The members on the government side supported the contention advanced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that it was not the appropriate time to extend the franchise to people of 18 years. At that time the Prime Minister made an interesting comment or two which I should like to quote. I find this on page 6279 of Hansard for July 14, 1960:

> I think it is one of those things that might very well be studied in detail by a committee at a subsequent session of parliament,—

He also said:

> In a subsequent session I will join with hon. members in giving the membership of the house an adequate opportunity to fully explore all the considerations relative to this question;

Now, I quoted those words, Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of a bill identical to this which was dealt with at the last session and debate upon which was entered on February 14, 1961. There were five other members representing the other two parties in the house, in addition to myself, who spoke on the bill. None of them objected to extending a franchise to people of the age of 18, although there was some slight disagreement expressed and some reluctance indicated about whether or not 1961 was the appropriate time to proceed with this measure. I do not intend, because I do not believe it really helps, to go into these specific objections which were raised. I feel they are relatively minor compared with the basic principle of the extension of the right to vote to people who are 18 years of age.

Some of the provinces, Mr. Speaker, have a voting age which is less than 21, notably my own province of British Columbia, which some time in 1954, I believe, extended the franchise to those 19 years of age. The adjacent province of Alberta also has a voting age of 19, while Saskatchewan has a voting age of 18. The bill which is before us now seeks to establish a voting age of 18. I suppose as between 18 or 19 one could make an equally effective argument, depending on which age one chose. I am not adamant that it must be 18 years of age, but the basic principle is that it should be lowered to take into account certain factors which exist at the moment and which have been developing in Canada, as in other countries, for some time.

In 1960 during the hearings of the committee on privileges and elections there was placed a tabulation on the record at pages 323 and 324, a tabulation prepared by the chief electoral officer from material contained in the Statesman's Year Book of 1959, indicating the number of countries which have voting ages which are less than 21 years. It also indicates that there are some countries which require that persons be older than 21 years of age before obtaining the right to vote. The tabulation extends from 18 years of age, as is the case in the province of Saskatchewan and the states of Georgia, Kentucky and Alaska, to 25 years of age as required in the Netherlands. However the majority of countries place the age at 21 years.

I do not intend to make specific reference to each country listed in the tabular form. That information is readily available and I am sure the Statesman's Year Book for the years subsequent to 1959 would bring that information up to date.

These are some of the reasons why I think we should extend the franchise to those aged 18 years. First, over the last few years—and this has been greatly intensified since the start of world war II—there has been a great change in the form of communications both within a country and between countries. This has been due to the advent of television and radio, and with the placement in other countries of representatives of news service agencies we find that normally on the day which various political events occur in other countries we know about them here. They come to our attention as adults, and persons who are 18 years of age also know about them.

Then too, during the last few years—and I hope this will continue—there have been more opportunities for people to acquire a higher education. There have been more opportunities to proceed further in school and in formal education than was the case 20 or 30 years ago. Also there is the other factor of the attraction to individuals to leave school in order to work in industry at fairly decent wages. There is the attraction for them to marry at a younger age and I believe all these factors tend to make our 18 year old people more mature and give them a better understanding of political and sociological matters than was the case a number of years ago.

Sometimes one hears the argument that a person aged 18 years is not mature enough to make a reasonable or mature decision with respect to voting and might be misled by a variety of factors, and thus not be able to make a mature judgment in so far as the party he or she should support is concerned. However, we sometimes find that age and maturity are not necessarily connected. I am sure most of us have run into individuals who are 25, 30, 35 or 40 years of age who have cast doubts on the maturity of individuals in those age groups. It is true, however, that if we talk about young people aged 9, 10 or 11 years then there is some validity to the argument about their ability to express a mature judgment on matters such as this.

That is why I said earlier that I am not particularly tied to the age of 18 but selected it arbitrarily, the same as the age of 21 was selected arbitrarily and is now a sort of arbitrary determination. The impact of greater educational opportunities, the participation by younger people in our economic life, their participation in the married state and in a variety of other things all bring them a better understanding of political and socio-economic matters. Therefore I believe they have a sufficiently sound ability to judge and vote. It would be a correct thing to recognize these factors and to recognize that here is a group of people which, to all intents and purposes in a general way is contributing to a large extent to our economy, to our tax structure, is concerned with activities in the House of Commons and participates in political matters to the extent that it is able to do so. The way to recognize the group is to extend it the right to vote in federal elections when its members reach the age of 18 years.

I believe this bill, if it receives second reading, should be referred to the committee on privileges and elections, as was indicated by the Prime Minister. Of a former occasion he indicated that and said he would support such a motion at a subsequent session. Apparently the last session was not the subsequent session to which he referred. Perhaps this is the one he means, and I would be glad to have it referred to the committee in order that an opportunity might be afforded to people who are interested in this matter to appear before the committee and express their views so that the committee can evaluate the question itself, can assess the body of public opinion that exists either in favour of or against it, and report the bill back to this house after it has been given careful consideration.

As I said earlier, the house was so agreeable to the bill which preceded this one, extending the franchise to people who heretofore had been denied the right to vote, that I would point out this bill does substantially the same thing except that it is not a geographic extension. It is an age extension and I hope the house will be agreeable to giving the measure its support.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, when we were examining the Canada Elections Act, I supported the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who, at the time, recommended that the voting age be reduced from 21 to 18.

I could add that the platform of the Liberal party provides for such a reduction in the age of voters.

However, I disagree slightly with the member for Skeena who said a while ago that the age of 21 had been chosen arbitrarily. That is incorrect. At the time, that age was adopted because 21 is the age when a person becomes legally of age and can act on his own and for himself.

The reason we are now recommending that the voting age be reduced to 18 is that young men of that age are liable to be enrolled for the defence of their country.

They risk their lives and yet they have no choice about it. They do not even have a word to say about decisions which could cause them to die prematurely.

Consequently, since they can be enrolled at the age of 18 for the defence of their country, they should have the right to decide on their own what they should do.

Some will say that the voting age for our force members is 18. That is true. Members of the active forces are allowed to vote at 18.

It is precisely because they can be enrolled and because, at present, only their elders can take definite decisions in that connection, that I feel they should have the right to vote. Since they can be the victims of such decisions, they should at least have a part in them.

This does not mean that everything will change.

Some may feel that young people are not mature enough to decide how to vote. I recall what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) used to say when the matter was brought up: "At the age of 18, being from a Conservative family, I was a Conservative; upon reaching 21, the age of reason, I became a Liberal".

But that is one case. I know that the majority of young people, today, have had much more schooling than those of 21 and over had 10, 15 or 25 years ago. Today's youth is better informed because of television and newspapers, which fill modern homes. Nowadays, the young people are much better prepared to play their part in the community at 18 than people of my generation were at that age.

Well, for all those reasons, we can support the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Skeena. I think the Liberals will be happy to support this bill and specially to send it to the committee on privileges and elections, so that those who have representations to make can put them before the committee and thus better inform the house.

(Text):

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I spoke on this bill a year ago and I was in favour of reducing the age limit for voting to 18. I believe that when I was 18 years old I was just as good a man as I am now, and I was a good Conservative.

In our country, where they work big machinery, a boy does not wait until he is 21 to run a tractor, a combine, a big disker or anything like that; he is up on them when he is 16 or 17, and when he is 18 he is a mature man. Many a time I have been by fields and seen a boy of 18 driving a big combine. They are raised for that.

We are living in a different world altogether to the world in which we were living when I was a kid. My father probably would not let me go in the barn when I was 18; he was afraid that I was just a big kid and I would get hurt. But now I can go anywhere. In the army I met numerous boys 18 years old and younger, and they certainly should have had the vote. They were just as good when action started as the fellow who was 21, and a lot better than the fellow who was 35 or 40, whose nerves had been hurt by his wife or something like that.

As I say, I am in favour of this age limit being reduced to 18. If young people are not smart then, they never will be smart. We get all kinds. We get many who should not have the vote—we know that—but we cannot make a distinction here or there.

I am going to end my little talk by saying I am in favour of people voting at the age of 18. I think they will do as well, and if a war comes along—and the clouds are loaded with that—a young man of 18 will be one of the first to be called up and he will have to say his piece.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have given a great deal of thought and consideration to the bill introduced by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and I am inclined to support it. I am going to spell out the reasons why I support it. One cannot help thinking that age 21 is an archaic age limit that was set in times gone by when it was thought that at 21 a person was of mature age and could make decisions. In our law of contract right now a person under 21 years of age can enter into a contract, which he or she can repudiate upon reaching maturity. They are considered minors in the eyes of the law until they are 21 years of age. Unless they are 21 they cannot enter into a contract of sale without there being the risk of their repudiating it upon reaching maturity. However, I believe that the right to vote cannot be put in the same category as the right to enter into a contract.

The age at which the right to vote is given varies in different countries. As the hon. member for Skeena has mentioned, in Holland it is 25 years of age. Apparently the Dutch feel that a person is not mature enough to make political decisions until he is 25 years old. In Denmark it is 23 years of age, in Turkey 22, and in Costa Rica 20, but it is 18 if the person is married or is a school teacher. Apparently in the eyes of those people marriage gives a person a certain maturity.

In many other phases of our life 18 is considered a mature age, and in this connection we cannot help but think of our marriage laws. In most of the provinces—I believe in all the provinces; I know it is the case in Manitoba—a female who is 18 years of age can marry without the consent of her parents. Marriage, apart from the fact that it is given a certain sanctity by the church, is a contract; a young man or woman enters into a contract to love, honour and obey and take the other partner for better or for worse, often for worse. Many marriages of young people have proven very successful; many have been more successful than the marriages of those of a more mature age. The marriage contract is a contract of which society approves. These young people take on the parental obligations of raising a family and they are considered mature enough to do this. A young man and a young woman are mature enough to renounce their freedom by joining with each other in a partnership and living together.

There is another profession where a person is considered mature at 18. I have in mind the teaching profession. We do not hesitate to engage a teacher, male or female, when he or she has reached the age of 18. We do not hesitate to entrust our children to their care. We trust them not only to educate our children but also to mould their characters. Our departments of education do not hesitate to grant them certificates whereby they are qualified to teach in our schools. The responsibility of a teacher is a great responsibility. If we adhered to the old, archaic idea that no one is mature before the age of 21, we would not trust these young men and women with the care of our children. But there are thousands of these young people teaching in our schools today and doing a mighty wonderful job at that, raising Canadians to become good and loyal citizens. Proper guidance from them supplements the education which the children receive from their parents.

I think of something else. Our young men and women graduate from universities at a considerably younger age nowadays than they did in my time. My daughter graduated when she was 19 and thousands of men and women graduate from universities at that age with honours and degrees. Could they be considered as people whose judgment is so immature that they cannot make up their minds what party to choose or what party to vote for? Are they not mature enough at that age to use correct judgment as to the various platforms or policies submitted by the political parties in this dominion of ours?

One is led to think that we are depriving these people of a right to express themselves by saying that regardless of intelligence and regardless of mental maturity the only yard stick shall be the age of 21. One of the speakers who preceded me mentioned military service. I am in complete agreement with what he said. If a young man is old enough to accept command or to give commands, to understand discipline or to understand the cause for which he fights in the defence of this country he is, I believe, mature enough to be granted a vote. I realize that as the law stands those who are serving in the armed forces have the vote. But in time of crisis 18 is the age at which we draft young men into the army. Eighteen is the age at which we accept them as volunteers. The age of 18 is however, according to our present law, the age at which a young man or woman cannot use good judgment in deciding on the issues of the day.

It is interesting to note that a number of South American countries have a lower voting age. That is not popular in Europe. As I have already said, some European countries such as Holland, hold on to the age of 25 as being the age at which a person can vote. But Bolivia, Venezuela and Mexico all permit people to vote at the age of 18.

Speakers who preceded me have mentioned the fact that there are three provinces in Canada which have lowered the voting age from 21. But taking it all in all there is another argument which I would advance in support of my contention. The young Progressive Conservatives and, I believe, the young Liberal associations have on many occasions considered resolutions to request their parties to lower the voting age. In the limited time I have had at my disposal I have not been able to find any record of resolutions in the past, but I know this is in the minds of these young people, and I think it is nothing but fair.

I know there are others who wish to express their opinions on the subject and therefore I am cutting my remarks short.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): In the idea of an earlier voting age I can find little flaw. The argument against it seems to follow two lines, first, that 18 year olds are erratic and in secret communion with far leftists or worse, and that though they are able to use logarithms, count down space missiles, have babies, make pills and fly jets they do not have the acumen, the perspective or the judgment to make a choice among political candidates—that is, unless they have already volunteered to be shot at, whereupon we give them the vote.

We allow these young people to go to jail in Canada but not to the polling booths. They cannot, it is said, make legal contracts but has anyone heard of the Department of National Revenue turning away an income tax return because it is signed by an 18 year old? In one democratic domain where the fires of freedom seem to us to burn as fiercely and gleam as brightly as they ever did, men heaved tea chests into the sea six long generations ago precisely in defence of this principle. "No taxation without representation", they said, and away went the tea chests.

It is said that Canada's 526,000 young men between the ages of 18 and 21 and her 511,000 young women between the ages of 18 and 21 are radical. Good. Anyone who means to make anything of life ought to be radical at some time. What finer, gayer, more wonderful time is there to be radical than when you are young? I believe that 99.9 per cent of the world's advancement has been brought about by people who would not conform because they could not conform.

What is a radical? Most people some of the time and some people all of the time define a radical as a man or woman who does not agree with them. Suppose we use softening words, that instead of radicalism we speak of youth's erraticism, instability, wobbling, immaturity? Who can say that immaturity automatically ceases and maturity begins on one's twenty first birthday?

In between the nuclear tests what are the marks of 1962's adolescents? No trimming and no trembling; devoid of timidity and baseness; tremendous when they are right and even more tremendous when they are wrong, as they occasionally are, not yet having reached the safety first or guaranteed existence; still free from fear and gain—those old perverters of mankind.

In the United States it is said that every young American is born a Democrat and stays that way until he acquires a mortgage, whereupon he becomes a Republican. Nothing gives a sense of responsibility like being made responsible. Eighteen year olds marry, have babies, pay taxes, go into the army, share in the costs of government, share in the duties of the state, but do not share in the rights so long as they are denied the vote.

Mr. Speaker, the prosecution rests.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to participate in previous debates on this and similar bills both in the house and in the privileges and elections committee when this question came under scrutiny at the time when that committee reviewed, and in my opinion greatly improved, the Canada Elections Act a few years ago. I am not going to take up much of the time of the house today because there are several other hon. members who wish to record their views and who have been deprived of an opportunity in the past.

It seems to me that the usefulness and value of the discussions during the private members hour has been illustrated in an important way. Following my remarks and submissions in previous debates, my contributions being far less eloquent than those of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat although generally along the same lines advanced by the hon. member in his arguments today, I received a number of phone calls and letters and had a number of discussions.

Having supported the principle of this bill, as I said, I was confronted by an argument which I found very difficult to refute. If this bill does go to the committee I hope the single point I am about to raise will come under careful scrutiny. I also hope that hon. gentlemen who follow me in this debate will address themselves to this question.

I have reference to the incidence of automobile accidents and the risk attached to the driver of a car under age 21, and the reflection of that risk among that age group not only in the accident rate but in the insurance rates that are charged. While this does not support the proposition it is a factor in the argument which has to be confronted and answered.

I have not had sufficient time to pursue this matter as I would like to, but I am given to understand that the number of accidents and the corresponding insurance rate is much higher at the age which the hon. gentleman who is sponsoring this bill proposes to establish as the voting age.

I am reluctant to go beyond that. I will only repeat that this argument has been raised and I have not really been able to effectively refute it. I feel that consideration should be given to it in any future action taken along these lines.

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the bill this afternoon I realize, as one who is over age 21, that we who are addressing ourselves to this question do not wish to give the impression that we are speaking of the "haves" as opposed to the "have nots". I must say that when I was considerably younger I would have viewed this bill with a great deal more enthusiasm than I do today.

In the last 25 years or so we have seen agitation for this change in the voting age. Some of the provinces—and only the provinces—have acceded to the request to make changes allowing people under age 21 to vote. It might be instructive to inquire into the motives of those provincial administrations that have made this change. I think we should get to the bottom of this. One of the points we must consider in determining whether a person should have a right to vote is that this is a right, a privilege. I think all hon. members will agree that a right implies a responsibility. There is no such thing as a right without a corresponding duty or responsibility. If there is a right to vote there must be the responsibility of the exercise of that right.

In certain parts of Canada in certain types of elections there is a notorious degree of disinterest on the part of the electorate. The voting age in the province of Alberta has been lowered to 19. It would be most illuminating to know just what proportion of the age group between 19 and 20 exercised in the provincial elections the right that was given them as a great boon and bounty. I would put it to hon. members of this house, that from my observation they were somewhat less active in exercising their right than were those of a more mature age. We also know that in municipalities voting is still limited to those 21 and over. I stand to be corrected if necessary in what I am about to say. I do not know whether a property owner under the age of 21 would have the right to vote as a burgess, but I would be of the opinion that the overriding qualification of the age of 21 would apply.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) made one point with which I agree fully, that age does not equal maturity. Certainly we will agree with that because we know there are some people who at the age of 16 are quite as mature in their approach to affairs of a public nature as their neighbours who may be double that age. There is an old adage that there is no fool quite like an old fool. Yet one must arrive at a dividing line somewhere. What is it going to be? Is it to be the yardstick of age?

I will be the first to admit that this yardstick may not be the most perfect, but before we seek to make a change I suggest that we must find a better yardstick and at the same time one that must be practical. It might be suggested that an intelligence test might be a better yardstick for voting qualification or possibly a test as to awareness of public affairs. But just how would you administer such a test so as to qualify people?

I thought the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) developed an argument which I cannot let pass. He stated that because young men and women may be inducted into the armed services at the age of 18 they should have the right to decide whether they should be brought into the armed services. We know that once they have entered military service they are entitled to vote, but I submit that this is a concession to or derogation from the yardstick of age that we have adopted in view of the fact of military service. It is not a concession to the reasoning that the median age should be 21.

To get back to the argument of the hon. member for Hull, I think we could say quite easily that as parents we make very serious decisions which affect our teenage children. Sometimes they object; but is it ever suggested by anyone of serious mind that such decisions within the family should be based on a majority vote, including the vote of teenagers? I think we would have a rather difficult time. I know some of them might like it but we do not accept it as a normal course of conduct.

I think we have to come back to the overriding principle that within practical limits we are trying to determine what shall be the median age. As I indicated before, this may not be the most perfect way, but I submit to hon. members that in advocating a change it must be a change for the better, and I wonder whether one can say that a change in the voting age would bring a greater awareness of public affairs and that as a result we would get better administration. I seriously question that.

There was something said about young people today being much more aware of public affairs than young people were a generation ago. I submit that is entirely a matter of opinion. I have attended many functions in some of our schools. I have heard young people talk on matters of everyday life and I do not think this generation is any better in that regard than its predecessor or those who went before. They are still interested in those things which, frankly, do not come within the scope of public affairs on which they would vote.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I adopt the attitude that we must have a yardstick. In the light of experience the yardstick of 21 years of age has proved to be reasonably good. It certainly ties with the legal concept of majority, and unless one can find cogent reasons that will give us definite advantages I do not believe we should change the voting age. I am sorry, but at the moment I do not think I can support the bill.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, no one is more conscious of the fact than I am that in speaking against the bill I am laying myself open to the certain criticism that, as an old man, I want to maintain the status quo. Those of advanced years are always open to that accusation and I face it in advance.

I should like to use the words that were used by the hon. member who just took his seat because he expressed what is in my mind. The mover of the bill referred to the age of 21 as arbitrary. I was on the point of asking him if he thought that was an entirely fair statement having regard to the fact that it is presumably in line with the age of 21 being the age of legal liability and to that extent it is not wholly arbitrary. It is a basis and, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said, there should be cogent reasons for changing it. As it has been accepted for years and we have got used to this state of affairs, I think it is reasonable that we should ask that there should be cogent reasons for making a change.

The only member who seemed to me to come anywhere near giving cogent reasons was the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Morris). He had a very tidy, neat and well worked out argument that dovetailed quite well but I rather thought that in his final words his argument had an American flavour. The thing that is difficult to face is the fact that we do take men in the army at 18 but to some extent at any rate their case is covered by legislation. While there is no one who has better reason to know what those between the ages of 18 and 21 can do in wartime, nevertheless it seems to me that the tests which should apply are quite different. Gallant fellows from 18 to 21 do things that nobody else could do and do them partly because they do not bother with questions of judgment. They do not look before and after. They have a headlong attitude toward life which has been very valuable to this country but which would perhaps not contribute to the exercise of balanced judgment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. I see it is six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business will be for Monday and Tuesday, if the acting house leader can so indicate?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to indicate to the house that on Monday and Tuesday it is proposed to deal with legislation. Looking at today's order paper, the first matter with which we will deal will be No. 3, that is an act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. Then, having concluded that, we will proceed with No. 4 on today's order paper, and then having concluded that we will proceed with No. 5 on today's order paper. Having concluded that we will proceed with No. 9 on today's order paper. I am speaking now, Mr. Speaker, in anticipation of dealing with these matters both on Monday and Tuesday because of the proposal to deal with legislation on both days. These matters will be dealt with, so far as I know now, subject to any unexpected change in the order in which I have called them.

Then, if time permits, we may deal with No. 10 on today's order paper, a resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. We also may deal or will deal with No. 1 on today's order paper, the house in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-67, in the name of the Minister of Transport. I do not want to state definitely to the house that we will deal with the latter two in the order in which I have given them. Then, if the house concludes consideration of these matters we also may deal, without saying this will be the order after having dealt with the first four items, No. 2 on today's order paper, Bill No. C-38 in the name of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask if it is the intention to revert to either supplementary estimates or the main estimates on Wednesday?

Mr. Nowlan: I would not want to give a definite commitment to that effect at the moment, but I believe we will be dealing with estimates after Tuesday and go on with either supplementary or main estimates or both during the rest of the week.

It being four minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 5, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—EDITORIAL CHANGE IN REPORT OF DEBATES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on a question of privilege. This is the first time I have been in the house since the Minister of Veterans Affairs drew attention to some words of mine in Hansard. What seemed to offend the hon. gentleman was that quotation marks were put around those words. He seemed to be suggesting that I was responsible for putting the quotation marks there. I really do not know whether or not I did, sir—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but one thing I do know is that if they are there, they should be there because that was a quotation, and the last thing I would wish to do would be to misappropriate those unforgettable words of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Misinterpreted words.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was no interpretation at all; there were just the words.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No one will suffer.

Mr. Pickersgill: No one will suffer except the Prime Minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF SUMMARY REPORTS OF CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house may I lay on the table in English and in French the agreed summary reports of the two committees which were approved at the final special session on Friday of the sixth meeting of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Last year the report of the committee to parliament was tabled, and it was then agreed that the report be published as an appendix to Hansard. These are not the final reports but rather the press reports which came out of the meeting. If the house would like to have these documents printed—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed that these reports be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

[Editor's note: For text of documents referred to above, see appendix.]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RECIPIENTS OF ALLOWANCES TO RETAIN ADJUSTED OLD AGE PENSIONS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday I reviewed briefly the background of the relationship between war veterans allowances and payments of old age security pension. I explained that the War Veterans Allowance Act has always been based on a means test, and that for the purpose of this means test old age security pension has been considered as income ever since the Old Age Security Act was approved by parliament. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have been given by the departmental officials a copy of the notice which went out in 1952, which shows that at that time the amounts paid under the Old Age Security Act were to be computed as part of the income of recipients of war veterans allowance.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. gentleman is doing now is something distinct from an announcement of government policy. I agree that this would be the appropriate time at which to make such an announcement, but the minister is now trying to justify something which he might well have said in the course of debate on another occasion. He is simply telling us now what has happened in the past, and what he is saying is debatable, contrary to the privilege open to a minister of the crown under the present circumstance.

Mr. Churchill: This is an outrageous interference with a statement of government policy, and is typical of the Liberal party which denies freedom of speech to people in parliament.

Mr. Speaker: In an announcement of policy it is appropriate to make factual statements. It would not be appropriate to present a case on a controversial matter, because that would make it impossible for comment to be limited in the same way and would give rise to debate. I trust the minister will proceed with his statement in recognition of that custom and not introduce arguments on controversial matters.

Mr. Churchill: I hope I shall have the privilege of continuing the statement of policy without interruption.

An hon. Member: What is the policy?

Mr. Churchill: In spite of this earlier practice, the government has given further consideration to this problem and has come to the conclusion that war veterans allowance recipients and their spouses who have reached the age of 70 years should receive an additional benefit from the latest adjustment in the old age security rate.

I am pleased to inform the house that following my recommendation the government has approved a policy of considering as exempt income, for the purposes of the War Veterans Allowance Act, $10 per month received by virtue of the Old Age Security Act by a recipient of war veterans allowances or his spouse, or $20 per month if both are in receipt of an old age security pension.

This amendment to the W.V.A. regulations will be effective February 1, 1962.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): It is gratifying to learn from the minister that the position taken by the opposition in this matter and the arguments advanced in support of that position have had some effect and that, therefore, the government of the day has decided to change its policy in this matter.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Members of this group are delighted with the effect they have had on government policy in this respect. This question was raised any number of times, on three occasions by the hon. member for Vancouver East and also, I say with all modesty, by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Now I want to ask a question.

Some hon. Members: No questions.

Mr. Herridge: Excuse me; we are a bit ahead of ourselves. We are delighted with this announcement, and will continue to work for veterans in this direction.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs, in view of the announcement he made earlier regarding the regulations being changed concerning the veterans whether he could tell us whether the same consideration is being given to the people who come under the extensions of the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act which were passed at the same time.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Those two acts do not come under my supervision.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare could indicate whether the same consideration that was given to the veterans has been given to disabled persons and the blind.

Mr. Churchill: I shall take that question as notice.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*REMOVAL OF TOLLS, VICTORIA AND JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGES

Question No. 193—Mr. Valade:

Have requests for information, other than oral questions in the house, or representations concerning the removing of tolls on the Victoria and Jacques Cartier bridges, been received by the Minister of Transport; and, if so, from whom, and what was their nature?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question consists of a long list of municipalities. Perhaps the house would agree that it be printed in Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: The minister indicates that there is a long list. Would it be a page or more?

Mr. Balcer: It is a list consisting of approximately 20 names.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this list be printed as part of the answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The list referred to above is as follows:]

Representations suggesting the removal of tolls on the Victoria and Jacques Cartier bridges have been received from the following: cite de Longueuil; town of Chambly; corporation du village de St. Hilaire, comte de Rouville corporation du village de rougemont, comte de Rouville; corporation du village de McMasterville, comte de Vercheres; Corporation de la paroisse de St. Michel de Rougemont; ville de St. Hubert, comte de Chambly; town of Brossard, comte de Laprairie; la cite de Saint-Jean; ville de Preville; Ste. Famille de Boucherville; Ville de Fort Chambly; ville de Marieville; cite de Lafleche; Sorel; cite de Jacques Cartier; ville de Boucherville; St. Basile le Grand; village de Richelieu; L'Association du Camionnage du Quebec Inc.

*AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 207—Mr. Michaud:

1. Have moneys been appropriated for the purchase of land and/or land clearance for an airport at or near Dalhousie or Campbellton, New Brunswick; and, if so, in what amounts?
2. Have moneys been appropriated for the construction of runways, road diversion, and ramps for proposed construction of an airport at or near Dalhousie or Campbellton, New Brunswick; and, if so, in what amounts?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the two parts of this question are as follows:

1 and 2. No, but a project near Dalhousie has been receiving departmental study and an early decision is expected.

*ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY ACCIDENTS, 1961

Question No. 211—Mr. Fisher:

1. Were there fewer accidents to shipping in the St. Lawrence seaway during 1961 than in the previous years; and, if so, can this drop be attributed to different or better pilotage arrangements or better piloting?
2. Has Captain F. S. Slocombe of the Department of Transport or Captain A. T. Meschter of the great lakes pilotage administration made any comments upon this accident factor?
3. Does such a drop lead the Department of Transport officials to expect a drop in insurance rates on shipping in the seaway?
4. Does the department intend to make any representations to the underwriters adjustment bureau with regard to this subject?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the four parts of this question are as follows:

1. There has been a steady decline in virtually all types of accidents to shipping in the St. Lawrence seaway since it was opened in 1959. Many factors may have been involved in this improvement and the department cannot express an opinion as the prime cause.

2. Captain F. S. Slocombe of the Department of Transport gave a brief summary of the principal figures illustrating the decline in accidents before a joint meeting of the dominion marine association and the lake carriers association at Dearborn, Michigan, on January 17, 1962. He made no comment on this information. Captain A. T. Meschter is an employee of the government of the United States and not of the government of Canada.

3. Marine insurance is a matter for the shipping industry and the marine underwriters.

4. No.

*PUBLIC BUILDING, EDMUNDSTON, N.B.

Question No. 220—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Is it the intention of the federal government to proceed with the construction of a public building at Edmundston, New Brunswick, during 1962; and, if so, has the Department of Public Works purchased the land for the proposed building?
2. What is the location of this land, from whom was it purchased, and at what price?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the two parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes; no.
2. Not applicable.

*VOLUME II, STATUTES OF CANADA 1960-61

Question No. 221—Mr. Howard:

How many copies of volume II of the statutes of Canada for 1960-61 were printed in (a) English (b) French, and what was the total cost of such work?

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, the reply is as follows:

(b) 29; at a total cost of $3,540.71.

*EXPORT PERMIT APPLICATIONS REJECTED, TRANSSHIPMENT OF GOODS TO CUBA

Question No. 223—Mr. McIlraith:

Were any applications for export permits rejected in 1961 for the shipment to Cuba through Canada of goods from other countries; and, if so, how many, and what other countries were involved?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes.
2. 44.
3. United States of America.

*EXPORT PERMIT APPLICATIONS APPROVED, TRANSSHIPMENT OF GOODS TO CUBA

Question No. 224—Mr. McIlraith:

Were any applications for export permits approved in 1961 for the shipment to Cuba through Canada of goods from other countries; and, if so, how many, and what other countries were involved?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes.
2. 162.
3. Belgium, Brazil, Chile, Cuba (returned goods), Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Federal Republic of Germany, India, Italy, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, United Kingdom, West Africa, United States of America.

FUME CONDITIONS, SAINT JOHN HARBOUR, N.B.

Question No. 225—Mr. Herridge:

Have any complaints been received concerning fume conditions existing during the winter port season months in the Pugsley terminals sheds on the east side of the harbour of Saint John, N.B.; and, if so (a) what was the nature of the complaints (b) who made them, and when (c) what answers have been given (d) what remedial action, if any, has been taken?

Answer by: Mr. Balcer:

Mr. Speaker, the answers to the four parts of this question, the national harbours board informs, are as follows:

Questions

(a) Complaints were received against air contamination of Pugsley terminal sheds by the operation of gasoline and diesel-powered fork-lift trucks and by the idling of highway transports during delivery and collection of cargo.

(b) the complaints were made by officers of labour unions originally through the provincial and federal departments of health and received by the national harbours board in Ottawa on February 23, 1961.

(c) Following a survey by the occupational health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare during the period March 21-24, 1961, and receipt of their report dated April 14, 1961, the port manager at Saint John advised all companies responsible for shed operations that the board would instal a ventilating system in the offices, but that as the board had no responsibility for shed operations the operators themselves should inform all their employees of the inherent dangers so that they could take necessary precautions when operating motor equipment in the sheds.

(d) Ventilation of the offices has been completed; operators of trucks and other equipment are instructed not to idle their equipment in the sheds; tests are being made to determine the level of contamination at various times during this winter, and following such tests a further appraisal of the situation will be made.

*BANK OF CANADA CURRENCY SIGNATURES

Question No. 230—Mr. Howard:

1. What amount of currency, by denomination, bearing the signature of J. E. Coyne as governor of the Bank of Canada, is on hand at the Bank of Canada?
2. When is it expected that currency will be distributed bearing the signature of Louis Rasminsky as governor of the Bank of Canada?

[Later:]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I have the answer now to question No. 230, if it is the wish of the house to revert to it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the answer to question 230 may be tabled now?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is an oral question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but it contains a number of figures and it might be placed on the record of Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

[Mr. Balcer.]

1. Denomination	Millions of notes
$1	44.3
$2	29.8
$5	34.9
$20	23.0
$50	5.5
$1000	.039

2. The supply available, at normal usage based on previous years' experience, is approximately sufficient to last for an additional:

$1	6 months
$2	10 "
$5	1 year
$10	1⅔ years
$50	9 "
$1000	17 "

*MICHAEL WARDELL, CANADA COUNCIL APPOINTMENT

Question No. 233—Mr. Dumas:

Was Michael Wardell (recently appointed to the Canada council) (a) born in Canada (b) educated in Canada; and, if not, how many years, if any, has he lived in Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is that Mr. Michael Wardell was not born in Canada. He was educated at Eton and came to stay in Canada in 1950.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON PUBLICATIONS—COST

Question No. 236—Mr. Herridge:

What was the total cost to the crown of the royal commission on publications?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

The answer is $126,236.63.

*PLEASANT BAY, N.S.—HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS

Question No. 239—Mr. Bourget:

Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to undertake harbour improvements at Pleasant bay, Inverness county, N.S., this coming summer; and, if so, what is the extent of these improvements?

Mr. Walker: Yes. An extension to the skidway—this is not political—is being planned.

*LAND EXPROPRIATION, SAINT JOHN, N.B. URBAN RENEWAL

Question No. 240—Mr. Dumas:

Have any representations been received by the government alleging injustice in the expropriation of land for the east end urban renewal in the city of Saint John, N.B.; and, if so, what is the specific allegation, and what reply or action has been taken by the government?

Mr. Walker: I have received several telegrams and letters from associations representing a number of property owners in Saint John, New Brunswick, concerning the expropriation of an urban renewal area by the city. I have replied stating that their representations should be submitted to the provincial and municipal authorities, as the matter is one which falls within their jurisdiction.

*FRENCH CANADIAN PERSONNEL, GOVERNOR GENERAL'S FOOT GUARDS

Question No. 241—Mr. Pitman:

Is there any truth in the allegation that the Governor General's Foot Guards traditionally and presently confine French Canadians to the level of other ranks; and, if so, what are the reasons?

(Translation):

Mr. Chambers: Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no truth in that assumption. On the contrary, that battalion is proud of having French speaking Canadians among its officers, n.c.o.'s and other ranks. It is to be regretted that the hon. member put such a question on the order paper without first having examined the facts. Had he done so, he would not have inconvenienced this most distinguished unit.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

*LOANS AND GIFTS TO RUSSIA, WORLD WAR II

Question No. 217—Mr. Pigeon:

What is the aggregate of loans or gifts, by way of money or arms, made to Soviet Russia by the Canadian government during the last world war?

MANUFACTURE OF LIFT TRUCKS IN CANADA

Question No. 227—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Did the Department of National Revenue, customs and excise, have any information that gas or gasoline powered lift trucks, having a maximum lifting capacity (as now rated by the department) of 4,000 pounds at a load centre of 24 inches from the face of the forks, were made in Canada in the calendar years 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959 prior to the budget of that year?

2. If so, in which of these years were such lift trucks made in Canada, by whom were they made, and by what model designations were they identified?

*INFORMATION DIVISION PERSONNEL, PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 242—Mr. Pitman:

1. How many are employed in the information divisions of all the government departments?

2. How many were employed in the existing information divisions in 1957?

3. What is the total payroll of these information divisions?

Orders for Returns

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING

Question No. 243—Mr. Pitman:

1. On what date did the federal government reach agreement with each of the provinces in regard to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act passed at the last session of this parliament?

2. How many technical institutions designed to provide facilities for those who have left the regular school system have been approved for federal grants under this legislation?

3. What are the names of these institutions, the cost of each, the federal share of the cost, and the estimated enrolment of these institutions?

4. How many vocational teachers, instructors, supervisors, and administrators were trained in each of the provinces under provisions of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

LEGAL ADVISERS, C.M.H.C., PETERBOROUGH

Question No. 244—Mr. Pitman:

1. What are the names and addresses of all legal advisers to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the electoral district of Peterborough in each of the years 1953 to 1961?

2. What were the fees accorded to each of these advisers in the years 1953-61?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS ON JOINT CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government proposes to enter with the United States into the discussions referred to by the United States secretary of state last week for the joint control nuclear weapons for Canadian armed forces.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As I said last week, Mr. Speaker, discussions have taken place from time to time. There is no present intention to follow the course suggested by the hon. member in his question.

Mr. Pearson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not suggest any course. I merely asked the Prime Minister a question and made no suggestion for any course at all. The Prime Minister's inference was entirely unwarranted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was just trying to help the hon. gentleman out.

NATO—USE OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In the absence of a bilateral agreement with the United States of America, is it possible for Canadian forces in NATO to acquire and use nuclear warheads for the weapons they already have which have been constructed for use with nuclear warheads?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the matter of nuclear warheads was dealt with pretty fully throughout last week by the Prime Minister, and I do not think I have anything further to add at the moment.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder whether the minister would mind just answering the question. Is it possible for Canadian forces in Europe to acquire nuclear warheads without a bilateral agreement with the United States?

[Later:]

Mr. Hellyer: I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has there been any discussion in NATO concerning the possibility of the United States supplying its NATO allies with a new mobile medium range rocket specifically designed to fit NATO's defence needs in western Europe?

Mr. Harkness: I have some indication in the newspapers of such a discussion or proposal having been made, but as yet I have received no official confirmation from our officials at NATO headquarters.

ARCTIC ISLANDS—REPORTED SELECTION OF LANDING STRIPS BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Laurier referred to a recent news report to the effect that the United States had picked out some 50 emergency landing strips in the Canadian Arctic islands for military and civilian planes. He asked if the statement was factual and whether there were any conditions governing the use of these fields, and I told him I would get a report. The answer is as follows.

The report apparently referred to a United States study entitled "Terrain Analysis of Ice Free Land sites in Arctic Canada" dated February, 1961. As part of the United States arctic research program a study was performed during 1960-61 with the assistance of Canadian Aero Service Limited of Ottawa. The major purpose of this project was the identification, location and preliminary terrain analysis of the most promising ice free natural landing sites within the Canadian Arctic, north of the 65th parallel. The study was based entirely on an examination of aerial photographs taken by the R.C.A.F. and readily available to the general public through the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. It indicated that there are some 50 sites within the area where landing strips could readily be developed.

The results of the study have been made available to the Canadian government departments concerned, and through the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to interested commercial companies. To date there are no plans for the development or utilization of these possible landing strips.

TRADE

REPORTED CRITICISM OF CANADIAN POLICY BY U.S. SENATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of press reports that United States Senator Wayne Morse on Saturday strongly criticized Canada's trade with communist countries and indicated that he wished strong U.S. government pressure to be brought to bear on Canada to effect a change in our policies, will the Prime Minister assure the house and the country that the Canadian government has no intention whatsoever of meekly reversing policies which have the support of the majority of the Canadian people?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Prime Minister considers it appropriate to answer the question I would not offer any objection. However, may I make this observation to the hon. member. The question about Canada's policy with respect to trade with Cuba has been asked several times this session and answers have been given. It would not seem to me to be appropriate to ask questions again every time some foreign politician or even a United States senator makes some comment on the matter.

Mr. Herridge: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, may I submit that this was a rather unusual statement over the week end. We wondered whether the government had been shaken.

Mr. Speaker: What I have said is in the interest of keeping this period of our business within bounds. If I accepted a new question every time a critical remark is made, it would be difficult to achieve this objective. However, I do not wish to limit an hon. member with respect to a matter which he considers to be urgent. I do not object to the question being answered if the Prime Minister desires to. I would simply point out that the matter was dealt with a short time ago.

SHIPPING

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport, notice of which I have sent him. Has the government come to any decision on the request made by the Canadian brotherhood of railway transport and general workers to the minister with respect to the re-establishment of a Canadian merchant marine, as contained in their annual brief to the minister?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in their brief the brotherhood asked for the re-establishment of a Canadian merchant marine of the same type as the Canadian National Steamships, Canada-West Indies Steamship Corporation, or Park Steamships. The only answer I can give is that there has been no decision to change the policy of the government, and if and when a decision is taken in this matter it will be announced in due course.

NOVA SCOTIA—LEAKAGE OF OIL FROM GROUNDED FREIGHTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg asked a question concerning pollution from bunker oil on board the S.S. Suerte, aground near Three Fathom harbour. Many inquiries have also been made by and discussions held with the two members for Halifax on this matter, and I should like to make a report to the house.

An official of my department has made several visits to the vessel, accompanied by salvage officials. Bunker oil must be heated before it can be pumped and the flooding of the engine room has prevented this being done. I am also advised that the surrounding waters are so shallow and dangerous that other vessels of sufficient size to provide heat and power could not come alongside.

The department has, however, just been advised that a contract to salvage has been arranged by the owners of the ship, who have been notified that in the meantime and during salvage operations every precaution must be taken to prevent or minimize the escape of oil. It is expected that an attempt to move the vessel will be made shortly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government decided to remove tolls on the Welland ship canal?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I received a delegation from the Welland ship canal toll abolition committee, and the hon. member was also present. The group that came to see me discussed with me various factors that should bring about the abolition of these tolls. The matter is under consideration, and if and when a decision is taken it will be announced in the proper fashion.

CHAMPLAIN WATERWAY—REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of some of the statements made during the discussions of the Canadian-American interparliamentary committee to the effect that thus far no official reference of the question of the Champlain waterway cut-off had been made to the international joint commission by Canada, I ask the Prime Minister if the government of Canada has referred this subject, as I understood it did some weeks ago, to the international joint commission.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the house had better await the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him who will be representing Canada at the disarmament conference in Geneva.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): While I have not seen the text of the letter from Mr. Khrushchev to the President of the United States, I understand that he suggested that the Geneva conference should be preceded by a meeting of the foreign ministers of the United States, United Kingdom and the Soviet union, and that the conference as a whole should begin at the foreign ministers' level. That being so, the head of the Canadian delegation will be the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

PUBLIC WORKS

NAMING OF NEW DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In view of public interest and concern I wish to direct this question to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. First, would he explain to the house the news reports concerning his titillating mistake with respect to the Tilleys, which has some of us in a tizzy. Second, does this represent indirect notice of the government's intention to re-introduce titles in Canada?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Whether it was a titulating mistake or a titivating mistake, it certainly made one man happy for a day. He was king for a day. It was a great pity that when the name "Sir Leonard Tilley" was to be given to this building of the defence research board, our department did not do more research before asking the wrong man, but I think justice has been done under the circumstances and all parties are happy with the outcome.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MCILRAITH—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I desire to raise a matter of privilege affecting the rights of private members on the question hour, with particular reference to written question No. 70 on today's order paper. It will be noticed that that question is very clear in its form, is very short, and asks a simple question of fact. It has been permitted to stand on the order paper day after day as questions have been called. It will be noted also that on February 28, as appears at page 1344 of Hansard, the Prime Minister was asked a question on the same subject by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, and in the answer given to that question it became quite clear that the information available to answer No. 70 on the order paper was in his possession.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member has any precedent for raising his question of privilege regarding hon. members of the house, dealing with delay, reluctance, refusal, or whatever it may be, to answer a question.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. McIlraith: Speaking to the point of order, as I understand the matter I have no such right to raise a matter of privilege on any delay in answering questions, but I have a right as a private member if the Prime Minister, in his capacity as Prime Minister, has information available and provides it for one hon. member and not for another. That affects the right of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I would doubt if the hon. member could cite a precedent for any statement of that kind. When the refusal to answer questions does not raise a question of privilege, then surely there is no matter of privilege involved in what the hon. member says. If an answer were given outside of the house to a question which was not answered in the house, that might raise the question of the rights of the house or of hon. members. It seems to me that the fact which has been stated might give the hon. member scope for argument, but not the basis for a point of privilege.

Mr. McIlraith: The only point of privilege that can arise is that in the House of Commons I had assumed it was rather elementary that all private members have equal rights, and that there cannot be different treatment accorded to different members on public business; and that the test as to whether or not information is given to the house cannot be based on which hon. member asked the question. That is the only point of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member has not established any breach of the rights of hon. members.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That last statement cannot go unchallenged. Certainly private members have equal rights. The question I answered had to do with payments made during the month of February and whether there were payments to be made on account during the subsequent months. The written question by the hon. member for Ottawa West has to do with the date of an agreement, how many individual contracts have been signed, and what is the date of each. The general principle as to the rights of private members being equal is accepted and always has been.

Mr. McIlraith: Answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure the hon. member is just raising the question in order to make himself heard.

Mr. McIlraith: And to call attention to the delay.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

C. M. DRURY—APPOINTMENTS AND DECORATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): May I ask the Secretary of State when he will be able to reply to question No. 72, which was made an order for return on January 31 last.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): I shall make inquiries.

(Translation):

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—FEDERAL REPRESENTATION IN LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In connection with the dispute at Montreal concerning the control over taxi service at Dorval's international airport to show that the contract awarded by the federal government infringes upon property and civil rights, could the minister tell the house if the government is represented in any way in this litigation and, if not, has the minister any comments to make in that connection?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this matter is presently before the courts and as such is sub judice. Consequently, it would not be proper for me to express an opinion one way or the other.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the government represented in any way in that litigation?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT LOANS

The house resumed, from Thursday, February 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-49, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, when the house was debating this resolution some time ago I traced the history of this legislation and tried to indicate that this was one of the four great measures brought forward by this government a year ago last fall as the four corners of the great edifice against unemployment, along with the Vocational Training Act, the amendments to the National Housing Act, and there was one other piece of legislation that went along with those whereby unemployment was to be combated.

This government came into power, at least in part, on its promise to help the small businessman, and it set up a small business department in the Department of Trade and Commerce. The only thing about this department is that it remained small, and I cannot really see that it has helped the small businessman very much. The first year it appeared in the estimates with a grant of some $30,000. Last year it received nothing. I looked in vain this year in the estimates—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must realize that is quite wrong. The appropriation for the small business loans branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce is there in the estimates. It is included in a larger item now. This was discussed on the estimates in the last session.

Mr. Pitman: What the minister is really saying is that it has been absorbed and has now appeared as a part of another section, but I think we can say that this department has made no real, significant change in the way this government has dealt with the small businessman since the last election.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a silly statement; it is not true.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is true.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is untrue.

Mr. Pitman: Supposedly this measure for loans to the small businessman was to provide a great pool of some $300 million government guaranteed, and strangely enough the small businessmen across this nation refused to dip into this pool except to the extent of some $27 million.

I am sure hon. members on the other side of the house realize that the availability of capital is the most important aspect of taking part in business today.

A few days ago I was reading a little book by two men called Adler and Kelso. They were the authors of a book which caused quite a furore sometime ago entitled "The Capitalist Manifesto". This new little book is called "The New Capitalists". I think it should be read by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house who are going to fight the next election on the basis of free enterprise and maintaining our capitalist system. These authors say that our system is going down, and the main problem is that the large capitalist can finance his day to day activities by acquiring more capital, in comparison with the man who has to go into the open market to get it. The advantage is always with the large corporation to the disadvantage of the small business. To put it bluntly, those who have will get more, and those who have not will get less.

Of course as time goes by capital is going to be more important than labour. The importance of labour as compared with capital is declining year by year. These authors look ahead for many years and see a situation whereby the capital of the nation will be controlled and concentrated in fewer and fewer hands. They say this is wrong, and that if we are to stop this happening we must take a very great leap forward. The solution of the author is to make everyone a capitalist, and he calls it the new capitalism. He points out that we must use the insurance principle to deal with the problem of entrepreneurial error which makes it almost impossible for the small investor to take a chance.

This bill is in a sense trying to do somewhat the same thing; it is within this area. It is taking a direct approach and placing capital in the hands of those who need it. The small businessman, as we have seen, is driven constantly to the loan company, to high interest rates, to restrictive terms. The important thing about this piece of legislation is that although it looks good on paper, it simply is not fulfilling its purpose.

A recent article in the Globe and Mail of Tuesday, February 6 indicated that there are some 64,000 small businesses and small manufacturing firms which have assets of less than $250,000 and which come within the purview of this legislation. This is multiplied, of course, when we take into account those businesses which are in the service, retail and the tourist fields, all the areas which this broad piece of legislation was expected to cover, of which only some 2,000 have taken advantage of this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Some 3,000.

Mr. Pitman: Well, between 2,000 and 3,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Twenty seven million dollars out of $300 million.

Mr. Pitman: I know one bank in Peterborough which is absolutely surrounded by small businesses; it is one of the oldest banks in the city, but it does not have one single loan on its books under this legislation. I know another bank where they have had some 25 requests, not one of which came within the demands of this legislation. I tried to get information on this bill. I think if hon. members will look at Hansard, page 1243, and the questions I put on small business loans they will see how I tried to get information which I felt was extremely important if we were to judge this piece of legislation and look at the measure with which we are now dealing with some kind of knowledge. I asked question No. 175;

> What was the total amount of money lent under last session's Bill No. C-40 (Small Businesses Loans Act) in the year 1961?

The answer was $25,582,269.41. My second question was:

> How many loans were made during 1961 under the said act?
> How many loans were made in amounts from (a) up to $500 (b) $500 to $1,000 (c) $1,000 to $5,000—

And so on. In other words I wanted a breakdown of the number of loans and the amounts loaned under this legislation. That information was unavailable. Perhaps the Minister of Finance could tell us why this kind of information is not available on what I consider to be an extremely important piece of legislation. There is no breakdown of the loans which have been made under this legislation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I can answer the hon. member right now.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are not in committee.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This information has not been broken down in this form as yet. I am told it would take at least two weeks to break down the information we have into the detailed categories the hon. member set forth in his question.

Mr. Pitman: I wish the minister had mentioned that at the time, because simply saying that the information is not available would lead one to believe that it was not going to be made available. My next question was:

> How many applications were (a) received (b) rejected?

Once again this information is not available.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government has not got that information; that is information the banks have. They receive the applications; they deal with them and accept or reject them. The government is given information only as to loans that are allowed to which the government guarantee applies.

Mr. Pitman: I thank the minister for that information, but it would seem to me that if the government is going to have any complete view as to how effective this legislation really is to the small businessman, this is the kind of information it would be very well to get from the bankers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You cannot.

Mr. Pitman: It seems to me that if we are to be able to tell whether the small businessman can really benefit by this kind of legislation, these government guaranteed loans, surely we should know how many are being rejected because they do not come within the purview of this legislation. It would seem to me, on the basis of the comments I have heard from many people, that this is simply not getting through. Last year when we talked about the industrial development bank I was heartened by the fact that at least two members spoke up and said there should be a more liberal policy, that there should be more inclination to take a chance when making advances to industries applying to this government agency for loans. That surely is the view I might have expected would have been taken with regard to this legislation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is quite different.

Mr. Pitman: I fail to see how it is quite different, and I say so in the sense that here again the government is trying to make credit available to smaller groups, though in relation to the industrial development bank they were trying to make capital available to the larger companies.

I would refer the minister to the remarks he made when he introduced this legislation in the house as reported in Hansard at page 55, 1960. It was suggested then that the expectation was that the government guarantee would encourage lending and increase the availability of medium term credit to small business. The minister then seemed to be very interested in comparing this legislation with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. He said—and I am quoting from page 55 of Hansard:

> The general nature of the legislation is similar to the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

He went on to say it was similar in form to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Then he added:

> It has been represented to us by small business organizations that the amount of contract work available in the course of renovation and extension of premises of small retail businesses in Canada amounts to approximately $75 million.

Yet, we find that the total loans made under this act for that year amounted to only $25 million. Let us look at the results of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. In 1960 some 68,041 loans were made under the terms of that act. Under this legislation 2,977 loans were made. In that period $101 million was lent under the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Under this act the amount made available was $25 million. Let us look at the size of the loans. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the average size of the loans made was $1,497. Under the Small Businesses Loans Act it was $8,593. I think it was the hon. member for Ottawa West who dealt with the whole question of putting the number of companies at the top. What is happening to the people at the bottom? It seems to me that $8,593 is rather a high average for loans to small businesses. I wonder what has happened to the grocery store owner, the motel owner, the small businessman who will only need one or two thousand dollars. I am sorry we do not have a breakdown of these loans so we could see what has happened to the people at the bottom.

I do not think I need go over the statements which have been made by the hon. member for Welland in this respect. Those we are trying to cover in this legislation are those who have managed to survive the last three years of Conservative recession, and those who hope to survive the next few years. This measure obviously does not cover those people. One person who is closely associated with banking has said of this that it looks good but it does not seem to cover the people he serves. This man is surrounded by small businesses. Small businesses have been very badly hit by this recession. They have suffered far more than the large corporations. They cannot create their own capital, and they are dependant entirely on the market place for their credit. Now they find that these regulations are too stringent.

Here again the problem is not just one for the bankers. What the banker does is determined by a conservative finance policy, conservative with a small "c". He has to make sure that his money will come back, and he has to be more than sure under the terms of this legislation. Yet surely this government must recognize its responsibility for having created an economy which has been to the detriment of the small businessman. The fact is that the small businessman, like the small farmer, has found his position destroyed by the recession, and is no longer able to compete on a practical basis.

I am trying to be constructive this afternoon. Perhaps we could look to the Department of Agriculture for some guidance concerning how to make this bill of real assistance to the small businessman who really needs help. I look with some interest at the work of the Farm Credit Corporation. We have a small businessman's section already in operation in one of our departments; the minister and I disagree as to how effective it has been. But it is in this area that I wish to suggest a direction in which improvements might be made. A tremendous effort could be made in terms of enlarging the scope of this section, even to the point where its officials could go into an area, talk with those concerned, find out what money is needed, find how a business is operating and what help is really required as a basis for giving the businessman concerned some assistance in improving his enterprise and making it really worth while, as is done by officials of the Farm Credit Corporation. That organization does not simply say "It looks as if we shall not get our money back here, so we will let this applicant go without it and get along as well as he can". The small businessman needs help and advice as well as credit.

Some may say that this sounds like socialism. I do not think so. I think it is a sensible way of dealing with this problem. I think small business is in a bad way, and we must take its problems into account. I hope this government will take a different look at the difficulties now confronting the small businessmen of our nation.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): As an advocate of long standing for greater consideration by lending institutions to small businesses, I welcome the amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act before us which extends the availability of loans to include the construction or purchase of other premises, if the premises in which the business now conducted cease to be available, or if it is considered advisable to move to other locations or extend facilities to enable the expansion of business. I doubt whether there is a class of business, outside of small farmers, who are more deserving of consideration than these businessmen whose contribution accounts for 60 per cent of the internal trade of Canada, to say nothing of their individual contribution to the welfare and public life of the community in which they live. Often they give much of their personal service gratis, at no small sacrifice.

I would like to point out the contribution made by the tourist camp and motel operators to the wealth of our nation. The tourist industry has reached a status of great importance to the economy of Canada. Only wheat and newsprint bring in more money from outside Canada than do tourists. Only newsprint brings in more money from the United States than does the tourist industry. It benefits Canada in many ways.

I think it is sound to recognize the tourist business for what it really is. Figures show that it is one of the major Canadian industries. In spite of considerable expansion in motel and tourist resort promotion we are still far behind the United States in tourist facilities, not because of a lack of qualified persons eager to go into the business but because those people who are really interested cannot get the money to start a business.

The recently completed lake Superior circle super highway, which follows the lake from Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, south to Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and finally Fort William, is 1,200 miles of scenic splendour, but unfortunately the Canadian side lacks the accommodation for the thousands of tourists who are coming in an ever increasing all year round calvacade to enjoy such inspiring sights as only the rugged shores of lake Superior can provide. It creates additional business and employment. Our tourist operators can hold Canadians in Canada and keep in circulation here money which would otherwise be spent abroad.

Travel by Canadians within Canada promotes a deeper understanding and appreciation of their own country and fosters national unity. In other words, tourism benefits everybody.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member would consider that he has sufficiently expounded all the virtues of the tourist industry to bring them within the purview of this act. We are really not debating the tourist industry. It is true that we are debating small business in the tourist field in so far as this amendment is concerned, but I suggest it does not open the door to a general review of the tourist industry.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, with due deference to Your Honour's opinion on the matter, we are speaking about small business and I consider the small operators in the tourist industry to be engaged in small business. That is the way I view the matter. I submit it is the course of wisdom on our part to keep our tourist operators in business in order to retain the tourist dollar in the country.

I submit that in referring to the tourist business in discussing this amendment I am merely emphasizing the need of the small operator who is a small businessman. With respect, I submit I am quite in order in speaking on behalf of the tourist operator who, after all, is a small businessman. Those who provide the tourist accommodation required to meet the increased demand are entitled to the assistance which this amendment is supposed to provide. Today the tourist industry is developing from what it used to be—camp resorts offering cabin type of accommodation—to up to date modern establishments, because tourists demand accommodation equal to that which is provided by modern hotels.

Most visitors come to Canada from the United States by automobile, and this mode of travel creates a greater demand for roadside accommodation of the highest quality. Although many motels have been built in recent years, a substantial percentage of Canada's motels and cabins needs to be improved and enlarged. There have also been sharp increases in tourism by Canadians visiting vacation spots in Canada. While no complete information is available concerning interprovincial travel, it seems fairly clear that the value of travel by Canadians within Canada is of an importance equal to that of the tourist business from the United States.

The expansion and improvement of Canada's tourist establishments, which include resorts, restaurants, hotels, motels and camps, are urgently required. At present the facilities which are inadequate and outmoded are being compared unfavourably with the more modern establishments which the travelling tourist expects, and the modernization of many of these businesses requires capital which quite often the operator is unable to borrow through ordinary banking facilities. This applies, of course, to tourist resorts and motels which, by reason of the relocation of highways, have to be removed to other locations.

I realize that with the passing of the government sponsored bill last year, No. C-40, provision was made for government guaranteed loans by chartered banks to small businesses, which has been of some help to small business enterprises for improvement and modernization of equipment and premises. However, some small businesses have encountered difficulties, notwithstanding the act, resulting in refusals by the banks to grant reasonable term credit to these proprietors of small businesses.

The minister has pointed out in reply to the hon. member for Peterborough that the department has no record of applications to the chartered banks under this legislation. This is an important omission. Surely the government should be kept informed as to the number of loans approved and the amounts, and also the number of applications for loans which were rejected. I dare say that the latter is greater than the former.

The major problems of the small retailer are a shortage of adequate long term capital and a shortage of well trained personnel. The small business is a major factor in the Canadian economy. The late Henry Ford staunchly declared that the small businessman was the backbone of the nation, which is just as true today as it was in Henry Ford's time.

Small businesses can be likened to a barometer which measures the economic climate of the country. Let us consider the impact on the national economy if the approximately 450,000 small businesses, including retailers, tourist operators, small service operators employing from 2 to 15 to 20 persons, were able to hire one or two more. There would be a business boom which would practically eliminate our present serious unemployment problem.

It is a pity that when the government established the productivity council the small independent business was ignored, notwithstanding the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that the legislation provided for representation of all sectors of the economy. As far as I know, big business and the labour congress are the only groups represented on that body.

Good as this amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act is, small business in Canada deserves greater recognition. The small tourist camp operators and motel owners and the independent stores are the real custodians of the principle of free enterprise. Here we see at first hand the workings of the profit and loss system. Here we see the reward of success, invariably made possible by recognition of efficiency, resourcefulness, hard work and integrity.

Notwithstanding the growth and expansion of big business, which is a trend developed by large investments, small business will continue to exist and be the mainstay of free enterprise because of the opportunity it offers for ingenuity, initiative and love for work. I cannot think of a better champion of democracy than the businessman who is self employed and knows the names of all his employees and many of his customers.

These are the people whom this bill is designed to assist. I submit that they deserve even more consideration than the bill contains. Some form of long term financing is needed to help those who wish to expand or relocate their premises. More than once I have had the opportunity to observe long established small independent businesses driven to the wall and into bankruptcy because of lack of sufficient capital to improve services and expand their holdings. They were unable to compete with large chain stores; their cheery personal services are gone and, sad to say, with them a part of the economic backbone of the nation is also gone.

In addition to lack of capital, small business establishments are handicapped by discriminatory freight rates in sections of the country such as northwestern Ontario, where horizontal freight rate increases over the past 10 years have driven to the verge of ruin many businesses, small and large.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have refrained from rising previously on a point of order in the hope that perhaps the hon. gentleman might get back in order, as you suggested. However, he is now talking about freight rates. He has talked about everything else except this bill. With great respect I suggest that there ought to be insistence that he conform to the rules and discuss the bill.

Mr. Speaker: I think the point is properly taken. I may advise the hon. member for Fort William that the principle involved is the guaranteeing of bank loans to small businesses. He should relate his remarks to that principle.

Mr. Chevrier: May I draw your attention to one thing, Mr. Speaker. In the consideration of small businesses and the profit or loss in relation to small businesses, freight rates are a very important factor. I presume the hon. member was making that point during the course of his remarks. I would ask Your Honour to take that matter into consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would proceed in the light of what I have said.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I am obliged to say that freight rate discrimination has an adverse effect on small business establishments.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Order.

Mr. Badanai: I am merely pointing out the situation. I am going to say this. This amendment is designed to help and assist the small businessman. I am trying to point out a way in which to assist him. I know the difficulties the small businessmen are confronted with in the form of any discrimination. In any event I am in favour of the amendment. I do not wish to prolong the debate on it. I think we all agree, with some reservations. It should go a little further. We should know the number of people who have applied and were turned down. We should know the amount of money invested in these small businesses and guaranteed by the government. I think it would assist the government a great deal, and also assist the small businessman.

For my part I am in favour of the amendment, notwithstanding the fact that it does not go far enough. However, I am sure that those who have been unable to borrow money under the old act will now try again. I express the hope that they will receive fairer consideration and will be able to borrow sufficient to meet their needs under this present legislation.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): This legislation has come before the house two or three times this session, Mr. Speaker. While I had not intended to speak on it, I believe that up to this time two things have been overlooked. I wholeheartedly support the amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act. As to a businessman who has an established business, and who for one reason or another finds it necessary to move his location, this amendment will allow him to borrow in order to make the move.

The hon. member for Peterborough went to great lengths in comparing this particular measure with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. They are similar in many respects. He said that while under this measure, which has been in effect for one year, $25 million is lent, that was a small amount having regard to the principal with which it was set up, namely $300 million. He compared it to the $75 million lent under the Farm Improvement Loans Act in 1960. However, it must be remembered that this act has been in effect just a shade better than a year, and at the time of the figures he was using it had only been in effect one year. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, in the first year in which it was in effect, approximately 4,000 loans were made and $3,381,000 lent.

I think it is only fair to compare like years in respect of one act with like years in respect of the other, if you are going to draw a comparison. When the Farm Improvement Loans Act was set up the aggregate principal amount was $250 million. While they are similar acts, certainly the Small Businesses Loans Act has been readily accepted and has made a substantial contribution to small business and to the men in business. If this act continues to grow in the way the Farm Improvement Loans Act has grown since its inception back in 1944, it will continue to play a great part in the development of this country.

The hon. member for Peterborough went on to say that the average amount lent under the Small Businesses Loans Act was $8,500, and he compared this with the average amount lent under the Farm Improvement Loans Act which was $1,400. However, he did not know or did not realize that while a farmer may have several farm improvement loans at one time, his total amount in any one year may be up to $7,500 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I suggest that most farmers would be paying on possibly an average of $4,500. I am just taking that figure out of my own general knowledge of my own area. Under the Small Businesses Loans Act I am sure it would be more than likely that a small businessman would have one loan, and that would be the average of $8,500. I think the averages compare rather well, considering also the fact that under the Small Businesses Loans Act the businessman can borrow up to a maximum of $25,000 if his business is large enough.

The hon. member tried to portray to the house and to you, Mr. Speaker, a picture showing that the Small Businesses Loans Act was not going to play a part in the development of Canada and was not going to meet the condition which it was first thought it would meet. By comparisons he tried to portray this picture, by comparing the effect of this act with the effective part the Farm Improvement Loans Act has played over the years in helping out a great many farmers. I submit that he made a very poor comparison when he sought to compare the figures for the very first year of operation of this new piece of legislation with the last figures available for a well established piece of legislation which the farmers have become accustomed to using a great deal.

I think I have pointed out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house that the Small Businesses Loans Act compares very favourably with other legislation, and I think it will go on to play a major part in the development and continuing expansion of this country.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks just made by the hon. member for Acadia. Among his contentions I noted his claim that this legislation had made a substantial contribution to the welfare of small business in Canada. I may not be using his exact words, but I believe I am quoting him with reasonable accuracy. I submit that this act has made a substantial contribution to the welfare of our banking system and the chartered banks of Canada, because under the terms of the act they have been making loans that in all likelihood they would have made in any case. They have been happy to enjoy the benefits of this legislation. Any rather marginal loans they made in the past are now in effect insured by the government of Canada; therefore they do not need to run any substantial risk with regard to the loans they make.

I say this with the particular thought in mind that according to the terms of the legislation the banks are still entitled to collect the maximum rate of interest permissible under the provisions of the Bank Act. We have heard many comparisons of this act with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. However, there is an important distinction. If the government of Canada underwrites a loan made under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the guarantee of the government of Canada has the effect of reducing the interest rate that the borrower must pay. This condition does not apply in the case of the Small Businesses Loans Act. While the government likes to compare this legislation with the Farm Improvement Loans Act, I regret very much that it has not seen fit to insist that the guarantee by the government should merit a reduction in the maximum allowable interest rate. I would hope that the government would heed the advice we gave it when it first introduced this legislation and bring in an amendment to establish a maximum interest rate for any loans made under the terms of this act, in line with the maximum rate now applicable to loans made under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. After all, the bond of the people of Canada should be worth something. Having in mind that the banks are permitted to collect 6 per cent interest on risks that they assume entirely, if they receive a guarantee by the people of Canada with regard to a major portion of any loan under this act I feel this should warrant a reduction of the maximum interest rate that the banks are able to collect.

By the government's failure to establish a maximum interest rate permitted to the banks of Canada under the terms of this legislation it is in effect announcing to all and sundry that the word of the government of Canada does not mean very much. The government is in fact saying to the banks "You can make loans on your own or you can make loans with our guarantee. Do as you please; you can collect the same rate of interest in either case". Naturally the banks are going to take the guarantee. In fairness and justice to the taxpayers of Canada and also in the interests of the small businessmen of Canada, I believe that if we guarantee loans by legislation the maximum permissible interest rate should be reduced.

I should like to endorse the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Fort William. I have encountered many operators of tourist camps or trailer camps who find themselves without adequate facilities under either the Industrial Development Bank Act or the Small Businesses Loans Act. I believe it is time to call to the attention of the government the needs of people engaged in this type of enterprise. I believe we are losing a lot of potential revenue in not making available to these people adequate financial resources. At the present time they have only one place to go for the money they need, to the money racketeers of our nation, and this greatly handicaps them in their efforts to establish competitive enterprises in the tourist industry.

I noticed how touchy the minister was when the hon. member for Peterborough reminded him of what we have noted in the blue book of estimates over the past number of years. When the government first established a so-called branch in the Department of Trade and Commerce which was ostensibly designated to advance the interests of small business, the magnificent sum of $30,000 was allocated to that effort. At that time I called the attention of the government to the fact that this would not even help one small service station operator in my constituency to gain real independence for himself. The amount was hardly enough to pay for more than the mailing of one mimeographed letter of advice to the many hundreds of small business operators in my community.

After having expressed our disappointment at the small effort on the part of the government that was indicated when the branch was established, namely the provision of $30,000 to encourage small business in the whole of Canada, I shared completely the disappointment of the hon. member for Peterborough when the item disappeared completely from the blue book in the following year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true.

Mr. Regier: Yes, it is.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was included in another item.

Mr. Regier: We have now received the blue book of estimates for the coming year, and once again not a nickel is allocated to the cause of helping the small entrepreneurs of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is completely untrue.

Mr. Regier: It is not completely untrue. The minister cannot point to any specific item in the blue book that is designed especially to advance the interests of what he likes to brag about so much, free enterprise in Canada. The government is going right down the line followed by previous governments, and from our observations aid to small businessmen has for all practical intents and purposes been written off as impractical and no longer necessary because in the view of the government their contribution, their initiative and desire to be of service to their fellow men can well be dispensed with.

This was also obvious in the refusal of the government to supply the information requested by the hon. member for Peterborough. The minister cannot get off the hook as easily as he attempted to do by saying that the government does not have this information available. If this government is prepared to guarantee loans, then it has every right—indeed, I would go beyond that and say it has every obligation—to obtain the necessary statistics on the loans that the taxpayers of Canada are being asked to guarantee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Otherwise why spend even $30,000 a year?

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Regier: Obviously the government does not recognize that the taxpayers have a legitimate claim on it to account for the guarantees; and obviously the government, if it is unwilling to report its activities in this matter, would not, as the hon. member for Essex East said, have any justification for spending even $30,000 in the estimates of the year before last.

I am rather disappointed with the limitations that are revealed in the bill now before us. Naturally we shall support the bill, but I had hoped that the small businessman would also be able to take advantage of the provisions in the bill in order to supply himself with adequate amounts of stock. Any of us who know anything about how a small businessman must operate know that one of his greatest handicaps in becoming competitive is his lack of capital to buy adequate amounts of stock at the appropriate times.

I have known ever so many occasions when a small businessman, had he the financial reserves, would have been able to lay in sufficient stock in order to make an additional 10 cents, or even up to 20 cents, on a pound of coffee. Why doesn't the government extend the provisions of this bill in order to acknowledge the fact that one of the major investments which a small businessman must make is for supplies and to secure stock?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, we have had a great deal of straying in the course of the debate this afternoon and the Speaker, when he was in the chair, directed the attention of the house to what was the principle of the measure before it. We are not discussing the principle of the main legislation. We are discussing a bill which proposes to enlarge the purposes for which loans may be authorized under the main bill so as to include therein the relocation of business premises. That is the principle of the bill, and with the greatest respect I submit it does not afford any hon. member the opportunity to engage in a speech ranging all over the territory, as though he were debating the budget or something of that kind.

The hon. member has already dealt with the estimates of another department, and now he is proceeding to attack the principle of the main legislation. With respect I submit that is not before the house during this debate.

Mr. Regier: In reply to the point of order I would say the minister has been in this house for many more years than I, who have only been here nine years. He has been here more than nine years. We had a resolution preceding this bill in which the house was asked to approve in principle that the bill ought to be amended, but I would point out that at the resolution stage the house is not officially aware of the contents of the bill that the government intends to introduce.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, we are not debating any resolution. We are dealing with the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Regier: I would appeal to you on the point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member state his reply to the point of order raised by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Regier: My point of order is that it has always been the prerogative of an hon. member on second reading, having seen a bill, to express his disappointment at the government's failure to introduce a bill that would meet with the proposals that had been made to the government at the resolution stage. The minister is very thin skinned.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Evidently the hon. member is not aware that there was no resolution with respect to the present measure. None was required. The bill has been introduced and here it is. Apparently the hon. member is not aware at all of the procedure of the house in this regard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think it is well recognized that the discussion on second reading of an amending bill should be limited to the principle of the amendment, and it is not an occasion to review the principle of the main bill. I know the hon. member has been straying a bit from that principle, and I hope he will now confine his remarks.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, I have been listening to what the Minister of Finance has to say and what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has been saying. This is not the first time this point of order has been raised. During the past hour I have discussed this matter with officials at the table, looking at the rules and the citations. I appreciate that there is a difference of opinion as to what the rules provide. I would be content to accept the ruling of the Minister of Finance if in Beauchesne I could find any citation that says that at this stage of the discussion of a bill an hon. member is precluded from pointing out the inadequacy of the measure before the house.

I can find no such citation, but in fairness I think it is only right to point out that on another occasion last session this position was taken by the presiding officer of the house, although the ruling was not insisted on. However, I should like to have the citation shown to me which precludes the kind of discussion about which a complaint has been lodged by the Minister of Finance. Surely an hon. member is entitled to say that this bill is good so far as it goes, but that it is inadequate because it does not provide other possible remedies to assist the small business community.

If we look through the Hansard reports of this debate we shall find that the kind of argument made by the hon. gentleman was pursued by others on all sides of the house since the bill was first introduced in this chamber. I rise not to take issue with Your Honour, but for the purpose of seeking enlightenment, to have shown under what citation this particular ruling or this particular position of the Chair is taken.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This question has often been ruled upon in the house and I have here a number of rulings made by previous Speakers and the present Speaker, which are absolutely in accord with the point raised by the Minister of Finance, to the effect that the discussion on second reading must be limited to the amendment and not to the main bill. There is this citation:

> The fundamental rule that debate must be relevant to a question necessarily involves the rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed—

And so on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Could Your Honour give us the date of that ruling, please?

Mr. Winch: At the same time would you say whether the citation is on the details of the bill or the principle of the bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The citation I have just quoted is from May's sixteenth edition, page 451, and it also refers to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 203, paragraph 1. Speaker Macdonald on November 14, 1949—this is recorded at page 237 of the Journals—ruled:

> On the second reading of an amending bill it is the principle of the amending bill and not the principle of the act to be amended which is the business under consideration. The discussion therefore must relate exclusively to the principle of the amending bill.

The present Speaker, on December 13, 1957, as reported at page 2314 of Hansard, gave a similar ruling, and also on May 6, 1959 at page 3402 of Hansard. There are a number of other precedents, to which I need not refer. I think if the hon. member will correlate his remarks to the purposes of the bill, that is the principle of the amendment, he will be in order. I think he will agree that it should be so, and I would ask him to observe this ruling.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for your very great consideration of the problem raised by the Minister of Finance. I was not for a moment—and I hope he has not misunderstood me—attempting to argue the principle of the bill; I was speaking to the proposed amendment to the bill and I hope, in the light of the ruling you have just read to the house, I am able to remain in order.

However, I think you will agree with me, sir, that I ought to be given the privilege of replying to any arguments that have hitherto been put forward in this debate. The hon. member for Acadia mentioned that some $25 million had been loaned to small businessmen under the terms of this bill. I am not in any position to dispute the statistics. However, I should like to point out to the hon. member for Acadia that these loans have been made by the banks of Canada and not by the government of Canada. All the government of Canada has done, in effect, under the terms of the bill now before us is to guarantee to the banks that the major portion of these loans will be repaid, and the banks have been directed to collect the same interest rates that they would have collected if the bill had not been in existence.

An hon. Member: You are all wet.

Mr. Regier: This comes back to my earlier contention, that when the people of Canada guarantee a loan it is only equitable that the terms of that loan should call for a slight concession, no matter how small. According to the Farm Improvement Loans Act the concession to the borrower is 1 per cent per annum. I feel that the guarantee of the people of Canada ought to be worth something; otherwise I see little need for this parliament to be occupying itself with what would appear to be the needless task of underwriting a possible loss.

The hon. member for Fort William mentioned that this was a test of the profit and loss system. I should like to contend that this is a test of service to our nation and to mankind and not a test of the profit and loss system, because if we analyse the profit and loss system as a system without the good will of the people of the nation, by the very existence of this legislation we are admitting its utter failure and its gross weaknesses.

I think a number of speakers have boasted of this legislation as aiding employment. They said there were so many millions of dollars spent in the past year in the expansion of private business as a result of this legislation and that therefore it made a valuable contribution in reducing unemployment in Canada. I should like to answer this argument in only a very brief statement; that private business has sagged, and the very existence of this legislation is witness thereof, and that private business investments today have fallen to the point where they are unable to generate enough new private capital to be really influential to any major extent in relieving the problem of unemployment. Therefore the public resources are being asked to aid and abet in this matter.

While, as I said before, we are quite prepared to endorse the amendment to the act, we do contend that it is an admission of failure; that this government has failed to keep its promise to the Canadian electorate that it would do something effective to aid the cause of small business, and it is also not effective in that it does not begin to scratch the surface of the problems that are today facing the small businessman of Canada, the only real free enterpriser, who is being squeezed out of business because of the failure of the government to deal adequately with his problems and with corporate power as it now exists.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, as all the businessmen in my riding are small businessmen I would be remiss in my duty as their representative if I did not take advantage of this opportunity to say a few words on this amendment, and in particular to point out their views and the experiences they have had with the main legislation.

Hon. members will recall that the original bill was introduced in November of 1960, and at that time it was put forward by the minister as a part of the program which the government was setting up to make a massive assault on our unemployment problem. It was certainly a very exciting piece of legislation to the small businessmen in my riding, because I received more inquiries about it than I have ever received about any other legislation that has gone through this house. In fact there were so many inquiries that it could almost be used as a sort of Gallup poll.

I took advantage of that opportunity to ask the people who wrote me for information on how to go about getting these loans to write back and let me know just what success they had in getting loans under this legislation. Of all the inquiries which I received, the legislation was only applicable to about 10 per cent of their problems, and to date I have received notice that only one person in my riding has obtained a loan under this legislation.

It seems to me that the principle of this amendment is essentially the same as the principle of the original bill. This amendment does not embody any change in principle; it merely extends the means by which the principle may be applied. Since there is no change in principle we can take it for granted that it will receive the same unanimous support from all quarters of this house that was given to the original bill.

At that time, when the original bill was being debated, the opposition pointed out the defects in the legislation; and the figures which the minister put on record in Hansard on February 15 I believe confirmed the criticism which was made at that time, namely that the legislation was far too restrictive to have much impact upon the economy of the provinces as an aid to employment, or to be of great assistance to the small businessmen themselves. The minister told us that fewer than 3,000 loans had been made. He said the average loan was $8,600 and that the total of all the loans amounted to about $25,-500,000, while the prospects indicated that the aggregate for the coming year might reach a total of $32 million. That is a far cry from the limit of $300 million envisaged in the main legislation.

This amendment would make it possible for small businessmen to secure loans for the construction or purchase of alternate premises should they have to vacate the premises they occupy, or when zoning operations make it impossible to expand, or where a business might fail if such a move were not made. It seems to me a pity that the government did not take advantage of this opportunity to go a little further and repair some of the other defects which have become apparent after this legislation has been in effect for a whole year. The fact that these loans are made by the banks and not by the government is in itself a handicap. I think the government should take note of the fact that in the Atlantic provinces there are about four banks—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is going beyond the amendment when he begins to discuss the means by which the purpose of the original bill is carried out, and I think he should return to the amendment before the house.

Mr. Carter: On that point of order, these loans for the purchase or construction of new premises have to be made by the banks. What I am pointing out to the minister is that banking facilities in my province are not comparable to the facilities which exist in Canada as a whole. In fact I think it can be shown that about four banks make 80 per cent of all the loans made in the Atlantic provinces. We are having the same experience with regard to this legislation for small businessmen as we have in the case of the fishermen. For some reason or other it is very difficult for them to get loans, probably because those who require assistance are too far away from the banks to make personal contact or to provide the banks with all the information which is required.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member heard the ruling which was made a few minutes ago, a ruling to which the Speaker, when he was in the chair, also referred. I think it would greatly facilitate progress in this debate if the discussion were limited to the subject matter of the amendment.

Mr. Carter: The point I was making is that when the original bill was before the house we called the attention of the minister to the fact that its terms were too restrictive. If any hon. member thinks that is funny let him look at the debate, and he will see that I pointed out to the minister then that the businessmen had four main needs. One of those needs was long term loans; another was a low rate of interest, and a third need was working capital. None of those needs were met by the original legislation, and none have been met by the amendment which we have before us now. In view of the importance of the small businessman in the economy of our country I think it is necessary that the minister give consideration to expanding the scope of this measure.

The small businessman is really the backbone of our economy. He is least likely to be affected by automation, and the employment afforded by small firms is likely to be more stable than that provided by larger firms. I would much prefer to have in my riding 50 small industries employing 20 persons each than one industry employing 1000 people, because in the latter case you have all your eggs in one basket.

This bill is a step in the right direction but it is only a very small step, and since it does not go anywhere near meeting the real needs of the businessman I ask the minister not to stop at this point but to carry on and extend this legislation, particularly so as to provide working capital. That is the main need of 90 per cent of the businessmen in my province. They cannot get it through the banks, and I think the government should make provision for it. I must remind the minister, too, that there is some doubt as to whether the banks are the best agencies for administering this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member is now definitely straying from the amendment, which refers to the enlargement of the purposes for which a small businessman's loan can be made, and I want him to come back to that. If he cannot do so he will have to resume his seat.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on that point of order, surely that is a very strict interpretation. If Your Honour will look at the explanatory notes of the bill you will see that the purpose of the bill is indicated. It is suggested that the government will accept the recommendation of a responsible officer of a bank in the making of a loan. Surely my hon. friend is not straying away from the subject matter of the measure when he argues that the bank is not, in his judgment, a proper vehicle for the purpose intended, that it should not be left to an official of the bank to have the power which this legislation gives to him. With respect I submit that Your Honour is straining the interpretation of our rules when he precludes my hon, friend from making an observation of that kind which, incidentally, is not the substance of his remarks but simply made in passing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not mind the hon. member making a passing reference to these matters but I hope the bulk and substance of his argument will relate to the bill before the house. So far that has not been the case. I think all hon. members will agree that I have exercised as much leniency as is possible, and as much as I am disposed to exercise in order not to go beyond the rules.

The hon. member for Essex East a few moments ago asked me to refer to citations. The citations are very clear. The discussion, therefore, as it has been ruled, must relate exclusively to the principle of the amending bill. I am only asking the hon. member to conform to that ruling which has been followed throughout the years in this house.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I made the point that the principle of this amending bill is identical with that of the original legislation, namely to provide assistance to small business. This bill does not change the principle one bit, it only extends the means by which this assistance may be given.

Mr. Pickersgill: Very inadequately.

Mr. Carter: I am not going to labour the point, Mr. Speaker, if you wish to restrict my remarks, but I will remind the minister and my hon. friends opposite that this is not the kind of legislation we were promised by the Prime Minister to deal with the problems of small business. What he promised in 1957 was an agency somewhat similar to that which obtains in the United States.

Before I sit down I wish to ask the minister if he can give the house a breakdown by provinces of the $25.5 million in loans which have been granted to date. It seems to me legislation of this kind can serve a double purpose. Not only can it be a stimulant to the economy but can also be used as a sort of balance wheel to our economy. If this is to be done it has to be applied on a regional rather than on a national basis. I should like to see just what pattern shows up, by provinces, in the loans that have already been granted.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Essex South, with his usual respect for freedom of speech in this house—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the hon. member permit me to interrupt him before he castigates the hon. member for Essex South, who well deserves to be castigated? May I ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to refrain from doing so at the moment because this is the hon. gentleman's birthday.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would have thought that on this occasion the hon. gentleman might have acted his age. However, I congratulate him on the occasion of his birthday.

Mr. Lambert: You should remind yourself of that every day of the year.

Mr. Pickersgill: I also thank the hon. member for Edmonton West for his customary good wishes which I always appreciate at their true value. As I was saying—

Mr. Thrasher: Perhaps the hon. member would allow me a moment in which to express my thanks to him and the hon. member for Essex East for their kind felicitations on this important day. I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I have now reached a milestone in my life and I would like to think that I am now free to forget about future birthdays.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, you will have to do something with this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Unfortunately, I do not think the hon. member will likely have to forget about birthdays for a great many more years than would be so in my case or that of the hon. member for Essex East, and I hope when he reaches the age of the hon. member for Essex East he will have reached a similar degree of wisdom.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And be less senile than that hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance, as a great expert on the subject, talks about senility and I will not argue with him on that point.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do not look at your deskmate when you say that.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman is not prepared to argue about the senility of the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may be permitted to be relevant and to speak to the bill instead of about birthdays and senility, and without the uncalled for interruption of the Minister of Justice, I wish to make a few observations about the inadequacy of the principle on which this bill is based.

This bill, as my friend the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo so accurately pointed out a moment ago, has precisely the same principle as the original legislation. The principle of this bill, as I understand it, is that loans will be extended by the banks to small businesses and up to a certain amount will be guaranteed by the treasury of Canada. That is the principle of the bill.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the minister replies he can put me straight.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman needs it.

Mr. Fulton: That will be impossible.

Mr. Pickersgill: Meanwhile, I will outline what I consider to be the principle of this legislation. It is that the treasury is giving a limited sort of guarantee of loans made by the banks under certain circumstances to certain categories of small businesses. This legislation, when it was originally introduced with great fanfare in November 1960 was part of a huge program that was going to end the current recession of that time, the second recession under the present government. You will remember, sir, at the beginning of 1960 the Minister of Finance made that famous speech to the board of trade, or rather to the Canadian club and the Empire club in Toronto—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): January 7.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have to be very careful to give the name of the right organization or otherwise the minister will likely say it is a lie. That is a word he very frequently utters. It is almost impossible to speak six words in this house without having the minister rise and use that word.

At the Canadian club and the Empire club in Toronto in January 1960 the minister told us the recession the Conservatives claimed they inherited from the Liberals was all over and we had now entered into a period of great prosperity when he was going to balance the budget. You will remember that, sir.

And then in November 1960 the government changed its mind again, or the facts had forced it to change its tune. It brought in two or three measures including the one we are now being asked to amend. We gave strong support to this legislation at that time because we felt we should support any measure which would contribute to alleviating the slump and stagnation from which this country has been suffering most of the time since hon. gentlemen opposite have occupied the treasury benches.

Mr. Cardiff: Utter trash.

Mr. Pickersgill: We gave this legislation strong support and only one or two people on this side of the house spoke on the subject, but from the other side we had speaker after speaker getting up and making long speeches of congratulations of the minister at that time, which seemed to me to have nothing to do with the principle of the bill. The Chair at that time did not call those hon. gentlemen to order as they told us what a wonderful Minister of Finance we had and praised the splendid job he was doing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have allowed the hon. member to engage in a lengthy preamble. I hope he has now reached the end of his preamble and will deal with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir. I have not reached the end of my preamble in this free parliament. There are other points I wish to make in laying a foundation for the argument I wish to advance.

As I said, at that time hon. gentlemen opposite told us of the wonderful things that were going to be accomplished by this legislation. Well, nearly a year and a half ago the government brought in this legislation. Hon. gentlemen opposite decided it was such a big measure that they required a ceiling of $300 million on the loans and so far $25 million has been lent.

In the speech from the throne this year, with great fanfare, we were led to expect big additional changes in this legislation. What do we get? We get an amendment which says that if you move your business from the south side of Sparks street to the north side of Sparks street, or from the north side of Sparks street to the south side of Sparks street, you can borrow under this legislation; and that is all. That is all this amendment does, and yet this bill was announced in the speech from the throne, which gives you an idea how frantically the government was shaking old straw in an attempt to find something with which to create an impression on the public. That is not, of course, what was expected. It is to that point that I intend to address myself, namely that this legislation is not what we were led to expect, not what the country was led to expect and not what even the officials, who themselves have the responsibility for administering it, led the country to expect.

I have here in my hand a sheet torn out of a magazine called the Canadian Grocer for October 21, 1961. There is here an account of a symposium of the retail merchants' association's Ontario food section on this very legislation we are now being asked to amend. I should just like to read one paragraph because it shows two things. It shows not only that this legislation is quite inadequate but that an official having to do with its administration recognized that the law was inadequate, that it ought to be changed and that he aroused expectations of change which have not been met in the legislation.

Mr. Clancy: Read the whole thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member suggests that I read the whole thing. It would be very edifying to do so. However, I assume that the hon. gentleman can read. He has a great deal of leisure and I suggest that he read it himself. The paragraph I wish to read is as follows:

> James A. Shields of the small loans branch kicked off by saying that experience had convinced members of his department that the ceiling of $250,000—

That is the ceiling on sales.

> —was too low and it would probably be lifted. Personally, he felt that the ceiling should be removed entirely as it was difficult to decide a figure which would suit all types of small business. It was his own feeling that any businessman who felt he would like to borrow $25,000 could be considered a small business.

The minister will no doubt say that Mr. Shields is not an officer of his department, but is an officer of another department. We know from experience at Accra and about Accra that different ministers speak with different voices. Now there are officials who do so. However, there is no doubt that expectations were aroused by these reports. Anyone who cares to read the Financial Post for January 27 will see that the editors of the Financial Post, who in these days seem to be about the only people left in the journalistic world who view this government with any charity at all, were led to expect some real legislation, some real changes that would lift this legislation from the doldrums in which it has found itself, with only $25 million lent when they expected $300 million and, as one hon. member has pointed out, probably most of it would have been lent anyway whether or not the legislation had been there. As my friend the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo has said, this legislation is so different from what we were led to expect, is so different from what the public was led to expect and is in so many ways inadequate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He did not say that.

Mr. Pickersgill: We had expected that something really substantial would be done, something that would carry out some of those sweeping promises to small business that were made by the Prime Minister in his election campaign in 1957 and which I could put on the record—I have them here in my hand—if the rules of the house would allow it. However, I see you looking at me, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be distaste on the other side of the house for having any of these promises of the Prime Minister put on the record, even in the most attenuated form. Objection is taken even to having quotation marks put around them. As I say, what we were led to expect was that legislation would be put on the statute books which, like the farm improvement legislation and the other legislation such as the home improvement legislation, which was put on the statute books by another government in another period, would have much more substantial effects than this legislation is having. Surely what was expected was something like the measures that are being taken by the small businesses administration in the United States to which the Prime Minister referred when he made the promises on which this legislation evidently is based, or which this legislation is supposed or presumed to be fulfilling. When he replies I hope the minister will tell us whether the government has given any consideration to a much broader approach to this whole problem than the miserable approach that is made in this puny amendment to legislation which is not really accomplishing what everyone a year and a half ago had such high hopes it might accomplish.

In the United States, of course, many devices are being used for providing capital for small business. For example, there are small business investment companies.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are 21 different projects.

Mr. Pickersgill: My friend the hon. member for Essex East, who has made a real study of this matter, points out that there are 21 different projects.

An hon. Member: You have not made a study of it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not pretend to be an authority on the whole field. However, I pretend to know something about what is going on in Canada. I also know something about the number of loans being made under this legislation in Canada. That information has been given very reluctantly by the government. I have this circular from the small business administration in October, 1961, which suggests what I believe looks like a much more promising approach to this problem than is this legislation. It is for that reason, and for that reason only—that I consider this legislation so inadequate—that I venture to suggest to the minister that a more promising measure such as that to which I have referred might be considered. I mean promising in the sense of achieving results not in the electoral field but in the field of the growth of the economy. We know, of course, that many promises seem to be made and forgotten. But the kind of promise I am talking about is the promise of effective results in the development of small businesses. I think that only one conclusion can be drawn from the few facts that we have been able to elicit from the minister and the brutal fact of the small number of loans, namely that this measure is all right as far as it goes but that it does not go nearly far enough to meet the big problem which the Prime Minister, when he was not in the government, promised to do so much about in 1957.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) referred to some of the promises that were made in 1957 with respect to this group of citizens, namely the small businessman. In Brockville, on May 8, 1957, according to the Globe and Mail of May 9, we have this quotation:

> The small businessman—manufacturer and independent retailer—has been all but forgotten by the federal government, the Tory chief charged . . . Canada, Mr. Diefenbaker's statement said, is a country of small businesses. Of the 37,400 manufacturing establishments in this country, more than 35,000 employ fewer than 100 persons.

There was also specific reference on that occasion and on the earlier occasion of the important opening campaign speech at Massey hall to the type of legislation under the United States program, where the definition of small business is flexible enough to permit aid to be extended to any firm which is small when judged within its own industry. We submit there should be further amendments and more real legislation at this time.

In the second quarter of 1961 the number of business failures resulted in liabilities of $27.7 million, 11 per cent above the same months in the same quarter of 1960. This was an all-time high. Nineteen per cent more firms failed in January, 1962, than in January, 1961, and in this regard I am referring to a news story found on page 22 of today's Globe and Mail.

Mr. Lambert: Why do you not give the reasons for the failures?

Mr. Matheson: In answer to the hon. member for Edmonton West I will give the reasons for the failures. The Financial Post says that the reasons are primarily three: First, a general slowdown in business. This we cannot deny. The second reason is the high cost of borrowing. This goes back to the reconversion loan and the manipulations that have been going on fairly generally since then as a result of which there has been a build-up of the average cost of interest on all debts from 2.98 per cent prevailing in 1956 to a figure we cannot accurately judge at the present time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this must be the dozenth time the debate has been out of order and surely we can have some serious attempt made to confine the debate within the proper rules. It has been straying all afternoon. The hon. member is now talking about interest rates in general, about the conversion loan of 1958 and everything else except the principle of the bill. The principle is very simple, whether the permissible purposes for which loans may be guaranteed under the act shall be extended to include removal and relocation of businesses.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I say word?

Mr. Speaker: It is not necessary. I cannot accept the objection. It seems to me that hon. member is relating his argument to borrowing by small businesses, which has to do with the provision that is being amended. I would not want to restrict him as long as he does not get into the whole policy of reconversion and so on. It is obvious that would not be in order, but when his remarks are related to borrowings by small businesses it seems to me he is on the point.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, I was endeavouring to reply briefly and succinctly to the hon. member for Edmonton West. I mentioned that, according to the Financial Post, the second most important item was the high cost of borrowing. This added cost is surely one of the main reasons why there has been an increase in business failures. The third reason put forward by the Financial Post is the obvious scarcity of mortgage money.

May I say it would appear that within the last four or five years we have entered into a new period of debt morality, and this has to be taken into account when we are considering the legislation before the house today. So far as the debts of the government are concerned, it is clear there is no earnest attempt to balance the budget. In other words, obviously we have entered into a new phase so far as the problem of meeting the costs of government is concerned. Our biggest business, Canadian National Railways, has a record deficit, and we do not try to balance the budget in this particular field. We do not try to balance the unemployment insurance fund. The financial position of T.C.A. and our exchange fund are two other areas where we could draw comparisons.

These policies pursued by the government are beyond our understanding. All we can do is to testify that we have witnessed all these things. Why these things are so, I do not know, but certainly this new debt morality in Canada is one of the factors that profoundly affects small businesses which have to borrow, which either have to pay or get out of business. It is as simple as that, and the manner in which the government has pursued its fiscal and monetary policies has had an important bearing on the way small businesses can operate. If our big government undertakings, our railway system, our air line system and so on, are to be permitted to go substantially into debt, I think it is only reasonable to say that the ground root strength of our economy the merchant and small businessman, has got to be supplied with a little more food and water than is contained in this niggardly amendment which certainly will prove a disappointment to a great many people.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether he has had an opportunity to examine the program that the United States has adopted for its small businesses? When the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was speaking he pointed out the program of assistance under the small business administration in the United States. He said there were 21 different projects which the small business administration of the United States had established to assist small businesses. That is the kind of program, as he pointed out, that the Prime Minister assured the Canadian people he would implement in 1958.

All this is reported in the United States government organization manual for 1960-61. Has the minister had an opportunity to read this report? Can the minister explain to the committee why the government has not accepted this kind of program, particularly in the light of the promise made by the Prime Minister? The minister sits there in solid comfort at the moment and I have a great suspicion—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I enjoy no comfort at all, listening to this.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that he is not aware of what the United States is doing and perhaps not even aware of what the Prime Minister promised.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Keep on going. You are serving your purpose. It is five o'clock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As it is five o'clock I will continue later.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have served your purpose.

The Chairman: As it is five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISION—REQUEST FOR EXTENDED COVERAGE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, immediate steps should be taken by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation either directly or indirectly to provide television to those areas and communities in Canada which are presently denied the enjoyment of such services and facilities.

He said: Mr. Speaker, you have just read the proposed resolution, which I am sure will become a resolution in fact if it is voted upon this afternoon. You will note that it is worded in such a way as to be all-inclusive of areas in Canada which do not now have television facilities and services. Even though the riding of Skeena covers practically one third of the province of British Columbia, the people of that riding have no television whatsoever, and I know there are other regions of British Columbia in the same position. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) told me a moment ago that he too is interested in this matter for the same reason, and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) also has areas within his constituency that do not enjoy this modern medium of communication.

I raised a similar subject matter in the first session of this parliament immediately after the general election of 1958. In fact it was on June 3, 1958, that I raised the matter by way of grievance following a supply motion. That, of course, did not allow for any vote being taken as to whether or not it was desirous for the house to give an expression of its opinion. The motion today asks parliament to express an opinion in a formal manner to the effect that steps should be taken to extend television coverage to all areas and communities which are now denied such facilities.

In Skeena we have an estimated population of some 60,000 to 70,000 people and, if allowed, I shall place on the record figures from the 1958 voters lists to indicate the number of registered voters in some of the major communities. Perhaps it would give an indication to the house of what is involved population wise. In my own community of Terrace we had some 2,000 registered voters in 1958; in the Smithers-Telkwa area there were some 1,500 registered voters. In Burns Lake, and in the areas surrounding it, we had another 2,000 voters. The city of Prince Rupert itself, without taking into account the outlying communities, had some 6,000 people on the voters list. In Kitimat there were about 4,300 and in Ocean Falls aproximately 1,400. All these communities have a number of other small communities surrounding them and they are likewise concerned and interested in this particular question. It is almost a perpetual problem and perpetual conflict between those areas which are heavily populated and those which are less heavily populated.

It seems that no matter what type of service is involved, be it highways, daily newspapers, radio or television, the larger populated areas receive them first. For instance, the lower mainland of British Columbia which includes Vancouver, Burnaby and Victoria, is a small area geographically but it contains approximately one half of the population of the entire province, and it is the area which is given prior consideration in any of these matters. In fact this is almost traditional now, and for that reason I believe that a public body such as the C.B.C. should give extra consideration to the outlying areas, the smaller communities and less populated sections of the country. I believe that public agencies such as the C.B.C. should even bend over backwards to ensure that greater consideration is given to providing such services as television in order to balance the scale between the urban and the rural communities.

As a medium of communication television has been in existence for quite a number of years, but as I said earlier we in Skeena do not as yet have the benefit of it. We hope that things will change shortly. As I say, television is considered to be a great means of communication. It has great cultural advantages; and it has great entertainment value. It is true that it also has certain defects and drawbacks, but nothing is either pure black or pure white. Everything that is good contains a little bad, and vice versa.

We do not believe that merely because we do not have a city with a population of 50,000, 75,000 or 100,000 we should be denied services which many people in this nation receive. The needs and the desires of the people in Skeena are just as great as those of the people in Vancouver. I hope the motion before us will be given the due consideration necessary and will receive unanimous passage in the house in order that those who live in the northern parts of the country will understand that parliament itself has concern for our desires and needs.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): It is not very often I agree with the hon. member for Skeena, but on this very point I am in general agreement with the idea he has expressed. My area is very much similar to that which he represents in that it is a big constituency and extends for many miles into the far northern regions.

The idea of a national broadcasting system is one in which the whole nation should participate, but I believe we should realize some of the difficulties in providing television to all areas. Even the royal commission, when it made its study, had this to say:

> However much we regret it, there will probably be more than one and a half million Canadians who will have to rely for their broadcasting service on radio and will not in the foreseeable future be brought within reach of Canadian television.

It goes on to say:

> We do regret it because the value of television in terms of information, entertainment and identification with the rest of the country is greater for people living in remote areas than it is for Canadians in the settled parts of the country.

I think we can safely say that even today, after having radio service for a good many years, some 2 per cent of the people in Canada do not receive broadcasts from Canadian radio stations. Indeed some of the people who live in the far north will tell you they get Russian broadcasts more easily.

Even though television is a relatively new service in Canada we are rapidly approaching the point when 95 per cent of our people will receive it, but from there on I believe it will be a matter of dollars and cents. In my area during the last few years the government has been trying to work as fast as it possibly can in order to provide that service which the hon. member for Skeena says he needs in his area, and which is needed in many other northern parts of the country.

Only a few years ago there was but a fringe service in the southern portion of my constituency. Considering that my constituency runs about 600 miles north and the fringe reception covers perhaps only 30 miles of the lower portion, one can well understand that it does not serve many people. However, there have been extensions in the last few years. There has been the extension into Baldy Mountain in Manitoba, which has helped many of the people in the southern area and there has also been a steady expansion by the C.B.C. and private stations in the last few years.

Indeed some of the private stations found they could possibly go into the more northern areas of the constituency. As a matter of fact a few years ago the C.B.C. had made application and was prepared to provide service into that area, but because the privately owned stations were willing to do it themselves the C.B.C. withdrew in favour of the privately owned stations, in order that it could conserve funds for areas that privately owned stations could not serve.

I know it is an expensive proposition when one goes into these sparsely populated areas. It is so expensive that for example in the areas around The Pas, which is outside my area, and Flin Flon, which also serves my area, the C.B.C. could not see fit to provide direct transmission because funds were unavailable. In areas such as these you often find that kinerecordings, although perhaps not the best, are accepted.

I can cite examples in my area where within only 20 miles of a signal a community of perhaps 1,000 people will have to go without service until such time as more funds are provided. I think the essence of the whole problem is, where do you gets the funds?

The royal commission reported that in the future there will be demands from areas for two stations. I think this is one factor that should be considered, that before any areas are serviced with two or three stations—many of our residents are serviced to some degree by United States stations, and although this is not the best thing it is not a point of argument—we should service those areas which are without television facilities at the moment. There will be demands in the future from areas which feel that two or three stations can operate quite well and quite profitably, and there will also be demands in the future for an extension of time from those areas which have enjoyed television over the years. This is going to be a factor which will cost money. If there is going to be an extension of time, this will mean that some other areas not now serviced will have to do without television for a longer period. There is also the possibility that the near future will see the advent of colour television.

These are factors at which we must look very carefully, and before we provide these additional services to those areas which are presently serviced and have been serviced for a good many years we should be very careful about what our policy is going to be and we should be sure that areas that are not serviced do receive some form of television entertainment.

I have taken a few figures from the Fowler commission report and I would just quote three years for which that commission forecast net operating expenditures in this field. They expected that in 1958 the net operating expenditures for radio and television would be approximately $44 million; for 1959, $50 million and for 1960, $55 million. However, the government's estimates for those years were $51 million, $58 million and $62 million. They estimated the capital cost to be $10 million in 1958, $14 million in 1959 and $13 million in 1960. However the government's estimates for those years were $8 million, $9 million and $7 million.

In other words, what I am trying to point out here is that as a result of added operating costs, capital costs have been sacrificed. I think one should look at the operations of the C.B.C. and see that some of the capital expenditures are not sacrificed because of added operating costs. In general I would say that the people of my area want me to support this resolution.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I think this resolution will affect a great many people across this country. Because of this I hope that within the short time allotted to its discussion we will be able to come to some decision.

I have before me very detailed information concerning quite a few places in Newfoundland. I am not going to take the time of the house by putting it on the record now, because as I said before I hope that before the hour has expired we will be able to come to some decision. I do feel, however, that since television is in large measure a public service, people living in smaller areas have the same right to expect television service, within reason, as those who live in the more thickly populated areas. I am sure that across this country there are many places that are now not served by television and yet within these areas reside a large percentage of the population of Canada.

I bring to the attention of the house the example of the town of Deer Lake in my own province of Newfoundland. Deer Lake and the surrounding territory has a population of 10,000 people. It is only 30 miles from the larger city of Corner Brook. Corner Brook is a city serviced by television, and yet 30 miles away a town with a population of 10,000 people is not able to receive this public service.

On a number of occasions I have brought to the attention of the house the question of television coverage for Deer Lake. There have been numerous pieces of correspondence on this matter, but so far the service has not been provided for this town. I hope that if this resolution is passed consideration will be given to the justifiable demands which are being made by the people of this important town on the west coast of Newfoundland.

I also bring to the attention of the house a television station which is now being operated at Stephenville, Newfoundland. The station itself and the equipment is owned by the United States forces at Harmon Field, while the station is operated by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Three or four years ago this station was able to serve all the people who were then receiving electric power. Within the last two or three years great strides have been made in this area in extending electric power to many more settlements, and the station at Stephenville is now not able to service all the homes capable of receiving television if such a service were provided. I would hope the time will not be too distant when the station at Stephenville will be either enlarged or relocated so that the service the station provides will have greater coverage than it has today.

In the southern part of what is known in Newfoundland as the Ste Barbe district there is a fairly densely populated area known as Bonne Bay. These people, too, have no television service. I would hope that within a very short time these people will also be able to receive the benefits which come from television broadcasting.

My hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, who is not in the house today because weather conditions have prevented him from returning to Ottawa, has given me a message asking me to state his case for Labrador. In Labrador at the moment there is only one television station, and it is at Goose Bay. Certainly, in this great area other stations are necessary so that service may be provided to all the people concerned.

My hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo, who realizes that in this debate not many people are going to have an opportunity to speak, has asked me to refer to the number of occasions on which he himself has called attention to the need for television coverage of Port aux Basques, Grand Bank and the south coast of Newfoundland. There are in Newfoundland today many places which might well enjoy the advantages which come from television broadcasting and I hope that if this resolution receives the approval of the house these benefits will be brought to the people living in the areas I have mentioned.

Mr. M. L. McFarlane (Kootenay East): First, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the mover of this resolution. I feel it should be allowed to go through. This is something to which a great many people in my own district have looked forward for a number of years.

Before entering upon my talk on this matter I should like to congratulate the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation upon the installation of radio stations in the Lake Windermere valley in my area. The residents of this area have been endeavouring over a ten year period to get C.B.C. station programs, programs produced in Canada. Until the installation of the booster last year they were unable to get C.B.C. programs of any kind. This installation was the culmination of many years of effort by boards of trade, chamber of commerce and many other organizations and individuals in the valley. It is fortunate that this government took action at least to provide radio reception, late as it was. It would certainly never have been installed under the previous administration. However, during the period in which the local people in the area were endeavouring to obtain radio reception, television entered the picture. I should also like to mention that at the present time we have a television satellite in the area which will serve a great number of people. We do not know at the present time how many people this will serve, but we feel the coverage will be fairly extensive. However, due to the rocky terrain of the Rocky mountain area in which I live, complete coverage has become impossible with our present facilities.

During the past few months I have been endeavouring to review the work of the C.B.C. and also to study the numerous applications for television services in Canada which have been granted. I find that preference is being given to the larger centres while the rural areas are not getting the consideration that they should be getting. In these days television is not a luxury; it is essential to our way of life, and I suggest that immediate consideration should be given by the minister to the expansion of this television service. A large number of departments and members of parliament have been in receipt of briefs from rural constituencies all over Canada requesting the installation of television satellites to make it possible for people to receive programs without the necessity of installing expensive equipment such as wiring, and having the programs piped in.

I should like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that the installation of television facilities for the larger centres is paid for out of public funds and that the rural taxpayer contributes heavily to these funds. Therefore, I strongly recommend that before any more applications from the urban centres of Canada are approved, consideration should be given to the installation of television programming for the rural areas. My own area of East Kootenay, as I mentioned, is situated in the heart of the Rocky mountains where television and radio reception is unpredictable. Some of our towns are situated in the valleys and others on the sides of the mountains. A few areas are still without these services. Lake Windermere and the Golden area in the upper end of my constituency have been endeavouring for a number of years to obtain this type of service. In the Fernie area we are fortunate, in one or two cases, to be able to receive programs from the United States, but I think we should develop the distribution of Canadian programs of particular concern and interest to our people. The rural areas are suffering badly from their lack of ability to receive Canadian television.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I am delighted to rise and support this resolution which has been moved by the handsome, capable and industrious member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). Before proceeding I want to compliment the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. McFarlane) for his completely non-partisan approach to this question and his willingness to support a resolution, moved by a member of this group, which has application all across Canada.

Before going further, I wish to bring to the attention of the house the excellent work that has been done by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) on the radio broadcasting committee with particular reference to this problem and its application across Canada. No one can accuse the hon. member for Port Arthur of being parochial in his approach. I say he has a universal approach to this question and, on occasions, almost a cosmic point of view.

This is a serious problem to numbers of small towns in my constituency. For a number of years I have been urging the government to give effect, through the C.B.C., to what is the spirit and purpose of this motion. Although our larger areas are now served by the C.B.C., including the city of Trail, Rossland and adjacent areas, besides Nelson and the surrounding areas, there are still a number of small communities which are denied the opportunity of receiving C.B.C. programs—the news, music, theatre, ballet and all the other interesting television fare provided by the C.B.C. Because the larger centres now have the opportunity to enjoy these programs, there is naturally an increasing demand by these other communities for service. We have an area on the west arm of the Kootenay lake which includes Balfour, Procter, Ainsworth, Kaslo and intermediate points which is not served. We have Boswell, Gray Creek, Crawford Bay, Lardeau and Riondel. We have an area around Castlegar, Edgewood, and a considerable area around Slocan city. Residents of these communities and organizations in these centres have written to me consistently in the last two or three years urging consideration of their needs in this respect. To give the house an indication of the type of letters which have come to me, I should like to put on record a letter I have received from Mr. Cyril F. Fitchett who has been very active in travelling around the mountains with officials of the C.B.C., so that when the officials come in to make surveys there need be no unnecessary amount of travelling on their part. I will read what his letter has to say.

Under date of December 22, 1961 he writes as follows:

> Dear Sir,
> I wish to make a request regarding t.v. reception in this area.
> I would appreciate anything you could do to bring C.B.C. television to this district. Unfortunately we are unable to receive any signal from C.B.C. or U.S.A. outlets. I feel we are missing an important part of Canadian life with regard to education, sports, world affairs and drama, in which my wife is particularly interested. She has had, on several occasions, notices mailed to her from C.B.C. t.v. announcing forthcoming drama events and in order to view them we have to drive 20 miles to Nelson, our nearest centre, and impose upon friends. I believe a repeater station is being installed in the Cranbrook area this coming year. Would it be possible to have something similar to serve the people of the Kootenays?
> The newly installed radio repeater station at Procter is a great improvement to our reception and I wish to thank you for your help in this regard and for any help you may be able to give us with t.v. service.
> Wishing you and your family a happy new year,—

—and so on.

