would be so easy for the government to introduce an amendment in the house. It seems to me that a bill like this one would be passed within 10 or 15 minutes, if it did not have to go through that whole procedure.

With regard to the company mentioned in this bill, I was very happy to hear that, for a change, it was a wholly Canadian company with Canadian capital.

We are and will always be against foreign investments which seep into this country through Canadian companies but operating on capital coming from outside Canada. Mr. Speaker, if ever—and that is the hope of any nation which wants to come of age—we are to become at last masters in our own house, this parliament will have to encourage Canadian companies whose capital is entirely Canadian. On the other hand, if we keep on encouraging companies with 50, 75 or even 80 per cent of their capital coming from outside, or if we grant them the same benefits as to the Canadian companies with Canadian capital only, I say that we are not working in the interest of the Canadian people.

We are asking our people to invest, but we do not guarantee them the protection they need against those foreign investments which take over the best in Canada.

It is easy to say today, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is a rich country, but that is true only for those who come to Canada to benefit from its resources. The time has come to change all that. The central government should put a stop to those investments and encourage Canadians to invest in their own country.

We will, once again, refer this small bill to the committee. I wonder how many weeks it will take before it comes back to the house? However, to promote bilingualism and in view of the fact that the main objective of this bill is to give a French name to that company, I hope that this bill will come back as soon as possible to be passed by the house.

[English]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay the house long on this bill but I want to endorse the proposal put forward by my colleague from Skeena and the support it received from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). For some time we have been suggesting that it is a gross waste of our time to have this constant parade of company bills whose sole purpose is to change a name or add a French name to the English name.

Of course this is a laudable practice which companies are following and we are all glad to see it taking place, but it could be more adequately dealt with in the way which the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has suggested, by a piece of legislation which would permit changes of name of this character to be made by supplementary letters patent.

Under the Ontario companies act corporations can not only change their names but also the objects of companies, their capitalization and their stock structure merely by formal application for amended or supplementary letters patent, and it seems to us something of that type could be available in cases such as

Bill S-8. As the former house leader for the Conservative government has said, this matter could be dealt with by some sort of joint house meeting to explore ways and means of expediting measures of this kind so that we would not have to spend our time on them in the House of Commons.

We in the N.D.P. do not particularly enjoy holding up bills but sometimes it is the only way we can get a commitment from the government that some sort of action will be taken. A very painful exercise in this regard was carried on some years ago by the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) with respect to divorce petitions and eventually some action was taken, but not before three or four sessions had produced considerable hardship for a lot of people, something regretted by everybody but which was necessary in the circumstances of that time.

It would be unfair to hold up the present bill because it is not the fault of this company that the government is not prepared to take any kind of corrective action. We shall not hold it up but we serve notice on the government that if some action is not agreed upon and concrete steps taken, then in order to emphasize our point we may have to talk at great length on these bills and explore them very carefully.

Because this bill deals with a mortgage corporation I want to put on the record some material dealing with the increasing and drastic drought of mortage money in Canada. This is a subject that members of the opposition have tried to raise on orders of the day. We did have a short discussion on it with the minister but time ran out and it was not possible to make our point. For some weeks now we have been saying that a drastic, dangerous and serious situation is building up in the house building industry caused by the lack of mortgage money, and I hope the company named in this bill will be able to help out in this drought.

When we raised the question previously we were told that house building would continue at a slightly reduced level from that of the preceding year and that the government was going to provide sufficient mortgage money to equal its commitments of last year and make up for the shortage of money available from private lenders such as the company named in the bill under discussion. We tried to emphasize that there was a delayed reaction in matters of this kind, and now I want to read into the record six examples of what is happening in my own city of Toronto.

[Mr. Scott (Danforth).]

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether the hon. member for Danforth is not now departing from the actual principle of the bill before us.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Well, Mr. Speaker, I thought I had kept myself within the confines of the bill. It is a bill which deals with the provision of mortgage money. Since we are on second reading and the whole principle is involved, I thought it might be permissible to develop this theme a little. I certainly will try to stay within the ambit of the bill. If I depart I know, Mr. Speaker, that you will not hesitate to point this out to me.

Mr. Fairweather: Perhaps it would be a service to have more mortgage money.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): My friend from Royal says it would be a service to have more mortgage money. I agree. To emphasize the seriousness of this matter I wish to give a few examples which were released by the Toronto Metropolitan Home Builders' Association on April 29, 1966:

Builder No. 1

—last year had 137 loans

—to date this year have received no loans through regular lenders

—has put me right out of business—construction program stopped completely

—at least 20 trades possibly 100 people directly affected by our shut down

I should like to emphasize this and say that there is a great need for mortgage services in this very serious and dangerous situation.

Builder No. 2

—no money coming through regular lenders has caused complete shutdown of my construction program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure that if the hon. member for Danforth reads the explanatory notes of this bill he will realize that the principle of the bill is not very closely connected to the argument he now is making. I realize this bill deals with a mortgage corporation, but the shortage of mortgage funds to which the hon. member now refers is not the principle of Bill No. S-8 which now is before us.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I agree with you completely that the shortage of mortgage funds is not the principle of this bill, but I am hoping one effect of the bill will be to reduce that shortage if companies such as this make more funds available. Perhaps this company will be operating in the Toronto area. Perhaps the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) can tell us that. This company might be in a position to help out in this very dangerous and drastic situation.

Builder No. 3

—within two months all my trades people will be directly affected by our construction shutdown.

Builder No. 4

—approximately 200 people will have to be laid off within two months

—I've had to refuse 115 pre-sales because of short mortgage money

Builder No. 5

—one month to six weeks will see us laying off trades, complete slowdown or stoppage of our construction program will be caused unless money situation improves considerably.

Builder No. 6

—effect of short money on trades is fantastic

—trades scared to death that they are not going to have work, they see that within one month or six weeks they will be unemployed.

—trades cutting their own throats price-wise, they are almost panicking just to try and cover overheads.

I have read this into the record, Mr. Speaker, merely to support our suggestion that the action this government has taken to date to meet this crisis truly has been inadequate. In his speech the minister said he wanted private lenders, such as the one mentioned in the bill under consideration, to fill the void, but no matter what their views are they are totally unable so to do because they are private businesses and are obligated to operate in areas where they receive the maximum return on their money. Therefore they are not the slightest bit interested this year in making further loans under the provisions of the National Housing Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Again I must remind the hon. member for Danforth that the argument he is now advancing has very little if anything to do with the principle of the bill before us. I would request that he stay within what ordinarily are considered to be the confines on second reading of a bill.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Well, Mr. Speaker, you are making it very difficult for me. Naturally I respect your ruling. You will understand that it is not always easy to stay strictly within the ambit of the bill under discussion. I do not wish to prolong the matter. I merely wished to make the point for the future, that, notwithstanding what the minister has said and the assurances he has given, his officials in their pronouncements have indicated that the situation for the rest of the year will become grave and serious. Every indication we have from the building trades from coast to coast is to the effect that the worst is yet to come and that the stoppage of mortgage moneys now, for whatever reason, will not be felt for two or three months. Present mortgages are being used up and in two or three months from now the very dangerous and difficult effects will be felt. At that time it will be almost too late to do anything because builders will have disbanded and the trades will have been discharged.

I hope I shall be proven wrong, but I believe the present policy of the government cannot help but have a dangerous effect upon the whole construction business in Canada. Once again may I say I hope I am wrong, but every indication we have at the present time is that unless a change of policy and a change of heart are brought about the whole building industry in Canada faces very difficult days.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this bill I am concerned about the fact that when particular members sponsor this type of bill they are not willing to give a complete explanation of the reason a bill of this type is introduced. This is a waste of parliament's time. I am not going to speak about it from the same point of view as did the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), although I agree they have indicated the solution. I wonder why the hon. member who introduced this bill did so when all it purports to do is to change the name to allow a French translation of the name by removing the word "service" from the present name. It is true there are two other clauses in the bill which slightly modify the act. In one case the word "mortgage" is added where it did not appear before. In respect of both series A bonds and series B bonds they add the word "mortgage". Surely this company does not have enough money to throw around to be willing to spend the amount of money they must spend merely to change three words.

• (6:50 p.m.)

I think we would be naïve to think that this company is doing it just for that purpose. It is an act of parliament which they are asking for and I do not believe that the explanation we have been given, or that contained in the explanatory note, really is the purpose of this bill. Perhaps something hinges on the wording of the bill in that it states:

Whereas General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada, hereinafter called "the Corporation"—

They are reducing the name to simply "General Mortgage Corporation of Canada", leaving out the word "service". I am wondering whether this has some significance as to the type of mortgage money that will be made available. If there is nothing more important in this bill than that change, either the directors of this company think we are extremely naïve or they are extremely naïve in believing their shareholders are going to agree to an expenditure of money for this purpose.

The fees paid to the directors last year amounted to $2,800. They all live in the city of Toronto. I suggest they are receiving this money unjustly if the only thing they can do is recommend a change of name. It surprises me that the sponsor of the bill would abide the wishes of this "kookie" company in bringing this kind of immature, mundane legislative measure before parliament, knowing full well that this body has many more important things to consider.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Certainly.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the hon. gentleman not agree that the company is not at fault but that the fault lies with parliament itself because it has not seen fit to amend its procedures? It is hardly proper to call the company "kookie" because of this fact, and perhaps that expression could more aptly be used in a different direction.

Mr. Peters: I agree that we have a responsibility to do something about the situation but I feel also that some responsibility is attached to the sponsor of bills of this kind.

If anyone cares to look at the report of the Superintendent of Insurance for 1964, which is the last year for which he has made a report, he will find that General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada has an authorized capital of $10 million with a paid up cash value of $1,115,784 and total assets amounting to $7,146,000 including mortgage loans, both first and second.

[Mr. Peters.]

One might compare this company with another which also has an authorized capital of $10 million but which has a paid up cash value of $7,200,000. The fees paid to the directors of the company now under discussion amount to $2,800. I presume the directors of the other company work a little harder because their fees amount to $36,435.69. It is also interesting to note that the second company pays $80,000 in staff pensions and insurance fees whereas the company under consideration pays only $195 for the same purpose. One can compare salaries and find some difference. One company pays $1,850,000 in salaries whereas the other company pays $81,000.

I suggest that the sponsors of bills of this kind should give more consideration to their responsibilities to parliament. Parliament is not an operation similar to a law office where every client is accepted. Perhaps I am wrong in making such a comparison, but I think that members of this house should consider their responsibilities to parliament before accepting the sponsorship of whimsical legislative measures such as are contained in bills of this type.

If one reads the report of the Superintendent of Insurance regarding loan and trust companies he will find that this particular company does not stack up very well, and I suggest that the sponsor should consider his responsibility seriously and not act as a lawyer handling a client's case. If he is prepared to sponsor such a bill he should be prepared to give a complete and thorough explantion of the reasons behind it. In support of my suggestion let me point out that it appears that very few members are willing to sponsor proposals such as the one before us.

The report of the Superintendent of Insurance makes a distinction between various incorporated companies. The company under consideration falls into a particular category because it was originally incorporated by an act of parliament in 1961. However, if one considers the situation further he will find that the company was originally incorporated under letters patent.

We do not wish to be unfair to this company and so far as we are concerned we have no objection to the bill being given second reading at this stage, but I hope in future that other members who sponsor bills of this kind will take into consideration their responsibilities to parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Howard: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour for consideration of private members' business has now expired and the house will revert to the business interrupted at six o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee was interrupted at six o'clock clause 34 which appears at page 11 of the bill was about to be considered.

On clause 34—Powers of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make a speech on this clause but I should like to ask a question. In view of the absence of the Secretary of State I presume I should direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Benson: The minister will be here in a moment.

Mr. Prittie: Perhaps I should wait until she arrives. During second reading of the bill I advocated that there should be a federal office of education and that the numerous educational activities of the federal government should come under that office. At that time I quoted a news story which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, written by Joan Cohen, which said that a home had been found within the federal government for an office to deal with education, that this was to be located in the Department of the Secretary of State, and that the responsibility for university grants was being transferred from the Minister of Finance to the new office within the Department of the Secretary of State.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Now that the Secretary of State is here, I should like to ask her this question. I have referred to an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of May 21, written by Joan Cohen, which referred to a new office established in the Department of the Secretary of State. I later asked the Minister of Finance if it was true that university grants were being transferred from his department to that of the Secretary of State, and he replied that it was. I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether the article written by Mrs. Cohen in the Citizen is substantially correct. I am sure she knows the article to which I am referring.

Mr. Churchill: What was the substance of it?

Mr. Prittie: I will not read the whole article again, but for the benefit of the hon. member who has asked the question I will read parts of it. I did read it last week on second reading of the bill.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It has all been read into the record.

Mr. Prittie: It is in the record at page 5467 of Hansard. The substance of the article was that the federal government had found a home for education within its confines and that this home would be in the office of the Secretary of State; and as a first step, university grants would be administered by that office. In my speech last week I indicated that there are other educational functions which they are now carrying out, and that these should be transferred there as well. I can appreciate the fact that the government wants to move very slowly in this field.

For the minister's information I should like to refer to yesterday's issue of Le Droit. Perhaps the minister has seen the news story there which reports the speech of le Père Roger Guindon, the director of the University of Ottawa. The story is headed, "L'éducation: un droit provincial, mais une priorité au fédéral. Voilà ce qu'a déclaré le Père Roger Guindon durant la cérémonie de collation des grades de l'Université d'Ottawa." It is interesting to get this type of statement from a person in Father Guindon's position. I suggest to the minister that there is not nearly as much opposition to the proper sort of federal involvement in education as some people in this country may think.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask the minister a short question. How is she getting along with the $6 million painting that she was going to buy?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I thought I made it clear in the house that I had flown a kite in an attempt to find out what public opinion was. Public reaction is rather surprising. I have been informed that there has been a lot of radio broadcasting, telephoning-in sort of thing, and discussions on this subject. The hon. member for Ontario has talked about buying a $6 million painting when the aged of this country do not have an increase in their pension. This kind of argument does not pay any attention to the fact that $6 million spent once is $6 million, and that even $10 a month adds up to an expenditure of $100 million if carried on indefinitely every year. This sort of thing has been discussed on some of the radio programs and my mail has been running about half and half. In this respect my mail has been surprisingly heavy.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): How does the hon. lady spell that?

Miss LaMarsh: H-a-l-f. There has been a great deal of interest in this matter. I have received letters from those in the art world in particular and people who appreciate the goal which was intended, which was to erect a symbol of excellence similar to that which exists in the museum in Holland with regard to Rembrandt's "Night Watch". I suppose that every tourist who goes to Holland visits Amsterdam to see this painting, and for the same sort of reason every tourist who goes to Paris visits the Louvre first to see the "Mona Lisa".

It was my opinion that the National Gallery, which really is not very old and which I think has never spent more than $100,000 on any one acquisition, might benefit in very many ways from being the setting for a very fine jewel in the world of painting. I do not know that the owner of the painting in question would be prepared to sell it to Canada, or whether the price I have suggested it might be worth would be acceptable to him. I do not believe that most Canadians feel this kind of investment is a bad one. After all, billions of dollars are spent each year in this country for many different purposes and I cannot believe that because an expenditure is not made on one hand, all expenditures on the other hand or for any other purpose should be withheld.

I am looking forward to the arrival of the new director of the gallery, who is to start tomorrow. I hope to have some conversations with Dr. Boggs and members of the board about this painting or a similar kind of project. To my knowledge Canada has not rejoiced in being the recipient in its gallery of gifts such as the Hirshhorn gift to the U.S.A. Indeed, Dr. Buchanan who died recently and was a member of the board, saw fit to leave his collection to his native province of Alberta. I think hon. members will have noticed lately that individuals have been leaving similar collections to their provinces. This happened recently in the case of the province of Ontario. I would hope that Canadians would be encouraged to leave their treasures to the country so they would become national treasures.

I cannot think of any better way to teach people that Canada has an appreciation for the very finest objects of art than by providing a home for a work of art such as this. It seems to me that, as the Bible says, man does not live by bread alone, and we need a goal in our cultural life which perhaps does not exist at the moment. Canadians often think they do not deserve the best that they are second rate and the best that is in the world cannot be ours. I know that voting money in this amount for such a purpose is not very common for this or any other country. But if this amount of money was spent on something which could be put on display next year at Expo, it would be a terrific drawing card and would be the diamond in the sceptre of the National Gallery's existence. Indeed, it might even begin to pay for itself. The acquisition of this painting has commended itself to many people, and I would be very happy to know what the hon. member had in mind and whether he believes it would be a good thing for Canada to have.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I only raised the point because the minister has an uncanny ability for making pronouncements which catch the public eye. This announcement in particular, for some strange reason, seems to have evoked a fantastic response, certainly in my experience, both pro and con. We have seen much the same reactions as the minister has outlined. The minister said she was sort of flying a kite in this suggestion. I was wondering whether she is still flying the kite, or have any steps been taken to make a positive offer for the purchase of the painting?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Don't incite her to make another speech. Let us pass this bill.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Miss LaMarsh: The kite is still in the air so far as the government is concerned. I will have to reserve answering at the moment what my personal opinion might be.

Clauses 34 to 46 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We have been making wonderful progress and I hope we will continue to do so, but I would like to make a plea to the minister that he now consider the suggestion that this bill be divided into six separate bills. This omnibus bill is the worst legislative draftsmanship that I have ever seen, and I am sure that it is only presented in this form because the hon. member for Ottawa West, the house leader, has insisted that this is the way to get the bill passed by the house. I am not going to say anything more.

I would really like to make a plea to the other place that they divide the bill and send it back to us in the form of six separate bills. I am sure that all of us here would welcome this legislative tidiness, with enthusiasm.

Mr. Churchill: I want to support that suggestion. I think that is perhaps the best way in which it can be done, and I hope the other place will pay attention to what we say here. We pay attention to what they say on some occasions. That would be the easiest and neatest way of doing it. I support the division that has been suggested by the hon. member for Carleton.

The Deputy Chairman: We will now revert to clause 31.

Mr. Benson: As indicated this afternoon, I have prepared an amendment adopting the principle put forward by the hon. member for Kamloops. I would like to move that Bill C-178 be amended by adding the following to clause 31, immediately after clause 8(a) as set out on page 9 of the bill:

8B(1) In carrying out his responsibilities under Section 8A, the minister may formulate plans for the conservation, development and use of the resources specified in that section and for research with respect thereto, and with authority of the governor in council and in co-operation with other departments, branches and agencies of the government of Canada, provide for carrying out such plans.

(2) The minister may co-operate with the provinces and with municipalities in formulating and carrying out any plans under subsection (1).

(3) In carrying out his duties and functions under this section, the minister may consult with and inaugurate conferences of representatives of producers, industry, the universities, labour and provincial and municipal authorities.

I would simply like to point out that this includes all of the words put forward by the hon. member for Kamloops and supported by various members in the house, except for the introduction to the amendment.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think the hon. member for Kamloops should be congratulated upon his legislative paternity.

Mr. Hamilton: My remarks on this particular amendment will be to the point. One of the most powerful sections of the Northern Affairs and National Resources Act was section 7, which is now in essence fairly well repeated in the amendment that has been proposed by the government and was originally proposed by the member for Kamloops. On reading the proposed clause 31 of this particular bill several things struck me. It simply gives to the minister power to:

(a) conduct applied and basic research programs and investigations and economic studies . . . . and

(b) study, keep under review and consider recommendation—

What this amendment does is to add a little more punch to the active section of the bill and allows the minister, in carrying out his responsibilities, to —formulate plans for the conservation, development and use of the resources specified . . . in co-operation with other departments, branches and agencies of the federal government of Canada, provide for carrying out such plans.

This is an operative type of legislation.

In the second clause the minister may co-operate with the provinces and with municipalities in formulating and carrying out any plans under subsection (1). The point I want to make is that under section 7 of the Northern Affairs and National Resources Act we, as the federal government, were able to take the initiative on such far-reaching proposals as the Resources for Tomorrow conference held in 1961, to set up the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers, and to propose the Saskatchewan-Nelson system. This proposal was originally made in 1958 and was finally accepted in 1965. It took seven years before federal initiative under section 7 of the Northern Affairs and National Resources Act was carried out. The fact is that the minister had the power and direction of the act to carry out this initiative. There are other things such as ARDA which are actually the type of thing that the minister can put before his colleagues in the government when there is a section in the act directing him to 'formulate plans for the conservation, development. . ." etc.

I would therefore like to support his amendment and congratulate the government upon incorporating in this act a section from the old act, and for not letting it float around. I think you will find that this section will strengthen tremendously the power of the minister.

I have another matter which I wish to mention briefly, so as to avoid speaking again. The Prime Minister made a promise that each of the new ministers would make a statement. I do not want to hold up this legislation and if I could get from the minister presiding over the legislation some sort of an indication which would appear in the record that the minister, when making his statement on estimates to the house, will deal with a number of very important policy statements, I will be satisfied.

Mr. Churchill: Which minister?

Mr. Hamilton: The minister of energy, mines and resources. I am asking that the minister indicate his thinking on a number of policy matters which are causing grave concern across the country. That would be satisfactory to me. I know where the minister is and I know how important it is for him to be present at the meeting of the Canadian Council for Resource Ministers in Winnipeg; but I would like to list, for the convenience of the minister a number of questions that are on our minds.

• (7:20 p.m.)

We should like to know what is the minister's policy in relation to the national oil policy on such questions as (a) setting annual targets to industry. We have not had a statement from the minister on this subject for two years now. Then, (b), what is the attitude of the minister toward building a refinery at Quebec, which negates the background of the whole national oil policy? (c) What is his policy on the second oil pipe line to Montreal? (d) What is his attitude toward oil and gas regulations in the north—and I am particularly dealing with the continental shelf? (e) What are his attitudes with regard to the oil and gas regulations on the continental shelf which are now in existence? These are matters, Mr. Chairman, vital to the whole future of Canada, and we must have a clear-cut statement from the minister so that we know where we are going.

The second major question which I want to put before the committee for the minister to discuss when he makes his statement deals with the national energy policy. We should like from the minister some statement (a) as to the relations he foresees between the Federal Power Commission of the United States and the National Energy Board of Canada. There is obviously trouble brewing on this front unless there is a clear-cut policy to avoid the difficulties ahead. Then, (b), we also want from the new minister a statement on the national transmission grid, which is vital to the whole concept of sovereignty and using our energy as a basic part of strengthening our bargaining power in the field of resource use on the continent. (c) We should like a statement from the minister with regard to the relationship between atomic power and hydro reserves in Canada. (d) We should like projections on what the minister foresees is the energy demand for new industrial complexes in Canada during the next 20 to 30 years.

The third subject, Mr. Chairman, deals with water policy. (a) We desperately need something which has been recommended since 1962, and that is a study on the supply of water in Canada. I can go into detail on this, but that is sufficient to indicate the subject. (b) Even more importantly, we need a study of the demand. If we have to use United States figures and translate them into figures showing Canadian use, this is a little embarrassing when we are trying to estimate our demand for water. Before we can discuss water intelligently we have to know the supply and demand picture. Then, (c), we should like from the minister officially in his new capacity a statement on the NAPA plan which the United States has proposed and has been pushing on the legislators of this country in private sessions. And, (d), we should like a statement from the minister on the Kiernan plan proposed by a Canadian engineer. We should like the direction of the minister on these subjects.

That, Mr. Chairman, is a list of the 12 or 13 subjects which are the real pressure points for those of us who are trying to resolve our policy in connection with energy, minerals and resources. Instead of my waiting for the minister to make a statement before asking these questions, I would ask the minister in charge in the committee whether he would convey to the minister of energy, mines and resources these examples of the type of questions upon which we should like a statement from him when he speaks on his estimates.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I would be most pleased to undertake to bring the questions that my hon. friend has raised to the attention of the minister of energy, mines and resources. I am sure he will appreciate advance notice of these questions and will deal with them when he makes a statement on estimates. I cannot, of course, obligate the minister, but the list having been prepared, and its being a comprehensive and useful one I will bring it to the attention of the minister; and I am sure he will deal with these matters on his estimates.

I would point out that it is not through neglect or through any desire not to be here that the minister of energy, mines and resources is not in the committee today. His absence is due to federal-provincial conferences now taking place. In speaking to my hon. friend a few minutes ago I indicated that it was essential for him to be there in the interest of resource development in Canada.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, just on that point, the minister said that he would bring these matters to the attention of the minister of energy, mines and resources, which perhaps is all he can do. But it is almost a point of honour now with the Minister of National Revenue—a gentleman's agreement—that the topics raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle will be the subject of responses by the minister of whom he is speaking. Our concession on this side, of course, is to pass the bill now in committee stage and get on with other matters. That is a major concession, in view of the importance of the subject matters raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, when I indicated that I would bring them to the attention of the minister of energy, mines and resources, I am presuming that he will have the courtesy to reply to the questions raised by the hon. member.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SYSTEM

Hon. E. J. Benson (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-170, respecting employer and employee relations in the public service of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government, with the co-operation of hon. members, to proceed with second reading of the three bills, C-170, C-181 and C-182, which together would provide for the introduction of collective bargaining into the public service and for a number of other important reforms in the processes of public administration. If it is agreeable to the house, Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by asking hon. members to consider Bill C-170, the proposed Public Service Staff Relations Act. Following second reading of that bill, I would like to proceed to Bill C-181, the proposed Public Service Employment Act, and then to Bill C-182, which contains proposed amendments to the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. members have already approved the establishment of a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which, it is hoped, will review all three measures and report its views to the house prior to third reading. It is my intention after each bill has been read a second time to propose a motion to provide for referral to this committee, which has been established by the house.

In speaking to Bill C-170, I would like to begin by reviewing very briefly the principal features of the system of collective bargaining for which it would provide.

Under the proposed system, bargaining rights would be available to virtually all public servants except those carrying managerial responsibilities and those serving management in a confidential capacity. It would not be available to employees of crown corporations now covered by the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, to members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or to certain smaller groups for whom it would be difficult or inappropriate to establish terms and conditions of employment by means of collective bargaining.

The system would be administered by a staff relations board, similar in composition to the labour relations boards that operate in the different jurisdictions across Canada. The board would have the power to define bargaining units and can certify employee organizations as bargaining agents. It would also provide an administrative umbrella for other third party functions, including the arbitration of disputes and the adjudication of grievances.

For a period of about two years, bargaining units in a large part of the public service would be defined in such a way as to correspond with the occupational groups identified in the classification structure now being developed and implemented by the Civil Service Commission. This feature, recommended by the preparatory committee on collective bargaining, is designed to ensure that bargaining rights are extended as quickly as possible, with a minimum of destruction to the ongoing processes of pay determination, and in a manner consistent with the interests of employees and the effective operation of the public service.

For the great bulk of the public service, the interests of the employer in bargaining would be represented by Treasury Board. Provision is made, however, for the designation as separate employers of a number of agencies, such as the National Research Council and the National Film Board, that have traditionally had a significant measure of independence in matters of personnel management. The interests of employees would be represented, of course, by employee organizations able to meet the normal tests for certification as bargaining agents.

Agreements reached would be binding on the parties. Arguments about their interpretation would be subject to mandatory grievances procedures and, ultimately, to independent adjudication.

The dispute settlement provisions in the bill are of great importance. In applying for certification as a bargaining agent, an employee organization would be required to choose one of two dispute settlement options; one providing for recourse to binding arbitration, the other for a procedure requiring reference to a conciliation board and offering, in defined circumstances, to employees other than those deemed necessary in the interests of the safety or security of the public, the right to strike. Each bargaining agent would be bound by the procedure of its choice and would be unable to change its option for a period of three years. The reason for the three-year period is to move through one bargaining period and on to the next before there can be a change in the option of employee representatives.

The arbitration of disputes would be the responsibility of an independent arbitration tribunal. For any one dispute, the tribunal would consist of a permanent chairman and two members drawn from panels of individuals representing generally the interests of employer and employees. Awards of the tribunal would be final and binding on both sides.

I want to say how pleased I am, Mr. Speaker, with the reception given by the house to the Prime Minister's statement when he moved the resolution. I am likewise pleased to note the support for the underlying principles of the bill that has been expressed outside this house by the principal employee organizations.

A number of points were made during the debate on the resolution on matters affecting the proposed new system of staff relations in the public service. No doubt all of these will be given careful consideration in the joint committee. In the meantime, I would like to comment on one or two of the more important of those comments which were made.

There were warm words of praise for the National Joint Council of the Public Service of Canada. I am happy to associate myself and the other members of the government with the sentiments expressed. For more than two decades the council has served as a focal point of joint consultation in the public service. Its deliberations have led to a steady stream of improvements in conditions of employement and, what is perhaps more important, a steady growth in the maturity of the relationship between representatives of the employer and the employees.

For some months, Mr. Speaker, the National Joint Council has been reviewing its future role in the light of the anticipated introduction of a system of collective bargaining. Recommendations resulting from this review were approved by the council last week and were received in my office a few days ago. The government will wish to consider these recommendations before taking a definite position on the issues involved. I can now say this much, however: The government believes that in the new system there will be need for an institution like the National Joint Council in which representatives of bargaining agents and representatives of the employer can come together and jointly seek solutions to problems that go beyond those of particular bargaining units. Like the preparatory committee on collective bargaining, we believe that, if preserved and nurtured, the traditions associated with the council could be put to good use in the new system.

In the debate on the resolution, a question was also raised about the future role of the Pay Research Bureau. Let me say at once that in my opinion there can be no doubt about the valuable service rendered by the Pay Research Bureau since its creation in 1957, nor about the increased objectivity which its work has brought to the consideration of the remuneration of employees of the public service. I would like to commend officials of the bureau who, in the past deccade, have built it into one of the most respected research organizations of its kind in Canada.

As hon. members know, the preparatory committee made quite specific recommendations about the future of the Pay Research Bureau. The government has not yet dealt with these recommendations. It seemed to us that they could not be dealt with in a satisfactory manner until consultations with employee representatives could take place in the full knowledge of the characteristics of the legislation we are now considering. We believe that the Pay Research Bureau should be retained as an independent and impartial unit whose findings are made available to accredited representatives of both employer and employees. We are satisfied, however, that decisions about its future terms of reference and method of operation should be made only after employee representatives have had an opportunity to consider those matters in the context of the collective bargaining legislation and to express to the government their considered views.

In the debate on the resolution, mention was also made of arbitration mechanisms proposed by the preparatory committee, mechanisms which, as the bill indicates, are considered by the government to be appropriate. The arbitration tribunal proposed in the bill is directly comparable to the arbitration tribunal which has successfully dealt with disputes in the Whitley Council system of the United Kingdom since 1925. During the more than 40 years that it has functioned, the British tribunal has dealt with some 600 cases and, throughout this very long period, has enjoyed the confidence and support of representatives of both employees and successive governments.

One hon. member, commenting upon the proposals of the preparatory committee, expressed some doubt as to the wisdom of making no provision for the public expression of dissenting views in awards of the tribunal. It seems to me, however, that an award which associates the chairman of the tribunal with only one of the members is apt to be divisive, encouraging one of the parties to welcome the award and the other to resent it. The manner in which awards are to be made is an important element of the proposed legislation that will no doubt be analysed in greater depth in the joint committee. I am sure that members of the committee will wish to ascertain the views of the staff associations on this question. Although our position on this point is by no means rigid, it seems to me at the present time that the proposal for an award signed only by the chairman has much to commend it.

I have already indicated that, where a bargaining agent rejects arbitration in favour of the process involving conciliation and the right to strike, provision is made for the designation of employees whose services are necessary in the interests of the safety and security of the public.

This proposal has been the subject of some comment outside the house and it is important, I think, that there should be no misunderstanding of its character and significance. The absolute requirement for such a provision is clear, I think, to anyone who comprehends the many areas where public servants provide services which, if withdrawn in some circumstances, could endanger individuals in the community. A number of examples come to mind, including prison security, air traffic control, and hospital care. The identification of all such services is of course not possible without a systematic review of work being performed throughout the whole public service of Canada.

In considering this aspect of the proposed legislation, hon. members must differentiate between what might be described on the one hand as useful and important services, and on the other, as services necessary in the interests of the safety and security of the public. Almost every public service is, in one way or another, important to the well-being of the community. The proposed limitation on the right to strike is not intended to deny that right to all whose services may be deemed important. Such a limitation would be so severe as to serve almost as a statutory prohibition of all strike action.

In relation to this aspect of the proposed legislation, however, it is not necessary for me to remind hon. members of the ultimate sovereignty of parliament and its authority to protect and safeguard the public interest. It is, I believe, our duty in dealing with issues of this kind to legislate in such a way as to deny no man the ordinary rights and privileges of Canadian citizens unless in the public interest it is absolutely necessary to do so. On the other hand, no one should doubt the capacity or willingness of parliament to qualify such rights and privileges where they are being used in gross disregard for the well-being of the community.

Let me remind hon. members of the objectives of this legislation which the Prime Minister suggested that all members should bear in mind as they examine and evaluate the provisions of this bill. These were: first, to protect the public interest; second, to respond in an understanding and responsible manner to the aims and aspirations of organized employees; third, to preserve the capacity of the public service to function in an efficient manner; and fourth, to respect the principles underlying industrial relations law and practice in Canada.

With respect to the first objective, there has not been, and indeed there cannot be, any equivocation. The public interest must be served. In the development of all aspects of these bills, this basic requirement has been a primary consideration.

With respect to the second objective, I am satisfied that in its principal elements this legislation is a reasonable response to the claims of all interested employee organizations. However, I do not expect every one of these organizations to support all the details of the bill, if only because their wishes and aspirations are not in all respects the same.

With respect to the third objective, I believe that improvements in morale will result from the introduction of collective bargaining and mandatory grievance procedures, and will in time produce substantial gains in the efficiency of the public service. Hon. members know that this legislation is only one of a number of steps which the government is taking, or proposing to take, to gear the administrative machinery of government to the present and future demands of Canadian society.

Many of these steps are in the field of personnel management. Reforms in this field are as important and as necessary as reforms in the processing of income tax returns—I might perhaps say they are even more important—or as the need for reforms in the presentation of estimates to parliament. Each in its own way represents a change which adapts the machinery of government to the new age in which we live. Each in its own way will, I am sure, contribute to the administrative efficiency of the public service.

[Mr. Benson.]

Finally, the proposed legislation in most of its basic principles is consistent with the provisions of statute law which regulate these matters in the private sector. It provides for the definition of bargaining units and the certification of bargaining agents. It imposes an obligation on the employer to negotiate in good faith with certified bargaining agents with a view to the conclusion of collective agreements. It provides for third-party adjustment of disputes arising out of the interpretation or application of collective agreements and arbitral awards. It permits employees to choose freely the organizations by which they wish to be represented in collective bargaining, and to replace those organizations when they no longer enjoy their confidence. It prohibits interference in the affairs of employee organizations by representatives of the employer, and it assures the right of every employee to belong to an employee organization of his choice.

In two important respects, Mr. Speaker, the proposed legislation goes beyond that which governs the relationship of employers and employees in most other jurisdictions. It grants bargaining rights to all professional employees, and it provides to all employee organizations applying for certification as bargaining agents the right to choose between alternative methods of dispute settlement.

In the long history of staff relations in the public service of Canada, organized professional employees have played a prominent and responsible part. In recent years they have been among those advocating a system of collective bargaining and arbitration. Now that such a system is being provided, the government can see no reason why they should be denied access to it.

As far as we know, the proposal for alternative methods of dispute settlement has no counterpart in other jurisdictions. We believe however that, when coupled with the provision for the designation of employees necessary to the safety and security of the public, it represents a sensible response to the requirements of the public service. As hon. members know, some groups of organized employees have expressed a strong desire for a system in which disputes are settled by binding arbitration and others have made it clear that they oppose arbitration as a matter of principle. The government has concluded that in the public service, in a system designed to embrace a wide spectrum of occupations—indeed, it will be the largest employer-employee relationship governed by collective bargaining in this country—organized employees should have the freedom to choose a dispute settlement procedure with which they are in basic agreement and by which they are prepared to be bound.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this bill is as complex and intricate as it is voluminous. Together with its companion measures, the Public Service Employment Act and the amendment to the Financial Administration Act, it constitutes an immense change in the approach to personnel management and staff relations in the public service.

At the resolution stage I endeavoured to outline the principles which we on this side think should govern collective bargaining in the public service, and indicated clear support for those principles. With reservations which I shall mention tonight, I support this bill although I must assert that a detailed study of it and of its two companion measures leaves many questions unanswered. The minister's statement tonight, to which I listened carefully, did not remove these uncertainties.

It is still not clear how this collective bargaining bill will be integrated with the regular procedures under the new public service employment bill and with financial control under the Financial Administration Act. Indeed, few of these questions have been answered by the minister's opening presentation tonight, and they will require to be pursued before the proposed joint special committee of the Senate and House of Commons.

Because this bill will go to that joint special committee I believe it is desirable, indeed important, that members of this house should not adopt final, or hard and fast positions on second reading. In the special committee all interested parties will have the opportunity to give evidence and make submissions, and thereafter there will be ample time to take up positions.

Within the public service itself, sir, there is still but little appreciation of how radical, indeed how revolutionary will be the changes wrought by this bill. Many of the familiar and established procedures will go out the window and be wholly abandoned. The whole system of salary determination which has been built up over the years will be altered beyond recognition. This will not be achieved without major headaches—headaches for management and employee alike. There will be major and startling upsets in the public service of this country.

In many departments wholesale dissatisfaction has already arisen with the classification revision program, the so-called red circling program. Many employees feel a sense of discrimination and hurt, and I hope the government will be able to allay those fears which have already been aroused.

The house should not think that the public service is wholly unanimous in favouring the changes now proposed. The old system of salary determination, based upon reports of the Pay Research Bureau and involving cyclical revision, is not unanimously condemned by any means. Many intelligent civil servants would prefer to retain the existing system in preference to collective bargaining. For myself, sir, I believe the change to a system of collective bargaining is both inevitable and desirable and will accrue to the great advantage of the majority of civil servants.

Equally, I have never concealed my hope that it could have been achieved by a process of gradualism. In my view the Whitley councils in Great Britain would be the best model for us. They have no statutory or legislative basis, and my hope had been that before this we could achieve the same results in this country by a process of broadening down from precedent to precedent. It became obvious, of course, that this was not possible, and that section 7 of the old act would not lead to this result.

Obviously we have come to the stage today where we must now have this legislation, but what troubles me most about this bill is its complexity. It purports to dot every "i" and to cross every "t". In the joint special committee I shall need some convincing that this exhaustive complexity will not lead to inflexibility or to excessive rigidity in employee relations. I say to you, sir, nothing could be more undesirable than to initiate a new system of collective bargaining and confine it in a legislative strait-jacket at the very outset.

In my view the new system must have room for experimentation, room to live, to breathe and to grow. Personally, I have never seen any employee relations legislation so exhaustive, so saturated with detail as is this bill. In committee I submit that we must ask ourselves whether this very exhaustiveness is not self-defeating—whether the system so rigidly defined may not break down of its own weight. I hope that it will not, but I would like to see less definition, less exhaustive presentation and more opportunity for the system to live and, as I say, to breathe and to grow.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, two human factors will determine the success or failure of the new system—first, the calibre of the persons appointed to the Public Service Staff Relations Board and to the Arbitration Tribunal and, second, the good will and loyal competence of the negotiators for management and the representatives of the bargaining agents. I reiterate what I tried to say at the resolution stage, that the appointments to the board and to the tribunal must be of the very highest calibre. There must not be even a breath of suspicion of patronage, and I speak of patronage as either political or bureaucratic. Indeed, sometimes I think bureaucratic patronage is worse than political patronage. I repeat, there must not be the breath of suspicion of patronage in these appointments.

It will be the responsibility of the rank and file of civil servants themselves to make certain that their employee organizations, which will be their bargaining agents, do not fall into improper hands—into power-hungry or influence-seeking cliques. If civil servants generally just leave it to "George", if they let minorities rule the employee organizations, then I say that collective bargaining will be no new Valhalla, and they will have only themselves to blame. The early stages of collective bargaining particularly will necessitate wise leadership and genuine employee relations statesmanship among the heads of the employee organizations.

If I read the bill correctly it does purport to retain as the final basis of an arbitration award the principle of salary determination which has become known as "fair comparison." The Arbitration Tribunal is instructed to have regard to "the conditions of employment in similar occupations outside the public service." Personally I believe that is proper. The government of course should always be a model employer, exercising a good influence towards all employment across the nation, but the role and status of public servants should not get out of line, either upwards or downwards, with those prevailing generally in similar occupations. The basis of "fair comparison" has worked satisfactorily as a general rule and should be retained as a basic test for negotiation, conciliation and arbitration.

There is one aspect of the bill which may cause some concern. The Arbitration Tribunal is instructed to have regard to "such geographic, industrial or other variations as it may consider relevant." This of course is well understood in the prevailing rates employment, but for classified civil servants a national uniformity of pay has always been maintained, subject only to some bonuses for overseas or northern service. If there is to be a change in this policy, so that in the future a secretary in Vancouver may have a different pay scale from one in Saint John, we should be told about it. We must be vigilant that a basic change in the national policy of uniformity of pay is not just smuggled in.

The bill is not fully clear in my view as to precisely what matters may be the subject of collective bargaining and what may not. The companion and integrating bills, the Public Service Superannuation Act and the amendments to the Financial Administration Act, do not make it clear either. For example, is a matter such as bilingualism for certain persons and not for others, to be a subject of collective bargaining? This is not clear. What I should like to reiterate is that there must be no intrusion by collective bargaining, either directly or indirectly, upon the merit system. In my view it is this merit system which has given Canada the finest public service of any nation, and no erosion of and no encroachments upon it can be tolerated. It is only upon the assumption that the combined effect of the new public service bill and schedule B of this bill will protect the merit system that I would be prepared to support it at second reading.

The Minister of National Revenue, as I endeavoured to do at the resolution stage, has paid a well merited compliment to the work of the 22-year-old National Joint Council. I of course am not aware of what the recommendations may be as to the future role of that council. The minister has not disclosed the recommendation in this regard tonight. No doubt he will do so before the joint special committee. I should like to say I believe it has an important role and that there is no organization within the public service which has more effective public contributions to its credit. In the future it must be continued and we shall expect, before the committee, a clear statement of what this government is prepared to suggest in respect of the role that the National Joint Council should play.

The minister has been a little more vague tonight than I would have hoped in relation to the future role of the Pay Research Bureau. I have a somewhat paternalistic feeling for the Pay Research Bureau, because my first action when originally elected to parliament was to persuade the then minister of finance, the hon. Donald M. Fleming, and the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert to establish this bureau. I say to the minister that he must not be at all equivocal on this matter. There must be a role for the Pay Research Bureau because as a source of objective, impartial wage and salary comparisons, its continuance is in my view, imperative.

Mr. Speaker, as I understood the minister's statement tonight he definitely was equivocal in relation to this. I hope when he replies he will make it clear that the Pay Research Bureau will continue and will be the source of the information essential if collective bargaining is to be effective, and which I think cannot be found elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the most important and effective features of this bill is that dealing with grievances. In any organization as large as the public service of this country, the existence of a substantial number of grievances, some well founded some less well founded, is inevitable. At least one quarter of my total working hours each day is devoted to listening to grievances of civil servants in this area and taking them up with ministers or appropriate senior officers. When I sat on the other side of the house, almost two-thirds of my time was devoted to this time consuming but necessary aspect of an Ottawa member's life.

I believe the grievance procedures in this bill are good. Perhaps they will relieve Ottawa area members like my sincere friend from Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) to enable them to devote more time to constructive legislative duties, although I have some doubts. I think my hon. friend from Ottawa East and my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Tardif) would agree fully with these statements. I know the hon. gentleman who leads this house now, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) has had more experience than any one of us. One of the ironic things is that civil servants are universally and instinctively against political influence until personal problems arise, and then they resent it if their M.P. does not have enough pull to fix the problem.

Finally, sir, I should like to deal with the principles of the bill as they affect the right to strike. For myself I want to reserve the right of final decision on the issue until all the evidence has been heard and exhaustive discussion has taken place in the joint special committee. On all sides of the house there are major differences of opinion on this subject. The same is true among the employee organizations.

What I fear is that this bill falls between two stools; it recognizes the right to strike for some employees, but refuses it to others. Then it permits those for whom strike action is recognized to bargain away that right. Frankly, to me, this seems to be an attempt to get on all sides of the issue and is likely to fail for that reason. I have been interested to note that the almost universal reaction of newspaper opinion is firmly against the right to strike. For myself I doubt that either recognition of the right to strike or the prohibition of the right to strike really matters anything like as significantly as some people urge.

Recognition of the right will not make employee organizations any less responsible and, on the other hand, it has been my experience throughout life that prohibitions never have been successful in preventing persons with a sense of moral outrage from taking retaliatory action. Actually the only real issue is not whether a strike can be prevented one way or another, but whether, if held, a strike in the public service would be legal or illegal. However, when you encounter that dread tragedy of a strike of public servants, the question of legality or illegality is not very serious or significant, in my view. It really is only a matter of academic exercise.

Parliament always should be seeking to prevent any conditions arising where the possibility of strike action could ever be contemplated. If, for example, the legitimate grievances of the postal workers as revealed to Judge Anderson and Judge Montpetit had been aired in this chamber, we never would have had a postal strike. Civil servants in the Ottawa area had put all their political eggs in the one Liberal basket at that time, and the Ottawa members were silent. The government just sat on a powder keg until, predictably, it exploded into a postal strike.

Obviously, before third reading, there will be much more to say on this subject of the right to strike. That is all I would wish to say at this particular time. I have made my personal position clear. We should await the hearings and the evidence in the committee before making further comment.

There is one principle of the bill with which the Minister of National Revenue dealt which affects the issue very directly, and which I do not think can be allowed to stand. That is the unique provision that the chairman of an arbitration tribunal shall always be a one-man majority, even when his two colleagues are in disagreement. In committee, this extraordinary principle will have to be eliminated, if arbitration is to be realistic. I never have heard of this type of provision. It may exist elsewhere, but I never have seen a situation where one man can be a majority in a body of three. In committee this extraordinary provision will have to be explained to me in a manner which the minister has not done tonight, or else certainly I will be one of those who decidedly will vote against it.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member not aware that this is exactly the system of arbitration which has been used in the United Kingdom for many years in the Whitley council, and has worked out very well in that particular case.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, I am not aware of it. I can only say that to me it is a most extraordinary principle that a chairman can be a majority of a body of three. I think it is a form of dictatorship the like of which I have never seen presented in legislation to this parliament. So far as I am concerned, unless there are arguments that I have not heard at all, this legislation is not going to pass in that form of dictatorship.

This bill does initiate, as I have said, a totally new era in the relationship between the government of Canada and its employees. I would hope personally that there would be a much greater awareness among the rank and file of public servants and civil servants of the vast changes which are in store, and that the deliberations of the joint special committee might profit greatly from wise representations, not merely of employee organizations but of other thoughtful and interested persons, including individual civil servants, members of the public, and national organizations which have a great interest in what is the position of the public service.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with the reservations that I have expressed, we support the second reading of this bill. Hon. members on this side of the house will seek in committee to improve and alter the provisions of the bill to ensure that the bill which ultimately passes this parliament is the best that can be devised in the national interest, and the best for the benefit of what we believe to be the finest public service in the world.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said at the resolution stage when he spoke on behalf of our party, we welcome this legislation. We feel it is an important milestone in the history of the government of this country for us to be establishing the principle of collective bargaining for our federal public servants. We also welcome the other two bills which are companion pieces to this legislation and which will be dealt with after we pass this bill. I refer to the bill establishing the public service employment act and the bill amending the Financial Administration Act.

We welcome the fact that among these pieces of legislation the number of employees who are to be known as public servants is widened, and we welcome the extent to which the government has accepted some of the very useful recommendations of the Glassco Commission. All told, we feel that a good job for the public service and for public servants is being done by bringing forward these three pieces of legislation.

It will be no surprise to any member of this house if I suggest that my speech is not going to be one of nothing but praise. I shall have some criticisms to make. But even so, I wanted my first words to emphasize what has already been said on behalf of this party, namely that we are glad the day has at last come when we are going to establish collective bargaining in the public service. We also welcome the fact that these three pieces of legislation will be referred, after each one has had second reading, to a special committee where we can go into the details of them. I hope the government's attitude will be one that will accept useful and constructive suggestions that are made when these pieces of legislation are before that special committee.

Mr. Speaker, having made it clear that we are pleased to have this legislation, I should like to make a few criticisms and indicate a few points where we think improvements can be made. Necessarily I shall be referring to items that are covered within the contents of the bill, but I shall not break any rule by referring to the clauses as such; rather, I think it is important to do as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) did, namely give notice at this point of some of the things that we think should be gone into when we have this legislation before the committee.

The first thing I should like to say is that we feel the government at long last having accepted the idea of collective bargaining for public servants, should have demonstrated more confidence in this principle than I believe to be exhibited by the terms of the legislation. I think not only should it have shown more confidence in the principle of collective bargaining, but I agree with the hon. member for Carleton that the government should have shown more confidence in the experience it has had over several decades in dealing with civil servants through their various organizations. Even though it can be said that we are entering a new era, in the sense that we are going to have collective bargaining, it is not the beginning of consultations between the government as employer and its employees.

There has been a good deal of experience in this field. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) tonight paid tribute to the growth and improvement that has taken place in those relations. He referred to the maturity that has come about. It seems to me that if the government does have an awareness of the fact that there has been experience in terms of consultation between the government as employer and its public servants as employees, it should have demonstrated this by not hedging the principle of collective bargaining quite so much as has been done in this piece of legislation.

Part of what I have in mind in this respect was alluded to by the previous speaker when he referred to the complexities of the bill that is now before us. I recognize that it takes a fairly lengthy piece of legislation to deal with this matter, but it does seem to me that those who drafted this bill have gone a little too far in trying to provide for everything. To the extent that an attempt is made by legislation to deal with every possible situation, room for negotiation, room for good will between parties which respect each other is limited.

I suggest that it would be better to rely a little more on the good will and experience that has been built up between the government and its employees. In this connection I suppose the outstanding example of what I am talking about, when I say there is a lack of confidence in the principle of collective bargaining, is the way in which the government has given the right to strike and at the same time has hedged it. I am aware of the fact that newspaper editorial opinion to a considerable extent has not welcomed the recognition by the government of the right to strike on the part of civil servants, but I should like to commend the government for not having worried about this. I commend it for having accepted the fact that, at least as far as it is prepared to go, civil servants are citizens like the rest of the workers in Canada and should be accorded the same rights.

But when the government gives the right to strike to public servants, and then says that that right can only be exercised if the appropriate bargaining units make a choice in advance to which they are tied for three years, then I submit that it has, to a considerable extent, denied the freedom of the right to strike which has supposedly been given to our civil servants. I am surprised that once the government was prepared to grant the right to strike it did not give it in at least the same and unconditional way that is provided for other employees in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. This requirement that a bargaining unit must decide in advance whether it wants to have recourse to arbitration or whether it wants to retain the right to strike, I suggest is unrealistic and a denial of the right that is supposedly being accorded.

Not only does this way of dealing with the matter deny the right to strike, but it puts the right to resort to arbitration in what seems to me to be an unreal position. I always thought that any two parties which have respect for each other and are on any kind of equal terms have a natural right at any time to agree to arbitrate and to agree to a third party sitting with them to ajudicate on a dispute; that they have the right in advance to agree, if they wish that arbitration will be accepted.

I suggest that the extent to which arbitration under this legislation becomes something that a bargaining unit has to choose three years in advance as an alternative to the right to strike, puts our public servants in a strait-jacket that is not consistent with the publicity that has been given to the idea that this right has been accorded to civil servants. I hope that when we go into committee we may have an opportunity to take a new look at this. I think the choice should not have to be made in advance. If the right to strike is granted, it should be there on an unconditional basis.

I shall now move to another area which I think is a limitation in this bill. I refer to the grievance procedures which are established in it. There is much to be said for those procedures that is good, but I see two limitations. On the one hand I think that the range of matters that can be the subject of grievance procedure is too narrow, and on the other hand I suggest that the machinery for handling grievances involves the kinds of delays that can be fatal to a satisfactory solution to the grievances that employees or bargaining units may bring forward. I hope therefore that we can take a good look at the grievance procedure and perhaps improve it with respect to the points that I have made.

Another point to which I should like to draw attention relates to the whole question of how bargaining units are to be chosen and established, but I wish to draw attention more particularly to the fact that there are clauses in the bill which seem to me to open the door to what in certain circles, is called raiding. We will go into these defects when we get into committee on the bill, but I urge that if my reading of the bill is correct, if there are sections that make it possible for this practice to take place, we should tighten it up and make these provisions more clear.

There are certain areas in the bill where it seems to me that there are inequalities between the two sides, namely employer and employees. For example, I find that there are various penalties that are provided for employees or for representatives of bargaining units, penalties that are mostly monetary, but I find no corresponding penalty on the other side of the fence. I know the argument will be made that the employer on the other side is the government; perhaps eventually the employer is the parliament of Canada.

It seems to me, however, that if errors are made or if there is a departure from the spirit and intent of the whole principle of collective bargaining on the part of the individuals who represent the employer, similar to departures which are possible on behalf of individuals who represent the employees, some disciplinary measures should be enforced to assure equality on the two sides of the picture.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Finally I would like to draw attention to the fact that in this bill something is carried over from the old Civil Service Act which will also be carried forward if the government has its way, in the new public service employment act, and that is what amounts to an outright prohibition of political activities on the part of civil servants. The hon. member for Carleton used the words "political" in his speech, but he was not talking about the kind of political activity to which I refer.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I will talk about that in the next bill.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member indicated that whenever civil servants in the Ottawa area who eschew political activity are in trouble, they want their members of parliament to use any political influence they have. I was a little disturbed when the member for Carleton used the phrase "let George do it". I wondered which George he was referring to. Surely the purpose of this legislation is to get away from that practice.

The particular provision in the bill now before us which seems to me unfair is the one that goes a long way with respect to the business of political interests or activities. I do not object to the provision that would make it improper for a civil servants union to make contributions for political purposes compulsory in order to belong to that union. I quite agree with that. But it seems to me it is going a little too far to say that a union representing employees, even one which handles money that is given to it voluntarily by some of its members to be given to this, that or the other political party, is to be denied the right to be certified or to engage in collective bargaining in any way whatsoever.

I know that every time this question of political activity on the part of civil servants comes up there is a certain type of editorial response that is automatic, but tonight I am going to rely on the spirit of the statement of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), particularly in the closing part of his remarks. He used phrases that indicated that the purpose of this legislation is to accord to civil servants their rights as Canadian citizens. We think that that is exactly what this legislation is all about. We think that for far too long civil servants have been only the objects of great praise on our part. We agree that they are the greatest civil servant group in the world, doing the job which keeps parliament and the country going, but having given them that praise, we then make them second class citizens by denying them, for example, the right to collective bargaining that is accorded to employees in private industry.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that full rights as Canadian citizens include not only the right to belong to unions of organizations that are free to engage in collective bargaining, but also include full political rights. If we have reached the point where we are able to grow up a bit in relation to the rights of civil servants—the rights of public servants, as we shall call them from now on—I suggest we grow up all the way. Certainly there will be headaches as a result of these new freedoms which we grant; but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that prohibitions create more headaches than freedoms and I urge very strongly, now that we have gone this far with this principle, that we go all the way with it.

There are other details in the bill, Mr. Speaker, with which we shall be dealing when we get the bill to the special committee to which it and the two others will be referred. I agree with the previous speaker that this is not the time for us to be taking rigid positions on either side; rather, it is time for us to state the subjects which we think should be surveyed and reviewed. I hope that as a result of the study which will be given this bill and the other two by the special joint committee we will be able to bring back to the House of Commons legislation which will make what we are doing a milestone in our Canadian history, that it will bring about an improvement in the kind of service we will get from our public servants, and that it will establish for them their full and untrammelled rights as Canadian citizens.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any length on the particular measure before us at the present time, but I do want to state the support of our group for the principle of collective bargaining for the public service. It seems strange that this principle, which has been recognized for so long in other areas, has taken so long to be applied to the public service of Canada. As I stated, we are in full support of the principle which has been enunciated.

We believe that the rights of those who are engaged in the public service of Canada should be safeguarded and promoted in every possible way. But, Mr. Speaker, coupled with the bestowal of those rights and privileges I am sure that those engaged in the public service are cognizant of the responsibilities that rest upon them in view of the somewhat different type of occupation in which they engage when compared with the activities of those in the private sector. I am sure that this fact will be recognized both by the government as employer, and by the employees.

As pointed out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in introducing the resolution preceding this measure, the preparatory committee, under the direction of Mr. Heeney, did invaluable work in evolving this system which is now being presented to us for consideration. We have been advised that some of the recommendations are already in process of implementation, and this whole measure as we have it is based largely on the recommendations of that committee.

This fact, Mr. Speaker, coupled with the fact that this measure is to be referred to the special joint committee of both houses of parliament, makes it more or less unnecessary for detailed study and analysis in the house at this time. In fact, because of the complexities of the measure, it is practically impossible for us to analyse it here and give it the study which it requires. However, when the matter is referred to the special joint committee there will be an opportunity given for detailed analysis, for questions and answers, and for the detailed study of every aspect of this matter.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that many questions remain unanswered. Some have been answered by the Prime Minister, and others have been answered tonight by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson); but many other questions still remain unanswered. We trust that when the matter does go to committee ample opportunity will be given to accord the bill the consideration it merits.

In introducing the resolution the Prime Minister outlined the objectives the measure is designed to realize. I think they are very commendable and I will just mention them. First of all, it is designed to protect the public interest; second, to respond in an understanding and responsible manner to the aims and aspirations of the employees; third, to preserve the capacity of the public service to function efficiently in serving the people of Canada and, fourth, to respect the principles underlying industrial relations law and practice in Canada. If this measure and the companion measures to which reference has been made serve to achieve these objectives, then of course they will be very worth while and commendable indeed.

Public Service Collective Bargaining

I just want to refer to two questions which have been raised in the course of debate thus far. The first is the provision for strike action. That is what I had in mind when I mentioned, in the first instance, that along with the rights which are safeguarded, responsibilities will also devolve upon those who are employed in the public service. We feel that the attitude they have taken in days gone by is a good omen for the future, and that they will act in a responsible way even though their rights are safeguarded.

Another question which comes to mind is one raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and concerns contributions to political activities. I do not know just what type of financing will be required in this respect, what type of fees will be necessary, and so on, but I should like to raise one point. I do not know whether this is covered in the bill, but if there is to be any provision for compulsory check-off of dues or contributions, then I should like to emphasize very strongly that those making contributions should not be required to do so if they are to be used for political action with which the contributor is not in agreement. I want to make that perfectly clear.

As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on this matter because I feel that every aspect of the bill can be considered thoroughly when it goes to the special joint committee.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I think that Bill C-170 introduced today by the government has been long in coming. I know that since I came to the house in 1953, I have been asking that the civil servants be given the right to negotiate with governmental authorities about their working conditions and salaries. Something was done in that direction in all the committees set up to study the Civil Service Act.

I was happy a little earlier to hear the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) say that he supported the new legislation, with some reservations. I remember that as parliamentary secretary he was given the task of refusing the request I made to give the civil servants the right to negotiate with their employer. He has changed his mind since, and I am happy about that. It will be one more vote for this legislation. The hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) pointed out that it took a long time for the act to become a reality in Canada.

[Mr. Patterson.]

It was discussed under Mr. St. Laurent's government. Then, the whole thing went dead. Nobody objected to it, but nobody did anything. When the Conservative party was in office, I suggested it and the Liberal party supported me. But the Conservative party, including the hon. member for Carleton, was dead against giving the employees the right to negotiate their working conditions.

I do not intend to speak for a long time. A committee will study that matter and I hope that we will be given the opportunity to discuss that bill clause by clause and to make the necessary changes. I agree with all those who spoke before me and said that the legislation is not perfect. As a matter of fact, it was prepared by human beings and, therefore, reflects all the imperfections of human nature. It is possible to improve it. I say that the Liberal party will not object to amendments being submitted to improve it.

It is impossible to predict beforehand what the arbitration board will be like. I know that there will be such a board and that the employees and the government will each have a representative on it and that both of them will agree to find a third member able to understand their needs, those of the government and those of the employees.

That is how an understanding can be reached. I hope that it will be possible to create an arbitration board which will really be conscious of its obligations, and that is how we will be able to eliminate patronage, as mentioned a little earlier by the hon. member for Carleton. But as you know patronage is dead. There was a little in the past with regard to hourly-paid employees, but it has completely disappeared. With the new attitude which prevails today, it cannot exist. There was a time when I recommended hundreds of people and the hon. member for Carleton did the same thing. They were accepted. The new attitude has changed all that; it is impossible to recommend anyone. Once in a while, maybe, a man will be hired to replace another one; but it does not happen regularly any more. At the present time, contracts are given out. That may be preferable for I admit money can thus be saved. We were somewhat surprised to lose that opportunity of giving a man a job from time to time.

I agree that patronage must disappear, for it cannot improve the situation in parliament. It was done away with in Quebec and things are looking up. I believe the same will apply here when it has completely disappeared. Even though the Créditistes do not seem to want to admit it—they do not believe in anything—they will not believe it until they have placed their hands in the wounds; doubting Thomases that they are, they do not want to believe.

I say that since patronage has disappeared in Quebec everyone is better off for it; the same will probably apply in Ottawa when it has disappeared here also. Even if it caused some astonishment the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) and myself must admit that new conditions have altered the situation; if patronage must disappear, let it be so.

It is said in certain quarters that the bill is not clear. That is a fact. Some things in it are not clear. It is quite difficult. What the employees wanted could not be foreseen. They will clarify things when they ask for specific working conditions and salaries. When the arbitration tribunal is created then their conditions can be studied and the government will see if it can grant them their requests. And so, stability will be achieved. It could not be had from one day to the next.

While talking of conditions, arbitration and what could improve the situation, mention was made of the right to strike. The right to strike, Mr. Speaker, was not requested by the employees, postal workers excepted. None of the others asked for it. The right to strike can be dangerous for a civil servant.

Let us suppose, for instance, that the employees of a department decide to go on strike. This would create a situation which would have an impact not only on those responsible for the working conditions complained about, or merely on those responsible for salaries, but on the whole Canadian people. Have we really got the right to give employees the possibility to cause concern among the Canadian people.

If the employees of the Eddy Company go on strike, this is their sacred right and we cannot prevent them from exerting it. This concerns their working conditions and the Eddy Company. If the employees of the International Paper go on strike, it is normal. This concerns their working conditions and the International.

We all know that the postmen's strike was prejudicial to all Canada. Mail was not delivered; we were obliged to send somebody from Hull to Montreal with insurance policies and this person brought back policies to be distributed to insurance agents in Hull. Those who were living far from the head office could not work. Were we responsible? Were the various insurance offices responsible? No. Yet, thousands of people had to suffer the disastrous consequences, and only the government could settle the problem.

I say it is dangerous. I am not against it, but I say the government must have thought about it seriously before deciding to grant the right to strike.

I am convinced public servants will not take advantage of that in an arbitrary fashion, because I am also convinced they do not want it. They did not ask for it, they do not intend to use it, but the fact that it is in the act constitutes a danger.

When I asked for civil servants the right to settle their own problems with the government, I always insisted that we should avoid granting them the right to strike, because I thought it was dangerous.

I have met thousands of civil servants in both my riding and the city of Ottawa, and not a single one ever told me he was in favour of the right to strike.

In view of this fact, we are going to examine this bill seriously. I will not object to this point, but I think the government has taken a dangerous step.

Mr. Speaker, the political activities of civil servants were mentioned. Well, this I cannot accept. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) told us that they should be granted the right to enter into politics, to subscribe to political parties. I know that they do not want this. They want to be independent of political parties. They want to be free to work, to earn their salary, whichever government is in office. They absolutely want to stay away from political organizations, because this represents some danger.

Moreover, when an employee goes into politics against a given party, he is prone to try and prejudice this party, if ever it comes into office.

If the New Democratic Party, which is now claiming for civil servants the right to go into politics, came into office—but this will probably never happen—its members would probably be the first to complain about that privilege having been granted, since they would suffer tremendously.

I suggest that we cannot grant them the right to go into politics. They are satisfied as they are. They can stay like that and I hope that the amendments moved in order to enable them to go into politics will not be passed.

As I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, the bill is complex and requires extensive consideration. I do not intend to speak any further this evening. I hope in committee to make the necessary comments to improve the situation.

Moreover, I think that we must stop right now and consider the matter, and one day we will be in a position to give civil servants what they are entitled to expect from the government.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the principle of the bill and indicate some of the difficulties which I see in it, but before doing so I want to make clear that the suggestions I make are not intended to take anything away from the fact that this bill is a milestone in Canadian civil service history and, if it is improved in some respects, it will be an even more shining milestone than it is now.

My first suggestion is that the bill shows a certain amount of fear about the way in which in practice it would work out, with the result it is far too detailed. Too many t's are crossed and too many i's are dotted. There is too little discretion left to the board, and too little room for applying changing conditions. Everything is codified in a way which is likely to cause a great deal of difficulty in the actual, practical working out of this kind of legislation.

It would have been much better had the bill contained fewer specifics, had the government been prepared to let it rest on certain general principles and put the details into regulations which can much more easily be changed on the recommendation of the board, or of some other body which is specified in the bill. In my opinion this is the major defect in the bill. It attempts to set out almost every conceivable detail. I speak with some years of experience in such matters and I say that in labour relations it is impossible to do that and carry out an effective, practical job.

The second major difficulty about the bill is that the Public Service Staff Relations Board has far too many functions in addition to the certification of bargaining agents. It is not only given the job of certifying the bargaining agents, which should be undertaken by an entirely impartial third party, but it also has duties in relation to conciliation—in relation to the items which are to be placed in conciliation, because its chairman sets them out—and it also has duties in relation to the appointment of adjudication and the manner in which they are to work.

In other words, it is a super board and because it is given powers—on the one side the certification of bargaining units, and on the other the authority to guide all the labour relations through the course of bargaining, conciliation and so on—it has too varied a set of powers to avoid becoming rigid. It will be much more concerned with the details of labour relations processes than would an ordinary labour relations board charged with certifying bargaining agents.

The body charged with certifying bargaining agents ought to be limited to that job, and I for one cannot see why that job could not be entrusted to the existing Canada Labour Relations Board. However, if the government felt it wanted some special civil service body to do that job and make that kind of decision, it could have a separate board undertake it, even though it be a part-time outfit meeting only for the purpose of dealing with certification applications, which do not arise often.

I repeat that it is a bad principle to have the body which creates the bargaining units, and therefore is the body which creates the instrument through which labour rights are to be enjoyed, also act as the body which in effect controls day by day the exercise of those rights the body which creates the rights ought to be separate from the body which controls the day by day exercises of those rights by the parties which gain them. For the life of me I do not see why it was not possible to place those two functions in two separate bodies.

My third general comment, which I make with all the emphasis at my command, is that the bill commits a terrible error in defining a bargaining unit in a detailed way, in effect almost saying to the body which is to certify the bargaining agent precisely what the composition of a bargaining unit should be.

It has been found by every labour relations board in every jurisdiction in Canada, and indeed in every other jurisdiction where such bodies exist, that this is an imprudent thing to do; that the prudent thing is to define a bargaining unit in the widest sensible terms —not the widest possible terms—and then leave to the board which certifies the bargaining agent enough discretion to be able to adjust its certification to the demands of the parties, to the wishes of the parties, and to the particular circumstances surrounding the facts of an application for certification. The proposed board does not have that discretion. It is limited to certain stated, statutory categories, out of which it cannot move. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this will be found by the board, by the government and by the Public Service Commission to be a confinement that will be most impractical and undesirable.

The fourth comment I wish to make is that there is a further limitation on the process of collective bargaining which, to me, is disturbing; that is, the statute gives the employer specific rights which it says are exclusive to the employer. I do not so much object to this being done as I object to the fact that the clause which gives the employer those rights does not make them subject in any way to the collective agreement between the parties.

For many years this was the case with collective agreements. They contained a proviso that such and such should be the exclusive function of management. But any modern collective agreement will provide that such and such shall be the exclusive function of management "subject to the provisions of this agreement". In other words, if the parties can agree that something in relation to dismissal or promotion for example, can be done in some other way than the way set out in some regulation, or the way desired by the employer, then the right of the employer should be qualified by the agreement of the parties in the case of a collective agreement, or by the award of the arbitrator in the case of arbitration. The terms of the bill constitute in this respect a serious limitation on collective bargaining.

My next point has to do with another example of the excessive power which has been given to the board as defined. There are provisions which say, in effect, that if an adjudicator or a board of arbitration trying to adjudicate or reach a settlement of a grievance bumps up against what is called a point of law or of jurisdiction, the adjudicator or the board does not have authority to deal with it but must refer it to the Public Service Staff Relations Board for decision. In the meantime, the arbitration proceedings cease.

In other words, there is a grievance procedure, provision is made for arbitration, and an attempt is made to provide an expeditious way of settling the matter. Then the adjudicator or the board come up against a point of law—or someone argues it is a point of law. Usually it is the employer who says that jurisdiction to deal with a particular case is lacking. The board then goes home and has to refer the matter to a super board for a decision on the point of law or jurisdiction before arbitration can proceed. Again, this seems to be an instance where one board is given far too much power. There is nothing in labour relations which sours collective bargaining so quickly as protracted delays in the settlement of grievances.

In the same way it seems to me to be objectionable in principle that when conciliation is set up as one of the choices under the act it is not the parties themselves who set out the issues the conciliator has to deal with. They may signify these issues to the board, but it is the chairman of the super board who sets out in writing the matters to be dealt with and gives them to the conciliation board to consider. I cannot see the reason for this unless the government is setting out to take away with one hand part of what it is giving with the other; unless it is fearful of the results of genuine collective bargaining and wishes to place limits upon it.

The parties should be able to determine these matters themselves and if, in the course of conciliation proceedings, they happen to think of something else rather than what they thought of earlier, they should have the right to change. Often in the course of negotiations one party starts out asking for a, b and c while the other wants d, e and f. Then somebody says: give us g and we will abandon a and b. Unless the legislation provides for flexibility to meet situations of this kind, the machinery will work less effectively than it ought to work—I suppose to say it would be unworkable would be to use too extreme a word.

Finally, perhaps the minister would explain to us why two things are necessary. First, why should it be necessary to wait for as long as two years after this machinery has been established before certification takes place. And why should it be necessary for an organization to make a choice as to which of the two processes for dealing with disputes it will choose, right at the start, before it is certified? My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said the choice was for three years. As I read the legislation it is at least for three years, because at the end of that time if the parties wish to make a change from one process to another they have to make application to the board, and it is the board which will consider the application and make the change, not the parties. Why should that be necessary?

Obviously, what the government is doing by this provision is to invite any prudent civil service organization to choose the path with the strike at the end of it. If I had anything to do with a civil service organization and I knew that if I chose the arbitration procedure nothing could be done for three years, and even after that I would have to make application to the board should I wish to make a change, I would choose the other course, the one that leads to a strike.

It seems silly to invite this kind of thing by requiring a choice so far in advance and making the choice so rigid once it has been arrived at. I hope I have not misread the legislation. If I have, I would be glad to learn that some of the fears I have expressed are not justified.

As my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre and the leader of our party, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) have stated, we greet this legislation without hesitation. I congratulate the government for bringing it in, but I hope that when we get to the committee stage hon. gentlemen opposite will make some changes which I am certain will enhance the rights which are set out for the employees, and improve the working of the legislation itself.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize first for having been away when the minister made his statement. I happened to be at supper. But I am pleased, as all members of our group, with the introduction of Bill C-170.

Civil servants, as well as members of the house, have been awaiting this bill for a long time. Several find the bill long and not very clear in parts, but I think it is precisely the right tool to make our work easier in the committee, because this bill must be used as a tool by the committee.

That is why the members of that committee will have to be chosen carefully, because it is precisely within the committee that those who will find the bill difficult to understand will be able to amend it as required.

I hope that government members appointed to the committee will be adaptable enough to discuss this bill with all the fairness called for by this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will finally enable employees to negotiate with their employer. It follows that good relations between employers and employees will be ensured through the selection of the men who will meet with employers, in the present case, members of parliament and government members. I think that if on both sides, we make every effort to remove the obstacles likely to interfere with the due process of negotiations, then we shall have achieved our purpose.

