Fenton got in and started again.
All through the night they tore along the road, and dead tired, the girl fell asleep, still holding her mistress's hand. But Rawson Fenton remained awake, and now and again looked at his watch, and once consulted a timetable.
Long after the sun had risen they reached a small village, and the coachman pulled up, and locking to Rawson Fenton to come outside, told him that the horses were dead beat.
"Very well," he said, in the same calm voice. "Get another pair—the best you can hire—hire or buy them. I don't care which."
He set to the window, and gently drew the cloak from Constance's face.
"We must stop here," he said. Then in a lower voice, so that the maid could not hear, he added: "Come, Constance, be brave! You made your choice. If you are still in the same mind, fulfill your part of the contract. If not, say so. It is not too late; I can take you back as you came. I dare say the marquis has not escaped."
She sprang up white and wan, a shadow and look of her old self.
"I am ready. I will do as you wish," she said, in a hollow voice.
He offered her his arm, but she refused, and clung to Mary, and led the way into a small inn.
The landlady, much embarrassed by such evidently distinguished visitors, showed the two women up to a room, and Rawson Fenton ordered some breakfast to be sent up to them.
Constance flung herself on a couch, and when the breakfast appeared, refused to touch it; but when Mary begged to cry she drank a little coffee, and insisted upon the girl's taking some food.
"If I only knew where we were going, and what it all meant, miss," she sobbed.
"I myself do not know," responded Constance, wearily. "I only know that we must go where he—Mr. Fenton—wishes. You will stay with me, Mary, whatever happens."
"It's the bells have startled the lady," said the woman of the inn to Mary. "One of the girls in the village is to be married to-day."
Constance pressed her hand against her heart and hurried into the carriage; and for miles the sound of the wedding-bells pursued her.
It was her wedding day.
They travelled through the day as they had travelled through the night; at the greatest speed the horses could be urged to, and stopping only to change horses at midday, went on as if the journey would never cease.
To Constance the speed and onward rush brought a fitful kind of rest. It was in harmony with the rush of her own thoughts.
She did not dare to think of the man she had left; did not dare to picture his anguish at the discovery of her flight and her seeming treachery; for every time she tried to think of him her brain whirled, and her heart ached with a pain unendurable. But she thought of the marriage, the gentle woman who had been as a mother to her, and of the child Aral, who loved her as a brother.
What did they think of her disappearance? He, the man who loved her, would curse her, she knew; all his life he would curse her, little knowing that she had sacrificed herself to save him from ruin and disgrace. But the gentle, loving-hearted mother and Aral!
One cannot describe the emotions that stretched her soul upon a rack, one can scarcely imagine them. Once or twice she raised her heavy eyes to the pale, set face of the man who held her in his power, and she turned them away again with a shudder. There was no hope there; nothing could be read in that face but an inflexible purpose from which no prayers or entreaties of hers could divert him.
Toward sunset they approached the