I mention that because it indicates the interest in the C.B.C. and the desire to obtain service. What this gentleman says is repeated in dozens of letters from people who appreciate the low power relay transmitter station for radio which was recently installed and would now like to receive C.B.C. service.

I have taken up this matter with the minister and discussed it with him on a number of occasions. He has been very sympathetic to the problem. We understand from the present debate that it is not a local problem. There are numerous areas in Canada which wish to receive a similar service. I discussed it with the vice president of the C.B.C. and I have written him about it. I have also discussed it with regional officers of the corporation in Vancouver, with engineers and technicians who have a thorough understanding of the district. All have expressed sympathy with the circumstances that exist and are anxious to do what they can. To that end surveys have been made as to the population, where the repeater stations could be installed, what the approximate cost would be, and so on.

In that connection I wish to quote from a letter I recently received from Captain W. E. S. Briggs dealing with the policy of the corporation which will facilitate the dissemination of the information. Under date of February 13, 1962 he writes:

Dear Mr. Herridge:

This is in reply to your letter of January 30th, 1962, concerning television service for the electoral district of Kootenay West. I believe that a statement of the policies and regulations governing the corporation's program of extending its television coverage would be of assistance to you.

And it has been.

In carrying out its program of extending television coverage, the corporation has made a survey of all unserved areas in Canada. The policy presently in effect dictates that service will be provided on a priority basis to areas where the greatest number of people can be served at the lowest possible cost. The corporation believes that this policy allows the most economical and equitable use of the public funds involved.

A continuing review of all unserved areas is maintained and the priority lists are adjusted from time to time as new information becomes available. As a result of new information provided by the 1961 d.b.s. census figures, a major review is under way of all the unserved areas in Canada.

In regard to the Kootenay West district, you are aware that the corporation presently owns and operates low power radio transmitters at five locations within the district, at Kaslo, Procter, New Denver, Castlegar and Slocan, which provide the C.B.C. national radio network service to these areas. As part of our continuing coverage expansion, an application for another L.P.R.T. in the Kootenay West electoral district, has been filed with the Department of Transport, to provide service for the community of Nakusp.

In case hon. members do not realize it let me say that is my home village. I notice that the Minister of Justice is listening with much interest. I continue:

The C.B.C. national television service is presently being provided for your district by means of C.B.C. owned and operated television stations at Trail and Nelson. Investigations into the possibility of extending this service to other areas in the district, such as Procter and Balfour, have been conducted by our engineers. At the present time, the area of Castlegar is receiving further detailed engineering investigation and preliminary reports appear encouraging for development of a C.B.C. television station for this community.

The corporation has carefully studied the question of monetary participation with private groups in the development of radio and television stations and has concluded that such a policy could not be successfully adopted.

I might say that the community of the Arrow lakes collected money through the community television society, installed equipment on Saddle mountain and is able to receive C.B.C. television service from Kelowna. Several thousand dollars was collected. This was the result of local effort. Other communities cannot do that because the expenditure is larger and the equipment required more intricate and expensive.

As far as regulations are concerned, I am sure you are conversant with the procedure adhered to by the corporation in establishing broadcasting stations. After preliminary investigation of a particular project, the project must receive approval from the C.B.C. board of directors. Following this, detailed engineering studies are conducted and an application submitted to the Department of Transport. The application would then be forwarded to the board of broadcast governors and heard at a public meeting. If recommendation for approval was forthcoming from the B.B.G., it would go forward to the governor in council, who in turn, assuming approval, would issue an order in council to the Minister of Transport for authorization of the station. Only after receiving authority from the minister to establish a station, can the corporation make any commitments for the provision of network service or the purchase of land or equipment. If the equipment to be provided is in excess of $100,000, an additional order in council would be required.

Very frequently, delays of six to 18 months are encountered in the delivery of network service. Because of the corporation's policy to "buy Canadian" whenever possible, and because the specialized equipment required generally has to be especially fabricated, a delivery schedule of nine to 11 months is usually experienced.

In connection with the possibility of providing television service to the Arrow lakes region, the outlook at present does not appear encouraging. Because of the relatively small concentration of population within any one particular service area, the very rugged terrain and the estimated high cost of network service, the corporation does not presently have any immediate plans to provide television service to this area.

However, as the national service expands and technical advances are made on equipment particularly suited for small coverage areas, the possibility of bringing service to areas such as the Arrow lakes region offer some promise for the future.

I trust that this somewhat detailed description of the policies and regulations governing the corporation's program of extending television coverage, will be of some assistance to you in clarifying inquiries which may arise.

I quoted that rather lengthy letter because I thought it would be of interest to many people including some hon. members who are taking part in this debate to have an understanding of the procedures of the C.B.C. and the difficulties and regulations with respect to "buy Canadian" and so on.

I am pleased to say that since receiving the letter I have heard that the situation is being reviewed in these areas to determine whether there is some way of providing service at a lower cost than was first estimated. I appreciate the attention of the officials to the problem that confronts the people I represent.

Request for Extended T.V. Coverage

I represent a large productive riding the chief industries of which are mining, lumbering and to a lesser extent agriculture. That means that this government or any government receives considerable revenues in the form of taxation. I believe these people are entitled to receive every consideration particularly since they live in isolated places and are producing the raw materials required to maintain our export markets. All these people are anxious to enjoy Canadian news and Canadian programs in general, including music and drama.

In concluding my brief remarks, therefore, I wish to support all other hon. members who have participated in this interesting debate and urge that every consideration be given by this government to the requirements of the persons who live in the outlying districts and small communities. They should be treated as fairly as those who live in the larger centres.

I know another hon. gentleman behind me is very restless and wishes to participate in the debate, so at this point I will conclude my remarks.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like with the consent of the house, to intervene in the debate for just a few minutes. I do so because several hon. members who have spoken come from the province of British Columbia. I refer to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who has just taken his seat, the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. McFarlane) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I recognize the interest of members from the interior portion of British Columbia especially in a resolution such as this one which urges that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should provide greater television facilities to those areas and communities in Canada which are now denied the enjoyment of such services and facilities.

It was indeed in recognition of the fact that there is a lack of television and radio service in the less heavily settled areas of my province, just as is the case in Canada generally, that it was my pleasure shortly after this government took office and after the Broadcasting Act had been amended, to recommend that there be appointed to the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, a person from the interior area of British Columbia.

I should like to pay tribute to Mrs. R. L. Carter of Salmon Arm for the work she has done as a director of the C.B.C. in successfully urging upon the corporation as a director a considerable number of extensions of services. Indeed, I was discussing with her here in Ottawa recently, on the occasion of the last meeting of the C.B.C. board of directors, just what was the situation in British Columbia. She gave me some particulars which I regret I have not here with me. She assured me that in the matter of extension of C.B.C. facilities, our province of British Columbia is certainly on an equal footing with if not ahead of any other province in Canada. I am speaking of the situation over the past four years. I observe my friend the hon. member for Kootenay West nodding agreement.

I know that other members from British Columbia would agree with me that we have been well served in recent years in connection with the extention of facilities. While saying that, however, I recognize the fact that there is still a need to be filled.

I assure my hon. friends and the house that the British Columbia representative on the board of directors of the C.B.C. also recognizes that fact. I can assure at least those members from British Columbia that, in addition to myself, our provincial representative on the board of directors will note with great interest what has been said here as the genuine need for extended services. I shall be glad to make sure that it comes to her attention. I am certain that in it she will find further support for her continuing efforts to persuade her fellow directors of the C.B.C. to meet the very real needs especially of those portions of our province outside of the lower mainland area.

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): I do not wish to take much time of the house as I hope that a vote can be taken on this motion. Part of the riding which I have the honour to represent in this house is well served by the Timmins station. On the other hand, we have very little French programming. Owing to the fact that the microwave system covers the entire riding from east to west, it is felt—and I think it is only fair to do so—that it should be possible, at rather fair cost, to have installed at two different points satellites which would not only serve the communities along the first trans-Canada highway, namely No. 11—we like to boast about it because it was the first trans-Canada highway ever opened—but also the lumber camps which operate nearly the year around. It would also provide French programming through the C.B.C. French network which, after all, would serve a fairly sizeable part of the population of the riding I represent. I understand that the Ontario Northland Railway have in mind the installation of the microwave system from North Bay to Moosonee, or the extension of it right on to Moosonee. There also it would be an improvement for those people in that far distant area to be served by television as well.

I hope that this motion will be considered and voted on before six o'clock.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this debate permits me to raise briefly a problem which has been touched on by other hon. members. It relates to satellite or translator stations in areas which are not properly served by any television station. The problem is pointed up by two areas in my riding, one of which is at Parry Sound town. There the situation was corrected because there was a sufficiently large population to permit a private operator to come in and set up a translator or satellite system economically, to the point where he could justify additional advertising charges by the additional number of homes he could reach. Therefore, in this particular case a private station operator was able to come in and economically instal at his own expense a satellite station for the benefit of the local people.

There is another area which is not quite so fortunate. I refer to Huntsville which is situated on the fringe of at least three stations, none of which gives proper service to a large portion of the area. The problem I wish to mention is this. The private stations can afford to set up a satellite only if they economically can raise their advertising rates to national and international advertisers. If they are trying to give service to a sparsely settled community with perhaps a large area, they hesitate to set up any kind of translator or satellite station because it is not worth their while to do so. If it were a C.B.C. station, the C.B.C. could set up such a satellite, as apparently economic operation is not a primary factor and certainly that is the situation in many locations—but where the primary factor is merely that of providing service to local residents. I believe that some assistance should be given to private television stations in setting up such a satellite. If the private station makes a survey and finds that it cannot do this economically, I think the people who are served by a private station should not suffer because they do not happen to be served by a C.B.C. station. In such a case I think that revenue should not be the prime factor. This is the case in Huntsville where there is no C.B.C. station from which a signal could be received and magnified. The people there have only private stations and none of those at the moment has indicated that it is prepared to go ahead with a satellite.

We are very hopeful that the Barrie station, which is looking into the matter, will eventually do so. However, this did point up one basic difficulty. If a private station has a particular area under its wing it must put in a satellite on an economic basis. On the other hand, if the C.B.C. has an area under its wing it can set up a satellite station at the public expense. Therefore I believe that in such situations some assistance to the private stations should be considered.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) wants to make a few remarks so I will put what I wish to say in brief form. I was very puzzled by the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) in this debate. The gist of them seemed to be that if the lady from Salmon Arm who is on the C.B.C. board of directors is made cognizant of the situation we may get some better development for the future. There is nothing wrong with this, but it would seem to me that it overlooks the part played by a number of members of parliament of all parties, not the least of whom are the hon. member for Churchill and the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays), in bringing personally to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its senior executives what the problem is.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, the plain fact of the matter is that we will get an extension of television into the areas about which all of us have been talking when and if funds are earmarked specifically for this purpose and when the whole concept of per capita and per household is put aside for a planned development over five years, let us say, that will attempt to bring television coverage to all those places that are without it. Frankly, the argument of per capita and per household makes very little sense to the people who do not have television. All they know is that they are taxpayers and that extensions are being made in other parts of the country.

This government took the initiative in allowing private television to develop, and in that regard I simply say that we know and recognize that private television will have no part in providing television to those sectors of the country that are asking for it because there is no money in it for them. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has to do the job, in the main, of bringing television to such areas except in the odd, very rare situation where a private station might be closer to an area that is not served. Given this kind of situation, the decision has to be made by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as to the amount of money that is going to be spent. Quite obviously the corporation will not extend their budget to the degree that hon. members are talking about and would like because the corporation feels that it is too expensive. I suggest that it is the government's role, and this is not interference for after all the treasury board does go over the C.B.C.'s estimates—earmark specifically an increasing amount of funds to do the job that all of us here recognize needs to be done.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help saying that I find it regrettable, and I think other members do also who have this problem of communities without television, that in most parts of Canada television is considered to be a much greater need and more desirable than even welfare legislation, government action with regard to unemployment or government action in developing an area in an economic way. It is rather sad that Canadians as a whole give television that high a rating. But these are the facts of the situation and they constitute one of the reasons why I, along with other members who have big hinterland areas to look after with populations scattered in small nodal points, very much wish and hope that the government will support this resolution and do so to the extent of providing more funds to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation specifically earmarked to extend coverage without this formula business that can drag on and on for years, and under which those of us who are outside the corporation have no real understanding and comprehension when our areas are going to get television.

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a big town in a big district that needs television. There is television all around there but this town does not have it. There is television at the minister's town, Kamloops, and also at Williams Lake, Prince George, Barkerville, which is a suburb, and Wells. I had a letter yesterday from the mayor of Quesnel. These people have been beaten off in their efforts and there has been interference by different parties. The people there want television. They can get it for $12,000 by means of a satellite station but they do not think they should. I have an appointment with Dr. Stewart of the board of broadcast governors to put the claim of these people before him.

Quesnel is one of the oldest towns in British Columbia. It was in existence in the Cariboo in the gold days and it contributed piles of wealth to the government. Therefore I think the people there are entitled to television. There is no reason why they should not have it. They think there is something "screwy" when they cannot get television. This is one of the oldest places in British Columbia. There is no trouble in getting television elsewhere. The people of Kamloops and Prince George have it and I think Quesnel should have it. There is not much more I can say. I cannot pound it out of the government, but Quesnel is one place that should get television.

I have a long letter here and as I have a couple of minutes left I might read some of it. It reads as follows:

Dear Gus:

You probably will not be surprised to hear from me on the subject of television for Quesnel. You are aware that Williams Lake has "live" television which they obtained by extension from the Kamloops television station. To the north, Prince George has television supplied by CKPG, Prince George, B.C.

About two weeks ago I phoned the manager of the Kamloops television station and asked him if he was interested in bringing television to Quesnel. He replied that he was and that it was entirely feasible from an engineering standpoint. The cost to our town would be approximately $12,000. This expenditure would be necessary because of added antenna, etc. to boost it from Williams Lake to Quesnel. I would like to make it clear at this point that Quesnel wants television quite badly, and "live" television such as Kamloops can supply.

However, since then I had occasion to call Kamloops again and between my phone calls CKPG television, Prince George, has contacted Kamloops and asked them if they were interested in bringing television here. Kamloops replied that they were and CKPG replied they were also interested in bringing television here. Prince George further advised Kamloops that the Department of National Defence or the Department of Transport were putting microwave in immediately between Kamloops and Prince George. Because this was under defence it was supposed to be highly secret. However, Gus, I would like you to find out from from either of these departments if this is correct, that is, are they bringing microwave from Kamloops to Prince George and if so when will it be in operation. Once microwave is in, I am told, C.B.C. can get on it and we can have "live" television without any $12,000 cost.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has only enough time left to say who wrote the letter.

Mr. Henderson: This is from the mayor of Quesnel, Alex Fraser.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT LOANS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-49, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton)—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before the adjournment I had expressed the hope that the minister was familiar with what they had been doing in the United States in their small business administration. I had suggested it would be worth while noting certain acts which the administration was empowered to do to assist small businesses.

It is empowered to provide financial counselling and to lend to small business concerns to finance plant construction, conversion or expansion, or to finance the acquisition of equipment, facilities, machinery, supplies, or materials, and to supply such concerns with working capital. It is empowered to lend to groups of small business concerns for the purpose of establishing facilities in and through such corporation to produce or secure raw materials or supplies.

It is empowered to make loans to assist small businesses which have sustained substantial economic injury resulting from drought or excessive rainfall. It is empowered to determine what business enterprises shall be designated "small business" concerns with respect to government procurement, lending, disposal of property, and allocation or distribution of materials, or supplies.

The administration is empowered to certify to government procurement officers as to the productive and financial ability of a small business concern to perform a specific government contract. It is empowered to enter into joint determinations with the procuring agencies to set aside for exclusive award to small business concerns the whole or part of government contracts. It is empowered to consult with other government agencies in connection with their issuance of orders or in the formulation of policies affecting small business concerns.

The administration is empowered to approve small business defence production pools to enter into government prime contracts and sublet their performance to small business concerns. They are further empowered to encourage letting of subcontracts by government prime contractors to small business concerns. They are empowered to provide technical and managerial aids to small business concerns, and to inventory productive facilities of small business concerns. They are empowered to consult with government agencies to ensure fair and reasonable treatment for small business concerns.

It is empowered to ascertain and co-ordinate the means whereby the productive capacity of small business concerns can be most effectively utilized.

It is empowered to make grants to state governments, state chartered development credit or finance corporations, colleges, universities, and schools of business, engineering, commerce, or agriculture for studies, research and counselling concerning the managing, financing and operation of small business enterprises.

It is empowered to assist small business concerns to obtain government contracts for research and development. It is empowered to charter and license small business investment companies in order to stimulate and supplement the flow of private equity capital and long term loan funds to small business concerns. It is empowered to make loans to small business investment companies through the purchase of their obligations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are some of the things which the small business administration is empowered to do in the United States to assist small businesses. It includes extensions of credit way beyond the terms provided for in this bill and in the act to which this bill is an amendment. It will be seen that what the Prime Minister said in 1957 and 1958 with regard to the plight of small businesses in Canada, and his proposed remedies, as shown in this measure before the house, fall far short of what was promised by the head of the government at that time.

There is no doubt that this is an area in our economy that demands the attention of government. This government has made a start. It has established a small business branch in the Department of Justice—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Justice?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Rather, in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That shows how much you know about it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There speaks the Solon from Notre Dame de Grace who wandered into my constituency on Friday last and thereby ensured my re-election, for which I thank him very sincerely.

This small business branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce certainly represents a structure that is far short of what the Prime Minister told us his party would do if it were given an opportunity to form a government. Certainly what the government is doing in this measure falls far short of the requests that were made of the government on September 4, 1958, when a delegation representing the distributive trades advisory committee of Canada, a body which represents the retail, wholesale and manufacturing section of small business, approached the government. It falls far short of what they asked the government to do, and what they asked the government to do is not represented by any substantial means in the amendment that is before the house.

This delegation defined a small business as "one with a limited investment that is independently owned and/or employing few people with relatively small sales". The statistics that they produced are relevant to the bill now before us. Unfortunately the minister was not able to give us some of the answers to questions put to him by the hon. member for Peterborough. Those questions are not unrelated to some of the statistics produced in the 1951 census of distribution, which shows the nature of the problem that we face if we really are going to do something to assist small business.

This bill is a misnomer. It suggests that this is not only a measure to provide loans to small business, but by the very use of the phrase "small business" it suggests that the government is embarking upon a wide policy something like that which has been in vogue in the United States now for some time.

But I say the problem in Canada can be ascertained by an examination of the number of retail stores, the number of wholesalers and the number of manufacturers that come within the caption of a small business. We are told that there is one retail store for every 92 inhabitants, one service establishment for every 238 inhabitants, one wholesaler for every 535 inhabitants and one manufacturer for every 378 competitors. We are told that for each wholesaler there are 5.7 retail stores, 2.2 service establishments and 1.4 manufacturers. In all there are some 273,000 business concerns in our country that come under this definition of a small business.

When we recall that this government has provided 3,000 loans totalling some $25 million out of a possible $300 million, we see the inadequacy of the measure now before us. We are told, further, that based on 10 employees or less for retail stores and service establishments, 15 employees or less for wholesalers or manufacturers, 90 per cent in number qualify as small businesses, being approximately 250,000 concerns employing at the peak between 600,000 and 700,000 people, with an aggregate turnover in excess of 30 per cent of all dollar sales; that is $14,404,090,458.

It is partly on these figures that this delegation which called on the government on September 4, 1958 based its claim that small business in Canada was the backbone of our economy. We all recognize that the supermarkets, the discount stores, these corporate enterprises and others provide a challenge and a competition to the small businessman whether he be a wholesaler, a retailer or a manufacturer. If we are going to do something to assist this substantial body of Canadian business people and business institutions, then certainly we have to do more than this government proposes to do in this amendment or what this government has already done in the main bill of which this measure is an amendment.

I note with some interest that in the representations made by this group, known as the distributive trades advisory committee, they asked not only for credit represented by the maximum of $25,000 provided for under this measure, but they asked for other measures to provide needed guidance on many practical problems such as store arrangement, stock control, accounting, advertising and the like. These measures are certainly not provided by this bill or by this government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has had 15 minutes of speaking now to establish some element of relevancy of his remarks—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am now coming to that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —to the clause under discussion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am coming to that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, you did not say that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, I think it was obvious to all except the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is customary to be polite enough to say so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the bill before us has been given second reading and the principle has been approved. It has one clause, and the clause has for its purpose simply the enlargement of a definition in section 2 of the main bill to include within the permissible purposes of loans authorized by the act the relocation of premises.

The hon. member is speaking this evening as though he were debating the main bill; as though it had been introduced. I would respectfully urge, Mr. Chairman, that this wide digression on his part should now be brought to a conclusion and that he should be invited to address his remarks to the one clause now before the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you make any ruling, since I believe this is the first time this particular point has arisen since Your Honour became chairman of committees of the whole house, perhaps I should remind Your Honour of what is generally known as the Howard Green principle as applied to the first clause of a bill, which was insisted upon often and eloquently by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra when he sat on this side of the chamber, when he received very frequently the vocal, and I might even say the noisy and sometimes even the rude support of the hon. member for Eglinton.

The principle that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra enunciated was that in committee, in a rather more informal fashion it had been customary ever since the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra came to this house, which was at the same time as my hon. friend from Essex East, and 10 years before the Minister of Finance came here—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And long before you did—

Mr. Pickersgill: —and long before I did—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and graced this chamber with your great presence.

Mr. Pickersgill: Though I had opportunities of observing the house while the minister was sitting in the city council. As I was saying, we had the minister's—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Your experience is remarkable.

Mr. Pickersgill: —customary interruptions, which are still going on in a muttering fashion. The principle that was enunciated by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra was that, in a rather more informal way the general purpose of the bill was discussed, particularly in bills which were not preceded by resolution, on the first clause. I am sure Your Honour would not wish to choke off a tradition which was enshrined by the hon. gentleman who is the senior member of the house on the treasury benches.

Mr. Deschatelets: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The only tradition that seems to be involved in the present discussion is the one by which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate seeks to run interference for the hon. member for Essex East and delay the proceedings.

Mr. Pickersgill: One must protect the weak.

The Chairman: On the point of order, I am sure that none of the hon. members who have spoken on the point would want the debate to be continued in an irrelevant fashion, and I am sure the purpose of all hon. members is to discuss clause 1 in a relevant manner. I was therefore particularly gratified to hear the hon. member for Essex East say he was just reaching the point of relevancy. I hope he has, and that the discussion will continue along that line.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure that you hear well, but I do not think you heard me make the precise point which Your Honour made a moment ago. I have not admitted for a moment that what I have said was irrelevant—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You were out of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but what I sought to imply was that I was now going to deal with something that was more particularly relevant than what I have thus far dealt with. I am sure the Minister of Finance will agree that I have given useful background material to the particular relevancy I am now about to embark on.

The amendment deals, of course, with the conditions under which there will be an extension of further capital made available to small business, and the method of financing small businesses. The brief presented to the government urging the need for a comprehensive small business administration pointed out that an examination of Dun's Review and Modern Industry for October, 1957, showed that in the United States 12.4 per cent of manufacturers, 9 per cent of wholesalers, 9.6 per cent of retailers and 14.1 per cent of service establishments were being held back in their growth by lack of capital and financing. I propose to apply these percentages to Canadian figures, but before doing so I should like to make reference to what the minister said when he introduced this amendment on September 15 of this year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We have not come to September of this year yet.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of February, I said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister must not think that because I say "September" instead of "February" he has won a point. I expect the Minister of Finance to pay attention to the substance and not to details which are of no consequence.

An hon. Member: What substance?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister said, if I may refer to his memorable words as recorded on page 915 of Hansard:

> From the inception of the act in January 1961 to the end of last December, 2,977 loans amounting to over $25.5 million were made to small business enterprises. Out of total loan disbursements, service businesses accounted for about one half, retail establishments for about one quarter, manufacturers for about one fifth and the remainder of the loans went to wholesalers.

Then he went on to say that the average size of individual loans was $8,000.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Eight thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, $8,600. Then, the total amount lent under this act as of December 31 was $25.5 million. Let us see to what extent these 2,977 loans represent a confrontation of this problem in the context provided for specifically by the credit facilities set out in the main act, and the extent to which they will be expressed in the amendment now before the committee. We are able to do this from the figures given to the government by the delegation which came to see it in 1958. The delegation points out that in Canada there are 151,626 retailers, and that the number needing capital assistance—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, your ruling is being cynically defied by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am making my speech. Is the hon. gentleman rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not know that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member says he is making his speech and, certainly, no one else would claim to be making his speech except the hon. member. But Mr. Chairman, your ruling is being cynically defied. The remarks of the hon. member have no relevance whatever to this enlargement of the purpose of the loans so as to include the relocation of premises. He is going ahead in defiance of your ruling and he is discussing the bill as he might have done when the main act was introduced.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, may I say to the Minister of Finance that if I was thin-skinned and sensitive, which I am not, I would take exception to the word "cynical" which is one way of imputing a motive. But I am not going to ask the minister to withdraw that word, because he makes so many observations which are contrary to our rules that one would be engaged all day in asking him to withdraw. I do not intend to do that. Surely, what I am discussing now is relevant. I am indicating, on the question of expanding credit to small business for the particular purpose the minister has in mind in this amendment, that the hon. gentleman is not meeting the problem. I am addressing myself as relevantly as one can to the situation in this country in that regard, and the way I am doing it is by showing the number of retailers, the number of service stores, the number of wholesalers and the number of manufacturers. The estimated number in these categories who need financial assistance to carry on their operation either in the sense contemplated in this amendment or otherwise is surely relevant. The minister obviously has something which he wants to hide, otherwise he would not continually interrupt me and try to prevent me from making this constructive statement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What about imputing motives now?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): The only way in which this would be relevant would be if the hon. member was alleging that these merchants required assistance to relocate. A few minutes ago the hon. member for Essex East said he was about to embark on a sea of relevance. Well, he has not even laid the keel yet. He has not even started.

The Chairman: I think that at this juncture the hon. member for Essex East is getting fairly close to the item under consideration so I will ask him to continue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank Your Honour for your generous understanding of the position in which I find myself.

I had indicated that according to the distributive trades advisory committee which came to see the government, there were 151,626 retailers in Canada of whom 14,566 needed financial assistance. These are not my figures; these are the figures of the persons engaged in these various categories of small business enterprise who came to see the government to suggest what should be done to help it meet the difficulties facing the proprietors of small businesses in Canada. The number of service stores is given as 58,748, and the delegation says that 8,283 in this group are in need of financial assistance to carry on their enterprises. The number of wholesalers is 26,167 and the number of wholesalers who need assistance is 2,355. The number of manufacturers is 37,021 and the number in need of financial or capital assistance is 4,590. To sum up, this means that there are 273,562 retailers, service store operators, wholesalers and manufacturers in Canada, and of this number 29,794 stand in need, in the judgment of this delegation, of the kind of assistance which in part is being provided in this amendment. When the minister tells us in the face of this actual situation—some 29,000, almost 30,000, needing assistance—that the government has to date been able to provide loans only numbering 2,977 and amounting to only $25.5 millions, I say that the government by these very figures presents the answer to our charge that this particular bill and the companion to which it is an amendment is not even meeting the limited purpose that the measure has in mind of providing for credit to small businesses in certain conditions. This amendment, therefore, affords the opportunity of asking the government either to give to the staff of the small business administration greater assistance to extend the scope of its operations, instead of bringing forward these anaemic bits of amendments—

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think I terminated at an appropriate moment and I hope I have impressed the Minister of Finance with the strong case I have made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has impressed me just about as much as he usually does.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a typically arrogant comment on the part of the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The supreme exponent of arrogance, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who is arrogance personified.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Chairman, after listening to the statistical approach of the hon. member for Essex East I wish to participate in this debate. Rather than adopting a theoretical or statistical approach to the problem I wish to contribute a personal observation as one who since age 15 has participated in the operation of a small business. I do not have either a theoretical or statistical approach to this problem as has the hon. member for Essex East—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At least I have an approach.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): —but rather one based on personal experience, sometimes a painful experience, particularly during the period in which the hon. member for Essex East was a member of the government.

The amendment before us represents an expansion of the scope of the act, a very useful, helpful and desirable expansion. I assume that as this act continues to be used in small business in Canada other amendments may develop and further expansions of the operations of the act may be introduced as I hope they will be. Because of some of the comments made by the hon. member for Essex East during the last 20 minutes I should like to go back to the period during which the government of which he was a member presided over the business operations of this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was a time of prosperity.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): The hon. gentleman says that was in a time of prosperity, but I say it was in a time of restriction, restraint and failure.

Mr. Flynn: You did nothing.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): During that time I was a vice president of the British Columbia tobacco and candy jobbers association. The association sent resolutions and appeals, resolutions and appeals, year after year to the government then in office only to have them completely ignored. Nothing was done and no help was forthcoming. No assistance whatever was provided.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): And yet the hon. member for Essex East blithely rises in this chamber and says that the present government should be doing more.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because your party made promises.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): How can he say this when during all the time the government of which he was a member was in office nothing was done by that administration. If he or the government of which he was a member had acted during that period a great many men and women in Canada who now work for large corporations might have been able to continue in their own business. They might have survived if they had received assistance at the time they really needed it. If there had been available benefits such as those available under this act in the years prior to 1957, many businesses not now in existence would still be in operation because they would have had available to them the required credit for capital expansion and equipment purchases that would have assisted them in competing on a more equitable basis with the large corporations against which they were competing.

This is not a figment of the imagination. This is a thing that is known to small businessmen across Canada. Perhaps there is more the government can do in this area. That may be, but at least more is being done now than was done over a period of many years. Certainly nothing was done by the government in office prior to the 1957 election. As I explained, I speak not in a theoretical way but as one who has participated in small business for most of his adult years.

I know there was nowhere to turn in the years prior to 1957. No act such as this was available. There was no directorate under the Department of Trade and Commerce to which small businessmen could have turned for expert advice and service.

Mr. Montgomery: There was no sympathy forthcoming from the government either.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): No, there was no sympathy forthcoming from the previous administration. It may be said there was not even a lack of sympathy on the part of the previous administration but merely a lack of awareness of the very existence of small business. We were too small to be bothered with. As a matter of fact, my family's business began in the year 1935. It was established at a time when certain measures existed introduced by a previous Conservative government, which measures even in those difficult days after 1935 provided an opportunity to small firms such as the wholesale firm my family operates to compete against chain merchants and chain wholesalers, against very large corporations.

Those protections existed for a few years and then gradually the erosion began. Lost were the opportunities to sell merchandise at what are now termed protected prices. This is something that is looked upon with scorn by many people in the country who have never been in business. Under the Conservative government the feeling is at least that a merchant, however large or small, is entitled to a fair return on the sale of his merchandise. It is felt that a merchant should have an opportunity to compete with those with access to immense capital, who can exist through a period of price decline with respect to certain articles or certain types of merchandise, who can ride out the difficulty caused by lack of profit, in the meantime swallowing up their small competitors. Prior to 1935 and for a short time afterwards these protections existed for the small merchant. Under the Liberal administration they were removed entirely. In my own field of business I watched my friends succumbing to the difficulties with which they were confronted—

The Chairman: Order. I must warn the hon. member that he seems to be wandering far afield from the clause under consideration. I trust the hon. gentleman will relate his remarks to this clause of the bill which is limited in its scope. Therefore the discussion must also be limited inasmuch as it must bear directly on clause 1.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance did not object.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I apologize, Mr. Chairman. I allowed myself to stray down the path established by the hon. member of Essex East. I have no hope of overcoming him but I shall now return to the point.

[Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke).]

This amendment provides a further useful expansion of the scope of the act. As I said, other amendments may come in time but meanwhile this will meet an essential need, and I believe during the months to come will provide many more small merchants and businessmen with the opportunity of taking advantage of the legislation, thus contributing even more to the stability and growth of the economy of the districts and towns in which they operate.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make additional extended remarks at this point but I wish to ask one or two questions of the minister. In view of the fact that we have no way of knowing the reasons for the rejection of many people who would appear to come within the legislation, I should like to know where the idea came from for the expansion of this measure which was foreshadowed in the speech from the throne. Who brought this forward? Was it the chambers of commerce or the bankers themselves? Who saw this as a large extension of opportunity under this legislation?

Would the minister also tell us to what extent this amendment will increase the amount which it is possible to borrow through the banks over the next year or so?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment did not come about in the way indicated in the jaundiced approach of the hon. member. It came about through experience with certain persons who had applied for loans for this particular purpose of relocating premises which caused an examination of this question to be made in terms of the existing legislation. That is how the matter came about.

The first view of the act taken was that the terms were broad enough to permit loans to be guaranteed for the purpose of relocating premises. On taking legal opinion on the question, however, the advice was given that the terms of the act were not broad enough to cover that particular type of business outlay. As the desirability of extending the act to permit extension of credit in such cases was in the view of the government very clear, in aid of small business the government decided to place this amendment before the house.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, any jaundice which was seen in that question was certainly placed there by the minister. I was just asking where the idea came from.

The second part of my question related to the extent to which the minister expects an increase in borrowing. Does he expect it will be 10, 15 or 20 per cent or more?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No one can make such an estimate, Mr. Chairman. We do know that there are such cases. How many cases there will be and how many loans will be made in such cases, no one can state precisely.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I regret very much having to place on record the view that it is most obvious that the minister's memory is very short indeed.

At the time when he first introduced the bill it was our group which advocated that the bill ought to include the purchase of new premises or the relocation of existing premises; and the government went to great lengths, including the minister, to explain to the house why this was not possible. He now tells the house that at the time the bill was introduced into this House of Commons it was anticipated by the government that the bill would cover incidents of this kind. I find it hard to believe that the minister's memory would be that short.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member has any occasion to cite anything that was said in the course of the debates on this measure a year ago, I suggest that he read extracts from Hansard in order to establish his point. The point that was raised at different times during the debate—and I do not know what relevance this may have to the present item—concerned loans for the purpose of acquiring premises and particularly to provide working capital. The purpose of the bill was not—and this was said repeatedly during the course of that discussion—to provide or to guarantee loans for the purpose of providing working capital. That is a different matter altogether from what is now before us.

Mr. Herridge: I have a very few brief remarks to make and they are somewhat relevant to this amendment. I do not take the same gloomy approach as that taken by the hon. member for Essex East. I remember that for years the small business interests urged the government of the day to pass legislation of this kind. We must recognize the fact that we have an act. However, I think it is our responsibility to improve the legislation from experience. It is in that spirit that I wish to offer one or two suggestions. I have talked to small business people and to bank managers about the operation of the bill. Although I am normally a backwoodsman, I discuss these things with my constituents. I suggest that in some cases bank managers require some instruction as to the spirit and purpose of the act. I think some medium should be found for getting this information out to the bank managers, possibly through the head offices of the banks. I think that situation also needs investigation by the small business branch.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member whether he has not noticed a substantial improvement in this respect since the early days when the legislation was in effect? I agree with him that in the early days bank managers, or at least many of them, were not acquainted with the new instructions. It took time for that acquaintance to develop. However, according to my observation and the representations that have been made to me, that stage has been passed and the legislation is now operating relatively smoothly.

Mr. Herridge: The minister is quite correct. There has been an improvement. However, I think there is still room for improvement and I do not think that point should be overlooked. Then, in order for the department or the small business branch to be well informed as to the operation of the act, I think there should be something more than just a statistical report from the bank managers or from the banks to the department. I think the branch should ask for suggestions and some report that would cover their experience where the legislation fails here and there to meet certain situations. I think those reports should be under continuous scrutiny by the small business branch, and that matters of importance should be brought to the attention of the minister. Then I think the recommendation of the banks as a result of the reports of their managers and the recommendations of the small business branch should be considered by the minister, and that annually we should have a somewhat fuller report of the operations under the act, not just a statistical report giving the number of loans, the bare figures. I think we should have a report which gives us a fairly clear picture of how the act has functioned throughout the year and even recommendtaions as to how it may be improved.

Mr. McMillan: I was interested in the words of the speech from the throne where it states:

> Other measures which will help to enlarge employment by stimulating economic activity will include a bill to increase the total amount of financing of exports which can be undertaken by the export credits insurance corporation and an amendment to broaden the scope of the Small Businesses Loans Act.

I think small businesses might be expected to get something more from this amendment. I suggest that this amendment is a broadening of the scope in a most restrictive degree. The amendment can of necessity help very few businesses. After all, there are very few businesses that would wish to move their offices or some other part of their plant. I admit that in a few cases some businesses might get help. However, in the over-all picture, there will be no help or new enlargement of credit facilities to small businesses in general. The speech from the throne states that this amendment will help to enlarge employment. If this is so, I should like to ask the minister whether he has made any calculation in this respect. I think he should be able to do that. The Financial Post of January 27, 1962, had this to say:

Three basic changes in the Small Businesses Loans Act are planned by the government—

I think small business expected this. The Financial Post asserts that this was the meaning of the announcement in the speech from the throne that small business would be helped by these amendments. Then it goes on to state that the act was not nearly so effective as was announced here in the house when the government introduced it in November and December of 1960.

They suggested three measures that might be taken to help small businesses in connection with this act. For instance, they suggested that there should be an increase in the loan limit which at the present time stands at $25,000.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, we had these irrelevancies this afternoon. They have been repeated now for the third time. Can we not confine ourselves to the clause now under consideration?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I will become relevant. The minister should be able to tell us how much money he expects to put out under this amendment. Previously, when he put it at $300 million he said that within the immediate future $75 million would be taken up. We know that only one third of that amount was taken up in the first year. I think we have the right to have this information and I think I am relevant in asking the minister at this time how much this particular amendment to this act will increase the loan. I think there is every evidence that business needs help. I will close with this observation. We know that business failures increased by 6.6 per cent this last year. Just in the month of January last business failures among small businesses in Canada increased by 19 per cent over those in January of last year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That fact must have made the hon. member very happy.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the minister this question. In his statement he said that the maximum amount which may be borrowed by a small businessman is $25,000. Perhaps, that is a provision in the basic act. I forget its provisions. However, how does the minister arrive at the figure of $25,000?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What figure of $25,000?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In your statement on February 15 you said that the maximum amount which may be borrowed by a small businessman is $25,000 and the maximum period of repayment runs for 10 years. How was the figure of $25,000 arrived at?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member will take the trouble to read the original act he will find that is the maximum loan provided by the act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My question is, how did the minister arrive at that figure? Why is that figure set as the maximum amount that may be borrowed?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think that the question raised by the hon. member for Essex East is particularly relevant because we know that the Prime Minister of this country went across Canada in 1957 and made a great number of promises. I am not going to get into the so-called numbers game with respect to how many have been kept, but certainly one of the promises he made was that he would provide for small businesses laws similar to those that were available to small businesses in the United States. I find that this is a very puny amendment to the act because the Prime Minister said at Campbellton, N.B. on May 4, 1957 that he would fashion his small business assistance act upon that of the United States. He said the same thing in Brockville, that action similar to that followed in the United States should be taken in Canada, and so on. I could give many other examples of what he put before the electorate in 1957.

All we got in 1958 was the setting up of the small business branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and it was not until December of 1960 that the Small Businesses Loans Act was introduced. That falls far short of what we know has been available for some years in the United States. In that country even in 1958 they increased the lending authority for a single loan under their small business administration act to $350,000 from $250,000.

There are many other items to which reference could be made. I think particularly of the fact that in the United States legislation there is a maximum rate of interest.

There is no maximum rate of interest in our legislation and it is not provided for in this amendment.

The Chairman: Order. I have been following the hon. member very closely in the hope he would get down to clause 1 of the bill, but he is straying off onto another subject and I would ask him—

Mr. Benidickson: I am saying that clause 1 falls short.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask him to discuss clause 1 of the bill.

Mr. Benidickson: I am discussing clause 1 and I am saying that, having regard to the promises made, it falls far short of what should be in clause 1 because there is no fixed rate of interest. After we conclude the debate on this subject we are going to deal with legislation amending another act, and I am sure the government is going to boast that lending under that act has increased quite impressively. I want to point out to the minister that under that act, which is similar to this one, farmers can go to commercial banks and get loans at a fixed rate of interest that is lower than the normal rate.

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member will admit that he is now embarking on the discussion of something else which appears on the order paper and is not discussing the matter that is before the committee. I am sure he will want to co-operate with the Chair so that clause 1 may be considered and nothing else.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, having regard to the wording of the speech from the throne that this measure has something to do with increasing employment and jobs, questions have been asked the minister time and again with regard to the extent to which he thinks this amendment will actually increase jobs. When the original legislation was introduced, with its definitions of entitlement, there was a great deal of fanfare that $300 million of new credit was being offered to the Canadian public. That was in 1960, three years after certain promises had been made; but even in December, 1960 the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance said that under the legislation as presented to us—we now have an amendment to enlarge the opportunities of borrowing—$300 million of additional credit would be available over a period of three years.

We have had 14 months or so of experience under the act and the total amount lent has been $25 million. What liberality is provided under the amendment now before us? What acceleration is likely to follow if we pass this amendment? When the act was first introduced it was talked about as a $300 million credit measure, but after 14 months only $25 million of credit has been advanced under the restrictive principles of the act. What is likely to be the enlarged volume of credit under the amendment that we have before us?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have already indicated that no one can make a precise estimate. We have had enough reason to think that there are a number of cases of this kind and we felt this amendment was important enough to be passed by the house.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would be wholeheartedly in agreement with the proposed amendment if there was any assurance or indication from the minister that it would do anything for anyone. We know that the Small Businesses Loans Act has not provided for the business people of this country the opportunity they had hoped to have, and certainly I do not think that the organizations representing the small business people of this country have considered this to be a major amendment when making their annual presentations or one that would warrant the fuss that was raised when it was first introduced this session.

I think there are ways that we can do something. I do not really think that all businesses want to move from the south side of the street to the north side or from the downtown section to the suburbs. I do not think that is necessarily so at all.

An hon. Member: Yes, it is.

Mr. Peters: It may be so in some areas, but I find that development organizations will usually go into the suburbs and build new businesses and they do not particularly ask for government aid. Certainly the pittance that is involved in this amendment would not cover a major-sized suburban development in the hon. member's riding. No doubt he has some subdivisions and the money involved in the small businesses established in those subdivisions would probably be more than double the amount the government is prepared to make available to all small businesses in Canada.

Mr. Henderson: What do you know about running a store?

Mr. Peters: If I were in the business of running a store—

Mr. Henderson: I was.

Mr. Peters: —I would certainly look for more co-operation from governments, particularly this government, than is provided under this amendment. The original act had some merit. We supported it because we thought it was going to do something, but I should like the minister to stand up and tell us why only $25 million has been advanced under the act when a considerably larger amount was authorized. Why has it not been taken advantage of? Why is the whole $300 million not in circulation at the present time? I think I know the answer.

An hon. Member: Nationalize it.

Mr. Peters: It is a very simple answer, the same answer that has been used in every other case including loans made to farmers and loans made to fishermen, and it involves the interest rate. I believe I am in order and I want to move an amendment to the section as follows:

That clause 1 be amended by deleting the semi-colon at the end thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"and any such loan under this act shall bear an interest rate of not more than 5 per cent per annum simple interest:"

I believe this amendment will do a lot to enable businessmen, even under this section, to move from one side of the street to the other; or what is probably more in keeping with modern business practice, to move from downtown areas out into the suburbs. I believe this simple amendment will do more to help extend small business loans to the business community than will the first part of this particular clause.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Obviously this amendment is out of order because it is not relevant to the subparagraph which purports to amend the paragraph relating to the definition of "business improvement loan". The amending bill simply proposes to add certain words regarding the possible construction or purchase of alternative premises. The amendment proposed by the hon. member is clearly out of order.

Mr. Howard: If I may reply to the point raised by the minister, it is under section 2 where there is set out certain definitions of what is a "business improvement loan". That is in paragraph (d) which is sought to be amended by the bill now before the house. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming merely clarifies further what is a business loan by referring to the rate of interest which will be applicable to it. I contend it is completely in order and has happened on other occasions.

The Chairman: I think the rule of relevancy applies to any amendment which is proposed to clause 1, as it also applies to the discussion, and I see that in Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 281, the citation 394 reads:

The principle or relevancy in an amendment governs every proposed resolution—

[Mr. Peters.]

I think it is quite clear from what I read in the amendment that the amendment must be ruled out of order because of irrelevancy.

Mr. Peters: I appeal your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Sheer obstruction.

An hon. Member: Is that done?

Mr. Regier: It has been done before by a man who used a flag.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

Mr. Speaker, in committee of the whole when clause (1) of Bill C-49, an act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act was being considered, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) moved an amendment as follows:

That clause 1 be amended by deleting the semi-colon at the end thereof and by substituting therefor the following: "and any such loan under this act shall bear an interest rate of not more than 5 per cent per annum simple interest."

I ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that, as the amendment went beyond the scope of the bill as approved by the house on second reading, it was irrelevant to the bill. Whereupon the hon. member for Timiskaming appealed to the house from this decision.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a ruling of the chairman of the committee of the whole who has reported that in committee of the whole when clause 1 of Bill C-49, an act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act was being considered, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) moved an amendment as follows: "That clause 1 be amended by deleting the semi-colon at the end thereof and by substituting therefor the following: "and any such loan under this act shall bear an interest rate of not more than 5 per cent per anum simple interest."

The chairman ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that the amendment went beyond the scope of the bill as approved by the house on second reading and was irrelevant to the bill. Whereupon the hon. member for Timiskaming appealed to the house from this decision.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

And the house having resumed in committee:

On clause 1.

Mr. Chevrier: While we on this side of the house voted to uphold your ruling, Mr. Chairman, because we were of the opinion that your ruling was the correct one, none the less we were in favour of the principle of the amendment and we should have supported it had it been in order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Laurier has been in the house long enough to know that those remarks of his were entirely out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to discuss the point of order with the hon. and learned member who seems to know everything about the rules but who does not know them nearly as well as he thinks he does. I submit with deference that I was in order in making the statement I did at the time I did.

Mr. Regier: As you have graciously allowed the hon. member who has just resumed his seat to explain his vote, I also should be entitled to say that we voted as we did because we thought that a government guarantee ought to be worth something—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: I think this discussion as to why certain members voted in a certain way is irrelevant and I trust that if the hon. member wishes to continue he will discuss the first clause of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before clause 1 carries, I am sure it will be in order—

An hon. Member: No, it would not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Some kind member over there behind the government front bench suggests that my question would not be in order before it has even been heard. He goes even further than the Minister of Finance, who usually listens to the first half of the sentence before saying it is wrong.

Mr. Benidickson: He usually says "rubbish".

Mr. Pickersgill: I was rising to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government has in fact given any consideration to the point which has been made several times in this debate that these loans, which are made with a limited government guarantee, should bear a lower rate of interest than loans made without a government guarantee—a provision which exists in two similar pieces of legislation which we are to consider later this evening. I should like the minister, if he can, to tell us any reason why this is not being done.

Mr. Regier: On a point of order, I believe the house has just decided that matter and recorded its opinion as to whether there ought to be a limit imposed on the interest rates.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Regier: I believe that after an expression of opinion of that kind the hon. member's remarks are not in order. He is now attempting to apologize for the vote cast by the Liberal party.

Mr. Pickersgill: I presume I may speak on that point of order.

The Chairman: As far as the point of order is concerned, the Chair is not disposed to consider it further. I do not think it was validly taken. At the same time, the rules of relevancy still apply and I trust the hon. member's remarks will be confined to the item under consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I had concluded the question I was putting to the minister but the last few words were somewhat interrupted by the hon. member's point of order. It was whether in putting this amendment forward the government had given consideration to the advisability of making an express provision at the same time that the rate of interest on these guaranteed loans would be in fact lower than the rate of interest on commercial loans which bore no government guarantee.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the minister will reply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is a perfectly legitimate question. We are not dealing with a decision that has already been taken. The hon. gentleman simply asked the Minister of Finance whether he has given any consideration to lowering the rate of interest which it is proposed to charge in this situation, providing in consequence consistency with the provisions of interest in legislation to be later introduced. Has the minister given consideration to that? That is the question. Surely this committee is entitled to an answer.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, we just cannot be called to order without some explanation. A question has been put to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Benidickson: Closure.

The Chairman: I shall be glad to furnish the hon. member with an explanation. The amendment that was proposed previously was ruled out of order because it went beyond the scope of the bill and also was irrelevant to the clause under consideration. I would say the same reasons apply to the question that the hon. member is asking the minister.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will permit me I would say this. Mr. Chairman, would you consider me out of order if I were to ask the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —if he would give consideration, having in mind this evening's discussion, to bringing in an amendment to the act to which this bill is an amendment, to provide for a rate of interest that would meet the principle of the amendment, a principle which we in the opposition support. That question is certainly in order and I thank Your Honour for saying it is in order. I ask the Minister of Finance if he will give an answer to that question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it will be a long time before I bring in an amendment to this legislation unless it is strictly necessary in the light of the sheer obstruction offered by the official opposition tonight and their shilly-shallying over the stand they took a moment ago on the appeal from your ruling.

Mr. Benidickson: The retail merchants will be interested in that comment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. This is not the first time the Minister of Finance has made remarks to which we take strong exception. The remark the minister made earlier this evening to the hon. member for Welland—

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am now speaking on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is a question of privilege. The minister used the word "obstruction".

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. I suggest to the hon. member for Essex East that if he has a question of privilege he should raise it, but I urge that in so doing he refrain from bringing up matters that have already been disposed of by the house and which should have been raised previously, not now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I made no remark that warranted that observation. I am simply saying that the Minister of Finance made an accusation against hon. members of this house which he should withdraw.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the minister said that what we in the official opposition are doing tonight is obstructing this measure, because we have expressed views that the minister does not like. Because we have sought to improve this bill is no justification for the minister saying that we are engaging in a process of obstruction. We supported Your Honour in the ruling made a moment ago and I ask you now to request the Minister of Finance to withdraw that unseemly remark.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: I do not think that the expression used by the Minister of Finance can be termed unparliamentary. The charge of obstruction is one that is made constantly in this house on one side or the other. Now that the hon. gentleman has raised the point and expressed his viewpoint on it I believe the question should now be closed. I now ask whether clause 1 will carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course hon. members opposite can howl us down if they want to. I was rising on a point of order. I understand Your Honour's ruling to be that it is perfectly proper for one hon. member to accuse another hon. member of obstruction and that that is quite parliamentary. It seems to me that this is such a departure from previous rulings in the house, sir, that it ought to be underlined and recorded as a new departure in this house.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking to a point of order.

Mr. Flynn: —the hon. member is discussing your ruling and that is completely out of order.

The Chairman: I would say in answer to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that the Chair does not condone obstruction or anything like it. But this is an expression that is used from time to time. The circumstances in which the expression is used are not such as to justify my requesting the minister to withdraw that particular expression at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish to say this, Mr. Chairman. You say you do not wish to condone obstruction. I simply wish to say to you with great respect, sir, that if there has been any obstruction tonight it has been on the part of the uncommunicative, pouty Minister of Finance who is obviously angered because we in the official opposition have taken issue with some features of this bill.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Pompous Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, Mr. Chairman, the minister says I am pompous. Let me say to him that I would rather be pompous than a pouter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You succeed in being both.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is trying to impose closure.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I think it is important to record in Hansard the following sentence to be found in May's sixteenth edition at page 459:

> A charge that a member has obstructed the business of the house, or that a speech is an abuse of the rules of the house is not out of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We decided that a long time ago.

An hon. Member: Two flag Jack.

Mr. Pigeon: It is six now.

The Chairman: Now that we have disposed of various points of order it would be of advantage to hon. members to sit down and hear the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: I rise merely to say it is obvious this evening that the Liberal party has extended its principle of two flags and two policies to everything that comes on the floor of this house. Obviously the Liberals desire to appear to be in favour of something and yet against it, depending on which way the wind blows.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Mr. Flynn: Obstruction.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Flynn: You are not the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. He was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: I beg your pardon. I yield to my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Hurray.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Who is obstructing now? The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate should apologize to the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, before the clause carries I wish to repeat a question which I put to the minister on second reading.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is futile to do so. You will not get an answer.

Mr. Carter: I would ask the minister whether he could give the committee a breakdown by provinces of the aggregate of loans of $25.5 million?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will be glad to send the hon. member a breakdown.

Mr. Pickersgill: Get up and answer like a man.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister should not nod. Hansard does not record a nod or any other unspoken gesture.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: Is the hon. member going to receive an answer?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo asked a question of the minister. The minister in reply said he would send the information to the hon. gentleman. Surely the minister has the information now. I ask the minister to let us all have it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The whole committee is entitled to the information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Such reticence.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the figures are as follows: British Columbia, $3,324,196.25; Alberta, $2,138,187.85—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not so fast, now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —Saskatchewan, $1,537,497.01; Manitoba, $1,230,264.35—

Some hon. Members: Faster.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —Ontario, $8,056,-142.15; Quebec, $7,372,527.45—

Mr. Bourget: This is a farce.

Mr. Habel: The minister is laughing at parliament.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —New Brunswick, $686,000.55; Nova Scotia, $841,495.00; Prince Edward Island, $204,332.80; Newfoundland, $191,626.00. Total, $25,582,269.41.

Mr. Howard: I have a question for the minister, Mr. Chairman. When the minister was speaking I did not quite catch the figure he used in relation to New Brunswick. Did the sum end with 45 cents or was it 55 cents?

Mr. Montgomery: Read Hansard tomorrow.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. Benidickson: I have a question that I think is relevant. We have here an amendment which henceforth will permit loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act to be made under circumstances that involve the construction or purchase of alternative premises where the premises in which the business enterprise is located will cease to be available or suitable for the purpose. Having regard to the fact that we have had this legislation for 13 months I ask the minister this question. At what rate of interest have the loans been made? We have been told that in volume $25 million of loans have been made. Have any loans been made at a rate of interest less than 6 per cent? My next question is this. What is the likely rate of interest that will be applicable for loans or to permit business improvement loans to be made for the construction or purchase of alternative premises?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The loan rate prescribed in the regulations. Practically all of those have been made at 5½ per cent.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Now, by leave.

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO GUARANTEE LOANS, ESTABLISH LIMITS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide for the making of guaranteed loans during the period July 1st, 1962 to June 30th, 1965, and to establish four hundred million dollars as the limit of guaranteed loans that may be made during the new loan period.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act will serve to extend the operations under this legislation for a further period of three years. Briefly, it is proposed to provide for a new lending period beginning on July 1, 1962 and ending on June 30, 1965. It is also proposed to establish a limit of $400 million on the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans which may be made by the banks during the new lending period.

As hon. members are aware, this legislation is designed to make intermediate term credit more readily available to farmers for the purpose of financing a wide variety of capital improvements. To this end the act authorizes the government to extend a guarantee of 10 per cent of the farm improvement loans made by any one bank in a lending period. To limit the government's over-all contingent liability, the act establishes a maximum on the total amount of guaranteed farm improvement loans which may be made by all banks during the lending period.

The act came into force in 1945 and was given a life of three years. Subsequently it was extended through the addition of new lending periods. The first extension was made in 1948 and further extensions were made in 1951, 1953, 1956 and most recently in 1959. The current lending period, which is the sixth since the inception of the act, began on April 1, 1959, and runs until June 30, 1962. The maximum on the total principal amount of loans eligible for the 10 per cent guarantee was originally set at $250 million and was increased to $300 million in 1953 and to $400 million in 1961. Originally, the maximum amount which might be borrowed by an individual farmer was set at $3,000; this amount was increased to $4,000 in 1953, to $5,000 in 1956 and to $7,500 in 1959. In reviewing the history of this legislation I might also point out that an amendment was introduced in 1959 to extend the act's coverage to include bee-keepers as eligible borrowers. The two amendments which are now proposed will enable the banks to continue their lending operations under the act for an additional three years.

During the post-war years, technological advance and the mechanization of farms have been dominant features of Canadian agriculture. In this process, farm improvement loans have played a major role by providing the farmer with loan funds, on reasonable terms and conditions, for the purchase of machinery and equipment. For example, in 1960 an amount of $58 million, or considerably more than one half of total farm improvement loans, was used for the acquisition of tractors, combines and hay balers. While the lending facilities under the act have been especially helpful to the farmer for purposes of mechanization, additional borrowing in substantial amounts took place in 1960, as in previous years, and covered a broad range of investment projects including the construction of farm buildings, the purchase of livestock as well as other works for the improvement and development of farms.

The annual report covering the operations under the act for the calendar year 1960 shows that the total amount of loans reached a record level of almost $102 million. There was a further increase in lending during 1961 and for this 12 month period more than 70,000 loans were made amounting to slightly over $108 million. No doubt, if it had not been for the drought in the west, the credit facilities under the Farm Improvement Loans Act would have been used to an even greater extent.

I might add for the purpose of providing a broader perspective on the growth of activities under the act, that during the current lending period from April, 1959 to the end of 1961, over 198,000 loans were made amounting to almost $294 million. This is approximately $55 million, or 23 per cent, higher than the amount borrowed during the whole of the preceding lending period from April, 1956 to March, 1959.

I am sure hon. members will agree that this is a gratifying and enviable record. In this, the co-operation of the banks deserves much credit. Progress under the legislation has, of course, been encouraged by the guarantee on loans as well as the steps taken by the government in recent years to enlarge the scope of the act. I believe the soundness of the operations is attested by the fact that out of total lending of over $1.1 billion since the inception of the act, accumulated losses during this period amounted to roughly $1,356,000 of which some $134,000 has been recovered. Thus, the loss ratio is only slightly in excess of one tenth of one per cent of the total of loans made.

In conclusion, I should like to say that the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act have been of great assistance to Canadian farmers in meeting their credit needs. The government's proposal for extending these operations for a further period of three years will I submit contribute to the well-being of our farm population and will help to ensure the development and improvement of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Benidickson: We are only too happy to agree to the extension for a further three year period of a certain sum of total liability for which the Farm Improvement Loans Act will be available. The minister indicated that the last information in front of members of parliament refers to the calendar year 1960. However, I think some of his statistics embraced some activities in 1961. I hope the minister will indicate when we might have available the report for 1961. For the period of the next three years there will be a guarantee of $400 million rather than the $300 million which was the maximum for the previous three year period.

I have no information whatever as to what happened in 1961. If the minister gave us any statistics relating to 1961 I took it in listening to him that they were included in a three year statistical period. In 1960 the amount of lending was over $100 million. This indicates, of course, how worth while this measure is, which was introduced by a Liberal government as one of many to try to bolster the ordinary economy of the country after the cessation of hostilities that had taken so much of our attention prior to 1945. In 1960 there was a progression of lending to the extent that $101 million was lent under this splendid legislation. It is not intended by this amendment to change the purposes of the original act or to enlarge in any way the opportunities of farmers to borrow. The simple fact is that there has been a rising volume of loans under a stable set of terms. But if $101 million was lent—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member a question? Has he overlooked the fact that the ceiling on individual loans was raised to $7,500 in 1959?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, I am aware of that but I say that this amending legislation does not involve an increase in the ceiling on individual loans. In fact, on two occasions I had the honour of introducing amendments to the act which increased the ceiling.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You did not introduce the $7,500.

Mr. Benidickson: I should say that I did not introduce the bills. In 1953 and 1956 we increased the ceiling on the maximum loan that could be provided. As parliamentary assistant to the then minister of finance I had the honour of piloting the legislation through the house. One additional amendment of that nature was made by the present government in 1959. I acquiesce in that, but there is nothing of that kind in this amendment. I was about to say when I was interrupted that we have no information as to the volume of loans in 1961 unless the minister gives it to us before we pass the resolution, but if in 1960 loans amounted to $101 million is the minister prepared to assure the house that over a three year period $400 million will be adequate?

With the growth that has taken place in farm improvement loans it seems to me that perhaps we should not say that $100 million per year will be sufficient in 1962 or 1963. This legislation, of course, will be operative until June or July of 1965, and I question whether $400 million is adequate. If we have a rate of growth in loans such as we have fortunately experienced, it may become necessary to amend the act again. The amount of losses under this legislation, as the minister has said, has been amazingly low, one tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One half of one per cent.

Mr. Benidickson: One tenth of one per cent. It is just fantastic, and a great deal of good has been done by this legislation which was introduced originally by the government of the late Mr. Mackenzie King.

There is a stipulation in the act itself that, because all loans ultimately are guaranteed by the government, the farmer will not be charged a rate of interest higher than 5 per cent per annum simple interest. Despite the fact that we all appreciate and sympathize with the hazards of farming, I say that when the losses have been one tenth of one per cent on over $1 billion lent since 1945 this indicates that with a government guarantee and with the good judgment exercised by the large number of branches of the commercial banks of Canada something of this kind can be done in other fields.

We have not got a fixed maximum rate of interest in connection with housing loans nor in connection with small business loans which we were discussing a short time ago. With this record under this legislation I say that there is something wrong with the fact that we have not got ceilings on interest rates on loans in connection with other segments of the economy such as small businesses.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the members of this group wholeheartedly support this resolution to extend this very sound legislation which provides for medium and short term agricultural credit. I want to bring to the attention of the house the fact that the success of this legislation since it was first introduced in 1944 is clear evidence of the value of representations to governments from farm organizations. The farm organizations both on a national and a provincial scale have made representations to my knowledge with respect to legislation that would provide this type of credit, and for years those representations were made to no avail. With the very orthodox attitude that prevailed at that time there were certain queries as to the soundness of this type of legislation. I think that its success to date indicates two things, first, the soundness, integrity and industry of the farmers who have applied for loans in view of the very small rate of loss and, second, the soundness of the legislation.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Chairman, I want to draw attention to the interesting changing pattern of these loans. The report I have is for the year 1960. This is March, 1962, and I would comment that it seems to take a long time to get these annual reports before the house. However, this is the last one that we have at hand. In 1960 farm implement loans numbered 52,811 and the amount lent was $79,942,352, a very large total which clearly indicates that the larger percentage of these loans was made for the purchase of machinery in the prairie provinces particularly, where they use high cost machines such as combines and so on. Then we come to farm building loans. They numbered 5,196 and the total amount lent was $10,064,490, a considerably smaller sum. We anticipate that in the years ahead the percentage of loans for building purposes will increase in relation to those for farm machinery.

Livestock loans numbered 7,744 in the amount of $9,624,919. That clearly indicates that the act has been of great value to the producers of livestock. Then we come to an interesting one which I particularly want to draw to the attention of the house. For clearing and breaking lands the number of loans was 608 in the amount of $462,773. In my opinion this is one field in which the act is not being taken advantage of by many farmers to the extent that it could be, because this is relatively a very small amount of loans for a whole year for the purpose of clearing and breaking land. Then we come to improvement and development and miscellaneous purposes. The total since 1945 is $13,360,728.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Herridge: I have just a sentence or two, if the house will permit me.

The Chairman: Is the house agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: I would ask the minister if, in view of the changing patterns, it will be possible to have this act amended so that farmers will be able to borrow under its provisions for forest farm purposes and things of that kind. That is a direction in which there is a demand for at least medium credit and I believe consideration should be given to that demand in relation to other legislation adopted by the house. With those few words I again express our complete support for this measure and our satisfaction that the voice of the farmers was so sound in years past.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what we shall be doing tomorrow and Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we shall take the four resolutions in the name of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will he be here?

Mr. Churchill: We shall take the resolutions relating to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the Crown Corporations and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, in that order. No. 5 will be the resolution in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs dealing with the universal copyright convention. No. 6 will be Bill C-67 relating to a proposed railway line in the Gaspe peninsula, and No. 7 will be Bill C-38 dealing with statistical and other information relating to the affairs of corporations and unions.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister indicate what we shall be doing on Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: I shall indicate that tomorrow.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP—SIXTH MEETING—JOINT PRESS STATEMENT

The Canada-United States interparliamentary group concluded two days of discussion in Ottawa today. Twenty three members of the parliament of Canada and 16 members of the congress of the United States, representing all political parties, participated in the discussions. The Canadian delegation was led by the Speakers of the Senate and House of Commons, the Honourable Mark Drouin and the Honourable Roland Michener. The co-chairmen of the United States delegation were the Honourable George Aiken, senator from Vermont and the Honourable Cornelius Gallagher, member of the House of Representatives for New Jersey, assisted by the Honourable Laurence Curtis, member of the house for Massachusetts.

This was the sixth meeting of the group which held its first and organizational meeting in Washington in January 1959. Since that time, meetings have been held alternately in Canada and the United States. The fifth session was held in Washington in June 1961.

The United States delegates were welcomed at the opening plenary session on Thursday, March 1, by the Prime Minister of Canada, Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker.

Committee meetings were held on both days. One committee discussed defence and foreign policy matters of mutual interest and the other discussed economic and boundary matters of concern to both countries. The agreed summary reports of the two committees which were approved at the final plenary session today are attached.

Members of both delegations and their wives were scheduled to leave Ottawa on Saturday morning for Montreal where they will visit the R.C.A.F. air defence command headquarters and attend a reception given in their honour by his Worship the Mayor and Mrs. Drapeau. While in Montreal the co-chairmen will visit the city hall to sign the golden book. In the evening the members and their wives will attend a national league hockey game. Both delegations will return to their respective capitals on Sunday.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE AND FOREIGN POLICY

Berlin and European Security

The committee opened its discussion with a consideration of the status of Berlin and the problem of European security. The discussion reflected no differences of opinion as to the Canadian and the United States approach to the Berlin situation and the basic position from which any negotiations with the Soviet union should proceed. Major attention, therefore, centred around how the present difficulties arising over Berlin should be approached to reduce tensions with the Soviet union.

The rights accorded the west under the quadripartite arrangements must be maintained. Any search for an accommodation with the Soviet union must take into account three points upon which the west must stand firm—(1) the rights of the people of West Berlin; (2) the rights of the occupying powers to be in the city; and (3) the right of the western powers to have access to the city. Any negotiations with the Soviet union must seek to clarify the latter point so that there will be firm guarantees given the west to have access to the city not only by means of the present four air corridors but also of specific land, rail and water corridors.

The Berlin problem is symptomatic of the many large issues that must be carefully and thoroughly explored, first among the western powers and then with the Soviet union at the diplomatic level before the convocation of a summit conference.

China Policy

The committee noted that since the group's last meeting the question of the admission of a communist Chinese delegation to the United Nations had been considered and had been rejected but that the matter would again confront the next meeting of the general assembly. While neither Canada nor the United States has recognized the Peoples' Republic of China it was reported that there is a body of opinion in Canada which favours Canada granting recognition. There was no disagreement on the need to maintain the integrity of Taiwan but there was some difference of opinion as to the validity of a "two China" policy. The United States members stressed that Taiwan is important to the security of the United States and that the United States administration must always consider the effect of United States recognition on its allies in Southeast Asia, and for these and other reasons the United States opposes such recognition.

There was an extensive discussion of the question of trade with communist China. While there was complete agreement that there should be no trade in strategic goods, the two delegations were not unanimous in their views as to trade in non-strategic commodities. The Canadian members were generally of the opinion that by such trade it was possible to keep open certain avenues of contact and further questioned the effectiveness of a trade blockade in weakening the position of the Peking regime.

The United States members were of the view that trade with communist China in any form serves to bolster the regime and facilitates its expansionist policies. The United States members, therefore, hope that the free world would be able to co-operate with the United States to the end that nothing be done which would strengthen or hasten the development of communist Chinese military capacities.

Defence Production Sharing

The committee noted the mutual military responsibilities of both countries for the common defence of North America and the endeavours under the Canada-United States defence production sharing program to achieve integration of their defence industries development and production capabilities. The continuing Canadian reliance on United States industry for a substantial part of major items of Canadian defence requirements is economically more acceptable in view of the improving trend of United States defence procurement in Canada.

It was recognized that it would probably never be feasible for the United States to obtain from Canada as large a proportion of United States defence equipment needs as the proportion of Canadian requirements which is purchased from United States industry. The increased participation of Canadian industry in United States defence requirements is achieving an improved pattern of cross-border defence procurement and desirable standardization of equipment. However, this increased activity is revealing difficulties preventing Canadian industry from contributing fully and it was agreed that efforts must continue to ensure that defence industries in both countries have equal opportunity to participate in western defence requirements.

The achievements of the defence production sharing program were commended as an outstanding example of the close co-operation which exists between the two countries and which should continue to receive the active support of both governments. It is important that public opinion in both countries recognize that this program is aimed at more efficient utilization of the industrial capacity in both countries to the benefit of mutual defence and economic interests.

Disarmament

The committee, noting that renewed disarmament negotiations are to begin in Geneva on March 14, expressed the hope that these would result in some progress. It also considered that there were some grounds for restrained optimism in this regard. The committee agreed that initially a good basis for the conference's work exists in the agreed statement of principles and that the participation of foreign ministers would be appropriate to lend additional guidance to the opening phase of the negotiations.

The question of United States resumption of nuclear testing was also discussed. The United States members pointed out any resumption would be undertaken reluctantly and in full awareness of the impact that this would have on public opinion even though devices tested would be held to the minimum in point of number and size. On the other hand the progress which the Soviet union has made in the field of nuclear armaments as evidenced by their series of tests last fall might leave the United States no alternative but to resume testing.

Canada and the OAS

The Canadian delegation expressed its appreciation for President Kennedy's pledge of support to Canada should it desire to become a member of the organization of the American states (OAS). The Canadian members explained the various considerations that have made Canada reluctant to assume the obligations of membership at this time.

It was noted by both the Canadian and United States delegates that Canada has displayed an increased interest in Latin American matters. This has been evidenced by the creation of a Latin American division in the Department of External Affairs, the establishment of diplomatic relations with all the Latin American nations, Canadian membership in the United Nations' economic commission on Latin America, and the assignment of observers at important meetings of the OAS.

There was support for Canadian presence at meetings of the OAS and other inter-American organizations. It was also suggested that consideration be given to the appointment of a permanent Canadian observer at the OAS.

Cuba

The committee agreed that a communist Cuba is a serious menace in the western hemisphere which requires careful control and counteraction. It was noted that, as a result of recent policy review, the United States had now terminated all imports from and exports to Cuba with the exception of certain medical supplies. The United States members believed that a similar review and common policy of economic sanctions against Cuba by Canada and all western countries would serve to counter the communist threat. The Canadian delegation recalled that Canada has long since terminated any exports to Cuba of arms, and is rigidly controlling other exports to Cuba and is preventing any re-export of United States goods through Canada. This is a similar policy to that which was recently approved by OAS at Punta del Este.

The committee agreed that the policies of both Canada and the United States must be developed in the light of each country's long-range plans to counter the communist threat.

United Nations Bond Issue.

The committee was unanimous in its support of the United Nations at this difficult juncture in its history. In this connection the committee discussed the method and extent of meeting the United Nations financial obligations arising principally from its efforts to establish peace and security in the Congo. The committee discussed and explored the United Nations proposal to help meet these obligations through the sale of bonds. The failure of many members to meet their assessments has created a financial crisis.

The committee was of the opinion that the United Nations fiscal machinery should be made more efficient and more stringent control should be exercised over financial matters.

REPORT OF THE ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Relations with the Common Market

The committee discussed the broad implications and the effects on Canada and the United States of European developments with particular reference to the United Kingdom's application for membership in the common market. The committee recognized that both Canada and the United States face special problems of trade arising from European regional arrangements. At the request of the Canadian delegation the United States delegation outlined the purpose and scope of new trade legislation now before the United States congress. The Canadian delegation expressed support for expansion of multilateral world trade by such measures as may be agreed upon and Canada's willingness to take a constructive part in this expansion.

Both delegations expressed the view that the commercial and agricultural policies of the common market following negotiation for their application to Canada and the United States should result in a fair and adequate access for the industrial materials, agricultural products and manufactured goods of both countries.

The committee noted the contribution made by the commonwealth and the U.S.A. to world peace and stability.

The Canadian delegation emphasized the significance of traditional commonwealth trade links, including especially free entry into the United Kingdom market and the exchange of preferences. The committee clearly recognized throughout the discussions that it was for the United Kingdom alone to make a decision whether to join the European common market.

It was agreed that Canada and the United States have many common points of view and of interest and that, consequently, in any negotiations and measures undertaken or contemplated by either, this community of interest should be borne in mind.

Columbia River

The Canadian delegation outlined the present situation in Canada with regard to the treaty and pointed out that delay of Canadian ratification was related to differences between the federal government and the government of British Columbia. The Canadian delegation noted that it still remains the policy of the Canadian government to ratify the treaty as soon as possible.

The United States delegation observed that the United States had ratified the treaty and expressed the hope for early ratification by Canada. The United States delegation made reference to the urgent needs of the Pacific northwest for power which would require early decisions to be taken on alternative sources of power.

The Richelieu—Champlain Waterway

The committee took up the question of the Richelieu river—lake Champlain waterway. Such a waterway would cover a route of about 400 miles. It would reduce the water distance between Montreal and New York city by 1,200 miles, and between New York city and great lakes ports by a comparable distance.

The United States delegation outlined the history of this proposal, observing that this has been a water route since the earliest days of North America. The United States delegation also noted significant increases in cargo in past years on lake Champlain, and pointed out that development of the waterway would provide considerably greater access to the St. Lawrence seaway.

It was noted that both governments have proposed a joint submission of the question to the international joint commission.

The committee welcomed the report that this matter will be referred to the international joint commission and expressed the view that the international joint commission should begin a study and submit its recommendations as quickly as possible.

Lumber Trade

The United States delegation noted that recent United States housing legislation has had the effect of increasing the market for lumber in the United States and resulted in the increasing importation of Canadian lumber. As a result the domestic market for United States lumber has been affected. United States shipping legislation (the Jones act) also has had the effect of raising the cost of shipping United States lumber from the Pacific northwest to the eastern seaboard.

There was a frank discussion of the problems outlined by the United States delegation and of the measures which might be taken to alleviate them.

It was apparent that the Canadian lumber industry was not free from problems of competition as well.

Point Roberts

The Canadian delegation outlined the situation that exists at Point Roberts, Whatcom county, Washington, a peninsula crossed by the international boundary (the 49th parallel) isolating the point from the state of Washington. The region is accessible only through Canadian territory or by sea and both countries maintain border crossing points. The area comprises some 5 or 6 square miles and has a permanent population of some 200 people. Point Roberts is a popular residence for Canadians but difficulties are experienced because of the United States immigration regulations.

United States residents of Whatcom county recently urged the relaxation of United States immigration regulations so as to allow of easier entry by Canadian citizens, particularly those seeking to make the area their permanent residence by obviating the necessity of their becoming United States citizens.

The United States delegation pointed out that the highway between Haines and Whitehorse passes through a section of the Yukon territory making it necessary for people using the road to pass through two separate customs and immigration points.

The committee expressed sympathy for any arrangements which would provide for a satisfactory solution of such problems on the border.

Canada-United States Bilateral Air Agreement

The Canadian delegation drew the committee's attention to delays experienced in continuing discussions with the United States on Canadian-United States air transport relations and pointed out that as a result the Canadian authorities were unable to proceed with current studies of regional air traffic requirements in Canada.

The committee agreed that it would welcome an early resumption of negotiations on the bilateral air agreement.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 6, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LICENSING OF LIVE ORAL POLIO VACCINE

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that live oral polio virus vaccine of the Sabin variety has now been licensed under the Food and Drugs Act for use in Canada.

This new vaccine represents another great medical breakthrough and one which may in effect result in the almost complete eradication of paralytic polio in this country. I know that hon. members will take satisfaction, as I do, in the fact that Canada is among the first nations of the world to license all three strains of the vaccine. Our regulations in this regard set a very high standard, and I think it is a tribute to the excellence of Canadian scientists and Canadian producers that full approval has now been possible.

I might say we have taken this step only after long and careful study. There are many special problems associated with a vaccine of this type, and considerable time has been required to solve them. In addition to the information provided by research and field trials in other countries, a good deal of work has been done in Canada, in Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The results of these efforts have confirmed that the Sabin strains of live oral polio virus vaccine are safe for community use in Canada and that they are also valuable immunizing agents.

Because of the really outstanding success achieved with the Salk vaccine and because it is now built into child immunization programs across the country, we do not expect that the oral vaccine will replace the Salk at least at the outset. Rather it will be used as a supplementary or booster dose for the majority of persons who already have been immunized with the Salk, as well as for a primary stimulus for those who have not. In the case of immunized persons, the initial approach is that a single dose of the oral vaccine will be sufficient. Several doses may be necessary for those not previously immunized with Salk.

I might add that evidence to date suggests that the most effective method of using oral vaccine in our present state of knowledge is by community immunization programs. For this reason, and in order to make the best possible use of supplies available, distribution for the time being will be through provincial and federal health authorities.

As in the case of the Salk vaccine, the costs of providing the Sabin vaccine will be shared on a fifty-fifty basis by the federal and provincial governments. Also as was done with the Salk, production in Canada will be handled by the Connaught medical research laboratories of the University of Toronto and the institute of microbiology and hygiene of the University of Montreal.

As I have mentioned, careful preparation has been made for the use of this new weapon against polio, and in view of this I have every confidence that we will achieve a record with the Sabin vaccine that will match our outstanding success with the Salk vaccine in terms of safety and effectiveness.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there will be general satisfaction in the house and throughout the country with the announcement that the department has decided to license three strains of the vaccine of the Sabin variety, which is to be orally administered. It is interesting to note that this does not mean the replacement of the Salk vaccine, in the initial stages at any rate.

It is also a matter of satisfaction that the Connaught laboratories at the University of Toronto and the institute of microbiology at the University of Montreal, under Dr. Armand Frappier, will continue to provide the production of this new orally administered vaccine as they did in the case of the Salk vaccine.

The minister, however, has said nothing about the tests to be employed both at the Connaught laboratories and at the institute of microbiology, as well as in the department here in Ottawa, to make sure that doses of this vaccine meet the standards of safety laid down by the Department of National Health and Welfare in co-operation with the provincial departments of health. The minister will recall that in the case of the Salk vaccine, Canada was privileged to escape some of the abuses and dangers which attended the administration of Salk vaccine in the United States because of the great care which was taken in Canada in testing various batches of the Salk vaccine.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I hope the minister can give the house some assurance that every possible device will be employed in Canada to make sure that doses of this vaccine in this country are tested by the production centres as well as by the department's laboratory here in Ottawa.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Following the oral treatment on the part of the hon. member for Essex East, as opposed to his usual insertion of the needle, I wish to say that this group is pleased that the government has seen fit to take action in order to give Canadians the opportunity to take advantage of the skills of Canadian scientists, manufacturers and technicians for the further protection of their health against disease.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I wonder whether I might be permitted to add one word, Mr. Speaker. The Sabin vaccine will be handled on exactly the same basis as that on which the Salk vaccine was handled, namely on an individual batch release basis, and it will be examined in our laboratory on that basis.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE FUND—REPORTED LOSSES OF RESERVES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it a fact, as suggested in today's Gazette by its financial editor, that the losses of reserves in the exchange fund in January and February have been of such a magnitude that the Minister of Finance has used up all his opportunities for further conversion into Canadian dollars?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is rubbish.

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO PUBLIC HEARINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he inform the house whether the royal commission on banking, which was established in October, 1961, I believe, has held any public hearings yet?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the commission has held a number of private meetings and has organized its work quite extensively. The public hearings are expected to commence quite soon and it is the intention of the commission, I am informed, to hold hearings in different parts of the country.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTING—SUGGESTED APPEAL TO PRESIDENT KENNEDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of press reports that Premier Khrushchev stated today that the United States decision to resume nuclear testing in the atmosphere will inevitably lead to a new Soviet round of tests; and in view of the fact that, as Premier Khrushchev points out, the U.S.A. has always insisted that its nuclear stocks excel those of the U.S.S.R., would the Prime Minister consider appealing to President Kennedy to reconsider his decision which is fraught with peril for all mankind?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government's decision with regard to President Kennedy's announcement of March 2 was set out in my statement of March 3, which was fully reported in the press. I have nothing further to add.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—REPORTED NON-PARTICIPATION OF FRANCE IN CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance that the Prime Minister and his government attach—and rightly so, as do we all—to the 18 power disarmament conference that is to take place on March 14, does he think he can say anything useful with regard to the announcement that France does not propose to participate in the conference?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the manner in which the question was phrased indicated that the hon. gentleman would not expect any direct answer to that question. However, I am sure I express the views of Canadians generally when I say that we still hope France will be able to join with the other 17 members in attending that conference.

LOTTERY

INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. My question has to do with a statement made by the minister at a press conference in Joliette over the week end. Will the minister say whether a federal-provincial conference will be called before the dissolution of parliament in order to discuss an amendment to the Criminal Code in respect of a national or provincial lottery?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, the minister will not say.

Mr. Deschatelets: Another smokescreen.

SHIPPING

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED FAILURE TO CARRY OUT ICEBREAKING AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I regret that I have not been able to give him notice of it, but if he is unable to answer today perhaps he might take the question as notice and reply tomorrow. Has the minister's attention been directed to an editorial in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of February 27, to the effect that the icebreakers of his department are neglecting to carry out an agreement between Canada and Newfoundland to maintain a passage for the William Carson, to the benefit of other ships in various parts of the gulf of St. Lawrence? If so, would the minister care to comment?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the editorial, but I can assure the house that the icebreakers of the Department of Transport are extremely busy at the present time carrying out their duties, which involve giving assistance to Canadian shipping and also giving effect to all agreements and undertakings for which the government is responsible.

TRANSPORT

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO TWINNING OF LOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the government giving consideration to the early twinning of any of the single locks of the Welland ship canal?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of policy and if and when any decision is taken it will be announced in due course.

SPORTS

ADVISORY COUNCIL—EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS DURING CURRENT FISCAL YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare relating to the annual $5 million fund for the national advisory council on fitness. What consideration is the minister giving to the reasoned argument of a member of the council, Mr. Ted Reeve, in last Saturday's Telegram that the funds for the fiscal year 1961-62 should be spent and not allowed to lapse?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have read the article and would simply say that Mr. Reeve is, I believe, unduly pessimistic.

Already three grants recommended by the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport have gone out to organizations with emergency needs. In addition, a recommendation concerning the setting up of a scholarship-fellowship scheme is being developed, and it is our hope that a program agreeable to the provinces will be ready shortly. We are also concerned with the question of direct aid to provincial programs and with the development of fitness research and technical information services. I hope to be able to make an announcement in the near future with regard to these matters. In other words, definite proposals for further outlays under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act during the current fiscal year are going forward with all possible speed.

OLD AGE SECURITY

RETENTION OF INCREASED ALLOWANCES BY DISABLED AND BLIND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur asked whether the consideration to be shown to recipients of war veterans allowances following last month's increase in old age security payments is being shown to those receiving disability and blindness allowances.

Old age pensioners do not also receive assistance under the Blind Persons Act or the Disabled Persons Act, so I assume the hon. member is thinking of a situation where one member of a married couple is over 70 and the other is not. The recent changes in the acts provided for this and made sure that the benefit would actually be received.

As well as increasing the maximum allowance by $10 a month, we increased the permitted income of the couple in federal-provincial sharing programs by more than the corresponding $120 a year. This means, for example, that even though a husband is receiving $10 a month more through his old age security cheque his wife will also receive the extra $10 a month under the Disabled

Persons Act where a federal-provincial agreement has been signed, and a greater income from other sources is also permissible.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S FOOT GUARDS, OTTAWA—FRENCH SPEAKING OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Defence.

In view of the answer he gave yesterday to my question concerning the percentage of French speaking and English speaking officers of the Governor General's Foot Guards, and following the comments given to the press by the colonel indicating that while 50 per cent of the n.c.o.'s are French speaking, only two of the thirty officers are French speaking, does the parliamentary secretary think this proportion of French speaking officers is adequate?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the hon. member for Peterborough asked this question because the commanding officer of the regiment informs me that there are some vacancies to be filled at present among the officers of his regiment and that he would be very pleased to receive applications from qualified French speaking candidates.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): In view of the thought provoking speech of the minister last night before the optometrists in Toronto, in which I detected indications of the minister's delaying tactics—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What about the member's delaying tactics?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —can the minister say when we may expect the report of Chief Justice Hall which would enable the minister to bring down a program of medical care insurance before dissolution of the present parliament?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I thought the hon. member for Essex East would have been better informed as to when I delivered this speech. It was yesterday at noon. I was just wondering whether his own party, which was invited to speak to the optometrists today at noon, would be represented. Apparently the hon. member is not very well informed. In any event, the Hall commission is sitting and will report in due course.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

RESERVE MINES, N.S.—PROTESTS OVER POST OFFICE SITE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received representations from citizens' groups at Reserve Mines, Nova Scotia, to the effect that the proposed location of the new post office is a poor one and is dangerous for children? Will the minister delay construction until an alternative site can be considered?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): This is a repetitious old chestnut that has been thrown around the Commons, first by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and then a few others and now, of course, by the gullible member for Trinity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Walker: There was a protest meeting called against this site, with great advertising, in the town of Reserve Mines, which has a population of 3,000 people, and 18 people turned up. I suppose my hon. friend is acting for the 18. In any event, this matter has been given careful consideration. The site which has been picked is the most popular site, the safest site, and the site that pleases most of the people of Reserve Mines, in spite of the interference of politicians on the other side.

Mr. Hellyer: May I ask a supplementary question on behalf of the minority, even if there are only 18? Has the minister satisfied himself that the site chosen is the best one, and also that it is safe for the population?

Mr. Walker: I shall have to speak French to the hon. member.

INDUSTRY

DOMINION TAR AND CHEMICAL CO.—ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT IN U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, and ask whether he has had an opportunity to look into the question which I posed on Friday, I believe, of last week, having to do with the Dominion Tar and Chemical Company announcing its intention to build a plant in the United Kingdom. Is there a reply to that question?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall have to inquire to find out; I was away myself on Friday. I am now informed that the minister will be here tomorrow and the answer will be given then.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO GUARANTEE LOANS, ESTABLISH LIMITS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, March 5, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton)—Mr. Martineau in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide for the making of guaranteed loans during the period July 1, 1962 to June 30, 1965, and to establish $400 million as the limit of guaranteed loans that may be made during the new loan period.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, concerning the resolution put forward by the Minister of Finance to extend the loan period in the Farm Improvement Loans Act, there are just a few words I should like to say.

The measure has nothing new to offer. Its purpose is simply to extend the period for making loans from July 1, 1962, to June 30, 1965, and to increase the limit of guaranteed loans to $400 million.

It does not bring any real change and contributes nothing to improve the farmer's lot. The situation, for the farmer, remains the same. Nothing is done to provide him with a better income for the good of his family.

Such is the policy of the present government, no general plan to improve conditions for the farmers. Since 1957, confusion has prevailed in our country's farm policy. There is no program, no planning.

The pamphlet called ARDA has often been mentioned. For the past four years, there has been some talk about the establishment of a food bank.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) is out of order. He should not read his notes so fast.

Mr. Boulanger: I should like to say a few words on this point of order. Each time I speak in the house, the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) claims I read my notes. I should like the hon. member to come and take a look at this sheet of paper. I am not in the habit of reading my speeches and I might add that I am not a plagiarist. I wonder if the hon. member knows the meaning of that word.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member's statements are entirely false. He should stop reading and discuss the bill under consideration instead. He should not speak about agriculture in general.

The Chairman: The hon. member has raised two points. With respect to the first one, I think that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska gave a satisfactory explanation. He said that he had some notes to which he was referring, and I have nothing more to say about that. Everything is in order.

As to the second point concerning the relevancy of his remarks, I would ask the hon. member to make an effort to keep within the subject of the resolution.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I had not yet strayed from the subject. I know that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is very touchy because he himself never speaks about agriculture himself, even though he represents an agricultural riding. All he can do is to make interruptions.

Mr. Pigeon: That is entirely false.

Mr. Boulanger: I was dealing with the amendment to the act announced in the resolution, for the purpose of increasing the loans guaranteed by the government. I was making a few comments about this act which will not improve in any way the lot of farmers. Yet, farmers were promised a fair share of the national income. After this government has been in power for five years, farmers have never been worse off than they are today. We had thought that the government would put forward a farm policy likely to increase the farmer's income.

Far from it, instead of helping him, the government sees the farmer going deeper into debt year after year, to the great satisfaction of the Minister of Finance.

And I shall prove what I am saying. The Minister of Finance said the other day that the farmer had borrowed more, in 1961, than in any previous year, and that is true.

Mr. Chairman, since 1957, the farmer has been borrowing more and more. This proves that he is in poor circumstances; and yet, the Minister of Finance boasts that the farmer borrows more and more.

In 1961, the loans totalled 70,000 and reached $108 million; last year, $101 million; in 1959, $98 million; in 1958, $90 million.

In 1957, after the Liberals had been in power for 22 years, farmers had borrowed only $60 million.

The fact that farmers borrow more and more clearly indicates that their situation is getting worse instead of improving.

Mr. Tremblay: On the contrary. They want to borrow money to pay old debts.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) wants to make a speech, I would ask him to wait until I am finished. Besides, it would be the first time that he would speak about agriculture, the second time rather, because the first time he said that the situation of Quebec farmers has been improved, that they are satisfied. That is what prompted the farmers' association—

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I have never said what has just been suggested by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. I stated once that the farmers' situation is excellent now as compared to what it used to be and I am ready to repeat it. Besides, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska should not worry; when I have something to say in this house, I do not need this former undertaker's invitation to speak up.

Mr. Boulanger: I know what the hon. member for Roberval means when he says that he can speak his piece in the house. That is why I should like to quote what he said here.

Mr. Tremblay: Go ahead, my friend.

The Chairman: In my opinion, there is no point in discussing further the question of privilege since it has already been dealt with. It would be useless to insist on that and I feel that the hon. member should continue his remarks on the resolution under consideration.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to abide by your ruling, and I shall not repeat what the hon. member for Roberval has said. But I would ask him just one thing, and that is to keep silent for a few minutes. Then, when I am through, he shall have his chance to speak and I can assure him that I shall listen to him.

An hon. Member: That is too much to ask of him.

Mr. Boulanger: Now, Mr. Chairman, the farmer, as I was saying, has increased his loans from year to year. Nevertheless, as I mentioned a moment ago, he still finds himself in a precarious situation because, among other things, his cost of goods and services has gone up from year to year.

If we examine the figures published in l'Economiste Agricole of December 1961, we find that goods and services bought by farmers had increased, from 1956 to October 1961, from 247.6 to 287.8, a 40 point rise, while the sales price index for the farmers' products had shown but a 7 point increase. That is why the farmer borrows more all the time.

What does the government intend to do to meet the situation? I should like the Minister of Finance to tell us if he feels that the 61 per cent of eastern farmers whose yearly income is less than $2,500 earn enough to support a family of five or six children.

This is the only question I am asking the Minister of Finance. Does he find the $2,500 gross income of 61 per cent of eastern farmers reasonable?

(Text):

Mr. Deschatelets: He does not know the answer.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: I shall expect the answer from the minister when he has an opportunity to take the floor in a few minutes.

We have heard some wonderful promises from our friends and we will probably hear some more before the end of the session.

Mr. Pigeon: Lesage's promises.

Mr. Boulanger: Lesage's promises, yes, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Lesage did make some promises.

The Chairman: It is not in order to discuss here what is done or not done by Mr. Lesage.

An hon. Member: He was asked the question.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, there is a limit to what an hon. member can do. If the hon. member who has the floor is invited to do so, as he was, a while ago by all kinds of interruptions attacking the premier of Quebec, surely, he is entitled to answer the questions directed to him.

The Chairman: The Chair did not hear the interjection. However, even if there was one, it was certainly out of order and I do not think an hon. member could take advantage thereof to start a discussion on an irrelevant matter.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I submit that you should call the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to order, when those on this side of the house are making their views known to the house.

The Chairman: I have done so many times, and I would once again ask all the members not to interrupt. As the hon. member just said, there is no reason for it, and I would ask the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska to remain strictly within the limits of the measure under discussion.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I shall end my remarks by asking the government to let us know its agricultural policy as soon as possible so that farmers, and particularly dairy farmers, may know what to expect up to April, 1963. Besides, that was another promise made by the government, which said that the farmer would know, a year beforehand, where he stood with regard to the sale and price of his agricultural products.

Today, in the dairy industry—

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, the hon. member has been engaged for some time in talking not about this bill at all but about agriculture in general. This is not a debate on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. This is not a debate on agriculture in general. This is a discussion on a resolution contemplating the introduction of a bill to extend one particular statute. This does not give any ground for any hon. member to embark upon a wide ranging discussion on agriculture in general. Surely it is possible to have a debate in relation to the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, the matter before the committee deals with two things. First it deals with the extension of guaranteed loans and, second, it deals with the ceiling on guaranteed loans. My hon. friend has been dealing with loans throughout his speech, and with the effect of those loans upon the income of the farmer. Surely he has a right to do what he is doing. I submit that it is because what the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is saying has struck the government right between the eyes insofar as its program with reference to agriculture is concerned—

The Chairman: Order. I trust the hon. member will not go beyond the point of order which has been raised. He has rightly stated that this is a matter concerning the extension of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the ceiling on loans. When the minister rose to make his point of order the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska was embarking on a discussion of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. In doing so he was definitely out of order, so I would ask him to return to the item under discussion.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to confine my remarks to the item which is now before us. However, I should like to see the same rule applied to the hon. members who will take part in this debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tremblay: We will not talk about the same things.

Mr. Boulanger: The member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) will, no doubt, not talk as I did because his conception of the needs of the farmers differs from mine. I even believe I shall have to go in his riding—

An hon. Member: You will go help him.

Mr. Boulanger: —to explain the present situation in the province of Quebec, more particularly as concerns the dairy industry.

Mr. Chairman, since the Minister of Finance is so sensitive to my remarks on agriculture, I shall not discuss it further; but I shall bring up the subject again, for there is much to say on the matter. In fact, I could spend two or three days dealing with agricultural questions, particularly as concerns the province of Quebec.

I am convinced that the members to my left who are now whispering will have something to feed their thoughts during the next election campaign.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to take part in this discussion because I consider this legislation a great improvement on the act which we had under the former government. The fact which strikes me most, and I am going to prove it—

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot understand.

Mr. Pigeon: —and I shall prove it, Mr. Chairman. When I see the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who, like an outraged maiden, rises on a point of order to defend the Quebec farmers—

Mr. Bourget: Order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. I think it would be preferable for the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) to keep to the resolution before us, as he, indeed, wanted the member who spoke before him to do.

Mr. Bourget: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: I only wanted to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Laurier should not speak on farming. He puts his foot in it every time—

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Pigeon:—and to prove that this government has improved the legislation, I should like to point out that, under the former government—the government of the hon. members for Laurier and Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger)—the maximum loan for farm improvement was, for each farmer in this country, $5,000, whereas this government has increased it to $7,500.

Mr. Boulanger: The farmers did not need any more at the time.

Mr. Pigeon: It is an improvement, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, rose a while ago again like an outraged maiden, to tell the hon. member for Roberval not to interrupt his remarks. Look at him, Mr. Chairman, he is the first to interrupt, to break the rules of this house and to burn what he adored. Be fair not only as regards the rule of this house but also as far as the farmers of this country are concerned. Stop talking nonsense.

Here is another proof, Mr. Chairman, of the way in which farmers were treated. Under the previous government formed by the party to which the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska belongs, the total amount of loans to farmers—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is wandering from the subject under discussion.

The Chairman: I feel that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm deals with the resolution when he discusses the maximum amount of loans, which is relevant to the resolution; but I would ask him to stick to the resolution now under discussion.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what I am doing. I am discussing the resolution mentioned in the order paper of this house concerning loans for farm improvements.

[Mr. Bourget.]

When I say that a maximum loan of $5,000 was granted, under the government of which the hon. member for Laurier was a member, to farmers of this country who wanted to borrow, I am talking about the act related to the legislation now before us, and I join with the farmers to commend the Minister of Finance for having improved the act and having increased the loan to $7,500. That is what I am discussing.

As I said a moment ago, under the previous government of the hon. members for Laurier and Drummond-Arthabaska, the maximum set aside for those loans was $300 million, and the Minister of Finance has now raised that maximum to $400 million. It is certainly an improvement over what we had then.

I note from the statistics that the farm revenue in this country was good last year and that economists forecast an excellent year for 1962. And if a decrease is expected in the province of Quebec, it is perhaps due to the provincial government, because there is a decline in the province of Quebec under the present administration which is fouling up farm legislation in that province and refusing to give the Montreal area a school for advanced studies in agriculture.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wishes to speak about agricultural colleges, or about farm revenues, I am quite prepared to talk about it also.

An hon. Member: There is no point of order.

The Chairman: I hope that hon. members will not be too sensitive because everyone will have the opportunity to speak on the resolution. However, I wish to remind the hon. member who has the floor to keep to the question before us. I feel that he has done so quite successfully until now; but just the same I should like to ask him to make a special effort not to wander away from the question under discussion.

Mr. Pigeon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I simply wished to draw the attention of the house to the great improvement brought about by this government, through the Minister of Finance, in regard to that policy of farm improvement loans.

Before concluding my remarks, I should like to tell hon. members, and most particularly the hon. member for Laurier—

Mr. Boulanger: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: Has the hon. member something to say? If so, let him rise in his place and say it.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska raising a point of order?

Mr. Boulanger: As regards the point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Tremblay: Fit for the circus.

Mr. Boulanger: —the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wanted to put words—

Mr. Pigeon: Have I done so?

Mr. Boulanger: —in the mouth of the hon. member for Laurier. Therefore, he is out of order.

The Chairman: Order. I am of the opinion that the hon. member for Laurier is quite able to defend himself if he feels he is attacked.

Mr. Tremblay: The hon. member for Laurier has to rely on the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska to defend him. How sad.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, you will appreciate that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is not serious, because he raises a point of order as soon as I mention the name of the hon. member for Laurier. He thought I would report what he said, but I simply wished to advise him not to take the farmers of the province of Quebec for a bunch of idiots, especially when he comes to that province to talk about agriculture, while he does not know a thing about Quebec agricultural problems.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Pigeon: I say that as an agronomist, and as a farmer's son.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think the statement just made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm does make sense in a way, and it is that there is no greater idiot in the House of Commons than the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman—

(Translation):

Mr. Fortin: You are forgetting yourself in that statement.

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

The Chairman: Order. The Chair recognizes the Minister of Finance on a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier has just used language which is a clear offence against the rules of this house, and I ask that you call on him to withdraw the remark he has made concerning another hon. member of this house.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, in the first place the Minister of Finance should be the last person to rise in this house on a question of that kind because he has repeatedly said that we on this side of the house engage in blatant lies.

With reference to the point itself, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has got exactly what he has asked for. He has been inviting interjections all along. He has repeatedly used language which apparently I am supposed to have used elsewhere but which I have no recollection of having used. I simply put to the hon. member that perhaps the language applies to him far more than it applies to me.

The Chairman: On the point of order, let me say this.

(Translation):

I believe that in the heat of the discussion, the hon. member for Laurier went farther than he should have towards the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. In my opinion, he should be given the opportunity to change the word he used regarding the hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I fail to see the difference between the term I used and the word "obstruction" which the Minister of Finance—

The Chairman: Order. What the Minister of Finance might have said previously has nothing to do with the matter involved at present. What we are now dealing with is the word "idiot" directed to an hon. member. I suggest that such a word is not consistent with the dignity of the house, and I am convinced that after due consideration, the hon. member for Laurier will agree to change his expression.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the word was used adequately and properly. When the hon. member interrupted me—

Mr. Tremblay: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Wait—

Mr. Flynn: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order. I would ask the minister to resume his seat and I will tell you why.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Chevrier: I am speaking on the point of order.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Chairman: Everyone is familiar, I think, with the elementary rule that when the Chair has something to say, all hon. members must take their seats. That is the first point.

Second, I feel that the remarks made by the hon. member for Laurier are contrary to the dignity of the house and I would ask him to reconsider.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to raise two points of order in that connection. First of all, you said that all members are supposed to take their seats when the Chair has something to say, and you are perfectly right. I did not resume my seat immediately because of the minister's attitude. He should not try to give us a lesson as he did yesterday evening.

The Chairman: I think that only one point of order should be raised at any one time. Questions are settled one by one.

As regards the remarks addressed to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm by the hon. member for Laurier, I think that is liable to throw ridicule on an hon. member. There are several precedents to the effect that an hon. member should not indulge in such practice. I know that the hon. member has great experience in this house and is probably aware of the rules better than I am. I would therefore ask him to cooperate and to use his usual good judgment in making the necessary correction.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I accept your suggestion and instead of the word I used a moment ago, I shall say he lacked intelligence in making such observations about me.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: I think the question has been settled to the satisfaction of the Chair and of all hon. members. I think we can now proceed with the debate.

Mr. Pigeon: May I finish, Mr. Chairman? In closing, I should like to pay tribute to the present government and especially to the Minister of Finance, who has substantially improved this act. What a change compared to the inaction we had before, to the little consideration shown to the farmers of this country under the previous government.

I hope that our friends opposite, even if they know nothing about people on the farms, as is obviously the case with some of them, will be careful when they come to speak in certain Quebec constituencies with which they were not familiar before, owing to the fact that they have temporarily taken up residence in the province of Quebec only a few months ago.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order.

Mr. Tremblay: Again?

Mr. Chevrier: A little while ago, I used a word which apparently I did not have the right to use but which fits the hon. member well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: A member is not allowed to raise in this house such a personal matter. But that is exactly what the hon. member has done. If an hon. member has charges to make, and it is the Prime Minister himself who established this basis, he must make a complaint himself and put his seat at stake. If the hon. member has enough courage to do that, let him make a complaint. He has no right to do so by devious means.

He attacked me in my private life. This is a strictly personal matter. It does not concern him.

Mr. Pigeon: I did not mention your name.

Mr. Chevrier: That is no concern of his. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to call him to order as you did me a moment ago.

The Chairman: I am glad to ask that of the hon. member. Besides, I think he has finished his speech.

He did not have the right to raise such a personal matter concerning the hon. member for Laurier. As the hon. gentleman pointed out, a procedure has been established in such cases. It is not customary to proceed in that manner in the house.

In this instance, the subject matter of the debate is the resolution. If the hon. member has concluded his remarks, I recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Pigeon: I did not name the hon. member, but if the cap fits, let him wear it.

Mr. Habel: Just like the Union Nationale: insinuations.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, once the Union Nationale speak they are apt to continue all afternoon. You cannot tell when they start and when they stop. I am also surprised that they make the statement which they make about this particular legislation. This is not a great improvement over anything existing previously. There has been an improvement, but this improvement does not need to stop. Certainly if there was any foresight in the Conservative party they would be considering the extension of this particular act at this particular time, in addition to the increases that have taken place in the amount of money available over the period of years. I suggest that this should happen with regard to the maximum amount of money permitted to a particular farmer.

We endorse this type of legislation. We are very happy that it carries the present interest rate. We believe that this act has served a purpose. Certainly the Minister of Finance went to great lengths to point out this fact. I agree that it has done so, but I think now is the time to quit playing with this type of legislation and make it permanent. We amended this act in 1948, 1951, 1953 and in 1956, when we made an additional change by putting in $5,000 as the maximum allowable loan per farmer. In 1959 the act was again amended and the maximum amount was raised to $7,500.

When we are amending it now for a period from 1962 to 1965 I suggest that the minister should give some consideration to the farmers' request on numerous occasions to raise the maximum amount to $10,000. I make this suggestion because I think it is in keeping with the original concept of this act. Farmers at one time would consider $3,000 on a 10 year mortgage to be a sufficient amount of money.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The machine companies.

Mr. Peters: Yes, as the hon. member from Alberta mentioned, the machine companies would have considered it a suitable loan in 1948. But in 1962 I would ask the hon. member from Alberta this question. Farmers in his part of the country, as in other parts of Canada, must extend their operations and their capital expenditures. Is it possible for a farmer with $7,500 to go out and buy a new tractor and a new combine, or is it possible to buy either one for $7,500?

I suggest that the amount of money now available under this act is not sufficient. I think that statement applies to western Canada and also, though more recently, to the dairy industry in Ontario. That amount of $7,500 is not sufficient to buy a bulk tank and bulk cooler for handling whole milk in Ontario. A few years ago you could go out and for several thousand dollars could buy a cooler plus milking machines. It has become increasingly difficult to pick up for $7,500 a bulk cooler and the tanks and the piping that are necessary. I think it is impossible to do so.

I therefore suggest that if the minister is being progressive he will consider increasing the amount. Oh, there is one member who says it is not true. This may be so. He may rise in his place and say it is not true, if he wishes to do so. He may even point out that $3,000 was too much for the farmer to be able to borrow in 1948. But I think it certainly was not more in 1948 at $3,000 than it is now when we allow $7,500. I suggest that the maximum amount should be $10,000. I should hasten to add that most of the farmers will not borrow $10,000. They are very good businessmen and they know, as the Household Finance people tell the Canadian public, that one should never borrow needlessly. It is foolish to borrow money when you are not obliged to do so. I think the farmer has always been in this position. He is not going to borrow money except when it is absolutely necessary in order that he may stay in business; and in some cases it is going to be necessary to have more money available than $7,500 under this particular act.

There is one last point I wish to make, Mr. Chairman. I would think the minister should give some consideration at this time to the necessary amendment in order to permit farmers to combine to buy farm machinery. This would mean they could get together and co-operate in securing the machinery necessary for their operations. For example, the potato producers in an area may find it necessary to put in a small grading plant and storage facilities. If they could do so co-operatively under the terms of the act by pooling their resources or their ability to borrow, they would then be able to establish their own facilities to handle their own product. There are certainly hon. members here who represent Ontario farmers and who know that if an amendment of this kind were made the pork producers of Ontario would be able to establish on a localized basis small plants for the slaughtering and packing of pork which would make it possible for them to handle the product more economically than at present.

I believe everyone supports this legislation, but I think we should be moving forward and not standing still. There was good reason in the first place to set the maximum amount of loan at $3,000 and later to increase it to $5,000 and subsequently to $7,500. However, this legislation will not be applicable only to 1962 but will apply right through to 1965, and the first hope that Canadian farmers can expect for any alleviation of the problem that has been brought to the attention of the government by the farmers of western Canada and by the dairy farmers of Ontario will be in 1965. Therefore I think now is the time for the minister to make the change I have suggested. I hope the minister will take this matter into consideration before the bill is introduced and raise the maximum amount of loan to $10,000 per farmer in order to meet needs that appear to be growing day by day. Certainly such an increase will be a necessity by 1965.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I consider this resolution to be of sufficient importance to my constituency to make a few observations at this time. A similar resolution was introduced last year which had the effect of raising the ceiling from $300 million to $400 million for the period ending in June, 1962. As I recall, the bill was given first, second and third readings on May 15, 1961.

According to the Minister of Finance, as found on page 4860 of Hansard for May 15, 1961, 80 per cent of all loans cover the purchase of farm implements. This allows the farming community to adapt itself to technological advances in farm machinery, but there is far less effort being devoted to the social impact of the mechanization of farming. Mr. J. C. Gilson, associate professor, department of agricultural economics, faculty of agriculture, University of Manitoba, presented a paper entitled "Strengthening the Farm Firm" to the resources for tomorrow conference held last October 23 to 28. In it he had this to say:

> —there appears to be a serious gap between the technological possibilities of the agricultural industry and the corresponding economic and social adjustments required. This fact, however, does not seem to be fully appreciated. There is an urgent need for research into, and evaluation of, the economic and social aspects of technological progress in the agricultural industry. There is an accompanying need for an education or extension program to help farm people, and society in general for that matter, to understand the implications and consequences of technological change in agriculture. It makes little economic or social sense, for example, to replace labour with machinery in farm production, and then to leave the technologically displaced families or labour resources stranded in agriculture with little hope for productive employment. The creation of the agricultural adjustment centre at Iowa state university is an example of what might be considered for Canada.

I should like to ask the minister to what extent this credit is supplemented by supervisory technical assistance, especially for the young farmers. What does it accomplish? Does a loan made by a bank just become a bookkeeping entry in the government's books, or are such loans actively supervised and technical advice given as to how the new machinery can best be put into the farm organization?

The extent to which farm automation is becoming highly capitalized, aided by this type of legislation, raises the question of how the farmer is going to get his money back out of his investment in his farm. The problem of refinancing the farm every year becomes more complex as more machinery is added. It cannot be solved under this act, but some solution must be found. In this area I think the Minister of Finance should examine every possibility and every avenue in order to find a solution.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Badanai: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is he not aware that he has strayed into another statute entirely? That type of assistance is available to farmers, particularly young farmers, under the Farm Credit Act, as it is available to veteran farmers under the Veterans Land Act. But here we are dealing with the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which is in a different realm entirely. This is a matter of the government guaranteeing bank loans to farmers for the purposes designated by the act, and that is all that we are asking should be extended. The matters the hon. member is discussing lie under a different statute.

Mr. Badanai: I appreciate the minister's explanation. I was merely pointing out that 80 per cent of the money lent under this act is being used for the purchase of machinery. That is the only reason I brought in the question of the automation and mechanization of farms. I realize that the government has agencies with facilities that are devoted in part to this problem.