When I speak of the selection of employer representatives, I am thinking of political pressures and action. Whatever the member for Hull (Mr. Caron) may say, there is always some political action to expect and to avoid, especially in this case.

For instance, if we take members on the side of the employer who use the dues of the employees to finance a political party, I tell you in advance that something is surely going to run amiss, just as it does run amiss when—as I can prove in my area—an employee who is not for a party, as the N.D.P. for instance, has to pay his dues to his union, knowing that his dues will be used against him for the campaign. It seems to me such cases should be considered in committee. The dues of employees should no longer be allowed to help any political party, even though it may claim to protect the employees. Mr. Speaker, we are all here to protect the rights of the workingman; we are all here to protect the rights of human beings. I cannot see in the house any party in a position to claim exclusive right to defend the rights of the workers and to use that claim to justify the use of such dues.

Mr. Speaker, those are points that the members of the committee will have to take into consideration, and especially incorporate into the act in very clear terms, so that the group of employees who will negotiate with the employer are not tied down by any party whatsoever.

We will have justice only when both these negotiating groups feel absolutely free, absolutely detached from politics.

I was listening a while ago to the hon. member for Hull who said: That will eliminate patronage, there is no patronage any more. I think the member for Hull is joking when he says there is no patronage any more because in the country, like in our province, there is more patronage than ever before.

I say that everyone will have to take his responsibilities, because I consider that here the employer is a member, and the member is the man elected in the constituency. When, for instance, post office contracts are let without the knowledge of the member elected by 60 per cent of the constituency, I wonder how the hon. member for Hull would call that, if not patronage.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the remarks the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) is now making go well beyond the scope of the bill under discussion, namely Bill No. 170 or

An Act respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada.

I therefore ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to this subject matter.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, but it was because the hon. member for Hull had been allowed to deal with the matter of patronage. I think this also comes within the ambit of the debate, because I set out the required qualities of the employers group to negotiate with employees.

The dominant shortcoming here of the employers group is the evil of patronage. I am precisely saying that we need a preventive to this evil, so that it does not develop any more.

The committee will have to consider what deals with the arbitration tribunal. Well, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about arbitration I am fearful, because I find that if the bill is well thought out, if the bill is well drafted, I believe that arbitration will be lessened. I hope it disappears, because the arbitration boards we now have are not too satisfactory. That is why I rely mainly on the good work of the committee. I also hope that a member of our group will be on that committee, for we will have something to say, and we hope that this bill will serve the employees as they wish and as they deserve, and the employers as their duty commands.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to hold the house any longer, but, as I believe that perhaps this committee will have 25 or 26 members, I rely on the government's sense of responsibility to make sure that one of our group is appointed to it.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Provided he attends the sittings.

[English]

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words, because like other speakers who have preceded me I believe this is a matter which will be discussed in detail in committee, as should be the case. My main remark at this time is in answer to some of those who have said that this is a long overdue act. Perhaps, if we have found the right solution, it is long overdue. I should like to remind members of the house, however, that every one of us on both sides of the house—and let us not make of this bill a political issue—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Hear, hear.

Mr. Richard: —has for many years been working in the interest of civil servants. This accolade does not belong to any party in this house. To my knowledge all individuals at least have said the same thing; that is, on both sides of this house over many years members have said that they were interested in bettering the lot of the civil servant and in improving the relationship between employer and employee.

Over the past few years we have had bills affecting civil servants. In 1961 we had long committee hearings at which we had a very thorough representation from the associations. I should like to remind some of those who were not on that committee in those days that some of the things which are found in this bill now go much further than anything asked at that time by the associations. It was difficult at that time even to convince the associations that we really could have true collective bargaining. The word "strike" was hardly heard of. Many of the things which have been included as a result of the Glassco Commission, and some of the representations made by employee associations, the government and others since that time, are radical in relation to representations made in the past by associations of the civil service.

I am not going to discuss the provisions of the bill because this is not the time to do so. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of collective bargaining, as I was in 1961; but as to how the provisions of this bill will provide for the employer and employees the proper system for conducting proper negotiations, I am not sure. I think we should wait until we are in committee and ascertain the attitude of the interested parties. I am sure that at that time we will find that many of the clauses which I have read rather quickly will seem to be, as one hon. member mentioned, rather rigid and the procedure may be complex. I am not an expert in labour relations, but it occurs to me that at the time the bill is before the committee some changes may have to be accepted. I do not wish to delay the passage of this bill before it is referred to committee, and I will save any further remarks that I have until another time.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, at this time I am not going to comment in any detail on the remarks made by hon. members on all sides of the house. Immediately this bill passes second reading I will move that it be referred to the special joint committee, where members of the committee will have the opportunity to hear representations from all interested parties, which of course will include the existing civil service organizations.

I should like to reiterate the fact that the government, in bringing this bill to the house and referring it to committee, considers it on a completely impartial basis. Our aim as a government, as must be the aim of all hon. members of the house, is to come out of that committee with the best possible piece of legislation and the most workable piece of legislation in order to ensure that the civil servants of Canada have their full rights to collective bargaining as envisaged in the bill presented to the house and that the legislation be passed in its most workable form.

Many of the questions that have been raised are similar to questions and ideas which were brought forward by civil service associations at various stages of the hearings of the Heeney committee, and were later included in representations made to the cabinet committee in connection with this particular bill. I am sure these representations will also be placed before the special joint committee.

I hope the committee will be able to meet as soon as possible, perhaps starting next week, will hear representations, and will then move through this legislation as soon as possible in order that the legislation might be completely enacted—that is, this and the succeeding two bills—before we rise for the summer recess. I admit that I may be a little optimistic—

Mr. Knowles: When is the summer recess?

Mr. Benson: I admit that I may be a little optimistic in this regard, but it is quite important that this legislation be enacted in order that we may move this fall into collective bargaining with the public service of Canada; because after we start moving into collective bargaining with the civil service a two-year period will elapse before all the organizations will have started to negotiate agreements whereby conditions of employment, wage rates, and so on are arrived by agreement with the government, rather than through an arbitrary decision of the government.

As I have said before, I think the system in Canada which has caused us a good deal of difficulty in the past, has been one whereby arbitration has taken place before a decision has been arrived at by the parties involved or before they have even sat down and had the opportunity to speak one with the other and put forward their points of view. My only hope, and the hope of the government, in referring this particular piece of legislation to the committee is, as I have said, that we come out of the committee with a workable piece of legislation that will provide all the rights which I believe belong to the public servants of Canada, and yet will provide the basic protection of the public of Canada whom all of us represent.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the special joint committee on the public service.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Hon. E. J. Benson (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-181, respecting employment in the public service of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in developing Bill C-181, the proposed public service employment act, the government has had three basic objectives: first, to preserve and extend the merit system of appointment and promotion under the control of an independent commission responsible only to parliament; second, to provide the commission with a flexible framework of law with which to operate, one well suited to the task of staffing a modern public service with qualified personnel; and third, to relieve the commission of any responsibility for the regulation of classification, pay and conditions of employment, or for the control of personnel policy, and to remove from the law any detailed provisions relating to these matters, in order to make possible a genuine system of collective bargaining and to provide in Treasury Board a focal point of central managerial authority.

In pursuit of these objectives, which are consistent with some of the most important recommendations made by the Royal Commission on Government Organization, we have come to the conclusion that, within a wider jurisdiction, the commission should be given a more specialized role as the central staffing agency of the public service. It is for this reason that important changes of terminology are proposed: a public service employment act instead of a Civil Service Act; a public service commission instead of a Civil Service Commission.

I need say very little, Mr. Speaker, about the contribution made to the Canadian public administration by the present Civil Service Act, which has its roots in the statute passed by parliament in 1918. By the standards then prevailing, the Civil Service Act of that year was one of the most advanced measures of its kind in the world. By establishing the merit system in a clearcut manner, it provided a foundation for what has come to be recognized throughout the world as a great public service. The Civil Service Act has served this country well and I hope that steps will be taken to ensure that its fiftieth anniversary, the year after next, will be appropriately marked.

The government believes that the essence of the 1918 act has been carried forward into Bill C-181. The principle of appointment and promotion according to merit has been retained and, if anything, stated more explicitly than ever before. Provision for an independent commission has also been retained. Indeed it is hoped that in some respects the proposed measure would put the commission in a position of even greater independence than that which it now enjoys. Finally the security of the merit principle has always been linked to the authority of the commission to control appointments to and promotions within the service. No part of the bill now before the house would in any way limit or qualify that ultimate authority.

Under the proposed legislation, the merit principle of appointment and promotion would not only be retained; it would in fact be extended to large areas of public service employment to which it has never before applied as a matter of law. For example if the bill is passed by parliament, all positions occupied by prevailing rate employees and ships' officers and crews, of which there are some 30,000, will come automatically under the merit system and within the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission. I am sure that such changes will be welcomed by all those who value the non-political character and traditions of the public service.

I believe that in the preparation of Bill C-181 great care has been taken to preserve the merit principle. Let me make it clear however, that if, after careful examination and study, hon. members have any doubts about this, the government will be prepared to consider seriously any changes that may be suggested to improve the relevant provisions. We are satisfied that without the merit principle both the public service and the people of Canada would be less well served than they now are.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that under the proposed legislation, the Public Service Commission would be given discretion to vary its methods and procedures in order to meet with maximum effectiveness the needs of different departmental programs and the conditions prevailing in the labour market. A conscious effort has been made to ensure that in the independent commission there is a capacity to respond flexibly and intelligently to changing requirements and circumstances.

Among other things, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-181 would permit the Public Service Commission to delegate its powers of appointment and promotion to the deputy heads of departments and the chief executive officers of other agencies. As the public service grows in size and complexity and as its activities affect an increasing number of citizens in so many important areas of their daily lives, it becomes essential for public administrators to be given increased authority to meet the demands that are made upon them quickly, realistically and efficiently, without reference in every case to a central agency. Unless such authority is made available, public administration tends to lose touch with reality, to become simply a matter of rules and regulations. Unless such authority is made available, it becomes increasingly difficult to ensure that the public interest is properly served. Just as it is important to protect the merit principle, so it is necessary to keep in mind the advantages to be gained in terms of administrative efficiency and effectiveness by a sensible distribution of authority within the public service. It is for this reason that the proposed measures would give the commission the capacity to delegate its appointing authority to deputy heads and other chief executive officers.

The nature of delegated authority should not be misconstrued. Authority that may be delegated may also be withdrawn. Delegated authority is authority held in trust. It presumes a commitment on the part of those who accept it to use it in accordance with such direction as may be given by the delegating authority. It provides for a desirable administrative separation of those who determine policy and prescribe standards and those who apply policies and standards in the day to day administration of the public business.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the delegation of authority in no way removes responsibility from those to whom it is assigned by law. Under the proposed measure the Public Service Commission might delegate authority but it would retain responsibility for its exercise. The commission would be in a position to establish the conditions and standards governing the use of delegated authority and to monitor the exercise of such authority by departmental officers. It would also have the capacity to revoke an appointment made contrary to law or to the terms of delegation. Finally the commission would retain its traditional responsibility for the hearing and determination of appeals.

By making it possible for the commission to reduce its operational load, the proposed legislation would permit it to devote more attention to the development and maintenance of sound selection standards. It would also permit it to provide departments and Treasury Board with substantial assistance in career planning and in the administration of programs designed to make more effective use of scarce personnel resources.

Although responsibility for the effective utilization of manpower will rest with Treasury Board, Bill C-181 gives to the commission an important role in the operation of interdepartmental training and development programs and in the provision of assistance to deputy heads in the training and development of employees within departments. These are not new responsibilities. For the past decade the Civil Service Commission has made a substantial contribution to the efficiency of the public service through its training and development programs. It is hoped, however, that in its new role the commission will be able to increase the scope of existing programs and relate its activities in these areas more directly to the emerging requirements of the service.

The bill would also give the Public Service Commission broad authority to make regulations necessary to carry out and give effect to the provisions of the proposed act. This is an important change. Under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, regulations have been made by the governor in council on the recommendation of the commission. The change would not only increase the capacity of the commission to discharge its mandate; it would also serve to emphasize its independence from the government of the day.

Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this statement, I mentioned that in developing Bill C-181 the government pursued a number of objectives, one of which was to leave rates of pay and conditions of employment outside the jurisdiction of the commission and beyond the detailed regulation of statute law, in order to permit the processes of collective bargaining to operate with a minimum of confusion and delay. I will have more to say about this when I come to Bill C-182, to which I hope we will be able to move when the debate on this measure is completed.

Mr. Speaker, in commenting upon the essential characteristics of Bill C-181 and in contrasting it with the Civil Service Act I have emphasized the very important responsibilities of the proposed Public Service Commission, responsibilities which, although reduced in some areas, would be significantly increased in others. Let there be no doubt in the minds of hon. members about the importance the government attaches to the role of the Public Service Commission. The quality of the services provided by the government to Canadians in all walks of life will depend in no small degree on the success of the commission in staffing the public service with competent and qualified personnel. For this reason the legislation before us is of great importance. I know it will receive careful examination and study when it is referred to the joint committee which has been set up for the purpose of looking at these three particular bills.

Mr. Speaker, a question has been raised about the long-standing prohibition of political activity of a partisan nature by public servants. Except for one or two technical amendments, the provisions relating to this matter in Bill C-181 are the same as in the present Civil Service Act. In other words, no substantive changes have been made. However, the government is aware that since the original statutory prohibition was written into law there have been changes in the size and character of the public service and in public attitudes toward political activity. It is aware also of the fact that in a number of jurisdictions both in Canada and elsewhere steps have been taken to relax the traditional form of prohibition and to make it possible for certain types of public servants to take part in political activities. It may be that we should be considering some change here.

The government does not advocate change, but it has an open mind on the subject. The government felt that in presenting the legislation it should not change this particular clause in the bill; but if there was a consensus of agreement within the committee consisting of all parties represented in the House of Commons, then the government would be open to considering the advisability of making such a change in the proposed legislation. And, of course, if the change were made in Bill C-181, changes would have to be made in the other pieces of legislation which are closely related to it.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, whatever political party may sit to your right, good government in this country cannot be achieved without a public service of the highest competence and proficiency, of genuine dedication and of unchallenged integrity. Such a public service Canada has experienced, due in large measure to the merit system initiated under the Civil Service Act of 1918, which I believe to be a landmark of Canadian history for which we are indebted to the wisdom and statescraft of Sir Robert Borden.

The tradition of this house, since 1918 at least, has been that public service problems are discussed objectively and devoid of political partisanship. To that tradition I intend to be true in what I shall say tonight.

This parliament, sir, has no task so basic, or in my view so fundamental, as to assure that public service employment now and in the future shall be an attractive and rewarding career for the very best young Canadians. With the increasing involvement of government in every aspect of the daily life of the individual, the public service must be composed, I submit, of the very best—not the second best but the very best—and ablest of our young Canadians recruited for service to their nation. If we are to recruit such young Canadians we must provide rewards which are genuine and real. Service to the state must be considered the highest form of service and those who pursue a public service career must be given the confidence that they will not be led down blind alleys; that they will not have their potential for advancement and promotion restricted by red tape; that they will not have their initiative blighted by needless, frustrating administrative techniques; and that they will not have their leadership qualities lost in the giant mechanism of an inhumane bureaucracy.

The very drastic change which this bill represents from the familiar system of personnel management now in vogue, and in vogue since the Civil Service Act of 1918, has been set forth in the minister's opening statement tonight. I think that members of the house and members of public service should be made aware of the convulsive eruptions in established patterns which will result from the passage of this bill and its two companion bills. In discussing the previous bill I have already expressed the view that the sweeping nature of the proposed changes has not been fully understood among the intelligent rank and file of the public service.

Sir, it is a significant fact that since its reconstitution in 1918 the Civil Service Commission has been the guardian of the merit system, responsible for appointments and promotions, but responsible as well for classification, establishment, standards and grades. It has been responsible further for recommendations as to salary and wage levels.

In effect, it has had a threefold role. Now, let it be clearly understood by the house, the new Public Service Commission will be shorn of two of these three roles or functions. Classification and establishment becomes exclusively a Treasury Board function, intended to be delegated as a general rule to deputy heads. In the jargon of the day, if I may so describe it, these allegedly are managerial functions to be now determined at the managerial level. The protection of an independent commission has been removed and the classification or the grade of an individual is placed squarely under the responsibility and jurisdiction of a political board, the Treasury Board, and of deputy ministers who, however non-political they may be, report after all to ministers who cannot be described as non-political.

Let this house remember, sir, that classification can be just as important as a salary increase. In the civil service those of us from Ottawa know that there is an old practice known as "classification creeping", which means giving a boost to an employee by reclassification of his position as opposed to promotion or salary increase.

The commission has heretofore been the guardian against abuse in this respect. Hereafter, however, the commission will be eliminated from this area and the only protection against political, partisan and bureaucratic influences at work in a department will be the vigilance of the collective bargaining agents under the companion public service staff relations bill. Will the bargaining agents be either powerful enough or vigilant enough to protect against abuses in classification and establishment? They have no direct authority. Can they wield an indirect club?

I want to be clear on this, Mr. Speaker. The status and role of the old Civil Service Commission is being wholly abandoned in this field. Deputy ministers vulnerable to political pressures, and Treasury Board, which has a most competent and dedicated staff with a leading public servant as its secretary, but which, after all consists wholly of partisan politicians, will be taking the final decision and will have responsibility in this sensitive area.

I wonder what would happen if the golden, persuasive powers of, shall we say, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) were exercised upon his under secretary to induce the latter to recommend that "dear old Bill" be reclassified from grade 3 to grade 5. We know, of course, that the present Secretary of State for External Affairs would never do it. In his present portfolio, and previously as minister of national health and welfare, his statesmanlike qualities have completely subdued any innate partisanship he may have, even though not all his departmental officials have recognized his political objectivity. But consider, sir, if you will, what some less enlightened colleague or some successor might do with this open invitation to use reclassification as an instrument of political patronage.

As I have said, over the years the Civil Service Commission has been the protector against politicians using classifications as a political instrument. Is there to be a guardian of political purity in the future? Can the bargaining agents be that guardian? I do not know, but I confess that I have some worry that there is a thin wedge of what might become a very large wedge being inserted.

When the commission was in control of classification there was a central body which could achieve relative uniformity in grades across the whole public service. Now, if the functions to be vested in treasury board relating to classification are to be delegated as a general rule—and I think this is the plan—to deputy ministers, what assurance have we that a hodge-podge will not be the result. May it not be that in one department a job is done by an employee of one grade whereas in other departments the grade of the person doing equivalent work will be two or three grades higher or lower. Will the bargaining agents be a sufficient guard against empire building in one department which may be contrasted with rigid frugality in another. I think this is one of the aspects upon which the special committee will have to assure itself.

Now, sir, I recognize basically these proposals stem from the Glassco report. It has become accepted practice to preach that a new era of governmental efficiency will result from a divorce of so-called management functions from recruitment and promotion. At this stage, all I say is count me as dubitant. I believe too many amateurs on royal commissions have been playing around in the professional field of public administration. I am not prepared to accept their amateur preaching as necessarily gospel. At this late hour of the evening, I confess I am getting a little tired of royal commissions general.

The third field in which the present Civil Service Commission has responsibility at the present time is pay determination. This is to be, hereafter, the subject of collective bargaining. I say nothing further at this time on that subject except to welcome most heartily the decision of the government to retain the functions of the Pay Research Bureau. The point I want to make abundantly clear is that the new Public Service Commission will be a body very different indeed in authority and in jurisdiction from the existing Civil Service Commission. It will be shorn of two of the present three major functions, and I am not positive that this represents progress. At least in the field of classification, it may well involve serious retrogression.

One of the by-products of the trifurcation—this is a word that has come into popular use in this house lately—of civil service procedures, is that discipline and dismissals are dispersed to three separate bodies. I believe that confusion will be the inevitable result. In my opinion, it is unrealistic to suggest that dismissal for incompetence is for the Civil Service Commission, whereas dismissal for misconduct or breach of discipline is for Treasury Board and dismissal for matters affecting the safety and security of the nation is for the governor in council. The appeal procedures are to be different for each type of case. Indeed, I think it would take a Philadelphia lawyer, and Your Honour and I are not in that category, to work his way through the three bills to determine just what is the appeal procedure.

The provision for suspension or dismissal in the interests of the safety or security of Canada or any state allied or associated with Canada, and for review of such suspension or dismissal is little more than window dressing in this bill. An order of suspension or dismissal made by the governor in council under the new bill—I think perhaps I might be now confusing in my mind this new bill now under discussion with one we will be discussing immediately afterwards—is said to be conclusive proof of the matters stated therein in relation to security or safety. Now, of what value in those circumstances is any review or appeal? Recite whatever the governor in council wants to recite, and the proof of the recital is conclusive. Under those circumstances, I think any review is a sham and a delusion. I think these sections of these other two bills will need much additional thought after the report of Mr. Justice Wells in the Spencer matter, and perhaps might be subject to review again at a later date when the report of the proposed new commission on security procedures is available.

In my view, sir, the appeal procedures generally proposed under this bill are primitive and unsatisfactory. They are much less satisfactory than under the present act. There is no provision made in this bill for an employee appealing to be represented at the inquiry. It may be argued that the Bill of Rights gives everyone the right to counsel. Frequently, however on civil service appeals, representation by a staff association officer or by a friend may be equally effective, if not more effective, than by a member of our profession. It pains me to say this, but it is a fact. Unlike the old act, there is no provision for this in the new bill.

Equally bad is the fact that the nature of the inquiry and investigation is left in an atmosphere vague and unclear. If there are to be appeals, and obviously there must be, then let them be genuine appeals to impartial and independent tribunals. I venture to draw attention to the provisions of Bill No. C-63, which I have on the order paper but which regrettably is unlikely to be reached for debate at this session. This bill would establish a genuine appeal, and proper procedures before an appeal panel. I commend it tonight to the minister as I shall to the special committee. I say that a simple inquiry or investigation by the very body appealed from is not an appeal at all. It is just a sop and a sham. The only way to assure justice is to establish appeal panels of impartial persons outside the commission itself.

Now, the principles established by the government for adjudication of grievances, which would include dismissal for misconduct or for breach of discipline, as I have said are much to be preferred to the inadequate procedures provided in this bill for appeals from dismissal for incompetence, which incidentally is no longer defined, or for appeals in closed competitions. I think these provisions of the bill must be greatly strengthened, and I will submit that Bill No. C-63 shows the correct approach. I believe as well that the time has arrived to allow, under proper safeguards, at least a limited right of appeal in open competitions. It is in this field that I receive more complaints than any other, and some measure of relief to satisfy the complaints of unsuccessful applicants appears to me to be desirable now.

The minister has mentioned what is one of the most significant features of the bill, that is the proposal to bring under the ordinary procedures of selection, appointment and promotion, the prevailing rates employees, ships crews and officers. Personally, I endorse this proposal fully, and what I hope will be the complete abandonment of political patronage in this field. For many years I have been convinced that the continuation of patronage in the field of the trades and of ordinary labour is a blot upon our public personnel administration. I am sure that not all of our colleagues on either side of this house share that view. I do not profess to speak for colleagues on my own side in this respect. There are members on both sides of the house who look upon the existence and continuation of patronage in the prevailing rates field as the bedrock of political organization. They take the attitude which one J. H. Price did in a letter to Robert Baldwin back on February 6, 1943, and I quote:

> Patronage is power; our men won the victory, and they are entitled to prize money.

Business of the House

• (10:00 p.m.)

Well, sir, after having been responsible for probably as many patronage appointments as any other member present in this house, I am inclined to believe that patronage for a politician is a snare and a delusion. In my previous term I saw over 16,000 people from the Ottawa area seeking patronage employment, and I tell you that takes some doing. I think probably only the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) has ever equalled that. Few of us in this chamber have any training in personnel recruitment or management and I doubt whether the test of a good member of parliament should be his ability in this field. Personally, I welcome the new legislative proposal.

But I would give this warning: The techniques of examination and selection for the prevailing rates groups must not be too rigid or inflexible. It is unlikely they can be modelled upon the existing civil service examination procedure. Humanity and compassion must not be removed from the process of selection applicable to this type of employee. Some of the best prevailing rates employees today could never have passed any type of conventional examination. Among widows, long removed from the labour market, among those who have suffered major illnesses or other reverses in life, there will be found many wonderful people with the will and the incentive to succeed in this type of employment and I believe it is imperative that they should not be eliminated by standard tests or examinations designed for the youngsters just out of school.

Yes, wisdom, compassion and humanity must play a full part in the selection process. These were among the factors which politicians brought to their recommendations and they are factors which I believe must be continued in the new selection process.

But perhaps for the sake of compassion, wisdom and humanity I should call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we shall complete the second reading stage of this bill and bring forward item 59 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill C-182, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act. We shall then proceed to estimates for the rest of the week, and we shall start off with the Department of Industry, the Department of Defence Production, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, the Privy Council, Legislation, Veterans Affairs and Labour in that order. I reserve the right to change the order later in the week if necessary.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

TELEVISION—QUEBEC—USE OF TELEPHONE COMPANY FACILITIES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, several times, but in vain, I have asked the incumbent Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) or her predecessors to put an end to the injustice being suffered by the people of Chibougamau and Chapais concerning television service.

I am told, as the taxpayers of those two cities are told, that the funds voted to the C.B.C. for service extension are inadequate and that they will have to wait.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Northern Quebec Telephone Company Ltd. which has a microwave service between Grand Remous, Val d'Or, Rouyn and Chibougamau via Senneterre, and between Chibougamau and Notre Dame de la Doré, in Lake St. John, has offered its facilities to the C.B.C. to carry the television signal to Chibougamau-Chapais via Rouyn or Lake St. John.

That is why on May 20 last I asked the Secretary of State whether this offer had been considered and whether a decision had been taken on this matter. I know that the people of Chibougamau-Chapais are anxious to know what the intentions of the government are as regards this new possibility.

I believe that it would now cost little to the C.B.C. to use private enterprise, to co-operate with it to ensure a long-sought and wanted service to the people of Chibougamau-Chapais, a service to which they are entitled.

The Secretary of State has no more excuses and I hope that the citizens of Chibougamau-Chapais will be satisfied with the answer she will give tonight and I must point out that the only satisfactory answer will be the assurance that they will soon have the benefit of free television service, as is the case elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can give satisfaction, on behalf of the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) and of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to the population of Chibougamau-Chapais. Personally, I was ready a month ago to give the same answer to the hon. member, who had put the question last March.

The question of the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, raises this whole issue of the extension of television services in Canada.

Although no country in the world, except our United States neighbours, has more television and radio broadcasting stations, on the basis of population, than Canada, there are unfortunately—and the Secretary of State as well as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation realize this and work closely on this—remote areas which are not yet served or are inadequately served by this excellent education medium, that is television. One of these areas is that which interests the hon. member for Chapleau, namely Chibougamau-Chapais.

The hon. member asked on March 29 last and again on May 20 whether the Secretary of State had received an offer from the Northern Quebec Telephone Company Limited to provide broadcasting facilities for television service in the area of Chibougamau-Chapais, and what consideration she had given to this offer.

I shall answer to the hon. member that the minister has indeed received such an offer from the Northern Quebec Telephone Company Limited and that she referred it—as was in order—to the C.B.C. for consideration.

The minister, who acts only as an intermediary, cannot, as the hon. member knows, prepare radio and television development and extension programs for the C.B.C.

Mr. Laprise: She can recommend passage of the estimates though.

Mr. Béchard: Let it suffice to refer the hon. member to the speech delivered in this house by the Secretary of State, upon consideration of her estimates on March 9, 1966, as recorded on page 2454 of Hansard. In view of the time at my disposal, I will not read the words of the Secretary of State, but I believe the hon. member can refer to them.

EDUCATION—INQUIRY AS TO ABOLITION OF UNIVERSITY FEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, May 24, as recorded in Hansard at page 5424, I put this question to the Prime Minister:

> In view of the statement made on Friday night—

The reference was to Friday night, May 20.

> —in an address by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to the effect that in Canada we are getting closer to the abolition of tuition fees in universities, will the Prime Minister say what steps the government is taking in this direction?

As Your Honour will recall, there were a number of questions on education that day and with your usual impartiality you treated all of them alike, and so this one got posted for the first available adjournment motion, namely tonight.

My question was based on a speech made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), the text of which he was good enough to make available to us. But I also noticed a very good report of his speech in the Montreal Star of May 21, and I should like to quote two or three portions from the report in the Montreal Star:

> The day "is not far off" when federal and provincial government officials will have to discuss with Canada's universities the abolition of tuition fees, health minister MacEachen said last night.
> • (10:10 p.m.)

Later on in the report I note this:

> This being so, can we continue providing free education in that segment of the educational system which only lays the basic foundation for a space-age career, while maintaining the financial barriers in the higher education levels from which an increasingly greater percentage of our work force must come?

Then later these words:

> Education is a responsibility of the provinces, Mr. MacEachen said. But the Federal Government had a responsibility to see that the "privilege" of higher education is transformed into "a right."

That indeed was a significant statement made by the minister with which I am sure all of us agree. He went on:

> With the co-operation and understanding of all concerned, I think it will be possible for the Federal Government to fulfil its national obligations without eroding provincial prerogatives and without transgressing on academic freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed reading the speech and I was pleased to see it so well reported in the Montreal Star. The sentiments were noble. What is the federal government doing about them?

Mr. P.-E. Trudeau (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some bewilderment to the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He was asking a question of the Prime Minister concerning a statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I listened with interest to the statement, as reported by the hon. member, but I did not see with much clarity in what way the minister intended to exercise this federal government's intention, as expressed by him.

We all know that education primarily is the responsibility of the provinces. I should say that is is totally the responsibility of the provinces, except in very limited cases concerning protection of certain minority rights. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is perfectly right in asking this kind of a question. Personally I should like to see him ask it of the minister who made the statement rather than of the Prime Minister.

I am in total agreement with the people who feel that a technological society such as we have in Canada should lend great importance to the area of education, and certainly the state should want to see that education becomes as universal as possible. The state, however, in this circumstance is the provincial state. The federal government, by way of bursaries and other aids to individuals, certainly can help the educational process; but stated in the way the hon. member asked the question, in other words in the way of acting towards the abolition of fees, this certainly is not a matter which is within federal jurisdiction. The federal government cannot in any way legislate toward the abolition of fees.

Mr. Knowles: Then what did the minister mean?

Mr. Trudeau: I am asking myself, sir, what the minister meant. Obviously he had in mind some way of helping, probably through bursaries, grants or loans to individuals engaged in the educational process. If by this he means in effect that fees in some way will be erased, then I am satisfied. If he means more than this, then I am not satisfied. I feel that perhaps the minister was hoping the day would come when all parties in government in Canada would look at section 93 of the B.N.A. Act concerning education to see whether in some respects perhaps a constitutional amendment is required. But on this, of course, the New Democratic party also would have to ask its own supporters in Quebec what they meant because, as the hon. member knows, their view on this is somewhat at variance with the views expressed in other parts of Canada. Reform of any section of the constitution cannot be obtained without complete agreement.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE—GRANTS FOR RECREATION CENTRES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 27, I asked the following question:

> Can consideration be given by the Department of National Health and Welfare to recommending grants for the construction of social and recreational centres for senior citizens equal in amount to grants by any province under an act of the legislature for such purpose?

The reason I asked this question was that at the present time the senior citizens club at Brantford, Ontario, is starting out on a campaign to raise funds to build a social and recreational centre for senior citizens of Brantford. The land has already been purchased. It is a very desirable piece of property, located very close to the centre of the municipality of the city of Brantford. I believe the club should be congratulated on the site it has chosen for this centre.

It is hoped that a start will be made on the building for the new social and recreational centre very shortly. An architect has been employed, the plans have been drawn for the new centre, and there is no doubt that a building of this kind is greatly to be desired and would be an excellent thing for all senior citizens of Brantford and vicinity who would desire to make use of such a centre.

For the information of the house I would point out that I have been in contact with various officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare and have been told that there is no basis for making a grant of this nature for the construction of a social and recreational centre for senior citizens. I can scarcely believe this to be true. However, Mr. Speaker, I do know that the federal government is being asked for grants for all sorts of beneficial projects from one end of Canada to the other and it is very difficult to start allocating money in this way.

At the same time I should like to point out that the municipality of the city of Brantford has agreed to pay 20 per cent of the cost of construction of this building and the province of Ontario has agreed to pay 30 per cent of the cost of construction. All I am asking is that the federal government agree to pay 30 per cent of such cost in order to match the provincial grant. The provincial grant is made possible under the elderly persons social and recreational centres act of Ontario, 1961-62 revised statutes of Ontario, chapter

37. Under this act the province of Ontario, as I have said, has agreed to pay 30 per cent of the cost. Under the act the province will not make this grant unless the municipality has agreed to pay 20 per cent of the cost. This has been done, and it becomes a question of whether the federal government will see fit to make a grant in this regard.

I know that such a centre would benefit large numbers of senior citizens in my constituency. It would be for their general health and well-being, and there is nothing I would like to see happen more than a contribution made by the federal government. I am sure the senior citizens of my constituency would benefit substantially by such a grant.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest and concern to the remarks made by the hon. member and I must say that in my constituency a similar home is being built, so I share his concern in this most important matter. However, since the inception of the fitness and amateur sports program in 1962 there have been many inquiries and requests for financial assistance toward the construction of sports facilities for the aged, for municipalities, schools and colleges across the country. While all these requests have been considered and given the utmost attention by the officials of the department and the government, it has been impossible to accept them because of the limited funds made available to the advisory council which was set up under the authority of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act. While we agree that there is a definite need for this type of assistance in Canada, regretfully it is impossible to announce any change in the policy of the government at this time.

I want to assure the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown), however, that we will continue to look at this whole question in a sympathetic manner with the hope that action along the lines he suggests may be taken in the not too distant future.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry) presented the third report of the standing committee on veterans affairs in both French and English.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PENALTY FOR CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Question No. 1,141—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the Minister of Justice, since April 23, 1963, received representations requesting amendments to the Criminal Code to prohibit a person convicted of an offence related to cruelty to animals from owning or otherwise possessing animals for a stated period?

2. If so, when and from what organizations were such representations received?

3. What action has been taken or is proposed to be taken in respect of such representations?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): 1. Yes.

2. April 29, 1963, from the Ontario Humane Society.

3. The representations are under study in connection with the next Criminal Code amendment bill.

CONTRACTS WITH EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS

Question No. 1,164—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Does Eastern Provincial Airways at present hold any contracts for service to the government of Canada, other than with the Post Office Department?

2. If so, what services do these contracts cover?

3. What is the duration of each such contract?

4. What equipment, by designated type, is being used in any such contracts and at what tariff schedules?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by all departments as follows:

1. No.

2, 3 and 4. Not applicable.

PROTECTION OF LABORATORY ANIMALS

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Chatterton:

1. Did the Minister of Justice in 1963 receive a brief from the council for the protection of laboratory animals and, if so, to whom was the brief, or the subject matter of the brief, referred?

2. What detailed action has been taken by the government with regard to this brief?

3. Were representatives of the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies appointed to any governmental committee dealing with this brief and, if not, for what reason?

4. Were representatives of the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies permitted to attend, as observers, any governmental committee dealing with this brief and, if not, for what reason?

5. Is the government giving consideration to the introduction of legislation dealing with the subject matter of this brief?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): So far as the Department of Justice is concerned:

1. The Minister of Justice received a submission from the council for laboratory animals under date of July 22, 1963.

2. The Minister of Justice referred the submission to the Minister of National Health and Welfare under date of July 25, 1963.

3 and 4. No such committee was set up in the Department of Justice.

5. The Department of Justice is not considering such legislation.

U.K. LEGISLATION APPLICABLE TO CANADA

Question No. 1,242—Mr. Allard:

Are there any enactments of the parliament of the United Kingdom which by their express terms still apply to Canada and, if so, what are they?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): This question seeks a legal opinion, which it is not the practice to give to the house.

Questions

[English]

TARIFF CHANGES RESPECTING SHIPPING CONTAINERS

Question No. 1,250—Mr. Orlikow:

Was a recommendation made in the report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the acquisition by Bathurst Power and Paper Company Limited of Wilson Boxes, Limited, in 1962, that "appropriate tariff changes be made to restore competitive conditions in the supply of containerboard and in the supply of shipping containers" and, if so, is the government considering implementation of that recommendation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes, the restrictive trade practices commission did make a recommendation along these lines. This recommendation, together with other recommendations which have been made by the commission on tariff matters, is being studied in connection with international trade negotiations.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Question No. 1,261—Mr. Allard:

1. Must foreigners wishing to make investments in Canada, apply to any federal agency and agree to certain conditions and, if so, what are these conditions?

2. Must foreigners wishing to recover investments and profits they have made in Canada submit to certain conditions and, if so, what are these withdrawal conditions?

3. Does the federal government or any of its agencies have advertising or recruitment offices for the promotion of foreign investment in Canada and, if so, in what countries?

4. Is there a liaison or information service between the federal and provincial governments concerning foreign investments in Canada?

5. Does the federal government or its agencies direct foreign investments to the various regions of Canada and if so, what standards does it apply in such direction?

6. What conditions, if any, should be met by the city of Sherbrooke, Quebec, in order to favour foreign investment within its limits?

7. From what countries were investments made in Canada in 1964 and 1965 and how were they distributed between the provinces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance):

1. No.

2. No, provided they have complied with the Canadian tax laws prior to withdrawal.

3. No. However, the area development agency of the Department of Industry does advertise from time to time to inform foreign investors of its program. The trade commissioners of the Department of Trade and Commerce posted abroad forward inquiries respecting foreign investment in Canada to the federal Department of Industry.

[Mr. Cardin.]

4. Any general inquiries from foreign investors are referred to the various provincial industry departments. If an inquiry relates to a particular province, or to particular provinces, then such provinces only are advised of the inquiry.

5. No. The federal Department of Industry will provide interested parties with the locations of the designated areas under the area development program and with the names and addresses of provincial, municipal or regional officials to be contacted.

6. The area development agency of the Department of Industry, which is actively engaged in assisting communities to launch programs of industrial development and promotion, does not differentiate between domestic and foreign investment. Decisions by domestic as well as foreign investors whether or not to locate at a specific site do appear to be influenced very substantially by the quality and the relative cost of municipal services and utilities available.

7. Gross foreign direct investment in Canada in 1964 and 1965 was as follows:

	1964	1965
	(millions of dollars)
United States	195
United Kingdom	31
Other sterling area countries	—2	not
Other OECD countries in Europe	37	yet available
All other countries	—6
Totals	255	390

Net investment flows to Canada for portfolio investment in Canadian securities during these years were as follows:

United States	776	630
United Kingdom	—46	—55
Other sterling area countries	—
Other OECD countries in Europe	10	2
All other countries	5
Totals	745	577

Other types of foreign investment flows are covered in the DBS publications 67-0011, Quarterly Estimate of the Canadian Balance of Payments and, 67-002 Sales and Purchases of Securities Between Canada and Other Countries.

Provincial distribution of the ultimate disposition of these inflows is not available for either year.

*CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT RESPECTING CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Question No. 1,280—Mr. Irvine:

1. Since April 8, 1963, has any brief or submission been presented by the Ontario Humane Society to the federal justice department or any other department requesting amendments to the criminal code which would give magistrates the power to prohibit, for specific periods of time, the keeping or harbouring of animals by any person or persons who have been found guilty of cruelty to animals?

2. If so (a) on what date was the first such brief or representation made (b) have any subsequent briefs or representations been made on this subject (c) what action is contemplated by the department regarding these briefs or representations?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): 1. Yes.

2. (a) April 29, 1963, (b) subsequent representations on this subject have been received from various societies and individuals endorsing the views of the Ontario Humane Society, (c) the representations are under study in connection with the next Criminal Code amendment bill.

A. G. HEAKES—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING MAIL DELIVERY

Question No. 1,383—Mr. Langlois (Mégantic):

1. Has Mr. A. G. Heakes been unable to obtain an accurate reply to his inquiries into his mail to his mother, Mrs. W. A. Heakes, on or about December 1, 1965 and filed under the file numbers 8A-64, 278, 79-80 and, if so, for what reason?

2. Was Mr. Heakes unable to obtain any answer to the said inquiries until after he had complained to the Postmaster General on February 17, 1966 and, if so, for what reason?

3. Was it found necessary to reopen the investigation into this matter after Mr. Heakes had complained to the Postmaster General that the reply to the said inquiries from Mr. Durocher, district director of postal services, dated February 21, 1966, was false and, if so, for what reason?

4. Was the same investigation made in connection with (a) Peter T. Marsh, at the University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon (b) Henry H. Marsh, Whitehorse, Yukon (c) Mrs. P. J. Rowsell, 1204 Clyde, Ottawa?

5. What is now happening and what has happened to the mail addressed by Mr. Heakes to his mother at her last known address, 17 Glebe Road, Toronto?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Côté (Postmaster General): 1. No. The reply was as accurate as possible in the light of the information provided by Mr. Heakes, who had requested an inquiry respecting letters sent to his mother between December 1964 and November 1965 to three different addresses in the Toronto area. Mrs. Heakes was not residing at any of the given addresses and, since the letters in question had not been sent by registered mail, there was no record of their handling.

2. No. The District Director of Postal Service, Montreal, replied to Mr. Heakes on 21st February which was before it was possible to take action on his letter of 17th February. Initial inquiry had been instituted by Mr. Heakes at Postal Station "B" Montreal, where inquiry forms were completed and forwarded to the office of the District Director for attention. Thus, there was no correspondence exchanged at the time.

3. Investigation was re-opened by request of Mr. Heakes, who alleged that he had been given false information. This charge appears to have been based upon the fact that he was not informed that changes of address had been filed with the Post Office in Toronto, calling for redirection of mail for Mrs. Heakes to an address in Saskatoon. Withholding of this information was in accordance with regulations whereby, for obvious reasons, the addresses of postal patrons cannot be divulged. It was not known at the time that Mrs. Heakes had not actually left the Toronto area.

4. (a) Yes. Investigation has revealed that changes of address had been filed by Dr. Peter T. Marsh, of the University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, on the basis of a General Power of Attorney, respecting Mrs. Heakes' affairs, which was executed in Toronto in December 1964. (b) and (c) No. These names did not come up in the course of inquiry.

5. Any mail addressed to Mrs. Heakes at 17 Glebe Road, Toronto, would now be delivered there. Effective 29th November 1965, mail was forwarded to Saskatoon on the basis of a change of address filed by Dr. Marsh who began to return it to Toronto during the month of February 1966 leading to the conclusion that redirection was no longer desired. Verbal confirmation of this was subsequently obtained from Dr. Marsh.

ARDA PROJECTS, CARLETON CONSTITUENCY, ONT.

Question No. 1,431—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Have any projects been approved under ARDA affecting the electoral district of Carleton since April 22, 1963?

2. If so (a) what are they (b) what was the objective of each (c) what was the cost of each?

3. Are there any projects affecting this electoral district now under consideration?

Questions

4. If so (a) what are they (b) what is the objective of each (c) what is the estimated cost of each?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. Yes.

2. (1) Eastern Ontario Rural Development Study; This project covers the 11 eastern counties of Ontario and is primarily an economic evaluation of farm size, land capability, and mode of farming with the objective of establishing the requirements for the formation of viable farm units. The total cost of this project is estimated at $36,100, shared equally between federal ARDA and the province. (2) Drainage Assistance in eastern Ontario; There are 966,000 acres of land in the 11 counties of eastern Ontario which are poorly drained but which have a high capability for agriculture. A portion of this land is within Carleton county. During the next five years federal ARDA will provide one third of the funds for a $1,500,000 program to provide outlet drainage ditches. The balance of cost will be paid equally by the province and the municipalities involved. (3) Farm Pond Assistance Program; This provincial wide program is designed to increase farm productivity by supplementing farm water supply for livestock, spraying, and irrigation. During the next two years federal ARDA will contribute one quarter of the $700,000 to be expended; the provincial contribution will also be one quarter while the local contribution will be one half. The total federal provincial contribution may not exceed $500 for any one pond per 100 acres of land or fraction thereof. (4) The Canada Land Inventory; This $18,000,000 nation-wide survey will assess land capabilities for agriculture, forestry, recreation and wildlife. In addition, certain socio-economic factors will be evaluated. The work is probably more advanced in eastern Ontario than any other region of Canada. At the present time, the capabilities for agriculture and forestry and the present land use have been mapped in the eleven eastern counties. Work on the wildlife and recreation sectors of the inventory is presently underway in the same area. Federal ARDA will assume the entire cost of the inventory.

3. Yes.

4. The details of projects are not yet resolved and are under discussion with the province of Ontario.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

DRAINAGE OF AGRICULTURAL LAND ON INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 1,435—Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West):

Does the government intend to extend its co-operation with the province of Ontario, through ARDA, to a program of drainage of agricultural land on Indian reserves in the province?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): The Agricultural and Rural Development Act and the rural development agreement entered into by the province of Ontario and the federal government pursuant to that Act, provides that ARDA may be applied to Indian lands and Indian people. The government may then extend its co-operation to a program of drainage of agricultural land on Indian reserves if it is requested by the province.

REPORT ON BAY OF FUNDY TIDES

Question No. 1,455—Mr. Coates:

When is a report expected on the study at present being carried out by the Atlantic Development Board into the feasibility of harnessing the Bay of Fundy tides from a power point of view?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

The report on subsurface investigations in the Minas basin area for a possible tidal power site has been received. Previous to this study, preliminary investigations had been carried out of foundation conditions in the Shepody Bay-Cumberland Basin area.

REQUEST FROM B.C. FOR ADDITIONAL VOCATIONAL FUNDS

Question No. 1,483—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

1. Has the federal government been asked by the government of British Columbia to make additional funds available under the 75-25 formula so that additional vocational facilities can be provided?

2. If so, what was the government's response?

3. Has the Vancouver school board offered assistance to those in charge of the manpower development program and the war on poverty program?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Prime Minister's office and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration as follows:

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. No.

TOWN OF OROMOCTO

Question No. 1,497—Mr. MacRae:

In connection with the development of the town of Oromocto (a) how much did the government pay per acre for land in the townsite area (b) how many lots have been laid out per acre (c) what is the average cost of servicing an acre of land or each lot (d) is it a basic principle of the development corporation to make a profit from the sale of the lots?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) $270 per acre (b) Approximately 2.5 lots per acre including roads, rights of way and park areas; (c) Approximately $2,659 per lot. (d) No.

COST OF CANADIAN NATO BASES

Question No. 1,505—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, was the cost of Canadian military bases and personnel in France since their establishment under NATO?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): The capital costs, paid by the Canadian government, of fixed facilities at Canadian bases in France were as follows:

Marville	$ 8,744,000
Grostenquin	8,940,000
Metz	2,270,000
Total	$19,954,000

These figures do not include the costs of facilities provided by the commonly financed NATO common infrastructure program. The Canadian base at Grostenquin was closed and turned over to the French authorities at the end of 1964.

The personnel, operation and maintenance costs of the Canadian bases in France since they were first established are estimated at $482,000,000. These costs include military and civilian personnel costs, equipment operation costs, station support costs and other operating and maintenance costs of the headquarters, 1 air division (Metz), No. 1 wing (Marville), and No. 2 wing (Grostenquin).

Questions

CONSTRUCTION OF TECHNOLOGY INSTITUTE, SEPT-ÎLES, QUE.

Question No. 1,514—Mr. Blouin:

In the context of the federal-provincial program to help technical and vocational training institutes, did the federal government pay part of the cost of construction of the institute of technology at Sept-Îles, Quebec, during the year 1964 or 1965, in accordance with an agreement with the government of Quebec?

POST OFFICE BUILDING, INWOOD, MAN.

Question No. 1525—Mr. Stefanson:

Has the government any plans to build a post office at Inwood, Manitoba and, if so (a) has land been purchased (b) when will this project be proceeded with?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): No. The post office at Inwood, Manitoba is in the category of offices where the postmaster is normally responsible for the provision of suitable accommodation as a condition of employment. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for York South, to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the labour dispute at Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec between the Shipping Federation of Canada and the international longshoremen's association, and its serious effects upon the economy of the country.

I would like an opportunity to make some remarks regarding the urgency of this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member to submit remarks not about the urgency of the matter but about urgency of debate of the matter.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I shall confine my remarks to the urgency of debate at this time. It is not necessary to point out to the house the widespread and harmful effects which a continuation of this labour dispute can have on the economy, the serious effect which it will have on the export of our goods and particularly grain shipments, which to a very large extent determines the deliveries which prairie farmers can make of their wheat.

The fact that there has been violence on the waterfront during the last 24 hours is something which I think causes great concern. We in this party do not for one moment condone that violence, but we suggest that the quickest way to bring an end to such violence is to find a speedy solution to the dispute.

We feel that a discussion in the house today will provide an opportunity for full discussion of the facts upon which the dispute is based. The house has not had an opportunity, other than by some fragmentary answers given by the Minister of Labour, to learn what is the real cause of the labour dispute and what are the points at issue. It seems only fair to both sides and to the public that these facts should be known and should be fully discussed in the hope that a solution can be reached.

I should like to point out that no other opportunity presents itself at this time to discuss this very important matter. We had hoped that the estimates of the Department of Labour would have been before the house today; had that taken place it would not be necessary to raise this matter now. If the government decides to bring down the labour estimates this would obviate the necessity to proceed with this motion, but if there is no other opportunity it seems to us this matter ought to be discussed now.

As hon. members know, the labour estimates have been put at the end of the long list of departmental estimates announced by the Minister of Public Works last evening. It is unlikely that those estimates will be discussed before another ten days or two weeks. That is too long to wait before discussing a matter which is of such pressing importance and which could have such devastating consequences for the Canadian economy. For that reason we feel debate is urgent at this time in order that a full statement can be made by the Minister of Labour and hon. members may have an opportunity to debate this very important question.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the fact that the mediator has been sitting since nine o'clock this morning and presently is actively engaged in this matter, this is not the time for me to make a statement. I am quite prepared, however—and I have spoken to the house leader about this—to have the estimates of the Department of Labour brought on immediately this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the assurance given by the hon. minister, I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam will agree that there is no necessity to adjourn the ordinary business of the house.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I quite readily concur in your suggestion. If the labour estimates are to be brought down this afternoon I ask the permission of the house to withdraw my motion.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Notice of motion for papers No. 133 is acceptable to the government, subject, however, to the reservations concerning official documents and the authorization of the municipal authorities concerned.

Would Your Honour call notice of motion No. 132; I ask that the others be allowed to stand.

[Mr. Douglas.]

TUNNEL UNDER RAILWAY TRACKS, ST. HYACINTHE, QUE.

Motion No. 133—Mr. Ricard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the authorities of the city of St. Hyacinthe on the one hand, and any department of the government of Canada on the other hand, in relation to a project for the construction of a tunnel under the railway tracks of the C.N.R. opposite Choquette boulevard in the city of St. Hyacinthe.

Motion agreed to.

CONDITION OF NATIONAL MUSEUM

Motion No. 132—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of any reports received by the government relating to the physical conditions, safety and structure of the national museum.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, all the reports referred to in this notice of motion are reports made by the departmental engineers and therefore are privileged since they are made to their own superior officers. I have discussed the matter with the hon. member and I would ask him to withdraw the motion. I have no objection whatsoever to giving him all the information we have available, but I would not wish the motion to pass.

Mr. Orlikow: That will be satisfactory.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—R.C.M.P. REPORTS PROVIDED TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the state of affairs in which Mr. Vachon finds himself, is the Prime Minister now in a position to let the house know the circumstances under which R.C.M.P. reports came into the possession of the Quebec government; and will he indicate what justification there can be for such an occurrence?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, having regard to this matter of security information, there has been no change in the policy which has prevailed now for a good many years. R.C.M.P. files are never made available to any person other than properly authorized officials of the government of Canada. I should add this general statement, however, without reference to any particular case, and I know the house will appreciate why I do so.

It is essential for the enforcement of law and the maintenance of order and national security that there be an exchange of information when deemed necessary between law enforcement agencies in Canada. Such exchanges have been going on for many years, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister say when this information was made available to the province of Quebec? The house has a right to that information, because otherwise these secret files could be used for purposes of personal assassination, which is something that cannot be justified.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition is repeating the question he originally posed, to which the right hon. Prime Minister has replied.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask this question. When was this information made available, or was this also kept under cover for 14 months?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the cabinet has given consideration to the use of the armed forces in connection with the threatened Quebec provincial police strike, referred to today in a Toronto newspaper.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, the only occasion on which the armed forces of the federal government are used for the purpose of maintaining law and order is consequent upon a request made by a provincial government in accordance with the law. If and when such a request is made the federal government then discharges its obligations under the law. There has been no such request in respect of the situation referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. Fairweather: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the provincial election to be held on June 5 in Quebec, will the Prime Minister assure us that no such extraordinary remedy will be used even if the Quebec government asks for it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member is hypothetical.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter of the exchange of information I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government examines each case to see whether the information given has been misused. If so, should there not be a reconsideration in respect of the exchange of such information?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in following a practice which has been in effect for many years it is not possible for me to give details of security matters of this kind to the house. I can assure my hon. friend that all the matters he has mentioned are taken into consideration.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Was there any such request during the troubles which occurred in respect of the S.I.U., when the then minister of labour contemplated the use of troops?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is not in order.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister advise the house when the information regarding Mr. Vachon was made available by the R.C.M.P. to the Quebec government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is not acceptable.

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When security information is made available is there any understanding as to the purpose for which it may be used, or is it made generally available for political purposes, as in the case of files given to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Surely the rights of the individual and the protection of fundamental freedoms should not be denied in this way. This is a serious matter, namely the use of information gathered by the mounted police in a provincial election by a provincial government to destroy the effectiveness of someone to whom it is opposed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no question of privilege here at all. The right hon. gentleman may have a grievance, but certainly this is not the time to redress grievances.

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order in connection with the ruling on my question, Mr. Speaker, I think my question is perfectly appropriate. I would ask Your Honour the reason for the ruling whereby we are not allowed to know the basis upon which security information is given out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order—

Mr. Nugent: The question is argumentative, but it is a fundamental question of right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, might I, with respect, request Your Honour to explain why my question to the Prime Minister, asking when this information was given to the Quebec government, is out of order?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works and ask him whether I clearly understood the statement made by the Minister of Labour, namely that the labour estimates would be before us first thing today, as the very first item.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he authorized the R.C.M. Police to release the Vachon file for use by people in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will recognize that this is the same question that was asked a moment ago. The hon. member is requesting information, and in view of the way the question was put I cannot see that it should be asked at this time. If the hon. member feels that there is a matter of extreme urgency, or of urgency here, the matter can be dealt with on the adjournment debate tomorrow.

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That being so, Mr. Speaker, and in view of the ruling I give notice now, sir, that I am going to move the adjournment of the house tomorrow to discuss this matter which affects the liberties of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Since the Quebec provincial police association has been properly warned that Mr. Vachon is a security risk, what action is being taken by the government to protect national security in this case?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will realize that this question is of a general nature and cannot be asked at this time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROTESTS BY STAFF RESPECTING "SEVEN DAYS" DISMISSALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. I would ask the hon. lady, in view of the critical situation created by the threat of a strike of C.B.C. producers, if she can inform the house whether publicly owned facilities were used by the C.B.C. public affairs staff in Toronto to create an unofficial, nation-wide campaign to protest the firing of the co-hosts of "Seven Days".

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker, because I do not know the answer; but I shall find out.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Has he been asked recently by the Quebec minister of justice to set up a royal commission on fraudulent bankruptcies in Canada?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

Has he received from the Quebec Federation of Businessmen Associations and from the Canadian Lumber Dealers Association, a request for a royal commission on fraudulent bankruptcies in Canada?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know I did not receive the submission referred to by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked a question in almost identical words and you ruled it out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member just used a very important word, "almost". If the hon. member was entitled to ask the question and I should have recognized it, I apologize to him.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I claim your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, because there is something more fundamental in this question than meets the eye.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: In view of the fact that the parliamentary band and chorus are going to perform at the gala evening being undertaken by the O.A.C.-O.V.C. Mac-Alumni on Wednesday, June 8, in the West Block—without charge—would the Minister of Labour mind getting in touch with the president of the musicians' union in Washington, U.S.A. in an effort to obtain his permission for this performance and its recording?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Minister of Labour has noted the suggestion made by the hon. member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SPENCE ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Prime Minister. I wonder if the right hon. gentleman is in a position today to advise us when he expects to receive the Spence report. I presume this question is in order because of the Prime Minister's great knowledge of files.

Sone hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I refuse to sit down as the result of comments from across the way. Would you kindly point out to me, sir, why my question is out of order? I am asking the Prime Minister when the Spence report may be expected.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will resume his seat and point out to me when the question was ruled out of order. I did not rule it out of order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Then may I again pose my question to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. gentleman does not have to ask his question again. The question was asked, and if the Prime Minister wants to reply to it he may do so now.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In spite of the insulting way in which the hon. member put the question—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —I will say that although I have not formally dissociated myself from this commission, I do not know when the commissioner intends to make his report.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question. May I thank the right hon. gentleman for his insulting reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Can't you take it?

Mr. McIlraith: There is some decency in some members.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order. I ask for the assistance and co-operation of hon. members to please try to put questions in a more orderly way.

TRADE

SHIPMENTS OF POWDERED MILK TO AFRICAN CHILDREN IN RHODESIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce which he may take as notice. Are shipments of powdered milk destined for schools and missions for African children in Rhodesia being presently prohibited under the terms of the Export and Import Permits Act?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not believe so, but I will take the question as notice and if my answer is not correct I will so inform the house.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Since the committee on broadcasting is scheduled to meet again tomorrow afternoon and the Keate report suggests that the government publish the white paper as soon as possible, can we expect the government to speed up its publication so that it might be made available to the committee within the next ten days?

[English]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): We are now in the month of June, Mr. Speaker, when I promised it to the house.

PILOTAGE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. When is it expected that the royal commission on pilotage will make its report?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish I knew.

Mr. Howard: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice and ask him if he asked the R.C.M.P. to look into this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—PRESERVATION OF INDIAN SHRINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources but in his absence I will put it to his parliamentary secretary. Since the Historic Sites and Monuments Board has met and presented its recommendations to the minister regarding the Cree Indian shrine Mistaseni, would the minister now be in a position to inform the house what decision he has made regarding the removal of this valuable shrine to safe ground?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I take this question as notice.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—PROTECTION OF FEDERAL PROPERTY IN LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the outbreak of violence on the Montreal waterfront has the R.C.M.P. been instructed to protect government property and installations in that port?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): The R.C.M.P. is giving assistance to the harbour police in protecting federal property in the port of Montreal.

Mr. Harkness: I have a supplementary question. Has the number of R.C.M. Police been augmented so they can properly carry out this function?

Mr. Pennell: The number of R.C.M.P. supplied has met the request of the Montreal harbour commission police.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What steps have been taken to isolate and gain free passage for goods and materiel designed for Expo '67 in view of the secretary general's grave concern about the progress of the construction?

Mr. Winters: Some of it is being held up right now. It is impeding the work of Expo.

Mr. Fairweather: What is being done about getting it released?

Mr. Winters: We are exerting our best endeavours to move all the goods and equipment we can, but the strike is a matter of grave consequence to Canada, and Expo is suffering with the rest of our economy.

AGRICULTURE

CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION RESPECTING FEED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Forestry. In view of the urgent necessity for planning supply and storage of livestock feeds for the coming winter, can the minister indicate when resolution No. 48 on the order paper will be dealt with?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): This will be decided by the house leader.

Mr. Kennedy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I then direct this question to the government house leader?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It will be done as soon as the government gets a chance to have its legislation dealt with by the house.

CHAROLAIS CATTLE—SALES TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, may I change the tone of this assembly. I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture concerning Charolais cattle. One hundred and fifteen head of cattle were imported from France last October and kept in quarantine at Grosse Ile, Quebec. They were recently distributed to farms and ranches throughout Canada for a further 90 day quarantine. This matter is urgent because U.S. buyers in Canada are as thick as flies. They wish to buy these cattle because the U. S. government prohibits imports from France owing to the foot-and-mouth disease, so Canada is being used as the back door.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kindt: My question is as follows. What action does the government intend to take to prohibit sales of these Charolais cattle to the U.S.?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt whether the question is very urgent, but I am inclined—

Mr. Kindt: But Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might wait until I finish. As I said, although I do not think the question is urgent I am inclined to allow the minister to answer it.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is heartwarming that whenever this assembly gets too rowdy, a question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture in order to temper the feelings and elevate the debate.

In answer to the thesis propounded by the hon. member, I would say that at present there is no restriction with regard to the export of these cattle. My understanding is that the buyers and sellers of cattle are very happy that there is a free market across the border in respect of the sale of cattle, and I think we want to continue it that way.

Mr. Kindt: Supplementary Mr. Speaker, how much of the taxpayers' money was spent to bring in these cattle? Were they not brought in for the sake of crossbreeding for Canadian producers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps that part of the question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Kindt: I shall discuss it at ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member will be flying solo.

QUEBEC—SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Since we have temporarily embarked on the subject of agriculture, Mr. Speaker, which seems a more specific subject than most that have been dealt with today, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture or the Solicitor General whether any special provisions have been adopted to ensure that farmers will be able to load grain in spite of the strike, in view of the fact that some farmers' grain trucks were dumped in Montreal when they were attempting to take feed to their animals?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): We have the situation under careful scrutiny, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe any special measures have been taken in respect to farmers any more than other people who are suffering the ill effects of this strike. I can assure the hon. member we will keep the matter under continuous surveillance, and if there is a critical situation with respect to feed we will take such action as we deem necessary at that time.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that yesterday or the day before the minister said farmers could get their grain directly in this way, has he taken any measures at all to ensure that convoy protection or something of that nature will be provided so they can get the grain back to their farms? Is he prepared to do that?

Mr. Greene: At the time I answered the question the port of Montreal was open and things were peaceful. Since that time there has been a deterioration in the labour situation, and the only action that is being taken at the present time, as was indicated earlier, is that federal property is being protected by federal officers. To date no action has been taken to forcibly open the facilities for farmers to procure grain. Actually I believe it is the wholesalers who obtain the grain directly from these sources.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): May I ask a question of the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the minister is now in a position to provide the house with information regarding the grain situation at the port of Montreal, about which I asked yesterday.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The hon. member for Lisgar asked me yesterday how many grain boats were awaiting loading and unloading at the port of Montreal. I inquired from the wheat board and they informed me that in the port of Montreal there are 41 ocean vessels waiting to load and 18 lakers waiting to unload, for a total of 59. At the three ports there are 57 ocean vessels waiting to load and 27 lakers waiting to unload, for a total of 84 vessels.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister would give us the number of bushels involved in those vessels. In addition, I should like to ask him if the government has given any consideration to having these cargoes handled at Baie Comeau or the Atlantic ports?

Mr. Sharp: I do not believe the information would be very relevant in so far as the amount waiting to unload is concerned, but the amount of export loading that is delayed is approximately 25 million bushels. I can assure the hon. member that all the forces of the government are being concentrated on trying to get this strike settled.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED USE OF DRUG IN SCENE FOR "THIS HOUR HAS SEVEN DAYS"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I promised to reply to a question asked on Monday, May 30, by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition concerning a report from the R.C.M.P. related to the filming of a C.B.C. documentary on youth.

At the request of the C.B.C., investigations were conducted by the Metropolitan Toronto police and the R.C.M.P. The result of the investigation by the R.C.M.P. was referred to the Department of Justice. An opinion was given that the report of the R.C.M.P. did not provide the basis for a charge under the Narcotic Control Act or the Food and Drugs Act. I understand that the same conclusion was reached with respect to the report of the Toronto Metropolitan police under the provisions of the Criminal Code.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION TO BE DEALT WITH BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is a question I have asked on two or three previous occasions. Is he yet in a position to indicate to the house the government legislation which it is planned to deal with at this part of the session, and will that list include medicare?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Some of the legislation in question, I am glad to say, has been dealt with. The remainder of the items which should be dealt with before we even consider any summer recess I shall be able to list at the beginning of next week. This list will certainly include medicare.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN SETTLING LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Having in mind the wage dispute between Air Canada and certain of its employees which may threaten the operations of Air Canada, can the minister say whether he has yet received the report of the conciliation board? If so, is the appointment of a mediator under active consideration?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I have been getting this same question more or less regularly each day for the last three or four days. I did not get it yesterday. If I had received it yesterday I would have said that the report had been received and was being dispatched immediately to the two parties concerned, as is required by the act. I understand they are meeting today to discuss the report.

PENITENTIARIES

MILLHAVEN—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): My question is for the Minister of Public Works. When will construction begin on the new Millhaven penitentiary?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. On May 17 I asked him a question pertaining to quotas. He said he would look into the matter and make a report to the house. I wonder if he is ready to give that report now.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I have been in communication with the wheat board on a number of occasions about the equalization of quotas. It is my understanding that the board itself is issuing a statement about its intentions and its objectives very shortly. If that statement is not issued I will give one in the house myself.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR C.M.H.C. FINANCING FOR OLDER BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as spokesman for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Can we at this session expect legislation implementing the government's election promise that National Housing Act financing would be extended to older homes?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I do not recall any such election promise, but I can assume that when government policy in this matter has been settled, it will be announced in this house.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): At ten o'clock I will read the minister the election literature.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE OF PRIME MINISTERS THIS SUMMER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Prime Minister say whether the fact that one or two or more prime ministers have indicated they expect to be in London in July has anything to do with the prospective prime ministers' meeting to be called in connection with all the matters that are ordinarily dealt with at this conference, but in particular the Rhodesian situation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my right hon. friend knows, at the conference in Lagos last January it was agreed that there should be a resumption of meetings, in certain circumstances, in London in July. So far as I know these meetings will still take place in London in July. Although some members of the commonwealth feel that September would be a better date for the talks, and exchanges have been going on as to whether they should be postponed, there has been no proposal for postponement yet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether progress has been made during the informal—if that is the appropriate expression—negotiations which have been going on between the representatives of the British government and Prime Minister Smith's regime?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the talks that have been going on should not, I think, be designated as negotiations. There have been, as my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affiars has pointed out, talks to see whether negotiations would be productive, and whether there is a basis for any such negotiations. They are talks about talks, in other words. The talks that took place in London I believe are about to be resumed shortly in Rhodesia, but the preliminary character of the talks still persists.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am very sorry to say that the question period has expired.

Supply—Labour

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

1. General Administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates; the expenses of the International Labour Conferences and the promotion of labour-management co-operation $4,569,100.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 of the main estimates of the Department of Labour carry? This item appears on page 200 of the blue book of estimates, and was under consideration on Friday, May 27 last.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Minister of Labour said earlier today that he would be prepared to make a statement about the labour dispute which is now causing a good deal of dislocation in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. I wonder if the minister wants to make a statement at this time?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, my recollection of what I said yesterday, confirmed by a reference to Hansard, is that I would give consideration to the suggestion that was made, and that I might make a statement on motions today. I have considered that suggestion.

I intimated earlier this afternoon that the mediator has been working with the parties since nine o'clock this morning. Part of the difficulty, and I am sure that this is not through any lack of confidence on either side, is lack of communication in this particular field. The discussions taking place today are of the nature of an educational process, and communications between the parties are progressing within a more relaxed environment than previously, without the pressures that existed over the weekend. While these negotiations are progressing I do not think the minister ought to make a statement which might be taken out of context and might add to the difficulties that now exist.

My hon. friend sought to move a motion to adjourn the house. Nevertheless the estimates are before us. My hon. friend or any other member of the house may wish to comment, or make suggestions respecting this particular matter.

Mr. Douglas: The minister's reticence at this time is rather difficult to understand in view of the fact that he has already made some statements, giving only part of the story, with reference to the dispute now taking place within the port facilities of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. I had hoped that the minister would take this opportunity of making a full and complete statement as to the basic causes of the strike.

Yesterday, when my friend and deskmate, the hon. member for York South asked the minister certain questions, the minister said that they would take too long to answer on orders of the day. Now that he has an excellent opportunity to give answers, he seems reluctant to do so.

• (3:30 p.m.)

We want to know, Mr. Chairman, what is the major cause of this strike? The minister in his statement to the house on Monday last, May 30—

Mr. Nicholson: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. gentleman. Respecting the telegram that the hon. member questioned me about yesterday, may I point out that I did receive one telegram the day before yesterday. I think that the telegram the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam received illustrates the point I have just tried to make. Some of the persons interested in this matter have failed to appreciate suggestions which have been made to them. In that connection I think it might help if I read a wire that went off this morning, for use by the mediator, if helpful. That wire is to Mr. Tremblay to whom the hon. member referred yesterday. Mr. Tremblay is the Atlantic coast district vice president of the ILA. My wire reads:

> Retel 31 May during the further discussions taking place today I have asked that your representations be given consideration regarding the older longshoremen who would be affected by reduction of gangs with a view to devising arrangements that would accommodate them. Would also say that my statement in the House of Commons was subjected to observations and inferences that were unwarranted and out of context. There was no prejudicial reflection on my part on the position of your organization.

Because of that communication, and others, I feel that a statement by me as minister at this time would not be opportune or advisable.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I must respectfully differ with the minister. It seems to me that a statement would be very much in order, particularly if it were to clarify some of the statements which he made on Monday, which statements in my opinion were highly inaccurate.

It is not a matter of being out of context. The first telegram dated May 30, which the minister received from the Gérard Tremblay pointed out to the minister that the main obstacle to the settlement of the longshoremen's strike lay in the fact that the shipping federation insisted on reducing gangs, and only guaranteeing job security to 85 per cent of the workers. This meant that 15 per cent of the workers would be laid off.

When I asked the minister about that, what was the minister's reply? At page 5675 of Hansard he said this:

> The shipping federation offers job security for all the people who had worked for more than a given period of last year; in fact they offered job security for all those who had worked, I think, for more than 15 or 16 weeks. That was put forward for consideration. This is where the figure of 85 per cent comes in. I am advised that the other 15 per cent or less comprises the casual groups such as the taxi drivers, students and those who work for a limited period each year.

That was the minister's statement. The fact is, as was pointed out in the telegram sent to the minister by Mr. Gérard Tremblay, that these are not casual workers, taxi drivers and students; they are longshoremen who, because they have not yet reached the age of 65, are not old enough to receive a pension. But they are too old to work the entire shipping season. They do not work part of the time on the docks and part of the time at something else. They work part time on the docks because they do not have the physical strength and stamina to work full time. They work part of the day and go home for a rest. Remember, this is exacting, physical labour. The minister gave the house and the country the impression that these men—the regular longshoremen—would not be kicked out and that this proposed lay-off of 15 per cent would apply only to casual workers such as taxi drivers and students.

The union is contending that these older men who are not able to work the whole shipping season should not be thrown into the discard. It is not only a matter of losing a job. If an older worker who yet has several years to go before retirement, is thrown out at this time, he will not be eligible for a pension at the age of 65; he will lose all the benefits and pension rights he has built up for 20 or 30 years. This is a fundamental point. The rest of the longshoremen are fighting a battle, not for themselves but for this 15 per cent of the older workers who cannot work full time and who would not only be out of a job but completely without security at the age of 65, should they be callously discarded now by the shipping federation.

Surely the Minister of Labour must be aware that a couple of years ago his predecessor appointed Judge Lippe as a commissioner of inquiry to look into the matters which were disturbing the smooth operation of port facilities, particularly in Montreal. In the course of this inquiry Judge Lippe recognized the existence of this problem involving the older workers. He recognized that where such heavy physical labour is demanded the retirement age ought to be lower —probably 60 years—but that in the meantime some agreement for the partial retirement of these men in the 60-65 age group should be brought about.

Had the government acted on this recommendation which, I understand, Judge Lippe made, the problem would not now have arisen. But it exists, and instead of recognizing it and trying to get the shipping federation to accept a solution, the minister informs the house that all is well—that there is really no problem and that the 15 per cent who are to be thrown out of work are students, taxi drivers and people who are not really longshoremen at all. Well, the information I have is that they are longshoremen—men who have spent the best part of their lives working on the docks and who are entitled to some job security and protection.