Mary, looking through the window, caught sight of water, and she touched Constance, murmuring:
"Look, miss, the sea!"
Constance raised her head, but dropped back apathetically into her old attitude.
The weary horse pulled up at a hotel, and Rawson Fenton got out.
"Wa stop here," he said. "Come, give me your arm."
Constance was almost too exhausted, physically and mentally, to refuse, but Mary was staunch, and drew her mistress's arm within hers.
"I'll help her, sir," she said, grimly.
Rawson Fenton ordered a private room and dinner, and Mary led Constance upstairs.
"Look, miss," she said, trying to speak cheerfully. "Here's the sea. I've never seen it before. Thank goodness, we can't go any further!"
Rawson Fenton gave his final instructions to the coachman.
"Make your best way to London," he said. "You can keep a still tongue in your head, I know. If any one asks you where we have come from, say from Cornwall, and that the lady and I were married two days ago, and that she is ill."
The coachman touched his hat, and pocketed the bank-note which would pay his expenses and leave him something handsome for himself, and Rawson Fenton walked down to the pier.
He was tired, but the elation of success supported him, and he walked like a man who has won a great victory against overwhelming odds.
He made his way to the packet office, and interrogated the clerk.
"Steamboat to France, sir?" said the man. "She left just three hours ago."
Rawson Fenton bit his lip.
"Only three hours," he said, quietly.
"When does the next start?"
"Day after to-morrow," replied the man.
"Is there no other for any place before that?"
"No other. We only carry to France," replied the man.
Rawson Fenton leaned against the rail of the little pier and looked out at the sea.
The day after to-morrow! In that time the marquis could overtake them. But there was no help for it. He took a cigar from his case and lighted it, and looked out at the sails in the harbor.
"Do you have many yachts here?" he asked, for the sake of saying something.
"Oh, yes, a goodish few."
"Whose yacht is that lying there?" he asked, nodding toward a sleek-looking schooner lying at anchor in the offing.
The man glanced at it.
"I don't know. Came in last night, some swell's I suppose."
Rawson Fenton made a few commonplace remarks, then went back to the hotel.
Two days! In two days much might happen. The marquis might track them. Well, if he should, he—Rawson Fenton—held him in his power. Even if the marquis overtook them, he could not snatch Constance from him—Rawson Fenton's grasp.
He entered the hotel, and was conducted to the room where Constance and Mary sat.
Constance was lying back in an easy chair, pale and hollow-eyed, and the movement of her hands—a quick, nervous gesture—only indicated her cognisance of his presence.
He went up to her and bent over her.
"Send the girl away, Constance," he said, in a low voice.
"No," she said. "Say what you have to say before her."
He bit his lip and the hand that rested on the back of the chair closed sharply.
"There is an awkward hitch," he said. "The packet does not start until the day after to-morrow."
She made no response, but lay back white and apathetic.
"The day after to-morrow," he repeated. "We must remain here till then."
"You speak as if you were a prisoner!" he retorted. "Come, Constance, consider. You are not treating me well."
"I am—a prisoner," she said, almost inaudibly.

"You are not," he retorted. "You came with me by your own free will. You had your choice of two evils, and you chose—By Heaven! Constance, you treat me very badly! Any one—this girl here—would think that I was carrying you away against your will."
She turned her face still further away from him.
"You are taking me to France?" she said.
"Yes," he said. "I think it best. We are free from pursuit there. Remember what that means. If the marquis overtakes us, he is lost! The moment he appears I hand him over to the police."
"Ah, yes, it is too true," murmured Lady Ruth, who had broken her promise to the marquis, and told them the story of Constance's flight. "I had it from her own hand. It is all as I have told you."
Rawson Fenton lost all faith in my own discomfiture, in my judgment of character, and in my sex!" exclaimed the duchess, the tears of sorrowful vexation standing in her eyes.
"What the devil could she see in the fellow?" grunted the duke, forgetting that the ladies were present. "She must be mad to leave Wolfe for a man like that!"
"If I could only think she was mad I should feel less about it," said the duchess, almost inaudibly.
"She is not mad," said Lady Ruth, in a low voice. "You forget that they were old friends; he may—of course I do not know—but he may have some hold upon her."
The duchess looked at her with troubled thoughtfulness.
"Is that possible?" she said. "He is just the sort of man, with that calm, cold face and steady smile. Oh, I'll never believe that she cared for him! No woman could be such a marvellous actress as to impose upon us all. Why, I have seen her face when she thought herself unobserved, and Wolfe entered the room, and if ever a woman's heart looked through her eyes—! She stopped, unable to go on, and pressed her handkerchief to her eyes.
"She was a good actress," remarked Lady Ruth, quietly. "She would have deceived any one."
"She was not deceitful; you never liked her!" said Lady Kitty, with a sob; she had been crying openly ever since she had heard the news. "I only knew her a little, but I am sure she was not acting."
Lady Ruth's pale face colored slightly.
"Yes, I knew her better than you did, Kitty," she retorted, quietly.
"What's to be done?" asked the duke, rumpling his hair and looking more concerned and upset than he had ever looked before. "You can't have a wedding without a bride!"