However, I have complained on a number of occasions in the past about the lack of consideration given to the farmer, particularly the small farmer, such as those engaged in farming in the district around Fort William. I have said previously, and I say again, that unless a farmer in our district has sufficient collateral it is next to impossible for him to secure a loan to enable him to develop efficiently and economically the agricultural potential of his holding. What I have said about obtaining loans is true also in connection with the purchase of farm machinery. The farmer goes to the bank and tries to negotiate a loan with the bank, but this legislation notwithstanding, on many occasions the farmers in my district are turned down.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope I will be permitted to say this because it is relevant to the question we are discussing. The total population of the Thunder Bay district is approximately 140,000, of which less than 6 per cent are farmers compared with an estimated 12 per cent for the whole province of Ontario. With a distinct federal and provincial farm policy, supported by long term loans, this region could be developed into one of the most desirable farming areas of Canada. Although grain production in the area is very limited, with the great source of livestock feed at local terminal elevators, the area could become a No. 1 livestock producing area in Canada. The distance from marketing facilities could be overcome by the adoption of an equitable freight rate structure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is doing exactly what he did yesterday. He is off on the subject of freight rates. What on earth has this to do with the extension of the Farm Improvement Loans Act? Surely there must be some regard for the rules of the house and the simple rule of relevancy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That rule ought to be imposed on members sitting behind the minister.

The Chairman: I thought the hon. member was getting off on another subject. This is a very special resolution, and it is not too broad in its terms. The hon. member's remarks should be confined to the terms of the resolution.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; I shall adhere to your wise counsel. Nevertheless, freight rates have something to do with the welfare of our farmers.

It is true that the area of improved farm land is comparatively small in the district of Thunder Bay. It is approximately 70,000 acres. The reason this area is no larger is the freight rate discrimination, as well as many other difficulties, one of which is the inability of the farmers to obtain loans from the bank. At the moment the farmers of the district are concentrating on dairy products, poultry, eggs, potatoes and so forth. Of course other products are grown, but in the main these constitute the bulk of the products from which our farmers make a living. There is a great potential for expansion of production of fluid milk, potatoes, vegetables, greenhouse products, small fruits and berries of all kinds, mushrooms, poultry, eggs, turkeys, honey and feeder cattle. The establishment of feeder plants for cattle and hogs near our terminal elevators should be considered as a distinct advantage to the area.

Contrary opinion notwithstanding, in the Thunder Bay district we have thousands of acres which could be under cultivation now but which, as a result of lack of promotion and interest, is worthless bush. About 70 per cent of the total farm area is unimproved land, and this percentage compares with 39 per cent for the whole province of Ontario. Only about 20 per cent of the total occupied land is under crops, and this is roughly one half of the provincial average. The lack of development in the farming communities of our district results from an inadequate system of providing funds, without which a farmer cannot expand nor can new farms be developed. Up to the present the experience with the farm loan board has not been of the best.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is talking about a statute relating to the farm loan board, and there is no provision for such a board under this statute. He is talking about the farm loan board which was under a statute parliament repealed several years ago and replaced by the Farm Credit Act. He is in an entirely different field. Surely the hon. member knows by this time that we are supposed to be discussing the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Could he not confine his remarks to that?

Mr. Chevrier: May I bring one thing to your attention, Mr. Chairman. Surely the minister should not be rising to his feet continually and objecting to the discussion of a measure such as this when the minister asks for the extension of this measure and certain additions to the ceiling. Within these two tests, if I may use that expression, the hon. member has been within his rights in proceeding in the manner in which he has been proceeding. It seems to me that the minister should not be objecting to the hon. member discussing the matter in the manner in which he has been speaking.

The Chairman: I think I have been following the hon. member who has the floor fairly closely. I hope he will make the necessary effort to stay within the ambit of the debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I just—

The Chairman: Order; I have not completed my remarks. As has been explained to a few members here, this debate is concerned with the extension of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The hon. member should have ample scope within the confines of that subject matter. I hope he will not embark on a discussion of other statutes, because that would not be pertinent.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have talked about nothing else but farming and farm loans which would help the farmers of my district. That is all I have been talking about. I have expressed the same opinion on several occasions. All we need is more money for our farmers, and the extension of this legislation for an additional three years will be of some help.

However, the difficulty which I wish to point out to the minister is this, and I have pointed it out on several previous occasions. The farmers cannot obtain money from the bank, notwithstanding the legislation which we are passing. Of course I am in agreement with the resolution, and I feel the act should be extended. However, provision should be made to enable the small farmers to take advantage of it. Not all small farmers can go out and buy machinery. I should say this in closing, because I do not want to irk the minister too greatly—in fact I am just trying to help him along—

Mr. Pickersgill: He needs it.

Mr. Badanai: I am trying to help the Minister of Finance with his responsibilities. He is responsible for this farm policy because it requires money to implement it, and that is his department. I suggest the minister should be just a little more generous in his attitude toward the extension of credit to farmers. I have a great deal of regard for the farmers of Canada, the small farmers of Canada who have not been taken care of under this legislation. There are quite a number of people who would like to establish themselves on farms but who are unable to borrow the money necessary to purchase a farm. Where can you find a better place to raise a family than on a farm? There is plenty of space if you wish to have a large family, and there is a place to grow the things people need.

An hon. Member: I don't believe you ever saw a farm.

Mr. Badanai: I have never been a farmer, and I am free to admit it. I can see that hon. members over there appreciate this. Nevertheless I admire the people on the farms, and I envy them sometimes. They are so peaceful, and there is so much land around them. All they need to make them happy now is enough money to improve their holdings and establish them firmly on the land. Up to the present we have failed to establish an equitable policy of farm assistance in areas such as northwestern Ontario. This is the crux of the question so far as I am concerned.

Mr. McMillan: Yesterday the minister said that $58 million or slightly over half the amount of loans made available to farmers was used for the acquisition of farm machinery, for tractors, combines and hay balers. I think last year when the Farm Improvement Loans Act was being amended in a similar manner one of the members of this house, I cannot recall which one but I think it was the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, called the attention of the minister to the fact he was aware of a number of cases in which farmers had incurred debts for farm machinery and the machinery had been destroyed by fire before the debts could be retired, but there was no insurance to cover the machinery in question.

Two or three such cases have come to my attention, where the farmer had to retire his debt with depleted resources because of fire. A farmer might have a blanket insurance policy on machinery, and I have been told—I am not absolutely sure that this is the case—that with a number of these mutual companies with which farmers place their insurance, machinery such as a combine or a hay baler would not be included unless it were specifically stated in the application or unless an application to have these particular machines included were filled out later and sent in to the company. Some of these farmers are not aware of this aspect of their insurance. They may have been aware of it but they have forgotten about it. There are also other reasons why a farmer would not have this machinery covered by insurance.

I do not know how often this occurs but I know of two or three cases, and I think the hon. member for Grey-Bruce said he was also aware of some of these cases when this matter was up for discussion last year. I think some provision should be made by which banks could see that new machinery bought on credit is covered either by the farmer's own insurance company or by some sort of blanket policy.

I am not raising this matter as any criticism at all of the operations of the farm loan board. I do think, however, that some consideration might be given to this question, and I would like the minister to make some reference to it when he replies. It is often quite difficult to get the minister to reply to any questions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is impossible sometimes.

Mr. McMillan: I know that last year—

Mr. Pickersgill: He does not know the answers.

Mr. McMillan: —he did not reply to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, a member of his own party, unless he did so outside the house. I would appeal to the minister to reply to these observations.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce always got an answer.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate—

An hon. Member: Another farmer.

Mr. Tremblay: —very warmly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for the bill he has introduced.

Since I am not a mortician by profession, I can talk about agricultural policy. However, I am not posing as an expert, but I should like to make a few remarks about this bill. I do so in order to clarify a situation, because as I interjected a few minutes ago, in the course of an hon. member's remarks, I am not shy about participating in discussions on agricultural problems; it is just that, not being an expert, I am always reluctant to deal with matters with which I am not technically familiar.

However, I feel ill at ease in the face of that easy demagogy being practised on the theme of agriculture as applied to the province of Quebec.

I see Liberal members who are now bent on proving that the Conservative government is putting eastern farmers in an unfavourable position as compared to western farmers. That is easy demagogy, and I do not intend to follow the previous speakers on that ground. But I should like to point out a statement made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, to the effect that the Minister of Finance is boasting that the government is putting more money at the disposal of farmers under the form of loans.

From that, he infers that it is a sign that agriculture is in a bad situation in this country.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the fact that farmers may borrow more money and that more money is being put at their disposal is a sign of a bad situation; on the contrary, it is a sign that the Conservative government wishes to correct by this means a situation which had gone on for several years, I would even dare say a situation which had gone on for about 20 years, and which had been kept so by the Liberal government.

If farmers, when the Conservative government put greater amounts of money at their disposal, hastened to take advantage of this measure, it is that they were in urgent need of it, considering the situation in which they had been placed in the past.

That is why I am glad to congratulate the Minister of Finance for having put more money at the disposal of our farmers.

It was pointed out earlier that larger amounts are now being granted in loans. In addition to this, the provisions have also been extended to other groups of farmers, such as poultry farmers and beekeepers.

In my opinion, that is one of the beneficial aspects of the farm legislation implemented by the Conservative government.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that speeches delivered in this house in season and out will not improve in any way the situation of farmers. It is not the demagogic statements made in and out of season by those who, for 22 years, did not care too much about Quebec farmers, that will improve the situation; it is rather by making representations, by taking efficient steps and by bringing pressure to bear on members of the government that hon. members will call the latter's attention to the needs of our farmers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Essex East rising on a point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member is not discussing the matter under consideration.

The Chairman: I have been following quite closely the remarks made by the hon. member for Roberval and it seems to me that they are quite related to the matter under consideration. If he wanders away I will try to call him to order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He seemed to be wandering away.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, because of his timidity, the hon. member for Essex East has been unable to make his point.

I can assure you that I have no intention of entering upon a general debate on agriculture. I merely wish to make a few desultory remarks on this bill.

Before I conclude, there is one point on which I should like to insist. The entire farm policy of Canada should be reconsidered. As the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska stated a while ago, there has been a lack of planning in that field. He was right of course in saying that, because from 1935 on, there was a real lack of planning in the field of agriculture—

The Chairman: I think that if the hon. member embarks on a discussion of that matter of planning or of farm policy in general, he is not speaking to the point.

Mr. Tremblay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I merely wanted to point out that there was no planning. But the legislation that the Conservative government introduced these last few years, along with the bill he puts to the house today, are an effort to solve that problem and to use sound planning as more important aspects of our farm problems are brought up. And, as I said, I do not think, as far as I am concerned, it is necessary to rise at every turn in order to discuss farm problems in this house.

Every time farmers in my area, in my constituency, made representations, I lost no time in discussing the matter with the government authorities. In this respect, we obtained things for which farmers in my constituency, in our area, had been waiting for 22 years. I could mention, in passing, for the information of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, subsidies for the transportation of feed grains which they had been expecting for years under the Liberal regime.

To come back to the point I had in mind, once again I wish to thank the Minister of Finance and to convey to him the appreciation of the farmers in my constituency. I have had the opportunity, in the house, to point out that, since the Conservatives came to power, our farmers' lot had improved. At that time, however, I had underlined the fact that all was not perfect, far from it.

Our friends in the Liberal party have delicate feelings that are not far removed from guilty feelings; that is why they pounce on any argument to go into their familiar demagogy. I think that the policy followed by the Conservative government, under the guidance of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), is an effort towards a practical, efficient and dynamic solution of the whole problem facing the agricultural community in my constituency, in our province and in our country.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member for Roberval a question. Can he tell us if the farmers in the Lake St. John district are satisfied to get one half cent less than the Ontario farmers for their cheese.

Mr. Pigeon: That bears no relation to the legislation now under discussion.

The Chairman: I will not allow the hon. member for Roberval to answer that question because it is irrelevant to the resolution being studied.

(Text):

Mr. Matheson: The remarks of the hon. member for Roberval demand that the problem posed by this bill be shown in better perspective. I refer to the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, better known as the Gordon report, which points out that farm output between 1935-39 and 1940-1944 increased by some 30 per cent as a result of much more intensive cultivation. The rapid mechanization of Canadian agriculture since the end of the war has involved larger cash outlays for a great many things, particularly machinery, and there has been a considerable technological revolution in farming, with heavier purchases of commercial feeds, seeds and fertilizers. This has resulted in a substantially increased capital structure on even the small farm. The commission found that in every province farming had become much more highly capitalized and that the capital is increasingly concentrated in machinery, implements and livestock rather than in land and buildings.

This is the most spectacular change we have seen in Canadian agriculture. The mechanical revolution has come to the farm and made a great many changes. This has been so in all walks of Canadian life and it is certainly so even in eastern agriculture, the depressed area of agriculture today. The Gordon commission said it appears likely that the technological changes of most importance over the next 25 years will be those designed primarily to increase the productivity of nature rather than the productivity of labour. It will be seen that much mechanical equipment has gone on to the farms; that there is less labour used, while the units of land are larger. There has been a rapid trend toward fewer farms, and this trend is likely to continue. The commission came to the conclusion that the number of farms in Canada, which in 1951 numbered 623,000, might decline to 570,000 by 1965 and to 540,000 by 1980. The conclusion was reached that the size of the average farm in 1980 would be 326 acres compared with an average size of 279 acres in 1951.

Following this study which, the committee will remember, took place in 1956, the chairman of that commission, Mr. Walter L. Gordon, wrote a book called "Troubled Canada". In it he said that in the ten years since 1950 employment in agriculture had dropped by one third. He concluded that the agricultural industry was going through a period of drastic change amounting almost to a revolution. He says it is important that this transformation be as gradual as possible and that it should be facilitated by capital changes whenever this can be done, so that the hardships that are bound to occur when people leave the land may be eased to the greatest extent of which we are capable.

The really serious problem is this. As these farmers across Canada are readjusting themselves to an extent never known before in our agricultural experience, they are caught by the squeeze between the rising prices they must pay for the goods they require and the falling prices received for the goods they have to sell.

Mr. Pallett: What is the date of the article the hon. member referred to?

Mr. Matheson: The book was published, I believe, in 1961.

Mr. Pallett: The author is a Liberal candidate now.

Mr. Matheson: It is a fact that the author of that book feels it to be his duty to enter practical politics today, but I think the evidence of figures supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics will substantiate precisely the claims he makes. With respect to the cost-price squeeze referred to by the author, the index of farm prices of agricultural products stood at 231.3 during 1956, the last full year of Liberal administration, as compared to 243.3 during 1961. This represents an increase of approximately 5 per cent in the prices received by farmers from the sale of their products.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, another hon. member opposite is treating this debate just as though it were a general debate on agriculture, saying anything he pleases on the subject of agriculture in general. Again I urge that the rule be enforced. We are dealing here with a resolution respecting one particular statute, the Farm Improvement Loans Act. We are not dealing with agriculture in general, and this is not a debate on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to say something on the point of order raised by the Minister of Finance. I would draw your attention to the fact, sir, that you yourself on three separate occasions had to call the hon. member for Roberval to order because the Minister of Finance did not take the trouble to direct your attention to the fact that a follower of his who was licking his boots at the time was paying no attention whatever to the measure.

The Chairman: Order. I trust the hon. gentleman will confine his remarks to the point of order that is presently before us.

Mr. Pickersgill: I intend to, sir. I merely suggest that since hon. members on the other side of the house have been allowed to range widely and wildly on this subject, the same treatment should be given to hon. members on this side of the house.

The Chairman: Order. I trust that the hon. gentleman did not really intend to say what his remarks appear to convey, because the Chair has devoted much effort to attempting to be fair to all sides of the house. As far as the point that has just been raised is concerned, I believe the hon. member for Leeds will wish to relate his remarks to the matter under discussion. Probably he is just laying a foundation for remarks that are pertinent to the resolution, and I trust he will deal with the resolution before long.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I would not wish Your Honour to think I was attempting to reflect on the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I may be permitted to continue. I realize that Your Honour was making a valiant effort to treat both sides of the house in the same way. What I was drawing attention to, sir, was the partiality of the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: You are a fine one to talk.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Blabbermouthing from Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: One law for one side of the house and another law for the other.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I hope to draw my remarks to an early conclusion. At precisely the moment of change to which I referred the cost-price squeeze is more significant than ever before. The index of farm prices of agricultural products stood at 231.3 during 1956 as compared with 243.3 during 1961. This represents an increase of approximately 5 per cent in the prices received by farmers from the sale of their products. On the other hand, the price index of commodities and services used by farmers increased from 230.3 in 1956 to 258.3 in 1961, or by about 12 per cent. Thus while the price of products sold by farmers increased by only 5 per cent, the prices of products bought by farmers used in production increased by 12 per cent. The farmer's costs have thus gone up twice as fast as the prices he receives.

The problem of the rising prices of machinery and other farm costs is sufficiently serious that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture as recently as February 7, 1962 made the following submission to the government:

> Farm improvement loans.
> In view of rising prices of machinery and other farm costs, and the continuing technological advance that is increasing the capital investment in machinery and equipment needed for efficient farming, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture believes the present loan limit for farm improvement loans of $7,500 should be raised, perhaps to $10,000. The raising of the maximum loan limit only makes possible such loans where they are reasonable and necessary for good farm business and investment practice.

A valuable study group called the Ontario farmer-labour conference met at Port Elgin on June 18-19, 1960, comprising representatives of labour and farm organizations. One of the guest speakers was Hon. W. A. Goodfellow, minister of agriculture for Ontario. I was impressed by his remarks, which are set out in the report of the conference at page 35. Referring to farm production Mr. Goodfellow said:

> But in spite of the fact that we have a much smaller area in production, we are producing approximately 34 per cent more than we did in 1946. From 1941-1956, the number of Ontario farms reporting motor trucks and tractors nearly tripled. The number reporting grain combines increased 20 times. At the same time 38,000 farms had ceased to operate in the province of Ontario. Those are rather revealing figures. In 1900 a farmer fed, including his own family, nine people. A farmer in the province of Ontario this year through mechanized equipment, better farm management, better productive methods, will feed approximately 36 people

This illustrates the startling change to which I have referred. An interesting study of the province of Ontario is reported in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce commercial letter No. 2 of February, 1962. Referring to the situation of Ontario farmers the report states:

> Coincident with the rising production of Ontario farmers there has been a gradual decline in the total farm acreage and in the number of farms, and a fairly marked increase in the average size of holding.

The report goes on to speak of the improvements technology has made possible and the decreased labour requirements. These factors have left a large problem. That is, how is the farmer, particularly the farmer in the east, going to survive? As a previous speaker on this side has indicated, it is not good enough for the government to assist only the farmer in the west.

The annual report for 1960 relating to the Farm Improvement Loans Act published by the Department of Finance contains some interesting figures in a table set out at page 13. The table reveals that there has been a decline in the number of people in the province of Ontario obtaining loans under this act from 12,874 in 1959 to 11,881 in 1960. The value of these loans in Ontario has declined from $19,109,964 in 1959 to $18,737,174 in 1960. In Ontario there has been a substantial drop both in the number of applications and in the amount of loans. There has been a substantial increase in the loans extended in the province of Saskatchewan, but in the national picture we find that in 1960 as compared with 1959 there has been an increase in the total amount of money lent under the act of less than $3,500,000. It is difficult to examine those figures and have them make much sense in the light of the comments made by the hon. member for Roberval.

Recently the constituency of Leeds was honoured by a visit from the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Recorder and Times of February 22, 1962 carries a report of the minister's address which indicates that he devoted his attention particularly to the problem of eastern agriculture. The article is entitled "Hees Would Help Leeds Farmers".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My goodness.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a joke.

Mr. Matheson: The article states:

> A program of rehabilitation and development of now useless farm lands in Leeds county is planned by the federal government, Hon. George Hees, Minister of Trade and Commerce, told Wednesday's Progressive Conservative nomination meeting in the civic auditorium.

The minister is reported as having said:

> In the county of Leeds, one of the great historic agriculture counties of Ontario, it is well known that many of our farms are abandoned because of lack of opportunity to survive in traditional agriculture.

The minister then went on to refer to the A.R.D.A. program.

It is recognized that eastern farmers must go into greater capital development as a means of survival. Many farmers are equipping themselves with milk sheds, not because they want to nor because it will increase their returns, but because they are compelled to. The dairy farmer may have to instal refrigerated storage tanks which cost approximately $2,500; otherwise a milk plant may terminate its contract. We are already beginning to experience this in Leeds county. I have received a number of complaints from my constituents indicating that they are worried lest they may have to make further capital outlays not to increase their returns but simply to maintain the minimum standards of return they are receiving today.

A highly qualified expert in dairy matters is a new Canadian by the name of Pieter C. D. Toxopeus, who recently addressed himself to the question of the amount of return the farmers in Leeds are receiving per hour. This ranged from 30 cents an hour to approximately 80 cents, which is unreasonable on the basis of any computation. Today we find there are organizations being formed such as the Protection of Eastern Canadian Agriculture Incorporated of St. Hyacinthe in which we are participating because the situation in my area has become extremely critical. We know that the dairy situation is more serious than it has ever been previously. In the case of mill feeds, we have prices skyrocketing at the end of January and yet—

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member is now discussing eastern agriculture in a general way and is not relating his remarks at all to the resolution which has to do with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I would therefore ask him to confine his remarks to this particular resolution and not to enter a wider field as he seems to have been doing in the last few minutes.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I should certainly like to address myself to the key problems. We have tried to put these problems before the house and before the committee. We are concerned that the simple policy of lending more money to people who are going deeper and deeper into debt is not really getting at the heart of this problem at all.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will have on other occasions an opportunity to raise these matters. However, at this particular juncture we are considering a specific resolution. The limits of the discussion were touched upon and explained not very long ago. I would ask the hon. member to cooperate with the Chair so that the rules of this House of Commons may be observed.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I shall do so. There is a Chinese proverb which says that one learns to itch where one can scratch. We are grateful for anything that will add in any small way to the possibility of declining eastern agriculture at least surviving over these very difficult years.

Mr. Danforth: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Matheson: Certainly.

Mr. Danforth: I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Leeds giving his essay on agriculture. However, I failed to understand whether he is or is not in favour of this resolution. I wonder whether he would care to answer that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He just said so in the last minute. He cannot give the hon. member understanding.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This debate has ranged far and wide, and I do not intend to contribute or add to your difficulties in trying to control it, Mr. Chairman. However, there are a few remarks I should like to make on this subject. The matter of farm credit is one that concerns all farmers. Being a farmer myself, this matter really concerns me. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska talked about everything. He said specifically that he could talk about farm problems for two days. However, he failed to talk for one minute on this particular measure. Whether or not that fact was owing to some problem he had in understanding it, I do not know. However, I tried desperately to gather some of the thoughts he might have on this particular resolution and failed to do so. Possibly it was my fault; I do not know.

The hon. member for Timiskaming stated that he thought the loan maximum should be increased in amount to $10,000, complained that the government was continually bringing in measures such as this one, and expressed the opinion that it should be put on the statute books permanently so that the money would be there whether the government appropriated it or not.

This measure is similar to others which have come before the house in past years. Its purpose is to establish $400 million as the limit of guaranteed loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Previously, the limit was $300 million. Actually last year $101 million were lent under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. We are again establishing the act to take effect from 1962 until 1965. One good reason for doing this is that if loans continue to be made at the rate at which they were made last year, namely at the rate of $101 million a year, for the next three years, they would possibly exceed the $300 million limit that was established under this act. We are therefore increasing it in order to allow farmers to borrow without any halt under this act for purposes which they feel are feasible.

With regard to the $10,000 limit placed on each farmer may I say this. Actually in the west today we are seeing a trend away from heavy capitalization of equipment. I firmly believe that most western members here will agree with me on this matter. Perhaps the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska and the hon. member for Timiskaming do not realize that fact. The farmers are looking around and are buying better combines that are not self-propelled. They are buying them with power take-offs. With the advent of the power take-off being a common thing in large tractors, farmers are going back to the power take-off combine rather than the self-propelled combine. Therefore I think it is quite feasible for a farmer to buy a new combine and a new tractor, provided he has some down payment; and most farmers are trading in a tractor. I think it is quite feasible for him to buy under the limit to which we have increased, namely $7,500. While there are no doubt a number of farmers who would like to see the limit established at an even higher figure, may I say that those are large farmers. As has been pointed out in this debate, the average loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act is something like $1,497 or about $1,500. The average farmer would likely be paying on three or four loans at one time. It has been customary for the banks in western Canada particularly to lend on a three year basis amounts under $4,000. If a farmer borrows more than $4,000 on a new combine, building, repairs or a new tractor, the banks generally try to work it out over five years and so on. The number of years bear a relationship to the amount of money lent. I feel, of course, that this bill which will increase the amount will have an effect and will allow the farmers to continue to borrow money.

We had from the hon. member for Fort William a talk with regard to farm credit. However, I think his whole speech dealt with the farm credit corporation rather than with this particular Farm Improvement Loans Act. I think there is evidence under that particular piece of legislation that this government is making major strides forward in increasing loans and in increasing the money available to farmers for the purpose of establishing themselves as an economic unit. I think the interesting thing about this particular measure and the operations under it last year is that 42 per cent of the borrowers obtained money for the first time under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. To me this is a very surprising thing. I was under the impression that most farmers in western Canada have been using this particular piece of legislation for years in order to buy their machinery. However, under last year's operation 42 per cent of the borrowers used this legislation for the first time. I think this is a very encouraging thing. This is a worth-while piece of legislation and one which will enable the farmers to become more mechanized at a reasonable cost to them.

Another very encouraging thing is that more farmers borrowed money last year under the Farm Improvement Loans Act in order to purchase livestock. Here again I think they are moving in the right direction.

The hon. member for Leeds made a scholarly speech about agriculture. He relied on some more of his scholarly colleagues to deal with the agriculture problem. I would suggest to him that if he relied on a few more farmers in the future, he might get the facts a little bit straighter. He discussed farm prices but I do not intend to go into that matter at all. However, he quoted some figures from the dominion bureau of statistics which are as yet not up to date. He was confused about table 13 in the annual report as to why Ontario farmers had taken out fewer loans this year and Saskatchewan farmers had taken out more loans than last year, and so on. This depends to a great extent on when the machinery wears out. I do not think we should encourage farmers to take loans unless they need new machinery. It has been a common fault of a lot of farmers over the years to borrow money and buy new combines when it was questionable whether or not they needed to do so. Without a doubt the reason why Saskatchewan farmers borrowed more money last year by taking advantage of this legislation was the fact that the cycle of use of given machines was running out.

One can go back into the history of farm machinery purchases and see that in the case of the province of Saskatchewan 1952 and 1953 were heavy years with respect to the buying of machinery. This machinery has now lasted eight or nine years. It is wearing out and the farmers are purchasing similar machinery. That is why there were more loans in Saskatchewan last year than the previous year. I think the same thing may hold true for Ontario farmers who are no doubt operating on a somewhat different cycle.

The hon. member suggested at one time that farmers were not borrowing enough. He was disappointed that in Ontario loans had gone down by approximately $1 million. However, just before ending his speech he said that we cannot lend the farmers money thus increasing their debt and expect them to get out of their troubles. The hon. member left me confused with respect to whether he was in favour of more money for the farmers or less money for the farmers.

He spoke at some length about the dairy farmers in his area needing new milk plants and suggested that this would not increase their net earnings to any great extent. Certainly it would increase the efficiency of their dairy operations and this should be their guide in deciding whether or not they will take out loans. I sincerely support the resolution because I feel it is a very necessary one, having in mind the fact that farmers are taking advantage of this legislation in increasing numbers.

(Translation):

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the house is now considering a resolution for the introduction of a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide for guaranteed loans during the period July 1, 1962 to June 30, 1965, and to set at $400 million the limit of those guaranteed loans.

Under the existing act, only chartered banks are allowed to make such loans. On different occasions, when this act was under consideration in the house, and especially when it was amended in 1959 and 1960, representations were submitted to the Minister of Finance urging him to include the caisses populaires.

As the Minister of Finance knows, in most agricultural centres credit unions lend more and more to farmers of their respective areas, and in a large number of agricultural centres, there are no chartered banks where farmers could do business. Since the bank managers do not even know them, farmers cannot secure loans under this legislation.

The minister will perhaps reply that the caisses populaires come under the provinces but I should like to know just the same if he intends to include them in this resolution and, if not, I would ask him to tell the house his reason for not doing so.

(Text):

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks I should like to make on this measure at this time. It is one of those measures that have come before parliament periodically throughout the years and it has been of very great benefit to the farmers of this country. It is a type of act that has been based on co-operation between the federal government and the chartered banks and it has been a very useful measure indeed. Farmers have obtained the necessary credit for many aspects of farming at a nominal rate of interest and the banks, encouraged by the government guarantee and by the present Minister of Finance and his predecessors, have been very active in the lending field.

When the act was first placed on the statute books in 1945 the maximum loan was $3,000.

An hon. Member: 1944.

Mr. Argue: The maximum loan now is $7,500, which maximum was placed in the act some three years ago. I should like to ask the minister to indicate when he comments whether any consideration has been given to increasing the maximum guaranteed loan from $7,500 to $10,000 as has been requested by a number of farm organizations. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in their submission to the cabinet on February 7, 1962, had this to say in appendix N entitled "Farm Improvement Loans":

> In view of rising prices of machinery and other farm costs, and the continuing technological advance that is increasing the capital investment in machinery and equipment needed for efficient farming, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture believes the present loan limit for farm improvement loans of $7,500 should be raised, perhaps to $10,000. The raising of the maximum loan limit only makes possible such loans where they are reasonable and necessary for good farm business and investment practice.

The main use made of the legislation has been in the purchase of farm implements, and I think it is correct to say that machines that could be purchased for a total of $3,000 in 1945 now cost very nearly $10,000. Today's machines may be somewhat larger and more efficient, but there has been a tremendous increase in the price of farm implements and I think the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has made a reasonable and sensible request, namely that the maximum be increased from $7,500 to $10,000.

Farmers have demonstrated that they are very excellent credit risks. Under the act they have borrowed more than $1 billion up to the end of 1960, the last year for which a report is available, and the claims paid by the government have amounted to only one tenth of one per cent. This demonstrates that farmers are a very good credit risk. It also demonstrates that the banks have been prudent in making these loans, and it is an indication that this has been farsighted legislation on the part of government, legislation that is valuable and should be improved. I would hope that the minister will consider the suggestion of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Farmers are caught up in a very rapid technological revolution at the present time. The mechanization of farms is continuing at an ever accelerated rate. I think that to increase the maximum to $10,000 would merely recognize this existing fact.

I should like to ask the minister for some information if he has it, either at this stage or at a later stage, as to the number of repossessions of farm implements made under the act, the disposition of those farm implements and the personal claims on the borrowers following the disposal of these implements.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Over what period?

Mr. Argue: The last three or four years would be satisfactory. I want to be quite frank with the minister. I have not had this matter brought to my attention in recent days, although a year or so ago there were a number of complaints by farmers that bankers were unduly pressing collections in the light of poor crop conditions and adverse market conditions. I would hope that a reasonable amount of discretion is being used by the bank in the collection of loans and that the repossession of farm implements takes place only as a last resort. One of the complaints of the farmers is this, that when a banker repossesses a combine, shall we say, he very often sells it rather quickly. In the opinion of the farmer the banker often does not get the full resale value of the machine and this, of course, means that the farmer who borrowed the money in the first place has to repay a larger sum.

I am not putting this forward, Mr. Chairman, as something that is a very serious, widespread or aggravated problem. It is a problem which crops up from time to time, and I should like any information the minister can provide on this point. Before I sit down, I should like to repeat that I feel the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is fully justified in asking for an increase in the maximum guaranteed loan.

Mr. Peters: I was interested in the comments made by the hon. member for Acadia. I wonder if he has given consideration to the fact that money borrowed for the purpose of purchasing livestock, unless it is for breeding stock, is usually borrowed for a short period of time. I wonder if he has considered the fact that the $400 million available is to cover losses guaranteed by the government and the guarantee covers 10 per cent of the amount borrowed under this particular section.

In so far as farm machinery is concerned, the other day I inquired of a farm organization what they considered the average would be for loans under this act for the purchase of farm machinery. They were of the opinion it would be fair to say that the borrowing period would not be 10 years but would be somewhere between three and five years. Under normal circumstances, the farmer would be able to make repayment in that period of time. Obviously if a farmer were to use the loan for the purchase of livestock the period of the loan would not run to ten years but would probably be closer to three years. I would think, therefore, that the amount of money being borrowed would have very little relationship to the $400 million. In my opinion, it is not correct to say that the $400 million will be used up after three or more years because this year we will be using something over $100 million. I would suggest that, at the end of three years, most of this money will have been repaid and the banks will no longer be requesting the 10 per cent guarantee from the government. I suggest that if this is true, then the money can be used as a sort of revolving fund and the amount used would continue to average about $100 million a year.

If this is the case, perhaps the government should be asking for a larger sum of money now. When the minister replies, I think he should bear in mind what the hon. member for Acadia has said. What the hon. member has said may be true in western Canada where other factors are involved. If the loans are not repaid in the normal period of from three to five years, it may be necessary to have more money available. I know of a farmer in western Canada who has been looking for a sizeable amount of money with which to buy livestock. He has the opportunity of going into this business on a fairly large scale. His desire is to borrow the money for three years because, in his words, if he has not made it in three years then he will be carrying his cattle at a loss.

I would suggest that the minister give consideration to this, as well as to the other matters mentioned. I compliment the hon. member for Acadia upon his restraint in asking his own minister to meet this additional request. However, I certainly will make it on his behalf because of his modesty.

The Chairman: Order; I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is five o'clock. It is my duty, therefore to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private member's business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

COCHIN PIPE LINES LTD.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-6, to incorporate Cochin Pipe Lines Ltd.

He said: Mr. Speaker, by this bill a group of Edmonton people ask parliament to incorporate them as a body for the purpose of undertaking a study and building a pipe line between the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I wish to assure the house that the owners of this company are all Edmonton residents and Canadian citizens. The pipe line company is going to be completely owned and built by Canadians, operated by Canadians, and in so far as forseeable plans are concerned it is strictly for carrying petroleum products between the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

At present the actual construction plans are not complete because in order to finalize their plans it is necessary to carry out a marketing and feasibility study. The pipe line will run roughly between the area of Hughenden, Alberta, and Melville, Saskatchewan, a distance of 300 or 400 miles. It will connect a couple of natural gas reservoirs, and it is intended that they should carry what are called the light ends of gas, the butane, propane—the l.p.g's in other words. The pipe line will not interfere or compete with any other existing pipe line.

The bill as it now stands is in the usual form, with the usual powers that a pipe line body seeks, including the power to export, because they feel that with the development of the uses of these types of gases and their marketing there may well come a day in the not too distant future when there may be a market in the northern part of the United States, and they would not want to come back to ask for that power if at that time it was found good business to go further.

I wish to point out to the house that before they could undertake the construction it would be necessary to have the approval of the conservation boards of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and that all this house is being asked to do is allow them to become a body which can invest the necessary moneys to carry out feasibility studies to see if they can do it, and to carry on further with their plans.

This bill will be referred to a committee and we will have the opportunity of questioning the proposed president of the company, and all technical questions will be answered at that time. I can answer a few of the questions, if any hon. member has any. I hope that the house will encourage these enterprising Canadians who are keeping Canadian money at home and putting it to work on Canadian products, which I think will greatly benefit our part of the country.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

MUTTART DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION LTD.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) asking leave to move second reading of this bill for the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney)?

Mr. Morton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that this is at the request of the hon. member for Parkdale?

Mr. Morton: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house consent to the hon. member for Davenport moving second reading of this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Morton (for Mr. Maloney) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-7, respecting Muttart Development Corporation Ltd.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to convert Muttart Development Corporation Ltd., which was incorporated by letters patent issued by the Secretary of State for Canada dated August 21, 1958, into a loan company so that it will have all the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by and be subject to all the limitations, liabilities and provisions of the Loan Companies Act. The name of the company is to be changed to Muttart Mortgage Corporation.

There is also a provision in the bill to increase the capital stock to $6 million; it is now $2 million. There is also a provision to convert the 2 million shares with a par value of $1 to 200,000 shares with a par value of $10. This is brought about because of an amendment last year to the Loan Companies Act which restricted the objects of the company as it stood. As a result of that amendment and in order that it may continue the purpose for which it was originally incorporated, it must now be brought under the Loan Companies Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) is asking leave to move second reading of this bill on behalf of the hon. member in whose name it stands, with his consent. Is it agreed that the hon. member may move the motion on behalf of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Asselin (for Mr. Lafreniere) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-8, respecting Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

(Translation):

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this bill is to change the French name of the company from Compagnie canadienne d'assurance sur la vie dite du Soleil, to Sun Life du Canada, compagnie d'assurance-vie.

As may be seen in the bill's preamble, such change in name shall not in any way impair, alter or affect the rights or liabilities of the company, nor in any way affect any suit or proceeding now pending, or judgment existing, either by, or in favour of, or against the company, which, notwithstanding such change in the name of the company, may be prosecuted, continued, completed and enforced.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-17, to amend the House of Commons Act (internal economy autonomy).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I mean nothing disrespectful to Your Honour by this, but I think it is a fact that, contrary to common opinion and common understanding, you are not a free agent in the discharge of your duties and responsibilities, to the extent that you have along with you in the exercise of some of your duties a number of ministers of the crown who participate with you in coming to some decisions.

The house and its environs are supposed to be under your authority Mr. Speaker, but I submit that by virtue of the House of Commons Act which this bill seeks to amend, such an understanding is, in reality, a fiction because there is working with you in connection with some matters a group called the commissioners of internal economy sometimes referred to facetiously as being the commissioners of infernal economy—yourself excluded from that facetious reference. Section 18 of the House of Commons Act provides the following:

> All sums of money voted by parliament upon such estimates or payable to members of the House of Commons under the Senate and House of Commons Act, are subject to the order of the commissioners, or any three of them of whom the Speaker shall be one.

We see from this that even after parliament approves the estimates of expenditure with regard to certain matters which come under your jurisdiction, the money voted is still subject to cabinet interference and influence as to the manner in which those funds are to be expended.

As was transmitted to the house by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on opening day, the commissioners of internal economy are the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Veterans Affairs who is also the leader of the house, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I say that in effect this allows for cabinet dictatorship and cabinet control over certain functions of the House of Commons and certain activities of ours. I say this is not compatible with our sense of democracy and is not compatible with our desire to have a Speaker free and unfettered by cabinet dictation.

The background to the establishment of the commissioners of internal economy is referred to briefly in the Audit Office Guide put out by the office of the Auditor General. On page 95 of that publication for 1958, reference no. 347, the following appears:

> Unlike the case in the Senate, the Speaker is elected by the House of Commons and has financial responsibilities before and after the grant of supply, because sections 16 and 18 of the House of Commons Act provide that—

Then the text goes on to recite sections 16 and 18. I shall go on to quote the reference in the Audit Office Guide, which reads as follows:

> By way of explanation of the origin of the requirement in section 16 that the commissioners be members of the privy council: At the time of confederation sessions were relatively short and transportation facilities restricted, therefore it was felt desirable that the members of the board of internal economy should live close to Ottawa. A risk was that this might place the members of parliament in the Ottawa area in a preferred position; moreover, they had a special interest in appointments. The solution was to select ministers of departments who represented different parts of Canada but necessarily spent most of their time in Ottawa.

The indication, therefore, is that this board or group of commissioners came into being to meet a particular set of circumstances prevailing at that time in order to provide for the more expeditious despatch of this sort of business. I submit that those circumstances no longer exist and that we should move away from a situation where the internal affairs of this house are being run by a minister of the crown, usually the Minister of Finance, to a situation where the house has control of its own activities.

The bill in this regard seeks, therefore, to repeal section 16 of the House of Commons Act which provides—I shall not read it in detail—that the governor in council shall appoint four privy councillors who, along with yourself, Mr. Speaker, would be members of a commission for certain purposes. The bill before us also provides for the repeal of section 18 which sets up these commissioners who may approve or disapprove of the expenditure of certain sums of money. By repealing these two sections we leave the way open for the House of Commons, without interference either from the Senate or from His Excellency the Governor General, to establish standing orders to deal with this matter, because it is purely a matter with which we as members are concerned.

I think that in our consideration of what standing orders should apply to such a commission as the one over which you now preside—and I still think that one should exist—we should take into account the necessity of having, certainly, yourself as a member of that commission. It should be representative of all the parties which might happen to be in the house and, as well, of the government itself as an element distinct from parties. Naturally, I think that Mr. Speaker should, without question, continue to be chairman of this commission and that the others would work with him and advise him on certain matters. I think the Leader of the Opposition, by virtue of his office, or his deputy, should be a member of the commission also, as well as the house leaders of other parties which may be represented from time to time in the house. I think the Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary should likewise be a member of the commission because there is a certain financial interest here involving the preparation of estimates. I think the Minister of Public Works or his parliamentary secretary should be a member of this board because there are certain activities affecting the area around the House of Commons and in the house itself which come under the jurisdiction of that minister. In addition, I think there should be a number of other members, perhaps five or six, who would be selected on the basis of their experience in the house.

This commission, which would be established by our standing orders and thus become directly an arm of the house itself should, I think, be set up afresh with each parliament and continue in effect for the duration of that particular parliament. I think the commission could continue to perform some of the functions carried out by the present commissioners of internal economy with respect to staff and so on. Certainly it would advise Mr. Speaker on such questions as the preparation of the estimates, the location of accommodation, office supplies and the like, including the provision of office equipment and secretarial services to members—all those things which may be considered necessary to allow a member of parliament to discharge his functions and responsibilities in the most effective manner.

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. member permit a question? He referred to the preparation of estimates. I wonder if he would elaborate and tell us just what he means.

Mr. Howard: Yes. I had in mind that the commission could advise Mr. Speaker in the preparation of estimates.

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. gentleman permit another question. Is the hon. gentleman in his proposal suggesting that we take away from the Minister of Finance control over the ways and means and put this control in the hands of the parliamentary group referred to by the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Howard: Control over the expenditure of public funds is in the hands of parliament and will remain there by the consideration and passage of the estimates and the authorization to spend certain sums based on the estimates. It is a question of making sure that the expenditure of the money is not subject to interference and that the operation of the house comes under the control of the Speaker. Once parliament authorizes expenditures for salaries of employees of the public service those funds are paid to civil servants on a monthly basis. There is no question of derogation of responsibility. It remains the responsibility of parliament to pass on the expenditures. It is merely a question of taking into account all the factors that should be considered in preparing estimates for the coming year. The house will be the main element concerned. Each department prepares its estimates and pares them down to the bare minimum expected to be spent in the coming year.

The commission should continue to make an annual report to parliament concerning what is going on. Wages, hours and working conditions should be reported on to ensure that the staff of the House of Commons does not suffer through being underpaid or not having a channel through which to air their grievances.

I hope that no one will interpret my remarks as being disrespectful of Mr. Speaker or Your Honour's office. This merely represents an attempt to bring these provisions relating to the operation of the house up to date to ensure that Mr. Speaker will remain free and unfettered from cabinet dictation, as I said earlier, with respect to the operation of the house, this chamber and the buildings. I seek to assure that the operation will be within the control of parliament and not something the cabinet runs to suit itself.

I will close by quoting from a reprint of an article by Professor J. R. Mallory of McGill University which appeared in the February 1, 1957 issue of the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science. Professor Mallory writes:

> Cabinet government and the modern party system have placed the executive in a position of effective mastery over the House of Commons. When it is pushed to its extreme limits the ascendency of the cabinet goes somewhat against the grain of the constitution, so that certain transparent fictions must be solemnly perpetuated in constitutional doctrine. One of these is the doctrine that the House of Commons is master of its own procedure—a notion which in practice does not disturb the peace of mind of the government or its party whips. Another polite and harmless fiction surrounds the appropriation of funds for the internal administration of the House of Commons.

I am eager to ensure that there is a lessening of cabinet control over certain of the activities of the House of Commons.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member who introduced this bill is under a misapprehension with regard to the operation and function of the committee on internal economy. Throughout the course of his remarks he iterated and reiterated that there was cabinet interference, cabinet domination and cabinet control of this committee. Actually, the members of the committee act as an advisory council to Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker in due course reports to parliament as to the action taken by the committee on internal economy during the course of the year. That report is subject to scrutiny by the House of Commons and is subject to debate thereon. Questions may be asked of Mr. Speaker with regard to the activities of the committee during the course of the consideration of the estimates of Mr. Speaker when they are before the House of Commons, so that there is nothing concealed with regard to the activities of the committee. Energetic and active members of the House of Commons who wish to do so can read the reports of that committee and question Mr. Speaker when his estimates are before the house. There is no cabinet domination or interference with the activities of Mr. Speaker in this regard.

The hon. member suggests we should bring the situation up to date. Actually what he is suggesting is that we turn back the clock approximately 95 years because it was in 1878 that the committee on internal economy, as we know it, was set up. It succeeded an earlier committee which was called the committee on contingencies. That committee which normally consisted of 21 members functioned during the time when the legislative assemblies were active in the governmental life of our country prior to confederation. The committee was appointed after confederation and dealt with problems concerning the House of Commons. In 1868 the prime minister of the day, Sir John A. Macdonald, introduced a bill based on British precedents to establish the committee on internal economy. It has functioned from that day to this without, to my knowledge, any suggestion that it has not been a competent and responsible body, responsible to the House of Commons.

I am at a loss to know why the hon. member has seized upon this opportunity of bringing to the house this particular aspect of the statutes. I do not know whether or not the hon. member was inspired to do so simply on the basis of a magazine article by Professor Mallory. The portion the hon. gentleman quoted seemed to me not to be conclusive evidence that a change should be made. In fact, as I followed his discourse I could not find any argument in favour of change except the unfounded allegation as indicated in some of the words he used that there is undue cabinet influence and interference with the spending of the money voted.

The hon. gentleman said he wished to make Mr. Speaker free and unfettered from cabinet dictation. This, too is an unfounded allegation. There is no evidence to support a statement of that nature. If it were true it would logically follow that every speaker from 1878 to the present day has been unfree and fettered by cabinet dictation. It is a rather strange thing that in 1962 the hon. member for Skeena whose experience in the House of Commons is relatively limited should fancy that he suddenly discovers that something has been wrong for well over eighty years. The hon. gentleman is now riding off in all directions in an attempt to correct something which he thinks is wrong. I think he should examine the history of this committee, lay the facts before the house and support his allegations with evidence before he comes here to give information which is, to say the least, a bit misleading, and to launch an accusation against members of the government who happen to be on the committee on internal economy, charging them with undue influence with regard to the Speaker. As a matter of fact, I thought the hon. member was quite out of order in making accusations of that sort with regard to members of the house who are on that committee. However, I did not rise on a point of order as I realized that I would have an opportunity to speak, as has happened.

If the hon. member would look back at the Journals of 1867-68, he will find that a committee was appointed in that year. As I have said, there were 21 members. I have not had time to check and ascertain whether they were representative of all parties in the house. However, perhaps they may have been of that character.

The hon. member throws out the suggestion that all parties of the house should be represented on this committee to advise the Speaker and that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) or his deputy—I do not know whether he has a deputy now unless it is the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue)—should be a member of that committee; and for some reason or another he would be prepared to give the Leader of the Opposition a prominent position there. Then he suggests that house leaders of other parties represented here in the House of Commons should be on that committee. For what purpose? Every member who has some difficulty or complaint with regard to the internal management of the House of Commons is perfectly free to go to Mr. Speaker and to suggest to him that some changes should be made. I am quite certain that over the years that has been the practice of the House of Commons. I well remember that when I was sitting in the opposition I often called upon the Speaker of that day in order to suggest certain changes in the general operation of the House of Commons, with regard to the matter of supplies and things of that nature. At the present time there is no particular reason to judge that the same opportunity is not available to every member of the present House of Commons with the present Speaker. Alternatively, members could draw to the attention of the named members of the committee on internal economy suggestions, if they have them, for improvements in management.

I have not had time in which to discover why, in 1878, the prime minister of the day thought it wise to change from the method of a large committee to a statutory body, namely the committee on internal economy. The librarians have been working hard to find that information but it has not yet come to light. However, there must have been some good reason for making the shift. It may be because of the financial obligation that is imposed on the Speaker. In Bourinot, the fourth edition, at page 197, I notice that the learned author of that work states the following:

> The commissioners of internal economy of the House of Commons is a statutory body having definite powers and responsibilities with reference to the expenditures of that body. Formerly, certain expenses of the legislative assembly of Canada were regulated by a committee of contingencies, appointed at the opening of each session. On its report the salaries and other contingent expenses were provided for. The committee was re-appointed in 1867-8, and made several reports, which were acted upon, but during the same session, the premier (Sir John Macdonald) brought in a bill respecting the internal economy of the House of Commons, which was unanimously passed.

I draw the attention of the house to that quotation. The house of that day had lengthy experience with the committee on contingencies and members of the House of Commons of that period who had formerly served in the assemblies of Upper Canada, Lower Canada and the other provinces had similar experience. Yet when Sir John brought in his bill setting up the committee as we know it now, the house unanimously passed that measure. I therefore suggest the implication is that the house found the committee on contingencies was not a suitable method of dealing with problems affecting the members and the organization of the business of the house and thought it would be better done by having a statutory body appointed.

Mr. Bourinot on the following page goes on to indicate some of the work of that committee and he ends one of his paragraphs with this sentence:

> The commissioners regulate with the Speaker all salaries not fixed by statute and all expenses of the house—in fact assist the Speaker as an advisory council with respect to the staff of the house.

Then he goes on to state that provision was made for an audit of the accounts and that the Auditor General in his annual report would give the fullest information with respect to the expenditure of the two houses.

Why should we make a change at this time? If the hon. member wishes to have a change made and wishes to go back to an outdated system, I suggest that he must put forward much more valid arguments than those he has adduced this afternoon. I reject entirely the accusation that there is interference with the Speaker or that there is cabinet domination. I reject his accusation that the cabinet steps in and takes action to suit itself, again using some of his words. This is an atrocious accusation against members of the cabinet. The article which he quoted from the Audit Office Guide of 1958, gave an explanation of the Auditor General of that period as to why the commissioners were appointed by the privy council. I do not know where the Auditor General of that day obtained his information. However, it has been reprinted in the explanatory section of the bill. Apparently the suggestion made there is that instead of just appointing members who were living close to Ottawa because of transportation difficulties of 100 years ago, it would give better representation country-wide to appoint to the committee members from the cabinet who would be living in Ottawa anyway but who would be representing other parts of the country. So it was not in order to ensure or make any provision for so-called cabinet domination, but merely to make the committee widely representative of the various areas of Canada that members of the privy council were appointed to the committee. There was no plot in those days and there is none at the present time to bring about domination by members of the cabinet. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that members of the cabinet are also members of the House of Commons and should be entitled to the same consideration as other members of this august body.

It is interesting to read the report of the committee that was set up in 1867 and 1868. I judge this was the last time that the committee of contingencies operated prior to the bringing in of the bill of Sir John A. Macdonald. The House of Commons dealt with 17 resolutions which were put forward in the third report of the committee of contingencies. It is interesting to note that they were concerned with matters of financial economy to be observed in the House of Commons. They dealt with the number of translators and the number of extra clerks that should be employed. They considered such things as the reception and distribution of the printed bills and other documents. They dealt with the subject of the post office and its management. They suggested that no clerk be stationed in the reading room, that there should be but two messengers and one labourer in the joint department on routine and printing, that there be but one messenger in the library and that no messenger be attached to the office of the Speaker's secretary or to that of the assistant clerk of the house.

They set the salaries of various people employed by the House of Commons. They suggested that the nine pages, which was the number they had working in those days, should receive $1.50 per day during the session. They suggested that the salaries of the two night watchmen be fixed at $400 per annum, that the stationery supplied to each member of the house should not exceed in cost the sum of $15 for each session and should be delivered in a box on the first day of each session, and that no more be issued. They were dealing with matters of internal management with regard to the House of Commons.

I suggest that those matters are being dealt with effectively and efficiently at the present time through the committee on internal economy under the able chairmanship of the Speaker with the assistance of his very able staff, and that the House of Commons has full opportunity during the course of a session to examine into the activities of that committee and to question the Speaker when his estimates are before the house with regard to how his duties have been carried out. It follows from that that there is no concealment in this committee, no pressure applied by members of the committee who happen to be members of the privy council, and that the Speaker is completely free and unfettered in the performance of his duties.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether the minister would permit a question before he resumes his seat. Inasmuch as the minister is not only Minister of Veterans Affairs but house leader, as well as being a member of the committee to which we are referring, would it be fair to classify his speech as a vested interest type speech?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have heard some foolish questions in my day but that ranks high on the list.

Mr. Howard: Just as foolish as your argument.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It would be a case of vested interest if you got on the committee.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief remarks on this rather intriguing bill. The explanatory notes state that the purpose of the bill is to abolish statutory rule by members of the Queen's privy council over the internal economy of this house, the reasons for such rule no longer having validity, and thus permit the Speaker and members chosen by the house to govern the affairs of the commons.

I must say before proceeding with my remarks that the minister did not deny that the purpose of the bill is properly stated in the explanatory notes. The purpose of the bill is to assist Mr. Speaker and members. It is quite obvious to one who has knowledge of the management of the internal affairs of this house that Your Honour reigns but does not govern in all respects, and the purpose of the bill is to assist Mr. Speaker to govern with the assistance of members of this house, to introduce a greater spirit of democracy, shall I say, in the administration.

I thought that the minister was rather sharp with the hon. member for Skeena. He will admit that the member has provoked discussion on a somewhat obscure and complicated question. Practically the whole of the minister's reply to the arguments of the member for Skeena was a defence of the status quo. He showed a rigidity and inflexibility of mind that is so common among persons of Tory mentality. He did not even suggest to the member for Skeena that there was something in what he had said and that the matter should be looked into because the subject warranted investigation. I think that would have been a much more progressive approach on the part of the minister. I trust that he really and finally has been influenced by the arguments of the member for Skeena and will change his mind. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, good precedents for his doing so have recently been established in the house in that the minister has been influenced by arguments put before the house by members of this group and has changed his mind. I do hope he will return to that former flexibility and give this matter further consideration.

I thought that the minister rather censured the member for Skeena somewhat unduly. This is a most complicated and obscure question and the member for Skeena demonstrated absolutely his fitness to be placed in the shadow cabinet which we hope to form in the very near future. On page 32 of the publication, Organization of the Government of Canada, I read the following:

> In the House of Commons, when the language of the Speaker is English, the language of the chairman of committees, who also acts as Deputy Speaker, is French. In addition to presiding at all meetings of the house, the Speaker enforces the observance of its rules, maintains its rights and privileges and acts as the official spokesman of the house as occasion may require.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that you do that to the great satisfaction of all of us.

He is also responsible to the house for the management of its internal affairs and the operation of its branches and services.

That is not quite an accurate description of the circumstances that prevail at the present time with respect to Mr. Speaker, and the purpose of the bill is to make that statement a matter of fact so far as the management of the affairs of the house is concerned. I must compliment the member for Skeena on his exposition of a somewhat abstruse and to the public, I am sure, mysterious administrative problem concerning the management of the affairs of this house. It is not a subject that would be easily understood outside the house and I think there is too little knowledge among members within the house. Although there has been a very unsympathetic approach on the part of members of the government party, I trust that this discussion will cause members to do some reading and find out the exact circumstances that prevail at the present time.

However, he has provided an opportunity for members to discuss the improvement of what I consider, in some respects, to be our out of date way of doing things, our out of date system of internal management. What the hon. member is aiming to do is to improve the management of this house so that there will be greater satisfaction amongst members with respect to offices, secretaries and things of that sort. Mr. Speaker does the very best he can for us under the present circumstances, but there is a sort of limiting hand behind the scenes when it comes to finances, staff and so on. This method would improve the control of expenditures and the application of those expenditures. It would improve the circumstances of the staff and give them a sense of security to which they are entitled and which does not prevail at the present time because of this hidden hand behind the scenes. I am not suggesting for a moment that these gentlemen do not perform their duties to the best of their ability, but under present circumstances we have a variety of pre-Victorian management which is out of date.

I am sure that even the discussion of this problem will inform members, and the passage of this bill provide greater satisfaction to members in the performance of their duties, establish fair rules for the staff and introduce improvements and efficiency in the management of the internal affairs of the House of Commons. In saying that, I am not reflecting upon any person. The hon. member for Skeena is seeking to improve a system which we believe, in some respects, has become somewhat outdated.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): I must admit to some surprise that the question of principle involved in this bill is urged by a private member of the particular group to which the hon. member for Skeena belongs. Implied in the whole suggestion is the fact that presumably the hon. member's group is being hard done by in terms of facilities in this house. In other words, there is something that they have not got now which they want. I would ask any member of this house to examine historical records to see if he can find anywhere in the history of our parliament a like situation where eight members representing a rather twisted political persuasion, have had such lavish facilities made available to them. As an example of these facilities, I cite the number of secretaries in the leader's office, a special messenger, and each member with an individual secretary. Surely, the position of the private member, particularly within that group, is better than it ever has been in Canada's history.

Mr. Herridge: Because of their increasing burdens.

Mr. McGee: As I said, I am astonished that these suggestions should come from that particular corner of the house. Presumably the hon. member would like to return to the days of the pork barrel when the members of the committee for contingencies exercised influence over the hiring, firing and other aspects of patronage. I can assure the hon. member that with the current examples of C.C.F. patronage in the province of Saskatchewan, we have no wish whatever to return to those days.

There is another question here, and this bill provides me with an opportunity of making a comment which I have not had the opportunity of getting on the record for some time. It pertains to the position of the Speaker, himself. Certainly, in this debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order; before the hon. member goes too far in referring to the position of the Speaker, I think he should be warned that he may be out of order.

Mr. McGee: Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is not out of order to suggest that the limitations upon the Speaker are particularly binding at this moment. You, sir, are prevented from answering the implied allegations that you have been knuckling under from some pressure from the cabinet. As the house leader mentioned, this suggestion is implicit in the bill which is before us. Domination implies that the cabinet is dominating somebody, and the only other person who could be dominated in this situation is the Speaker.

Mr. Peters: They are sure dominating you.

Mr. McGee: I had hoped that the hon. member might have put forward some suggestions as to the individual items which he felt should be brought into effect, that he might have brought forward specific grievances. As I said in the beginning, the position of a private member in this parliament has improved tremendously since 1957. Obviously the physical facilities have been expanded and extended. The whole of the west block operation testifies to the willingness and encouragement of the Speaker and other members of the committee concerned with the role of the private member, in improving the facilities. I would be tempted, Mr. Speaker, if time permitted, to go beyond this bill and discuss the increased role of the private member, to say something about the opportunities for participation in parliament by the private member as a result of the recent changes in our procedures. Clearly, the limitation of time prevents this.

Perhaps I might come back to the point that I am surprised that this suggested restriction on private members should come from that corner. In the first 50 minutes of this debate during private members' hour, we heard from two N.D.P. members and we heard from only one other group in the house. The thundering silence from the Liberal benches is perhaps understandable and most easily explained by the fact that they did not have any contribution to make to this debate.

May I call it six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WATERLOO SOUTH—NICOLET-YAMASKA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE OF BY-ELECTIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): May I ask the leave of the house to revert to motions?

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister asks the leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of making an announcement. Has the Prime Minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to announce that by order in council, by-elections will be held to fill the vacancies in the federal constituencies of Waterloo South and Nicolet-Yamaska on September 10. There will be one vacancy in the House of Commons, the Mackenzie River constituency. The hon. member for Yukon has introduced a bill which has passed this house but has not yet received the attention of the other place, under which the name of the constituency would be changed to "Northwest Territories" and the area increased in size. No reference has been made to that vacancy, nor will there be until the bill finally receives the attention of the other place. If it becomes law, then an announcement will be made at that time.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): On behalf of the absent front bench members of the official opposition and our group, I thank the Prime Minister for making this announcement at this time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the hon. gentleman, who has recently become a leader and whose leadership seems to have gone a little to his head, and say that it is unfortunate that these constituencies are going to go unrepresented for the whole of this session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the hon. gentleman that it was once said, "Physician heal thyself", and if he will look at the record of the government of which he was a member, he will have an answer to his own problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, but we were going to have the rights of parliament restored.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO GUARANTEE LOANS, ESTABLISH LIMITS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton)—Mr. Martineau in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide for the making of guaranteed loans during the period July 1, 1962 to June 30, 1965, and to establish $400 million as the limit of guaranteed loans that may be made during the new loan period.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: I assume the minister intends to reply to my hon. friend from Welland, to my hon. friend from Assiniboia and to my hon. friend from Gloucester who raised an important question about credit unions.

Mr. Milligan: I should like to make a few remarks in connection with this amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act based on some of the experience I have had in assisting farmers in my area to obtain loans under this measure.

I am very much in agreement with those who have spoken about the importance of this measure. Indeed, it is becoming difficult for those engaged in agriculture to obtain credit, when they need it, from any other source. I do know of some people in my own area who have attempted unsuccessfully to obtain assistance. Finally, they had to borrow from individuals at the rate of 10 per cent plus a bonus before they could get a loan. There is no doubt that the act has been very helpful to a great many people.

However, I have some reservations about increasing the amount available for these loans from time to time. I think that at some point we must take a realistic look at where we are heading. I noticed in tonight's Citizen an article suggesting that there might be two new provinces in northern Canada and that the possibilities for agriculture in those areas were terrific. It seems we have a lot of people who are doing research directed towards increasing production without a corresponding effort being made to find markets to dispose of the products we have on hand at the present time. I think this aspect is important.

I do know it has been the policy of the farm loans board to suggest for example, that a certain farmer with, say, 20 dairy cows should have 35 cows. To my mind that is not the right approach, because we are encouraging farmers to increase dairy production at a time when we are faced with a surplus of dairy products. Again, we should not encourage western farmers to buy more machinery so as to produce more wheat when we do not have a market for all the wheat we are producing at the present time. The same remarks apply to producers of sugar beets and to a great many others. It seems to me there should be some way of controlling the amount of loans going to those who are producing today just about what the market demands. In my experience it is not hard for a farmer, especially if he is doing well, to go to a bank and receive favourable consideration of an application for a loan under this measure. On the other hand, a small farmer, or a farmer who is really pressed and in need of assistance, would find it difficult to get such a loan through a bank.

There is another aspect which concerns me. I believe that when a farmer applies for a loan to buy cattle the bankers interpret the loan as being made in respect of purebred cattle. I know of one person in my area who paid between $450 and $500 apiece for cows, though he was selling his milk to a manufacturing plant. It seems to me that purebred herds may have their advantages but that we are certainly placing many of these farmers in a position where they are going to find it difficult to repay their loans. These people would be in a better position, it seems to me, if they were allowed to buy good quality dairy cattle and were not confined to purebred stock. I have talked with three bankers in my town in connection with this situation and they tell me that this practice is followed for the purpose of identifying the cattle; were it not for the registration number they would have no way of identifying these cattle. That seems ridiculous to me, because when they make a loan they know how many cows that farmer should have, and the farmer is bound to maintain his herd at a certain level.

Although I am in favour of seeing these loans increased, I think there should be some changes made in the regulations so that a farmer should not be able to borrow to increase his herd or buy more machinery merely to produce something which is already in surplus. I feel this is what is happening in some cases under the provisions of the act. It seems to me that our officials, when approving loans, should be encouraging farmers to get into lines which are not already overproduced—something that they can market. I am afraid that if we continue the present policy we shall find ourselves in the future in a more difficult position than we are at the present time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thank hon. members for the support they have expressed for this resolution. I shall try to deal with several points which were raised by hon. members who sought information.

First of all, one hon. member asked why the act is being extended for a three year period. That has been the history of this legislation since it was introduced in 1945. As I understand it the purpose has been to retain parliamentary control so that parliament would have the opportunity of reviewing the legislation once every three years.

There is a substantial amount of money placed by way of guarantee at the disposal of this legislation. The view has commended itself to parliament that on this account as well as for other reasons that form of control should be retained in the form of a limited life to the legislation.

Second, I was asked by the hon. member for Gloucester in regard to the position of credit unions and caisses populaires. We had an extended debate on this subject in 1960 and there has been no change in the position since that time.

Reference was made to the limit on the individual loan. May I remind hon. members that the original amount of an individual loan under this legislation was $3,000. That was increased to $4,000 in 1953, to $5,000 in 1956 and to $7,500 in 1959. That last increase was, of course, the largest increase to date. It was an increase of 50 per cent in the previous total and I think under present conditions it can be regarded as reasonably adequate. Conditions, of course, could change and one recognizes that both with respect to equipment and to other investment in agriculture, today the stress is on an increase in investment.

The hon. member for Assiniboia asked me for certain information of a statistical nature in relation to the experience with repossession of machinery. I am told on inquiry that that information is not at present available. Whether or not it could be made available, I do not know. It will take some considerable time. I shall make inquiries in that regard. I cannot say that that information could be made available before this legislation has passed through its various stages. I can tell the hon. member, however, that the administration of this legislation so far as the Department of Finance is concerned has been thorough and systematic as well as sympathetic.

In the calendar year 1961 the total of loans made was 70,615. The number of claims made in respect of the guarantee given under the legislation was only 232. In the calendar year 1960 the number of loans was 68,041 and the number of claims was only 209, so the experience of administration of this legislation is in keeping with what I said last night concerning the record of losses. It is an enviable record. I think it points to the sound policies that have been followed in relation to lending under this act as well as to the sturdy reliability of the Canadian farmer.

Finally, the hon. member for Welland asked me about the position of fire insurance on farm equipment. It is quite obvious to hon. members that no bank manager is going to make a loan on farm machinery unless he has reasonable fire insurance on the particular equipment. The hon. member said he knew of several cases where there had been loss by fire and where evidently there had not been insurance. In that case I must express my surprise. I can only surmise that there has been some slip up on the part of the bank or on the part of the borrower in that case. Perhaps there was fire insurance on the equipment at the time the loan was placed. It may have lapsed later or for some reason or other may have become invalid. It would be sheer speculation or surmise to attempt to account for it. Sound banking practice will dictate on the part of the bank manager firm insistence on having fire insurance placed on equipment which is the subject of a loan under this legislation.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-73, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Argue: Next sitting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting, agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO EXTEND PERIOD OF GUARANTEE ON LOANS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made to the 30th day of June, 1965.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this resolution, as I am sure hon. members are aware, is a kindred resolution to the one which has just been passed. This one relates to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act as the former one did to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to extend operations under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act for a further period of three years by establishing a new lending period to run from July 1, 1962 to June 30, 1965.

This legislation offers to fishermen credit facilities similar to those provided under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Thus, it will be sufficient, I think, to recall at this time some of the main features of the act. The essential purpose of the legislation is to facilitate the provision of term loans to fishermen. To this end, credit is made available to finance a broad range of investment projects including the purchase, construction or improvement of fishing vessels, fishing equipment and shore installations. The maximum amount that may be borrowed by a fisherman is $4,000 and repayment of the loan may take place over a period as long as eight years. Under the provisions of the act, the government undertakes to reimburse individual lending institutions for losses of up to 15 per cent of loans aggregating $500,000. A guarantee of 10 per cent is applicable in respect to loan funds exceeding $500,000. There is an over-all limit on the total amount of guaranteed loans which may be made by all lending institutions and this has been set at $20 million.

This legislation was enacted by parliament in 1955 and was made effective for a period of three years. In 1959, an amendment was passed which extended the period during which guaranteed loans might be made from December 12, 1958, to June 30, 1962. The amendment which is now proposed will establish the third lending period since the inception of the act. In this brief review of the history of the legislation, I might also point out that another amendment was enacted in 1959 which extended the definition of a fisherman to include a person who intends to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel, as well as a person who already has an interest in one.

In recent years a fairly stable although modest amount of lending has taken place under this legislation.

From the inception of the act in 1955 to December, 1961, a total of 981 loans was made amounting to $1,237,328. Of this total, $813,717 was repaid and currently an amount of $423,611 is outstanding. The most recent annual report on operations under the act shows that during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961, an amount slightly in excess of $217,000 was lent to fishermen, comprising 142 individual loans. During the succeeding nine month period to December 31, 1961, a total of 127 loans was made amounting to $187,454.

In summary, the proposed amendment is simple and brief. It will extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made and, as a result, fishermen will continue to have available intermediate term credit facilities for borrowing, on reasonable terms and conditions, to meet their capital needs. I believe that this measure, together with other action taken by the government, will enable fishermen to take advantage of more efficient methods of operation and will help to ensure the sound development of this important primary industry.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising to express disappointment at the resolution. The Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, as the minister correctly pointed out, was enacted by the previous government in the year 1955 in an attempt to meet a part of the credit needs of the fishing industry. The minister is right in using the term "modest" to describe the results under the act, notwithstanding the fact that, unlike the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act recognized credit unions and caisses populaires as well as the chartered banks. I may say parenthetically that it is hard to understand why that should be so in the one case and not in the other, except that one was done by a Liberal government and every opportunity to do the other has been turned down by a Tory government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no, that is ridiculous.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister can speak when I have finished.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would ask that the minister take his seat. I have the floor.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member denies or refuses a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is trying his favourite trick of trying to rise and make a speech when another member is speaking and it is not going to work.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was asking whether I could ask a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister can ask his question when I have concluded my remarks. We have all evening before us on this measure. I suggest to the minister that, if he does not wish to take all evening, he sit patiently and listen instead of interrupting. I shall be very happy to answer all his questions when I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do not make misstatements.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am recommending to the minister that we need not take much time over this legislation and that if he would show a little bit of courtesy to the house he would get this legislation through a great deal faster. I may say that I do not expect my advice to be taken. The minister is above advice.

Mr. McGrath: Keep on the subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for St. John's East says "Keep on the subject". May I say that I was on the subject when I was rudely interrupted by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a question of privilege. I did not interrupt the hon. member. I followed the practice of the house. I rose and asked him whether I might ask him a question. There was no rudeness on my part. The house can judge whether or not there was any rudeness on his part.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the minister is happy now that he has stated his question of privilege. I suppose I might get two sentences out before he rises on a point of order.

It will be interesting to see whether or not I do so. Then perhaps I might get a couple more sentences out before he says that what I am saying is a "blatant lie", a favourite phrase of the minister which is used almost every time he speaks outside of the house and of which I have many examples right here, if the hon. gentleman wishes them put on the record.

An hon. Member: Why don't you say something?

Mr. Pickersgill: As I was saying, if the minister would show the house just a little bit of courtesy and exercise just a little bit of patience, I do not think it would take very long to deal with this measure. However, if the minister wishes to behave in his usual fashion I think it will probably take the usual time. He may have his choice.

If I may now come back to this measure, Mr. Chairman, I may say that the legislation which we are now seeking not to amend but merely to extend was put on the statute books by a Liberal government. Though it has done some good, the minister was quite right in saying that the results have been very modest in comparison with those under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I suppose it would be easy and demagogic to blame the chartered banks, but I do not do so. It is quite obvious that there are difficulties about getting, in the case of loans to fishermen, the same kind of security as that which can be secured in the case of loans to farmers. After all, the farms are there whether or not the farmer is there. However, if the fisherman himself is not there, there is not much to be secured except boats and gear which themselves, of course, are rather perishable as we know all too well. The inherent difficulties are very much greater. But just because the inherent difficulties are very much greater it seems to me that in this industry, the oldest and the most historic industry of our country—an industry older even than the fur trade—ought to be receiving even more sympathetic consideration than any other industry in the country. As everyone knows, we have on our coasts the greatest fishery in the world which is being prosecuted successfully by the fleets of almost every European nation, and even those of some nations beyond Europe who come thousands of miles across the seas to prosecute the fishery, and who seem to be able to do so successfully when our own fishing industry is steadily declining.

As I say, we had hoped that in this field of credit—and I do not intend to go beyond that field; I assure the minister that I have plenty to say that is relevant without going into any irrelevant field—we hoped this government might do something, particularly in what some people think is going to be a year when they appeal to the country, although there are others who are not so sure, or that those considerations that seem to be more appealing in the minds of hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches than does the welfare of the country might induce them to do something similar to what they did three or four years ago in establishing the farm credit corporation which, after all, was merely a revision of the farm loan board, its predecessor.

An hon. Member: And what a revision it was.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. The hon. gentleman says, "What a revision it was." I think the revision was a very successful one. I have never attempted to take any credit from anyone for any good he did. I do not think it is necessary to do that, even in public life. I say that if this government would establish a fisheries credit agency similar to the farm credit agency which they established two or three years ago, I would give them full credit for it. Both ought to have been done at the same time. We said that at the time. Just so that I can anticipate the customary retort of hon. gentlemen opposite who react almost like Pavlov's dog in this matter, by repeating "Why did you not do it in your 22 years in office?"—

An hon. Member: Why did you not do it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will tell you why we did not do it in our 22 years in office. We did not do it in our 22 years in office because we thought the first step to take was the one we took in 1955 to establish this particular legislation. All this government has done is to extend it. Oh, it is true that they did a little bit more than that. They said that somebody who was not a fisherman could borrow under this legislation in order to become a fisherman. It would be interesting to know how many of those people have actually obtained loans.

Notwithstanding the fact that most of the provincial governments in the fishing provinces do have provincial loan agencies for fishermen, I am sure the hon. member for Royal, the Minister of Forestry, would agree with me when I say that the plain fact is that this is not something that ought to be left to provincial governments. Under the constitution fisheries are the exclusive responsibility of this parliament and the federal government. Surely if farm credit, when agriculture is a joint responsibility of parliament and the legislatures, is largely assumed by parliament, credit for fishermen should be the responsibility of this parliament. But let me say, sir, that if there is any industry that has been totally forgotten, totally neglected and totally ignored by the present government it is the fishing industry. The only thing that the government ever claimed it did for the fishing industry was to put fishermen under unemployment insurance, something that was done in the spring of 1957 before this government came into office.

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member will admit that he is going beyond the scope of the resolution now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I will admit, sir, that I was illustrating a point having relation to the resolution in the customary fashion in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Customary Liberal fashion.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I was pointing out, sir, was that we are disappointed. After all, what we are discussing is whether it is expedient to do this. Those are the governing words. I think it is expedient to do this but I am saying that it would be expedient to do very much more indeed than this.

It does seem to me that the present government, even in this period of death-bed repentance through which they are going at the present time, might go beyond this. They might produce another little speech from the throne in which they would announce that they were going to provide a credit agency to provide longer term credits for fishermen and to provide them on a basis on which I do not think we can reasonably expect the chartered banks to make loans under this legislation.

Before we actually pass the resolution I think it would be helpful if the minister could give us, in addition to the information he has already given, a geographical distribution of the loans because my recollection is that the last time I saw one it was perhaps the most disappointing feature of the whole legislation. I do appeal again to that great heart, that generous understanding, that broad vision of the Minister of Finance and suggest to him that the government should treat fishermen in the same way they treat farmers, as we appealed on another occasion already this session, and that in the field of credit for fishermen there should be an agency parallel to the farm credit corporation.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, those of us who have expressed a degree of interest in the fisheries for a variety of reasons are indeed disappointed, I am sure, at the limited extent of the resolution before us. However, perhaps we should not have expected too much, having in mind past activities, and perhaps we should have really appreciated the degree of mental ossification that exists on the treasury benches with regard to a matter so important as this. I cannot help but make a slight reference to some of the indelible words of the Minister of Finance when the original bill presented to the house was before the banking and commerce committee in 1955. We find that in the minister's gentle way he made some comments with respect to two or three clauses of the then proposed bill, which incidentally are still in the act. On page 87 of the proceedings of the committee I find these words of the minister with respect to clause 5:

> Mr. Fleming: I have a question on clause 5. The power is given by clause 5 of the bill to the governor in council to terminate the crown liability in respect to these loans in any locality—

And so on. Then he asked why this was necessary and the answer given him at that time was that this section was taken from the Farm Improvement Loans Act and if it was good enough there it should be good enough in this instance. The minister's casual comment at that time was:

> If that is the case it strikes me that it is not a good enough reason.

Then there is some additional explanation after which the minister said:

> On clause 5 if there is no better explanation to be given than we have heard, I want to say that I am against clause 5.

Seven years ago he was against clause 5 but clause 5 is still in this act. Is the minister still against it or has he come to the conclusion that it is better for him, as one participant in the activities of the governor in council, to have this degree of authority? I have given only one selection from the 1955 committee proceedings in which the present Minister of Finance as a private member played a prominent part and used a variety of expressions about the legislation not being good enough. He said that the explanations that were given to substantiate the legislation were not good enough and he was opposed to certain sections because they were not protective enough.

He has been in office now for four years and on two occasions during that time he has piloted bills amending this act through the house but nevertheless he seems to have forgotten the great words he used in 1955. If we go back to 1959 when the minister piloted an amending bill through the house, a number of members presented ideas to the minister at the resolution and other stages of the bill and suggested changes in order to make the legislation more effective, provide greater protection for the fishermen, give them a better opportunity to participate in the economic life of this country and in order to make sure that their livelihood would be protected and they would have the opportunity to prosecute the fishery to the best possible advantage. At that time the minister protected himself with his cloak of ministerial authority and said that naturally he could not do anything or make any pronouncements about the future, but that these matters would be given very careful study. He almost went so far as to say by implication that sympathetic consideration would be given to the ideas that were propounded at that time.

We now have another proposed resolution before us and all of the very worth-while ideas put forward by members of the house in 1959 in order to ensure that the fishermen would have full opportunity to participate under this act have been discarded by the Minister of Finance. He thinks it is not worth his while to spend his time to prepare such amendments for passage by the house in order that fishermen will have a proper opportunity to participate. The number of loans that have been made under the act is certainly disappointing.

Why would it not be disappointing when there is a $4,000 limit on such loans? One reason the result is disappointing is that some fishing vessels cost more than $4,000. This is a rather low cost type of boat, so far as the west coast is concerned. I do not care to engage in any guesswork about the cost of fishing vessels on the east coast. I leave that to those who are more familiar with that area. In so far as the west coast is concerned, $4,000 would not buy a rowboat that could be used for fishing. When you get into the region of $15,000, $20,000 and up, then you are in the area of the amount of money necessary to build a boat to participate in this industry. The limit of $4,000 on a loan under this act excludes persons who want to become fishermen by reason of the fact it costs more than that to either become involved in the fishing industry or to make repairs to a boat if one is engaged in that industry. I believe this argument was presented to the minister on a number of occasions.

I see no reason why there should be reluctance to accept an increase in the limit. Certainly, there was no hesitancy, so far as I can gather, about increasing the limit under the Farm Improvement Loans Act on two or three different occasions in the past few years. In fact this government, in 1959 I think, speaking from memory, increased the limit under the Farm Improvement Loans Act to $7,500. Why not increase the loan limit under this act to ensure that fishermen will have a full opportunity to borrow money? So far as my knowledge goes there have never been any defaults in payments on loans. The most recent report I have been able to obtain points out that there were no claims submitted to the government for payment under the guarantee provision of the legislation. The fishermen who borrowed money under this act met their commitments to the bank and paid off their loans before they expired. One would think that the same conditions would prevail with an $8,000 as have prevailed in connection with the $4,000 loan, and the advantage to the fishermen would be equally great.

The act now prohibits a person who does not own a fishing vessel from borrowing money. We know there are many commercial fishermen who, for one reason or another, will remove themselves from the fishing industry for a period of a year or two or perhaps more. If they have an interest in a boat, they sell it. If they own a boat, they sell the boat and take up some other form of work. Perhaps two or three years later they may decide to enter the industry again. They are definitely prohibited from borrowing under this act because they do not have an interest in any vessel. This is one type of amendment that should be made in order to help people who want to borrow money to get back into the fishing industry. However, as I have said, you cannot borrow money unless you have an interest in a fishing vessel.

In any event, in the final analysis it is the lending agency that decides whether or not to lend money to these individuals. It is not the Minister of Finance. He is not lending money to anybody. Why should there be this restriction that prevents some people from getting back into the fishing industry? We went through this process before, and the minister seemed to listen carefully and sympathetically. Perhaps he did not pay any attention but just looked as if he were listening sympathetically. What about the situation where a person starts to build a boat and gets it partly completed? He gets the hull completed on the ways, but he cannot borrow money under this legislation to enable him to complete that boat by reason of the fact that he is not considered to be one who has an interest in a fishing vessel. This is another amendment that should be made in order to assist people in the fishing industry.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, when I am suggesting an increase in the limit of $4,000 on loans to $8,000 or $10,000, I am treading on dangerous ground because the section of the act which contains this provision is the same section which provides for 5 per cent simple interest on the loans. Perhaps if the minister could get into that field he would treat the fishermen with the same contempt he treated the small businessmen by having a wide open interest rate inserted in this legislation. However, I feel we should be willing to gamble that the minister will not be quite so callous to the fishermen and will maintain the 5 per cent interest rate, even though he does open the section for one other purpose.

As I have said, we went through this procedure once before. The minister filled up a number of pages of Hansard during the debate on the amending bill in 1959, saying that he was going to study these proposals and perhaps later on something would be done about them. Before we proceed beyond the resolution stage, perhaps the minister could indicate to the committee what consideration he gave to those studies and his reasons for rejecting them. Like the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I feel that this is a piece of legislation which, inadequate though it is, the house could put through with a minimum amount of controversy. Certainly, so far as I am concerned, that could be done. However, Mr. Chairman, I feel we have a right to insist upon an answer from the minister concerning the conclusions he came to about the very worth-while suggestions made in 1959, the very worth-while suggestions which have been made to him directly by way of correspondence and the very worth-while suggestions which were reiterated today. Perhaps the minister has been too busy with other things and has not got around to drafting these amendments. I am sure if he has studied these proposals he will have a worth-while explanation to make to the committee, and we can go on from there. I do not believe we should allow the resolution to pass without some clarification from the minister.

Mr. Robichaud: The resolution which is before us for discussion now has to do with nothing more than a minor amendment to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to extend to June 30, 1965 the period during which guaranteed loans may be made. In introducing this resolution, the minister said this act was similar to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. As stated by my colleague, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act contains a definition of "lender" which includes credit unions, caisses populaires and other co-operative credit societies designated by the minister as lenders for the purpose of the act. I would say this is the major difference between this act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act which we discussed this afternoon.

Now, the minister has put on the record some of the figures relating to the application of this act. When we realize that the amount authorized for lending under this act is limited to $20 million and the act has been used only to the extent of $1,200,000 by 614 fishermen in a period of six years, we can state that it has certainly been used in a very modest way. At the moment the amount outstanding under loans made under this act is in the vicinity of $600,000. As was stated by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, out of the total number of loans made, 474 or about 50 per cent have been repaid for a total of $660,000, and there were no claims paid during the year. One claim amounting to $237.64 has been paid. This clearly shows that the fishermen are meeting their obligations.

In 1959, when an amendment to this act was introduced, representations were made to the minister to the effect that there was not enough publicity given to the act, not enough fishermen knew the act existed, and there was a definite reluctance on the part of the chartered banks to make loans under this act.

I think that some major amendment should be effected to make this act more practical and more adaptable to the needs of the fishermen. The act should be amended to assist fishermen in the case of disaster. If a fisherman, for example, loses his boat and fishing gear he is in no position to make the down payment which is required by the chartered banks. If the act were amended so that the amount guaranteed by the government were 25 per cent instead of 15 per cent in the case of a major loss by a fisherman, I am convinced that more fishermen would take advantage of this measure.

I would therefore suggest that before the bill is introduced the minister gives further consideration to it and includes in it some major amendment which will be of some assistance to fishermen.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add my voice to hon. members who have already spoken urging the minister to give consideration to extending the scope of this legislation. As the minister told us, this legislation was set up in 1955 to fill a specific need. Now, after more than five years experience with it, we know it is not doing the job it was intended to do and is not coming anywhere near filling the need that has to be met.

The minister told us that the amount lent under this act has been very modest. In a parliamentary return that was tabled in this house some time ago it was shown that since the inception of this legislation only 854 loans have been made from December, 1955 right up till the end of March, 1961. That has worked out to less than $200,000 per year.

In my own province of Newfoundland, during that time only 10 loans have been made, one in 1955-56 for $750; two in 1956-57 for $1,000 in total; in 1957-58 and 1958-59 there were no loans at all; in 1959-60 there were two loans totalling $2,448, and in 1960-61 there were five loans totalling $8,065. Altogether in the entire period from December 12, 1955 right up to the end of March, 1961 only 10 loans were made, for an aggregate of $11,753.

The minister told us when he introduced this legislation that its purpose was to enable fishermen to acquire vessels, to acquire shares in fishing vessels and to modernize their equipment. How many vessels can you buy for $11,000, or for an average of $2,000 per year; how much equipment can you get?

This is vital to our province because the fishing industry is one of the mainstays of our economy. We have about 18,000 fishermen making a livelihood out of the fishery, and the fishery is one of the industries that is self-perpetuating and is certainly capable of being expanded and modernized to compete with the fisheries of other countries.

The fisherman is a small operator, for the most part, and he needs more assistance than he can get under this legislation. The hon. member for Skeena has pointed out some of the difficulties, and I am not going to repeat what I have said on so many occasions in this house, that it is impossible for the ordinary fisherman in my province to get loans from the banks. I think that is amply proven by the fact that in six years only 10 loans totalling under $12,000 were made. For a vital industry of a country, this kind of lending cannot have any impact at all. There is just as much need—I would say, an even far greater need—on the part of fishermen as there is on the part of farmers. This legislation is not meeting the need that has to be met, and that must be met if we are going to modernize our industry and put it on a sound economic basis. For these reasons I should like to add my voice to those of hon. members who have already urged the minister to either change this legislation or set up some other means of filling this need.

Mr. Batten: Mr. Chairman, the resolution before us is:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made to the 30th day of June, 1965.

Obviously if this act is going to be used at all, the payment period would have to be extended, but after all it is a very minor amendment to a piece of legislation which I would have hoped would have been a greater advantage to the fishermen and would have been used more readily.

I think the experience we have had with this act over the last few years shows that it has not had the appeal to fishermen that we all wished it would have. I think one of the things that should be done in amending this act is to make a study to determine why the act has not done for the fishermen what it was intended to do, and why it has not received the attention and use by the fishermen that we would normally expect. I think an effort should be made to find out why.

There can be no doubt about the need as far as my province is concerned. There are three or four areas in my constituency where, if men are going to make a living, they have to resort to the fishing industry. They now do not have the boats, they do not have the gear, they do not have the inshore fishing property that would allow them to make a living which is compatible with our cost of living today. Perhaps years ago, under the conditions which existed at that time they were able to make a living of sorts. Today their needs are greater, and if they are going to make a living out of the fishing industry they must be able to fish earlier in the year. They must be able to carry on their fishing activities later in the year, and all this demands bigger, stronger and better equipment. If these men are going to need bigger, stronger and better equipment, as they do, it means a larger investment, and the only way in which these people can get funds to improve their equipment is by getting loans. Our Newfoundland fishermen for some reason or other are finding it difficult to get loans under this act. As my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo has just stated, very few loans have been made to Newfoundland fishermen under this measure. I feel there is some reason for this, and an investigation into those reasons would be very worth while in order that the act might be amended in such a way as to give our fishermen the loans they need to continue to make a living in the industry.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are several points raised by hon. members on which I think it was desired I should make some comment. I was asked about the geographical distribution of these loans. I can give the information for the most recent nine month period from April 1 to December 31, 1961. This is the number of loans, by provinces: Prince Edward Island, 67; Nova Scotia, 27; British Columbia, 23; New Brunswick, 4; Newfoundland, 2; Quebec, 2; Ontario, 1; Saskatchewan, 1; total, 127.

Mr. Carter: Is that for last year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is for the most recent nine month period, April 1 to December 31, 1961.

I can give the hon. member the figures for the same period in 1960 for comparison:

Prince Edward Island, 58; Nova Scotia, 7; British Columbia, 16; New Brunswick, 8; Newfoundland, 5; Quebec, 9.

Reference was made to the part that credit unions and caisses populaires are entitled to play in the administration of this act. When this measure was enacted in 1955 the original definition of lenders was written, and it has remained unchanged. According to a provision in section 2 of the act "lender" means, first, a bank, and second, a credit union, caisse populaire or other co-operative credit association designated by the minister as a lender for the purpose of the act. Of course, the reason given at that time by the government which introduced this legislation for including the credit unions and caisses populaires as lenders under this legislation, whereas they were not admitted to that status under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, was that in certain areas of Canada, and particularly in Newfoundland, branch bank facilities were so limited that it was felt it was necessary to include these other institutions in order to afford opportunities to the fishermen.

There have been very few loans made by credit unions in pursuance of this legislation. They have a status of lender under the act, but the total number of loans made by credit unions and caisses populaires since the legislation came into effect is just 59.

Mr. Pickersgill: Out of a total of how many?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I gave the total in my first statement—981.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not a bad percentage.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was asked about the effect of section 5 of the act, that is, the section which provides for the termination of liability by order in council on proclamation in any locality for any of the purposes specified in this act. No use has been made of that power at any time to my knowledge, and I can assure hon. members that I have no intention of making a recommendation at any time that I can foresee for the exercise of any such power.

I was asked also about the number of claims there had been, or cases of default. The record here is again remarkable. The annual report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961 showed that no claims had been paid during the year. One claim amounting to $277.64 has been paid. That is, indeed, a record which can be interpreted in various ways: first of all that the fishermen who have been borrowers under this act have been very prompt in their payments; it also could be interpreted as indicating that the banks have followed a cautious policy in lending under this legislation. I have already indicated that the use which has been made of the facilities of this act has been, in terms of volume, modest.

Next, I was asked concerning the terms of the loans permitted under this act and, in particular, as to the present ceiling of $4,000 on an individual loan. It may surprise some hon. members who have spoken on the subject to learn that experience has shown that there has been no crowding of that ceiling. We have received, to my knowledge, no representations from fishing organizations on this subject nor have we been told by the banks that there has been any pressure on that ceiling which might be relieved by an increase. In this respect we should be glad to examine any representations which may be made in the light of experience.

Finally, some reference was made to the disasters which overtake fishermen in respect to their equipment and gear. I remind hon. members that such cases are taken care of under an altogether different provision. This present legislation was not intended to cover cases of disaster. We have a plan to deal with that, and it is known as the fishermen's indemnity plan. Provision is made for that, as hon. members know, under the Department of Fisheries, and parliament will be asked later to appropriate a sum of money to cover the administration of that plan.

Mr. Robichaud: On that last point, is the minister aware that claims on the fishermen's indemnity fund can only be made with respect to certain types of gear, and that these are the types of gear covered by an insurance policy bought by the fishermen? There are many types of gear which are not included under that scheme but which can be included under loans to fishermen.

Mr. Howard: I should like to indicate that we appreciate the clarity with which the minister has dealt with the various questions which were raised earlier.

It is surprising to me that we intend to retain in statute form a provision which no one has any intention of using. The minister talked about section 5 of the act, the section to which he was opposed in 1955. He says it has never been used and that he himself has no intention of recommending to the governor in council that it should be used. It seems to me we are going to a lot of unnecessary trouble by reprinting statutes from time to time which contain provisions we do not intend to use.

I commend the minister for his own attitude. I think we should not decide that the act should be applicable to certain areas of the country and not to others. As I say, it seems strange to me that we should not do a thorough job and toss unwanted sections out so that the act may read more clearly. What probably happened is that the minister forgot what he said in 1955 and said what he said a moment ago about section 5 as an afterthought to cover up his failure in this regard.

The minister mentioned that the banking institutions said there had been no crowding of the ceiling of $4,000. I understood him to say he received no representations asking for an increase or extension of that ceiling. If the minister reviews his correspondence, voluminous as it may be, he will find that in 1959 he did receive a communication in this regard. The united fishermen and allied workers' union, spokesmen for the largest group of fishermen on the west coast, at their fifteenth annual convention passed the following resolution:

> Whereas the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act has been of benefit to some fishermen but is not altogether satisfactory particularly on the west coast of Canada where costs of boats and materials are higher than elsewhere
> Therefore be it resolved that this fifteenth annual convention of the united fishermen and allied workers' union request the Minister of Finance to make the following amendments to the above act.

The second point of the resolution reads:

> 2. Increase the maximum amount of a single loan from $4,000 to $8,000.

I know for a fact this was forwarded to the minister. I do not know what answer he gave. Following my receipt of the resolution I wrote the minister forwarding the resolution. I do not have a copy of my letter available and I do not recall whether he replied. This was in 1959. Here in fact is one organization which communicated with the minister asking for an increase in the ceiling.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member would permit me to interrupt, I was speaking of the period since this subject was last discussed, the time he was speaking of when he spoke earlier, since 1959.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps we should clear this up. We can still say the minister got that before the period of time he was talking about. The letter I have forwarding the resolution to me is dated May 8, 1959. The debate on the last amendment to the act commenced just before six o'clock on March 10, 1959. The dates coincide. It is difficult to say whether this was communicated to the minister before or after but it was around that period of time. This means the minister has had a couple of years in which to think about this. He has stated that he has received no requests and intends to do nothing about it. He said the banks have indicated there is no crowding, as he put it, of the $4,000 ceiling.

That is understandable for the following reason. My examination of the record indicates that the fishermen of British Columbia have taken greater advantage of the act than those in other provinces not with respect to the number of applications but with respect to the total value of the loans, which indicates that loans on the west coast are higher in value than those in the maritimes. Some fishermen who have knowledge of this act, knowing they can borrow money, make inquiries and discover the amount they can borrow is limited to $4,000. Knowing that, even though they may need $8,000 or $9,000 they realize they would be wasting their time trying to get that much from the bank. They therefore arrange their finances in such a way as to permit them to operate within the loan they will receive or try to curtail expenses and skimp on what they could do if they received a larger loan.

As is the case with the increases in the ceiling under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the minister will find the increases in the ceiling under this act will be beneficial to fishermen on the east and west coasts. I urge the minister to take into consideration the other matters I have raised.

While listening to the minister I examined Hansard of 1959. The debate on the amendment introduced at that time covers only a few pages because the bill was rushed through all stages by unanimous consent in view of the urgency of the situation. In approximately eight pages, from page 1804 to 1813 of Hansard of March 10, 1959, the minister on at least three occasions indicated that a continuing review would be made with a view to introducing amendments to the legislation as required. At page 1805 the minister was reported as having said:

> Several suggestions have been made with respect to amendments to this bill, all of them, I think I may say, designed to enlarge the scope of the bill. When the previous resolution was before the committee I said that these would be taken under study and they will be taken under study. The one that is before the committee now is one that readily commended itself and had some general support in the discussion, and it seemed to us to lend itself to early decision.

This indicates that perhaps decision on other matters required some study over a period of time, perhaps two and a half to three years as apparently is the case now. The minister went on to say:

> That is the reason why the house is being asked to permit the amendment of the bill, in the course of its passage, to permit this enlargement in the provisions.

Throughout the debate the minister indicated that the matter would be under study and possibly changes enlarging the scope of the act would be introduced. That was in 1959. Almost three years have elapsed since then. The minister indicated that proposed changes would be studied and discussed with the banks and at a later time he would come before the house asking for additional amendments. I am not admitting there is any validity in the minister's reasoning but apparently he has not felt prepared to make a comment with respect to enlarging any other features of the bill. In the three year period that has elapsed the minister should have reached a decision on these proposals and should have introduced changes to this extremely important piece of legislation instead of coming before us, diddling around by making extensions because of emergency conditions such as the expiry of the act.

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this rather unimportant piece of legislation. I say it is unimportant because it has been of little or no benefit to the fishermen in eastern New Brunswick.

I believe the minister deserves to be commended by hon. members of this house for having the patience and determination in bringing forth amendments to this legislation on two occasions within a period of six years. I believe he is obligated by law to do so because of existing loans and to carry forward in perpetuity a piece of legislation that was no good even when it was first introduced. I heard the minister give his statement earlier tonight. I believe he said four loans were made in the province of New Brunswick between April and December 1961. I do not know whether the loans were average or below average. However, I think that is ample evidence that there is very little need for this act. As has been said by people who represent the fisheries, what we need is definitely some sort of a fishery credit corporation such as that which was introduced for agriculture a year or two ago. I refer to a corporation under the Department of Fisheries, an organization that is in contact with the fisheries.

From time to time I hear of fishermen going to the bank. The bankers themselves hardly know of the existence of this legislation, let alone the fishermen. Many of the fishermen feel that it is up to provincial administrations to make loans, and some of the eastern provinces have set up minor departments of fisheries in order to try to give assistance. However, Mr. Chairman, this is a federal problem.

I commend the government for taking the time of the House of Commons to keep this statute alive, as that is all we are doing. It is obvious that the limits are high enough. Only a few complain about it or use it, except perhaps in the province of British Columbia. I congratulate the minister for his courage and his perseverance and patience. I hope that he and his colleagues will soon be able to bring in a fisheries credit corporation which will perform an adequate service for the fisheries.

Mr. Carter: I just wish to ask the minister a question. If I heard him correctly he said that since the end of March, 1961, to the latest date he has, two loans were made in Newfoundland. Can he give us the aggregate of those two loans?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. Two loans made in Newfoundland between April 1 and December 31, 1961, were for an aggregate sum of $4,800.

Mr. MacLellan: I should like to take a moment to express my views with regard to this piece of legislation now before the committee. Coming as I do from a riding in which there are a great number of shore fishermen, it has been my experience that this act has been of very little use to the people to whom it was intended to be of assistance. The shore fishermen are by far the greatest proportion of people engaged in the fishery in the Atlantic provinces, though it is quite true that the largest proportion of the catch is landed by people fishing from larger boats and operating out of the modern processing plants. Some 15,000 families are dependant directly upon the shore fishery in the province of Nova Scotia.

These are the people who need some special new type of credit facilities. They have found the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to be of very little use to them for the simple reason that the bankers for some reason or other will not extend sufficient credit under the act. Since the act provides a guarantee of 15 per cent of a portion of any loans made under it and ten per cent of the balance, one would think that this type of loan was one which would recommend itself to the banks. However, it has been my experience and that of a great many of my constituents who have got in touch with me from time to time with regard to this matter that the act is of very little use in practical effect. I wonder whether the minister would make some inquiry to ascertain whether there is not some way in which the act could be of more use to the shore fishermen for whom it was designed. It may be that this is only a matter of bringing to the attention of the banking community that this act could be of great benefit to the shore fishermen if it were applied with more flexibility.

I notice that in 1961 very few loans were approved in the province of Nova Scotia. I suppose that next to Newfoundland, it is the province which has the largest number of shore fishermen in Canada. In 1961 in Nova Scotia, only some $21,691 of loans were approved, yet the record of loans made under this act so far has been that these loans were repaid. The department has suffered little loss, I understand, in claims made under this legislation. It is too bad that some way could not be found to make more credit available to the shore fishermen. I am sure that some other method is needed rather than this particular type of legislation. My colleague from Westmorland a few minutes ago mentioned that he thought the best idea would be to set up a credit corporation for fishermen similar to that used for farm credit. I think this would be a very good idea. It may well be that this whole problem of credit for the shore fishermen and the rural dweller in general should be examined by a royal commission or some other type of inquiry. I am sure no other section of this nation is more in need of rejuvenation or rehabilitation than are the people engaged in the shore fishery. There are some fishing districts in the province of Nova Scotia—and I am sure this is so in the other provinces in the Atlantic area as well—who are as much in need of redevelopment as are some areas receiving aid under the Colombo plan.

I should like to see an inquiry made towards setting up some sort of credit system which would encompass the wider needs of the people in rural areas, particularly in the maritime section. I find that it is impossible really to say that very many fishermen subsist by their shore fishery alone. Shore fishermen usually are part time fishermen, part time lumbermen and part time farmers. Yet there is no one agency to which this group of people can go to seek over-all credit. They either must qualify as full time fishermen as under this act, or as full time farmers under other legislation. I should like to see some sort of rural assistance program set up which would allow a man who is receiving part of his income from the fishery, part from farming and part from lumbering, to go to one source where he would get adequate credit to help him to carry on his entire business operation, which requires him to look to the fruits of the sea, of the land and of the forests at once. The problems of the people in rural areas, particularly along our sea coast who rely chiefly upon the fishing industry for their livelihood and who turn in other seasons to other parts of the economy, needs special attention now, ahead of any other sector of the Canadian community.

I would sincerely recommend to the Minister of Finance, whom we have found to take our suggestions very readily in matters of this kind, that he see whether there is some way in which an adequate system of credit for the shore fishing industry could be set up. I can tell him that it would be a great boon to a section of the population which badly needs some help in this sector.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Just before the item carries may I say this. I am naturally very pleased to have these latter day supporters of the policy which I have advocated every time this matter has been before the house and every time the fishery estimates have been up for consideration in the last three years. It is encouraging to find that certain hon. members who support the government are now supporting the policy which has been advocated for three or four years by the official opposition and which would merely be carrying out for the fisheries the same policies which the present government has for the farmers. I should like to ask the minister whether he can offer any hope that any such policy will be carried out during the life of the present parliament.

Mr. MacLellan: Before the minister answers, Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. If the last speaker was referring to me, I might say that ever since I have come into this house I have supported every move or every proposal of any member of the house for a better system of credit for the people in the rural areas, particularly in the maritime areas. I believe the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will admit that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not deny it. I was hoping the minister would say something.

An hon. Member: Two flag Jack.

Mr. McGrath: He has three flags, one for blow, one for show and one for Joe.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, we can all appreciate that conditions in the fishing industry on the east coast require at least some extra degree of consideration with respect to action by this government or any government for that matter. Earlier this session we spent a considerable amount of time discussing the question of subsidies or payments or whatever they are called to western grain producers on the basis of $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of $200 for some nebulous purpose. No one hesitated to say that it was necessary or merited support.

I believe that over three years the total amount payable on the basis of $1 per acre exceeds some $120 million. I do not know whether the Minister of Finance is agreeable to paying $1 per cubic mile of fished ocean up to a certain maximum to assist the fishermen to get by in the world, but this situation is one that we should attempt to bring into some balance. If it is equitable and correct to pay western grain growers as primary producers of food a subsidy on an acreage basis, surely in order to bring about some balance with respect to government assistance to primary producers of other foodstuffs, and especially in view of the deteriorating condition of the fishing industry on the west coast as well as on the east coast, we should be considering some means of payment to fishermen in order to bring their incomes into balance and afford them a better opportunity to participate in the economic life of the country.

As I say, I do not know whether it would operate on the basis of $1 per cubic mile of ocean fished, on the basis of so many cents per mile for the mileage that fishing vessels travel to and from port or whether a subsidy would be paid at least to the fishermen on the east coast who have to fish outside the 12 mile limit whereas foreign vessels can fish inside the limit. I do not know what the basis would be but the government should be searching for some plan.

The proposal of so much per cubic mile of ocean fished may sound like an idea taken from outer space, but surely it is within the realm of the imagination of the government to accept the idea and develop it, particularly in view of the fact that there is going to be an election shortly.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the resolution carries, could I ask the hon. member for Skeena a question? Does he really believe that the present government has any imagination?

Mr. Howard: Oh, certainly. They had the imagination to demote the former minister of trade and commerce a few years ago when he got into difficulties. They had the imagination almost to fire the Minister of Finance because of things he said in another country.

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member will have enough imagination to know that he is getting out of order.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-74, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? Now?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF CERTAIN PROVINCIAL TAXES AND FEES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations on or after the 1st day of April, 1962.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the measure referred to in the resolution is another step in the efforts of the federal government to strengthen the fiscal position of the provinces and through them to aid the municipalities also. It will subject 28 named federal crown corporations to the payment of provincial sales taxes, gasoline taxes and automobile and truck licences, waiving their constitutional immunity from such taxes. It will achieve approximate equality of treatment as between provincial crown corporations and agencies in relation to federal sales and excise taxes, on the one hand, and federal crown corporations and agencies in relation to provincial retail sales taxes and gasoline taxes, on the other.

The bill will implement one of the Prime Minister's proposals to the federal-provincial conference of February 23-24, 1961. At that time the Prime Minister stated:

We have given further thought to the means of achieving reciprocity of treatment in the position of provincial crown corporations and agencies under federal sales and excise taxes and the position of federal corporations and agencies under provincial direct taxes on purchases. We are prepared to waive federal immunity from taxation and instruct federal corporations and agencies to pay provincial purchase taxes and other similar taxes on the understanding that provincial corporations and agencies will be subject to federal sales and excise taxes. We think that this is an equitable arrangement, being in accordance with the general principles followed in regard to the payment of federal taxes on purchases by federal departments. We think it is better than reciprocal exemptions as an administrative and accounting arrangement, preserving as it will a fairer relationship between crown corporations and agencies in general and private businesses.

The federal government now enjoys a constitutional advantage over the provinces in the imposition of taxes because of its exclusive right to impose indirect taxes. Neither level of government has power to tax the other directly. The provinces have no power to impose indirect taxes. The federal government, having such powers, could collect sales and excise taxes from manufacturers and wholesalers selling to the provinces and the manufacturers and wholesalers could pass the tax along to the provincial governments in the form of increased prices although there would be no actual levy of tax on the crown in the right of the province. The provincial governments, on the other hand, lacking the power to impose indirect taxes, cannot so easily impose taxes which are passed on to the federal government, although undoubtedly certain provincial direct taxes become elements of cost and are in this way passed on to the federal government.

In actual fact, the federal government has never pressed its constitutional advantage to the limit and has voluntarily provided a statutory exemption in respect of goods purchased for use by provincial departments, with the result that its sales and excise taxes impinge upon the provinces only through their crown corporations and agencies.

It is therefore apparent that the federal government, by instructing its own corporations and agencies to pay provincial sales taxes, is making a unilateral concession which will have the approximate effect of placing the two levels of government on the same footing. I have stated only that approximate equality of treatment would be achieved by the proposed bill. It is, frankly, difficult to make a more precise claim because of the real problem, at both the federal and provincial levels, of distinguishing between departments and agencies. Lest any hon. member should under-estimate the importance of this concession, however, may I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the bill actually goes the extra mile by providing that federal corporations shall expose themselves not only to retail sales and gasoline taxes, but also to automobile and truck licences. The latter, of course, are a provincial tax with no federal counterpart so that federal corporations will actually be exposed to provincial taxes of a greater variety than the federal taxes to which provincial agencies are now exposed.

The 28 federal crown corporations which will be instructed to pay retail sales taxes, gasoline taxes, and automobile or truck licences imposed by the provinces, are listed in the schedule to the bill. These corporations were selected after a careful scrutiny of all branches of the federal government. Essentially, they consist of all but three of the crown corporations listed under the Financial Administration Act plus those unlisted corporations which seemed comparable in function or legal status.

Concerning the corporations listed in the Financial Administration Act, these come entirely from schedules C and D since the bodies listed in schedules A and B are defined, by section 2(f) of the act, to be departments. Three corporations listed in schedule C of the act have been excluded on grounds of principle. These agencies, Canadian Arsenals Limited, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, and Defence Construction (1951) Limited, differ from the other schedule C and D corporations in that they operate almost entirely to provide what might be described as internal services for federal government departments. The corporations outside of the Financial Administration Act which will be covered by this bill are the Bank of Canada, Canada council, Canadian wheat board, industrial development bank, national productivity council, and the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

No recent estimate has been made of the cost to the 28 crown corporations of complying with the provisions of this bill. However, on the basis of a survey made in respect of the 1958 taxation year, it is estimated that the approximate cost will be $3 million. The cost would be substantially greater except for the fact that many of the crown corporations listed in the schedule are already voluntarily paying all or some of the taxes with which this bill is concerned. The effect of the bill, therefore, will be to place all 28 corporations on the same footing concerning the payment of sales taxes, gasoline taxes, and automobile or truck licences.

These are the main features of the proposed legislation. It represents an important concession to the provinces and marks the first time in history that this federal immunity has been waived for their benefit. It will accordingly contribute to the fiscal strength and independence of the provinces.

Mr. Benidickson: We have before us a very interesting resolution which will be followed by a bill that we will read with great interest. As I recall the circumstances in perhaps the largest province of Canada, Ontario, which had a government favourable to the present government in so far as its political inclinations were concerned, the government of that province went on strike. The government of Premier Frost decided that it did not intend to permit its crown entities to pay sales taxes to the federal government. The government of Ontario felt that there was a difficulty here and stopped, as I say, paying these taxes.

The Minister of Finance indicates that the federal government has decided, out of great generosity, to pay something that it was not being pressed to pay. I want to say that if the Prime Minister, on the basis of reciprocity told an interprovincial conference in February, 1961, that he was prepared to do something along this line, he was just 12 months behind the times. I think the reason he is doing something is that the province of Ontario, a relatively friendly government to the present federal government, stopped paying sales taxes to the federal government in respect of the purchases of such big provincial crown corporations as Ontario hydro.

Before proceeding too much further, I think we should hear from the Minister of Finance as to whether or not he has been receiving sales taxes levied by the federal government from Ontario crown corporations. I should like to know how long there has been a default in the payment of sales taxes with respect to Ontario hydro. I should like to know if there is no default at the moment, whether there was, in fact, a default a year ago and for how long that default existed. How many millions of dollars were involved in the payments withheld by Ontario hydro and other provincial crown corporations? It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to suggest that this is something that was proffered to the provincial government. I say it was not. This government resisted and complained about the fact that the province of Ontario felt it should not pay sales taxes to the federal government.

Now, the federal government, through its crown corporations such as Polymer and many others with almost similar commercial operations, refuse to pay the Ontario tax on gasoline purchases or the normal licence fees for vehicles operated by the corporation within the province. I say that we had an impasse between two Conservative governments, the government at Queen's Park and the government at Ottawa. There may be other provinces in which similar difficulties have been experienced. I expect that during this debate we will hear from British Columbia members as to what their feelings are with respect to this proposal, particularly in so far as the purchase of the British Columbia Electric Company is concerned, which until recently was not a provincial entity. I hope we will hear more about that.