When I asked the minister whether the Freedman principle ought not to apply, the minister answered, as reported on page 5676 of Hansard:

> —even Mr. Justice Freedman did not suggest that casual employees should be looked after in the way suggested in the telegram.

My understanding of the Freedman proposal was that where technological change makes it desirable to reduce the work force, this should be a matter for negotiation and that some of the benefits of technological change should be passed on to the workers and used to provide retirement benefits for those thrown out of work by automation. Mr. Speaker, if ever there was an example of a need to apply the Freedman formula, surely it is in this instance.

The other question which has not been clarified by the minister has to do with wages. I asked the minister a question about this on Monday last, in reply to which he said, as reported on page 5675:

> As I have said, very substantial increases—some say fantastic increases, I would suggest—in pay were offered. In return for these, the shipping federation has suggested, and I think properly, that they might expect increased productivity during the second year of the agreement.

I think the house has a right to know the extent of these so-called fantastic increases.

My hon. friend from York South (Mr. Lewis) tried to find this out. He asked the minister yesterday whether the offer which was submitted to the longshoremen was a figure submitted by the minister as a bargaining basis or whether it was a figure which had been accepted by the shipping federation and which the hon. gentleman had been authorized to offer to the longshoremen. It was at this point that the minister said it would take too long to give an answer on the orders of the day.

They are quite within their rights in suggesting, whatever wage increase is offered to them, that before they agree to any reduction in the work gangs they have a right to some assurance that this 15 per cent of the workers who are to be displaced will be given proper job protection and proper security in their old age.

My reason for raising this matter today is that I think that the longshoremen have a right to have their case presented fairly and properly. I do not suggest that I can present it fairly and properly. I have not taken part in the negotiations. I do not know what wage increases have been offered to them. All I have seen is an exchange of telegrams—

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Nicholson: Does the hon. member not think that an experienced counsel in the field of labour relations, who has been with this matter for several weeks, is in a better position to explain this situation to his clients with the assistance of the mediator, rather than a discussion in this house?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the experienced counsel is not in this house. What I am seeking to do is to point out that the only information that has been given to the house regarding this labour dispute has come from the minister, and his statement of Monday last sounded like a press release from the shipping federation.

If the minister wants to pose as the spokesman for the employers, then let him get into a department where he will be such a spokesman for the employers, and not stay in the labour department where he is supposed to be unbiased and impartial. I am saying that the longshoremen have a right to have their case presented fairly. It has not been presented fairly by the minister, and that has been shown by the telegrams exchanged between himself and Mr. Gérard Tremblay.

The minister has not given the house the facts. It is from the statements of the minister that the people will gather their impression as to the reason for this labour dispute. The minister has not told the house all the facts with reference to the 15 per cent of the men who are to be thrown out of jobs. He has not told the house and the country what sort of wage offer has been made, and whether it has been made by the employers or merely made by him as a basis for negotiations.

In the telegram which the minister received from Mr. Tremblay, the latter stated that the longshoremen have not yet received a written reply to the offer they submitted to the shipping federation. That is why we want to know whether this wage offer is a definite offer, made in writing, to which the shipping federation is committed, or are these merely figures which the minister is using in the process of negotiation? Until we have this kind of information we do not know what is the real cause of the dispute.

The people of Canada are naturally concerned about this strike. It is doing great harm to our export trade. The Minister of Finance has already told us that some 25 million bushels of grain which should be shipped are held up. The public is going to become increasingly annoyed at the delay in shipping.

As a member of the house I am anxious to know where the responsibility lies. Does it lie with the men? Are the men being unreasonable in their demands? Are they asking too much? Or, does the responsibility lie with the shipping federation? Is it trying to use this present situation as an excuse for throwing 15 per cent of its employees out of jobs merely because those employees have become older and less able to work? Is it trying to use this situation to get rid of employees to whom it will have to pay a pension in a few years? Is it trying to use this situation as a means of cutting down overhead and avoiding obligations with reference to some of its workers who have been working for it for over a quarter of a century?

We want to know. The country has a right to know. The whole issue has been befogged and beclouded by the statements of the minister. Today the minister is very reticent, but he was not so reticent on Monday when he was presenting the employers' side of the case. There is no reason why he should be so reticent today.

Mr. Turner: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Turner: Does the hon. member think he is contributing to the settlement of this strike by questioning the impartiality of the Minister of Labour?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: The same old cry.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I ever knew that statements of ministers have become sacrosanct.

Mr. Turner: You are questioning the impartiality.

Mr. Douglas: I am saying that any person who will read the minister's statement of last Monday, which I put on the record, will recognize whether or not the minister has been partial in this matter. The minister makes the statement that a proposed increase is fantastic, and then refuses to tell the house whether or not this was an actual increase offered by the management.

A minister who describes 15 per cent of the people who are being laid off, not as longshoremen but as taxi drivers and students, without having checked the records in the central bureau of the St. Lawrence river ports, and a minister who quotes figures on the basis of the information given to him by the shipping federation, certainly in my opinion is not acting in an impartial manner.

I am not raising this in order to make a settlement more difficult. I am raising it because I do not want the Canadian people to be under any misapprehension as to the cause of this strike. If there is information we have not got, then let the minister give it to us. But I am saying that in so far as the limited information I have, which is merely in the telegrams that have been exchanged between the vice president of the I.L.A. and the minister, it would indicate that the basic problem has to do with the reduction of work gangs, that the people being displaced are in a great many cases long service longshoremen, and that the only reason they are able to work for only part of the shipping season is because of their age and infirmity.

And I say that if those facts are correct, the longshoremen are fully justified in saying that those men ought to have some consideration, and that merely paying the younger and able bodied workers a little more money does not give the shipping federation the right to toss the old men out on to the scrap heap.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that this dispute is only one of many that are on the horizon. The seaway employees, disputes in Air Canada and the C.B.C. are only the ones that have come under federal jurisdiction, but there is hardly a province of Canada in which there are not labour negotiations proceeding, and threatened strikes. I am sorry that in many cases where they come under his jurisdiction the results of these labour disputes will be placed on the doorstep of the Minister of Labour.

For over two years we in this party have been trying to warn the government that these labour disputes will become more common and more violent unless the government faces up to two problems. First there is the steady increase in the cost of living, and every increase in the cost of living is inevitably followed by a demand for increased wages. That is only natural. Unless the government is prepared to bring down some program that will meet the difficulty of the rising cost of living, they can expect more labour disputes and not less.

The other problem which we have pointed out to them is that automation is going to be an increasing factor in causing economic dislocation. The investigation by Mr. Justice Freedman laid down the principle and that principle now has to be worked out in terms of practical legislation. The government now at long last is getting around to the setting up of a department of manpower, and talking about re-training. But three valuable years have been wasted. Little or nothing has been done to set the stage for the problems of automation and the solutions which must be found to those problems.

Last Friday, at page 5632 of Hansard, the minister made what I thought was a most amazing proposal. He said:

> I have not been in this office long enough to be able to say whether the solution lies in the establishment of arbitration or of labour courts, such as those that have been set up in Australia and other countries of the world. The answer may lie in that kind of action because, while they have had divided success, on the whole they have been successful.

I throw that idea out as something that merits the serious consideration of all members of this house and of all Canadians.

Well, Mr. Chairman, surely this is a policy of despair when a government, which says it cannot do anything about the rising cost of living, is prepared to do something when workers demand increased wages to meet the rising cost of living. What is proposed? It proposes that it may set up courts for compulsory arbitration so that it may say to the worker: "Somebody other than you will determine the price of your labour." The government is not prepared to determine the price that the Steel Company of Canada, Limited, will get for steel or that General Motors Corporation will get for a car, or that Canada Packers Limited will get for a pound of bacon; but the government is prepared to consider setting up an authority which will determine what price the worker will be paid for his sweat and his toil.

Surely the government does not think they can get away with that. The setting up of the kind of court which the minister has proposed is simply an indication—

Mr. Nicholson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Nicholson: Are you suggesting that I proposed such a thing? Did I not also ask the advice of the house on the question of some other possible solution? Will the hon. member please read another passage which will show that the remarks he quoted were taken out of context. I refer to the passage at page 5636 of Hansard, where the very item to which he is referring was raised in a question by the hon. member for Middlesex West. I think one of the difficulties in respect of taking statements out of context is that it gives rise to trouble. I would appreciate it if the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would read the question and answer at page 5636 of Hansard.

Mr. Douglas: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to read the question, but I should like to point out to the minister that in addition to the statements which he made in the house last Friday, he has been making statements outside the house along this line. I listened to one of them myself when he appeared on television. The minister may say that he is not making this as a firm proposal, but I certainly would suggest to him in all kindness that he cannot blame the public if they gain the impression that he is trying to condition public thinking to the introduction of such a policy. The general feeling of many of us is—

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member not going to read the passage?

Mr. Douglas: Surely. I was going to say to the minister that I get the impression that he is flying a kite to see what public reaction will be to compulsory arbitration.

The minister at page 5636 of Hansard was asked a question by Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West), and the question is:

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question while his mind is still on the point. Has consideration been given by his department to the use of compulsory arbitration as a means of settling disputes, rather than resorting to strike action, as has been the case for many years?

Then the minister said:

I am going to suggest that I take note of questions and deal with them perhaps at the end of the period. However, I think this particular question merits a special answer and I would be glad to give one.

Very serious consideration has been given to this matter by the department and by experienced departmental officials over a period of several years. As a member of cabinet I know something of the difficulties that we have had in trying to work out and find an acceptable formula. If you really believe, as I happen to, in the importance and the significance of collective bargaining, which enables management and labour to sit down on opposite sides of the table and unburden their hearts and take strong positions if necessary, it is difficult to say in all cases compulsory arbitration would be necessary, or advisable.

I ask the minister to look at that.

Mr. Nicholson: Please read the next paragraph.

Mr. Douglas: The minister said that it would be difficult to say in all cases compulsory arbitration would be necessary or advisable. Is he saying that in some cases it would be necessary?

Mr. Nicholson: Just read the next paragraph please, and do not stop in the middle of the excerpt.

Mr. Douglas: I will read the next paragraph to the minister. It would be much better for him to make a speech, but if he wants me to make it for him, fine.

On the other hand, I think—and I am speaking only for myself, certainly not for the government, nor do I even express the consensus of my department—there are many cases where the national interest is at stake. I can think of safety and security in the air line industry, for instance, where weather services have to be maintained. Then there is the movement of passengers and freight in many cases on our railroads. It is just as important perhaps, in my view, to have compulsory arbitration in these fields as in certain aspects of civil service activities, as proposed in the legislation that is now before this house.

The minister certainly has not helped anything by asking me to read. The fact that he now enumerates some of the economic activities in which he would support compulsory arbitration—

Mr. Nicholson: Would you read the next paragraph please.

Mr. Douglas: Before I go on to read the other paragraph which the minister wants read, may I point out that since he already has dealt with the handling of freight and the operation of the railways, I suppose the loading of ships comes in much the same category. Do I take it that he is now going to include the longshoremen among the categories which should come under compulsory arbitration? I will read the last paragraph:

I cannot give the hon. member a definite answer, but I can assure him—and this is why I made the appeal earlier today—that any constructive suggestions, which any member of this house or any other person may have to make as to how we might solve this extremely difficult question, when our national interests and economy are at stake, would be very welcome.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be unkind to the minister, but I want to say that I am sure if the Liberal government had gone to the country last November and said to the people, "As soon as we assume office we will generally advertise, asking anyone who has any idea about how to run this country to please submit it and it will be received, but in the meantime we have not the remotest idea what we are going to do about this matter," they would never have been elected. I am sure that if they had said, "As soon as we get into office we will open a special mailbox to receive—"

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman another question. Is he suggesting that a minister of the crown should not invite the views and opinions of members of this house. I thought that was one reason why we were having a debate this afternoon.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the minister's asking for suggestions. As a matter of fact, I will make some in a moment. What we are saying is that surely there ought to be some leadership given by this government. Surely a government that asked the people of Canada to elect it to office should give some leadership. Surely a party that has talked about 60 days of decision should not be now saying: We do not know what to do about rising prices, automation and labour discords such as have occurred as a result of our inaction and inertia. Surely a government after dawdling for three years, doing nothing about rising living costs, and doing nothing about bringing in legislation to resolve the problems created by automation and technological change ought to give us something better than a statement by a minister to the effect that as soon as the people tell them what they should do they will do something.

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Sone hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the hon. member should be allowed to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a few more minutes, but I might say that at least one quarter of my time has been spent in reading the minister's speech for him, at his request.

Mr. Nicholson: Is that not a penalty you must pay when you read excerpts from Hansard?

Mr. Douglas: The minister has spoken about suggestions that might be made. Let me inform him that he did not have to wait until now for suggestions. We on this side of the house have been making suggestions to the government for the past three years, pointing out that this country, along with the rest of the western world, has now embarked upon a great scientific revolution, and that technological change is taking place altering our whole way of life, and will alter it even more in the decades that lie ahead.

This country must adapt itself to completely changed conditions and entirely different situations. The old techniques will not suffice, and it will not do for the government to sit with its eyes shut to a steadily increasing cost of living, and do nothing. The government has done nothing about automation in the past three years but now comes to us and says it is in a mess because workers want more wages because it costs more to buy groceries in the stores. The government has said that workers are out on strike because some employers want to throw 15 per cent of their employees on the scrap heap, but that if the people have any suggestions, they would like to hear them. Surely that is not good government.

This government has known for three years that these problems existed, but they have swept them under the rug and turned a blind eye to other major economic problems which face this country. The government is now wallowing in a mess, yet the very best it can say is: We would be glad to have some suggestions from the opposition.

Let me conclude by returning to my original point. I hope the minister will now make a statement clarifying the situation with reference to the strike taking place at the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, and that he will tell us exactly what the employers have offered in writing, and what the employees are demanding. I hope he will tell us what steps the government is taking to try to resolve the difference that may exist between the positions taken by the two disputants. If the minister can give us that kind of information we will then be in a better position to assess where responsibility lies and decide what steps must be taken to reach a solution.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think there will be general agreement with the views expressed by the hon. member who preceded me, that there has been gross delay and inactivity on the part of this government. The strike has gone on now for several weeks, since May 9 or 10, and regularly we have been led to believe that everything was being done by the government that could be done to bring about a solution to this strike, which is becoming more serious with the passing days.

Let me quote the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in answer to a question posed by the hon. member for Lisgar. The minister is reported at page 5743 of Hansard for May 31 as follows:

> —I can say the matter is of the very greatest concern to the Canadian Wheat Board.

The situation is of concern to the farmers in the province of Quebec who need feed to operate their dairy farms. This is something that concerns law and order in every part of Canada, particularly when one realizes that in order to divert a new waterfront eruption 300 policemen are on duty, and that in spite of this fact violence has already taken place. The only answer we can get from the government takes the form of a suggestion that nothing is being done about it, but ultimately it will disappear. That is a strange proposition.

Perhaps some explanation can be found in the fact that after this government has been in office for three years individuals like the president of the professional association of millers of Quebec do not even realize that there has been a change of government. This fact indicates the tremendous impact that has been made by the present government.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Does he not regard that as a compliment to him?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It certainly does not indicate a compliment as far as the government of Canada today is concerned. The president of that association of millers sent me a telegram in which he said:

> Have just heard on radio that you stated that we could pick up the feed grain with trucks at the port elevators. What about the stevedores who will not allow the trucks to get to the elevators and also will not allow non-striking port employees to get to their work. This is what is happening at the elevators in Quebec. For the last time, accept your responsibilities before it is too late.

He did not even know that the Minister of Labour was around or that this government was in office, because he put the blame on us. What is the government doing about this situation? Are they waiting and hoping, and like Barkis, willin'? While the government waits, making the kind of equivocal statements to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, things are becoming worse and worse.

• (4:10 p.m.)

All of us have heard the old legend about Rome burning and Nero fiddling. One has only to think of the activities of this government to realize that this example does not begin to describe the indolence, inactivity and inaction of this government. I listened with interest to what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said as to what could be done. He was in office in the province of Saskatchewan. That was of course before there was any alliance with any great labour unions. But I recall that there were strikes when the C.C.F., the parent body of the N.D.P., was in office. I remember even in 1953 that the provincial transportation system was tied up because of a strike.

As I listened to the hon. member—and this seems to be a characteristic of that group as they wrap about themselves the mantle of perfection—I recalled something of the cost of living within the province of Saskatchewan. After all, action on price fixing is a matter for the provinces, except in an emergency, and then only in circumstances permitted under the War Measures Act. As the hon. member spoke a moment ago as to action that might be taken, I recalled so well that in 1946, I think it was, the government of Saskatchewan, the socialist government of Saskatchewan, passed legislation that all prices in Saskatchewan had to be approved, that increases in prices that could not be justified could result in action being taken. I have said before that the legislation was never brought in, because it had to be proclaimed and they never proclaimed it. I have often mentioned the fact that if they had brought it in there would have been only three classes of persons in Saskatchewan: those in jail, others waiting to get in, and the rest waiting to be tried. They did not bring it in, but they have the solutions now. I would like to know what those solutions are.

They talk of the results of automation, and certainly automation is one of the most tremendous challenges throughout the free world. But how are you going to meet it? Not by the kind of generalizations that were mentioned today; not by rising and simply saying, "We have in our minds what could be done"; not by an alliance with great labour unions. Indeed, alliances of that kind are now being frowned upon in the United States. Only a few days ago Mr. George Meany, head of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., enunciated the principle of the danger of a great union's being allied with a political party. That union of his was part and parcel of the Democratic party; it won a couple of elections as a result. But the other day he expressed grave fears as to whether there should be any continuance of that alliance. Indeed, I interpreted his remarks to mean that no labour union of any importance should again find itself in a position of being allied with a political party: for after all, all of us have done our part for labour; none of us has any monopoly.

I look at my hon. friends opposite, and they give the impression as they speak that only they have any affection for labour. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to review the years and go back over history, but the very foundation of trade unionism was under Macdonald in the face of great trouble, difficulties and opposition; and through the years no political party has had a monopoly of the desire that labour should receive its fair consideration. That has been the history of this matter. But when I listen day after day to the unctuous pronouncements of my hon. friends to the left, I ask myself, "Do they mean it? Are they as sincere as they appear? Has sincerity become something that only they possess in this regard?" I give my hon. friends the opportunity of clarifying this, and I am sure they will; they are great debaters.

I have heard these things over and over again, sir, and this afternoon I feel compelled to say a word in this regard. They often lead us to believe that there is something wrong with parliament, and that if only we had a socialist government things would be so different. We had a socialist government in Saskatchewan. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was the premier of that province, and with distinction. They had such bitterness in the legislature of Saskatchewan that the leader of the opposition sued the premier of Saskatchewan and they went through to the Supreme Court of Canada. Of course, that is in the past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am simply pointing out that I remember so well the debates in Saskatchewan, and the legislature then was not always that peaceful, namby-pamby kind of institution which they today would indicate the rest of us should make the House of Commons. They are only human beings and they are following the usual ways of human beings. I thought I ought to point this out because, Mr. Chairman, week after week they rise, they speak, and sometimes as I listen to them I think of the words of Agrippa, "Almost thou persuadest me..." It might be that I could be persuaded if I had not had the experience in Saskatchewan.

However, I know they will understand that I was just provoked into this and thought I should make a few references to this matter, because we have listened now for three years to this kind of thing. While I have every regard for the contribution that was made by the socialist government of Saskatchewan in social welfare, I am not unmindful of the fact that our province went back economically and in population during the days of socialism.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly.

Mr. Winch: Could I ask the Leader of the Opposition if it is possible for him to lower his halo a little bit, and will Diefenbaker the almighty now tell the government and this house how to handle the situation in Montreal, with which we are most concerned?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman's halo choked him long ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: Will you now advise the house how to handle the problem?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking the government now to give us some idea of what they have in mind.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I was quite surprised to find the Minister of Labour coming out so strongly in favour of compulsory arbitration. He asked the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam to read on. As he did this I was reminded of Right Hon. Mackenzie King. You could never catch him: Of course he was the hon. member for Prince Albert. If you quoted anything that he had said, he would tell you "Read on". Sooner of later you could be absolutely sure to find the very reverse of what he had said earlier. Apparently the Minister of Labour is also of that school; he says "Read on".

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the right hon. gentleman? Is it not a fact that he said on more than one occasion he was a great admirer of prime minister King as a political tactician in the house? Does the same compliment apply to the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I can say is that whatever were his powers of extraterrestrial communication, often he came up with the right answer. I must say that the Minister of Transport also possesses ability in that direction. I think the Minister of Labour might consult him and find that answers will be forthcoming, such as they may be.

I wish to ask the minister whether or not the views expressed in the several telegrams that have been sent by Gérard Tremblay are in fact borne out by the facts? I have received a telegram which I will read to you and I will ask the minister to give us his answer to this. It says:

> We disagree with claim that shipping federation has offered to guarantee employment for all regular longshoremen—

Will the minister say whether regular longshoremen will be guaranteed employment?

[Mr. Winch.]

Will they be guaranteed their pension rights? It goes on to say:

> It is not true that all longshoremen who work 750 hours or less in navigation season are casual employees. Many of them are longshoremen who are too young to die or to receive a pension at age 65 and too old to work.

Will the minister clarify this? Will he place facts before the house and the country? It goes on to say:

> Recommendations of Judge Lippe when he was commissioner in inquiry ordered by your predecessor Hon. MacEachen concerning St. Lawrence river and maritime ports re some sort of partial retirement prior to pension that can only be obtained at age 65. Urge you to examine statistics available from central records bureau for St. Lawrence river ports . . . Regret that you qualify employer's offer as fantastic.

That was the wage offer.

Will the minister say what this "fantastic" offer was? Up to the present time all we know about it is the generalization. For weeks on end there has been a cavalier disregard by this government. They say "All will be well. We cannot act now because something will interfere with this action." My hon. colleague, the former minister of labour, asked the following question which appears at page 5743 of Hansard:

> I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the difficulties that are now being experienced... will the Prime Minister call the parties involved to Ottawa, to bring them into a different atmosphere so they may proceed to a settlement through the collective bargaining arrangement, under the chairmanship of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), who has a great deal of experience in this type of work?

This is amazing. Mr. Marchand—and I use his name only because of the reference I intend to make rather than referring to his constituency—is a man with wide experience in labour matters. Why is he not brought into this? The Minister of Industry has not had much experience in this field. The hon. member for Verdun—I am sure has had experience. But what about the Minister of National Health and Welfare? He should be in on this as he is a man of great experience.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am always willing to speak of the qualities of any minister opposite, and I wonder why he was not used. It would have been a great opportunity to use his experience. What they did is to get only the Minister of Industry, because he comes from Montreal, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Verdun. Why did they not bring in someone with experience? I am glad to hear the applause that greeted the mention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It indicates there is agreement over there that he should do something. Why was he not called in? Why did they simply bring together the lame and the blind to deal with this problem? This is something I would like to know.

The Prime Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, everything that can be done is being done to bring this strike to an end. The Minister of Labour is in touch with the situation, as my hon. friend knows, and if and when the time comes that the minister who is dealing with the matter feels the intervention of the Prime Minister would be helpful, naturally he will let me know.

How long must the shipping transportation of Canada be held up before the government believes that some action should be taken?

An hon. Member: They want 60 days for decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I said to the Prime Minister that in view of the request which the Prime Minister received from the Montreal port council, the council stated that any further delay in settlement would be "catastrophic". Think of the tremendous loss each day. The Wheat Board is piling up wheat which cannot be shipped. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says it is a very trying and difficult situation, and yet there is nonchalance and an easy-going uncertainty on the part of the government. They are in a rut. After all, there was always support in the house from some hon. gentleman to the left. Why has some action not been taken?

• (4:30 p.m.)

The hon. gentleman for Burnaby-Coquitlam said there would be an increasing number of strikes unless action is taken. What does this mean? He said that one of the reasons is the tremendously high cost of living, which goes up continually. There has been no action, nothing but wait and hope. They expect charity to come to their rescue. If ever there was an example of the inertia of a government, this is one. I repeat that three weeks, 21 or 22 days, have passed and the answer is: We are thinking about it. While the wheels of commerce cease to turn, the government of Canada refuses to take any action whatever. Surely if ever there was a problem that should be dealt with in part by the proposed department of manpower, this is one. What about the great Mr. Kent? You recall his name. He is the head of the war on poverty. We have not heard of him, but he ought to be in on this problem.

Again, I say why has not the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the minister of manpower to be, been called upon? If the statements made in the telegram from the workers, from Gérard Tremblay, are correct, then the workers have some justification for what they are doing. Before any of us can prescribe we have to know the facts. I now ask the minister to absolve himself from his vow of silence, and if he can get any help from the President of the Privy Council I will not object to hearing from him. He comes from Montreal—and that is the No. 1 qualification because no one can get into these discussions unless he comes from Montreal. This is what barred the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Starr: What about the Minister without Portfolio; he is from Montreal?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, he has other responsibilities. Let us hear from the minister, and then I will have something further to say. In all seriousness, sir, can you not see yourselves if you were sitting over here, and we were in the government? The hon. member for Ontario, and I never said this about him before, was a minister of labour who understood matters and got things done. But if a strike continued even for a few days, the virulence of the attack that was launched on us was something to behold.

I do not say that the present minister is not acquainted with the problems of labour. As a corporation man throughout the years he dealt with labour. He has about him a kindliness that should certainly have results if given an opportunity to operate. Before having anything further to say on this matter, I ask the minister to dispel this aura of silence that seems to have gripped the government with regard to this problem, and let us know the facts.

This is not something like mounted police records that can be spread about, as in the Vachon case. They are pretty good at that—spreading about slander, and destroying. This is a practical thing. I hope the minister will be prepared now to place the house in possession of the facts, and will be able to do that which will be almost impossible: to explain how the government of which he is a member has sat, considered, examined and done nothing effective for so long.

Mr. Mackasey: I have to admit, Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to follow the Leader of the Opposition. I enjoyed his speech because I realized that the greater part of it was delivered with tongue in cheek.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

Mr. Mackasey: I particularly appreciated his remarks, which I thought were so accurate, not pertaining to the strike but pertaining rather to the sanctimonious attitude of the socialist party which sits in this house. As a labour man—and I consider myself a labour man—I do not apologize to the Leader of the Opposition for having participated in the discussion on the week end. I can recall in 1942 supplementing my income when I was in university by working as a longshoreman on the Montreal waterfront. I became aware of many of the problems that labour is discussing in 1966 because they existed even then in 1942 and 1943. I sympathize with labour on many of the aspects of this situation.

As a labour man I was somewhat appalled at the efforts of the leader of the New Democratic Party earlier in the day when, under the guise of being concerned for labour, he callously rose in this house to demand an emergency debate on the longshoremen's strike, knowing full well, or at least he should have known as a labour representative, that a debate confined to that particular strike could have gone a long way toward jeopardizing, indeed neutralizing, much of the progress that had been made over the week end. There has been progress made today in Montreal.

Mr. Winch: Will you report on that progress?

Mr. Mackasey: More and more, I get a little nauseated at the sanctimonious attitude adopted by the socialists in so far as labour is concerned. I think it is time they started showing some responsibility in the house and stopped jeopardizing the cause of labour under the guise of being the spokesmen for labour in the House of Commons. Knowing most members of the house as I do, I find no shortage of spokesmen for labour in our party or in the ranks of the official opposition.

• (4:40 p.m.)

What this situation needs is more frankness and blunt talk, and less hypocrisy. I know that the minister will be speaking later in this debate, and I will leave it to his good judgment to divulge to the house what he thinks should be divulged of the in camera sessions of Friday, Saturday morning, all day Sunday and Monday morning.

I should like to express my views as to some of the problems preventing the settlement of this costly strike on the waterfront. It is not a question any more of dollars and cents. It is no longer a question of how much management should pay or how much labour wants. The leader of the New Democratic Party was accurate in his assessment that we are now entering a new phase of management and labour relations. This country, now an industrial nation, can no longer afford the luxury of having segments of society pulling against each other, if we are to continue prospering.

The problems and aspirations of management must be the problems and aspirations of labour, and vice versa. Judge Freedman recognized this in his historic document. Similar to the document drawn a decade ago by Judge Rand, I believe the one drawn by Judge Freedman will, in time, be incorporated into the dictionary of labour terms.

In all fairness to the present Minister of Labour, he was one of the first both inside and outside this house to endorse, espouse and advance the philosophy of Judge Freedman. Only last month in a speech in Vancouver, not to labour but to manufacturers, he warned the manufacturers association of the moral obligations they had to the people working for them, a moral obligation put on paper by Judge Freedman, a moral obligation which management must realize more and more.

Underlying this strike, Mr. Chairman, is the concept of the moral obligation management has to longshoremen who suffer from arthritis, heart attacks, fractured limbs, colds, exposure to the elements, and from 10, 15 or 20 years on the waterfront loading and unloading ships under the cruelest of circumstances. Management has a responsibility to these people. The Minister of Labour made that abundantly clear to both parties in this dispute.

Many people in my constituency are longshoremen. Stripped of the propaganda of what is sometimes an unfriendly press, stripped of the gangster elements that periodically infiltrate the waterfronts around the world, the average longshoreman emerges, in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec as an average and decent man, wanting no more for himself and his family than I, or you, Mr. Chairman, or any other Canadian would want. My sympathies lie with the longshoreman and I do not hesitate to say so.

We must expect management to accept the philosophy of the Freedman report, just as we must expect management of a railway, when a line is abandoned, to accept its legal and moral obligations to all those who lived in the towns or villages, whose lives have been disrupted by the unilateral decision of the railway.

On the other hand, labour must realize its responsibilities to management, if there is to be teamwork. We must develop and encourage in Canada co-operation between management and labour, so that if management recognizes its responsibilities under the Freedman report, labour must realize that if this country is to maintain its competitive position in the markets of the world, it cannot resist technological changes, new inventions, or new ways and means of increasing productivity per manpower hour.

This fundamentally is the issue. In all fairness to management, to the shipping federation, and to labour, this is a new concept which has been introduced into the scheme of things for the first time. Perhaps the parties have been tardy; but after all, free bargaining between management and labour is going on. Perhaps I am revealing secrets out of school but, under persuasion by the Minister of Labour, management has accepted responsibility to the people dislodged by automation, and labour has accepted its responsibility to co-operate in ways and means that will increase productivity, in the final analysis making our products exportable and not subject to inefficiency and high shipping costs.

It might asked, why, if both sides have accepted such principles, this strike has not been settled? I submit it is because this is the first time that such a concept has been introduced in this area of labour relations. There are differences of opinion between management and labour as to what the moral obligations on either side are. Those moral obligations have not been set out before in written form. It is only logical and normal, therefore, when you are dealing with six locals, and with a multiplicity of shipping concerns, that there should be differences of opinion.

Labour in the Montreal area is represented by a very efficient and responsible legal adviser, who has the respect of the minister, as well as of management. It is significant that the only point of difference at the moment between the parties is not a question of wages, salaries, or costs per hour, but what are the moral obligations of the parties, and to whom those apply.

I do not feel that anyone can evaluate moral responsibility toward longshoremen in terms of the number of hours that have to be worked in one year. I think it is necessary to go into the histories of people. In case any hon. member asks for information, I might point out that labour had tentatively consented, provided everything else meets with their approval, to the appointment of a conciliator whose role it would be to see whether work gangs could be reduced moderately—not immediately but, say, in one year from now.

Labour has said in return: If we accept such a proposition, which would mean that possibly 200 or 300 men in total would be out of a job, in the interest of increased efficiency, what would happen to such men? Management has said: We will see that they have a job.

In any event, attrition will take its toll of the 200 or 300 men. Really the difference of opinion involves the definition of a longshoreman as opposed to someone who works periodically, either at the week end or in the evening, moonlighting in the labour market. A distinction exists, and must be resolved.

On the other hand, and here I do not speak on behalf, or with the authority of the Department of Labour, my sympathy lies with the longshoreman who, when struggling to work 500 or 600 hours, which is not very much by our standards—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the hon. member permit a question? Am I to understand from his last remarks that the longshoremen's union, in the three ports involved, permits moonlighting on the job?

Mr. Mackasey: I know the hon. member who has asked the question is a labour man. You can define it any way you like. One of the paradoxes and hypocrisies of the labour movement is the willingness on the part of its members to fight each other, or anybody else, over certain aspects of labour; and yet, after a man has worked for 40 hours in one industry, he can stop working in that industry, and go somewhere else to work as scab labour. That happens all the time.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Does the constitution of the longshoremen's union permit a man to go to another union and moonlight?

Mr. Mackasey: These questions would be fine if we were in a standing committee. It is obvious the hon. member is not familiar with the practice in the Montreal area. Thousands of part-time workers are required in the Montreal area to help when times are busy. The point being discussed between management and labour is this: Into which category do these particular workers fall? Are they genuine longshoremen, or people who earn their living as watchmen, trainmen, railwaymen or postal workers, and who go down to work on the docks during periods of peak activity?

The difference of opinion arises because management is trying to define a longshoreman on the basis of the number of hours he works. I think this is wrong. A longshoreman who presently works only 500 or 600 hours a year may have worked 3,000 hours a year a few years ago when he had the vigour to do so. It may be his health has been ruined by his employment—by the almost inhuman working conditions to which he has been subjected. I do not think we should say, dictatorially, that because a man worked only 200 hours in a particular year he should not be entitled to job security. To do so would be cruel and inhuman; it would be in conflict with the Freedman principle.

Since there are comparatively few people affected, some four or five hundred, I suggest it might even be necessary to prepare a case history of each of these men. It might well be found that a man who had worked only 500 hours in the year just ended had worked on the waterfront for 20 years and should certainly be considered as a legitimate longshoreman.

These are some of the problems which representatives of labour and management are discussing today in Montreal under the guidance of an experienced mediator, Judge Lippe. I would suggest to those who are genuinely interested in the attainment of a settlement—I exclude those who are more interested, for political reasons, in embarrassing the minister—that it is not in the best interests of these negotiations, or of the parties concerned in them, that the terms offered by management and suggested by labour, be made public in the House of Commons before those who are directly involved have had an opportunity to delve deeply into their differences. This is the reason for the minister's reluctance to go into detail concerning the dispute at this particular point in the negotiations.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Hon. members who speak from the far corner, labour lawyers and others who have worked within unions, such as the hon. member who asked me a few questions several minutes ago—know how quickly the whole aspect of a labour dispute can be changed by a wrong word or an incorrect report. These things can happen. Why force the Minister of Labour into a position where his words may be misconstrued, where certain adjectives can be added, or deleted, or honestly misunderstood? I am not especially concerned about the Minister of Labour. He is big enough to shoulder his own responsibilities and suffer his own embarrassments. But I am interested in the thousands of longshoremen who are out of work at this moment and who, contrary to public opinion, are not hoodlums, gangsters or bums but, for the most part, decent, honest labouring people who fear automation.

Somehow, through the efforts of the mediator and of the Department of Labour, management has to make them understand that they have nothing to fear. Management must itself be given to understand that it has a moral responsibility to those who have worked so hard on its behalf in all kinds of weather for so many years.

In conclusion I would humbly ask, as one who was privileged to sit in on some of these discussions, that in discussing the estimates of the Department of Labour we in this house should refrain from yielding to the temptation of embarrassing the minister and at the same time jeopardizing the results of the negotiations which are going on at this very moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who would have preferred not to take part in this debate because I am convinced that while conciliation is under way, it might be wiser not to mix things up.

The fact remains just the same that I represent a city and a region which are vitally concerned by this problem and, for over a week, I have been getting urgent representations which force me to intervene in the debate.

I state beforehand, of course, that I will abstain from making any criticism of representation which could create problems for the conciliation board now sitting.

Before getting to the heart of my remarks, I will say just the same that I listen with great interest when the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) discuss in the house problems which concern us because of their great experience and deep knowledge of all the aspects of such a problem.

As far as the leader of the New Democratic Party is concerned, I admire his statements and stands much more when he forgets to indulge in partisan considerations. This means that most of the time when he speaks outside the house they detract from his views a little, because we in this house, who try to approach the discussion in the most independent manner, feel all the time undercurrents of partisanship against the party in office.

Kindly note that, up to a certain point, I admire not only the leader of the New Democratic Party but his party's philosophy which I am studying conscientiously.

As far as the Leader of the official Opposition is concerned, Mr. Chairman, he is interesting for another reason, because what he says constitutes a kind of entertainment for the house.

When you hear him speak, you realize that there is an expert on things parliamentary and a first class performer in the art of make-believe. He takes an argument which might seem worthless and he puts on an extremely impressive show which probably does not help to solve problems as important as the ones we have been considering this afternoon, because in the end the economy of Canada as a whole is concerned and it is such an urgent question that I think we should all concentrate on working out a solution and forget partisan considerations.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, for a week I have been aware of the reactions in my riding from the employers, not only in the maritime transportation industry but also in all the industries in my region which are affected by those problems. I know the reactions of the leaders of the longshoremen and I feel I can say that, all in all, until now, we are perfectly happy—

Mr. Knowles: Five o'clock.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): When shall the committee have leave to sit again —next sitting of the house?

Mr. Knowles: Or later this day?

An hon. Member: Carry on.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it might not be the wish of the house to continue this discussion until six o'clock and waive the private members' hour? If this is the wish of hon. members it is agreeable to us on this side.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has been agreement on this.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that private members' hour be deferred and that we proceed in committee with the estimates of the Department of Labour?

Mr. Bigg: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rapp: Five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): As there is not unanimous consent—

Mr. Nicholson: I think I should advise the house that word has been received which may necessitate my being in Montreal tomorrow.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we might not appeal to those who have refused to give unanimous consent. Some of us have not had a chance to speak in this debate and it seems reasonable to me to continue it until six o'clock and set aside private members' hour.

Mr. Bigg: I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): As there is no unanimous consent, it being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

HIGHWAYS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE TO INSTITUTE BUILDING PROGRAM

On the order: Private Members' Notices of Motions:

That, in the opinion of this house, immediate steps should be taken by the government to arrange for a federal-provincial highway building conference at the earliest possible moment in order that a national highway building program be instituted with special attention in such a program to be given to access roads in the northern areas and lesser developed areas of the nation—Mr. Howard.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), was one of those who agreed that the private members' hour might be postponed. He is out of the chamber at the moment. Therefore I wonder if in his absence this motion could be considered as not having been called?

Mr. Stewart: What the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says is quite correct and I concur in his request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there unanimous consent that the motion stand?

Mr. Knowles: As if it had not been called.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION TO COMPLETE NAVIGABLE WATERWAY IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of establishing an inland waterway from Winnipeg through Selkirk to Edmonton, via the Red River, Lake Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I first placed this motion, which requests the government to give consideration to the advisability of establishing an inland waterway from Winnipeg through Selkirk to Edmonton, via the Red River, Lake Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River, on the order paper in March, 1962. Each year subsequently I placed this private members' motion on the order paper, but was never lucky in the draw and the motion never reached the floor of the house for discussion. Naturally I am happy that it has now been called and an opportunity given to members to discuss it.

I was first prompted to introduce this motion by the promotional efforts of the Selkirk Chamber of Commerce who have been advancing this project for some years. The late Mr. J. F. (Fergie) Cunningham, who resided at Selkirk, Manitoba, was employed with the federal government's public works department and was in charge of dredging operations for the federal government in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and the Northwest Territories, was actually the author of the project. Mr. Cunningham had done a lot of research work on this proposed project. He had outlined it to members of the Selkirk Chamber of Commerce. I likewise had many personal discussions with Mr. Cunningham about it.

Subsequently the Selkirk Chamber of Commerce took over the promotional work for the project. They sponsored resolutions at the annual convention of the Manitoba Chambers of Commerce and at the annual meeting of the Hudson Bay Route Association, advocating an inland waterway in western Canada.

The Selkirk Chamber of Commerce prepared a brochure for a western inland waterway, which they subsequently distributed to members of the Manitoba legislature, members of the Saskatchewan legislature, members of the Alberta legislature, to all the chambers of commerce in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, to all the daily and weekly papers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, to the radio stations, T.V. stations, and to others. In 1962 I distributed this brochure to all members of parliament and all senators on behalf of the Selkirk Chamber of Commerce. The Selkirk Chamber of Commerce and I received many acknowledgements and some very interesting comments.

The purpose of the proposed waterway is to provide another means of transportation. It is natural that those who are already engaged in transportation will be opposed to it, and may even endeavour to ridicule the proposal. I believe that this western inland waterway will reduce freight costs from the prairie provinces, will accelerate development in northern areas, and will encourage production of minerals, as well as agricultural and forest products. It will open new frontiers to recreation and will encourage tourists to come to these areas. It no doubt will bring in much needed American dollars. In addition to this, it will shorten the distance for building roads to resources and will create substantial additional employment.

There are those who say that our population at present is too small for this type of project to be feasible. They say that when our population reaches 50 million this project will be both desirable and feasible. The population of Canada has now reached a total of 20 million people. From now on it will increase at a much faster rate than hitherto, and it will not be very many years until the population reaches the 50 million mark.

Where will this extensive growth take place? I believe it is a foregone conclusion that a lot of the growth will take place in the three prairie provinces. This is a natural area for industry to move to, and a western inland waterway will help bring about this expansion.

In the period from 1870 to 1917 the following boats travelled the Saskatchewan river system: the Northwest, the Marquis, the Northcote, the City of Edmonton, the Alberta, the Baroness, the Medicine Hat, the Manitoba, the Alberta, the Nipawin, the Strathcona, the City of Prince Albert, the Saskatchewan, the Lilly, the Commissioner, the Cumberland, the C. R. Smith, the Assiniboine, the Omega, the La Fleur, the Minnow, the Minasin, the Le Pas, the Notin, the Klondyke, the John Bull, the Archibald, the Sam Briskin, the Dispatch, the Emma E and The Pas. These boats ranged in length from 43 feet to 202 feet and travelled the river system without any expenditure for river improvement. Since some of them were 202 feet long they were not small boats, and they managed to travel the river system for all those years without any improvement being made to it.

An extensive detailed investigation to ascertain the feasibility and cost of providing a navigable waterway for vessels and barges from Edmonton to Lake Winnipeg was made between June, 1910 and October, 1915. The report of this investigation was submitted complete in November, 1917 by the chief engineer of the dominion public works department.

This report, based upon a minimum of six feet of water at mean low water levels from lake Winnipeg to Edmonton, estimated the cost as follows: dredging and channel improvement, $6,200,000; seven locks and dams, $14,565,591; for a total of $20,765,591.

When this report was received world war I was in progress. Then came the post-war years, and subsequently the second world war, but still no action was taken on the report. In those years, and up to recent times, the prairie region was mainly a grain economy, but now western Canada is becoming industrialized and this industrial development will grow at a rapid pace. It is therefore essential to have competitive transportation systems which will be able to provide low-cost transportation services. In my opinion a multi-transportation service will be needed to serve the needs of the people, and this will include truck, rail, air and waterways.

Navigable Waterway in Western Canada

Following the second world war, tremendous developments of waterways have taken place in the United States, in Europe, and in other parts of the world. The St. Lawrence seaway was built after world war II which now permits ocean liners to sail from Fort William and Port Arthur. In the United States the Mississippi river system has been developed into an inland waterway; the Missouri river is now an inland waterway. Another tremendous development is the Ohio river navigation system of 981 miles, with 53 locks and dams. Towns along these waterways have increased in size and have prospered.

Travel on inland waterways in Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the Netherlands, the U.S.S.R. and other countries has increased considerably since the end of the second world war. Recently, new inland waterways have been developed in Italy, Germany, France, the U.S.S.R., Luxemburg, and so on. The Moselle waterway, a 170 mile link between the steel producers of Lorraine and the Rhine, was officially opened in the spring of 1963. The construction of the waterway was an engineering feat of some note and the cost was shared by three countries—France, West Germany and Luxembourg.

This inland waterway enabled the French steelmakers to ship steel to prospective customers in southern Germany more cheaply than before. It also enabled them to bring in coal by barge from the Ruhr area and the Dutch ports and this means lower freight rates. This inland waterway is helping the economies of the three participating countries.

The proposed inland waterway from Winnipeg through Selkirk to Edmonton is approximately 1,200 miles. We are not talking in terms of seaway similar to the St. Lawrence seaway. The inland waterway which we are proposing would be suitable for tugs and barges.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question. I am sorry I missed a portion of his address. Could he repeat what average drafts he would anticipate for the channel, compared to those in the United States and in Europe.

Mr. Stefanson: These all are different types and some of them are shallow draft of eight feet or so. They are used by barges, including the new type of push-barge. They are operated under shallow draft of anywhere from six to ten feet, the same as in this waterway I am proposing.

During the past six or seven shipping seasons, there have been modern tugs and modern barges operating on lake Winnipeg. I am told that this is the most up to date equipment of this kind anywhere on the North American continent. This equipment moved a large volume of material and equipment during the construction of the Grand Rapids hydro power development. During the past two or three seasons, this equipment has moved considerable pulpwood to the pulp and paper mill at Pine Falls, Manitoba, located on the Winnipeg river. This equipment has hauled pulpwood from along the Nelson river and has gone approximately 60 miles beyond Norway House. This type of equipment would be ideal for operating on an inland waterway such as the one I am proposing. It is capable of moving a great deal of freight and can be operated on an economic basis.

With the limited time at my disposal, I am unable to go into any great detail regarding the construction of this proposed waterway nor have I time to deal with the commodities which can be transported along this waterway. I am convinced that such a waterway would provide a low cost transportation system which would be of benefit to the Canadian economy as a whole. I would suggest, wherever future hydro developments take place, that provision be made that all these rivers will likely be water routes in the not too distant future.

Speaking in the House of Commons on February 19, 1962, page 1031 of Hansard. I said the following:

Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a copy of the Selkirk Enterprise dated March 8, 1961. The heading on page 3 is "Cunningham Visualizes Edmonton to Selkirk Water Highway."

Mr. Cunningham is a resident of Selkirk, Manitoba, and until his recent retirement was in charge of all dredging operations for the federal government in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Cunningham, when speaking to the Selkirk chamber of commerce, outlined his plan for a water highway from Edmonton on the Saskatchewan river to Grand Rapids, down lake Winnipeg and up the Red river to Selkirk and Winnipeg. It was evident that Mr. Cunningham was talking about a subject with which he is familiar, and also that he has carried out a great deal of research work on this topic. It is also a topic in which he believes, and he feels it would be practical to make it a reality.

Whenever new ideas are advanced there are some who immediately say that those ideas are ridiculous and nonsensical and that the man responsible for them is a day dreamer. I am sure that when the St. Lawrence seaway was suggested there were those who said the project was nonsense. After the idea had been advanced it no doubt took a long time to stir up interest in it and to convince people of the possibilities. Later, extensive surveys were required to determine whether the project would be of sufficient benefit to warrant the spending of public money. I have no quarrel with that. I do think it is important that this type of project be given careful study. I agree one has to be convinced of the over-all benefit to the country as a whole before public moneys are spent. I merely point this out because I am sure that throughout history whenever a progressive idea has been advanced there were those who referred to it as absurd. However, one should remember that the man advancing the idea has given study to the topic while those who criticize have usually not given the matter any thought or consideration, which is why they offer the kind of criticism I have mentioned. I am one of those who believe that whenever someone suggests a project, particularly when that project is imaginative and visionary, one should look at it carefully and give it every consideration.

The suggested program of Mr. Cunningham is one which, I believe, comes in that category. It certainly is imaginative; likewise, it is visionary. One can visualize this type of project leading to the development of the northern ports of the three prairie provinces. It is essential that we should provide all practical forms of transportation. Since Canada is a growing nation with an expanding economy and the likelihood of a greatly increased population in the years to come, I think it will be desirable to have varied forms of transportation so as to serve Canadians wherever possible. The presence of rail, freight, truck transportation, air lines and water transportation would tend to establish competitive freight rates which could not help but be beneficial to people in general.

[Mr. Stefanson.]

I still hold the views which I expressed on that occasion and firmly believe that the time has come for the government to explore the cost and the feasibility of such a waterway.

I want to read one of the letters I received after distributing the brochure prepared by the Selkirk Chamber of Commerce. It is from the minister of public works of that time, and is as follows:

I was very interested in the brochure enclosed with your letter of March 15, 1962, describing a waterway between Winnipeg, Selkirk and Edmonton. Mr. J. F. Cunningham, the author, was an employee of the department for many years until his retirement a year or so ago.

The improvement of the various waterways of Canada is of continuing interest to myself and the members of the department. I have watched with interest the increasing use of such rivers as the Mississippi, Missouri and Ohio rivers of the United States and the rivers of Europe, where barge traffic has become a very important element in the national transportation system.

There appears to be two main requirements for an economic use of river waterways; these are, a large population and a mature industrial development. I am certain that in the future the area which would be served by the proposed Winnipeg-Selkirk-Edmonton waterway will have a large increase in population with many industrial centres.

When this has come to pass, I am sure that the vision of the Selkirk Chamber of Commerce and the people of the west will have become a reality.

In this letter Mr. Walker refers to two main requirements for an economic use of river waterways—a large population and a mature industrial development. We are gradually approaching both these requirements. We can dream a little further and again, looking into the past, we will realize that Selkirk and Winnipeg need not be the eastern terminal of this inland waterway. With channels of 100 to 150 feet wide having a mean depth of six to eight feet, large loads can be taken clear from lake Winnipeg to the Great Lakes via the routes of the old explorers, up the Winnipeg river Lake of the Woods system to the Great Lakes.

One can dream a little beyond even that and envisage the day when a seaway will also be built down the Nelson river to connect Hudson bay and Lake Winnipeg. Then western Canada would be connected by a seaway to the Atlantic ocean and Hudson bay.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I wish to quote from an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press in March of this year under the heading "Winnipeg Seen as Seaport". The article reads as follows:

By the year 2000 large ocean-going ships could be loading cargo at the port of Winnipeg.

In fact Winnipeg might well be the busiest seaport in the western hemisphere, with water traffic pulling into her docks from the south, north, east and west.

According to Edward R. Trapnell, of Washington, D.C., a consultant on water policy for the Ralph M. Parsons Co. of Los Angeles and New York, a $100 billion water conservation and distribution program for North America could result in several Canadian inland cities becoming water transportation centres.

Mr. Trapnell spoke in Winnipeg at the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce national farm and business forum in March of this year. He dealt with a massive North American water and power project conceived by engineers of the Ralph M. Parsons Company. Mr. Trapnell dealt with the need for making use of all the fresh water instead of having it drain into the Arctic ocean. He said it made sense to start planning now, that if this proposed project were completed, Canada would be in a position to sell water and power south of the border, irrigate large areas of the prairies, have inland waterways for transportation and have increased recreation areas.

I urge the government to make the necessary plans now, to be ready to undertake the construction of this proposed inland waterway just as soon as our population and industrial development make this project feasible, which will be of economic benefit to the people of Canada.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to compliment the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stenfanson) upon introducing this private members' notice of motion. I think the government should consider the advisability of establishing several inland waterways, and studies to this end might well be launched soon. However, I would urge that there are other priorities, and I want to speak briefly this afternoon about other waterway developments which I think are more important to the country. They are certainly more important from an economic point of view and would affect many more people in the short run.

I want to speak essentially about waterways which would be utilized by small pleasure craft, and to a lesser extent by small craft used by fishermen and other types of commercial operators.

For many years, indeed for many decades in the United States the federal government of that country has taken a determined and substantial interest in the development of what might loosely be referred to as small craft harbours and their development, and certainly in the construction of harbours of refuge along rivers, lakes, and the coast line of the United States. There is a very large population of small craft owners in the United States. Apparently one out of every three home owners in river or coastal locations, now has a small boat used for recreational purposes. These people spend a great deal of money on these boats, both in the purchase of them and in the maintenance and supplying of fuel and other materials.

This industry has grown to major proportions and is one which will become increasingly important in Canada. Some measure of the importance of it, at least in the eyes of the federal government of the United States, is indicated by the following figure. Last year alone the United States government through the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers spent $50 million in the construction of small craft harbours on the west coast of the United States.

On a pro rata basis, if Canada were to undertake a similar program of this kind on a proportionate scale, it would mean an expenditure of $5 million on the west coast of Canada. So far, at least to my knowledge, not one nickel has been spent on small craft harbour development on the coast of British Columbia, around the islands or on the mainland. I think this is very shortsighted.

A policy that was announced some years ago leading to a program under which some $200,000—not $200 million, but one thousandth of that—would be spent for works which would be of some benefit to small craft owners across Canada. This was the amount budgeted for this type of work all across the nation, and as I understand it much of that money was spent to build small craft loading ramps where small craft could be run down and launched or brought out of the water. A sizeable proportion of this money was spent in the Ottawa area and I have no doubt that the civil service, which is always on its toes in matters of this kind, did very well in this regard. We saw very little of that money on the west coast.

We need more facilities of that type, but that is not the type of facility which the government should provide, and in my opinion it is certainly not the type—

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. While it is true hon. members are allowed a great deal of latitude during the private members' hour, the proposition which is now before us relates to western Canada in general. If the hon. member wishes to go far afield of that subject, I suggest that he sponsor a bill in order that he may discuss the matter to which he is now referring. An hour is not a very long period in which to discuss the possibilities of a western Canada waterway, and I suggest to the hon. member that he direct his attention to that subject.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to do that, but in my opinion any waterway in this country will eventually link up with both our coast lines. We have a very substantial waterway along the west coast, between the islands and the mainland west of the mountains. I focus my attention on this area, because that is the area from which I come. What I say in respect of that area applies to the small craft industry anywhere in Canada.

The policy which was announced last year in respect of facilities for small craft, and basically apply also to small craft using inland waterways across the prairies, would also apply in respect of navigation through the lake areas, where harbours of refuge could be built. I think harbours of refuge would be an integral part of such a development.

I am not arguing for small boat loading ramps and so on, because they represent a very minor item, but I am arguing for federal money for navigation in respect of harbours of refuge, essentially, and the clearing of channels creating facilities which are in a sense an improvement on nature.

In the Vancouver area, for example, there are more than 50,000 small craft, the craft running up to as large as 100 feet in length.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As has been pointed out, the subject matter under discussion is an inland waterway from Winnipeg west by the Red river, lake Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan river. The Vancouver area, important as it is, does not come within this particular debate. I suggest that hon. members be restricted to this subject because there are other members who wish to speak about it. If any government member is afraid that this subject will not be discussed for the complete hour I can assure him that it will, but let us confine our remarks to the subject now before us.

Mr. Davis: Let me continue to refer to the policy announced last August by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and subsequently detailed by the federal Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith). This policy relates to the construction of facilities which could be built on inland waterways. I know that there are a number of members interested in projects of this type which could be located on inland waterways.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The notice of motion before us refers to an inland waterway from Selkirk to Edmonton. That is the subject of this debate and we ought to stick to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. The hon. member has heard the observations of several members of this house. While he obviously wishes to speak in general terms about inland waterways I think he is going beyond the terms of this motion, and suggest that he confine his remarks to the subject immediately at hand.

Mr. Davis: I agree, Mr. Speaker; but perhaps you will allow me to complete my reference to the policy announced last August and let members then judge whether the proposed items would be of interest to or associated with inland waterways.

I contend that these projects are precisely the type in respect of which private enterprise, the public, in the sense of municipalities and provincial governments, would benefit in terms of not simply thousands of dollars, but millions of dollars from the federal treasury in dredging and the construction of breakwaters. These works are part and parcel, certainly, of inland waterways, particularly where they cross large lakes, and this type of investment is essential. This is one way—it may not be the most substantial way but it is a significant way—in which the federal government of Canada can assist inland waterway development.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I would suggest that this policy can also be used in helping to improve our existing—some of them ancient—canal systems, which could be eventually used as toll facilities, if you like, used largely by pleasure craft. I suggest this will be the principal source of revenue of many future inland waterways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I think the hon. member is indulging in a debate in general terms in connection with inland water policy, and I think he should speak specifically to the notice of motion that is now before the house.

Mr. Davis: Then I will be quite specific, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: The Liberal party had better recognize the prairie provinces for once.

Mr. Davis: I have mentioned the $200,000 ramp program, which is ancient and not effective. The second proposal—and I am quoting from the announcement of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) of last August—is:

> Where an economic appraisal of present and potential traffic requires the development of additional harbour facilities, the federal government is prepared to undertake the construction of navigation facilities, such as breakwaters to protect shore installations and the dredging of main channels in harbour areas.

Surely this has relevance to waterways anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has set out deliberately to abuse the privileges of the house. He is defying Mr. Speaker's ruling. He is talking about harbours and such matters in connection with an inland waterway, and he is making no secret of the fact that he is defying the Chair.

Mr. Davis: I will leave it to the Chair to decide whether I am defying Your Honour's prerogatives. I certainly do not wish to do that and I will abide by any direction you may give me, Mr. Speaker. The third proposal is:

> The provision by the federal government of capital works would be contingent on firm commitments by other interests to the establishment of onshore facilities, such as wharves, marinas, living facilities and municipal services such as roads, water supply and power as well as the provision of sites where required for the area development.

Then this is another item.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I cannot see how he can relate these remarks to the specific notice of motion that is now before the house.

Mr. Churchill: Recognize the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Davis: Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me deal quite specifically with the waterway across the prairie provinces.

Mr. Churchill: Which is a Liberal desert.

Mr. Davis: I realize that there have been many proposals along these lines, and increasingly in recent years an interest has been expressed in this regard both in Canada and from south of the border. I refer for instance, to the so-called Parsons plan, the NAWAPA project, the North America Water and Power Alliance proposal, which is little more than a sketchy plan; it is actually a public relations effort on the part of a large engineering firm based in California. This envisages a waterway for carrying commercial traffic, freight as well as smaller craft, across the prairies. I think this plan suggests that in the long term it would involve transportation by water right across Canada of traffic of this type.

This is a visionary proposal and I doubt very much whether it will ever be implemented in anything like the detail that is suggested by the plan. But personally—and I think the hon. member for Selkirk would agree—we should be looking at possibilities like this. I do not mean that we should be looking at the water export aspects of the NAWAPA plan very seriously, but certainly we should contemplate other benefits which will result from the development of rivers on the prairies. We should be considering the navigational benefits, as well as schemes which might take some water from power production, and make available improved irrigation facilities, because I think these will be essential in the long run. I believe the federal government would be very remiss if it did not seriously consider, even in its earliest exploratory studies, long term possibilities of this kind.

Perhaps I might conclude, Mr. Speaker, by again saying that the hon. member for Selkirk has brought a very important topic to the attention of the house. I have veered off in the direction of smaller craft and smaller people, but I believe that small people as well as big people, small interests as well as big interests, will also use navigational facilities of this type.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. Johnston: If the hon. member is so interested in small facilities and small people, I wonder if this means that the Department of Public Works is about to reverse its decision not to reconstruct the wharf at Canoe on the Shuswap lake.

Mr. Davis: I do not have any intimate knowledge in this connection, but I certainly hope the department reverses its decision in respect of a breakwater in my area which I deem to be essential to protect life and extend the waterway away up our west coast. The cost would be a quarter of a million dollars, but it would be a quarter of a million dollars well spent, especially when one compares this development with, for instance, the Centre for the Performing Arts on Elgin street in this city, or the marina to be included in the 1967 Exposition.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to identify myself with this motion. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) may live at one end of the waterway about which he talks, but I live at the other end, because the headwaters of the waters involved in this motion take their origin in my riding. Because of this, and because of my familiarity with the entire watercourse, I must give my support to this motion as being something that is very vital to the economy of western Canada.

I hope my remarks are more relevant than those of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis), and I would say to the hon. member for Selkirk that if all the consideration the government is going to give this motion has been indicated by the remarks just made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, we might just as well have gone on with the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Labour as they relate to the longshoremen's strike in Montreal.

Water transportation in our country has played a very important role in the past and I believe it is going to play an even more important role in the future. Whether we are discussing the NAWAPA plan or this motion specifically, I am sure that water transportation and the benefits that accrue therefrom will continue to play an important part in Canada's economy. I am thinking specifically of inland waterway systems such as that proposed in this motion.

I would say to the hon. member for Selkirk that I would have been more happy if he had proposed the other end of this system to be at the old fort of Rocky Mountain House, which was in existence long before Fort Edmonton, and was the western terminus of the old fur trade route and which will be the beginning point of the centennial canoe pageant which will start at Rocky Mountain House, in the foothills of the Rockies on the North Saskatchewan river, and end at Expo '67 in Montreal.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member how large the craft will be that get from Rocky Mountain House to Expo '67?

Mr. Thompson: I would say, very large. I happen to have paddled every foot of this route and can say that barges of considerable size could be moved up the river without even building any dam structures, which might be necessary farther down river as far as maintaining the necessary flow level in the river is concerned.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I would also say in this regard, however, that in the whole question of water conservation in the west, as water from the Arctic is diverted into the waters that go across the prairies, waters from the Peace river and from the Athabaska, which will form part of any over-all water conservation plan to the east are going to add to the flow of the water in this system we are talking about here. I believe that water conservation and water transportation are an integral part of the future development of our water resources. It is therefore imperative that the government of the day begin not only the specific co-ordination of water conservation but also the co-ordination of studies which relate to water transportation. I believe that the two are inseparable.

The historical past of Canada is inseparably linked with this inland waterway from Winnipeg to Rocky Mountain House. It was the highway in the early development of this country, as were the waterways elsewhere in the west and the east a century or two ago. It is true that down through the years the importance of water transportation to the economy of the nation tended to fade away. This is true as it relates to the building of the railroads. However, with the increasing cost of the operation of the railroads, with the increasing development of the west—and this applies not only to agriculture but also to the industrial development of the west—I believe that waterways such as this come right back into focus again.

I can only support the remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk—and I think we owe a debt of gratitude to him for bringing this up—that the government should initiate a study on this immediately, and that it should be co-ordinated with the study that is concerned with water conservation and which I hope is taking place in more than just the prairie provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak on this motion any longer except to add that I believe the subject matter of this motion is more important to the economy of our country, is more vital to the economy of western Canada, than any of us in this house really realize. If the reports that have been referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk could be studied by every member in this house, I believe that each one of us would realize just what potential is involved in this lake Winnipeg, North Saskatchewan and even South Saskatchewan water system.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government will take under serious consideration this study that is proposed. I am a little discouraged when I hear remarks like the ones we have just heard made by the preceding speaker, which tend to make light of or ignore the value of such recommendations. I must say to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) that I expected more from him as a westerner. Some of us who have been fighting for this kind of project and who have been struggling to get consideration from the government of Canada, to convince the people in the east that projects such as the Alaska highway are vital to the economy of the whole nation, find it difficult to understand why those who surely intimately and personally know the value of this project might not have taken a more constructive attitude. Nevertheless this does not detract from the importance and value of the subject matter of this motion and the recommendation by its mover that the government take serious consideration of the project.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise mainly to compliment the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) upon having introduced this proposal. I think it could be a very valuable one. In his notice of motion he asks the government to give consideration to the establishment of this inland or prairie waterway, and I think that is a most reasonable request. I would like to see the government take real notice of it and study it, particularly if it does so in line with an over-all study of our Canadian water resources and their employment. It may be that the hon. member's vision of Winnipeg's becoming a great waterfront metropolis may not be too promising, but I think we cannot be regional about this. I, as a member from British Columbia, would very much like to see the government give at least serious study to the hon. member's proposal. I am hopeful that it might come to some resolution this afternoon, so I will confine my remarks to what I have said.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it gives me considerable pleasure to support this motion from the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson). As you well know, I am the member for Athabasca. The Athabaska is the link between the proposed prairie waterway and the Arctic. Speaking of the present water system, I will say it is one of the longest river systems in the world, and I cannot exaggerate the importance of the Athabaska and the Mackenzie systems.

It was just 100 years ago on Monday that the first permanent settlers started the city of Prince Albert, which is approximately half way along this proposed waterway. I think the passage of this motion would be a very fine way of honouring these early pioneers. They did not lack vision or foresight. They certainly did not lack the courage to make the long and hazardous journey by water from Winnipeg to Prince Albert. It does not take a great deal of imagination to see that we have wasted this waterway, the first highway across the prairie. Now that water conservation has become so important to the whole of North America, I think we would be remiss in our duty to the coming generations if we did not take this step now, which is perhaps in some respects tardy, to preserve the great water resources which we have in the northern half of the American continent. Not only do we owe it to ourselves in Canada but the great republic to the south is already aware of the great danger in the present lack of water.

Not only do I support this as the water highway across the prairie, but I also think the waters of the Saskatchewan river are being wasted at the present time. They are flowing into Hudson bay quite unused, particularly with respect to power. Many years ago the city of Prince Albert went deeply into debt in attempting to dam the river just below Prince Albert. They were laughed at with scorn, in the same way in which this proposal was jeered at today in the house. And yet the engineers say now, some 50 years later, that had the city of Prince Albert gone ahead and dammed the North Saskatchewan river at La Coll falls, the whole economy of Saskatchewan might well have been changed.

I for one do not think we should wait until we have a complete plan for water conservation. Here is something which, with the outlay of a few million dollars, could repay us in water alone, not to mention transportation and power. Today water is a commodity, and we are certainly remiss in our duty if we do not take immediate steps to preserve this great waterway of ours.

I do not know whether Winnipeg will ever become a great ocean seaport, but certainly in a very few years, for the expenditure of a small sum of money compared with the results of extending the canal system across the prairies, we might have a link with Hudson bay. It is true that the present shipping season is short. This has been used as an excuse for not developing the Hudson bay route, so far as rail and ocean transport is concerned. I do not believe it is at all out of the way to suggest that the day is not too far off when we will see atomic energy being used to change the temperature of Hudson bay and this whole canal system. Then we can well imagine a shipping season of 10 or 12 months on this canal.

I do not want to be responsible for talking out this motion, which I think is a very important one. I would be pleased if the house would pass it. The motion does not commit the government to spending large sums of money unless they approve the project. Certainly I put it forward as a worthy project. I am sure if we pass this motion now people will look back and say that in 1966 we had the same vision our ancestors had when they first stopped off half way along this ancient waterway in the city of Prince Albert.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) for his patience and his determination in bringing this motion forward after waiting three years. It is a dream which may well come to pass within this century. The suggestion of an inland waterway from Winnipeg though Selkirk to Edmonton is not a new one. In fact it is an old idea which has been discussed and studied for a number of years. An engineering survey of this project was first made by the Department of Public Works more that half a century ago, during the years 1910 to 1914, as pointed out by the hon. member who introduced the motion. Then the first great war broke out and the scheme was abandoned for the duration of the war. Other things happened to curb the enthusiasm of those few who favoured the idea at that time.

However, the idea has persisted. The interesting scheme to pipe water across the prairies to the cities of Moose Jaw and Regina, which had been suggested by Professor Hind of the University of Toronto in the 1870's would have meant the construction of a dam and a diversion at the Elbow river. The possibility was envisaged of travelling by boat all the way from Winnipeg to Calgary. This proposal by Professor Hind was knocked out by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Then, there was the plan of Mr. John R. MacNicol, a member of parliament. His plan was to make the old fur trade route navigable for coal and oil transport which the hon. member for Selkirk seems to be advocating. In 1961 the premier of Manitoba requested a review of the information obtained in the survey made before 1914. The former minister of northern affairs and national resources also became interested in reviving the possibilities of the scheme.

This time the review concerned the engineering and economic problems associated with the canalization of the Saskatchewan river, was restricted, as was the original study, to a determination of the justification for a detailed engineering study including a field investigation, preliminary design and cost estimates. The conclusion reached in 1961 was that there would not be sufficient volume of traffic to provide significant transportation savings to set against the heavy capital and operational costs which would be involved for the federal government in the construction of such a waterway. The assessment showed, moreover, that road and rail transportation systems now in existence would appear to be capable of meeting foreseeable future requirements.

It must be remembered that the transportation facilities in the prairie provinces are vastly improved now over the facilities available in the early days of this century when this project was first suggested. Then, the railways and waterways were the main transportation systems. Now, the Trans-Canada highway provides a direct first class route for interprovincial truck and passenger traffic and our air lines offer speedy passenger, freight and air express service between all major points.

Although the 1910-1914 engineering survey was confined to the route from Edmonton to Winnipeg and did not investigate the potential of the South Saskatchewan for navigation, it is still considered adequate for determining the order of magnitude of the costs involved in developing either or both the north and south branches of the Saskatchewan river for navigation purposes.

At this point I had hoped, if time permitted, to quote from a reliable publication a summary of the potential and weaknesses of the Saskatchewan river, as it was at the time the survey was made and as it existed until recently prior to the advent of the building of the Saskatchewan dam. I think a recital of the history of this famous river's behaviour is useful for the purpose of our discussion which concerns, of course, whether or not such a scheme as envisioned in this motion is economically practical. Thus it can be seen that this proposal, if judged by the standards set for the original engineering study, appears to be reasonable for the probable barge traffic that might be expected to use the river today. These provide for a channel depth of six feet and a width of 150 feet. The original study estimated the costs of providing navigation facilities from Edmonton to Lake Winnipeg at approximately $20 million. Using the quantities and designs of the early study and revising costs to meet present day circumstances, it was estimated that approximately $100 million would have been the cost if the work had been started in 1961. It is extremely doubtful that present circumstances would result in a substantial downward revision of these costs.

One estimate made by a non-federal agency of costs for providing navigation facilities for lake Winnipeg to Empress on the South Saskatchewan river exceeded $250 million. This latter estimate, in the opinion of the engineers of the Department of Public Works, is excessive. It might be noted that one estimate is for a navigation route using the North Saskatchewan, and the other is for a navigation route using the South Saskatchewan. However, the review carried out in 1961 for the previous Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources found that it was reasonable to assume that a minimum cost of developing a navigation route originating on either the North or South Saskatchewan river and ending at lake Winnipeg would be in the neighbourhood of $100 million, and could possibly cost $250 million.

It follows that if the expenditure of $100 million cannot be justified on the basis of potential transportation savings, further study at the present time is not warranted. Let us look at the economic factors. The range of capital costs has been estimated to run from $100 million to $250 million. In the lower figure if amortized on a 50 year basis, the equivalent annual costs, including interest and amortization, would be some $5,500,000. On the higher figure, the annual costs would be $13,750,000.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. It being six o'clock, the hour for private members' business has expired.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, it is apparent the hon. member has gone to considerable lengths to prepare some valuable material on this subject, so I wonder if he could be granted just a few minutes at this time?

Mr. Churchill: Is he for the thing or against it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that the hon. member be allowed to continue?

Mr. Churchill: How much longer?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I am informed that the hon. member's speech will last for five minutes more.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I intimated, on the higher figure, the annual costs would be $13,750,000. Neither of these amounts include maintenance for operating expenses.

• (6:00 p.m.)

The physical capacity of the locks in the proposed system was estimated at nine million tons of freight annually, on the assumption of equal traffic in both directions. However, it would be possible to handle only 4.5 million tons one way, and it would be highly improbable that the locks would be in continuous operation. Therefore a more realistic estimate of the capacity of the system would be in the order of 3 million tons a year.

It appears that by far the greatest volume of traffic that would move on such a waterway would be bulk cargoes such as coal, petroleum products and grain. These would be the only ones having any possibility of economic movement on the waterway during the estimated seven-month season. As I said before presumably the main movement would be from west to east, with little apparent backhaul traffic in sight.

In connection with the movement of coal by barge along the proposed waterway, the Manitoba Hydro-Electric Power Board has estimated that in 10 to 20 years, the coal requirements for its Selkirk plant will average 1 million tons annually. This is assuming that natural gas would not provide a cheaper B.T.U. base—an assumption that is open to question. As to grain and petroleum products there is nothing to indicate at the present time that the proposed water system would be competitive with present rail rates for eastward movement.

Summing up, on the basis of these preliminary studies there would appear to be little justification for expenditures on works of the order of $100 million to $250 million in the interests of navigation on the Saskatchewan river. Hence it would seem doubtful that there is any reason to quarrel with the 1961 finding, which was that a large outlay on engineering investigations is probably not warranted at this time. If it is considered desirable some day to pursue the matter further it is believed that studies should be made first of all on the economic side and involve a more detailed analysis of traffic potential.