part of second mother, with a keen delight. Add to discover that the girl whom she had thought so worthy to occupy the high position of the Marquis of Brakepear's wife had fled, eloped with another man the night before the day fixed for the marriage, simply overwhelmed her.
"It is the most extraordinary thing that I have ever known, ever read of!" she said to the duke, as they sat late into the dawn talking, and surmising and deploring the strange incident. "It is difficult to believe it, even now. You are sure, quite sure, that there is no mistake. Ruth—that she has really gone off with Rawson Fenton?"
"Ah, yes, it is too true," murmured Lady Ruth, who had broken her promise to the marquis, and told them the story of Constance's flight. "I had it from her own hand. It is all as I have told you."
Rawson Fenton strolled onto the pier again, and with a cigar between his lips, looked at the ships in the offing.
By the light of the moon he saw a boat put off from a yacht he had noticed in the morning, and the men, spruce as man-of-war's men, rowed toward the pier.
When it had reached it Rawson Fenton saw a tall, sun-burned man, in a suit of yachting serge, spring from the boat.
"Come for me at ten o'clock to-morrow, boatwain," Rawson Fenton heard him say; and with an "Ay, ay, my lord," from the boatwain, the boat returned to the yacht.
The gentleman ran up the pier-steps, and stopped close beside Rawson Fenton.
"Which is the best hotel?" he asked of the pier-master.
"The Royal Ship, your honor," replied the pier-master.
"Thanks," said the gentleman.
It was the hotel to which Rawson Fenton had taken Constance.
Rawson Fenton had listened mechanically, and paced up and down, thinking nothing more of him.

Once he bent forward and touched her, but she shrank away, and drew the cloak more closely over her face; and not a whit discomfited, he leaned back and folded his arms again.
After a time which seemed hours the carriage stopped. Rawson Fenton got out, and Mary, looking through the window, saw that they had pulled up at an inn. He came back in a few minutes and laid his hand on Constance's arm.
"Will you stay the night here, or shall we go on?" he asked, in a low voice.
Constance dropped the cloak from her face; it was white as death, and there were dark rings round her eyes. For a moment or two she seemed too dazed to understand, then her hand went toward the girl and she clung to it with a feverish clasp.
"Go on," she replied, almost mechanically.
"Very well," he said, calmly. "The choice rests with you. We shall change horses here."
He left the carriage again, but reappeared presently with some wine, and offered it to Constance.
She declined it with a movement of her hand, and he poured out a glass for the girl.
Mary shook her head. If her mistress would not take it, neither would she.
He had ordered a fresh pair of horses to be in readiness, and the change was soon made. Just before he got in, Mary whispered, "Oh, miss, where are we going?"
Constance shook her head, but held fast to the girl's hand.
"I do not know; but you will not leave me, Mary?" she replied, whisperingly. "Whatever happens, I won't leave you. But, oh, miss—the poor marquis!"
Constance turned her head aside, but made no response, and Rawson

The morning broke bright and clear, and with the rising of the sun the first sun and buzz of the rumor began to be heard. The wedding bells that were to have rung out a merry, joyous peal at eight o'clock were silent, and wild stories were spreading through the village that something, no one knew what, had happened. Presently it was whispered by some one that there would be no wedding.
The villagers laughed at these rumors at first, but later on, as the bells still remained silent, and grooms were seen riding from the castle as if on urgent missions, such rumors gained ground.
Up at the Towers the consternation was indescribable; this that had happened had fallen like a thunder-bolt from a clear sky.
For the first time in her life the duchess was overwhelmed and incapable of action. She had loved Constance, and had looked forward to participating in the wedding ceremony, to playing the part of second mother, with a keen delight. Add to discover that the girl whom she had thought so worthy to occupy the high position of the Marquis of Brakepear's wife had fled, eloped with another man the night before the day fixed for the marriage, simply overwhelmed her.

Editorial Chat.

The attempt to do away with the senate bar was unsuccessful, but on the motion of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, it has been made impossible for persons other than senators to procure drinks at it.

There appears to be a strong feeling among our citizens that there should be an improvement made in the condition of Main street as soon as possible. Just what method would be best to employ seems to be the most necessary thing to decide upon. We would invite the rate-payers to make use of our columns for the discussion of this or any other matter pertaining to the welfare of the town or county.