I want to say that the Minister of Finance has gone far out of line in suggesting that this is an act of generosity on the part of the federal government, proposed by the Prime Minister of this country in February of 1961 at a federal-provincial conference. I say, on the contrary, that the Minister of Finance, those associated with him and the Prime Minister were met with a strike on the part of the government of Ontario, who refused to pay taxes imposed by the federal government, and this is a concession to the stand that was taken by their friend Premier Frost.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, it sounds pretty reasonable.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the minister's explanation of this very interesting legislation which he described, I think, as an act of generosity on the part of the government, and I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in which he discounted that generosity. He implied that there are other motives for the introduction of this resolution, and I suppose that in every sense of the word he considers it expedient. That is a lovely term that we use in the introduction of resolutions.

However, we are not sufficiently informed on this question at the present time to speak with confidence and therefore the members of this group intend to reserve their remarks until they have had an opportunity to read the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that before we can accept the resolution we need a little more information than the minister has given us about the background of this matter. Some of us have had quite a long experience of federal-provincial financial negotiations—the Minister of Finance has had a pretty bitter experience of them—and we do know this, that it is a rare enough thing for ministers of finance or even prime ministers simply to hand something as a concession to the provinces unless there is some historical background for it.

We all know, of course, that immense, almost encyclopedic knowledge of finance that is possessed by the Prime Minister who made this offer, and I think the minister should disclose just a little bit—lift the curtain a little bit—of that background for us and tell us why this particular concession should suddenly have been decided upon.

I think the minister should also tell us how the provinces are apt to benefit from this relatively, and if it will not turn out that this is no concession at all to the provinces that most need bolstering up financially, and that the bulk of any advantage that will come from this will be, as everything seems to be that is done by this government, to that province which financially is in the best position. I think perhaps the minister might give us a breakdown, as well as a little historical background.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I gave the essentials of the historical background. This matter was discussed at the dominion-provincial conference, to which I have made reference. The provinces, of course, were interested in receiving some opportunity of levying their commodity taxes on federal crown corporations. There was some discussion as to whether in seeking something approaching equality of treatment of crown corporations federal and provincial, in respect of taxes provincial and federal respectively the expedient should take the form of mutual immunity or mutual taxation.

The view of the federal government was that the sounder course was mutual taxation, and this view has been accepted and it is embodied in the present bill.

I indicated in my earlier statement the difficulty of making any precise reckoning of what this will mean in the payment of taxes by these 28 crown corporations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You must have made an estimate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did, and I referred to it in my statement. I am sorry the hon. member did not follow what I said on that point. But I am not in a position to make any breakdown on this as among the 10 provinces. No one can do that at this time.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, we are approaching ten o'clock and it is obvious that we will not conclude this debate tonight—

An hon. Member: You do not want to.

Mr. Benidickson: —but overnight I am confident that the Minister of Finance will consult his colleague the Minister of National Revenue and will be able to inform this committee when it next assembles whether or not there are now any outstanding claims on the part of the federal government against any crown corporation such as exists in my own province, let alone the other nine provinces. I refer to the Ontario hydro. Had the Ontario hydro any outstanding liabilities to the federal government prior to the passing of this legislation; and if so, how much, and for how long has the Ontario hydro been neglectful of its obligation to pay what might be in the opinion of the Minister of Finance a due debt under our Excise Tax Act?

Perhaps there are some other obligations of crown corporations in other provinces. Could we have, before we reassemble, a statement from the Minister of Finance as to any claims that the federal government has been advancing up to this time against crown corporations incorporated under provincial jurisdiction? Could we know what those crown corporations are, what the taxes are that have been asked for and have not been paid, and for how long have those debts claimed by the federal government remained unpaid?

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. I think that when the minister is doing the research my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River asked him to do, he might do a little research and find out so that he can tell us just what the estimate of the benefit will be to each of the provinces. I cannot believe that the Prime Minister would have made this extraordinarily generous offer and that it would have been discussed at a federal-provincial conference at some length without some of the premiers wishing to know how they were going to fare as compared with others.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think it was in the published minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is straining our credulity a little bit, because we all know that provincial premiers are very interested in practical questions of this sort. We in this house who represent the different provinces are also entitled to have this information; we ought to know what we are doing.

Mr. Churchill: You seldom do.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are giving away money that is collected from the federal taxpayers and putting it into the provincial treasuries. That is what this measure is seeking to do, and we ought to know in what proportions it is going into the treasuries of the various provinces before we accede to this resolution. Mr. Chairman, it is ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I wonder if the house leader could, if possible, indicate in a general way what the business will be for the rest of the week.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will commence with the second reading of the bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, then second reading of the bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, followed by the committee stage of Bill No. C-67 dealing with a proposed railway line in the Gaspe peninsula. The fourth item would be the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with crown corporations; item 5, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act. The next item would be the resolution in the name of the Secretary of State dealing with the universal copyright convention.

The work for the balance of the week depends upon the progress we make in connection with this legislation.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 7, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

TABLING OF INTERIM CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON DUTY RATES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table three copies of an interim agreement between Canada and the United States relating to rates of duty, signed today at Geneva. This agreement embodies the results of negotiations between representatives of the two countries during the multilateral tariff conference which opened at Geneva in September, 1960, under the auspices of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

In recent years the value of the two way trade between Canada and the United States represented by the items contained in the two schedules to the interim agreement has been about $130 million to $140 million per annum. All of the items in the United States schedule provide for reductions in rate, and they apply to Canadian exports which averaged about $65 million in the three year period 1958-60. The Canadian schedule provides for reductions in duties applying to imports from the United States averaging about $63 million per annum in the same three year period. In addition, Canada bound existing free entry provisions relating to a considerable number of farm implements and other items of production equipment which had not previously been bound, and for which import statistics are not separately available.

In addition to this agreement with Canada, the United States has entered into similar agreements with several other contracting parties to the GATT, including Britain, the European economic community, Japan, Sweden, Austria, Denmark, Finland, Israel, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal and Switzerland.

Indirect benefits of very considerable significance to Canadian exporters will accrue to Canada under the operation of the most favoured nation principle by virtue of these interim agreements between the United States and some of the third countries I have just listed.

The multilateral effect of these agreements between Canada and the United States and between the United States and third countries will be to open greatly enhanced prospects for Canadian exports. Reduction in duties arising from this series of agreements will provide benefits to almost every sector of the Canadian economy.

The interim agreement tabled today relates to the bilateral tariff negotiations between Canada and the United States under the so-called "Dillon round" of the multilateral tariff conference at Geneva. The results of Canada's bilateral negotiations with countries other than the United States, some of which are not yet concluded, will be announced in due course and will appear as part of the official conference protocols.

The interim agreement between Canada and the United States takes effect as of the date of signature. The textual part of the agreement as tabled is in English and in French, as is the schedule of tariff concessions granted by Canada.

The schedules setting forth concessions received and granted by Canada will enter into force 30 days after exchange of notification between the two countries or at a date to be agreed upon, and will later be incorporated into the official conference protocols which cannot be issued at Geneva until the conclusion of the series of bilateral negotiations. On issuance of the conference protocols the interim agreement will cease to have force or effect.

I now table a further document which summarizes in English and in French the two schedules to the interim agreement. Hon. members will find in the summary of concessions received by Canada under the agreement three figures in brackets. The first is the duty levied at present by the United States; the second is the duty leviable after the first stage of the reduction; the third is the duty finally leviable, that is, the fully reduced rate.

The reductions in United States rates resulting from the negotiations will, almost without exception, come into force by two annual stages, the first such reduction resulting in what is described in the U.S.A. schedule as the "intermediate" rate, and the second as the "final". Precise information is not yet available as to the exact date or dates on which the President of the United States will, by proclamation, bring the reduced rates into force.

Full details of the benefits accruing to Canada under the most favoured nation principle from the series of bilateral agreements between the United States and third countries will be made public when the provisions of the numerous schedules of concessions to these agreements have been analysed.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that in relation to the coming into effect of these mutual tariff reductions hon. members are aware that the governor in council possesses power under section 10 of the Customs Tariff to make such reductions in duties on goods imported into Canada from any other country or countries as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for concessions granted by any such country or countries. It will therefore be open to the government to bring these reductions in the Canadian tariff into effect on the date to be agreed upon following exercise by the President of the United States of the powers conferred on him by congress under existing legislation in that regard.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister's announcement would appear to cover a substantial section of our export trade in the agreement he has referred to between, initially, Canada and the United States and, by the application of the most favoured nation clause, to other countries as well. It certainly will warrant the most careful examination. In so far as this agreement removes obstacles to multilateral international trade and increases our own export trade on a mutually advantageous basis, it will be greatly welcomed on this side.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, our group naturally welcomes any move that is being made by the government to reduce tariff barriers hindering trade between our country and other countries. We are, of course, in the position that we will have to study the minister's announcement with great care before we will be able to express our opinion as to the eventual benefits or otherwise that our country will derive.

I was a little surprised at the bias toward bilateral agreements in the announcement by the minister. I noticed that he made reference to multilateral advantages that might be derived as a result of the agreement. We were very interested in a Reuters news dispatch today emanating from Geneva to the effect that the United States has arrived at a sweeping agreement with the European common market. No one in the middle of winter, especially a Canadian winter, likes to be caught outdoors in the nude. We are hoping that it is the intention of the government to follow through and do as the United States government has done, and reach a mutually beneficial agreement with the European common market at a very early date.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is going beyond the scope of the initial announcement.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF BELGIAN MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the house will allow me I should like to welcome to the diplomatic gallery the Belgian minister of external trade and technical assistance, Mr. Maurice-Paul Brasseur, who is spending a few days here to discuss with our ministers trade matters of common interest. His presence bears further witness to the close and friendly relations between Canada and Belgium which were sealed in service in two world wars.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the Prime Minister in the welcome he has extended to our friend from Belgium, not only because of his own personal distinction in the government of his country but because of the country he represents, an old and valued friend of Canada.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of this group and as one who spent quite a number of months on Belgian soil in defence of common interests, we wish to associate ourselves with the remarks of the Prime Minister and the remarks of the official opposition. I trust that the visit of this distinguished gentleman will be to the mutual advantage of both of our countries.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

TABLING OF REPORT OF CANADA-U.S. COMMITTEE ON MIGRATORY BIRDS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Last May my colleague the Minister of Agriculture and I met with United States Secretary of Agriculture Freeman and Secretary of the Interior Udall in Ottawa to discuss various agricultural and renewable resource problems affecting Canada and the United States. Discussions included the possibility of joint action to deal with the declining migratory water fowl population, particularly the ducks and geese, which use the international flyways.

A committee with members from each country was appointed to consider the problem. Since last May this international migratory bird committee has met twice in Washington and once in Ottawa. At the request of the committee, the United States fish and wildlife service and the Canadian wildlife service have undertaken special studies to provide information basic to the committee's deliberations.

The committee has prepared an interim report which I wish to table at this time for the information of hon. members. The report contains several specific recommendations for action, involving pilot projects in the multiple purpose use of lands for the maintenance of water fowl population.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for York North wish to revert to presenting reports? Has the hon. member leave to revert to presenting reports?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. C. A. Cathers (York North): I have the honour to present the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, in English and in French, and by unanimous consent I intend to move concurrence in the report later this day.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I believe that under the statute the Bank of Canada presents an annual report prior to March 1 of every year—

Mr. Speaker: Order; there is no motion before the house at the moment. The report is not debatable until a motion is made for its adoption. Perhaps the hon. member would like now to revert to motions. Has the hon. member leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cathers: By unanimous consent I move that the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce presented this day be now concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to make his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benidickson: I was not previously in order, but I want to point out to the House of Commons that we have a new governor of the Bank of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benidickson: I suggest that under the laws governing the Bank of Canada the governor must submit a report to the Minister of Finance within two months after the end of the calendar year, and I assume he presented his report prior to March 1. Within two weeks afterwards, I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member again, but I fail to see the relevance of what he is saying to the motion before the house, which is that the house adopt the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce relating to a quorum, printing and leave to sit while the house is sitting. I fail to see anything about other matters.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Like the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, I am a member of this committee and this morning attended a meeting of it. At that meeting the hon. gentleman made a request that we have the governor come before the committee, and that his report be tabled. The report now before the house does not contain that suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member proceeds any further, my recollection of the procedure, the proper procedure or the allowable procedure, on the presentation of a report or motion to confirm a report is that the house is only seized of the matters that are reported on, and it is not only irrelevant but contrary to our practice to discuss proceedings in the committee itself which are not brought forward in the report. The hon. member has rights in the committee with respect to what he seeks to raise now, and if he cannot exercise those rights there then he cannot complain about it at this time as part of the discussion on the committees report.

Mr. Benidickson: Surely we can ask the Minister of Finance whether he has received the report from the new governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, CONTROL OF DELIVERIES, ETC.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-75, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Harkness: The amendments proposed are to extend the powers of the board in various particulars, including the termination of various powers and so forth.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a fine explanation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Questions

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

AGREEMENT AND CONTRACTS, GRAIN SALES TO CHINA

Question No. 70—Mr. McIlraith:

1. On what date was the long term agreement between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company with respect to the sale of wheat and barley signed?

2. How many individual contracts have been signed under this agreement, and what is the date of each?

Answer by: Mr. Harkness:

1. Apart from the information with respect to volume and credit terms, it is contrary to government policy and not in the public interest to reveal details of the commercial sales contracts entered into by the Canadian wheat board.

2. Five contracts have been signed under the long term agreement negotiated by the Canadian wheat board with the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation and its accredited agent, the China Resources Company. As indicated in the reply to question (1), the details are considered to be privileged. The volume and shipping period for these contracts are as follows:

	Quantity (million bushels)	Shipping Period	Ports
1.	16.8 wheat	Aug.-Nov. 1961	Pacific
	11.2 wheat	June-Aug. 1961	St. Lawrence
	16.8 barley	June-Nov. 1961	Pacific
2.	6.0 wheat	Aug.-Sept. 1961	St. Lawrence
3.	30.6 wheat	Jan.-May 1962	Pacific
	8.9 barley	Jan.-May 1962	Pacific
4.	1.3 wheat	Dec. 1961-Jan. 1962	Pacific
5.	3.0 wheat	Feb.-May 1962	St. Lawrence-Atlantic.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE INSPECTORS, ASSINIBOIA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 147—Mr. Argue:

What is the name and address of each prairie farm assistance inspector who took crop reports within the Assiniboia constituency since August 1, 1961?

Answer by: Mr. Jorgenson:

The name and address of each prairie farm assistance inspector who took crop reports within the Assiniboia constituency since August 1, 1961, is as follows:

DISCUSSIONS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE REPORT

Question No. 183—Mr. Howard:

Have the recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs presented to the house on July 8, 1961, been discussed with any interested parties other than members of the cabinet and civil servants; and, if so, what is (a) the name and address of each such party (b) the date or dates upon which each discussion took place (c) the opinion of each such party (d) the action contemplated with respect thereto?

Answer by: Mrs. Fairclough:

(a) and (b). Discussions of a purely informal nature have been held, in the course of regular departmental business, with various individuals and groups across the country. These have involved numerous individual officers of the Indian affairs branch and interested persons outside the department and it would not be practical to attempt to list them in detail. However, among the major organizations who have either made representations or discussed various aspects of the recommendations informally with departmental officers, or considered them at annual meetings, are the Indian association of Alberta, the federation of Saskatchewan Indians and the Indian-Eskimo association of Canada. In addition, the recommendations of the joint committee were discussed fully at the Indian superintendents' national conference held in British Columbia in 1961.

(c) and (d). It is not possible at this stage to state the opinion of the parties or groups concerned, since the discussions were of a purely exploratory nature. Nor is it possible to state what action is contemplated with respect to those discussions, beyond making it clear that the department intends to pursue them with interested groups at every opportunity and to arrange more formal consultations at the appropriate time.

WRITS OF ASSISTANCE, R.C.M.P.

Question No. 184—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1958, has any writ of assistance been obtained by, of, or on behalf of, any member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and, if so, how many?

2. Are any members of the said police force currently in possession of such writs of assistance and, if so, how many?

Answer by: Mr. Fulton:

1. Yes—175 writs of assistance were issued to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under authority of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act between January 1958 and September 15, 1961. On the latter date, the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act was repealed and re-enacted as the Narcotic Control Act and all writs issued under the former act were cancelled. From September 15, 1961, to date, 118 writs of assistance have been issued under authority of the Narcotic Control Act.

On September 15, 1961, part III of the Food and Drugs Act was proclaimed in force and 118 writs of assistance were issued to members of the R.C.M. Police under authority of that act since September 15, 1961 to date.

462 writs of assistance have been issued to members of the R.C.M. Police under the Customs Act since January 1, 1958 to date.

504 writs of assistance have been issued to members of the R.C.M. Police under the Excise Act since January 1, 1958 to date.

2. Yes—118 members of the R.C.M. Police are in possession of writs of assistance under the Narcotic Control Act, and of writs under the Food and Drugs Act.

836 members of the R.C.M. Police are in possession of writs of assistance under the Customs Act.

975 members of the R.C.M. Police are in possession of writs of assistance under the Excise Act.

In many cases the members in possession of writs under the Customs Act are also in possession of writs under the Excise Act.

FRASER RIVER SURVEY RE FLOOD CONTROL

Question No. 219—Mr. Hicks:

Are any steps being taken to have a competent firm of engineers make a survey of the Fraser river, 100 miles inland from its mouth, having in view control at flooding time as well as permanent repairs to dykes?

Answer by: Mr. Dinsdale:

No.

Questions

MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND YUGOSLAV FOREIGN SECRETARY

Question No. 226—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Did the Prime Minister have any meeting, officially or unofficially, during the month of March, 1961, with the foreign secretary of Yugoslavia, Hon. Koca Popovic; and, if so, when did such a meeting take place?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

I was introduced to Mr. Popovic on March 28, 1961, but no discussions took place.

MIDDLETON, N.S.—ASSISTANCE TO HOSPITAL

Question No. 235—Mr. Hellyer:

Has the Department of National Defence assisted financially any hospital located in Middleton, Nova Scotia; and, if so, which hospital; and what form, and in what amounts did such assistance take place?

Answer by: Mr. Chambers:

The Department of National Defence made a grant totalling $135,587.76 to the Soldiers Memorial hospital in Middleton, Nova Scotia.

JAPANESE PLYWOOD QUOTA

Question No. 237—Mr. Garland:

1. What criteria, if any, does the government take into account in setting a quota figure for the import of Japanese plywood into Canada?
2. Is this quota determined to any extent by housing starts and construction activity?
3. Is the government actively seeking, in current negotiations, a reduction in this particular quota?

Answer by: Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

1. The quota for the export of Japanese plywood to Canada is not set by the Canadian government; it is set by the Japanese government following consultations with the Canadian government. In these consultations the Canadian government takes into account a number of criteria, including the economic outlook and the state of the market for this particular product. This includes consideration of the probable demand for hardwood plywood, which of course is influenced by such factors as housing starts and completions as well as other construction.

2. Answered by 1.

3. It would be improper to reveal the specific positions put forward by the government while the consultations are in progress.

LOAN FOR MILL CONSTRUCTION, SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 238—Mr. Cardin:

1. Has the federal government presently before it a request for a loan for the construction of a rod and bar mill at Sydney; and, if so, who has requested the loan, and in what amount?
2. What decision, if any, has the government reached on any such request?

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Answer by: Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

1. No.

2. Answered by 1.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

*DECREASE IN INDUSTRIAL NON-CONTRIBUTORY PENSIONS

Question No. 232—Mr. Caron:

1. Has the government received any representations to the effect that industrial non-contributory pensions have been reduced by the amount of the recent increase in old age security?
2. Is there any regulation that would prevent a company from making such a reduction in its pension payments?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

METHOD OF AMENDING CONSTITUTION

Motion No. 2—Mr. Chevrier:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general or other provincial ministers since July 1, 1960, regarding the method of amending the constitution of Canada.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask that this stand. I hope it is the last occasion I shall have to make this request. We have now heard from seven of the 10 provinces.

Motion stands.

RAILWAY SERVICE, SPRINGHILL JUNCTION—SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Motion No. 20—Mr. Pickersgill:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, since July 1, 1961, between the Minister of Transport or any officers of his department and the premier of Nova Scotia or any other person, regarding the railway between Springhill Junction and Springhill, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Martini: This is acceptable with the usual reservation, subject to the consent of the province.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

FEASIBILITY OR ECONOMIC SURVEY, MOOSONEE

Motion No. 25—Mr. Peters:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the federal government and any other government or any agency, department, or branch thereof, since January 1, 1959, relating to an economic or feasibility survey to examine the possibilities of establishing a salt water port at Moosonee.

Mr. Walker: Accepted, subject to the usual reservations about confidential and privileged documents and also subject to the consent of the province concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE STUDY, MACKENZIE DISTRICT INDIAN INQUIRY

Motion No. 26—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the study by an interdepartmental committee into the recommendations of the commission of inquiry, appointed on June 25, 1959, to inquire generally into all matters arising out of unfulfilled provisions of treaties 8 and 11 as they applied to Indians of the Mackenzie district.

Mrs. Fairclough: Since this matter is now being considered by the government the relevant papers, I am informed, are considered to be privileged documents. I am sorry, therefore, that I cannot agree to produce them.

Mr. Howard: Inasmuch as the report of the commission of inquiry was made public, I see no reason why this should not be treated in the same way. Perhaps it would be better if we were to call in the members, Mr. Speaker.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, could I address a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the Minister of Finance received from the governor of the Bank of Canada a report respecting the 1961 activities of the Bank of Canada? Second, would the minister undertake to refer the report to the banking and commerce committee, with the governor present before that committee, which was set up this day?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The answer to question No. 1 is yes. The answer to question No. 2 is that I think it will be proper to await the tabling of the report in this house in accordance with the statute and the procedures of the house.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister place any objection in the way of the committee expressing its wish to do what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has asked?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I refer the hon. member to my answer to the second question posed by his colleague the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

DESTRUCTION OF POWER SYSTEM—EMIGRATION OF SONS OF FREEDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister in view of reports from Nelson, British Columbia, that a 300 ton steel tower was blasted into Kootenay lake last night, thus creating an area wide power failure which will leave 500 to 1,000 men out of work for weeks, if not months. Has the Prime Minister received a telegram from the mayor of Trail stating that, as in wartime, the government must consider the blasting of this vital power link an act of sabotage and take steps to end these dastardly deeds of this minority group? If so, would the Prime Minister inform the house of the government's response to this appeal?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the telegram in question, but I know that representations have been made. The attorney general of British Columbia discussed this whole problem with the Minister of Justice and made a number of suggestions which are being considered. Any that might lead to a solution of this long continuing and recurring problem will be given the fullest consideration. All the co-operation we can provide to that end will be given.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question, as this is a matter of great importance to the district which I have the honour to represent. Has the government had any communications with representatives of the Brazilian government with respect to the emigration of this sect to Brazil?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ever since my early days there have been prospective migrations of the Doukhobors to various parts of the world. I have not heard that Brazil has expressed the desire to have the Sons of Freedom. However, I will have the matter looked into.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Prime Minister give the house an assurance that a budget will be introduced into this house before the Easter recess?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no determination yet as to the date of the Easter recess.

Mr. Pearson: There has been no determination of the date of the budget either.

FLOODS

NORTHERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REDUCE DANGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I was able to notify his office this morning of my intention to ask this question. In view of the heavy snowfall and the high moisture content of the snow this year in the lake Nipissing watershed, will the minister use his good offices at once to encourage Ontario hydro and the Ontario department of lands and forests to lower their reservoirs at this point in order to ensure maximum winter lows, and thereby reduce the dangers of flooding during the period of spring freshet and avoid a recurrence of the situation of 1960?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is the department's practice to open all the French river dams as soon as possible at the close of the navigation season to permit the emptying of the lake prior to the coming spring freshet. This has been done; the lake level is already below the recognized "empty" elevation of 638.0, and it would appear that we may be able to lower it still further to possibly elevation 637.5.

The water content of the snow cover on the watershed is about 10 per cent greater than normal, and all dams are still fully opened. These will remain opened as long as possible.

It is too early to make a firm forecast on the magnitude of the coming spring freshet. The general picture is, however, not too reassuring at this time. Much will depend upon the amount of snowfall still to come, the duration of the break-up and the amount of spring rainfall. While we expect a heavy run-off, the course of events of the next three weeks can alter our forecast considerably. Our reasons for expecting a heavy run-off are the higher than average water content of the snow cover and the lack of a pre-spring thaw this year.

Our officials are also in close communication with officials of Ontario hydro and of the Ontario department of lands and forests, who have storage dams on the rivers emptying into the lake, and up to date information on the condition of the watershed is known at all times.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPEAT PERFORMANCE OF PROGRAM "INQUIRY"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue in his capacity as spokesman in this house for the C.B.C. Will the minister convey to the C.B.C. the general and widespread desire throughout the country that a program called "Inquiry" which featured the Minister of Public Works be repeated?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that viewpoint has been communicated to the C.B.C. by thousands of listeners throughout the country.

PUBLIC SERVICE

HOUSE OF COMMONS—REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION RESPECTING SALARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs in his capacity as a member of the internal economy commission. Has the minister drawn to the attention of the other members of the commission the recommendations of the civil service commission that certain employees attached to the House of Commons be given salary increases retroactive to July 1, 1961? If so, what has resulted from his drawing this matter to the attention of the commissioners?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think such a question should be directed to the chairman of that committee.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I myself think the question is out of order.

RENOUS, N.B.—PROTEST RESPECTING CHANGE IN PAY PERIODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Today I received a telegram from the national defence employees association of the Renous, New Brunswick, naval ammunition depot, protesting a change in the weekly pay periods to twice a month for prevailing rate employees. The telegram also states that similar classifications at Halifax and Esquimalt are remaining on the weekly pay period. Will the minister take this protest under consideration toward retaining the present pay period?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The hon. member was good enough to send copies of his question jointly to my colleague the Minister of National Defence and myself. The question is properly directed to my colleague.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for sending this joint notice of his question. I can assure him that the employees association is under a misunderstanding with respect to this matter. There is no intention to change the pay periods at the Renous naval ammunition depot on April 1, as suggested in the telegram received by the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

KAPUSKASING, ONT.—WINTER WORK ON HIGH SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received any letters containing allegations that contractors in Kapuskasing, Ont., are attempting to avoid giving winter employment on contracts granted under the technical school program to promote winter work in the area? If so, has the minister anything to report on this matter?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for bringing this matter to my attention. As he knows, we have approved a composite high school for Kapuskasing in the amount of $578,000, with a federal contribution of $433,000. The hon. member is also aware of the fact that the actual administration of the program remains within the hands of the provinces, and that the way in which the work is carried on is a matter for the provincial authority.

I might mention that a cut-off date of March 31, 1963, was established on all these projects in order that the work would be performed as expeditiously as possible, and certainly we are in favour of as much of the work as possible being carried on in the winter months.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO MEMBERS OF ITALIAN COMMUNITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has his department or any agency of the federal government to his knowledge made representations to the Ontario government with a view to ensuring that some effective means can be found so that those members of the Italian community who were unable to take vocational training can be accommodated within the scope of the federal-provincial program?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are always prepared to participate in programs of this kind that upgrade the skills of our working force. Jurisdiction with regard to actually undertaking such education lies within the provinces, but I can assure the hon. member that we are prepared to co-operate in every respect.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Because the federal government pays 75 per cent of capital costs and provides other grants, does the minister not think that in view of the good relations that prevail between this government and the government of Ontario he could persuade the government of Ontario to take affirmative action?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, we as the federal government endeavour at all times to have good relations with all provinces, particularly in this field where everybody benefits as a result, and we at all times encourage the provinces to undertake these projects.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Italians are good Canadian citizens.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CHATHAM, N.B.—REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister make inquiries to ascertain whether Canadian National Railways are planning to close the C.N.R. freight office and C.N. express office at Chatham, New Brunswick, as reported in the Chatham Commercial-World; and will he make representations toward offsetting any such proposed closing?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I will be pleased to do so.

AGRICULTURE

MANITOBA—REPORTED DANGER OF FEED SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture whether he is aware of the statement yesterday by the minister of agriculture of Manitoba to the effect that a dangerous shortage of feed will develop before next month because of last year's drought, and is the minister in a position to indicate what negotiations are taking place with the federal government to eliminate this situation by assistance with regard to fodder and seed? Can the minister indicate to the house what steps have been taken in this regard to assist in the seed problem of western Canada?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister this has not yet been brought to my attention, and I would have to inquire into the matter before I would be in a position to give an answer.

TRADE

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he expects the uranium contract with the United Kingdom to be signed?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Just as soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: How soon is possible?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VOICE OF WOMEN—GOVERNMENT REACTION TO PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Prime Minister. In view of the visit to parliament today of an important delegation of the Voice of Women, and in view of their urgent plea to the Prime Minister to declare Canada's refusal to join the nuclear club and to intercede with President Kennedy to forgo atmospheric nuclear tests, would the Prime Minister care to report to the house the gist of his answer to this most commendable plea?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I met with this very large and representative delegation for a short time and the matters in question were not dealt with, other than being read by Madame Casgrain as part of their presentation. The Secretary of State for External Affairs remained with the delegation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—USE OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister yet learned officially of the effort of the United States to equip its NATO allies with a new atomic missile and, if so, can the minister say what the attitude of the Canadian government will be toward this proposal?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any official word on that matter.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION, PRINCE RUPERT-JASPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works or the Secretary of State a question relating to an order of the house made a month ago today with respect to a question of mine. The question sought information about the proposed plan of the province of British Columbia regarding financial participation in a second trans-Canada highway. I would ask whichever hon. gentleman deals with these matters to make inquiries to see what progress is being made toward satisfying the order.

(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall make inquiries and give an answer to the hon. member as soon as possible.

(Text):

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO GUARANTEE LOANS, ESTABLISH LIMITS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-73, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, during the discussion at the resolution stage there were three questions raised to which the minister did not make a particular reply. The first question was whether he had considered raising the maximum loan available to an individual farmer to $10,000. The second was with respect to what consideration he has given to utilizing the tremendous resources of credit unions, because this legislation is restricted exclusively to the banks. Third, he was asked whether he is still convinced that $400 million up to the summer of 1965 is an adequate provision by parliament, having regard to the growth in lending that we know has taken place under this legislation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has asked three questions. I dealt with the first two at the resolution stage yesterday, and my remarks are to be found at page 1543 of Hansard. With regard to the third question, I may say that $400 million appears to be adequate to meet the needs that can be foreseen at this time over the three year period in question. Of course if the volume of lending should increase materially and that aggregate should be found insufficient, presumably it would be in the third year and the matter could be brought back to parliament in the light of the situation then prevailing.

Mr. Benidickson: I know that the minister gave the house information as to the total amount of lending in 1961. I was not sure of that when I spoke prior to his statement. In advance of the printing of the report for the 1961 calendar year, has the minister information as to the average loan made under the act in 1961?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thought I gave information on that subject last evening, Mr. Chairman. I pointed out that the total of the loans for the 12 month period in 1961 amounted to $108 million, in round figures.

Mr. Benidickson: And $101 million the year before?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, it was $102 million in round figures for the calendar year 1960. The average size of the loans in 1961 was $1,531, and the average in 1960, $1,497.

Mr. Howard: There is one thing I should like to have cleared up. While this thought has not been communicated to me by people who have borrowed under this act, the same thought has been asked of me by fishermen with respect to loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. The principle is the same. Perhaps if I ask the question of the minister now, the answer will be equally applicable to both acts.

During the resolution stage, the minister indicated that this was the fifth or sixth extension of this particular act and that the extension contemplated now is for a three year period from July 1 of this year to the end of June, 1965. I have been unable to answer the question asked of me, except to say that past experience has shown that extensions are put into effect as the expiry date approaches. However, this does leave some doubt in the minds of individuals who are contemplating borrowing money under this legislation, and I am sure it may leave some doubt in the minds of lenders as to their position following the expiration of this piece of legislation. I realize that this procedure permits a review of the legislation every two or three years instead of dealing with the matter during consideration of the estimates.

I wonder whether or not any thought has been given, and undoubtedly it has, to placing legislation of this sort on a more permanent basis. I realize that once you put things of this nature into effect, especially when the legislation is renewed five or six times before the expiry date, you establish a practice and thus put the act on some kind of permanent basis. I just want to pose this question: Has consideration been given to a more equitable way of dealing with legislation of this nature, that is giving it a more permanent basis, rather than having the possibility of its cancellation become a reality every two or three years?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think hon. members will appreciate at once that parliament can make this legislation permanent if it chooses to do so. This would, however, immediately raise the question of the permissible aggregate of the guarantees. It has accorded thus far with the views of parliament that legislation of this kind should be given a three year life. This method assures parliamentary control and discussion of the legislation every three years, and thus the establishment of an appropriate ceiling on loans being made for the ensuing three year period.

Now, if we are to change the whole scheme of the act and withdraw the expiry date of the legislation, that would immediately present a problem as to what should be established as the aggregate or ceiling in perpetuity. I think hon. members will appreciate that this would not accord with the established conception of parliamentary control.

In so far as the position of borrowers or lenders under this legislation is concerned, the expiry date has no effect whatever on the validity of obligations incurred under the terms of the act before the expiry date. Even if the legislation expired at the next expiry date, it would have no bearing whatever upon the valdidity of obligations incurred or undertaken under the provisions of the act prior to that date. There is, therefore, no difficulty whatever about borrowers or lenders entering into their transactions under the terms of the legislation in that regard. The three year life does not deter any borrower or any lender under the act for that reason.

Mr. Howard: I appreciate the latter part of the minister's remarks to the effect that, even if the act expired, the loans would continue in effect and the guarantees would continue in effect, although the force of the legislation would be gone in so far as new loans were concerned. It seems to me that there was one year in which the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act almost expired before an extension was granted. When the matter reaches this stage, I know fishermen have expressed the view to me that they feel they rush into doing contemplated work in order to participate in these loans and make sure they are able to borrow money before the legislation expires. If they had some degree of assurance the legislation was going to be extended, then they could plan their borrowings more easily so that they would fit into the economics of the industry.

These are views I have had expressed to me. As I said, the only answer I could make, and perhaps I will have to continue to make it, is that so long as the present Minister of Finance is minister he is too nice a fellow to cancel this legislation out. You can rest assured from past experience he will introduce a measure before parliament to secure an extension. However, I have to qualify this by saying that I have heard some doubts expressed as to whether or not he will be minister when this legislation is under review in 1965, regardless of the fortunes of his party. I doubt very much whether he is going to be in that position in 1965 when this legislation is reviewed.

Mr. Benidickson: I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that there has not been too much growth indicated by the minister from 1960 to 1961. We have official information with respect only to the lending in 1960 to the effect that nearly $102 million was lent under this act. We advanced in 1961, and the amount was $108 million. Now, this act contains a provision that the borrower will not be charged more than 5 per cent interest. We have other legislation under which there are government guaranteed loans to other types of borrowers in Canada such as small businessmen, house owners and others, which does not contain a ceiling on the interest rate.

I want to ask the minister whether during the past year, 1961, even though the volume increased from $102 million to $108 million, he received objections from the banks indicating that credit was denied because the interest rate was not adequate, even though this legislation involves government guarantees.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not now recall whether I received any specific representations on that subject during the past year, which is the period mentioned in the question put by the hon. member. However, I know I have had such representations previously.

Mr. Regier: I am sure all of us are happy to welcome the growing use that Canadian agriculture is making of the help available under the terms of the bill which it is now proposed to amend. I also notice there is a greater use being made by farmers of the institution that used to be known as the Canadian farm loan board. Against that I witness the very desperate need of agriculture for capital assistance, and I would point out that when anyone wants to sell a program that he believes is good, then he undertakes a selling program on its behalf.

Despite the increasing degree to which agriculture is taking advantage of the good will shown by the people of Canada towards agriculture, I believe the need far outstrips the amount of aid that is being granted. At this stage I believe it would be useful to place on the record a number of statistics prepared by the Department of Agriculture, and which are contained in a pamphlet designed to sell the ARDA program. These statistics are most alarming and although we are happy that the government has undertaken the ARDA program we realize its implementation requires the active co-operation of the provincial governments concerned.

I would like to see much greater advantage being taken of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the facilities of the Canadian farm loan board by those engaged in agriculture, but I note that the Department of Agriculture advises us that in 1956 there were 21 per cent of Canadian farmers who had a gross annual production of less than $1,200. In a number of provinces the problem is even more severe. In Newfoundland 78 per cent of the farmers had a gross income of less than $1,200 per year.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am having difficulty relating these statistics to clause 1 of the bill that is before the committee, and I would ask him to assist me in this regard at his earliest convenience.

Mr. Regier: I am attempting to outline the urgent need for massive financial capital assistance to Canadian agriculture. I welcome the amendment now before us but I am attempting to ask what efforts are being made by the government to make Canadian agriculture aware of the opportunities available.

As I indicated in my opening remarks a program can be idealistic and wonderful but unless one undertakes a selling program it may fail in effectiveness. Here we have a province in which 78 per cent of the farmers produce less than $1,200 gross income per year and I would like to ask the minister what efforts have been made, publicitywise or otherwise, to inform the farmers in Newfoundland of the facilities or possibilities existing under the terms of this legislation and other government sponsored measures to supply capital aid for the needs of Canadian agriculture.

If we believe in the continuation of the family farm as a unit, then we must recognize that the problem is urgent in view of the growth of virtual disintegration in the field of agriculture. The capital needs of Canadian agriculture stagger the imagination. Agriculture in the Atlantic provinces alone could absorb hundreds of millions of dollars of capital in order to develop efficient and economical family farms. What effort has the government made to sell its facilities and its offer of help to agriculture?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This legislation has now been on the statute books for almost 17 years and I am sure that throughout the agricultural section of the population these facilities are very well known. Along with its other services to the agricultural population it has been the task of the Department of Agriculture to make these facilities known.

and I have no doubt at all that the facilities of the Farm Improvement Loans Act are well and widely known to the farmers of Canada.

The hon. member asked me a question specifically with regard to Newfoundland. He is aware that the proportion of the population of Newfoundland engaged specifically in agriculture is not as large as in some of the other provinces, but the same effort has been made in that province to acquaint those who might be eligible for loans, and who wish to make application for loans, of the facilities available to farmers under this legislation.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if the minister could give us a report on exactly what are the measures undertaken by the government to make the farmers aware of them?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think that question would be more appropriately directed to my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, when his estimates are before the house, but I am sure the hon. member must be aware of the pamphlets issued and distributed on that subject. As I recall it, the banks themselves distribute a number of these pamphlets in rural areas served by bank branches. Then, of course, there are advertisements that are published in agricultural journals across the country. No effort has been spared to make these facilities known to those for whose benefit they are intended.

Mr. Smallwood: As usual we have heard the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam speaking about something he knows nothing about. If he would look at the statistics he might not get up and ask the questions which he is putting. The Farm Improvement Loans Act has been in effect for a great number of years and is well used by the farmers. They can now get loans up to a total of $7,500, and if the hon. member cares to look at the figures supplied by the Farm Credit Corporation, readily obtainable by all hon. members in the house, he will find that in the first 25 months after it was brought into effect the farmers of Canada borrowed $131 million, as compared to $121 million borrowed by them in 28 years under the previous government from the Canadian farm loan board.

Mr. Benidickson: But this is a $1,100 million program based on legislation introduced by a Liberal government.

Mr. Smallwood: The figures are before us, if hon. members want to look at them; and I must repeat them for the benefit of my friends of the Liberal party so that they may know what is going on. We lent $131 million in 25 months under the Farm Credit Corporation compared with $121 million in 28 years—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order. I think it is a very rare occasion when I rise on a point of order while a private member is speaking but I do think the hon. gentleman is not even talking about the bill which is before us, much less about a clause of that bill.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave, now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO EXTEND PERIOD OF GUARANTEE ON LOANS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-74, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Time within which liability may arise.

Mr. Howard: I should like to reiterate what I said on a previous occasion and ask the minister, once again, to consider altering another section of the act, perhaps even at this time, by unanimous consent, or by a subsequent amendment later this session.

The section to which I refer is the section of the act which we discussed last evening, and I am asking the minister to consider an amendment raising the limit on permitted loans from the present statutory ceiling of $4,000 to at least double that amount. The figure of $8,000 has been suggested by the united fishermen and allied workers' union to the minister and others, and I assume that would be a reasonable ceiling to have. In the bill the house has just dealt with, the ceiling there has been increased from $3,000 to $7,500, I believe, and the same principle applies to the act which the bill now before us seeks to amend.

Despite what the minister said last night, fishermen have told me they do not make plans to enter extensively upon repairs, acquisitions or alterations by borrowing under the terms of this act because they know the present limit is set at $4,000. Even though the minister told us last night that there is no pressure on the present ceiling—and I do not doubt for one moment that this is what the lenders have said—I submit that if this is the position it is primarily because fishermen do not go to the banks asking for, say, $6,000 only to discover at that point that the permissible loan cannot exceed $4,000. Of course, they generally know this beforehand, and in connection with this act they do not plan on the basis of borrowing more than $4,000. Consequently we find that the average amount lent is considerably below $4,000. I think hon. members will find that a considerable proportion of the borrowings are in respect of such things as radio telephones or depth sounding equipment, or for repairs to engines, or new engines—something of that sort, all of which would cost less than $4,000. It is when you get into the field of buying a boat or buying a share in a fishing boat that you exceed the $4,000 limit. As I said last night, $4,000 would not even buy a gill-netter, and a gill-netter is a one-man boat used for fishing salmon on the British Columbia coast. That is, generally, the lowest cost vessel which a man can buy, and a good gill-netter costs in the neighbourhood of $8,000 anyway. When it comes to trollers and seiners we find that the cost is far in excess of $4,000. I do not presume to apply my remarks to the Atlantic provinces, because different circumstances prevail there—there are different methods of fishing, different species of fish and the like—but as far as the west coast is concerned I am sure the minister will find that an amendment of the kind I have suggested will help the fishermen to take advantage of the principle of this act and enable them to borrow sufficient money to enhance their position in the industry.

We placed on record last night correspondence and resolutions in this regard. We know the minister is aware of these things. I think it would not be good enough to wait until 1965, when this legislation might be further extended, before getting around to considering whether or not the limit on the loan should be raised. I feel sure that if the minister were desirous of taking action along the lines I have suggested we could hold up this legislation and find some way of putting the suggested change into practice. The rules are intricate and I do not know whether raising the limit from $4,000 to $8,000 would constitute another money bill and thus require a resolution stage, or whether, now that we are in committee following a resolution stage, we could take the action I suggest without further delay. I have some doubts about that.

Perhaps the minister could at least give us an indication that this question will be given serious study. In 1959 he said the question would be given serious study, that it would be discussed with those concerned. Last night he said nobody had told him about it; nobody had brought this matter to his attention since the last time it was discussed. We showed that the minister was not accurate in this regard. However, if the hon. gentleman can indicate that this is a matter about which he is really concerned, if he would consult with his colleague the Minister of Fisheries, who knows at first hand the effects of this legislation, I am sure the committee would be satisfied. The fishermen concerned would certainly be satisfied to obtain from the minister some indication that this matter was being seriously studied. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources tells us he has files labelled "For active consideration". Perhaps the Minister of Finance could open a couple of files under the same heading and give the fishermen an opportunity of participating fully in the benefits of this act, as the original legislation of 1955 intended them to. This would go a long way toward making them feel happier about this measure. I do not say they are unhappy about the provisions which exist at the moment or about the extension which is proposed here. I speak of those who are able to borrow under the terms of this act. However, those who are not able to borrow—and they include the majority of fishermen—are not happy about the fact that they are not able to prosecute the fishery to the fullest possible extent because of the limitation placed on the loans which may be made to them.

I therefore appeal again to the minister to indicate that this matter is being given sympathetic or active consideration and that he hopes to introduce legislation on a subsequent occasion, perhaps next session or even this session, to remedy the situation. I urge the minister to ask unanimous consent to amend the act again, which would be most helpful to the people concerned.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member spoke in the same vane on the subject at the resolution stage yesterday. I commented on the matter in my reply at that stage. My remarks will be found at pages 1551-52 of Hansard of yesterday's date. I do not think I can usefully add anything to what I said yesterday.

Mr. Howard: Yesterday as reported at page 1552 I reminded the minister that he received a resolution from the united fishermen and allied workers' union requesting an increase in the ceiling from $4,000 to $8,000. The minister rose and made the following comment:

If the hon. member would permit me to interrupt, I was speaking of the period since this subject was last discussed, the time he was speaking of when he spoke earlier, since 1959.

I charitably gave the minister the benefit of the doubt and went on to deal with the matter. I was under the impression last night and my impression is strengthened today that the minister indicates he has received no representations since the act was last amended. That is not the case because the minister has had representations.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not aware of having received representations on the subject since 1959. The matter was discussed in 1959 when the legislation was before us. The hon. member reminded me that shortly after the amendment of 1959 became effective there had been a letter sent to me on the subject. But that is nearly three years ago.

What I was endeavouring to convey was that in the succeeding period, in the last two and a half years, let us say, I am not aware of having received representations on the subject from fishermen's organizations or indeed anyone else. I referred to the fact that so far as the banks were concerned, there had been no indication given to me by the banks that there had been any pressure on the existing ceiling.

It is quite true that the existing ceiling has been in effect for some six and a half years since the legislation was introduced in 1955. It is also true that the ceiling has not been increased. It was not increased when the ceiling under the Farm Improvement Loans Act was increased; but I gave the reasons why, according to my understanding, whether under our predecessors in office or under the present government, no steps had been taken to ask parliament to increase the ceiling.

The hon. member has argued very earnestly on this subject. I have listened attentively to his arguments. I simply pointed to what I said on the subject last night. I do not think there is anything I can usefully add this afternoon to what I said on the subject yesterday.

Mr. Howard: I take it what the minister really meant last night was that he received no representations since the debate in the house on March 10, 1959 when the bill was last amended.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Howard: Let me see if I have it clear. With the exception of the resolution I mentioned last night the minister has received no representations from organizations since that time?

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said, Mr. Speaker, and my words are to be found at page 1552, I am not aware of having received any representations on this subject since 1959.

Mr. Howard: The minister made some comment about the interest of the banks in this regard. I may be operating under a misapprehension but I thought the legislation was to benefit fishermen and not the banks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is quite true. The banks do not regard this as legislation which benefits them. This legislation was enacted by parliament for the purpose of assisting fishermen. That is its purpose and that is the way it has been administered, and will be in the future as long as I have anything to do with it.

Mr. Howard: One way of assisting the fishermen would be by increasing the ceiling.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance is piloting this legislation through the house. It involves solely an extension of the time in which parliament gives authority for a maximum amount of guarantee to the commercial banks.

The minister comes from Ontario. I noted that yesterday as reported at page 1550 of Hansard he said that on a geographical basis only one loan had been made under this legislation through the commercial banks to a fisherman in Ontario.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the last nine months.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, in a nine month period, not a full year, that is true. The minister is very knowledgeable about Ontario and I give him credit for that. He knows that in that province we have the great lakes and the great water system extending from Montreal to Toronto. Surely people engaged in the fisheries industry all through that territory in this large province would have occasion to take advantage of this legislation. I am rather astonished to find that only one application has been made in Ontario to take advantage of this assistance which parliament has provided.

I believe that unlike the assistance given to farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act which we discussed very recently there is no fixed ceiling as a rate of interest under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

On the Lake of the Woods, lake Winnipeg, lake Manitoba, lake Dauphin and other places we have a large number of families that depend on fishing in inland waters for a livelihood. Why do the statistics not indicate that more people in these territories take advantage of this legislation which was introduced by the former government and which the minister is now amending? If it does not cover the fishing industry in inland waters, why is provision not made for this in the amendments presented to us today?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the legislation that denies these benefits to fishermen on fresh water of the great lakes. I share the hon. member's surprise that so little advantage has been taken of the lending facilities of this act by fishermen in inland waters. But there is the fact. The facilities are there.

There are many bank branches in Ontario. I have given the hon. member the record. He will be in as good a position as I am to draw conclusions from it. It is a matter, I think, of some surprise that more advantage has not been taken of the facilities of this act by fishermen in Ontario. Indeed, one might say the same thing with respect to the fishermen in some other provinces as well.

On the other point mentioned by the hon. member may I draw his attention to the fact that section 3, subsection 1(f) of the act provides that the rate of interest charged by the lender on a loan under this act shall not exceed 5 per cent per annum.

Mr. Benidickson: I am glad to hear from the minister that there is a fixed rate. My recollection was incorrect in that respect. We discussed this in connection with lending through the commercial banks to small businessmen the other evening. The minister indicated that there was a general pattern of a rate of 5½ per cent although it was not fixed by statute, is that correct?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think I said there was a general pattern. What I said was that under the other act the rate is defined by regulation. That act provides for the fixing of the rate by regulation, and the rate that has been established and has been in effect for the one year during which the legislation has been in effect was 5½ per cent.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister and I reside in Ontario. The minister knows there are a great many people in Ontario who earn their livelihood from commercial fishing. The minister has held that portfolio since 1957. What correspondence has he had with commercial fishermen who operate on inland waters?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does the hon. member mean with respect to this legislation?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes. Can he tell me why only one applicant obtained a loan from the commercial bank in the province which he and I represent in this House of Commons? I am not saying that this perhaps was not the situation before he took office. However, we are interested in trying to improve things. Why is it that only one loan was made, if this legislation is for commercial fishermen? I know that today they need capital to advance themselves in the competitive life in which they are engaged. Why is it that in the province of Ontario only one loan was made?

Ontario is an inland province, admittedly. However, we have tremendous waterways and tremendous resources in fishing. I think of the Indian population in my own area. I should like to see that there was a possibility that they would be assisted. From my own observation I can say that they have been advancing markedly in the last few years. I think of the Indians around the tremendous waterways of lac Seul and the Red lake area. The other day I had something to do with trying to make available to 30 Indian families fishing rights on Lake of the Woods. They did not ask for very much. They assured me that if certain things developed with regard to licences and financing, perhaps not under this act but through the department in other directions, 30 families would be satisfied with an income from fishing on Shoal lake which you know very well, Mr. Chairman. They did not ask for very much. They asked for a maximum income of perhaps $130 a month. This impressed me very greatly. However, I am concerned that the commercial banks have apparently not been utilized very much in Ontario with respect to this legislation.

Clause agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall the bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave, now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Just before the bill passes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reiterate in one sentence the hope that before the dissolution of this parliament the government will see fit to bring in for fishermen another measure parallel to the Farm Credit Corporation legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE BETWEEN MATANE AND STE. ANNE DES MONTS, QUE.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-67, to authorize the construction and operation on behalf of Her Majesty of a line of railway in the province of Quebec between Matane and St. Anne des Monts.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Construction and operation of railway line.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to repeat what I said on second reading of this bill or what I said while the bill was before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. All I wish to say is that this bill was referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines before which witnesses were called. We had there Mr. Scott, the assistant deputy minister of transport and Messrs. Dingle and Johnston of the Canadian National Railways. Hon. members had the opportunity to ask questions. I think that all members of the committee had a very good idea of what is involved in this bill the purpose of which is to authorize the construction and operation of a branch line between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts in the province of Quebec. This railway branch line is going to be built on behalf of Her Majesty by the Canadian National Railways. I recommend the adoption of the bill by the committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: I do not think it is necessary to repeat what the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) said at the resolution stage preceding this bill, since he stated that we are in favour of this project.

Now, I find that on February 13, at the resolution stage, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) promised to table the draft contract between the government and the C.N.R. I tried unsuccessfully to obtain that document. Could the minister tell us whether he tabled it or whether he intends to do so?

Mr. Balcer: I have this document here, Mr. Chairman. With the consent of the house, I would be pleased to table it.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, the document is being tabled a little late, because we are at the committee stage of the bill, that is the stage preceding the third reading. Anyhow, I wish to thank the minister.

There is another question I should like to ask him. In reply to questions put to him by the hon. member for Laurier and speaking of the Canada and Gulf Terminal railway, the minister stated the following on February 13:

—the railroad in question obtained a federal grant. At that time, and as a condition of that grant, the government had required the railroad to guarantee a right of way to any other railroad which would claim one—

This is the question I want to ask the minister. Was a written agreement made or an order in council issued at that time, and, if so, could the minister tell us the terms of such an agreement or order in council?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, there was an agreement signed by the railway company and the federal government. Unfortunately, I do not have this document with me, but I can inform the committee that, at that time, the government granted a subsidy to the company provided other railroads be given a right of way.

Of course the terms of this right of way and the rates to be established were not specified then. These rates shall be established by agreement between the Canada and Gulf Terminal Company and the Canadian National Railways. Should no agreement be reached, the matter would be referred to the board of transport commissioners, which would set the rates.

Mr. Bourget: The minister has just said that there was an agreement signed at that time between the federal government and the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway. In that case, could he table that document so that we can have a look at it? Could the minister also tell us whether discussions took place with the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway concerning the price it might ask for allowing another railroad to use the right of way? Could the minister give us that information?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, a meeting was held between the chairman of the Canadian National Railways, the chairman of the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway and other officers of both companies. On that occasion, a complete agreement could not be reached, since it was a preliminary meeting. Both parties have agreed to meet again within a few weeks, after this bill is passed.

Mr. Bourget: Would the minister tell us also whether that right of way is included in the $14 million?

Mr. Balcer: No, it is not, Mr. Chairman. The cost of $14 million covers only the building of the railroad. Now, as for the rate to be charged by the Canada and Gulf Terminal Company, it will be established by agreement between both railways or by an order of the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us whether the erection of fences is also included in the cost of building that railroad? I understand that the building of another railroad was discussed in the other place and that the cost of fencing had been left out of the bill.

Mr. Balcer: Well, since there is no exception in this case concerning the building of fences along the railroad, the general rule applies and the railway company has to build the fences.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, will the federal government submit the application to the board of transport commissioners or will it be made by the Canadian National Railway Company acting, in this case, as agent for the government?

Furthermore, could the minister tell us under what section of the Railway Act the application can be made?

Mr. Balcer: The application will definitely be made by the Canadian National Railways. However, I could not say under what section.

Does the hon. member mean under this bill?

Mr. Bourget: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Balcer: In that case, it would be under section 1 of this bill. I have in hand the English version of the bill and I will read section 1:

(Text):

—the governor in council may provide for the appointment of Canadian National Railway company ... as agent of Her Majesty for the construction and completion ... and ... for the company to continue to act as agent of Her Majesty in the maintenance, management and operation of the railway line.

(Translation):

I think the question asked by my hon. friend is about the management and operation of the railway line and, consequently, this section provides that it is the responsibility of the Canadian National Railway, in this case, to apply to the board of transport commissioners to have them establish the rate that will be paid to the Canada and Gulf Terminal Company.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, that does not answer the question I asked the minister. I asked him under what section of the Railway Act, that application could be made, and if it had to be made by the government or by its agent under the circumstances. As I am not a lawyer, I would ask the Minister of Transport to clear that point.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, there is certainly a general section in the Railway Act which allows the Canadian National Railway Company to appear before the board of transport commissioners to make such an application. Now, that is a general section, and I think I have answered my hon. friend's question in reading an extract from section 1 of this bill.

If the Canadian National Railway Company is to act as agent of the government with regard to maintenance, management and operation of this railway line, there is no doubt that it has certain rights which go with the role it is called upon to play, and which is defined under section 1 of this bill.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, all I wished to know was the procedure that was to be followed and the general section of the Railway Act on which the application is based, because I understand the national railway company is acting only as an agent. That is why I put that question to the minister.

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, in 1962 the railway industry of North America is at a time of complete reappraisal. The Americans are the latest into the field with a presidential report which goes into the question of operating costs, particularly of railway labour. But there are ramifications of that report which suggest that one of the main troubles and difficulties of United States railways is the question of consolidation of lines.

Recently in Canada we have had the long, long hearings of the royal commission on transportation and after a considerable time a two volume report which in essence, it seems to me, has a message for us that we should be vigilant and very deliberate in our scrutiny of any extensions of railway service in this country, particularly the building of new lines. I think hon. members who have read volume 2 of the report of the royal commission—I know that members from the west will be conscious of this because there has been considerable reaction on the prairies —will agree that the main advice of the royal commission is that the railways, particularly in western Canada, be allowed to get out of the operation of unremunerative branch lines as much and as quickly as possible. The theme of the report of the royal commission on transportation is surely that we must be extremely critical of any extension of lines unless there is a tremendous, almost bona fide case of a prosperous service, and I mean prosperous not only to the region concerned but to the railway.

In recent months a two volume history of the Canadian National Railways has been issued which in some ways makes interesting reading to go along with the two volume report of the royal commission on transportation. This two volume history by Colonel Stevens sets out a long and almost terrifying record of mismanagement on the part of the railway builders of this country. You are left with the impression, after reading the two volumes, that generations to come as well as this generation will be paying for the tremendous over optimism connected with the construction of railway lines. Certainly, it makes interesting reading to put Colonel Stevens' report in juxtaposition to the report of the royal commission on transportation which underlines again and again the need to make the railways more competitive. One of the ways to do this is to get the railways out of a situation in which they cannot possibly get a reasonable return on their investment.

I give this preamble, Mr. Chairman, because some of the evidence that was revealed before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines would seem to indicate that this proposed line has a rather shaky economic basis. In order to make the point, Mr. Chairman, I want to touch on some of the evidence that was revealed. I think the first point one should acknowledge in relation to this is that the conception the minister and the government are bringing forward in connection with the extension of this line along the south shore of the St. Lawrence is a fine one in that it is conceived as being a means of improving a section of the country that has been passed by in the general economic growth. In this sense, it is impossible to criticize the intention of the bill. We support that intention and anything that will help the more backward parts of the country, in an economic sense.

When we come to look at the arrangement that has been made, the expenditures that are going to be made, and the facilities that now exist, very grave doubts about the whole project come to our mind. I think the first point that has to be very clear is that the Canadian National Railways would have no part of this enterprise on its own. In other words, the Canadian National Railways would not take this project and make it their own. I am sure this proposal must have been made to them at some time or other and they turned it down. Therefore, the government had to come up with the proposal that they would provide the money for the construction of the line, they would look after the debt side of it and the Canadian National would merely be the builders and operators. There would be a separate fiscal division. This is the first thing we need to know about this project. It seems to me that Canadian National, in its considered judgment, turned this line down on an economic basis. I believe that is a fair statement, and I do not think the minister would disagree with it.

The next point it seems to me that we need to look at is the facilities that already exist in this particular region. As has been noted, this region is not like the area that is going to be served by the Pine Point railway or some of the other railways that are being built, such as the Chibougamau road to the north. This railway will be an extension into an area that has been settled for a long time and into which there are highways. It is a general area in which there is some rail traffic on the south, but this is not so from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts. It is an area with a traffic-carrying complex built into it in the form of roads, water carrier services and other associated means.

It has been the experience of most of us who have looked at the development of railways, that railways cannot compete in so far as passenger traffic and high revenue freight traffic are concerned where there are roads established and where the haul is relatively short. This is one of the reasons, as most members know, that the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National have gone in so heavily for trucking. It is because they cannot by rail alone really cover this very remunerative field of high revenue traffic. In this particular region, we have these services already provided through the truckers and through the highways that now exist. The main reason railways are built today, and the minister brought this point up in committee as did his advisor, Mr. Scott, is that railways are carriers of bulk tonnage at very low cost. This is the main reason railway lines are built today. Almost invariably they are tied in with the sort of contract mentioned in committee, Mr. Chairman. We had problems in our own area connected with bulk contracts for the shipment of iron ore.

I was in Montreal this morning, Mr. Chairman, to see how the negotiations were going between the iron mines and Canadian National Railways in our own part of the country. The Canadian National is insistent that it will not give any easement in the rate that they are now putting into effect for this iron ore unless they have some guarantee of tonnage. This is something they regret very much not getting years ago when they originally entered into the provision of ore dock facilities and other things for the ore mines at Atikokan. This point needs to be underlined.

The minister says the railway is ideally designed for bulk traffic of the low revenue kind, at least that low revenue traffic is involved. Here is a situation where several million tons are being carried and the railway is trying to nail down the mine to even higher incentive figures.

I refer hon. members to the evidence which came out in committee. The estimated tonnage given to us by Mr. Scott, the economic adviser to the minister, was 75,000 tons of outbound traffic and 65,000 tons of inbound traffic. The revenue on inbound traffic would be $2 a ton and for outbound traffic $1.50 a ton, which gives approximately $240,000 of estimated operating revenue. This $240,000, Mr. Chairman, is set against, as near as we can judge it, a capital expenditure of $14 million.

Now, this is almost fantastic when we realize the operating revenue in sight. Of course, this is only the first year, and according to the minister the traffic future would be much brighter after that. What evidence did the minister give us in regard to the expansion of traffic? He told us that there would be a possibility of more pulpwood being shipped. I can paraphrase the evidence given by the adviser to the minister, and I do not think it is unfair, that the railway line would mean more suitable cutting in the area. He pointed out that there would be more even depletion rather than so much emphasis on the western end, and I suppose he was referring to the western end of Gaspe. What a purpose for a railway. Any information one can gather about the pulp and paper industry, Mr. Chairman, has led me to believe that it is generally agreed that shipping by log boom tends to be cheaper than by any other means, provided it does not cost too much to provide the waterways and flumes. In this particular case with the location of the mills across on the north shore at Baie Comeau, and at Gaspesia Paper in southern Gaspe, and the mills in Quebec city and Three Rivers, because of distance there is not much chance of booming pulpwood from the Gaspe to these mills. But there can be water movement by barge. It is cheaper to move pulp by barge or some kind of ship movement during the very long summer season in that area, rather than by truck or rail.

At the present time out of Matane into Quebec city and the Three Rivers area there is only a movement of 50,000 cords, and I wonder if hon. members realize how small 50,000 cords are. In northwestern Ontario, which is not much more populated than Gaspe, we have a cut of 2.5 million cords and that cut gets to the mills in various ways. The point there is that the cut through Matane is only 50,000 cords at the present time.

We might favour the proposal more if the minister could come and tell us that his officials of the C.N.R. had been to any of the pulp and paper companies and they had given any indication of the volume that was going to be secured of pulpwood haul on the railway. There is no evidence of that whatsoever and even Mr. Dingle indicated that the C.N.R. had not bothered to talk to anybody about this as yet.

The minister's economic advisors came up with a figure of 25,000 tons, possibly rising to 35,000 tons, of wood chips to be transported on the railway; but I would point out to hon. members what a pittance this really is. It will barely keep the average size mill going for 15 or 20 days in the year and it certainly is not an economic basis on which to build large bulk, small revenue traffic for a new branch line. Furthermore there is no suggestion by the economic advisors that this pulp rail haul to the Quebec area could be at a price which would be economically feasible, and there is no indication that the pulp and paper companies are really interested in it.

The only indication presented by the minister and his advisor to our committee was that one corporation, the St. Lawrence corporation, had indicated a volume of wood chips that might be shipped out from the Gaspe area in association with the waste from the saw mill enterprises, but no indication was given of where there might be a possibility of bulk traffic that would bring something to the railway in terms of bulk pulpwood. The minister says that the cut is 50,000 cords, but even 200,000 cords is a pittance in terms of revenue as a haul from Ste. Anne des Monts to Quebec city or Three Rivers.

The argument in so far as the pulp and paper industry is concerned really does not stand up to close examination. It must be taken into consideration that the crown lands in this area are held by a number of large paper pulp corporations, and smaller lots are held by small contractors. When we look at this particular situation we have no pattern to indicate where any attempt is going to be made to consolidate these holdings. We have no indication that the government and the railway have got together with the provincial government that controls these crown lands to say "maybe we should build a pulp mill on the north shore of Gaspe". Yet the government is prepared to put $14 million into this particular line.

That shows an economic faith that I find almost unbelievable, but let us turn to the other part of wood production where there is an indication of some kind of volume shipment. That is the indication that at the present time in the Gaspe area there are 75 saw mills with a capacity of 85 million board feet per year. Now I accept the fact that the building of this line will enable some of this wood, but not all of it, to compete more effectively in the Montreal market, but we are given no indication as to the relative amount of this wood which comes by water from the Gaspe area.

The minister further has indicated that he is going to improve the ports, including the port at Ste. Anne des Monts. How does he know when he improves it that it will not be a more effective means of providing cheaper transportation for the lumber from Gaspe into the Quebec and Montreal city areas? It is usually the case that water shipment is cheaper than rail for a bulk commodity such as raw lumber, or even dressed lumber, and it must be remembered that the port facilities at Montreal and Quebec city have distribution facilities. Therefore it is hard to see where, in respect of a product such as lumber, one which really has some large substance on the market at the present time, it is going to gain so tremendously from a railway line 57 miles long.

The situation in so far as products of the forest, particularly pulpwood, are concerned is not a very attractive one and we have no indication of a real economic survey or any real research having been done by the minister's department with regard to future prospects in this particular regard. In effect we are given a number of pious statements, and all I can say with regard to these pious hopes in so far as forest industries are concerned is that I come from an area which depends for its real life blood upon the products of the forest—and this is an area where the railway lines have been paid for a long time ago—these railway lines cannot compete with other forms of transportation.

Over the last 10 years we have been seeing a revolution in transportation in the woods, and this applies to other commodities as well, where an increasing emphasis has been placed on trucking. Now the Gaspe area has trucks and highways, so again we begin to wonder about the whole story of this $14 million expenditure for a railway line that apparently the minister's economic advisors cannot really indicate has any substance in its immediate future. When I say "immediate future" I am thinking in terms of five or 10 years, because to create a pulp and paper mill usually takes five or 10 years. To create the kind of operation that would make it economical to ship wood and paper pulp by this rail project would probably take much longer than five years.

The other will-o'-the-wisp, beacon, or siren that the minister put forward to justify the building of this line is the fact that there are large mineral deposits lying just to the south of Ste. Anne des Monts, an area to which this line will go. Why is it that in almost all the other railroad projects we have heard about in recent years, when a mine wants a railway the railways are willing to put in the line? We struck a hot base metal find in our area at Geco and we got two railway lines there.

Mr. Benidickson: And they are not paying.

Mr. Fisher: They are not paying at the present time. The C.P.R. and the C.N.R. both dived in; they were both anxious to get the right to carry the concentrates from that area. That was only five or six years ago; but here in this case the government seems prepared to put in $14 million primarily to move mineral resources for which it has no hard or firm contract.

May I call it five o'clock.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion and public bills.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

SUGGESTED PROCEDURE TO PROVIDE COMPENSATION FOR CROP FAILURES

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of providing comprehensive income payments to farmers in time of crop failure by giving consideration to amending the Prairie Farm Assistance Act so as to provide: (a) an increase in the schedule of payments as follows: (i) an increase in the maximum payment from $4 per acre to $8 per acre; (ii) an increase in the present $3 per acre payment to $6 per acre; (iii) an increase in the present $2 per acre payment to $4 per acre; (b) an increase in farmers' contributions from 1 per cent to 2 per cent; (c) an increase in the maximum cultivated acreage on which payments may be made from 400 acres to 600 acres; and should give consideration to the provision of other appropriate amendments required to assure adequate income support in time of crop failure.

He said: I am pleased at this time to move this resolution for the consideration of the house. It is designed to extend the scope of an act which has been on the statute books of this country for a long time. I refer to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act which was placed on the statute books for the first time in 1939. This act has been of great benefit to farmers in western Canada during years of crop failure.

It is an act to which farmers themselves as well as the federal treasury make a contribution. Over the years, payments of approximately 50 per cent have been made by the producers and 50 per cent by the federal treasury. This act has been improved from time to time over the years. When it was first placed on the statute books it required an area in Saskatchewan with a crop failure in some 135 townships, or 100 townships in Alberta or Manitoba before payments could be made. Since that time the area has been reduced, and now the basic unit for the operation of the act is one township. This means that in any year when there is a crop failure in any real sense the act becomes operative, and while it does not work on an individual basis—while there is still a great measure of rough justice in its administration —nevertheless the vast majority of producers who experience crop failure do receive some benefit under the legislation.

To sum up the purpose of this resolution in a nutshell, it is to double the benefits and double the contributions. The wording in the last section of the act "400 acres to 200 acres" would probably better be spelled out by saying "one half of 200 acres up to 600 acres". Of course, half of 400 acres is the basis on which the wording is put into the act. This act, over the years, has cost the federal treasury a good deal of money. It is estimated that over the last 21 years the total benefits paid out have been in the neighbourhood of $261 million until this year, and the farmers have paid $127 million of that amount. This means that year in and year out the federal government has, on an average, contributed some $6 million.

The proposals in this resolution, if they were implemented, would mean an additional burden on the treasury of perhaps $6 million to $10 million a year over a long period of time and would double the contributions made by the producers under this act.

The Prairie Farm Assistance Act was brought into this house by the late Hon. J. G. Gardiner and it is one of those acts which he fostered and which he supported. He was able to amend it in a beneficial way from time to time. It has stood the test of time. It is a good act, and what I say in favour of this act today I have said on many occasions in the past. All I am saying now is that the time has come when there should be further improvements made to a very good act.

We have a crop insurance scheme which deals with the same general field of crop failure. The present Crop Insurance Act has many shortcomings in my opinion. When it was before this house I criticized the fact that the federal government was prepared to assume only 20 per cent of the estimated premium cost over a period of years, that the federal government was not prepared to assume any part of the losses themselves, and that if there were a series of serious losses under the Crop Insurance Act the provincial treasuries would become bankrupt. I contend that the Crop Insurance Act as it has been placed before this house is not a substitute for the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and that the Crop Insurance Act has been found wanting in many respects. It is used rather extensively in the province of Manitoba. It has been used in a very limited way in Saskatchewan. It has not been used at all in the province of Alberta.

The province of Saskatchewan, so I understand, is prepared this year to continue the operation of the Crop Insurance Act in co-operation with the federal government but in order to protect the provincial treasury the provincial authorities are saying that they are prepared to pay losses only to the extent of $5,000. This very seriously limits the application of the crop insurance scheme in that province. I asked the Prime Minister a few days ago whether there had been in consultation between the federal government and provincial governments with respect to providing a system of reinsurance so that the provincial treasuries would be protected in times of severe crop failure, particularly while the fund was being built up. The answer given by the Prime Minister was that no consultations had been held between the governments—there had merely been individual contacts between officials of the federal department and the provincial departments. I submit that this is not good enough. I submit that the federal government has failed to take the lead in encouraging the operation of a crop insurance scheme adequate to protect the farmers of western Canada. I submit that the government has promoted in this country a crop insurance scheme which is largely impracticable, one which is largely inoperative and which does very little to protect western producers. If the federal government would pay a sum larger than 20 per cent, if the federal government would take the initiative in bringing about a method by which there would be co-operation in reinsurance between the federal government and the provinces, then the crop insurance plan might have a much greater application and be of much greater benefit. But until that is done, the crop insurance scheme will be of very limited value.

The last time the Prairie Farm Assistance Act was amended to increase the total payments under the act was in 1957. Up until that time the maximum payment a farmer could receive was $500, or $2.50 an acre on one half of 400 acres. Now the maximum is a total of $800, or $4 per acre on one half of 400 acres. I am asking by this motion that the maximum of $4 an acre be made $8 an acre, that the payment of $3 an acre for a yield category of from three to five bushels be made $6 an acre and that the $2 an acre payment of from zero to three bushels be made $4 an acre. This would be a straight doubling of the payments within this yield category.

The further proposal is that in recognition of the general increase in the size of farms since 1939 the government should consider an increase in the acreage on which benefits may be paid and that it should consider a 50 per cent increase in the acreage on which benefits could be paid. This would mean for a larger farm—and perhaps I should call this an average size farm because there are a great many farmers today who have up to 600 cultivated acres—a maximum payment in the lowest yield category of $2,400.

I have in my hand the August 1961 issue of the Economic Annalist which gives the 11-factor cost of production index. This index shows tremendous changes in the farmer's costs of production over the years. In 1939 the index stood at $99.3. In April of 1961 the index had risen to $283.4. In other words from 1939 to 1961 the cost of production index has almost tripled.

The maximum payment under the act in 1939 for the smaller acreage or the acreage then provided was $500. For a similar acreage under the proposal I am placing before the house today the maximum payment would be $1,600. That is very close to the change in the cost of production and would merely mean that for a farm of this size in 1962 the farmer would be able to receive a sum of money with approximately the same purchasing power as the dollar had in 1939.

I realize that there are certain areas of western Canada where prairie farm assistance has very little appeal. I realize there are areas of western Canada where this proposal will not receive wide support. However, it is my experience that taking western Canada as a whole over the years P.F.A.A. has been very acceptable, has received the support of western farm organizations and I am led to believe the proposal I now have before the house would receive similar support.

As to the future I think we should develop a better P.F.A.A. It may be advisable also to develop a more adequate Crop Insurance Act. It may be that at some time in the future these two acts can meet so that together they will give the western farmer some protection in time of crop failure.

The kind of measure I propose today is not something that is a cure-all for the problems of western Canada. It would merely mean that in time of widespread crop failure there shall be a basic minimum below which the farmer's income will not be allowed to drop. This basic minimum income for a farm of 400 cultivated acres in time of total disaster would be $1,600, which I submit is not a tremendous sum of money with costs as high as they now are. I suggest that the cost of a measure of this kind can be borne quite readily by the federal treasury. When you compare the cost of this kind of legislation with the $1 an acre payment, provision for which was recently made, or the payment of storage costs, provision for which has been on the statute books for a long time, the cost of this type of provision cannot be regarded as prohibitive in any sense.

The Prime Minister said in the throne speech that certain payments would be made to farmers who have suffered from crop failure. Those payments have not been made to farmers who suffered crop failure but to all farmers. In keeping with the sentiments expressed in the Prime Minister's statement I suggest this kind of provision should be given favourable consideration by the house, that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act placed on the statute books in 1939 has proved of great value, that its benefits should be increased and that the farmers themselves are willing to pay more into the act if they are allowed to receive greater benefits.

Mr. McIntosh: What authority does the hon. member have for making that statement?

Mr. Argue: My authority derives from my understanding of the position of the farmers. My hon. friend can contradict me and say I am wrong. That is fine. Nevertheless I make the statement that the farmers of western Canada would be quite happy to have the 1 per cent deduction for P.F.A.A. increased to 2 per cent if they could get the benefits under the act doubled and if they could get the maximum cultivated acreage increased from 400 to 600 acres.

Mr. Rapp: That would be all right in southern Saskatchewan.

Mr. Argue: I think this kind of proposal would be highly acceptable. The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale—one has to be so careful in using that unwieldy name —says that that would be all right for southern Saskatchewan. Under the legislation brought in by this government farmers in areas such as the hon. gentleman's or in areas similar to his in Manitoba may have a chance to get crop insurance and they do not have to pay the payments under this act. The hon. gentleman may obtain it for his producers if he wants it. When this argument has been presented in the past we found that although there was a lot of vocal complaint about the levies that were made, when farm organizations were asked if they wished to have large areas of western Canada exempted from the act they said no. I suggest the motion I am proposing today is one that will receive the wholehearted approval of western farm organizations and will represent a great step forward in providing crop failure protection to farmers in western Canada. I hope this motion will come to a vote and that we may be able to test the sentiments of the house.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time we in this house have heard the hon. member for Assiniboia mention that he would like to see these changes made in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. The only difference today is that he is speaking from another quarter of the house. I wonder whether he has the support of the Liberal party in this regard. I notice that the motion was seconded by the former official agricultural spokesman of the Liberal party. I wonder whether the hon. member for Assiniboia has the full support of the Liberal party in presenting this motion today.

Mr. Benidickson: We are all for it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is a question I wonder about. Perhaps the former agricultural spokesman of the official opposition will participate in the debate later and give the house the benefit of his viewpoint.

Mr. Boulanger: I will.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It would be interesting to the house to have the viewpoint of the Liberal party because hon. members in the official opposition have been going through Quebec saying that the western farmers do not need any additional support and do not need acreage payments. How does the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska feel about this motion. This matter is of very great interest to me as my constituency has always been one of those in Alberta which have benefited a great deal from P.F.A.A. While I realize this fact, I must point out that my constituency is in the unique position of having half of it benefit a great deal from P.F.A.A. and the other half benefit very little at all. Hence I hear two sides of the story as I go throughout the east central part of Alberta. I hear those who would like more money under P.F.A.A. and I hear those who would like to do away with it altogether. It would be interesting to hear what the other members of the newly found party of the hon. member for Assiniboia have to say on this matter. My mind is taken back to the time when this question was raised in the house in 1958. At that time the hon. member for Assiniboia was going throughout the country saying that the Conservative party has 47 members from western Canada but that it would take them four years to find out where to hang their hats. May I say that it has taken him 17 years, Mr. Speaker, to find out where to hang his hat; and we who formerly came from Saskatchewan are not sure that in 17 more years he will not be hanging it somewhere else.

This is a question on which one must gauge the remarks emanating from the Liberal party having regard to where they come from; I refer to the new, the old, the this and the that. This is a question that I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, all members of the house should take into consideration when they study this resolution. Certainly the constituency of the hon. member for Assiniboia will benefit perhaps to some extent by this resolution if no further changes were made with regard to P.F.A.A. When he mentioned this matter in the house in 1958 I asked him to what rate he would then raise the percentage in P.F.A.A. He said he would triple it. I observe that he has now reduced the figure to 2 per cent instead of 3 per cent. Maybe this is the effect of the switchover. I do not know. I will leave it to him to decide. However, this is the change that he has talked about.

There is another thing I should like to point out to the rest of the house. He has mentioned that this would perhaps just double everything in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. It would also double the contributions made by the federal government towards western Canada. This is a point in which the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska would be quite interested in view of the remarks he has been making throughout his home province with regard to western farmers.

Actually from 1939 until 1959 something like $101 million were paid into the prairie farm assistance fund through the 1 per cent levy on farmers, and $202 million were paid out under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Those are approximate figures. Hence the federal government has stood practically half the cost. I also think it fair that it be pointed out here that Saskatchewan has been the big beneficiary. They have been receiving something like $2 for every $1 they put into it, Alberta about $1.50 and Manitoba were lucky if they broke even. Perhaps that is why crop insurance has gone over so well in that province. However, in doubling the contributions as suggested in this resolution the farmers would then be paying approximately, on the average, $20 million every year into P.F.A.A. The federal government, of course, would perhaps be paying out, on the average, $40 million every year. When you consider the $40 million every year and the crops raised on the acreage, this comes to something very close to 6 per cent. This 6 per cent under the Manitoba crop insurance plan will get you a better return than the $8 an acre suggested here by the hon. member for Assiniboia. While I and a great many of my constituents would benefit by this proposal, I think it only fair that some of these things be pointed out to the house and to both parties.

Another thing that should be pointed out is this. The hon. member for Assiniboia suggested that some day in the future the Crop Insurance Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act may meet. I suggest that they meet right now if the province will get a move on and do something about the matter. Manitoba has taken quite a large forward step, in my opinion, in offering the farmers crop insurance, that is in areas in which the P.F.A.A. does not cover the situation too well because of the minimum they must have in order to qualify, because of poor crop below 8 bushels an acre. Half townships are obliged to qualify.

The hon. member for Assiniboia never mentioned today the question of individual basis. Actually more farmers are concerned with receiving P.F.A.A. or crop insurance on an individual basis. He failed to mention that matter in his talk. I think this will be a far better step; I refer to bringing it down on an individual basis. It would do away with any conflicting crop reports turned in by one farmer and another. Actually I realize that bringing it down on an individual basis would be difficult under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act as it now stands. But under the Crop Insurance Act there is no real difficulty in this matter. In fact, most of the crop insurance is written up, as I understand it, on an individual basis.

This points out one of the advantages a farmer can have by taking out crop insurance or advocating, as is the case in Alberta, that the provincial government devise a crop insurance scheme. Another advantage is this and I point it out purely to show the house the differences between the two pieces of legislation. In the P.F.A.A. the payments cover a limited number of acres. In this motion I think the hon. member has suggested that the number be increased from 400 acres to 600 acres. Here again he is catering perhaps to some of the larger farmers. Maybe he has all the large farmers in Saskatchewan down in his area.

Mr. Argue: May I say that 600 acres is not a particularly large number.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is the hon. member's opinion, not mine. However, I point out this fact. Under the Crop Insurance Act a farmer can insure all his crop if he so desires. This is a direct improvement over the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. It can be on an individual basis. He can insure all the acreage he farms. In fact, in one of the provinces I think he is obliged to insure all the acreage he farms if it is farmed in one unit, or something like that.

The other point I should like to bring to the attention of the house is this. As I have already mentioned, my constituency benefits a great deal by P.F.A.A. In fact, two thirds of the amount paid out under P.F.A.A. in Alberta I daresay goes into the constituency of Acadia. However—and I draw this point to the attention of the house—if increasing the payments is in any way going to arouse those farmers who are paying into it and are receiving nothing from it, or is going to anger them to such a point that they convince the authorities that perhaps the P.F.A.A. should be amended or should be done away with, then I would be hesitant to support this motion.

We in Acadia appreciate the P.F.A.A. It has done a great deal for my constituency and we wish it to continue to give service to that area. Actually I point this out because of the number of farmers I meet in the north and northwestern part of my constituency who have failed to benefit even in the last few years. Since 1958, when we amended the act, 15 per cent to 20 per cent more farmers are qualified under the P.F.A.A. than were qualifying previously. This takes in all those persons who have side incomes such as that from perhaps a part-time job on a railway or in an army camp or in a small town and are farming on the side. They can now collect under P.F.A.A. An elevator man or a school teacher who is farming on the side can now collect under P.F.A.A. When this change was made in 1958 it allowed something like 15 to 20 per cent more people to qualify for assistance. While the formula of 50 per cent paid by the farmer and 50 per cent paid by the federal government has been true in the past, I question whether or not it will remain true in the future because of the greater number of people qualifying under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act today. I believe I have pointed out to the house some of the difficulties and possible results that this resolution might have and I think that it requires considerable study.

(Translation):

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, for the information of hon. members who are always accusing me of reading my speeches in the house, I shall explain to them the notes before me. In this way, I hope not to be disturbed for a few minutes during which I propose to speak.

Of course, I had no need of an invitation from the hon. member who just sat down because I proposed to take part in the discussion for several reasons.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I supported the motion of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). One of my reasons for doing so is that the implementation of these proposals would mean a step forward and promote the stabilization of western farm income. Though it exceeds that of the eastern farmers, the income of the western farmers has nevertheless been declining for the past four or five years, more particularly in the last two years.

Mr. Boulanger: A rather gratuitous statement on the part of the hon. member.

Moreover, the implementation of a measure such as that proposed by the hon. member for Assiniboia would improve the situation which prevailed until now with regard to stabilizing the purchasing power of our western farmers which, of course, has an impact on the eastern economy. Indeed, once the western farm income is stabilized, eastern industry will follow suit; our textile industry and our farm implement industry are prosperous. On the other hand, when the income of western farmers declines, we, in the east, suffer too.

Another reason for which I supported the motion of the hon. member for Assiniboia, is that I wanted to help compensate for the promises the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made during the 1957 and 1958 elections, when he promised parity prices, "parity not charity".

The unfulfilled promises of the Prime Minister are known, and, while waiting for a change of government which will allow us to improve our farm legislation, I support the measure put forward by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

The purpose of the motion before us is to protect the farmer against the damages caused by drought—

(Text):

Mr. Henderson: You have got the wrong idea.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Do not ask him any question, you will embarrass him, he would not be able to answer.

Mr. Boulanger: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the basic principle behind this proposal is to protect the farmer against damage due to drought or all the other causes which can bring about crop failures.

It is true that we have passed a crop insurance act in 1959, but since its enactment, three years ago, this legislation has given practically no result.

In fact, only 194 farmers in Saskatchewan have seen fit to avail themselves of this legislation.

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That was the Saskatchewan government.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: That is just what I said: only 194 farmers in Saskatchewan.

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That was the Saskatchewan government.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: That is just what I said: only 194 farmers in Saskatchewan and 3,600 in Manitoba. It is nearly three years since we passed this legislation, and out of 575,000 Canadian farmers, only 3,700 have seen fit to take advantage of it. Let nobody tell us that the Crop Insurance Act is beneficial to the farmers of the province of Quebec. Quite the contrary. It does not meet the needs of the farmers.

It is all very well for the Conservative government to claim that they have enacted sound agricultural legislation. It is all very well for the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) to travel around in the province of Quebec, claiming that the situation is fine for the farmers in that province. But he is mistaken. He should go to the farms, talk to the farmers and find out about the real situation.

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What about the sale of margarine in Quebec?

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: If you want to ask a question about margarine, I can answer you and I will take the opportunity to do so.

The sale of margarine in the province of Quebec was asked for by the farmers. Do you know why? They asked for it because although it was unlawful, margarine was nevertheless sold under the Union Nationale administration. And I can say—

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask a question of the hon. member?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pigeon: I should like to address a question.

Mr. Boulanger: No, later.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member yields the floor a question may be put.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, a question was asked when the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska was in the process of answering a question that had just been put to him. It is quite obvious that the question of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was not to elicit information but to try to interfere with the speech being delivered so ably by the hon. member.

Mr. Dorion: It would be embarrassing because the answer is not in the text.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has the floor and I trust he will have it without interruption.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: I wish to complete my answer to the hon. member for Acadia. If the sale of margarine was authorized, it is because the farmers asked for it, since the Union Nationale administration did not care to enforce the act it had passed in that regard. That is why margarine is sold in the province of Quebec.

I might add that several members of the Union Nationale were directors of margarine producing companies, or what we used to call "spread" because the use of the word "margarine" was forbidden.

Now the hon. member for Acadia asked me about the point of view of the eastern farmers. I will gladly make it known to him, as well as mine.

We never criticized the measures to help the western farmers. I challenge any member to prove that I spoke against the assistance to western farmers. In fact, we asked for the farmers in the east the same benefits that were being granted to those in the west.

Here, I must pay homage to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) who has always worked in the interest of the eastern as well as the western farmers, because he understands their situation.

We asked for the eastern farmers benefits similar to those enjoyed by the western farmers. But this was not granted to us; and, in view of the Conservative members who surround us, we have no hope of being successful, because they are not aware of the eastern farmers' problems. They do not want to help them.

We will therefore have to wait until there is a change of government, in a few months from now. It is only then that the farmers will be able to raise their heads, breathe easier and really live.

Mr. Speaker, I will end my remarks immediately, because I would like the question to be put on the motion in order that we may find out, once and for all, who is in favour and who is against the agricultural policy for the west and for the east as well.

(Text):

Mr. Pigeon: I would like to—

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Ask it in French.

Mr. Pigeon: Well, I shall be pleased to ask it in French.

I have received representations from cigarette, cigar and pipe tobacco growers concerning crop insurance. Could the hon. member tell me why the provincial government does not ask to take part in that crop insurance program in order to support the specialized tobacco crops in my constituency?

Mr. Boulanger: I will gladly answer the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. If the province of Quebec does not join this Conservative crop insurance scheme, it is because it is not feasible in that province.

An hon. Member: Why did you vote for it, then?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Argue: Let us have a vote. Let us find out how the party stands.

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member for Dauphin.

Mr. R. E. Forbes (Dauphin): I wish to say a few words on this resolution sponsored by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I am in agreement with the intention of the hon. member to provide farmers with sufficient income with which to pay operating expenses in years of crop failure due to drought, or other cases over which the farmer has no control. However, the P.F.A.A. was implemented in the thirties as a measure of relief to enable the farmer and his family to live. The provincial government and municipalities assisted the farmer with the purchase of feed and seed grains on a loan basis until the farmer could get a crop which would enable him to repay his loan. This legislation has been amended from time to time to enable more farmers to qualify, by reducing the area and increasing the compensation.

In 1958, the act was amended to remove many of the inequities in the making of payments and to broaden the coverage. The result has been from 10 to 15 per cent more farmers benefit from this legislation than previously benefited from it. This whole matter of income for farmers has been of great concern to this government. In order to stabilize the income of farmers, particularly in years of crop loss, this government in July, 1959, passed the Crop Insurance Act. It was hoped this would enable farmers to help themselves and would meet conditions such as were experienced during this past season.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put on the record the regulations which are necessary to enable farmers to benefit from this worth-while legislation, as many hon. members may not be familiar with it. This legislation has been of great benefit to the farmers in Manitoba who have carried crop insurance. I quote:

> The act provides that Canada will pay 50 per cent of the administrative costs of any insurance scheme plus 20 per cent of the premiums paid in any year. The contribution of 20 per cent of the premiums is similar to that paid by Canada to the unemployment insurance fund.
> In addition, Canada may in any year loan to a province up to 75 per cent of the amount by which indemnities exceed premium income plus reserves plus $200,000.
> There is no compulsory feature in crop insurance but the agreements now in force provide that at least 25 per cent of the farmers in any area covered by the insurance scheme must participate before the scheme can operate.
> The coverage provided under any agreement with a province shall not exceed the established value of 60 per cent of the long term average yield. The established value of each crop is determined by any method agreed on by Canada and the provinces. The long term average yield of an insured crop in any area is calculated and determined in a manner approved by the federal Department of Agriculture. In the Manitoba agreement the long term average yield is calculated over a 35 year period. However, different periods of time may be used depending largely on yield records which are available.
> It is generally accepted that the 60 per cent coverage provided is approximately equal to the cash cost of production.

Just what are the costs of production in Manitoba? The hon. member for Assiniboia has said that under his plan of amending the P.F.A.A., the farmer could collect $1,600. I have been advised that in Manitoba some of those farmers who carried crop insurance collected over $5,000. Surely, this is a scheme that would be approved by any farmer who wanted coverage which would enable him to pay the expenses connected with farming. Now, the rates which applied in Manitoba are simply these, as it states here:

> The premium rates between townships in the northwestern area from 6½ to 10 per cent (or 98 cents to $1.51 per acre) for a coverage of—

Now, the hon. member for Assiniboia should listen to this.

> —$15.15 an acre for wheat, $12.71 for oats, $14.84 for barley and $16.50 for flax.

Hon. members should note that these are the premiums the farmer himself would pay. The full premium to handle the coverage includes another 20 per cent from the federal government. I feel that this crop insurance measure is one of which the farmers should avail themselves.

Some hon. members opposite have complained—

Mr. Peters: You have not talked about the resolution.

Mr. Forbes: —that this act has not been accepted by the farmers. This is due to the fact that over the last eight or 10 years we have had a succession of good crops. They have been waiting for something that would be a little bit cheaper. I am certain that with experience, the government of Manitoba will establish rates for the various soil zones that will be acceptable to the farmers of our province.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to endorse this resolution. As you probably know, as a group, we have already accepted this resolution and had some discussion about it. We are in a position where we are getting support from another section of the house that we perhaps did not expect—

Mr. Argue: Come over, Arnold; there is a vacancy right here.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has said that there has been considerable criticism from eastern Canada of these acts. I should like to say, as a representative of a farming area, that I think this is very unfair. I think that in a good many cases we find more reluctance on the part of the representatives of western agriculture to support the eastern farmers than we do on the part of the eastern farmer to support the programs of the western farmer.

Mr. Argue: Let us have a vote on this.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Peters: We think it is true. I am quite aware of all the legislation which applies to western Canada. It was my intention to move an amendment which in effect would remove the last sentence and add "so as to expand the act to apply to all provinces". However, if I did that you would be very surprised to find it would be opposed by most of the western members, and I say this reluctantly.

Farmers should be interested in agriculture as it applies to the whole country, rather than taking a sectarian point of view, those in one area wanting more for themselves and not being interested in seeing it is applied to the rest of the country.

The last speaker mentioned crop insurance and I do not see how that could arise in this discussion. It is a completely different thing altogether. I would like to add to what the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska said and I would tell the house that in my area the farmers have discussed this matter. The minister of agriculture in Ontario set up a commission of the provincial legislature which went around among the farmers to find out if they would support this type of insurance that the government proposed. In my area there was a very largely attended meeting and they told the head of the delegation, who is now the minister of agriculture and therefore is aware of the opinion they had, that they were not opposed to crop insurance being introduced in Ontario but they were personally not interested in taking part in the scheme. They said they would support it on the basis that it might be good for somebody else.

The people in eastern Canada connected with the agricultural industry are interested in supporting legislation that will be beneficial to other parts of Canada, and I hope eventually we shall be able to look at agriculture in an across-the-board type of way. I might even refer to it as an industrial union of agriculture rather than a craft union, so that all people engaged in agriculture will be interested in the problems of people in different sections of the industry, and thus give sustenance to this type of proposal.

I am quite happy to see acceptance of this extension, and when a vote is called before the hour is up I think we shall find that all members of the house will support this legislation. The western members can rest assured that if they are willing to do that, then the eastern members will be quite happy to give this their support.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): In speaking on this resolution I first want to refer to statements made by two opposition members. One was that the western members at no time would want to help the farmers in eastern Canada. On behalf of all the western members, and I think I can speak for them, I want to say that is absolutely wrong. The reason they said that is because they do not understand the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. That is one reason why I would not support this motion.

Further, I would point out to the hon. member for Assiniboia that under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act the producers have to contribute 1 per cent of their product. It is taken off their cheques when they take their grain to the elevators. If the federal government increased this in the manner suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia, then naturally the constituency he represents, and the one represented by the hon. member for Acadia would be all in favour of it. Those members who represent constituencies in the foothills of Alberta, where producers have paid into this from the start and have not reaped any benefit from it, would be against it because their constituents would immediately say "let us out." That is one of the reasons why the eastern farmers do not want to participate now.

Mr. Peters: We would probably want to participate but we have not the opportunity. It only applies to three provinces.

Mr. McIntosh: This is considered the spring wheat area. If the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska and yourself would get together we would support you at any time if you wanted this extended all over the country. I agree with the remarks made about viewing agriculture as one industry right across Canada, and that we should work for the benefit of all Canada and not just one particular area.

Mr. Boulanger: The minister promised to extend this last year, or two years ago.

Mr. McIntosh: That is the trouble. Possibly your party did not have strong enough representation, and I sympathize with your efforts over the past four years in that you did not understand the problem in western Canada. This resolution is not a new one. We discussed it the first year we were down here and some of the western members representing the foothill constituencies said "our farmers won't go for it". The constituency represented by the hon. member for Acadia, and my own, have benefited more from this act than any other constituencies in Canada, and I would point out it was never intended to be an insurance act. By its name it is an assistance act and if this resolution goes through it will be a means of putting the farmers back to where they were in the 1930's. They would have to look to the municipalities for relief.

In the first place the payments under this act were never meant to cover all the losses in production. They were just intended to be of assistance and they are not given to the landowner himself. They are actually given to the operator of a farm, the one who has to put in the crop the following year, and it is not a matter of covering his complete losses.

I have made mention of spring wheat areas and they can be divided into two parts, the part known as the prairies or great plains, and the part known as woodland and parkland. Climatic conditions in each of these areas vary from year to year. We in the prairies or great plains area suffer from drought, frost, rust, hail and so on, and in the long term average over a period of 45 years one would think we should have given up farming on this type of land. However, over a 45 year period on that type of land we have had an average production as great as if not greater than the parkland area, and I think it is in the interests of the people of Canada to keep that group of farmers on that land to produce more crops of wheat.

Agriculture used to be first in our exports. Now it is third and we must maintain our production on the western prairies.

I should like to say something about how this program is financed. Farmers contribute to the program to the extent of 1 per cent of their sales of wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax and rapeseed. The last two were included last year and all farmers are covered in the program. When I mention "farmers" I mean the actual producers on the land and not the land owners. This money is placed in the prairie farm investment fund and is used to pay farmers who experience crop failures. The additional funds required for payments are provided by the federal treasury without interest. All administrative costs of the fund are also paid by the federal treasury and, as the hon. member for Acadia told us, this 1 per cent contributed by the producers amounts to 50 per cent of the money that is paid out. The farmers pay that themselves, and of course they also contribute to the amount of money paid by the federal treasury. Up to the present—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I hope the house leader could indicate to us the business for the next two days and, if he could possibly do it, it would be a great help if we could know what the government intends to start with next week.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we shall continue with the supplementary estimates which we have not yet completed, followed by the estimates of the Department of Public Works. I think the study of the estimates will take most of Thursday and Friday. I will consult with the members of the parties on the other side of the house tomorrow afternoon with regard to the business which will be coming up on Monday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 8, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron) presented the fourth report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TRAINING OF UNITED KINGDOM UNITS IN CANADA

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement with regard to the training of British army units in Canada during the forthcoming months. The house will recall that last summer, in response to a request from the United Kingdom government, the Canadian government agreed to a battalion of the British army being airlifted to Camp Gagetown in June to train with the 3rd Canadian brigade group. This exercise proved of value to all concerned.

This year, and again at the request of the United Kingdom government, we have agreed to a battalion joining Canadian regular army forces in Canada for summer training. The first battalion of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers has been nominated. Details as to the location of the training area are now being worked out and will be announced in due course. As was the case last year, the United Kingdom will bear the total administrative costs. In addition, the Canadian government has also agreed to a proposal that a British army battery and a parachute company should come to Canada later this year and early in 1963 to obtain training experience under winter conditions.

I am sure all hon. members will appreciate this further evidence of the close co-operation which exists between Canada and the United Kingdom in matters relating to our common defence effort.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ACTS OF TERRORISM, B.C.—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay East, under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the need for federal assistance to the provincial government of British Columbia to effectively deal with the extremely serious situation in the Kootenays caused by continuous bombings and acts of terrorism, culminating two days ago in the destruction of half a million dollars worth of property causing unemployment to over 1,000 persons for a period of a few weeks to months.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the minister, perhaps I should ask the hon. member who requests leave to indicate, if he can, what is the urgency of debate. The problem of bombings and other unlawful acts by certain people in the Kootenays has engaged the attention of this house and of the country for a long time. It is true that there was recently an outbreak with particularly serious consequences to which the hon. member has referred. However, I wonder whether or not that creates an urgency of debate in a continuing problem. I would ask the hon. member to address himself briefly to that point, then I shall hear from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The question is urgency of debate. Recognizing that there is a serious problem, it is a continuing one. Is there some new aspect to it now which it has not been possible to debate in this session or will not be possible to debate within a reasonable time?

Mr. Herridge: The urgency of the situation for the people of the Kootenays is in the fact that according to some it has now almost reached the stage of civil war with these continued bombings, acts of terrorism and sabotage. The mayors of the various cities in the Kootenays, the heads of industrial organizations and numerous unions have wired members of the government, including the Prime Minister, the member for Kootenay West and the member for Kootenay East, urging the federal government to take action. They believe the urgency is very particular at the present time, and it is on that basis I moved the adjournment of the house.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): If I may say a word on this, I would prefer not to deal directly with the question of urgency because, as a minister coming from British Columbia, you will appreciate that I am aware of the nature of the problem and the serious aspect it has taken on just lately. Whether or not that kind of urgency brings it within the rule regarding urgency of debate is a question Your Honour has raised which I am content to leave where, I submit with respect and deference, you have correctly summarized it.

There are two other grounds on which I think the motion is out of order, and it is with those I should like to deal. The first is based on citation 100 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 89, where he says:

> The definite matter of urgent public importance for the discussion of which a member may ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 must involve the administrative responsibility of the government.

The constitutional position, sir, as is well known, is that the responsibility for the maintenance of law and order and the protection of property is that of the provinces. So long, therefore, as the province accepts this responsibility there is no way that the federal government can intervene to give assistance in this field, so there is at present no way in which any question of the administrative responsibility of the federal government arises. No indication has been received that the province of British Columbia does not accept the responsibility of maintaining law and order. Therefore, as I say, there is no way in which this matter could come within the administrative responsibility of the federal government.

In saying this, I would not want to be taken as implying that responsibility would automatically be accepted if a request were made. There are relevant statutes and other provisions in this regard with respect to the kind of assistance and the circumstances under which assistance of the kind referred—that is, military aid and extra policing—can be requested by a province. These would have to be looked at, and certainly would be looked at, at once to see whether or not these circumstances prevailed if any such request were made. The point that is important to note here for the purpose which we are dealing with now is that no request has been made by the province. There is no indication that the province does not accept the responsibility or feels it cannot discharge the responsibility for the maintenance of law and order. In those circumstances I submit that it is not a matter within the scope of the citation to which I have referred.

I repeat that I do not want to take what I may call, with respect, the narrow ground with regard to urgency, although I do submit with deference that you have correctly stated the position there. Rather I prefer to rest on the ground I have referred to, and on the ground contained in paragraph 5 of citation 100 at page 90 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, namely:

> The adjournment of the house cannot be moved with reference to critical conditions generally prevailing in certain parts of the country.

Although it is British Columbia's misfortune, nevertheless fortunately the conditions prevailing in the constituency of my hon. friend from Kootenay West are not those generally prevailing across the country.

So on those two grounds, while respecting fully the desire of the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Kootenay East and their anxiety in this matter, and while indicating that all hon. members in the house share that anxiety—certainly the government shares and understands their concern—nevertheless in my respectful submission this is not the kind of subject that can be debated here at this time, for the reasons I have given.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the hon. member who is asking for leave feels that the matter has been sufficiently placed before the attention of the government to allow his request to stand, or whether he would like me to deal with it on its merits.

Mr. Herridge: I have listened to the minister's explanation with great interest, and in view of the facts he placed before the house I feel I have nothing further to say at this time.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances I think I might be correct, then, in rejecting the motion at this time.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—PRIORITY OF AGREEMENT ON NUCLEAR TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister in view of the forthcoming disarmament meeting at Geneva next week. Does the government consider that the first and essential step in reaching a general disarmament agreement should be an agreement to end all nuclear tests, with appropriate provision for inspection and control, and that this should be given first priority at the forthcoming conference?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is no doubt that the question of nuclear tests will be raised. There are to be preliminary discussions on that point among the foreign ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet union commencing on Monday, and there probably will be subsequent discussions in the disarmament committee itself. But I think it would be unwise for Canada to insist that this question of nuclear tests must be settled before the committee undertakes any discussion of the broader question of disarmament.

We shall be doing our best in the general field of disarmament to bring about an end to nuclear tests, but I do not think there should be a rigid dividing line between the discussions on these two subjects, such as the Leader of the Opposition would appear to be suggesting.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question based upon a report of a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on March 2 in Vancouver, when he said:

> Canada's policy has been against any atmospheric testing by any country but the Americans have the responsibility for defending the free world and apparently have decided they are in danger of being outclassed.

Is it now government policy that Canada will not oppose nuclear tests unless there is an agreement providing for a system of controls, inspection and verification, along the lines suggested by the United Kingdom and United States?

Mr. Green: The Canadian policy remains as I have enunciated it on several occasions.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM, B.C.—STATEMENT ON EMIGRATION TO BRAZIL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Kootenay West asked me whether the government had had any communication with representatives of the Brazilian government with respect to the emigration to Brazil, of Doukhobors.

The answer is no.

The Brazilian embassy informs us, however, that a group of Doukhobors are attempting to negotiate the purchase of land in Brazil and have requested immigration visas for entry into that country. That question is now under consideration by the Brazilian authorities. The Canadian government has not been involved in any way with this matter, and I am therefore unable to say whether or not the Sons of Freedom are included in those who are desirous of being considered as potential immigrants into Brazil.

[Later:]

Mr. M. L. McFarlane (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the serious situation in the Kootenays, would the minister be willing to send in the militia if the request is made by the appropriate authorities in British Columbia?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): The responsibility for maintaining law and order in the Kootenays, as indicated by the Minister of Justice, is with the provincial authorities. It would appear to me that until they have exhausted their capabilities in that direction there would be no necessity to call upon the members of the Canadian army to assist them in that regard.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): If I may, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Will the minister not admit that under section 91 of the British North America Act the parliament of Canada is responsible for the maintenance of law and order if a provincial government fails to act?

Mr. Harkness: As I believe the hon. member well knows, Mr. Speaker, the National Defence Act provides for assistance to the civil power in the event that it is requested by a civil authority. No such request has been received by the defence department.

TRANSPORT

CHAMPLAIN WATERWAY—REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his absence last week I directed a question to the Prime Minister which was to this effect. I was interested in view of certain statements which had been made at the Canada-United States interparliamentary committee to the effect that Canada had not yet officially asked the international joint commission to deal with the Champlain waterway cut-off, in learning whether the Prime Minister was in a position to answer the question or make a statement to that effect.

The Prime Minister said that the reply had better await the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs would advise the house whether the information we received in the committee was accurate, and whether or not this matter has now been referred to the international joint commission for consideration.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that on January 22 the Prime Minister told the house that the United States government had been informed of the Canadian government's desire to submit this matter to the international joint commission, and of its willingness to have this done by means of a joint reference of the two governments.

The matter has not yet been referred to the international joint commission. We are working on the reference, and it is hoped that it will be made in the near future. When it is, the house will be informed.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING ON MINE CLOSINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Now that the minister has been allowed 24 hours in which to give the matter due consideration, is he prepared to report to the house on the meeting which was held yesterday with Premier Stanfield and representatives of the coal industry of Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacInnis: They failed to show up again.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the delay. I could have told him the same thing yesterday, however; that the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Forestry, the Minister of Labour, myself and members of parliament from the area concerned met a delegation headed by the premier of Nova Scotia and including two of his cabinet ministers, representatives of the coal industry and the U.M.W., members of the clergy and mayors of the municipalities of the area; in connection with the proposed closing of No. 16 colliery.

The meeting lasted three hours. The representatives made a very forceful plea, but in a most reasonable manner, to obtain from the government the continuance of the operation of No. 16 colliery. Needless to say, the government will consider these views in the most sympathetic manner, and a decision will be taken as soon as possible.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

WINGHAM, ONT.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO STATION DAMAGED BY FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister aware of the explosion and devastating fire that took place at the CKNX television and radio station at Wingham this morning, and is the government doing anything to assist this very important news and entertainment medium in western Ontario to carry on its operations?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to telephone my office this morning with respect to this matter, and I was able to make some inquiries of the corporation. I can advise him as follows. As he has informed the house, the fire this morning destroyed the Wingham television and radio establishment, wiping out the studio facilities, but the transmitter is intact. The C.B.C. has been requested to try to supply equipment to fill the void pending the repair and reconstruction of their equipment.

The C.B.C. is trying to arrange for a direct feed to Wingham from either their Toronto telecine or Meridian studios. It is not expected that they will be able to loan telecine equipment to Wingham. They are definitely able to assign a mobile video tape cruiser, with one camera, and a one camera field set-up with camera control and audio facilities. The C.B.C. is endeavouring to locate a two or three camera mobile unit which can be assigned, and which will be assigned as soon as it can be located.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Skeena inquired during orders of the day as to the progress being made toward satisfying an order for return arising out of a question of his, which question I assume from his description was No. 119.

I am informed that the consent of the province of British Columbia to the tabling of this information was necessary. This consent was received only this week, and I expect the return will be tabled in the next day or two.

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell me when the return will be available which was ordered by the house with regard to the correspondence between the Minister of Transport, Quebecair and other people?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member reminded me of the question he asked on that matter. This will enable me to make further inquiries. I shall do my utmost to provide him with a reply very shortly.

(Text):

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

AVAILABILITY OF LISTS OF PERSONS RECEIVING CITIZENSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and inquire whether in her department or in the minister's office lists are prepared of the persons who have received citizenship, on a weekly basis; and if so, whether those lists are available to anyone outside the department.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should inquire within his own political party. He will find that both in Toronto and Montreal representatives of his party are securing this information from the local courts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. lady a question as to whether or not—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: You received your answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has the floor. I cannot ascertain whether or not he is using it properly unless other hon. members will listen. Will the hon. member repeat his supplementary question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. lady—

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for the hon. gentleman to ask the question again. It is true I did not answer it. The answer is no.

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer is no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Can the minister inform the house how records of those obtaining citizenship at Hamilton and London, which are not available to the Liberal or other political parties, are available to the Progressive Conservative Association of Canada?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, I presume they obtain the information in the same way the Liberal representatives obtain it at Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. Hellyer: They refuse to make it public, and you know it.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, I saw the article to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Discrimination.

Mrs. Fairclough: I saw the article in this morning's newspaper. The gentleman who says he went to the office at Hamilton and was refused is not fully representing the facts as they are.

Mr. Hellyer: What are the facts?

Mrs. Fairclough: That he never even called at the office.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROVISION OF BENEFITS FOLLOWING DESTRUCTION OF POWER LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Labour or the parliamentary secretary.

In view of the recent bombing of the power transmission facilities of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company on Kootenay lake, which will cause over 1,000 employees to be unemployed for a period from weeks to months, and in view of the fact that the union and company have made satisfactory arrangements to distribute employment as fairly as possible, would the minister assure the house that the unemployment insurance commission will co-operate with the union and management with respect to unemployment insurance benefits and by providing the staff required to service these unemployed persons so they will suffer no inconvenience?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to bring the hon. member's suggestion to the attention of the commission.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF MEAT INSPECTION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture or to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the recent series of outbreaks regarding the sale of meat unfit for human consumption in various sections of the country, is the Department of Agriculture prepared to meet the requirements of additional staff needed to provide adequate inspection service as provided for under the Meat Inspection Act?

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being given every consideration by the department, and I am sure it will be looked after.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell us whether he thinks his staff is sufficient to do the policing job required in the circumstances?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated by the hon. member for Gloucester, this is really a responsibility of the Department of Agriculture, inspecting the quality of meat.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But is it not a fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare regards this as his responsibility as well, and has already taken some action in this matter, belated as it is?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, this practice apparently had been going on for many years under the administration of the previous minister, and this minister actually did take action.

INDUSTRY

DOMINION TAR AND CHEMICAL CO.—ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT IN U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in my absence the hon. member for Laurier asked a question regarding the location of a branch plant in the United Kingdom by Dominion Tar and Chemical Company. In answer I would say that for a very long time Canadian firms that wished to locate branch plants in other parts of the world have been quite free to do so, just as branch plants are often located in Canada by firms that have their head offices and main operations in other countries of the world.