It may sound unpleasant to have to be realistic and dash cold water on such a romantic suggestion as a waterway through the heart of our great prairies. It would be much more pleasant to be able to agree with Professor Edward Kuiper of the University of Manitoba who, in a paper prepared for the 1961 Resources for Tomorrow conference said that a similar development would turn Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta into "the Garden of Eden of North America". Dr. Kuiper was of course referring not only to a waterway but to a full irrigation system that could be developed with it. Such a system, he said, would mean the end of drought for all time in the prairie provinces.

Dr. Kuiper's proposals were more ambitious than those of the hon. member for Selkirk. He also suggested the canalization of the Nelson river in northern Manitoba. Such a development, he said, would make it possible some day for Winnipeg residents to travel by boat deep into the heart of Alberta and, for a change, come back by a different route—through the Saskatchewan wheat fields to Hudson bay. He thought it would be a simple matter from a technical viewpoint to build ship locks in conjunction with future dams on the Saskatchewan and Nelson rivers.

However, the results of the preliminary investigations I have described to you indicate, I believe, that although it may be simple from a technical viewpoint, the capital expenditures involved would be very considerable, while the economic justification has not been firmly established in any of the investigations that have been carried out to date. In other words, there is little evidence to indicate that the results of the review carried out by the previous government in 1961 do not still apply.

Nevertheless, great changes have taken place in the prairie provinces in recent years in industrial and natural resources development, as well as in transportation. And in view of this growth and development, I would not want to suggest that the Winnipeg-Edmonton waterway will not be built some day, nor for that matter that even Dr. Kuiper's more extensive proposals will, in the light of future development of the west, prove to be impossible. I trust, none the less, that this is a dream that the hon. member for Selkirk will see come true in the end.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. The hour for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if we could know the order of business for tomorrow. Are we carrying on with the Department of Labour estimates?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Tomorrow we shall proceed with the estimates of the Department of Industry, Defence Production, Citizenship and Immigration, with Privy Council legislation, and with the Department of Veterans Affairs. We always reserve the right to change the order, if necessary.

Mr. Churchill: You do that in any case.

It being six minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

Thursday, June 2, 1966

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF FIFTH CANADIAN MOUNTED RIFLES

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery of members of the Fifth Canadian Mounted Rifles, here to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the death of their regiment's first commanding officer, Lieutenant Colonel George Harold Baker, M.P., killed in action on June 2, 1916.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REFERENCE OF REPORTS TO AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, by leave I move, seconded by Mr. Hellyer, that the following reports of the Canadian Wheat Board be referred to the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development: annual and supplementary reports of the Canadian Wheat Board for the crop years 1962-63, 1963-64 and 1964-65.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCORPORATE BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-191, to amend the British North America Act, 1867, (Canadian Bill of Rights).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the British North America Act, 1867, by adding thereto as part of the federal constitution, with regard to the powers of parliament, a Canadian Bill of Rights in substitution for the act of parliament, chapter 44, passed in the year 1960.

This latter statute has been to a certain point ineffective, from the fact that it is not part of the Canadian constitution and that its application has been rather limited because most of the time the decisions of the courts have been to the effect that its provisions apply only to legislation adopted by parliament since its coming into force.

Not only new legislation but that which is already on the statute books should be interpreted in the light of the principles which will be now contained in the constitution itself, and this is what the present measure seeks to achieve.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

PROVISIONS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY PROVINCIAL ALLOCATIONS, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of the whole at its next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canada Student Loans Act to increase provincial allocations for the loan year commencing July 1, 1965 and subsequent loan years by authorizing the Minister of Finance, on application by a province, to determine a supplementary allocation for that province in an amount not exceeding 20 per cent of the basic loan provision for that year and by increasing to $58 million the basic loan provision for the loan year commencing in 1965; and to provide also for a certain change in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH RESOURCES FUND

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES FOR HEALTH TRAINING AND RESEARCH FACILITIES

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee of the whole at its next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a health resources fund to assist provinces in the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions and for the appropriation in connection therewith of the sum of $500 million to be credited to the fund in such amounts as from time to time are required and to provide for contributions therefrom to the provinces; to provide further for the establishment of a health resources advisory committee consisting of 11 members and for the payment of reasonable travelling expenses of its members.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL SECURITY

USE OF R.C.M.P. FILES—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I stated yesterday I intended to do, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing an urgent matter of public importance, namely the misuse of secret files of the R.C.M.P. as evidenced by the public statement of Premier Lesage. He said that the R.C.M.P. security report on Mr. Vachon in the possession of the Quebec government, discloses him to be a security case. At the same time I would deal with the policy of the federal government in condoning the use of rumour and hearsay based on unproven police reports which libel the character of individuals unaccused by due process. This procedure invades despotically the legitimate rights of the individual to liberty under the law.

I do not have before me the French language version of this motion. As soon as I have it, I will make it available.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the right hon. Leader of the Opposition kindly address the house on the question of urgency of debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I will restrict myself entirely to the question of urgency. I should like to point out immediately that under our system of parliamentary government the preservation and maintenance of freedom, and any derogation from that freedom, are matters that are always urgent. Parliament will not, if it is true to its mission, allow bureaucratic practices to destroy the civil rights and the reputation of the individual. The urgency of this matter will be understood when I point out that unless this is controlled, McCarthyism and fear will be generated in the individual and, indeed, an intolerable invasion of human freedoms will result if security files can be used for political or personal vendettas.

The police state is the negation of democracy. Oligarchies of bureaucracy could, by using the security of the state as an excuse, permit the spoliation of character, the dearest possession of a human being. Discussion and public knowledge are the only recourse and protection against uncontrolled invasions of human freedoms.

It might be argued that this question could be dealt with when the estimates come up. Your Honour I am sure will agree that if a matter like this arose in the United Kingdom the procedure at Westminster would immediately assure that the government would make available time for an early discussion. Not having that same procedure here, the only way in which it can be brought before the house without delay is to move the adjournment, which I have accordingly done on the general ground that when serious invasions affecting the rights of individuals take place the house should give first consideration thereto.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be no doubt that the matter raised by the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is important and urgent. On the face of it there seems to have been a misuse of R.C.M.P. files, such a file having been used by the premier of Quebec to discredit Mr. Arthur Vachon, who was president of the Quebec provincial police association. It certainly would be a serious thing if in this country premiers or any other persons in government were allowed to use R.C.M.P. files in order to discredit organizations with which they had a difference of opinion. Therefore this is a matter of great import not only to this house but to the people of Canada.

It seems to me that the urgency of debate would lie in the fact that this motion will give the Prime Minister and the ministers more directly responsible an opportunity first to give the facts to the house and consequently to indicate when these files were made available to provincial authorities; and second, to inform us as to why they were given and what protection is provided by way of an insistence that these files shall be used only for prosecutions and surveillance under due process of law.

If Your Honour decides that this matter is sufficiently urgent to allow the government to make a statement, then we will welcome it. If Your Honour decides it is not of sufficient urgency to call for a debate of this kind, I certainly hope the government will either call the estimates of the Solicitor General or that the Prime Minister will provide some opportunity so he can assure the house and the country that there will be no repetition of what appears to have been a disgraceful misuse of public, confidential documents.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as to the urgency of debating the question raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, our group is wondering whether there really is any urgency, because we have heard Mr. Vachon state on television that he was postponing the matter till after the election.

It seems to me that, if there were any urgency, Mr. Vachon could have engaged immediate proceedings against the premier of Quebec. Now, he stated himself that he was postponing this until after the election.

We are also wondering whether the R.C.M.P. has not the right, indeed the duty, sometimes to provide some explanations or some evidence to the provincial police.

As reported by Le Devoir, the premier of Quebec merely says that the basis of his statements—and those are Mr. Lesage's very words—is the evidence provided by the provincial police. Have the provincial police received the information from the R.C.M.P.? If there lies the urgency, we believe it has no basis at this time at the point this matter has now reached.

That is why we do not see the purpose of the house adjourning its business to discuss this matter. Let us give time to the authorities to clear up the matter. Besides, it is not for this house, which has no evidence, to discuss this question at this time.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) because I am convinced that the matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is not only important but urgent owing to four reasons:

First, it is an exceedingly serious charge, as it is suggested—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. member that he must not deal with the issue itself but discuss the urgency of the debate and state whether it is urgent to postpone the ordinary business of the house this afternoon to discuss the matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Allard: I thank you for your advice. The issue is quite important and urgent and the discussion should start this afternoon. It is also urgent to initiate it for four main reasons.

First, because the accusation is of the utmost gravity. If there is to be respect for federal as well as provincial authority and if the people are to respect legal authority, such accusations involving the security of the state must be considered. The accusation made by the premier of the province of Quebec involving the R.C.M.P. and the Solicitor General, and the timing of such accusation during provincial elections in Quebec and within five days of the vote, is sufficient ground to state that there is urgency to debate the issue.

I would relate this accusation, Mr. Speaker, to another accusation, that of the fake certificates. It is urgent that this question be brought to light and that the house debate the question, not after, but before the vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please restrict his remarks to the question of the urgency of the debate.

Mr. Allard: That is precisely what I am doing, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect. If you will let me finish my remarks, my conclusion will prove the urgency of initiating a debate this afternoon.

In this regard I was making the comparism that this is exactly like in 1962, before the provincial elections. Serious accusations were made just five days before the vote.

The accusation made by the premier of Quebec is exceedingly serious for it involves the security of the state. In fact, it questions the authority of government, of the premier of Quebec and the respect of authority by the population.

This debate is urgent. If it is delayed or if consideration of the Department of Justice estimates is postponed until after June 5, I say this debate will not serve any useful purpose. The common good is at stake here and, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the motion of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I hope we will have the opportunity to debate the question this afternoon.

Unfortunately, I hear hon. members from this side of the house, who are unconcerned by the seriousness of the charge made—

Mr. Speaker: Order. At the present time the hon. member is straying away from the matter under consideration.

[English]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as you have stated, the issue to be decided is the urgency of debate. In order to deal with this point adequately I must put certain facts before the house very briefly. I wish to make it abundantly plain that no member of this government has communicated directly or indirectly with any member of the government of the province of Quebec in this matter, nor has there been any departure—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Solicitor General is absolutely out of order. If he wants a debate let us have a debate.

An hon. Member: You don't want to hear the truth.

Mr. Starr: Let the Speaker decide.

Mr. Speaker: There should be no debate on the substance of the matter. I believe that until now I have obtained the co-operation of other hon. members who have taken part in this discussion. We have limited the discussion to the question of the urgency of debate, and I am sure the Solicitor General will want to do the same thing.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I want to say, if I may, that there has been no departure from the normal practice.

Mr. Starr: Order.

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, he is defying the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will have to ask the Solicitor General to co-operate with the Chair. I have received excellent co-operation from hon. members of the opposition who have strictly limited their contributions to the urgency of the debate, which is not what happens all the time. Of course what I mean is that on this type of motion it is very difficult for hon. members to limit themselves to the question of urgency of debate. I am sure the Solicitor General will want to do the same thing.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, may I say with respect that the point I am making is that the urgency of the debate will depend upon whether there has been a departure from the normal practice. If I can establish—

Mr. Starr: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the argument the Solicitor General wants to present is to prove there is no urgency of debate.

[Mr. Pennell.]

I can say I have reached a decision now, and that is that there is no urgency of debate, so I do not think there is any point in the Solicitor General presenting his argument.

I have listened to the point raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. He knows, and we all know, in what circumstances the ordinary business of the house can be adjourned. It has to be a very specific matter of sudden emergency. I am not trying to minimize in any way the importance and seriousness of the subject matter raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, but to my mind it does not fill the requirements of the standing order and of citation 100 of Beauchesne. The point which has been raised is more in the nature of a grievance than the type of question which merits and warrants the adjournment of the ordinary business of the house. For this reason I have to rule against the motion.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, June 2, 1966

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 2nd June, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,

sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier

Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before calling orders of the day, in view of the fact that there will be royal assent I wonder whether the house might not now consider making an order to come back at seven o'clock this evening, in order that we might have a supper hour for a change.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): That meets with our approval, so far as the government is concerned. We will adjourn for private members' hour.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Skeena that after royal assent the house return at seven o'clock.

Some hon. Members: At eight o'clock.

Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we could not agree to that. We agree, however, to adjourning until seven o'clock, after the house returns from the other place.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There will be an order of the house to suspend private members' hour this afternoon.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Labour in a position now to give a more favourable report as to the probability of this calamitous strike in Montreal being brought to an end? If not, in view of the suggestion by the minister that some form of compulsory arbitration was passing through his mind regarding the settlement of strikes, does the government intend to take proceedings similar to those that were taken by the government of Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent during the period of office of that government?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate that the mediator is in session at the moment. My deputy minister is in attendance and is assisting him in the discussions.

With regard to the second part of the hon. gentleman's question, I think the house will recall that when my estimates were before the house last week I put forward not just one suggestion but others as well for the consideration of hon. members. If and when government policy has been decided with regard to this matter it will be announced.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. Having regard to the fact that this strike has now gone on for 22 or more days, and is paralysing this nation in certain particulars, when does the government intend to act?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the government has acted. If the right hon. gentleman has any constructive suggestions for further action they will be welcomed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You need the help.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the answer given by the Minister of Labour just now I will reiterate the suggestion put forward in the question. Also may I suggest that instead of the Minister of Labour calling the people involved together for two or three hours and then allowing them to go, he call them to Ottawa and under the collective bargaining procedure sit with them until a settlement has been reached. We used to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: I thank the hon. member for his suggestion.

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—R.C.M.P. REPORTS PROVIDED TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the great concern that has arisen out of the accusations made against Mr. Arthur Vachon with regard to the abuse of R.C.M.P. files to discredit him, and the concern that there might be a repetition of the abuse of such files, would the Prime Minister be prepared to make an early statement as to what guarantees he can give the house that there will be no repetition of this, and that files given to provincial authorities—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would limit his contribution to one question at a time.

An hon. Member: Based on the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Douglas: Then I will ask the Prime Minister whether he would be prepared to make a statement assuring the house and the country that there will be no repetition of any misuse of R.C.M.P. files by provincial authorities.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. the hon. member knows he cannot make a statement of that sort, or attempt to make a statement, while asking a question. The question is out of order on that score.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he would be prepared now or fairly soon to make a statement about the Vachon case.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider that last question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister give consideration to reviewing and examining the terms of reference of the commission which is going to look into the matter of security, with a view that there will be a special directive to the commission to consider the use which may be made of files such as have just been mentioned, also with a view to going into the right of remedy of those people who may have suffered from an improper use of such files.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the royal commission on security procedures will undoubtedly wish to go into matters of this kind and into matters which are of very great importance concerning security procedures. There is no doubt about that. At the last federal-provincial conference there was discussion between the federal government and provincial governments respecting the exchange of security information between police agencies.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister yet prepared to announce to the house the composition of that commission, and the date upon which it will commence its work?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. I would ask the Prime Minister how soon he hopes to be able to give the house the terms of reference, and whether the terms of reference will direct the commission in question to look into the matter of safeguarding such security records when they are placed in the hands of provincial authorities.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference which are now under consideration will, I assure my hon. friend, be wide enough to cover questions of security procedure.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the last one, and refers to the appointment of this commission dealing with security. Cannot the Prime Minister take the questions that have been asked as a warning that it is imperative for this commission to be set up immediately? Has he no idea when this commission may be announced?

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Pearson: I am as anxious as my hon. friend is that this commission be set up immediately and get to work, because it will take a long time for the royal commission to go into this matter in the thorough way it should be gone into.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General endeavoured to make a statement when I moved a motion to adjourn the house. I now ask him, has he been in touch with the premier of Quebec and the minister of justice of Quebec and asked them to explain how they came to say that Vachon was a security risk and that the R.C.M.P. report was before them when they made those statements?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that question should be asked at this time. To my mind the information the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is seeking now is not the sort that should be sought on orders of the day.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one last question. I should like to direct a very simple, perfectly straightforward and I think urgent question to the Solicitor General. Is there an R.C.M.P. file with respect to Mr. Vachon which was delivered to the attorney general of Quebec?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in discharging my responsibility I propose to follow the excellent example set by the hon. member for Kamloops in declining to say whether there is a file about any individual, what any file may contain and whether it was passed to anyone else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently the government has learned some lessons since the Munsinger case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister, in view of his most laudable expression of purpose in the administration of his department, has he got in touch with the premier of Quebec and the minister of justice of that province to complain about them having said that there was such a security file received from the R.C.M.P.? Has he condemned them?

Mr. Pennell: I did not say that, Mr. Speaker, but may I say that at appropriate times the manner in which information is exchanged between various law enforcement agencies is the subject of discussion between officials and responsible ministers.

WATER RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POLLUTION PROBLEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has the minister a report to make in connection with his attendance at the committee of the council of resource ministers, preparatory to a national conference on pollution to be held this fall.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): That conference was announced quite a long time ago. At the meeting in Winnipeg we reviewed the final arrangements for the conference to be held in October and November in Montreal. Most of the study papers are now with the secretariat and preparation for the conference is progressing quite normally.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question concerns the possibility of a further conference being held in 1967.

Mr. Pepin: I do not recall whether this was in the communiqué, but there is a possibility that following the pollution conference we may have a more general conference on water problems.

Mr. Hamilton: A further supplementary question. Will the minister assure us that there will be representatives of the various governments as well as experts at the conference in 1967?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this is not a very urgent question.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The question is urgent and I would direct it to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the house if he has received a letter from Hon. J. W. Gardiner, minister of resources for Saskatchewan, expressing the opposition of the Saskatchewan government to the export of Canadian water? If so, is this policy in accord with the proposed national water policy of the federal government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a matter of very general policy, and the question cannot be asked at this time.

[Later:]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to be clear as to the answer he gave to an earlier question. Did the minister say there would be a further conference of resource ministers at the time of the proposed conference in October and November? That is to say, will it be part of the same conference, or will there be a conference later in the year?

Second, did I understand him to say that the subsequent meeting will deal with the question of a national water use policy?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, one question which was debated was when this more general conference should take place, and it was decided that it should take place only after the conference on pollution.

Mr. Fulton: But immediately after, or later?

Mr. Pepin: No, a year or so after.

OIL

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In view of the opinions expressed yesterday by the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, is the minister giving reconsideration to the need for a revision of the national oil policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this is the same type of question and should not be asked at this time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I asked the Prime Minister whether he had ready the agenda for the federal-provincial conference to be held in Victoria on June 16, and he said that it would probably be ready by Wednesday, yesterday. I wonder whether it is now available to the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did have it ready yesterday, but I do not think my hon. friend was in the house when I was in a position to give a reply. Therefore perhaps he will forgive me if I am a day late in respect of that reply, which is to confirm what is already known to the house, that the federal-provincial conference will take place on June 16 and 17 as part of the commemoration of the centenary of the union of British Columbia and the island of Vancouver.

The main item on the agenda will be the question of federal assistance to university financing. None of the provinces has proposed that any other item be added to the agenda although they, as well as the federal government, will still be free to raise in the usual way questions of particular concern to them under the item "Other Matters".

As the conference will be only a day and a half in length, and part of that time will be devoted to ceremonials, it is not likely that we would have much time to deal with other matters because one item on the agenda is of such great importance.

Perhaps the house would be interested to know that my colleagues the two ministers from British Columbia will represent the federal government with me at the various ceremonies. In view of the nature of the agenda other federal ministers attending will be the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State, the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the nature of the occasion for the holding of the federal-provincial conference, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether any representatives of the government of the Yukon and Northwest Territories have been extended an invitation to attend?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to look into that.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. gentleman a question concerning education. Will the discussion include discussion of the program of scholarships and bursaries?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that matter will come up during the course of the discussion, but the main subject on which the provinces would like to have a decision reached at this particular meeting is aid to education apart from scholarships and bursaries, though that matter will undoubtedly be discussed too.

[Mr. Brand.]

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it that the matter of bursaries and scholarships will not necessarily require the consent of the provinces?

Mr. Pearson: It will not necessarily be settled at this particular conference. It is a matter, of course, primarily for the federal government.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR GREATER USE OF ALTERNATIVE SHIPPING ROUTES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance in his capacity as the minister under whose jurisdiction the Canadian Wheat Board comes. Would the minister impress upon the wheat board that they should ship more grain through Churchill, Hudson bay, and Vancouver so that the carryover for this crop year will not be as large as it seems it is going to be? Will he impress that on the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made representations of a general nature which I assume the minister has noted.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, this question is urgent.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION REGULATING PRIVATE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has indicated that he is considering a list of business for the house to deal with before a possible summer recess, can the Minister of Finance say whether the proposed legislation respecting the regulation of pension plans which come under federal jurisdiction will be included in that list?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know I have placed this before the Prime Minister. What disposition he and the house make of it is really not in my power to say.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister say what he has done with this very justifiable request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to my hon. friend—I know his interest and patience in this matter—that I hope to be in a position at the beginning of next week to make a statement on the proposed legislative priorities.

SHIPPING

FAILURE TO PROVIDE PILOT FOR RUSSIAN VESSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport of which I have given him notice. Did the St. Lawrence river pilotage service fail to supply a pilot for the passenger liner Alexandr Pushkin last evening for the Quebec-Les Escoumains passage, thus compelling the ship with over 700 people on board to proceed to sea through the night without pilotage service?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. and patient member for Royal for giving me notice of this question. In view of the fact that a question of safety may be involved I think I might be permitted to read the information I have been given on the subject because I have no information of my personal knowledge, as hon. members will readily understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, any pilotage I have been doing lately has been done here in Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I apologize to hon. members for taking up the time of the house with these diversions.

When a pilot was requested to conduct the Alexandr Pushkin from Quebec to Les Escoumains the dispatcher assigned a pilot to the vessel expecting him to board the ship in the normal manner by taking the pilot boat from its usual berth. The pilot at the request of the ship's agent, went to Lauzon where alternative boat facilities apparently had been arranged. We understand the pilot was persuaded by officials of the corporation of pilots for the lower St. Lawrence to return to the normal boarding station. There he was met by a picket line which prevented his boarding the pilot boat.

No one from the pilotage authority gave any order cancelling pilot service for the Alexandr Pushkin or for any other ship. Except for two isolated instances on Monday, May 30 there have been no other cases of this sort of interference.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is picketing still in existence, and could this occur again?

Mr. Pickersgill: In the city of Quebec?

Mr. Pugh: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The information I have is that at the present moment there is quite a good deal of mass picketing, or there was earlier today.

Mr. Pugh: Then are steps being taken to see that pilots will be put aboard vessels?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be permitted to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is my understanding that the National Harbours Board is seeking an injunction to have legal picketing only permitted at Quebec from now on.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR INCREASED GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is based on the announcement made by the Prime Minister yesterday with regard to impending legislation affecting medicare, and is addressed to the Minister of Industry who has responsibility in this house for research matters. Will the government seriously consider increasing its assistance to medical research, thereby helping to keep teaching staff and doctors in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is of a very general nature and I suggest it ought not be be asked now.

Mr. Grafftey: There is a shortage of doctors facing the nation, and I cannot see that anything could be more urgent.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the difficulty might be removed just as quickly if the question were placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING PROGRAM ON YOUTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is prompted by complaints I have received about what appears to have been a highly licentious program depicting sex and morals among our young people, which was broadcast last Sunday night at ten o'clock. How many complaints has the Prime Minister received about this program, and will he undertake to look into the matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest this question should be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—REPORTED COMPLAINT AGAINST CAMPAIGN IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has a statement been received by the Canadian embassy in Moscow protesting what has been described as an anti-Soviet campaign in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubts whether this question should be allowed at this time.

SOUTH AFRICA—REFUSAL TO ADMIT CANADIAN NEWSMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. The report that a Canadian newsman is one of four people who have been refused admittance to South Africa is a matter for concern. Can the Prime Minister tell us the name of this newspaperman, and is the government taking any action with regard to the incident?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question is of such urgency that it should be asked or answered at this time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENTS UNDER PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister inform the house whether payments under the proposed Canada Assistance Act would be greater than payments under the Canada Pension Plan during the transitional period before the plan matures?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt whether this question is extremely urgent. The hon. member might place it on the order paper or, if he thinks there is urgency, it might be debated on the adjournment motion.

QUEBEC—ANIMALS IN TRANSIT LEFT UNATTENDED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister ask his officials to look into press reports that animals in transit at the ports of Montreal and Quebec have been left unattended as a result of the strike, and are facing starvation?

Mr. Speaker: The minister has noted the suggestion made by the hon. member.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING INTEREST CHARGED BY BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the country is anxiously awaiting the presentation of legislation affecting the interest rates which banks can charge on ordinary loans, can the minister advise the house what progress is being made with such legislation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): As the house is well aware, the revisions of the Bank of Canada Act have been presented and it is our intention to present legislation providing for the revision of the Bank Act which deals with this question.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

In view of the fact that Canadian businessmen suffered losses of one half billion dollars in bankruptcies in 1965 and that the government, for its part, lost $150 million in revenue, can the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question—

Mr. Latulippe: It seems to me it is urgent since the government itself lost $150 million—

Mr. Speaker: I do not object to the question. I suggest that at this time the hon. member should put a question and not allege facts.

Mr. Latulippe: Can the minister advise the house what progress he has made with his representation in this regard?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice is well aware of the problems caused by bankruptcies, and I intend to make a statement in this regard during consideration of the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question. Can the minister or his colleague, the Solicitor General, confirm that the R.C.M.P. is continuing general investigations into bankruptcy frauds at the moment?

Mr. Pickersgill: Another leading question.

Mr. Cardin: The R.C.M.P. has for a number of years conducted investigations into bankruptcy frauds, and is continuing to do so.

SPORTS

PAN-AMERICAN GAMES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED SUPPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Its urgency arises out of the construction problems and pressures involved. Has the minister this week received any further representations from Winnipeg seeking increased federal support for the 1967 pan-American games, and, if so, can he report the results of these consultations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

QUEBEC—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND WORKING CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Postmaster General, to whom I gave notice a while ago.

Has he received, in the last few days, a request stating the serious grievance of the Federated Association of Letter Carriers, Local 47?

If so, what emergency measures does the Minister contemplate to prevent the dispute from dragging on?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the grievance is based on claims for overtime pay. I have asked the representatives of the Quebec district to look into the matter and report to me.

[English]

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE MADE AVAILABLE THROUGH CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as the minister speaking for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In view of the rapid worsening in the home building industry resulting from the dearth of mortgage money, as evidenced for example in Toronto—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask a question.

Mr. Scott: I am attempting to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should remind the hon. member that according to the rules of the house questions should not be prefaced by statements of the type the hon. member is making now.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I naturally accept that ruling, though I was under the impression one had to preface a question in order to indicate that some degree of urgency was attached to it.

In any event, in the light of what I have said as to the worsening situation in the industry, is the minister now prepared to instruct C.M.H.C. to make available sufficient direct housing loans to the building industry to meet this critical and potentially dangerous situation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot possibly accept the inference in the latter part of the question, because I do not think the facts as stated, by the hon. member are accurate. No major change is expected in present policy, however.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to ask the minister whether he thinks 600 loans to home builders in the Toronto metropolitan area are sufficient.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Has the minister any evidence of C.M.H.C. contracts in the maritimes, apart from mortgage loans, being held up since the tight money policy was introduced? If so, what is the policy in this regard?

Mr. Nicholson: There is no information of any such difficulty in any part of the maritimes.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of the housing question in Canada, and in view of the fact that the Minister of Labour will obviously be preoccupied—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not asking a question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Then I will do so now. Would the Prime Minister give serious consideration to the creation of a separate ministry of housing under a full time minister?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the announced intention of a group of Irishmen from Buffalo to re-enact at Fort Erie the Fenian raid of 1866, does the government plan any emergency action to counteract this threat to our national security?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, would it be possible that when the gentlemen in question are visiting Canada they could be given a copy of Walter Gordon's "A Choice for Canada"?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is possible, Mr. Speaker. I will bring the questions to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and also to the management of the race track who, I am sure, will give the visitors a run for their money.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is in no way a criticism of you, sir. I know you have a difficult task on oral questions, but surely you have ruled some questions out of order which in the opinion of everybody in the house, had far greater significance than the one you have just allowed to be answered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I bring to the attention of the hon. member for Ontario that so far as I could see this was one of the last questions to be asked. I thought the hon. member for Welland was very patient to wait for over half an hour to be recognized, and it was the feeling of the Chair that since we had almost reached the last question a bit of levity might be in order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think levity in the middle would be just as welcome sometimes.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair suggests it would be welcome at any time.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN SETTLING LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the statement he made yesterday to the effect that the parties to the Air Canada dispute were meeting yesterday, has he any report to make on that meeting?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can only report that spokesmen for the parties, the president of the air line employees' association and one of the vice presidents of Air Canada, are in session at this moment, I believe, with one of the senior officials of my department in Toronto.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $6,795,400.

The Chairman: This item appears at page 178 of the blue book and was last under consideration on Friday, May 20.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I rise to voice my protest against the designated area policy of the government. In fact it is a policy which should not be entertained by the Department of Industry at all.

When making an assessment of any policy one usually divides it into two parts, one showing the advantages and the other the disadvantages. This I have done. In the advantages column the only merit of a policy of this type that I can see is that it provides a certain amount of relief to unemployment, which has nothing to do with the Department of Industry.

The disadvantages are many. The results of this policy so far as industry is concerned include discrimination between communities, patronage on a large scale, subsidizing inefficient operations, increasing the cost of production with increases in taxes for those who pay taxes, creation of municipal problems that did not exist previously, creation of new industrial problems that industry did not have to contend with previously, curtailment of the nation's natural economic development, an adverse effect on the problems of our competitive position with regard to world markets, a further contribution to the problem of inflation which the government is trying to combat and, lastly, such a program and policy hinder normal industrial development.

When the minister presented his estimates he stated some sound principles which we hoped his department would follow. I suggest to him that if his department had followed those principles in regard to the policy of designated areas I would not be standing on my feet today. The implication of such a designated area policy is actually contrary to the principles enunciated by the minister. The whole program of designated areas has the opposite effect to what the minister is trying to achieve, if we are to go by the principles he has outlined.

As recorded at page 5374 of Hansard for May 20 the minister said:

> The department was established in recognition of the pressing need for Canada to attain an efficient expansion of our manufacturing industries.

How can industry attain efficient expansion when the government bribes industries to locate in areas where it is less efficient for them to operate?

The reason I use the word "bribe" is that another hon. member, when speaking on the minister's estimates, said that in his constituency an industry had been closed because it refused to move to a new site in Montreal. This was said the last time the minister's estimates were before the house. It was stated that the industry in question would not be given contracts unless it moved to Montreal. If this is not bribery I do not know what is.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Another statement made by the minister was that "we must at the same time ensure that industrial efficiency improves". I suggest that the present designated area program does not lend itself to improved efficiency in any way. In fact, it is a retrograde policy delaying the improvements which industry realizes it must achieve for competitive reasons. A perfect example of such retrogression took place in my own community as a result of this ill-conceived policy. I believe the minister is aware of it. It has to do with an asbestos plant that was going to locate in my own constituency, indeed, in my own home town. The industry had decided to locate in this place because of three main factors, ample water supplies, ideal waste disposal facilities, and close proximity to the American market which it hoped to develop. However, because of a saving of half a million dollars, in fact, closer to three-quarters of a million dollars, I believe, in capital expenditure and because of the fast write-off, the industry located elsewhere as a result of the government incentive to do so.

It can easily be seen that the result in that case is contrary to the principle the minister laid down and will not bring about the improvement in efficiency he wishes to achieve. Certainly this industry cannot be as efficient in the new location as it would have been had it been able to locate where the three factors necessary to the industry were available. The industry, in order to take advantage of the incentive under this program, the $600,000 and the fast write-off, took a short-term view of its future and decided to locate elsewhere. I suggest to the minister that because of the designated area policy industry today throughout the whole of Canada is taking a short-range view with respect to location, which in the future could be detrimental to Canada.

In his opening remarks the minister also stated that the aim of the Department of Industry is to ensure that this influence is positive and helpful. I ask the minister to tell me, on the basis of his experience already with the designated area policy, helpful to whom?

Mr. Drury: To Canada.

Mr. McIntosh: In respect of the case I have just cited the minister has not been very helpful so far as our community and that industry are concerned. He certainly has not been helpful to the municipality affected because at the place where this industry was going to locate provision had been made to absorb the additional children there would be in that area. In the area where the company is now going there will be a great many problems. Problems are being created where they did not exist before. This may apply only to small communities, but if the minister wants diversification of industry this is where industry must go rather than be centralized in the large centres.

I suggest to the minister that it is not a positive program as has been stated by him, but a negative one. If the minister allows the designated area program to continue he will be creating new problems which some future government will have to solve. Possibly the minister has the idea that the present government is not going to be in office too long and is creating these problems for a future government. In other words, and I am not being facetious, I think the minister will realize that the problems I am outlining certainly will become major ones in the not too distant future. I say that if the minister was honest in his presentation of these estimates he would say that his designated area program was not designed to benefit industry in the first place. As I said before, the program is an effort on the part of the government to deal with the unemployment problem which should have been left with the Department of Labour.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

I would ask the minister and the government to study closely the words of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. The article in the Saint John Times-Globe of May 19, from which he quoted, referred to the Atlantic provinces but it could apply to the prairie provinces as well. It points out the harmful effect on communities, not only harmful at present but for the future also, of such a program. The article is worth repeating and I take the liberty of doing so now. The article reads as follows:

> Denial of the incentives is crippling the centres that could lead these provinces in an economic renaissance . . . Established industries have moved out of these centres to get aid; potential new ones have been lost. The cities are being bled in the name of healing and the whole region is weakened.

Former speakers have also stated, and I think the minister must have taken note of this, that the formula he is using is absolutely wrong. The last time the minister's estimates were before the house I believe the hon. member for Provencher said that the formula as the minister had enunciated it was not even being followed. As I understood the information given to the house, it was based on unemployment figures as well as family income figures.

Mr. Drury: Non-farm family income.

Mr. McIntosh: So far as I am concerned the formula is wrong because, as other members have pointed out, the unemployment and home income figures used do not apply in the same way in each province. In one example in respect of Manitoba I believe it was pointed out that in the case of one designated area where an industry was allowed to locate and get the incentives, the income figure was larger than in other areas in the same province. In my view the formula had not been followed in that instance.

Before these estimates are passed I hope the minister will give a commitment to the house that he will do away with this program at this time. If he would do so, I do not think he would have any difficulty in getting his estimates through.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, the minister's estimates are now before the committee and I intend to keep my remarks relatively brief and related to a subject on which I have been dealing with the minister for a number of months now. It is a happy coincidence that I can bring it up at this time because the minister has under his jurisdiction the National Research Council, the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Industry. These three agencies of government relate to the subject I wish to touch upon briefly this afternoon, a subject with which the minister has dealt ably in so many ways over the past months.

Research, the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Industry are all related to the problem of automobile safety and highway safety. Over the past months much has been done in these three departments in this regard. I repeat that I intend to keep my remarks on this subject relatively short this afternoon. I think all members of the House of Commons, together with the people of Canada, have come to recognize that the problem of automobile and highway safety and automobile and highway deaths and injuries constitutes a national and international epidemic. The automobile is the greatest killer of young people between the ages of 18 and 35 and the third greatest killer of all our people, exceeded only by heart disease and cancer. We recognize that we have an epidemic involving the driver as the agent, the road as the atmosphere and the car as the microbe, and that we must approach the problem in a scientific, epidemiological way.

There is a problem of jurisdiction involved, and the minister has mentioned this before various house committees. Provincial governments must educate better and safer drivers. They must continue to build better and safer roads and they must insist on regular and meaningful annual or semi-annual inspections of automobiles. While the federal government can help with uniform codes and take the lead in this regard with the approbation of the provinces, all these matters do fall under provincial jurisdiction constitutionally.

We are able to refer to this subject today during the consideration of the minister's estimates because I firmly believe that the federal government alone can bring the construction of automobiles under the rule of law. Whether we are talking about the matter in a legal or constitutional sense, certainly in a realistic sense the United States found that only the federal government can invoke uniform standards relating to the production of safer automobiles at the manufacturing level or on import. It is in relation to the minister's responsibility for industry that I refer to this subject under these estimates today.

I am fully aware of the fact that the classic role of the Minister of Industry is to assist and encourage industry to expand, develop and do a generally good job in Canada. In looking at things in detail one realizes that the Minister of Industry is placed in a difficult position, and I imagine the government has recognized the jurisdictional problem facing it in formulating mandates with regard to scientifically proven safety standards in the automobile industry at the production stage.

We have now reached the question whether it is the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Transport or the Minister of National Health and Welfare who should enforce standards. I say on an optimistic note that some agency of government is going to have to invoke mandatory standards of safety in the automobile industry within a very few months.

We have talked about what provincial governments can do. I firmly believe that if the federal governments of the United States and Canada live up to their responsibilities, with the co-operation of opposition members, the public and the industry, and state to the industry that it must put already scientifically proven safety features in automobiles at the production stage, this one step alone will cut highway deaths and injuries by 50 per cent. That does not mean to say that we should neglect the problems associated with developing better drivers, better roads and annual inspections of automobiles at the provincial level, but I wish to emphasize the real role the federal government must play in this regard.

I should like to congratulate the minister for the initiative he has already shown and for his efforts which have led to the convening of a conference of provincial authorities in the near future on the subject of automobile safety. I certainly hope that at that time the problem of jurisdiction can be ironed out. In my opinion it will be relatively simple to iron out the problem because the federal government already has jurisdiction over foods and drugs and in respect of issuing mandates as to safety standards for aircraft, ships and rolling stock on the railways. No matter what the constitutional or legal position is, I think it is going to be a relatively easy job for the federal government to get approbation from the provinces to act as a central authority with respect to mandates as to safety standards right across the nation in terms of telling the industry that it must put scientifically proven safety features in automobiles at the manufacturing level.

I want to note two recommendations contained in the brief in this regard which was presented to the Prime Minister after the terrible slaughter that took place on our highways last year on the July 1st week end. Before doing so I want to thank the members of all parties who have endorsed this brief and the people who spent so much time in researching it and helping me to put it together.

One of the recommendations was that the government act immediately to create and establish a national accident research centre. One reason we have made so few inroads in terms of combating this international epidemic is that we know very little about it. Once an accident has taken place we do not know too much about what has caused a death or injury.

What happened in respect of the air accident at Ste Thérèse a little over two years ago which killed over 100 people? We immediately roped off the site of the accident and, at a cost to the federal treasury of between $4 million and $5 million, we put the aircraft together bit by bit and held a judicial inquiry with the result that we got some information which will help us to reduce the number of similar accidents in the future.

Every holiday week end in Canada over 100 people are killed on our highways. Within 10 or 15 minutes of the accident the morgue wagon takes the corpses to a morgue or funeral parlour, as the case may be, and the automobiles are towed to the junk heap. We know nothing about what happened in terms of the reason for an accident which has caused death or injury. Not one cent of private or public money is spent on research to find out what happened. When we are travelling in aircraft—the minister and I have chatted about this—we are 10 times as safe as when we are travelling on the highways.

Mr. Drury: I think it is six times.

Mr. Grafftey: I suggest it is approximately 10 times as safe. Why is that the case? In Canada and in the United States millions and millions of dollars are spent on licensing safe pilots, building safe aircraft at the production stage and providing federal inspectors who tell the aircraft companies what safety features must be included in aircraft at the production stage, just as we do in respect of ships and rolling stock.

We spend millions of dollars in formulating and enforcing safe aircraft rules; yet the simple automobile, in which all of us here today will ride at some time or another, falls outside the rule of law. I do not believe that the people of Canada or the United States people are going to tolerate jurisdictional disputes between the provinces or states and the federal government while the automobile remains outside the rule of law.

[Mr. Grafftey).]

We have discovered that very little private money is being spent on research in this regard. In 1964 in the United States Senator Kennedy obtained information in the U.S. senate commerce committee to the effect that General Motors of the United States had made a profit of $1,700 million but had only spent approximately $1,250,000 on safety research.

What happened in 1952 or 1956—I am not sure of the year—in regard to polio? We spent millions of dollars on research in respect of the epidemic and had the co-operation of all governments, scientific people, legislators and the public. Yet even at its worst the polio epidemic only killed between 2 per cent and 4 per cent of the number of lives that are claimed annually on our highways. We spent millions of dollars in research in respect of that epidemic and we licked it. Yet we spend nothing to conquer the greatest killer of our young people and the third greatest killer of our population at large. We are going to have to increase our research spending in this regard and we must have a national research centre.

Would it be too much, for instance, to ask that before July 1 next we say to every police officer in Canada: Make a meaningful report on death-producing accidents. Tell us something about the driver. Tell us something about the immediate circumstances in which he found himself before he became involved in the death-producing accident. What kind of vehicle was he driving? Why did he get into the accident? What kind of road was he on? What caused death or injury to him?

We know nothing about these matters now. Would it be too much to ask that the wrecks of cars involved in accidents be brought to a national research centre and that photographs of these wrecks be taken. Various farsighted coroners throughout the North American continent descend immediately on death-producing accidents and get the real facts and meaningful data which show why the accident occurred and why injury or death was caused.

I believe that a national accident research centre, not only for research into automobile accidents but other matters connected with accidents, would go a long way to help us move forward in this regard. It is largely because of the little bit of research being done at the U.C.L.A., Harvard and Cornell crash research centres that I and many others interested in this field sincerely feel that if safety standards for automobiles were controlled by mandate at the production level, this would cut the death and injury rate by approximately 50 per cent provided the provincial authorities co-operate at the same time in the other areas of safety in terms of the driver, roads and annual inspection of vehicles.

The second suggestion I make is this. Today the minister has under his jurisdiction many officials who are drafting safety codes in the area of automobiles, roads, and drives. My remarks as a federal legislator will relate only to the automobile. These codes are now being drafted, as the minister has informed the house on many occasions, under the aegis of the Department of Defence Production. It is my impression that the sooner some public authority builds a prototype safety car the better.

I am not going into the question of blame. I feel that the industry in years ahead will sell just as many safe cars as it is selling stylish cars today. I believe that safety can be sold Whether it can be sold or not, I believe it is incumbent upon the industry in our modern society to include safety features in its products. I believe a prototype safety car must be built by public authority. Members might ask me why. I remember that when we testified in New York a few months ago, the same night the industry made the announcement relating to collapsible steering columns and double-braking systems in cars. No doubt this will be an advance in this regard. I am not competent enough, nor do I know enough about the details, to make an objective judgment on whether this will be really significant. But I will say, and not in a dramatic, accusing way, that I believe the advances we will see in the 1967 models have been known to the industry for approximately ten years.

Suppose the food industry tomorrow morning at nine o'clock said to the government: We will be good little boys and take a little bit of poison out of the food the public have been eating for years and years. Legislators and the public at large would then have the right to ask how much poison was in the food in the past and how much was to be left in it in the future. Until governments and public authorities set up criteria based on prototype standards which they develop and correlate, we cannot make a correct judgment in this regard.

People sometimes think it is dramatic to take the position of whipping the big boys in industry, but I am not trying to do that. But at the same time I do not think anything as important and big as the automobile industry can be left to police itself any more than we can leave the food and drug industries to police themselves. So I believe that, first, standards must be mandatory and must be based on code regulations. If these code regulations are to be really meaningful, they must be based on objective criteria put together by governments.

This is why I believe that a prototype safety car must be built by a public authority. I would encourage the minister to do everything humanly possible to take the lead in this regard and offer Canadian aid, whether by direct financial assistance or co-operation by the National Research Council in respect of research projects, to bring the New York prototype safety car project to a successful conclusion as soon as possible.

I have referred to the New York prototype safety car. Many people ask me, "Why can't we do it in Canada" or, "Why can't it be done somewhere else?" Mr. Chairman, highway and automobile safety know no party or national boundaries. It is an international epidemic that we face. In my view the government of the state of New York is the only one in the western world that has made any real advances in terms of bringing such a car to completion. It has spent a couple of hundred thousand dollars in getting feasibility studies through the lower and upper houses in New York state and having them approved. It is interesting that an aircraft space agency has the contract to build the first seven prototype safety cars and crash them. I appeal to all hon. members; Let us move in this regard.

We are living in 1966, a year in which we can put men into orbit around the earth and bring them back, when we can almost put them on the moon and bring them back in safety. Yet we permit this slaughter to continue on our highways. Can we not stop it? I think we can if the government acts, and it can act even before Washington. Everybody says: Does it matter what Canada does? The United States will do something in this respect and whatever they do will affect us. I think we hold—the minister can correct me here if I am wrong—between 7 per cent and 10 per cent of the North American automobile market. If the government and the minister took the lead in this regard the industry would pay a great deal of attention.

In the United States, the G.S.A. fixed standards in this respect. The federal government there purchases approximately 50,000 to 55,000 vehicles a year. By fixing standards for government-purchased vehicles the United States woke up the industry. Surely if Canada co-operated with New York, which has a population almost as large as that of our country and involving about 20 per cent of the automobile market, we would certainly make the industry look up and take notice.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is imperative, first that we move quickly to establish a national research centre of this type and, second, that we co-operate as quickly as possible with New York in the completion of a prototype safety car. Canada can take a real lead in this regard. Would it be too much to ask that this be done? Have we not the technical know-how to conduct meaningful research at the present time if we from next January 1 collect all automobiles that are involved in death-producing accidents and tell police officers to give us the type of meaningful report to which I have referred?

Police officers have a very difficult task in this regard. When a car is involved in a death-producing accident the police officer usually has several important things to do. He has to get the body to the morgue and the automobile off the road so that traffic may start flowing again. Under present-day circumstances it is almost too much to ask him to fill out a meaningful report which would help us correlate and centralize data that we could use in research. I want to congratulate some of the more forward-looking coroners and police officers in Canada who are making initial and pioneering attempts in this regard. Some day we will have ratings for automobiles, whether the industry likes it or not. When we buy an automobile we will know which are safe and which are not as safe. Police officers will look at cars that have caused a death and note the mileage. They will record how many miles the car had been driven and how many such vehicles were sold and registered at a particular time. We will have safety ratings on cars.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

People have come to me and said, "Grafftey, you are crazy. If I want to drive an unsafe car, that is my business in a free world." It is nobody's business in a free world to drive an unsafe car. You can kill yourself if you want to but you cannot go out on the highways and kill innocent women and children who may be involved in an accident with you. When we consider that 87 per cent of all injury and death-producing accidents occur at speeds under 45 miles per hour, it is my belief that the federal governments of Canada and the United States have a real role to play in bringing the automobile under the rule of law immediately.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The minister has already done much in that respect. I repeat that it is my belief that the next two things to which priority should be given are the establishment of a national research centre and the completion of the building of a prototype safety car. I am sure that as we move ahead in this regard the minister will have the co-operation of every member of the house.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have been quite impressed by what has been said by the member for Brome-Missisquoi on the subject of automobile safety. It is something to which most people do not give much consideration until it is too late. It is too late to do anything after a calamity has befallen you or a member of your family has had a bad accident.

In his book Ralph Nader states facts implicating the automobile industry in abuses. I was particularly impressed by the example he gave of a woman driving down a street in a Corvair at a speed of less than 30 miles an hour and the car went out of control and rolled over. She lost her arm as a result. All this happened when she was driving at a speed at which one would have said it would be impossible to upset a car no matter what one did. Everyone who reads this story will probably think immediately of the criminal negligence that must take place in the automobile industry.

Of course most people do not think about safety. I presume if we really considered it seriously we would not drive. We are all aware of the fact that when you drive down a very busy highway and see an ambulance and a number of vehicles around a bad accident, traffic slows down to a crawl for 10 to 20 miles. But memory is very short and soon thereafter the previous speed is resumed.

At one time I was driving a new Meteor in northern Ontario on roads that were mainly unpaved. Most of the time I drove at high speed. Every 200 or 300 miles I had to stop at a garage and have the shock absorbers in the rear end of the car repaired. One day the mechanics fixed the shock absorbers—they welded in new plates and tore pieces out of the frame, etc.—and after they put the car back together I noticed that the shock absorbers did not extend sufficiently to allow for a connection. Actually they did not have enough distance between them to allow for full play and every time the springs extended to their full capacity the shock absorbers proved to be about four inches too short. In discussion with the representative of the Ford Motor Company I found out that this was certainly a problem but it was not the responsibility of the company to do something about it. What had happened was that the model had been changed and the shock absorbers did not fit the new model. They were obviously not built for that car. It was a leased car and I refused to drive it any further because of its unsatisfactory condition. Later on a man was killed in it. I am sure that its poor condition was not only due to the fact that, as the police found out, the speedometer was registering 15 miles an hour below the actual speed so that when I thought I was driving at 70 miles an hour I was actually going about 90.

No wonder I was having trouble with the car. In my opinion the shock absorbers were not built for the car. I presume this was the case in most of the cars in that series. The engineer of the Ford Motor Company in charge of maintenance was not the least bit interested in doing anything about that particular car and was prepared to admit that the shock absorbers were not appropriate. However, he was not willing to make recommendations for improvements.

It seems to me that Ralph Nader probably dealt with only a very limited number of real problems. I think the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi will be remembered in Canada for quite some time if he is able to bring the attention of a sufficient number of thinking Canadians to this problem. The automobile industry has been able to get away with a lot of ballyhoo on expensive radio and television programs instead of producing a piece of satisfactorily engineered equipment.

I think the matter of safety is one that affects Canada and that there should be legislation. The hon. member mentioned the fact that the state of New York is far ahead of all other areas in the matter of safety and is spending money on the building of a prototype car. I think that Canada, even with its limited resources, should be able to spend $1 million to have the National Research Council do work on this project.

The National Research Council need not work along the same lines as the state of New York but could do research of its own. I do not suggest that we should build tanks to ensure safety on the road because we would then have to instal so much equipment in the form of safety belts and so on that the purpose would be defeated because nobody would use them. I know this is a problem. I have a shoulder harness in my Volvo automobile but I never use it. My son tells me it is very good. At one time he was in a car which overturned and probaby that is why he now says the harness works very well and is very comfortable. I think this is a psychological problem. I do not think it will be solved by putting people in safety helmets and giving them football uniforms to withstand the shock of an accident. It would be better to eradicate unsafe projections in cars.

It seems to me the National Research Council might also take a look at a number of other causes of accidents in Canada. There is a stretch of highway No. 17 west of North Bay leading to Sudbury on which probably more deaths have occurred than in any other area. Some of the trouble seems to stem from the fact that the very white concrete absorbs the light, and the road is also very straight. The road is built in concrete sections 20 to 40 feet in length and a continuous noise is created as tires pass over the joints. The white line dividing the highway creates another problem. The types of lights used and the desirability of having automatic dimming devices and more readily accessible types of controls are factors which should be taken into account. Certainly correction of these faults must be taken into account by any person driving an automobile, and protection in this regard must be provided to those driving cars in our nation.

I was very surprised at the ignorant attitude publicly displayed by the president of the Chrysler Corporation who, in referring to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, said, "Who ever heard of him? What does he know about automobiles?" Many people do not know the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. People tend to be more familiar with members from their own part of the country and less familiar with members from other parts of the country. They do not have a national outlook. However, when the president of the Chrysler Corporation singled out the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi he did two things. First of all, he made people aware of the fight taking place not only in Canada but elsewhere with regard to automobile safety. He made people aware, for example, of Senator Kennedy's interest and those interested in university safety programs, including Ralph Nader and others. Like many other people, having heard of the problems that exist I read Ralph Nader's book on automobile safety. Having read it I am convinced that much can be done.

Another thing that the president of the Chrysler Corporation did was to make people examine the silly argument used by the automobile industry that the fault lies not with the automobile but with the driver. I agree that if the automobile were left in the driveway nothing would happen. None the less, not all accidents happen at 100 miles an hour; not all accidents happen in adverse weather conditions. If accidents occurred under such conditions, with the driver also intoxicated or overly fatigued because of long driving, there might be some argument for the automobile industry. Nevertheless, when a person sitting beside the driver hits his head on the radio control panel or on another instrument and is killed, that does not indicate that that person was drunk, fatigued or anything else. It indicates that the automobile was poorly designed.

If the automobile industry gave away its automobiles there might be some excuse for some of the things said. But it charges a fantastic amount of money for automobiles. The Canadian government gets in taxes about one-third of the money from automobile sales. It therefore has a major responsibility to see that the Canadian public is not being hosed. The government does not take its responsibilities seriously. We are willing to give the automobile companies $50 million. For what, may I ask, Mr. Chairman? Certainly not for safety.

When we talk about safety in terms of $100,000 the government is still not willing to provide it. I hope that the committee will take a look at this problem even though the minister has not looked into it. In this connection I heard an extraordinarily silly argument in committee this morning. An official of the department said that the house would not grant more money for such purposes. These estimates have not been reduced. If we had reduced them we would probably have an election because a want of confidence motion would be involved.

Mr. Pugh: How would you vote on the want of confidence motion?

Mr. Peters: I know how I should vote. In the past we have reduced items in the estimates to $1, and the hon. gentleman asking the question was on the other side of the house at that time. I am sure he voted the opposite way to me. It all depends on what you are reducing and who is doing the reducing.

If the minister asked for another $100,000 for purposes of safety, I am sure that no member of parliament would oppose his request. Perhaps the minister will stand up and tell us why he has not asked for this money. Is a jurisdictional problem involved? Does it not come under his department? Frankly, I am not sure whether it should not come under the National Research Council. I know that the Minister of Industry has some interest in the automobile industry but I am not sure of the exact jurisdictional boundary. In any event, will the minister give specific answers to the questions that have been asked? I am prepared to agree to the voting of an increase of $100,000 in these estimates if the minister will ask for that sum.

I should also be prepared to support the hon. member who just asked a question if he desired to request that $100,000 be added to the estimates for an automobile safety program. Frankly, I do not know how it could be done because if the hon. member were to do so he might be out of order, but if the minister did so it might be in order. Fundamentally it depends on whether the minister feels that such a program is worth undertaking and, second, whether he has the jurisdiction to do what I suggest. I think we should know the answer to that.

There are other problems I should like to raise but other members may wish to comment on the very important matter raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. I should therefore like to give other hon. members and the minister in particular an opportunity to delve into this problem. I hope the minister will inform us fully how we can go about establishing an automobile safety program, whether he is prepared to support such a program and, if necessary, whether he is prepared to move an amendment to these estimates to make such a program possible.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I rise to take a few moments of the time of the committee. First of all, I endorse 100 per cent what the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has said concerning the need for an automobile safety program in this country. I commend his words very strongly to the minister. I hope the government will have the good sense to take his thoughtful suggestions seriously and to act on them. I too have given this matter serious thought, as I am sure all other hon. members have.

I want to speak for a few moments about another subject. I refer to automation. Whether we like it or not, automation is going to play an increasingly important role in our lives from now on.

As we know, Mr. Chairman, automation produces greater efficiency and greater productivity, thereby lowering costs and lowering selling prices. Automation should make it possible to increase sales greatly, both here in Canada and in the export market, through lower selling prices. But if these increased sales are not sufficient to provide enough additional jobs to absorb those who lose their employment through automation, mass unemployment could develop as a result. It would then be a dismal failure.

Automation will be a success from the national point of view if we can teach the people who are displaced the skills they will need to fit them for the more technical jobs which automation will make available to them. The benefits of change will be fully and properly shared only if we consider the needs of the people who are affected by automation and if we organize our policies in such a way as to reduce hardship and insecurity to an absolute minimum.

I think we all agree that no humane society can permit workers to be made jobless on a large scale through no fault of their own. Our future success as an industrial nation is going to depend on the way we are able to plan both on the national and on the company level to provide our people with the opportunities of acquiring the skills necessary to enable them to take their place in the technical world in which they are going to live.

I believe that the government has a very real responsibility in this regard and that it must set an example to Canadian industry by the way it treats its employees who are affected by automation in their direct employment by the government, or as employees of the crown corporations which are creatures of the government. In order to do so, I believe that the government would do well to study what is being done in this regard by large United States companies which are giving great leadership in this matter.

I was very much impressed, Mr. Chairman, by the description of the responsibility of industry in this regard which was given by Mr. Clarence B. Randall, the recently retired chairman of the Inland Steel Corporation of the United States. He described this responsibility of industry in the following words:

> Our responsibility is to prepare the man who is being displaced for another task that will require a higher level of skill and which will exist after the change in the method of production takes place.

In the United States, Mr. Chairman, individual companies and unions have made considerable progress in this connection. For instance, the Kaiser Steel Corporation and the United Steelworkers have agreed that displaced workers should be guaranteed salaries up to three years and placed on an employment reserve. Another example is given by the Armour Meat Packing Company and its several unions. They have set up a fund between them to study the effects of automation on the employees of the company and to retrain affected workers.

These, Mr. Chairman, are merely two examples of the kind of forward-looking steps which Canadian companies should be taking at this time so that the steady transfer to the more automated society in which we are going to be living in the future may proceed without causing hardship to those displaced through no fault of their own. Therefore I strongly urge the government to give leadership to all Canadian companies in the interests of their workers, the companies themselves, and the country. I urge the government and these Canadian companies to follow the excellent example set by companies such as those in the United States which I have mentioned, thereby making the transition to an automated society in Canada as easy as possible.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I believe that such an attitude and such a program are the least we can do for our fellow workers as we move together along the road to progress.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. McIntosh: No, Mr. Chairman. I would hope that the minister would answer some of the questions which have been asked before this vote carries. When he does answer, would he differentiate between what he terms a rural family income and an urban family income? Does he realize that what might well be called an urban family income in Quebec and Ontario cannot be looked at in the same way in the west? The radius of service of a community is much greater in the west than in this part of the country. For example, cities in eastern Canada may be five to six times larger than communities in the west and service a very small area whereas in the west a town of 15,000 can serve a radius of 100 miles. Perhaps the minister will explain the formula he uses, which I say is discriminatory.

I hope the minister will also give a commitment in regard to discontinuing the designated area program. It is doing nothing but hurting the economy of the country and it will do greater damage in the future.

I observe that the hon. member for Peterborough is now present and I should like to say that I was quite taken by his speech except for one part to which I should now like to refer. He said that he had had excellent co-operation and so had the people from his area who had come to Ottawa to inquire how industry could co-operate with the Department of Industry.

I am sure it is not the minister's intention that industry from the various regions should come to Ottawa to co-operate with the Department of Industry. My idea is exactly the converse, that the Department of Industry was set up to help industry. In view of the hon. member's remarks I would ask, if it is the opinion of the government that industry should come to Ottawa and try to help the department? If so, what is the use of the department? Is it just a fulfilment of Parkinson's law where you have civil servants doing something just for the sake of doing it, and that is all?

I would also ask the minister to explain to the committee how the designated area policy is helping industry. What are the results of the policy? As I said before, it is of assistance to the unemployment situation but it does not solve the unemployment problem at all. Perhaps it just moves the problem from one area to another.

Because of the instigation of the designated area policy by the minister, people in certain regions of the country now find that their incomes are decreasing as a result of the intervention of the minister's policy. I do not think this is fair to the people in these regions. I would ask the minister to make the commitment now that he will discontinue the designated area policy. I see that the minister is shaking his head, indicating a negative reply. Therefore I would ask him to give the committee his reason before this item passes.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief. At the beginning I should like to thank the minister for receiving all the delegations I have brought to Ottawa to see him when we were pressing for the inclusion of northwestern Ontario and the constituency of Kenora-Rainy River in the ADA program.

An hon. Member: Were you successful?

Mr. Reid: Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, we were unsuccessful in getting our area designated. In one particular case an industry claimed it would only come there if the ADA program were extended to the area, but when it was not it came there any way, which proves to a certain extent that in my area we may be suffering from some sort of inferiority complex.

I have one suggestion I would put before the minister, and I realize that there are constitutional obstructions in the way. I believe that when the ADA program was first brought down it was instituted for the specific purpose of helping to cure the problem of unemployment, which at the time was quite rife throughout the country. I think this has been accomplished to a large extent. Our economists and statistical staff tell us that in certain industries we are suffering from a form of overemployment. In other words, there are now labour shortages.

However, there are areas, such as our natural resource areas, where this does not hold true at all. There are people there who are unskilled and do not have the necessary mobility to move around. If they do have this mobility the effect is that they move to other areas, with a consequent lack of population in areas such as mine which has a low unemployment record because those who are unemployed leave the area. This is very unhealthy. It hurts our economic growth and makes it more difficult for new industries or for a new mine to open in the area in order to bring people back to fill the jobs which would be created and which are already available.

I have two suggestions to make. First of all, I should like to see the ADA program, now that its primary purpose has been accomplished, expanded and become some sort of program to encourage economic growth in areas such as Kenora-Rainy River, northwestern Ontario and other regions not directly adjacent to economic areas such as Winnipeg, Montreal and Toronto.

My second point, though perhaps this is not the appropriate place to make it, is that in my area there is a very large Indian population. These people are untrained for work. Nevertheless there are examples in my riding as well as in other parts of the country where, with the proper supervision and training, such people can be absorbed into industry. Perhaps the Department of Industry could look into the possibility of providing training programs, or introductory programs, to help our Indian people. While there is a shortage of skilled workmen in our area there is a tremendous surplus of unskilled workmen, most of them Indians. It will be impossible to integrate these native people into our society unless we are able to provide for them the necessary economic incentives.

I fully realize that activities of this kind must be carried out in co-operation with the provinces concerned and that sometimes the provinces are not very co-operative. If the provincial minister responsible for this important type of development is not ready to work with the federal authority, then the effect in a province such as my own can only be deplorable. Nevertheless I would urge the minister to investigate the possibility of extending the program so as to fill the gap which now exists.

I turn now to consider a further problem which has arisen in my area. As a result of the regional development policies of the Ontario government we are included in an organization called the Northwest Ontario Development Corporation. The fact which faces us is that Winnipeg in another province is our natural economic centre. Thus there is a conflict between ordinary economic forces and political forces, and this makes things extremely difficult.

I know that the minister is fully aware of the situation. He has written voluminous letters to myself, to Senator Benidickson and to others who are interested. I leave these thoughts with him in the hope that in the future an alternative arrangement may be worked out.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, industry is for various reasons, a matter of interest in the region where I come from. The first one is that we are expecting an industrial explosion in the next few years, thanks to the announcement made by the provincial government about the establishment of the steel plant to be called Sidbec. Also, because we are one of the most important distribution centres of electrical power in Canada. In addition, we have six technical schools training skilled workers, which will make things easier for the industries coming to settle in our region. We have industrial commissions and we followed with great interest the legislation passed here in 1963.

I must say at this time that we are happy about the minister's intervention in the field of industry. We had the opportunity to congratulate the government in this regard. I am not trying to flatter it and I will make three or four constructive criticisms in that spirit later on.

I think that the legislation dealing with the designated areas should be amended right now; it probably did some good when it was implemented, but the time has come to revise it in the light of new conditions. Some things which seem illogical are happening. Here is a case in particular. In my region, more exactly in the city of Cap-de-la-Madeleine, a neighbour of Trois-Rivières, the following incident happened a few weeks ago.

The members of the industrial board of the city of Shawinigan, located in the riding next to that of Champlain, lured an industry away from Cap-de-la-Madeleine, which is not yet in my riding but will be at the next election, it seems to me that this industry moved precisely because of the fiscal advantages offered in the so-called designated areas. I find it strange that this legislation can succeed in getting an industry to move such a short distance away, that is 15 miles from us, solely it seems because of the fiscal advantages it found in Shawinigan, at the heart of a designated area. Was the region made a designated area because the hon. member for Shawinigan is the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance or because before that he was the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister? I am not blaming the people of Shawinigan for looking after their own interests; I am not blaming the hon. member for using his influence. I am talking about the legislation as objectively as possible. I mentioned the case to illustrate what I mean.

I studied closely the standards which determine the choice of a designated area. It seems to me that something is wrong with regard to the region I represent, that is Trois-Rivières, Cap-de-la-Madeleine. We are supposed to be one of the cities where the average salary is the highest in Canada. We come in fourth or fifth place, but that does not give the whole picture. If we got that far, that is the fourth or fifth place as far as the average salary is concerned, it is due to the paper industry which pays higher than average salaries. The fact is that a large number of our wage-earners draw less than average wages and that we have a greater percentage of out-of-work people than in neighbouring constituencies.

The conditions are such that designated areas should be reconsidered. I do not suggest that they should be abolished, on the contrary they should be extended; that is the scope of the legislation should be broadened because of certain factors. The Trois-Rivières and Cap-de-la-Madeleine district is the centre of an urban area of 360,000 inhabitants where all those who are unemployed elsewhere in the area flock and try to find some work. I imagine that elsewhere in Canada, there are other similar urban areas which would deserve the consideration of the government with respect to tax incentives.

On the other side of the municipality, in my own constituency there is Trois-Rivières-Ouest which is part of the semi-rural section where a casein plant coming from California was to be established. They had bought the land and I believe that in the area where it would have been located, this would have been beneficial to everybody. Finally they decided to settle further off, in Louiseville. I am not exactly holding this against Louiseville, because I know it was needed there. But I find it strange that, for so short a distance, only 12 miles further, fiscal arrangements can be granted whereas they are refused 12 miles closer. This was a very serious American concern. Such legislation should probably be amended.

Mr. Chairman, what was called the Area Development Agency, if I understand correctly the report published by the Minister of Industry on the operations of the department which was published, I think, last January 31, stipulated the following:

> The Area Development Agency, which develops and administers programs to foster industrial growth in certain designated areas of Canada, has been organized into two main groups. One of these consists of area specialists who concentrate on particular regions of the country. These officers work with the operational branches of the department as well as with federal, provincial and municipal departments and organizations in promoting regional development. The other group administers the special incentives for designated areas.

I think we have reached the point where this Area Development Agency should not only be concerned with the designated areas but it should increase its co-operation with the Department of Industry, with the provincial departments and also the area representatives, and the industrial commissioners of the municipalities.

I believe that there should be closer contact. I have personally noticed that the Department of Industry can do all kinds of things, but neither our municipal councils nor our chambers of commerce are aware of it. In order to enable them to benefit fully, the scope of the operations of the Area Development Agency may have to be widened and their advertising increased.

Now, I am being rather brief because others want to participate in the discussion and I should not like to tax the patience of the committee. I spoke a while ago of the designated areas under the present legislation.

On moving industrial plants, something in Hansard caught my eye a few days ago. I see that it is not only back home that people complain about those things. In 1964, the mayor of Galt wrote a letter begging the government to prevent the act from being used to move existing industries within too limited an area. That, to a certain extent, is what I mean too.

Now, Mr. Chairman, before closing I would like to make another suggestion to the Minister of Industry. I would ask him to take it in the spirit in which I intend it. Looking over the literature I get from the Department of Industry, I note that out of, let us say, 30 high officials in the department, only three are French Canadian.

Far be it from me to want to play nationalist, jingoist or separatist, but in all frankness, and with all the serenity possible, I say that if we want to overcome the difficulties which are inflicted upon us and achieve mutual understanding between the two main ethnic groups, it might be wise to recruit more qualified French speaking staff for the upper echelons in that department. Please note that I am not necessarily blaming the minister, I merely wish to make a constructive suggestion. It is not a question of removing the people who now hold those positions to give them to someone else, but rather one of recruiting qualified French Canadians when the time comes to fill vacancies. I did mention qualified people.

I know that it has been said in the past that we lacked qualified people; it has also been said that French Canadians were not anxious to join the civil service, but I believe that this time is now over. If qualified officials are needed in the department, it is surely possible to find some, so that within a reasonable time, without any rush, without dismissing anyone, in the group of 30 senior officials, we might find half a score of French Canadian names.

These are the constructive suggestions that I wanted to make. I will sum them up: Co-operation between the Department of Industry and municipal, industrial, provincial and regional agencies; review of the whole scope of the act concerning the designated areas policy; and extension of publicity concerning the activity of the area development agency.

Third and most constructive criticism: would it be possible to recruit more French speaking people for senior positions in this department as in others.

To conclude, I wish to congratulate once again the Minister of Industry, not only in my name, but also on the behalf of municipal councils and chambers of commerce who spoke of the fine job done by the minister for the past three years.

[English]

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I felt I would be derelict in my duty if I did not take advantage of the discussion on item No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Industry to support the proposition put forward this afternoon by my colleague, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, speaking on safety in motorcars. I have taken an interest in this subject for the past several years, particularly since a former Conservative member, Dr. Kucherepa, some years ago—I believe in the session of 1958-59—put some informative remarks on Hansard with respect to the problem of automobile safety.

My interest in this matter culminated in my placing Bill No. C-26 on the order paper on January 18, the subject matter of which has been referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs. I take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi for having taken the initiative in bringing to public attention this very serious problem facing society today. I am sure it was gratifying to him that the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Northumberland supported his stand on the matter.

There is not too much I can say at the moment because I think the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi covered the subject matter very thoroughly, but it seems to me there is an inconsistency in the minds of the public with respect to safety, and particularly with respect to the various modes of transportation by air, water, rail, bus and automobile.

If there is a fatal air crash in which 50, 75 or 100 people are killed, immediately there is a great public outcry. We spend hundreds of thousands of dollars having our aeronautical boards, engineers and departments of government investigate to see if there was a mechanical defect. Air line officials themselves also carry out investigations. We also do the same thing if there is a disaster at sea. But every week end there are 50, 60 and some times 100 people killed in fatal accidents on the highways, and because they are killed on a helter-skelter, hit-or-miss basis all over the country the public does not express the same concern.

The first law of nature is self-preservation. Why should we not be just as concerned about fatal accidents on our highways as about accidents in the air or on the water? This is an important area for discussion. As time goes on I am sure public opinion will wholeheartedly support members like the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and others who have taken action on this matter.

It is heartening to see the lead taken by our friends across the border in the United States, particularly in the state of New York. It was interesting, after reading the latest reports of the U.S. Senate committee which is investigating this matter, to note that the chairman of that committee, when presenting a recommendation to the United States Senate, made reference to the fact that it was not only the nut behind the wheel but the nut in the wheel about which we should be concerned.

I think it can be said simply that there are three areas. There is the nut behind the wheel, as we so commonly refer to the man who may be reckless in his driving, there are the roads themselves and the laws and regulations in respect of traffic on the highways, and then the vehicle itself. I think one reason more action has not been taken along the lines of what people have in mind is the fact that if one automobile company decides to introduce some safety measure this automatically involves a greater cost in bringing the vehicle to the public and as a consequence the vehicle is not quite as competitive. If we follow through with this new concept of considering the matter from a legal point of view and bringing in mandatory legislation with regard to safety devices on cars, automatically it will take in all vehicles sold by manufacturers in Canada or the United States and all cars imported into Canada. It would consequently make them competitive and we would thereby be removing the economic factor which apparently has been instrumental in retarding the advance of safety devices in automobiles.

I think such a move on the part of the government would be greatly welcomed by automobile manufacturers. If we were to take a definite stand I am sure this would be welcomed by the public and it would make the automobile manufacturers competitive. I should like to support what was said by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and the hon. member for Timiskaming to the effect that we should increase our budget of the Department of Industry and look into the matter of setting up some type of safety bureau or research centre in Canada which could make a thorough study of this problem. I am sure the government would receive widespread acclaim from the public if it were to take this action.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the representations which have been made this afternoon by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi who also appeared before the justice and legal affairs committee while it was studying the matter of auto safety. The hon. member made a most impressive and useful contribution. The hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Moose Mountain who also appeared before this committee made a very impressive and important contribution.

I wish to participate in this debate to ask the minister to give serious consideration to divesting himself of responsibility and authority in the whole field of automobile safety. I will come back to the urgency of automobile safety in a moment. I should like to make the point right at the beginning, however, that as things stand now in the Department of Industry the minister is responsible for automobile safety and also at the same time is responsible for the administration and conduct of the United States-Canada auto parts agreement. As everybody knows, that agreement is dependent upon the good will and voluntary co-operation of the United States automobile industry.

The main effect of this is that the minister really is a captive of the United States automobile industry. In Canada, because of this agreement, we no longer have any control whatsoever over the automobile industry and the direction it is going to take. As a result of this the minister himself is, as I say, really a captive of the United States automobile industry. One of my friends says he is a prisoner. I would not go that far, but certainly he has a conflict of interest, I suggest, between the need to administer the new agreement and make it work and the need to act as a policeman in respect of the automobile industry in the area of safety itself. Consequently, if the minister is left with the responsibility of dealing with automobile safety I do not see how he can adequately fulfil this function, even with the best intentions in the world. I do not say that he would deliberately neglect it, but I think the more one examines his department and the auto industry, the more one is impressed by the fact that he simply will not be able to be a captive of the United States auto industry on the one hand and try to act as a policeman in the field of auto safety on the other hand.