The terrible shooting accident at Moncton, the other day, by which a young fellow lost his life, indicates to us that people are as careless as ever about the use of fire-arms. The case soon only ended a few days ago, and the season's misadventures have already commenced. "Slipped and fell with the hammer up," or "Didn't know it was loaded," and some one has entered the "happy hunting ground." Will people ever be careful?

We want some good correspondents, one from each district in the county, who will write a breezy, interesting letter each week. Items about social events, church affairs, new buildings, etc., are always acceptable. Can you write? Try it. By doing so you will benefit the community in which you live, you will benefit the greatest of all institutions for the instruction and elevation of the human race—the local newspaper, and you will benefit yourself. Send us your address, and we shall be glad to furnish the necessary stationery, etc.

The first session of the eighth parliament of Canada was brought to a close on Monday. The session was called principally to vote supplies, but a great deal of time was spent in discussing other matters. The length of the session enables the members to draw a full term's indemnity of $1000 each, instead of $10 per day, as they would have done had the session been of less than a month's duration. This is apparently to the satisfaction of Liberals and Conservatives alike, but will cost those most interested—the rate-payers—an additional $200,000 at least. The house has been prorogued until Nov. 14th.

The press everywhere is giving kindly expression to feelings of loyalty and good-will toward Queen Victoria now that she has exceeded in the length of her reign any of her predecessors. All these years she has done good and not evil. Her influence has been on the side of peace and good-will and against international strife and hate. She has sympathized with her people everywhere in their triumphs and sorrows. During all these years the empire has increased in power, in wealth, in numbers; and the liberties and the substantial happiness of the people have been greatly advanced. Queen Victoria never obstructed any effort in the way of removing burdens and redressing wrongs.—Her empire has now a population of more than four hundred million souls, and the flag floats over eleven and a half million square miles of the earth's surface. One acre of every five in British soil, one man of every four is a British subject. This is the empire of which we to-day form a part and which it is our mission to strengthen and develop.

Sermon to the Students.

On Sunday, the 4th inst., in the Baptist church, Wolfville, the Rev. T. Trotter preached the annual sermon to the students of Acadia University and the associated institutions. The preacher's text was taken from the words of Christ Matt. xi: 29, "Learn of me." From the text he deduced the topic: "The School of Christ." The preacher considered the claims of this school; the terms of admission to it; the conditions of progress in it. He urged the claims of the school on the ground of the Master at its head; the fact that the instruction given in it was absolute and unadorned truth, and that much that was of highest importance could be learned nowhere else. On the terms of admission, he remarked that it was a free school, no fees, no qualifications of character, and a desire to be taught. There must be a personal appreciation of the Master. On the conditions of progress, he insisted that the prime condition was intense application. Intense application to prayer, in the study of the text book, and in the practice of the Christian virtues.

Provincial Educational Association.

This Association will meet in Truro, on the 14th, 15th and 16th instants. It is designed to benefit teachers and those interested in educational work. The programme for the coming meetings provides a good variety of subjects; and those chosen to read papers, or speak are among the ablest educationists in the Province. It is expected that all the teachers of the public schools will give their presence the required week's notice and attend. Such subjects as "The Professional Training of Teachers," "Kindergarten," "Physical Education," "Civics," etc., will be discussed. The question of "Supplantation of Teachers," a "Peasant site for a Summer School," and a "Provincial Reframatory" will, no doubt, come up for consideration and require to be voted upon. In view of all that is to be done, no teacher can afford to be absent. CHAS. W. BROWN, Secretary.

Wonders of Yellowstone.

Our old friend, Mr. C. R. Higgins, who for some years past has been in the banking business at Astoria, Oregon, has given to a reporter of the Astorian, of that city, the following interesting description of a visit to the celebrated Yellowstone Park: "Charlie's old friends in Wolfville are always glad to hear from him: 'It was the most delightful outing I ever had. From the time we entered the park until we took the train for home it was one succession of wonders. The accommodations are all that could be desired, and make the trip on a bicycle very enjoyable. One of the latest and best features are the permanent camps, which were recently introduced by Prof. Wylie. These camps are for the accommodation of bicyclists and are four in number. They are situated just a day's ride apart, and are cheaper and better than the hotels, affording one a longer stop at the principle places of interest. 'We were seven days in making the trip. The roads are cared for by the government and are excellent. The principal place of interest is the Upper Geyser Basin. Here we stopped a day and a half and witnessed an eruption of the giant geyser. This great geyser erupts but once a week and the eruption is of one and one-half hour's duration. The eruption took place at 9 o'clock at night and was a magnificent sight. We saw several eruptions of 'Old Faithful,' another great geyser.