I might say that this government and my department take great pains to encourage companies located in other parts of the world to establish branch plants here in Canada, thereby providing employment for Canadians.

FLOODS

BEAUCEVILLE, QUE.—REQUEST FOR ARMY ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Theogene Ricard (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question. Has the federal government received a request for assistance from the government of the province of Quebec concerning floods caused by the Chaudiere river at Beauceville? If so, what action is the national defence department contemplating in that regard?

(Text):

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. A request for assistance was made yesterday by the province of Quebec to the Canadian army, and a state of emergency has been declared in view of the fact that the Megantic dam on the Chaudiere river is in danger of breaking owing to ice conditions, which could result in the town of Beauceville being flooded.

A full reconnaissance of the ice conditions is taking place, and it is expected that this will be completed by approximately three o'clock this afternoon. It is planned to blow up the ice, and to have a force of approximately 75 all ranks stand by on twelve hours' notice for further operations if required for the following reasons: (a) to observe ice conditions and use further explosives, (b) to assist in evacuating threatened civilian population if the situation makes this necessary.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

SUGGESTED CHANGE TO METRIC SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister noted the endorsement of the Canadian conference on education that Canada should change its system of weights and measures from the English system to the metric system? If so, does he propose to introduce such a measure in this house?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest the article referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. Hellyer: Are you impressed?

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION IN FERNIE AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. L. McFarlane (Kootenay East): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether consideration has been given to our request for the construction of a penitentiary in the Fernie area. We have been very much interested in this project for a long time. In view of press releases in a Calgary paper recently, I felt that the penitentiary was going to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure about the urgency of the question. From what we have heard earlier today, perhaps it is an urgent matter.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no final decision has been made as to the actual site of a new penitentiary in western Canada, although I think I can safely say that one is imminent. In the consideration so far given and in the final consideration to be given I can assure the hon. member that the qualifications and interests of Fernie in having an institution located there have been and will be fully borne in mind. Even if I were inclined to overlook or forget that point, it would not be possible in view of the constant and urgent representations made by the the hon. member.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—REPORTED STATEMENT BY BELGIAN MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he has any comment to make on a reported statement of the Belgian trade minister yesterday to the effect that he was happy to be able to say that the common market would study the possibility of arrangements for an enlarged European Common Market which would preserve the objectives of the present community.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to comment on any statements made by the minister from Belgium. We had a most useful talk lasting for over an hour, and a great many matters of mutual interest and concern were discussed. As these conversations were private, I would not want to comment on them at this time.

Mr. Pearson: Is it not a fact that the Belgian minister in question informed the Minister of Trade and Commerce of the point I have just made, namely that they would be happy to see the European common market enlarged at this time?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I said that we discussed a great many things. I do not intend to discuss with the Leader of the Opposition what passed between us at this conference. It was a most illuminating and useful conference held between two ministers.

Mr. Pearson: Will the minister then state that this report is inaccurate?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: I have tried to tell the Leader of the Opposition three times, Mr. Speaker, that I did not intend to state anything.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—COMMENT ON CRITICISM OF OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether they have received any public complaints about criticisms made of past performances of the officials of the Department of External Affairs by the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Middlesex East?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I rather think the question is not one of such significance and urgency that it would warrant being asked on the orders of the day. It would open the door to asking questions about members' outside speeches. That would leave considerable scope for members who have not any other questions to ask.

Mr. Fisher: I should just like to make one point in relation to this matter. I was asking whether the minister or the Prime Minister had received any public complaints—that is complaints from the public of Canada—with regard to the substance of the criticism. I am not asking for information on the criticisms themselves. I suggest that from indications in the press there is great interest in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand the hon. member to be talking about complaints before the hon. member for Bow River made his statement?

Mr. Fisher: No; complaints with regard to the statement.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps that question could be permitted, whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs has had anything since the statement in question was made.

Mr. Walker: Perhaps the hon. member for Port Arthur is today preaching for a call.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

GAMBO, NFLD.—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SUB-POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether, in view of the imminent transfer of the historic post office from Gambo to Dark Cove, Newfoundland, he would give consideration to the establishment of a sub-post office in that historic place, which has had a post office for 60 years.

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in the course of a year I must receive several hundred representations with regard to post office establishments. If each hon. member displayed the lack of consideration just displayed and raised the matter in the house, we would never get any business done at all. If the hon. member wishes to write me about the matter or put a question on the order paper, I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman, I submit that this is one of those urgent and exceptional matters that arises very rarely, and as a member who presided over—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not understand the minister to be raising a point of order but rather to say that he could not undertake to answer questions of that kind generally in the house. In other words, an answer was given. It is not customary nor allowable for members to debate the sufficiency or otherwise of an answer. If there is a supplementary question it is permissible. However, it is not permissible to debate the sufficiency of the answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister. Does the minister realize that this is not a usual situation but is rather a most exceptional situation, and will he give it careful consideration?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Each one of the hundreds is given careful consideration.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

625. Canada's civilian participation as a member of the international commissions for supervision and control in Indo-China—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to participate in a debate on this item but, rather unusually, we have played a bit of hopscotch in connection with the items in these estimates.

Mr. Churchill: I have informed all parties.

Mr. Benidickson: Could all members of the committee be informed by the house leader as to the likely order in which the various departments will be taken up?

Mr. Churchill: We will start with external affairs.

Mr. Benidickson: What follows?

Mr. Churchill: Then the Department of Forestry, which was just about completed the other day, then citizenship and immigration, and after that we will carry on in the order in which they are in the further supplementary estimates.

Mr. Benidickson: Thank you.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, we have not had from the minister a report on the situation that prevails in the countries covered by the three international commissions for supervision and control, in South and North Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos. The minister will recall that toward the close of the last session there was some discussion on his estimates about developments in Laos and particularly with regard to the reactivated international commission on which Canada, along with Poland and India, serves.

At that time the minister expressed an optimistic note. He said that notwithstanding difficulties that had prevailed from the month of January, 1961 up until the summer of 1961, he was confident that the situation in that particular section of old Indo-China would evolve in a manner that did not warrant some of the apprehensions that I and several other members affirmed. I am sure that on this item the minister will want to bring the house up to date as to the situation in Laos.

The position taken by the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet union, along with lesser powers, was that there should be established in Laos a government that would be truly neutral in character. That seemed to be one of the ways, it was thought at the Geneva conference, by which stability and peace could be provided for this area. As we all know, however, notwithstanding the apparent agreement to establish a government under the former prime minister, notwithstanding the meeting of the three royal princes including the present prime minister of the government of Laos, the former prime minister, Souvanna Phouma, and the leader of the Pathet Lao, since last summer there has been no disposition by these three gentlemen to effect conditions which would have permitted the establishment of a truly neutral government, along lines envisaged by the United Kingdom and the United States.

I am not saying that it will be possible to establish a truly neutral government because of the incursions that have taken place in Laos by guerilla activity emanating from certain communist lands. Canada, however, has a very important stake in the outcome of events in Laos. The reactivation of the truce supervisory commission, which adjourned sine die over a year and a half ago, was effected to determine whether pursuant to agreement, there had been in fact a cease-fire between the Pathet Lao forces and those of the royal government. Since the beginning of the time Mr. Mayrand as our representative on that commission took over his functions in Delhi, prior to going to Laos, there have been skirmishes and conflicts between the opposing forces. It would be interesting to know what progress the commission has been able to make in determining in fact whether there has been a cease fire and whether in fact the commission has been able to fulfil the functions for which it was set up a second time.

It would also be of value to hear from the minister if the material shortage situation continues. When we discussed this matter last there was not provided to the commission, as I recall, necessary air equipment to enable the commission to discharge its functions effectively. These and other questions perhaps better known to the minister, will be of interest to the house and to the country. We would appreciate having from him a report with regard to the commission in Laos. What is to be its likely tenure? How effective has its work been?

I am not suggesting that it has not been effective, nor am I suggesting that the commission has not made every endeavour to make a useful contribution to the situation which prevails in an area adjacent to which are such nations as Cambodia, South Viet Nam, Thailand, Burma and other countries in south and southeast Asia, all of which have a direct involvement. It would be interesting to know whether the minister believes that the evidence is that the Soviet union has made every endeavour to co-operate along the lines originally agreed on, and if the difficulties which have arisen come from another communist nation and not from the Soviet union.

Then, of course, on this item we would want to hear from the minister as to the situation with regard to the commission in Cambodia. There relative peace prevails but, as we know from earlier discussion, the obligations of the commission in that little country have not been great in the last four or five years. One could successfully argue, I think, that the commission there might well have been disbanded. However, there were good reasons, I believe, for continuing the commission, reasons essentially exemplary, because of the situation that attends the government of Laos and of South Viet Nam. I take it that although the commission continues to be in existence in Cambodia, there has been no successful resistance to the contention of Canada that it should not concern itself with boundary matters.

Then there is the third commission in South Viet Nam. In the last four or five months we have been hearing a good deal about South Viet Nam. We are told that this has become a very critical area, in which the United States, through its president and secretary of state, has indicated a deep concern and interest. It is a country into which are flowing military contributions, materiel and personnel, to assist directly or indirectly the government of President Diem against infiltrations and attacks originating within and more particularly from North Viet Nam.

Now, certainly when this commission and the other two commissions were established in 1954, as a result of the Geneva accord, it was not envisaged that the responsibilities of the three participating countries on the commission would have as extended a period of operation as has proved to be the case. I am sure we will agree with the minister's statement last summer, and with similar statements made by his predecessor earlier, that these three commissions have served an important and steadying purpose at the time they were established. They continued to provide a measure of stability and peace in all three countries. But it is a fact that in 1956 the situation had so developed in at least two countries, South Viet Nam and Cambodia, that there was some reason for Canada to anticipate that the period of the commission's usefulness was perhaps approaching an end, although in the case of Laos I believe the position of Canada, notwithstanding the wish of the royal government, was that the commission had not yet fulfilled its purpose.

Canada is represented on these commissions. It has a civilian representative in South Viet Nam, as in the two other countries. There are military personnel, I do not know to what extent, in all three countries. Perhaps the minister will inform us about this. In any event we have a considerable number of Canadians serving in the cause of mediation and the cause of peace in these three countries. It would be interesting, because of the continued and disturbing internal conflict which prevails in South Viet Nam in particular, to know what the attitude of the Canadian government is with regard to this situation, particularly with regard to the operations of the commission in South Viet Nam. It would be interesting to know the significance of the recent bombings of the palace in Saigon.

Many people suggest that the situation there is second only in importance, in so far as the peace of the world is concerned, to the situation in divided Germany. Whether that is the case, we are participating in the commission in South Viet Nam. We have a duty, and I think the minister would recognize this, to ask what is his view as to developments. What are our reactions to the recently declared policy of the government of the United States in its desire to assist, by way of paramilitary power, the forces of the government of South Viet Nam? The committee will expect the minister to make a report on these three commissions because we are participating in them. We have many Canadians participating in the work of these commissions, in one way or another. We are spending considerable sums of money, and properly so, to help maintain these three commissions in an area of the world, so far removed. All of this indicates the interdependence of nations in this period in which we live, and the attendant responsibilities of peace loving countries like our own toward situations that exist in other parts of the world.

Mr. Regier: I believe every member of this house is extremely proud of the work that Canadians have been doing within recent years in southeast Asia. I believe there is no member of this house who would dare to vote against the request of the government for an additional $100,000 in the supplementary estimates in order to pay for our participation in the commission in Indo-China. I am inclined to believe, Mr. Chairman, that if it had not been for these commissions in recent years, the history of this portion of the world would be entirely different from what it now is. I believe they have a steadying and a pacifying influence in the area.

We are all aware of the fact that the commission is made up of representatives of one nation that is ordinarily labelled as being within the communist bloc, one western nation, namely our own, and another more or less neutral nation in the ideological warfare between the two major power blocs. I think Canadians ought to take a great deal of pride in what must be often a heart-breaking and frustrating task assigned to our people who are serving on the commission.

I am a little disturbed by the attitudes and even the activities of our good friend, neighbour and ally, the United States of America. I would hope that whereas we always welcome any advice that our good friend, neighbour and ally the United States decides it may wish to give us, that it may also be receptive to a bit of advice, on occasion at least, which we may give. I realize we are not a big nation like the United States, but I would hope they would be willing to lend an ear to expressions by the Canadian people. Most of us have been led to understand that an agreement, at least in principle, had been more or less arrived at between the warring factions in Viet Nam a considerable time ago. One cannot help, after reading the United Kingdom and Canadian press, but have the feeling that the United States of America is not, in spirit, really living up to the terms of that agreement in the policies that it is pursuing.

This is my whole plea. I feel that the Canadian government ought to use its good offices to appeal to the United States to do what it can to remove the appearance it has created, whether accidentally or by deliberate design, of preventing the implementation of the spirit of the agreement that has been recently concluded.

There seems to be a feeling that we can defeat the communists in Viet Nam by guerrilla counter attack. In this respect I would like to quote an article which appeared in last month's issue of the Atlantic Monthly entitled "The limits of defence." written by Arthur I. Waskow, who served as legislative assistant to a congressman from Wisconsin until a year ago. In analysing the situation, as printed at page 84 of the magazine, he says:

> Successful guerrillas are not merely underground soldiers in an alien land. They need the support of the population and get it by demanding, or pretending to demand, social and economic reforms that would benefit the population around them. If the United States is prepared, with huge amounts of economic aid, to support social revolution even against western business and political associates in the local governments, it is not necessary to send commando fighters. If we refuse to support basic social changes, sending commandos will not stop communist guerrillas, because our commandos will not get popular support.

The other attitude that seems to be adopted far too frequently in the western world is that we might be able to use the principle of a military deterrent in this part of Asia. On that Mr. Waskow has this to say, as recorded on page 85 of the magazine:

An attempt by the west to meet this dilemma by matching the Sino-Soviet alliance in sheer numbers of men under arms would be disastrous. The effect would be that of permanent limited wars, like those in Korea and Algeria, limited in the amount of violence allowable, so that no victory could be won, but seemingly unlimited in the length of time they might last. During these wars, the United States and France each experienced great pressures at home against keeping the war limited, and also great pressure against democratic civil liberties. During the three short years of the Korean war, the United States had to deal with MacArthurism and McCarthyism. What would be the effect of 25 or 50 such years?

In the very short run, the balanced deterrent would undoubtedly be safer than a counterforce strategy, but it would only be useful as a way of getting the time to move to new solutions.

I would like to think that the Canadian government was doing its utmost to persuade our alies in Washington that a long term program or social change in southeast Asia is the only solution, and that guerrilla warfare and the deterrent of large numbers of armed personnel are not the long term answer, even though the deterrent may give us the time in which to work out the social changes needed.

I am not criticizing the attitude of the Canadian government in any way, shape or form. I believe we have been most useful in the past in this area of the world and, by the very nature of the request now before us, I know it is the intention of the government to continue to be a positive force in that area. I would only like to plead with our government to use its good offices to request a hearing in Washington with the end in view that we would not wind up with another Korea, Algeria or Congo situation in this part of the world.

Mr. Green: The part which Canada has been and is playing in former Indo-China is a good example of the very large field we have in peace keeping activities, and this is one of the most useful types of work our nation can do. We are called on frequently for work of this type, and no country has a larger number of trained personnel in its departments of national defence or external affairs than Canada to undertake work of this kind.

I shall deal first with the situation in Laos. That can be divided into two different sectors. First of all there is the 14 nation conference which has been in session at Geneva for practically 10 months. When I say "14 nations" I mean there are 13 national delegations there plus a triple delegation from Laos, one representing the group which is pro-western, one the group which is pro-communist, and one representing Souvanna Phouma who is the head of the neutralist group in Laos. As I say, we have this three-headed Laotian delegation in Geneva and by a process of patient negotiation, which has involved compromise on both sides, the representatives at Geneva have reached virtually complete agreement on arrangements to replace the 1954 general agreement for Laos.

While the issue is still in the balance it would not be helpful for me to attempt any detailed assessment of the results of their efforts, other than to say I think these results have been excellent, and they may well have set the standard for the disarmament negotiations which are to commence next week.

Canada's part of course has to do with the terms of reference for the international commission which will have to carry on in Laos after the conference in Geneva is ended. The primary role of our delegation has been to try to ensure that these terms of reference are such as to enable the commission to operate effectively in support of an internationally agreed settlement. However, an international agreement aimed at securing the independence, territorial integrity and neutrality of Laos presupposes an accepted and generally recognized government of Laos sharing these objectives and prepared to co-operate in bringing them about.

As hon. members know, each of these three factions in Laos is led by a prince, and the meetings which have taken place between the princes have not yet resulted in the formation of a government for Laos, although I am hopeful that result will be achieved fairly soon. Time, of course, does not seem to mean a great deal in the Orient. They have a meeting and then decide to adjourn for two or three weeks or a month, and then after much effort they meet again and the same process is repeated.

There has been some small narrowing of areas of disagreement, and Souvanna Phouma, who is the leader of the neutralist group, continues to show patience and perseverance in his efforts to complete the task of forming a unified government acceptable to all three parties. Mind you, until there is agreement on a government for Laos the conference in Geneva cannot complete its work. I think it would finish up very quickly once agreement had been reached on a government for this unhappy country.

Then I turn to Laos itself. There the international truce supervisory commission has been functioning as best it can. It has not been permitted to visit any of the scenes of real fighting, and no proper arrangements have been made for providing it with equipment under its own exclusive control, but I think the very fact that this commission is in Laos has greatly reduced the amount of fighting taking place, and I believe that if the commission had not been there there would have been a great deal more serious trouble than we have at the present time.

The head of the Canadian delegation is Leon Mayrand, who is our ambassador to Italy. He had done a splendid job; I do not think any Canadian could have done finer work than Mr. Mayrand has done. There has been fighting from time to time. There are protests made to the commission, sometimes protests from both sides, and then the fighting stops there and starts somewhere else. It goes on in this way, but nothing very serious has occurred as yet. I think that all the countries represented at the conference in Geneva on Laos really desire to see that country set up as a neutral state and to see the fighting stop. I think they all believe in the effectiveness of the international control commission, of which India is the chairman and Canada and Poland are the other two members. I cannot make any promises, because you never know what is going to happen—we learned that the hard way—but in any event there has been no starting of a third world war in Laos, and I think there is a reasonable chance that a settlement will be worked out. At the moment it all depends on these three princes.

With regard to Cambodia, this country is truly neutral and they have had very little trouble. The government of Cambodia is anxious that the truce commission should remain, otherwise I think—as the hon. member for Essex East said—that particular commission might well be disbanded, but we do not like to move to have it disbanded when the Cambodian government is anxious that it should remain. They express this desire from time to time, and I think Prince Sihanouk, who is the head of the government in Cambodia, has handled the affairs of that country extremely well. He attended at Geneva in May when the conference on Laos was opened, and he made the opening statement with what I thought was a very statesmanlike speech. He is a leader who is very well qualified and, as I have said, there is no really serious trouble in his country.

The situation in Viet Nam is a great deal more difficult. As hon. members know, in North Viet Nam and South Viet Nam the commission has jurisdiction over both separate countries. I think it would be unfair to single out the United States for blame in respect of the situation in South Viet Nam. The provocation, in my judgment, has come from North Viet Nam. There have been troops infiltrating from North Viet Nam, and I am certain that the communists have been at the root of most of the trouble in South Viet Nam.

Mr. Regier: I agree with that.

Mr. Green: There has been some very nasty guerrilla warfare going on there, with officials murdered, villagers blackmailed, villages destroyed, and all this sort of business, and the main blame for the trouble in South Viet Nam rests squarely on the shoulders of the communists—

Mr. Regier: I agree.

Mr. Green: —and not on the United States at all. Any action the United States has taken has been in a measure of defence against communist action. There the commission has many complaints from both sides. It does its best to examine these complaints. There is quite a long list of them now which have not yet been examined. I cannot say what will happen in South Viet Nam, or in North Viet Nam either for that matter, but here again Canada is playing her full part in restraining people and in trying to work out a solution to these internecine quarrels.

We have, of course, very many ways of discussing questions like this with the United States on a friendly basis, and questions such as Viet Nam are discussed practically daily with the state department. We will do what we can to urge moderation on everyone. Here again we will just have to hope that in the end a settlement can be worked out. It is not going to be easy; it may take a long time. I do not see any prospect of Canada being able to leave the Viet Nam commission at an early date, but as I said in opening, this is an area in which Canada is making a great contribution in the way of peace keeping activities and I think it is one of the finest contributions that has been made.

The hon. member for Essex East asked for the numbers of personnel involved. In Viet Nam there are four foreign service officers and eight on the administrative side, for a total of 12. In Laos there are three foreign service officers and three in administration, for a total of six. In Cambodia there are one foreign service officer and two on administration work, for a total of three. The military representation as of October 16 last is Viet Nam, 27 army officers, 26 other ranks, for a total of 53; two R.C.A.F. officers and two Royal Canadian Navy officers. In Laos there were 14 army officers and seven other ranks for a total of 21. Apparently there was also provision for one other officer and two other ranks in Cambodia, but these positions are not filled under present circumstances.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be allowed to make one further observation on what the minister has said, and to recall to him the attitude I took and the words I expressed when we discussed this matter in the house on September 11, 1961.

One appreciates, of course, that Canada as a member of these various commissions cannot on that account be expected to accept responsibility for solutions that rest with other powers. But we are on these commissions and we have an obligation to discharge. I know we are fulfilling that responsibility to the best of our competence and ability within the opportunities provided. It seems to me that we have the right to expect a more realistic appraisal of the consequences of the developments that are taking place not only in South Viet Nam but in Laos as well.

It is worth recalling that as late as 1956 the view was put forward that the policy of certain powers in the west toward Laos in particular was not a practical and wise policy, under the conditions that then prevailed. To have insisted upon a partisan government at that time was not a practical and wise policy. It is now agreed that there should be a government that is truly neutral.

I find it difficult to believe in the light of conditions that have prevailed since last January and in the light of the conflict among the three competing forces for government—the present royal government and the two other personalities involved, either in coalition or separately—that we can anticipate that there will be in fact a truly neutral government, because of aggressive intentions on the part of communist China in particular. We can only hope that a neutral government will result and that it will be able to work out conditions for the betterment of the people in that little Indo-China nation.

I believe we have the right to expect from our Secretary of State for External Affairs a wide appreciation of the situation as he sees it, not only in terms of the moment but as well of the future. If it is a fact that this is a theatre which might well occasion trouble extending far beyond south and southeast Asia, surely then this is a matter of great concern. The time for us to face the matter is now rather than wait until ominous events happen. We must at least try to anticipate what could happen, and discuss dispassionately and understandingly what steps might be taken to avoid eventualities prejudicial to the maintenance of peace.

On September 11, 1961 the minister took issue with me when I said as reported at page 8185 of Hansard:

> —it seems to me we ought to take a very realistic view of what is happening in the whole of Indo-China. While there may be a declaration of agreement on the question of the kind of neutrality that is to prevail regarding government in Laos, it would surprise me very much, in view of the record there and the infiltrations that are taking place via North Viet Nam and from across the Chinese-Burma border, if we can conclude that there have as yet been placed before us those guarantees which would give us the conviction that the solemn undertaking of those ideologically opposed to us will be observed. However, only time will tell.

The minister in commenting later, at page 8185 of Hansard, expressed the view that I was unduly pessimistic. Then he went on to express words of optimism which I do not believe were warranted at that time. I do not believe the minister on that occasion gave us justification for the optimism he expressed. I know the minister is optimistic by nature. Possibly he felt it would be better to create the impression that the situation was not a hopeless one by any means. There could be a very good argument for this attitude. As I see the situation, however, this is an area where the friction is of a character that must cause great concern not only to the minister and the government but to all of us.

Canada as a member of the commission will wish to be able to have an assessment made of her present and future role in a way that will warrant the belief that we have done everything we could to avoid any situation which the future might prove to be of the greatest concern. I am sure we are doing everything we can. But are we not entitled to an assessment from the minister as to what lies ahead? Will there be a truly neutral government, or will it be a tool of aggressive powers that intend to violate the peace of the area? What are the implications of this for us? What is the attitude of the present government toward the operation of the commission? Is the commission able to fulfil its functions? Is it able to accomplish the mandate given to it? If not, why not? Are there obstacles still being placed in its way as was the situation last September when, as the minister indicated, necessary military equipment was not made available?

The situation with regard to Viet Nam is no less difficult. It is much more serious. What is the attitude of the government of South Viet Nam to the commission? As a member of the commission do we have access and has the commission access to the territory in North Viet Nam? Do we have contact with the governing bodies in North Viet Nam? The minister said our role would be to do all we could to provide a balance between the discordant elements. I am sure the minister was sincere when he said that. I am sure Canada does take that position. I merely ask whether the opportunities are present for us to be able to exercise on all sides the influence implied in the minister's assurance that we would do everything we could to pacify the competing forces.

These are some of the questions in the minds of all of us as we read from day to day of the continuous conflict, a conflict that is being assisted by outside participation, providing thereby for a situation which I think demands on the part of the minister the frankest possible statement that he feels he can make in respect of situations which we are led ot believe and which our own judgment suggests are calculated to bring about serious and dangerous provocations for widening conflict.

We in the west have often been accused of not facing situations, of always being behind events. Here is one situation that threatens. What can we do about it? What are we doing about it? What assessment is made of the situation by countries with which we have a close interest in the western world? This is the kind of comment I think we should like to receive from the minister today. We assume that Canada cannot rectify this question by herself. All the good will in the world on the part of the minister cannot rectify this situation. However, we are on these commissions. We are in this turbulent area where vigorous guerrilla warfare is now being carried on. It is a form of warfare which is intended to arrest the infiltration from the north into South Viet Nam. We shall not avoid these problems by refusing to face their consequences.

I am asking the minister now if he does not think that the seriousness of the situation —it is one which I thought was serious last summer, and it continues to be even more serious—is one that demands from the minister a more penetrating analysis, I was going to say, or a more penetrating report on the situation as he sees it. I think that is something which we are entitled to ask. Other governments have felt that it was their duty to give a much more detailed reply on events as they saw them than we have received today. These other nations may have a heavier responsibility. However, as the minister has often stated, although a smaller power our opportunity is not necessarily less on that account. That being the case, I think the minister possibly could give us a more definitive appreciation of the situation.

Mr. Green: I am very grateful to the hon. member for inviting me to enter into the field of prophecy. However, I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. I find that it does not pay very big dividends to start prophesying when one is head of the Department of External Affairs. What does pay dividends is not taking an attitude that any situation is hopeless. If the foreign minister adopted that attitude, it would be much better if he were in the Senate or somewhere else instead of being in this office. After all, there are serious situations in many parts of the world. Canada is involved in as many of them as any other middle power, and is playing a part which is as big as or bigger than the part played by any other middle power in these various areas.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

What will happen in Indo-China in the final analysis will depend upon what red China decides to do, possibly on what the United States decides to do, and possibly on what some other large countries decide to do. However, we are able to exercise a good deal of influence on all these countries. From my experience at the Geneva conference on Laos I would say that no country represented there wants a world war started over Laos. I shall be greatly surprised if, with regard to Viet Nam, there is not exactly the same reaction. There may be all kinds of guerrilla warfare and troubles of one kind and another; however, I do not think red China wants a war started over any part of Indo-China.

So far as the western countries are concerned, there is in existence the SEATO pact. We are not a member of SEATO; however, I think the leaders of these other countries realize that it would be insanity to have a nuclear war break out as a result of anything happening in Indo-China. This is the main reason that I do not adopt the attitude that the situation there cannot be solved. My experience is that all the countries sitting in on the conference on Laos at Geneva desire to have that country really neutral and that they desire to have a condition in which a truce commission can function properly.

I would be the last one to assert that there are not many frustrating events happening in the work of the two commissions. I refer to the one in Laos and also the one in Viet Nam. We are not able to do all the things we should like to do. For one thing, there is a division on the commissions. The Poles are there representing the communist world, and often it just is not a situation where you can get agreement. Sometimes decisions are made on a majority basis. However, by and large, I think Canada's part in all three of these countries in former Indo-China has been very much worth while.

Mr. Pearson: The minister did not answer some of the questions that were addressed to him by my friend the hon. member for Essex East, as I understand them, about the powers and responsibilities of the commission, and the opportunity to discharge those responsibilities, particularly in Viet Nam; whether they had had access to the northern or the communist part and, if so, whether they had had any opportunity, because of that access, to examine what was going on there. After all, these commissions were set up in conditions which were much different from those which exist now. They were set up to police a cease fire. However, they have taken on responsibilities—and I am certainly not complaining about this matter—which were never entertained when they were established.

I think they have discharged those responsibilities to the best of their ability, having regard to the fact that there is a communist, a non-communist and an anti-communist on each commission. Certainly the Canadian members of the commissions have discharged their share of the responsibilities in a manner that has done great credit to themselves and indeed to our country. Hence it is not a question of complaining about the work of the commission; it is a question of trying to find out whether, in new situations, these commissions, especially those in Viet Nam and Laos, which are the two that matter, have now an opportunity to do the job which is required in these new situations, or whether in fact these commissions can be used as a front behind which forces are at work which will not make for neutral countries in that area but for something much more dangerous. I am thinking of communist governments in these countries, especially in Laos, where the communist infiltration has gone very far indeed, backed by communist forces outside of Laos; forces now getting across the border into Cambodia. We know, of course, what the situation is in Viet Nam. It is a situation which is bound to arouse anxiety.

I think it is perfectly in order for us, without asking the minister to prophesy what is going to happen in the future, to find out whether the commissions can in fact do the job which they are required to do in these circumstances. The minister said that he does not intend to be a prophet. I think he is very wise in not attempting to be a prophet. However, the minister very often—and he is not being criticized for this fact—has prophesied optimistically about what would happen in respect of this situation. We hope his optimism will be justified. He was optimistic about the situation in Laos, Viet Nam and Cambodia when we last debated this subject. But that situation certainly has not improved. I hope it has not deteriorated to a point where it can become a real danger to peace in the world.

The minister said that what optimism he has is based on the fact that as a result of his experience at the conference at Geneva it is his opinion that all members of that conference—I hope I am not misquoting him, because I am certainly paraphrasing—sincerely desired a neutral Laos, a neutral Cambodia and presumably a neutral Viet Nam; that they are countries which could be isolated and insulated from the cold war.

Mr. Green: I did not say anything about a neutral Viet Nam.

Mr. Pearson: Well, a neutral Laos and a neutral Cambodia. But it is hard for me to believe that the Chinese communist representative at this meeting was really anxious or even willing to have a neutral Laos. If that were the case, it is hard to understand the support that the Chinese communist government is giving to the Pathet Lao forces which, as I see it, are trying to prevent a neutral Laos and trying to set up in that country a communist state or a state which will be allied to the Chinese communist empire.

Similarly in Viet Nam, as the minister has said—and it has been said by others—the force mainly responsible for the civil war, because it is civil war, is the intervention of Chinese communism in that area. That is the main force behind the intervention that is causing the trouble. I am sure that is true. You have the Chinese communists supporting one faction in Laos. You have the Chinese communists supporting the communist side in North Viet Nam. You have these North Viet Nam forces now facing South Viet Nam which has been very actively, and understandably in view of the situation, supported by the United States of America.

It may well be, I am sure it is the case, that no one at the Geneva conference and perhaps no one in this area of the world wants a world war to start over Laos or Viet Nam, any more than people wanted world war II to start over Danzig. But you have a situation now where you have two parties to the cold war, the Chinese communist empire and the United States, facing each other, one in South Viet Nam and the other in North Viet Nam. That is a danger to peace. Perhaps no one wants this situation to develop into a world war, but on the other hand perhaps the Chinese communist regime wants a united communist Viet Nam. It is certainly operating for that purpose.

To what extent then are the forces on the southern side in South Viet Nam, willing to fight to resist that kind of penetration. In that fight what is the nature and extent of the United States intervention going to be? I read the other day—this has been stated in Washington and I do not think it is any secret, because the United States has given a great deal of information recently about its activities in Viet Nam—that there are about 4,500 United States troops operating there. Ostensibly they are there to train and help to equip the South Viet Nam forces who are defending their country against civil invasion from the north. But training intervention of this kind is gradually shifting to more active intervention in operations. Surely this is a dangerous position. I do not know whether greater danger can be avoided; I hope it can.

I am not at the moment criticizing the United States for the shifting nature of its intervention. This may well be required unless the United States is willing to abandon its friend, President Diem, and the government of South Viet Nam. In that regard however, our anxiety is increased by the fact that the popular base of support for the government of South Viet Nam is not very deep or broad. At least there have been indications recently that the position of the government there, which the United States and other western powers are backing, is pretty shaky. How far then will western intervention go to preserve this government because it is the friendly government of South Viet Nam and is opposed to the communist government in the north?

All these questions are of very great importance. They would be important to Canada whether or not we were represented on the commission; just as what happened in Danzig in 1939 was important to Canada, and what happened at Sarajevo in 1914 was important to Canada. But we have an additional responsibility because we have accepted, and we have rightly accepted membership on these commissions, and we have discharged our responsibility on them in a way that has brought credit to the men on these commissions and to the government and people of Canada.

I wonder, therefore, whether the minister can give us some further information especially about the work of the commission in Viet Nam. To what extent is the commission consulted in respect of relations between the government of the United States, the government of South Viet Nam and, if there is any relationship, with the government of the north, or is it being used as a screen behind which dangerous forces are at work? In the future it might even be asked to accept some responsibility for developments there without in fact having any power or opportunity to control in any way those developments. As Canada is represented on these commissions, I think we are justified in expressing some preoccupation with this matter and in asking for this kind of information if the minister feels it can be given.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the commission visits Hanoi in North Viet Nam from time to time. I have had no reports of their interviewing Ho-Chi-Minh, the president of North Viet Nam, this year. Mind you, their ability to get around and check the whole situation is comparatively limited. I do not think the commission can be attacked fairly on the ground that it is simply being used for someone to build up trouble behind it. If that were a proper criticism, then one would perhaps be justified in asking that the commission be withdrawn.

I do not think that is the case. They do what they can to check these incidents. One incident, for example, involved the murder of a South Viet Nam military officer who was attached to the commission. He was murdered in a most cold blooded way, and the commission has had the greatest difficulty in finding out the facts behind the murder. They have also had great difficulty in getting the facts with regard to various other incidents that have taken place.

It would be unfair to make the commission assume responsibility for all that goes on in Viet Nam. When the Leader of the Opposition referred to the red Chinese coming into South Viet Nam, I think he was wrong. The infiltration is from North Viet Nam and not, as far as I am aware, by red Chinese troops either in South Viet Nam or in Laos. By the very nature of the operation of the commission its work cannot be perfect. Those Canadians who are serving on the commission simply do the best they can under conditions which are extremely trying.

Looking at the broad picture, I think the presence of these commissions in the area has prevented a big war breaking out. I may be wrong in that view. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, it is quite impossible for anyone to be certain just what would have happened had the commissions not been there, but I think they are a restraining influence. It must never be forgotten that the commissions themselves are divided. It is not as though they go in as a team of three working together. That is not the case at all. They go in with the representative of one country working very closely with the communists, and it is a very difficult situation.

Mr. Pearson: I did not mean to give the impression, perhaps I did give it that red Chinese troops as such had moved across the border. I have no reason to believe that, and no evidence I have seen would support that. But there is no doubt that the communists from the north have red Chinese forces behind them, that these communists from North Viet Nam who are doing the infiltrating are in very close relationship to the Chinese communist government. This is how it is being done. I am glad to hear the minister say that the commissions have been a restraining influence. I am sure that is right. It has been a good thing to have them there. The time is going to come when perhaps their usefulness is over, in which case they should be withdrawn. I believe the government has considered withdrawing the commissions from Cambodia and Laos, but perhaps it has been a good thing to have them there in view of events in the last year or two.

It is useful to have the minister's opinion that the commissions are not being used as a screen behind which activities could be carried on of which we would not approve. The danger remains, however and I am sure the minister will agree with me, that behind the North Vietnamese are the Chinese communists who have not interfered openly as yet any more than they interfered openly in North Korea in the early days of the war there. Behind the South Vietnamese are the United States forces. If this civil war can be confined to the forces of Viet Nam, on one side or the other, perhaps there is not going to be any widespread trouble. But if, in fact, the war broadens out to the point where those who are helping each side get in conflict with each other, then anything can happen.

The other day when it was announced the United States had sent some more troops into Viet Nam, a great deal of publicity was given to this. The minister will recall a statement was issued from Peking that if this kind of thing continued the Chinese government will consider what kind of action it will have to take to support its friends. This is what happened in Korea. At the beginning there was no Chinese intervention. It was felt by a lot of people that there would be no Chinese intervention, but the Chinese government said that under certain circumstances they would intervene and they did intervene. We missed world war III by a hair's breadth. Let us hope that does not happen in Viet Nam.

Mr. Green: I should point out that there are no United States combat troops in South Viet Nam.

Mr. Pearson: I think there are United States combat troops there for training purposes. There are 4,500 according to the announcement from Washington, and they are there to help train the Viet Nam forces to meet the forces from the north.

Mr. Regier: I believe that the vast majority of the Canadian people will always be grateful that our Secretary of State for External Affairs likes to regard himself as an optimist. I would hate to think of the attitude of the Canadian government towards the world scene if our Secretary of State for External Affairs were anything else but an optimist.

There has been a bit of discussion of the role and duties of the commission in that part of the world. I had never expected that the role of the commission would be to ensure that that part of the world would some day be in either the communist or the western camp. I had always imagined that the role of this commission was primarily to maintain peace and to prevent an outbreak of war, to limit any violence or to attempt to use its influence to keep violence to the lowest possible level.

Then, my basic reason for rising was that I did want to make it perfectly clear that it is our contention that the basic cause of unrest is that the people in the area of the world now know that the conditions of life which they have experienced in the past can be improved upon. There has to be a change in the social and economic lives of the people in that area. I agree with the minister when he contends that the communists are the immediate cause of the disturbances. They will always exploit to the utmost, on behalf of their ideology, any social or economic complaints of the people anywhere in the world. Our only plea was that our reply to the challenge of the communists, especially the reply of the United States, ought to be directed towards removing the economic and social complaints of the people in order to take away from the communists their most valuable source of ammunition.

Before I sit down, however, I should like to ask the minister a specific question. Has any report ever been issued to the government as to why a Canadian official was murdered in that area? The minister referred to this only a few minutes ago. I should like also to ask him another question. Have any Canadians, either from the Department of External Affairs or the Department of National Defence, been sent home for reasons other than the normal reasons of leave, furlough, et cetera? If so, for what reason were they sent to Canada?

Mr. Green: I was referring to the murder of a South Vietnamese colonel, not a Canadian. I believe there was a Canadian murdered some years before I took over the portfolio.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was one of our own.

Mr. Green: Yes, there was a Canadian murdered that time. I have no report on that particular incident. From time to time, Canadians are brought home, but I think it would be of no benefit for me to go into that any further.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister if he can enlighten us as to whether the small Christian colony in or near Hanoi, where Canadians used to foregather quite frequently, has been permitted to continue, or have the personnel left?

Mr. Green: I have no knowledge of that, but I shall be glad to get the information and send it to the hon. member.

Mr. Regier: The minister seemed to be hesitant in replying to the latter part of my question. To the best of his knowledge, have any Canadians been sent home, other than in normal circumstances, and have they been found guilty of violating the laws of our country?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Regier: I wonder whether or not the minister would care to tell us about that? I believe that Canadians realize we are not without sin and that we sometimes err. I feel that the committee is entitled to know what has happened.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: While it would be very nice from a curiosity point of view to make statements on facts like this, unfortunately the matter very seriously affects those Canadians still serving in Indo-China and for that reason I do not think it is in the public interest that I should go any further.

Item agreed to.

626. Gift to commemorate sesquicentennial anniversary of the independence of the Republic of Mexico—further amount required, $2,500.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is a gift to commemorate the sesquicentennial anniversary of the independence of the Republic of Mexico, a country with whom Canada has traditionally cordial relations. Mexico is a member of the organization of American states. It may be that many citizens in that great and friendly country would regard, as one of the most effective ways for Canada to observe the sesquicentennial anniversary of the independence of the republic of Mexico, a clarification of the government's intentions with regard to joining the organization of American states.

I do not say that everyone in Mexico would accept that as the proper way for Canada to pay tribute to Mexico, but I suspect that the encouragement given by the minister himself on his peregrinations to Mexico as well as to other Latin American countries, and by the Prime Minister, has whetted the appetite of many people as to Canada's intentions.

It will be recalled that the minister himself took the initiative in saying that the government was giving careful attention to membership in the organization of American states; and indeed the Prime Minister, on the occasion of his official visit to Mexico, by the emphasis he gave to the matter at any rate seemed to have gone a step further. Then I recall the minister's statement in Vancouver which encouraged protagonists of the organization of American states to regard the minister as the real precursor of Canada's interest in association in that organization. However, I was surprised the other day to see in the paper that government policy in this regard was being expressed not by the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister but by the speaker in the other place.

Mr. Green: On a point of order, may I ask what a British Columbia totem pole, being sent to Mexico as a gift to commemorate its 150th anniversary, has to do with Canada joining the organization of American states?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I said, and I thought rather ingeniously—

Mr. Green: Certainly.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —I thought my ingenuity had won the sympathy of the minister—

Mr. Green: You stick to the totem pole.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —was that one way of expressing our appreciation to this friendly country would be to give an indication of what our present views are with regard to the organization of American states. The speaker in the other place said that financial reasons stood in our way of joining the organization of American states, but that has never been the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Chairman: Order. I think perhaps I should rule on the point raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Chair is certainly inclined to take the view that the hon. member, in discussing the OAS, is out of order on this particular matter, and I would ask him to relate his remarks to the gift in question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not want to press something that the Chair regards as being out of order. I had thought the character of our discussion was such that the minister would have agreed that I had got under the umbrella with some procedural justification. However, since all we are going to present to Mexico is a totem pole I can only conclude that the government has not made up its mind as to whether we should join the organization of American states although, if

I would not incur your wrath, I would go on to point out it is perhaps because the government has not been able to ascertain the state of public opinion in the matter.

The Chairman: I am inclined to be wrathful just now.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister what is happening to this totem pole? I take it that is what the $2,500 is for. Where will it be erected in Mexico?

Mr. Green: I understand the totem pole is at sea at the moment. This vote for $2,500 is to cover the transportation costs and presumably the erection costs. It is to be put up in Mexico City.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I assume of course that this totem pole is made of wood and the minister, being the kind of man he is, the wood has come from British Columbia.

Mr. Green: There isn't the slightest doubt of that.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a former superintendent general of Indian Affairs may I ask could the minister assure us that this is an authentic totem pole and was secured from the Indians; and because the Indian band that was responsible for it might take some pride in it, could be tell us which Indian band it was?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Chairman. It is an excellent example of Indian art.

Mr. Pearson: Is the minister the high man on this totem pole?

Mr. Green: No, but I will tell you the Leader of the Opposition is the low man, the same place as he is going to be on some other poll.

Mr. Pearson: Does the minister realize he is well below us on the Gallup poll?

Item agreed to.

627. Gift to commemorate the inauguration of 'Plaza Canada' in Buenos Aires, Argentina, $1,100.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since we are marking our friendly relations with these Latin American countries in a material way I am sure we will all support this gift to our close friend, Argentina; but it would be interesting to have an explanation from the minister as to the circumstances of this gift. The gift will be placed in the Plaza Canada in Buenos Aires. It would be interesting to know what it is, a plaque or a totem pole.

If it is a totem pole then it certainly is not as impressive as the one we are giving to Mexico because it is only going to cost $1,100. Maybe that is the kind of pole the minister will admit he is really on. I think we should have some explanation and I am sure there are many reasons why we would want to recognize our friends, the Argentinians. It would be interesting to know whether this is by way of reciprocal act for the gift Argentina has given to us. Does this arise out of the gift of the president of that country during the last few months?

Mr. Green: I am very happy to explain this vote. In Argentina there is an Argentina-Canada cultural institute, the membership being made up of citizens of Argentina who are interested in Canada, as well as Canadians who happen to be living there. They proposed to the city council of Buenos Aires that a square in the city should be named Plaza Canada. That was done and on July 27 last year this square was formally inaugurated with great ceremony and publicity.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Was the Associate Minister of National Defence there?

Mr. Green: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is that the occasion when the Associate Minister of National Defence was in Latin America?

Mr. Green: No, he stopped a revolution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, he stopped a revolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was that in Argentina?

Mr. Green: They have two schools in Buenos Aires which are named Canada schools. One is affiliated with a school in Toronto and the other with a school in my riding in Vancouver. When the President of Argentina was here last December he went to Toronto and visited the school there, and renamed it the Argentina school. All of these activities are part of the wonderful work being done by this Argentina-Canada cultural institute. In view of the fact that they had undertaken this we felt we should give some recognition to that action and we are supplying a painting, which is to cost $700—it was obtained through the national gallery—and in addition we are procuring and shipping maple trees to be planted in this Plaza Canada. I think this is an excellent example of promoting good will between our two countries.

Mr. Pearson: The Plaza Canada is in the square, I take it, in Buenos Aires, but where do you put a painting in a square?

Mr. Green: I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would be so obtuse. The painting is to go to the city hall. It was the city council that named the square.

Mr. Pearson: A few weeks ago, I think it was, there was a story in connection with this ceremony to the effect that the Argentine government, in this much appreciated gesture of establishing this Plaza Canada as a further symbol of the friendship between our two countries, decided according to the report to set up in the plaza a statue of the liberator of Canada and asked the government of Canada who was the liberator of Canada. Can the minister give the committee any information as to that exchange?

Mr. Green: I think the Leader of the Opposition must have read that in some Liberal campaign literature. I never heard it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It could still be authentic, of course.

Item agreed to.

Other payments to international organizations and programs—

628. Assessments for membership in the international (including commonwealth) organizations that are detailed in the estimates, including authority to pay such assessments in the amounts and in the currencies in which they are levied—further amount required in Canadian dollars, estimated as of January, 1962, $2,400.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, this is a rather important item. Perhaps the minister will tell us whether any progress has been made in the payment of obligations by member states, particularly in the United Nations. The number of countries which have failed to meet their obligations is rather discouraging. While we are aware of the steps that have been taken to elicit from the International Court of Justice an advisory opinion as to the obligations of member states with regard to the maintenance of peace keeping operations, that is not necessarily going to correct the situation because there is no way of enforcing a decision of the court.

Since this question was asked of the minister in the house about two or three weeks ago I note that the Soviet union, for instance, said that it was going to pay its obligations to the United Nations. Were those with regard to its normal assessment, or were they because of the operations in the Congo?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, that question has nothing to do with this item.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It deals with assessments.

Mr. Green: There is a later item under which the hon. member could raise that question. This vote is for—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Assessments for members.

Mr. Green: —the permanent court of arbitration in the Hague.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: This item reads:

Assessments for membership in the international . . . organizations that are detailed in the estimates—

Could the minister give us the details of these international organizations?

Mr. Green: The details will be found at page 12. It is for the permanent court of arbitration, 7,717 Dutch florins, $2,400.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Under what item did the minister say the discussion which I initiated could take place?

Mr. Green: Vote No. 668, loans, investments and advances.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. There we could, of course, discuss all the problems of the United Nations, and so on.

Item agreed to.

629. Purchase and transportation to British Honduras of skim milk powder, canned pork and other supplies for the relief of victims of the hurricane disaster and to authorize reimbursement of the agricultural stabilization board in respect of the purchase of such skim milk powder and canned pork, $70,500.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to see this item of $70,500, part of which has been directed to skim milk powder. We know something of the circumstances of the disaster that affected particularly the city of Belize in British Honduras and we are very pleased that Canada can come to the rescue of these people, so many of whom suffered so grievously.

I am wondering if the minister could explain to us on this vote whether this is the type of thing that we now have handled through the food and agricultural organization on utilization of surpluses for economic and social development.

I was fortunate in being an observer at the second committee which met in New York on Friday morning, December 8 last, when there was a statement made by Mr. B. R. Sen from India, the director-general of that organization. His secretary, whom I had the pleasure of meeting, was Miss Jessica Campbell of Victoria. Mr. Sen, in his statement to that committee, said:

—that the world conscience could no longer tolerate restriction as the solution to the problem of surplus production in some countries when half of mankind remained underfed or poorly fed.

He said further:

—the resolution gave proof of the unanimous desire of all member nations to strengthen their co-operative effort to bring about a world order based on human dignity and progress.

Then he went on to a matter that I think asks for some clarification on this vote. Mr. Sen said this:

As regards the scope of operations—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is five o'clock and it is therefore my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill SD-1, an act for the relief of Madeleine Françoise Hankowski—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I had hoped to be in a position today to make some statement. Unfortunately some factors have intervened, some of them unforeseen, and I would ask that the 102 divorce bills standing in my name today be stood.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that item Nos. 1 to 102 stand until the next day for private bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HOLDING OF BY-ELECTIONS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-20, to amend the House of Commons Act (election writs for by-elections).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill which is a very short one and which contains only one clause is to amend the House of Commons Act to provide that in the event of a vacancy occurring a writ shall be issued within 60 days of the receipt by the chief electoral officer of the warrant for the issue of a new writ instead of the present provision that it shall be issued within six months.

As Your Honour will recall, earlier this week the Prime Minister asked leave to revert to motions at six o'clock for the purpose of announcing that the writs had been issued for two by-elections to take place in two constituencies, Waterloo South in Ontario and Nicolet-Yamaska in Quebec, both of which have been vacant since long before the present session of parliament began and one of which was, of course, just coming up to the wire of the six-month provision.

It seems to me there is a lack in the law at the present time with respect to the holding of by-elections. I drew attention to the fact the other day, in response to the Prime Minister's announcement, that it was unfortunate and totally unnecessary that these two constituencies were going to be unrepresented for a whole session of parliament. Since parliament did not meet until January there was no reason why these writs should not have been issued last September and the by-elections held in ample time to give the people of these constituencies an opportunity to be represented at this session of parliament.

The Prime Minister replied in a fashion which of course has become almost habitual with hon. members of the present government whenever it is suggested that they do any of the things they said they were going to do before they were returned to office. The Prime Minister used the phrase, "physician heal thyself". When hon. gentlemen opposite were appealing to the people to turn out the previous government and put themselves in its place they were not appealing for the purpose of doing precisely what the Liberal government was doing, but that is their invariable excuse for every sin of omission or commission of which they are guilty. They seem to feel, now they are in office, that everything that was done by their predecessors was perfect and all they have to do is follow that model and they will be perfect.

Mr. Peters: That is not true, of course.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is quite right. There are a great many things which were done by the government of which I was a member which were not perfect—a great many things—but unlike hon. gentlemen opposite we are human enough and modest enough to admit that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is true that in 1953 in the session before the general election and again in 1957 in the session before the general election there were two or three constituencies which went unrepresented for the whole of those sessions of parliament.

An hon. Member: York South was one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, York South was one of them. I do not think the fact that that happened is any credit to the previous administration. It is a matter of history, however. If it was not a credit to the previous administration there are at least two circumstances that differ from the situation that has prevailed under the present government.

Those were the last sessions before a general election and the government of that day had made it very clear that there was going to be a general election. They did not seem to regard it as a cliff-hanging mystery which now seems to be an occupation to fill the idle hours of the Prime Minister. One would have thought that the Prime Minister of a great and important country like this would have more important considerations to occupy his attention than trying to play tiddly-winks with the press and the public. But we are told by those pressmen who seem to enjoy the Prime Minister's confidence that that is his main preoccupation these days, trying to create mysteries about this matter. I appreciate, sir, that in saying that I am straying somewhat from the bill but I have been straying along paths that seem to be of great interest to many hon. members.

What I am saying is this. In the case of those particular vacancies which occurred in 1953 and in 1957 they were vacancies that occurred just before a general election, the last session before an election. I am not advancing this argument, but it might be argued that there may be some justification when one is really close to a general election for leaving the seats vacant. I do not think so myself but I am sure that argument would have been made at that time and perhaps I might even have made it myself in those circumstances. But looking back on it I do not think it is a proper thing. I do not think it ought to happen.

There was another difference. In the case of those vacancies the opposition of that day did not draw the vacancies, in most cases, to the attention of His Honour the Speaker. That is not very important either because the government had an equal responsibility; but I just note that members of the opposition of that day by and large did not draw attention to those vacancies whereas in the case of Waterloo South notice was given on September 8 last year.

This may not be the last session before a general election. There are some of us, sir, who have very considerable doubts about whether this will be the last session before an election. Under the constitution there is plenty of opportunity to have another session. There is no constitutional need to have an election before July 1, 1963, and if the Prime Minister shows the same capacity to reach conclusions about this subject as he does about many other subjects, there are many of us who would not be surprised if the election was brought about by the efflux of time as it was the last time we had a Tory administration and as it was in 1896 when a dying Tory administration was in office.

As I say, that could happen. This is not the first time there have been constituencies unrepresented in this parliament for an entire session. This government which went to the country on a plea of restoring the rights of parliament seems to ignore completely the very foundation of parliament, and that is the representation of the people. It should not be possible for a prime minister or a cabinet to deprive the people of representation under the law. I am not accusing the government of doing anything unlawful. I say the law is imperfect and I am seeking to improve it and make it more perfect if I can convince hon. members that my bill should be supported. I say the law should not allow a prime minister or a cabinet, by failing to do something, to deprive taxpayers of representation in this house which taxes them, or to deprive citizens of representation in this house which makes laws governing them in a country which professes to be self-governing. It seems to me this is the very foundation of everything we stand for and support.

We know there are times when it is very inconvenient to everyone including the electors to have an election. I think it would not be feasible or reasonable, and that it might work unnecessary hardship to have a rigid provision that immediately a vacancy occurred the writ must issue the next day or in the shortest possible time. I have therefore not made any such suggestion. What I have suggested is that once notification is given of the vacancy a period of two months might elapse. I realize that this bill by itself will not correct the whole problem. In addition to this legislation, in order to make absolutely sure, that the by-elections will take place, there would also be required an amendment to another statute in order to set a time limit beyond which the election itself could not be delayed. Even if the writ is issued two months after the notice of vacancy instead of six months afterward, though it might be scandalous it would not be illegal to set a by-election a whole year later.

Mr. McGrath: As Joe did in Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member's intervention is singularly ill-timed because his leader and his friend in Newfoundland is complaining bitterly because the premier of Newfoundland has set a by-election too soon, not too late, and he has been doing so in the last few days.

Mr. McGrath: Surely the hon. member will allow me to correct the record.

Mr. Pickersgill: At the conclusion of my speech I would hope that the hon. gentleman would make a speech on this subject himself.

Mr. McGrath: I will certainly correct the statement made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I also hope that in doing so he will support this bill in order to make sure that there are no delays and that there is no possibility of any constituency being unrepresented for any length of time in this house at any time. Whatever may have been the record of other governments in the past, I do not think since 1935 there has been any record worse than that of the present government in delaying by-elections. It is true that immediately after 1958 they did not delay them. However, they have done so from the date on which my friend the hon. member for Trinity was elected in a by-election that marked the beginning of the turning of the tide in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hon. gentlemen opposite have a singular reluctance to test their fortunes with the electorate. Perhaps this reluctance is human. Perhaps they should not be blamed, knowing what they know about the currents of opinion. However the facts are there on the record. More than half a dozen constituencies for whole sessions of parliament have been deprived of representation in this house. The matter has now become a scandal. Being a scandal, I suggest it is time the situation was corrected and that this is one important step in making that correction.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for St. John's East rising to make an explanation?

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member who has just taken his seat made the statement which is on the record about the premier of Newfoundland. He said that our party was complaining because the premier of Newfoundland had called a by-election too soon. That is not a factual statement. What in fact happened was that there has been a vacancy in the Newfoundland legislature for a Labrador constituency. The premier of Newfoundland waited the complete six months statutory period and called the election for March 19 in a constituency in the wilds of Labrador and he gave only three week's notice.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to get into this feud between Newfoundlanders or perhaps I should say between a Newfoundlander and a Manitoban. Perhaps I should preface my remarks by saying that there is possibly a bit of a hazard involved in expressing support for a bill emanating from the area from which this one emanated. It might be misinterpreted as leading to something else.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not suspect it.

Mr. Howard: No; and it will not happen. We support the principle of the bill. We feel that it is not compatible with our ideas of democracy to have seats in the House of Commons remain vacant for inordinately or exceptionally long periods of time. A case in point is the constituency of Waterloo South. By the time the by-election is held, if it is held on the date which has been announced, that seat will have remained vacant for well over a year. We think that this is just not the full degree of decency of treatment which should be afforded to voters in this country. Many of our forefathers went to jail and suffered great hardships in order to obtain the right to vote, the right to representation in parliament and the right to exercise their own ideas through their own elected representatives. With this long history behind us we feel that the desires of people in a country or in a constituency should not be frustrated because we have a government headed by a Prime Minister who has the propensity for great procrastination or for using the calling of by-elections for some obscure political purpose. As was mentioned, taking into account the problems of the country in connection with geography and weather, it is not possible nor do I think it is sensible to set a rigid time for the calling of elections or by-elections. For instance, in the midst of January it would be most awkward and difficult and would indeed cause hardship to the people involved if they were obliged to participate in an election, say, in Yukon, or in the new constituency of the Northwest Territories or in any of the other northern ridings. As the hon. member mentioned, in the Labrador area also this situation works a hardship upon the people.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would he not think that this would work as much hardship in March of one year as in March of another year, and that this consideration would have applied to 1958?

Mr. Howard: As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of getting into this feud between a Newfoundlander and a Manitoban on this question. All I am doing now is supporting the contention which was advanced by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate originally and which he is doing his best to talk me out of supporting. I want some flexibility to be contained in the statute that says you must call an election within a certain length of time, in order to allow a certain period of time to meet the exigencies of weather and the like. In short, we support the principle of the bill. We think it is most necessary to ensure that the population in constituencies have representation in parliament at all times during the time parliament is in session. Of course, we then get into the realm in which members have been accused on a number of occasions, namely that we may even have sitting members in the house but that actually the people in the constituency in question have no representation, even though there is a sitting member. We cannot get into that field, of course, as then we would be going beyond the scope of the bill. We do not wish to do that. However, in general we support the principle of the bill. We hope it will come to a vote. We hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will not spend the balance of the time until six o'clock ensuring that this bill does not come to a vote. It is far too important to be treated so disdainfully, as other private members bills are treated by hon. members opposite.

Mr. G. W. Montgomery (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill. I notice that it has two parts to it. The mover wishes to have by-election writs issued within 60 days and by-elections held within 90 days after the issuance of the writ. Before I say any more, the last speaker more or less accused members on this side of the house of being ridiculous and talking about things that are not important. I think he has spent more time in this house talking about unimportant things than any other member and I do not think he should accuse us of wasting time if we want to express our opinions on this bill.

Mr. Howard: Attaboy, Gage.

Mr. Montgomery: I am one of those who first entered the House of Commons after a by-election quite a while ago, and I take a different attitude from that of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with regard to this matter. I will tell him right away that I will not support his bill if it comes to a vote.

It is not particularly the job of members of parliament to decide to limit the wishes of the people in any constituency. The rights of parliament are different from the rights of the people in a constituency. In some constituencies a by-election may be desired soon and in others the people may not want a by-election to be held quickly. That is just as true for one party as for another. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said a while ago in confessing his past sins, it may depend on who is sitting in the chair of authority. In my opinion the people of the constituency should be given lots of scope.

Mr. Pickersgill: How can they do anything about it?

Mr. Montgomery: Well, I find that people in a constituency get pretty much what they want if their requests are reasonable. I have sat in the opposition and on the government side, and if the people of a constituency have a member of parliament who is a cussed nuisance they sometimes do not get everything they request because they are misled. If they have a good, sound member of parliament who is reasonable, they usually do.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would not understand that.

Mr. Montgomery: I think the people in a constituency are fairly reasonable.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Montgomery: I will try to answer if I can.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would he tell me how, under the law as it now stands, the people in the constituency can have a by-election if they want to?

Mr. Montgomery: There is nothing to prevent it if they petition the government in the right way and make their wishes known. The trouble with some hon. members is that they feel they represent everybody. They do in one sense; but there are a lot of people in their constituencies who apparently do not pay much attention to what they recommend. For 22 years when the party the hon. member supports was in power you fooled the people many times. It is like the old story that when you cry wolf, wolf too often, help is not given.

I do not want to get away from the bill, though it seems so easy to do in view of the circumstances. Under the present law the time within which a writ must be issued is six months. It can be done sooner if the people of the constituency get after their member of parliament. If he is reasonable and can present a good case I venture to say that even an opposition member could secure a by-election.

Mr. Pickersgill: But he would have to be dead first.

Mr. Montgomery: But if you have an opposition member to whom no attention is paid and who makes himself a nuisance to the government he is not going to be able to get a by-election. There are only a few of us who have had experience both in the opposition and as members of the party in power and who can really speak with a good idea of the opinion of the people in the constituencies. Therefore I am quite happy with the way the law is.

There is another point. Under this bill it could be possible to have two by-elections in one year. Any hon. members who have had to run in one election and then seven or eight months later run again know that it is not a very pleasant experience from a financial standpoint at least. There is also the point that sometimes the people in the constituency do not want an election called when somebody in the opposition might like to have it called because of the weather conditions and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is the new democracy, is it?

Mr. Montgomery: All of these things have something to do with the matter. Like many other things, I think this is a matter that should be subject to a request from the constituency and left to the discretion of the people who must call elections.

I have not had time to investigate to see why a period of six months was established in the present law. There must have been some good reasons, and I think the law as it stands has served very well. Maybe I should not say this but I know of one or two constituencies where the people would be just as well off if they had no representation as they are with the representation they have.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. member thinking of Restigouche-Madawaska?

Mr. Montgomery: No, I was not referring to that. New Brunswick is very happy.

Mr. Pickersgill: I mean the former member, of course.

Mr. Montgomery: There are many reasons other than political ones. We do not want to limit discussion of this matter, and I am certainly not one of those who would wish to cut down the time. I do not believe the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had this in mind but I can see some people might say that he would want to have somebody elected before the former member had cooled off, before he was buried. You can go to extremes in these things.

Mr. Pickersgill: You cannot have an election in less than 60 days.

Mr. Montgomery: I think you could under this bill. I am quite happy to support the law as it stands at the moment unless far better reasons are advanced than those offered by the mover of the bill. I know that the hon. member has brought the bill forward in good faith. I sat on a committee with him and he is quite adept at changing his mind. He told us he started out as a Conservative and that if he had had a chance to vote early enough in his life he might have been a Conservative. However, he then got into other company and by the time he was 21 he had changed his mind. As time has gone on he has changed his mind on several occasions and now he is apparently ready to throw his old party overboard on account of all their sins. He has repented but I do not know what he is going to do with some of the fellows he has with him on that wagon who have not repented yet.

I think we can assume that there must be some political reason behind this, although I will give the hon. member credit for his sincerity. He seems to have in mind the fact that this government is not doing right by the people. He has forgotten that under his scheme the people who are really represented in parliament would not have very much to say about whether or not they wanted the time to be longer than the five months. I think six months is all right for the issuance of the writ, and a reasonable time thereafter for the election. I am sorry but I must tell the hon. member that if this bill comes to a vote I will be voting against it.

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): When this debate began, I thought the bill was a very simple one. I was going to congratulate the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate upon introducing it because I think the measure is very much needed in our democratic system. I must say that since the last member spoke I have become more and more confused. I think we are getting near reincarnation now because I have not been able to understand how a member of parliament can ask for a by-election in his own constituency, especially when by-elections usually occur after the death of a member. It seems to me we have become involved in a whole area of trouble because of the apparent lack of efficiency of our undertakers in terms of getting our members of parliament buried before this by-election can take place.

Surely, we are dealing with the rights of the people in the constituency. I think one of the speakers had a point when he said that the people in the constituency had rights. It is not the right of a few supporters of the government party, whichever party that might be, to decide upon the date of the election. We have a situation where perhaps 100 or 200 people in a constituency have the right to make the decision for all the people in that constituency. I do not believe this is sound in terms of our parliamentary democratic tradition. Nor do I think it is very sound to assume that the government party, no matter which party that might be, should be able to delay the election over a long period of time, to wait until unemployment decreases or until the economy begins to rise before deciding on the date of the by-election. All of us in this house know to what extent a by-election becomes a means of judging a political party or an opposition party in terms of its performance in this house or in the country.

Perhaps, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate mentioned, this bill is a first step towards remedying the situation. I would expect that, as a second step, perhaps the hon. member would introduce another bill by means of which we would be able to set a time limit on the government's ability to postpone a by-election. Perhaps we would have the opportunity then of having the election within five months after the death of a member. As one who did come into this house on a by-election, I can assure hon. members of the difficulties which exist in a constituency which has no member. I think the by-election was called in fairly short order in the federal riding of Peterborough. However, there was a tremendous backlog of problems. Veterans become very much concerned about pensions when they cannot seem to get through to the right person. Many of the people have problems. I am sure every member in this house finds five or ten letters a day on his desk. When you multiply this by the number of days a constituency is left without a member of parliament, you can well imagine the frustration created for a great many people in a constituency.

I think we can put this discussion on a very high level. I thought I heard the hon. member for Trinity mention, no taxation without representation. Certainly this is one of the great strongholds of our democratic tradition, that is the tradition that all the people must have the right to decide, through their representatives, on the taxes to be imposed on them. I sincerely hope that this bill will come to a vote tonight and all hon. members will have an opportunity to take another step towards making our parliamentary democracy more democratic.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I would be inclined, under normal circumstances, to approve of a measure to speed up the process of filling vacancies in the House of Commons. As I say, I would be inclined to approve of this if I could bring myself to believe in the sincerity of the hon. member's purpose in proposing the measure to this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will have to rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It is not, of course, competent for any hon. member to question the sincerity of any other hon. member. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw the implication and will deal with the bill regardless of who sponsors it. It is the bill with which we are dealing, not the sponsor.

Mr. McGee: I take it, Mr. Speaker, you wish to rule on this?

[Mr. Pitman.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must rule on this point. It is not proper to impute motives to an hon. member, and the hon. member should continue to discuss the bill.

Mr. McGee: First of all, I did not think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was so sensitive, so touchy, but I will defer to your ruling, sir, and withdraw that to which exception has been taken. Surely I may be permitted to do a little wondering out loud. I am wondering why today the hon. member dons both sackcloth and ashes, beats his breast in humility and proclaims the sins of his administration. Has this been a sudden thing that has come on him as a fit?

Mr. Pickersgill: I introduced the same bill last year but it never even got second reading.

Mr. McGee: The criticism for that delay might be directed to another part of the house, not this particular corner. As the hon. member well recalls it was the actions of certain hon. members in another corner of this house that, for all practical purposes, deprived every hon. member who had a private bill on the order paper from having that bill discussed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Peters: Where were you last session? He is not talking about this corner, anyway.

Mr. McGee: Surely I am permitted to wonder why, when the committee on privileges and elections was reviewing the election act, the hon. member did not mention this problem at that time. I must pay tribute to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate because he was a most vocal and articulate member of that committee. Do we find in the records of the committee this passion and concern for this particular matter? I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, you will look in vain through the records of that committee to find any evidence of an effort by the hon. member in connection with this subject.

The hon. member had some comments to make about the cliff-hanging aspect of the situation when elections are being called. He stopped beating his breast and proclaiming the sins of the past too soon. I seem to recall an incident in the history of this House of Commons in which a prime minister well known to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate dissolved this house over the dinner hour. The hon. member was suggesting that some virtue existed in the Liberal party so far as the calling of elections were concerned. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, he acknowledged the monumental task of cataloguing the sins of this previous administration by desisting—

Mr. Habel: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McGee: I shall answer any question the hon. member might have at the conclusion of my remarks. There is a point to be made here; and again, without questioning the sincerity of the hon. member in any way, I wonder why he did not put a bill together which would clearly do the job which this pretends to be doing. A case can be made that six months is too long a period of time. When the six months period was first established in the elections act, communications in this country were such that clearly all that time was required for word to get out to the more remote areas in most of the constituencies. Now, on the grounds of increased communications over the past two decades, a case can be made for reducing that period from, say, six months to something perhaps in the area of four months.

Had there been any kind of serious intent behind this bill it might have something to say about the difficulties of weather, perhaps designating constituencies affected by it as we designate them for other purposes in the act.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a purely factual question? Does the hon. gentleman appreciate that this bill does not set the date, or purport to set the date of election? It is only the date on which the writ is issued, and that has nothing to do with what he is talking about.

Mr. McGee: These considerations were raised by the hon. member himself and surely basically we are concerned here with the period of time which will elapse—

Mr. Pickersgill: From the vacancy to the issuance of the writ. The election date would be involved in another bill.

Mr. McGee: But surely the purpose of the bill is to reduce the period of time which will elapse between the vacancy and the by-election date?

Mr. Pickersgill: Between the vacancy and the issuance of the writ.

Mr. McGee: I heard the hon. member speaking and he addressed himself almost entirely to the proposition that by-elections should be held sooner than they are now, and this is precisely the point to which I am addressing myself. Before the hon. member interrupted my train of thought I said I would have expected to find some reference in this bill excluding certain constituencies because of communication problems, and the hon. member, with his ability to place words together both in verbal and written form, should have been able to find some phrase to cover the situation in which a by-election, by some sequence of events, would be held deep in the depths of winter.

There is some difficulty involved where a by-election can be held too soon, and we have in this parliament an hon. member who demonstrates the doubtfulness of the proposition that by-elections should be held almost instantly. I make reference here to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and his unhappy circumstances, although mind you the results were very happy. Hon. members will recall that there was a disputed election in his constituency and a new election was called. I am sure all hon. members felt for the hon. member for Yukon, who went through and conducted three separate election campaigns within the space of one year in some of the most difficult and inaccessible terrain in the whole of Canada.

Hon. members will recall that the original election in 1957 was disputed. Then a new election was called, and then the general election; so that the hon. member was engaged in almost continuous campaign activity throughout the whole of that period. Certainly a case can be made for the holding of by-elections but it must be pretty clear to almost everybody, except the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, that we are not too far away from a general election.

Mr. Pickersgill: What do you know about it?

An hon. Member: As much as you.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton made reference to the question of unseemly haste and it seems to me that consideration should be given to a decent interval being allowed to elapse between the death of an hon. member and the beginning of activities to replace him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Say 15 months, in the case of Waterloo South.

Mr. McGee: I am attempting to place on the record some relevant, and I hope intelligent factors, which I had hoped to find contained in this bill, and if the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who lectures this house almost every day and calls everybody's attention to the rules of the house, would keep quiet, I might be able to continue. Indeed I might say I heard somebody offer the suggestion the other day that if the hon. member would reverse the procedure—open his mind and close his mouth—he might learn something.

As I have stated, there is room for improvement in this area, but I have attempted to point out some of the considerations which should be given a great deal of thought. There is the question of allowing a decent interval and the question of the difficulties of organization. In discussing such matters as this in the elections act and when they are discussing redistribution of seats, some hon. members seem to forget the very real problem of locating a candidate, and of forming a committee as each party and in fact as each individual candidate must do, arranging and gathering persons around him who will be acting in his support to conduct an election within our current practices. They seem to forget that these things take some time, and the undue haste that the hon. member suggested should not be allowed to disrupt the true purpose and the ideal all of us have in connection with this matter.

In summary I would say that the hon. member has made a case, but on a basis which curiously enough he did not mention, that of communications. He was so busy trying to make political hay on the question that he overlooked the basic proposition which is valid to support his own bill. I am prevented from questioning his sincerity but that omission raises doubts in my mind about the bill. I hold there should be consideration given to geographical areas and weather difficulties and I suggest that the bill in its present form is not worthy of support. However, I think a bill which would be worthy of support could be presented to the house but in all probability, as is normal, it will be left to a Conservative member to clean up the mess, improve the inadequacies of the members of the Liberal party, and present an effective measure to the house.

Mr. Habel: May I ask the hon. member a question? He referred to a dissolution during dinner hour. Does he know that in 1958 this house sat for half a day after it had been dissolved by the present Prime Minister?

Mr. McGee: This is a very interesting observation. I presume the hon. member was in the house, in full possession of his faculties, when the house was not in session. I wonder what the hon. member was doing there.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I often notice that the hon. member for York-Scarborough is more an expert on capital punishment than on elections. According to the bill there is no question about a dispute after an election; it is only a question of dealing with the date of issuance of a writ. Therefore the elections act will take care of what happens after an election has taken place, and if we want to bring in an amendment to the elections act we will do so.

In answering the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, who said he makes a difference between the rights of parliament and the rights of the people, I do not know whether there is much difference between the two. Anyway, he said that the people might not want an early by-election. He says this, of course, because since they have been in power they have lost most of the by-elections.

I would remind the house that as far as the constituency of Labelle is concerned, on January 19, 1960 the then secretary of state was nominated to the Senate—as we see at page 77 of Hansard—and then only two and a half months after, not from the government but from the Liberal side, the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc) gave notice to the Speaker that there was a vacancy as far as the constituency of Labelle was concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: How did that vacancy occur?

Mr. Denis: Because he had been nominated an honourable senator—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member from his seat is posing questions which do not seem to be relevant to the bill.

Mr. Denis: We might forget about it because the honourable senator is not there any more. But two and a half months after, notice was given by the Liberal member for Gatineau. It is amazing that the Conservative party was not in such a hurry to declare vacant the seat in the constituency of Labelle. The by-election took place on October 31, 1960, which was nine and a half months after the seat for the constituency of Labelle had been declared vacant.

It is obvious that delays which are allowed as far as by-elections are concerned are far from being fair to the party in power or the party in opposition, and especially are they not fair to the people of the constituency in which the vacancy has occurred. I am sure that if the bill of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) is passed—and I do not want to delay it because I want to leave enough time for a vote—it will be much fairer and justice will be rendered to those constituencies in which a vacancy exists.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the phenomenon of elections is on the Canadian horizon as a huge cloud which will one day burst over the heads of the electorate. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) is not unaware of that atmospheric phenomenon. Indeed, he shows great interest in it, since he has introduced this bill on by-elections.

I have listened most attentively to the hon. member's remarks and, although I do not want to be unkind to him, I must say that during all the time I have been sitting in the house, never have I heard a member defend so badly a bill he has himself introduced and support it with such insubstantial arguments.

Must we conclude that the hon. member is more interested in by-elections than in general elections? Would he be considering retirement in the near future? We are wondering whether he has decided to leave the hustings in order to devote himself to the writing of numerous literary works for the benefit of future generations.

In any case, let us say that we will have a close look at the present elections act and what it would gain through the bill introduced by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

According to the act now in force, a vacancy may occur when one of three things happens: the resignation of a member; the death of a member; or the appointment of a member to another post.

When a member resigns, the Speaker notifies the chief electoral officer, who must issue a writ within six months. Then, it is up to the government to set the date for the by-election.

When a member dies or is appointed to some other function, another member notifies the Speaker, after which the same procedure applies.

If I understand correctly, the purpose of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate it is to reduce the period I mentioned a moment ago from six months to sixty days and to compel the government to order an election within 90 days after the issuance of an election writ.

We listened carefully to the mover of this bill and he asked that we vote for this legislation.

He spoke as fast as he could and wandered off, as he often does, into political issues, and he is a past master at that sort of thing.

He spent most of his time anticipating the legitimate and justified criticism we could voice in reminding him that when his party was in power they could have taken the steps he considers of such importance today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask for the unanimous consent of the house to raise a question of privilege which will take ten seconds. I used the wrong expression earlier when I said "tiddley-winks"; I meant "button, button; who's got the button?"

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour for consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Other payments to international organizations and programs—

629. Purchase and transportation to British Honduras of skim milk powder, canned pork and other supplies for the relief of victims of the hurricane disaster and to authorize reimbursement of the agricultural stabilization board in respect of the purchase of such skim milk powder and canned pork, $70,500.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, just before the adjournment I was referring to a statement made by B. R. Sen of India, the director-general of the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations which reveals something of the scope of operations proposed by the world food bank. He suggested it should be used to finance emergency relief and international food reserves as well as national food reserves, the relief of chronic malnutrition, to provide infant pre-school and school feeding, to provide educational fellowships and assist other social development activities and other economic development projects.

Mr. Sen indicated that in the discussions that took place at the food and agriculture organization conference a difference of view was expressed. Some members felt that this fund was only for emergency relief perhaps with the addition of relieving chronic malnutrition, but the other view taken was that its use went far beyond this and embraced the welfare of people in need.

I think it would be of interest if the minister were to place on the record the Canadian view with respect to the purpose of this important body. The world food bank has been endorsed in strong terms by nearly all agricultural organizations. The national farmers union in its brief dated January 31, 1962 spoke of its enthusiasm for the world food program to be developed within the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations.

The dairy farmers of Canada consider that many of their problems will perhaps be resolved by the development of this program.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, this vote is not one under which the world food bank should be discussed. I will be perfectly happy to discuss it at the proper time. This is a vote providing $70,500 for the provision of certain goods to British Honduras and the discussion should be limited to that.

The Chairman: I think the point raised by the minister is well taken. The discussion should be limited to this particular item. I trust I will not have to remind hon. members of that on future occasions.

Mr. Matheson: I trust I will not be prevented from dealing in my remarks with skimmed milk powder which presents a problem to dairy farmers at this time. There is a hold-over of over 50 million pounds and the export situation has been seriously declining this past year. Production of this product this year has been 23.5 per cent over that of the previous year. This is one of the most important elements of Canadian dairy production—

The Chairman: Order. I am not discussing what the hon. member has just said and the only point upon which I wish to rule is the relevancy of his remarks at this particular time. I am inclined to take the view expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that it would not be in order to discuss the matters upon which the hon. member is embarking at this time.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, with respect, as I read it this item of $70,500 covers the purchase and transportation to British Honduras of skimmed milk powder, canned pork and other supplies for relief of victims of the hurricane disaster. Surely we are not limited to a discussion of the hurricane disaster.

Can we know the quantity of skimmed milk powder that was supplied by Canada and at what prices? I am pleased with this item which may indicate a future solution to our problems of surplus agricultural products. I hope I have not gone beyond the limitations of the item in these remarks.

Mr. Green: The following was provided under this item:

350,000 lbs. of skim milk powder at 7 cts. a lb.	$ 25,000
85,000 lbs. of canned pork at 17 cts. a lb.	17,000
Shipment of pickled mackerel, corrugated roofing and transportation charges on skim milk powder, canned pork, pickled mackerel and roofing	18,000
Reimbursement to R.C.A.F. for aircraft, etc.	10,500
	$ 70,500

Mr. Matheson: May I ask the minister this question. If similar disaster should occur in the future in places like British Honduras is it anticipated that relief will be provided through the food and agriculture organization?

Mr. Green: That would depend on the position of the world food bank at that time.

Item agreed to.

Loans, investments and advances—

668. To authorize the purchase in the current and subsequent fiscal years of United Nations bonds in an amount of $6,240,000 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars estimated as of January, 1962, which is, $6,493,500.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister indicates, Mr. Chairman, that he does not intend to make a statement with respect to this item. This is a matter of great importance.

Canada, of course, is doing its duty in providing $6,493,500 in respect of the purchase of its quota of bonds that have been offered for sale to meet the present financial difficulty into which the United Nations has been plunged. The comments that have been made in many quarters suggest that the necessity of extending this form of financing to the United Nations is regarded as an indication of the ineffectiveness of that body.

I rise at once to say that regardless of its inadequacies this is not the time to belittle the work, the purpose and the potential role of the United Nations. We strongly support the government in the affirmation of this principle. There are on both sides of the iron curtain people and countries that have engaged in a depreciation of the effectiveness of the United Nations. However, I would strongly support the observations made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and indeed by the Leader of the Opposition in speeches that both have made outside of this house to the effect that all we have to do is to glance at the world, its problems and its turbulence in order to realize how much worse the situation would be if it were not for the United Nations. The time that we would lose, the experience that would disappear, in the process of building up a world community if the United Nations were to disappear, I am sure will cause most people to regard these attacks on and depreciations of the United Nations as idle indeed.

The fact is that the United Nations has presented its members with this financial situation for a number of reasons. Not the least of these reasons is that this deficit situation arises out of the fact that the United Nations itself was engaged in the accomplishment of one of the purposes for which it was created, namely to deal with situations that threaten the peace or actually violate the peace. It also arises out of the fact that all countries have not lived up to their obligations as their membership in the United Nations commands. I understand that 82 members or 87 members—I am not sure of the figure; there seems to be some dispute about it—of the United Nations are in default. This is, of course, a serious consideration. When one thinks of the millions of dollars being spent in armaments today and when one realizes the relative low cost of the operations of the United Nations, this deficit and the need for providing for it should not occasion the criticism or depreciation that has been made of the United Nations.

Canada's foreign policy is based upon a number of factors, one of which is the United Nations. I take it that in this house we are all united on that one point, at any rate, and that we are determined to see to it that this collective security organization is maintained, is strengthened and is not allowed to lapse into a position in which its usefulness is no longer apparent.

The charter of the United Nations, in article 19, deals with the case of members who are in default. It provides that there may be a period as long as two years in which defaulting members may have an obligation of paying their dues. Then under article 19 likewise provision is made for countries which, in certain circumstances, cannot pay their dues. A country may have suffered some particular catastrophe such as a severe earthquake, may have undergone an economic crisis or may have a government which is so unstable that elections are not possible. Circumstances of that kind may be extenuating circumstances explaining why a nation has not met its obligations. While these are descriptions of possible situations, the fact is that many nations are not living up to their obligation to bear their portion of the cost not only of peace keeping operations but of the general work of the organization itself. What are we to do? Are we to take punitive action against those nations which do not even meet the requirements of article 19? I think that course would be unwise. In any event, before punitive action could be taken, I think there would have to be an amendment to the charter. As that course in turn requires action by the security council in which the veto operates, we cannot look for any solution through that particular form of procedure. However, even if we could take it, I would think that course would be unwise.

In examining the list of countries which are in default we note that there are a number of them which do not offer the kind of excuse which is permissible under article 19. Among those countries are two at least of the great powers. Just by way of digression may I say this. I believe that the amount of contribution that Her Majesty's government in the United Kingdom is going to take up of this $200 million bond issue does not represent fully the percentage requirement which the United Kingdom would be expected to take up. Her contribution would be 7.58 per cent which would mean the purchase of $15 million worth of bonds, whereas actually the government of that country has decided to take up bonds to a maximum value of $12 million. I am assuming that the figure represented by the intended purchase by Canada of United Nations bonds represents our complement or our obligation as a member of the United Nations and that we have taken up the full amount. The minister will correct me if I am wrong in this regard. I certainly think that we should take up the full amount. However, I think that we have done so.

As I observed a moment ago, the fact is that some of the greater powers have not met their obligations. Notable among these is, of course, the Soviet union. The Soviet union has refused not only in this instance but in many others since 1946 to assume obligations not only with regard to peace keeping operations that were contrary to what she regarded to be her foreign policy interests but has also refused to take up certain other obligations. Moreover, her payments have not always been payments that were made on time. Other countries—and France is among these—have refused to bear their share toward certain peace keeping operations. It seems to me that this situation is regrettable. However, these remarks are not intended to be exclusively applicable to France. While they apply to her, they apply as well to other countries. There certainly ought to be a distinction made between an obligation to pay one's financial obligation to the organization and willingness to accept certain consequences of the decisions of the United Nations. There should be no equation between the decisions of the United Nations in matters of policy and the payment to the United Nations by any member state affected by that policy.

Fortunately, Canada has in this regard an unblemished record and we may well pride ourselves on that fact because, whatever we may think of the United Nations, whatever may be the weaknesses in the voting procedures of the general assembly, whatever we may think about some of the abuses that may have developed, the fact is that the United Nations is the instrument of the world that speaks for the conscience of mankind and which has been a stabilizing factor. The fact that the question of disarmament in a sense is now being discussed outside of the United Nations, the fact that such questions as Germany are being resolved or attempted to be resolved outside the precincts of the United Nations, must not be regarded in any way as an indication of the failure of the organization to accomplish its purposes.

Nor are we going to gain much by suggesting that because we now recognize the principle of universality of the United Nations the interests of some of the great powers are being seriously affected as a result. It should not be forgotten that between 1946 and 1955, when the United Nations was half what it now is in size and membership, we in the west were able to find concurrence for many of our policies and many of our international objectives. Now that new members have been added to the United Nations, now that as a result the balance of power in the United Nations has changed, and on some occasions materially changed, that should not cause us, disturbed possibly by some of the consequences, to embark on the kind of campaign of depreciation that has been launched, notably by the Soviet union.

This was begun, of course, a year ago last September when, because the Soviet union recognized that its particular objectives were not being realized in the United Nations, the Soviet union sought to change the character of the organization. It sought to give expression to this determination by urging a reform in the office of the secretary general itself. It did so by proposing the principle of the troika instead of the secretary general operating as he does now under article 99 of the charter as one who speaks, not for any one nation but for the interests of all of the nations, which they regarded as something not in their interests.

Canada resisted their proposal, and the Leader of the Opposition in speeches he made in this house and elsewhere supported the government in the expression of support they had given through the Secretary of State for External Affairs and others in joining the majority view that that kind of procedure would result in the emasculation of the United Nations itself. This problem has been temporarily met and it has been met by catastrophe. The death of the secretary general created a hiatus of which the Soviet union took advantage to seek again to urge a majority of the United Nations to accept its recommendation for a division of the office of secretary general to take into account the three important divisions of world opinion—the western world, the communist world and the uncommitted world. Undoubtedly we shall have to face this situation in 1963 when the office of secretary general will become vacant and when an opportunity will be provided to elect a permanent secretary general.

In talking about a permanent secretary general, I have never mentioned this before but I should like to take this occasion to note this fact for purposes of the record. I think it should be noted that there is a long history attached to the office of secretary general that is not unrelated to one of the members of this house. I hope he will not be embarrassed by what I am going to say tonight. In 1946 I was one of the delegates from this country at the United Nations first general assembly that was held in Church house in London. I was privileged to go there with the then minister of justice, Mr. St. Laurent, later to become Prime Minister of Canada.

At that time, following meetings of the preparatory commission which had met in London during the fall of 1945, a number of names were being discussed for the office of secretary general and among those names were the following: General Eisenhower as he then was, later to become president of the United States, Monsieur Henri Spaak, then foreign minister of Belgium, the present Leader of the Opposition who was then under secretary of state for external affairs, and Mr. Trygve Lie. I do not think I do any injustice to Mr. Lie when I say that at first his name was not a prominently mentioned as other names.

General Eisenhower indicated that, if offered the position, he did not propose to accept it, and Monsieur Spaak, for reasons best known to himself, indicated early in the proceedings that he would not be a candidate. But I can attest because I was there that the name that was most prominently bandied about from one delegation to another was that of the Leader of the Opposition. That was in 1946. As we all know, Mr. Trygve Lie, who was at that time foreign minister for Norway, became secretary general. Mr. Vishinsky, then foreign minister of the Soviet union and the head of the Soviet union delegation, indicated in a press interview the reasons why Mr. Trygve Lie had been selected, and among those reasons was the fact that he came not from a commonwealth country but from one of those areas of the world where it could be said a greater measure of apparent neutrality in foreign affairs prevailed.

Mr. Trygve Lie served with distinction as secretary general of the United Nations. He resigned and when he was not asked to carry on it became necessary to elect someone in his stead as permanent secretary general of the United Nations. At that time the present Leader of the Opposition was president of the United Nations general assembly. I was with him at that time as head of the Canadian delegation and again I can attest to the fact that it was almost the unanimous wish of every nation in the United Nations at that time that Mr. Lie's successor should be the present Leader of the Opposition.

The security council met one day. Ten of the eleven members indicated their preference for the present Leader of the Opposition. The Soviet union indicated that the Leader of the Opposition's name would not be acceptable. I want to say now, as one who went through those days and who perhaps more than anyone else knows what happened, that the reasons which motivated the Soviet union in rejecting the present Leader of the Opposition as secretary general were reasons that were associated with the view that as one of the architects of NATO he would not be acceptable to them.

The communists did not want him. That was the real reason. I think all Canadians in this country who do not know the details of this episode should be so informed. I do not want to embarrass the Leader of the Opposition in recounting these details. However, he was the choice of most of the nations because he incorporated, in everything that he had done, something that I think is symbolic of the convictions and the feelings of the Canadian people, that is the belief that in this interdependent world, in this period of turbulence, if we are going to have peace in the long run it will only be by establishing on the international plane those processes of law, adjudication and conciliation that have proven so successful on the domestic plane. I think that every Canadian will be proud of the fact that one of our own was the overwhelming choice of most nations who would have preferred him. This is in no way to be construed as an expression of depreciation of the great services of Mr. Hammarskjold.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the Secretary of State for External Affairs may be assured that we support strongly the efforts of this government to make the United Nations a vital force in this world of ours. We support the present vote to enable Canada, its government, to purchase bonds, a rather unique device conceived I believe by the United States, to enable the United Nations to meet its present financial difficulties. All this does not mean that we regard everything as satisfactory in the United Nations. I think we can say this because Canada had a lot to do with extending the membership of the United Nations. We recognize that in supporting the principle of universality and giving it effect, problems have been created for all nations.

But this is the essence of the United Nations. We can only hope that wise statesmanship, patience in diplomacy, will enable us to see developed in the general assembly of the United Nations, those attitudes, postures and procedures that are calculated to make it more effective than seems to be the case at the moment.

While it is not easy, we ought to try to develop a tradition in the general assembly to resolve some major issues at least by other means than merely voting. Some of these great issues of international consequence cannot be resolved by vote. The procedural questions are of a different order, such as whether there should be 10 or 14 members on the disarmament committee. That is another matter. However, the great issues that divide the world, the great issues involved in policy are such that I would hope the reputation Canada has built up over the years would enable us to make a contribution in the assembly by indicating to the newer members, towards whom we have much in common and towards whom we have great sympathy, that the way to resolve many of these issues is not always by the mere act of voting.

On the other hand, we want it to be clearly understood that if there have been abuses, the abuses do not lie on one side alone. When we think of the attitude of some of the great powers between 1946 and 1955 particularly, even up to the present time, we see that the abuses were by no means the monopoly of the newer members of the United Nations. We recognize, too, that there have to be changes made, changes in the security council to take into account the number of newer members; changes in some other organs of the United Nations to likewise take into account the increases in United Nations membership. These are things, however, that we can only deal with in the light of circumstances at the time. I believe that the words of Mr. Nehru, delivered in the 15th general assembly, are perhaps applicable here. He said:

> It would not be desirable for the executive to be weakened when rapid decisions have to be made; that would mean abdication of responsibility undertaken by the United Nations. If the executive itself is split up and pulled in different directions, it will not be able to function adequately and with speed. There is always a particular time when decisions have to be made and this applies equally to the United Nations.

The minister may be assured that we in this party believe that Canada is taking the right course in having decided to purchase these bonds. The necessity for the creation of this issue of $200 million does not represent the bankruptcy of the United Nations, although in actual financial terms that may be the case. It represents rather the dangerous situation in so many theatres of our world in which the nations of the world have been projected. It is because the United Nations has a role to play that it finds itself at this time in the embarrassing position of having to devise a method for obtaining financial assistance beyond the normal procedures provided in the regulations under which the United Nations operate. When we think of the moneys that are being spent all over the world on armaments, how anyone could criticize the United Nations because it has resorted to this particular form of financing is difficult to understand.

I have taken the liberty tonight of saying these things with which we all agree because I think it is appropriate that in this parliament those of us who believe in the rule of law amongst the nations should fearlessly affirm our faith in the purposes of the charter, recognizing at all times its weaknesses, but firm in the conviction that it is the only instrument in the long run by which we can hope to make any progress in laying a solid foundation for peace amongst the nations of the world.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a few words on this item when it is being considered. Last fall I had the privilege of being one of the Canadian delegates to the 16th assembly of the United Nations and, at the assembly represented Canada on the second committee. No one, I think, has any doubt that the United Nations is now facing a serious crisis. This is brought about by two particular matters: First, the financial problems with which we are being faced tonight because of the delinquency of some members of the United Nations. This has resulted in the United Nations going to the governments of member nations and asking to borrow funds with which to carry on the work of the United Nations. The second problem results from the material change in the balance of voting power which is unpalatable now to some of the great nations who contribute largely to the finances of the United Nations. There is a potential danger of the day arriving when a majority of the members of the United Nations may vote money matters to which the majority contributors are not prepared to contribute. When that time comes, although I hope it will not, there will be a very serious crisis in the United Nations.

A change in the voting procedure on money matters is one of the changes which I believe must be effected in order to keep the United Nations operating. Even municipalities in this and other countries recognize there is a difference between voting on matters of principle and voting money supplies, and even the municipalities have separate rules for the type of voting procedure as between two different matters in principle. I believe the United Nations will have to grapple with this very difficult subject in order to avert the day of crisis.

To deal specifically with the item under consideration, it is my belief no one will deny that the small sum which we are being asked to vote tonight for the purchase of bonds is very insignificant in the light of armament and other tremendous expenditures made to maintain peace in the world. I would go further and say we in this parliament should be prepared to leave the way open for further contributions should the United Nations not reach its objective after all the countries have been canvassed and their contributions received.

Canada has always taken its fair share in the work of the United Nations. It has been a respected member and has contributed to every worth-while project that the United Nations has sponsored. Therefore I heartily approve the expenditure of this sum of money for purchasing the bonds and I express the hope that if further funds are required Canada will not be found wanting.

In conclusion I want to express my appreciation of the very great work our Secretary of State for External Affairs has done to maintain and increase the great stature which Canada has gained among the nations of the world.

Mr. Green: Before the vote carries I should like to make one or two points. Reference has been made to bonds being purchased only by the members of the United Nations. That is an erroneous idea. For example, it is hoped that West Germany would buy quite a substantial amount of bonds as well as various specialized agencies of the United Nations itself. The bond issue is not restricted in any way to those countries which are members of the United Nations.

To date the subscriptions come to $136,810,000, including $100 million which it is anticipated will be paid by the United States. The United Kingdom is the second largest subscriber with a sum of $12 million, and next comes Canada with $6,240,000, Sweden $5,800,000, Australia $4 million, Denmark $2.5 million, India $2 million, Norway $1,800,000, Malaya $340,000, Ireland $300,000, Pakistan $250,000 and Burma $100,000.

Canada was the first country to subscribe to this bond issue and we co-sponsored the resolution which provided for the undertaking of the bond issue. We are very hopeful that the total issue will be subscribed.

Another important factor is that there has been the reference to the international court of justice in the hope that that court will decide that payments for such operations as the Congo operation should be considered as regular assessments. If that is done I believe there is a very good prospect that most members of the United Nations would pay their regular assessments, which would mean they would be paying their share for the refunding of this bond issue. As I told the hon. member for Essex East some days ago, Canada has placed a submission before the international court of justice and we are very hopeful that the decision which is finally made will be to the effect I have mentioned.

Mr. Pearson: This vote for $6,493,500, which we on this side of the house certainly support, is made necessary, as the minister and the hon. member for Essex East pointed out, by the additional expenditures incurred by the United Nations and by the refusal of certain members of the United Nations to discharge their financial obligations in respect of those expenditures as well as in respect of normal expenditures. These additional expenditures have to do with such special and vital activities of the United Nations as the operations in the Congo.

I have not the figures at my command. Perhaps the minister has, but I know that the expenditures on these special operations like the Congo will soon run into amounts which will be comparable to, if not in excess of, the ordinary expenditures of the United Nations. This of course involves a new problem of finance, a problem which if it is not solved will create grave problems and dangers for the future effective existence of the United Nations.

There are member states who are in default of their ordinary obligations and the charter, at least in theory, has a way of dealing with that, but there is no provision in the charter, as I understand it, for dealing with special expenses for special activities. If they do not do so now, these will soon involve sums in excess even of normal expenditures. It is one thing to be in default of normal expenditures. We have some way of dealing with that in the charter, and I shall return to that in a moment.

But there is no way of dealing with these special expenditures in the sense that any particular obligation can be imposed on any particular state to pay its share. We are now getting into a position at the United Nations where if a member of the United Nations does not accept a particular operation—if it votes against a particular activity of the United Nations—it then claims it has no obligation to bear its share of the expenditures of that activity.

The best example of that, I suppose, is the Congo, where the Soviet union and the other communist states have washed their hands of all responsibility financial or otherwise for an activity of which they do not approve, at least in the form in which it is being carried on, although they voted for it in the first instance.

The Soviet union and the communist members are the most striking examples of this default, but there are other countries too. There are countries of the west which have taken the same attitude; they do not support the decision of the United Nations in respect of a particular matter and they will not pay their share of it. What do we do? We are now floating a bond issue in order to take care of these emergency expenses. The United States, which is always under criticism by these countries which do not take their share of these international responsibilities, is of course going to be asked to bear the great share of the burden. One hundred million dollars out of $136 million is to be taken up by the United States. If the United States does not do this, what will happen to the United Nations? There is only $36 million to be taken up by the other members, and with regard to that amount I think only eight, nine or 10 members have indicated that they will do anything at all. I think that is what the minister said a moment ago.

This is the problem, and I am glad this problem of the obligation of members of the United Nations in respect of the financing of these particular activities has been submitted to the world court. I hope the world court will come up with the kind of solution the minister has mentioned. That may be a good solution, but it will be one thing to get the verdict of the court and another to get the members of the United Nations to accept that verdict in terms of payment.

As my hon. friend from Essex East tells me, it will only be an advisory opinion in any event; it will only have the weight of an advisory opinion. So this is a very serious problem. It would be the tragedy of all tragedies if the United Nations were allowed, perhaps not to collapse—because it cannot collapse; it cannot be permitted to collapse—but if these activities were diminished because funds could not be found for that purpose, funds which are very small indeed in relation to the expenditures on modern armaments by some of these countries which are refusing to pay anything for this. We on this side of the chamber hope, Mr. Chairman, that this money will be made available in the way suggested.

I should like to ask the minister one or two questions. He has said that the United States is proposing to take up $100 million. I take it that this matter is now before congress. I do not think it has been approved by congress yet. What will happen if congress does not approve of it, we do not know, but it will certainly involve a very serious problem for the organization in New York if the United States—and I hope this will not happen—does not find it possible to pay as its share such a high proportion of the total amount that is required.

Mr. Chairman, in this house on January 22 the Prime Minister had this to say in respect of the default of members of the organization on their ordinary contributions and in respect of the application of article 19 to members who are defaulting. This article is a way of dealing with these members. If they are in default after a certain length of time—I think it is two years—and if there are no circumstances which are considered as mitigating by other members of the United Nations, their franchise can be taken away from them.

I am not suggesting that this would be a wise course of action to follow. It has not been followed in the past. If it had been followed in the past we would have been in great confusion and difficulty at the United Nations. There have been cases in the past when nations were four or five years in arrears and then paid up. Therefore I am not suggesting that this should be done at this time. However, the Prime Minister did say at that time:

> There should be no free riders in an international organization designed to maintain and preserve peace.

Therefore I should like to ask the minister what steps, if any, the government proposes to take to implement that statement of the Prime Minister that there should be no free riders; and is this a matter which the government proposes to take up at the next assembly of the United Nations in respect of those members who are now more than two years in arrears?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, we believe that if the court's opinion is in the affirmative, then the United Nations will have improved its prospect for insisting upon the payment of assessments for the United Nations emergency force and for the Congo force, and for taking action against the defaulters. But it has not been considered practical to invoke article 19 which, as the Leader of the Opposition has mentioned, concerns the suspension of voting rights in the assembly, in the absence of an authoritative opinion on the legal obligation, in view of the actual response of members to the financial assessments levied for the emergency force and for the Congo force.

The court's opinion is to be rendered in time for the 17th session of the assembly, which will begin about the middle of September. If that decision is favourable, then I think there would be much better ground for taking action against defaulters; but in the meantime there is nothing practical that can be done to deal with the question of the nations which are in default.

Payments are made from time to time, and in some cases nations simply are not able to pay. We do not quarrel with their failure at all. But it is in the case of the nations who can pay and will not pay where the blame is due. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, the communist countries will not pay anything either for the United Nations emergency force or for the operations in the Congo, and some other countries—some of our best friends—will not pay anything for the Congo operations. The question of expelling members of the United Nations or depriving them of the vote for failure to pay is a rather complicated one. There is some doubt as to the effectiveness of the working of the organization as a whole if action of that kind was taken.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the minister have readily available the list of states in arrears and the length of time for which they have been in arrears?

Mr. Green: I have not got it by states, but as of January 31, 1962, four states—here I am referring to arrears on the regular budget—were in arrears on 1959 contributions amounting to $37,885. Fourteen states were in arrears for 1960, amounting to $3,127,709.80 and seven of those had paid something on account. Forty seven states were in arrears for 1961—this was as of one month after the end of the year—amounting to $9,066,297.63. Of those 47, there were 18 had paid something on account. Communist countries, I believe, keep up their assessments on the regular budget.

The position with regard to the special peace keeping operations is of course very much worse. Twenty nine states were in arrears for 1957, amounting to $3,988,931; eight had paid something on account; 31 states were in arrears for 1958, amounting to $7,272,756; two states had paid something on account; 36 states were in arrears for 1959, amounting to $4,415,462; one state had paid on account; 41 states were in arrears for 1960, amounting to $4,768,882.75; two states had paid on account.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Did that last figure relate to 1960?

Mr. Green: Yes. To continue, 73 states were in arrears for 1961, amounting to $5,060,074.18; three states had paid on account. I point out again that that was only 31 days after the end of the year. That was for the United Nations emergency force in the Gaza strip.

For the Congo force, 66 states were in arrears for 1960, amounting to $18,844,853,75; 3 states had paid on account; 78 states were in arrears for 1961, amounting to $33,125,008; 2 states had paid on account. I believe the hon. member referred to 82 states.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said 82 or 87.

Mr. Green: Yes. Actually 78 states were in arrears for 1961.

Obviously the position is extremely serious. Canada has been very active in trying to get something done about this situation. We were a member of the small working group which devoted a great deal of time to this during the whole of last year. Also we were one of the co-sponsors of the resolution providing for the bond issue.

I think it should be pointed out again that if the decision of the international court of justice is to the effect that assessments for the repayment of this bond issue are to be considered in the same category as assessments for the regular budget, then there is far more likelihood that the payment will be made. Of course, we are hopeful that the decision of the court will be to that effect.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I believe the total amount involved in this bond issue is $136 million odd. It is interesting to note that the main reasons for this are the special activities of the United Nations such as those in the Congo, and the United Nations emergency force in Palestine. But one source of additional expenditure to the United Nations and one source in which we can all take pride is the fact that the United Nations activities have been so greatly widened and extended because of the inclusion in its membership of a number of Asian and African countries which were not long ago colonial territories.

Seven or eight years ago the ex-colonial territories members of the United Nations who were then members of that body, could have been numbered on your two hands. Now there are 25 or 30, I should think, members of the United Nations who only a few years ago were colonial territories. Because of the weakness of their economy, they cannot, of course, make any great contributions to the United Nations in terms of money and I suspect their contributions are assessed at a very low percentage of its costs. They do, on the other hand, add to the expenses of the United Nations and this is an additional expenditure which I am sure the other members are very glad to bear except perhaps those members of the United Nations which have their own colonial territories which are not likely to become members of the United Nations; and I am talking about the communist empire.

I wonder whether the minister in respect of the $136 million which is required and of which we are being asked to contribute roughly $6.5 million could relate that expenditure to the cost of operations in the Congo, let us say, since the operations began. I may be wrong but I would not be surprised if the costs of the Congo operations would be in excess of the figure of $136 million. If that is the case, that itself would explain the necessity for this extra amount about which certain members of the United Nations refuse to do anything.

Mr. Green: The cost of the Congo operation is running, I think, at approximately $10 million a month.

Mr. Pearson: Ten million a month?

Mr. Green: Yes. I do not know where the Leader of the Opposition got his figure of $136 million. That is the amount that has been subscribed. The bond issue is for $200 million which it is estimated will allow the United Nations to carry on until the payments come in under the regular assessments for the amount required to be refunded.

Mr. Pearson: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I was wrong in my figure. The minister now says that $200 million is being asked for and that $136 million is, we hope, being subscribed by those members who have already indicated their intention so to subscribe.

Mr. Green: Provided the United States will contribute $100 million.

Mr. Pearson: Yes. That leaves, of course, another $64 million to be raised by other members which have not yet indicated any intention. If in fact $136 million or $140 million is subscribed that will only carry the United Nations through the Congo operations for a year, roughly, at $10 million a month. That would not be enough to meet the expenses of the Congo operations since they began, at the present rate. This underlines the serious financial position of the world organization and the necessity of doing something about it above and beyond even the present subscription of $200 million, if that is all subscribed. This is one temporary way out of a very great difficulty, but it is only a temporary solution to this difficulty.

Mr. Green: That is right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, we are discussing further methods by which we can meet the current financial difficulties of the United Nations organization which the Prime Minister referred to last fall, speaking in Toronto, when he said that it was the government's intention at the next general assembly, presumably that of next September, to move a resolution condemning the Soviet union for its colonial policy, its subjugation of former nations, of people who formerly enjoyed the advantages of a free society. I think the house generally will agree with the observations made by the Prime Minister on that occasion, as indeed we had, in the condemnation levelled against the Soviet union's colonial policy and its practice of a new type of imperialism, as set out in the speech he made to the general assembly in the autumn of 1960.

I think it should be noted that what the Prime Minister said on that occasion in the United Nations, and what he said last fall regarding Canadian intentions for the assembly in the fall of 1962, did not break new ground.

I would not wish anyone to misunderstand what I am saying. I think it was well that the Prime Minister of Canada spoke the mind of the Canadian people and expressed the views of those in this house with regard to this matter. In a matter of such importance, I think it equally important to remember, however, that the Leader of the Opposition in particular, the prime minister in the former government as well, and others, too, took opportunity from time to time at the United Nations to use the procedures there available to condemn the Soviet union for its policy of subjugation, for its denial of the normal processes open to people in a free society. I think it is well that we recall some of the words that were used by Canadian spokesmen in the general assembly as well as in this house.

The Prime Minister said that at the next general assembly the Canadian government would cause to be placed before the general assembly a resolution condemning the Soviet union for its colonial policy. At that time I expressed the view that, commendable as was the Prime Minister's statement, it was regrettable that we should have waited until the next general assembly. He spoke in the month of November. The general assembly was still in session. There was actually before the assembly at that time a resolution that did not embody the precise terms of the Prime Minister's intention but to it could have been an annexed amendment, expressing Canada's view of the regressive step taken by the Soviet union towards the subjugated nations of Europe.

I expressed the view that the government of Canada through the Prime Minister ought to give instructions to the Canadian delegation to see to it that we expressed condemnation right there and then in the general assembly, at a time when the Soviet union was attacking Britain as well as other countries for its colonial policy, overlooking of course the progress that has been made notably by Britain in this regard. However, that step was not taken. I am not rising to oppose the intention to do that kind of thing at the next general assembly. However, what the Prime Minister said was not new. There are many people in this country—and some of them are represented by distinguished members in this house—whose friends and relatives, many of whom are now dead, have become the victims of Soviet imperialism and colonialism. For instance, I have before me some observations made by the Leader of the Opposition in the general assembly of 1949 when, among other things, addressing himself to Mr. Vyshinsky, the spokesman for the Soviet union, he said this on December 1:

> If Mr. Vyshinsky really wishes to do something about the preservation of peace, he should try to persuade his government to pay some attention to the fear in the world of this new imperialism; to the concern which is deep and widespread about the methods which it adopts to spread its influence, and the threats to peace which are inherent in those methods.

Then he went on to say this:

> Within the USSR sphere of influence—the new Soviet empire—have been included many peoples who previously had their own free governments: Finns, Estonians, Ukrainians, Latvians, Lithuanians, Poles, Rumanians.

He expressed the same view in more general terms on September 26, 1949, in the same general assembly. Then on September 27, 1950, speaking on a resolution having to do with the war in Korea the Leader of the Opposition said as follows:

> This war in Korea is but the continuation by armed and open aggression of the policies which communist imperialism has been pursuing by other means. It is part of the theory of communism that the disruptions and dislocations of a post-war period give to the communist minority its best chance to seize power by force and maintain it by the terror and repression of a police state. Systematically the forces of communist imperialism, in these last years, have been trying out their theories in the four corners of the world.

Then again in 1956, he spoke in the general assembly. On November 4, 1956, he said this:

> This is a sad—

Mr. Jones: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do not like to interrupt the hon. member for Essex East in his third or fourth speech since eight o'clock but I wonder whether he could relate his remarks to the item we are considering, namely item No. 688 of the estimates. It would be helpful if that could be done.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. member has seen fit to interrupt my hon. friend in order to raise a point of order, I should like to say a word about the point of order. As hon. members know, an attempt has been made to bring a certain matter before the United Nations. We are discussing an item having to do with the financing of the United Nations. It seems to me that what my friend the hon. member for Essex East was doing on this occasion was showing that the government, in taking this course which my hon. friend was supporting, was operating on historic lines which had been followed by Canada under the previous government as well as under this government ever since the United Nations was established. It seems to me that on this the eve of the anniversary of the birth of the great Ukrainian poet Shevchenko, thinking as we do of the thousands of our fellow citizens whose families and friends are behind the iron curtain, we should not attempt any narrow interpretation of the rules in connection with a subject of such deep interest to them and one which the government itself has said should be considered in the United Nations.