I know all ministers are empire builders and are reluctant to divest themselves of certain areas of authority and jurisdiction. However, if the minister really is anxious, as I am sure he is, to deal with the problem of automobile safety, I think he should consider seriously passing over authority in this field from himself to perhaps the Solicitor General, the Minister of Justice or anyone else except the Minister of Industry because, as I have said, I think as we proceed we will find that he simply will not be able to act as a policeman in the auto industry at the same time that he is going to go to the industry to seek its co-operation and big-hearted help in making the auto parts agreement an effective instrument in our economy and in the automotive industry of Canada. I suggest very seriously that the minister give this point consideration.

The other matter, which probably has been raised by other members while I was not in the chamber, is a mandatory scheme of automobile safety. Already in our examination of the subject it is becoming increasingly apparent that we should have a mandatory scheme, not only from the point of view of the public but also from the point of view of the manufacturers as well. Any information we have been able to obtain so far indicates that if you have a voluntary automobile scheme it will be a failure. Experience in the United States has indicated that the automotive industry itself, because of its competitive nature, will not and cannot adhere to a voluntary scheme of automobile safety. Unless you bring in a mandatory scheme which puts all the automobile companies on the same basis and forces all automobile companies to put the same safety features in their cars, it seems to me you will not have a scheme which will be successful. Because they all are so competitive with each other, not one of them will do it, and even if one should do it the others will shortcircuit it in order to obtain a competitive price advantage.

The automobile people themselves are now coming to the conclusion that the most effective system of safety standards would be a mandatory one requiring all automobiles to have the same number of safety features. I doubt whether the public yet realizes just what an enormous problem this constitutes in our country. The tragedy is that it is one which is capable of solution. No doubt it already has been pointed out that in the past ten years over 35,000 people have been killed in automobile accidents in Canada and 948,000 have been injured. By the end of this year almost, 5,000 people will die and another 150,000 will be injured. Between 1966 and the end of 1970 26,000 Canadians will die on our roads and more than one million people will be injured. Automobile accidents are now the leading cause of death and injury in this as in many countries. It is estimated that about half of all our cars are going to be involved sooner or later in injury producing accidents. The cost to the public in terms of lost income, personal suffering and accident claims amounts to a fantastic and staggering total.

As I said earlier, studies have already shown that the whole problem of automobile safety confronting this country is of the first magnitude. We have all been following the investigations taking place in the United States which have pinpointed even more dramatically the problem that has been created. It has been said that a good many deaths and injuries and a good deal of suffering can be prevented. For example, 87 per cent of all traffic accidents and 45 per cent of highway fatalities occur at speeds of less than 40 miles per hour. It is commonly thought that the real problem in this regard relates to high speed, cars roaring along the highway, but that is not true. The major killer and producer of injuries is the car travelling at less than 40 miles per hour.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has documented this situation on various occasions both inside and outside the house and has shown that the real causes of accidents and deaths can be related to instrument panels, steering assemblies, faulty windshields, door structures and the lack of headrests on seats. These are all items involving safety features which could be made mandatory, and the total cost of installing them in cars on an assembly line basis is estimated at between $100 and $150 per car. In spite of this, we in this country seem prepared to sit silently by and permit this carnage to continue year after year, resulting in high insurance premiums, deaths, injuries, suffering and heartache to the people of Canada.

It is not necessary for us to document this whole situation in more detail at this stage. I am sure the minister is familiar with the statistics, and in view of the representations he has received I am sure he is about to rise and announce a strong program for his department in relation to this whole matter. In order that he will have an opportunity to do so I will now sit down.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I feel I must say a few words about Canadian industry, its financing, and the sale and marketing of its products. This is the subject I would like to deal with in the house.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the aim of industry is to manufacture and sell as much as possible; to manufacture as much as possible with the least effort. In Canada, as in many other countries, we have this facility of manufacturing many products by automation, employing scarcely any manpower.

I could mention the case of an industry which I know very well, which employed 800 people some ten years ago whereas now there are only about a hundred, although production has increased tenfold.

This is the result of automation, which is right here before us and which we must face. This is what I would like to talk about: automation and industry.

Since automation, that is science or technology, is replacing man, will we use more manpower to help develop industry, or shall we create a new industry with new technical means? One must not be against development and automation, but I must say we cannot create employment and give everyone work in Canadian industry, because the aim of the latter is not to create employment but to meet the demand. This is the aim of industry, which has certainly understood its purpose. It has reached its goal.

Now we must face the problem of manpower. People most earn their living, they must accept industry.

We have designated areas in Canada where there is a shortage of manpower. Again, I could mention the case of an industry which pays about $1,500 a week in salaries and manufactures $10,000 worth of products. Do you think $1,500 can buy for $10,000? I put this question to the hon. minister, and I think he will be able to answer it. This is the state of the economy across Canada.

With regard to our designated areas, we want to develop industry in every way. Concerning industry, Canada has created various bodies to help industry, such as ARDA or IDA, as it is called, which I believe can help industry independently of the provinces.

We know that ARDA is the body concerned with joint programs and that all those programs must be submitted and accepted by the provinces, after which the federal government contributes to a certain extent to the development of industry.

In connection with the industrial areas where it is desired to set up and extend industries, the first question which comes to my mind is the following: are goods lacking in Canada? Does industry manufacture enough goods to meet the needs of the Canadian people? I would say yes, because we now have industrial surpluses which have been accumulating for approximately 15 years and cannot be marketed.

I know that there may be a shortage of goods in various industrial sectors. For instance, in the steel industry, there might be a shortage of steel; it is perhaps not being produced in sufficient quantities, but it is our duty to build steel works so as to produce enough steel. It is our duty and it is the duty of the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury).

There is no shortage of goods in Canada. In 1965, for instance, statistics indicate that from $51 to $52 billion of goods were produced, of which $35 billion were marketed, exported and sold. The balance is in warehouses, on shelves and remain unsold. It is up to the Minister of Industry to increase production and develop industry. He must also look after the consumption and the sale of those goods. This may not come exclusively under the Minister of Industry, but other departments are concerned. On the other hand, I feel it is the duty of all ministers and citizens of Canada to look after the distribution of goods, and to see to it that goods are sold according to the needs of the Canadian people.

We have a great number of citizens in this country who manage to reach a certain degree of affluence, who manage to buy products by means of loans. They profit by progress and science on credit, by borrowing money. We want to develop industry in designated areas, but we find that industrialists have no money and the governments have to guarantee their loans to assist industry.

I am not against assisting industry. If consumers had money to pay, we could do without all those socialist regulations and plans which bog down citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I know several industries in those designated areas, which want to expand and could do so. There are industrialists who were born in parishes or in certain areas where they like to live, but they cannot expand their industries under the present system. Under the new program of the Department of Industry, industries are granted 10 per cent for expansion and construction purposes. If an industry moves to another area, it becomes a new industry and can get one third of construction and equipment costs. Why not grant one third to existing industries which want to expand but cannot do so by themselves.

There are always restrictions and conditions which result in a very small number of industries and companies being able to avail themselves of the advantages afforded by the government. If advantages are offered let them be such that people can avail themselves of them.

Why do industries lack money? Why do industries no longer find capital in Canada?

It is precisely because the federal, provincial and municipal governments, the school boards and the church councils get what little savings may exist in Canada, and when one wants to develop an industry, there is no money, no capital left.

The government has absorbed all the capital by way of taxes and debentures. Thus, Canadians and industries are deprived of their assets to the point that several industries can no longer operate without getting into debt. Almost all industries are financed. A large number of them can operate only thanks to the Industrial Bank, which can be of great service but not to every one, because its interests are too high and its reimbursement period is too short. For short term reimbursement, you have to make profits to pay back the Industrial Bank. But when you make profits, you must pay taxes which, added to the reimbursements, put you in an almost impossible situation. So, many industrialists and businessmen are unable to borrow because taxes are too heavy, the reimbursement period is too short and interest rates are too high.

I would ask the Minister of Industry to take a look into the Industrial Bank to see if there would not be a way of extending the reimbursement period. There should be loans payable in 20 years. Seven or ten years is not long enough to reimburse $300,000 to $500,000. It is impossible to do so.

I think the minister has already realized it. He has all the facts before him. I know he is aware that many industries cannot operate because those interest rates are too high. They cannot sell their products because the consumer cannot buy them, having no money left after paying too many taxes and too much interest. All Canadians lie at the mercy of the government. They cannot meet their own needs because they have no money. When governments put money into circulation, they come and get more than we have. The situation is getting more confused all the time. That is not the way to solve the problem.

If we want to settle the problem of industry in Canada, Mr. Chairman, we will have to take the required steps. Industry is on the same footing in the province of Quebec as everywhere else in Canada. The industrialist has had more advantages then the farmer and yet it had to run into more debt. Industrial debts are enormous. All these financial interests, all these taxes contribute to increase the cost of living and to create inflation in Canada. Inflation is due to the unbalanced system we have. That system must be balanced. If there are in Canada a hundred million products for sale, there should be as much money in the hands of our citizens to buy those products. It is just the opposite our government and the economy gave the Canadian people.

This cannot go on in the same way forever. Even though new industries are being developed, these will not go far if they cannot sell their products. And they will not be able to sell them because wages they pay are not high enough to allow people to buy their production.

Then, we will have to give dividends or discounts compensated on prices. These dividends or compensated discounts should be granted by the Bank of Canada, the official body that can also be used to create capital and to put into circulation the required money in order to create the buying power needed so that our products are in good demand in Canada.

We can rely on different countries to sell our products, but everybody knows that when you export to other countries you have to import for just about the same amount. Thus, international trade does not make much difference, as far as production by the people of Canada is concerned. There has to be Canadian purchasing power in the hands of Canadians, in order to sell Canadian products.

Such are the solutions the minister should suggest to the government. If some others have found other remedies, they should be brought forward. Nobody has yet been able to find means of solving our economic problems, so as to solve the distribution problem.

There are almost no problems as far as production is concerned. All the minister has to do is to ask for the production he needs and I can assure you that he will get it.

I can tell you that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is telling us, for instance, that production is at a maximum in Canada, that it is almost impossible to produce more, I say this is not true. The Minister of Finance talks nonsense when saying such things, because I know a large number of industries which could double their production in a few days, in a few months. Then comes the question of labour: well, we have all those people busy on winter works, which are useless. That kind of work doesn't give anything, it is wasting the people's money.

If those people were employed in industry, they would be working for Canada and producing something. Many citizens are on social welfare, but I am told that the moment they begin to work, they lose their social benefits. These people could produce something but, as it is, they are not.

Canada's productive force totals seven million people, of which approximately three million are not earning enough money to pay income tax. This means that those Canadians are not working very long nor very often. It also means that they could produce ten times more. There are strikes throughout Canada, people curtailing production; all those problems could be solved and the hon. minister would have many things to do in that field. I am not putting all the blame on him, as he is not the one who invented the present system, but he is not doing much to set it right. The present system is not working anymore, it is fundamentally obsolete; it is working only for those who are controlling money and credit, in brief, it is adding to the wealth of those who are controlling money and credit and to the impoverishment of the rest of the population.

This is why strikes happen; people are altogether too poor.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I wish to tell the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac that he is wasting his time, and I wish he wouldn't. Now, it is not incumbent upon me to settle his problems; perhaps he had better direct his speech to my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I may reply to the minister that if I am wasting my time, he is also wasting his, for he does nothing to improve the situation.

If there is need to talk to the Minister of Finance, let the Minister of Industry do it, for he is in a better position than I; besides, it is his duty.

So, Mr. Chairman, there are still many things I could say, but I believe I have spoken of the main ones. I feel that if we seek mutual understanding, if we really want to serve the Canadian nation and the industry itself, we could find the necessary means, and use those which are at our disposal, to settle the various problems that beset industry, production and consumption.

There are two problems, production and consumption. The main one is consumption, since production is not lacking at the present time. I am not against new industries, on the contrary, I want them to be created, but I wonder how long they could operate, or sell their products, if consumption cannot be financed.

We have accepted technique, science and progress in all fields, but we should especially welcome technique, science and progress in the economic field on a national scale.

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, I would like for a few moments to discuss the estimates, but not along the same lines as the member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) because in spite of the little knowledge I may have, I do not know how he came to the somewhat eccentric ideas he attempted to outline, which, in my opinion, one could not make head or tail of, and which did not relate at all to the estimates of the Department of Industry.

Mr. Latulippe: You have heads and tails; what solution have you found? People are starving.

Mr. Laflamme: I would like, Mr. Chairman, to draw the attention of the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) on a special point concerning my riding. It is a problem which, I know, now holds the attention of the minister and, especially, that of many voters in my riding. It concerns the Valcartier arsenal which, since about 25 years, served to the production of ammunitions for the Canadian government, and which the Department of Defence Production decided, two years ago, to sell to private enterprise; the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) is especially interested in it since this is an attempt, I submit respectfully, to create, within private enterprise, an important industry which will have for effect, not to decrease but to increase employment and the number of employees which, unfortunately, have been decreasing there for a few years.

The Valcartier arsenals have been producing ammunitions for more than 20 years and required at certain times the services of at least 3,000 male and female employees. There are now only about 350 employees in Valcartier and many of these plants are not operating, precisely because it is not necessary that they operate to full capacity to carry out contracts with the Department of Defence Production.

Now, as a whole, even if the staff now working in that plant has some apprehension concerning the sale of this industry to private enterprise, I think they should understand that if the industry is sold to private enterprise, the whole industry will be able to manufacture, in addition to ammunitions, other things which could compete with the general civil production with which, we must admit, it is impossible for the government to compete.

I respectfully submit that the Minister of Industry, in his forthcoming dealings, should point out to the buyers the importance of respecting the vested rights of present employees.

I am convinced that the rights of the present employees being respected, the buyers will not only be in a position to keep the present employees at the Valcartier arsenal, but in a near future, they will rehire from 2,000 to 3,000 employees to reach their previous strength, because precisely a great number of those mills could be used for civil production where the Canadian government cannot compete against private enterprise.

I wish to congratulate the Minister of Industry for the conscientious work he has been doing in that field for some time.

I, for one, am convinced that this decision will be welcomed by the general public, and that the acquirers will thus be able to get a maximum production out of this war plant which can thereby be changed into a peace plant.

I also think that, generally speaking, the department acted wisely in adjudicating the production of ammunition to private enterprise, so that it could bet the lowest possible competitive price.

[English]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I can well imagine the minister being a bit impatient and I do not blame him.

There are two things I wish to mention. In my district quite large quantities of excellent birch are being destroyed. I can think of one instance of nearly a million feet of lumber being cut for which there is no market. The local people have made several efforts to see if they could not establish a furniture factory in the district to utilize this and other very suitable woods for the manufacture of furniture. I should like to direct the minister's attention to this matter and to ask him if he can do anything about it. I should also like to ask him to provide some information in this regard to the persons interested.

There is another matter which I mentioned to him privately, a few days ago, can the minister tell me whether any research has been done with respect to the small chippers for chipping culled logs so that they can be sent to the pulp mills? At the present time machinery is available to do this but it is much too expensive for the ordinary tree farmer or small operator. Will the minister look into the situation and see if something can be done to provide this type of machinery on a smaller scale than that at present provided to the large industries? With these few remarks I shall take my seat.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful indeed for the remarks, or most of them, which have been made during the course of this discussion. I appreciate some of the flattering comments and I am particularly grateful for the number of suggestions that have been made for the future guidance of the department in the execution of its programs.

This is a new department and, I suppose, in terms of government it is very new indeed. Neither the officials nor myself are persuaded that all the answers have yet been found, but we are looking for them and consequently we appreciate new ideas. This does not mean that we shall accept all suggestions, but at least we shall look at them.

One general question asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve respecting the Department of Industry was: How is it that Canadians appear able to afford, as outlined in the estimate book, the sum of $25 million for defence development but only a very much smaller sum indeed for civilian development? At page 178 of the blue book of estimates this item appears under vote No. 5:

> To sustain technological capability in Canadian industry by supporting the selected defence development programs . . . $25,000,000.

Under vote 10 the following appears:

> To advance the technological capability of Canadian manufacturing industry by supporting selected civil (non-defence) development . . . $8,770,000.

This does not in any way indicate a greater predeliction or preoccupation with defence equipment development in industry as opposed to civil development. The problem that exists with relation to the support of development projects in defence industry has been in existence for a considerable number of years and consequently more people are familiar with it. Some people are in a position to take advantage of it successfully, and the department is more capable of effectively administering it.

Vote 10 has to do with a new program which, for practical purposes, is entering its second full year. While last year there was provided in relation to the operation of this program the sum of $5 million, the figure is now $8,770,000. We expect that as this program acquires public acceptance, that is, by the manufacturing public, and as the department acquires more skill in administration, the amounts set for the support of advancement of technology in the civil field will grow. The necessity of growth in the military field is not quite so apparent.

In relation to the department two other major items were mentioned. One was the area development program, and its operation, and the other was the automobile safety program. I might deal with the second program first.

I should like to felicitate the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi for the very excellent work he has done and is doing in bringing home to the Canadian public the extent to which this is a problem in Canada and for making clear that statistically, in relative terms, what he talks of is a greater problem here than in the United States. He has done a very valuable service in bringing this problem to public attention and directing public attention to it. The government for its part, and I happen to be its spokesman on this subject for the moment, is undertaking to provide some practical and acceptable solutions to the problem.

The first step in providing suitable solutions to any problem is to find out what the problem is and what is known about it. Then you must organize all information. When you have a background of information you then endeavour to bring intellectual effort to bear on the problem in the hope that a solution can be worked out co-operatively in the best interests of all concerned.

I am glad to say that the National Research Council has just completed a review of current knowledge in this particular field relating to what has been somewhat disparagingly called the nut behind the wheel, the nut on the wheel and, finally, the place where the nut falls off the wheel, which is the road. under these three headings nine technical reports have been issued by the National Research Council. Should any hon. member be interested in them I should be only too delighted to make all nine volumes available to him. These volumes contain a very valuable summary of the current state of knowledge in this field and provide an indispensable background for anyone trying to find effective solutions to the problem.

For its part the government, in co-operation with the Traffic Accident Research Foundation and the Canadian Highway Safety Council, has commissioned a draft automobile safety code, as it has been so far called, which will be submitted to the scrutiny of a conference to be held in June. Members at the conference will examine the draft code on the strength of the reports providing basic information about the driver, the car and the environment on the road. This conference will be composed of representatives of federal and provincial authorities concerned with highway safety, also of various private and semi-private organizations in Canada concerned with traffic safety and, finally, some other individuals who have demonstrated an interest in safety. There will be an exposé of the problem at this meeting. There will be suggested parameters which it is hoped the conference will accept. If they are accepted steps will be taken to try to bring them into force.

Referring to what was said by the hon. member for Timiskaming, who in a way indicated the nature of the problem, I may say that we have in this country a number of statutory speed limits. One would assume that a safe car should be designed for travelling at those speeds. Owing, no doubt, to special circumstances involving time, some drivers, as indicated by the hon. member for Timiskaming, do not pay attention to those speed limits. Therefore it is clearly not possible to design cars from the safety point of view to be driven within the statutory speed limits, because there will be people who will pay no attention to such statutory limits. Clearly it is not enough to provide the safety devices in cars that he suggests. The mere provision of those will have no effect if they are not used. The hon. member has indicated that although he has incorporated a shoulder harness in his car he has never had occasion to use it. As I recollect, his son used it after he had turned the car over. I do not think anybody would deliberately turn a car over. That should not be a prerequisite of or a prelude to using a safety harness.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: I hope he was not just testing it.

Mr. Drury: The hon. member for Timiskaming also expressed some doubt where the focal point with the federal government should reside, as did one of his colleagues. The hon. member for Timiskaming suggested by implication, and the hon. member for Danforth suggested quite explicitly, that the Minister of Defence Production was the wrong minister to be in charge of this program. I share this view. I think that unquestionably there is a problem connected with the administration of a department whose task it is to work in co-operation with a particular and very large industry, yet at the same time be responsible for imposing mandatory obligations upon that industry and, further, perhaps having some responsibility for enforcing those obligations. It might make more sense if within the federal government the department which now is in the process of developing and administering safety programs in respect of other forms of transportation, and which has a great deal of experience and expertise in these other fields already, might contemplate taking over that particular task.

The Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), Penitentiaries—request for appointment of female deputy commissioner.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette): Winter works—Notre Dame de la Guadeloupe, Que.—Amounts paid by the federal government; the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier): Income tax—Lac-Saint-Jean—Investigation requested concerning discovery of bank notes.

[English]

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber. And being returned:

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting The Trustee Board of The Presbyterian Church in Canada.

An act to give effect to Term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

An act to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It has been suggested that it might be better, before we suspend the sitting, to resume the business which was interrupted by royal assent.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $6,795,400.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will resume at seven o'clock.

At six o'clock the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we were listening to a statement by the minister and I believe he should be given an opportunity to complete it.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I had indicated some views on the question of automobile safety, and had stated that in terms of focus for federal government action the Department of Industry was not the most appropriate department. Consideration is being given to what would be a more appropriate department to look after this.

A question was asked whether more money is needed to get an automobile safety program under way. I do not think at the present moment that shortage of funds is in any way hindering what has to be done, namely the acquisition and organization of information, and the development of a program after having sorted out the various jurisdictions. I think we are taking productive steps to organize the information, to get agreement on jurisdictions and to launch a program. The government is seized of the importance of this particular problem facing Canada today to at least as great an extent as other hon. members.

The next item examined was the area development program, and observations respecting it were to some degree contradictory. This would indicate to me that a program, which those who find themselves outside of designated areas desire to have abolished, and those who are alongside designated areas seek to have extended to them, is a useful and successful one.

However, I should point out in respect of a number of the representations which were made that there is a fundamental basis to this whole concept. It is a measure in an area in which the federal government has jurisdiction, namely the field of unemployment, and the program is one designed to bring some measure of relief to areas suffering from high chronic unemployment.

We measure this unemployment in two ways as accurately as we can. The first is through registrations under the national employment service. Where the number of registrations in an N.E.S. area rises above a certain figure, or is above a certain figure for a sustained period in relation to the total labour force in that area, then automatically the area qualifies for the incentive benefits.

Mr. Winkler: Was not the principle of development also an important factor at the time the Prime Minister made the announcement in the house?

Mr. Drury: The functions of the area development agency as a whole relate to industrial development and area development, but the designated area program is limited to being a program related to unemployment. One of the reasons for this is that under our constitution the provinces regard economic development, and the determination of priorities for economic development within a province, as being a matter for the provinces not for the federal government. If there were to be a move into this particular field, an attempt on the part of the federal government to set priorities for economic development, this would be a matter of concurrent jurisdiction with the provinces, administered as is the ARDA program.

The ARDA program is for the purpose of encouraging economic development of rural areas within a province. Hon. members will recall that under it the initiatives for programs within a specific area are taken by the province, not by the federal government; and the criteria are determined by the province, not by the federal government. This is in a sense the classic shared-cost program, in which the determination of criteria and the administration of the program rest with the province, or provinces, and the role of the federal government is largely confined to assisting in financing the projects.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Mr. Winkler: Can industrial plants be built under that scheme?

Mr. Drury: Industrial plants can be built under ARDA. There is no limitation in respect of the purposes or objects for which ARDA funds are used. I think this is a useful and interesting distinction. It indicates first the nature of the constitutional problem and why this particular incentive program is based on unemployment. Whether based on national employment service registrations or on areas where the national employment service registry is an accurate index, recourse to unemployment figures is an aid in considering the average level of non-farm family income.

I was asked by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek where the statistics with regard to non-farm family income were derived. The statistics were obtained from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and their definition of a non-farm family is accepted for the purposes of those statistics. Non-farm family income is used, because in cases where the non-farm family income is very low there is an assumption that even though within the family there may be people who are unemployed but not registered, the numbers involved will depress the average non-farm family income, and consequently in this way indicate to some degree, where there are not accurate national employment service registrations, the level of unemployment or underemployment. That is the reason this is used.

The purpose of this program is not to raise the family income level; it is to relieve unemployment. The income figures were used and spoken of lightly as another way of measuring unemployment or underemployment. If this is understood, it is quite clear that one cannot take into account, as any criteria or as any basis for the program, other economic factors such as rate of economic growth, slowness of economic growth, or indeed rate of population growth or lack of it. All these are measures of economic growth of an area and, as I say, the determination of priorities in respect of economic growth within a province is something which the provinces control, and which under their constitution they regard properly as being within their competence and jurisdiction, and not under federal jurisdiction.

A number of members from the maritime provinces have represented that in order to make this an effective program to stimulate economic growth, there should be designated the metropolitan areas in the maritimes, notably Halifax, Dartmouth, Fredericton and Saint John. Even though unemployment was at a very low level both in regional and national terms in these metropolitan areas, to designate these areas, on the grounds that these areas currently of low unemployment are at a disadvantage in relation to other areas in the maritimes with higher employment, would mean that the deliberate advantage conferred on areas of high unemployment with a view to alleviating this would disappear. The program having as its basis the bringing of jobs to those who are without work would fail completely.

Recognizing that in some areas the incentive program will not be the answer and will not effectively reduce unemployment, if it exists there, members will be aware that the government has made available to the individual an alternative program, should he wish to make use of it, which would provide assistance to persons without work to move from the area in which they or their families are to an area where there will be job opportunities. These two approaches are not conflicting; they merely supplement one another and provide a desirable choice to areas which have some high unemployment.

There was some representation by members from some of the westerly areas that comparisons of designated areas with smaller areas not too far geographically removed from them appeared to disclose that conditions inside the designated area, and just outside, were substantially similar. This of course would be expected because it is rather rare that one finds an area of high economic activity and low unemployment, and then just right across some invisible boundary line an area of high unemployment and low economic activity.

These changes tend to occur rather gradually in geographic terms, and in moving from an area of high economic activity and low unemployment to an area of low economic activity and high unemployment there will not be a corridor; as one proceeds in distance there will be a merging or a gradual transition from the first condition to the second. So, wherever the line is drawn, conditions immediately adjacent to that line and on either side of it will be substantially similar. Obviously the line has to be drawn somewhere, unless the whole country is to be designated. Obviously right adjacent to the line there will, understandably, be feelings of invidiousness in that the man on the favourable side of the line has an advantage which his almost neighbour just across the line does not enjoy, although the neighbour feels the conditions where he finds himself are substantially the same—and indeed they are.

The criteria for the delineation of these areas has been the national employment service areas, largely for the following reasons. In their present configurations they are supposed to represent areas of homogeneous economic activity; each is supposed to be an economic unit. Second, over a number of years there have been gathered for these areas, on an area basis, the kind of statistics on which we have to rely. Indeed these are the only records we have on which to determine which area qualifies for designation and which does not. If one is to operate a program based on objective measurable criteria and standards, he must rely on statistical evidence which has been gathered over a period of time. I accept the difficulty there is in comparing conditions close to and on either side of a line of demarcation, but I do not know of any way to avoid them.

We are continually receiving representations as to the appropriateness of the N.E.S. areas, and I heard some new ones in the current debate. These are reviewed as the representations are made and periodically, following discussions with the soon to-be department of manpower, which will be responsible for the operation of the national employment service, changes are made in the boundaries of the N.E.S. areas where it appears that the existing boundaries produce social inequalities or social injustice. This forms part of the periodic review which is carried out in respect of the qualification of N.E.S. areas for designation or de-designation.

I think I indicated in my opening statement that this program had to date been a very successful one. In order to provide incentives, one must offer advantages to a limited number of people; and the more limited the number of people, the more effective are the incentives. These incentives are now offered to areas of Canada comprising some 15 per cent of the total Canadian labour force. If, as has been suggested by some members—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Drury: Just a moment. If, as has been suggested by some members, large, additional centres of population are to be added, the incentives become diluted, in the sense that they are available to a much larger segment of the population of Canada, and obviously the areas which are currently most disfavoured will tend to fall even more into disfavour than they have in the past. I think one has to try to resist the temptation to enlarge the areas, or the number of people to whom the incentive area program is available, if one really has a concern or preoccupation for those areas which are seriously, and have been for a long time, effectively disadvantaged.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I have a question in connection with the minister's remarks about the areas which have been seriously affected over a long period of time. Since the minister said that the program was so successful, I wonder if he could list the accomplishments of a few of these programs in the Cape Breton industrial area in general? The minister also referred to the government program of moving workers to areas where employment was available, and referred to it as a very good choice for these people. Is he not aware of the fact that it is a matter of no choice at all? Also, I would like to hear the minister list the successes which have taken place in Cape Breton, which is one of the worst areas in the country in this regard.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Drury: I have not the details of the effects on the Cape Breton area—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Then would the minister mind listing the successes anywhere of the program?

Mr. Drury: I have not the details of the effects on the Cape Breton area, Mr. Chairman, but I will undertake to provide those later on. In so far as the mobility program of the department of manpower is concerned, when the hon. member says there is no choice I suggest that he perhaps does not understand the manpower mobility program. This is a choice offered to the person who is unemployed. He has an opportunity to receive financial assistance in moving from where he is to an area in which there are employment opportunities.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister not agree that the only time such a choice is accepted is when nothing else can be done by the person affected?

Mr. Drury: I am not presuming to make judgments as to why people exercise these choices. I am just saying that a choice is provided and the government has a program which is designed to encourage manufacturing industry to establish in the designated area and provide, as a consequence, employment opportunities. It offers at the same time and in the same areas financial assistance to those who, for reasons best known to themselves, desire to leave that particular designated area. Both of these steps are aimed at lowering the level or numbers of people who are unemployed in a designated area. I do not presume to say why it is that people avail themselves of either of these alternatives; I am merely saying that the government has provided these choices.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. Since the plan was instituted have there been further negotiations with the provinces—I have in mind particularly the province of Ontario—in regard to the revision of the boundaries of designated areas? Has such a meeting taken place, and has such consideration been given to this matter?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Chairman, we have not been consulting with the government of Ontario in relation to the delineation or termination of boundaries of N.E.S. areas. This is an area in which the federal government, the N.E.S., is the master, if I may use this term, of the delineation of the area.

In looking at the suitability or the inequalities, if there may be any, of these areas, factual information in this regard is sought from a great variety of sources, and presumably one of them may well be the provincial government authorities.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, is the minister saying that he does not know whether the department sought the advice of the provincial departments in establishing the areas, or considering amendments that should take place in this regard? Were the provinces not consulted in the first instance with regard to statistical matter or whether they had recommendations to make in regard to the areas that should be chosen?

• (7:30 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: The N.E.S. areas have been in existence for a great many years; I am not too sure how long, but ever since the national employment service was organized. To the best of my knowledge neither the advice nor the consent of the provincial government was sought at the time these areas were delineated. When the hon. member asks me whether the advice of the government of Ontario was sought as to which areas in Ontario should be designated and which should not, the answer is no. This is not a joint program. This is a federal government program under the control of the federal government and it is related to the relief of high chronic unemployment. The federal government is in possession of the most accurate statistics in relation to unemployment that are available in the country. They have been obtained from the national employment service and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

I suggest that no useful purpose could be served by an endeavour to convert this program into a joint program with the provinces, and that there is no point in seeking the consent of the provinces in order to change designated areas or designate new areas.

Mr. Winkler: I am grateful to the minister for that information, because apparently I have been grossly misled. It was my humble opinion that there was to be some liaison between the department of economics and development of Ontario, and the minister and his departmental officials.

I must disagree with the minister when he says that he has the best statistical information available at the disposal of his departmental officials and government agencies. He knows how I feel about the area in which I live, which was not designated. If one were to make a comparison between that area and other areas that have been designated he would realize that there has been discrimination of such magnitude that one can only conclude that the minister and his departmental officials do not know what is taking place. I take strong exception to this discriminatory action. I disagree entirely with the explanation he has given as to the reasons for the difference of treatment.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: I should like to put a question to the minister.

I referred to two cases this afternoon and I would like to have the views of the minister. Is it in accordance with the spirit of the act, designed to help designated areas, that an industry established in Trois-Rivières after having bought a property within a mile of that city, should move seven or eight miles farther because of fiscal agreements, and that another, established in Cap-de-la-Madeleine and already in operation, should move 12 or 15 miles downstream toward Shawinigan?

I wonder whether this is not a typical case that the government should look into when the minister will consider amending the act.

What are the minister's views on the matter?

Mr. Drury: Well, it is precisely to help in such cases.

Now about the moving from Trois-Rivières to Shawinigan, there is a regulation, a condition that in order to be eligible to the benefits, 90 per cent of the equipment, of the machinery must be new. Used equipment and machinery may not be moved. The machinery must be absolutely new.

So that if a plant is located and operating in Trois-Rivières, it cannot be moved to Shawinigan with all the equipment and machinery that was being used in Trois-Rivières and still be entitled to the benefits, because the regulations require that the machinery and equipment be new and, for that reason, it is not possible to move machinery and equipment out of a non-designated area into a designated zone or area, and still eligible to the benefits.

[English]

Mr. Mongrain: It is interesting to note that the case in which I referred industry was already located, and normally it would have expanded or enlarged there; but because of the advantages provided by this program this new development took place in an area 10 or 12 miles away. I am aware of another case where an industry has purchased an area of property because they felt it was an advantage to them for future development. However, this industry has been attracted by this program and influenced by an industrial commissioner to develop, as I say, 10 or 12 miles away. Surely there is something wrong with a government program when it deprives an area of the development which would normally take place because of certain advantages offered.

Mr. Drury: I think the hon. gentleman understood me when I said that this program will not cause industry which has already located in an area to move to another area. The program is designed to attract or persuade entrepreneurs who would, in the ordinary course of events, contemplate the setting up, expansion or creation of new facilities in non-designated areas, to move instead into designated areas. However, in relation to either expansion of or addition to existing facilities, there is no contemplated transfer from one area to another.

If there is going to be growth in Canada, what we are interested in is encouraging a part of that growth to take place in designated areas. Statistically we have found that of the total new industries developed in Canada since the program started, only 15 per cent has been developed in designated areas. It is difficult of course, to say how much of that new investment would have been taken in these areas in any event, but the proportion is probably quite small.

There is an indication that this incentive program has been successful in encouraging at least 15 per cent of new investment, or a large fraction of it, to locate in areas of high chronic unemployment rather than in more favoured areas. In respect of the cases the hon. member has mentioned in Trois-Rivières and Shawinigan, and the case mentioned by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, let me say that you are both seized of a problem relating to the drawing of the line between non-designated and designated areas. The line must be drawn somewhere.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister permit a question? He has referred to the 15 per cent of new development which has taken place in designated areas. Is that an indication of his description of a successful program, and does he not think that the 15 per cent would have located in these areas in any event?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member had been listening to my explanation he would know that I said there was no way of deciding what percentage of the 15 per cent would have located in these designated areas in any event. In any event employment conditions have improved in certain designated areas to the point that it is now possible to dedesignate them, and this indicates that the program has been effective in at least some areas. There is no question that this program tends to be more successful in some areas than in others. There are some disadvantages which exist in relation to some designated areas which do not exist in others, and some designated areas enjoy more in the way of economic advantages than others. The rate of improvement has been higher in some areas than in others. Unfortunately this rate of improvement is not equal across the board.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Everything apparently boils down to the fact that the minister considers that the 15 per cent figure indicates the success of the program.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: Fifteen per cent of total new investment in Canada has taken place in designated areas.

Mr. Schreyer: I am not in a position to argue the relative success or failure of the designated area program across the country, but may I ask the minister whether he would not agree that in the case of Manitoba, for example, the program has no relevance and it is difficult to see how it can have relevance as long as it is based upon or oriented toward unemployment statistics. From what the minister has said I understand it must apparently be so because of the constitutional requirements. And yet it is a fact that in Manitoba, areas of high chronic unemployment and underemployment—and there are large areas of that kind—are ones in which there is an inadequate national employment service coverage and registration. Consequently, to my mind at least, it is difficult to see how this program could ever be applied in regard to such areas. The only areas which could conceivably be eligible under the designated area program at the present time would be precisely those industrial metropolitan cities like Winnipeg, Brandon and so on, which, in most likelihood, will never require the assistance of this designated area program. However, vast parts of the province could use this program as long as it is oriented toward or based upon registration of unemployment, and yet they will never become eligible because no data is available.

This brings me to my second question, Mr. Chairman. It is my understanding that the legislative assembly of the province of Manitoba passed a virtually unanimous resolution requesting the federal government, through the aegis of this designated area program, to apply it to all of the province. I do not think that this was done facetiously or in a bantering manner. I wish to ask the minister how he was able to deal with this particular request, which was endorsed by the provincial legislature.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I do recognize that there are areas where the N.E.S. registrations are not an accurate measure of unemployment in the area, as I have tried to explain earlier. In a sense, the more an area is rural the more this tends to be the case. It is precisely for that reason that recourse is had to D.B.S. which makes a much more profound study of non-farm family incomes. An examination of the average level of these incomes tends to indicate concealed unregistered unemployment or underemployment. By looking at both N.E.S. registrations, which may or may not be accurate, and the average non-farm family income, one is able to get a fairly good measure of unemployment in the area.

As I have indicated, this is not an economic development program. It is a federal program designed to provide employment opportunities through industrial growth in areas suffering from high chronic unemployment. There are a number of other schemes, of which ARDA is one, where projects aiming at economic growth through industrial, agricultural or forestry development are jointly conceived and undertaken with the provinces.

In so far as the government of Manitoba is concerned, the federal government co-operates with the provincial government in developing economic development programs which constitutionally must be joint and collaborative affairs. In those areas of Manitoba where it has been statistically determined that there is a relatively high chronic unemployment measured by either of the two tests I indicated, the federal government provides a program of incentives aiming at the creation of job opportunities through the establishment of new manufacturing industry or the expansion, to an appropriate degree, of existing manufacturing industry.

Mr. Winch: I wish to ask the minister a question. In view of the fact that the minister exercises his functions in the dual capacity of Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production, can he tell me whether he has been able to bring about an extension of the Canadian manufacturing industry or the establishment of new manufacturing concerns. Can he give us any examples of cases in which he has been successful in doing so? My opinion is that he has been rather successful in co-ordinating the two ministries of industry and defence production. Can he give us any information on the correlation between these two fields of activity, and on any success achieved in the maintenance and extension or the establishment of new industries?

Mr. Drury: I rather think of the role of the Department of Industry as being the establishment of a climate or an economic framework in Canada, which will lead to the creation and expansion of manufacturing industry in this country in an efficient and progressive manner. I think what the hon. member is trying to have me speak about is the role of promotion.

Mr. Winch: Yes, in the area of defence production, because of your authority in that field.

Mr. Drury: The hon. member wishes me to speak about the promotion of individual manufacturing concerns. I think it is rather dangerous and at times invidious when governments endeavour to claim any measure of credit for the establishment of new manufacturing operations when in fact the responsibility for either the expansion or the establishment of new manufacturing operations is that of the entrepreneur, the man who puts up the risk capital. He is the fellow responsible for this, not the government. The role of the government is to endeavour to establish an appropriate economic framework in which this kind of operation by entrepreneurs and by private enterprise can and will take place.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. Winch: I am afraid the minister did not answer my question. He holds a cabinet position in a dual capacity. In one he is Minister of Industry, and in the other he is in charge of defence production. As Minister of Defence Production and Minister of Industry has he been able to correlate those two functions so as to tie in with the Department of Industry the expansion of manufacturing concerns? Has he been able to bring new manufacturing into the country, as Minister of Defence Production and Minister of Industry? I may not be expressing my question very well, but has he had any opportunity of doing this? If so, can he give us any examples of how he has worked to correlate his two functions?

Mr. Drury: Quite obviously the government, including myself, will endeavour to correlate the work of all government departments toward the objective of expanding production, as well as making more efficient manufacturing industries in Canada.

There have been cases where, as a consequence of orders placed by the Department of Defence Production, through our ability to place substantial orders for defence equipment there have been established in this country manufacturing facilities for articles which previously were imported. It is interesting to note that the function of the Department of Defence Production will be taken over by the department of supply for the whole of the federal government.

That is the defence production side of the operation. Through the work of the Department of Industry, assistance has been given to firms whose business has been initiated on a defence basis for the production of defence equipment—because plant and machinery have been set up, and trained personnel have been with the firms because of defence orders —to set up other types of business—

Mr. Winch: Have you done that yet? Can you give us any examples where this ideological position has been carried through?

Mr. Drury: Would you like me to name a company?

Mr. Winch: Give us an example. The minister is not talking about the future? I take it that he is talking about what is happening now.

Mr. Drury: This has been done.

Mr. Winch: What has the minister done? What has been done to tie in defence production and the Department of Industry, in bringing about the expansion of old, and the introduction of new manufacturing industry?

Mr. Drury: I have just endeavoured to explain how this is done. I take it the hon. member wants an example. Does he want the name of a company?

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Winch: I want to know what the achievements have been.

Mr. Drury: We are making progress. I cannot give you figures of investment, production and growth covering all these things. We have not any specific program directed toward this combination of functions. I propose at a later stage to provide some more information indicative of the success of this work.

Mr. Peters: As I listen to the minister I become more and more confused as to what this program is doing, and what the intention of the minister is in accomplishing anything under the terms of designation.

Before saying anything more may I express my appreciation of the remarks the minister made previously. I do not want him to beware of Greeks bearing gifts, or anything like that, but we do appreciate the remarks he made about the changes he would recommend in his department, in terms of automobile safety, in the light of the problem which was discussed earlier this afternoon.

Dealing with designated areas, the minister made a number of very odd statements. I hope that he will bring his officials down, to sit by him on the floor of the house so that we can go into the various designations he has dealt with. Frankly, I want to know why every one of the areas involved was designated. I may be wrong in my assumption, and the minister must know if I am wrong, but it is my understanding that designations took place in a joint meeting of the provincial and federal authorities. It is also true that the areas so designated were not designated on the basis of unemployment districts, or with relation to non-farm incomes. There are designations in the second part of appendix D of the order in council that were based on the census statistics of the revised criteria. Those are the ones that I believe have no relation to the criteria that the minister has talked about today.

I should like to know on what basis the areas have been chosen, and I should also like to know what has been accomplished, in areas that have been designated, that can be directly attributed to the revised criteria of this plan. What industries have been brought into the areas? Those are questions the minister ought to answer.

What was done in specific areas? How many areas have been designated for only a period of time, and how many areas fall into the category of the two areas close to my riding, those of Rouyn-Noranda and Timmins, both of which are designated areas and both of which received absolutely no benefit from the plan, whereas other areas not designated apparently could take considerable advantage of this plan.

It is very interesting to note, and I think the minister will have to explain, why there should be in the province of Quebec 22 areas, and in the province of Ontario seven areas, the areas generally speaking in Ontario being no worse than those in Quebec. In terms of unemployment insurance there does not seem to be any particular difference between most of the areas in Quebec and the ones in Ontario. I should like to talk about some of these areas specifically. However, before I do that I should like the minister to bring his officials with him so that we can discuss these areas individually.

I am well aware that these estimates are not going to a committee for discussion. I am faced with the situation that developed last year when largely through a mistake on my part, we allowed the passage of the designation program. The minister at that time said, as reported at page 3126 of Hansard for June 30, 1965:

> I did undertake unequivocally to table the estimates because this is within my control. I have learned in a very short parliamentary experience not to give undertakings as to what the house may or may not do. I will use my best endeavours to see that these are referred as early as possible after tabling—and I do undertake to table them immediately—to the house committee. Specifically, I think it has been understood, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this question of tabling and referral, that the government undertakes that the order in council designating the designated areas in clause 2(c) will be tabled on the resumption after the summer recess and referred to the standing committee on industry, research and energy development. This will include an opportunity to discuss the criteria.

Mr. Chairman, the minister did not prevaricate. He said that you can never understand what is going to happen here. Neither can we. We were interested in coming back in the fall and discussing this matter last year. As we all know, an election intervened, bringing another session and another parliament. I assume therefore that the minister is not bound by the commitment he made in that previous parliament. However, I believe he has an obligation to bring these criteria before the standing committee. That has not been done, and as there is no indication that it will be done I think we must discuss the matter in detail in this committee. Therefore I suggest that the minister bring down his officials, because we will be asking about specifics; if the minister does not do so he may have difficulty answering some of the questions.

The minister said this program had no relationship to the joint federal-provincial programs. He said this program is operated by the federal government, specifically in the field of unemployment insurance responsibility, over which the federal government has jurisdiction. I do not think that is true, Mr. Chairman. I think the program has been administered in conjunction with the provinces. There are people on the staff of the minister's department attached to the various programs, some of whom I could name. They are working in close conjunction with the economic development agency in the province of Ontario.

When the Prime Minister decided consideration would have to be given to a modification of the criteria, a committee was formed on which he asked a number of senior civic officials to sit. This committee will be negotiating not only with the officials of the minister's department but with officials in Ontario, and they are not going to be satisfied at all with this buck-passing from Ottawa to Toronto and then back again. Eventually we will find out exactly where the breakdown occurs.

If what the minister said today is his interpretation of what his department is going to do, then we need look no further. If he is not going to co-operate with the provinces and thinks he will be able to bring in a plan which will put industry into certain areas without the co-operation of the provinces, then he might as well forget the whole program.

But, Mr. Chairman, shortly after the criteria were developed I understand there was a meeting between the Prime Minister, the federal minister and a number of provincial cabinet ministers, and they made a decision on the criteria. I should like to go over some of them.

In Ontario they decided to designate places such as Bracebridge, Collingwood, Elliot Lake, Midland, Owen Sound, Parry Sound and Sturgeon Falls; and I should just like to look at each in turn.

There is no question about Bracebridge being an unemployment insurance area. This area is a summer resort and has been for years. Most Toronto members have cottages in the Bracebridge-Muskoka area.

An hon. Member: No, they cannot afford them.

Mr. Peters: Some of them cannot, but they have friends who can, and they do visit the Bracebridge area. This area of Bracebridge has seasonal unemployment. The people who work in the tourist industry also engage in agriculture of a fairly low standard. Bracebridge is really a tourist operation, which is seasonal, and would meet the criteria outlined by the minister. However, in my opinion it does not satisfy most of the representations which were made when developing the criteria last June, nor the type of program most members of parliament want.

The minister may not be aware of this, but most members of parliament who do not represent major urban areas are faced with exactly the same problem. I outlined the other day the pebble theory, where industry spreads out from metropolitan areas a certain distance, and then spreads even farther. That is not what most members or the Prime Minister said they wanted. The Prime Minister said that the importance of the proposals was that Canadians living in areas where jobs are most needed would have a better chance to improve their livelihood because of the scope of this program, which provides opportunity for industrial development and improved skills. He did not say that it was a program under which people who have been unemployed will get employment or be moved into other areas. This program is to develop places without industry at the present time, so as to provide jobs for the people already living there.

Now let us take a look at Collingwood, which is another small town with one or two industrial developments in the shipbuilding field. The employment is highly seasonal. I may be wrong in my seasons, but I think there they work in the winter and are laid off in the summer. The predominant industry is tourism, which is now a year-round operation because of the ski resorts in the area. But the summer tourist industry does provide for a seasonally unemployed segment of the population.

Elliot Lake, Mr. Chairman, is in a completely different category. The federal government is responsible for the area because of the botching up of the Canadian uranium program. Elliot Lake falls into a special category. If the government were to establish there government owned and sponsored industries, such a step would probably be justified. Central Mortgage and Housing financed a large portion of the housing in the area, and have had to heat it and provide for its upkeep even though no one was living in the houses. Elliot Lake is a national disaster area as far as employment is concerned. It is not a question of unemplomyent but of employment. No one is unemployed in Elliot Lake. I am sure you would find unemployment in Elliot Lake is almost nil, and for the simple reason that as the mines closed down there was not a chance in Hades of further employment opportunities in the area. That is one of the problems, of course, which we face.

I would have no objection to the inclusion of Elliot Lake, except I think we would be justified in saying that unemployment figures were not the cause of its inclusion. I think you could show that over a period of time the employment figures dropped from a maximum of 6,000 to 2,000. At the same time you could not show there was any potential employment likely in the area. It is really a little like the situation at Bell Island. When the iron ore industry closed down, the people employed in the area obviously had to move away because there was no alternative employment there for them. Unless they were prepared to go on welfare they just had to move out.

Midland is in the same category as Bracebridge and Collingwood. A shipbuilding industry is in operation in the winter, doing refits. In the summertime the workers often take summer employment, assisting those who are seasonal workers in the tourist industry.

I am sure there is not a great deal of difference in the Parry Sound area; there is great similarity in the areas of Parry Sound, Owen Sound, Midland, Collingwood and Bracebridge.

Sturgeon Falls is in another category. There has been a large forest products industry there over a period of time. One of the major mills run by Abitibi at Sturgeon Falls was operating at near capacity the last time I visited the area, and I do not think you could show any long and continuous period of unemployment there.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Unless I am wrong about these cases, the argument the minister has used does not apply. I suggest it never did apply, and that an arrangement was made. A number of people sat down at a table and bargained about these things. I want to congratulate the members from Quebec because they did a better job of bargaining than did some of the others.

Let us take a look at what was done in the census division. Take Parry Sound. I will make no comment about that because I do not understand why Parry Sound should be designated under the program. I do not know what the census criterion is. This was not included in the legislation we passed last year, to my knowledge. Take Haliburton, Ontario. To the best of my knowledge, Haliburton has had a number of forest products industries. I presume this takes in the sawmill, as well as various resort areas where there would be seasonal unemployment. But conditions in Haliburton today are not much worse than they have been for the last 30 years. They probably have not changed very much in 30 years. There is no acute problem in this area; it is a problem of a chronic nature.

I turn now to Manitoulin island. Manitoulin island, it seems to me, cannot be considered as being an industrial area. In my opinion the people on the island are not much interested in its becoming an industrial area. I know there are hon. members listening to me who have hunted and fished on the island, and chased deer all round it. They are aware that this is primarily an agricultural area. I believe the Prime Minister can rest assured that when the price of turkeys goes up everyone on the island will be very happy about the situation around Christmas time and Thanksgiving. I doubt whether one would find a serious unemployment picture on Manitoulin island, if one thinks of unemployment in terms of the national unemployment figures as they are usually compiled.

In my opinion these are not the kinds of definitions which fit into the criteria about which the minister has been speaking. Incidentally let me say there are more good people working in the hon. gentleman's department than most people realize. Indeed there is a superfluity of people. He has people there who are probably more frustrated than civil servants in other departments, because their efforts are not being utilized to any degree. These people joined the department to help decentralize industry and provide industrial equality across Canada. But they find this is not being done. It is not being done in Ontario, either, because of the inactivity of the department of economic planning under Mr. Randall. He, like his predecessor, has paid more attention to manufacturing, to sales and to the propaganda side of his department than to the economic development which we believe must take place.

Again, in this department of economic planning there are some very good people. The province has been divided into areas and most of these areas have economic planning agencies. In my own area we have the Northeastern Ontario Development Association. The provincial government is allotting funds to these agencies and these are the agencies which are able to assist the federal government in its economic development projects. I am sure the minister's officials will tell him that co-operation with these agencies is essential if the program he is putting forward is to be anything more than window dressing.

The minister has said it is not wise to extend the boundaries too widely. Can he tell me why all the districts of northern Ontario should not be designated, without interfering with anything being done in connection with other programs? If this were done, areas which have the necessary natural resources would be able to take advantage of industries which are already contemplating expansion.

In my own area the firm of E. B. Eddy will be forced to go into the pulp and paper industry at Elk Lake within the next two years or they will lose their limits. They say it is difficult to raise capital amounting to $45 millions, and they may be right. A program of this kind will assist the company to come into an area where they have limits which they can operate for 30 or 40 years before the expiry date.

Work could be done to develop a chip industry in connection with the pulp and paper process and this would use up a great deal of what are now waste products. These things could happen if leadership were given by the department. But if the minister thinks he can operate this program in isolation, controlling from the top the development of particular industries in the areas he designates, he is under an illusion. He will not be able to get along without the co-operation of the provinces.

I do not know what we can do about this. Last year I decided to carry on a filibuster and I have no objection to doing so again. But it is unfair, and the responsibility must rest solely on the shoulders of the minister if some of the estimates of other government departments do not come up for discussion. I am hesitant to take this course, not because I do not think it is possible, but because I do not think we have the right to do it. Surely there is some other way of calling attention to this problem without embarking on a full-fledged filibuster, until everyone is willing to tear their hair.

The minister is a reasonable man. He knows how these things work. He must be aware of the position in his own caucus. He knows that almost everybody in Canada agrees that he should help these areas of slow growth. If they are not getting their fair share of the benefits of the national economy, something should be done to help them.

In my own area there is literally no unemployment. This does not mean we have jobs at Kirkland Lake or that there are as many people in employment as was formerly the case. It means that people get into their cars and drive to Toronto. We have a high school at Kirkland Lake which has 1,200 students. The new Lisgar high school has 900. We have big vocational schools in Kirkland Lake and New Liskeard but almost none of the people we train can find jobs in the area, and so they go to Toronto. My son in Toronto tells me that any time he wants to have a party, within two hours he can contact 100 people from his home area who are living in the city. There are probably 4,000 to 5,000 people in Toronto who should be able to get work in their home area. This is a problem we damned well are going to solve. We are not going to move all our young people out of their home area. As a nation we do not want to see our people move to the United States.

• (8:20 p.m.)

People move from northern Ontario to southern Ontario simply because the Minister of Industry has not been able to plan development along two simple lines. I ask him to point out any industry he has located in a designated area which does not meet two criteria. Either a man from the area got a bright idea and started a factory with his own money or, alternatively, a firm moved into the area because the raw materials were to be found in it.

In one election I argued that we would have to force industry into northern Ontario. Everybody threw up their hands at my suggestion, but within the last several weeks the minister heard delegates from a number of cities in northern Ontario use the word "force" in connection with the location of industry in that area.

Certainly the minister must provide a carrot. There is a $10 million item provided, but all he expects to spend on this program in 1965-6 is $300,000. That is how successful the plan is. It is not working; it has not worked. The minister should take this problem to a committee where decisions could be made on the type of program that will provide the necessary development.

One problem in attracting industry to our area is that Mrs. Jones, wife of the superintendent of the plant contacted, wants to shop at Eaton's in Toronto and go to the O'Keefe Centre. Her husband likes to play golf at Runnymede golf course, or whatever the name may be. The manpower department will have to do something about such a problem and point out some of the advantages in northern Ontario, where those who like to do so can ski for six months of the year—although that does not overcome the golfing problem.

Everyone agrees that we want diversification of industry. Building factories on top of factories in Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver is not always to the advantage of the nation. Hon. members from the west who are not participating in this debate because it concerns industry will soon face the problem that we have in northern Ontario, with more and more of their people moving into cities and leaving the farms. They are not able to find work down the street or in the next small village. They move to other provinces. I ask, does everybody in Manitoba finally wind up in Winnipeg? Does everybody in Saskatchewan end up in Regina? Does everybody in Alberta end up in Edmonton?

The representatives in Toronto are equally silent on this problem. They just do not believe there is anything but southern Ontario. Occasionally they may take a trip to northern Ontario to fish, but that is about all. The criteria we established are not working. The criteria which we passed in June last year—and I have the sessional paper the minister tabled in August—

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: I have only two questions to put to the hon. minister.

I wish to assure him again that my constituents are pleased with the work that the Department of Industry has been doing for three years, and especially with the supervisors chosen. I am not acquainted with all of them; however, I know one of them, Mr.

Lavigne, who worked in other fields for several years. If all the other supervisors are as able and as well qualified as he is, I suppose we can expect substantial results in the industrial field of this country.

Mr. Chairman, it is in this spirit that I wish to ask two questions of the minister.

Trois-Rivières has but one industry, newsprint, of which we are the biggest producers in the world.

But cities which have one industry, as you know, are in danger of being in a bad way should that industry fall into a slump at some time. Now, industries at Trois-Rivières were the first to set up here in Canada. Machinery and equipment have become obsolete and the industry must invest millions to modernize if it is to compete with other paper industries or other factories.

How long can this last? Of course, one cannot tell, but one can foresee that some day competition will force them to slow down their production.

That causes a problem on the outskirts of Trois-Rivières and attracts the unemployed from the area. I wonder if the administration could not diversify assistance to industry to prevent stagnation from setting in? For the purpose of this discussion, let us say it would not be in the Trois-Rivières area but on the outskirts, at Trois-Rivières-Ouest, Baie-Jolie, Notre-Dame-du-Lac, Cap-de-la-Madeleine or Champlain, thus making possible an extension of the industrial zone. That is my first question.

Now, for my second question.

[English]

I will ask it in English so that you will realize I am not biased and am not engaging in any kind of jingoism. I mentioned the matter this afternoon. I notice that among some 30 higher staff members of the minister's department there are only three French names, and I would like to have the minister's reaction to suggestions for improving the situation.

Mr. Drury: In respect to the second question there are, as you know, Mr. Chairman, a limited number of French speaking Canadians in the government service. On a number of occasions there has been an expression, by and on behalf of the government, of a desire to have more. Intensive efforts are being made to endeavour to recruit and interest those of French speaking culture in the federal service, and I am one of those who engage in this effort. If the hon. gentleman has any candidates for my department I shall be very glad to hear about them.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

With regard to the second point and, perhaps, the first two points, as I said a while ago, it is not a program for the economic development of a province but a program dealing with chronic unemployment.

In the city of Trois-Rivières, at the present time, at any rate, there is a little unemployment.

Mr. Mongrain: A lot more than just a little.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I admit that the paper mills in Trois-Rivières are becoming somewhat obsolete. The Department of Industry has a program for modernization and for the introduction of new production methods with federal government assistance.

I do hope the companies in Trois-Rivières will get information on that program and take advantage of it, if it is advisable.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, some of the French speaking members of the department continuously have been borrowed from the province of Quebec. There has been difficulty in keeping the government in the province of Quebec from borrowing these persons, and thus depleting the department.

Mr. Drury: In reply to the earlier remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming, in which he suggested that some kind of a deal has been made between the federal government—I presume represented by the area development agency—and the province, so that swatches of designated areas were given out, and that this is how Quebec happens to have more than their share—

Mr. Peters: I do not wish to leave the impression that the area development agency did this; I did not say that. I said that there was a meeting I believe between the premier of the province and the Prime Minister, and this is the disclosure which flowed from that meeting. This is my impression, because a press release was put out from that meeting which had this disclosure in it.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that that is a mistaken impression. At a federal-provincial conference at which the Prime Minister and the premier were in attendance, there was a notion of a federal government program designed to bring employment opportunities to those areas and regions of Canada suffering from highly chronic unemployment. This is the program which gives effect to that particular intention. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that if he reads and understands the criteria, and if he applies those criteria to the published figures of the national employment service and to the published figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in relation to non-farm family income, he himself will be able to work out the list of designated areas; he can do it. There is no magic; it is just arithmetic.

Mr. Peters: Tell me how you did it in the case of Manitoulin island; give me an example.

Mr. Drury: Manitoulin island, as an island, is not a designated area. It lies within the Elliot Lake national employment service area.

Mr. Peters: No. If the minister will check the order in council he will find it comes under a different classification. It is under the counties census division in appendix D. It is not in with the Elliot Lake or Sturgeon Falls area. It would have to pass over the Espanola employment service area. So far as I know it is not serviced by either Elliot Lake or Sturgeon Falls.

Mr. Drury: I may have misled the hon. member on that.

In response to the question about Manitoulin island, the criteria are those applicable to the designation of the national employment service area as such, provided they meet certain quantitative criteria. The regulations also provide that a county or census division—and Manitoulin island is a county—if it is contiguous to a designated area and provided it meets certain criteria, is also designated. A county or census division, not in the circumstances a national employment service area, which meets the criteria, can be designated provided it is contiguous to a national employment service area. That is why it is separated from the Elliot Lake area.

Mr. Peters: Obviously you are putting it contiguous to Elliot Lake and Sturgeon Falls. You will agree that Elliot Lake does not meet the criteria that you used, because there are no people unemployed in Elliot Lake. It is quite true the unemployment figure was high, but very suddenly it dropped down to a minimal base. That minimal base is the employment picture in Elliot Lake now. There is no unemployment in Elliot Lake, although there is no employment other than in the uranium industry. There is a sawmill which employs 20 or 30 men at the edge of the town, but all the others would have to be service industries to the uranium industry. There are no unemployed. As soon as the men are unemployed they go to another area. Not only did the people move out, but the department here paid them to do so.

It is not really true that the criteria set down apply to Elliot Lake. I am not objecting to Elliot Lake being designated, because the government has some specific responsibility in this regard, but I do not think the criteria apply.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that the hon. gentleman has a copy of appendix A of the regulations, but if he will look at paragraph 1(b) he will see that it states under the heading "Criteria respecting designated areas under section 9 of the Department of Industry Act":

> 1. An area is deemed to require special measures to permit economic development or industrial adjustment by reason of the exceptional nature or degree of unemployment therein and may be proposed for designation by the governor in council as a designated area under section 9 of the Department of Industry Act if it is:
> (b) a national employment service area in which for the most recent five years employment has declined at an annual rate of more than 10 per cent;

If the hon. gentleman will take the N.E.S. figures he will find that for the most recent five years the employment in that area has declined at an annual rate of more than 10 per cent. That being so I suggest that Elliot Lake fits the criteria and it should be and has been designated.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief. I should like to ask the minister to consider the method by which areas are designated. I am sure he realizes that the figures are associated with larger cities and that many small towns and villages within 100 or 125 miles are not taken into consideration, because of the distance and the inconvenience people find in registering at unemployment insurance offices.

I am sure the minister will remember that the Prime Minister promised that one of the first duties of the Department of Industry would be to consider assistance to the people of the Bancroft area, because of the closing down of the uranium mines there. This area has as yet not been given consideration, and I should like to ask the minister why that is the case.

I hope that the minister's department is not operating on a patronage system, but it does seem strange that the latest figures show that 180 projects have been approved in the province of Quebec, which has a Liberal government, and that 150 projects in the province of Saskatchewan, with a Liberal government, have been approved. In comparison, the number of approved projects in other provinces are in the neighbourhood of 50.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that somebody has been feeding my hon. friend phony information.

Mr. Webb: I got my information from one of the departments.

Mr. Drury: I repeat my statement: Somebody has been feeding the hon. gentleman phony information.

Mr. Webb: And I repeat that I received my information from the department.

Mr. Drury: Would you give me again the number of new projects in the province of Saskatchewan which have been approved?

Mr. Webb: I suggested that there were approximately 150 projects that had been approved, but I think the actual number is 147 or 148.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I again repeat my statement: The hon. gentleman has been misinformed. I hope that he will tell me privately who in my department has been giving him information that is untrue. In the province of Saskatchewan as of April 30 there were 22 projects approved.

Mr. Herridge: That is quite a difference.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, could the minister give us similar information in respect of the other provinces?

Mr. Drury: Yes. Perhaps I could do so in a more orderly fashion by giving the figures in respect of provinces in an alphabetical order. In Alberta there have been five projects approved with a total investment of something over $2.5 million, with a projected employment of 319; in British Columbia there have been 13 projects approved with a total investment of $3.1 million with a projected employment of approximately 320.

Mr. Herridge: Surely that cannot be patronage.

Mr. Drury: In Manitoba ten projects have been approved with a total investment of $24.7 million with a total employment of 434. A statement was made before the dinner recess to the effect that this program meant nothing to Manitoba and that the people there hoped it would be withdrawn. It appears to have been more successful in terms of investment and unemployment in Manitoba than in British Columbia.

In New Brunswick 55 projects have been approved with a total investment of $154.7 million, and with a projected employment of 4,552; in Newfoundland 14 projects have been approved with a total investment of $35.8 million, and with a projected employment of 919; in Nova Scotia 43 projects have been approved with a total investment of $101,994,000, with a projected employment of 2,598. In this regard, 11 projects have been approved in the New Glasgow area with a total investment of $58,675,000, with a projected employment of 1,371; three projects have been approved in Sydney with a total investment of $34,106,000 with a projected employment of 210, and at Sydney Mines one project has been approved with a total investment of $88,000 with a projected employment of five. As I understand it, the last three places are in Cape Breton.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It is obvious that the minister knows little about these projects. Would he look at a map and orientate himself in respect of Nova Scotia so that he will at least have some idea of the geography.

Mr. Drury: I would be glad to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Byrne: You are always annoyed.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): If the hon. member from British Columbia has something to say to me, I think he should bear in mind what happened recently when he spoke outside this house.

Mr. Byrne: Always mad.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: In Ontario there were 197 projects approved with a total investment of $332,659,000, with a projected employment of 13,037; in Prince Edward Island 12 projects have been approved with a total investment of $6,331,000, with a projected employment of 992; and in Quebec there were 98 projects approved with a total investment of $229,953,000, with a projected employment of 8,077. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, who was apparently misinformed by somebody about the number of projects in Quebec, is not here.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the remark of the hon. gentleman on the other side of the chamber was certainly not called for. The hon. member referred to did not run away; he went up to his office to confirm the information given to him by the minister's department, and he will be back in the chamber later on.

Mr. Drury: I mentioned Saskatchewan earlier, which has 22 projects. Investments total $60,871,000, and prospective employment is 686. I should make clear, as I have in answer to parliamentary questions, that this represents advice to the area development agency of the plans of owners or prospective owners of industrial enterprises of building or investing in new plant or expansion of plant with a view to availing themselves of the incentives offered under the Department of Industry Act. These projects are in various stages of planning, construction, completion or operation. They are not all at the same level, but this is the best information we have as to current accomplishments or intentions to invest.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, when the minister was speaking a short time ago he made reference to something I said before dinner. In case he has misinformed the committee I want to put the committee straight and say that I referred to Manitoba. I said that I believed that the formula the government was using was wrong, and I did not make the statement the minister attributed to me. The minister said that I said this program had done nothing for Manitoba. My remarks in respect of Manitoba were a repetition of what the hon. member for Provencher said, namely that the formula the department is using is wrong. The department is using unemployment figures, and reference was made to family income figures. The minister said that this figure was not correct and cited the example of Brandon, where the family income was something around $3,900 a year. It was said that in the hon. member's area, which is not a designated area, the family income is around $3,600 a year. Therefore the formula is wrong; and even if it is correct, the minister's department is not following it.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister where the designated areas are in Alberta? What is the location of them, and where are the five projects in Alberta that the minister mentioned? When I have received an answer to this question I will have some further questions.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the designated areas in Alberta are the N.E.S. area of Blairmore, and census divisions Nos. 12 and 13.

Mr. Fane: What does "census divisions Nos. 12 and 13" mean?

Mr. Drury: These are statutory census divisions which are defined in the statute. Geographically, they lie north of Edmonton and run from the Saskatchewan border not as far as, but short of, the British Columbia border.

Mr. Fane: Is there an area in Alberta that is embraced by the provincial counties of Smoky Lake and Bonnyville? Is that in a designated area? I have been told that it is.

Mr. Drury: I apologize for my geographical ignorance, but I have not the faintest idea where Smoky Lake is. Is it in census divisions No. 12 or 13?

Mr. Fane: I would not have the foggiest notion where census divisions Nos. 12 and 13 are.

Mr. Drury: Then our ignorance is mutual.

Mr. Fane: It is east, or north, of the city of Edmonton. Edmonton happens to be the capital of Alberta, a city of 400,000 people.

Mr. Drury: It might be included. I will have this checked and will let the hon. member know.

Mr. Fane: Thank you.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the committee, and I will see the minister about this before tomorrow. With regard to the figures which I gave and which are on the record, I went up to my office and checked them. With reference to Quebec the figure is 179; Saskatchewan is 145, and all the other provinces are listed. However, I will get in touch with the minister between now and tomorrow.

Mr. Drury: Thank you.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would indicate the project in Sydney to which he referred. How many people are employed and what is the nature of this project?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the Sydney N.E.S. area I gave the figure of three projects, not one. It has been the practice under this program to treat as confidential information relating to plans. The department has not disclosed the names of those who have made plans to avail themselves of these benefits, and the announcement of a project is made by the company. I have undertaken, when certificates entitling the beneficiaries to benefits under the Income Tax Act are issued, to publish the list of those certificates; but until such time as the certificates are applied for and issued we will not be publishing the names of those who have indicated their intention to take advantage of this program.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that a matter such as this must be kept confidential in order to cut down competition. When the minister referred to figures in Sydney and spoke of prospective employment in Sydney, he implied that this had actually taken place. This is not the fact. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has gone across the province bragging about every job that has come up. The government are instituting a coastguard college in Sydney, after removing the naval base, and they are bragging about employing 20 or 30 people in this coastguard college. How can the minister speak now of 200 jobs, when these jobs have not yet come about?

• (9:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question.

Is it possible to revise a designated area? There is in my riding a parish which is in Compton and the latter is part of the Sherbrooke area. People in that parish have a hard time of it because an industry which used to give work to 300 people closed down about ten years ago and that city is now in a state of stagnation. Life there is very difficult and representations have been made to me to have that city included in a designated area.

Here is the question I would like to ask the minister. Would it be possible to add that parish to a designated area?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, we are now getting representations such as those the hon. member has just made. I will study them and see what can be done to avoid cases of social or economic injustice.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, we are now becoming very interested in the examination of the designated area program, as the minister probably gathers, and it now appears obvious that his estimates will not be completed tonight. I wish to put some questions to the minister regarding a more general review of his department and I will ask him to take them into consideration and answer me when the estimates come back.

As the committee will remember, this department was set up by legislation two years ago, I believe. At that time many of us who spoke in the debate indicated that we were mystified as to the purpose of the department and how it was going to fit in with departments such as the Department of Trade and Commerce, because we thought that much duplication would result.

Last year we were very easy on the minister because his department had only been set up for a year and we felt he still needed time to organize it. However this time we want to know all about his department. It is an interesting department. If rumour serves me rightly, there are probably more frustrated geniuses in this department than in any other department of the government. I notice that in the estimates, out of a total of 635 employees, 318 earn from $10,000 to $23,000. That buys an awful lot of talent.

I would like to hear from the minister a detailed statement of what these fellows are doing. We hear that the department is cannibalising some other departments to get its employees. They are hiring them away; and, again if some of the stories we hear are true, this is one of the most schizophrenic and disorganized departments. I would like the minister to take some time to tell us in what type of programs the department is engaged, what studies it is making, in what areas they are taking place and in short, take us into his confidence. I do not want the minister to name the companies but I think we are entitled to know in some detail what his department is doing, how it is conducting itself, and particularly what achievements it has made in the last two years.

I hope the minister will tell us a little bit about the liaison between his department and the provinces. For example, one of the planners in the province of Ontario told me they have given up the Department of Industry. They came down here, held conferences and then gone home not knowing what on earth is being done here. I suppose it is this smokescreen of confidence regarding confidential matters about which the minister was talking. In fact, you keep them so confidential that the provinces do not know what you are up to. It seems to me there is something wrong in the lack of co-ordination between the federal government and the provinces.

When this department was set up two years ago we asked how it was going to fit in with, for example, the Department of Trade and Commerce. We have never really found out how the work of the Department of Industry is dovetailed with the work of other departments which seem to be doing roughly the same work.

I would like to have some indication from the minister on how these programs originate. Does he decide what the department is going to do? How many of the projects originate with the staff? We hear that a lot of them are frustrated because they cannot get a clear line of activity from the minister, and this is wrong. Perhaps he can tell us about it in his reply.

Those are some of the questions which I would like the minister to answer, and I hope it will be a fairly detailed answer because this is the first time in two years that we have really taken the time to go into his department. We want to give it a good going over while we are at it.

Mr. Drury: In response to that, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I understood the hon. member to indicate he does not expect an immediate answer from me. However, I will provide him with a copy of the annual report which outlines in considerable detail all the things we have done. I will also furnish him with a copy of my introductory remarks which appear in Hansard and which also, although rather more briefly, indicate answers which he has been seeking.