"Another interesting place is Grand Canyon, at which we stop for a day. The canyon is 1200 feet in length and presents a truly wonderful sight. The coloring in the surrounding rocks baffles description. It is simply perfect. We saw forty six eruptions of one geyser in a single day, a most unusual occurrence. 'With such excellent roads the trip on a wheel is one that will not be soon forgotten. There were eight of our party and we enjoyed ourselves immensely. 'The political situation? Well, up in Montana the silverites, as might be expected, are in the majority. On the train it is different. We took one vote and it resulted in 124 for McKimley and 64 for Bryan.

"The only objection we could have to the trip is the railroad fare. From Portland to St. John, the distance is 1000 miles, while to Livingston, Mont., it is 600 miles. The fare to Livingston is as much as that to St. Paul—$80. I have no idea why this difference exists. 'To the Public. A number of pieces were missed by the Grand Division agent, Edward Blackadder, during his campaign in Kings county in September. These pieces will be visited by him during the present month. Where divisions are running, cards of notification will be sent to the deputies; where there are no divisions, the cards will just be addressed to the post-office, who will kindly arrange for the meeting or give the card to some person who will if by chance notifications be not sent or misdirected, it will be a great obligation for some one to arrange for the meeting without further notice, on reading this. Let it be announced in the schools and churches, and any public gathering, in order that as large an audience as possible be procured. A time will be taken at every meeting for the discussion of the Plebiscite Policy of the Liberal Party.

Where no temperance societies are running, all interested in the cause are earnestly requested to help the Grand Division agent to organize societies. Collections will be taken at each meeting. Please arrange (even though it be merely a quiet talk in a country school-house) to bring a few together.

Saunders' Comedy Co.

Wolfville's theatre-going people were on Monday evening last accorded the privilege of hearing "Saunders' North and South Colored Comedy Co." in O'Leary's Hall. The audience was a fairly large one—for Wolfville. Everyone present, is local or far—as we could observe, enjoyed the fun. Most of the acts were bright, and as far as Wolfville was concerned, quite fresh. We recognized a number of old favorites, but they were newly dressed, and passed off very well. S. Saunders, the "leading man," has a good hoarse voice, and can dance a jig in lively shape. He is a capital fun maker. The sable minstrel who performed upon the harmonica and banjo simultaneously, was one of the best harmonica players we have ever heard. The two lady members of the company both of whom were charming brunettes, of the decided type, sang a number of songs and did a sort of primitive skirt dance. The performance closed with a humorous farce, entitled "Trouble in the House." The rare privilege in Wolfville of laughing unreservedly for any length of time, is well worth a quarter.

Crosley and Hunter, the well-known evangelists, are to begin a three weeks' campaign in Canning on Tuesday evening next.

Evolution in Trade Methods.

Everything in life is changing. Revolution and evolution seem to be going on everywhere. Scenes, methods, habits, tastes, and even principles, are radically changing. It is a new life, with new ways and new aspirations—not the least startling change is to be seen in business life. What would the rich old merchants of half a century ago say to the methods, expenses and fine surroundings of the business houses of the present day? They would rub their eyes in bewilderment, and tell many a story of their own days of simplicity and economy, and yet of great and honorable success. All business men, and especially the younger firms, should recognize the new state of affairs, and make a constant study of the changes and development that are taking place. Judgment and nerve are required in a higher degree than ever before. Business men must have clear brains and stout hearts. It must have constant watchfulness and energy. It must have regard not only for private interests, but the public welfare. The success and expansion of firms cannot now take place without the prosperity and growth of cities. The road to fortune in business is no longer the beaten track that can be followed from generation to generation of a family. Each season and each year is producing new elements and relations in the situation, in connection with human progress generally, and the wise and successful merchants will be those who join in the outward march with faith in themselves and confidence in the future.—Paper and Ink.