Mr. Jones: Speaking further on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that it was certainly not my intention nor did I wish to suggest a narrowing of the debate beyond its proper limits. As is the case with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I am prepared at all times, as I have done in the past, to pay tribute to Taras Shevchenko, that great poet of the Ukrainian nation. I do not know how that subject got into the debate but inasmuch as it has I am sure that all members of the committee will take advantage of the opportunity to affirm again support for this great poet. However, on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to bring to your attention the suggestion that the energies of the hon. member for Essex East and his remarks should be directed towards the particular point we are discussing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the hon. member for his contribution. As was said by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I was simply expressing my approval of the general statement made by the Prime Minister on this important matter, one which concerns so many groups in this country, and to which he intended later to give expression in the United Nations, as indeed he did himself a year ago. In discussing this matter so related to the United Nations which we are discussing I was simply pointing out that the course followed and the observations he made had been pursued and made by those who preceded him.

Mr. Macdonnell: Is anyone questioning that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. I am grateful for that question. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that there are those who question this. That is why I have taken the time of the committee to put before it this vital matter, one that affects many people in this country. I have many of them in my constituency. They expect me and others to deal with this matter. There are people who question it. What I was saying was this, however. I was referring to a quotation of remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition on November 4, 1956 when, addressing himself again to the colonial policy of the Soviet union, he said this:

> Mr. President, notwithstanding the words of the Soviet delegate, in the past 24 hours we have witnessed in Hungary one of the greatest and grimmest betrayals in history.
> This is a sad and desolate moment for all who have been striving for the extension of freedom and justice throughout the world.
> For ten years all the resources of a great empire were used to weaken and destroy all feeling for national and personal freedom in Hungary and the other countries of eastern Europe on whom communist regimes have been imposed after world war II by foreign forces.

Are we not all happy in this House of Commons to know that not only the present Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs but the Leader of the Opposition, as leader of the opposition and more particularly as secretary of state for external affairs, and the two prime ministers who were in office prior to this government's coming into office and after the foundation of the United Nations in 1945 all gave expression to views which in principle were of the same character and tenor. It is important to realize that what the Prime Minister said was a continuation of policy. When we realize the freedom that we enjoy in this country and that people in the other free lands of the western world and elsewhere enjoy, when we think of the subjugation of people in Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary, the Ukraine and elsewhere, I think it is up to us in this free parliament to take whatever means we can to assert our dissatisfaction with the policies of a government that have resulted in such subjugation. That is what the Prime Minister and others in Canada have done.

My final comment about this is that I would have preferred the Prime Minister not to wait for the next general assembly but, as I said, to have instructed the Canadian delegation to take formal action at the last assembly to express once again, as was expressed by others in other years, our regret that colonial policy as practised by the Soviet union had resulted in the denial to so many millions of people behind the iron curtain of that freedom which we all cherish and regard as vital for the development of human personality.

But there is one other aspect of this matter, in addition to taking steps at once, which occurred to me last fall and to which I gave expression after discussing it with members of our party. The United States, through the president had said that if there was going to be a general conference on a divided Berlin and a divided Germany, it would be anxious to see that the subject matter of such a conference should not be confined to the question of a divided Germany or a divided Berlin. I think it was the United Kingdom government that said that such a conference should deal primarily with that question. The United States thought at that time at least that such a conference might encompass a discussion not only of the problem of Germany but of the major problems that divided east and west at that time. While we are not one of the occupying powers, it occurred to me, because we have at least a constitutional link with the declaration made by the occupying powers as to their right of access to West Berlin, that if there was going to be a package deal, Canada might seek to persuade the major western powers that they should include on their agenda a consideration of the problem that we have been discussing in the last few minutes and that part of the settlement should be the restoration of freedom to the people in these subjugated lands.

I do not know whether the government has taken any steps along this line, but I suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who I know is interested in these matters, that in his discussions with his opposite numbers, particularly from the United States and the United Kingdom, he should express what I believe the Canadian people would want him to express, that is our view that in the settlements we seek to make with the Soviet union to bring about a better understanding between east and west, consideration should be given to the steps we feel should be taken by the Soviet union to accord to the people of the subjugated nations the freedom which, since the United Nations came into being in 1945, has been accorded to over a billion people who now enjoy freedom under the canopy of self-determination, extended to them in many instances as a result of the decision of former colonial powers. This is a matter that concerns many millions of people in the world. I do not think for one minute that any hon. member will take exception to the views I have expressed tonight.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

I am glad to have put on the record not only the views of the Prime Minister, but alongside them, the views on the same subject of the Leader of the Opposition, uttered at a time when he had the opportunity open to him as a member of a government to express the strong feeling that Canadians have against the subjugation of these people, whose sons and daughters now take part in the Canadian family. This should be one of the objectives of our foreign policy. I am sure it is. If it is, we should not hesitate to speak about it in this house.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East really has not been aware of just what has been going on. I think most other people in Canada know that the Prime Minister in particular has been in the lead among all western statesmen in urging that these subjugated peoples must be freed. All that is necessary is to read and to follow the reports in the Russian press to realize who it is who is considered to be the main western statesman demanding freedom for these peoples.

It is all very well for the hon. member for Essex East to wake up on March 8, 1962, and realize that there is a problem, but the government acted on it many long months ago and has been acting continuously during the intervening period. At the United Nations in the fall of 1960 when the heads of state were in attendance it will be remembered that Premier Khrushchev made his strongest appeal on the question of colonialism. He demanded that all colonies should be freed by the end of that year. The reason the Soviet leader did this was that all of the new members of the United Nations, particularly the African but also some Asian countries, are highly emotional on the question of colonialism. They cannot understand why anybody in the world should have to live in a colony. The Russians never lose an opportunity—those of us who have been in New York have seen this—to try to make trouble for the west because of this deep conviction of the African and Asian countries. This was Premier Khrushchev's main line of attack in the session of 1960. He made an exceedingly strong speech on the question of colonialism. It fell to our own Prime Minister to be the first western leader to speak after Premier Khrushchev had spoken, and in his speech our Prime Minister devastated the arguments of Premier Khrushchev. There were Liberals there with our delegation and they told me personally that it had been a magnificent speech, one of the finest speeches ever made by a Canadian prime minister.

It had the effect of ruining the Russian initiative for the whole session of 1960 on the question of colonialism. I am not questioning that speeches had been made in earlier sessions by those who then represented the government of Canada. But I do not believe there was ever a more magnificent speech made in the United Nations by any Canadian than the speech made in the fall of 1960 by our own Prime Minister. Certainly, there was never a more powerful appeal on behalf of the subjugated people of Europe.

Then, the hon. member for Essex East insinuates that last fall the Prime Minister should have had action taken in the United Nations. He knows very well, just as well as any of us who have been at the United Nations know, that this came up late in the fall just when the business of the United Nations was finishing. All the committees with the exception of the fourth committee, which is the trusteeship committee, finished their work before Christmas. It is true that the first committee met occasionally in the resumed session after Christmas, but practically all the work of the United Nations was finished before Christmas.

It would have been utterly absurd for an attempt to be made in the dying days of that session to tack on an amendment to some other resolution and hope thereby to deal with this question. The Prime Minister took the proper stand when he said in November that this subject would be dealt with at the next session of the general assembly. It is all very well to try to leave the inference that the Prime Minister made a big speech in 1960 and then did nothing about it ever since. If representatives are to be judged on that basis then I could easily say that the present Leader of the Opposition made a speech in 1949 and then did nothing about it ever since. I do not make that accusation because it is not fair. On the same basis, I am afraid it is not very fair to the hon. member for Essex East to try to insinuate tonight that the Prime Minister of Canada has not been following up on this issue which is so dear to his heart and for which he has fought so long, even long before he came into this House of Commons.

We all recognize why this subject has been dragged in tonight. It was dragged in as a sort of pre-election speech. I do not doubt but that the people across the country will realize that is exactly what the hon. member for Essex East had in his mind. But do not make any mistake about it, the government has been fighting for the subjugated people of Europe since it came into power and will continue to do so. We only hope we will have the support of the opposition party in that effort.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here awaiting an opportunity to speak about jackpine and tamarack and the exotic air of the virgin forest. The debate in the last hour or so has inspired me to ask the minister a few questions. I should like to say that I feel there are a few lively ghosts in this house tonight. I am thinking specifically of the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres, the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Middlesex East. It seems to me that these particular gentlemen, in their remarks in the very recent past, have had a decided effect upon everything that has gone on in the house tonight. For that reason, I should like to come directly to the minister and ask him a couple of questions regarding comment that seems to be raging in the country and released to a certain extent by these gentlemen.

I should like to ask him first of all, has it been his experience in the United Nations that he has been hindered in any way in his operation through discovering that the former incumbent under a previous government of the position was considered to be soft to the communists?

Mr. Green: I am not going to comment on statements that are made outside this house by private members of the house. I suggest that the question now before the committee is on the financing of the United Nations.

Mr. Hellyer: Don't evade like the rest.

Mr. Fisher: Where has this discussion been? It has ranged all over and the minister is one of the ones who has been ranging.

An hon. Member: Get back to the item.

Mr. Fisher: This is an item relating to the United Nations and the discussion has ranged in many directions. The minister, not the least, has been responsible for that. Now, I should like to ask the minister straight. When you took over at the United Nations, did you find you were working under any handicap as the result of the performance of the Leader of the Opposition when he was secretary of state for external affairs? Can't you answer yes or no?

Mr. Green: Don't try to talk to me just in that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: If you are prepared to discuss the merits of any question dealing with the United Nations, I am quite prepared to answer a question of that kind. I am not going to deal with this. I have not made any allegations about any of my predecessors in the office of secretary of state for external affairs, and I do not intend to do so.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think this is the first time I have ever taken any part in the debates on the estimates for the Department of External Affairs. I am moved to do so this evening for two reasons. I am moved to do so first because of the last observation made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in reply to the hon. member for Essex East. I do not believe the latter part of what the hon. gentleman said was quite worthy of the rest of his contribution to the debate, and I will tell him why. The hon. member for Essex East commended the Prime Minister throughout. He commended everything he had done about this matter, but he did point out in doing so that what the Prime Minister was doing was following historic continuity going right back to the beginning of the United Nations. My hon. friend demonstrated this point over and over again by quotations.

Now, it seems to me that the Secretary of State for External Affairs might have shown the same generosity, the same largeness of spirit, that was shown by the hon. member for Essex East by saying, that is quite true; we have followed the continuity in this matter because it represents the views of all Canadians, as it does, except for a small minority of communists in this country. The kind of implication that the hon. gentleman was seeking to make, that some of us have these matters more at heart than others, I suggest is quite unworthy of him as I suggest it is unworthy of any other Canadian. I would not say for one single minute that, because in 1953, in Winnipeg, my right hon. friend Mr. St. Laurent, at a Ukrainian-Canadian conference said this:

> All decent Canadians share your desire to show the people in the Ukrainian homeland and the other countries dominated by communism who still long for personal liberty and national freedom that they are neither forgotten nor deserted.

I would not say Mr. St. Laurent felt more keenly about that than the Prime Minister. I would not think of saying it. I would say he felt as keenly, every bit as keenly. My hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, on September 26, 1949, long before the Prime Minister had any opportunity—I am sure the Prime Minister had the same sentiments, but he did not have the opportunity—said this, and I think the quotation has already been put on the record so I will not read it all:

> Imperialism of the old kind is a rapidly diminishing force—

Then, he went on to deal with this Russian imperialism, and to point out, as my hon. friend from Essex East has pointed out this evening, how repugnant it was, how dangerous it was for the peace of the world and for everything that decent men hold dear. That is what was done. It seems to me we have enough things to play politics about in this country without playing politics about which of us is most anxious to see other human beings liberated. That kind of politics we can well do without.

Mr. Jones: Why don't you shut up about it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not making comparisons.

Some hon. Members: You started it.

Mr. Pickersgill: As everyone knows I have a good deal of respect and regard for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as a human being. I have a good deal of regard for his human sympathies and I do not believe there is any member in the house who is more anxious than he to see his fellowmen free in every part of the world; but I do not say he is more so than the rest of us, and I think he is modest enough that he would not say so either.

I suggest that we have an end to this kind of childish competition. It is only within the next day or two that Hungarians outside Hungary will be celebrating their national day. Why outside Hungary? Because those inside Hungary are enslaved by an imperialist power. At a moment in 1956 it seemed possible that the Soviet empire was cracking in Poland and in Hungary, when thousands of Hungarians rose to fight for the freedom of their country. I well remember when the Russians came in and ruthlessly overran them and they had to escape with nothing but their lives. What country of all the countries in the world did the most for those refugees to make sure that they would not be driven—because Austria could not support them—to return to Hungary which, if they had, would have been the greatest victory the communists could have won in all the years since the October revolution?

If it had not been for the contribution made by the government of Canada under my right hon. friend, Mr. St. Laurent, and under my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, and with the warm support—I have never failed to acknowledge it—of the official opposition and other parties in the house at that time when we took the unprecedented step, never undertaken before in Canada, of admitting these people freely, paying their way, admitting them without health examinations or any other formalities, they would have been forced back under soviet domination. We in Canada admitted more Hungarian refugees than any other country in the world except the United States, and practically as many as the United States, and five years from that time these people are now becoming citizens of Canada and already have made a great contribution to this country.

Surely that is evidence enough of what all of us in this country feel about this question of the liberation of the enslaved people behind the iron curtain, and I suggest we have an end to this competition about who is their greatest friend. All decent Canadians want to achieve this objective and I suggest we get back to discussing the relative merits of our political parties in promoting the growth of our own country and in balancing the budget, and deal with those problems about which we can do something practical if we want to, instead of engaging—not inside this house but outside it—in what is becoming a campaign of mud-slinging in this country.

Mr. McGrath: You started it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I repeat sir that I commend the speech made by the Prime Minister. I commend everything he has done in this matter. I commend everything done by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I would like to hear him, in the same unqualified way, pay the same tribute to others in other parts of the house.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

Forest research branch—

635. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $80,000.

Mr. Fisher: In the discussion we had on the previous occasion on these estimates, towards the end the minister made a statement which was very much appreciated. I have no quarrel with it, but I made remarks during that discussion to the effect that I had found the forestry profession very confused in so far as its purposes and goals were concerned. Since then I have had some reaction from the foresters whose attention was directed to these remarks, and I want to make some further comments in relation to the forestry profession just to put on record more clearly what I meant.

The country at the present time has four or five forestry schools. Normally forestry is a four-year university course and it produces people who are trained in both the scientific and technical aspects of forestry, and with some experience in the matter of logging on the industry's side of it. The pattern has been that little over half these foresters go to work for the various pulp and paper and lumber companies across the country, with the rest going to work for various government agencies such as the one the estimates for which we are now discussing.

There is a tendency on the part of the industrial forester to look upon the government forester with a critical eye, because in most of the provinces his operations are supervised by the government forester. In addition the terms of the leases under which most companies operate follow the regulations and statutes put out by the provincial forestry services. This leads to one kind of a conflict between the two, but a further fact is that in both the provincial forestry services and in the industry itself the professionally trained forester has not as yet made many of the top positions. There still seems to be a preference for the man who comes up through the bookkeeping and business side of the operations to have managerial control, rather than someone who has been specifically trained in forestry.

To hon. members who may feel I am oversimplifying the case I can only suggest that they look very quickly at the large pulp and paper corporations in Canada and if they find two or three foresters—I think H. R. MacMillan is an exception—who have reached the very peak positions I would be very surprised.

In terms of this confusion you have the tension between the government forester and the industrial forester, together with the suspicion that exists in many cases. On top of that you have the general attempt of the forest industries, and I am not blaming them here, to escape as much as possible from the regulations and controls which they have to meet. In doing this through the Canadian forest industries' various associations, they have managed to create a climate of publicity that many people are accepting and yet many professional foresters, who know what they are saying is not exactly right, never object to it. As a consequence, when the foresters themselves get together in their meetings and professional groups, a great deal of time is spent really in discussing nothing but in trying to get away from this.

I want to pick an example of what I mean by the popular progaganda that is put out—I do not mean propaganda in a nasty sense at all—by the large forest companies. I have one here entitled "New sounds in the forest". It is beautifully coloured and illustrated and it is put out by Abitibi Power and Paper Company. I just want to read a few of the sentences from this brochure to indicate why I quarrel with the role of the professional forester at the present time. The first sentence to which I refer reads:

> The land cut over this year should have a similar crop 100 years from now.

This is what is ideal, but I wonder whether anyone who has been around the cut overs in the boreal forest really thinks that information is very accurate. Later on this lovely brochure says:

> Except when fires and insect infestations occur, the result of planned cutting is a satisfactory new and natural forest 85 per cent of the time.

I would suggest that Abitibi cannot prove that 85 per cent figure; they cannot even come close to it. I would suggest, on the other hand, that Abitibi cannot be proved wrong on that 85 per cent figure. This is what I am suggesting to the minister he should get his professional foresters working on, because I have heard it from some foresters that cut overs in the boreal forest are coming back in perhaps 65 or 70 per cent of the sites, but in many ways no one is actually sure whether the stocking is adequate. No one has really worked out a policy for the sites when they are not coming back. Almost any forester in the boreal forest will tell you that the best spruces come off the swamps. The black spruce swamps are the source of the very best spruce, and yet that is where the regeneration is most inadequate and that is where you get thousands of acres in our part of the country where five, ten or fifteen years after the cut there is really nothing worth while growing and there is really no black spruce swamp of any kind; yet there is this statement in the brochure that says that 85 per cent of the time a natural forest comes back as a result of planned cutting.

The brochure goes on to indicate that there is a great deal of experimentation taking place in ways of cutting the forest so that they will get better regeneration. I do not know how much experimentation has really taken place in a genuine way. I know there are very many logging techniques being worked out. For example, we are now working on a machine that will walk into the bush, cut the tree, limb it and prepare it for loading on to the truck, all in one operation, doing away with the chain saw and the whole operation of cutting as we now know it in the forest.

These are the kind of statements that are made by these companies.

This is another one that is a real laugh to anyone who has been around a pulpwood limit. I have talked not only to logging managers but to the pulp cutters themselves. The kind of pulp cutters we have in northern Ontario today are not worrying about the small trees, but this is what the Abitibi brochure says:

> Trees which are too small to cut are left standing. Cone bearing tops and branches are scattered between skid tracks to provide seed for new growth and protection for the young trees already firmly established.

That is a lovely picture but it is not the actual practice in more than a fraction of the cases. This is not the minister's responsibility, but in the sense that these kind of practices, if they were indulged in widely, are good or bad, it is his responsibility to let us know, not the scale but whether they are worth while. This sounds very good, but it really is not the practice. It certainly is not the practice as I know it on the majority of the Abitibi limits in our area, and they are of considerable size.

Then we get this statement:

> Constant effort is being made to preserve the young trees present at the time of cutting and to develop economical logging methods that promote natural reseeding.

Well, I challenge anyone to visit any of the cleared cuttings in the boreal forest and see where a real effort is being made to preserve the young trees. The only way this can be done is to work on the cutters, because they are the people doing the job. I have spent hours watching cutters on pulp and paper limits and I have yet to see them worry about the young underbrush or young trees that are coming up. Their whole incentive is toward production. You cannot blame them for this; that is what they are paid for; the more cords they turn out, the more money they make. Therefore they cannot have top production and worry about the smaller trees or the smaller growth that may make the next forest. This is just not in their minds.

Here again I would appreciate having from the minister's foresters an assessment of the forestry education and approach of the average cutter in this country. One of the other points that is made in the Abitibi brochure is this:

> Our target is vigorous young pulpwood stands.

It goes on to say:

> However, as trees grow, they face the twin threats of fire and insect damage. Canadians, young and old, should be constantly aware that forest fires, eight times out of ten, are caused by human carelessness. A fire blackened forest is a scar which takes a decade to heal—a century to replace.

This may be very true, but there are a great many suggestions today that we need controlled burning in our forestry practices, and as yet I know of no really large scale studies in Canada by forestry experts to indicate how this can be done practically. The Abitibi brochure concludes with the sentence:

> But, nature through protection and wise forest management provides the forest of our future.

I think that nature through protection and wise forest management will provide the forests of the future, but I am very skeptical that management is providing it today. This, it seems to me, is the onus that is upon the minister's foresters to determine the methods by which this can be done.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. I think it is ten o'clock. There are one or two hon. members who have some brief observations to make. I would not anticipate that it will take very long.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the house leader if he could enlighten us—I think he told us what we were expected to do tomorrow—and give us a preview of next week, particularly the early part of the week.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we propose starting with Bill No. C-67, which relates to the proposed railway line in the Gaspe peninsula. That has been through the committee and might be completed very quickly. Then we will follow with the supplementary estimates.

I had hoped that we would finish the supplementary estimates this week because we are spending more than the normal time on supplementaries, and there will still be final supplementaries coming before us during this month. But uncertain as to whether or not we will complete the supplementaries tomorrow, I cannot forecast the business for Monday and Tuesday.

If we do not finish the supplementaries we might have to continue with them on Monday, because certain works will come to an end and people will be without pay unless we are able to get these supplementaries approved.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 9, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GRANTS TO NATIONAL COUNCIL AND P.E.I. MEMORIAL FOUNDATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are two announcements I should like to make in connection with preparations for the observance of the one hundredth anniversary of confederation. The first has to do with the Canadian centenary council, which is holding its annual meeting today and tomorrow. It has associated with it some 160 national associations, either directly or by way of affiliation. The council was established to stimulate interest and participation on the part of the general public in the preparations for the observance of the centennial of confederation.

I wish now to inform the house that, subject to the approval by parliament of the moneys involved, the government will make a grant under the National Centennial Act in the amount of $25,000 early in the fiscal year 1962-63 to assist the Canadian centenary council in its activities. Active participation by citizens everywhere in the country is essential if Canadians are to make the centennial one of the truly significant events in their history.

Second, subject also to the approval by parliament of the funds involved, an order in council will be passed early in the next fiscal year to provide an interim grant of $250,000 to the organization known as the fathers of confederation memorial citizens foundation to enable architectural work to be done in connection with the memorial buildings to be erected in Charlottetown by the foundation to commemorate the conference there in 1864. In addition there will be a grant, inclusive of the above interim grant, in the amount of one half the construction costs of the buildings in question, but not exceeding a total grant of $2.8 million.

It will be a condition of the main grant that the foundation shall not award a contract for the construction of the buildings until it has satisfied the appropriate officers of the federal government that the foundation possesses sufficient funds, including the grant, to cover the full cost of construction of the buildings in question.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we on this side will support any government move, any request for funds, for the preparatory work which will be required to make this celebration, as the Prime Minister calls it, one of the significant events in our history. He can count on the full co-operation of this side in the work to be done.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): The members of this group support wholeheartedly the government's proposals for the celebration of our centennial. However, for certain reasons, Mr. Speaker, we would like to know if the Prime Minister expects to be in office when the centennial is celebrated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer is in the affirmative.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a very simple question arising out of his comment about the centennial committee. I wonder whether he can tell us who is the chairman of the centennial committee.

Mr. Pearson: Don't be ashamed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will secure a record of not only the chairman but of the other members for the hon. gentleman. I note that his curiosity has been aroused.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TABLING OF REPORT "PRIVATE AND PUBLIC INVESTMENT IN CANADA—OUTLOOK 1962"

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today the report entitled "Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1962" which summarizes the results of a recent survey of capital spending intentions. The survey, which is conducted annually, is designed to cover anticipated outlays for new plant and equipment, institutional and government facilities and housing.

Canadian Economy

Capital expenditure plans for all sectors of the economy, as outlined in this report, involve total outlays in 1962 of $8.6 billion. This is 6 per cent above the $8.1 billion actually spent last year. Higher capital spending is indicated for each of the major sectors of the economy, with business investment up 2 per cent, residential construction up 4 per cent and institutional and public building up 16 per cent.

Within the business area most of the added strength will be in key commodity producing industries. Capital outlays in manufacturing are expected to increase by 16 per cent, mainly as a result of expanded programs in primary iron and steel, non-ferrous metal processing and petroleum refining. Other areas of business where plans call for significantly larger capital outlays in 1962 include iron ore and non-ferrous metal mining, electric power and communications, and retail trade. Less will be spent in 1962 in pipe line and gas processing plant construction, new office building and in acquiring equipment for the commercial airlines, unusually large programs having been implemented in these fields last year.

The major factor contributing to larger outlays in the area of institutional and public investment is the greatly expanded program of technical school construction which has been made possible through extensive financial assistance by the federal government. Significant increases are also indicated in anticipated outlays for the construction of university and hospital buildings and for federal, provincial and municipal government projects.

Present spending intentions call for a higher level of investment in 1962 in eight of the ten provinces. Only in Alberta and British Columbia, where very large programs of pipe line construction were completed last year, is a lower level of capital spending anticipated.

A capital expenditure program of the size indicated will reinforce the expansion in general activity now under way in Canada. Higher outlays for both new construction and new machinery and equipment will mean increased activity in the construction and related trades and in equipment producing industries. The results of the survey show also that a continuing high proportion of the national product is being devoted to the renewal and expansion of capital facilities.

The two copies I am tabling have been printed in English, which has been the custom over the years. However, I am also having copies printed in French, and they will be made available very shortly.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Speaker: I take it these documents are not submitted under statutory obligation. Will the house give the minister leave to table the documents in question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CANADIAN ECONOMIC OUTLOOK, 1962

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him if he could accompany the tabling of the document he tabled this morning by tabling the document called The Canadian Economic Outlook, 1962, which is prepared in his department.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TABLING OF ARRANGEMENT FOR OPERATION OF GASPE RAILWAY

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): By leave of the house I beg to table two copies of the draft arrangement with the Canadian National Railway Company as to the terms and conditions under which the company will act as agent of the crown for the construction, maintenance, management and operation of the Gaspe railway. The order in council to be passed setting out the terms and conditions as shown in the draft arrangement will constitute the agreement with the Canadian National, as was done in the case of the Hudson Bay railway.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON ESTIMATED FEDERAL DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he would care to comment on the Canadian tax foundation's estimate of a $812 million deficit for the fiscal year ending this month, and an estimated $700 million deficit for the forthcoming year.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The Canadian tax foundation makes a study of this nature every year with varying degrees of accuracy in relation to what may prove to be the official government figures in this regard.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRUCE COMMISSIONS—REPORTED RUMOURS RESPECTING CANADIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the light of the ugly rumours and speculation now prevailing in the newspapers, whether in the public interest he has any additional statement to make concerning Canadians now serving with the international truce commissions in Asia?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I dealt with this during the debate last night. I stated at the time that I thought it would not be in the public interest for me to go further than I had gone, and I am still of that opinion.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): As a supplementary question, when it is a matter of such deep concern surely in the public interest the minister should take the earliest opportunity to inform the house as to what this involves and the steps being taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I just want to say to the hon. member that it is hardly a supplementary question he is asking.

Mr. Green: In reply to the statement by the hon. member for Trinity I suggest that he look up the records when his party were in office, and I think he will find they did exactly the same thing.

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure if that is the case—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hellyer: —it is no excuse. This is a serious matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Trinity is an experienced member of the house, and knows this is not a time for debate.

AGRICULTURE

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—REQUESTS FOR ASSISTANCE RESPECTING SEED AND FEED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received any requests from the prairie provinces for assistance in providing feed and seed?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): The federal government and the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have been sharing jointly since last July in a program of assistance toward the cost of transporting fodder into feed deficient areas. This is still in effect.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Requests have been received from the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba for the federal government to share with the provinces the costs of a program of freight assistance on seed where it is necessary to bring seed from a distance, and this is now under consideration. I may say that the hon. member for Timiskaming asked a somewhat similar question a day or two ago and this will serve as an answer to it.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTS OF C.N.R. AND T.C.A.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him when he will be in a position to table the annual reports of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines, and when he expects it will be possible for the special committee dealing with government owned operations to convene in order to study these reports.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I expect these reports to be tabled toward the end of next week.

[Later:]

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question.

Mr. Churchill: I will take it as notice.

Mr. Chevrier: He was in the house a moment ago, and I see he is coming back to his seat now. In relation to his answer to my question a moment ago, that he expected to table the annual reports of the two crown corporations next week, I wonder whether the minister has been in communication with the presidents of these two corporations and whether he can tell the house when the special committee is likely to meet to discuss these annual reports.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, whenever a decision is taken for the committee to sit, it will be announced in the proper fashion in the house.

TRENT CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO IMPOSITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is consideration being given at any level in the Department of Transport to the imposition of some form of tolls on the Trent canal?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No change in the present situation is contemplated at the present time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

APPOINTMENT OF A FRENCH-SPEAKING DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Forestry. Does he intend to appoint a French-speaking assistant deputy minister in his department? If so, could he give us his name?

(Text):

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the answer to my hon. friend's question is yes. Arrangements have been made to secure the services of Dr. L. Z. Rousseau, distinguished member of the faculty of Laval University and dean of forestry in that institution. He will be assuming these duties and responsibilities on April 1. The government and the department are very pleased that the services of this distinguished forester and educationalist will be available for the benefit of Canada in the important field of forestry.

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of one answer which we have received this morning, may I ask the Prime Minister when he will be in a position to announce the appointment of the under secretary of state.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what has been said on a number of previous occasions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if it is the intention at the earliest moment to set up the external affairs committee.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a question to be dealt with by the house leader. The hon. member for Essex East knows that the estimates cannot be referred until they have been introduced. They have not yet been called.

LIVESTOCK

RABIES—COMPENSATION TO QUEBEC FARMERS FOR LOSS IN OUTBREAKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. J. Martel (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, or in his absence to the acting minister or his parliamentary secretary, notice of which I gave to his department. My question is as follows.

(Translation):

Could the Minister of Agriculture tell the house if his department has kept complete records of all cases of rabies among animals in the province of Quebec, since the beginning of its immunization program to check the ravages of this disease which even threatens human beings?

I should also like to proceed immediately with the second part of my question, which is: If the answer to the first part is yes, what was the amount of the compensation paid for animals destroyed because of this disease, under the agreement signed with the government of Ontario, and what share of these payments did the federal government pay?

Furthermore, is the federal Department of Agriculture willing to see that similar benefits are paid to Quebec farmers, many of whom have suffered from the ravages of this terrible disease, especially in the constituencies of Pontiac-Temiscamingue, Villeneuve and Chapleau—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member comes to the third part of his question I think I should remind him that while the first part seemed to be relevant, long questions of that kind asking for statistical information are more properly put on the order paper and dealt with in writing.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I humbly submit that the second part is very important, too, because this matter has been delayed for a long time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Like everything else by this government.

Mr. Martel: I have almost completed the second part of my question.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member got his question fully on the record now?

Mr. Martel: Well, I gave notice to the minister.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CHATHAM, N.B.—REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): On Wednesday the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi asked a question concerning the Canadian National Railways freight and express offices at Chatham, New Brunswick.

I am advised by the management of the railway that studies have been under way concerning the handling of freight and express in the whole maritime area, but no decision has been made with respect to any change in the offices at Chatham.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM, B.C.—SUGGESTED IMPOSITION OF CURFEW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. My question is based on a telegram I have received from a representative of the fraternal council of reformed Doukhobors, generally known as the Sons of Freedom. It reads as follows:

I was instructed by fraternal council of reformed Doukhobors bring your attention re matters Kootenay district. February 19 council notified Magistrate Evans of Nelson in presence of R.C.M.P. that a curfew be in effect on our settlement. This was further brought to attention of Justice Minister Fulton, Ottawa—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it the hon. member's question relates to the imposition of a curfew as requested by the telegram. As was well pointed out yesterday, the immediate responsibility for curfew and such matters is not federal but provincial. If there is anything relating to the responsibility of the Minister of Justice, perhaps the hon. member would ask his question.

Mr. Herridge: I think there is a related responsibility. I shall not read further, but I wish to ask the Minister of Justice this question because he is interested in the maintenance of law and order in Canada. In view of this suggestion coming from the fraternal council itself that a curfew be imposed on their own community, would the minister bring this to the attention of the attorney general of British Columbia as it may offer a first step toward getting some control over this situation, with the voluntary co-operation of these people?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I am sorry it has taken so long to bring out the facts, but this has already been done through the channels of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Herridge: Very glad to hear it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROVISION OF BENEFITS FOLLOWING DESTRUCTION OF POWER LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Yesterday the unofficial leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Kootenay West, asked a question regarding facilities for payment of unemployment insurance in the Kootenays as a result of the unfortunate incident which took place there. I may say that on March 7 the commission received a report that there were 300 people currently laid off and that a further 600 to 700 might be laid off subsequently. The chief commissioner and the director of insurance are now in Vancouver, and all the necessary steps are being taken to ensure adequate service.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can the minister inform the house when I may expect a reply to my question No. 31 on A. V. Roe steel operations, which was made an order for return on February 5?

(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I must say that in all such matters we try to do what is necessary to gather all the required documents so that they can be tabled. My hon. colleague can rest assured that I will do my utmost to proceed with all possible dispatch.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, did the minister have time to make inquiries about the question I put to him yesterday?

Mr. Dorion: After making inquiries, I shall give the hon. member the same reply as yesterday.

Mr. Chevrier: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dorion: If the hon. member will allow me—I take for granted that he is familiar with the Secretary of State's duties—I shall remind him that after a motion for papers is made an order for return, my functions are to ensure that the required research be undertaken so that the documents requested may be tabled. In this case various departments are involved. I am following the same procedure as always. In every case I attended to the matter.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the Secretary of State give me an approximate date on which those documents or that correspondence will be tabled?

Mr. Dorion: I would be very pleased to give this information to the hon. member, but it is impossible for me to do so, because it does not depend entirely on me but also on officials of various departments. It is difficult to give a definite date.

(Text):

HOUSING

SARNIA—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PURCHASE OF PROPERTIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has there been any discussion between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the province of Ontario in respect to the possibility of a federal-provincial purchase of properties in the Blue Water area at Sarnia?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Trinity for giving me notice of the question. In reply I would say that there have been no discussions between C.M.H.C and the province of Ontario respecting federal-provincial purchases of properties in Blue Water under section 36 of the National Housing Act.

The hon. member may be referring to the Blue Water redevelopment project. This project within the confines of the city of Sarnia is actually under way and has been undertaken by the city of Sarnia with a federal contribution under section 23 of the N.H.A. That is for urban redevelopment.

One requirement of the N.H.A. is that the province approve the acquisition and clearance of the area by the municipality. This approval has been received. I understand further that the province of Ontario has agreed to make a contribution to the city.

Mr. Hellyer: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether there is any agreement or understanding with the city of Sarnia that part of the lands be made available to the Polymer Corporation?

Mr. Walker: I should be happy to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Dorion.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN ATTITUDE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question, which I put to him at this time because I understand he will be leaving on Monday to attend the disarmament conference in Geneva on the 14th day of this month. I am sure that I express on behalf of all hon. members our sincere wish that something constructive will flow from these deliberations. We wish the minister every success.

Is the minister in a position to indicate to the house the general attitude Canada will take? Are we going to support the general proposals already given by the United States, with the support that has attended that move by the United Kingdom? Bearing in mind the question asked of the minister yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, has the minister's attention been directed to the statement of the minister of defence in the United Kingdom, Mr. Watkinson, who observed that the start in the talks ought to be a test ban agreement? He said this would not only alter the whole climate, but could be the beginning of general disarmament.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the minister comment on this matter as well as give us an indication of the government's attitude?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Personally, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his good wishes in respect of my trip to Geneva, which I plan to start on Monday.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked a question about the interrelationship between working out an agreement on a nuclear test ban and general disarmament negotiations, and I dealt with the question at that time. There is nothing further that I can add today.

For a number of weeks a very intensive study has been conducted by the five western powers, including Canada, which participated in the 10 nation disarmament committee negotiations in 1960. The plan which was proposed by President Kennedy to the United Nations last September remains the basic western approach to the disarmament negotiations and many parts of that plan were proposed in the first place by Canada. Others, of course, were proposed by other members of the group of five. A genuine effort has been made by the five western nations to work out a disarmament proposal which will go as far as possible to meet the suggestions of the five communist nations. I do not think any one of the western five is being inflexible. As negotiations proceed, changes may have to be made in the western proposals.

As the hon. member knows, Canada has taken the position that it would be a good thing to have countries added to the group of 10 for these new negotiations. That has been done, with India and Burma being added from Asia; Sweden from Europe; the United Arab Republic, Nigeria and Ethiopia from Africa; and Mexico and Brazil from Latin America. We think the fact that these eight other countries are participating may help to prevent the negotiations from being deadlocked. Of course no one can tell just what will be the actual result of the negotiations. However, we think it is helpful to have these other eight nations participating. They too have been doing a great deal in the way of preparatory work for the negotiations. We have been in touch with most of them and, as a matter of fact, have worked quite closely with some of them at the United Nations over a long period in connection with this question of disarmament.

The negotiations will probably take some time. As the house knows, they are opening at the foreign ministers level. However, I would expect that before very long the negotiators will get down to the actual business of trying to work out terms of a treaty. I would hope that would be the course followed rather than that of having a whole series of speeches. Later on when some progress has been made, or even if no progress is made, it is possible that the heads of state will meet in Geneva. That matter, of course, has not yet been settled. However, a report must be made to the United Nations disarmament commission before the first day of June. I think we can expect that there may be a meeting of the heads of state before the expiration of that time.

I am very hopeful that it will be possible to achieve results as, of course, not only is there the question of reducing arms but also of preventing the development of more deadly weapons, something which I think is even more serious than the problem of cutting down armaments which at present exist. It seems to me that this disarmament conference in Geneva is of vital importance not only to Canada but to the whole world.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POSTAGE ON MAIL ADDRESSED TO NATIONAL REVENUE DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General, and I should like to get the information as quickly as possible. In view of the fact that one can address a letter to a government department in Ottawa and not pay postage simply by franking the envelope "O.H.M.S.", can the Postmaster General explain why local postmasters are advising people that they must pay postage on letters addressed to the Department of National Revenue in Ottawa?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, this is a vital, urgent and tremendously important question. The answer simply is that mail addressed to the headquarters of the department at Ottawa is franked. Branches of the department here in Ottawa which are operating as local offices are in exactly the same position in Ottawa as branches in any other part of Canada, and postage must be paid on mail addressed to them.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask a supplementary question. I did not quite get the full import of the minister's answer, and a number of people are curious about this matter. Does his answer mean that letters posted from British Columbia to a branch of the Department of National Revenue must have postage paid on them?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, is it not a little stupid at this point to take up the time of all other members of the House of Commons with a question of detail which can be settled behind the curtains in two minutes?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR ACTION RESPECTING U.S. DRUG ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether his department has any plans for this year to meet the problem brought out by Dr. Morrell, one of his officials, in a very recent article in which he said that uncontrolled American drug advertising coming into Canada has very bad effects?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The department is watching this situation, of course, at all times

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE BETWEEN MATANE AND STE. ANNE DES MONTS, QUE.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, March 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-67, to authorize the construction and operation on behalf of Her Majesty of a line of railway in the province of Quebec between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts—Mr. Balcer —Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Construction and operation of railway line.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the other day I had almost exhausted the time allotted to me for remarks upon this bill. There are a number of further points I wish to make in connection with this rail line and why we in this group are very sceptical about the whole proposal. The first point I should like to make today is taken from the report of the royal commission on transportation, volume 2. The commission's views on the provision of new rail facilities are expressed on page 145, and it seems to me that they should be put on the record in relation to the project now before us. The report reads as follows:

> As has been indicated previously, Canada will continue to require new rail lines. The expected economic developments, particularly in mineral and forest products, will require the transportation of large tonnages at low cost. Rail transport will play a vital role in these developments. Such developments will be of great benefit to Canada and should at the same time improve the financial position of the railways.

If I may interpolate here, it seems to me that there is no guarantee or even prospect of a large tonnage of either mineral or forest products on the railway in question so far as the evidence produced by the minister is concerned. The commission goes on to say:

> Parliament should assure itself that any proposal for a new line is economically sound before approving it. The commission notes that this has in recent years been the policy that parliament has followed. We heartily approve this procedure. This is not to say that parliament should not under certain circumstances authorize construction of lines for developmental purposes when the immediate revenue cannot be expected to meet all costs. Under these circumstances, the government should be prepared to meet the deficit from public funds and not place the burden on other shippers. We have earlier recommended that the burden of existing uneconomic lines be removed from the shipper. Consequently, we cannot do otherwise than state that new lines should not become a burden. However, it is unlikely that the building of any substantial number of developmental lines will be required in the future.

I should like the minister to note this.

> In general it may well be that the provision of road or air transport as the initial transport in new areas is the best procedure to follow.

I interpolate here that the area in question already has an efficient system of road transport and, as the commission points out repeatedly, wherever you have trucking you tend to have efficient competition because it is the kind of field that an entrepreneur can get into fairly cheaply and reasonably. It seems to me that the point of the commission, that the provision of road or air transport as the initial transport is the best procedure to follow, has been made so far as this area is concerned, and we have no guarantee or indication of those high volume tonnage prospects in forest and mineral products that the commission suggests should be the main reason for putting in a branch line. The commission goes on to say:

> The commission has no need to make specific recommendations on building new rail facilities. Each such facility will require the approval of parliament and at that time parliament will have an opportunity to assure itself that the scheme is economically sound.

Have we had any assurance that this scheme is economically sound? I should like hon. members to look at the figure of $14 million as the estimated total cost and the maximum figure of $250,000 as the estimated operating reveune in the first year or years. The Canadian Pacific Railway is one of the few railways in Canada that makes some kind of a profit and pays a dividend, and anyone who owns Canadian Pacific shares knows that in recent years the railway has not earned over 4 per cent. Let us assume that Canadian National Railways can make a profit on this line with operating revenue of $250,000 a year. If it even matches Canadian Pacific's profit on operating revenue, what will the figure amount to? It will probably amount to $12,000 a year. That is the likely profit prospect based on an operating revenue of $250,000 a year. How then can they possibly come anywhere near meeting the capital investment cost of $14 million? I suggest that we simply have not had from the minister or his officials any indication of the economic feasibility of this line.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, in a friendly way, said that we should call this line the Belzile-English line. I thought it was a pleasant remark. However, I wonder if these two gentlemen are worth respectively, in these terms, $7 million each. Here we have a situation where to develop an area the sum of $14 million is going to be expended, and we can hardly see any economic justification for that expenditure.

Now, I think any members of this house looking at the regions of the country that have fallen behind in economic growth, want to see national resources developed to help them. I think, for example, the sympathy for the maritimes in the rest of the country is enormous in this regard. I would assume that Gaspe has the same difficulties, if not compounded. In this sense we are very strongly for national aid going to this area to improve the economy. However, the particular means that has been taken to accomplish this purpose, it seems to me will do very little and cost a great deal. The sum of $14 million is substantial enough that, applied in another way, it would mean a subsidy to every individual in that area, according to the population figures, of almost $200.

Mr. Morris: I wonder if I might ask the hon. gentleman a question. Is he aware that we in the maritimes, of whom he has just spoken, regard the provision of adequate rail service not as a matter of growth but as a matter of right?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member has made this point, and I should like to give him an answer that the minister gave to a question in committee concerning rail facilities today. If the hon. member will read the report of the royal commission on transportation he will find that is no more a matter of right than the right to have television reception. The whole theme of this report is that we need to have a balanced transportation system in our economy, and the question is whether a railway line, in this particular case, meets that objective.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, when we discussed the matter, Wednesday, I asked the minister if he could table the agreement passed between the federal government and the Canada and Gulf Terminal in 1903 or 1904; is the minister now in a position to table that document?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have here two copies of the contract passed between the Matane and Gaspe Railways Company, whose name was later changed to Canada and Gulf Terminal, and I wish to table both documents.

Mr. Bourget: Are those documents both in French and English?

Mr. Balcer: No, in English only.

Mr. Bourget: Why is there no French copy of those agreements? It has been two days since I asked the minister to table that document and there is none yet in French. And we often hear them boast that everything goes fast with the Conservatives. It is the same situation with regard to the recent agreement passed between the Canadian National Railway company and the government, which has been written in English only. Why has the minister not seen to it that the agreement be published in both languages?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I have been in the House of Commons for 13 years and I think the record of this government, on that count, is quite an improvement over what was done in the past.

The documents I am now tabling are in English. Because of our desire to accommodate hon. members, all documents they may require are tabled and we readily do so. But in this case, we did not have any French copy. In any case, you may rest assured, Mr. Chairman, that we are now having the document translated and that it will probably be tabled in the house today—I could not say at what time exactly—but it will be very soon. It is an eight page document, in very small type, and I think the translation of such a document will require several hours' work by our translators.

I wish to assure the house that it is with pleasure that we are doing this, and besides, all documents from my department are treated in the same way.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak again on this bill. However, now that I have listened closely to the remarks made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) I cannot do otherwise than give the house a few explanations.

I am always more and more amazed at the fact that we have here, in this house, what could be commonly called a "superman". Here is a man who knows everything and who can discuss forestry, agriculture or anything that concerns Canada.

I truly respect his great competence but I cannot help adding that there is nothing worse than a man who has two eyes and refuses to see or two ears and refuses to listen.

On several instances, I have, like many others, explained in this house the economic possibilities of the Gaspe peninsula. I do not think I have to accept any lecture from the hon. member for Port Arthur, who does not even know the size of my constituency, who has never visited the people I represent and who has never become acquainted with the correct situation in the Gaspe area.

As for me, I have been sitting in this house since 1957. I have heard discussions on problems concerning western Canada, with which I was not familiar; I listened carefully to the speakers and I showed interest in their problems but without taking part in the discussion. I would be very ill-advised to discuss problems I know nothing about. I am bright enough to realize it.

An hon. Member: He is an expert.

Mr. English: We have particular problems in the Gaspe peninsula. When he speaks about the trucking industry, it is obvious that the hon. member for Port Arthur does not know much about the situation in my area. With regard to the province of Quebec or my riding, he is prompted by a certain feeling of hatred for all projects of interest to the province of Quebec. That is all. It is merely a personal revenge and I feel bound to draw the house's attention to it.

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Under the rules of the house has any hon. member the right to impute motives to another hon. member?

Mr. Pigeon: We have approved.

The Deputy Chairman: I should caution the parliamentary secretary at this stage. I was having some difficulty in hearing the interpretation because of his close proximity to the Chair, but I do wish to caution him and ask him to keep his contribution on a more impersonal basis, if he will.

(Translation):

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, if I made unparliamentary remarks—

Mr. Johnson: Not at all.

Mr. English: —I shall take them back and say this: when the hon. member for Port Arthur went to Quebec city, he said that we had nothing in the province of Quebec except Maurice Richard and Lili St. Cyr. I ask the hon. member for Port Arthur whether those are not the actual words he said when he was in Quebec city. Let him raise a point of order if he believes I am wrong. Besides, I wonder which one of us is wrong if not the one who made such a statement in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. English)?

Does he not believe that if the hon. member for Port Arthur met Lili St. Cyr, he would change his opinion about the province of Quebec?

Mr. Johnson: She was not from Quebec.

Mr. English: He would not change his mind but his outlook would be different.

Mr. Chairman, all hon. members feel very strongly about the construction of that line. I know that every one of us, including members of the opposition who have received the visits of numerous delegations and who have considered the problem, agree that the Gaspe peninsula will finally be developed.

I may not have the knowledge of the hon. member for Port Arthur, but I know full well, for instance, that there is a mine in operation in the Gaspe area, the Gaspe Copper Mines in Murdochville. I am sure that the owners of that mine will be glad to hear that a railroad will be built in the district. Indeed, a delegation from Murdochville came to see me in that connection and they asked me to support the project.

I am aware of the fact that at present those people have to transport the ore by truck over a distance of 65 miles to ship it by rail. Those additional costs paralyse the future development of the Gaspe peninsula, Mr. Chairman.

We also have in the district, the Federal Metals Company; its president, Mr. Pierre Beauchemin, is also president of the East Sullivan Gold Mine Company. That mine is as rich as that of the Gaspe Copper Mines and its president is willing to spend millions to operate it but he clearly stated, when he accompanied a delegation to Ottawa, that he will not spend a red cent on the mine as long as there is no railroad. I cannot blame him. It does not make sense to transport ore by truck from that part of Gaspe North, back of Ste. Anne des Monts, to Matane, then put it on board a privately operated train up to Mont Joli and from there on board a C.N.R. train to Montreal or the United States.

We cannot urge these people to spend millions of dollars in the Gaspe peninsula without first providing them with adequate means of communication.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to see trucking companies take the ore from the Gaspe mines and try to carry it to the United States or elsewhere over the roads in this area. I should like to see that. I have yet to see them do it. I know that trucks cannot undertake such a job, because they cannot carry enough of the ore taken from our mines.

The hon. member for Port Arthur said that he fails to see why we ought to spend millions on a railway line in that part of Gaspe. It is very easy to come here and talk about expenditures and of this and that. But I think that if the hon. member had any love for the province of Quebec and also for the Gaspe peninsula, he would have no objection, for I believe that, in its whole history, this is the only substantial amount Gaspe has ever received. And yet, it was discovered in 1534. It seems to me that the hon. member for Port Arthur is in no position to come to us and criticize the government for spending the sum of $16 million on a railway.

Mr. Chairman, let me point out that this sum of $16 million in not as much as it seems, because, instead of paying unemployment insurance benefits as we do now, we will be giving work to our people, therefore that it will be a good investment for the government of Canada.

The hon. member for Port Arthur dealt only with pulpwood, quoting certain figures on the quantity of this product being shipped from that district. If I asked him where pulpwood is cut in the Gaspe area, he would be quite puzzled.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that statistics show that exactly 412,145 cords of pulpwood were cut in the Gaspe peninsula. Those statistics have been worked out and if the hon. member for Port Arthur wants more information, I am willing to spend a half hour with him to explain the situation, inasmuch as he can understand, of course.

Mr. Chairman, let us consider the weight of a cord of wood. A cord of dry wood, if I am not mistaken, weighs about 3,000 pounds. If he wants to know how many tons, he can figure it out for himself.

Of course, before one can discuss that matter, he must know the difference between pulpwood and lumber.

The hon. member for Port Arthur said nothing about the Gaspe lumber industry. However, it is one of the main industries of that region. The only company, the James Richardson Company, with Mr. James Russell as chairman has cut down and sawn 26 million fbm of lumber last year. That is only one company and it has 600 employees.

Mr. Chairman, reference was made to water hauling. Well, I am not saying that ships are not useful. But suppose, for instance, you operate a mill in the Gaspe peninsula and you cut 26 million feet of lumber, are you going to keep your employees on the payroll all year round, knowing that water hauling is in operation only five or six months and that you cannot ship by boat the rest of the year? In such a case, you will wait until the next year to ship your lumber. If the hon. member for Port Arthur had come in my district even two weeks ago, he would have seen the condition of the roads, especially after the rains we had, which made them very slippery and very hazardous for trucking over long hauls because sawn lumber is now being shipped to Montreal. When you think that it has to be carried by truck to Matane, and from there by a private railway to Mont Joli and then transferred to the C.N.R., you realize that it is costly and that the people in the area are unable to compete on the Montreal market.

At the present time, those engaged in cutting pulpwood in our district are earning less than lumbermen in other parts of the country. It is easy to understand. That wood has to be transported by truck to the railroad, which is for them more costly than it is for those whose logging operations are located in the vicinity of a railway line and who can have their wood shipped direct to Montreal, Quebec city or elsewhere.

In the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, the hon. member asked some questions as to the economic aspect of the project. And yet, if he had taken the trouble to read my speech, he would have found that I had put a letter on record dealing with that subject. It was not a letter written by myself but a letter from the East Sullivan Mines Limited to Mr. Roland Gagnon.

Incidentally, I wish to point out to the house that there are only four smelters in Canada and that the Gaspe Peninsula is fortunate in having one at Murdochville. Here is what the secretary treasurer of the East Sullivan Mines said about the smelter in the Gaspe peninsula which will surely know an extraordinary development:

> Further to our telephone conversation, I am glad to confirm the following information:
> Solbec Copper Mines Limited is a new subsidiary which is developing a copper and zinc mine in the Black lake area, in the eastern townships. The estimated copper production will be close to 20,000 tons of concentrate per year.
> We are aware that the smelter of Gaspe Copper would be a proper place to treat our ores, if that plant were not completely isolated due to the lack of communication facilities. We find it unfortunate for the Gaspe peninsula as well as for the eastern part of the province of Quebec that lack of communication facilities forces us, as it were, to have our concentrates treated outside the country, namely in Europe or in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, something has to be done to improve that situation. As a matter of fact, the president of the East Sullivan Mines Limited, says that he is ready to ship concentrates to Gaspe to have them treated. Furthermore, the Federal Metals Corporation is ready to start developing its mine as soon as the railroad is constructed.

Canadian National Railways

Mr. Chairman, I have looked into all the representations made in favour of the construction of that branch line, under the Liberal administration as well as under the present administration. I admit that the situation 20 or 25 years ago was not what it is today; we must recognize that it is only since 1952 that the development of the Gaspe Copper Mines has revealed the huge resources of the Gaspe peninsula.

Now, if you travel from Montreal to Gaspe South, you take the train for Nova Scotia or New Brunswick; when you reach Matapedia, the train for the maritimes, the Ocean Limited, continues on its way; you transfer at Matapedia and you go past Perce to reach the tip of Gaspe. Please note that this situation has existed for almost a hundred years, although the region of Gaspe South does not know the mining development of Gaspe North, because there is not any mine in Gaspe South. And yet, that railway line has always been operated to the benefit of the southern region of the Gaspe peninsula.

On the other hand, when we ask for the construction of a railway line from Gaspe to Matane, that is a distance of approximately 160 or 165 miles, and we are granted a line running for 57 miles only, in order to promote the industrial and mining development of the northern region of the Gaspe peninsula, there is an uproar. Why? Because the government wants to have a sum of $16 million voted, not only to give a railway to the Gaspe peninsula but to develop its mining resources.

I have already quoted the letter from Mr. Westmore, manager of the St. Lawrence Corporation Limited of Three Rivers, in which he said he was interested in negotiating with three saw mills in the Gaspe peninsula, because his company was experiencing difficulties in obtaining wood waste products and he thought the construction of that railway line would enable them to get them more easily.

And there, Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of only 25,000 tons, as suggested by the hon. member for Port Arthur, but a much larger quantity. As a matter of fact, when we say 35,000 tons, the hon. member says it is 20,000 tons, and when we say 25,000 tons, he says 10,000.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that the production of wood waste could be doubled or even tripled.

Mr. Chairman, there is always talk in the nouse of considerable development, for example in the Yukon or other regions of Canada. On many occasions, in this chamber, it has been said that a railroad was essential to the development of a region, and that such a service should come before and not after the development. If the development of our country had to wait until railway lines were built, very few industries would come to invest millions of dollars to develop our plants.

Mr. Chairman, I could make further observations, but I think I have answered some of the objections raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur. On another occasion, I would like to give more explanations.

Besides, we are not the first to recognize the need for a railway line in that region, because in 1881—that is going back a long time—the newspaper La Minerve said:

> The Gaspe peninsula is a separate section of French Canada, as are the Magdalen islands or even old Acadia (which became part of Canada in 1867). It is little known in the province of Quebec itself. In the olden days, that area had its own government and had little to do with those of Quebec, Three Rivers and Montreal, which were a compact and homogeneous group. Nowadays, relations between them have become more frequent, without, however, taking on the intimate and entirely uniform nature which is characteristic of relations between other districts on the St. Lawrence.
> We still look upon Gaspe and its people as some sort of distant colony, as brothers who are separated from us, in the same way as the Acadians. The situation is, first of all, due to the remoteness of Gaspe which is hundreds of miles away from Quebec city—and to the lack of communications in some parts of the peninsula,
> The Gulf steamers and the Intercolonial have brought the Gaspe peninsula nearer to Canada and also to the rest of the continent. But the seaway is of little help and the railway is still far away from the real Gaspe district. People in the central areas, who went to settle those faraway places and dedicate themselves to their development—like Dr. Fortin and Dr. Robitaille—did even more to inform the people of Gaspe about us and to tell us about them.
> It would be in the best interests of the Gaspe people to end their isolation. They could only benefit from such a move, particularly if it resulted in giving them a taste for farming and, moreover, enabling them to take advantage of our fisheries—

Well, Mr. Chairman, that reminds me of what a good physician in my riding said, the other day, when I was spending a short time in my district. This is what he said: "There is a lot of talk about separatism in the province of Quebec. Now, we, in Gaspe, have been separated for three quarters of a century."

He certainly was right. I am sure that all hon. members will approve the bill and rejoice with me, five years hence, that they voted for it.

(Text):

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I think if anything could confirm one's suspicions about this particular action of the government it has been the immoderate and I think unfortunate attack by the parliamentary secretary upon the hon. member for Port Arthur. Throughout this debate that particular member has carried on an extremely conservative—with a small "c"—assessment based on completely economic lines. I think to impute hatred, even lack of interest, on the part of any hon. member of this house, in this national parliament of the people, no matter from what group or whatever province in any other part of the country, is extremely improper and unfortunate.

The hon. member for Port Arthur has been trying to find out what are the economic possibilities. The parliamentary secretary said there were great economic possibilities. Where are they? I am sure that every member of this committee, perhaps over the lunch hour, will sit and read this evidence given before the standing committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines. If, afterwards, he can come to the same conclusion as the previous speaker I shall be very much surprised. I invite hon. members to do just that, to read this evidence and secure any feeling of confidence that this line would either be of any great benefit to the area or constitute a paying proposition or an economic reality.

The previous speaker misses the point. It is not that this group has no sympathy with the people in this area. It is not that at all. We simply state that one cannot solve all the social, economic and political problems of an area simply by building a railway. You can only spend money once, and $16 million is a great deal of money. The same sum put into a Gaspe development fund, which might encourage people to come into that area, might very well prove of far greater use than this line which could be an economic embarrassment to the community 10 or 20 years from now. As I say, we are interested in the development of this area, but we believe there are more realistic, more economic ways of dealing with this question than by putting down two lines of steel.

Mr. English: Wait till the next election.

Mr. Pitman: The hon. member refers to the next election. That is precisely the point. You cannot deal with a national transportation system on a constituency basis in terms of 1962. We are not fighting an election campaign in Gaspe in this chamber.

Mr. Jones: The hon. member is imputing motives which are improper. I think it was adequately pointed out by the hon. member from Gaspe that the purpose of the railway is to benefit the area. The election has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Pitman: It was not the hon. member who brought up the subject of elections at all; it was the parliamentary secretary who, speaking from his seat, interjected this matter into the debate while the speech was going on. As I was saying, we are interested in the development of this area, but we believe this development can be accomplished in better ways than the one now suggested. We have just had the benefit of a report by a royal commission. So far that report has not been acted on by this government. I am not blaming the government; I am not suggesting there has been undue delay. I am simply stating that nothing has been done in connection with this report, and that this is a time for reassessment; it is not a time for building lines and for undermining the proposals in this report, which will have to be acted upon by the government when it comes to deal with the recommendations.

My hon. friend from Port Arthur has already drawn attention to this aspect of the question, so I shall not refer to this report at any length. However, I remind the committee that it is not only the hon. members of this house who have studied this report; its recommendations have left an impression across the whole country. I could draw the attention of the committee to an article by Walter Gray in the Globe and Mail of February 16 under the heading "Railways Looking for Cut-back Discover Friends in Commission". I should not take up time by reading from this article, but I would point out that these are the views which are held across this country. I wonder how hon. members in every part of this chamber are going to explain the building of this railway to their constituents on the basis of the economic prospects, or rather the lack of economic prospects revealed in the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, at a time when the various railway companies in Canada are cutting back their services.

I come from a constituency which is off the main lines of the major railways in Canada. We have experienced a certain amount of cutback of services. An attempt has been made to slow down this cutting back, and naturally so because various economic groups in the community are concerned about it, but on the whole there has been an intelligent understanding of the realities of our national transportation problems today; it is realized in the community that certain services are no longer feasible or economic.

I realize that these circumstances do not represent a complete comparison with development lines such as we are discussing here. I am simply saying that people across this country are ready and willing to accept a reasonable assessment of national rail transportation. They realize that we are in a new age and that other means of transportation may have to take the place of railways. They realize there might have to be a redevelopment of our old concepts of railway economics in certain areas. The hon. member for Port Arthur has told us there are lines in his constituency which are rusting away right now because services have been cut off completely. How can hon. members in any part of this chamber go to their constituents and explain why we should spend $16 million on a railway when there is no real assurance that it will help the economy of the area? If there were any agreements with mining companies or pulp and paper companies I think there would a good case to argue, but I do not think such a basis can be found in the transcript of the evidence which has been placed before this committee.

I wonder how hon. members in the Liberal party can support this line. Last fall they showed an apparent concern—no, I will say it was a real concern—about the Pine Point railway. The feeling on the part of this party was that the Pine Point railway was economically unrealistic. I ask hon. members in the Liberal party to compare the economic possibilities of the Pine Point railway with those of this railway. I think they will find that the disadvantage will lie on the side of the railway we are discussing at the present time, and I wonder how they will react to this problem when it comes to putting their opinions on record.

I do not intend to take up the time of the committee any longer. I simply ask hon. members to take a slow, reasonable look at this proposed railway and to read the evidence on the subject. I am sure the answer will be obvious.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting in this house for the past four years, and I wonder why the hon. members for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) and Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) are making such a fuss today.

[Mr. Pitman.]

I shall immediately take up the comparison made by the hon. member for Peterborough between the matter of the Pine Point railway and the bill on the Gaspe railway which is now before the house.

I do think the attitude taken by the members of the new party somewhat odd, and I would like to know whether, if the railway were built in some part of the province, or of the constituency of the member for Peterborough or Port Arthur, we would witness as much opposition and hear so many questions asked as to the ability of the railway to pay its own way by the people who are advocating the socialization of public services. How can these gentlemen reconcile their doctrine with the statements they made today? How can they reconcile the doctrine which they preach in public, through their leaders, not only their federal leader, but the leader of the party in the province of Quebec, Mr. Chartrand, among others, to the effect that public services must primarily serve the people without regard to the economy of those services, how can they reconcile this doctrine with the arguments which they have put forward against the bill in this house today? How can they, on the one hand, preach socialization for our provinces, and, on the other hand, get up in this house and say: "Look at what has been said before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and you will see that this railway will not be economically feasible."

One of these two alternatives must be right, Mr. Chairman: the railway will be economically feasible or it will not. If it is—and the member for Gaspe so contends—we have no reason to refuse to approve its construction. If, by chance it is not, it would be wrong to deny this area of the province of Quebec the development it hopes for.

Economists and people familiar with the subject have stated repeatedly that the province of Quebec has not received its fair share in the way of railways. There have been improvements recently, and here is one granted this year by the present government. Are we going to deny Gaspe its railway and access to the development it desires under the pretext that it will not be economically feasible, which is but an assumption? If my memory serves me right, the member for Gaspe noted before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines that the truckers associations of the area were not able to offer the required services and that a railway was necessary. The member for Gaspe brought evidence to the effect that the producers and the manufacturers want this line because they do not have adequate services. This evidence was not denied before the committee.

If the member for Port Arthur has evidence to the effect that what the member for Gaspe stated before the committee on railways is not correct, let him bring it forward and we will then be able to discuss it. I wonder how these people who have voted in favour of the principle of the bill, on the motion for second reading, can now contradict themselves?

I ask them to be sincere and honest once and for all, to stop pretending in their conventions that they recognize the needs of the province of Quebec as much as those of other provinces, that they recognize national equality of the French Canadians of Quebec, while getting up in this house trying to convince the government to refuse an economic advantage to this important area of the province of Quebec. I am asking them to be honest once and for all, to take a definite stand. If they consider this railway as uneconomic, they should give up their theory that railways should first of all serve the public, the areas which need them, without regard to profits, without regard to surplus or deficit. They should take a definite stand and vote for or against this railroad building project. In this way we will be able to assess their sincerity and later on we will let the people judge for themselves.

The hon. member for Gaspe did not bring up the question of an election, but the hon. member for Peterborough did.

If the members of the new party are so courageous, if the members of the new deceased party are so courageous, let them go to the country and account for their actions in the next election.

But before that, let them vote for or against this measure on third reading. I invite the hon. members for Peterborough and Port Arthur to do so. Just vote against it and then we shall see if you are sincere.

Mr. Pigeon: Just one word, Mr. Chairman. Being aware of the work done by the present Minister of Transport, in co-operation with the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. English) and the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Belzile), for the construction of that railroad which will bring considerable economic activity to that part of the province of Quebec, I urge the Minister of Transport to ask the C.N.R. authorities that this line be called the Balcer-Belzile-English line.

I should very much like the Minister of Transport to pass on to the proper authorities that suggestion which is the wish of all members in this house, in order to emphasize the work done by the present minister in co-operation with both hon. members concerned.

I should be very happy to hear what the minister has to say about that. I know that the decision is not his, since it is up to the C.N.R. authorities to decide, but just the same I should be very happy to hear his views.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I shall not tell my hon. friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that I am leaving right away for Montreal, to meet the railway authorities for the very purpose he just mentioned, but I thank him very much for having mentioned my name and I know that he did so out of friendship.

Just the same, I feel that this railway which is called by the whole population of the lower St. Lawrence "The Gaspe railway" will be a factor of prosperity and development for that area in years to come.

When this government decided to build a "development" railway in that area, it made a decision which the future will prove to be right, I am sure.

Besides, is it not my hon. friend from Port Arthur who mentioned the fact that the MacPherson royal commission, at page 145, volume 2 of its report, suggested that when a railway is not self-sustaining the first year of operation, instead of having the railway companies bear the operation deficit incurred or the capital depreciation, the government should face its responsibilities and undertake to pay those deficits through appropriate grants, but that it should never place the burden on the railways.

Well, that is precisely what we are doing; besides, it has been recommended, not only by the MacPherson royal commission, but also by the Turgeon royal commission. In 1951, the Turgeon report recommended exactly the same thing, namely not to let the C.N.R. suffer any deficit or losses as a result of non-economical operations in the first years.

Now, my hon. friend from Port Arthur referred to the information we supplied to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, to the effect that the railway would not be self-sustaining the first years.

We acknowledged that fact. We admit that the volume of assured traffic is comparatively small at present. But we believe it is a fair minimum.

Those were the figures obtained through a study of the present situation of industry and trade in that area.

I actually went to the Gaspe peninsula where I met businessmen and industrialists. They all explained to me that the construction of this line with the resulting lower freight rates, will enable them to develop their industries or business and to increase their production.

As a matter of fact, that is the problem and that is why no one ever thought of setting up industries in the Gaspe peninsula.

Industries already established in the area were not interested in further development because shipment of their output to the market of central Canada would be too costly.

They had to pay part of their shipping costs to the C.N.R., part to the Canada and Gulf Terminal and further costs for trucking. They will now have more reasonable shipping costs and that is precisely what is needed in the Gaspe peninsula.

As far as possibilities are concerned, we merely have to take an unbiased look at the situation to realize that in view of the mineral output in that area until now, and of the large quantity of standing pulpwood and timber, reasonable shipping costs are a necessity.

Above all, I believe that the main reason why the government is willing to take over, for a few years to come, the deficits of this line, is that it is the human thing to do. The area has over 100,000 industrious people. All they want is a chance to prove that they have not lost those qualities for which they have long been noted.

A moment ago, my hon. friend from Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) was saying that it was awful to realize that there were places in Canada where a railway had been built to develop a certain mine, and once the mine had been closed, the railway remained inoperative and was rusting away.

It is precisely the great difference that exists between the proposed railway and the others which, fairly often, are built by the Canadian National Railways. In the case of a mine, as at Mattagami for instance, the railway winds its way through the bush, where there is not a single soul living. Well, I suggest it would be criminal on the part of the railway company or of the government to build such a railway if we had no guarantee it would be self-supporting. I think it is absolutely essential for the government and for railway companies to have a clear and definite guarantee that those railways will be self-supporting.

But the case of the Gaspe peninsula is quite different. We have there an area which has been developed for four hundred years. People have lived there for a few centuries. We find villages and a fully established community; all sorts of small industries are to be found there that did not have the opportunity of developing as they should have. Just the same, everything is there at present; there is a potential. Furthermore, there is an interesting potential in natural resources. Well, this is a challenge for us. Are we going to invest the taxpayers' money in a place like that?

In introducing this measure, I believe the government has made a courageous gesture, a gesture that the future will prove reasonable, a gesture which will substantially contribute to the development of one of the most picturesque and interesting areas in Canada.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, allow me to say just a few words to follow up the suggestion made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), to name that line "The Balcer trunk line".

Perhaps I could make a few suggestions myself about that. We could perhaps call it the "Pigeon line", since some people will be "carried" on that line. As we know, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm travels in various parts of the world, much like a carrier-pigeon, and for that reason I think it would be more appropriate to call that line the "Pigeon line" rather than the "Balcer trunk line".

But, on the whole, in order that people may recall the Conservative regime under which that line has been built, I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether it should not be called "No one will suffer".

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who is most concerned with this railway has made some points on which I think I should try to touch. First of all, he said that I had made no mention of the lumber potential. I think I indicated in my previous speech that at the present time this was the one real source of traffic, but my point was that there was an alternative route into the Montreal market for much of the year by water, and that this means of shipping is usually and normally considered much cheaper than shipping by rail.

There are a couple of other points in relation to the potential of this line that I think need to be looked at. As found on page 38 of the evidence taken before the committee, the minister was asked at the bottom of the page about the potential of the region, and with reference to the north shore area across the St. Lawrence he said:

> They are now in process of building a highway to Seven Islands. Most of the population that works on the north shore comes from the south shore. There is only one farm on the north shore; whereas the south shore is a farming community, and there was no connection between the two shores. This present government has instituted a ferry service between Rimouski and Baie Comeau. This service has been operating for a period of two months and is a tremendous success. Its success has been far beyond all expectations.

Then he went on to say:

> Last week we authorized the building of a new ship, new harbour facilities and a new service between St. Simeon and Riviere du Loup; we are building a new wharf at Matane, and we have approved the establishment of a new "roll on, roll off" service between Matane and Godbout. This new branch line will help to assist the ferry service between Ste. Anne des Monts and Seven Islands. Within a very few years I think you will have a completely different picture of the economic situation of the lower St. Lawrence.

It seems to me that these are very reasonable proposals. Anyone who has looked at the economic indicators knows that the north shore of the St. Lawrence has had a phenomenal development, and it is quite understandable that it has been a magnet in drawing people from the south shore. It is quite understandable that the farmers on the south shore, where this railway is going to be built, are looking forward to feeding the growing population on the north shore. It is also good to know that marine services and so on are being set up to enable this to be done.

But here again my point is that all of us know enough about rail services to realize that where you have a water haul, as in this case, rail service in terms of moving these farm goods to the ferry and then across to the north shore is just not feasible in economic terms. The railway cannot really fulfil a function in carrying perishables, such as most farm products are, for a distance of say 50 miles, to be transported thence across the St. Lawrence by ferry. I think the minister and his economic adviser will admit that this is an area where trucking is much more likely and almost certain to play the real role. So it seems to me that in the provision of farm products for the north shore region the railway in common sense really cannot fit into the picture.

In so far as the question of mineral production is concerned, the royal commission emphasizes that we must build railway lines to exploit large volume tonnage where there is any kind of considerable haul because this is far and away the cheapest means of transport. But the point I think the minister has to acknowledge is that every railway today is out to get some kind of iron-clad agreement or guarantee within the general situation of the mining industry. I pointed out that this is the situation at the present time at Steep Rock.

I suggest to the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville that I have complained before in the house about a branch line that was built in my area, a completely uneconomic one, that went into Manitouwadge a few years ago, which was just straight wastefulness. I can tell him that north of Nakina on the Canadian National Railways we have a large ore body on which over $10 million has been spent in development, and I would not vote for a measure to put a branch line in there unless there was some kind of contract with Anaconda, which is doing the development. Steep Rock Iron Mines has a very large iron ore prospect in the area north of Sioux Lookout near lake St. Joseph. I think it would be folly for this government or the Canadian National to put a branch line in there, no matter what the mining promoter might want, until the mining promoter was prepared to give some kind of guaranteed tonnage over some period of time.

On page 33 of the committee evidence the minister is reported as saying:

> —we have a letter from Mr. Beauchemin stating that the moment the railway is built he will go ahead with the development of the East Sullivan Mines deposit in that precise area. He has always shown a tremendous interest in a railway in that area, and he has always considered the construction of this line as one of the main conditions for the development or exploitation of those deposits.

Fine, but where is the contract? Where is the undertaking? All you have is a letter expressing a pious wish. We can only assume it is a pious wish if the Canadian National Railway demands contracts from mining promoters in other parts of the country and does not get one here. Why can you not get one here? This seems to me to be the question that should be answered. If these ore bodies are so good, and if the only thing impeding ore development is the question of rail facilities, let us get a contract and go ahead. Let us put the rail line right into the mine and not bother just going to Ste. Anne des Monts. It seems to me this is the reasonable thing to do. All over Canada we have ore bodies proven up, but there are usually economic considerations that determine whether or not we should proceed with development. If these particular projects were at a stage of development where the tonnage was known and they had some idea of markets, then it would seem to me that they would be prepared to offer at least a tentative agrement. However, you have not got that.

There is another point I should like to make. I gather from a quick look at the geology of the area that most of the ore bodies that exist are not in the field of iron ore where you get the largest bulk shipments, but are in the field of base metals. It is very rarely that base metal ore is shipped for long distances because of the various weight factors. The ore is almost always treated and reduced to concentrate form on the property itself. This would not mean that there would not be a large tonnage of concentrates shipped, but nothing in the nature of the huge production that moves out of an iron range, something in the nature of millions of tons a year. I submit that this being the case, why justify a line like this on the basis of mineral development if you cannot get something concrete from the developer?

The hon. member for Gaspe made a point that this was nothing but, I think he said, a certain hatred in my heart toward the people of Quebec. I wanted to bring to the attention of the committee the fact that I have been talking to French Canadians in Quebec who are opposed to this line. I wanted to put their views on the record. I did not find I could not deal with them. I have here a copy of a letter sent to the hon. member for Gaspe signed by Romeo Blouin, secretary general, Quebec trucking association.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that this represents a point of view in that province that is very doubtful about the railway. I think it is worth while to put it on the record. This letter is dated March 3, 1962, and it is in French. I hope hon. members will forgive the pronunciation as I give it.

Mr. Balcer: Are you using Lili St. Cyr's language to read this?

Mr. Fisher: No; I think there is a misunderstanding about that whole incident. However, this is not the place to attempt to straighten it out. The letter reads as follows:

(Translation):

Dear Sir:

I am informed that during the debate on the second reading of the bill concerning the construction of a railway line between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts in the Gaspe peninsula, you stated that three truckers are not opposed to the project which the Canadian National Railways Company intends to carry out.

I am sending you herewith copy of a motion which was adopted at our general meeting held at the Chateau Frontenac, in Quebec, on the 26th, 27th and 28th of February last.

It is true that three truckers of the Gaspe peninsula are not opposed to this project, but I should like to point out that the above mentioned motion was introduced by a large number of truckers from the lower St. Lawrence region and the Gaspe peninsula that group included truckers from Riviere du Loup, Trois Pistoles, Cap Chat, Riviere au Renard, Mont Joli, Rimouski and Matane.

I do hope, dear Mr. English, that after studying this motion, you will understand why we do not want the federal government to provide over fifteen million dollars for the construction of this railroad since existing transportation facilities in that district give full satisfaction.

Yours truly,

Romeo Blouin, secretary general
Quebec Trucking Association Inc.

(Text):

The Chairman: Perhaps this would be a good point at which to call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Fisher: Before the luncheon adjournment I put on the record a letter sent by the Quebec trucking association to the hon. member for Gaspe. This letter was occasioned by a press report referring to the evidence that the hon. member for Gaspe gave before the committee, in relation to objections from the trucking organization.

The motion that is referred to by the secretary of the Quebec trucking association is motion No. 28, and I should like to read it as it has been forwarded to me by the association in translation form. It is entitled "Why a railroad in the Gaspesia region," and reads as follows:

In the speech from the throne, upon the opening of the parliament in Ottawa, the federal government has announced the construction of a railroad, out of the public funds, at the cost of $16 million, in the Gaspesia peninsula, from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts, namely a distance of about 50 miles.

Whereas the MacPherson royal commission of inquiry on transportation has recommended the abandonment by the railways of non-profitable services;

Whereas three trucking companies, bus lines, local truckers and taxi companies have invested moneys and are already at the disposal of the public in that region of the province of Quebec, to transport goods or passengers;

Whereas these transport enterprises operate their services without public subsidies;

It is moved to ask the federal government to make a survey in that region to find out if the trucking firms, bus and taxi lines meet the public needs. If those services are satisfactory and that the survey recommends that to help the Gaspesia region, there should be a reduction of rates, subsidies be granted to the existing enterprises rather than investing $16 million in an enterprise which will never be profitable and would constantly be a burden upon the taxpayers.

Whatever other appeal that argument may have I think it certainly makes the point that there is a strong body of opinion in the province of Quebec which has no relationship to me, and I would say no particular interest in me, but which is objecting to this railroad. I would ask the hon. member for Gaspe to remember that, when he makes the charge that I am speaking only out of some kind of hatred in my heart.

I would underline again that I represent the fourth largest constituency in Canada. It has more miles of railroad track in it than any other constituency in Canada. At its broadest point there are 365 miles of transcontinental railway. Two transcontinental railways run through it and in addition there are a number of branch lines, although I can truly say that some of those branch lines are practically rusting at the present time.

Now it seems to me that this is enough reason to be critical of this line even if one has not the national picture at heart and if one is not interested in the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation.

I do appreciate the rebuttal argument, if one could call it that, made by the Minister of Transport. He seems to suggest that there is no possibility of getting industries interested in the Gaspesia area until there is rail transportation provided there. However I can tell him that there are many parts of the country which do have rail transportation and they do not seem to be able to get industries interested in them. There are places in southern Ontario—I am thinking of communities such as Barrie which has had a great development in industry of the most desirable kind, secondary industry, clustered around that town—where the railway services have been restricted and restrained. In other words the indication is that the incentives which bring secondary manufacturers into an area usually depend less upon transportation than upon access or relationship to markets.

The argument is made that industries cannot get to markets from the Gaspesia region because of the lack of a railroad but my point is that, on the grounds of distance from any place there to the large cities such as Quebec and Montreal, the difference between rail transportation and truck transportation is in many cases nil unless you have a large volume of tonnage that can be looked upon in some way as capital that is going to develop. This large volume of tonnage can only come from products of the forests and mines, and here we have nothing but very nebulous promises.

The hon. member for Chambly-Rouville brought up a good debating point. He made the suggestion that the particular party I am associated with has a certain argument that it is presenting to Quebec at the moment and he wondered whether my approach was not a contradiction of it in that, in a sense, it seemed to be an anti-socialist argument. I do not know what conception one has of what a socialist is in Canada but I would hope that whether one is a socialist, a capitalist, a Liberal, a Conservative or a Social Crediter, as a member of parliament no matter what one's background might be he would want to see enterprises approved by parliament that had a good future and that really dovetailed into some kind of an operational plan.

I return again to the evidence. The C.N.R. representative who appeared before our committee was not pressed deeply on any question but there is no indication in this evidence that the C.N.R. has even surveyed the situation for potential in the particular region. As a matter of fact there is no indication of what kind of rates may be struck. It was suggested that the ordinary rates would apply; that is, the railway has not even given this the consideration of what kind of incentives it can bring.

I had the impression—perhaps the minister can contradict this—that the C.N.R. officials who will be constructing this line and running it have not had any relationship with this great copper property at Murdochville or this potential East Sullivan property of Mr. Beauchemin. This I can only look upon as inadequate planning. I do not use the word "planning" in a nagging sense, but surely for an expenditure of this scale there should be some kind of projection by the agent who is going to have the responsibility.

It comes down to this. Can this railway line carry passengers effectively? The answer is no. There is hardly a railway line anywhere in North America today, except in the most concentrated populated areas, that is carrying passengers effectively to make any money. What else can it carry, then, other than freight? Is this the kind of region that is going to have a great deal of piggyback services or concentrated market services where there is a fairly large volume of high rated traffic going to be generated? Not at all. And it is already served by the St. Lawrence waterway, in my opinion the greatest waterway in the world.

I understand that the Gaspe region is well served by air transportation, or at least comparatively well served. The trucking association claims that there is a good trucking set up in there at the present time and that there is a competitive trucking set up there. I am not suggesting that we should accept their argument in toto, but we have no indication that the C.N.R. has looked into this aspect of it. We were told at the committee that the C.N.R. had no plans for using its trucking operations to dovetail into this extension of the branch line; in other words, they have not even gone that far to build up a conception of service around this line. It is for all these reasons that we have grave doubts about the line.

There is one other point that I think needs to be underlined, and that is the position of the provincial government in this whole matter. I admire this government for its efforts in the field of the roads to resources program, its attempt to work out in forestry and other fields a co-operative program that brings federal and provincial initiative together for development projects. I cannot find any indications in the record that the roads to resources program has been touched upon at all in this particular region; that there have been any demands or requests for it. I must admit that I have only looked at the records that have been provided me about the roads to resources program. Maybe there has been something, but I have not been able to find it. But we have from the minister himself an indication that he has not been in touch with the provincial authorities on this matter, and I would just like to note that on the record. I asked the minister this question:

> In Ontario much of the development in railway extension is taking place under provincial auspices. What approach did you make to the government of the province here in order to work out some kind of arrangement under which they would bear part of the cost?

I went on to ask another question:

> What approach did you make to the province to get assistance or support?
>
> Mr. Balcer: We did not make any.

I went on:

> Could you tell me why you did not? The reason I ask is that before the royal commission on transportation a Quebec minister gave evidence in which he indicated that the province of Quebec was ready to build a railway line if necessary to help development.

I did not mean for this particular area; I meant generally, of course. My question went on:

> Since that time Mr. Levesque has also indicated that the Quebec government would not hesitate, in order to develop the province, to build railway lines. With statements of that kind on the record and with a project which in the short run you say is uneconomic, why was the province not drawn in for assistance?

Here is the minister's answer:

> We feel that this project should have been built a long time ago, and that it is a federal responsibility. The federal government is convinced that the long term benefits from this railway will prove we acted wisely when we built the railway.

Here you have a situation where a provincial minister appearing before a royal commission on transportation sets out a bunch of potential branch lines for the province. As a matter of fact the minister who did it is a brother of the hon. member from Chambly-Rouville. I thought the presentation he made before the royal commission was an excellent one; it put the case for development railways in Quebec as I read it, and I certainly understood that the Quebec government was ready to give the lead and if necessary to take the lead in development railways.

Given that situation, plus the statements of Mr. Levesque, why were not the provincial governments approached? Here is the government that is in charge of mineral resources; here is the government that is in charge of forest resources—and the minister himself says these are basic to the development—and yet they did not bother to approach that government to see whether this was the line they wanted or whether it would dovetail in any way. Could the minister indicate that the provincial government is going to support this development with any concrete plans? I do not get that impression from the evidence, and I think the minister should tell us. Until he tells us I can only assume that no liaison has been established at all with the provincial government in connection with this matter. The minister seems to rest his case upon this, that it should have been built a long time ago and that it is a federal responsibility.

Surely in view of the royal commission we are not building railways today to make up for something that was not done some years ago; surely we are building them because they are going to serve an economic need. Given this kind of a situation, I wonder how the government can proceed with this kind of an expenditure that I know on the face of it is attractive, but without any liaison or project in unison with the provincial government.

This government has, I think—I was going to say made great play, but that might suggest something nasty—certainly given the impression that it is anxious at all times to work co-operatively with the provinces, and this is an attempt to develop a region of a province through its natural resources. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the minister has not bothered to talk to the province concerned about it at all. I can only express surprise and certain regret about that.

There is one other point. The hon. member for Gaspe pointed out that this would create work in the Gaspe region. Of course it will: building a line does. But I should like to refer him to the words that were given to us by the Minister of Public Works on this very question as to whether public projects could be any substantial answer to the unemployment situation. I think the minister will remember these words. I have not them here, but I think I can remember the gist of them fairly well. He said that the unemployment problem could not be met in the long run by building public projects. It seems to me that is a point of view of the government that would gainsay the argument that this is or could be primarily a project to meet the unemployment situation.

Surely, there are more effective ways of spending money in that area. At the present time the area seems to be served by highways and by water for approximately eight months of the year. It seems to have some air facilities. It has neither rail nor pipe line facilities. I would reiterate that today this is not considered to be a major lack in most parts of the North American continent unless the transportation demand or need is for large volume traffic usually related to products of the forest or of the mine. In this particular case I submit we really have not had the evidence that this is the potential.

When I am moving around the country I often hear from people about the cadre of experts and economic wizards which the federal government seems to be building up here in Ottawa. People say the civil service is expanding at a fantastic rate—that the government is plucking bright people from the universities and sticking them in, with the result that we are getting a top heavy bureaucracy that is likely to plan far too much of our lives and activities. All I do in this regard is to refer these people to the branch line proposed between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts, because this seems to me a case where these economic experts have made practically no contribution at all and where the investigations which have been conducted turn out, at the most, to be tentative and sketchy.

(Translation):

Mr. Morissette: Mr. Chairman, it is only proper that as the member for Rimouski, I should thank the government, and more particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer), for having met the wishes so often expressed by my fellow citizens of the lower St. Lawrence and by public organizations of that area and the Gaspe peninsula.

Actually, the construction of a new railroad in that part of the province marks the end of a long wait on the part of the taxpayers involved.

As everyone knows, since Mont Joli is to become one of this railroad's terminals, I have very special reasons for being pleased with the decision taken by the government and the Minister of Transport.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, we had lost all hope of ever seeing the construction of that famous railroad which has been mentioned for half a century and has afforded to Liberal politicians for 25 years the opportunity of deliberately making false representations and repeated promises.

I remember the promises those politicians used to make in my constituency, the riding of Rimouski, when as a young student I was getting interested in the material problems of the district.

The least we can say is that it is not too early for the construction of the railroad. That project is part of the general policy followed by the Conservative party in the field of transportation and will provide eastern Quebec with adequate means of communication.

Realizing that transportation facilities are the basis and, in a way, the lifeblood of our district's economy, the Minister of Transport has kindly taken the necessary action in that respect and has introduced the bill under consideration to put an end to the procrastination favoured by the Liberals.

Moreover, this is but one item in the general program which is being carried out in my area. I should like to mention another concrete measure from which taxpayers in my constituency are already benefiting. Father Point and Baie Comeau are now connected by means of a year-round ferry service.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to an interruption recently made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), during the debate on the resolution. The hon. gentleman, in a desperate attempt to save his party's chances, undertook to repeat the suggestions contained in a report prepared by the distinguished professor, Mr. Camu, on "Transportation problems in the lower St. Lawrence region". One of Mr. Camu's suggestions was the establishment of three ferry services, including one between Father Point and Baie Comeau. Now, this last service, which interests me most since it is in the constituency of Rimouski, which I represent, has recently been inaugurated, and the company which operates it has just been granted a substantial subsidy by the government. I therefore propose to the house the following dilemma: either the hon. member for Laurier knew nothing of the initiative of the people of my region who set up that service with government assistance—and then it is wrong for him to act important and pretend he is interested in the problems of my constituency—or he was aware of the facts and he tried, once more, to minimize them or to lead people to believe that such facts, although they are official, did not exist and in that case, such an approach was prompted, once again, by shabby partisan motives.

To come back to my subject, I should like to point out that before setting up that ferry service I mentioned a while ago, tremendous engineering works had to be carried out at Father Point, to an estimated amount of $4 million; likewise, millions of dollars will soon be allocated to similar undertakings at Baie Comeau.

So, to use a word much in favour today, I would say that thanks to the mover of this bill, the transportation bottleneck in the lower St. Lawrence area is a thing of the past. This leads me to the following conclusion: if Mr. Pierre Camu has found some satisfaction in having his remarks taken out of context and quoted or misquoted by the member for Laurier, he must have been much happier to find that the government was implementing his recommendations. And personally I would add that this is further evidence that the Conservative government has put an end to the era of Liberal promises and that it is resolutely engaged on the road towards achievements. I doubt very much that the cackle of the Liberal parrots will hoodwink the people who have been misled for too long by the party of the member for Laurier.

Mr. Pigeon: The wandering Canadian.

Mr. Morissette: Mr. Chairman, getting back to the railway between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts—

An hon. Member: To serious things.

Mr. Morissette: —I would like to be allowed to pay homage to all those who, for many years fought with courage, determination and perseverance to secure the construction of that railway line. I am thinking in particular of the public corporations of the lower St. Lawrence and the Gaspe peninsula, the chambers of commerce, the municipal councils of these points and the council for economic planning of the lower St. Lawrence. I am thinking in particular of my colleagues, the members for Gaspe, Matapedia-Matane and Bonaventure (Messrs. English, Belzile and Grenier).

I do not wish to repeat in this discussion the appropriate remarks made by my colleagues about the obvious benefits that will result from the extension of the railway line between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts. I prefer to bring up another problem that immediately comes to mind when transportation in the lower St. Lawrence and the Gaspe peninsula is mentioned. That problem results from the competition between the various means of transportation, particularly between the trucking companies and the railways.

The businessmen of my area have established sound trucking enterprises. They have invested considerable amounts of money in those enterprises. Thanks to the initiative and competence of our businessmen, those enterprises are playing a vital role in the local economy. They have created hundreds of jobs for our workers, and they are rendering immense services to the population, industrialists, businessmen and contractors. I think the time has come when managers of those trucking enterprises, on the one hand, and the Canadian National Railways authorities, on the other, should consider the possibility of extending to the eastern part of Quebec the piggyback service, which has given excellent results in other areas of the province and the country. No doubt we have there a possible solution to the problem created by the competition between trucks and railways. The trucking contractors of my constituency, and it is the case of Beaudet Express of Mont Joli, have undertaken negotiations to that effect with the C.N.R., and for reasons unknown to me, so far the C.N.R. has shown very little enthusiasm.

I do not pretend that the piggyback service would solve all the problems. I simply feel that we should give it a sincere trial. To the extent that the C.N.R. would agree to apply suitable rates, it seems evident to me that a piggyback service would help to reduce the operating costs and the costs of trucking companies. At last, the National Railways and trucking companies would have common interests. The lower St. Lawrence contractors could more cheaply haul several products that could not be shipped previously because it was impossible to compete with other producers of nearby or remote areas.

Just as the construction of a railway is going to give a new impetus to the economy of the Gaspe area and of the lower St. Lawrence valley, I believe it would be proper to suggest to whoever may be interested that the whole problem of relations between the railway and the trucking industry should be reviewed in the light of the new requirements and of the regional needs.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks that I intended to make on this bill. But before taking my seat, I wish to avail myself of the opportunity of thanking the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) for the unexpected help he is giving me and my colleagues from the lower St. Lawrence valley, by denouncing, in such strong terms and in such a narrow-minded way, this railway construction project between Matane and St. Anne des Monts.

I repeat that I want to thank him for the help he is giving us. There is obviously in my area what they call "units", to use a popular terminology within the new party.

Thus, there is one in my home-town of Mont Joli—where I still live—and I just have before me a statement from the chairman of the local new party association in that town, Mr. J. T. D. Rioux, who is also chairman of the C.B.R.T. and G.W. in which he says that the railway project between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts will be the prelude to great prosperity for the people of Gaspe who, for half a century, have been waiting for adequate service.

Mr. Chairman, it might be that some followers of the new party, in the Lower St. Lawrence, are brighter than some members of the new party in this house, and that they are even so bright that my colleagues and myself have every reason to trust that they will give us their support in the next general election.

Mr. Belzile: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few remarks to make. Indeed, at the resolution stage, I had an adequate opportunity of elaborating on matters of interest for my district which would justify the building of a railway line from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts.

It is well known that this railway will start at Matane, the county seat in my riding, and end at the wonderful village of Ste. Anne des Monts, 57 miles away. That is to say that half the railroad will be in the Matapedia-Matane riding.

As I said, having discussed this matter at length in the past, I would like today to make a few remarks on the political aspect of the project and on the humanitarian feelings on which it is based. I am pleased that this debate, besides promoting the project, is also informative as to the reasons for which the situation remained unchanged for so long in the past.

The contribution to this debate by the hon. members for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) and Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) gave me, and probably all other hon. members and the whole of Canada, the solution to the problem I was facing. I shall explain this.

I am from Gaspe, and I was born in the Matapedia valley in that peninsula. Since I attained maturity, I frequently heard serious-minded men, representing social and economic associations, and public men say that Gaspe did not receive all the consideration which it had a right to expect from the various governments.

Since I represent the constituency of Matapedia-Matane, I have an opportunity of making an on the spot study of the basic problems in that part of Gaspe—which had been so badly neglected by public men in the past—and I frequently ponder the matter.

I fail to understand why the governments did not also consider those problems, and did not consider an area which had been the first spot where white men landed in 1534. I could not understand why this part of our country, the Gaspe peninsula, was not getting what it needed for its economical development: adequate means of transportation. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand.

Before 1958, there must certainly have been in this house other members like the member for Port Arthur and the member for Peterborough who took strong exception to the fact that the leaders of the Canadian government should give Gaspe its rightful share.

Mr. Tremblay: That is what Mr. Chevrier did in our area.

Mr. Lessard: Put politics aside.

Mr. Tremblay: Tell us all about Mr. Chevrier. Let him come in our area and say that.

Mr. Lessard: A visit there would be enough.

Mr. Tremblay: Once will surely be enough.

Mr. Belzile: I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that I am from Gaspe.

An hon. Member: We know it.

Mr. Belzile: What is Gaspe?

An hon. Member: You are not well brought up.

Canadian National Railways

Mr. Belzile: Mr. Chairman, the Gaspe peninsula is a little province by itself. It has an immense territory. The Perron boulevard, which surrounds it, extends for almost 600 miles. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, it is the land discovered by white men. Gaspe has tremendous natural resources. Its forests potential is immense. The Gaspe woodlands are vital. Probably on account of our climate, reforestation is very rapid. The area also offers good prospects for agriculture. I am aware of the fact that we have to contend with a short summer. However, in many places, the soil is rich.

Abundant fisheries are another resource in our area. The subsoil also contains numerous resources. If, economically speaking, Gaspe has not developed as fast as the other parts of the country, the reasons for this delay are exactly those I mentioned a few minutes ago: our representatives have not grasped the entire scope of the problem. We have understood it, and so has the present government.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) understood it.

A few minutes ago, Mr. Chairman, I heard the hon. member for Port Arthur talk about nebulous promises. There have been nebulous promises. I have never heard a man in public life talk with such strength and sincerity as the Minister of Transport. We understand that income is derived from land transportation and the railway line will be a tremendous asset.

We know how to deal with economic problems. We wanted, in all fairness, to supply the people of that part of our country with adequate transportation facilities.

The hon. member for Port Arthur also said that he had asked this question in the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee:

Will it be used to carry passengers?

And the answer was "No, I do not think so". I was there also and I do not think that the answer was a flat "no".

I think I remember having heard the Minister of Transport say:

It will carry passengers, but this is not the number one item on which we depend.

The hon. member for Port Arthur, in his argument, goes on to refer to the representations of the trucking associations of the province of Quebec and says that he is not the only one to oppose the project, but that there are also people in the province of Quebec such as the trucking associations.

[Mr. Belzile.]

I do not deny it, but here again are differences of opinion. Mr. Chairman, truckers and trucking associations are not unanimous in opposing the construction of the Matane-Ste. Anne des Monts railway.

I have here a copy of the letter which the hon. member for Port Arthur read. Incidentally, I wish to congratulate him on how he gets along in French. I urge him to keep on practising during the time left to him. But I wish him good luck for the next election; then he may continue to practise French in the House of Commons.

So I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that in the letter which the hon. member read this morning, it is said that three truckers did not oppose the project which the C.N.R. had in mind.

I have a copy of the letter addressed to the hon. member for Gaspe North (Mr. English) by the Quebec truckers association inc., over the signature of Mr. Romeo Blouin.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I have here a message from another trucking association, this one in the constituency of Gaspe:

Cap Chat, February 17

At a meeting of the independent truckers of Gaspe, held yesterday, the 16th day of February, in Cap Chat, it was moved by Damase Vallee and adopted unanimously that congratulations be sent to the member for Gaspe and conveyed also to the right hon. the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Transport, for the decision taken by the government to provide Gaspe north with a railway line it has been clamouring for during the past fifty years. At this same meeting, it was decided to protest strongly against the objections which may be raised by the Quebec truckers association concerning this project which is essential to the development of our region.

I have the copy of another telegram, sent this time to Hon. Leon Balcer, Minister of Transport, House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario.

Cap Chat, Quebec, February 17, 1962

Hope pressures three small transportation firms shamelessly exploiting us will not change your decision re Matane-Ste. Anne railroad.

Signed: James G. Russel.
From: James Richardson Co. Ltd.

Mr. Chairman, I have still another one sent to Hon. Leon Balcer.

Cap Chat, P.Q., 17 February, 1962

Hon. Leon Balcer,
Minister of Transport,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

We approve of telegram sent by J. G. Russel re railway.

Louis Landry, Sec. Treas.
James Richardson Co. Ltd. and its 600 employees.

Mr. Chairman, I feel I have given sufficient evidence that, within the transport industry, trucking associations do not offer a united front, that they are not of a single mind. On the other hand, I recognize that it is their privilege to feel that building a railway between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts will somewhat encroach upon their rights and deprive them of part of their income. I realize that it is their privilege to make representations.

But we, members of the House of Commons, have not been elected to protect the private interests of an individual, association or company, but to safeguard the general interests of our constituents. We are here to look after the interests of the population of our constituencies, our provinces and our country. I feel that it is my duty to speak this way and I wish to thank you, Mr. Chairman.

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there was a point raised by the hon. member on which I want to touch. I should like to tell him that my own particular imagination in relation to this rail line would have been much more attracted and I would have conceived it as much more imaginative if the rail line was going to go all the way through say to Murdochville or all the way round the Gaspe coast. I should like to point out to him that it is only an extension of a line that exists at the present time. There is no indication from the minister that it is to be anything more than that.

The other point he made, and it was made by other members, is that Gaspe has been asking for this line for 50 years. Well, 50 years ago was the railway age; that was when railways were important for transporting goods. But the experience in recent years has been different, otherwise we would not have truckers appearing all over the place giving evidence; we would not have presidential commissions or the royal commission on transportation going into this whole matter. All these things mean there are great problems in connection with the over-expansion of railways.

I want to put on the record a point Mr. Donald Gordon of Canadian National Railways made a few years ago in relation to the expansion of rail lines, branch lines, so far as the Canadian National Railway is concerned. I am quoting from page 227 of the evidence of the 1955 committee on railways and shipping. At the time, Mr. Gordon was being queried by the present member for Notre Dame de Grace and the present member for Greenwood. The present member for Greenwood said:

> What do the words "traffic guarantee" mean?

The question was asked in relation to the development of branch lines by Canadian National. Mr. Gordon's reply was as follows:

> It is a formula which we have devised which may apply in different ways. For example, to give you one example take the building of our line from Terrace to Kitimat, B.C. There we are servicing one industry. At the time that industry was proposed we said to the Aluminum Company: "We will build a line if you can satisfy us that traffic will be forthcoming" and they said: "Of course it will be forthcoming". We said: "Well, how do we know your plans are going to work out? We are not prepared to build the line and find nothing there. If you will undertake with us to provide a specified amount of traffic and undertake to reimburse us if you don't provide it, we will build the line."
> Now, if the traffic materializes it costs them nothing.

He is referring there to the Kitimat organization.

> If the traffic does not materialize then they put us in the position as if the traffic had materialized. That is a simple form of traffic guarantee, but when we get into a line of this kind it becomes more complicated.

He is referring here to the line between Chibougamau, St. Felicien and Beattyville. Mr. Gordon goes on:

> I am not too sure we can work it out, because a great number of shippers may be involved, but if we can get enough traffic guaranteed from individual shippers of a kind which we can depend on, assuring us of traffic, then we would be willing to build the line.
> Now, that does apply to the Beattyville-Chibougamau branch that we are building now. We have received traffic guarantees from the interested shippers which will justify us in building the line. Incidentally of course, like all these things, there are many facets to the agreement, and we credit the line with the freight that may materialize whether it is from those shippers or not.

Now that, it seems to me, is a very clear and succinct outline of how Canadian National Railways approaches the building of branch lines. It is quite apparent that Canadian National would not touch this particular branch line as part of its normal program. They have to go ahead because the minister has accepted responsibility and the government is putting up the money. The government is going to look after the deficits or profit whatever the case may be. The Canadian National is merely the agent, and as the agent of the government the Canadian National has to do what it is told. There is no quarrel about this at all. We did not get any indication, Mr. Chairman, from the Canadian National witnesses who appeared before the committee that the Canadian National had even looked into the construction of this line very deeply. Now, what kind of railway building scheme is it when the government agency has not looked into it?

In 1955 Mr. Gordon told, and he has repeated it almost every year in one form or another before every committee, how careful the Canadian National is not to get itself into some kind of scheme that is not going to have some future in it. Hon. members of this house know that I am not a great admirer of the president of Canadian National Railways. This may be an understatement. Certainly, however, I have the impression he will build a branch line when he thinks there are any prospects at all for business. He will send his men in, they will work out surveys and make agreements. They will ask shippers. They will do all these things and yet, in so far as this line is concerned, I should like to point out again Canadian National does not seem to have done these things. Surely, we have no better underlinement of the economic weaknesses of this line.

In order to conclude my remarks at this stage of the bill, I should like to reiterate that I feel it is a very bad day for the parliament of Canada when a member gets up to express views about something that fits into the national transportation picture—at least the minister indicated it fitted into the national transportation picture—and he is told by other members of the house, in effect, he should really mind his own business; that this is outside of his province. He should sit and, I suppose, listen to the people who come from that particular area. This is a point of view that I cannot do any more than regret.

But I should like to make it very clear that if anyone wants to criticize railway developments in northwestern Ontario or in Port Arthur—I have a hunch we will be getting a branch line or two in the next few years—I would say they would be more than welcome. I do not see how you can look at the railway transportation picture in this country without being worried about the scale of development. Only in the last few weeks, I have been involved in negotiations relating to union contracts. I have just finished reading the presidential report in the United States, which is going to have ramifications in the Canadian situation. We are going to get the Canadian National annual report very shortly, and it is going to show another substantial deficit. We are going to have deficits on both private and public air lines, in the transcontinental sense.

There is nothing in our transportation picture where railways are concerned, that leads us to be optimistic about their capacity to meet the immediate challenge unless we open up and change our whole attitude towards transportation. Although I may disagree, and I have known all kinds of other people much more expert than I am who disagree, with some of the recommendations in the report of the royal commission on transportation, I fail to see how the government can go ahead with this particular project with so little research and so little planning. It seems to me to reveal quite a lot of the recommendations in this volume upon which I think the government will be acting very early.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I am quite surprised, Mr. Chairman, that we have not had any comment from the minister in regard to many of these points that have been raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur.

An hon. Member: You were not here.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Whether or not hon. members were looking, I was here all morning during this debate. Whenever any real study or real pertinent questions are being asked by members of the opposition, I know that it is so much easier for members on the government side, instead of doing any thinking or research, to reach for the paint brush and just start smearing, distorting and things of that nature. The hon. member for Beauce—no, I mean the hon. member for Gaspe—

Mr. Johnson: Does the hon. member not know where the region is?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): If the hon. member will contain himself for just a few minutes, he will understand. I have a little bit of knowledge of what I am talking about. I know that one of the favourite sports these days in the province of Quebec is to comment on how much the hon. member for Port Arthur is supposed to be against the province of Quebec.

Mr. Balcer: We do not think he is that important.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I do not think hon. members opposite, with the imagination they display on occasions, can even begin to try and make the same charge stick about myself. I was born and raised in the province of Quebec. In fact I even had the honour of serving with a French Canadian regiment which came from Riviere du Loup—

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, surely the remarks of the hon. member might be directed towards this bill rather than to where he was born.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): What was the point of the hon. member?

Mr. Carter: He never has a point.

Some hon. Members: Irrelevancy.

(Translation):

Mr. Morissette: Does the hon. member claim that he was born in the riding of Rimouski?

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Timmins): However, Mr. Chairman, I thought that the case put forward by the hon. member for Port Arthur displayed the fact that he had done a tremendous amount of work on this subject. I thought he marshalled his facts and his thoughts very well. On two or three occasions throughout his remarks he insisted that we are not ignorant of the fact that this part of Quebec has been neglected for many years and that it has been bypassed in the development of this country. We also feel that it should be looked after and his only criticism, his only argument, was to examine this bill to see whether it was in fact what should be done to make up for this neglect over many years.

To hear some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Gaspe you would think the New Democratic party was responsible for this neglect. I think we should remind the hon. gentleman that the New Democratic party has not been the government for the past 95 years in this country. Any blame for the neglect cannot be laid at our door. It has to be laid at somebody else's door.

In this regard I was very interested to read in Le Devoir of January 20, 1962, a report of the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle, where he said:

(Translation):

Speaking of the construction in the Gaspe peninsula of the railway line announced in the speech from the throne, he said that up until now that region has been left to itself and "isolated from the rest of the province of Quebec and even from the country."

(Text):

On the same day on another page we find a quotation from the provincial legislature of the province of Quebec, by Mr. Gerard Levesque:

(Translation):

The leader of the opposition—

(Text):

—who, incidentally, happens, to be a brother of one of the honourable members who took part in this debate, here,—

(Translation):

The leader of the opposition, he said, who was the minister of water resources under the Union Nationale administration, had answered the pleas from the people requesting electrical power: "$15 million, that is too much money."

(Text):

If electrification of this whole area at a price of $15 million is too expensive, then what objective would there be in spending approximately the same amount of money for a railroad? Surely electrification is something which is going to affect each and every solitary citizen of that particular area every day in almost every way, whereas the railroad at best would only affect a certain percentage of the citizens. That is why we find it very difficult to understand why hon. members from the particular ridings involved can get quite excited if there is any question or doubt thrown on a plan like this.

Now we all like to fight very hard for matters that deeply affect our own particular ridings, sometimes even if they are not in the best interests of the country as a whole or really in the long term interests of the ridings themselves. After all an hon. member likes to have a sense of accomplishment in knowing he has succeeded in getting something which his riding has wanted for 50 or 100 years. However we sometimes fail to realize that what was vitally necessary 50 or 100 years ago may not now be as useful as it once could have been, and that the same amount of money devoted to some other project could accomplish far more and give far more lasting benefit to the people of the area.

I found it very strange to listen to the remarks of the hon. member for Gaspe. He construed the criticisms, doubts and points brought up by the hon. member for Port Arthur as expressions of the hatred in the heart of the hon. member for the people in the province of Quebec. I certainly would not accuse the hon. member for Gaspe of having hatred in his heart, regardless of how much evidence I might have to that effect, but I find it rather strange to see him displaying such tremendous interest in this area now, contrary to what he might have displayed when he was deputy minister of fisheries in the Union Nationale government from 1944 to 1953. If some of the zeal and energy he displayed today had been expended on that region during his term of office, then I think his riding would have benefited very much, and so would the whole province of Quebec.

It is alright for the hon. members who are immediately involved in this particular area to get up and sound off, but this is not a private member's bill. This is a bill brought forward by the government and I think the hon. minister owes it to the house to examine some of these arguments put forward by the hon. member for Port Arthur, give us some explanation as to what was done, and in fact give some explanation why some of these things were not done.

For example, why was the provincial government not consulted? At least we have no evidence whatsoever to that effect, and the province of Quebec is well known to resent deeply any actions of the federal government when no consultations are held with the province. Certainly they are very justified in doing so. I do not see that any federal government can feel it is that much of a big brother or great paternal father that it can make decisions which are going to affect the provinces without having consultations with the provinces. This certainly merits some explanation and I think the minister should give the house some explanation of it.

According to the evidence presented by the hon. member for Port Arthur I would like to ask why the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation are being so completely ignored in this regard. What is the use in this parliament setting up the royal commission at considerable expense, a commission that sat for many months and brought out very lengthy recommendations, that has underlined them and reunderlined them, and then before the print is completely dry on the recommendations the government takes a move that completely ignores those recommendations?

These are matters that the minister should explain to the committee. I believe he should give an explanation, if he knows, as to why the C.N.R. itself apparently will not touch this with a ten-foot pole. There must be some reasons for this, and I think the minister owes it to the committee to give us those reasons, at least to the extent that he knows them.

I hope that before this matter goes any further we will hear some explanation, not from one of the hon. members who may be very emotionally involved in this matter, but from the government, because after all this is a government bill and I think we should have the explanation from a representative of that government.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I just want to answer briefly a few of the questions that have been asked. I want to say right now that I am not going to repeat for the fifteenth time the same arguments and answer the same questions that were answered both here in the house at the time of the resolution and in detail in the committee.

The hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Timmins tried to make a great big case and cause great excitement over the fact that we have not consulted the province of Quebec. This has not been done in 25 years by any government building railroads in Canada. The provinces have never been consulted. They do not want to be consulted, because they tell us "Look, railways are your baby. Don't try to get any money out of us to build railways; we are not interested". So it is absolutely utopian to think that the province of Quebec will give us money to build railroads. There are two provincial railways in Canada, and they do not come to us for money with which to build railroads. They would laugh at us if we went to them and asked for money to build railroads. This is exactly what will happen in the province of Quebec. This has never been done.