Mr. Johnston: Speaking on the question of the boundaries of designated areas, I wish to point out to the minister that originally the north end of the Okanagan designated area left out the Shuswap lake region possibly because on the federal electoral map it is part of the Kamloops constituency. Within the Shuswap lake region are included the village and municipality of Salmon Arm and the community of Sicamous. Representations were made on behalf of this combined area, and I believe that, wisely, a change was made which placed the Salmon Arm village and municipality within the designated area. However, it seemed to be forgotten that the representations had included Sicamous as well as Salmon Arm, and that these areas are very close together. I think the Sicamous region could well have been included, speaking in terms of an area to be designated, and it would have made a much more logical map of the north end of that region. If and when a review of this northern boundary is considered, I urge very strongly that the shape of it be rounded out to include the Sicamous region within the designated area.

Mr. Drury: I do not know the precise answer to this. However, I do know that as a consequence of representations made some time ago, it was agreed that some N.E.S. areas as defined by the previous Department of Labour did not appear to be an economic unit, and that the area which centred on Vernon should include Salmon Arm. As a consequence the area was delineated to include Salmon Arm. This has nothing to do with the designated area program; it is a redelineation of the national employment service area to make it more realistic than it has been in the past. I will be glad to look into the matter of whether, in terms of N.E.S. needs, Sicamous should be included in the Vernon N.E.S. area, which is what I think the member is asking for.

Mr. Peters: I was surprised by the figures which the minister gave us in relation to Ontario. I still think that there was a lot of monkey business with one designation, but be that as it may, I think there is also something very surprising about Ontario in the designated areas.

Unless I am wrong, the minister said that 197 projects had either been contemplated, undertaken, or were in the process of going on in Ontario. This involved a total of $332 million. If I am not wrong, and I have just roughly added together the unemployment insurance areas, and municipalities and towns, less than 50,000 people are involved. Probably there are 35,000 people in all these towns. Let us say that the entire area surrounding the unemployment insurance area includes 100,000 people. This is a remarkable amount of money to spend on such a number of people. Were this correct, this area would be more heavily industrialized than the city of Montreal. There cannot be 197 industries in these towns. Believe me, if there were, they would be de-designated immediately. This is not true. This situation has not been arrived at yet.

Mr. Drury: The hon. gentleman said, "This is not true". He should not make misleading assertions. I am sure that the hon. gentleman will recall that one of the N.E.S. areas designated at the beginning of this program was the industrial city of Windsor.

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Drury: Another one was the city of Cornwall, and still another was the city of Brantford.

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Drury: All three of which, as a consequence of industrial growth and a reduction in unemployment have been de-designated. Nevertheless, in these areas there was, during the period of designation, substantial investment attracted by this program, and a substantial increase in job opportunities. What I gave the hon. member was the Ontario record. I caution him against making any such statement as, "This is not true", because that statement simply is not true.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am the first to admit I was wrong, and I apologize for having said what I did say. I was misled into using the sessional paper which sets out the new criteria. I did not realize that the areas that were named have been de-designated. I did not realize that this was the total program, and I should have known.

I think the minister will agree with me that if we had 197 factories in these areas that we have now designated, the areas would be booming. Quite frankly we would hope that that is the situation. That of course brings me to another question. I should have been more careful, but the date of the change respecting criteria was August 4, 1965. The areas that the minister mentioned included Windsor, Chatham, Cornwall, Timmins, Wallaceburg, Rouyn and Val d'Or—perhaps I should not include those last two towns in the Ontario group. I should have only mentioned Chatham, Cornwall, Timmins, Wallaceburg and Windsor. We sometimes forget that the two towns I mentioned at the end of my first list are in Quebec, and therefore do not fit into the Ontario scheme. I might point out that my own town and Rouyn-Noranda played off this year, and Noranda won the all Ontario northern championship in hockey. We sometimes forget that those two towns are not in Ontario.

Since the change in criteria in certain areas has taken place, I should like to ask, separately, as to how many projects are listed under section A. Also, in the census districts—and this involves Haliburton, Parry Sound and Manitoulin—how many of those have expressed an intention with respect to a project? Second, which projects are firm projects, and in which of these areas do those occur?

Mr. Drury: I cannot produce that statistical breakdown as between those, in essence, falling before August 4, and those after. That would require an extensive analysis, and a search through a very substantial number of projects involved.

There is also another difficulty. It is sometimes difficult to say whether a project is firm or not. An application is made for information as to the benefits, and as to what is needed to qualify in order to obtain the benefits. This information is provided. Communication is established with the entrepreneur who has expressed interest. We do not, however, follow up these communications in terms of progress reports or periodic inspections. Some of the projects or inquiries may not be proceeded with. I think it is reasonable to say in respect of the projects I have indicated that we feel fairly assured these are not merely, in a sense, the taking of orders, or staking claims. These are projects that are seriously intended and are going ahead.

Mr. Peters: To my mind it seems that a danger is involved in some of the projects. Was there not some date at which benefits would be sawed off? Was there not a date, which is now past, by which time a project had either to be finalized, or in process, after which time the benefits would not be retroactive?

Mr. Drury: In respect of a project in an area which has been continuously designated, at the outset of the program the benefits were in the form of income tax relief and increased capital cost allowances. Both these forms of relief come under the Income Tax Act. The entrepreneur would seek and apply for those advantages at a time when he was seeking, or felt he had to seek relief from the payment of income tax. As the hon. member knows, a company whose fiscal operations close at the end of the calendar year is not called upon to pay income tax with respect to its corporate activities until the following June 30. It is possible in certain areas of operation for half a year to go by before a corporation would apply for exemption from income tax. Any program of seeking certificates will be in arrears to actual activity.

In 1965 the law was changed, providing, instead of income tax exemptions and substantially increased capital cost allowances, a monetary grant. The monetary grant was to apply only in respect of projects initiated subsequent to the beginning of July. That, if you like, was the turnaround date. I am not sure that is what the hon. gentleman is talking about.

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Chairman, this is the date. The minister ought to be able to give a breakdown of the sort I asked for, and he ought to be able to distinguish between the total number of designations, including original projects, or original designations, and new designations. The criteria have changed. The assistance is payable in a different manner. There will certainly be a different criterion. This should not be too difficult to sort out. The thing terminated a year ago.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: I suppose it is not very difficult to sort out. I have given a list of 470 aid projects. All one need do is to look at each of the 470 projects and decide whether it falls under the first program or the second, in whatever designated area it is. Then the figures could be produced. You just have to examine 470 projects.

Mr. McCutcheon: I should like to ask the minister a few questions for clarification purposes having to do with the area I represent. Mine is a "D" designated area, and I would like to ask the minister how many new industries were established in the area. By "new" I do mean new—new corporations.

Second, I should like to ask the minister how many enlargements there have been of existing industries. If possible, I should like him to segregate the brand new corporations from, say, new plants which are branches of corporations in other areas. But I would particularly like to know how many new entrepreneurs have entered the area.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, there is a bit of a problem here. We do not inquire of a man whether he is establishing a brand new business or has been carrying on business elsewhere, whether he has ever been in business before or whether in fact he has had a lot of experience.

In order for any entity which wants to establish business in the Wallaceburg N.E.S. area—which I think is the area to which the hon. gentleman refers—to qualify, it merely need be a corporation or a company which hitherto has not done business in the locality in which it is going to establish itself. Whether it is the subsidiary of another firm, or is doing business elsewhere in Canada, or has ever been in business before, is not material to this particular program or to the criteria. So, short of sending out a questionnaire to the companies involved to ascertain this particular information, I do not think I could furnish it to the hon. member.

I have seen some of the new plants in Wallaceburg, and I know that they comprise operations of corporations in Canada which have carried on similar businesses in the United States, as well as independent Canadian operations with no United States affiliations at all. Also they are brand new plants, new operations in the area, as well as expansions of existing operations. You cover all the parameters, but unfortunately I cannot tell the hon. member which are which without either a physical inspection myself or sending out a questionnaire to all the people who have established there.

Mr. McCutcheon: May I thank the minister for that explanation. I do not think it will be necessary for him to go out and examine the situation or to send out a questionnaire. When this legislation went through a matter of a few years ago—

Mr. Drury: It made Wallaceburg very happy.

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think it did; but the thought I had as the legislation went through was that it was going to do things, one of which was to provide an opportunity for new business; and by "new" business I thought it would be new business. Actually, I think it would be fair to say that the designation of this area has done nothing for brand new business, but it has certainly helped some existing businesses which had tax problems.

I have one more question, Mr. Chairman. How many tax certificates have been issued in that area up to the present time?

Mr. Drury: I will try to find out, Mr. Chairman; I have not that particular information to hand.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): No, Mr. Chairman; we are still waiting for answers from the minister. In his earlier remarks the minister made a statement about the purposes of ARDA, and if I took him down correctly he said that the real purpose was to establish a climate. How does he do that? Can he tell me more about how you establish this climate?

Mr. Drury: In case the hon. gentleman would not understand the term "establish a climate", perhaps he understands the alternative term I also used, "establish an economic framework in Canada", within which an efficient manufacturing industry can prosper and grow.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): The minister has been before the committee quite a while, Mr. Chairman, and I can understand he is getting tired, but I do not know why he is getting so sensitive to questions from the opposition. After all, our duty is not necessarily to heap mountains of praise upon a minister, but to try to find out how a particular department functions, what it does, and so on. We have not found this out up to the present time.

Let me rephrase my question. If the purpose is to establish an economic framework, how is the minister's department doing this? What is it doing to bring about an economic framework? This to me is just a phrase. Can he add to that and tell us more about it?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I have asked for a copy of the annual report. Unfortunately the copy was sent down which is in French. Would the hon. gentleman make use of the French copy, or would he like to wait for one in English?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I am on the horns of a dilemma here. This really is ridiculous. Surely the minister knows what his department is doing. Why the reticence to tell us about it? All we want from him is to tell us how his department operates.

We are under the impression, perhaps wrongly, that there is a lot of confusion in the department. When we get to the salaries item I want to go through the tremendous number of people involved and find out what are the areas of responsibility and what has been allocated to them. There are an enormous number of high priced people employed, to which no one objects, if we want the department to function efficiently. But we do want to know a great deal more about the department than we have been able to extract from the minister. I am prepared to stay with the department almost indefinitely. Surely the minister can tell us how this department functions. I want to examine how it works with the provincial agencies, and that sort of thing.

As I say, we are under the impression that things are getting mixed up, though we could be wrong. But we do want some clarification. I hope the minister will not be so sensitive about this. As a start, can he tell me about this economic framework and how his department goes about building it?

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: The amiable hon. member said I was sensitive. I hope I am not, when it comes to questions seeking information. But for the hon. member to stand up and say after two days of general debate during which a good deal of specific information has been provided in answers, that he is uncertain about how the department works, leads me to fall into the trap of attributing motives, a thing which politicians are not supposed to do.

The hon. member can easily see the kind of intention of which I suspect him. I must either assume I am in the presence of a two-man filibuster, or else that the hon. member is rather more stupid than hitherto I thought him to be. The second alternative is not really acceptable to me so I am driven back to the first.

If the hon. member really wishes to learn more about the department I will provide him with the literature. It is clear the hon. member and his colleague have no intention of allowing this item to pass before ten o'clock and I think he had better do his reading after hours. If he and his hon. friend would allow this first item to go through I will be delighted to provide answers to specific questions and give all the information I can.

I am always glad to let people know what we are doing, why we are doing it and how we are doing it. But to invite me at this juncture to make a speech on economic development in Canada is something of an insult to my intelligence. It is also an insult to the committee whose time is being wasted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): That is certainly calculated to expedite the examination of the estimates. Again I wish to return to the questions which were posed earlier. Subject to your direction, Mr. Chairman, I do not think some of them can be answered on specific items because they deal with general policy matters. Those of us who sit on this side of the house sometimes get weary of these phrases the ministers throw out about filibustering. As the hon. gentleman well knows, nobody over here ever filibusters anything; all we are interested in doing is giving legislation the careful and thorough examination it merits.

An hon. Member: Oh yes?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): And that is what we are trying to do in the case of the estimates now under consideration. This is a department which has only been functioning for two years, and it does not seem unreasonable that we should examine its affairs and see what progress is being made.

All too often members of the press gallery write articles describing how we push estimates through without giving them due consideration. It seems we cannot win. If we put the stuff through quickly, we are criticized; if we examine it carefully, the minister or his colleagues accuse the opposition of engaging in a filibuster. I disregard the hon. gentleman's insulting statement about stupidity. Again, I do not know why the minister is so sensitive—

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that the suggestion of a filibuster did not arise with me. It came from the hon. member's colleague, who told us he did not like the notion of having to engage in a filibuster—that he regretted having to do it. It was his suggestion, not mine.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I was not in the committee when he spoke, but my information was that he did not intend to do this—he did not want to do this. He made it clear he in no way intended to carry on a filibuster.

An hon. Member: But was willing to do so.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Oh he is always willing to do so. But we should get back to the estimates of the department and not quarrel about whether there is a filibuster or not.

Can the minister tell me about the method of consultation with the provinces and to what extent he is working in co-ordination with the provinces? I was not being facetious when I said that some of the people in the Ontario department had told us they had not been able to find out the general area of the federal department's activities, and were not able to integrate their own thinking and planning with the projects the department is undertaking. This is serious. If there is a conflict between a powerful provincial planning agency and the minister's department, and if information is not constantly passing back and forth, the wastage of money and effort is terrific. It seems to me to be worth while spending a few minutes in an attempt to clarify this point.

Mr. Drury: From time to time I meet with the Minister of Economics and Development of Ontario, generally in relation to specific points, and we have discussions either here or in Toronto. Similar meetings take place between my deputy minister and his deputy minister, again in relation to specific points rather than generalities. There is a link between other rather more subordinate officials in the department and their counterparts at Queen's Park, not only on the departmental side but in respect of the area development agency.

In addition there is an annual conference of the deputy ministers of the ten provinces held in or near one of the provincial capitals. This is attended, as a guest, by the deputy minister of industry and, also as guests, by the ministers of industry or their equivalents from the provinces. Collective sessions are held for a period of between 24 and 48 hours.

Then there is, of course, the long distance telephone, and very considerable correspondence. From what I have seen in the way of testimonial correspondence emanating from Mr. Randall's department in Toronto, I find it difficult indeed to subscribe to the view which the hon. member appears to have formed that Ontario has been unable to learn what the Department of Industry in Ottawa is all about. I do not know who the hon. member's informant is, but he is certainly not the person or persons who have written to us.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for taking up the time of the committee for a few moments. I rise on a question of privilege related to standing order 41 of the House of Commons as well as paragraph 108 of Beauchesne's fourth Edition on the rights and privileges of the house.

Last night, in Quebec city, the Canadian flag this house adopted was flown on the Rocamadour patro building.

The leader of the Union Nationale, who held his meeting in that building, ordered his organizers to call on Father Bernier, who was in charge of the building, to remove the Canadian flag, our national emblem, before the meeting.

This act constitutes a blow to my privileges as a member of parliament, to the privileges of all the members of this house, for it concerns an act passed by the house two years ago; it is also an insult to all Canadian citizens, at least to those who are truly Canadian citizens.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I tell the committee that the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency who has risen on a question of privilege cannot do so at this time because it is out of order and because the house is in committee.

Mr. Allard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member tell the house whether this Mr. Johnson allowed the flag of the province of Quebec to be hoisted?

Mr. Laflamme: Certainly—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I ask the hon. members to kindly return to the matter under consideration at present.

[English]

Mr. Peters: I am surprised at some of the minister's remarks because we have not been rough on him in the past, regarding this matter. Area development is almost the sole program whereby the federal government can be of assistance to many parts of Canada. That program is the hope of many agricultural sections, particularly of northwestern Ontario, which is experiencing a decline in population and is not participating in the national average economic growth.

Plans made under the area development program by the Department of Industry could be of great assistance to my part of the country. I would make no apology for filibustering, but I have no intention of doing so because I believe it would be pretty futile. If the minister is not going to honour the commitment he made the house last year, then he is not likely to honour any commitment he would make tonight in order to get his estimates passed. We had hoped the matter of designation and criteria would go before a committee. If the minister is willing to let that happen I am prepared to sit down.

The minister really does not understand the criteria. This is not a program similar to ARDA. ARDA is not going to build industries and factories, although some limited industrial development can take place under it. It is not an adjunct to this program.

I agree pressure was put on the minister to have this go to a committee where the criteria could be discussed, but he has not seen fit to let that happen. If he wants me to agree to the passing of his estimates I would still be willing to take his word, if he says he will send the criteria and designations to a committee, as he agreed to do last June. If not, I am going to discuss each individual case because I want to know what happened and why it did not work.

I have lots of time, Mr. Chairman. Maybe the minister's colleagues and some other hon. members do not, but this matter is important not only to me but to all hon. members who live in the northern parts of Canada. This applies to northern Quebec, and Quebec members should take a look at the situation because, as the hon. member for Villeneuve said the other day, this problem is as acute in his areas as it is in mine. I am sure the same is true in northern Manitoba, northern Alberta, northern Saskatchewan and northern B.C., to say nothing of the maritime provinces.

I think the hon. member for Danforth was right when he said there is a great deal of misunderstanding between the province of Ontario and the federal government. I was of the opinion that the minister had personnel working in co-operation with the Ontario government on economic development, but if this is not true I will be surprised.

Maybe when the minister returns to the chamber tomorrow he will be able to indicate what developments have taken place since last summer in Bracebridge, Collingwood, Parry Sound, Elliot Lake and Sturgeon Falls and, if he wants to, he can throw in Manitoulin island, which I consider to be an interloper on this particular matter.

A considerable change has been made in this program. The minister should read the Throne Speech in which it was indicated that this program was to help slow growth areas of Canada, and equalize opportunities for employment for all the people of Canada. That was the election promise which was made in most of the non-urban ridings in Ontario during the last federal election.

We are anxious to understand this program and we are trying as hard as possible to persuade the minister to be open minded about making a change, because the plan is not working in the areas that need it most. I would like to know what has happened in the province of Quebec in places like Aylmer, Gaspé and Maniwaki, and in Mont Laurier, which is not far from here, and in Matane and Mégantic. These are small communities which are not in a similar position to places like Chatham, Windsor, Wallaceburg; or a place such as Cornwall, which is situated on the St. Lawrence seaway and able to take advantage of the development of the seaway. There is a considerable difference between these communities.

If this is a good plan I would like to know what objection there is to changing the criteria. I may be wrong about the amount the department has put into it, but if I read the estimates correctly, total expenditure under the statutory provision for incentives for development of industrial employment opportunities in designated areas is to be $300,000, which is not much out of a $10 million program.

If that is all we are spending out of a $10 million program, can the minister give me any good reason why we should not extend the program to other areas that are not covered by it? Personally I cannot see why he is reluctant to do this or to consider it.

If we have the money and if the government is interested in developing secondary industry in areas where there is a slow growth situation, we should be prepared at least to set up a relationship with the provincial government to see what can be mutually worked out between the two to spend some of the $10 million we are providing. I do not know whether or not the minister knows off hand what industries are developing in Bracebridge, or whether there is going to be any development in Collingwood or some of the other communities. It would not be difficult for me to take a drive over to check. I think I could phone Toronto and find out from one of the area development agencies in Ontario whether or not there has been any talk. It always is very interesting to find, in speaking to members of the department, that the interest they have is exactly the same as that being expressed, for instance, in my area, in the Northeastern Development Association. If somebody is talking about a new plant coming in, everybody is talking about it and taking a certain amount of credit for it. So it would seem to me there is a certain amount of overlapping and some co-operation between the various departments in that regard. For that reason I believe the minister should be in a position to give us this kind of information.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I really do not know what can be accomplished by this. I should like the minister to fulfil the promise he made to the house and send both the criteria and the designated area program to the committee. Previously he agreed to do this. Really I do not see why he disagrees now. I do not see why he would not rather do that than discuss some of these criteria in the house tomorrow. I am sure some of the officials would be quite prepared to take credit for the work they have done, and give an indication of the fields of endeavour which they intend to pursue. I am sure that then the members of the house might be in a position to decide whether or not the criteria are satisfactory to them. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, it is neither satisfactory to me nor to the area which I represent. This is well known. It has been well known for some time. The minister, unimpeachable as he may be with his long association with the Department of Defence Production, where they really do not have to answer to anyone, because it is a highly complex field, is perhaps finding it difficult to associate with some of the other persons who have gone into this criteria, and who have not found it is as simple a proposition as the minister has indicated.

Two years ago I had the opportunity to sit in with a number of the officials of the Department of Labour. At that time officials were brought in from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. They discussed the criteria being used at that time and there were new criteria. The criteria about which we were particularly concerned were those which would provide for an increase in the economic growth in those areas where population is decreasing because of the lack of primary industry, particularly those industries that suffered a gradual decline before the five year period which is in the criteria now. I should like to use the example of Kirkland Lake. From 1937 to 1939 Kirkland Lake hit its peak of employment. Following the war it decreased because activities stopped in some of the gold mines in that area. As the mines closed down the population decreased. The population did not fit into the criteria, for the simple reason that those who were over age 50 had worked underground for 30 years and found it impossible to retrain for any type of employment. In addition they had homes in that area, had raised their children there, and had friends there. At that time most of them retired and did not become statistics, so far as unemployment was concerned. They felt they were not employable.

All the young people decided to leave the area because jobs were not forthcoming and they, too, did not become statistics so far as unemployment is concerned. You would then imagine that the second wave of the criteria would apply, the one in respect of a family living in a non-urban population area and having an income of a predetermined figure. It is surprising, in an area where a large number of highly paid salesmen and a large number of teachers and professional people make their home and are not in the employee field, that a mockery is made of the family income, which is one of the criteria for the designation. It is more than surprising to those who know the area that the income in the Kirkland Lake area, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, is about $500 higher than the income in Noranda, and about $400 higher than the income in the Timmins area or vice-versa.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that little progress has been made today, the order of business for tomorrow will be the same as that for today.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PENITENTIARIES—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF FEMALE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions in the past I have asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) whether he would consider the appointment of a female deputy commissioner within the penitentiaries system of Canada. At this time we need a modern approach to the problems of crime and punishment. This subject has been discussed on many occasions in the house over a number of years, and it is heartening to observe some signs that a change is taking place.

I am sure we are all looking for the initiation of a project which will protect society while at the same time, in so far as possible, encourage and help offenders to become useful members of our national community. I was greatly heartened to see the changes that have taken place in our prisons system when I was kindly invited to visit Cowansville in Quebec, where a new minimum security prison has been established. There have been many new changes made there in a physical way, different from the situation which existed in respect of the old bastille-like fortresses with which we have become familiar.

We have also been heartened by the minister's decision in the case of female drug offenders, in that they will not be sent back to Matsqui unless they so desire. On reflection, I am sure that many people will realize that this is a good move, in that the Matsqui prison is within a short distance of Vancouver, the worst drug centre in Canada, and that upon release of these prisoners they would more than likely be plunged back into this area.

It was also pleasing to note that recent newspaper reports indicate that a women's rehabilitation centre will be established in Kingston to be in full operation by August. The commissioner of penitentiaries stated that this centre would accommodate up to eight prisoners at one time and would be staffed by a superintendent, a female classification operator and four correction officers. He stated that prisoners at the prison for women in Kingston would be eligible for transfer to the home two months before the completion of their sentences.

All these things are signs that a change is in the making. Now is the time to make drastic changes in our method of treating women offenders, in line with the examples set by other countries of the world. I am sure that the appointment of a woman deputy commissioner within our penitentiaries system, to be in charge of all female offenders in female correctional institutions, including community hostels and prelease houses such as the one to be established at Kingston, will be a step in the right direction.

It is likely that the federal government will soon take over from the province the responsibility for all female offenders who have been sentenced to terms longer than one year. At the present time there are only about 120 women prisoners under federal care. It would seem suitable at this time to try out a pilot plan under which some of the new ideas in penology, such as prelease houses, could be followed.

Women offenders, according to many penologists, are the best type of prisoner to use in trying out innovations. This is true because the majority are not involved in organized criminal society, are not dangerous to property or persons, and have been convicted for offences arising from inadequacy, prostitution, alcoholism, self-destruction and drug addiction. In other words, they are their own worst enemies and their own worst stumbling blocks to recovery.

This is not the place to discuss the details of the new penology nor the responsibilities of a woman deputy commissioner. These are set out very briefly and clearly in the submission recently prepared and placed before the government by the directors of the Elizabeth Fry Society of Kingston, Ontario, and the members of the senior staff of the prison for women at Kingston. I would simply urge upon the Solicitor General that there is need at this time for the appointment of a woman deputy commissioner within the penitentiaries system who would be charged with full responsibility for all female offenders in correctional institutions operated by the federal government.

I would very much hope that this step could be taken now, while the Solicitor General is freshly come to the problem. I really feel that Agnes MacPhail would be exceedingly happy and proud if she could see the fruition of so much of the work she tried to do more than 30 years ago, because she was trying to advance penology, as we are, among people of her time. It would seem to me that now, when we find that countries such as Holland, Japan, Britain and others have tried out something that is new and more modern in this respect, would be an excellent time to put in charge of female offenders a thoroughly capable woman commissioner, who might or might not live right on the spot—that is not important—but somebody who would be charged with the special responsibility to try out some of the newer methods of penology in this country, which is behind so many of the more advanced countries in this respect.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that I am grateful for the example the hon. member has provided by her interest in our correctional system. Permit me also to add that in my humble opinion the highly respected Agnes MacPhail has a worthy successor in the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). Dealing with the subject matter of the hon. member's remarks, I would point out that only yesterday I received the report of P. S. Ross and Partners with regard to the organization in the women's prison at Kingston. I am sure the hon. member would not be out of sympathy with my suggestion that I ought to study this report before committing myself in regard to her interesting proposal.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

INCOME TAX—QUEBEC—IMPOSITION ON MONEY FOUND BY CHILDREN

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, this has to do with an item published in Le Nouveau Samedi of May 28, 1966, and entitled:

They find $30,000 while playing.

On May 30, 1966, I put a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) concerning the contents of a woollen sock found on the street by two children in the city of Jonquière.

The people of my area are asking a lot of questions on the source of this fabulous discovery of $30,000. At first glance one wonders whether this is not an amount hidden from the income tax by an individual or a corporation. But the serial numbers being consecutive, it can only involve a single withdrawal.

Indeed, the 300 $100 bank notes bear serial numbers A/J80,65600 to A/J80,65900 and are all brand new.

One could think that the amount was destined to a political party for the election campaign in Quebec. It could be an old trick used by some parties in spite of the promises made by the old politicians.

Yet, to top it all, a judge of the Superior Court of Quebec, Mr. Justice Toussaint McNicol, claims that he was holding the amount in trust but refuses to name the payee.

In that case it is the estate tax division which will have to intervene because this would be the first time in my life that I would be in a position to discover an estate in a woollen sock. Yet, there are those who claim that there are no more woollen socks in the province of Quebec.

It is said that out of the mouths of babes and sucklings comes the truth. Now, I would be very pleased if those two candid babes could have contributed to throw some light on this very strange event.

And it had to happen right in the middle of the election campaign. Is it a consequence of the heat of the election?

What puzzles me most is the complete silence of most newspapermen about this event, they who are usually so fond of sensational news. Are we spectators at the comedy of the plague-stricken animals?

It is up to the Minister of National Revenue to see that the same justice is applied to all.

That is why I am asking the minister whether he intends to conduct a full inquiry into the matter.

[English]

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): I wish to thank the hon. member for Roberval for his interest in the activities of the revenue department, and for his alertness in pointing out items of this kind. I will simply say that officials of the taxation division are always interested in items of this kind and will be making inquiries in due course. The information which they obtain through the powers of investigation given to them by the provisions of the Income Tax Act will have to be kept confidential, and the department will not be able to disclose whether the sum of money represents taxable income or not.

I would like to tell the hon. member again, in case he did not hear the first part of what I said, that the department is interested in items of this kind and will be making inquiries in due course.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 3, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

REDISTRIBUTION

TABLING OF REPORTS OF PROVINCIAL COMMISSIONS

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to sections 19 and 21 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, statutes of Canada, 13 Elizabeth II, chapter 31, 1964-65, to lay before the house a certified copy of the reports of the electoral boundaries commissions for the following provinces returned to me this day by the representation commissioner, as follows:

1. Alberta, without amendment.

2. British Columbia and amendments thereto.

3. Manitoba and amendments thereto in the form of resolutions of that province's commission.

4. New Brunswick, without amendment.

5. Nova Scotia, without amendment.

6. Ontario, and amendments thereto.

7. Prince Edward Island, without amendment.

8. Quebec, and amendments thereto; and

9. Saskatchewan, without amendment.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West) presented the fifth report of the standing committee on transport and communications, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour will no doubt have received a report in this regard, but I should like to ask him now what is the present position regarding the strike, which more and more is bringing about disastrous stagnation.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that it will not be news to most members of the house that the mediator, Judge Lippe, had a difficult day yesterday. Nevertheless I think he performed a useful service in keeping the parties together working toward a settlement.

Late yesterday Judge Lippe announced his recommendation to both sides regarding a commission of inquiry which he felt should be set up. That suggestion was to be given consideration overnight. I may say that following the meeting with the mediator the longshoremen suggested that a meeting with the stevedoring companies should be held. A telegram was sent to the Prime Minister last night on this subject, and at the request of the Prime Minister I replied to it early this morning. In view of the publicity that has been given to this matter it might be wise, with the permission of the house, to read into the record the telegram of reply.

It is addressed to Mr. Paul Asselin and Mr. Gerard Tremblay, one of whom is the president of the largest longshoremen's union in Quebec, the Montreal union, and the other is international vice president. The telegram reads as follows:

> The Prime Minister has received your telegram of June 2 and has asked me to reply. I would first say that any suggestion for the early settlement of the strike of longshoremen at St. Lawrence ports is greatly welcomed here. With respect to your suggestion that the shipping federation be displaced as the bargaining representative for the employers they represent you will recall that in the various certificates granted to your organization by the wartime and Canada labour relations boards the shipping federation was named as the representative of the various employers affected. It is not in my power to displace either the federation or your organization as the representative agencies of the employers or the employees affected by the dispute. I would hope that both parties resume collective bargaining to restore the good relations that existed for many years in the past.

I would supplement this information by saying that the wire has gone out and my deputy minister is still in Montreal with Judge Lippe, working on this matter as one of greatest urgency.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, could the minister also read into the record the telegram that was sent to the Prime Minister, so we will have the full record; and will he say whether the displacement of the shipping federation is a condition precedent, in so far as the stevedores' organization is concerned, to a settlement?

Mr. Nicholson: I have no objection, if the house is willing, to reading into the record the wire that was received by the Prime Minister. I might say that there are some points in it that are open to argument. Perhaps that is not surprising in disputes of this nature; you get them from one side or the other. The wire to the Prime Minister reads as follows:

Must regretfully advise you that the International Longshoremen's Association now finds it evident that it cannot settle its dispute with the customers of its employers. The employers of the longshoremen at Montreal, Quebec and Three Rivers are the undernoted stevedoring companies duly incorporated in Canada and owned and operated by Canadians. The International Longshoremen's Association have by circumstance been placed in the position of dealing with the Shipping Federation of Canada the members of which are not our employers but are in fact foreign steamship companies for the most part located in Great Britain.

That is not strictly accurate, because there are some Canadian companies in this federation as well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that statement part of the wire?

Mr. Nicholson: No, I interjected that. Continuing:

It is obvious that the capricious attitude of the Shipping Federation of Canada and our members are convinced that if the shipping federation remains in command of the negotiations relevant to a proposed collective agreement between our organization its members and various Canadian stevedore companies the said collective agreement will be blocked by its present impasse until such times as the dispute in Great Britain with the British sailors is settled.

Respectfully petition the labour minister to direct that the negotiations be conducted between the International Longshoremen's Association and the employers of its members, which are namely the following Canadian stevedore companies: Brown and Ryan, Eastern Canada, Wolfe Stevedores, Cullen Stevedores, Montreal, and Saint John Stevedores, etc. etc. It is our earnest belief that action by the hon. minister upon this justified petition will result in a settlement of this dispute within a relatively short period.

Paul Asselin,
Gerard Tremblay
On behalf of the elected International Longshoremen's Association negotiating committee.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That telegram certainly does not give much indication of hopefulness. Under the circumstances does the government intend to regard the national welfare as of some importance—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and take action along the line that was taken some years ago by the St. Laurent government?

Mr. Winkler: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wait for the answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: You are the government; govern. You wanted power. Now you have it, use it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I at least have the courtesy of the minister saying yes or no?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I gave the right hon. gentleman the answer yesterday. I said this matter is receiving careful and urgent consideration by the government, and if the hon. gentleman has any suggestions to make they would be welcomed.

Mr. Pearson: He has not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government if it has now abrogated its responsibility to the opposition?

Mr. Pickersgill: A constructive suggestion.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the minister whether he is now willing to follow not only the suggestion but the example set by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) when he was Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask him whether there has been any communication between the government and Premier Lesage or members of the Quebec government relating to the strike at Montreal.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice. I can speak on behalf of my own department but the hon. member is asking about communications with the government.

Mr. Grafftey: Then I should like to ask the minister whether there has been any contact between him or his officials and Premier Lesage or members of the Quebec government regarding the strike at Montreal.

Mr. Nicholson: Not by my department, so far as I know. This matter is a federal responsibility, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: Would the minister answer my question? This is a federal responsibility, but has there been any communication?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In my understanding the minister did reply to the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there have been reports and complaints of continuing harassment and interference with trucks which are engaged in lawful and essential business at the Montreal docks, and an injunction in respect thereto has been taken out. What means are being taken to prevent this grave injustice to rights, which in particular is having an adverse effect on the availability of feed to the farmers of Quebec?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that question will have to be answered either by my colleague the Minister of Transport or by the Solicitor General, but I should think by the Minister of Transport.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, just before coming into the house I spoke to the chairman of the harbours board. The injunction is being respected this morning; there are only three pickets at the gates of the harbours board. Trucks are moving in and out and grain is being taken from the elevators. That is the report I received at eleven o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—REPORTED COMPLAINT AGAINST CAMPAIGN IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would he inform the house whether the government has received any protest from the Soviet union against alleged anti-Soviet propaganda in Canada, and what reply the government has given or is preparing to counter such allegations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which my hon. friend refers was the subject of representations made to a member of our embassy in Moscow at the Soviet foreign ministry on June 1. The Soviet embassy here and Soviet officials in Moscow have recently made known to us informally their concern at what they refer to as an anti-Soviet campaign in the Canadian press, citing what they consider to be evidence from press reports to support their concern. We have explained that such reporting is a normal function of the press in a free society, and that what the press prints is in no way controlled by the government. We have assured them that it remains a sincere desire of the Canadian government to encourage the development of mutually beneficial relations between Canada and the Soviet union.

In this connection I think I can say with your concurrence, Mr. Speaker, that not only the government but all of us in this house are greatly looking forward to the forthcoming visit to Canada of Soviet parliamentarians led by the first deputy premier, Dimitri Polyansky, and to their subsequent tour of the grain growing areas in western Canada. I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, of any so-called provocations directed against the Soviet embassy nor of any activity which might impede its normal functions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I wish to direct to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, or in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary. In the light of the information provided by the Prime Minister can the parliamentary secretary inform the house if arrangements for the visit of Soviet northern experts to Canada have been completed?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I take this question as notice.

CYPRUS—RESTRICTION ON MOVEMENTS OF TURKISH CYPRIOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that it has just been announced that President

Makarios has sealed off the Turkish sector of Cyprus and has forbidden Turkish Cypriots to leave their area, can the Prime Minister tell us whether supplies are getting through and what the Canadian government is doing in regard to such action?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that matter at once. I do not have any information regarding this matter before me at the moment.

Mr. Thompson: I will direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister tell me whether this action is affecting the service of the United Nations troops the largest part of which is made up of Canadians?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I cannot say, Mr. Speaker. I have asked for a report, but I cannot give my hon. friend an answer at this moment.

TRADE

SHIPMENTS OF POWDERED MILK TO AFRICAN CHILDREN IN RHODESIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister now in a position to reply to the question I asked two days ago, which he took as notice?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am able to confirm what I said to the house that there are no instances of shipments of powdered milk for the schools and missions in Southern Rhodesia being held up.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SPENCE ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform us whether he has recently been in touch with Commissioner Spence, and whether the commissioner's report will soon be presented?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had no meeting with the commissioner, and I do not know when his report will be in.

[Mr. Thompson.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REVIEW OF REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING MENTAL ILLNESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct my question to the Minister of Health and Welfare. In his absence may I direct it to his seatmate. Will the federal government review any representations received from the provincial governments relating to the inclusion of mental illness under the medicare program, in the light of the revelations regarding the overcrowding of mental institutions? Will the minister take such representations into consideration?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a matter of general policy, and I suggest to the hon. member that the question might be placed on the order paper.

BRIDGES

NEW WESTMINSTER—REPORT ON FRASER RIVER BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, an answer to which is considered urgent by the citizens of New Westminster. I should like to ask the minister if he has yet had an opportunity of studying the report of Philipps, Barratt and Associates relative to the Fraser river bridge at New Westminster, and whether as a result there will be a recommendation for either a bridge replacement or a span replacement.

Mr. Speaker: In spite of the preface to the hon. member's question I believe it is not so urgent that it should be asked at this time.

TRANSPORT

THREATENED STRIKE OF METEOROLOGICAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if the reported threat of a work stoppage by communications personnel in the meteorological service has been averted.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I would prefer not to make a categorical answer to that question. The matter is under most urgent consideration. I think perhaps while it is under consideration it might not be very helpful for me to try to interpret what is going on.

SEAWAY TOLLS—REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF REPORT OF CONSULTANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has any information as to when the seaway authority will have the economic report available for distribution and sale.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think just as soon as it can be reproduced. I believe there are 350 pages in three volumes. They are not printed but are done by one of these processes such as mimeographing or something of that sort. As a result of the rather over-full employment in that particular field of activity in Ottawa at the moment it is difficult to get these documents produced as rapidly as we would like.

[Translation]

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—STATEMENT RESPECTING PROVINCIAL POLICE ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Can he tell the house whether he is aware the R.C.M.P. file seems to indicate that the only thing for which Mr. Vachon can be reproached is his demand for more French in the R.C.A.F.?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

Mr. Allard: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

This is a matter which concerns all French Canadian members of the house. On the basis of that file, Mr. Lesage was able to state that to ask for more French is to become a security risk, so that my question deserves an immediate answer.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will examine the standing orders, he will realize that he cannot demand an immediate answer.

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—PRESERVATION OF INDIAN SHRINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, but in his absence I should like to direct it to his parliamentary secretary. My question is a follow-up of one put by the hon. member for Saskatoon last Wednesday. The urgency of the question is expressed by the deep concern of some 800 Indians in my riding.

Can the minister say what decision has been made regarding the removal of the important Indian shrine Mistaseni to safe ground, now that the historic sites and monuments board have met and presented recommendations to the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The last time I objected to a question about this Indian national shrine I got into difficulty. However, it seems to me this is the same type of question as the last one and I should not accept it unless there is evidence of urgency which is not apparent to me at the moment.

Mr. Southam: The hon. member for Saskatoon directed this question to the minister last Wednesday, when the minister was absent, and his parliamentary secretary accepted the question as notice. I was just expressing my concern on behalf of our area.

Mr. Speaker: I am just wondering if an answer was given to the question at the time. If it was only taken as notice, the parliamentary secretary will want to give an answer.

ONTARIO—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his capacity as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. In his absence perhaps his parliamentary secretary may wish to take the question as notice. The question deals with the community development agreement signed with the province of Ontario on May 19, and it is this. Will the minister assure the house that the provincial community development officials will not visit any band or reserve without the prior permission of the band concerned?

Mr. Speaker: That question should be placed on the order paper.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN SETTLING LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has met or will be meeting the parties to the dispute with Air Canada who, I understand, will be taking a strike vote Tuesday. If he has met with them, can he report on this meeting?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I have not met with them, but as I said yesterday an official of my department met with them in Toronto yesterday. Consideration is being given to the appointment of a mediator, if it is deemed advisable or necessary. The official of the department was there in the capacity of my representative, not as a mediator.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not think, under the circumstances, a mediator is advisable?

Mr. Nicholson: I am inclined to think so.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FORMATION OF UNION OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. My question is related to further evidence of the continuing march toward a classless socialist society.

In view of the recent announcement that the professional association of foreign service officers intends to form a union for the purpose of bargaining with the government of Canada, would the Prime Minister inform the house if this union was certified as a collective bargaining agent? Would its officers and members be entitled to picket the nearly 100 Canadian embassies and consulates around the world, and the United Nations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noticed this report with great interest, and I am looking at it especially to see whether ex-foreign service officers are eligible for membership.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer of the Prime Minister to my previous question I should like to address a question to the house leader. In view of the fact that ambassadors are now being unionized, would there be any objection on the part of the government to the secretaries of parliament forming an association for the same purpose, namely collective bargaining?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I may have been a little too lenient when I allowed the first question; I certainly will not allow the second one.

SHIPPING

FAILURE TO PROVIDE PILOT FOR RUSSIAN VESSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which the Minister of Transport may wish to take as notice. I thank him for the answer which he gave yesterday about a pilot for the Alexandr Pushkin. However, allegations are being made that other vessels were given pilots and that this vessel was being discriminated against. Will the minister investigate this matter and advise me in due course?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not need to take the question as notice. I think the answer is that there was no discrimination as far as the pilotage authority is concerned. Whether there was discrimination on the part of the pickets who prevented the pilot from going aboard I would not be able to say. Neither would any other member of the government, because this question would not be within our responsibility. But so far as the pilotage authority is concerned there was no discrimination. There was an unfortunate incident, as I explained yesterday, which made it impossible for the pilot to get aboard the vessel.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENT OF COVERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the government intend to include all Canadians born prior to 1910 in the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that this question should be placed on the order paper.

EXPROPRIATION

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the sweeping reforms in their expropriation laws announced yesterday by the Ontario government, can the minister inform us whether or not a redrafting of the expropriation laws of Canada is included in the present statute revisions which are under way?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he can tell the house how his study on the report on juvenile delinquency is proceeding, and if he can announce any timetable with respect to legislation founded upon it.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave approximately one week ago, at which time I stated that an interdepartmental committee had been set up. I would hesitate to indicate deadlines, as I have sometimes found there are administrative difficulties.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

HEARING OF APPEALS RESPECTING PASSENGER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport dealing with the Canadian Pacific Railway's "Dominion" hearings. Will the minister tell the house whether all documentation has now arrived, and whether all those who are appealing against the judgment of the Board of Transport Commissioners have now filed their appeals?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can give a categorical answer, but I can say that the most recent document filed was one received from the government of Manitoba on May 26, which is now under study. Until all these documents have been studied it will, of course, not be appropriate for the government to hold any hearings.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $6,795,400.

The Chairman: This item appears on page 178 of the blue book and was last under consideration on Thursday, June 2.

• (11:40 a.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I will keep the committee for only a very short minute or two. In following the discussion which took place yesterday about the designated areas I was reminded of an exchange that took place in this house on June 30, 1965, to be found at page 3126 of Hansard for that year. I rise merely to ask the minister whether he would not consider implementing what I think was an undertaking by him at that time.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam had asked the minister whether he would consider not only tabling the orders in council but also referring them to the committee on industry, research and energy development, as I believe it was then called. The minister said at page 3126 of Hansard:

> I did undertake unequivocally to table the estimates because this is within my control. I have learned in a very short parliamentary experience not to give undertakings as to what the house may or may not do. I will use my best endeavours to see that these are referred as early as possible after tabling—and I do undertake to table them immediately—to the house committee. Specifically, I think it has been understood, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this question of tabling and referral, that the government undertakes that the order in council designating the designated areas in clause 2(c) will be tabled on the resumption after the summer recess—

If I might interrupt my reading at this point, they seem to have been tabled on Friday, January 28 of this year, according to the sessional papers I have before me. The minister went on to say:

> —and referred to the standing committee on industry, research and energy development. This will include an opportunity to discuss the criteria.

It seems to me in so far as it was possible for the minister to give any undertaking, he did so in that statement in reply to the question of my hon. colleague the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. The minister said that it was understood that the government undertook not only that the orders in council would be tabled but that they would be referred to the standing committee on industry, research and energy development.

It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that the question of the designated areas, all that is involved in the way in which they are designated and which areas are designated, is crucial. There is a desire on the part of my colleagues who have taken an active and interested part in these discussions to go into the matter more deeply. I am sure that desire is shared by all members of the house I therefore ask the minister whether he would not today repeat the undertaking which he gave on June 30, 1965, and this time carry out that undertaking.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, an undertaking such as the hon. member referred to was given and was valid and binding in respect of the parliament in which it was given. We are now in a new parliament.

I have discovered that the standing committee referred to now has a fairly full schedule of work. If it is the view of the steering committee of that committee that this work can be handled, I should be glad to have a discussion of this topic within the committee in the present session. I should be glad to have discussion of the designated areas program and the criteria therefor. But I would not want to hold up passage of the Department of Industry estimates until such time as this committee will have been able to complete its present schedule of work, before getting to the particular topic in question.

I repeat, in this new parliament I would be prepared to give a new undertaking to refer the question of the designated area program and the criteria therefor to the standing committee on industry, research and energy development if, in the view of the steering committee, there will be time to do this.

Mr. Lewis: Let me make absolutely clear that there is no suggestion of holding up passage of the estimates. Second, could not the minister simply refer this question to the committee so the committee will ultimately deal with it? When the matter would be dealt with is up to the steering committee. I do not understand why the minister has to say that he will refer this matter to the committee after the steering committee has done something. Why cannot the minister simply refer this matter to that committee and leave it to the committee as to when it will deal with it?

Mr. Drury: I understand that the house is free to refer what it wishes to the committee. It did not seem to me that much useful purpose would be served by referring this to the committee if the committee was not prepared to take it on. I wanted to ascertain in advance what could be done. I did not think any useful purpose would be served by referring this item to the committee if the committee had neither the interest nor the time to take it on.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I happen to be on the steering committee and I am aware of the work the committee has to do. I do not think the minister is relieved of the commitment he made previously. I am perfectly prepared to admit that one parliament cannot bind another; nevertheless, the minister has not changed, and therefore he ought to be bound by whatever commitment he has made.

There may not be an opportunity to discuss this question in committee, but it has not been suggested that we should hold up the estimates on this account. May I, in connection with what has been said, direct a question to you, Mr. Chairman. Is it possible for us to take a commitment by the minister and refer that to the committee? I should like your advice, Mr. Chairman, as to whether, under a statutory section, we could refer the estimates to a committee. I think we should have some advice from you, Mr. Chairman, as to how this could be accomplished.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have asked for a specific ruling by the officers at the table as to whether a commitment by the minister can be referred to a committee; and second, whether a statutory item that appears in the estimates can be referred to the committee by a motion in committee of supply.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think it is inappropriate to ask your opinion or for your ruling on legal matters. What is being sought here is a legal opinion. The hon. member for Timiskaming in fact is suggesting that approval of the Department of Industry estimates be suspended or withheld until the committee has dealt with the matter he has raised. That, I suggest, is the nature of the ruling he is seeking.

I have undertaken that if the steering committee wishes, and has the time to deal with this particular topic, namely the designated areas program and the criteria therefor, I will do what I am supposed to do to have that matter referred to this committee. That does not call for a ruling by the chairman as to the ability of the house to deal with statutory items.

• (11:50 a.m.)

Mr. McIntosh: It is not often that I agree with the hon. member for York South, but on this occasion I do agree with him. Because there has been so much dissatisfaction expressed by hon. members about the minister's designated areas policy, if he will not consider discontinuing the policy, the suggestion that item 1 of the estimates stand and the rest of the estimates be proceeded with might be considered. If the minister will not discontinue the policy then surely, in view of the number of protests that have been made, he must give consideration to changing it. It has been pointed out to him that the criteria he uses are wrong, and that in several cases, the criteria he says the department is using are not being used in the manner he suggests.

This whole policy does not accord with the principles he has set for his department. In fact it has been pointed out to him that it should not be administered by his department at all because it is a problem for the Department of Labour or the proposed department of manpower.

The minister is not helping industry in any manner by continuing this policy of designated areas. He is hindering the progress and affecting the economy of the country. The program is detrimental to the future of industry. It is creating municipal problems that never existed previously, and industrial problems which industry had never faced previously.

The minister has made an accusation that possibly there is filibustering on the part of the opposition. This is not filibustering. It has been pointed out previously that it is the duty of the opposition to criticize bad legislation. After hearing all the speeches about designated areas surely the minister must realize that this is a bad policy, but he has given no indication whatsoever that he will waver or bend just a little bit. He has not said he will take the legislation and reconsider it. He has not set a limit on how long he is going to carry out this policy.

This policy is bad for a number of reasons. It is bad for industry. It is not helping industry even though the minister tries to indicate that it is. Surely the minister is not so blind that he cannot bend just a little bit and give some consideration to the speeches made not only by the opposition but by his own backbenchers. In fact I heard only one speech from the government side supporting the minister's policy, and I heard many speakers on the government backbenches saying it is a bad policy. Surely those people have some influence on the minister, and I suggest we stand this item until we dispose of the rest of the estimates.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman who has just spoken feels quite strongly that the legislation establishing the area development agency is bad legislation, but in fact it is legislation enacted by the parliament of Canada. He feels that the designated area program should be abandoned completely. I venture to suggest that this represents the view of a very small minority in the chamber, perhaps a minority of one, and does not represent the general views of Canadians. Indeed, the hon. member for Timiskaming, far from wishing to see the policy abandoned, wants it extended. He appreciates that this is a useful initiative, and because it is working well in particular areas in particular respects he would like to take this useful, productive mechanism and extend its success to other areas.

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Drury: Just one moment, please. There seems to be some misconception as to how the program operates. There seem to be differences of view as to whether it should be extended, and as to the areas in which it should be extended. I have undertaken, if the committee on industry, research and energy development is prepared to deal with it, to refer the subject matter of the designated area program to that committee for study and presumably report.

What the hon. gentleman is now suggesting is that we pass on to the other items and come back to item 1 later and approve it, provided the minister has accepted the views of the hon. gentleman. I am prepared to listen to ideas, but not to accept the suggestion made by one hon. member that this policy be withdrawn and that until such time as it is withdrawn there will be no passage of the estimates.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, in view of what the minister has just said I am just wondering how far the hon. member for Timiskaming wants this designated area program expanded. If the minister thinks we are going to get down on our hands and knees and crawl to him, asking him to include each of our own areas and in that way get rid of the opposition, he has another think coming. I would also say it should be extended, but I would go further than my own community. I would say it should be extended to the whole of Canada. Then it would not be discriminatory as it is at present.

The minister says I am a minority of one. Surely the minister, if he did not listen, must have looked over the speeches of members on this side of the house. There were very few who complimented him on this type of policy. Certainly those who benefit from the legislation are in favour of it, but I say that in designating these areas the minister has not used the same criteria in all cases. I know certain representations have been made to the minister. I know he has changed his mind and designated certain areas, but I refuse to beg him to designate my area. That is what the minister wants.

I say that if the minister were not so arrogant and did not have the mind of a civil servant he would realize what is happening in this chamber today, namely that the people are speaking. Canada dislikes this policy that has been put forward by the minister. There are many areas in Canada that do not like it. Because pressure has been put on the minister by certain industrial urban centres he says they like it, but there are many rural areas in this country, and the people in them also have to make a living. Because of this policy, as has been pointed out to the minister on many previous occasions, the standard of living in those areas is dropping.

Family income is going down because of this very policy for which the minister is seeking support. This is what we are fighting against. It is to this that we want him to give consideration. I say stop this discrimination or extend the policy to cover all of Canada. I do not care which the minister does.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I almost rose on a point of order on something said by the minister a few minutes ago. He said it was the opinion held by a minority of one in this chamber that the present policy pursued by his department regarding these designated areas was a poor policy. I would like to refute that.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I was misunderstood. I did not say that the policy was universally approved either by members of the committee or by Canada. What I did say is that a very small minority would like to see the policy abandoned, and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek wanted it completely withdrawn. Now, there are a number of people who would like to see it changed—

Mr. McIntosh: How does it help industry?

Mr. Drury: —and I receive continuous representations regarding change. One further means of exploring suggested changes is consideration of the program by a committee. I am delighted to agree to this, and have already agreed to it.

• (12:00 noon)

I am not saying the policy is perfect; I know it is not. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek suggested that it is a discriminatory policy and that one should remove the discrimination by extending it to all Canada. This is an incentive program. By definition an incentive program must be discriminatory. It must appeal to a limited segment and not to universality if it is going to be an incentive. The object of the program is to provide assistance in the way of incentives to those areas suffering from high chronic unemployment, and the whole of Canada does not suffer from high chronic unemployment. If, as the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek suggests, the criteria are not being applied properly, I would be delighted to learn where they are not being applied properly. I think they are. Perhaps in the committee examples of where they are not being applied properly can be adduced and a detailed answer given. I myself believe they are being properly and objectively applied.

It does not rest with the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, as he puts it, to come on his knees to me to get his area designated. I do not do the designation. As I pointed out last night the designation is quite automatic; it is determined by local events. When the chronic unemployment in a national employment service area, as measured by national employment registrations or by the average non-farm family income, rises in the case of registrations above a certain level or goes below, in terms of average family income, a certain point, that area qualifies itself quite independently of any views I may have on the subject. As I say, the qualification for designation is determined by local events and not at the discretion of the minister or the department. There is no discretion. When the local situation falls within the framework laid down by the act and the order in council designation takes place, and not at the discretion of either myself or the officials. So not only can the member spare his knees so far as I am concerned, but I can say further that it would not do him any good if he did come to me on bended knees. It would be a wasted pilgrimage.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for his attempt to explain his version of the feelings on this side of the house but his explanation is unsatisfactory so far as I am concerned, so far as my riding is concerned and so far as a vast area of southern Ontario with which I am familiar is concerned. I support the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek in his contention that this legislation is discriminatory and is bad for Canada as a whole. It even reflects on the motives of this government, when one goes back and analyses the primary reason for bringing in such legislation. On May 17 I protested against it because representations had been made to me from both the counties I represent, the county of Prince Edward and the county of Lennox, where the people are completely frustrated. They cannot get any new industry because of the attractive propositions put forward by the government to induce the location of industry in neighbouring areas which are designated.

My area, like that of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, is not designated. May I also say to the minister that I do not believe the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is coming on his knees to anyone in an effort to have his area designated. I think that applies to my people too. We do not come on our knees imploring assistance from the minister, who has designated other areas near us, but we do ask for fair play all across the board regarding our efforts to obtain industry. Despite our qualifications for assimilation of new industry, a month ago the county of Prince Edward was turned down by an industry because the people who represented the industry said they could not accept our offers in the face of the attractive offers made by the Department of Industry with regard to designated areas. They have gone to a designated area.

The minister has said that his policy in respect of designated areas is successful. That may be so, but it has been disastrous to non-designated areas. He is carrying out this policy at the expense of the rest of Canada and the taxpayers thereof. In the non-designated areas, which the government of course must have decided were industrially healthy, the people there also pay the taxes to help finance the designated area plan and they certainly are not in favour of it. It is unfair, discriminatory and very frustrating to hundreds of municipal councils and chambers of commerce. Hundreds of municipalities and towns all across Canada place a levy on their taxpayers to finance programs designed to attract industry. The designated area program is stultifying all their efforts and nullifying whatever they hope to accomplish in the current year because of the better offers made and the larger grants paid by the government to prospective industry if it will settle in an area where the government wants it to settle.

There is nothing fair about this plan. The whole of Canada is watching it. I caution the minister. A few minutes ago he said that if it did not work he would make changes. I admonish the minister and his department right now to forget about this idea and be fair to the whole country.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I certainly am not going to take up too much of the time of the committee. I know that is a popular saying at this stage of estimates. I have, however, been provoked into speaking this afternoon because of several statements made and the attitude adopted. I cannot say I agree entirely with the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek but that is not unusual. I might say I am saying that in a personal vein. I should like to say also that I think that some of the things he said are completely true, particularly in regard to attitude.

I wish to make one thing very clear. In the areas which have been designated and have had the benefit of this assistance, I think the policy has certainly been successful. The minister knows the representations I made to him earlier. I was amazed at some of the answers he gave me last evening to pointed questions, but I should like to make an observation in respect of his approach. I recall very well an occasion when I accompanied a large delegation from several different constituencies. At that time the minister unfortunately was not present. As a matter of fact, the reception I received on that occasion from the present Minister of Finance was warm, sensible and sympathetic. The results of the meeting were nil, not because of the attitude of the Minister of Finance but because of the general attitude taken by the Minister of Industry.

Let me make a brief comparison as to what has happened in various areas. The minister tells me that on a statistical basis he does not, strictly speaking, make any decisions at all as to designation but that various areas are designated because of their particular circumstances. Let us consider the counties of Grey and Bruce and other associated counties in that part of the Georgian bay area. I hold no feeling whatsoever against the people who have the advantage of designation. The results of designation have been wonderful and the advantages enjoyed by the people there have been tremendous. Let us consider the town of Kincardine, which is not in my constituency, and the towns of Southampton and Port Elgin. The latter two fall within a designated area whereas Kincardine does not. There is no justification for this fact at all.

Let us compare the situations of the town of Walkerton and the city of Midland. There is no comparison at all and the designation of Midland is ridiculous. The city of Midland enjoys the highest rate of employment that any community could wish but the advantages of designation are given to it and not to Walkerton. Let us compare the situations of the towns of Chesley and Meaford. There is no comparison there, yet one has the advantages of designation. Let us compare the towns of Port Elgin and Kincardine, the towns of Walkerton and Owen Sound, or let us compare them with Midland again. There is no comparison at all. Yet some have the advantages of designation and others do not.

The minister tells me that all these places qualify because of their own circumstances, but that statement is utterly ridiculous. I assure the minister that I am not making these remarks to antagonize him. At one time it was said to me: Do you want to accept the responsibility of removing the designation from the Georgian bay area? I said no and I say no again this afternoon. However, I certainly would be willing to accept the responsibility for designating the balance of the Georgian bay economic region as established by the province of Ontario.

This sort of designation nonsense has got to stop. If we are going to consider economic areas as such let us consider them that way. What is the minister trying to do, play politics with these designations? I do not think he is because he has not had any success in that area as shown by the lack of elected members in the government party. These designations should be made on a moral and sensible basis. I was informed, I think by an official of the minister's department, that all the economic factors were taken into consideration in designating an area. I asked what was meant by that and I was told that the factors taken into consideration include income from welfare and that sort of thing. Goodness me, if we are going to consider pensions and old age assistance in respect of the criteria we are not being honest about the situation. Certainly that is not an honest or fair approach. In the particular areas to which I have referred the young people do not remain there because there is no incentive. If we are given the incentive to attract industry to our area we will be able to keep our young people working there, but the minister is not prepared to give us that incentive.

This government has taken a dictatorial attitude in that we are going to have universality in respect of everything. We have been forced to pay into the Canada Pension Plan and we will be forced to pay into medicare. Yet the minister is forcing the people who should enjoy the benefits of designation right out of the areas where they now live. This is a totally wrong attitude on the part of the minister and his department and I believe a revision of thinking should take place.

I am sure everyone recalls the discussion that took place here last week regarding the proposed increases in tolls on St. Lawrence seaway and the Welland canal. This is another factor that will deprive us of a certain element of growth. If we are going to create something that will be of benefit to people, let us not put roadblocks in the way.

Not long ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture where on earth all the pork came from that was imported into this country. We appealed to the government to assist this section of the agricultural industry, but it allowed approximately 2,500,000 pounds of pork to be imported by a processer for the express purpose of depressing an industry which exists in the area. In spite of that fact the minister and his department will not give us what they could give us by way of designation. The minister must change his attitude in this regard.

Let me return to my original statement. I brought a group of people to Ottawa to meet with the minister and officials of his department. In my view the delegation took a very moral and sensible attitude toward the situation. I am sure the minister realizes that the people in our area have the ability to attract industry but, for goodness sake, give them every advantage they can get in their attempt to create a large area of development in western Ontario. All I am asking the minister to do is to revise his policy and for designation purposes to use the boundaries of the economic divisions set up by the department of development and economics of the province of Ontario. That department has attempted to do a good job but it is being discriminated against by the policy of the minister and his department. If we are going to have reasonable and sensible area development and if we are going to spend the kind of money involved, for goodness sake let the minister and the department adopt a fair and moral attitude.

I was ridiculed a few weeks ago when I argued against the redistribution of my area as a result of which my constituency will disappear. However, the government is according me one honour in that I will be the last member to represent the riding of Grey-Bruce with the distinction that the members for that constituency have brought to the House of Commons over the years. However, the people I have the honour of representing now will be disregarded even more after redistribution because of being lost in the big shuffle. There is enough disregard now for this part of the province of Ontario, and these are the people for whom I have great concern. We have the ability to attract industrial organizations to our area and we have proven that in the past, but you are not going to accomplish decentralization in this area by compounding the problem through discriminatory action.

I do not intend to come to the minister on bended knee requesting that this area be given the advantages of the designation program. As a matter of fact, after my last experience I would not even waste the time required to make another request. I do ask the minister to take a further look at this situation and act in a fair and moral way in determining government policy and its application so that the area can be given the advantages that are being afforded to other areas in this country.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, to change the pace I should like to obtain some information from the Minister of Industry. Will the minister indicate the number of areas that have been added to the list of designated areas under this plan? I have talked with the minister about this subject and I think he knows what I have in mind. As an example, the Grand Forks area was added to the Okanagan designated area. I am wondering how many similar areas in Canada have been added to other designated areas. How many contiguous areas have been added to existing designated areas?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I can answer that question or that I really understand it. The problem of designation involves the identification of areas of high chronic unemployment. In order to identify them and provide assistance one must have information relating to employment. There has been a system in existence for a number of years under the national employment service of gathering and collating statistical information in relation to national employment service areas. This information is gathered and related to an area as a whole rather than to segments or individual parts. In our search for some means of identifying large areas in Canada suffering from high chronic unemployment the only measuring stick available was that provided by N.E.S. statistics. For that reason the N.E.S. areas provide the framework for designation, and when in a given N.E.S. area the pattern of unemployment is above a certain figure the area becomes designated. When the unemployment pattern falls below a certain figure the area is de-designated.

The process of creating designated areas in hitherto undesignated areas and designating those areas whose level of employment has fallen has been taking place ever since the beginning of the program. I am not sure whether the hon. member is asking me for a list of areas which were designated at the beginning of the program and have been de-designated. If this is so, I would be glad to give him this information. It is all contained in the original order in council which was tabled and in the subsequent order in council which was also tabled.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, my question did not refer to how many areas have been brought into the program and designated, and I am quite aware of the use of N.E.S. figures. I refer to the adding of an area which would normally be considered as having chronic unemployment to an already designated area. I believe that the town of Blairmore, Alberta, has been added quite recently to an area in British Columbia. This is my understanding after talking to the Liberal member from that area. I am wondering—

Mr. Drury: Let me interrupt for a moment, Mr. Chairman, to say that the Blairmore N.E.S. area, including the town of Blairmore, has been designated from the outset of the program. It was amongst the first areas to be designated and has continued to be designated ever since. There has been no change in respect of the town of Blairmore.

Mr. Pugh: Then might I ask the minister whether any area has been added to a designated area, the area added being of such a nature that in itself it would not qualify under the N.E.S. formula?

Mr. Drury: In respect of areas which in themselves might not qualify but have been designated, this applies to some census divisions and some counties contiguous to and touching on N.E.S. areas which have been designated. I think we discussed yesterday census divisions 12 and 13 in northern Alberta. I am not sure whether this is what the hon. gentleman refers to or whether he is looking at the situation in British Columbia. It may be that he is thinking of changes in the boundaries of the N.E.S. areas themselves. This is quite unrelated to designated areas.

The National Employment Service has over the years changed the pattern, shape and size of individual National Employment Service areas. This is done continually. As the economy of an N.E.S. area changes and development takes place in that general area of the country, perhaps the boundaries, as in the case of boundaries of political constituencies, are no longer appropriate. Previously the Department of Labour had responsibility in this regard but now it is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and it is continually looking at the size, shape and structure of the National Employment Service areas for national employment purposes. They periodically redraw these boundaries in the same way that the boundaries of political constituencies are periodically redrawn.

This happened in relation to the Vernon N.E.S. area. The boundaries that existed some three years ago did not seem to correspond any more to the economic facts of that region so the boundaries were changed. This is how Salmon Arm came to be included. The assumption is that it has been put into a designated area. In fact, what happened was that Salmon Arm was put into the Vernon N.E.S. area. The question now is whether Sicamous should also be included in that N.E.S. area. This has nothing to do with designation at all. I hope I have made myself clear.

An interdepartmental committee is now studying the N.E.S. areas all the way across the country to see how appropriate they are to current circumstances in the light of representations that have been made by a number of people, including the hon. member for Grey-Bruce. That hon. member's basic unhappiness arises out of the fact that he does not like the way in which the National Employment Service has drawn the boundaries of the two N.E.S. areas in his constituency. Both these areas are in his county. The result is that part of his constituency is in an N.E.S. area which has been designated and part is in an N.E.S. area which has not been designated. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce would like the whole of his constituency to be designated. This is understandable.

There is no doubt that economic conditions close to and on either side of an N.E.S. line would be roughly similar. This is in the nature of things. Whether the dividing line should be a little north, south, east or west is something that is now being examined not only with regard to the Pembina area but for all N.E.S. areas in Canada.

Mr. Pugh: I should like to clear up one point, Mr. Chairman, because I think it is fairly important. The minister has said that in the efflux of time there have been changes in economic conditions and other circumstances which have resulted in the N.E.S. boundaries being changed. I wish to pinpoint one thing. Has any area been added to a designated area, at the request of the people in the area added, with no redrawing of the N.E.S. boundaries? This is the specific question. I am relating it precisely to the Grand Forks area, about which the minister knows, and the Okanagan Boundary designated area. Grand Forks is not designated; the Okanagan Valley is. Has any similar area been added to an already designated area other than with respect to N.E.S. boundary changes?

Mr. Drury: I can say no quite categorically, Mr. Chairman, and I hope this will never occur. We are authorized to designate N.E.S. areas, contiguous counties and census divisions, so that the areas which, as the hon. member put it, can be added must either be N.E.S. areas, counties or census divisions. The only way to incorporate additional territory is to change the boundaries of N.E.S. areas or those of counties or census divisions. But it has not been, and I hope it will not be, the case that additional territory or people have been added merely by reason of the fact that representations have been made.

Mr. O'Keefe: Mr. Chairman, may I as a representative of one of the provinces which has benefited quite a bit from this imaginative legislation introduced by the minister say that we congratulate him. We think he has done a very good job in the designated area program. It seems more than merely passing strange to sit here and hear some of the rather bitter criticism from hon. members opposite, members of a party which some years ago formed a government which did precious little in my estimation to help solve or even try to cure any of the problems that have been tackled so energetically, and in many cases cured, by the Minister of Industry. They had five or six years to do these things, and while I agree they did some good things they could scarcely help doing them in that length of time.

Mr. Starr: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he not think that $20 million spent on technical and vocational schools in Newfoundland was of some good to that province?

Mr. O'Keefe: I said you did some good and that was one of the good things, possibly one of the best, but it was one of the very few things. Under this program we will have 15 or 16 brand new industries, and some 36 million brand new dollars which we know will be used to provide a projected 1,000 brand new jobs. This is the kind of legislation we want. May I therefore congratulate the minister once again on his imaginative and liberal program.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I was very surprised to hear the member for St. John's East contribute to this debate. He reminds me of the story of the father who had two sons. He rewarded one and punished the other. It is like the fellow who receives something and then thanks you for it. I think the hon. member has taken a very narrow view in regard to the regions which are being discriminated against. This is the point we are trying to discuss. I heard the minister say in answer to the member for Okanagan Boundary that industry was induced to locate in certain areas for the sake of temporary relief of the unemployment problem. I say to the minister that this is a very expensive way of dealing with that problem.

As I said before, it is not the Department of Industry which should be dealing with unemployment but the Department of Labour because this program was not primarily designed to help the unemployed. As Shakespeare said, "What's in a name? That which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." The minister has been trying to tell us that this program assists industry. This is not so; it is purely a labour program and should be left with the Department of Labour.

It is certainly true that these grants assist industry but, as I said before, they represent a short-range view of the problem of industry. You are forcing industries to locate in areas in which they do not wish to locate because of certain special factors and by offering incentives or bribes which you give to them under the guise of grants and write-offs. It is only for this reason that they in fact locate their plants where you wish them to. However, if they took a long-term view of the economy of Canada, our foreign trade and everything else, they would choose other locations than the minister is forcing them to choose at the present time.

I agree with the minister that this program is not all bad; there must be some good in it. For instance, we have the example given by the hon. member for St. John's East of the $36 million received by Newfoundland which it would not have received if the program had not been put into effect. Nevertheless this was done at the expense of the non-designated areas. Is that fair? I think it is discrimination. You are playing one region against the other. This is not fair from the point of view of the decentralization of industry and it is not fair with regard to the continuing problems that these regions will have. Above all, it is not fair to industry because, as I said earlier, you are creating problems which will be very difficult to overcome in the future when the incentive program is completed.

I also say to the minister that this is a very expensive way of dealing with the problem of unemployment. These are much better ways.

Mr. Drury: What other ways?

Mr. McIntosh: Do you want me to go into them at the present time?

Mr. Drury: Yes, certainly.

Mr. McIntosh: All right. I will start with our secondary industries and the way in which they can be developed. One way is to make our goods competitive in foreign markets. The way to make them competitive is to adopt the measure taken by the former government.

The Chairman: Order, please. I appreciate the interest in the subject shown by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and by the minister but I am afraid the Chair will decide what will be discussed. We are still on item 1.

Mr. McIntosh: Apparently the minister does not understand what we are trying to get across. I was going to tell him why this program is dangerous to the future of Canada, to its economy and its foreign trade. This is what we are trying to stop. If the minister wishes me to go into detail, I will certainly do so. I will also acquiesce to such a wish from the hon. member for St. John's East.

I simply wish to say at this time that this is a very expensive way of providing temporary relief for the unemployment situation in Canada. It is not an answer to that problem. We ask the minister to reconsider the program and change it to make it non-discriminatory.

Yesterday I listed many of the underprivileged areas. The minister is being unfair to many regions in Canada. I wish to draw the minister's attention to this fact. He said something about waiting for me to make a pilgrimage to his door. I say to the minister, don't hold your breath too long because you will never see the day when I will come to your door on my knees.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, if anything has come out of this debate it has been the general dissatisfaction with the area incentive program. In his opening remarks yesterday the minister chose to interpret the fact that there is so much opposition to this program as an indication of its success. He was pleased with the fact that people were putting forward different points of view. He interpreted this as a positive approach to this program. I would suggest to the minister that the contrary is probably true.

All of us surely recognize, in fairness to the minister, how difficult it is to implement such a program and how difficult it is to satisfy people with an area designated program which, as he points out himself, must of necessity be discriminatory in order to be effective. We realize he has to face a difficult problem.

I also think very few of us would quarrel with the idea of an area development program. We know there are disadvantaged regions in Canada, that many of these areas face difficult problems and that we have a responsibility to do whatever we can in their behalf. No one is arguing about this general principle. What we are quarrelling about, and the issue which we are now raising, concerns the particular method which the minister has chosen to implement area designation by using certain types of criteria.

[The Chairman.]

He has also explored other criteria, I am sure. As has been pointed out by some other speakers in this debate, to limit the criteria to the problem of unemployment is taking a short-range view of the situation. This is not an adequate concept of the area development program. I presume this is a formula which the minister has devised in order to ensure that no one will point a finger at him and say he is being arbitrary. It is a very rigid formula based on unemployment, income and other contingencies, and in this way he thinks he is being fair in the administration of the program. According to this formula, an area is eligible for the program if it falls within these criteria. This is really a lazy man's program and I do not believe the minister is a lazy man. He is certainly a most active man. He has implemented new programs and he has stuck his neck out on many occasions. However, this particular program is a lazy man's program. He is throwing things into the hopper and hoping they will work out.

• (12:40 p.m.)

In other words, the program requires a minimum amount of administration, a minimum amount of decision-making in order to make it work. Either an area fits or it does not fit. Everything is being stretched to fit into certain criteria in order to help the program work. Frequently, as has been pointed out, you kill innocent victims or at least you certainly maim them with this kind of program.