RYCKMAN'S

Kootenay Cure

St. John, N. B., July 24th, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—Being a great sufferer with rheumatism, I was induced by Mr. C. N. Deal to try your Kootenay Cure. Before taking it I could not walk, after taking half a bottle I was able to attend to my work. I am not thoroughly cured, but I am greatly improved. I make this statement purely on behalf of fellow-sufferers, that they may be benefited by using Ryckman's Kootenay Cure.

Yours truly,

D. Danlop.

Greenwich Items.

Many times at Port Williams station now-a-days. Large quantities of apples both from Cornwallis and Horton are being shipped from there. It is estimated that in Greenwich alone there are between five and six thousand barrels this year.

Mr. Enoch Neary has received an offer of $2000, cash, for his four-acre orchard. We do not know whether the offer will be accepted or not; but if the property should change hands, the mightily buildings now disfiguring the front would be replaced by others that would greatly improve the appearance of the street.

Miss Amelia Burpee, of Burton, N. B., is visiting her sister, Mrs. A. K. Forsyth. Mr. C. E. Forsyth's house is completed. The interior is especially attractive, the hall, parlor, dining-room and kitchen having a very fine hardwood finish.

Mr. Lorne Pundey is building a very neat and comfortable house on the Ridge. The view from there is one of the finest.

Mr. G. E. Bishop has a brood sow which dropped a litter of eighteen pigs on Sept. 3. Nine of these raised and were weighed on Oct. 3. They made an average of twenty lbs. each, the smallest weighing eighteen and a half lbs., the largest twenty two and three quarter lbs.

WARNING!

TO PIANO AND ORGAN PURCHASERS! THE great popularity of the "BELL" PIANOS and ORGANS has created much jealousy among certain Piano dealers.

Willis Piano and Organ Co. Any other advertiser, therefore, who may claim in any way the agency for the Bell Pianos, or Bell Organs, do so under false pretences, to attract attention to goods sold in opposition to those renowned instruments.

DO THE WORK AT HOME. Diamond Dyes Guarantee Success and Satisfaction.

Many people go to the city or town dye house when they have goods to be dyed. This means a loss of time and much unnecessary expense.

When buying dyes, avoid all imitation package dyes that your dealer may offer you. Take only the "Diamond," and you will be crowned with success.

A Real Necessity. The matter of building good roads has passed the state of mere agitation in some states, and the work of construction has been commenced and with satisfactory results.

At the good roads congress recently held in Atlanta the testimonial offered regarding the actual money profit to farms and other property along which good roads have been built, was astonishing.

Never Heard Of. A single instance in which Dodd's Kidney Pills Failed to Cure Kidney Disease.

MOUST FOREST (Special) Sept. 21.—The proprietor of the Queen Hotel of this town declares that he has every reason to believe, that any claim made by the people who are advertising and selling Dodd's Kidney Pills is true.

A Plea for the Beautiful. The beautiful has a theological value. It is one of the most conclusive proofs that God lives and reigns. It does not cost any more to put paint on properly than to put it on wrong, nor to put timbers together in a beautiful fashion rather than a homely fashion.

Every human being should do his share towards uplifting the masses of his fellowmen. "Wah, I've done my share—I ran an elevator seven years."

to our National treasurer, Mrs Helen M. Barker, The Women's Temple, Chicago. And may God deal with us as fast as we deal with our Armenian sisters and brothers and their little ones in this hour of their overwhelming calamity!"

High and Worthy Ends. These high and precious and holy gifts of God should be used for an end correspondingly high and worthy and holy.

Cherry—Mr told me to run here and ask you if you couldn't give me something for my head. Dr Blunt—You run home and tell your ma I wouldn't take it as a gift.

Minards Liniment Cures Colds, etc. Chawley Gastroika—My dearest Margaret, I love you tenderly, devotedly. Your smiles would shed—

There is something very human in the longing for love and remembrance. No soul, unless it is utterly friendless and solitary, is willing to pass out of life through the gate of forgetfulness.

When Eve had so many pleasures to occupy her time in the garden of Eden, how do you suppose the serpent managed to secure her attention?