The hon. member for Timmins, following the hon. member for Port Arthur, raised the matter that no proper study has been made of the project, that we did not have any reports, and so on. The Canadian National Railways has made many studies of this situation; they have made reports to the Department of Transport and to myself. In 1957 they made a very extensive study and came to the conclusion that it was not in the interests of Canadian National Railways to build a line themselves, but they made a very detailed report to the department. It was on these reports and on other studies made by economists of the department and private individuals—quite independent economists—and also taking into account the great contribution of the chambers of commerce and different organizations in the area, that we reached this decision. Since I have been Minister of Transport it has always fascinated me to see the great effort that is being made in this part of the province of Quebec by the people helping themselves before coming to the government to try to obtain handouts. In the lower St. Lawrence the chambers of commerce got together; they set up study groups and hired economists and engineers to make special surveys. They have paid for that, and these reports have been extremely helpful to the experts of my department. All these various reports and factors were considered by the government in reaching the decision to go ahead with this railway.

As far as the MacPherson report is concerned, there is nothing in that report which says the government should stop building development railways. The MacPherson report made a great difference between national policy and a national transportation policy. The railway being considered by the committee at the present time is a development railway, and as such it is a matter of national policy and should be the responsibility of the government. The government did not saddle the Canadian National Railway with the expenses of this railway; this is absolutely in line with the MacPherson royal commission report and with the philosophy of that report. Therefore I do not think we have to worry, because it is not going against the recommendations of the MacPherson royal commission report.

Of course, we are all anxious to see this railway line pay, and it will pay. It is a matter of when it will start to pay after the amortization of the capital. Personally I am very confident that it will come sooner than we think, because we have examples in this area of Canada that the people are hard working and are determined to see their natural resources exploited and developed so they can carry on living in the area and building up a future for their children.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make some very brief remarks on what the minister has said. He indicated, as he did before—and I appreciate it—that this is a matter of national policy. My hon. friend from this region seemed to question that anyone from outside the province should comment upon it, and right in the minister's own argument we have this explanation that it is a matter of national policy; that is, government policy in the transportation field.

There is one other point I should like to put on the record in relation to motives. The present government, for example, right within my own home city and part of my constituency is spending approximately $9 million for just one dock and one terminal facility. This is much appreciated. Approximately $1 million a year goes into the estimates of the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works to keep up the facilities there. Over half of the bridge subsidy of $7 million a year for rail traffic relates to the rail lines in my constituency. I say this to emphasize that I do not raise this matter from any point of view of being mean or hesitant about the spending of money. We appreciate the money that is spent in our area. However, surely it is worth while examining this matter very closely, given the rusting branch lines in many parts of the country—and not less in our area, where there is a great deal of large volume tonnage—and we should be as analytical as possible in approaching a proposition such as this. I can only say, with all respect for the fairness of the minister's comments, that neither the evidence of the committee nor what he said here has convinced us that in principle this is a good proposition for a development railway.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: If I understood him well, the minister stated that trunk line will probably not be self-supporting, especially in the near future, but that it will be perhaps a little later; however, he has decided to build it.

How is it that, using the same argument, he has refused to admit that the Richelieu-Vercheres people were right about the Richelieu waterway, while he himself stated that he did not consider the Richelieu waterway because the project was not self-supporting?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I am glad my hon. friend should give me the opportunity of stating the facts of the matter.

What I said, at the time, while my hon. friend from Richelieu-Vercheres was asking me questions, was that the reports we then had, established that the project was not self-supporting. Since then, we have received further reports, the latest ones having enabled us to deem it proper to have a full inquiry by engineers in order to ascertain its precise cost. The initial reports indicated a much higher cost; on the other hand, the latest ones we have are very encouraging, and that is why the government has decided to proceed with this enquiry which will allow us to ascertain precisely not only the cost of the project, but the depth that the canal should have.

Mr. Denis: If I understand well, Mr. Chairman, there are two policies: one for the Gaspe peninsula, and the other for Richelieu-Vercheres. Because the Richelieu waterway was not considered self-supporting, you decided not to go ahead with it. As far as this trunk line in the Gaspe peninsula is concerned, you have indicated it was not self-supporting, but just the same you have decided to build it. Consequently, what you are doing for the Gaspe peninsula, you refuse to do for the Richelieu-Vercheres people.

On clause 2—Estimates.

Mr. Bourget: This morning the minister tabled the draft arrangements of the C.N.R., and in these draft arrangements there are some conditions set out, especially on page 1 where there is a clause or condition, No. 5, in which it is said that Her Majesty will pay to the company certain sums of money in respect to various services. In particular, the draft talks about the expenses or costs of supervision, accounting, treasury, law, engineering, maintenance of service and other miscellaneous expenses.

I wonder whether the minister has, first of all, a breakdown of these expenditures, and, second, if he can tell us whether all these expenses are included in the $14 million mentioned in the schedule.

Mr. Balcer: I think the hon. member is quoting from page 2, paragraph 5.

Mr. Bourget: Yes. That is the first page. That is the reason I called it page No. 1. It is marked page 2.

Mr. Balcer: Is it paragraph 5?

Mr. Bourget: Yes, it is.

Mr. Balcer: Paragraph 5 says that Her Majesty will pay to the company for and in respect to the work of construction of the line of railway the actual cost to the company of performing the work of construction of the said line, including supervision, accounting and so on. Yes, that is all included in the $14 million. This is all counted as construction cost; it is all part of the capital cost of the railway.

Mr. Bourget: It is included in the $14 million. I still believe it would be of advantage to have a breakdown of these figures, particularly as to the expense of engineering costs, because I see that 5 or 6 per cent is contemplated for plans and specifications. That would amount to some $840,000, an important consideration, and I think it would be interesting to have the breakdown. Otherwise, I do not know how we can arrive at a useful judgment on this estimate of $14 million.

Mr. Balcer: In the construction of these branch lines and the preparation of estimates of cost, the railway companies are, of course, guided by their experience of such matters. The items referred to by the hon. member are all separate expenses, but the costs will be kept by the company and all the figures will be submitted to accounting. The bills, when presented, will be reviewed by our accountants and paid by the government. If the hon. member asks, for example, how much will be spent in legal fees, I am afraid I cannot say at the present time and I do not think many people could. But based on its experience of rail construction in Canada in the last 50 years the railway company has been able to make a certain estimate as to the cost of this, as well as the other services which the hon. member mentioned. The company knows for instance, that so many bridges will have to be built. It has to determine what the cost is likely to be in order that we might have a bill before us which the house could approve.

The hon. member will note that we add 15 per cent to the $14 million—that is done in clause 3, where the phrase "not exceeding in any case the sum of $16,100,000" appears. This 15 per cent is intended to cover any difference between the estimates and the actual cost.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I fully understand all the arguments put forward by the minister, but what I want to know—and he must surely realize it—is this: what will the work cost?

It has been said that $14 million, or perhaps 15 per cent more, will be spent if necessary.

I find it strange that we are not given any information on particulars as important as those mentioned in clause 5. We are unable to obtain any definite figure.

For instance, engineering costs are mentioned. If you figure that out at 5 or 6 per cent, the minister will realize that this is an important item. If I remember well the information given to us last week in committee, it was mentioned that the only survey made was an aerial survey. I fail to understand how the cost could be estimated at $14 million after an aerial survey only had been made. The minister might answer that the C.N.R. has wide experience when it comes to estimating construction costs on a mileage basis, but, on the other hand, construction costs of an overpass, for instance, can vary considerably because of the nature of the soil and foundations.

Consequently, I feel we are entitled to more information concerning a $14 million contract.

I do not want to insist, sir, since we are in favour of the project, but I feel that the committee should have this kind of information in view of the circumstances, because it is important for us to know what will happen in the future. That is why I would ask the minister to give us that information. I will even go further to help the minister; if he does not have that information at present, he could give it to us later on so that we may have a breakdown of that amount.

(Text):

Mr. Balcer: According to clause 6:

> The Minister of Transport shall present to parliament during the first thirty days of each session held prior to the date of completion fixed by or under section 1, a statement showing in detail the nature and extent of the work done under the authority of this act during the previous calendar year, and the expenditure thereon, and the estimated expenditure for the current calendar year, together with the amount of any payments made under section 4, and such further information as the Minister of Transport may direct.

I think it would be an excellent opportunity at that time for my hon. friend to get it.

Mr. Bourget: What is the minister reading from?

Mr. Balcer: I am reading from the bill itself, clause 6. The questions that my hon. friend is asking are with relation to matters that are usually handled by the management of the C.N.R. This is really in their domain. It is really a management breakdown that my hon. friend is asking for at the present time. I have not this information and we do not have it in the department. This is a C.N.R. matter.

Mr. Bourget: The C.N.R. is acting as an agent and should know.

Mr. Balcer: They will make their survey and then they will be able to assess how much is going to go for overhead.

Mr. Bourget: I am not going to pursue the matter now. However, what I should like the minister to do is this, if he would be kind enough to do it. Will he give us detailed estimates maybe later on, say some time next week, so that we will know and be informed of the cost?

Mr. Balcer: I will not be in a position to do that next week. A complete survey is needed in order to find out how much it is going to cost for every precise detail that is listed in this subsection 5. We need a complete survey. The survey is going to start right away. We figure that the survey will be over next fall and that is when we will start the actual construction. However, until the survey is done, I do not know how much engineering there is going to be and how much of the breakdown is for that purpose. The way in which we arrive at $14 million is this. It is based on the experience with other branch lines of the same length, over the same kind of terrain and under the same regional conditions.

Mr. Bourget: The minister said that the survey will be completed next fall. Does he mean that the land survey will be completed or does he mean also that all the plans will be ready and in shape so that the C.N.R. will be able to ask for tenders.

Mr. Balcer: In the latter part of the summer the survey will be over and the plans will be made and we will be ready to start actual construction early in the fall.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Fisher: I wanted to ask the minister again about the very point that has been raised. We have the evidence that only a preliminary survey has been made by the C.N.R. from aerial photographs. I should like to ask him this question and it relates to this question of the estimated expenditures. Is this the normal practice in building a line? Is it the normal practice to have such a superficial survey as this—and it seems to me that an aerial survey is a superficial one—as a basis for an estimate of the cost? I suppose in a way this is what the hon. member for Levis was asking but I am putting it in a much more direct way. I was disturbed by what has been indicated. The minister said that the C.N.R. surveyed this thing from an economic point of view. This is something which I cannot quite understand. How could they make such a thorough economic survey as he indicated just a short time ago and yet have so little in the way of particulars with regard to the engineering structure and as far as the breakdown of costs is concerned.

Mr. Balcer: All this is absolutely normal. Whenever the C.N.R. decides to build a branch line or rather I should say before they decide to build a branch line they make a general survey. It is not a detailed survey but it is a general survey. This survey is made so that they may have an idea of what the thing is all about. On this preliminary survey they come to certain conclusions, whether it is worth it or whether it is not worth it. Then when the branch line is voted here, they have enough money with which really to go ahead and make the actual detailed engineering survey from which the detailed costs of construction will be arrived at. However, you cannot expect the C.N.R. to have a complete engineering survey of all kinds of proposals for branch lines and to keep that process going on all the time. It would cost a fortune. Millions of dollars would be wasted. Therefore, whenever there is talk of building a railway, the C.N.R. makes a kind of preliminary survey. It is not a detailed survey. However, it is a survey that gives them a chance to have a general idea of what is required so that they may make approximate estimates. That is precisely why we have in every branch line bill before the house this provision of 15 per cent in order to allow the difference between the actual costs and the preliminary estimate.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Maximum expenditure.

Mr. Bourget: Has the minister any information about the cost of the land that will be required for the right-of-way?

Mr. Balcer: I was going to say yes, but I am afraid I would surprise my hon. friend too much. I was in the Gaspe peninsula and I may tell my hon. friend that the value of the land varies from one place to another. There is there some very valuable land and there is also some less valuable land. However, I have not the figures with me.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—How payments to be made.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the minister a question in relation to this clause. I understand the funds for the payment for construction and later on the payment of any deficits will come out of the consolidated revenue fund. Therefore in this sense we will not have a continuing account to indicate the cost of the capital to the government in so far as it relates to this specific problem. I assume that to be so. That being the case, has the minister an estimate of the cost of amortizing or paying for this particular road and over what period of years has the projection been made, assuming let us say, taking the most pessimistic view, that there will be enough revenue to take care of the capital expenditure plus the interest?

Mr. Balcer: I am informed that in the studies we have done in the Department of Transport we have sort of taken into account the operating costs but not the amortization. What I mean is that we have based the estimate on operating costs and the revenues of the railway on actual potential traffic. However, we have not taken into account the traffic that will develop as a result of the fact that a new railway is being developed in that area. We are quite confident that there will be bulk cargo of the type of mineral ore. As a matter of fact we are convinced of it. However, in our setting up of the accounting for the thing, we have not taken account of that factor at all. As far as the construction cost is concerned, it will be paid to the C.N.R. which will act as our agent. If there is any surplus it will come back to the Receiver General of Canada and if there is any deficit it will be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Fisher: I take it from the minister's answer that the $14 million—

Mr. Balcer: Actually I am not too sure whether I understood the question correctly.

Mr. Fisher: In other words, the $14 million is being supplied from the general taxation revenues and there will be no particular record kept of it. It will never be balanced against the economic feasibility of this line in the long term.

Mr. Balcer: A record will be kept of all the capital expenses as well as the operating expenses. This will be reviewed in parliament as an item in the estimates of the Department of Transport. We will keep a record of the capital cost of the construction and when there is a net revenue it will be credited to the amortization of the capital cost.

Mr. Fisher: The capital cost will be a fixed sum, whatever the total cost will be, and it will not bear any interest developing from year to year to increase that amount. Is that correct? I ask the minister this because he knows that, for instance, the Jacques Cartier bridge is an example of a government enterprise where not only did the income not meet the operating costs for many years but also it did not come close to meeting the interest charges upon the debt, and so instead of the amortization on the Jacques Cartier bridge fading away over the years it has been piling up. I would assume that that would not be so in this particular case.

Mr. Balcer: It will not. It will not be money borrowed from the government on which interest will pile up and finally develop into a huge amount of money. It will be a one-shot payment but a record will be kept of it and if there is any surplus revenue it will go toward amortizing the capital cost. Actually it comes back to the government. It is simply a bookkeeping entry, but there will not be interest paid on this $14 million.

Mr. Fisher: Could I ask one question following that? Can the minister give us an example of a similar kind of payment in the railway field since the government took office? I just want to check the situation for my own purposes.

Mr. Balcer: Not exactly the same. For instance, we are subsidizing the Pine Point railway but that is a different financial arrangement. As far as the Chibougamau railway is concerned, there is a subsidy of $25,000 a mile so it is a different financial set-up. This one is a development railway, as I have said so many times, and it is a different financial set-up which will be established by order in council incorporating the draft agreement that I have tabled in the house.

Mr. Fisher: I thank the minister for his reply. It is as stark as I had thought. In other words, we will have probably $14 million as a minimum, though it may vary 15 per cent up or down, going out of the revenues of the government in the next year or so directly into this project. In this sense it is an unusual expenditure in this particular field in that there are no precedents that I know of for this particular kind of railway expenditure. I am making this assumption. Every year we have a railway bill or two before us and I should like to be sure that I understand this one completely. I am assuming that this is a unique precedent, shall I say, for the construction of a branch line in modern times.

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Chairman. This branch line is very similar to the Hudson Bay Railway. The Hudson Bay Railway was built at government expense. At first it did not make any money but the revenue grew and finally it was transferred to the C.N.R. It is now a paying proposition. It was the same set-up. The government paid for the construction and the C.N.R. acted as agent. Only in 1957 was the Hudson Bay Railway included in the C.N.R. international system.

Mr. Fisher: Does the minister mean that the Hudson Bay Railway did not have a debt structure? I have not got the reports here but I understood that it did have a debt structure and that there were annual charges against the debt. It seems to me that the scheme in this instance is a unique approach to railway building, but the minister says it is like the Hudson Bay Railway. Am I wrong in my memory about the Hudson Bay Railway? Does the minister mean that the capital cost of the Hudson Bay Railway was met out of the consolidated revenue fund and there were never any interest charges on the debt?

Mr. Balcer: All of the construction costs were paid out of the consolidated revenue fund and all deficit costs on the operation were paid out of the estimates of the Department of Transport. My information, subject to correction, is that these moneys did not carry any interest charges, so the situations are similar.

Mr. Fisher: I might indicate why I am curious about this matter and why I want to come back to it again. As the minister can imagine, if the idea of taking a lump sum out of the current revenues of the government and putting it into a branch line is a unique precedent, it will be an attractive way to many sectors of the country to get railway developments there. I have to accept the minister's judgment that the Hudson Bay Railway was a precedent of the same kind though from my memory it did not strike me that way. I want to ask the minister this question. In the consideration of how to approach the matter of how to finance this road, was the alternative considered of setting aside a fund or was the C.N.R. approached with the suggestion that "we will give you a subsidy of $50,000 a mile for so many years as an operating subsidy and then the matter will fall directly within Canadian National Railways". It is pretty apparent from the nature of my remarks and my phrasing that my knowledge of how capital is handled in a financial way is not very extensive, but the thing that intrigues me is that I have always understood it is considered poor practice for a government to use money from the consolidated revenue fund en bloc in this way for what might be called a current project with no consideration being given to the payment of the cost over a number of years, and the normal interest charges upon that cost.

I have seen the point made in a number of places, including economic textbooks, that this is really bad management. It is the sort of thing, for example, that most tax regulations will not allow private corporations if it can possibly be avoided. It seems to wipe out the whole idea of the regular amortization of debt. I wanted to get it very straight in my mind because I would imagine that this is a very clear precedent and we will have other sections of the country coming here, not only in relation to railways but the building of canals, requesting the same treatment. I can think of a project such as the Richelieu waterway. We have a canal project up our way leading off lake Superior, and we would like it set up on the very same basis.

Mr. Balcer: Crown companies do amortize their capital expenditures, but I am informed that the government often pays a direct subsidy out of the consolidated revenue fund, without any interest being charged. I think a good example of this is the ferry boat Abegweit and the William Carson. These ships were built by the government. The government pays the cost of construction of the ship, say it is $14 million or $15 million, and then the ship is turned over to the Canadian National for operation. The Canadian National acts as agent for the government.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Adjustment of surplus or deficit.

Mr. Fisher: I wanted to ask a question in relation to this clause. In clause 7 of the memorandum of agreement, I find these words:

> That the company will maintain and make available as and when required for audit by the appropriate officers of Her Majesty accounting records of the said line of railway showing the cost of management, operation and maintenance thereof and a record of all revenues accruing to the said line of railway for the services rendered or facilities provided.

Does this mean the Auditor General?

I should like to have this very clear in my mind because one of the things I have always advocated has been that the Auditor General be turned loose in Canadian National Railways. I think it would really set the chickens flying. I should like to think that this clause means the Auditor General would be the proper officer of Her Majesty in this regard. I bring up the question on this clause, Mr. Chairman, because the clause goes into the question of annual operation.

Mr. Balcer: It will be an officer of the Department of Transport who will do that or an officer designated by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Fisher: In other words, it is not the Auditor General?

Mr. Balcer: No.

Mr. Fisher: Was any consideration given to specifying the Auditor General?

Mr. Balcer: I shall be pleased to consider that.

Mr. Fisher: I hope the minister will consider it because, as I take it he is probably aware, the present Auditor General, in a review that has been made of the role of his department within the past year and by a parliamentary committee this year, has given an indication in his annual report that he is interested in and would like to be responsible for the auditing of a number of crown corporations. It seems to me that this is a good example of how we can get an investigation, distinct from the Canadian National auditors. I know Canadian National Railways auditors are appointed by parliament through the minister. I do not want to suggest by my remarks that I have a criticism or suspicion of these auditors. However, I should like to make the point that in a case like this I do not believe this particular set of auditors who look after Canadian National should be the ones to make this annual review or audit for the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Balcer: I just want to add that this railway will be our own property. It will be the responsibility of the Department of Transport. It will be studied here as an item in the estimates of the Department of Transport, and as such it will be audited by the Auditor General as are all other items of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Fisher: In connection with this annual investigation, would the minister indicate what arrangements Canadian National Railways have in mind in so far as the servicing of this line is concerned? It will have quite a bearing on the annual operating accounts, for example. What is going to be the divisional point for the operation of this line, will it be Mont Joli? Has he had an estimate from the railway, say after five years, as to the amount of equipment or the number of employees that will be employed in the annual operation?

Mr. Balcer: The Canadian National will act as agent. They will supply the equipment and the labour force needed. They are the ones who are qualified to decide where the divisional point is going to be, where we are going to have stations, and things like that. They will act as agent of the government, so there will be a management of this rail line.

Mr. Benidickson: I think we have an interesting point here in connection with the auditing of an asset that is with Canadian National Railways simply for the purpose of management. Now, I do not know that inspection by an officer of the Department of Transport, from the point of view of auditing, can be very extensive. Parliament apparently does not place very much responsibility on the Department of Transport in connection with the operation of other entities belonging to the crown which are managed by Canadian National Railways. I assume this would be an asset that might be put into this category. When one reads the vote it says that we will pay to Canadian National Railways Company, hereinafter called the company, such deficits as are certified by the auditors of the company. Then, they go on to refer to some of these other entities such as the Newfoundland ferry terminal, the Newfoundland car ferries, which are all part of our transportation system, but not something Canadian National put into its own system.

When the minister rose to refer to the precedent of the Hudson Bay Railway, I was about to make the same suggestion. I thought perhaps the policy being followed here was similar to what was followed in the case of the Hudson Bay Railway. I do not recall now what has happened to the accounts of the Hudson Bay Railway because the Hudson Bay Railway is not one of the entities in the book of estimates for which parliament is asked to make up the deficit. Does it mean that in recent years there has no longer been a deficit on the operation of the Hudson Bay Railway, or have I a proper recollection that in some manner these lines which were originally called the Hudson Bay Railway were transferred directly to the Canadian National Railways, are now part and parcel of that system, and anything related to them comes in under the reports of the C.N.R.?

Mr. Balcer: A few minutes ago I mentioned our ferry services. It is going to be the same system. It is the property of the Department of Transport and the Canadian National Railways act as an agent. The C.N.R. keeps all the records and our own Department of Transport people will receive them. The C.N.R. are responsible to the Department of Transport and the records will be subject to the auditing of the Auditor General of Canada. It will be exactly the same thing. The services, operation and costs of construction of this branch line will be under the auditing of the Auditor General.

Mr. Benidickson: That is not what it says in the book of estimates. It says that the minister is obligated to pay to the Canadian National Railways what its auditors, the company's auditors, certify was the deficit in the operation of these enterprises. The other question was, did the Hudson Bay Railway not operate originally in the manner in which the minister proposes in this bill with respect to the Matane railway?

Did it not at one time, like the ferry services, present an annual deficit which parliament was asked to pay to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Balcer: These were annual deficits that were included in the estimates of the Department of Transport as such.

Mr. Benidickson: But they are not now.

Mr. Balcer: That is not what it is. In this present case there will be an item in the estimates for the construction of the railway, and also if there is anything further to be paid it will be paid by an item in the estimates, but all of this will be subject to the auditing of the Auditor General.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Report to parliament.

Mr. Fisher: I want to ask a question relating to clause 6. In the committee the minister indicated that we would be able to discuss this when the government estimates came before the house, which is a privilege that we are very pleased to have. Certainly there are enough opportunities at various times in any session to debate the situation with regard to the C.N.R. in this house. Every year we have a number of motions which give us an opportunity to speak on matters relating to the railway, but the best opportunity an hon. member really has to review the operations is when something comes before the parliamentary committee.

I would like confirmation of what I had assumed from the evidence given in committee, that is, that every year when the C.N.R. report comes before the sessional committee on railways and shipping we shall have the opportunity to go fully into the operations of this particular branch line with the minister and the head of the C.N.R., who will be there ready to answer any questions that relate to this. Have I got the correct understanding on this point?

Mr. Balcer: All answers that can be given by the president of the C.N.R. to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines will be given as president of the agency. He will be there in his capacity as an agent for the Department of Transport, but the proper questioning will be done in the house when the Department of Transport estimates are called. Of course if the estimates of the department are sent to the committee on estimates hon. members will have the opportunity to go into details there. Any questioning of the president of the Canadian National Railways that is done with regard to the railway in the special committee on the C.N.R. and T.C.A., will be in his role as agent for the Department of Transport.

Mr. Fisher: I take it from that that questioning will not be ruled out so far as the actual development is concerned, but the main limitations—

Mr. Balcer: It will be left to the committee to decide.

Mr. Fisher: I have one point to raise in connection with this draft arrangement with the C.N.R. and its terms and conditions. In drawing up this particular draft arrangement could the minister tell us was there a precedent in so far as this particular arrangement is concerned, or is this form of arrangement again a new precedent? I am curious and anxious to know what was the model for this particular draft.

Mr. Balcer: This draft arrangement was prepared by the officials of my department and the officials of the C.N.R. They took as a basis for this agreement similar agreements which we have with the C.N.R., where the C.N.R. have done some work of maintenance for the Department of Transport. It is a sort of similar draft agreement.

Mr. Fisher: I take it from his answer that there are partial precedents in terms of this draft arrangement, but there was no other arrangement identical with this to which we could turn to see whether this had been used before.

Mr. Balcer: I am not aware of any.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall the bill be read a third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Before giving the floor to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) there was a document presented for tabling by the sponsoring Minister of Transport, and I should like to get leave from the house to table the document now. Has the minister leave to table the agreement which was filed with the table when Bill C-67 was being considered in committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Balcer moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, in the admittedly voluminous discussion that has taken place upon this measure in committee we have expressed our doubts about this line and its economic feasibility. We think that, from our point of view at least, we have indicated that here is a most unusual one shot, $14 million take from the consolidated revenue fund to develop a railway line that on the face of it, as we look at it, has not any economic substance or any bright economic future. I say the rail line, not the area through which the rail line will go. We feel that we should put our criticism into the proper parliamentary form, and for that reason I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin):

That this bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to add thereto, immediately after clause 6 thereof, a clause 7 to provide

That the coming into force of this bill be deferred until such time, not exceeding one year from this date, as the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines has undertaken a study of and reported upon the feasibility of expending the moneys authorized by this bill in such a way as to provide for increased economic development of, and more appropriate transportation facilities for Gaspe peninsula.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Perhaps one of the hon. gentlemen in the house would be prepared to assist the Chair in arriving at a decision as to whether or not this amendment is in order, particularly with reference to the question of whether or not it introduces new material to the bill itself.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I believe that at the time the house gave second reading to this bill it endorsed the principle that there be expended a certain specified amount of money in order to aid in the transportation problems of the Gaspe region of Canada. I believe that, after having accepted the principle that money should be made available to aid and relieve the transportation problems of this region, it is perfectly in order upon third reading to refer the bill back to a committee and to ask the committee to explore other possibilities whereby the transportation problems of this area might be assisted.

I see no conflict between the amendment now offered and the basic principles that were endorsed by this house on second reading, and therefore I contend that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) is very much in order.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on examining the amendment we find that it is not doing what amendments of this nature normally do, that is refer a bill back for some immediate action by the committee of the whole house either to make some amendment to the bill or some change.

This amendment is asking that the bill be referred back to the committee to add an additional clause, and in that additional clause various things are set up for the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines to do. The amendment says that within one year that committee would be empowered to undertake "a study of the feasibility of expending the moneys authorized by this bill in such a way as to provide for increased economic development of, and more appropriate transportation facilities for, Gaspe peninsula".

Surely it would involve considerable expense on the part of the standing committee to undertake a study of the feasibility of expending the moneys that are being suggested for the purpose of this railway—

Mr. Regier: This is really new in Canadian parliamentary history. The expenditure by a committee is now raised as an objection.

Mr. Churchill: —and it is not directed to determining the feasibility of the railway branch line itself. The amendment talks about "increased economic development", which encompasses a very wide field indeed, I suggest, and might involve general surveys of the entire land in the Gaspe peninsula. It might involve testing for mineral wealth, and things of that nature. It might involve an assessment of the forest products there and the methods of dealing with them. It would be a very large study indeed when the amendment goes as far afield as talking about the "increased economic development of, and more appropriate transportation facilities for, Gaspe peninsula".

I do not know whether that means more appropriate transportation than the proposed railway line itself. If it does, then it means surveys with regard to other means of transportation; highways, or perhaps water transportation or air transportation. The result is that this amendment, if adopted, would destroy the purpose of the bill itself, and of course it is obviously intended to be just a delaying factor. If the hon. members do not approve of the proposed railway line in the Gaspe peninsula, they should simply vote against the measure.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I have been absent from the chamber a great deal of the time this important measure has been under discussion, but my recently enlarged duties are the cause of that. I find that delegations coming to Ottawa go to the Prime Minister's office, and the great majority then come to see me. That has kept me out of the chamber a great deal more than in the past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: However, in our group we always discuss these matters thoroughly in caucus; every measure that comes before this house is thoroughly discussed in our caucus, where we have our advisers. This measure, similar to others, was given considerable discussion in our caucus, and to be quite certain that we knew all the facts and were on sound ground we called in two economic advisers from French Canada who know the area quite well and who know the problems. We wanted to be certain that we came to a decision which, in our opinion, was best for the inhabitants of the region which the provisions of this bill would affect. I do not intend to repeat the excellent arguments which were advanced by the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). My hon. friend from Port Arthur is, our spokesman on questions of transport—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I am looking for the hon. member for Kootenay West to assist me in coming to a decision as to the admissibility of this amendment and I would ask him to stay closely to that point.

Mr. Herridge: I was under the impression that you had allowed the amendment. I shall have to rise again in order to make a few remarks and advance my argument, but, like the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam I have never before in 17 years of experience in this house heard advanced as a reason for an amendment being out of order the statement that it might cause an expense on the part of a committee of this house. I think the leader of the house was on very unsound ground in making that contention.

I suggest the amendment is in order because it is a constructive alternative to the proposal now before us in the form of this bill. It has the same spirit and purpose as the bill itself but it is designed to provide a second look to see whether we can do something better than spend this $14 million as proposed in the bill.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to section 418 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, at page 288 which reads as follows:

> The question for the third reading is put immediately after the report from the committee of the whole. All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill. On the second reading of a bill, an amendment may be moved expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution, or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees or commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence, or the opinion of judges. This cannot be done on the third reading because it is not directly connected with any provision of the bill.

Therefore, I suggest that such an amendment as the hon. member proposes is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): The Chair was in some difficulty in considering this amendment because there was a reasonable doubt as to whether the material introduced was or was not extraneous to the purpose of the bill. I am grateful to hon. members who have assisted me in arriving at a decision. I wanted to refer the house to May's 16th edition, where the paragraph at the top of page 578 reads as follows:

> As the debate on the third reading should be confined to the contents of the bill, reasoned amendments which raise matters not included in the provisions of the bill are not permissible.

This is the rather fine point over which I was having some difficulty. The citation read to the house by the Solicitor General is, however, a little more mandatory in its wording. I shall quote only part of what the hon. gentleman read from Beauchesne:

> On the second reading of a bill, an amendment may be moved expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution, or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees or commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence, or the opinion of judges. This cannot be done on the third reading because it is not directly connected with any provision of the bill.

These are the words which satisfy me it would be difficult to admit this amendment as a proper one. Accordingly, I must rule that it is out of order.

Mr. Herridge: This is the first time in my experience in this house that one third of my speech has been on a point of order and the remaining two-thirds on the second reading of the bill—

Some hon. Members: Third reading.

Mr. Herridge: Third reading. We are opposed to this bill because we think it is a completely uneconomic proposition designed to the disadvantage of the area concerned and to the disadvantage of the Canadian people as a whole.

There is an investment of $14 million proposed and we have been told, according to the evidence of the committee, that there will be a gross annual revenue of around $250,000. Surely, anybody who looks at this proposition from a sound business point of view must realize that if there is no chance of increasing this gross revenue there will be little opportunity of paying the cost on the capital or the operating costs. I understand that this is in the nature of a grant, but whether this is so or not, this money has a certain earning power for the people of Canada, and the charges have to be met from some source. It is obvious that for many years, if not for the life of this railroad, there will be a heavy annual loss to be borne by the Canadian taxpayer in the absence of anything to counter that loss or to ensure the economic operation of this railroad in the future.

We fully appreciate the attitude of the members who have spoken in support of this bill—those hon. members who have the honour to represent the areas directly affected. We understand their anxiety to get this bill through. What we do question is their method of trying to assist the area concerned. Their method is to press for the construction of an uneconomic railroad. We support this expenditure of $14 million, but for the reasons given by the various members of this group who have spoken, led, in this case, by the hon. member for Port Arthur, we suggest an alternative proposal as was mentioned in our amendment which was ruled out of order. For these reasons this group proposed that amendment and opposes the proposal contained in the text of this measure.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam rose to speak, I understand.

Mr. Regier: Yes, I rose to speak, and I intend to offer an amendment.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-18, an act respecting the printing of negotiable instruments in the English and the French languages—Mr. Pigeon.

An hon. Member: Stands.

Mr. Speaker: Does this order, order No. 1, stand at the request of the government?

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-19 to amend the Small Loans Act.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to set a limit of 1 per cent per month as the maximum interest rate which could be charged by small loans companies on loans up to $1,000. The reason it is worded in this way is that the Small Loans Act at this time sets a smaller rate for loans in excess of $1,000. As long ago as 1955, Mr. Speaker, I had the honour to introduce in this house a bill which would limit the interest rates on small loans to 1 per cent per month. At that time there were very few facilities available to many people in the country who wished to obtain small loans for personal needs. The measure that I presented at that time received a good deal of support across this country. I had a great many communications at that time in support of that general proposition and I have had a great many since then.

In 1956 the government of the day brought in a government measure which was sent to the banking and commerce committee of this house and which went some distance toward reducing interest rates that could be charged by small loans companies.

Up until 1956 the maximum rate was 2 per cent per month on loans from zero to $500. Beyond that point there was no control. In 1956, the measure of that day set an interest limit of 2 per cent per month on loans from zero to $300; 1 per cent per month on loans of $300 to $1000; and one half of one per cent per month on loans from $1,000 to $1,500. This was an important step forward.

Those who spoke at that time on behalf of the small loans companies in this country said that the measure of that day would bring financial ruin to the small loans companies. They said it would mean that they would be going out of business, that they would be obliged to curtail their loans. This dire forecast has not been fulfilled. The small loans companies have continued to expand and to increase their business and their profits. However, the campaign, if I might call it that, which was started in this parliament in 1955 has been continued since then and, I would suggest, has received a more sympathetic hearing year after year.

The problem of high interest rates charged to ordinary borrowers has impressed itself on a larger and larger number of members of this house. The problem, of course, is not confined to small loans companies and loans from small loans companies only. The problem results in the tremendous or fantastic interest rates that are very often charged on second mortgages—these fantastic interest rates may go as high as 20 per cent or 25 per cent per year—and the fantastic rates that are often charged on instalment credit. In other words, the ordinary small borrower with a low income who had to borrow for personal purchases, for household purchases or in order to deal with family emergencies, very often in the past has been a victim of the unscrupulous lender who has charged very high interest rates.

Some people have decided to attack this problem from various angles. When I first introduced this bill the then hon. member for Saskatoon, Mr. R. R. Knight, introduced another bill which, if it had been passed, would have made it necessary for small loans companies in their advertising to set forth the interest rate they would charge. An amplification of or an improvement on this idea was brought forward in the Senate last year by Senator Croll. There is before the other place at this time a bill which would provide that in any loans made by financial institutions the actual interest charged must be set forth in the contract. The hon. member for Rosthern this year in this chamber introduced a bill which is similar to the bill introduced in the other place.

These are two good bills. I hope the bill in the other place reaches a vote and I hope that it is passed. I hope the bill of the hon. member for Rosthern might reach a vote in this session and be passed. That is a hope I have, Mr. Speaker, but it is not much more than that. We all know what happens to private members' bills; and with the new arrangement—and I am not complaining about it; I think it is an improved arrangement—with a one hour debate, the chance of a bill coming to a vote, unless all of the parties wish it to do so, is indeed extremely remote. However, the fact that a member of this house and a member of the other place have decided this field was important enough to warrant their putting forward bills asking that the interest rate be set forth in contracts so that the borrower might readily understand the interest rates that must be paid is, in my opinion, a very good omen. I have had on the order paper another bill which would set a general interest ceiling across this country of one per cent per month. If such a measure were passed by this house, then of course this particular measure with its more detailed application would not be necessary.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the time has arrived once again when the whole problem of high interest rates charged by small loans companies, finance companies and moneylenders and including interest rates charged on second mortgages and on instalment credit, should be referred to the banking and commerce committee of the house. I believe that witnesses should be called, that evidence should be heard and that parliament itself should decide to deal with this very important problem in a more effective way than it has been dealt with in the past.

In recent years there have been some improvements in this general field of lending money to lower income earners and in lending money at lower interest rates. A very important institution in this country and one of growing importance is the credit union or the caisse populaire. The credit unions are serving the Canadian nation well in a very important way. The credit unions across this country are growing and are providing an excellent service. I have in my hand a publication which is entitled "Credit Unions in Canada, 1960" and which is published by the economics division, Canada Department of Agriculture. It shows that in 1960 there were 4,667 chartered credit unions in Canada with a membership of 2,544,300 and that the number has been growing at a very significant rate. In 1950, for example, there were 2,965 chartered credit unions with a membership at that time of just over one million, being 7.5 per cent of the population. By 1960 membership in the credit unions was 2,554,300, being 13.9 per cent of the Canadian population, and assets had increased from $312 million in 1950 to $1,299 million in 1960.

Credit unions provide credit to their membership at cost. They charge as a maximum rate 1 per cent per month, and they have been able to do a large and successful business. As a matter of fact, many credit unions are able to pay dividends both to persons who have invested money in the credit union and to the persons who are borrowing money from it.

The 1 per cent interest rate that I have suggested in this bill would not in any way affect the credit unions, and I think their success together with the success of the small loans companies with the new interest rates of 1956 suggest that if this bill were passed even the small loans companies would be able to continue in business and make a return.

There are a great many credit unions that charge much less than 1 per cent per month. In the province from which I come the credit unions very often charge rates of 6, 7 or 8 per cent per year depending on the type of loan. I belong to two or three credit unions.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Do you need that many?

Mr. Argue: Oh, I find it is a little easier to borrow sometimes if you have more than one opportunity to do so.

Mr. Thrasher: Spread the risk.

Mr. Argue: I try also to pay my accounts on time. One credit union to which I belong is the Assiniboia credit union which makes the boast of being the largest rural credit union in Canada with assets, I believe, of some $4½ million. Their lending rate is 7 per cent and loans are life insured so that if the borrower should die the loan is automatically paid up out of their life insurance fund and the estate of the deceased does not have to meet that obligation. In addition, this large and successful credit union in a town in rural Saskatchewan last year paid to the borrower a 10 per cent patronage dividend on the interest that he had paid. In other words, the net interest rate worked out to 6.3 per cent, and this for a life insured loan. I think this indicates an excellent type of lending institution from the standpoint of the small borrower in this particular community.

Credit unions have done and are doing a marvellous job in this country and I am sure that the role they play will be a greater one in the years ahead. I might say that in my experience the credit unions have received the support of the whole community in which they operate. Farmers, small business people, workers and professional people all find that it is to the general advantage of the community itself to have a place where local funds can be deposited, where they can be lent to borrowers who need those funds and where the funds generated in the community will bring about the greatest possible benefit to the community as a whole. So this is an alternative form of borrowing for many who in the past have had to go to small loans companies to get money.

Another alternative form is the chartered banks themselves which in recent years have gone into the small loans field in a very large and successful way and I am sure in a very welcome way. In 1957, for example, loans on the security of household property amounted to less than $8 million while in 1961 the total was $224 million. Other personal loans in 1957 amounted to $400 million while at the end of 1961 the total was over $800 million.

The banks have promoted the small loans field in recent years. Their branches in the cities and towns are being established in the suburban areas and the shopping centres where they are available to meet to a substantial degree the borrowing needs of citizens within the area. This is another method of attacking this very important problem. I am proud of the accomplishments of the past in reducing the cost of small loans to borrowers. I am very pleased with the growing use of credit unions and with the development of the personal loans divisions within the chartered banks.

There are further problems at this time with respect to high interest rates in the second mortgage field and on much instalment credit. This is a great problem. It is receiving more sympathetic consideration from members in all parts of the house. I should like to see this measure passed. As an alternative I should like to see it sent to the banking and commerce committee so that a further study of the general problem might be made and such bills as those presented in the other place and that of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) in conjunction with this one might be studied to the end that the credit needs of ordinary Canadians might be supplied at the lowest possible interest rate.

Mr. R. S. MacLellan (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-19 which is before us this afternoon proposes an amendment to the Small Loans Act. As has been set forth, the situation at the present time is that under the Small Loans Act a charge of 2 per cent per month may be levied on all loans or balances of loans under $300. Interest of 1 per cent per month may be charged on loans exceeding $300 and up to $1,000 and, in the third category, a charge of one half of one per cent per month on loans over $1,000. The bill would place a ceiling of 1 per cent per month on all loans up to $1,000 and then one half of one per cent on loans over $1,000.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I have noted considerable interest among members of the house in the matter of small loans financing and instalment buying in general. There are now some three bills on the order paper which are concerned with this matter, and I think one of the best is that introduced by the member for Rosthern, Bill No. C-6, which would require the cost of servicing these loans to be shown as a percentage of principal. I am sorry I was unable to be present in the house when this bill came up for debate but I had to be in my riding at the time. If I had been here I would have supported the member for Rosthern in what I believe to be a very worthy objective.

I have also noted a very wide interest throughout the country in this matter of consumer financing, and interest rates on small loans. I believe other members of the house have the same experience as I, that they are receiving many letters from day to day on this topic urging that some inquiry be made into the situation. Certainly the problem of consumer financing today, grown as it has to become a giant in the financial world in the nation, is one that concerns everyone.

Only a few years ago the chief lender in the nation was the bank, even for the purpose of a small loan. Now the situation is much more complicated with many borrowers going to small loan companies. Much credit is put out by acceptance corporations which underwrite quite a bit of the merchandising of the nation. I have felt that as this business has grown there has grown with it the need for some form of protection for the consumer of credit similar to the protection that is set up for the consumers of general merchandise to protect people from fraudulent types of credit just as they are protected from fraudulent merchandising.

I remember not long ago trying a court case at home in which a man had signed an instalment contract in blank to purchase a car. Later, the car was repossessed and an action was brought against him to recover the balance owing on the vehicle after the car had been sold. He came into court to say that he had no idea at all that the finance charges would be as much as they were; that this was a different deal from the one to which he had agreed with the car dealer. The judge felt that the deal seemed to be pretty close to what the dealer represented it to be and he required the defendant in the case to stand by his contract, although he had signed it in blank. The buyer had put his signature on this instalment contract, it had been endorsed for value, and he was therefore, held liable for it. I merely state this to show how often people are deceived into signing documents of this type, and how lightly some enter upon a transaction which could be quite important. Many people who will shop widely for good prices on merchandise will slip very quickly into a proposition that requires them to pay a large amount for carrying charges on the products they buy.

As I have said, I see considerable interest in the country in this problem. Just the other day I had a note from a friend of mine who came originally from Cape Breton but who is now living in Ottawa and is interested in social work. He sent me a clipping from the Western Producer about the bill introduced by the hon. member for Rosthern and suggested I support that bill. In his letter which he attached to the clipping, he simply said, "Bob, is there any way a private member like yourself can help this proposal?" Well, I think that indicates two things: One is the amount of interest of a lot of people in this sort of thing and, second, how very few people realize how much impact the opinion of a private member in the house has upon the government in matters of this kind.

As hon. members are aware, we now have a royal commission on this subject which will be conducting hearings all across Canada in the months to come. I refer to the royal commission on banking and finance in Canada, the appointment of the members of which was announced by the Prime Minister on October 18. It is under the chairmanship of the distinguished Mr. Dana H. Porter, chief justice of Ontario. The other commissioners are, Mr. W. Thomas Brown, of Vancouver, British Columbia; Mr. James Douglas Gibson, of Toronto; Mr. Gordon L. Harrold of Calgary; Mr. Paul H. Leman, Montreal; Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, Kingston; and Mr. John C. MacKeen, a well known businessman from my own province of Nova Scotia. All of these men have excellent qualifications for this work which is before them. The commission is now active; the secretariat has been set up and, as I said, hearings will commence across the nation very soon.

The terms of reference of the royal commission are very broad. They will be considering matters of the kind proposed in this bill today as well as matters of the type proposed in the bill introduced by the hon. member for Rosthern. I think this is an example of how quickly the government acts in matters of this kind, where private members have advocated measures which would deal with consumer financing and have suggested that an inquiry should be made. As hon. members will recall, when bills similar to this were before the house before, most members were inclined to be cautious about having such bills passed. However, many did suggest that an inquiry should be made into the whole field of consumer financing. As a result the government has launched this commission, and it surprises me how few people in the nation seem to know that the inquiry is going ahead. Indeed, the hon. member for Assiniboia suggested that a special committee should be set up to inquire into consumer financing and interest rates. I wonder if he realizes that these matters will be gone into by the royal commission?

Mr. Argue: I have more faith in us than in a royal commission.

Mr. MacLellan: I would say the best way to examine this question and make the detailed inquiry necessary would be by means of a royal commission. They have the staff, they have the facilities and the time to go into this matter very fully, to a much greater extent than we could here in a committee. However, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put on the record the statement of the Minister of Finance when he announced in the commons on June 20, 1961, that this royal commission would be set up later. Speaking of the terms of reference of the commission at that time, as reported on page 6648 of Hansard for June 20, 1961, he said:

> Meanwhile, I say that the terms of reference will be broad, covering all aspects of money, banking, credit and finance. The financing of the Canadian economy will be one of the major areas of study. Such broad topics as the pattern and behaviour of interest rates, consumer credit and instalment financing, and the management of the public debt, will be included in the terms of reference. The commission will be asked to study existing financial institutions, such as the chartered banks, the Bank of Canada, and other institutions that perform banking and credit functions, and the various acts of parliament which govern their activities.

The commission will also be asked to consider ways and means of encouraging the development of savings institutions. It would be our intention that the report of the commission should be available well in advance of the decennial review of the Bank Act.

I put that on the record to show that this royal commission will be going into matters covered by this bill today. I would suggest to the house that this bill should not be passed until we have had an opportunity to see the report of the royal commission following their exhaustive inquiry.

I am very pleased to see this inquiry taking place. As I have stated on previous occasions in this house, this is a very complicated issue and one which needs to be examined, certainly one which should have a very careful and exhaustive examination before precipitate action is taken. It is very easy to say that 12 per cent should be enough interest for anyone to earn on a loan and indeed, of course, at first blush it is. However, there are many situations, as all hon. members are aware, in which high risk credit is required and this rate may not be high enough to make the loan attractive to the lender. Rates depend on many factors which are always fluctuating. I doubt very much if it would be in the interest of the nation to limit the rate of interest as this bill suggests, without first of all looking fully into all the aspects of the case. Of course, I am in accord with the general principle of the bill.

The rates that are charged at any given time in any sector of the economy will depend upon the money supply at the time, the demands for loans of the type in question and the risk which is involved, as well, of course, as the cost of administering the loan. Everyone will realize that 6 per cent on a $10,000 mortgage loan can be obtained with very much less administration cost than on the same $10,000 advanced in 100 small loans. The administration needed for each of these 100 loans could be even greater than on a mortgage loan of $10,000 which had real estate security behind it. It has been pointed out that credit unions get by with a rate of 1 per cent per month. It has been my experience, working closely with credit unions, that there are many types of loans which a credit union must decline because it wants to keep the interest rates down. They normally require the endorsement of someone having funds on deposit in the credit union, or some other type of endorsement that will more or less guarantee the loan. Many loan companies and instalment companies lend money only on the value of goods, and their security is not nearly as strong in the case of default as the endorsement of a guarantor.

[Mr. MacLellan.]

However there can be no question but that the whole subject of consumer financing is very important and has very widespread economic and social effects. Indeed one is often surprised at the lack of knowledge shown by many people as to what they actually pay for money and what interest costs on many of these instalment transactions. Some time ago I was reading a book which I know is familiar to many hon. members. It is entitled "The Organization Man" by William H. Whyte, Jr. The book deals generally with the development of the new white-collar group in the United States, the young executive people who are climbing the ladder in industry and business, and it surveyed generally the life of the new suburbia which has grown up in the last 20 years.

The book is very interesting, particularly chapter 24, where the author writes of the results of surveys made into the buying and saving habits of these young executives in the suburbs of the larger cities. I think it would be well to bear in mind that the people of whom he speaks are not uneducated people. Most of them have college education or are graduates of high schools. If anyone should understand the mysteries of instalment buying and the cost of credit, and should be able to apply that knowledge, surely these people would be the ones. But this is what Mr. Whyte says as a result of the surveys he has conducted in many of the big subdivisions in the United States. I am quoting from page 326:

For a future capitalist, the organization man displays a remarkable inability to manipulate capital. His handling of "debt consolidation" is a case in point. The growing popularity of loans for this purpose conjures up a picture of chastened citizens tightening their belts and cannily reducing total interest charges. The picture is quite misleading. It is true enough, of course, that in taking out one large loan from a bank a person can cut down the interest he has been paying on a variety of purchases from 25 to 30 per cent to a low of 12 or 18 per cent. But this is not the reason most purchasers take out the loan. In actual practice their consolidating is a sort of check-kiting operation by which they can square themselves away for yet another round of commitments. When these are halfway digested, they will be back again. And again.

They pay dearly for the convenience. Consider, for example, a possible alternative. A mythical couple we will call the Frugals decide to defer all but necessary purchases for enough months to accumulate an extra $500. They will then have a revolving fund of their own which they can use for cash purchases, and instead of paying out a fixed amount each month in instalment loans, they will use these sums to replenish the $500.

Now let's take a normal couple. The Joneses, with precisely the same income, don't put off purchases but instead commit themselves to a combination of instalment loans and revolving-credit plans. At the end of ten years the Joneses would have paid out somewhere around $800 in interest. The Frugals, by contrast would have earned interest —roughly $150. Not counting the extra benefits they would have reaped by being able to buy for cash, they would be, in toto, almost a thousand dollars better off.

The Frugals, to repeat, are somewhat mythical. Most suburbanites fail to accumulate capital to produce capital, and they fail to manipulate what capital they do have. It rarely occurs to them, for example, to use their savings as collateral in taking out a loan. Were they to do this they could frequently get an actual rate as low as 4¼ to 4½ per cent instead of the usual 10 to 12 per cent—and their savings would still earn them the regular rate of interest.

Again I say the author is speaking of people who are well trained and educated under a formal educational system which is comparable and parallel to our own.

I am very pleased to see that the royal commission is examining this very important matter. I think what is needed in this field is first of all to have forms of finance contracts, perhaps set by statute, which will clearly set forth the cost and legal effects of merchandising under this system. So far as these forms go, I think the fine print on the back should be summarized on the front in block type so that a man who signs one will know what he is signing. For example the form should tell him that the dealer is lending him the merchandise until it is paid for. He should know that if he defaults he is still liable for the price of the goods, even if they are repossessed. It should tell him that if the goods are sold and they do not bring in an amount sufficient to cover the balance of principal and interest then he can be sued in court for the difference. Also I think it should be clearly stated on the face of the form what is the total cost of finance and other charges, shown both as a sum of money and as a percentage of the principal involved.

There are some who will say that this is a free enterprise country and that we should be very careful with the ways in which we interfere with the flow of credit, particularly as much of the manufacturing industry depends on this type of instalment purchasing. I agree with that, but it is my suggestion that free choice depends upon one having a knowledge, of the facts and factors involved, so that a rational choice can be made.

I would like to see my children and all other children across the land taught in schools about this type of financing because they will be meeting it a few years after they leave school. No boy or girl should leave grade 8 without understanding that the retailer in many ways is a financier, and of what problems the consumer can get into unless he knows something about modern day merchandise financing procedures.

Mention was made today of the work done by credit unions and figures were put on the record to show their growth from 1950 to 1960. The credit union movement has given a great service to the nation in terms of funds made available to the people, particularly in rural areas, who otherwise would not have this credit obtainable to them. However, I feel one of the greatest contributions which the credit union movement has made has been in the field of education. These organizations have been formed all across the land to bring people together to study matters such as the cost of interest, and the power of savings, and also to show them how with proper handling of their finances so much more can be obtained from a dollar bill. This work of the credit union movement has done a lot of good in the nation. The credit union movement has also pioneered a movement to have some controls set up over consumer financing. This I believe is all to the good.

I would like to conclude by saying again that I am very pleased to see a royal commission on banking and finance set up, which will be inquiring into this problem. This is another example to illustrate that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister listen to what is said by hon. members in this house. I am proud to be one of those who have raised their voices since 1958 for an inquiry into this matter of consumer financing and interest rates.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Any measure introduced in either of the two houses of parliament which tends to reduce interest rates receives pretty favourable reaction in the country, and is of interest to the people. I believe this bill will receive the same consideration. I am in favour of most of its provisions. It attempts to reduce the interest rates of loans made by the small loan companies. I know that no tears will be shed by our banks, which offer a similar service, if this bill is passed. I am fully aware of the fact that our credit unions would not be hurt; as a matter of fact they would be in favour of this bill going through.

However I realize that the people most concerned, the small loans companies, would raise a hue and cry, as they have in the past, and would say that if interest rates on small loans were reduced from 24 per cent to 12 per cent it would put them out of business.

Previous speakers on this bill have proved —and I intend to add something to that proof —that the banks are doing very well at a set rate of interest. Our credit unions are doing very well too, in spite of the fact that they give more protection and more service than even the banks, and at a lower rate of interest. If we accept the amendment incorporated in this bill and it means the demise of the small loans companies, I am all in favour of speeding their demise; I am all in favour of seeing them go, because we have alternate institutions which provide the same service at a lower rate of interest. By allowing and supporting high interest rates we are protecting the loan companies. I feel that it is the people, the masses, the borrowers who need protection, and this bill intends to give just that.

I agree with everything the hon. member for Assiniboia has said about credit unions. I speak from experience in my own credit union, which I have had the honour to manage for a number of years. I can only add that my credit union lends money at 8 per cent and it gives the following services to the borrower. It gives insurance in the event of his death or physical incapacity to carry on his business, profession or trade. In this event, the debt is paid. This money must come from somewhere, and it comes from those whom we call shareholders, in credit union treminology; the people who have little money to spare. These shareholders get insurance up to deposits of $2,000; that is, any member of the credit union who has enough savings in the credit union up to $2,000 is insured to that amount without having to pay any extra premiums. In the event of his death—and I know this from experience—his estate receives the same amount in insurance as he had in savings in the credit union. If his savings were $1,000, his estate receives insurance of $1,000. The same thing applies whether the amount is more or less, but in any event it is up to the amount of his savings up to $2,000.

But more than that, Mr. Speaker, this same credit union has continued to pay 3½ per cent interest to the investors, the members who put their savings into the credit union. This compares very favourably with the bank interest rate of 2¾ per cent. This same credit union has been paying rebates to its borrowers even on an interest charge of 8 per cent. Most credit unions work on the basis of 12 per cent interest, with rebates to their borrowers. In addition to that, my credit union pays the manager. It does not pay a salary comparable to that paid to the executives of small loans companies, but it is worth the manager's while to spend his time in looking after the affairs of the credit union. In addition to that my credit union pays the rent of the office.

If a credit union lending money at 8 per cent interest can give its shareholders a 3½ per cent dividend, on the basis of 12 per cent interest I feel it could give them a 7½ per cent dividend. That is a pretty favourable return on any investment. I know that any hon. member of this house would be quite satisfied with interest of 7½ per cent on his money. Therefore I ask this house: why should the small loans companies be entitled to charge 24 per cent, plus hidden charges, charges that we do not know about? Is this going to drive them out of business? If they are to be driven out of business, the sooner the better, Mr. Speaker.

The bank interest rate is pegged, and the banks are doing wonderfully well. We have only to look at the size and height of the magnificent buildings they have put up to realize this. These small loans sharks are doing even better. The name small loans companies is a misnomer; they should be called high rate loans companies.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to support this bill. I hope that, if it does not pass now, the time will come when a check will be put on these people who try to get their pound of flesh from the Canadian people.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill No. C-19 I first look back to previous debates when this bill was first introduced and when the interest rate was first set at 2 per cent per month on small loans. Actually it has been in effect since 1939 on loans under $500, and from 1956 on this 2 per cent per month interest rate was allowed on loans under $300.

While I support the idea and the theme behind the bill which is before us, there are several questions that come to my mind with regard to the application of the bill. Will the bill accomplish what the mover is trying to accomplish? Why has he arrived at an interest rate of 12 per cent a year, or 1 per cent a month? This is an old question that has been raised in previous debates but never really answered by the mover of this bill. He has introduced the bill several times but he has never really answered this question; therefore it remains to be answered for anyone questioning the feasibility of the bill.

The other question that I wonder about is this: what is the number of loans made every year which this bill will affect; in other words, how big or how small is the scope of this particular bill? How much money is involved, and what percentage is the money involved compared to all loans made under the Small Loans Act? This bill only sets out to reduce the interest rate on the amount of money on a loan of less than $300 so it is actually a proposal involving only a small amount. It does not cover some of the questions which have bothered me with regard to lending money in recent years; these are mainly connected with credit buying. Actually this bill does not affect loans concerning the sale of goods. In other words, T. Eaton and all the large chain stores can continue to charge their own interest rates or debit accounts with fixed charges with regard to collection and so on. So I ask: would this bill accomplish the things I would like to see accomplished for the small people who buy goods on time?

I know that in my own home area we are not served by large chain stores to any great extent. Perhaps for this reason I do not usually take advantage of charge accounts, but since coming to Ottawa I have had occasion to make purchases in some of the large stores here, and whenever I have presented cash the clerks seemed slightly annoyed. They seemed to be thinking: why bother with this stuff—put it on the account. I wondered why they wanted me to run up a charge account, and the only conclusion I could reach was that they wanted to make money on my money; in other words they wanted to make more money on my purchases. So far they have not been too successful.

Mr. Benidickson: Bankers instead of merchants.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): As the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River says, bankers instead of merchants. That, in a sense, is true. But with regard to the amount of money concerned in this measure, we should ask ourselves: are the interest rates too high? Are loan companies making profits that are beyond reason or exorbitant? I do not support the hon. member for Assiniboia in the attitude he has taken in the past with regard to profits. I think people and companies should be allowed to make profits. In this case we must ask ourselves whether the profits are unreasonable. The mover of this bill has not yet produced any evidence which, in my opinion, suggests that the profits are out of line. I have gone back through previous reports and I notice that in 1946 the government of the day introduced an amendment to this act to reduce the interest rate from 2 per cent to 1½ per cent. This amendment was referred to the banking and commerce committee following second reading and I imagine it was given exhaustive study by that committee, though I have not had time to look up the records. In any case, the bill was not reported back to the house. Even in that year, 1946, it was stated that the companies were not charging the maximum allowable rate of interest but that they were only charging 1½ per cent. However, the measure was not reported back to the house, so I am still in doubt as to whether this figure of 12 per cent or 1 per cent per month which the hon. member has put forward is appropriate or just in the light of all the circumstances.

I certainly support the contention that people taking advantage of small loans should be able to get them at a reasonable rate. I also recognize that when a small sum is borrowed the fixed charges may be as much as they would be on a larger loan and that therefore it is reasonable to expect that the percentage charged would be slightly higher in the case of a small loan than in the case of a larger one.

Today more than ever before we are living in a credit economy. Credit is a very important thing. In fact, I think it the most important thing. I believe that all young people going out into the world should take their credit very seriously. Actually, this bill can only affect those companies which are licensed and which have a federal charter. Loan companies or finance companies with provincial charters can operate within a province and charge any rates they like on loans above $1,500. This is a point which I should like to see covered; I think it would be more beneficial to the borrowers than the particular piece of legislation we have before us because there are a large number of people who borrow sums larger than $1,500. Many people borrow money from finance companies to purchase automobiles and other goods which are necessary in the modern world.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member permit me to draw his attention to the clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: The business for Monday will be third reading of the bill relating to the proposed railway line in the Gaspe peninsula followed by supplementary estimates. If these are disposed of we have other legislative items available.

Mr. Benidickson: Can the minister not indicate what those legislative items may be on Monday or Tuesday?

Mr. Churchill: I must leave it open to see what progress we make with the supplementary estimates which have become urgent. We could go ahead with the resolution standing in my name dealing with amendments to the Veterans Land Act.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SMUGGLING ACTIVITIES OF CANADIANS ON INTERNATIONAL COMMISSIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it had been the hope of the government, in view of Canada's important international commitments in Indo-China and the extremely delicate situation prevailing there at this time, that the allegations regarding smuggling activities by certain Canadians serving on the international control commissions there would not be made the subject of public debate. Meantime with regard to the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and also by the Minister of National Defence matters that are under investigation are under ordinary circumstances not subject to discussion in parliament, and it has been regarded as a matter of public policy that they ought not to be. However, an hon. member of this house who is not present at the moment, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), has chosen not to accept the statements of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the house and has made certain statements outside this house which are inaccurate. For that reason it becomes necessary in the national interest to set the record straight.

Late last year it was discovered that some of the military members of the Canadian delegation to the international supervisory commissions in Indo-China were engaged in smuggling activities within Indo-China. Immediate investigations by the military authorities in Indo-China indicated that one commissioned officer and one non-commissioned officer had engaged in gold smuggling, and five other ranks appeared to have engaged in either the smuggling of gold or opium. All of those involved who were still in Indo-China were recalled to Canada. Disciplinary action was taken in Indo-China against a number of these military personnel before their return to Canada. Investigations of the others are still continuing.

At first it was believed that only military members were involved, but subsequently it was learned that two members of the clerical staff of the Department of External Affairs serving in Indo-China had also been engaged in smuggling. Administrative action to prevent a recurrence was taken immediately by the Department of External Affairs and by the Department of National Defence. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police were apprised of this situation and were requested to take charge of the investigation in so far as it affected the civilian members of the Department of External Affairs. The two members of the Department of External Affairs engaged in these improper activities were returned to Canada and have been interviewed by the R.C.M.P. They have signed statements admitting that they acted together in smuggling a quantity of gold and a parcel of opium, on behalf of a Chinese person, from one city to another in Indo-China. Both men have been suspended from the public service of Canada with a view to subsequent dismissal.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has referred to ugly rumours and speculation in the press. Three rumours that caused the house most concern appear to have originated in what the hon. gentleman is reported to have said. Reports have appeared in the press that the persons concerned received large sums of money as a result of engaging in these activities. Certain of those concerned did receive sums of money in local currency, but the reports concerning the amounts have been very greatly exaggerated.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is quoted in the March 9 edition of the Ottawa Citizen as saying:

> Viet Nam has been a major source of supply for narcotics coming into Canada.

There is no evidence whatever, Mr. Speaker, that narcotics have been smuggled into Canada by Canadians serving on the three truce commissions in Indo-China. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has linked this affair with what he describes as "mass arrests in British Columbia by Royal Canadian Mounted Police a few months ago." Again I must say that on the information I have—and I have personally looked into the matter in detail—that statement is completely mistaken. There has been nothing to indicate or suggest that this matter is in any way related to the arrests in British Columbia to which the hon. member referred. The drug involved in the matter which is before the house is opium, which the enforcement officers advise is rarely if ever handled by illegal narcotics dealers in Canada.

The statement I have made represents the results of an investigation made not only by the department of defence in respect of those who belong to the armed forces, but as well by the Department of External Affairs and the R.C.M.P. with respect to the civilian employees. If the hon. member, or any hon. member, is in possession of any information bearing on this case, the house may be sure that the information will be used, and used effectively if it is conveyed without delay to those responsible for these investigations. But as far as the government and the several departments are concerned, I have given a full and complete statement regarding this matter.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it is well that the Prime Minister should have made this statement. The details of the statement, which will certainly require consideration, seem to me to confirm our view that it would have been well if a statement of this kind had been made immediately after the original allegations were made, because in the very nature of things those allegations were bound to receive a great deal of publicity. That happened and that publicity grew, in the absence of information, over the week end in a way which was bound to result in unfortunate speculation and rumours which might have reacted unjustly and unfavourably on the services concerned.

I think the house welcomes the statement made by the Prime Minister, and it is to be hoped this statement will remove some of the more alarming rumours and will put this matter in perspective.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group appreciate the Prime Minister's frank statement on this very serious situation, which no doubt has caused great concern to the Canadian people. All I wish to say is that if after investigation these allegations prove to have some substance, the members of the armed forces or personnel of the Department of External Affairs should be dealt with under the Criminal Code and, if proven guilty, sentenced according to Canadian law. We hope there will be no shielding of anyone because of their position or because of the circumstances in which these alleged irregularities existed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the suggestion made by the hon. member I might be allowed to answer. I appreciate what the Leader of the Opposition had to say in this regard. He himself is fully aware of the fact that in 1956 similar difficulties arose, but they were dealt with at that time by the government of the day in the manner which this government has followed.

With respect to the suggestion of the hon. member, in so far as civilians are concerned the hon. gentleman says they should be proceeded against under the Criminal Code. An examination of the Criminal Code and of the other pertinent acts, particularly the narcotics act, indicates that the offences, having been committed outside of Canada, are not subject to prosecution in Canada. That was one of the situations which was revealed during the course of the events of 1956.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): My question arises out of the fact that I was surprised, almost shocked, to hear that Canadians in service overseas, whether in the defence forces or in various departments of government, are not subject to Canadian law. I ask my question because I believe it is the responsibility of parliament to the Canadian people to maintain a high standard of integrity in the public service.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question to ask, perhaps he would ask it, but I doubt from his preamble whether he could ask a proper question, one which would not be inviting a legal opinion.

Mr. Herridge: This is a very proper question. I will ask the Minister of National Defence this question. If any commissioned officers are found guilty of a criminal offence outside Canada, will they be permitted to continue to hold Her Majesty's commission?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): That, of course, is a hypothetical question. However, perhaps I should point out to the hon. member that when the Prime Minister was dealing with this matter earlier, he spoke of civilian personnel. I should like to make it clear that military personnel, no matter where they may be serving, are subject to the code of military discipline.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to make a statement concerning the international wheat agreement.

In January of this year the Canadian government received an invitation from the secretary general of the United Nations to participate in the United Nations wheat conference, commencing on January 31 in Geneva, for the renewal or replacement of the current international wheat agreement which came into effect on August 1, 1959, and which expires on July 31, 1962.

Mindful of the important part successive wheat agreements have played since the late 1940's in assuring supplies of wheat to importing countries and markets for wheat to exporting countries at equitable and stable prices, and aware of the wide support for the international wheat agreement among producers organizations in western Canada, the government authorized the dispatch of a strong delegation including government officials, Canadian wheat board representatives and members of the advisory committee of the Canadian wheat board, who are at the same time leaders of the principal farm organizations in western Canada.

Nearly 60 countries took part in or were represented by observers at the six week conference. The negotiations have now come to a successful conclusion. Subject to ratification by the governments concerned, a new three year international wheat agreement, similar in structure to the 1959 agreement, will come into force next August 1, expiring on July 31, 1965. Should all the major exporters participating in the conference, including the U.S.S.R., ratify the agreement, all the important sources of wheat will be brought within the ambit of international wheat co-operation.

The new price range raises the minimum price, in U.S. dollars, for No. 1 Northern in store Fort William/Port Arthur and Vancouver from $1.50 to $1.62 and the maximum price from $1.90 to $2.02½. At the current rate of exchange this price range in Canada in dollars is $1.71½ minimum and $2.13⅝ maximum. It should be noted that selling prices for the next three years are to be within the price range, and that actual prices will depend on market conditions. It is worth pointing out in this connection that the actual selling price in Canadian dollars for No. 1 Northern at Fort William fell, during the course of the present agreement, to a low of $1.63⅝ in November 1960. This is not only 50 cents lower than the new maximum of almost $2.14, but it is about 8 cents lower than the new minimum.

In view of these facts hon. members will appreciate the remarkable degree to which prices have recovered, due both to a changed market situation and to the current discount on the Canadian dollar. Members will also appreciate the significance of a higher minimum price, keeping in mind the extent to which prices did fall in recent years before surpluses began to diminish rapidly in the face of increased exports and reduced production.

The new agreement provides that so long as prices remain below the maximum price specified in the agreement, each member importing country undertakes to purchase from member exporting countries a specified percentage of its total commercial purchases of wheat. The exporting countries in turn agree, in association with one another, to supply all the commercial requirements of the importing countries so long as prices are lower than the maximum price. When prices reach the maximum, member exporting countries undertake to supply member importing countries with a definite quantity of wheat based on their average purchases over a recent period of years at a price not greater than the maximum, and importing countries are released from their obligation to make their purchases from member exporting countries.

The agreement also continues to provide for an annual review of the world wheat situation, which has been an important feature of the 1959 agreement. These reviews are carried out in the light of information obtainable in relation to national production, stocks, prices and trade including special transactions under government assistance programs.

In anticipation of a possible wider participation of exporters in the agreement, member importing countries have accepted a commitment to purchase a larger percentage of their commercial requirements from member exporting countries. Of particular importance is the strengthening of safeguards for the commercial marketings of the exporting countries by means of more precise definitions of what constitute commercial and concessional sales. Furthermore, consideration was also given by the conference to the effective utilization of excess supplies of wheat in raising levels of consumption and assisting in general economic and market development in developing countries with low levels of individual income. While it was recognized that programs to this end are provided for by individual governments and on a multilateral basis, it was agreed that the objectives of the agreement should reflect the concern of the conference for the problems of developing countries.

The new agreement represents a significant advance on the present agreement. With all the important sources of wheat covered by the new agreement, importers will enjoy, despite sharp reductions in wheat supplies, a greater assurance that they will be able to purchase their commercial supplies of wheat at equitable and stable prices. At the same time exporters benefit by reason of the increased price range, the increased obligations of importing countries and the improved safeguards for commercial marketings. I am glad to say that this new agreement carries the unanimous support of the producer advisers who were members of the Canadian delegation throughout the conference, and I am sure it will equally commend itself to all members of the house. The text of the new agreement will be submitted for ratification at the present session.

The members of the delegation deserve our thanks for the highly successful conclusion of these negotiations. The chief members of the delegation were J. H. Warren, assistant deputy minister of the Department of Trade and Commerce, C. F. Wilson, consul general for Canada at Chicago and W. C. McNamara, chief commissioner of the Canadian wheat board.

The producer advisers who were in attendance were A. W. Runciman, president, united grain growers, Winnipeg; J. S. Stevens, director, united grain growers, Winnipeg; C. W. Gibbings, president, Saskatchewan wheat pool, Regina; A. P. Gleave, president, Saskatchewan farmers union; Saskatoon, Gordon L. Harrold, chairman, Alberta wheat pool, Calgary; W. J. Parker, president, Manitoba wheat pool, Winnipeg.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the terms of the new three year wheat agreement announced by the Minister of Veterans Affairs on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture indicate a rise of 12½ cents a bushel in both minimum and maximum prices under the agreement it should, as the minister suggested, commend itself to all sections of the house. However, it must be remembered that the strengthening of the position of those who are exporting wheat has been largely due to the fact that new customers who were not buying wheat when the last agreement was formulated have appeared in the picture. Most of these are communist countries. In addition to that, the new customers have appeared coincidental with a falling off in the volume of crops of wheat in exporting countries in recent years.

The minister made reference to the exchange rate and the lower value of the Canadian dollar at this time vis-à-vis the United States dollar. I am sure that in this respect the farmers, being an important element in our export trade, will have noted that the Minister of Finance through the exchange fund within the last two months spent $309 million to prevent the Canadian dollar from going lower.

The minister made some reference to the possible entry into the agreement of the U.S.S.R. It was not clear whether that is probable or merely possible. This, of course, would have a bearing in making the international agreement more secure. I join with the minister on behalf of those on this side of the house in commending the very strong delegation that was sent to this conference. It has always been Canada's practice to send a strong delegation to this important conference. Among the names I recognize many who have previously been delegates to international preparatory conferences.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will appreciate the statement the minister has made, and will wish to compliment the department for the leadership it has given in the signing of this new three year international agreement. The increase in price of 12½ cents will go some of the way it is necessary to go to bring about equalization with the increased costs that western farmers, who are most interested in this problem, have to meet. It certainly must be gratifying to all Canadians to know that Canada has been able to play a larger part in arriving at an agreement with respect to an international regulated price, and also that some consideration has been given to the development of new grades for our wheat and that something has been accomplished in this field.

We also appreciate the fact that consideration has been given to new markets and that there is a guarantee that wheat will be available at between the maximum and minimum price to new purchasers. In addition, we appreciate the fact that there will be room within the new international wheat agreement to bring in those new countries that are now going into wheat production, and to assure them of an opportunity to establish themselves in the markets so far as the sale of their product is concerned. I think the fact that Canada has made a contribution to the international wheat agreement is a compliment to the farmers and farm organizations as well as to the department which has assisted in this regard.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADOPTION OF REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the reports of the civil service commission concerning certain positions on the staffs of the parliamentary restaurant, the House of Commons, and the library of parliament, laid upon the table of the house, Thursday, March 8, 1962, be now approved.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER GREATER DISPATCH OF BUSINESS

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 8—The Prime Minister:

That a select committee, to be designated, be appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of this house for the purpose of suggesting any changes that may be desirable to assure the more expeditious dispatch of public business, and, in particular, to consider the desirability of repealing standing order No. 33 (closure rule), with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time its findings and recommendations to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

PURCHASES OF FEED GRAIN BY FEED MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 228—Mr. Boulanger:

Questions

1. Since November 30, 1960, when the regulations of the Canadian wheat board were amended, what quantities of feed grain (oats, barley, and wheat) have been purchased by feed manufacturers directly from the farmers holding a permit book issued by the board, from November 30, 1960, to December 31, 1961?

2. What prices have the farmers received for these three types of grain?

Answer by: Mr. Charlton:

1. The new policy respecting feed mill purchases in the prairie provinces did not come into effect until December 1960. According to the terms of the agreement between the Canadian wheat board and the feed mills concerned the mill operators have to report to the board the quantities purchased. This is done twice a year, covering a six month period. Accurate figures on deliveries are available for the period from January 1, 1961 to July 31, 1961. These are shown in the table below. Figures for the first six months of the current crop year are not yet complete, inasmuch as some of the mills have not yet filed their report with the Canadian wheat board. The quantities so far reported for this period are indicated separately in the following table:

		Wheat	Oats (bushels)	Barley
Manitoba	—Jan. 1, 1961—July 31, 1961	421,502	545,599	156,965
	Aug. 1, 1961—Jan. 31, 1962	340,804	435,643	211,155
Saskatchewan	—Jan. 1, 1961—July 31, 1961	239,951	161,578	197,187
	Aug. 1, 1961—Jan. 31, 1962	164,817	87,840	289,220
Alberta-B.C.	—Jan. 1, 1961—July 31, 1961	787,390	972,748	918,175

*PROPERTY RENTAL SETTLEMENT, LETHBRIDGE, ALTA.

Question No. 234—Mr. Roberge:

Has the Department of Transport reached an equitable settlement with Dr. D. B. Fowler of Lethbridge, Alberta, with respect to the latter's claim for rental for the use of his property by the Department of Transport since 1947; and, if so, what are the terms of this settlement?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, settlement has not been reached with Dr. D. B. Fowler of Lethbridge in respect of his claim for compensation for the use of his property. Proceedings have been instituted in the exchequer court. The case was to have been heard at the March sittings of the court at Calgary and has been postponed at the request of Dr. Fowler for hearing at Lethbridge this autumn.

*ROYAL COMMISSION ON TRANSPORTATION

Question No. 245—Mr. McMillan:

1. How many commissioners were appointed to the royal commission on transportation?
2. How much was paid to each commissioner together with his out of pocket expenses?
3. What personnel were employed by the royal commission on transportation in the course of its hearings and the preparation of its report?
4. What was the total amount paid to them together with out of pocket expenses?
5. What was the total cost to Canada of the royal commission on transportation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer is a rather lengthy one. I wonder if the house would agree to placing it on Hansard without being read.

[Mr. Charlton.]

Mr. Speaker: I see what appear to be two pages.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One full page.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this full page be taken as read and recorded?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*CLOSURE OF COLLIERY, NEW WATERFORD, N.S.

Question No. 246—Mr. Batten:

Has the Prime Minister received a petition signed by approximately 1,000 coal miners requesting the federal government to take action to prevent the closure of No. 16 colliery at New Waterford, Nova Scotia; and, if so, what action, if any, does the government propose to take on each of the specific proposals advanced by the petitioners?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. On March 7 a delegation headed by Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia, who was accompanied by the Nova Scotia minister of mines, Hon. Donald M. Smith, and the minister of municipal affairs, Hon. Layton Fergusson, and comprising members of the executive of the united mine workers and representatives of colliery No. 16 and of the municipalities affected, met with the Ministers of National Revenue, Labour, Mines and Technical Surveys and Forestry. The circumstances affecting the plans of the Dominion Coal Company to close colliery No. 16 on or about August 12 of this year were fully discussed. The delegation was assured by the representatives of the federal government that careful consideration would be given to its representations.

*NATIONAL LIBRARIAN—ABSENCE FROM OTTAWA

Question No. 247—Mr. Fisher:

1. With reference to the activities of the national librarian, in the period 1957-1961, inclusive, how many weeks has the incumbent been away from Ottawa on official duties?
2. For each of these years, what places were visited, how long were the visits, and what were the purposes of the visits?
3. What was the total cost by year of the travel expenses incurred?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question takes a little better than a full page of foolscap. I wonder whether it could be printed in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is the house prepared to accept the minister's suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. 1957, 4 weeks and 1 day; 1958, 4 weeks and 4 days; 1959, 3 weeks and 4 days; 1960, 2 weeks; 1961, 3 weeks and 3 days.

2. In 1957: Toronto (3 days), to consult with architects of the new national library building; Montreal (2 days) to speak to the Quebec library association and to visit libraries; Boston (4 days), to attend the convention of the special libraries association and speak there; Vancouver (10 days, including a day in Toronto on the way home), to speak at the opening of the new Vancouver public library, and to consult with architects of the new national library building; Toronto (2 days), to speak at dinner of the music publishers' association.

In 1958: Montreal (1 day), to lecture at McGill library school; Windsor (1 day), to receive degree from Assumption University and deliver convocation address; Quebec (4 days), to attend convention of the Canadian library association; Europe (15 days), to visit libraries and consult with librarians, including royal library at The Hague, the bibliothèque nationale in Paris, the British museum library in London, the national library of Scotland in Edinburgh, the Mitchell library in Glasgow and Cambridge University library; in addition, books were purchased for the national library in many of the cities visited, notably London, Edinburgh and Cambridge; Toronto (3 days), for consultations with librarian of Canadian National Institute for the Blind, and with architects of the national library building.

In 1959: Montreal (3 days), to chair round table at the conference of the Canadian national commission for UNESCO; Montreal (2 days), to lecture at McGill library school; Montreal (2 days), to attend opening of new Fraser-Hickson institute library; Edmonton (7 days), to attend convention of the Canadian library association; Toronto (2 days), to confer with publishers' and booksellers' councils; Toronto (1 day), to speak at opening of North York public library; Montreal (2 days), to speak at opening of Westmount public library.

In 1960: Toronto (2 days), to confer with librarians regarding plans for union catalogues in Toronto and Ottawa; New York (2 days), purchasing books for national library; Montreal (5 days), to attend joint conference of Canadian library association and the American library association; Kingston (1 day), to speak at opening of new Royal Military College library.

Questions

In 1961: Montreal (1 day), to lecture at McGill library school; Toronto (2 days), for meetings in connection with the Canadian library week council, of which the national librarian was chairman in 1961; St. Andrews (5 days), to attend conference of the Canadian library association; Toronto (3 days), to receive degree from Victoria University and attend opening of the new Victoria college library; Toronto (2 days), to speak to the book publishers' council; Halifax (2 days), to speak at the tenth anniversary of the Halifax memorial library; New York (3 days), to take part in opening of the Dag Hammarskjold library at the United Nations.

3. In 1957, $29.55; in 1958, $495.78; in 1959, $267.50; in 1960, $126.05; in 1961, $232.30.

*R.C.A.F. RESERVE—INCOME TAX DEDUCTIBILITY OF UNIFORM COSTS

Question No. 249—Mr. Carter:

Is the cost of uniforms deductible from taxable income by officers of the R.C.A.F. reserve?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, there is no provision for such under the Income Tax Act.

*GRANTS TO CHEESE FACTORIES, EASTERN PROVINCES

Question No. 251—Mr. Pigeon:

From 1958 to 1962, what has been, for the eastern provinces of Canada (Ontario, Quebec, and the maritimes), the total amount of the grants paid by the federal Department of Agriculture to the cheese factories (extension, equipment, and premiums on cheese to suppliers)?

Mr. Charlton: The total amount of grants and premiums paid to cheese factories in the maritime provinces, Ontario and Quebec for the amalgamation and improvement of cheese factories and equipment and for premiums on high quality cheese was $6,037,089 during the period April 1, 1957, to February 28, 1962.

*MRS. MAURICE SAUVÉ—TELEVISION PROGRAM "OPINIONS"

Question No. 252—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Is Mrs. Maurice Sauvé, the moderator of the weekly program "Opinions", shown on the French television network of the C.B.C.?
2. For how many years has she been the moderator of this weekly program?
3. Since she has taken over this program, what total remuneration has she received?
4. With respect to this weekly program, is Mrs. Maurice Sauvé acting in her capacity of director of public relations for the Quebec Liberal federation?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order in connection with this question, particularly part 4 thereof. I submit to you with deference that part 4 of this question should never have been allowed, because not only is it not within the departmental jurisdiction of the C.B.C. but it is also contrary to the rules, I believe, to accept a question of this nature. Furthermore, the person whose name has been mentioned has absolutely nothing to do with the public relations of the Quebec Liberal federation, and under the circumstances I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to erase that part of the question.

Mr. Speaker: In making his point of order the hon. member has rather answered the question himself. I am sorry that I did not notice the fourth section of this question when it was handed in; otherwise I should not have allowed it, because to ask a question of a minister of the crown about employees of the Quebec Liberal federation does seem to me to be going beyond the administrative capacity of the government. If the first three subsections make sense and the hon. member would wish them to stand alone, I think one alternative would be to strike out part 4 and let the first three parts be answered, or the question can be withdrawn and advanced again in another form.

Mr. Pigeon: I agree.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member in whose name the question stands would like the first three parts answered and the fourth part struck out as out of order.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes.

(Translation):

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation advises as follows:

1. Yes.
2. Since October 18, 1958.
3. It would not be in the public interest to disclose particulars of contracts entered into with individuals.

*MR. YVES MICHAUD—TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Question No. 253—Mr. Pigeon:

Is Mr. Yves Michaud, moderator of the program "Commentaires", also a member of the team producing "Edition spéciale" (shown on the French television network of the C.B.C.), acting in his capacity of chief editor of the newspaper Le Clairon of St. Hyacinthe?

(Translation):

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the C.B.C. informs me that the answer is no.

*JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE AGREEMENT, MONTREAL

Question No. 254—Mr. Fisher:

1. Does the federal government consider that either the province of Quebec and/or the city of Montreal have defaulted or failed to meet the terms of the original contract or agreement entered into on the Jacques Cartier bridge; and, if so, what steps to date has the federal government taken to see that the contract terms are met?

2. What sums, if any, have the province of Quebec and/or the city of Montreal failed to contribute or give towards fulfilling the contract?

3. If neither provincial nor city agency is in default, what term does the federal government apply to the relationship which came to exist regarding this bridge and the three authorities involved?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the national harbours board advises:

1. In accordance with the terms of the tripartite agreement under which the bridge was constructed, the province and the city each paid $2,045,342 toward the deficits incurred in the years 1930 to 1934 inclusive. The city then discontinued its payments, alleging non-liability, and the province also withheld its payments in view of the position taken by the city. The national harbours board entered suit against the city and was successful in obtaining judgment in its favour. As a result, in March, 1953 the city discharged its indebtedness by the payment of $744,426, together with interest in the amount of $210,407. This covered the years 1944-1949 inclusive. No deficits payable by the province or the city, as defined by the agreement, have occurred since 1949. A petition of right was submitted to the province on August 19, 1953, but no action has been taken by the province to discharge its obligation. The present provincial government has also been approached by the board, but no settlement has yet been made.

2. The province of Quebec is indebted to the board in the amount of $744,426, together with interest.

3. See No. 1.

*LIBRARY EXPENDITURES, EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Question No. 256—Mr. Fisher:

1. For the last three fiscal years, what has been the expenditure of the library in the Department of External Affairs on (a) monographs (b) periodicals?

2. What is the estimated cost of the services in this library of people with (a) professional library training (b) clerical training and (c) any other services such as janitorial?

Mr. Diefenbaker: This reply consists of a large number of figures, and I suggest that the house might consent to having them printed as if read.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CHANGES IN FACILITIES, PUBLIC ARCHIVES LIBRARY

Question No. 257—Mr. Fisher:

Have there been recent changes in the facilities or privileges offered scholars who use the library at the public archives; and, if so, why were these changes made, what is their nature, and how long will they last?

Answer by: Mrs. Fairclough:

The library of the public archives has been moved to two rooms on the ground floor formerly used for museum purposes. In the old quarters, on the second floor, the library staff and most of the book stock were accommodated in the same area; in the new quarters, the staff, readers and a reference collection occupy one room, and the second room is a stock room. The move was made because it had become essential to provide more space on the second floor for manuscripts, and the library is expected to remain in its new quarters as long as the public archives remains in the Sussex drive building.

*VOLUME II, STATUTES OF CANADA, 1952-1960

Question No. 258—Mr. Howard:

How many copies of volume II of the statutes of Canada for (a) 1960 (b) 1959 (c) 1958 (d) 1957-58 (e) 1957 (f) 1956 (g) 1955 (h) 1953-54 (i) 1952-53 (j) 1952, were printed in (i) English, and (ii) French; and what was the total cost of such work for each of the years mentioned above?

Mr. Balcer: I have the answer to this question and I am prepared to give it orally. However, it consists of four columns of ten lines each of figures, and perhaps I may therefore be permitted to have it printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this question, which has been starred, be answered in writing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*NATIONAL LIBRARIAN AND CHIEF OF PUBLIC ARCHIVES

Question No. 259—Mr. Fisher:

1. In the dual role of national librarian and chief of the public archives, what is the relative disposition of time given by the incumbent to each task?

2. Does he carry out these tasks in one, or two or more offices? Where and/or which?

Mrs. Fairclough: The answer to the first part of this question is that no exact figure can be given, as the relative time devoted to the national library and the public archives varies daily according to circumstances. On the whole, more time is devoted to the archives, because it is at present a considerably larger and more complicated organization.

The answer to question No. 2 is, the main office of the dominion archivist and national librarian is in the public archives building, Sussex drive, but another office is available in the records centre at Tunney's pasture, in which the national library is now housed. The office of the assistant national librarian is in the records centre. The national librarian or members of the staff travel back and forth between Sussex drive and Tunney's pasture as circumstances may require.

*DEEPENING OF MIRAMICHI RIVER CHANNEL

Question No. 260—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Have representations been made to the government for the deepening of the Miramichi river channel; and, if so, what action is contemplated by the government towards the completion of this project?

2. If the project has been considered feasible and warranted, when will it be undertaken?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. No decision has yet been made regarding the economic and extensive engineering studies required.

The answer to No. 2 is answered by No. 1.

*FEDERAL RIDINGS, JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE

Question No. 261—Mr. Fisher:

What federal ridings abut or are within two miles of the north and south ends of Jacques Cartier bridge?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the following eight federal electoral districts abut or are within two miles of the north end of the Jacques Cartier bridge; Sainte Marie, Saint Jacques, St. Ann, St. Lawrence-St. George, Cartier, Laurier, Lafontaine, and Hochelaga. As to the south end, there is one electoral district only, Longueuil.

BUTTER IN STORAGE

Question No. 262—Mr. Matheson:

1. What volume of butter stocks, or their equivalent in butter oil, was in storage on February 28, 1962?

2. What is the age of the oldest butter now in storage?

3. How many pounds of butter were lost in 1961 through spoilage?

Answer by: Mr. Hees:

1. The volume of butter stocks including butter equivalent of butter oil in storage on January 31, 1962, is 190,874,000 pounds. (Information for February 28, 1962, not available).

2. August, 1960.

3. None.

EMPLOYMENT—IMPACT OF AUTOMATION

Question No. 263—Mr. Herridge:

Has the Prime Minister received a request in a letter dated March 1st from the British Columbia federation of labour that the government immediately undertake a thorough examination of all aspects of the impact of automation and technical progress on employment; and, if so, what action does the government propose to take, and what was the nature of the reply?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

Yes, the letter in question was received. A letter of acknowledgement was sent under date of March 12, 1962 in which reference was made to the skilled manpower training research program, which was initiated in 1956 by the federal Department of Labour in co-operation with other interested federal and provincial departments and management and union organizations, and which has already produced several reports on various aspects of this problem.

*MARGARINE PRODUCTION, 1956-61

Question No. 264—Mr. Boulanger:

What has been the annual production of margarine for the years 1956 to 1961 inclusive?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the annual production of margarine for the years 1956 to 1961 inclusive is:

	lbs.
1956	124,707,000
1957	130,645,000
1958	145,598,000
1959	152,173,000
1960	166,321,000
1961	183,980,000

*GRAIN STORAGE AND HANDLING COMMITTEE

Question No. 265—Mr. Boulanger:

How many members are there on the committee organization recently formed to study grain storage and handling facilities, what are their names, whom do they represent, and what part of the country are they from?

Mr. Hees: The interdepartmental committee formed to study grain storage and handling facilities consist of 10 members. These are as follows:

W. D. Porter, (chairman), dominion bureau of statistics; E. E. Baxter, board of grain commissioners, Winnipeg; J. W. Channon, Department of Agriculture; R. M. Esdale, Department of Trade and Commerce; G. G. McLeod, Department of Transport; C. H. Malcolm, national harbours board; M. W. Menzies, Department of Agriculture; E. A. Oestreicher, Department of Finance; W. L. Posthumus, Department of Trade and Commerce; G. M. Schuthe, Department of Trade and Commerce.

All these officials are employed by government departments and agencies in Ottawa, with exception of Mr. Baxter who is located in Winnipeg.

*NATIONAL BUTTER ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 268—Mr. Boulanger:

1. Was a national butter advisory committee instituted; and, if so, when, and how many members are on this committee?
2. What are their names, occupations, and what part of the country are they from?
3. How many meetings were held, on what dates, and is this committee still functioning?

Mr. Charlton: The government of Canada did not appoint a butter advisory committee of Canada. However, in 1960 the government employed a public relations firm to conduct a butter promotional campaign. In the course of its work this firm named a butter advisory committee to assist them in an advisory capacity. This committee consisted of seven members.

The answer to part 2 is:

T. J. Wheeler, Toronto, Ontario, public relations counsellor.

Mrs. W. R. Walton, Jr., Toronto, Ontario, housewife.

Robert C. Smellie, Russell, Manitoba, retired creamery operator.

Dr. E. W. McHenry, Toronto, Ontario, professor of nutrition, school of hygiene, University of Toronto.

Frank E. Lutes, Berry Mills, N.B., dairy farmer.

J. B. Lemoine, Montreal, P.Q., president, L'Union Catholiques des Cultivateurs.

L. W. Pearsall, Ottawa, Ontario, assistant deputy minister, Department of Agriculture.

The answer to part 3 is that six meetings were held on the following dates: October 31, 1960; November 22, 1960; January 5, 1961; January 27, 1961; February 17, 1961; and March 23, 1961. The committee concluded its functions during May, 1961.

MILK PRODUCTION, 1960-1961

MARITIME SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS—REQUEST FOR POLICY CHANGE

Question No. 272—Mr. Robichaud:

Has the maritimes federal superannuated civil servants association requested a change in the superannuation policy in order to bring superannuation payments in line with today's cost of living; and, if so, what reply, if any, has been made to this request by the government?

Answer by: Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

Yes. The circular letter was acknowledged and attention drawn to misstatements in the circular.

*RABIES—COMPENSATION TO QUEBEC FARMERS

Question No. 274—Mr. Martel:

1. Could the Minister of Agriculture inform the members of this house as to whether or not his department has kept a complete record of all cases of rabies infected animals in the province of Quebec since the inception of the immunization program undertaken by his department to control the spread of this disease which may be dangerous even for human beings?
2. What is the amount of the compensation paid for rabies infected animals slaughtered under the terms of an agreement entered into with the Ontario provincial government, and what proportion thereof was paid by the federal government?
3. Is the federal Department of Agriculture ready to extend to the farmers of Quebec—many of whom have suffered heavy losses due to this terrible disease—and more particularly of the counties of Pontiac-Temiscamingue, Villeneuve, and Chapleau in the northwest of the province, the benefits deriving from such an agreement inasmuch as the provincial authorities will apply therefor and be willing to co-operate with Ottawa in this respect?

Mr. Charlton:

1. The Department of Agriculture has a record of all cases which have been reported to it and where it has been determined by departmental veterinarians that the animal died of rabies.

2. The indemnities paid in Ontario are based on official valuation of the livestock, as related to a maximum of $100 for horses, $250 for cattle and $40 for swine and sheep. The federal government reimburses Ontario for 40 per cent of the indemnity payments made by the province.

3. The present authority for federal participation applies only to Ontario, which is the only province having requested it. I feel sure that should the province of Quebec make a similar request it would be given favourable consideration.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

HYDRAULICS DIVISION, WATER RESOURCES BRANCH, NORTHERN AFFAIRS

Question No. 229—Mr. Herridge:

1. What are the names, present positions, qualifications, degrees, and experience in the construction or operation of hydro plants, dams, etc., of the officials in the head office in Ottawa of the hydraulics division of the water resources branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

2. Have any of these officials ever been employed in any capacity with a foreign government, or with an agency of a foreign government, or in the water resources field in a foreign land, or with any private corporation at home or abroad; and, if so, what are the names of the officials concerned, and the details of their foreign employment?

*SALARIES AND DUTIES OF MESSENGERS

Question No. 255—Mr. Fisher:

1. What is the difference in substance between the duties of a messenger and a confidential messenger?

2. Why is the minimum and maximum rate for a messenger so much lower than that for a confidential messenger?

3. Why is there a higher rate for a messenger who was appointed prior to April 1, 1955?

4. How many people are there employed in Ottawa at this date under the three categories of messenger, messenger appointed prior to April 1, 1955, and confidential messenger?

5. Has any consideration been given recently to rationalizing the salary rates of messengers in the government service in order to achieve equity amongst people doing the same or similar jobs?

*TRADE DELEGATION TO AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

Question No. 267—Mr. Boulanger:

Has the Department of Trade and Commerce set up a delegation which is to proceed to New Zealand and Australia; and, if so, (a) when, and for what purpose was such a delegation formed (b) how many members comprise the said delegation (c) what are their names, their respective provinces, and what organizations do they represent?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

BANK OF CANADA—REFERENCE OF REPORT TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether or not it is the intention of the government to refer the annual report of the Bank of Canada for 1961, which I believe has now been tabled, to the standing committee on banking and commerce in order, among other things, that the governor of the Bank of Canada may be present to express his views to the members of that committee.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I tabled today, with the Clerk of the house, the annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada for the year 1961. If it is the wish of the standing committee on banking and commerce that that report be referred to the committee, certainly there will be no objection whatever to that course. The governor of the bank will be available, I am informed, after the end of next week to appear before the committee if that is the wish of the committee.

INDUSTRY

SULPHUR CONVERTING CORPORATION, MONTREAL—INTEREST OR INVOLVEMENT OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. I have been a bit disturbed since I read the press this morning. In view of press reports of a rather remarkable luncheon in Quebec city on Saturday which was attended by the Associate Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Defence Production, as well as by 10 Conservative M.P.'s, would the Prime Minister care to inform the house of the government's interest or involvement in the Sulphur Converting Corporation of Montreal?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I had no knowledge that such a company existed at all. So far as the government and members of it are concerned, they have no interest or involvement, directly or indirectly.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. I would like to ask him whether he is engaged in any discussions with the Sulphur Converting Corporation in Montreal with regard to building branch lines in the province of Quebec for this company.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. What happened is that the officers of this company stopped in my office and told me they intended to get in touch with the C.N.R. to discuss with them the possible building of some branch lines. I have heard that they met with the C.N.R., but the information I got from the C.N.R. is that no decision whatsoever has been taken by that company.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Arising out of the answer the Prime Minister gave, namely that the first time he knew of the company was when he arrived in Quebec, my question is if that is so, as I take it it is, can the Prime Minister explain how it is that four of his ministers from the province of Quebec knew about it several months ago?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know how the hon. gentleman, knowledgeable as he is, knows what knowledge four ministers of the crown had several months ago. All I can say is that there is no basis for any ascription of knowledge respecting this company to the government.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a supplementary question, but before I put it I would refer the Prime Minister to the article appearing in today's Montreal Gazette which contains a statement made by the president of the company, who said he had discussed it with four ministers from the province of Quebec. From that I take it the Prime Minister should have known about it.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harkness: I know of several companies which the Prime Minister never heard of.

Mr. Chevrier: Apparently they knew about it, because the president said it had met with the approval of government ministers.

(Translation):

I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether he has any comment to make as regards the statement of Mr. J. A. Leclerc, president of the Sulphur Converting Corporation of Montreal, to the effect that the project was submitted last fall to four ministers—Mr. Leclerc gives the names of the ministers but I do not think it is necessary to repeat them—and that officials of the Department of Transport and of the national harbours board gave their approval to the project, the last words being in quotation marks?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said Saturday, that officials of my department did not in any way give their approval to the project.

[Later:]

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, in view of the questions which were asked previously, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Has he asked the management of Sulphur Converting Corporation whether they intend to export part of their output to Ecuador and British Guiana?

Mr. Pigeon: Surely not through the national film board.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking a supplementary question? I thought the matter had been fairly completely dealt with in the original round.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

SUGGESTED CHANGE TO METRIC SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of considerable interest shown by Canadians favouring the adoption by Canada of the metric system of measurement instead of the English system, has the government given any consideration to the proposal, or has the government any intention of doing so?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, for whom I have a great respect, that his question be put on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I think the matter does not raise any point of urgency and could go on the order paper.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LATEST DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he report to the house on any recent correspondence with Premier Bennett concerning the Columbia river?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): On Friday last, March 9, I wrote a letter to Premier Bennett which I shall be glad to table. It is quite short, and perhaps I might read it for the information of hon. members. It reads:

My dear Premier:

I understand that you plan to be in Ottawa on Monday, March 19, to attend the dominion-provincial conference on the federal proposals in regard to a national power grid.

If so, I should welcome an oportunity to resume our discussions on the financial aspects of the Columbia river power development. Could you arrange to arrive in Ottawa so that we might meet in advance of the dominion-provincial conference?

Yours sincerely,

I noticed in Saturday's press, Mr. Speaker, that Premier Bennett had made a statement some time on Friday indicating that he had applied to Ottawa for permission to start what is called immediate construction of the three dams envisaged in the Columbia river treaty. I do not know whether any such application has reached the office of the appropriate department in Ottawa. I only learned of this on reading the press report on Saturday.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would point out to the minister that he has no right to volunteer any information of that kind except on motions. It is not an answer to the question.

[Later:]

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister report whether any applications have been received from the province of British Columbia concerning the construction of dams on the Columbia river, and would the minister comment on press reports in this connection?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the receipt of any such application. It might conceivably have gone to the Department of Public Works, but I have not been made aware of that fact, if it be a fact.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE FUND—ACTION TO SUPPORT CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the substantial decrease in U.S. dollars in the exchange fund, amounting to $175 million in February, and I infer that if you add January it is $309 million consecutively, is it now the intention of the government to support the value of the Canadian dollar and avoid further devaluation?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The government will continue to follow the very beneficial policy in this regard which it has been following.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Benidickson: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it now to be taken as the policy of the government that it will encourage borrowings in the United States in order to prevent further declines in the holdings of United States dollars?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker. The government does not encourage borrowings in the United States. If the hon. member will read the budget speeches of June last and December 20, 1960, he will find clearly set forth the policy of the government, and there has been no departure from that policy.

[Later:]

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Minister of Finance, having been referred to his last budget speech—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The last two.

Mr. Benidickson: Is the manipulation of the exchange fund, in order to prevent devaluation of the Canadian dollar, not to be regarded as a change in the policy announced in the last budget?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It certainly would be a departure from the policy of the government as announced in the last budget speech, if it ever occurred. But it has not occurred; there has been no manipulation. The hon. member is deliberately using an opprobrious and most inaccurate term.

SPORTS

CURLING—WINNING OF CHAMPIONSHIP BY SASKATCHEWAN RINK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as the minister to whom the national advisory council on sport reports, and as the minister by whom the act is administered. I should like to lay a short basis for my question.

On Saturday morning at Kitchener the Richardson rink of Saskatchewan won the Canadian curling championship. Other skips such as Matt Baldwin of Edmonton and Ken Watson of Winnipeg have skipped rinks that won the championship three times, but this is the first time in history that a rink with the same personnel has won the championship three times, and twice before won the Scottish cup. They leave today for Scotland to compete again for the world championship, and I am sure the minister and other hon. members will join with me in wishing them the very best of luck. My question is this. Is the minister aware of these benefits to young Canadians, and will he advise the national advisory council of them?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would be delighted, and I would like to congratulate the Regina rink on this latest achievement.

(Translation):

HARBOURS

GROS-CACOUNA, QUE.—INSTALLATION OF PORT FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the minister or the government intend to announce the implementation of a port facilities project at Gros-Cacouna, as requested by the whole area, including the northern part of New Brunswick, and as recommended by Dr. Camu in his study entitled: "Transportation Problems in the Lower St. Lawrence Area"?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that question should be directed to the Minister of Public Works. I should like to say, however, that this government, through the public works department, is now making engineering surveys, that a reduced scale model is being built at the federal research centre, and that those engineering studies are proceeding in a very satisfactory way.

Mr. Chevrier: Is not the minister of the same opinion as the delegation which came to Ottawa today, that the time is now ripe for works rather than studies?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member asked me that question, thus allowing me to remind the house of all this government has achieved in these last four years, contrary to what was done by our predecessors, especially in the province of Quebec. Once again, I thank the hon. member for Laurier for giving me the opportunity of paying a tribute to this government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the minister now in a position to report to the house on a meeting he and some of his colleagues had this morning with a delegation representing the citizens of Bell island?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, after having met the Prime Minister and presenting him with a petition, a delegation from Bell island later met with my colleagues the Solicitor General, the Minister of Labour and myself, and for two hours we discussed the serious consequences that would flow from the lay-off of 700 men at the Wabana mines and the ways and means of averting it. My colleagues and I shall report to cabinet for whatever action shall be deemed appropriate at this time.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REPORTED REPEATERS IN SURVIVAL TRAINING COURSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he has noted the report in the Globe and Mail of March 10 under the heading "Survival training course repeaters have the army in a tizzy". If so, can the minister comment on the statement that the special militia training program is now finding a great many repeaters in the courses because there is no other place they can go in order to obtain employment or security?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article in question, but I can say in regard to the statements which have just been made by the hon. member that a very limited number of people have been discovered taking the course for the second time. In nearly all cases the reason they gave for this was that they enjoyed the first course so much that they wanted to get in on the second one. I think that is the explanation, in most cases at least, of the really quite limited number of people who have enlisted under a different name or in a different locality and have thus taken the course twice.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NANAIMO, B.C.—RESOLUTION RESPECTING GRANTING OF TIMBER LICENCE

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, of which I sent him notice earlier. Has the Prime Minister received a letter from Rev. Peter Kelly of Nanaimo mission, British Columbia, enclosing a copy of a resolution of the band members of Tsimpsean Indian reserve No. 2 respecting a timber licence bid won by Shorline Lumber Ltd. of Vancouver.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I think it only proper that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration have the opportunity of saying something in reply to this question, either today or later this week.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with reference to this particular matter, after the award was made there were some objections to the award and some misunderstanding with reference to just what had been covered in the tender call. In order to avoid any misunderstandings I have given instructions that the commissioner for British Columbia will visit the Tsimpsean reserve tomorrow, at which time we expect that the Indians will have an opportunity to consult with him and he will be able to explain to them the terms of the tender. If any further action is required, the matter will be carefully considered by the department.

Miss LaMarsh: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister prepared to comment on the statement contained in the resolution to this effect:

> We feel that some members of the department of indian affairs are definitely not acting in the best interests of the members of this band and this council now unanimously agrees not to accept any such offer.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept any such statement. The officials of my department always act in the manner which they think is for the good of the Indian bands and the Indians themselves. If there were any question at all with respect to this contract it would have been referred to me. I must say that I did not hear about it until after the award had been made, and as soon as I heard there were differences of opinion I immediately asked for an investigation. But I can assure the hon. member that nothing will be done which will militate against any advantage to the Indians themselves.

Miss LaMarsh: A further supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a further supplementary question. Can the minister state whether the information is correct—as we also have been in receipt of telegrams—that the two bids were on entirely different bases and that one firm put in a tender for 8,000 more acres of timber than was actually being sold by the minister's department? Is that correct?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mrs. Fairclough: In general terms that is correct; there was one tender submitted which bore a very marked difference to the tender call. I might say that if any members of parliament are interested in examining these tenders, I invite them now to visit the department and have a look at the two tenders.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, in the light of what the minister has just said, is the minister prepared to table the letter, the resolution and the accepted bid referred to?

Mrs. Fairclough: I shall take that matter into consideration.

FLAGS OF CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF MODEL DESIGNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion), I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer), so that he may relay it to him. I should like to know if the Secretary of State has received models of the two flags proposed by the Leader of the Opposition as well as the six flags proposed by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure that the hon. member is putting his question seriously, but it seems to me it is not one which is readily dealt with on the orders of the day.

Mr. Pearson: He is not a serious member.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF SENIOR OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Egan Chambers (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the implications in a story published last Saturday by a Montreal French language newspaper, would the minister confirm that four senior officials of her department have recently resigned, and that one of them had been under suspension since last October.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I saw the story in the newspaper and I expected there would be a question on this matter. I would like to say now that the story was entirely inaccurate in its reference to our district superintendents Grant and Bird, who are in charge of our Atlantic and Pacific districts respectively. These officers are already past 65 years of age, which is the normal age of retirement, and are completing their one year's extension before taking their retirement in the normal way.

Mr. McFarlane, our central district superintendent in Toronto, has not yet reached normal retirement age but does so at the end of 1962. He has not resigned, and I have no information to indicate that he will not continue in the service until his normal retirement age is reached.

Mr. McFaul, who was formerly our eastern district superintendent in Montreal, submitted his resignation more than a month ago, to take effect on February 1, 1962. At the time of submitting his resignation Mr. McFaul had been under suspension since last October for a personal transaction which the department did not consider proper for a civil servant in his position. The department took into account, in accepting Mr. McFaul's resignation, his 33 years of service with the government.

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF FEDERAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the practically unanimous agreement reached at last week's Canadian conference on education that federal aid to education has become an absolute necessity, is the government prepared to invite the provinces to actively explore, with the federal government, ways and means whereby federal aid to education can become a reality while at the same time not violating the intent of the British North America Act, whereby control of education is assigned to the provincial level of government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member has the subject matter here for a two day debate. If he expects to be answered on the orders of the day I do not share his optimism. Perhaps this question would be more appropriately brought up on the estimates, or at some time when it could be discussed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the necessity of hon. members of this house making transportation arrangements well in advance, could the Prime Minister give us some indication of the date of the Easter recess?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I appreciate that the hon. gentleman is most anxious to find out when he may again have a vacation in Mexico, but I cannot give him any assistance.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED CRITICISM OF NEW REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the charge made on Saturday by labour leader Charles H. Millard, as reported in the Globe and Mail that the new immigration rules made Canada a poacher of human resources—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question to ask based on the regulations which were promulgated some weeks ago and wishes to present opinions about those regulations, he could find an opportunity to do so in debate and should not try to introduce the matter now.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE BETWEEN MATANE AND STE. ANNE DES MONTS, QUE.

The house resumed, from Friday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Balcer for third reading of Bill No. C-67, to authorize the construction and operation on behalf of Her Majesty of a line of railway in the province of Quebec between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In discussing this bill further on third reading, may I say I believe it is obvious that it is the intention of the government to make a grant in regard to construction of this proposed branch railway line, at least to the extent of the capital costs involved, and that it is the plan of the government to engage in the amortization of those capital costs. In addition, it is also obvious that the government fully understands and, indeed, expects to have to dip into the consolidated revenue fund of the nation for many years to come in order to make the operation of this proposed railway service possible.

I noticed that the minister, in what I considered a very weak defence of the government's position attempted to compare this branch line with the ferry service operated by such boats as the William Carson. To me these are two completely unrelated propositions. On the one hand we have established at public expense and, possibly, even at public subsidy, a ferry service connecting important areas of our Canadian nation. This has no resemblance whatever to the building of a 57 mile long branch railway line in one of the oldest areas of settlement in our nation.

The minister also made a very weak effort to compare this branch railway line with the building of the Hudson Bay Railway. That is almost too fantastic to deserve comment. I am sure the minister must be deeply aware of the fact that at the present time the Hudson Bay Railway happens to serve an important national defence need. In addition, that railway was built for the purpose of establishing an outlet to the sea for a fairly large number of Canadian people. It cannot be compared with a railway branch line which, at best, can hope to serve only 100,000 people.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, the hon. member is engaging in a debate on third reading, and according to the rules the discussion on third readings is restricted. The subject matter of the discourse should be confined to the contents of the bill, as is clearly pointed out in May's sixteenth edition on page 578 where the words appear "As the debate on the third reading should be confined to the contents of the bill..." and so on. The hon. member is going far afield, making comparisons with other railway lines.