I am trying to be fair about this matter. I hope the minister will appreciate my concern. My riding is perhaps not affected so possibly I can be objective in this argument. During the debate the minister has heard a great deal of dissatisfaction with these criteria expressed. Members are obviously concerned about their ridings. Almost every week we see news items that an industry has moved out of area B into area C or A because of the incentives offered to do so. Naturally these members are greatly concerned and you can hardly blame a member for saying, let us scrap the whole program because it is not doing much good. This is not what we are saying.

Some provinces have come to the federal government and expressed their disapproval of the program because it was not in harmony with their own plans. I could mention the Maritimes, and there is also dissatisfaction in the province of Quebec where they are trying to establish growth centres based on a different type of criteria, economic planning and the decentralization of industry. Manitoba has expressed its dissatisfaction because it does not like the way the federal government is offering help. The minister can say, as he has said, that the involvement of the federal government in this matter is limited because it can be based only on unemployment. This is a federal responsibility, but economic planning comes within federal jurisdiction to a very limited extent only. I suggest to the minister that perhaps what is called for at this time, in view of the great dissatisfaction which has been expressed in almost every part of Canada, is a federal-provincial conference on the subject of economic planning.

We need a conference to determine how these criteria will be interpreted or if there are better criteria than we have now instead of the limited approach the minister has taken to this subject. I respectfully suggest to the minister that we might first of all get our program in harmony with the plans of the provinces and, second, more in harmony with the whole concept of economic planning, the whole concept of economic feasibility as I used the term the other day. We should be putting industry into those areas where it has a reasonable opportunity for survival, where it can be productive. I resent using industry in this particular fashion to try to cure the short-term unemployment problem. It is admirable that the government wants to cure the short-term problem. I suggest that in the long run, however, if we use industry in this fashion and try to locate industry for this purpose, the long-term problem will be extremely difficult to solve. We will be impairing our ability to be productive and competitive. I think this is something we have to consider seriously.

There is no sense in enticing somebody into an area if the prospects for his long-term survival are not going to be good. When I spoke the other day I perhaps used some fairly strong language to describe this type of program. I do not believe this is the time for strong language. I hope the minister realizes we do not want to hold up these estimates, but the reason this debate has taken place is our deep concern about the criteria. As the hon. member for Timiskaming has pointed out, what do we do about it? How do we, as members of parliament, indicate to the minister that some change has to take place in this method of designation, in establishing these criteria? We have an example here of interfering with the free enterprise system. The untrammelled, free enterprise system has a certain logic of its own, a certain ruthless logic if you like. An industry locates where it suits that industry, without regard to social considerations. We no longer accept this proposition. I am talking about all of us. We accept it to different degrees perhaps, but by and large we think there are social responsibilities to Canada.

We have, as I said, interfered with the workings of the free enterprise system and we have interfered in such a way as to get the worst of both worlds. We get neither the advantages that accrue when businessmen base decisions only on their self-interest nor the advantages which come from proper government economic planning based on getting the best co-operation in certain areas, the best long-range studies and so on, to enable us to do this sort of thing. If we do undertake such a program we will require staff to conduct investigations, economic feasibility studies, land use studies and that kind of thing in order that we will be able to say: This is what we should be doing here; we should be moving secondary industry in with primary industry. Perhaps we have to consider rate of extraction of a resource in an area based on a resource in order to ensure that after 15 or 20 years the resource does not dry up and we are left with a ghost town. You have to do this sort of thing if you are going to have a proper area development program. Perhaps it should not be called an area development program; it should be called an area plan. You cannot do this unilaterally at the federal level. You must do this in conjunction with the provincial governments. You must sit down and work out a national program in harmony with provincial objectives.

It is for this reason we are most anxious that the whole question of designated areas and the establishment of criteria be referred to a committee so that we can have a full discussion of this problem. We cannot solve it in a few hours debate. The problem is too complicated. All we can do in a debate of this kind is to point out our dissatisfaction with the program. The minister has already given us some assurance that he will try to improve the program. I am sure he will do everything in his power to see that the problem is referred to a committee, the proviso being that the committee has the time to study it. I suggest that the problem is of such importance the minister should be prepared to give assurance that a special committee will be set up to ensure a study being made. This program simply is not working the way we would like to see it work, and it is not working, I feel, the way the minister would like to see it work. It is a program of limited application and I submit it has probably caused trouble for more people than it has helped.

I have listened to this debate with interest. If the minister thought I was just being obnoxious yesterday, I think he has had an opportunity now to ascertain that a number of other people feel the same say. If the committee had an opportunity to vote on this matter I am sure they would decide it should be discussed further. I am not one of those who say the criteria have not been effective. I have had an opportunity of speaking to the chairman of the committee, as I am sure the minister has, and I hope the minister will say the committee has agreed that this matter can be referred to it.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I am shocked that the minister would sit there and allow the item to pass without making that sort of concession after the matter has been discussed and I think some agreement arrived at.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I have been advised by the chairman of the committee on industry, research and energy development that the steering committee, having been consulted, is prepared to consider this question. As a consequence I will take whatever steps are necessary to have referred to that committee the subject matter of the designated area program and the criteria therefor.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now turn to vote No. 1 of the National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council.

Mr. Starr: Is this under the Department of Industry?

Mr. Drury: I think, Mr. Chairman, there may be an error here. The votes of the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council have not been formally entered in committee of supply.

Mr. Starr: The Department of Defence Production is next.

Mr. Drury: It is merely the Department of Industry as a department which is now being considered. The next department to be considered as a department is the Department of Defence Production.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

1. Departmental administration including the care, maintenance and custody of standby defence plants, buildings, machine tools and production tooling and grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on Crown-owned defence plants operated by private contractors, $21,330,800.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in my statement covering the estimates of the Department of Defence Production I should like to outline the responsibilities of the Minister of Defence Production under the Defence Production Act.

Under this act the minister has exclusive authority to buy or otherwise acquire the defence supplies which are required by the Department of National Defence. Under this act the minister is also responsible for the organization and mobilization of the resources of Canada to meet the current and prospective needs of defence. The Department of Defence Production thus both purchases defence supplies and also assists in the production of such items where appropriate.

In addition, the government has approved the establishment within the department of a central purchasing agency to serve all the civil departments and agencies of the federal government other than the commercially-oriented Crown corporations.

As regards my department's primary reponsibility, which is to purchase defence supplies for the Department of National Defence, I should like to point out that there must be, and there is, a clearly defined division of authority between the Department of Defence Production and the Department of National Defence. It is the responsibility of this latter department to determine what is needed, when it is needed and where it is needed. It is our responsibility in the Department of Defence Production to meet these requirements at the minimum cost consistent with the need to develop and maintain Canada's industrial defence base.

It would not be practical to review all our defence procurement programs at this time but I would like to draw your attention to several areas of activity. In the area of shipbuilding requirements, work on the modernization and refit of the first six destroyer escorts of the St. Laurent class has been completed. Work on the seventh and last vessel, H.M.C.S. Fraser, is expected to be complete in August. Work on the modernization of the first vessel of the Restigouche class, H.M.C.S. Terra Nova, is now under way. The first of the three Oberon class submarines that are being procured from the British ministry of defence, the Ojibwa, was delivered last September, and the second submarine, the Onondaga, was launched the same month. During the past year contracts were also awarded for the two tidal current survey vessels for the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

DeHavilland Aircraft of Canada Limited is under contract to design, develop and construct the ASW hydrofoil vessel which is of approximately 200 tons displacement. Marine Industries Limited of Sorel is the subcontractor responsible for the hull and superstructure. It is expected that the launch will take place late in 1966.

As a result of a study of government procurement policies in the shipbuilding field, Mr. Chairman, the government adopted during the past year the principle that national competition should be sought whenever the nature and operational circumstances of the requirement so permit. The first results of the application of this policy indicated most substantial savings to the Crown.

In the airborne electronics field new procurement programs have been undertaken to provide equipment for the CHSS2 helicopter and for the modernization of the CS2F aircraft. Procurement action is also under way in respect of the integration and modernization of Canada's fixed defence communications systems, and a wide range of fixed and mobile surface communication equipment is being produced for our services. During the past year operations on the mid-Canada line were terminated and maintenance requirements are in the process of being phased down.

In the aircraft field, Mr. Chairman, a program which is of particular interest at this time is that covering the CF-5 tactical fighter. The CF-5 aircraft was chosen as Canada's tactical fighter and negotiations are now in the final stage for the reconfiguration of the Northrop F5 aircraft to meet Canadian needs, and for production of the aircraft in Canada. Production is scheduled to commence in 1966 and first deliveries are scheduled for the last quarter of 1967.

Other significant production programs include that for 15 Buffalo aircraft for the Canadian defence forces. The contract has been awarded the DeHavilland Aircraft of Canada Limited and deliveries will commence in April, 1967.

In the armament and aerospace field, Mr. Chairman, the Black Brant rocket development has been meeting its design objectives and the joint United States-Canada high altitude research program has continued to meet its research and development objectives. A battlefield surveillance system known as "Periscopter" now under development in Canada may well have an important market potential.

The purchase by the department of automotive vehicles, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and certain civil departments was undertaken during the past year. This action represents an important step toward the centralized procurement of all such vehicles for the federal government.

At this point in my statement, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make reference to the fact that preparation of a automotive vehicle safety code has been assigned to the Canadian government specifications board. The board will undertake this work in co-operation with officials of provincial governments and interested industrial, professional, technical, safety and research organizations. The code, which will be made up of sections dealing with the human, mechanical and environmental factors, will contain information on characteristics of drivers and roads which are related to accident frequency.

As I recently pointed out, it is proposed to give a high priority to the mechanical section which will include standards to govern safety features, but the sections dealing with human and environmental factors will be proceeded with simultaneously. It is our anticipation that the code will influence the development of safer automobiles and that it could also serve as the basis for encouraging uniformity of vehicle legislation and regulations. Not long ago I appeared before the standing committee on justice and legal affairs. On that occasion I discussed matters relating to the proposed safety code in some detail.

Looking at another area of activity, an international programs branch now provides central direction and guidance for all aspects of the department's defence export and international co-operation activities. The branch has drawn together and co-ordinated the activities of the Canadian Commercial Corporation and those formerly carried out by varied groups in the department itself.

The Canada-United States defence development and production sharing program, which has become an important part of the department's activities, aims at the optimum utilization of the Canadian and United States defence industrial capabilities by providing equal opportunity for Canadian industry to participate with United States industry on the bases of price, delivery and technical competence in meeting North American defence requirements. About 380 Canadian companies have obtained contracts under the program since its inception in 1959. While government activity has concentrated upon the creation of a climate of opportunity for Canadian industry to compete for United States defence business, the program depends for its success on the continued efforts of Canadian industry.

The agreed objective of the program is to assure maintenance of a long-term balance at the highest practicable level in reciprocal procurement of items of mutual defence interest.

The total of United States defence production sharing business obtained by Canadian companies from 1959 to December, 1965, has amounted to over $1.1 billion. During the calendar year 1964, this business amounted to $167 million and to nearly $260 million in 1965.

Canada's ability to compete in future defence production programs would be lost if we did not continue defence research and development projects in Canada to sustain the technological capability of our industry to produce the complex equipment that is required today. The Canadian government has, since 1959, provided assistance to Canadian companies to undertake development projects for both the United States and other allied defence programs. Financing is carried out on a cost-shared basis between the government, Canadian companies, and the United States or other allied governments.

From the inception of the program to the end of the calendar year 1965, a total of 105 defence development projects have been approved or recommended for government assistance to sustain technological capability in Canadian defence industry. Government expenditures have totalled $69 million. The program to the end of December, 1965, has stimulated $189 million in research and development activity in Canada aimed at meeting the defence requirements of the United States and other governments. Specific projects supported by the government's development assistance which have resulted in large-scale production for defence export include, in the aircraft field, a small gas turbine engine in the 500 horsepower range which is proving highly successful in military and civil applications; and in the electronics field airborne doppler radar navigation equipment and crash position indicator equipment are examples of items which are selling very well.

Although the department's international activity has been primarily oriented toward the United States, important opportunities are arising in other countries. This stems in part from the fact that unilateral weapon development in NATO and other countries is rapidly giving way to bilateral and multilateral arrangements between countries aimed at making the most effective and economic use of our individual and joint capabilities, replacing competition by co-operation, and conserving industrial and economic resources. Canadian defence industrial planning, therefore, must to an increasing degree be based on allied as well as Canadian military requirements and must be harmonized with the defence development and production plans of those countries with which our military planning is closely associated.

The past year has seen increased emphasis in our overseas international co-operation and bilateral defence trade activities. Departmental representatives have visited a number of European countries and Australia and New Zealand to develop further opportunities for closer collaboration and to survey potential defence export markets. Conversely, defence procurement missions from Britain, France, Germany, Norway, the Netherlands and Australia have visited Canada and we expect that some of these exchanges will result in increased co-operation in defence development and production between our respective countries.

The Anglo-Canadian committee on defence research, development and production, which was formed in 1963, last met in September, 1965. Considerable progress has been made through this committee toward a co-operative approach to the defence requirements of Britain and Canada.

[Translation]

The most recent event of importance in the area of bilateral co-operation was a meeting held early in December 1965 to set the stage for a Franco-Canadian Co-operation Committee on defence research, development and production. As a result, we are at the present time actively employed in considering the precise possibilities of increasing industrial co-operation for defence between France and Canada.

By their very nature, such undertakings are not quickly translated into actual industrial defence projects. Nevertheless, a good start has already been achieved in co-operation with a number of countries and we are in a position to expect that practical results will be more noticeable in the future.

The rising trend of defence equipment exports to overseas countries appears in the statistics of Canadian industrial volume which amounted to some $45 million in 1962, to $53 million in 1963, to nearly $60 million in 1964 and to approximately $68 million in 1965.

The Canadian Commercial Corporation which, as I have indicated, has been incorporated with the Department of Defence Production, continues to assist in the development of trade with other countries by supplying a contract completion service to foreign governments wishing to purchase defence equipment and other supplies in Canada at the government level.

[English]

The Department of Defence Production also continues to make progress in the implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Government Organization relating to the department. As I have already mentioned, the government has approved the establishment within the department of a central purchasing agency to serve all departments and agencies of the federal government other than the commercially-oriented Crown corporations, and has also approved the establishment of the basis for an integrated supply service.

As far as purchasing is concerned, appreciable progress has been made since 1964 when we first integrated the purchasing functions of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. During the year 1965 the Department of Public Works purchasing responsibilities in regard to furniture, janitorial supplies and maintenance, repair and operating supplies in Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal, were transferred to the Department of Defence Production. The personnel associated with these functions were also transferred to and integrated in the department.

In accordance with the over-all plan and schedule which was prepared for the orderly transfer of the purchasing functions of other government departments and agencies during the next few years, the purchasing functions hitherto undertaken by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and those undertaken by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources for units in the Northwest Territories were transferred to D.D.P.

The purchasing responsibility for all government departments and agencies for our new national flag has been given to my department, and on April 1, 1966, the merger of the purchasing functions of the Department of Veterans Affairs was completed, while on May 1 the department assumed the purchasing functions for the national museum.

We have firm plans for assuming the purchasing functions during 1966 for the Department of National Health and Welfare, the national parks and historic sites (eastern and western areas) of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and the public archives and national library of the Department of the Secretary of State. My officials are also working closely with the Department of Transport in order to plan for the consolidation of some of their purchasing activities later this year.

In the field of supply the initial phase in the organization of a Canadian government supply service has been completed. This phase entailed the establishment of a basic organization of six headquarters branches whose specialized technical staff will engage in research and policy formulation in the fields of cataloguing, specifications and standards, regional purchasing, warehousing and distribution, traffic management and quality assurance.

These headquarters branches will ensure that the Canadian government supply service takes full advantage of the most up-to-date procedures, methods and techniques and equipment. This means an effective system of identification and classification of items, the preparation of specifications and the establishment of standards for the most commonly used items, the determination of the most economical purchasing methods, the latest warehousing techniques, and efficient control of transportation costs and the assurance that there is an acceptable quality level in the items that are purchased for the consumption of the federal government departments.

I commend these estimates to the consideration of the committee and hope for their early approval.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the minister?

Concerning the purchases made by his department, are instructions given to purchase Canadian goods except where it is absolutely impossible to do so?

Mr. Drury: As a matter of principle, Mr. Chairman, efforts are made to buy and find Canadian goods. As I have explained, my department goes as far as to promote Canadian production of some items which were not previously produced in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, I have little to say about the statement which the minister has made but I hope this is the right time to deal with the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation because I have one or two matters to mention in connection with its operations. I have before me a letter written to an Edmonton firm by William C. Gow, salesman, of the Calgary office of the corporation under date of May 5. It reads:

Dear Sir:

In reply to your letter of April 28th, 1966, requesting confirmation that the above named firm is still on the mailing list for surplus vehicles.

We wish to advise that our revised procedure only permits us to sell to distributors, garages and licensed dealers in the automotive trade.

I ask, does this letter refer only to surplus automobile equipment owned by the government? The letter continues:

We are attaching hereto an application form and in the event that you comply with the above conditions would you please complete and return to this office in order that we may review your request and if acceptable return your firm's name to our mailing lists.

Please accept our thanks for bringing this matter to our attention and we anticipate your early reply in this regard.

The firm in question, Midland Mortgage, has been interested in excess buildings, and I have an application in front of me respecting some buildings that have been declared surplus in the Beaverlodge area. This company was interested in their acquisition but I understand it does not qualify to remain on the corporation's list.

I would like to know the minister's definition of licensed dealers. Who is qualified to buy surplus commodities from the government? Are the three categories listed in this letter the only people entitled to buy them? If they are, I cannot see why a garage or automobile distributor would be interested in buying chicken coops, portable hay houses and portable hog houses available at Beaverlodge.

Is the letter incomplete? Does it mean that people in the construction business can buy buildings, people in the automobile business can buy automobiles and people in the office equipment business can buy surplus office equipment? Is that the intent of the department?

What are the criteria under which people can qualify to be put on the list? I understood previously that any legitimate business could be put on the list, but these people in Edmonton have been notified that they do not qualify and therefore are no longer on the list.

I would like to know why the corporation uses the method of advising only those people on its list about the availability of surplus crown assests. I suggest it might be wise to consider the principle followed by provincial governments. Applied to the federal government it would mean that such assets would be advertised in all the national newspapers thus allowing everybody to bid on surplus government commodities. This would eliminate any suggestion of discrimination or political patronage. Every farmer in the west with the necessary resources would then be able to bid on the surplus agricultural buildings at Beaverlodge.

• (1:20 p.m.)

The provincial governments find this method very effective. They are able to realize a fair price for surplus commodities. I suggest to the minister that he should consider using that system rather than the present one because when Midland Mortgage, as I have mentioned, is taken off the list for very little reason one might think that there is patronage involved with respect to who should and who should not be on the list. How are people put on the list? Are you invited? Do you answer? No one really knows. Do you go to your member of parliament and say: "I want to get on the list"? How does a contractor in the city of Edmonton, for example, make inquiries concerning how he can get on the list? Does he communicate with the people in Crown Assets Disposal Corporation? How is it done? I should like to have an answer from the minister in this regard. In view of the many cancellations in respect of the old and existing lists, I think it would clear up a very important question in the minds of some of the business people, particularly in my area.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I do not know the circumstances surrounding the Midland Mortgage Placements Company Limited removal from the list, as the hon. gentleman puts it. I hope to have that information a little later. Let me say, however, that in general Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is charged with the task of disposing of surplus commodities entrusted to it for disposal. These are commodities surplus to the requirements of the Crown. In the disposal of these commodities the corporation endeavours to realize, through sale, the best possible price for the taxpayer. Obviously the return to the taxpayer is a net of the sale price realized less the cost of selling.

Through experience over the years Crown Assets Disposal Corporation has concluded that in respect of some commodities it is better economics to carry on business selling to wholesalers than it is to try to get themselves into the retail business. In respect of other items it is better, and indeed essential, to do the retailing job themselves. In the case of buildings or properties, for instance, they operate as retailers; they advertise as widely as possible and send out invitations to tender or bid in respect of the properties. Anyone who wishes to put in a bid is free to do so and indeed is encouraged to do so. In respect of certain commodities which may recur, however, notably scrap metal and scrap clothing, and which periodically appear on their list for disposal, they have developed a pattern of selling to the trade. They have discovered it is productive of a much better return to sell to the trade for disposal and resale than it is to conduct a series of public auctions or engage in whatever other method there may be of retailing the commodities.

It costs more to sell to the trade at retail than it does at wholesale and the net is higher on occasion, as has been shown by experience, by selling to the wholesale trade. This is in relation to scrap. In relation to any surplus commodity, however, whether it be buildings, property or movables, anybody is entitled to put in a bid. The high bidder, who is financially responsible, of course—and I must always make that exception—gets the sale. I have one qualification only to make to that and it is in relation to surplus motor vehicles. This is a special case. Apart from that anyone is entitled to bid and the high bidder makes the purchase. So in so far as items other than motor cars are concerned Midland Mortgage Placement Company Limited is free to bid and free to buy anything and everything. The only things demanded of them are (a) financial responsibility and (b) the high bid.

In order to encourage interest in bidding Crown Assets Disposal Corporation has a list of people who in the past have been in the habit of buying and who have demonstrated a real interest in buying as distinct from merely curiosity. Anyone who has demonstrated or any corporation which has demonstrated a real interest in buying is put on a list and the list is circulated. Duplicates of the public notices of sale are sent to the person or the corporation to make sure that the advertisement is not overlooked. In this way it is drawn to their attention in the hope that they will bid. In order for anyone to get on this list all we ask is that they exhibit something more than mere curiosity so that the Crown is not put to the expense of sending out these notices to somebody who never is going to make a purchase. People who in the past have been receiving these notices and have never done anything about them are crossed off. This is the list to which I think the hon. member has been referring.

If Midland Mortgage Placement Company Limited is serious about bidding, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is delighted to send them notices of invitation to tender in the hope that these will produce real bids.

Mr. Skoreyko: With the exception of automobiles.

Mr. Drury: Yes. The question of automobiles is another story. Recently the Department of Defence Production has undertaken the task of acquiring automobiles to meet all the requirements in the government service and not merely in the Department of National Defence. This gives rise to the problem of how to dispose of the vehicles for which the new vehicles generally are replacements. Most of the new vehicles are replacements rather than original equipment to fill a need which never existed before. So there is a turnover problem. Previously, under the old practice of allowing individual departments and agencies to make their own deals in any way they could with any dealer whom they chose, this problem of disposing of surplus vehicles did not arise because part of the purchase price involved in getting a new car was taken in the old one.

We have explored quite extensively with the trade, from the Crown's point of view, the most advantageous technique by which to dispose of the surplus cars. The various techniques which occur to me offhand are private sales such as one might make through a newspaper advertisement in the personal columns, public auctions, sales to individual dealers on a negotiated basis or by inviting dealers and the general public to bid, or sales to the wholesalers again on a negotiated basis. There are many alternatives which present themselves. One has to arrive at a device or system which will meet in the best possible way the situation where 30 cars have to be disposed of at one time in the city of Toronto or one car at Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories. Obviously it is difficult to have a uniform, single technique which is going to cover all of these situations.

We have come to the conclusion, and so far this is only experimental until we see how it works, that the best way to do this, in order not to disrupt the trade and produce instability of prices by dumping large numbers of cars on occasion on the retail market, is to deal only with the trade, namely, dealers, in the hope that we will obtain a continuing interest and market with a consequential stability of the market. That is our approach and it is for that reason that Midland Mortgage, which does not by its name sound like a second hand car business, would not be invited to bid for used cars.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question because of the statement that the general methods employed by the corporation have pretty well been maintained over the years. Perhaps I misunderstood the minister and, if so, I hope he will correct me.

In 1964 the public accounts committee had some anxiety about the methods employed by the corporation, its disposal procedures and techniques. This anxiety was particularly applicable to certain negotiations and transactions which took place in regard to the Department of National Defence. That committee made some recommendations in its seventh report in 1964 to the effect that sales inspection procedures followed by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation should be revised with a view to improving sales techniques. Some time in November of 1965 the minister replied that steps had been taken or were being taken by the corporation to revise and upgrade its operating instructions in the area of pre-sales analyses and inspections. He also stated that the corporation proposed to undertake a more aggressive sales campaign in such areas as market research and analysis to develop new methods of improving its solicitation lists and explore ways and means of interesting new and substantial merchandising outlets. I was interested in this in view of what the hon. member for Edmonton East said about developing new methods of improving the solicitation list.

Can the minister tell us whether, after his statement of February and in line with what he said, these new techniques have actually been instituted and whether the corporation is making progress in this regard? Has the corporation been successful as a result of these new techniques in displaying a somewhat better method of developing solicitation lists than was displayed at least to the public accounts committee when it investigated this matter?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I did not and do not want to give the impression that Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is unchanging or unchangeable. What I really should have said, in relation to the hon. member's question, is that sales to the public and to the highest bidder and realizing the highest returns to the Crown are objectives that do not change. As to the means of achieving these objectives, improvements undoubtedly can be effected.

The views and advice of the public accounts committee have been accepted with enthusiasm by the corporation and a number of them have been put into effect. Others are in the process of being incorporated, but I am not sure that others are entirely appropriate to the degree that the public accounts committee suggested. Considering the size of the Crown Assets Disposal's operation, one can very quickly understand that as a sales organization it could bankrupt itself by spending too much money on marketing investment. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that. Certainly a little more in the way of marketing analysis than has perhaps been the case in the past would be and has proven useful in respect of Crown Assets.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the hon. minister make some reference to the phrase "solicitation lists"?

Mr. Drury: Solicitation can be done in a number of ways. As I have indicated, one is by public advertising in newspapers and other media, and this costs a certain sum of money in terms of the impact one creates. Another method is by direct mail. I suppose those are the two most important ones. At the present time Crown Assets is employing both, and from time to time in respect of particular commodities more of one and less of the other or more of the other and less of the one proves to be the most efficacious in achieving effective price bid solicitations. The corporation does want to get as much interest in what it is selling and as many bids as possible, having in mind always that one must not allow the cost of the solicitation to become unreasonable in terms of the advantage obtained through having a few more bids. I am sure the hon. gentleman appreciates that fact.

As the public accounts committee has pointed out, perhaps not enough emphasis has been placed on active solicitation at some additional expense. Perhaps this would be desirable and I think it is in the process of taking place.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Defence Production. We shall now study the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. General administration including the promotion of a program for the employment of the older worker; the promotion of programs for combating seasonal unemployment; the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries; and the manpower consultative service, $3,913,500.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I was slightly late. I just had a sandwich so I would be able to read this statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, in the course of the next weeks and later in the session, the house will have before it at various times the consideration of the plans of my department. As a result, my statement will be restricted to the estimates and general remarks indicating our major aim and the projects we are trying to carry out.

May I first be permitted to pay tribute, whatever their political persuasion, to my predecessors in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and in the Department of Labour. I should also like to note the devotion of the officials of these two departments, particularly during the past few months, while the changeover and the new direction was being prepared.

The functions assigned to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration as well as the establishment of a new department which will direct manpower policies and programs at the national level would seem, I feel, to make up a most interesting program, the importance of which must be stated.

[English]

Successive governments have developed a variety of programs designed to improve the utilization of our human resources. There are many good programs already in existence and the department of manpower will not be launched with the idea that all present programs need to be replaced.

• (1:40 p.m.)

We do believe that existing programs can be made much more effective within a single agency and that agency can also plan, develop and implement whatever new programs are required. I know that members fully appreciate why manpower policy has become so important. We all recognize that the increasing rate at which the world is changing requires in people an adaptability never before necessary in our history, and that in our society the pace of change itself is accelerated. We cannot arrest these changes. We must accept a new pace, understand it, master it and profit from it.

The estimates you are being asked to approve bring together in the one department the national employment service, the immigration service, the training, rehabilitation, mobility and winter employment programs, the manpower consultative service and the groups responsible for economic and social research and labour market analysis. All the active manpower programs are to be the responsibility of one strong, integrated, national manpower service with offices across Canada organized to give a full range of advice, counsel and service to worker and employer.

[Translation]

I believe that concerning the organization and the arrangement of the staff, the progress achieved tends to increase the efficiency of the department. We can already rely upon several skilled and devoted employees. In the years to come, our first aim will be not to initiate new plans but rather to get ready to increase the results of present programs, to improve on their quality, to make them more accessible to those who will need them and to render services where required.

Such is the state of mind with which we are inspired in setting up a manpower service based on the organization that other bodies and other departments have already created. Integrated as to its purpose, the manpower service will be highly decentralized in its organization. It will be concerned with the different needs in various areas and various industries. Its scope and objectives will be national, taking the regional needs into account. Furthermore, it will operate in close co-operation with the provincial governments.

The five regional directors will be responsible for all federal manpower programs, for the National Employment Service as well as for the numerous other work performed up to now in the department at Ottawa. The regional directors will be under the assistant deputy minister, but they will have at hand and under their direct orders, experts and specialists who will enable them to keep informed on the needs of industry, to work with the provincial governments and to support much more closely the local manpower offices. The personnel of the N.E.S. is much smaller that the staff authorized by parliament. We have an enormous job ahead of us, in the recruiting as well as in the organization. Our own staff training will be of major importance.

[English]

If I were asked, Mr. Chairman, to state the department's current objectives in their simplest terms, I would reply that we simply intend building an organization for doing things for people. Our purpose is to assist the growth of Canada by helping people to get better jobs and to do better jobs or broaden the opportunities that are open to them. Our concern is with the challenge of the present. It can all be said very simply, but I think that we all realize it may be very difficult and will require a complex and competent organization of dedicated and understanding people.

Immigration has been integrated with other elements of our manpower program in the new department. This is as it should be because immigration can in that way make its full contribution to the economic growth. I emphasize, however, that manpower is more than economics. It is people. In putting immigration into the manpower department there is every realization that the role of immigration is not to be measured solely in economic terms nor as a precise response to manpower requirements alone at any given time.

The shortages in our manpower requirements, especially with regard to skilled or professional people, is of vast importance in shaping immigration programs, but there are other important factors as well, including the social and cultural ones. Canada's social and cultural development has benefited greatly from immigration over the years. That fact is and will remain in the forefront of our plans and our work toward a wise and comprehensive immigration policy.

[Translation]

Some people have claimed that to place immigration under manpower could be conducive to its being planned solely in terms of our economic needs, without due regard to the social and humanitarian considerations which should inspire it. It was feared in certain quarters that entrusting immigration to a department preoccupied with employment would lead to a timid and unsteady program, amenable to the least fluctuations of our economy and employment in Canada.

I cannot accept the idea that economic and manpower planning could harm immigration. On the contrary, an active manpower policy requires an active immigration policy capable of increasing its efficiency and promoting growth and prosperity in Canada.

[English]

Because immigration is such a vital factor in Canadian growth and development, because it affects so many lives, it is essential that immigration be carefully planned and executed. It means that to the best of our ability immigration must be administered in accordance with the basic principles of justice and humanity which Canadians demand in their national endeavours. The reason immigration and manpower should be so intimately related is precisely that they both are concerned with human resources. In operational terms, as the committee knows, there has been a great deal of work done in the immigration service in recent years to modernize and reorganize its facilities and strengthen its staff. I venture to say that in many ways it is ahead of the rest of the department and we are leaning heavily on the experience and involvement of the immigration service in developing the department as a whole.

I have taken more time than I intended but I did wish to speak today in terms of the principles which are motivating the department. The needs are very great. We have high objectives and some of the organizational problems may be quite difficult. In no sense would I wish to convey to the committee that manpower has now become an exact science. I am looking forward to suggestions and will be glad to give or secure answers to any questions that hon. members may have regarding these estimates.

[Translation]

I should probably make clear that our estimates are presented to you in a provisional form as we are determining the responsibilities and duties of the new department. The estimates for 1965-66 respecting tasks previously entrusted to the Department of Labour are indicated only where all these tasks have been transferred and when a separate vote had been written down for this purpose in past year estimates. Where no amount is indicated for 1965-66, the vote of the previous year is transferred to the estimates of the Department of Labour.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, the hon. members of the house will accede to my request and approve the estimates before us.

• (1:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, these estimates reflect the as yet unconsummated marriage of immigration and labour. My desire to preserve the chastity of each is well known to members of the committee but it appears there is no option but to relax, if not to enjoy. And so, sir, I propose this afternoon to deal mainly with immigration and citizenship. Other members of the opposition will deal with matters related to manpower.

This is the second time in just over three months that the estimates dealing with immigration and citizenship have been before the committee of supply. The intervening brief three month period has supplied ample evidence, as I said at that time, that the department has suffered greatly as the result of being under four ministers during a period of less than three years. I wish to say that I do not think any of the ministers, least of all the present one, has had an opportunity to take firm control and become the active directing head of the department of immigration. I sincerely regret the game of musical chairs that has been played in respect of the portfolio of citizenship and immigration and I think that the public interest has suffered thereby.

I know the Prime Minister is unrepentant in this respect and I only hope that in the short life of the present government the hon. member for Quebec West will be given the uninterrupted opportunity to become a firm directing head of the department and to bring into effect vigorous policies related to immigration.

First I would like to speak of citizenship before those estimates are placed under the Secretary of State. I have already stated my grave reservations about this change and I will not repeat them. However, I think that in no other aspect of the department has the unique faculty of this government for procrastination and legislative indolence been so amply demonstrated. What has happened to the once urgent and long promised amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act? What is the history of these amendments forecast at one stage by the hon. member for Papineau? Would you believe that in those early days when the Prime Minister was seeking to excite the bold and challenge the daring the first Speech from the Throne delivered on May 16, 1963 contained the following phrase:

> A change in the citizenship act will be proposed to ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

I want hon. members to note those words. On hearing them parliamentarians of all parties gave three cheers. Their chorus of approval was premature. No final parliamentary action was taken while the hon. member for Papineau was minister of citizenship and immigration. So what happened? In the Speech from the Throne made on February 18, 1964, the following sentence appeared:

> You will be asked to consider amendments to the citizenship act which will ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

Was any action taken? Of course not. In this first session of the new parliament, which opened on January 18 of this year, the author of the Speech from the Throne was highly original. He put it this way:

> My government will propose legislation to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, in order to ensure equality of rights for all citizens.

What a travesty of parliamentary leadership and action these three quotations represent. What is the result at this session? Parliament has been in session for four and a half months and the hon. member for Quebec West has done nothing to bring forward amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act. If they were ready for introduction in 1963 as forecast by the Speech from the Throne, why could they not have been put on the order paper in January of this year?

If the amendments are what I expect them to be, we on this side of the house will put them through within a matter of minutes. However, parliamentary approval cannot be given to legislation forecast by a government which, with its typical languor or should I say somnolence neglects even to introduce it.

I do not like the legislative game being played of three successive Speeches from the Throne containing precisely the same forecast of legislation. If the government is serious in its intentions, let it act now. I say to the hon. gentleman: Introduce this bill, put it on the order paper tonight, not next week. The fact is that the government has no real interest in these amendments except as a carrot held out politically to influence naturalized Canadian citizens.

I put it to the minister now, and I have no doubt I will have to repeat it to the Secretary of State later, that it is time they stopped sitting on their hands; it is time they went to work to put into effect legislative reforms which were once so dear to the heart of the hon. gentleman from Bonavista-Twillingate. I think I can forecast what will happen. The next Speech from the Throne will contain the same pious hope. This is one prediction which I hope will not be fulfilled.

In my view this country has been lax and dilatory in its citizenship program. Last year I had the opportunity to visit Australia where I was vividly impressed with how much greater was their sense of national identity, their pride in nationhood, in the greatness of a wonderful and aggressive nation which, however, does not equal this land either in resources or in potential. We are throwing away the advantage that we have in this country.

Of course, I do not believe in jingoistic indoctrination but I do believe most earnestly that we are not giving sufficient support to the dedicated work of the officials of the citizenship branch, nor is there sufficient coordination of the federal and provincial activities in the field of citizenship and of both with the educational systems.

Today, for the first time in a hundred years the survival of this nation is imperilled, and I believe a massive effort in the field of citizenship is imperative. Our philosophical objectives and our targets as a nation, our right to be proud of and to respect our various traditions and heritages should be delineated and promoted. Nothing less than a massive effort by the citizenship branch will be sufficient. I hope that when the minister replies he will tell us what the government plans in this field, what he plans in the field of citizenship education and registration. Is sufficient effort being made to encourage eligible persons to apply for citizenship? What are the plans for the establishment of additional courts of Canadian citizenship? What is being done to make Canadian citizenship ceremonies more impressive and more warmhearted?

From time to time I hear complaints about one or two judges of the courts of Canadian citizenship displaying sharp or at least unsympathetic attitudes to applicants. Personally I hope the present minister, or the Secretary of State when it becomes a matter for that minister, will talk turkey to any judges guilty of such conduct, for nowhere is it so important to have warmhearted understanding, friendly human treatment, as in these courts. Any judge who wraps himself in his judicial cloak and speaks and deals with applicants in the fashion of a harassed magistrate in a metropolitan police court is doing a grave disservice. One judge whose friendliness and warmhearted understanding is frequently commented upon to me is the local Ottawa and Carleton judge, Judge John A. Dawson. His broad knowledge of people, his general affection for all men, his lack of side or pomposity, his ability to combine firmness with charity, these qualities which he has demonstrated amply are qualities which should be emulated by all citizenship judges.

I should like now to say a word about another aspect of citizenship which concerns me greatly, namely, the handling of the so-called security cases. The minister and all his predecessors in this chamber will know the problem. It is one which caused me the gravest concern of any in my brief sojourn in the department. I confess I agonized over these files and wrestled with my conscience which I could never satisfy. The existing system, I am certain, is wrong, blatantly wrong, and had I remained minister for a month or two longer the system and the principles behind it would have been drastically altered. I think perhaps that is as far as I am entitled to go in the light of my Privy Councillor's oath. However, I urge most earnestly upon the minister and the Prime Minister that the terms of reference of the proposed royal commission on security be drafted to include a provision for consideration and report on this particular aspect of security. The minister will find in the departmental files a secret memorandum written by me at the end of my ministry, in my own indecipherable handwriting, expressing my views. I venture to submit that those views so expressed might be considered now by the minister and later by the royal commission.

The depriving of Canadian citizenship of persons who have been in Canada for lengthy periods, and who hold political views which are entirely legal in this country, is a most serious matter in a freedom loving nation.

I should like to turn to a discussion of immigration. As the committee knows, I am an unrepentant expansionist in connection with immigration policy. It is because of that that I confess I am a bit appalled at the audacity of the government in bringing forward these estimates without a white paper being presented, without even a prior acknowledgement of the existence of the Sedgwick report, with no statement of government policy about its important recommendations and without any action to revise and update the Immigration Act. I use the word "audacity" and I think it is an effrontery to parliament; yes, and it is arrogant. The government and the minister have been simply swinging the lead. I have no apology for saying to the minister that he has been swinging the lead in this respect. There have been questions in the house by various members on the imminence of a white paper, when would there be a statement of government policy, and he has simply avoided the issue.

His latest gem was a suggestion that the new policy would be announced soon to enable the hon. member for Carleton to sleep more peacefully. Well, sir, my sleep is unimportant.

Mr. Haidasz: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Delighted.

Mr. Haidasz: I should like to ask the hon. member whether he swung the lead when he was minister and failed to bring in any changes to the Immigration Act?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I will deal precisely with that situation. I took specific action which is now bearing fruit. This will be found in the files, and I recommended that we should have an expansionist policy in immigration. My friend knows that. He knows that as soon as I took command of that department I went out to the public and sought to gain support for an expansionist immigration policy.

Mr. Haidasz: But there was no change in the act when the hon. member was in charge of the department.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I will deal precisely with that before I finish. I will tell the hon. gentleman that the regulations were amended and a specific deadline date established when we would then advance the amendments to the Immigration Act.

Somehow, sir, we were discussing the question of my sleep. I say my sleep is unimportant compared with the long Rip Van Winkle sleep of this government. Not even a snore disturbs their slumbers. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre in my view is a man who really believes in immigration. If he had been kept in the immigration portfolio he would have done a tremendous job. However, he was shifted into a portfolio in which I do not believe he is extremely happy, and this is one of the major regrets that we in this house have.

The white paper on immigration was first mentioned on December 31, 1964, when the Prime Minister promised it at the beginning of the next session. Well, two sessions later we are still awaiting it. Four ministers have been unable to persuade the cabinet to adopt a white paper. The fault is not with the officials of the department. The two gentlemen over there know very well that the department can produce all the necessary material and have it ready within 48 hours, if the minister knew what he wanted to establish as a policy or if the cabinet would come to grips for a change with this important phase of our national life.

Now, sir, I think that actually this committee should refuse to pass these estimates without a white paper. Until I hear what the minister has to say about the inordinate delays that have occurred in connection with this white paper, I reserve the right to move an amendment to reduce these estimates.

What about the Sedgwick report? We have not heard a word from the minister when he introduced his estimates. The original section of that report dealing with ships' deserters has been in the hands of the government for 13 months. What has the government done? What is the attitude of the government? Can the government not make up its collective mind on this? We cannot get an answer out of the minister concerning the problem of Yugoslav ship deserters about which the hon. member for Ontario has inquired. What does the minister plan to do? Will he follow the Sedgwick formula? Has he now some new magic to deal with the problem? I am not unaware of the difficulties, and there is a member sitting close to the hon. gentleman who knows that. I submit to the minister that a difficult problem does not just disappear. This stalling is no substitute for initiative. When he replies I should like the minister to tell us precisely what he proposes to do with these Yugoslav deserters. What is his plan for the future of these people? He has had the report before him for 13 months, and I think this committee cannot grant the minister a permanent reprieve from decision.

Why did the minister not tell us today when he introduced his estimates about his policy in respect of part II of the Sedgwick report? I think it is a most significant document. I want to ask the minister certain specific questions and I hope he will make specific answers. Does he agree that a genuine appeal should be established in all cases from the making of an order for deportation? What is he doing to bring this about? Is he contemplating, as Mr. Sedgwick suggests, that he might establish a procedure of "exclusion orders"? Is he contemplating a new class of deportable persons, namely, persons in Canada who counsel or abet others to remain in the country illegally? What are his plans for an immigration appeal board? Does he propose to give it final discretion or does he support my view, contrary to Mr. Sedgwick, that a limited residual authority should remain with the minister?

These are genuine questions to which I think the committee is entitled to have answers. They might properly have been answered in a white paper. How can the minister expect the committee to vote him supply without these answers? What are his plans for the more than 20,000 people who are in Canada illegally, according to Mr. Sedgwick who, indeed, adds that more are arriving daily? Does he propose an amnesty or moratorium?

Mr. Sedgwick had the courage to state his views clearly about sponsored immigration. These views, in which I do not concur, have caused consternation among a number of ethnic groups. What is the minister's policy? Does he propose to adopt Mr. Sedgwick's proposal to limit sponsorship to spouses and dependent minor children of Canadian citizens or landed immigrants? If he does, it will throw havoc into established patterns of immigration from Italy, Greece, Portugal and Hong Kong.

I think there must be great concern, Mr. Chairman, about sponsorships in some of the ethnic classes where in fact sponsorship exceeds the process of selection by our own immigration officers. But what does the minister propose? I think we are entitled to know this today.

What does the minister think about the processes and procedures of exempting by order in council a considerable number of individuals each week or so, or whenever an order in council can be passed, who are inadmissible under the regulations, a procedure so strongly condemned by Mr. Sedgwick? This, we remember, is how Hal Banks became a landed immigrant.

The Sedgwick report deals basically and fundamentally with all these issues. But a pigeonholed report is almost worse than no report at all. I want the minister to be frank and open with the committee and to give us the facts. I plead with him today not to try to rely on philosophical or brush-off answers to these very practical and realistic questions which I have put to him.

I ask him to tell us now to what extent the government is co-operating with the government of Manitoba in their free passage program to attract immigrants to that province. How will this program operate? Will it be attempted on a national scale?

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the committee should know that we simply cannot compete in the United Kingdom with the financial allurements offered by Australia. Nor do I think we can compete in other European countries. Three years ago I observed in Austria through a friend, the head of the Australian immigration mission to Austria, Mr. Fred Ordish, the manner in which that office in Vienna seeks to assist desirable immigrants to Australia. I only wish we gave our officers abroad equivalent support and assistance.

Then, sir, what of the proposed revision of the Immigration Act to which the hon. member for Parkdale referred? The previous government had specific plans for a full-out revision and then decided that as a first step a completely new set of regulations with major policy changes should be adopted as an interim measure. That government announced that as soon as a reasonable period of experimentation with these regulations had passed a full revision of the act would be undertaken. I do not know whether this has been forgotten. The regulations have now been in operation for five years.

Mr. Marchand: Five years?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, I think so, or is it four? No, it is five. The period of experimentation, I suggest, is over. I submit that a full revision of this obsolete, archaic Immigration Act is overdue. I would ask the minister whether he would consider referring the draft act to the standing committee which could hear witnesses, get information and give all those interested the opportunity to make presentations. I ask him today to come to grips with the problem, because I am getting tired of drift and procrastination as a general instrument of national policy.

The minister has undoubtedly been able to review the Edith Ferguson report for the international institute of metropolitan Toronto, which has condemned apparently in vigorous terms governmental inactivity, especially at the federal level, in the provision of funds, programs and co-ordination for immigrant education. I have not yet been able to secure a full text of the report but the report in the Globe and Mail of May 30, 1966, disturbs one in respect of settlement arrangements. The report states in part:

> The study suggests that outdated attitudes toward education and toward immigrants are combining to hamper the Canadian economy.
> Blame for a lack of funds to remedy the situation is laid almost entirely to the federal government.

The report goes on:

> Federal immigration officers overseas fail to tell the prospective immigrant "that he will be expected to learn the language of the community where he settles, that unskilled jobs are likely to grow scarcer and that it would be advisable for him to consider the acquisition of some specific type of skill".
> She said the federal government is also remiss in making available only a single man's allowance to unemployed men registered in program 5 (a plan in which immigrants can take English lessons) who are supporting families in the old countries; another injustice is that no government subsidized scheme exists similar to program 5 for employed persons who wish to upgrade themselves.
> "Recent arrivals feel they have been misled by Department of Immigration officials who did not make the true state of affairs known to them at the time of application. When they write home or return home, they tell their experiences to other prospective immigrants."

There are many interesting statements in this report, including a number of specific recommendations. Doubtless the minister has studied the report in detail, and I would ask him to comment on these recommendations in some detail when he replies.

Earlier, Mr. Chairman, I said that I was an unregenerate expansionist in immigration policy. Canada requires a much larger population. A policy of genuine national development involves population planning or at least the development of basic concepts as to the quality, optimum size and rate of growth of population.

Mr. Munro: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Munro: Does the hon. gentleman agree that during the latter years of the administration of which he was a member and minister of citizenship and immigration a severe cut-back was made in the budget which did not allow any real promotional program in immigration? As a result there was a marked decrease in immigration into this country during the latter years of that administration.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I say to the hon. gentleman that as soon as I took over the portfolio of immigration I sought to have a marked increased in the amount of money which was made available, and I succeeded in getting that marked increase. I started a genuine promotional program abroad which, by reason of the attitude of the labour department toward immigration, had been cut up to that time. It is just because of this that I am so concerned now at the marriage of labour and immigration. I saw at once that it was from the labour section that the influences against immigration were being exerted. That is why I have described the new department of manpower and immigration as a department warring within itself. At least there could be war among two cabinet ministers under previous circumstances, but now it is a war within the department.

The hon. gentleman has access to the facts, and I would say to him that he will find the complete situation described in the files of the department, showing the policy statement which was set forth for the year 1963 and for future years.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, all I want to say is this. I have expressed in previous times my view that we as a nation should set specific national objectives. What I have said many times is that one national objective should be, on a long-range basis, an inflow of immigrants of at least 1 per cent of population per annum, subject to adjustment within the limits of .75 to 1.25 per cent of population. If we establish a clear target such as this we can avoid the drawbacks of annual immigration planning. For under annual immigration planning, facilities cannot be maintained abroad, particularly in terms of trained staff to carry out the immigration programs. The stabilization of immigration policy will permit the maintenance of a trained immigration staff able to cope with reasonable problems and emergency situations.

That is why I say this white paper is so much overdue. I appeal to the minister now to state policy forthwith and to proceed ahead with the greatest of vigour. The minister, I know, takes satisfaction in the rising immigration statistics. I take satisfaction in those also. I say to the hon. member for Hamilton East that this increase is the result of policies adopted in the autumn of 1962 and early winter of 1963. Governmental policy has really coasted since that time.

Sir, Canada needs more population. We need the cultural advantages of the best immigrants from other lands. We need the continuing stimulus to our economy. Let us go out to promote immigration. Canada has a wonderful way of life. Let us sell it with advantage to those who come to our shores. That advantage would as well accrue to us who are immigrants of an earlier generation.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I should like to express on behalf of our party satisfaction with the present government arrangement in which manpower and immigration are considered as two sides of one problem. I do not think we can have an intelligent immigration policy unless we have an intelligent manpower policy at the same time. It is understandable that we wish to increase the population of Canada. Certainly I have always been very much in favour of strong immigration policies for Canada. We must also realize that the long-range prospects and the success of any immigration policy depend on the institution of a manpower policy in this country that will assure the people who have become established here that there is no jeopardy to their interests when immigration is increased.

I do not think anybody's interest is jeopardized by increasing immigration. A great deal of misunderstanding has occurred about this in the past. By considering immigration and manpower as two aspects of the same problem, I think that most of the misunderstanding will disappear in future.

My remarks at this time are specifically directed to the department of manpower, particularly to the terms of reference of the minister in dealing with manpower and with specific reference to mobility. A few days ago I pointed out to the minister the criticism existing in this country about the segregation and discrimination that have arisen with regard to the government's policy of granting loans for mobility under some circumstances but not under other circumstances. It seems most unfair that there are not outright grants as opposed to loans.

As we have pointed out, many of the people who have to move from one place to another in search of a new occupation do not have sufficient funds at their disposal. They incur considerable costs in the process of dislocation. Even if they can obtain a loan, they are under a great strain to repay it in the future. I submit to the minister that this sort of thing is a most inhibiting factor in respect of mobility program. For the mobility program to be successful and realize its full potential assistance to anyone, after the resources of an area have become exhausted and nothing else can be done but move, must be given as expeditiously as possible. When circumstances arise in which mobility become a necessary answer the federal government should assume the cost rather than letting it fall upon the individual who in most cases is not responsible for the deteriorating economic circumstances of the particular region in which he lives.

Before the debate is over I hope the minister will indicate his feelings in this regard. I hope he will indicate that he intends to eliminate the loan system entirely and implement the mobility program on the basis of grants.

I pointed out the last time I spoke that the Economic Council has taken strong exception to the loan aspect. It is also well known to the minister that the Canadian Labour Congress has taken exception to this policy also and has strongly endorsed a system of outright grants in order to ensure maximum mobility.

A mobility program is an absolute necessity in a country such as Canada. When an area develops economic difficulties I do not think that the government or anyone else should first say to the people there: Move out. This ought to be a last resort. Other choices should be explored. But when as a last resort we recognize that moving from an area is necessary we ought to do everything in our power to make the program respecting moving as fair as possible.

Not long ago we were discussing the estimates of the Department of Industry. I hope you will excuse reference to a previous debate, Mr. Chairman, but I am doing so because remarks were made that are applicable to what we are now discussing. In that debate the problem of area development was raised and the area development program was severely criticized. I believe that the area development program should be co-ordinated with manpower mobility.

It seems to me that not enough research and study have been undertaken into the inter-relationship of these two possible solutions to the problems of unemployment and area development. The government's mobility program has been subjected to criticism in some quarters. The province of Quebec is concerned about losing its people to other parts of Canada. That province, on the other hand, has been criticized for taking a parochial attitude on manpower policy. I think there is a lot to be said for both points of view. I am not trying to walk on both sides of the fence. I am trying to express the difficulties inherent in this particular problem.

It is understandable that there is great reluctance in any area to lose its people because frequently the people who are the most mobile are the most highly trained and their departure represents a drain on the resources of an area and inhibits its future development. To say we can have an unrestricted national policy on mobility may be fine in terms of expressing the ideal, but in practice we may have to settle for something less and face up to the sociological factors that enter into the national mobility concept.

I suggest that the minister have his officials, in conjunction with the experts in the Department of Industry who are responsible for the area development program, explore the idea of growth centres within sociological regions in Canada to see whether a mobility program tied into them would offer a more fruitful avenue than does the blanket national mobility program.

I have met people who have been displaced from where their roots are. They face a most difficult problem when they are transposed from their own section of the country which has outlooks, attitudes and values that their new place of abode does not always quite respect. We may talk in terms of ultimate efficiency which may decree that mobility should be unrestricted. In economic terms this may be an unanswerable argument but in social terms it leaves a great deal to be desired. Until we come to the point where discrimination has ceased to have its effects, until we come to the point where we can plan much better for the reception of people from other areas, until we come to the point where opportunities have been more evenly distributed so that the transition from one area to another is not such a severe wrench, then we should explore a combination of area development centres of growth and internal mobility within the social fabric of such centres of growth.

The minister is not responsible for housing policy but much of his good work in manpower mobility and even in immigration may be frustrated by the extreme shortage of housing in those areas into which manpower is being directed or encouraged. The Kitchener-Waterloo Record of May 14 had an article headed, "Migrants Cannot Find Housing—No Problem Getting Jobs". That is typical of many areas where employment is much higher than it has been for many years. Housing is a serious problem and its shortage is one of the great inhibiting factors to mobility and immigration.

Even though an area may have a housing shortage people do not suddenly stop coming to it. They still come, but the deterioration that takes place in the community fabric leaves long and profound ill effects. I suggest that the minister use his influence among his colleagues to see that priorities are established for housing. Some of the responsibility rests with the municipalities and some with the provincial authorities, but this is always encountered in every area that the federal government enters.

The minister should do everything he can to encourage housing development, especially in areas that are rapidly acquiring more population. This is necessary in order to preserve the social values of a community and prevent the discord that accumulates because the newer arrivals are usually the worst housed. It is the migrants, those who come from other lands and other parts of Canada, who experience the greatest difficulty in finding suitable and adequate housing, and this creates social inequities within the community.

We shall always have to pay a price for mobility but the ill effects can be mitigated by advance planning. When it is known that migrants are to move into an area, a determined effort should be made to increase the area's stock of housing. I hope the minister will be able to deal with some of the questions I have raised.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I believe the setting up of a department of manpower is a very sound decision provided that the application of the theoretical potential reaches its objective. I agree with the preceding speaker who said that one of the greatest needs in Canada's labour force is mobility.

My own province of Alberta and the province of British Columbia are experiencing a desperate scarcity of technical manpower. The problem is so urgent that both provinces have virtually set up their own immigration recruitment programs in Europe. Yet there are still large numbers unemployed in eastern Canada, some 300,000 according to the latest statistics. The fact that this discrepancy exists in job opportunities is indicative of a great need for mobility in our work force.

This is one of the challenges which I think faces the minister. I am sure we all respect his labour background. If ever there was a man on the ministerial benches with an opportunity to go out and do something to prove himself, in a sense he is that man. I am sure that members in all sections of the house wish him well, because the situation in Canada is one which certainly involves the entire economy and all the Canadian people. The decision to set up a specific department of manpower to deal with the aspect of labour would, on the surface at least, appear to be a very sound one.

Likewise I believe the decision to unite immigration and manpower under one departmental head is also sound, at least on a theoretical basis. We have heard criticism of this decision by the hon. member for Carleton. I understand his concern in that regard, and the situation which existed prior to his assumption of the office of minister of citizenship and immigration is something we all recognize. Yet I do not see that the alternative which was provided by his own administration solved the problem either because immigration, as it has been handled for the past five, six, seven or eight years or even longer, has not been satisfactory.

With the tremendous potential in Canada we ought to have a much higher rate of immigration than at the present time. So far as our observations in this party are concerned, we do not see that there is any reason why Canada should not have a population increase of 5 per cent a year for the next 50 years. This would be a reasonable increase. If we are to supplement the normal growth rate, not only will we have to aim for an immigration flow of 1 per cent of our population but up to 1½ per cent. Historically in the growth of our economy, the years when the growth of our nation has been most rapid invariably have been tied in with the years which showed the greatest immigration inflow. If we are to continue to occupy Canada and develop the growth which Canada should have, I think it is logical to suggest we must have a more steady, continuous and higher immigration inflow than we have had for the last ten years.

In respect of our labour problem as it relates to our immigration, I would hope that the minister would get out and put his shoulder to the wheel and at the same time clear away some of the bureaucratic obstruction which he faces. I would hope that he would move ahead and really do a job for the nation. The challenge is there. I say to the minister that what is needed at the present time is less bureaucracy and more immigrants. Also, I do not believe we will get a clear perspective of what needs to be done until the white paper is brought down and is given a very careful and thorough study, and until a study is made of the application of those things in it which relate both to the department of manpower and immigration.

Sometimes I find myself becoming very critical of the administration of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. As members of parliament we are subject to all the pressures which come from those who wish to bring into this country their own families and their own friends. I really do not think there is anything wrong with this type of immigrant because he has the stability of his relationship to someone here in this country which allows him to become more easily acclimatized. So long as these are the type of immigrant who will be able to fit into the skilled or semi-skilled job opportunity fields, this is something we should encourage.

I believe that one of the greatest obstacles in the whole problem of immigration, not just at the present time but for the past number of years, is the maze of bureaucracy which has developed in the selection of immigrants under successive governments. Again I think this is a challenge which rests upon the minister who comes to his position fresh from his experience in the field of labour and certainly with a familiarity with the employment problems we face and the needs facing us in respect of readjustment of the entire economic picture. We in this party are willing to give the minister a fair try and every bit of co-operation we can. I must say, however, that we are going to be watching critically what happens, because what has been the case is not good enough for the future.

So far as job opportunities are concerned, we in Canada stand in a very unique position. We are just moving into the era of industrialization in our country, following the pattern of many other countries in this regard. Because we are just moving into it I do not think the effects of automation really will have an adverse reaction on the over-all picture of employment in our country in our lifetime. The real problems which will come with automation and cybernetics will affect the older industrial nations more severely and critically than Canada. Retraining and readjustment to job opportunities on the part of industry is something which is going to be much less acute for us than it will be, for example, in Great Britain, in the more industrialized European countries or in Japan for that matter. On that basis, not only must we be working toward a 5 per cent population increase per year, which I think is a reasonable objective, but also a corresponding growth in the economy as well. I also think it is quite a reasonable objective to say that along with the 5 per cent increase in population we should expect a 10 per cent annual increase in the gross national product, because the two will go together hand in hand.

I believe one of the problems with which Canadians are concerned at the present time is the fact that we lack leadership at the federal level. We view with concern the fact that in almost every instance there has been stronger leadership and stronger administration at the provincial level than we have had at the federal level. We realize we must have strong leadership at all levels. I am concerned though that some of the provinces have practically had to develop their own immigration policies and have had to go out and develop their own trade policies. This is not good. There must be leadership from the federal government. This has been necessary as things have been but it is not ideal so far as the future is concerned.

I return therefore to the premise that the minister has a tremendous opportunity and challenge before him to get out and give leadership at the immigration and manpower levels which not only will make his own department vibrant and strong but in a very major way will affect the whole matter of unity and respect for the federal government which most Canadians are looking for at the present time.

I noticed in going over the estimates that there is what I hope is a trend toward improving the administration of our immigration services. There is a marked decrease in the number of personnel in some of the technical and administrative classifications at the lower middle salary range and a marked increase in the number at the upper middle range. Likewise there has been a greater increase in immigration officers this year compared with last, and I hope that this is a sign of an attempt to give more effective and efficient administration particularly in relation to immigration officers overseas.

I have in mind particularly Hong Kong. I know that the situation there has been the subject of criticism for a number of years. The truth of the matter is that the staff in Hong Kong is just not able to cope with the situation there. While that is a very peculiar situation the department must recognize that it cannot expect to have efficiency there in breaking down some of the problems that exist so far as administration is concerned unless there is an adequate number of officers of the proper level and standard to do the job.

I will not mention specific cases, although I could cite a number in respect of which it has been almost impossible to render the type of service an immigration officer should because of the pressure of work and shortage of staff. I hope also that immigration offices in Europe will be expanded to meet the needs there, that the number of reports that have been adverse in so far as attracting immigrants is concerned will be less and that there will be a better public image created in respect of job opportunities and the ability of the Canadian economy to absorb immigrants than has been the case in Europe during the last several years.

I do not intend to say any more at the present time except to assure the minister again that he will receive all possible co-operation from us as long as he is moving toward doing something about the problems that exist. It is up to him to prove that the union of manpower and immigration under one ministerial head is a good thing. I urge upon him the necessity of bringing out a white paper in the immediate future and getting on with the new immigration policy that has been talked about in every Speech from the Throne in the past three years since the present government took office.

We appreciate the remarks the minister has made and hope he will elaborate on them a little more before the estimates of his department are completed.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, there are three points in respect of which I should like to comment while we are discussing vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. The first point I wish to make is more in the nature of a question than a comment. I have raised this point on two or three occasions in the past but nothing has been done about it in spite of promises contained annually in Speeches from the Throne. It has to do with proposed amendments to the "Canadian Citizenship Act which will ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born."

The party sitting to the right of Mr. Speaker has been in power for a little better than three years, since April of 1963, during which time we have had four ministers of immigration. When you ask why the minister does not do something about the promises contained in Speeches from the Throne to the effect that an amendment will be made to the citizenship act the answer is always that the minister was not in office when the promises were made. It seems that in order to avoid putting into effect the promises contained in the Speeches from the Throne, the government changes the minister. I do not think that is good enough, because a Speech from the Throne is read by the Governor General who has been the same honourable gentleman since this party came into power.

In the riding that has been good enough to elect me to parliament there is located the town of Weston with a population of about 10,000. Very shortly after my election to parliament I received an urgent letter from Canadian citizens of Italian birth who were greatly exorcised over the fact that they had gone to Italy for a visit and because of the cost of living there and the number of relatives they had in Italy had stayed for a number of years. They understood that before coming back to Canada they had to have their passports validated, but when they sent their passports to the Canadian embassy in Rome they were informed they had lost their Canadian citizenship because they had stayed out of Canada for so many years during which time their passports had not been validated. These people were desperate because they had Canadian-born sons and daughters in this country and wished to return. They had renounced their Italian citizenship in favour of Canadian citizenship and were glad to have done so. They were informed by the Canadian embassy that they had forfeited their Canadian citizenship because they had stayed out of Canada for a certain length of time.

I immediately took the matter up with the minister of immigration and I am happy to say that these people received the utmost co-operation and their passports were validated, re-establishing them once again as Canadian citizens.

This episode occurred two or three years ago at a time when a tremendous decision was rendered unanimously by the supreme court of the United States whereby a German born wife of a United States citizen, who had been a member of the United States armed forces in Germany when he married, could not lose her citizenship as a result of the soldier-husband and wife returning to Germany after the war to the village or town in which his wife was born and raised. The United States supreme court ruled that this German native born citizen, having renounced her German citizenship and accepted United States citizenship, could not be deprived of her United States citizenship unless she herself voluntarily renounced it in favour of citizenship of another country. That was a tremendous decision rendered unanimously, and it represents a mountain peak of freedom for United States citizens.

I have been pressing this government, as have other hon. members, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act so that the citizens of this country who have adopted this country as their homeland cannot be deprived of their citizenship except as a result of a voluntary act of their own. This government promised to do something in this regard in January, February, April and May, and if it stays in power long enough I suppose it will make the same promise in all 12 months of the year. We received a promise in the Speech from the Throne of Thursday, May 16, 1963 stating that:

> —a change in the Canadian Citizenship Act will be proposed to ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

Then on Tuesday, February 18, 1964 the Speech from the Throne contained this promise:

> You will be asked to consider amendments to the Citizenship Act which will ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

Those are very nice words and are exactly the same as the ones used before. However, nothing was done.

Then in the Speech from the Throne read on Monday, April 5, 1965, for the third time we were given the assurance that something was going to be done in the following words:

> A measure will be placed before you to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, particularly in order to ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

• (3:00 p.m.)

That is thrice on that one; but that is not sufficient to really let you know that the government means it. We repeated the statement on January 18, 1966, and we have this sentence in the Speech from the Throne:

> My government will propose legislation to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, in order to ensure equality of rights for all citizens.

Well, there is one thing about it; the determination is exactly the same as when it was first stated, but the performance has certainly been woefully lacking. At one time when I raised this point as to why no action was taken following all these wordy promises, I was told that there was a hold-up in the amendments because they were waiting for a court decision with respect to those people of Dutch extraction who were refusing to swear by the Bible. That case went through the courts and a decision has been rendered, so that excuse is out the window.

I have been told that the amendments are ready; they have been prepared and the regulations are drawn up. I would like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration—I know this is his first house, but he is, after all, a successor in a line of Liberal ministers of citizenship and immigration—when we might expect to have this measure placed before us that will amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, particularly in order to ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): When, oh when?

Mr. Cowan: Well, we have had four promises. I do not know, but I would like to think that the fourth time we might be able to get some action.

Mr. Rynard: Three and out.

Mr. Cowan: I would like to return to another subject which I discussed at some length a week ago today. I refer to the question of citizenship. I want to return to it this afternoon when we are discussing these estimates because of the very interesting question that was asked of me by the hon. member for Lotbinière last Friday afternoon. I was questioning why it was that people are allowed to accept honours, decorations and awards from the King of Greece, the government of France, the government of the Netherlands, the government of Belgium and the government of Italy, but a Canadian citizen cannot accept an honour from the Queen of Canada, who is also the Queen of Great Britain.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for York-Humber, but he is now beginning to speak about a topic concerning the acceptance by Canadians of decorations from different countries throughout the world and I just want to ask the hon. member whether he sees any relevancy in this topic when we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had explained myself fully. I am speaking on citizenship and I am coming to the subject of the citizenship of a native born Canadian who, because the Queen of Canada gave him a title, is no longer a Canadian citizen. I wish to raise some questions on this matter and particularly to reiterate the question raised by the member for Lotbinière last Friday afternoon. At that time the hon. member—I am sorry he is not here today; I was looking for him yesterday—asked this question of me:

> Is the hon. member aware of the fact that, in order to become right honourable, that is more honourable, it is necessary to become a member of the privy council of England? Does he not think that this is a bondage, since one must become a member of the privy council of a different government in order to become right honourable? Would he deem it advisable to change such a situation, since the Queen of England is also the Queen of Canada? We could become right honourable by becoming members of this privy council of Canada.

I was referring to Lord Thomson of Fleet, who has lost his Canadian citizenship, I say temporarily because his citizenship should be restored to him by the Canadian cabinet. The Nickle resolution states that titles should not be conferred on Canadian citizens ordinarily resident or domiciled in Canada, and heaven knows Lord Thomson is not ordinarily resident or domiciled in Canada. But when the member for Lotbinière asked the question last Friday he set up a chain of thought that some of us have been developing throughout the week.

It comes to this. How is it that certain prominent Canadians can be sworn into the privy council of, shall I say, a foreign government and not lose their Canadian citizenship, whereas if another Canadian citizen is sworn into the parliament of the same foreign country he loses his Canadian citizenship? How is it possible for a Canadian citizen to be honoured by a foreign government, shall I say, and then return with the title of "right honourable"? I do not need to name those who carry the title of "right honourable" around these halls or in this Dominion of Canada; there are a few of them. But the question that comes up is: If Lord Thomson could not become a member of the British House of Lords without the recommendation of the cabinet of Canada to the Queen of Canada, or the recommendation of the government of Great Britain to the Queen of Great Britain, who recommends those Canadian citizens who wind up with the title of "right honourable"? Does the Queen reach out and say to certain Canadians, "Of my own volition I give you the courtesy title of right honourable"?

Her Majesty could not do that to Mr. Roy Thomson, a native born Canadian from Toronto. She was told, "You cannot honour him without a recommendation from the cabinet of the section of the Commonwealth of which he is a citizen". And since no such recommendation came forward from Canada he secured a recommendation from another section of the Commonwealth, but still remains a British subject and still remains Toronto born, but is no longer a citizen of Canada. If Lord Thomson of Fleet lost his Canadian citizenship because of his desire to accept a title from the Queen of Canada or the Queen of Great Britain, whichever you want to call her—she is one and the same person—how is it that other Canadians are honoured by the Queen, we are told, without anything happening to their Canadian citizenship? It is a mighty fine distinction, if you ask me, between "right honourable" and a knighthood, a baronetcy or a title in the nobility. But the Nickle resolution distinctly reads:

> Most Gracious Sovereign.
> We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased:
> (a) To refrain hereafter from conferring any title of honour or titular distinction upon any of your subjects domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada—

Is "right honourable" a titular distinction, or is it not a titular distinction? If it is a titular distinction it is illegal, under the Nickle resolution. If it is a titular distinction, those who hold it should yield their Canadian citizenship in the same manner as Roy Thomson was forced to voluntarily give up his Canadian citizenship in order to accept a title in the nobility of Great Britain. It is an angle that I think the minister of citizenship should follow through, and se why it is that we have right honourables in Canada who are still considered Canadian citizens, but when you have a Toronto-born Canadian like Roy Thomson enjoying the title and perquisites of Lord Thomson of Fleet, he is no longer a Canadian citizen.

• (3:10 p.m.)

It looks very much to me as though what is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander. You will be interested to look up in the Oxford dictionary—I am referring to the unabridged edition, not the concise edition—the definition of that word "titular". If you want to look it up, O.K., but I can save you a little time by telling you that it reads, "not of reality; empty". That means that this Nickle resolution might well read: "Ask the King to refrain hereafter from conferring any title of honour or empty distinction upon any of your subjects..." However, I have just drawn your attention to the definition which you will find in the Oxford unabridged dictionary. If the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration would devote some attention to that matter, I would be very happy to hear his findings as I believe that Roy Thomson, a native born Canadian, should be given back his citizenship because of the honour and distinction he has brought to himself and to the country.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that we are dealing with Item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. My next remarks can either come under vote 1 dealing with the promotion of a program for the employment of the older worker, or under vote 15 under which necessary funds are to be advanced for technical and vocational training. If you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to a discussion that was held in this house on May 18 and 19 of this year when the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was piloting through the house a resolution providing for allowances to persons being trained in technical and vocational schools. At that time I spoke on behalf of the housewives who are either training or retraining as nurses between the hours of 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. At that time I referred directly to the Quo Vadis School of Nursing in Toronto. Assistance to this school could come under the promotion of a program for employment of the older worker because it trains housewives who have raised their families to school age and are more or less unemployed. I hope housewives will forgive me for saying they are more or less unemployed; I know how busy they are. These women who have their children in school believe they have the time in which to take a course for graduate nurses such as is offered by the Quo Vadis School.

I was particularly interested in the statement made by the minister on May 18, 1966, at page 5278 of Hansard, that the allowances for people taking training could be as high as $90 a week. Because of those facts I queried whether he could not include schools of nursing such as the Quo Vadis School in the proposed vocational and technical training assistance act. When I pointed out to him that there were empty wards in the hospitals because of the lack of nurses and that the greatest problem facing the medical hospital world today is the shortage of nurses, he gave me this answer on May 19, as reported at page 5330 of Hansard:

Several members said that we should put schools of nursing on the same footing. I think that the Quo Vadis School of Nursing which was mentioned is an extremely valuable school and I think that it can get a grant through the Department of National Health and Welfare, something we cannot do through a system of vocational teaching. I was asked to give that matter some consideration and I certainly will.

On Tuesday morning of this week I had the privilege of meeting Miss Mackenzie, the principal of the Quo Vadis School of Nursing, and Monsignor O'Meara, an official of the school and vice chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. I also met some of the instructors of that school. I asked them what assistance they were receiving through the Department of National Health and Welfare. They informed me that the only assistance which these housewives who are training as graduate nurses are receiving from the federal department is the reimbursement of half their travelling expenses. You can imagine what a vast sum of money that is, when their travelling expenses consist either of carfare in the city of Toronto or a mileage allowance on automobiles, because all these housewives are living in Toronto where they are raising their families in addition to taking the course at the Quo Vadis School of Nursing.