Minards Liniment Cures Distemper. What this country needs to develop its business is confidence, said the local politician in the grocery store.

"Charles is a sixteen-to-one man," said Ethel to Mabel, speaking of her fiancee. "I don't take any interest in politics," replied Mabel.

Minards Liniment Cures Gargot in Cows. Ned—Why, I better saw a lovelier girl than Miss Atherton, and she seems to be very fond of you. What do you mean by saying that there are weighty objections to your marriage?

I have here, said the agent a little book that will show you how to be your own lawyer. If it would show me how to be somebody else's lawyer, said the man behind the desk in the long-run.

Do you go to school, little boy? Oh, yes, sir, I love to go to school. What do you study—reading, writing and arithmetic?

Little things are often the hardest things. It is comparatively easy to do a momentary deed of daring that will startle everybody; it is not so easy to do little deeds of quiet courage from day to day, unobserved by all, and uncheered by all.

A tradesman in Sunderland had a lad in his employ. The lad's mother was a widow in bad circumstances, consequently the lad was poorly clad.

The first Monday after this arrangement had been made the lad did not come to work as usual, and on his employer sending to enquire the reason, his mother said "the looked so respectable she was trying to get him a better job."

I was cured of terrible lamboago by MINARD'S LINIMENT. Rev. Wm. Brown. I was cured of a bad case of earache by MINARD'S LINIMENT. Mrs S. Kautback.

It is said that a certain well-known portrait painter has himself as great a reputation for joking as for taking excellent likenesses. One evening he was speaking of a beautiful young girl whose portrait he had just finished.

It is no wonder that rubbers, which are not the same shape as the foot, should be uncomfortable. It costs money to employ skilled pattern makers but the result is a satisfactory fit.

There will be a stock of best Crystal Fresh Hams, Sausages of Poultry, etc. etc. etc.

Scraps for Odd Moments.

Brown—Does your wife ever threaten to go home to her mother? Jones—No; that's the worst of it! Her mother boards with us.

Wheeler—My doctor advises me to give up smoking. I don't think I will do so. He—You don't? Wheeler—No, I think he's biased—he's a surgeon.

I'm the machine that can get a head of human beings, booted the gullotine. "Why do you sometimes take a hair out of my self, replied the buzz-saw, modestly.

Miss Watson—Didn't Mr Sark say to you as I entered the drawing-room last night, Clara, "Is that the beautiful Miss Watson? Clara—Yes, dear, with the accent on "that."

Cherry—Mr told me to run here and ask you if you couldn't give me something for my head. Dr Blunt—You run home and tell your ma I wouldn't take it as a gift.

A Useful Elephant. A few years ago, when Lord Dufferin was Viceroy of India, the Rajah of Holkar paid the Viceroy a visit. While he was there he saw Lord Dufferin take up some illustrated London papers which had just arrived by mail and cut them with an ivory paper knife.

Choose Their Associates. Two of my friends, both well-to-do men, met once to each other a day, each one child a son. One of the young men is a gentleman in everything that makes a true man, the other is a pedant, familiar with nearly every date in the catalogue, yet he was one of the noblest little boys I have ever known.

It is a Pleasure. The following letter from Mr Wm. Davidson, of No. 20 Oliver Street, Quebec, P. Q., is so very plain and full that it requires no explanatory remarks. Its object is to draw the attention of the afflicted to that fountain and source of life from which he received supplies of new health. He says:

Not Ashamed to Wash Dishes. In a recent sketch of Hawthorn by his daughter we are told that in his early married life he helped his wife, who was not strong, by doing the housework. "I washed the dishes, cleaned knives and cutlery, and did all the other things which are counted as a thing common and unclean to work with their hands, just in using the pen."

Educating Influence of Fairs. The farmer needs his vacation as much as the merchant or the preacher. Besides the gain in the way of rest, he will find many things which will help him to keep his eyes open. He will get suggestions about crops and cultivation and about different breeds of stock that he can never get by staying on his own farm, and no better time can be selected than by attending your county, district or state fairs.

Common Diseases and Indigestion. Dyspepsia and Indigestion are common diseases, but hard to cure with ordinary remedies. yield readily to Manley's Celery-Nerve Compound.