Since these housewives are being retrained, I would urge the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to consider these student nurses whose ages range from 30 to 50 and who are therefore eligible for assistance under the program for the employment of the older worker. I would ask the minister that assistance which will be offered to students in vocational and technical schools be extended to schools of nursing which fall either under the provincial departments of health or under the departments of education. We need nurses more than we need any other class of workers in Canada at this time.

Since we have been told by Miss MacKenzie and Monsignor O'Meara that the only contribution which the Department of National Health and Welfare is making to the Qua Vadis School of Nursing at this time is one half of their travelling expenses, which is carfare, I would ask you to consider this matter very seriously and make certain that such schools as the Quo Vadis School of Nursing receive assistance.

Mr. Nicholson: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he not consider that grants to homes for nurses in training, since this is in the field of education, might be dealt with by an amendment to the National Housing Act rather than by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration?

Supply—Citizenship and Immigration

Mr. Cowan: I regret very much that I have not made myself clear, or else the hon. member does not know what I am talking about, because the Quo Vadis School of Nursing has no residences. The students of that school are all married women who live at home and raise their families. They send their children to school, prepare their lunches and then go to the school of nursing. They then try to get back home at five o'clock in order to prepare a hot dinner for their husbands and children. They do this five days a week.

I would say this to the minister, and I mean every word of it, that the Quo Vadis School of Nursing and similar schools of nursing will accept all the grants you wish to give them, provided you do not ask them to build residences because they do not need them. They would like to have assistance in the way of some sustenance for these student nurses who are training to become graduate nurses.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I was greatly taken with the colourful metaphor used by the hon. member for Carleton when he opened the debate for our side. In dealing with the formation of this department he referred to the unconsummated marriage. I simply want to extend that one step further, but before doing so may I say to the minister that, having in mind his record in the house since he has been here, I am quite confident there will not be too much difficulty in passing these estimates although, as he said, there has been no issue of this marriage. However, even if we take into consideration the notorious indecisiveness of the government, its inaction, its accident proneness and its inability to act, we must assume that in a year's time even this government will probably have given birth to some issue. At that time the minister will be judged on the basis of what took place during that year.

There have been four ministers in the department over a recent period of time. In a year's time the present minister will have held office for a year and he will not have had four fathers from which to hide the paternity of the child, if it should be suffering from economic thalidomide or mental or physical retardation—which I hope it will not.

Mr. Chairman, I want to speak very briefly about this new department. After rereading in Hansard what I had said the other day when the bill was being debated, I thought I was a little grudging at that time in my attempt to praise the government for the use of the words "the utilization of manpower resources in their fullest sense". So far as the generality is concerned, as I said before, I do not thing too much of it. Here was the single nugget of gold in a barrel of sand. I hope the minister will not hesitate to make the fullest use of the powers which the house has given him in that regard. This is all I want to say in connection with that aspect.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

I have a few comments to add to what was said by the hon. member for Carleton and other hon. members with regard to the question of immigration. I also consider myself a complete expansionist, coming as I do from the part of the country which I have the honour to represent. The settlement of Canada took place at a time when this country did not have the social welfare programs that it has today. We had, therefore, two stools on which to found our progress in the west and in the north. In addition there was the movement of people from east to west who were seeking new homes in new areas. Today this latter movement is not available, or at least only to a limited extent. The social welfare programs we have today have a tendency to keep people where they are. People are provided with some form of assistance to aid them in their attempts to achieve a better life. This has had the effect of artificially slowing down the normal movement which you might expect in a country such as Canada, with wide open areas in the west and in the north. Then, too, the designated area program, which we were discussing a while ago, has had a similar effect in preventing the normal movement of capital which could develop the resources of the west and the north.

Consequently we have to look to immigration, I am afraid, for this development. On the basis of what we have seen in the last few years the prospects do not look too bright. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we in the north country are not to be condemned in perpetuity to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, that is to say, to see the resources which we have there being hauled away to be processed. I think this is bad for two reasons. It is bad for us because we need the development, and it is bad for the country. We have a small population, largely concentrated in one or two areas, and the problems of transportation and communication place a tremendously heavy burden on the taxpayers of Canada which must be kept in mind specifically in our efforts to achieve progress. If we hope to increase the population and develop our resources, we must look to immigration. For this reason, I urge the minister, in his consideration of this particular aspect of his responsibility, to be guided by the necessity of ensuring that the growth of this country is a proper and normal one. I feel confident he will have support from all sides of the house in his efforts in this respect. I can assure him he will have my support.

I should like to deal briefly with another aspect of the question of immigration. The hon. member for Carleton spoke of the Sedgwick report and the white paper. I want to urge the minister now to give consideration to a suggestion I am going to make to him. When we are debating these estimates we are, of course, limited as to time under the new rules. We could deal to a considerable extent with the provisions of the Sedgwick report and the general question of an immigration white paper. However, I would urge the minister, when he brings down the white paper, to give the house ample notice and collaborate with the house leaders to obtain a reasonable period of time for discussion of the white paper and the more important aspects of the Sedgwick report. I think it would be most unfair, having in mind the circumstances which exist now, to expect the members of the committee to deal in detail with these two matters, particularly in the light of the fact we do not have the white paper before us. I hope the minister, before his estimates are completed, will give some thought to this suggestion and indicate that he will seek the agreement of the house leaders to have a proper discussion of these issues.

Having said that, I should like to deal briefly with the Sedgwick report. It is a most remarkable document. There are parts of it with which I agree and parts of it with which I disagree. I am talking about part II, of course. There are many departures from the procedures and regulations of the past. For example, there is the question of the deportation of those people who have acquired permanent status in Canada but who are not citizens. This is something which I feel is long overdue for consideration. The proposal to establish an independent tribunal or appeal board whose decisions are not subject to ministerial review I must say appeals to me. Having in mind my experience at the present time—

Mr. Nicholson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Nicholson: Is the hon. member advocating a complete abolition of ministerial discretion? In that respect, does he differ from his colleague, the hon. member for Carleton, and is he advocating the complete abolition of ministerial discretion?

Mr. Baldwin: In so far as the tribunal is concerned, I would agree with Mr. Sedgwick that it should be independent. It should be a court of record with the right of appeal. On an issue of this kind we, in this party, seem to blossom out with a reasonable amount of disagreement in our views, which is something I would strongly recommend to hon. members on the other side. I think it would take them a lot further than they have gone in the past.

In so far as ministerial discretion is concerned, I believe there should be some in certain aspects. However, in so far as the board itself is concerned, I feel there should not be any. These are all very interesting considerations which should be discussed in great detail. I hope time will be made available for that purpose.

In so far as the question of security is concerned, which is also discussed by Mr. Sedgwick, I think it is proper at this time to make a few comments. In his report at page 16, Mr. Sedgwick says something with which we can all agree. He says that the difficulty arises in that the gathering of security information is an extremely delicate and sensitive process. We have seen an illustration of that fact in the last few weeks, which underlines the accuracy of that statement.

Now, I should like to make one comment on a suggestion which I made before with regard to security and the right of those people who are affected to make a reply to the charges, particularly as this relates to the question of immigration. There was a statement made on this question with which I thoroughly agreed at the time, and this statement appears at page 4043 of Hansard for October 25, 1963:

> First, the government must ensure the physical safety of the secret, classified information for which it is responsible by devising effective regulations for its proper handling and proper storage. However, physical security is in itself of little use without the added assurance that the people handling the material in question are people in whom government can have full confidence . . .

If our security policies ignored, or did not take sufficiently into account, the basic rights of the individual, they could operate not to defend but to destroy the liberties which are our first concern. The reconciliation of these competing responsibilities and these competing obligations is not easy.

• (3:30 p.m.)

And again:

The security measures which have been developed here in Canada, through sometimes bitter experience, are intended to be preventive and not punitive.

These words were uttered by the Prime Minister at the time when we were debating the question of general procedure. If we were debating the matter in another context I would have a lot to say about these words and the extent to which they have been lived up to. But in their general application I accept them, as I think do most hon. members of the house. This is what we should set up for ourselves. This should be our objective. We should decide how we can relate it to the very difficult and sensitive question of security procedures in immigration problems.

I should like to make this recommendation to the minister, after having a great deal of experience not only as a member who has been dealing with cases submitted to me but in my professional capacity, knowing of hundreds and hundreds of prospective immigrants who have come to Canada, sought citizenship, been subjected to the procedures of the government and have had imposed upon them hardships wrought by our security measures.

I think it is wrong for any person who is deprived of his rights not to be given some opportunity to answer allegations which are made against him. I say that with full recognition of the fact that it might not be possible to confront the accused with his accuser. It might not be possible to disclose sources of information, and in certain cases that should not be allowed. But I see no reason why some summaries of statements which have been made, compiled in such a way as not to disclose the names of the people who have given the information, information oftentimes second and third hand, information which a court of law would never receive under any circumstances, should not be made available either to the immigrant involved—particularly in citizenship cases—or to people who may well be subject to deportation.

This will provide an opportunity for them to answer the statements, and they would know in respect of which charges their rights and liberties are being threatened. Even if the person concerned or those who represent him were not able to cross-examine on those statements, at least the appeal tribunal, which might have the final decision to make with respect to the rights which are being threatened, would have the statements before them. But to accept unchallenged evidence of this kind is, I suggest, repugnant to any democratic institution and to people who profess that way of life.

I suggest to the minister that this matter should be one of his greatest concerns. The hon. member for Carleton told us in the strongest possible terms of his great anxiety when he held the position now occupied by the minister in matters of this kind. I know the hon. member for Carleton, and I know the extent to which there were so many agonizing decisions he was called upon to make, as will the minister. I think that some procedure must be devised whereby people whose rights are threatened are no longer put into the position of not knowing what statements are made against them; but without impairing security procedures—which I suggest is possible—they should directly or indirectly be given the right to answer such charges.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, my remarks are addressed to the minister of immigration, but perhaps he can discuss the point I am going to raise with his colleague the minister of external affairs and also the minister of manpower. My intervention is prompted by the problem created by Canadian labour crossing the border to work, and being subject to the military draft while working there with a visa.

I have a clipping from the Wolseley News of Saskatchewan dated April 20, 1966, headlined "Local Boy 'Shanghaied'". Having read this, one thing which the minister could do is at least to amend the agreements in this respect which exist between the two countries. I imagine Canadians undergoing this treatment do not like it, and if we gave the same treatment to our friends from the south who come to Canada perhaps they would not like it either.

This article reads as follows:

As the result of a court case in a city in the northern States, a Wolseley boy has been forced to enlist in the American army. This lad accepted employment and went to the States last fall, under a working visa, not knowing he was eligible for the U.S. draft. When he received a draft call in February this year, he turned in his visa and returned to Canada, where he had since been working. Ten days ago he made a return trip to visit a friend in the States, and on crossing the border was arrested by U.S. federal authorities, and was released on $2,500 bail being posted by a U.S. friend. He appeared in court on Monday morning of last week, charged with "desertion". He was sentenced to "two to five years in prison"—

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, this is hardly an immigration matter.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): It might not be an immigration matter directly; I said that at the beginning of my remarks. The matter could come under manpower, but it certainly comes under human rights and Canadian citizenship, because this man was a Canadian when he was caught at the U.S. border.

Mr. Nicholson: With respect, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that this is a matter for discussion on the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I also stated that, Mr. Chairman; and I have had experience in the past of being transferred from one department to another even when two departments seemed to be involved. However, I am just about through with this matter; I just want to give the committee the result. This man was sentenced to two to five years in prison, plus $10,000 fine, or enlistment in the U.S. army. That was quite a choice he was given.

I suggest that somebody should look into this question. The United States monopoly controls practically everything which we have in Canada which is of major value —natural resources, industry and distribution, merchandising and everything else. The United States finger is everywhere. Possibly the latest case of drafting young Canadians is their way of controlling our human resources. They may talk about their good neighbours to the north, but are they not now replacing the dove of peace with the bald-headed eagle?

I would ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to consult with his colleague the minister of external affairs to see what can be done about this question. I know the same thing has happened to constituents of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and he will be taking the matter up. This is not an isolated case.

• (3:40 p.m.)

To return to the manpower situation in my region, I do not know how many families and young men have had to find work across the border as a result of the situation which the minister of manpower knows was brought about by the fusion of the local asbestos mines. Hundreds of people left to go to the United States. They were nearly all subjected to this treatment. I think the minister should consult with his colleague from the Department of External Affairs so that there could be some agreement between the two governments. If a young man had been working in the United States, and had returned to Canada, then if he were to return again to the United States, he might be—I am not saying he would be—subject to the draft. Such a young man might only have been working for five or six months in the United States before coming back to Canada.

I think the matters that I have raised should be looked into. If any change is to be made in protocol, I should appreciate the minister of manpower's consulting with the Secretary of State for External Affairs in order that the situation may be rectified.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity I have of dealing briefly with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Last year I missed my opportunity, owing to an unavoidable absence from the House of Commons. At the outset I want to thank the minister for his efforts, in the Edmonton area, in connection with a Greek immigration case. I want to thank him in the house for doing what he did on behalf of a particular man.

The hon. member for Carleton dealt very thoroughly with what he called certain anomalies in the Canadian Citizenship Act and the Immigration Act. This afternoon I want to deal with specifics.

First of all I should like to know if the minister would take it upon himself to answer some of the questions I wish to pose. Is he aware, first of all, of the following situation: When certain Chinese applicants in Hong Kong apply for admission to Canada because they are sponsored and have job opportunities in Canada, when it appears they are unable to meet specific immigration requirements they are told that as they cannot speak English they are not admissible to Canada.

For a number of years I have paid a good deal of attention to the Canadian Citizenship Act and the Immigration Act. At no time was I able to determine from reading those acts that knowledge of the English language was a criterion for admission.

My second question, for which I have substantiating documentation, is this: Is the minister aware that, after having made certain statements, certain Canadian citizens of Chinese origin, upon interview with immigration officials in a given city where those citizens have been inquiring about the possibility of being able to sponsor certain relatives from in or around Hong Kong, are told outright by immigration officials that they are lying, and that the people in question in Hong Kong, the parties before the immigration official, are not, in fact, relatives.

If this is true, may I suggest that no matter what the authority of an official may be, no official within the department at the local level has the right to accuse any citizen of Canada of outright lying, without sufficient proof. I pose this question to the minister in the hope that he will look into the matter and see that it is not repeated.

The other matter I wish to bring to the minister's attention is of some concern to people coming from countries behind the iron curtain who wish to sponsor relatives or visitors to this country. I have noticed on a number of occasions that the motives imputed to those persons who come from behind the iron curtain and who wish to sponsor relatives or visitors, have been predetermined by the officials in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Let me cite one example. An elderly couple with no family of their own in the city of Edmonton, who own a dry cleaning business and are well able to afford an all-expenses-paid first class trip from Russia to Canada for a nephew of theirs, tried to obtain permission to have that nephew admitted to Canada for a six months stay. The officials of the department in Edmonton told these people that their motive for bringing their nephew to Canada was not to have him visit, but rather to bring him into the country so that they might apply to the department after he was here for him to remain permanently. This is another instance of the officials of the department predetermining in their own minds reasons why people wish to visit Canada. I think this sort of thing is quite wrong.

Another point I wish to bring to the minister's attention is the method of examining intended immigrants to Canada. I have referred to this on a number of occasions in the past. I refer specifically once again to a case in Edmonton. A young school teacher from that city, visiting France four or five years ago, met and married a young Polish emigrant who at that time resided in Paris. She married him without knowing that she could not bring him back to Canada unless he complied with certain immigration requirements.

Upon investigating this man's background—and I repeat this for the minister's benefit—it was determined that his family in the past had been connected with the communist party behind the iron curtain. Although I have no evidence to substantiate my argument, I say this: The young man swears that in his early years he never had anything to do with the communist party, and in fact that the party was one of the reasons he left his country and resided in France. He is a qualified engineer, married to a Canadian citizen. Surely, Mr. Chairman, unless there is absolute proof that this man was connected with a government espousing beliefs foreign to ours there is no reason why the woman in question should have her husband living in Paris while she, with her two children, lives and teaches in Edmonton, just because certain security information indicates that her husband is not a desirable Canadian.

I know the case is now before the minister. Appeals have been launched through religious organizations in the city of Edmonton for the minister to reconsider the grounds for the refusal of this application. If the minister does not mind, I shall privately and confidentially communicate with him at a later date, to bring this matter again to his attention.

I have also brought this matter up on several occasions: Is it not possible for immigration officials in Ottawa to communicate with their counterparts in countries behind the iron curtain. Would it not be possible to staff our embassies with the people necessary to process the applications for admission to Canada of people from behind the iron curtain?

The problem always seems to be to get clearance for departure of persons from behind the iron curtain. In recent years our immigration laws have been designed to reunite families. Many people still have relatives living in iron curtain countries, and I am looking for action to expedite family reunions. I hope the minister will look at this aspect of the matter again.

With respect to manpower, it is not so long ago since it was relatively easy for an immigrant to gain admission to Canada, provided he was destined for agricultural employment in western Canada. Many Dutch people came to Canada specifically for employment in rural areas of western Canada, for periods of two years each, but the law with respect to that was never really enforced. Many of the people who came left farm work and went to find work in our cities.

I ask, would it not be advisable for the government to consider a formula by which people from almost any country in the world could gain admission to Canada, provided they were specifically fitted for agricultural employment or wished to establish themselves in the agricultural industry? I can see little wrong with such a proposal. My grandfather came here in the 1880's, destined for a homestead in the wilderness, and I know there are many people in many parts of the world who would be happy to come to Canada if they thought they had a future in agricultural areas.

While the hon. member for Carleton was speaking this afternoon a government supporter interjected that not much was done with respect to changes in the Immigration Act during the period that the party to which I have the honour to belong was in power. I would remind the minister that when I first came here in 1958 I did not appreciate the discriminatory (a) (b) (c) and (d) portions of the Immigration Act, and since that time they have been eliminated, bringing equality to our immigration laws. I am sure the minister will endeavour to bring further equality to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, to situate my remarks I would like to say two things. First, I believe in the necessity of immigration in progressive countries like Canada. I speak of selective immigration because, obviously, we need skilled manpower to help us develop all the potentials of our economy. Immigration will also bring us consumers, a valuable factor for our trade, and specialists in all sorts of fields.

The second remark, and I speak from experience, is that the minister now at the head of this department seems to me especially well qualified. I quote a case so as to prove that I am not simply doing an exercise in meaningless compliments.

I am among those who have to write every now and then to the minister for all sorts of requests. I remember a case concerning immigrants. I admit frankly, Mr. Chairman, that after having written to the minister, I forgot my request. But he wrote me three or four times to tell me that he was following up the case of my fellow-citizen and that, finally, he had found a solution.

For a new minister who, as a new member, must familiarize himself with all the complex parliamentary procedure and moreover, find in his department a "follow-up system"—to use a phrase not to be found in Bossuet—that means he is efficient and will render excellent services. I say that to situate the atmosphere of my remarks.

I listened to what has been said during the past few hours. Mention has been made of the Sedgwick report, that you have studied—it would be redundant, I think, to analyse it and make recommendations to the minister, because I think it has been studied and that his officials have analysed it and will use it to make proper recommendations.

I listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) which were not always in order but to which one can refer because they were made during the debate.

When I think of the member for York-Humber, Mr. Chairman, a French speaking person like me is reminded of a "stormy petrel", a name I checked many times in the dictionary and which, in my opinion, describes very well the character of this member whom I would see better among the independents than among the Liberals, judging by the positions he takes in this house, except that there are enough differences of opinion among the independents now, so that we do not wish a third one.

I would like anyhow to point out that I have sentimental ties with the member for York-Humber because his great-grandfather is buried in the Trois-Rivières cemetery. This may be partially the reason for his individualistic dispositions and Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed, even if I am out of order, to make this last remark about him. I should like the hon. member for York-Humber to come and stay in our riding for a few months to complete his knowledge as to what must be true Canadianism.

His intervention for Sir Thomson of Fleet, for instance, is understandable, in view of the loyalty he owes him of course—Sir Thomson put up with him for so many years—that he should at least support him in this house, even if we do not understand exactly the reason why. I think that Sir Thomson could not care less about the supreme distinction to be still recognized as a Canadian citizen after all the honours conferred upon him during the last few years.

I am coming to my point on immigration. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. minister—I apologize for this digression—who certainly agreed with me, but I should like to emphasize this point—if his department is taking measures to synchronize its action toward a selective immigration with what the province of Quebec intends to do? It is setting up its own department of immigration.

I should like the whole house to understand me well. I do not advocate this kind of emulation between French speaking immigrants and English speaking or other immigrants.

I want it clearly understood that if it is true that in this country there are two elements; two main ethnic groups, the group which I represent, that is the French speaking group, would like very much to survive not only through the battle of the cradles but also through a selective and maybe an immigration proportionate to the size of our ethnic group.

It is a well-known fact, for instance, Mr. Chairman, that our country is going to lack skilled labour. We will need engineers. Statistics tell us that. So that our industry may achieve the degree of development which it hopes for, we must import from somewhere else engineers and professional people, technicians of all kinds.

Our specialized schools are insufficient and I would only have to quote statistics to prove it. All hon. members know that. We trust that those coming from the outside will help give our Quebec or Canadian industry, French speaking Canadian, the impetus it needs, so that we can provide for the entry of immigrants from any country, as long as they have some affinity with our own culture. I always take for granted that the house understands that the union of the two cultures will make Canada prosperous.

I would also like to ask the minister if his department heads have been instructed to supervise more closely the immigration of agitators, anarchists by nature or profession, who come from other countries. This constitutes a real danger.

Take for instance the case of political refugees. Of course, some of them are in good faith; there are some who, in their own country, cannot agree with a totalitarian-minded government. But there might be some, and I emphasize that, who are eternal malcontents or anarchists, I called them anarchists by nature or profession, who will come here to become trouble-makers.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, in the province of Quebec, for instance, we saw in that separatist movement people who came from other countries, where they went in for agitation or anarchy and who taught our young people, our young idealists, who sometimes lack a sense of reality, how to revolt against the established order with the most modern methods.

I think that the immigration department should sift with a little more care those people who, in other countries, proved that they are eternal malcontents and who come here only to create a little more trouble.

I am not going into details, Mr. Chairman, because I remember that we have only 30 days to consider the estimates. About 12 days have gone already and I overlook what does not appear essential to me.

I would also like to insist on one thing—and I apologize if the department has already thought of it—namely that it is not enough to bring immigrants, whatever their racial origin or language. We should work closely with existing associations, call them whatever you like, chambers of commerce, junior chambers of commerce and you can probably think of 50 more like them, which would be happy to co-operate with the government and the department of immigration.

We should have some kind of intensive training for those new Canadians, taking a year or two, or more if necessary, to teach them what real Canadianism is, give them some notions of the history of Canada, explain how the federal, provincial and municipal governments operate. They should also be told how to integrate themselves a little more into the large Canadian community, so as to become active rather than useless members of our society.

I believe this to be rather important. Giving them entry to this country is easy enough, but it may not be as easy to have them become genuine Canadians. Efforts made until now could perhaps be intensified, systematized through the co-operation of the organizations I have mentioned.

Again as regards immigration, Mr. Chairman, I saw in the newspapers yesterday a report that the members of this house probably read also. A construction firm here in Ottawa was saying that they were to meet the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration since they wanted to import 50 skilled workers in building construction.

It seems that there is a lack of skilled workers in construction in Ottawa. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that I was quite surprised, as 50 does not seem a very realistic figure to me and, in the area from where I come, in the seven or eight counties surrounding my riding, it would not be difficult for me at all to find those 50 workers. I wonder whether the necessary efforts were made through unemployment insurance officers, in order to recruit, for the building industry in Ottawa, the skilled workers that are needed before asking for some outside the country. Mr. Chairman, the excuse is given that Expo is monopolizing all the skilled workers, but once we are through with it, the immigrants we have allowed in this country will probably congest the construction field, at least it seems reasonable to think so, and I even find myself wondering whether I do not have any objection to immigration in that field and whether it would not be wiser to use up all our possibilities at home before resorting to immigration. It seems to me that if we applied to all the provincial unemployment insurance offices—and there are 10 provinces—we would certainly find 50 workers who would be glad to come to Ottawa and fill up this of skilled workers in construction.

Mr. Chairman, I am coming now to the labour question, under the jurisdiction of the honourable minister, and I repeat once more that it is not my intention to make a complete analysis of that question now before us, because I realize that the hon. colleagues here will do so or have already begun to do it and thus, thorugh our united efforts, we will have a pretty good picture of the situation.

I should like to recommend to the vigilance of the minister, when he deals with manpower, our students who, during the summer months, endeavour to earn a little to help with the cost of their studies, both in high school and at the university. Something is certainly lacking there, and not only there either.

For instance, there is the problem of the old people, for today one is old rather young. It is difficult to find work at 40 or 45, for all kinds of reasons, among others modern technical progress, social welfare progress. Whoever is unfortunate enough to be out of work has to resign himself to the possibility of death from hunger until such time as the old age pension allows him to subsist a while longer.

I should like to include also members of the feminine sex; I shall not call them old maids, old women or widows, I shall say not so young, toward whom life has not been generous in that their husbands left them without means of subsistence, because husbands did not come at the right time and they remained single. It happens that those women grow in years, that they want to earn a living and do so, but still their situation is almost desperate.

I summarize the cases I have mentioned: students who want to pay for their studies, the old—and I mean those who are over 40 when I speak of the old—who cannot find employment because one is old at 40 on the labour market, one is already old-fashioned, and members of the feminine sex toward whom life has been less kind.

For these cases, would it not be possible to get the services of a sociologist who would look into those problems and find a means to allow these persons to earn their living, instead of being assisted through welfare and public charity and keeping them in this state of perpetual despair and disillusion toward our democracy that is so affluent that it should take care of its children.

I am wondering about that and I know that others agencies are also thinking about it. I only want to point out what they have already brought to the minister's attention, because it is perhaps one of the most urgent problems with respect to the mobility of manpower.

Mr. Chairman, was there at a certain time a sort of conflict, or at least an apparent conflict, that could have been exaggerated in the press, between the department of labour of the province of Quebec and the department of manpower of the federal government with respect to what was called the mobility of manpower?

I should like to see both ministers sitting around a table, as people of good will, to discuss objectively problems of synchronization of efforts between the two departments, because I am one of those who believe that the problem of manpower mobility cannot only be settled within the limits of one province, but that there must be intensive co-operation from the federal government.

I express the hope that the two ministers involved who are obviously Canadians of good will—I know them well enough to say it—can forget all secondary considerations, such as political or election concerns, to envisage only the common weal and try to find an agreement formula.

I have another suggestion to make in the field of manpower—it may be a side issue. Unemployment insurance is being paid to a lot of people in the country. It is a good thing and it has helped a lot. Like many others, I wonder whether it would not be appropriate to give productive work to some of those who are in receipt of unemployment insurance, who are fit and willing to work, who are proud enough to prefer earning their daily bread to living on hand-outs that often seem like charity or philanthropy, rather than recognition of their capacity.

I wonder if it would not be appropriate to review such legislation. I am aware that such a remark may raise an outcry, from the labour unions for instance. I know, because the Canadian Federation of Mayors to which I belonged for a number of years, dared express such a thought at one time. The next morning, editorials across the country charged that we were suggesting concentration camps. But I believe the Canadian worker has enough pride to want to earn his own bread, if he is given the opportunity, and that he is not satisfied to live off whatever is granted by the public treasury, because he feels it is an insult to his dignity as a man.

I wonder if this unemployment insurance program could not be reviewed in relation to the manpower mobility program, so as to apply it to those who are receiving unemployment insurance and who are in a position to accept some kind of job for which they are qualified and fit and who would agree in certain circumstances to be displaced temporarily to work where there are 40 skilled workers. Could not a middle road be found, so that we would stop saying what is being said often enough, not always rightly, but sometimes anyway, that unemployment insurance is some sort of a premium on sloth.

I am submitting these remarks very objectively to the minister of manpower, recognizing his own qualifications since he has personally been at the head of a labour organization; he must have studied, during his career, the sociological and economic aspects of labour organizations and I know that he will take my remarks quite objectively, with good will just as he can count on the co-operation of all members of the house in this area.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, like other hon. members of the party to which I belong, we welcome the changes the reorganization of departments has brought about, and particularly the placing of immigration under the same minister as manpower.

It has always seemed to me to be somewhat impractical to make speeches, as members of parliament often do, or to write editorials, as so many newspapers do, about the virtues of large-scale immigration without taking into consideration employment and the economy. The member for Carleton made a speech again today, as he did on another occasion, which made me think that he was suggesting to the minister that he ought to do what that hon. member suggests rather than what that hon. member did. We never had as little immigration in the past 25 years as we had during those years when the hon. member for Carleton was the minister of citizenship and immigration. I am not criticizing him in this regard, because at that time we had fairly large-scale unemployment in this country, and no government could encourage extensive immigration under those circumstances.

Today we are enjoying a period of boom and full employment and the government is encouraging immigration. I subscribe to that encouragement, but immigration policies must be a part of the whole manpower policy of the government. Having said that, I should like to say to the minister, without being critical—because, as has been said before, he is the fourth minister of his department in four years—that I could very well make the same speech today, word for word, that I made in 1964, because the things I suggested then still have not been done, and the required policies still have not been enunciated. We are still waiting for the white paper on immigration which has been promised by every minister of immigration since I came here. In 1962, we are still waiting for amendments to the Immigration Act and regulations. I hope the present minister will remain in office long enough so that the promises made in the past about the white paper and revisions to the Immigration Act and regulations can be fulfilled.

It is not my intention to deal in detail with immigration needs at this time because they have been enunciated on many occasions by hon. members in the house of all parties. I wish to say to the minister, however, that the time is long past when we ought to have amended our laws and regulations in respect of citizenship and immigration to provide the right of proper appeal to any individual whose application for entry or for citizenship status has been turned down by the government, or a board representing the government. An appeal procedure should be provided whereby a person who is making the appeal has the right to present his case, hear the objections taken against his application, and the right to answer the charges which have led the department to deny his application.

Mention has been made of the Sedgwick report, and I wish to deal with it briefly. If we had not observed so many terrible examples of totalitarian countries, both communist and fascist, burning books and reports, I would suggest to the minister that all the copies of the Sedgwick report in his department be burned. The few good things suggested in that report have been said many times both inside and outside this house and they do not need repeating. The rest of the report is bad, and I urge the minister to ignore the report almost entirely. I suppose we are all the products of our invironment and I do not wish to sound too critical, but it seems to me that the Sedgwick report is based on a very restrictionist point to view, taken so often by individuals who have been in and have run this country almost since its formation.

Knowingly or unknowingly, if the recommendations of Mr. Sedgwick were adopted we would cut off almost completely the entry into Canada of the large number of people who have been coming and are continuing to come from countries such as Italy, Greece, Portugal and many others of southern and eastern Europe, because they have been coming here as a result of sponsorship by their families or relatives. They have not been coming in the traditional ways in which people have come from Great Britain and countries of northern and western Europe. I think it is a good thing that people have been coming from those countries and I want that immigration to continue; but if the recommendations which Mr. Sedgwick made were adopted by the government, this immigration would virtually stop. I think the government ought to forget about the Sedgwick report.

I want to raise just one point, which I have mentioned on other occasions. This is in regard to immigration policy and the laws that apply to immigration. There is a feeling held by prime ministers and governments of some commonwealth countries—of the non-white countries, if I may put it that way—that the immigration laws, regulations and policies of the government of Canada discriminate against people from those countries coming to Canada. I want to quote very briefly from a speech made by Prime Minister Eric Williams of Trinidad and Tobago which was reported in the Globe and Mail of May 24, 1965, as follows:

> The latest came last week, when Prime Minister Eric Williams of Trinidad and Tobago accused commonwealth countries of "racial inequality and discrimination against people of colour, as if they are poison or disease".

He said further:

> "Canada eases its conscience by accepting a handful of domestic servants. The contemporary slogan is Keep Britain White—the very Britain which was built up by African and Asian labour in Africa, Asia and the West Indies. Whatever the commonwealth may be in theory, it is in practice being increasingly tainted with a racial limitation.

The Globe and Mail quotes figures which prove conclusively that Mr. Williams knew what he was talking about, because in the year before Mr. Williams made this speech—that is, the year 1964—Canada permitted 112,606 immigrants to come to Canada? Of these only 1,493 were West Indians, 2,127 were Chinese, 1,309 were Indian and 104 were Japanese. So Mr. Williams was certainly not exaggerating when he said very specifically that Canada's policies in fact are designed to permit really only white immigrants to come to Canada. This ought not and cannot be permitted to continue.

I want to deal in the time I have left with a matter that I think is of the utmost importance. This country is embarking upon a policy—and I agree with the policy—of expanded immigration, a policy of encouraging more people to come to Canada. The economic situation in Europe being what it is, it is impossible, whether we want it or not, for that immigration to continue to come almost exclusively, as it did in earlier years, from countries such as Great Britain and those in Scandinavia. A very large percentage of the immigrants who come to Canada are from Italy, Spain, Portugal, Greece and countries in which the people to a large extent do not speak English.

I am not being critical of this policy—I support it—but it creates a very serious problem for Canada both for now and the future. I think it is good that the minister in charge of immigration is also the minister of manpower, because it seems to me he can look at this problem and the implications of what we are doing in a very practical and concrete manner. Studies have been carried out in Toronto, and I am sure if similar studies were carried out in Montreal, Winnipeg or Vancouver the results would be the same, which indicate that immigrant children are discriminated against in the Toronto schools system—not deliberately, not as a matter of policy but simply because the Toronto schools system, like the Montreal, Vancouver or Winnipeg schools systems, are not geared to teach the regular curriculum to large numbers of children whose mother tongue is not English. I have here a report which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail of February 17, 1966. I will read just a few paragraphs of it to indicate what the problem is. This article deals with a report by a citizens group in Toronto and refers to the report in this way:

> It says that those who cannot speak English are urged to quit school when they are 16, and until they reach that age, they do little but sit out their time.
> The group's findings are similar to those in a report by the Toronto Board of Education.
>
> Existing facilities for immigrant children who do not speak English are inadequate and to a large degree non-existent, the citizens' report finds.

Later on the article says:

> The report says that virtually no teenage immigrants who don't speak English enter the high school system.
> "We were told by several people that if a teenage girl or boy of 14 turns up at school who does not speak English he is usually encouraged to get a work permit and get a job."

The findings of the survey carried out by this citizens group have been duplicated in a report by the Toronto Board of Education. I am speaking from memory, but their report estimated that it would cost $2 million a year for special programs to help children of new immigrants to Canada adjust and stay in school. This is a very small price to pay. I have mentioned in the house before, and I say to the minister now, that even though education is the responsibility of the provinces, under the British North America Act it is a problem of the government of Canada and the people of Canada, not only morally because we encourage these people to come here, but because if these young people do not continue at school, if they do not acquire the skills they require, they will be in the same position five or ten years from now as the thousands of people in Canada who did not go to high school and are finding it increasingly difficult to get jobs today.

We have embarked upon a manpower training program. I do not think it is good enough, but it is far superior to anything we have done in the past. It makes little sense to me if, when we embark upon a manpower training program for young people and adults who were born and brought up in Canada, we do not at the same time face up to the problem of training and educating young, new immigrants to Canada; because they will be here for the next 30, 40 or 50 years and the kind of training they receive now will to a large extent determine the kind of work they will do in the coming years. I suggest to the minister that he could do nothing more important in the next year than devise in co-operation with the provinces workable solutions to this problem, programs to which the federal government would contribute financially even though there is some question whether under the constitution the federal government is responsible. What is true of immigrant youngsters who are still attending school is true of immigrants who have come to Canada and are now old enough to work.

In the Globe and Mail of May 30 of this year there is an article entitled "Immigrants refused classroom space while schools lie idle, report charges". The news story is summarized from a report prepared for the International Institute of Metropolitan Toronto, and I shall read several paragraphs from the article as it appeared in the Globe and Mail.

> Immigrants who need and want education are going without it while huge schools lie idle, according to a study "Newcomers and New Learning", released during the weekend . . .
> Many new classes for adults are needed now, but it is claimed there is no space for them. Yet there are numerous school buildings, constructed at great expense, which are open only eight or nine hours a day between March and October and some of them not at all during the summer holidays. This is a waste of taxpayers money . . .
> Miss Ferguson says that last spring and summer, when auto mechanics were in short supply, the project was refused space to give trained Greek auto mechanics a skill-adjustment course that would have quickly fitted them to go to work. At the same time, from March to October, auto mechanics shops lay idle in the technical schools each evening.

Here is a concrete example of the need for the manpower training program, which the federal government is sponsoring, to use all the facilities and to take care of the people who have been encouraged to come to Canada by the story that there is work for them, only to find that they are not qualified.

In this regard the report says the following:

> Recent arrivals feel they have been misled by Department of Immigration officials who did not make the true state of affairs known to them at the time of application. When they write home or return home, they tell their experiences to other prospective immigrants.

Some very concrete suggestions are contained in this report and I will quote a few of them:

Further experimental programs for immigrants "to discover the quickest and most effective means of combining instruction in English with upgrading of basic education and occupational training;"

Recruitment of a staff of bilingual or multilingual field workers to promote education among immigrants;

Establishment of educational counselling services with multilingual staffs at locations convenient to the employed and unemployed;

That an adult education department be set up by the Metropolitan School Board for co-ordinating Metro schemes;

—Year around English language and citizenship classes for immigrants, available day or evening, anywhere there is sufficient demand.

Mr. Chairman, I know that some of this work is being done by cities such as Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, but I want to reiterate what I said earlier, that I think it is the responsibility of the federal government to give leadership in this field and to put up a substantial part, if not all, of the funds required. If people are encouraged to come to Canada, as they are, the decision to follow this policy having been made not by the cities concerned but by the federal government, it is the responsibility of the latter to provide the funds. I say that the federal government has both a moral and, I think, a legal responsibility to take action in this scheme.

Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with one other matter about which I had asked some questions and about which I have had some correspondence with the minister. I do not raise this in a critical manner. There is ample evidence that while the federal government has successfully embarked on a program of encouraging skilled and highly qualified people to come to Canada, certain groups, in their own selfish interests or because of their racial or religious prejudices, are making the work of the department to a large extent useless. I am referring specifically to what has happened and what is continuing to happen to a large number of doctors who have been encouraged to come to Canada and who have settled in Ontario. In the last five years, 763 doctors have come to Canada from Asia, a large number of them from India and Pakistan.

Mr. Chairman, I am not being critical but the government has followed an aggressive policy of encouraging doctors, as it has encouraged engineers and other skilled professionals, to come to Canada. Doctors in particular have been able to write examinations and to practise in a number of provinces in Canada. They have been able to practise in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the maritimes. However, the province of Ontario, which suffers from almost as great a shortage of doctors as any other province in Canada, has adopted, through the College of Physicians and Surgeons, discriminatory measures. Doctors from India and Pakistan are not permitted to write the exams and therefore to get licences to practise.

Mr. Chairman, I will not give details in regard to this today, although it can be done and I have sent substantial material to the minister regarding this situation, but the fact is that there are doctors in Ontario who have graduated from schools in India, who have been able to get their licences and practise in other provinces, but who will not be permitted to write the examinations and to practise in Ontario. The College of Physicians and Surgeons is quite happy to let them work in Ontario hospitals because of the shortage of doctors in that province—and those who work in the hospitals are not overpaid—but they have been adamant in their determination to prevent those doctors from practising.

Of course, the College is scandalized by the suggestion that this refusal is based on racial prejudice. An examination of the evidence however makes it very clear that there is no other reason. One of the reasons which has been given is that the education which those doctors received in India is not as good as the education given to Canadian or European doctors. Evidence proves the exact contrary.

The Medical Council of Canada sets examinations for doctors who wish to practise in Canada and who have been trained in other countries. The records which they keep are very precise and exact. I want to give a few examples from those records. They show that between the years 1919 and 1963, of doctors who came to Canada from Austria and wrote the Medical Council's examinations, only 54.3 per cent passed, only 56.9 per cent of Belgian doctors passed, 73.8 per cent of French doctors passed, 37.7 per cent of Greek doctors passed and 50.6 per cent of Hungarian doctors passed. And yet, Mr. Chairman, all of these doctors who came from these countries are permitted to write their examinations in Canada.

However, if you look at the number of doctors from India who have written the examinations, you will see that 76.4 per cent passed them. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario has refused any doctor who graduated in India permission to write the examinations. There is no other explanation for this except prejudice on the basis of race or colour.

• (4:40 p.m.)

It has been argued by the College of Physicians and Surgeons that the reason is the training is not good enough, that the percentage of full-time teachers as compared to enrolment in Indian medical colleges is not satisfactory. A comparison of the medical colleges in Canada, the medical colleges in other countries and the medical colleges in India, proves conclusively that this is not true. The ratio between teaching doctors in Indian medical colleges, and students, is just as good as the ratio in other countries. I know that the licensing of doctors is a provincial matter, and that the government of Ontario has given the job of determining qualifications to the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons. However, I do not believe that is a reason for the Department of Citizenship and Immigration just leaving it at that. After all, we are encouraging these people to come to Canada, and rightly so. There is a shortage of doctors in this country, in every province.

According to the Prime Minister, this country will institute a national medicare plan on July 1, 1967. At that time the people will not have to worry about the expense of seeing a doctor, and the shortage of doctors will become even more acute. This kind of discrimination, based on race and colour, is contrary to every principle of democracy, every principle of equality, and contrary to the needs of this country. I hope the minister will take a broad view rather than the very narrow, legal view that this matter is the responsibility of the provincial governments and there is nothing the department can do. If the government of Canada were to take this matter up with the Premier of Ontario or the Minister of Health of Ontario, and make it clear this kind of policy is not acceptable to the people of Canada, I believe the government of Ontario would find ways of convincing the College of Physicians and Surgeons that this policy must stop, and must stop now. I hope the minister will consider the matters which I have raised today, because I believe they are important.

Unless we move quickly, energetically and aggressively to meet the problems of continuing the immigration we need in this country in increasing numbers from non-English speaking countries, in years to come we will be faced with problems in the field of employment and in the field of welfare which would have been completely unnecessary if we had moved now in the light of the experience of the last few years.

Mr. Lambert: I hope I will only take about five minutes to cover the points that I must necessarily cut short at this time. First of all, I could not disagree more with the hon. member for Winnipeg North, who seems to indicate any person has the right of entry into another country, that he has a fundamental right of entry. I do not believe so. There is a sovereign right to exclude those persons we see fit to exclude, in the same way I can be excluded from any other country. I cannot insist upon my right, under any conditions, to be admitted into another country. This does not mean, however, that I do not agree with him that there might not be some relaxation in connection with the refusal, in many instances, to give the reason for the exclusion of a person.

For instance, I am thinking of medical grounds. Frankly, the old practice of the department in this connection is out of date. There is nothing wrong with telling a person he is suffering from tuberculosis or from this or that particular ailment. You might be doing the person a kindness by telling him what you have discovered. If the refusal is related to the fact a person has had a nervous breakdown, then let us have a look at that. This is one area in which I suggest we do have to overhaul our procedures. The fact the person has suffered a nervous breakdown is not a permanent stigma, otherwise a great proportion of the people of Canada would be under this stigma.

We have made great advances in this regard, but at the present time there are statutory difficulties. I am suggesting to the minister that there should be a review of these particular statutory disabilities. I have spoken about the difficulties under section 5 (d) in relation to moral turpitude, and I still maintain my views about that.

Mention has been made of the Sedgwick report which dealt with a particular problem, in the main, namely ship jumping. This is all right, and I can readily understand it. In so far as the Sedgwick report recommends the elimination of sponsored immigrants and that we restrict ourselves to skilled persons, then I think the report should be buried. I feel it should be absolutely buried. I do not believe we should be limiting ourselves to a small category of sponsored immigrants. We cannot afford to do so, because I feel it is mouthing sheer nonsense to say that we shall get only skilled workers from abroad. We may try to get them, but then what do we do? We indulge in the greatest hypocrisy at home. Our trade unions are to blame in part. They have restrictive regulations as to apprenticeship and as to qualifications for admission. I know a number of European trained workmen who are, frankly, just as good as if not better than our own Canadians, but do you think they can become qualified? They could not become qualified in a year of Sundays. The same situation prevails with respect to our professional bodies.

I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North when he refers to our doctors. As a lawyer I say that we too, in the legal profession, are antediluvian in this regard. We have some sort of idea that we must featherbed. There is a sort of depression complex that you have to maintain these private preserves for a limited number of people. What utter nonsense this is. I lay the blame all the way down the line, in our professional bodies, our trade unions and our provincial departments of labour who administer industrial standards. If we say we are going to attract skilled people, then let us give them the opportunity immediately to earn a living, and not make them wait years to qualify.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we must also go out and get unskilled people. This country was originally populated by unskilled people. We have great demands for people. Certainly we admit unskilled people under the sponsorship categories, many of them being relatives of other unskilled people. And what are they but successful people today? So why should we say that these people do not possess any skills, or that they do not have the equivalent of grade 10 education, as somebody in the Department of Immigration at one time indicated to me as one reason entry was refused. Shame. We have many of our own people who have not attained grade 10 education; and in many skilled occupations grade 10 is not reached. So why put that excuse forward now?

With regard to speaking either of the two languages, I should like the staff of the department to go to a country where there may be 25 or 30 languages in use, and where very few of the people speak English, and yet get along. So let us not have such reasons as these put forward. If we need manpower, let us go out and get it, both skilled and unskilled. We can certainly use it and train it.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières indicated that he was surprised that any contractor should ask for 50 workers. I had a case last spring of a contractor who wanted to import 100 workers from Italy because he could not get any labour in this country. The department referred him to the National Employment Service. The men who were referred to him were simply not worth the powder, and that is all there was to it.

Just because there is a surplus of labour in Quebec or in the maritimes or in some particular pocket in the country, you cannot say that you will be able to transfer them to an area in which there is a demand for labour, because there are many factors to consider. For example, they may have families with children at school, and perhaps a home which represents their only equity. You cannot move them around just like so many numbers. Therefore I suggest it is wrong to say that until you have completely and utterly exhausted the number of people who are unemployed or are unemployable you cannot bring in workers to meet the requirements of the employer and of the job.

There are many other matters I should like to raise, but finally may I say that I appreciate the increase in immigration from Hong Kong last year over the previous years. I also appreciate the great understanding that has been displayed by immigration officials in this regard. The minister told me that the staff in Hong Kong had been increased, but it seems that the periods of appointment are lengthening again. Perhaps we could have another look at this; it is very discouraging.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I hope that we will be able to see the white paper. There are some other matters I should like to discuss, but in view of the time I will hold them for some other occasion.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, my first words will be to thank hon. members of the house for the suggestions, the criticism and, indeed, in some cases, the hopes which have been expressed; I may add that I also understand those who were less optimistic.

It is obvious that, upon arriving in a new department, which has a past, it is not easy to defend all that was done previously. It is not my intention to do so, neither on behalf of those of the party of which I am a member nor of those who were there before. I also understand those who have particular interest in immigration problems and who want amendments in order to correct situations that everybody has been wanting to remedy for years.

I do not think it was ill-will, neither on the part of the minister of immigration of the previous government, nor of his predecessors.

In this field, a consensus must be reached on some immigration philosophy. It is the white paper on immigration that must define this immigration philosophy and program. I must accept some responsibility for a certain delay in the tabling of this white paper, because I requested that a certain part which I did not agree with be rewritten. It is not the departmental officials who are responsible for that delay; I am. And I think that, being a new minister and having to take responsibility for this white paper in this house, it was in order that I should request the departmental officials to rewrite certain parts which did not suit me, although the house is free to disagree with what I may propose. There have been delays over a period of years; if you have no reason to believe that such delays will not be multiplied, perhaps you have none to believe that they will not be shortened.

All I can say to the house—and I cannot lay formal proof before it—is that this white paper is almost completed. It will have to be revised but the writing is about completed. I hope we will be able to present it. As several members have asked, it will be referred to a committee of the house as soon as it is completed. Hon. members will then have every opportunity to consider it and to make suggestions and recommendations so that our immigration policy meets the wishes of the Canadian people.

But, Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer a few of the questions that were put during the debate.

[English]

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

• (5:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I believe it would meet the wishes of hon. members if we were to suspend private members' hour for today and continue the discussion of the estimates as we had been doing immediately before five o'clock. If that is agreeable, I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to announce the business for Monday.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be difficult, but—

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Mr. Orlikow: —this is a department in which a number of our members are interested, and in connection with which they have a number of problems to raise. I am certain that we cannot finish the whole of the estimates in the next hour. However, I am agreeable to the minister's completing the statement he began, and to passing item 1 of the estimates. I cannot agree to continuing until six o'clock and finishing the whole department.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if I could ask a question by way of clarification. Do I understand the hon. member to want to revert to private members' hour at the end of the proceedings he mentioned?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what I am suggesting.

Mr. McIlraith: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that we have already referred the subject matter of I think, some 33 private members' bills and resolutions to committees of the house, with a view to obtaining recommendations that should embody legislation. I think it is quite unprecedented in the history of parliament. We propose doing the same with some four or five other resolutions now on the order paper. I wonder if the hon. member would agree to letting us go on with the estimates of some other department, if what I have said helps to meet his problem.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker; that is agreeable to me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Does the house agree to dispensing with the private members' hour today and going on with the estimates of some other department—

Mr. McIlraith: After item No. 1.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: After item No. 1 is carried?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: Might I take advantage of this opportunity to announce the intended business for Monday. We proposed proceeding with item No. 56 on the order paper, third reading of the bill respecting the organization of the government of Canada; then item No. 7, resumption of the debate on the bill to amend the Yukon Act; then item No. 58, second reading of the bill respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada; then item No. 59, second reading of the bill to amend the Financial Administration Act; then item No. 51, the resolution to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, and certain other superannuation acts; then item No. 54, consideration of Senate amendments to the combines investigation bill, and item No. 4, consideration of Senate amendments to the National Research Council bill.

INDUSTRY, RESEARCH AND ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the proceedings this morning I seek unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions in order that I may move two motions in connection with the designated areas program, and the estimates of the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drury: I move:

That the items listed in the Main Estimates for 1967 relating to the National Research Council including the Medical Research Council, presented to the house at the present session, be withdrawn from the Committee of Supply, and referred to the standing committee on industry, research and energy development, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public monies.

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF DESIGNATED AREA PROGRAM

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development be empowered to consider the subject matter of the designated area program and the criteria thereunder.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this committee to which two sets of estimates have been referred is also considering those of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Does the minister hope that the committee can complete its task rapidly, in this context?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, this morning I questioned, on the grounds the hon. member has raised, the desirability of making these references to the committee. I was assured that there was a great desire that that be done, and I accordingly agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

General Administration—

1. General Administration including the promotion of a program for the employment of the older worker; the promotion of programs for combatting seasonal unemployment; the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries; and the manpower consultative service, $3,913,500.

The Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

• (5:10 p.m.)

(Translation)

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, as several members pointed out this afternoon, I am in favour of an extensive and systematic immigration for Canada. I feel, however, that our immigration policy should take into account the situation of the Canadian economy and labour market, not exclusively but inclusively, among other factors.

We are told sometimes that we should follow the example of the United States. It was somewhat the basis of the argument put forward by the member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). As a matter of fact, I thought his intervention contained the same type of argument. According to that argument, we should follow the American policy, that is, accept the greatest possible number of immigrants, with a view to extending our domestic market and eventually bringing about prosperity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it should be kept in mind that conditions in 1966 are not the same as those which prevailed when massive immigration took place in the United States. The professional requirements of the labour class, when the United States allowed massive immigration were not similar to those existing today.

When I joined the trade union movement, probably 30 per cent of labour was unskilled and could easily be absorbed by industry. Nowadays, this ratio has fallen to 10 per cent and keeps going down. At a time when our efforts are directed towards professional and technical training, we should strive to provide those unskilled workers with a proper training to enable them to escape unemployment. Our immigration policy should not be allowed to contradict this manpower retraining policy.

Whether we like it or not, Mr. Chairman, even when reference is made to selective immigration, even when immigrants are required to have certain professional qualifications in order to come to Canada, the fact remains nevertheless that under our sponsorship policy, year after year, approximately 35 per cent of immigrants coming to Canada are unskilled workers. They are being admitted to Canada for a humanitarian reason rather than a professional one.

I feel we should continue to stress professional qualifications so that immigrants come to Canada, not necessarily to enjoy our culture or our bilingualism, but rather to make a better living.

I think that if we accept immigrants, we should see that they are provided with suitable jobs. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, there is a very serious danger of giving rise to negative reactions on the part of workers. If ever workers realize that immigrants compete with them on the labour market, thus increasing unemployment, then a negative reaction to immigration will take place, and I think nobody wishes that to happen.

That type of immigration should therefore be rational, in that it should take into account our economic situation, our development and growth. But at the same time, it must be humane. And I think that by reconciling those two factors, our immigration policy will really achieve the purposes we are aiming at.

[Mr. Marchand.]

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) has touched upon several points and almost insisted that I give a reply to each one of them. I feel he is familiar enough with parliamentary procedure and the ways of government not to expect me to give him, this afternoon, texts that would provide an eventual solution to the problems he has brought up. I can merely tell him, in all sincerity, that the points he brought up do not only interest me, but are of concern to me as they are to the department. We hope to solve them within a short time. Not only that I feel we will have to deal with certain problems even sooner than with the white paper, that is to say we shall be able to solve certain problems before the white paper comes before the house.

There is the problem of sponsorship and that of courts of appeal. I believe those problems can be solved before the overall problem of immigration is looked into.

With regard to the setting up of a court of appeal with wider powers than those it now has, I believe we will come to an agreement; it will be a matter of drawing up a text which is almost ready now and which we hope to be able to submit to the house.

Several members have brought up a question which is of concern to me, and doubtless to others who have not spoken: that of security. It truly is the type of problem one hardly dares bring up because of a persistent feeling that the security of the state is at stake. Only, not talking about it eventually leads to even involuntary abuse of individual rights and freedoms. Sooner or later we may have to re-investigate the whole matter, even if it means taking certain chances.

I therefore fully agree on that point, and I trust the house will approve what recommendations we may make in that respect. For with regard to security, you know, sir, that according to the law certain countries are completely exempted from security tests. The purpose of such security rulings is to protect our country from certain agents. I feel there are times when we are most inadequately protected. Such countries as might be interested in sending spies or saboteurs to Canada would be intelligent enough to send them by way of those countries where there are no security tests. The whole question must be gone into, with due regard to individual rights and freedoms.

I think that any immigration or security system intended not only, and in this respect everybody will agree, to get rid of saboteurs, anarchists, dynamiters and what have you, but also to exert a control on the free and democratic thought of the people, is a bad system. Then freedom is in danger. I think that in Canada, while we cannot afford to be threatened with dynamiting and sabotage, we certainly can run all the risks that involve our freedom.

At any rate, let us say that, with this mentality, we shall move soon, I hope, certain amendments that will take into consideration some of the points raised by the hon. member for Carleton.

The hon. member for Carleton mentioned that one of the objectives as far as the number of immigrants to Canada is concerned could be set at about 1 per cent. Well, I think this year, we will get this objective of 1 per cent of the population of Canada and I hope this trend will continue in years to come.

It is a fact that conditions are more favourable this year for massive immigration than they were in previous years. It is more easily acceptable to the people since immigrants can readily find jobs and workers do not have the impression that immigrants come here to compete with them. Now it is a fact that these conditions exist and I think the over-all policy of the department is intended to increase the number of immigrants.

The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) spoke about the manpower mobility program. It is sure this program is not perfect and that it will have to be rectified as was already done since its inception in December last. We have reviewed it, we have adopted new regulations, for instance the Bissette case has been dealt with in a special way. We had to work out new regulations in that instance and we shall continue to improve them, so as to put the emphasis on grants rather than on loans for workers who will have to move from one town to another.

I believe we should not delude ourselves on the efficiency of a program aimed at manpower mobility. We cannot move people systematically and massively from Newfoundland to Vancouver or from Winnipeg to Quebec. People are attached to their environment, and I think some ideas conveyed by the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) are quite defensible. If we could develop some growth centres in the provinces, this would certainly meet our needs far better and would not require the uprooting of whole populations.

As regards the amendment of the Citizenship Act, in order to ensure equality of rights for all Canadian citizens, there is no doubt that if you are a naturalized Canadian citizen, your rights are more restrictive than those of a Canadian born citizen. I believe that everybody is agreeable to the idea. As stated, everybody has wanted this discrimination to disappear from the act for many years now.

Even the hon. member for Carleton, though well-meaning, did not have time to introduce this amendment. I hope to remain in office long enough to do so, and I expect this will be in the near future, so that all Canadian citizens may be on an equal footing.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Why not bring it down and we will pass it next week?

Mr. Marchand: Well, unless there is another Spencer case—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We want to get ahead with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Well, I do not think it will be too long. As for the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), he dealt with the Lord Thomson case. Of course, it is a tragic situation, but Lord Thomson lost his Canadian citizenship not because he was decorated by the Queen of England, but because he agreed to become a citizen of the United Kingdom. That is why he lost his Canadian citizenship under a formal provision of the Canadian Citizenship Act. If he wants to get it back, he can easily do it, but the act requires him to come and reside in Canada for at least a certain period of time.

According to the information I have, his case has nothing to do with the fact that he received a decoration; it is rather based on the fact that he has agreed to become a citizen of a foreign country and, as such, has automatically lost his rights to Canadian citizenship.

As for the observations of the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) about Canadian workers or labourers who are called-up in the United States, I am ready to discuss this matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), but it does not come actually under my jurisdiction.

Now we will certainly have to try our best, in accordance with the spirit and the letter of the law, to facilitate the access to Canada of people living behind the iron curtain, who now meet with certain difficulties. I think that question was put to me by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Skoreyko). This is another problem which we have considered. We tried to find out how to put these people on an equal footing with immigrants from other countries, without jeopardizing Canadian security and the proper application of the act.

This is a more involved problem but it is now being considered by the department, and we hope to find a solution which we will submit to you as soon as possible.

Members have dealt with immigrants coming from certain countries of Asia and Africa. All countries are certainly not on the same footing with regard to the Immigration Act. In the matter of sponsorship alone one notices a certain discrimination. Should it be abolished? Personally, I feel that any type of discrimination should be eliminated from every provision of the act, so that people wishing to come to Canada be all on the same footing. Should special cases come up, we could exercise various other means of control. I do not think that discrimination should be embodied in the act itself. Therefore, it is a solution to a problem that we hope to be able to submit to you quite soon.

Now, the hon. member for Edmonton East referred to the case of a Frenchwoman married to a Pole who cannot come to Canada. Her husband is not acceptable here not because he is a communist, but simply because we cannot check his record.

Therefore, this is related to immigration difficulties in the case of those living behind the iron curtain. Those are problems that we will have to solve soon enough and I would even hope to settle them before consideration of the white paper on immigration.

Of course, it gives rise to injustice when it can be said that someone is a communist or a danger for Canada. Very often, when there is a risk involved, we do not impose it upon this country, but rather upon the applicant for entry into Canada. But perhaps it would be necessary to widen the door in this regard so as to avoid certain situations which are absolutely inhuman.

It is the problem that ministers of immigration have had to face in the last few years and I am not alone in this. Besides, I was told that that was really the place where ministers were buried, because in spite of human problems, we are obliged to apply the law as is. This involves considerable difficulties. If a risk is taken, if at a given time we let a common law criminal or a bandit get through, as it happened in the past, this may result in a general uneasiness in certain quarters.

Anyway, we will seek to adjust the law so that this situation cannot occur again.

Now, we were asked to try and establish a special class for people intending to go into agriculture. It is quite normal to want to attract immigrants to make farmers out of them, but if they farm for two, three, four or five months, and if economic conditions are such that they are attracted to our cities, it serves no purpose.

I think that to accept people with lesser qualifications, ostensibly because they will work in agriculture, is to fool oneself because, as soon as they see they can earn $1 or $2 more per hour in Toronto, these people will leave agriculture. The only way is to bind them by their fare, in other words to promise to pay their fare provided they work on a farm for one, two or three years. But, in my opinion, this is not a very sound procedure in a democracy. I think this is slave labour rather than freedom. Anyway, in such cases, they cannot he forced to stay. I do not believe this is an acceptable method and philosophy as applied to immigration.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) talked of the balance of cultures in Canada, between the French and the English element. Of course, nowadays immigrants are not like merchandise that one can pick and choose. They must be sought after and we must take them wherever we can, when they are ready to come.

In my opinion, since Quebec has begun to follow Ontario, it should deal with the immigration problem and set up offices in French speaking countries in order to solve those problems. I am sure Quebec will receive full co-operation from the federal government. The Ontario government has been doing this for several years in co-operation with the federal government. This does not create friction of any sort and there is no objection to Quebec doing the same thing, so long, of course, as it respects the law and regulations of the Canadian immigration office. I believe this is the way to preserve this balance rather than at the federal level.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières also spoke of construction workers brought into Ottawa. I should like him to give me further information on this subject, because I do not think immigrants have been brought to Ottawa for the construction industry. If there is a particular case, I am willing to discuss it, but I do not know of one.

The hon. member made a suggestion with which I basically disagree when he said we should try to find part-time work for those who draw unemployment insurance.

Unemployment insurance is a type of insurance. The people who get unemployment insurance are not living on public charity. If we give start to competition between workers and those who are on unemployment insurance, I fear we will create an unbearable situation. Those people start working for lower salaries and will finally end up competing with regular workers. To my mind we must instead find regular employment for the people on unemployment insurance, full-time jobs that will afford them a livelihood. We must not allow them to compete against the working class.

The member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) spoke of a court of appeal—I have already spoken about it—and of the Sedgwick report.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

We have studied the Sedgwick report, but we never suggested that it was our intention to apply or implement it in its present form. Surely there will be some changes made and for the time being I do not think we are in disagreement in this regard.

The hon. member spoke about the report made by Miss Edith Ferguson. All I have to say in this regard is that under federal-provincial training agreements, the decision to establish training programs and extend living allowances is a provincial decision rather than a federal one. At the present time the federal government contributes 75 per cent of training costs and 90 per cent of living allowances for unemployed persons, including immigrants in full-time courses, and 50 per cent of training costs for employed persons taking part-time courses.

The provincial and federal officials will be making arrangements to hold discussions on these matters in the near future. If provincial governments decide for example to set up classes combining language, citizenship and academic subjects for newcomers who need this training for employment the federal government will share in the costs. The government is also willing and anxious to do what it can to lessen any other obstacles to the effective integration of newcomers.

Although a knowledge of either English or French is not a requirement for admission to Canada, all unsponsored immigrants selected overseas by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration are informed that until they know the language of their community of settlement they cannot expect to realize their full capabilities. Written advice is given to all such immigrants on the necessity of learning either English or French early in the immigration process, and it is suggested to them that they take language instruction prior to their leaving for Canada. This point is further stressed during the interview with the counselling officer, and the facilities for carrying on language instruction after arrival in Canada are explained.

As far as unskilled immigrants are concerned, the department is not selecting such persons abroad unless they meet certain basic educational requirements. We are ready to work with provincial governments in this field, and I hope our efforts in this regard will be fruitful.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Winnipeg North has also mentioned the case of medical doctors who cannot practise even with professional qualifications. In this field, we have already approached the provincial government of Quebec. We are ready to apply again to the Ontario government, if need be, so that provincial governments may bring professional organizations to cease this discrimination, not only in the case of physicians but of all professionals immigrating to Canada. The same thing could probably be asked of our good friends of the trade unions, as they are sometimes a little too conservative in this field. Immigrants must feel at home in Canada and they must be convinced that their professional qualifications are recognized.

But the hon. member for Winnipeg North will understand that this matter does not come directly under our jurisdiction and that we have to leave it to the provincial authorities, which usually control the activities of these private organizations.

Mr. Chairman, those are the remarks I wanted to make following the comments made in the house and which I took in very good part.

In a few years, shall we find again in the Speech from the Throne the same hopes as were expressed in two, three, four or five previous Speeches from the Throne? I cannot swear it is impossible. I only wish to say that we shall do the utmost in order that the next Speech from the Throne may deal with other topics than immigration and citizenship.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister. During his remarks I did not hear him say anything about immigration provisions regarding farm workers in western Canada. At one time certain immigrants were expected and required to work on farms for one year before moving to another type of employment. This provision seems to have gone by the boards in the last few years. It is very difficult to get farm labour in western Canada and I believe that some provision should be made which would require certain types of immigrants from other countries to make themselves available for farm work for a certain period of time.

There is no point in requiring immigrant doctors and lawyers who must requalify in this country to spend a certain period of time working as farm labourers. It is much better to have trained farm workers required to put in a certain period of time at this type of work before moving to another occupation. I should like to hear what the minister has to say about this matter. He may well have said something in this regard during his remarks, but if he did I did not hear it.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I missed the first part of the hon. member's remarks. Let me assure hon. members that there are a certain number of farmers coming to Canada each year. I do not have the figures with me, but the problem in this regard is that even though these people are required to work on farms they do not stay at that work, for different reasons, some of which are economic. I understand that what the hon. member has in mind is that there should be a clear understanding or even a formal agreement that they will stay on the farms for a while. Is this the question the hon. member put to me?

Mr. Fane: Yes, Mr. Chairman. If the minister wishes, I can supply him with the names of people who have written to me in the last few days and asked me to do something about getting farm help for them. In the majority of cases, they would like to hire their farm help by the year, and out in the country in which I live people are well able to do this. The difficulty is that labourers are just about as scarce as hens' teeth at this time.

Mr. Marchand: The number of people employed on farms in Canada is decreasing all the time and has been decreasing tremendously in the past 10 or 20 years. At the same time, for many reasons farmers have not been in a position to provide competitive working conditions and pay competitive wages. Therefore it is very difficult to counteract this trend. I should like to reserve judgment on this question because there are a number of things of which I am not aware. But personally I am not very enthusiastic about having formal agreements in order to compel a free citizen to stay in a certain job for years if he does not like it, or can find a better job somewhere else. I am not sure that such agreements could be easily implemented or enforced. In any event, Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this question as notice and perhaps I can discuss it with the hon. member. When my estimates come back, as they probably will, for consideration by the committee perhaps I can clarify this point.

Mr. Fane: Perhaps I would be able to visit the minister in his office and we could talk it over under perhaps better circumstances than these.

Mr. Marchand: The hon. member is welcome to visit me in my office.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to address a question to the minister. Does he intend to make some arrangements concerning the immigrants who cross the border into the United States and who cost a lot of money to Canadians? They do not stay very long in Canada and they go over shortly to the United States. I believe some steps should be taken, and I wish I were informed of the minister's opinion on this matter.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, Canada is a country which benefits from immigration. If we consider the final result of immigration, the number of persons entering Canada as compared to the number of those leaving it, we have a positive balance-sheet, that is there are many more immigrants entering Canada than leaving the country.

So, if Canada is happy to receive immigrants, I believe it would be quite illogical to try to impose restrictions on people wishing to go elsewhere, because if all countries acted like that, the migration of populations would be impossible.

Concerning the United States, there is no doubt that we incur in deficit on immigration and emigration. In other words, there are more people from Canada going to the United States than there are coming to Canada from the United States. The discrepancy is perhaps of the order of 30,000 people per annum. But on the whole, if we consider the total migration of Canada, we benefit, and if, by any chance, we imposed restrictions on emigration to the United States, well, we should expect the United States and the other countries to do the same thing toward Canada.

This is like people who think they can impose duties on foreign products and that other countries will not. We are not alone in this world.

Therefore if this population migration is to our advantage, we must not be among those who impose restrictions or make a useless fuss. The way for us to keep people in Canada is to create conditions such that they will want to stay. And, between us, if we were to find some advantage in moving to California, because it suits us, or if we had a family and so on, would we accept it if a state made all sorts of trouble for us because we were not leaving? Aside from states and the common interest, there is also the individual. Anyhow, let us say I do not find these restrictions very desirable.

[English]

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question about mine labour. I understand that the mining industry is claiming that it is short to the extent of some 6,000 men to fill available jobs, and I know the minister has on several occasions said that one of the reasons for this lack of manpower is the fact that the accommodation and facilities provided in mining towns is not of a quality to keep immigrants to this country working in the mines in these areas. I should like to ask the minister whether he has had any conversations with the mining industry about means and methods which the industry could use to hold the people that are brought in occasionally, and also to attract Canadians back to these mining areas.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, we have met with representatives of the Mining Companies Association to discuss this problem, but we believe that those companies can make an effort in order to train or retrain their staff. They might also strive to improve working conditions so as to attract workers.

At any rate, let us say that we are trying to avoid, by expanding an immigration which might create a problem in Canada at a given time, that some employers be prevented from assuming their responsibilities with regard to our workers and to the Canadian people.

This does not mean that all mining companies seek to have workers for less than they would pay Canadians. Conditions must not be created which would encourage them to adopt this practice.

For instance, a mine was closed down at Bell Island, Newfoundland, where there are close to 1,000 miners in the street. We do not know what will happen, but anyway if there are jobs in Canada, we must give them the preference, we must try and retrain them instead of importing people who are qualified and who eventually will become a burden to the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question to ask the minister. In view of the fact that it was only about six weeks ago, or perhaps two months ago, that the minister said it was impossible to run the immigration department under its present policies and set-up—

Mr. Marchand: I said that?

Mr. Thompson: I think it was on March 22. At least, it was reported that the minister said he had lost control over immigration policy and it was impossible to continue on that basis. I wonder how long the minister anticipates it will take, after bringing in the white paper, to introduce the new Immigration Act in the house?

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand: I think the report the hon. member has given of my statement is a little too broad. I did not say it was impossible to run the immigration and citizenship department; I said it would be impossible to keep control of immigration if we did not solve the problem of non-immigrants in Canada. My statement was not as broad as the hon. member has said. So I think this problem of non-immigrants in Canada will have to be solved before we present the white paper on this subject. I think it will probably be done in a few weeks time, as soon as the agenda of the house allows for it.

Mr. Thompson: My question was whether you anticipate introducing legislation relating to this matter during this session of parliament.

Mr. Marchand: I do not know, any more than any of the other hon. members of this house, exactly what will happen in the next few weeks or few months, but the intention is to introduce this legislation as soon as possible, and probably before the end of June.

Mr. Herridge: I have a question for the minister. I know that in the southeastern part of British Columbia many immigrants come from the United States and receive the status of landed immigrants. However, many of them have no intention of settling in Canada; they come here to take employment at very high wages for a year or two and, as they will tell you, they intend to go back as soon as the job is completed. What will be done to stop that situation? Those people are taking away jobs from Canadians and even from immigrants who, in some cases, wish to stay in this country.

Mr. Marchand: I presume that some Canadians do exactly the same thing in the United States. Whether you restrict the employment of United States citizens in Canada or the employment of Canadians in the U.S., you have to accept this competition. I think that if we prevent U.S. citizens from coming here and working under those conditions, the U.S.A. will probably retaliate by preventing Canadians from doing the same in the U.S.

Mr. Herridge: Would it not be better, to be quite frank about it, not to call them landed immigrants but to give them visitors' permits allowing them to work here for a year or two? There is a lot of humbug in this now, and I loathe humbug.

Mr. Marchand: I do not know how you can discover the intention of a U.S. citizen who states he wishes to have the status of a landed immigrant and become a Canadian citizen. It is not easy.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a question. Since our western agriculture has reached a stage where it is very technical and where there is a need for people who know something about operating very heavy expensive machinery such as combines, big tractors and equipment to clear land, would it be possible to allow some of these people to take technical and vocational training in schools which are set up for this purpose at the present time? Our agricultural industry is very complicated at present and it will get more so as time goes on.

Mr. Marchand: I think that farmers can profit by this training allowance bill which is now before the house and which provides for allowances up to $90 a week for training or retraining in primary industry such as agriculture, forestry and so on.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: As agreed earlier today, the remaining items of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration will stand. Is it the wish of the committee to proceed to the consideration of the estimates of another department?

Mr. Churchill: In view of the fact that there are only four minutes left, I think perhaps we should call it a day.

Resolution (Citizenship and Immigration) adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $6,795,400.

5. To sustain technological capability in Canadian industry by supporting selected defence development programs, on terms and conditions approved by treasury board, and to authorize, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, total commitment of $60,000,000 for the foregoing purposes during the current and subsequent fiscal years, $25,000,000.