Mr. Speaker: I did not stop the hon. member because I thought he was replying to a speech made by the minister on third reading, but perhaps I am mistaken in that.

Mr. Churchill: There was no speech.

Mr. Speaker: If I was mistaken, it would be out of order to go beyond the scope of the bill, because the minister has no right to reply in a debate of this kind. When the measure has gone through the committee stage and been reported for third reading, it is only what the committee has reported that is before the house. Really, debates on third reading should be kept strictly on the line because of the disability which is attached to replying.

Mr. Regier: I shall do my utmost to observe the intent of your remarks, Mr. Speaker, which I appreciate very deeply. However, I do believe that the minister has the right to speak on this bill on third reading on the basis of his earlier expressions—

Mr. Speaker: In view of what the hon. member has said, perhaps I should say that only by leave of the house can the minister speak on third reading, because he moved the third reading, which counts as a speech.

Mr. Regier: In that case I have to apologize to the house. I had assumed that the minister could reply. I can assure him on behalf of this group that we would be happy to give unanimous consent should the minister wish to wind up this debate on third reading.

However, I must deeply disagree with the findings of the committee of this house in regard to this bill, because this bill asks for $14 million of the taxpayers' money now and for an unknown amount of money in the future. This represents a sum of between $140 and $200 for every man, woman and child living in this particular area of Canada. I would much prefer to see the government make a gift to each of the families there; for a family of five this would mean a grant in cash of anywhere from $700 to $1000. I would rather have the government do this than build a railway which we know ahead of time is going to be uneconomic, that for the people of this area will serve no useful purpose that has yet been proved, and that in the years to come will mean an additional burden to the Canadian taxpayer. This is a very serious matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member on my right who is interrupting will have an opportunity to speak if he wishes.

Mr. Regier: This is a serious matter indeed. We are asked to pay out $14 million of the taxpayer's money at this time and untold amounts in the years to come. This amount of money would build 140 new hundred thousand dollar industries in that community. I ask the sponsors of this bill whether this approach would not be more useful to the people in the area and receive a more favourable response. This bill represents no solution to our transportation problems. Canadian history is littered with examples of political consideration having taken precedence over national interests in the field of transportation. This is the most barefaced case of its kind in the annals of Canadian transportation development.

I believe the committee ought to have given more consideration to the offer of the truckers of the province of Quebec, to the effect that if the transportation costs that now prevail are a handicap to the people there they would be prepared to reduce their rates if the government would grant a subsidy to make a rate reduction possible. I believe this would be much less costly to the taxpayers of Canada than the proposed extension.

The interest alone on $14 million at even a 5 per cent rate—and in recent years this government has occasionally had to pay a higher rate on its borrowings—runs to $700,000 per annum; in other words $7 for every man, woman and child living in the area to be served. I am convinced they would rather receive $7 worth of aid in cash or in some other form.

I notice with regret that it was reported in the committee that the C.N.R. is only going to be the agent of the government. Neither the C.N.R. nor C.P.R. would touch the project with a ten foot pole. I ask the government who is demanding this railway? Only this morning as I entered the building I spoke to a large number of men from the Riviere du Loup area who were marching on parliament hill with placards. These are business and professional men and workers from other occupations who are requesting assistance in the field of transportation for the people residing south of the St. Lawrence river. I do not know all the facts involved, but their proposal appears to have more merit than the proposal now before us.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is discussing a proposal now, I take it, that is not contained in the bill before us.

Mr. Regier: I hope when the government spokesman speaks at the conclusion of the debate on third reading we will be advised whether a certain Mr. Jules Brillant has expressed any opinions or made any representations with regard to the proposed branch line. I ask the government to reply to us before we give third reading to the bill. I wish to be informed whether the Sulphur Converting Company of Montreal has any ore bodies of any significance in the area that is intended to be served by the proposed railway line.

Before resuming my seat I wish to pay tribute to the integrity of the hon. member for Port Arthur, who is unwilling to remain silent while witnessing this government preparing to expend $7 million plus on an uneconomic project merely for the purpose of re-electing one member to the House of Commons. I feel this will go down in the annals—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have already asked Your Honour's opinion with regard to the restriction of debate on third reading. The hon. member is now going very far afield in making allegations and false accusations with respect to the motives of hon. members on this side of the house.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I believe you will agree that on third reading, in a final effort to block what I consider to be a most irresponsible measure of this government, I have every right to express my opinion as to what I think are the motives behind the bill. However, without further ado I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin):

That Bill No. C-67 be not now read the third time but that it be read this day six months hence.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of repeating what I said at the resolution stage about the bill now before the house.

As I said at that time, we are in favour of the act to authorize the construction and operation, on behalf of Her Majesty of a line of railway in the province of Quebec between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts.

Over the week end, I tried to remember if similar projects had been discussed under the previous administration, where a crown corporation such as this one, the government owned railways, had decided to build a development railroad.

I know that we have built about ten railroads when we were on the other side of the house. The project which may be not similar but comparable to the one under consideration is the one for which the government had agreed to pay a subsidy for the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway. Of course, circumstances are not the same since that railroad belonged to the province. However, there is a parallel in this that both railroads were intended to serve inland mining developments. That part of British Columbia produces all kinds of minerals: iron, copper, zinc, gold and silver. Moreover the provincial government intended to extend the railroad by stages.

I do not know what the intentions of the present government are with respect to the line under discussion. Once it is built up to Ste. Anne des Monts, perhaps the government will decide to extend it to the copper mine in Murdochville or the mine owned by Federal Metal Corporation. These are matters, obviously, which the minister himself ought to decide.

I got up not only to repeat what I have said before and to indicate what attitude the opposition would take, but to point out that, in this as in so many other things, the government is proceeding without any general plan. The government has no general policy for the development of that region.

The whole lower St. Lawrence region and the adjacent areas such as northern New Brunswick are isolated from the home market because of an inadequate transportation system. Until a general plan, designed to bring a satisfactory solution to this problem, has been applied, that vast region will be in difficulties and have a limited economic development.

It is precisely that basic point which I wanted to stress in my former speech on this measure, when quoting the conclusions and recommendations Dr. Camu had made in his report.

Indeed, it is easy to realize that the government refuses to see the situation as it is and to cope with it, if we consider the discontent which exists today, particularly in Riviere du Loup and the surrounding district.

The delegation which has called on parliament today is another obvious expression of that discontent. In this respect, I trust that hon. members will be very much interested to hear the views of the hon. member for Riviere du Loup-Temiscouata (Mr. Frechette). It is, indeed, interesting to find that several Conservative members from the province of Quebec took part in this debate and rose to make speeches, while the hon. member for Riviere du Loup-Temiscouata remained silent.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member for Laurier is not going beyond the bill. I am not sure there is any connection—perhaps he can inform me if there is—between what he is discussing now and the proposal to authorize the financing of this branch line.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Well, all I wanted to point out, Mr. Speaker, was that the government had no over-all plan for the transport system in the lower St. Lawrence area, and, as you called me to order, because I mentioned the delegation which came to parliament today, I shall comply with your decision and go on with my remarks.

Mr. Balcer: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Balcer: Would the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) tell me when, during all the years he was minister of transport, he took some interest in the problem of Gros Cacouna, and whether he had any plans prepared for endowing the Riviere du Loup district, with a year-round sea port—

Mr. Pigeon: Never.

Mr. Balcer: —and would he also give me a few instances of what he possibly did in that respect?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. I thank the Minister of Transport for having asked me this question, for I am ready to give the answer and, in my comments, I was just coming to that point.

Yes, when we were in power, Mr. Speaker, we took a very special interest in the development of this area. It is under our government for instance that the Mont Joli airport was constructed—

Mr. Balcer: You are not answering my question.

Mr. Chevrier: —that the airport was constructed and developed. You have put the question, let me answer it.

Mr. Balcer: Tell us about Gros Cacouna.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Regier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when I spoke I was prevented by the rules of the house from discussing alternative transportation remedies for the area in question, and I believe that the debate now taking place is also out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: May I speak on the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member on the point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question by the minister, I was proceeding to reply and I am being interrupted, first by the minister who asked the question and then by the hon. member who raised the point of order. The point of order raised by the hon. member was well taken, but having been asked the question by the minister I think I should at least be given the opportunity to reply.

Mr. Balcer: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier is requesting the privilege of answering my question, but so far instead of answering the question I asked he has been talking about the airport at Mont Joli—

Mr. Chevrier: You did not give me a chance to finish.

Mr. Balcer: —and it was precisely his government that killed the airport at Mont Joli.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member for Laurier proceeds, I might say that he has the floor and will be entitled to proceed, but I think it is only fair to say that I have every sympathy with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who was called to order for straying from the contents of the bill. Therefore I think it is only proper to say that the fact that the minister invites wider discussion than the bill permits does not open the door to that discussion, so perhaps we have traced it all back to the minister's question and come back now to the bill itself.

Mr. Chevrier: I take it then, Mr. Speaker, that having been asked a question by the minister and having proceeded to reply in part—I had not completed the answer—and having been interrupted by the minister, I am not going to be allowed now to complete what I intended to put on the record?

Mr. Speaker: The point having been taken, I think the hon. member for Laurier should return to the bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: I accept your ruling, as I always do, Mr. Speaker.

In the circumstances, I believe I should get back to what I was saying before in respect to an over-all plan. This is what I intended to deal with.

As far as the Liberal party is concerned, we have brought forward many times an over-all policy to assist the depressed areas. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) has set forth this policy in ten points; and they attempted to laugh at us.

Anyway, upon our return to power, we shall discuss the actual carrying out of this over-all policy with the provinces and the areas concerned. We feel certain that, as a result of this decision, we shall be able to carry out a whole series of over-all plans on a regional basis. I am satisfied that one of the first to be carried out will benefit the lower St. Lawrence valley.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the official opposition is in favour of this project but regrets that the government has not finally decided to approach the problem of transportation on the lower St. Lawrence with a comprehensive plan. The Liberal party undertakes to do it immediately after the next election.

(Text):

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, in moving his amendment the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam made it quite clear and plain to the house that he did not know all the facts involved. Truer words were never spoken, Mr. Speaker. If he is so interested in the development of that part of the country, I suggest to him that rather than taking a trip abroad he would have been better advised to have gone to that region; because, with the mind of an economist that he is supposed to possess, I am sure he would have come back with different ideas.

He has referred to the unknown amounts of money which this railway may cost the government in the future.

In view of the hon. member's economic assessment, I am less perturbed than ever that very soon this railway will be paying for itself. He suggested we should give to the people of that region, not the opportunity of earning their living and participating in the national economy, but rather that we should give gifts to these people who have been forgotten for 427 years, just as we did to the Indians, to try to keep the peace. Well, Mr. Speaker, the people of the Gaspe peninsula will not accept gifts. They only want a means by which they can participate in the national economy and earn a just and honest living.

I have heard the hon. member for Peterborough trying to find a solution to this problem by suggesting the establishment of a development fund. The trouble in this area has always been that there have been no exits from it, so it was too expensive for people to transport their products to the Canadian or United States markets. What is the purpose of establishing a fund if no one can use it, if no one can partake of it? After hearing these two members of the N.D.P., I am sure that if they intend to use these arguments to try to solve the problems of this country they are in for a lot of headaches. The interest which we attach to this bill is not a political one but one of national interest.

May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words only concerning the views expressed by both the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Laurier in respect to Cacouna. Cacouna is about 100 miles from where this railway will start, that is about 100 miles from Matane. I am sure that any solution of the problem of Cacouna is not going to solve the problem of Matane or of the lower region of the Gaspe peninsula. Moreover, may I remind hon. members that although I am certainly hopeful something can be done for these people, a project is being developed near Riviere du Loup, which is about ten miles from Cacouna.

Before I commence speaking on the amendment, perhaps I should read a few words uttered by the Minister of Transport in the committee:

> Among those familiar with the economy of the lower St. Lawrence region there is general agreement that the lack of railway facilities in the peninsula has so far been an obstacle to development of an area that has traditionally been deprived of ready access for markets. The economic future of the lower St. Lawrence region and more specifically of the Gaspe peninsula is, therefore, directly related to the improvement in its means of transportation. The government appreciates this problem and has decided to do something towards its solution.

Canadian National Railways

Farther along in the same report the minister stated:

> Mr. Chairman, I will now give you a brief résumé of the wider economic assets of the Gaspe north shore area since I feel that, in the long run, it is on the abundance of these assets rather than on the immediately available tonnages of freight waiting to be shipped that the success of this development will ultimately hinge.

Farther along in the same proceedings the hon. member for Peace River is reported as saying:

> Mr. Chairman, possibly I might ask this question of Mr. Scott. Leaving out the economics of the situation vis-à-vis the railway itself, as a result of your examination of the situation, as a result of your discussions and conversations with the corporations in this area, and as a result of your economic evaluation, do you feel that the construction of this railway will, over the years, appreciably add to the gross national product?
> Mr. Scott: Yes. Mr. Fisher says, and quite rightly, that the tonnage figures I gave him are quite small; but you must bear in mind that these tonnage figures do not include one ton of ore, concentrates, or anything of that nature, because we feel that is something that must develop after the railway. While we realize they are there, and hope they will soon be developed—and the quicker the better for the operation of the railway—yet the basic traffic is predicated on what we think is realizable now.

The lack of economic development, Mr. Speaker, is not peculiar to this one region about which we are speaking. There is not one province, Mr. Speaker, that does not have a region which is lacking in economic development. I am happy to see this bill reach third reading stage. It would, moreover, be a serious error to arrest the progress of this measure now and, therefore, arrest the steps being taken to put this project into being and accelerate the economic development of this area by linking the area of Mont Louis and Murdochville to Ste. Anne des Monts. This would give the area access to the industrial centres of Canada and the United States.

Railways have often been built on the basis of hypothetical developments rather than actual developments. I could cite the case of the Baraute railway in 1956, Mr. Speaker, in the Abitibi district. However, at that time it was not found appropriate to proceed with the Gaspe railway. Was it because the government of the day did not have faith in this sector of the country? I will not attempt to answer that question.

The royal commission on transportation do refer to the building of new railway lines. They say:

> This is not to say that parliament should not, under certain circumstances, authorize construction of lines for development purposes when the immediate revenue cannot be expected to meet all costs. Under these circumstances, the government should be prepared to meet the deficit from public funds and not place the burden on other shippers.

> We have earlier recommended that the burden of existing uneconomic lines be removed from the shippers.

Moreover, this same commission recommends that we should look at other methods of transportation, such as road and air. The economy of Gaspe peninsula is based on three things, Mr. Speaker, fishing, farming and mining. I am sure no one has ever considered moving the products of these three industries by air from that area. In so far as highways are concerned, it is a well known fact that certain high revenue products can be moved cheaper by truck than by rail. However, when you consider the products of these three primary industries in the Gaspe peninsula, I am sure you will concede it would be uneconomic to move them by road. To sum up, therefore, it would seem that the government should take responsibility for the development of this project.

On Friday last the hon. member for Port Arthur, who I hope will not engage in too much solipsism, did not seem to concede that others may have a fair idea of the economy of these regions. In his speech he stated that neither the hon. member for Gaspe nor the hon. member Matapedia-Matane was worth $7 million each. The expenditures for economic development are not based on one human value but on a large population's desire to contribute further to national development and enhance further their own economic and social welfare. As I said before, Gaspe is not asking for handouts. It simply requests an opportunity to share in the national wealth and acquire the facilities to realize a higher standard by the labours of its people.

I could go on further and refer to the speech made by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I would ask him to take his pencil and do a little figuring. When he speaks of 50,000 cords of pulpwood I am sure he will believe that this would amount to approximately 75,000 tons. When we speak of 85 million feet of lumber I am sure he will realize this would add up to 127,000 tons. When we speak of wood chips that could be shipped out of the area, I am sure he will realize this would amount to 35,000 tons.

Recently, in fact over the week end, I met a local lumberman from the area who had just received an order for 120 carloads of laths. It is true that at the moment there is a tremendous demand for laths, but a year from now if it is not laths it will be some other by-product of the forests. These 120 carloads, added to the remaining tonnage, would give roughly 250,000 tons of outgoing freight from forest products alone. Added to this would be 65,000 to 75,000 tons moving into the area. When I think of the revenue from this, and when I think of the original investment of $14 million, based not on 7 per cent as the economic adviser of the N.D.P. wishes to suggest but based on a price of 3.5 per cent, then I am sure the forest products alone could justify the expenditure of this capital amount.

The hon. member for Port Arthur referred to the crown lands, and I think a correction should be made as it is possible that he misunderstood the statement made in the committee. The crown lands of the Gaspe peninsula on the south side of the peninsula, where there is already a railroad are available to all operators. I should say that on the north side of the peninsula the crown lands are there for the use of the lumbermen in the area, and on the south shore most of the land is taken up by large operators and the pulp and paper industry. Therefore there is no problem whatsoever in assuring hon. members of this house that the timber limits are available there to those who wish to use them.

I shall now deal with some of the reasons why shipments of lumber should not all go by water. Not too many regions of Canada and the United States enjoy a water frontage, and although a certain amount of the lumber from the peninsula goes to Montreal, there are in fact only two lumber buyers in that city who can use water facilities so that they may deposit this wood in their yards. Otherwise the lumber must be disembarked from ships and trucked to yards in the interior of the island of Montreal. A large quantity of the lumber produced in this area goes to the United States market but unfortunately there, as well as in the Montreal market, it is impossible to compete favourably with other sections of the country, especially when one realizes that to ship 1,000 feet of lumber from Ste. Anne des Monts to Matane requires an initial cost of roughly $5. That is why these people cannot put their product on the market at competitive prices; it is because of this additional $5 freight charge.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member for Port Arthur now understands clearly why there has to be other means of transportation than by water for the movement of these forestry products.

I now wish to speak about the mining development of the Gaspe peninsula. For years—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member goes on with what he suggests is his next topic I should remind him that there is nothing in this bill about the mining development of the Gaspe. This bill simply permits the payment of certain sums of money for the construction of a railway by the agency of the Canadian National Railways. We are not concerned with the purposes of the railway at the moment. We are concerned with whether we should pass third reading of the bill which approves the voting of the money.

Mr. Keays: I was about to speak about the mining possibilities as well as the actual operation of mining in the area, in order to amplify the reasons for the railroad being built and to justify the expenditure of $14 million in this area.

Mr. Speaker: What the hon. member has in mind would have been relevant on the resolution and second reading, but I suggest to him that at this stage when the principle of the bill has been approved, nothing remains but to read the bill a third time, which is to confirm it in the form in which it came out of the committee. It is not relevant to go back to the whole substructure or substratum on which the bill rests.

Mr. Keays: May I be allowed to correct the statement made in this house on Friday concerning lack of co-operation between the provincial government and the federal government on this railroad?

Mr. Speaker: If the statement referred to by the hon. member was made on third reading he would be in order in dealing with it, but if he goes back to statements made in committee he might or might not be in order.

(Translation):

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Port Arthur asked the other day if the provincial authorities had been consulted. Let me say that my colleague from Gaspe (Mr. English) has always worked in close co-operation with the provincial member for Gaspe North, because both share the same desire, namely that of helping the Gaspe peninsula and making sure that its northern part is properly developed.

Thus, the Gaspe park has always been closed to mining exploration; now the provincial government intends to grant claims to 32 miles of that territory for mining exploration.

For the benefit of the hon. member for Port Arthur, I wish to read a telegram addressed to the hon. member for Gaspe by Mr. Claude Jourdain. I quote:

Sincere congratulations for decision by federal authorities to build railway Ste. Anne des Monts-Matane stop Carrying out this project immediately is essential and absolutely necessary to the economic and industrial development of the region stop Foresee gigantic mining development in Gaspe park starting this spring stop Agreements re immediate mining surveys will be concluded as soon as Bill C-67 is adopted by Canadian parliament stop Am convinced economic possibilities in near future of that project stop Economic expansion of region depends on it stop Can count on my entire support and am at your disposal for any necessary or useful representations to provincial authorities.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that this amendment should be introduced by a group of opposition members, with a view to delaying the building of a railway which might bring about an extraordinary economic expansion in a part of our country, and more particularly in a part of the province of Quebec. In fact, that railway has been asked for, for about a century, as was pointed out the other day by the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. English), when he quoted an article from La Minerve, dating back to around 1881.

If, after confederation, we had adopted such a rigid attitude about railway building as we do today in regard to the building of this railway in the Gaspe peninsula, I doubt very much whether railways would have been built in other areas of this country.

The province of Quebec is in need of heavy industry. The lack of railways in the province is said to be one of the main reasons for this scarcity of heavy industry.

According to a bulletin of the Montreal chamber of commerce, although the province of Quebec accounts for 30 per cent of Canada's population, it accounts for only 11 per cent of Canada's railways.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was talking about an over-all plan, and was saying that if ever his party came back to power, he would implement it. I wonder how it is that, having been minister of transport for so long, having received so many delegations from associations and county councils, he never did implement the logical representations made to him, at the time, for the building of that railway.

I am convinced that if that railway had been built 10, 15 or 20 years ago, the Gaspe peninsula would now know an unprecedented industrial, economic mining and forest development.

Mr. Speaker, it is very unfortunate that the members of the new party should have so little confidence in the economic future of that part of the province of Quebec. It is very unfortunate, and they will suffer the consequences of their shortsightedness. I think they are too rigid when it is a question of adopting a project which may contribute to the economic development of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will turn down this amendment by a majority vote, so that the building of that railway may start as soon as possible.

(Text):

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker I was interested in the remarks of the previous speaker in relation to this amendment. I think the amendment is an exceptionally good one. The hon. member who just resumed his seat pointed to the New Democrats and said that perhaps we should be for progress in this particular matter. I would remind him that the Americans have a saying, "Remember Pearl Harbour", and we have one in our part of the country, "Remember Murdochville". I think many hon. members are forgetting one very simple fact, that the Union Nationale is no longer a major force; it is now a very small minority.

We have heard a number of people who have come here and disagreed entirely with the suggestion that this railway should be built. They have made other suggestions. Then we looked at it as an outsider. I admit that I do not know too much about the Gaspe area, but if one looks at a map he will find that here is a stretch of railway that does not belong to the Canadian National Railways. This is privately owned; it is owned by the Canada and Gulf Railway Terminal, whoever they may be. When it is being discussed, usually the man's name that comes to mind is Mr. Jules Brillant. He is the man who controls most of the sea shipping, railways, airways, telephone system, power system and communications system, including radio, press and parts of the television system.

I would therefore suggest that a very small minority of the people are interested in the development that is being suggested to us, and I think we have an obligation not only to the people to see that they get as much as they can for their money, but we must also take into consideration another very important factor in our economy today. I refer to the railway workers.

Over the week end I had the opportunity to talk to quite a number of them who were violently opposed to any railway which is not going to make money, which will have no chance of making money and which is going to be defunct before it ever begins being built under government auspices. They pointed out that labour is always blamed for asking for wage increases. For years the government has been asking to build railways that everybody has admitted could not in the foreseeable future be economic projects. The reason for this railway not being an economic project will be blamed upon the workers and increased wages.

There have been many such railways built and the royal commission on transportation decided many years ago that we had too many railways in the country, particularly branch line railways, many of which are better situated than this railway. The royal commission felt these branch line railways were causing a drain on the economy of the country and they felt that if eliminated it would enable the central railway system to carry its own weight, or come closer to doing so.

Is this not a problem with which we have been faced for many years? I have no quarrel with those who support the Union Nationale to bring this matter forward. It is true, as the hon. member for Gaspe said, that this railway would have been a wonderful thing 100 years ago. However, it may not be a good thing now. Perhaps they wanted it for 100 years but they have become kind of lost in fact that other methods of transportation may have eliminated to some extent the system that is now proposed.

I think we would be less than honest in this parliament if we were to pass this bill today and not be assured by the government about what is going to happen to the independent railway. There is 50 miles of railway that is to be controlled by the Canadian National Railways or this extension cannot be built. What is the point of putting the tail about 10 feet from the dog? That is not very logical. I suggest that only the government can give us this assurance, and six months is probably the time necessary to make all the arrangements with the owners of this private railway. An arrangement has to be arrived at before the railway is started, and I would think it has to be arrived at before we can even consider how much the railway is going to cost. I would think you have to take into consideration the possibility of expropriation and the ownership of the section that we are going to add to the other 45 or 50 miles of railway that is already in existence and is the connecting link between the Canadian National Railways set up and the rest of the Gaspe peninsula. I think this is an essential. I would think the people of Gaspe would demand that this were done before we made this contribution. I would like to make it very clear that if these considerations are met, I have no objection to the railway being built.

We have listened to the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine stating the resources that are going to be available and referring to the other assets of this railway. He referred to the possibility of the railway obtaining this large tonnage that he outlined. However, I am sure he will agree with me that we in this country are not one bit interested in supplying a transportation system that is not connecting and has no connection with the other railways under the control of Canadian National Railways. It would be quite possible for Mr. Jules Brillant to arrange it so that he were the only person in the area to obtain very much benefit out of this, because negotiations will have to take place with the Canada and Gulf Terminal Company before the railway operates at all. I believe that for this reason it is absolutely essential that this type of agreement be arrived at. I do not think it is good enough to say that perhaps the possibilities will develop. Perhaps this agreement can be worked out; perhaps it will not be necessary to expropriate the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway, and perhaps this is good enough.

It may be that this is good enough, but for me it is not good enough, and for the Canadian people it is not good enough. We are not going to buy a pig in a poke. We want to be assured that this railway will be in continuous operation—that it is coming from somewhere and going some place, not just attached to somebody's private railway for a reason which is not particularly clear to me.

On these grounds I think the house might well express its opinion in a straightforward manner by supporting the amendment which is before us so that the committee might have another opportunity to examine the situation and give consideration to the views of other businessmen and interested persons, some of whom we had the opportunity of meeting this morning. These include people who believe that the expenditure of the $14 million is not in the best interests of the people of the Gaspe peninsula and that it will not necessarily bring a sizeable return to those who live in that area.

I think the government would be wise not to compare this proposition with another railway line which has nothing to do with the situation. I think the spokesmen for the government should stick strictly to the point. In addition, I think any such venture as this should be brought within the schedule of the Canadian National Railway Company. I do not see grounds upon which the minister can set up a separate company which would report to the house as an individual entity having no connection with the other railways of Canada. I do not see how the minister can bring forward a proposal of this kind and expect support either from hon. members or from the public of Canada. For all these reasons I believe the house should support the amendment which is before us at the present time.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Regier) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the house prepared to proceed with the main motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Balcer moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

[Mr. Peters.]

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONTINENTAL SHELF DISPUTE—SUGGESTED METHOD OF SETTLEMENT

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East) moved:

Be it resolved that the House of Commons notes the important issues of responsibility and jurisdiction over the issuance of leases, collection of royalties and control of the continental shelf, being the seaward borders of various provinces and the northern territories, and further recognizes that a federal-provincial dispute has already arisen in connection thereto as both federal and coastal provincial authorities claim sovereignty.

It is therefore recommended, as the opinion of this house, that the government take under advisement a settlement of the dispute in the following manner: (1) that the issue of sovereignty over the continental shelf shall be a matter of immediate negotiations between the parties concerned and; that failing an early agreement the matter shall be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, with an understanding that its decision shall be implemented by the introduction of required legislation and/or an amendment to the British North America Act.

(2) That as the continental shelf issue involves the federal government and several provincial governments, that in the interim period pending settlement, agreement be reached that the federal authority issue exploratory leases.

(3) That all receipts from leases or royalties shall be held in escrow pending a decision on sovereignty either by dominion-provincial agreement or decision of the Supreme Court.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the matter of the continental shelf is one of serious, major and fundamental importance to all of Canada. I am sorry that I found it necessary to put forward such a lengthy resolution, but the question of the continental shelf is so difficult, so complex, so constitutional and so legalistic that I found that the only way by which I could present some of the more serious aspects of the problem and some proposals as to how to resolve the problem for consideration was by drafting the resolution as it now appears on the order paper. In view of the shortness of the time allowed each member in this debate, I am going to endeavour to keep my remarks comparatively brief and with the permission of hon. members I am going to follow very closely some notes I have prepared on the matter.

May I introduce the subject by saying that the seaward borders of the lands of the earth have been under discussion, dispute, exploration and exploitation in recent years. This is happening after nearly 400 years of comparative quiet and stability. However, in the past few years a multitude of new problems have arisen, problems which are plaguing and have plagued many nations throughout the world and our own country as well.

I am sure that anyone who has followed the subject of the continental shelf will agree that it is obvious now that the same kind of federal-provincial dispute has arisen in Canada over the offshore mineral rights as has given rise to bitter controversy in the United States in the past 20 years. It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that quite a few months ago the federal authorities in Ottawa issued exploration leases with respect to the continental shelf off the foreshore of the province of British Columbia and a few months after the federal government had issued these leases covering many hundreds of thousands of acres of the continental shelf the government of British Columbia threw down the gauntlet, shall I say, accepted the challenge and issued exploratory leases which in many cases overlap and serve the identical purpose of the leases issued by the federal authorities.

I am going to refer particularly to my own province of British Columbia because it is involved in a dispute with the federal authorities over the questions of sovereignty, the right to issue leases, royalties, control, everything having to do with matters pertaining to the continental shelf. Because this situation is now to the fore in Canada I think it is important to note what has been taking place in the United States.

There have been three important decisions by the United States supreme court holding in essence that the national or federal government, not the states, is possessed of paramount rights in and sovereignty and control over the continental shelf. However, because of the complexity of the agreements, relationships and treaties between various states in the United States and the federal government in that country all these matters have been held in abeyance as a result of the submerged lands act of that country of May 22, 1953.

It is very interesting to note that because the dispute in that country is still unresolved after 20 years and because there are many more cases involved, over $400 million of exploration money is being held in escrow by the federal government until the constitutional issue of sovereignty and control is resolved in that country. Although our constitutional set-up is somewhat different, without a doubt we are facing a similar problem and in some ways it is a larger problem because I do not think it is generally recognized that Canada has a greater continental shelf area than the United States, even if Hudson bay is excluded. In Canada we have a greater area of continental shelf and it is estimated that, with the discoveries of science and new technology, in the future it is going to be worth countless billions of dollars in natural resources and in turn royalties. That is why the question of sovereignty is of such importance to our country.

So far as I have been able to ascertain from all the reading I have done on the subject, the United Nations conference on the law of the sea, which met in Geneva in 1958 with representatives of some 86 countries present, made the first real attempt to establish some international understanding with regard to the continental shelf. It was decided at that conference on the continental shelf by a vote of 57 to three with only eight countries abstaining that the federal authority had sovereignty and control over the continental shelf. Although that was the viewpoint expressed internationally, to my knowledge nothing has been done in Canada to resolve the situation. As a matter of fact, in my opinion the situation is not only ludicrous but absolutely ridiculous. Here we have the federal government issuing leases granting exploration rights on the continental shelf in the territorial waters off British Columbia. Then, we have the province issuing leases covering exactly the same area to do exactly the same thing. What has been the result? The result has been that there is charge and countercharge, insult and counter-insult and abuse. The big companies will not proceed with the exploratory work; they are not moving at all. Why is this so? It is the result of the jurisdictional confusion about sovereignty, as to who has rights, who has control. They do not want to move ahead and perhaps spend millions of dollars, and then find themselves involved in lawsuits or intergovernmental disputes. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is not in the interests of Canada to allow this condition to continue.

Surely, we do not want to have in our country a repetition of the 20-year battle that has taken place in the United States in the courts with the result that that country as well is being held up in attempts at exploration of the mineral and organic material on the continental shelf which, of course, borders every state and every province that has a waterway or an ocean adjacent to it.

Now, it would be unfair for me to raise the problem and at least not have some idea as to how I think it might be approached. I will admit it is most difficult. Perhaps what I suggest is not feasible, but I have included in the resolution at least my ideas of how the problem may be approached. You will find in the latter part of the resolution under 1, 2 and 3, procedures which I hope will be considered and which it might be possible to have followed. If the procedures set forth therein are not feasible, then at least let us have some kind of constructive action taken. For heaven's sake let us regard ourselves not as a sovereign state in Ottawa, a sovereign state in British Columbia or in Nova Scotia, but as Canadians. Instead of making charge and countercharge, let us sit down as though we were a united nation and try to solve our difficulties. Let us see how we are going to proceed in the interest of Canada.

It is my suggestion that an immediate endeavour be made to bring the federal government and the provinces concerned together to see if an agreement can be reached on sovereignty and on the leases. If that cannot be done, then we should not just let the matter drift. It is my understanding that the government has certain powers. I would say, refer the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada which is the highest body to which we can appeal because no provision is made for the granting of these leases under the British North America Act or other legislation. Let the court tell us what is the proper position to take. After that, let us proceed with this development by agreement, as Canadians, whether it is the provincial or federal government that has jurisdiction. Let us proceed by mutual agreement to introduce legislative amendments or changes in the constitution that would take care of the situation which, of course, was not one which was recognized at the time the terms of confederation were laid down.

However, all that takes time. Why should we wait? I suggest also that there should be an understanding, which I hope can be arrived at, so that we can proceed now, by means of which those who hold leases in British Columbia could proceed with their explorations. If, as I hope, in the not too distant future there is development, then it could be agreed that, until this problem is cleared away and all the disputes resolved, the federal government would issue the leases and hold the moneys received in escrow, the same as they are doing now in the United States. Then, whatever money is there will be distributed on the basis of this new clarification of natural resources power in our country.

This is a subject in which I am keenly interested. I could speak on it at length. I do hope that with these words I have at least outlined the problem and I hope members recognize how serious it is. I believe the suggestions I have made may lay some of the groundwork for a discussion as to how, in the interest of Canada, the potentials of our continental shelf may be developed so that our country can expand. I hope we can solve this problem in a manner that will qualify us as sensible human beings and members of parliament.

Mr. H. C. McQuillan (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, first I want to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) for introducing this resolution. This is an issue that is of extreme importance, particularly in British Columbia. As the hon. member has pointed out to you, the possibility of oil exploration and the hoped for oil development in British Columbia has been slowed because of the failure to establish sovereignty over the resources of the continental shelf. I should like to quote from a publication called Oilweek, of October 9, 1961. This article carries the headline, "Calm Settles Over B.C. Offshore Acreage", and states:

> Having made their initial grab of oil rights off British Columbia's coast line, exploration companies now appear content to sit back and wait to see if they filed for permits with the right government.
> Even those who played safe and took out permits from both federal and provincial agencies are in no hurry to commence exploration.

Perhaps the companies are not in any hurry, but I think the people of British Columbia are most anxious that this exploration be expedited. For that reason, I can lend a good deal of support to this resolution. Now, the issue of the ownership of minerals, coal and other fossil fuels in the continental shelf extending from our shores is one that cannot be dismissed as unimportant. This is particularly so in British Columbia. There is something in the nature of 15,000 miles of shore line in British Columbia. Of course, this takes in a lot of the islands lying off the shores of British Columbia. We have thousands of miles of inlets or fjords, as some call them. We have a narrow stretch of water between Vancouver island and the mainland. Anyone who cares to take a look at the map of the coast of British Columbia will readily see that this is an extremely difficult problem along that coast.

In my opinion, the problem cannot be dismissed by stating that under the provisions of the British North America Act these rights are vested in the federal government because I have not found that is so. I do not believe it is necessarily so. One cannot say that the settlement of similar disputes in other areas of the world has set a precedent that applies in the case of our own continental shelf area. There is a difference between our constitution and the constitution of the United States, and any settlement that might be made concerning rights in the gulf of Mexico would not necessarily set a precedent for a settlement of a Canadian problem. There have been in the past some contradictions on the part of the federal government that do not bear out the contention that the continental shelf regions are under the jurisdiction of the federal authority.

I believe it was in 1928 that the provincial government of British Columbia granted oil exploration rights in Hecate straits, lying between the British Columbia mainland and the Queen Charlotte islands. There was a very minor amount of exploratory work done at that time, but as the result of information gained then and as a result of further geological knowledge the oil companies have now taken a new interest in that particular area as well as in others around the coast. For a number of years they have been drilling test holes along the southern part of the Queen Charlotte islands, and have apparently come to the conclusion that the area extending under the sea from the Queen Charlotte islands holds a potential for the discovery of petroleum products.

About two years ago the former minister of northern affairs and national resoures asked me why the oil companies would be applying for exploration rights off the coast of the Queen Charlotte islands. He asked how could they possibly drill in that area. I pointed out to him that a very large part of Hecate straits is comparatively shallow. There is an area extending out some 20 miles which has a water depth of probably less than three fathoms, and after the experience in the gulf of Mexico such a depth of water poses a very minor problem for drilling and exploratory work done in connection with oil.

Now, as I said, there had been some contradictions in the past. I know I am not telling secrets when I say it has been a well known fact that coal operations have been carried out on the continental shelf in the maritimes for many years. I never heard any issue raised over that type of mine there, but I can foresee lots of complications if the federal government insist that continental shelf resources belong to them. In the case of the whole gulf of St. Lawrence and the lower St. Lawrence area, who has the rights to the resources? Who has the rights to the resources in the bay of Fundy?

The federal government does not dispute the right of Ontario to resources lying under the Canadian section of the great lakes. Somebody might say that is fresh water, but it is a huge inland sea and some comparison can be made. The water area of the great lakes exceeds the total continental shelf area lying off the coast of British Columbia. In fact the Ontario section of lake Huron is as large as the area in the region of the Queen Charlotte islands and Hecate straits in which the oil companies are so anxious to pursue exploration work.

I support the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) that the issue of sovereignty over the continental shelf "shall be a matter of immediate negotiation between the parties concerned". I do not see any reason to expect failure of these negotiations so far as those in British Columbia are concerned. I, as a British Columbian, feel that the mineral and fossil fuel resources of our continental shelf are rightly ours. If a reference is made to the supreme court, as I believe the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources suggested might be done on several occasions, and if the ruling is adverse to the interests of British Columbia, then I feel the law should be amended to redress what I consider is a wrong.

I shall quote again from Oilweek of October 9, 1961, which has a reference to the former minister of northern affairs and national resources, who is now Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) appearing before a committee of the other place. It reads:

> Present, among others, were the then minister of northern affairs, the Hon. F. A. G. Hamilton and the minister of the Department of Justice, the Hon. E. Davie Fulton.
>
> Apparently no subsequent discussion has taken place to up-date this debate, during which Mr. Hamilton made these comments in answer to questions:
> "We seek no power to take over the land of any province or any area not described as being precisely within our power . . . It is not the intention of the government to force anything on any person or any group that is unwilling to accept."

They were discussing a bill before the house at that time. Later, Mr. Fulton is quoted as saying:

> The amendment which is now proposed has been drawn in the desire to make it clear that the operation of this act will not extend to the Pacific coast, in which the province of British Columbia is interested; will not extend to the gulf of St. Lawrence, in which the province of Quebec is interested; will not extend to a large portion of the coast of Labrador, in which that province is also interested; and will not extend to the great lakes, in which the province of Ontario is interested.
> In other words, it will be confined to the areas where I understand the lands under territorial waters can be agreed now to be lands within the jurisdiction of the government at Ottawa—

Any suggestion that the federal government has considered itself on firm ground on claiming the resources under our continental shelves, particularly adjacent to the provinces, is not justified in view of the statements of these ministers.

I feel that everything possible should be done to expedite oil and gas exploration on the coast of British Columbia, and clauses (2) and (3) of this motion offer what in my opinion is an acceptable method of breaking the present impasse. I hope that the government of British Columbia will accept such a suggestion and will sit down with our federal officials in order to get this whole matter on the road. We have enough contentious issues between our various provinces and the federal government to weaken us as a nation. I say let us settle those we can, and I believe this is one we can settle. We have a great deal of difficulty in settling some others between the federal government and the provincial government of British Columbia, but I think this is one that can be settled without bad feeling.

I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that I have never been able to find any indication, nor do I believe it was ever the intention when confederation was conceived, that federal revenues should be drawn directly from the control of natural resources, and I say once again that in my view these natural resources lying off the coast of the provinces belong to the provinces. For the federal government to attempt to draw revenues from these resources might well be classed as nothing but greed and will certainly not encourage the development of our continental shelf resources.

Having said this, I want to impress upon the house and the ministers concerned with these questions that this is an extremely important matter to us in British Columbia. The discovery of oil or natural gas along the coast of British Columbia would give a tremendous impetus to our economy. At present most of our oil is transported long distances by pipe line and is brought in by ships. This results in a fairly high cost to the consumer.

We have our oil resources in the Peace River and we draw oil from Alberta, but the fact is that for one item alone, furnace oil, where I live we pay 20.6 cents a gallon and I believe it can be purchased for anything from 14 to 16 cents in the city of Montreal; and Montreal certainly draws its oil supplies from far distant countries.

I think this points up, Mr. Speaker, the urgent need for a settlement of this continental shelf resources issue and I hope that these oil companies will be able to proceed with their exploration work and a settlement will be reached at the earliest possible date.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, like the previous speaker I wish to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) for bringing forward this resolution which is extremely well worded. Unlike my colleague from Comox-Alberni I find myself fundamentally in agreement with all the points raised. It seems to me that—

[Mr. McQuillan.]

Mr. McQuillan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said, "Unlike my colleague from Comox-Alberni I find myself in agreement with the points raised". I think I made it clear that I agreed with the resolution.

Mr. Broome: I thought I said that I complimented the hon. member from Vancouver East, the same as my colleague from Comox-Alberni. I do not think there is any relationship between a continental shelf and such areas as the great lakes; these are simply depressions inside a continent. The continental shelf is the shallow area which stretches out into the ocean.

It seems to me that we could well have a condition of superior and inferior provinces in this connection. For instance, the provinces which joined confederation in 1867, and British Columbia which joined a little later, were crown colonies which came into confederation bringing with them certain rights guaranteed under the British North America Act. It is quite conceivable that if new provinces are set up in the Northwest Territories this parliament could, in its wisdom, take away from those new provinces any rights to any mineral wealth underneath the continental shelf in the Arctic ocean. We would perhaps then have the older provinces of Canada having certain rights which newer provinces might not have.

There is also the fact that the federal government is in charge of shipping and the fisheries, and it seems to me that by intent the federal government is supposed to look after those matters which are outside the actual land boundaries of the various provinces. I think it would be rather unfortunate if in continental shelf exploration we had varying laws and regulations enunciated by each province which happened to be concerned.

I think one of the factors which has caused the very intensive development in the Northwest Territories has been the fact that we have uniformity in our regulations and we have regulations which were designed for the benefit of Canada, because it is considered that these resources in the Northwest Territories at this particular time must be used for the benefit of all of Canada.

I do think there is a certain precedent in regard to the law of the sea. We do have our own constitution, but in these matters I think that any court of law would take into account the generally accepted international legal procedure, and this must have some bearing upon any decision that is handed down.

However, I think that the hon. member for Vancouver East has got himself into a little bit of a jackbox when he says in paragraph (1):

—implemented by the introduction of required legislation and/or an amendment to the British North America Act.

It is my understanding that the British North America Act can only be amended by unanimous agreement among all provinces. In fact this is one of the weaknesses of our constitution, that if any one province disagrees with something the other nine provinces want to see the federal government go ahead with, the federal government's hands are tied. It could well be that if we must have an amendment to the British North America Act we could never come to any sort of agreement. It would seem to me that if this question were referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, any decision of the supreme court must necessarily become binding on all parties.

I do not think the reference to coal mines being extended out from land areas in Nova Scotia underneath the sea is pertinent to this particular subject, because that resulted from a land development extending into the sea whereas the oil exploration envisaged on the continental shelf is from mobile rigs operating out on the water, in many cases scores of miles from land. We could have a balkanization of Canada; we could have various jurisdictions. This could result in the least advantageous development of our natural resources as far as those resources under the continental shelf are concerned.

It does seem to me that the proposals put forward in this resolution have merit. However, this is an extremely tricky legal problem. It is a problem upon which I think lawyers could spend quite a long time. Lawyers are very interested in the fine points of meaning of clauses and words. This resolution has been developed, I assume, by the hon. member for Vancouver East, who has many admirable characteristics but I do not think he is a lawyer. Neither am I nor the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and therefore I think this matter would have to be looked at very, very carefully before this parliament committed itself to advising the government that this is the right kind of action. I think the ideas are right and the philosophy behind the resolution is right, but I do not know whether this is the only approach. I think this is a problem for the legal brains of the government to sort of dig into very, very thoroughly.

In regard to agreement and immediate negotiations among the provinces, of course, these can be started at any time, but in order to have negotiation you must have a willingness on both sides to negotiate. It may well be that this will come about; I certainly hope it will. However, knowing the conflict of interests which exists between the various provinces and the federal government, I am not sure. I wonder if it will be as easy as the hon. member for Vancouver East thinks it will.

To sum up, I would say that this resolution should be studied by the appropriate officials in the Department of Justice and by the departments of government concerned. They should understand that this is a problem which cannot be carried forward year after year without anything being done about it. They should realize that it is necessary to reach some sort of conclusion, and if these negotiations do not result in an agreement then the only solution which I can see is the one which the hon. member has suggested, namely to take the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Stuart Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): It is not possible for any hon. member from British Columbia to argue against the spirit or the intent of the motion which the hon. member for Vancouver East has submitted. All of us, regardless of party affiliation, are aware that the people of British Columbia require and demand the settlement of the dispute which now exists between the federal government and the provincial government in this matter of jurisdiction over the continental shelf with respect to such matters as the collection of royalties, leases and so on.

As the hon. member for Vancouver East has pointed out, and as other members from British Columbia have indicated, this question of jurisdiction is one of extreme complexity. If one reads the various opinions which have been expressed since this dispute arose it is impossible not to realize that there are many points of view, both legal and otherwise. Even in the oil industry itself there is doubt where the responsibility lies. Further, as the resolution itself suggests, while the major dispute at this moment exists between the dominion government and the government of British Columbia, it is quite possible that any decision or agreement reached by those two authorities would have an impact on the other provinces, provinces which now have an agreed position in relation to their offshore rights on the continental shelf. The position of these provinces might be altered in any understanding or new agreement entered into between the government of British Columbia and the federal government. I do not feel, therefore, that a resolution as all-embracing as this one could be made to work at this stage.

In addition there appears to me to be a possibility that the second and third recommendations in the resolution contain the seeds of a further dispute which might be imposed on the existing one. As hon. members know, agreements between British Columbia and the dominion government have been entered into over many years. There is, for example, the six harbour agreement of 1924 which happened to provide British Columbia with a considerable part of its claim to jurisdiction over the shelf off the coast. But there is no common understanding as to what exactly that agreement provided. There are two interpretations. And so it goes. Throughout this whole discussion we find that the dispute is based on differing interpretations of existing legislation and agreements.

In the first instance, before consideration is given to bringing this matter before the courts, I think that in the interests of both the federal government and the province there should be a meeting between representatives of the departments directly concerned with this matter on both sides to find out if there is some common ground upon which the dispute might be resolved by negotiation outside the courts. At the present time discussions are being carried on at much too long a range. There does not seem to be any great desire on either side to enter upon negotiations in a spirit of conciliation, recognizing that the best interests of the people of British Columbia and, therefore, of the people of Canada, are not being served so long as this dispute continues unresolved. I believe it is necessary that the two governments should try to find some means of gathering together their experts from departments which have a particular interest in this question in an attempt to discover, in conference, whether there is not some ground for common understanding which could provide a basis upon which to proceed. I think that is the first requirement, and surely it is a reasonable one.

My next point is this: there is a good deal of danger that the relationship between the federal government and the government of British Columbia may become, in the public mind both inside and outside British Columbia, something like that which exists between India and Kashmir. We are not separate states. British Columbia is not a separate state; it is an integral part of confederation. The federal government is not, to the best of my knowledge, at war with the government of British Columbia at the moment, though at certain times one might get an impression that such a state almost existed; there are other disputes. I think it is time now to recognize that this is not a question of maintaining the prestige of either government. It is a question of resolving this dispute to make certain that the people of British Columbia, and therefore the people of Canada, should get the benefit of a long delayed and most necessary resource development. These attempts to protect prestige so often lead to a curious situation where no interests are served, including the attempt to preserve prestige itself. By the time the dispute has dragged on month after month, the people have become tired of it and there is no prestige left for anyone; there is only acrimony, resentment and, on the part of the people, bewildered boredom.

The issue is clear—it is to obtain resource development; to get the economy of Canada further developed. By developing the economy of British Columbia we do develop the economy of Canada, despite certain suggestions to the contrary which emanate from the west coast from time to time. However, as I say, I do think the first requirement is a meeting between the representatives of the two governments where the people concerned with resource development and the people who understand the law relating to the situation can meet to decide whether there is not some position which can be mutually agreed or some road which can be followed. It may be that the only agreement which would come out of such a meeting, or series of meetings, would be that the question should be submitted to the supreme court.

If it cannot be done by negotiation then I cannot see any other possible alternative. There would have to be an agreement that when the supreme court decision is made it will be binding on both parties. That is almost entirely what is incorporated in the first recommendation of this resolution.

When you look at paragraphs 2 and 3 of the resolution you realize immediately that the provincial government would have to recognize the federal government's position as a caretaker position in which the federal government would issue exploratory leases during the period of negotiation or while the issue was before the courts and collect the revenues and royalties and hold them in escrow.

I do not think we can go that far in this resolution. I strongly suspect the present temper of the government of British Columbia to be such that it would not be willing to accept the suggestion that the federal government at this time should have even a caretaker authority over the shelf. But of course we cannot really know what the attitude will be unless a meeting is held at which representatives could meet and determine whether they could come to an agreement on points such as those raised by the resolution now before us, and on others which may exist. While there is no agreement at the moment and no meeting of minds between the federal and provincial governments there is certainly not merely a hiatus in the consideration of this question. The issue is a live one here in Ottawa in the departments of the federal government concerned, as well as in British Columbia. The positions of the two governments and their arguments to support those positions must be clearly defined and established. Consequently it is time now to bring about a means by which a conference can be held. I would hope that from the conference would emerge the means by which there can be achieved settlement of the question whether merely by negotiation or by reference to the supreme court.

As to the points contained in paragraphs 2 and 3, they will perhaps come up. As a matter of fact I suppose those two points cannot be avoided in any negotiations; but I do not think the federal government should be bound to include them at this stage in view of the fact that there may be other approaches the federal government has assessed and is prepared to introduce in the negotiations, if they could be reopened.

I return to my original contention that it is impossible for a member of this house from British Columbia to oppose the spirit and intent of this resolution, but the only part of the resolution which strikes me as being entirely valid at this time is that contained in the first paragraph recommending that a meeting be held to deal with the problem and attempt to find a means of settlement which the people of British Columbia are now demanding be achieved.

Mr. R. D. C. Stewart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate —very briefly, as I see by the clock—I wish to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver East on proposing this resolution, but I wish to state that it involves issues of such magnitude, both legal issues and others, that it can scarcely be discussed in the hour reserved for consideration of private members bills. I do not consider myself a constitutional expert nor do I appreciate all the ramifications of the British North America Act, but it appears to me that there are raised in this resolution matters of great magnitude and of vital importance, not only in relation to the development of Canada but to that of each individual province.

We are dealing here with the continental shelf which in my opinion has never been exactly defined. We do not know how far it goes seaward or where it starts landward. The maritime provinces, although not to the same extent as British Columbia, are interested in the development of the continental shelf. I believe it was in 1925 that the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia passed an act vesting the foreshore of the province in the provincial government. Nothing was said as to the ownership or rights in the territories beyond, in the land beyond the foreshore. The fact that over the years some of the collieries in Cape Breton have extended their operations out under the sea does not in my opinion establish any claim except possibly that of adverse possession, but certainly not any inherent right of sovereignty.

The province of New Brunswick on the other hand has not passed such an act. We have grants in the province of New Brunswick that came from the imperial government, the government of Great Britain, under which the grantee is given rights to low water mark. A former chief justice of the province of New Brunswick now deceased decided that the province owned the land under the ocean for many miles. Whether or not that decision was correct, I am not prepared to say. In my opinion the first thing that must be decided is what is the extent of the continental shelf.

As hon. members know under the British North America Act certain fields of jurisdiction were assigned to the federal and provincial governments. According to some constitutional experts a residual power is also vested in the federal government under which anything not assigned to the jurisdiction of the provincial governments is vested in the federal government altogether apart from the section dealing with peace, order and good government. It may be that as the continental shelf is not mentioned as coming within the jurisdiction of the provincial government, it remains vested in the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Before I call it six o'clock may I ask that the house give its consent to permit us to proceed to the next order of business. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think we last dealt with this item on February 23. Before that time and since, I have had the opportunity of having a couple of conversations with the minister in connection with wood preserving. On behalf of the new industry in my riding, as well as four others which I believe were started elsewhere in Canada in 1961 and two additional ones which are expected in 1962, I have been suggesting to the minister that the forest products laboratory should endeavour to work in closer conjunction with the spending departments such as transport, public works and those other government departments which are perhaps the biggest purchasers of preserved wood in Canada.

I am speaking, of course, of a relatively new process so far as Canada is concerned, the waterborne preservative known as the Boliden salt process, whereas most of us are more familiar with oil treatments for wood preserving. So far as my riding is concerned, there seems to be quite a scope for the utilization of wood species such as poplar, which we have in great abundance, that are sometimes described as wood weeds. In our area we no longer have, of course, the wonderful white pine that made the early mills in northwestern Ontario so famous, and because of freight rates and so on the import of fir and other more popular products is sometimes prohibitive. The result is that products other than wood are being used in substitution.

I am told that a number of additional plants using this new process could be established if there was not quite so much rigidity in the acceptance of certain standards that have been traditional in this country. Those who have spoken to me seem to feel that, without adequate initiative and experimentation in Canada, we have been inclined simply to accept United States standards and have been ignoring the fact that while this particular process is new in Canada it has been well known for some time in European countries, particularly the Scandinavian countries. I believe that this particular salt waterborne preservative has been utilized in Europe since 1935.

As I understand the situation, the minister's forest products laboratory is prepared to tell any possible purchaser of wood for which a preservative is required that a standard of .55 with respect to the Boliden salt process is adequate rather than the standard of .65 set by the Canadian standards association. The point I wish to make to the minister is that, first of all, the countries of Europe, New Zealand and others have accepted a standard of less than .55 but if in the opinion of our laboratory .55 is satisfactory it seems to me that information should be conveyed properly to such departments as the Department of Public Works, which establishes specifications for the purchase of wood that is required in many of its structures. I urge that the department go beyond that and establish whether a standard of .55 is not higher than necessary and whether there is not undue conservatism in this particular field.

I happened to listen to a farm broadcast on the radio at noon and the subject under discussion was the forest products laboratory and the preservatives that are available for treating farm fence posts and so on. There is a tremendous field here, of course, in so far as the weed woods are concerned and there would be tremendous industrial and economic advantage to our part of the country in the use of this process. I know the same thing is true in Manitoba because I know that a plant of this type has been established in the constituency of the hon. member for Dauphin. At first the plant had a hard time selling the product but now they are working to full capacity. I understand that the governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba have accepted this preservative with respect to such purchases as telephone poles. Hon. members know, of course, that in those provinces the telephone companies are government owned.

I suspect that there has perhaps been undue reliance on United States standards rather than doing our own experimenting independently. There is a feeling that, in relation to oil treatment preservatives, a standard of lower than .55 could properly be accepted with regard to this process. If this were done it would certainly generate a substantial cash flow that is not available at the present time in areas such as mine and other rural areas, particularly in western Canada, where there is this immense asset in the form of unused poplar wood.

Mr. McQuillan: I should like to speak on this item for two reasons, the first being an item that appeared in the newspapers across this country. The article to which I refer appeared in the Globe and Mail for Thursday, March 8, datelined Vancouver, B.C., and reads:

A major expansion of the Elk Falls pulp and paper mill on Vancouver island at a cost of $25 million was announced today by Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd.

G. H. Gallaway, company president, said the expansion would mark the first production in Canada of bleached kraft pulp from sawdust.

The expansion will add 50,000 tons of sawdust pulp a year; increase the kraft pulp production to 1,000 tons from the present 520 tons a day and triple the Elk Falls bleach plant capacity to 600 tons a day from 200 tons.

The Elk Falls plant, just north of Campbell river, on Vancouver island's east coast, brought into production in 1952, cost $65 million. It is operated by the Elk Falls Company Limited, a division of Crown Zellerbach.

"This is the biggest single expansion our company has undertaken." said Mr. Gallaway. Completion is scheduled for 1964.

I believe the article was in error in setting the capital cost of this expansion at $25 million because I understand the official press release stated it would be $35 million.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a very important breakthrough in applied science. For many years it has been a dream to use sawdust as a raw material in the production of pulp. One often hears private business being castigated for its alleged failure to participate in research work. One also often hears, both in this house and outside, suggestions to the effect that United States industrial firms operate on a basis of cut out and get out in Canada. This development at Elk Falls was made possible because of the wealth of research knowledge the parent company, Crown Zellerbach, has gathered not only through its own research facilities but from all the sources available to it in the United States, Canada and indeed throughout the world. There may be a pulp plant in some other part of the world which is successfully using sawdust as a source of raw material, but I do not know of one. While I take an interest in forestry matters and forest products, I am not aware of another plant that is using sawdust for this purpose.

I should like to point out, Mr. Chairman, what this development means from an economic and forestry point of view, particularly in British Columbia. It is of particular significance to our future economy. This development means that our pulp industry has available to it a low cost raw material that will help make it competitive in other parts of the world and still provide working conditions for the labour employed in pulp mills that are as good as any place in the world. I believe I can safely say that. I believe working conditions in our pulp and paper industry are as good as any in North America, and consequently any place in the world.

In the case of this one plant, our forest products production is increased by the equivalent of 40 million board feet of timber a year without cutting one additional tree. The value in dollars of this pulp I will not attempt to estimate, but it runs into many, many millions of dollars. The annual output of sawdust waste in British Columbia, if it were economically available, would supply the raw material requirements for upwards of 25 such plants as this one proposed at Elk Falls. I said if it were economically possible because I think that is getting into the realm of fantasy. Many of the saw mills are in remote areas and there would be a real transportation problem in getting the sawdust to the pulp mills. I doubt if, by any stretch of the imagination, the sawdust waste of all saw mills could be used in the pulp mills of British Columbia.

One important fact of this new pulp development is the fact that in British Columbia there is no question about whether timber should be converted into chemical use or sawn into lumber products in saw mills. Both types of plants are an integral part of the over-all forest industry. One is just as important as the other, and a healthy pulp and paper industry needs a healthy lumber industry and the latter needs every possible assistance from research in order to sell its products in competition with materials available from sources other than wood.

This consideration of materials other than wood brings me to a subject that is very much in the mind of anyone who has knowledge of our British Columbia forest industry. I have referred to this before on a number of occasions, and I am speaking of our cedar problem. I feel that a crash research program is needed to find a solution to this problem. About 25 per cent of our coastal stands of timber is western red cedar. This would probably amount to about 100 billion feet board measure of timber. I have not the figures for the interior, but I would estimate that about 10 per cent of the interior stands are western red cedar. They are primarily situated in the Kootenays, the Columbia river valley, the lower Thompson and some of the areas around Salmon Arm and Enderby. There is much of this cedar that is of high quality and produces a high grade product in the form of cedar siding, cedar panelling, shingles, shakes and other products.

We have run into very severe competition in recent years from substitute materials. We are finding it difficult to convert a large quantity of this cedar into sawn products that we can sell. In fact, a few weeks ago, within the last two weeks, I believe, there was an announcement from MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Company that they were closing the cedar mill operation at New Westminster. This plant has been known as the B.C. Manufacturing plant, and because of the difficulty in finding markets for the products from that mill, the plant is closing. I believe this factory employs approximately 265 men and it uses approximately 75 million board feet of cedar a year. Where is a market going to be found for these 75 million feet of logs? They are going to come out of the woods because the cedar is interspersed amongst the other species required for lumber, pulp and paper, and they will be produced whether or not there is a market for them. This is a problem that is increased year by year and I believe it has been brought to the attention of the minister and his officials by the forest industries association for British Columbia. I have a copy of the brief that was presented to the minister about one and a half or two years ago, shortly after he became Minister of Forestry. I should like to quote from this presentation which deals with the particular problem of the British Columbia forest industry and which shows how the Department of Forestry could best aid that industry. It states:

> The percentage of cedar in the coastal forest inventory is very high, in fact more than four fifths of the total cedar inventory of North America is in B.C.'s forests. The actual percentage of cedar in our coastal inventory is about 24 per cent, yet, for many years, the percentage of cedar being cut annually is much lower than the percentage of that species in the total forest inventory, the percentage of cedar being cut being only about 17 per cent. This percentage has represented the maximum volume that existing or known commercial uses have been able to absorb. As a consequence of the low percentage being cut, the western cedar problem each year becomes more serious. A very high percentage of this cedar (which is known as "western red cedar") is suitable only for shingles and low grade lumber, for which there is a limited demand.
> As a result of the combination of circumstances referred to in the preceding paragraph, you will appreciate that the utilization of cedar is one of our industry's most serious problems. Leading forest engineers and chemists, who have studied the problem are convinced that the only real solution to the problem of using low grade red cedar is partly in increased use in the manufacture of pulp but chiefly in finding, through research, a wider range of commercial uses for cedar, including chemical extractions thereof.

I should like to emphasize the importance of this problem to the minister and stress what it means to the economy of British Columbia. It is what I might refer to as one of the soft spots in our economy and I feel that most people who have a knowledge of the B.C. forest industry—I think I have some knowledge of it myself—believe that with a concentration on the part of the Department of Forestry, with its facilities for research, there is every reason to be confident that the department would come up with the anwer to this problem. I ask the minister to give it his personal attention at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Batten: This is the first time I have had the opportunity to take part in discussions on the estimates of the new Department of Forestry, and it is a department which I believe will reach considerable prominence in service to Canadians in the future. The minister brings to his post a very wide and practical knowledge of the forests of Canada in general, and of the forests of his own province of New Brunswick in particular. Through you, Mr. Chairman, may I say to him that I wish him well in his efforts.

During my years in this house I have always been particularly interested in matters pertaining to research. I have enjoyed many of the meetings of the House of Commons committee on research, of which I am a member, but to date we have not been able to get to the point of discussing research in forestry. I hope that some time in the near future we shall be able to do that.

I believe Canadians are becoming more aware of the value and the need for research. However, I think that over the years we have not had sufficient research in Canada, and viewing the estimates of expenditures by other countries on research I would say that we have allocated a smaller proportion of our gross national product to research than many other countries in the western world. We in this country have a great and varied storehouse of natural resources. In fact I believe it is fair to say there are few countries in the world in a better position to carve a great economic prosperity through research and technology than Canada. To no small degree our economic stature in the future will depend on the nature and degree of our research, and the manner in which research findings are utilized. I would point out that these general observations on research would apply not only to forestry but also to many other industries.

The industries and the national economies which put a premium on research will do the best in the years that lie ahead.

Dr. E. W. R. Steacie, president of the national research council, when speaking at the opening of the addition to the Imperial Oil research laboratories at Sarnia in January of this year said:

> Any industrialized country that does not allocate to research a proportion of its national effort comparable to that of the most advanced nations will be unable to maintain its position in the world.

Later in his speech, when referring to the rate of growth of organized scientific activity, Dr. Steacie said:

> As yet, however, there is no sign that the rate has started to decline, and one must conclude that any country which does not increase its expenditures on research at a comparable rate will ultimately face a deterioration in its world position.

This item for a further amount of $80,000 for forestry research is one with which I can agree. In a country where research needs increased attention, both on the part of government as well as industry, it is good to see a lead being taken by the federal government. We must have a greater emphasis on research and an increase in desirable jobs. Otherwise this country will lose some of its best trained people. In this connection I would point out that in 1959, of the 90 science-trained doctors of philosophy who left the national research council, only 16 remained in Canada.

Research is not only for industries which are not as successful as they might be. It is also essential for industries that are successful today and hope to maintain their competitive position for tomorrow. In no case is this truer than in that of the forest industries.

There is no need to comment on the value of forest industries to the Canadian economy. In the newsprint industry alone 127 pulp, paper and paperboard mills across the country not only provide 47 per cent of the newsprint supply of the free world and account for 4.3 per cent of our gross national product, but they furnish the basic materials for almost another 450 mills providing employment for our people.

The importance of this industry to the economy of Canada was well expressed in a speech made last March by the minister to the Canadian forestry association in which he said that the aid which he expected his department to give to the forestry industry would include research relating to the utilization of forest products. Then he went on to say this:

> "The public must be awakened", said Mr. Flemming, "to the realization that the forest resource is Canada's vital concern, without which the standard of living would be very drastically depressed, and without which the whole economy might well crumble".

The basis for the forest industries in Canada—as of course it is everywhere else—is the raw material which our forests are able to provide. Much research will be necessary if we are to ensure adequate supplies of present plant capacity and also for increased capacity in the future. This is true for Canada in general and I think it is particularly true for other regions of Canada, particularly the Atlantic provinces.

It has been estimated that the forest industries of Canada can provide another 125,000 jobs. To do this there will be need of research. There will be need of research to appraise our present capacity and how it can be used to meet future needs. There will be need of research to develop the most effective and efficient use of wood. Research will be needed to provide new and improved methods of protecting our forests from the ravages of fire, insects and disease. Again, research will be needed to acquire more knowledge and positive information regarding tree genetics, tree improvements and artificial tree generation.

In the Atlantic provinces there are 80 million acres of forest land, most of which is accessible. This is a tremendous benefit to the Atlantic provinces because the forest industries play a major role in the regional economy. Over 20 per cent of the total production of the Atlantic provinces comes directly from forest industries. In the years ahead the economy of the eastern provinces will rest largely on the expansion of these industries, provided the supply of raw material can be maintained. In my view this will largely depend on the results of research by governments and by the industries concerned.

In my own province of Newfoundland the forest industries, particularly the newsprint industry, form the backbone of the economy of the province. They provide about 25 per cent of the total value of all production. The newsprint industry in Newfoundland is not only vital to the areas in which newsprint plants exist, but also to the whole province. Much research and careful implementation of resulting programs will be needed if wood supplies are to be sufficient for present capacity and proposed new capacity. I believe that only research can give the necessary directed activity.

In recent years there have been research projects to accumulate information necessary to any reforestation program. Tree planting and direct seeding projects have provided invaluable data regarding where reforestation is necessary and where it is likely to succeed. These projects, originating in 1950, have been directed in part to burned-over areas to determine the assistance required in different regions for the forests to reproduce in a satisfactory manner. In view of the abnormally large increase in burned-over areas, particularly in the last year, I would hope that both these projects would be given further consideration and attention.

Mr. Chairman, of particular importance at the present time is the need for research into the insect infested forest areas of Newfoundland. While we do have serious infestation in certain areas by the hemlock looper, the spruce budworm, the balsam fir sawfly and the larch sawfly, it is with the balsam woolly aphid that I would like to deal briefly. Insect surveys are not new to Newfoundland. In 1925 Dr. J. M. Swaine made an inspection trip across the island. It is interesting to note that at that particular time no mention was made of the woolly aphid in Newfoundland.

A few days ago when my hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador was referring to this problem he too was concerned about infestation in the forests in his own area. Reading back over the history of research in Newfoundland I note that although there were some writings by Dr. Swaine in 1925 there were no further reports until 1937 following the Newfoundland insect survey of 1936. I do not have the full text of that report, but the information I do have leads me to believe that again there was no mention of the woolly aphid in the forests of Newfoundland. The purpose of this survey in 1936 was to get some idea as to where the outbreaks were and to identify the insects responsible. In 1934 Mr. C. C. Loughlin was appointed as the first insect officer, sponsored by Bowater (Newfoundland) Pulp and Paper Mills Ltd. and the Newfoundland forest protection association, an association, incidentally, which in 1960 celebrated its 50th year of commendable forest activity.

Following a survey made in 1949 by officials of the forest biology division at Fredericton, New Brunswick, Mr. W. J. Carroll recommended, in particular, the conducting of a special study of the infestation of the Newfoundland forests by the balsam woolly aphid. While this was the first occasion that this insect had been identified, it would appear that it had been introduced into the southwestern part of Newfoundland by about 1930. In 1955 a forest biology laboratory was constructed at Corner Brook, Newfoundland, and since that time a good deal of useful information has been compiled under the able direction of Mr. Carroll.

Today the woolly aphid poses a serious threat to the health of the Newfoundland forests. The woolly aphid attacks only true firs, but the balsam fir is particularly susceptible to damage. This particular species of tree comprises about 75 per cent of the softwood stands in western Newfoundland and about 60 per cent of those stands in central and eastern Newfoundland.

At the present time infestation on the Burin and Avalon peninsulas is not severe enough to be considered as an immediate threat. This infestation is spreading at an approximate rate of 10 miles per year, which I understand is double the rate in the maritime provinces, with the resulting danger of a spread into the wider areas of central Newfoundland. It is known from surveys that were made last year that there are now about 3,000 square miles of forest land in Newfoundland infested by the woolly aphid. Possibly I can best give the committee an idea of the rapid spread of this insect by quoting from a paper prepared by Mr. W. J. Carroll and presented to the annual meeting of the Canadian institute of forestry held in Corner Brook in November, 1961. The writer states on page four of his paper:

> An indication of the rapid development of the Humber valley outbreak is shown in survey plot records from near Steady Brook. The plot is located in an immature stand of balsam fir and is fairly typical of stand conditions in most of the Humber valley. In 1959, 72 per cent of the trees showed no visible injury. In 1960, 5 per cent were uninjured and in 1961 only 1 per cent. Trees in the moderate to severe damage class changed from 1 per cent in 1960 to 29 per cent in 1961.

This is a problem of increasing seriousness and one which merits the attention of the appropriate department of the provincial government and the pulp and paper companies on the island as well as the lumber companies concerned. I also hope that this program will receive priority in any forestry research undertaken by the federal government.

Mr. Granger: I should like to associate myself with the remarks made by my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's. He has given an account which is quite clear and I hope the minister will show the interest in this problem that he has already shown with regard to our other difficulties. I remember that last summer when the fires were raging in Newfoundland the minister came to Gander and showed a personal and a knowledgeable interest in our problems there. At that time, as hon. members know, we had lost huge areas of timber through forest fires. The minister has first hand knowledge of these fire-blackened areas; he knows how difficult it is to grow trees again on areas which have been burned over.

Our two great problems at the moment are recurring forest fires and the threat of the woolly aphid. I should like to thank the minister for a copy of the paper entitled Reforestation and Research in Newfoundland. Among other interesting information in this paper is an account of how difficult it is for trees to be grown on areas which have been burnt over. I should like to suggest, if such a suggestion need be made, that research be conducted into the possibility of reseeding or re-afforesting these areas. It is my belief that the adverse effects of these fires will become more apparent within two or three years than they are at the present time, because the absence of this timber, which is the basis of the livelihood of so many people, when fire-killed wood has been cut, will then be felt severely. Here is a problem which I trust the minister and his department will attack with the zeal in research which is necessary if what is apparently, at the present time, a great tragedy is to be averted. The adverse effects on the economy could at least be mitigated if we could find a means of successfully replanting these devastated areas. Research into preventive measures is, I agree, of even greater importance, although a cure is important, too, in view of what happened last year and the destruction which occurred.

In relation to preventive measures, research into the best type of aircraft capable of being used for water bombing is a field of great importance. We should try to determine whether land-based aircraft or water-based aircraft are most effective for dealing with fires. Actually, research in all its phases is important because we have outgrown what I might call the pioneering attitude toward our forests. Nature was good to Canada; nature was even prodigal in supplying Canada with resources, and I am afraid that in the early days our own attitude toward these resources was prodigal also. But we have reached a point where conservation and the replenishment of our resources is necessary if we are to maintain our supplies of wood products. In these circumstances, money spent on research is well spent.

Mr. McFarlane: There are just one or two matters that I would like to bring to the attention of the minister while the committee is dealing with this vote. The first has to do with the compulsory grade marking of lumber. At the present time this is due to come into effect on April 1 of this year. I am in agreement that lumber should be graded and stamped accordingly, but at the present time the only recognized grade marking comes under the control of the interior lumbermen's manufacturing association of British Columbia. Even properly graded lumber is not acceptable to the national housing authority or to the C.M.H.C. if it has not been stamped by a stamp issued by the interior lumbermen's manufacturing association. This process is very expensive for the smaller mills of which there are a great number in British Columbia. They must either join this association or content themselves by selling rough lumber to the larger companies. At the present time there are just not enough men in British Columbia to undertake all this grading work. This is evident from the large number of advertisements appearing in papers throughout the province asking for men with the proper qualifications for this work. I have had considerable correspondence on this matter and I learn that even certain companies are not accepted by the I.L.M.A. They are not recognized and their grade stamping is not recognized. I have heard from one concern, the California lumber inspection service which applied some months ago for recognition by this lumber manufacturers' association, but even after volumes of correspondence and questionnaires they are still waiting for a reply to their request. Therefore, it appears that the interior lumbermen's manufacturing association has a monopoly over the grading of lumber in the province of British Columbia.

A great number of our smaller mills—and we have a large number of smaller mills in the province—are not members of these larger organizations. One reason for this is that it is very expensive to join and the smaller mills working on small tracts of timber are not able to afford to join these larger organizations. It is considerably more costly to obtain the services of one of these companies which perform grade stamping. It does not seem fair that any one association should be able to carry on a monopoly of grade stamping. The smaller organizations feel they should be able to choose how and by whom their lumber will be graded. The situation at present is that the smaller lumber concerns are being forced to join associations of which they do not wish to become members.

I bring this matter to the minister's attention and point out that I recognize that the grading of lumber is an art, but at the same time the grading is only as good as the eye of the man who grades the lumber. Therefore a stamp on the lumber is only as good as the grader who grades it. I feel some consideration should be given at this time to making some arrangements with the smaller concerns so that stamps can be made available to them either through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or the government itself. The government could issue licences and stamps to the smaller mills so they would not be forced to go to the more expensive mills in British Columbia.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Mr. Chairman, in all the observations which have been made there are undoubtedly many useful suggestions and many proper inquiries, so I feel at this time it is fitting that I make some observations in connection with what has been said by various hon. members this evening. If I do not refer specifically to every point that has been raised I urge the various hon. members who raised the points not to be discouraged and not to hesitate to bring my oversight to my attention in a personal way.

I wish first of all to refer to the question raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River with respect to the preservative to be used in connection with wood. In order to make a somewhat brief story of what could be rather extended remarks I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Boliden salt process —which I am sure is very well known to you, Mr. Chairman—has received a great deal of attention. It is something that is receiving more and more attention each day. The particular division of the department in charge will take under consideration the comments which have been made by the hon. member. Personally I am not an expert on penetration. I do not know whether .55 is enough or whether it should be .65 or whether the United States standards should or should not be rigidly adhered to, but I do assure the hon. gentleman that the director of the forest products research branch in the department is an expert in this type of treatment and I assure the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that his representations will be brought to the attention of Dr. Jenkins.

I was interested in and I must say very pleased by the remarks made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni because in my opinion, as my hon. friend said, the utilization of sawdust does represent a definite breakthrough so far as up to the minute advance is concerned. The hon. gentleman referred to the utilization of a very large percentage of the total product of the forest as it is represented by what is ordinarily known as sawdust.

In my young days in connection with saw milling, sawdust and the disposal of sawdust were terrible problems. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni mentioned that a $50 million or $60 million extension of an existing plant will come into being which will be based on the use of sawdust as a raw material from which kraft pulp will be made. I think this is a tremendous step, and as the hon. gentleman said it will have the effect of preserving the forest and making us more competitive. I am sure this is extremely important news for the forest industry in general.

I remember very well the question of the use of cedar which was brought to our attention more than a year ago. We were asked to give it concentrated effort and this has been done. If I had been requested to make an observation or guess about which of the two problems was the more difficult to solve—that is, finding an answer to the question of the more extensive use of cedar and finding an answer to the question of what could be done with sawdust—I would have said that the use of sawdust represented the more difficult problem. Yet we find that a plant based on the utilization of sawdust is practically assured at this time. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that efforts will continue so far as the use of cedar is concerned. Perhaps there might be a little more co-operation between the province of British Columbia and private industry and perhaps the research directed toward that specific problem by the department could be intensified. Toward that end I assure my hon. friend that I will cause some more inquiries to be made with a view to seeing whether we can have a little more concentrated effort.

I visited Vancouver within the last year or so and was greatly impressed by the calibre of the men who are working in the forest products laboratories. I am sure they are excelled by none engaged in similar work anywhere in Canada. If we had similar people engaged in this work in the maritimes probably they would be, but we do not have people engaged in work of that nature down there. In any event I have some understanding of the problem and my hon. friend may be sure we will continue to work toward accomplishing something more specific in connection with it.

I was keenly interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's in connection with research. We in the maritimes are most interested in research because our trees are not large in size. I believe we have to look to research as a means of achieving more production per acre in the future. I recognize the value of what he has said about the problem of reforestation, to which problem the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador also directed our attention. Since the most disastrous fire of last year this problem has seriously occupied the attention of the department, as hon. gentlemen may have noted by the paper on the subject that has been released. That is a start.

I know something about the newsprint industry and I have some conception of its value to Newfoundland. I am not very conversant with the problems arising from the blight of the woolly aphid that has affected the balsam. I do know it is recognized by those in our department who are charged with that special responsibility as being a particularly difficult situation. Efforts are certainly being made toward improvement in that respect. I was very much impressed, though I must say not very favourably impressed, by the remarks that were made in connection with the steady progress that has been made by this particular pest or insect or call it what you like. I can quite understand the concern of my hon. friends opposite. We cannot promise any miracles because the days of miracles may be pretty well over as far as forests are concerned. Perhaps they are not; in any event, we will hope for the best. But I do assure hon. members that the department and those connected with it are very conscious of the importance of this matter and they are also very conscious of the difficulties in connection with it.

The hon. member for Kootenay East referred to grade marking. I can quite understand his concern in connection with this matter. A day or two ago I was at a luncheon where representatives of the lumber industry from the Atlantic to the Pacific were gathered. There were something like 50 or 60 present. Two of them were from the interior of British Columbia. I believe it was the interior lumbermen's association with headquarters at Penticton that was represented thereby two of the men who are specially charged with the responsibility of exercising some supervision over grade marking.

I mentioned the matter to them and they were both quite satisfied that the situation would be dealt with and would be dealt with in a way that would not cause any particular hardship to small mills. If my hon. friend will discuss the matter with me on some other occasion, we will try to get something a little more specific than that. I do know something about that situation with respect to the province of Newfoundland because, as hon. members perhaps recall, recently the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate raised the point in the house. I find that the government of Newfoundland has been communicated with in order to have some of their staff get in touch with the maritime lumber bureau to obtain the necessary knowledge, even though this does involve a trip to Fredericton or some other place where there are courses in grade marking. The purpose is to train a few of the representatives of the department of forests of the province of Newfoundland so that the inspection service will be readily available and at moderate cost.

I believe that concludes the remarks I wish to make in connection with the observations made by the various hon. members this evening. There will presumably be a time when the forestry estimates will come before the house again and I would expect to make somewhat more extended remarks then concerning our aims, hopes and expectations with regard to future forestry activities on the federal level. Tonight I will content myself with making these perhaps sketchy observations in connection with the points that have been raised, and I assure all hon. members that if it is their wish to pursue them further with me privately I will be very happy to see them at any time.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION
Indian affairs branch—Indian agencies—

618. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $136,000.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, these six votes in the supplementary estimates total $1,685,430 and they are all for winter works projects. Of this amount, $500,000 is for the purpose of creating worth-while community employment projects on reserves and the balance of $1,185,430 is for an accelerated works program to speed up regular Indian affairs construction and repair programs so that many projects can be completed this winter, thereby creating much needed employment.

The community employment program of $500,000 will cover such projects as clearing and brushing of new or existing roads and rights of way in order to improve the transportation facilities. Other projects include cutting fuel wood for indigents, improved forestry stands, cutting sawlogs for housing, clearing and cleaning reserve sites, building docks, improving irrigation works and many others.

The accelerated works program of $1,185,430 will provide employment mainly in the construction and repair of schools, Indian houses, community halls, warehouses, sidewalks, docks, et cetera, the renovation of water, sewage and irrigation systems and the operation of sawmills and other worth-while projects. It is estimated that 5,811 Indians will be employed across Canada under the winter works program.

In addition, Indian bands with sufficient funds are participating in the winter works incentive program sponsored by the Department of Labour. As of January 12, 1962, 42 separate projects have been approved totalling an expenditure of $270,000 and employing approximately 780 Indians in addition to the 5,811 I mentioned previously.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, dealing with this item in particular I should like to talk about one aspect of the economic development of Indians and in particular the Indians on a certain reserve in British Columbia. It is part of the Skeena reserve. This afternoon I took the opportunity on the orders of the day to ask the Prime Minister a question which he referred to the hon. lady who then gave permission to any interested member of parliament to go to the Indian affairs branch and look at certain documents. I took advantage of her very kind offer and as a result I have certain information I should like to lay before the house which was obtained from that source, as well as other information obtained from other sources.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt for a moment, while the matter which the hon. member wishes to discuss is, of course, extremely interesting it does not properly come under these estimates and, as I explained this afternoon, we are investigating the particular matter which was brought up. While the award was given it is not yet operative. There are certain matters to be completed before it can be operative. While I have no objection to the hon. member continuing with this matter, it seems to me that by the time the main estimates come up we will have much more information. Right now we are discussing something that has not even begun to operate yet. As I say, if the hon. member wishes to continue I have no particular objection but the matter certainly is not pertinent to the votes we are considering.

Miss LaMarsh: With respect to the hon. lady's remarks, may I say that the matter does concern Indian training in large part, and since the minister did indicate this afternoon that the matter will be looked into it may well be there is considerable information which is not in her possession and which if given at a later time on the main estimates might not be of as great assistance as it would be now. Therefore I should like to discuss the matter as it involves a situation which has been in existence for the past year.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps there is a certain responsibility resting on the Chair in connection with this problem. I find on reading the items in the estimates here that they relate to repairs and upkeep of buildings and works, and community employment projects. The difficulty I am going to have is that if I allow the hon. lady to continue discussing the subject she has chosen to introduce on these estimates, I am going to have a problem ruling against other hon. members who might wish to comment on the same subject, perhaps even the hon. member for Skeena to whom she has referred, although he is not in the house at the moment. If he were here, undoubtedly he would want to make a contribution to the debate.

I ask the hon. lady, therefore, to co-operate and see that she does not make my job too difficult, realizing that another opportunity will arise, perhaps more than one opportunity, to discuss this subject. For instance, the first item of the main estimates of the department would be one opportunity, and then orders of the day might be another. I would ask her to co-operate. I will listen very intently to what she has to say and if I can relate it to the item, I shall do so. If other hon. members of the committee do not interrupt, she may proceed.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to speak to the point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is a point which you have raised, yourself, but which the minister has not seen fit to raise. Your Honour has referred to the fact that this matter could be discussed on another occasion, namely during consideration of the main estimates. The point is, and I submit this to you respectfully, that it can be raised under this item now.

The reason I make this statement is that the first item under discussion in these supplementary estimates concerns Indian agencies, operation and maintenance. It would seem to me that the hon. member for Niagara Falls is dealing now with a matter concerning an Indian agency, and concerning the operation and maintenance of one of these agencies. Next, the minister herself, when posed a question this afternoon, made it quite clear she had no objection whatever to giving certain information to any hon. member in this house. The hon. member for Niagara Falls took advantage of that and got some information on the assumption, surely from what the minister said, that she would be able to discuss it tonight. Again, from what the minister said this evening, she indicated she had no objection to this matter being raised.

It seems to me, and I say this with respect, if there is a possibility, as I submit to you there is under this item, the hon. member should not have to wait until such time as the main estimates are up for discussion. As the committee knows, the main estimates might never be reached. This may be the only opportunity hon. members of the committee will have to deal with the matter. Since the minister has at her disposal two of the officers of her department, it would seem to me there should be no objection on the part of the minister and I do not believe there is. I submit there should be none on the part of the Chair to the discussion of this item.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, possibly I could clarify the situation by saying that the vote under which this particular matter should come is that which is noted in the estimates as "Reserves and Trusts". It is vote No. 58 in the main estimates. The votes which are affected by these supplementaries are votes 56, 57, 59, 60, 61 and 63. I hope that clarifies the matter.

Miss LaMarsh: I take it, Mr. Chairman, I may discuss the matter which I raised.

This matter arose, Mr. Chairman, from the fact that about a year ago, in May, 1961, certain individuals in the province of British Columbia were interested in ascertaining whether or not there was in this particular reserve, which has been called Tsimpsean Indian reserve No. 2, timber available for cutting. Certain companies, or a company at least, began to write to the Indian affairs branch on the west coast and to the Ottawa offices with respect to it. I am informed that the timber in question had been offered by public calls for tenders on two earlier occasions, in 1954 and 1956. I believe the offer covered all the timber which was located in this particular area. However, at that time no offers were received. The stand of timber in question is of various types, Mr. Chairman. It is partly hemlock, partly spruce, partly balsam, partly cedar and is of varying grades.

In 1956 a certain company known as F. J. G. Johnson and Associates Limited of Vancouver was employed by the Indian affairs branch to do certain work with respect to this reserve and other reserves in British Columbia. He recommended to the department a rate of dues to be charged on all of the Indian lands in British Columbia. Subsequently, in 1958, the Indian affairs branch hired this same company for a period of three years, on a one-year contract annually renewed, to cruise timber held by the Indians and thereby held in trust by the department, throughout British Columbia.

One of the chief individuals of this company is a man named F. J. G. Johnson. One of his employees during the time when the timber was being cruised by F. J. G. Johnson and Associates Limited for the department was a man named Brett, a man who now is employed by the department as a forestry officer in the city of Vancouver. Mr. Johnson was employed, through his limited company, until March 31, 1961. The day following, April 1, 1961, Mr. Paul Brett his former employee, was employed by the branch as a forester in British Columbia. Within a matter of a few weeks, certain companies began writing to the department to inquire about the sale of this timber. On May 18, a company known as Beaufort Industries Limited, Vancouver, wrote to the department in Vancouver asking whether this timber might be purchased. This was on May 18, 1961.

Within a matter of two weeks, May 30, 1961, Mr. F. J. G. Johnson, on the letterhead of his company, was writing to a number of companies, in particular the Westport Export Company of Vancouver, offering to peddle the information that he had obtained as an employee of the department. He offered to sell this information and indeed offered to ask, on a minimum fee basis, to negotiate the purchase of this timber from the department. He suggested that negotiations be conducted directly with the superintendent and the bands and chiefs council, with regard to Tsimpsean Indian reserve No. 2, which had previously been advertised for sale. He suggested that the regional office of the department of Indian affairs in Vancouver be approached—

Mrs. Fairclough: May I ask the hon. member from what document she is reading?

Miss LaMarsh: I read from a photostat of a letter signed by F. J. G. Johnson on his letterhead. It is directed to the Westport Export Company.

Mrs. Fairclough: To whom?

Miss LaMarsh: To the Westport Export Company.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I ask further if this is a document which was gleaned from the files of the department?

Miss LaMarsh: I did not see it in the files of the department, if there is one there.

This timber was offered for sale, as I said, by Mr. Johnson who had, within the two months previously, terminated his employment with the department, on the basis of information which he learned as an employee.

He concludes his letter with this phrase, that every effort will be made to bring all negotiations to a speedy and successful conclusion. In addition I am informed that Mr. Johnson attempted to raise money in the United States to purchase timber rights on this particular land. In any event the company to which he wrote, Westport, was not interested in such a peculiar transaction and therefore refused.

At the same time Beaufort Industries Limited, which had written originally to the department, asked whether this timber was for sale and was advised that there were approximately 1 million board feet for sale, being virgin timber, over mature and lying approximately one mile from the sea. It was indicated in a letter written at that time, dated May 24, 1961, that such timber had been advertised previously but no offers had been received. It was suggested by the Indian superintendent, and a copy was sent to this individual, that Beaufort Industries Limited consult Mr. Paul Brett, the forester attached to the British Columbia office.

Subsequently Beaufort Industries was in consultation with the department and received a letter dated June 7, 1961, from the acting Indian commissioner for British Columbia, in which a quotation was made that there were approximately 113 million board feet of hemlock, spruce, cedar and balsam which was over mature. It also pointed out that logging chances were fair and that road and transport routes were difficult. It was further pointed out, and I read from page 2 of the letter:

> The Indian affairs branch is presently interested in receiving competitive proposals to cut and remove the timber using Indian labour wherever possible.

Accordingly Beaufort, on invitation to submit a proposal, did so in writing. Before doing so they wrote to the department and asked it the department had any set figure, and under letter June 9, 1961, they enclosed a number of documents setting out the prices which had been paid in the immediate area for timber in recent months.

At this point I might say that Beaufort Industries Limited is a company of all Canadian directors and shareholders, located in Vancouver, and has been cutting timber for a long time in the Tsimpsean I.R. No. 2 reserve, in the reserve area, and cutting it very successfully. It has been exporting this timber to Japan, particularly low grade timber for the construction of such things as orange fruit boxes.

When the had written to the department asking for prices they received a letter back again from Mr. MacGregor, the acting superintendent for British Columbia, on June 9, 1961, and he advised as follows:

> We regret to advise you that the branch may not offer timber in the above quantities to individual companies. Ordinarily such timber is sold by closed tender on advertisement as a general offer to the public.
> As it was pointed out to you, however, the branch cognizant of the particular local problems of the area, is receiving all competitive proposals to cut and remove the timber using Indian labour wherever possible.

This will indicate that while the department's usual practice was to request sealed bids, in this particular case since the branch knew of the local problems of the area individual offers were requested. Accordingly, after the passage of some time, in August, 1961, Beaufort Industries in writing sent to the Indian affairs branch in Vancouver a firm offer of $7 per 1,000 board feet of measure for all merchantable species. They indicated as well that they had intended to do this logging with Indian labour in all possible phases. In addition they offered to replant at the cost of the company to the same state as the original stand, concurrent with logging operations, and this would be done by Indian labour. They also offered that operations were to begin within 12 months and were to be completed within 10 years. They also offered a $25,000 deposit, which was the largest deposit required for provincial timber sales in British Columbia.

Subsequent to that firm offer which had been sent to the department in which Mr. Brett was the forester, and after a representative of that company had visited Ottawa and talked to representatives of the Indian affairs branch, they were informed that the department was designing a contract and proposal for the removal of the timber and subsequently it was the intent of the department to discuss it with Beaufort Industries and other interested companies with a view to the operation.

Subsequently by letter dated September 12, 1961, Beaufort Industries Limited made an addition to their offer which was to provide to the branch a maximum sum of $200,000, being $10,000 per year for each of two employees employed by the department, a community planning officer and a forest supervisor and co-ordinator, each of which officials should be employed and under the direct control of the department.

One of the proposals made by Beaufort would require a logging road, some 10 miles in length, to be constructed from Fort Simpson, which is one of the dwelling places of the Indians, to an inlet called Tuck Inlet, whereby for the first time the Indians of that reserve would have safe passage from the northernmost parts of their reserve to the south and to Prince Rupert. As at present, these Indians are unable to travel through the land and must travel only by the Chatham sound, in very rough water and sometimes in very bad weather. However the road which Beaufort Industries was prepared to build—admittedly for its own purposes it was a logging road—would be good for at least 10 years, would remain the property of the Indians and would provide them with complete access through their reserve.

The Indian affairs branch, however, said that such a road could not or should not be built, notwithstanding the fact that the amount intended to be used was $500,000 by the Beaufort company. Indeed any proposal to build such a road would be entirely at the expense of the tenderer, and at no expense to the Indian affairs branch. Accordingly such an offer was made and, as I said before, there was an offer made to replant whatever timber was cut. This was done for two purposes, one to provide for effective regrowth, and second, to provide psychologically for the Indians by showing satisfactory proof to them that there would be no raping of their forests and that their children and grandchildren would again have forests to sell.

There was considerable discussion between representatives of Beaufort Industries Limited, and Mr. Paul Brett, the district forester, and he said that he recommended against reforestation. I am further advised that Mr. Johnson, who made the original cruise under the employment of the department, also recommend against reforestation and said it would regenerate naturally. In that connection it was interesting to listen to the remarks made during the last vote and hear those hon. members interested in forestry talking about the necessity of replanting; yet here we have a departmental forester who says it is not necessary to replant.

I am informed by a representative of the branch that in addition the forest officer in Ottawa checked with the executives of other companies with respect to this question of reforestation, as it became important later. We are now at the point where this firm bid has been put in writing to the department and has gone through Mr. Paul Brett's hands. Then there was a call for tenders made on September 15, 1961. It was sent out to the Beaufort company and to another company, Shoreline Lumber Limited. Shoreline Lumber Limited was, according to the records of the registrar of companies in British Columbia, incorporated only on July 14, 1961. Its directors are most interesting. They are John C. Cotton, an American of Ashland, Oregon; Frederick J. G. Johnson, of North Vancouver, the same man employed by the department and the man who prepared the cruise map which is part of the tender; and Thomas E. Ladner, also of Vancouver, who I am informed is the son of one Leon Ladner, who is probably known to many of my hon. friends opposite as the chief fund raiser of the Conservative party in Vancouver. These three individuals incorporated a company in July of 1961. In December of 1961 the department issued its call for tenders. The original advertisement for tenders, and that which was sent to those who had become interested, said that tenders were to be handed in on January 16, but at the request of the Vancouver office—I am informed, at the particular request of Mr. Paul Brett, who as I pointed out was formerly an associate and employee of Mr. Johnson—it was delayed and the advertisement was changed to read for February 13. No notification was given to the Beaufort company that there had been a change in the date called for tenders.

On February 13 Beaufort's representative appeared in Ottawa with a written offer, and at the same time the offer of Shoreline Lumber Limited was received. The agent of Beaufort company was present with the officials of the department and the tenders were opened in his presence. He was told by the senior official opening the tenders that Beaufort had won the tender. In Beaufort's tender certain figures are produced. The department has made a point of the fact that it was not in the exact form of their original tender. In Beaufort's tender the price to be paid was $2,237,925. This sum was in cash and in kind and is set out in a separate memorandum attached. With the offer sent in by Beaufort was their certified cheque for more than $59,000 as was required in the offer. The only other bid that was received was from Shoreline Lumber Limited, which totalled $792,000 plus some fringe benefits.

When one reduces the items to indicate exactly what was offered, one finds that Beaufort had offered certain upset prices plus other sums, $200,000 of which they were prepared to pay to the department for economic development for the Indians, plus the value of the $500,000 road which would be a permanent benefit to the Indians, plus the fact that they were bidding not on the timber which was shown only on the map prepared by Mr. Johnson at the behest of the department and upon which Mr. Johnson had bid, but in fact upon low grade timber as well, which would have brought an additional cash benefit to the Indians.

When the tender was first put out it contained an interesting provision, which was that it was the desire of the department that Indians on this reserve should gain maximum benefit from this sale, including the opportunity to acquire skill, and other permanent benefits. Under the Beaufort bid they would have obtained cash for the sale of considerably more timber than under the accepted bid. They would in addition have obtained a permanent road, two permanent employees for 10 years, and they would have had considerably more timber cut.

Not insignificant is the fact that with the road they would have had a certain safety factor which does not now exist. In addition to this they would have had employment and the additional benefit of having the forest replanted. However, notwithstanding the fact that on February 13, 1961, Beaufort was advised that it had won the contract as high tenderer, under the date of February 21, 1961, they received a telegram from the officer in charge of reserves and trusts in Ottawa saying that they were a low tenderer, that Shoreline Lumber Limited was high tenderer and had won the bid. On the same date their cheque was returned to them. This was confirmed by letter.

On the same date Mr. Boys, the Indian commissioner for British Columbia, wrote to Chief Sampson of the band and advised him that the department had accepted a conditional tender. In fact the tender which was accepted from Shoreline—this is the company with Johnson and Ladner and this American—contains the proviso that the tender is submitted on the understanding that logs removed from this Indian reserve would be allowed to be exported, and if to the contrary the bid was withdrawn.

This to me, and it must be to many hon. members in this house, is a considerable shock, that when two tenders are placed before the department, the department accepts a conditional tender. This was repeated, as I said, in the letter which was written by Mr. Boys to Chief Sampson, where the price which had been paid was indicated and also that the earliest start of logging activity would be the spring of 1963. This very important proviso was also contained in the tender:

> In addition Shoreline Lumber Limited do not intend to execute the contract until such time as they secure a permit to export the timber, where approval of this matter will not unduly delay the project.

An interesting thing occurred. In so far as the Shoreline bid was concerned there was a very detailed plan with respect to the economic development of the Indians and it was the opinion of the Indian affairs branch that this company, which had never been in existence before last July, knew considerably more about the Indians on this reserve than anyone else. In fact it should be remembered that Mr. Johnson—and Mr. Brett had been associated with Mr. Johnson—the chief forester of the Vancouver office, had been sent by the department to the reserve in the fall of last year with another gentleman, Mr. Addison, who is the chief placement officer for British Columbia, where apparently they drew up an economic proposal. That economic proposal, being one which is solely within departmental jurisdiction, is not available. Therefore there can only be speculation as to how closely that proposal parallels the proposal which turned up in Johnson's bid which was accepted.

I should like to once more draw the attention of hon. members to the stunning regularity with which Mr. Johnson's and Mr. Brett's names come up again and again. Mr. Johnson had been Mr. Brett's employer. Mr. Johnson did the cruise in 1959 in this timber reserve. On March 31, 1961, Mr. Johnson left the department. The next day, April 1, Mr. Brett was hired. Mr. Johnson recommended the dues to be charged. Mr. Brett recommended the upset prices. Both recommended that there be no reforestation planning. Mr. Johnson tried to sell the timber to other individuals. Mr. Johnson was a member of the company which was incorporated. Mr. Brett was the one who at the tenderer's request delayed the job for call of tender. Mr. Brett went to the reserve to look up the economic problem, and Mr. Brett saw all the correspondence at all times.

This could be a matter of argument between businessmen, but it would appear that all of the gentlemen concerned are supporters of the party of the hon. lady opposite. There are no supporters of my party, or at least there were not until relatively recently, among these individuals. I would suggest, however, that this is not simply a matter of two individuals one, by virtue of honest bids one against the other, having won, and the other having lost. There is a definite pattern of collusion by an employee of the Indian affairs branch with a former employee. This government has from time to time made a great thing of the fact that—

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I have hesitated to interrupt the hon. lady although she has been out of order for half an hour, but I do say now that I cannot sit here and let her accuse members of my department of collusion. I ask her to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman—

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to withdraw. I believe that the hon. lady has no personal knowledge of this whatsoever, but I have photostats before me and in my legal training I have never before in my life seen such an obvious and barefaced collusion.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to advise the hon. lady that her time has expired.

Mr. Chevrier: Let her carry on.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to impress upon the minister in charge of this department the utmost importance of having this situation with regard to the selling of timber on the reserves in British Columbia clarified as speedily and as completely as possible. If that is not done almost immediately the effect in British Columbia will be most serious, not just upon the Indians on the reserve but as far as the native Indians of the entire province are concerned.

This matter was drawn emphatically to my attention this morning when at 9.00 o'clock a telegram was delivered to me signed by the chief of the council of the Indians of this particular reserve. I found it almost impossible to believe the information which was contained in that telegram, which stated that as between two tenders for certain timber limits there was a difference between them of almost $2 million in one instance and less than $1 million in the other, and that the bidder offering less than $1 million had been awarded the tender. The Indians, through their chief, had been unanimous in objecting to this type of operation and to this policy and had asked that the matter be investigated immediately. Having received a telegram of that nature I took what I thought was the correct procedure. I at once telephoned the Indian affairs branch to read the telegram to them and ask for whatever information could be given to me. It was about 9.20 this morning when the departmental official told me of the situation. I was asking for information because this telegram had to be answered. I was amazed to be told that the basic information contained in the telegram, was correct. Then the statement was made that the Indian affairs branch was only interested in one thing, namely, to ensure that in the long run as a result of the actions and policies of the department the greatest amount of money and benefit would accrue to the Indians concerned. It was stated that studies had led the branch to believe that in giving the tender to the applicant who had made the lower bid the Indians on this reserve would get the greater amount of money. That was very confusing to me, so I ask hon. members of this committee to imagine how much more difficult still it would be for the Indians themselves to understand.

Then I was given additional information, and I appreciate the fact that I was given it. I was told that there were a number of differences or discrepancies in the way the tenders were handled. I was told that the tenderer putting in the highest bid—it happened to be the Beaufort people, I believe—had tendered on the basis of six or eight thousand acres of timber which was not to be sold. Without going into detail, I was given to understand that there were two or three other aspects having to do with reforestation. In addition, there was a question of roads. In all, there were a number of matters which were of such a nature that the Indian affairs branch had asked the forestry department for an analysis, and that on the basis of this analysis and the recommendation of a forestry official—I did not get his name, and I do not know it now—this particular decision was reached.

I think, Mr. Chairman, you will agree that at least on the surface this decision does not make sense. It has got to make sense, or there is something wrong. The Indians in British Columbia must have an answer, and they are entitled to that answer now. The only way they can get it is for a presentation to be made by the minister explaining this paradoxical situation and explaining how, according to this decision of the department, the Indians concerned are going to receive the greatest ultimate benefit in services or money.

I shall not continue to make any of the other observations I may have in mind at the present time. The minister knows about this matter; she knows there are some of us who are interested in it, and surely she expected it to be raised. I am going to sit down now, for a few minutes at least, in the hope that the minister will make a start, at least, toward clearing the air and telling the committee the facts behind this extraordinary situation in connection with this timber on the coast of British Columbia.

Miss LaMarsh: Before the minister replies I should like to address a few further questions to her on this subject. Perhaps the minister will advise the committee how it is that the offer made in writing by Beaufort last fall to the department in the amount of $791,000 is so peculiarly close to the offer made by the successful tenderer of $792,000. Perhaps the minister will also tell us how it is that such a conditional offer was accepted by the department. Perhaps she will tell us, as well, how it is that when the department in its tender call said it would not necessarily accept the highest or any bid it did not include certain timber, about 8,000 acres, as the hon. member for Vancouver East has just stated, which had been previously included in two sales offered in 1954 and 1956.

I was today informed by the department that this timber cannot be sold because it was not offered. Yet the same official admitted to me that if it was not sold as one parcel it would never be sold because it would be completely uneconomic to go in and cut low grade timber once the better timber had been taken out.

If this sale is allowed to stand, the birthright of the Indians on this one reserve is going to be reduced by over $1 million because this timber will never be sold. Further, the $500,000 which was to be spent to connect the Indian settlements by a safe passage by road will never be spent—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Miss LaMarsh: I do hope the hon. member who said that has looked at the actual contract before crying "nonsense", very much as the Minister of Finance does when anyone stands up in this house. This is not nonsense. The successful bid means there will be three miles of haul road built in from the sea to the heart of the good timber; it goes nowhere near the Indian settlements; it will be of no permanent value at all.

Perhaps the minister can tell us why this is not a firm contract for ten years but only a contract for one year renewable for up to ten years under certain conditions. The successful bidder can get out of the contract if he chooses in certain circumstances, these too having been accepted by the government. All these people have to do is say: we cannot get an export permit. And they do not even have to apply for one. Why is it that the minister, having accepted this bid, has decided to wait and see. I suggest to the minister that if the department knows there is someone interested in purchasing all the timber—and if it has known this since last September—the bids should be recalled and the department should ask for the sale of all the timber on the reserve. I ask the minister to check the peculiar report prepared by the officials of her department in British Columbia against the particulars of the successful tender. I invite the minister to ask herself about the relationship between these two people unless, of course, the hon. lady is not prepared to ask herself because of the fact that there is an American at the head of this company and Mr. Ladner is on the board of directors.

Mr. McQuillan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. lady is entitled to smear a gentleman of her own profession simply because he happens to be named to the board of directors of a company. I am sure the hon. lady in her career as a lawyer has frequently been named to the boards of directors of companies.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I did not say anything about him except that he happened to be one of the directors. If my hon. friend thinks it is a smear to be a director of a lumber company it may be because he has certain further information I do not have.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is one principle concerned. The hon. lady throughout her career has expressed a considerable interest in Indians. All hon. members realize that many of these people are in need of considerable help, that many of them in such isolated places must rely on the good faith of the department, the officers of which are trustees for them, in ensuring that these funds when received are put aside for their benefit. Any training program set up is established by the department for their good. They are used as labour and are trained as far as possible to be skilled labourers. The hon. lady must appreciate that in terms of the following resolution which came forward and which I wish to read to the committee that necessary confidence between this band and the Indian affairs branch is completely destroyed.

This resolution was unanimously passed by band members of the Tsimpsean Indian reserve No. 2 and is dated March 7, 1962. It reads as follows:

1. Regarding the sale of our timber on Indian reserve No. 2 we hereby agree to accept the offer of the company that tendered on February 13, 1962 to build a road from Tuck inlet to Port Simpson as we regard this road as being of the utmost importance to the band's well-being.

2. We further agree to accept this company's offer to replant the areas that are cut and we consider this most important as it will give additional work to members of this band now and to future generations.

3. We further agree to accept this company's offer to remove all the merchantable timber from the reserve at the same price that was offered for the high grade timber and we know that this will substantially increase the cash amount paid to us over any other offer for high grade areas only.

4. We understand that this company's offer is for a ten year period and we will not accept an offer for any lesser period.

In summary, we understand that a tender has been tentatively accepted by the department of Indian affairs in Ottawa that does not include all of the foregoing mentioned in paragraphs 1 to 4 and we are shocked to find that the offer tentatively accepted by the department of Indian affairs was binding for one year only and was for a much smaller amount of timber and had no provisions for replanting or building our vitally needed access and logging road. We feel that some members of the department of Indian affairs are definitely not acting in the best interests of the members of this band and this council now unanimously agrees not to accept any offer that does not contain:

1. Access road from Tuck inlet to Fort Simpson—

That is not in the successful tender.

2. Replanting of areas cut—

That is not in the successful tender.

3. Cutting the largest areas possible and removing the largest amount of timber which will return to the band the greatest amount of money.

That is not in the successful tender.

4. A firm ten-year period.

That is also not in the successful tender. This resolution is signed by the chief and secretary of the band and by six other band members. It is critically important that the minister look into this matter now, that in fact she be able to satisfy herself that it is a proper tender, that she be able to satisfy herself that the Indians who are her charges are the ones who will be benefited and benefited most. I would suggest to the minister that notwithstanding what I am advised by the department it is not necessary to have a surrender with respect to such a one-year contract. I am further informed by the department that there is an old surrender on these lands and that it is not necessary to have the Indians' consent.

I do not know very much about the members of the band on this reserve but I am told that in earlier times they tore up stakes and went after white men who came on the reserve. It is extremely important that their trust be restored. It is also important that the best type of cutting operation possible be carried out on this reserve and I suggest to the minister that this be done.

There is one small matter in which it appears that the department may or may not have been negligent and that is during the fall of last year. After Beaufort was in contact with the department a notice appeared in the British Columbia Gazette that another company—I am not positive of its name but I believe it is Prince Rupert Saw Mill—had applied for a licence on foreshore rights on the inlet called Tuck inlet which is the egress ultimately to the sea and which Beaufort intended and had advised the department they intended to use to take out timber, if they were successful in obtaining this bid. It was Beaufort that brought to the attention of the department the fact that anyone who obtained foreshore rights would in fact be giving the Indians access ultimately to the ocean.

There is another significant fact about which the hon. lady may wish to inquire. Why is it that the map prepared by Johnson and associates for the department at the department's expense, which expense, of course, is reimbursed to the person who successfully tenders, had removed from it the legend showing Mr. Johnson's name? Why is it that when one examines the map one finds a raw edge and the place where the legend normally would appear does not show? It was only when I was able to obtain the original map today that I was able to ascertain that it was in fact the map prepared by Johnson.

Now, if the hon. lady is not alarmed by some of the facts brought out today, if she is quiescent and feels there is nothing to this, that it is simply a complaint taken to the opposition by individuals who unjustifiably feel themselves aggrieved, I can only say that the hon. lady has no business being the trustee for the Indians.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, although it is almost ten o'clock perhaps I may be permitted to say a few words in view of the fact that the hon. member has occupied almost an hour. My remarks will be very brief. I wish first of all to point out that this item is not one which is in the estimates for consideration today. The question comes under vote No. 58 relating to reserves and trusts and is not contained in these supplementary estimates.

Earlier in the day the hon. member addressed a question to the Prime Minister in reply to which I advised that I had already ordered an investigation into this matter. I might tell the hon. member and the committee that I ordered this investigation prior to March 7, the date of the resolution from the Indian band to which the hon. lady directed our attention. I also pointed out this afternoon that Mr. Boys, the commissioner for British Columbia, will be visiting the Tsimpsean reserve to morrow. After his visit there when the report has been received I will make a report to this house. I reiterate, Mr. Chairman, that this whole discussion thus far has been related to an item which is not even under consideration this evening.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader what we will be doing tomorrow and Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: I hope we will be able to complete the supplementary estimates tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, and we could do so, I think, if we gave very close attention to the items that are called. If we do not complete them tomorrow, we will of course have to continue with the supplementary estimates on Wednesday because, as I pointed out to the house last week, certain projects will have to be discontinued for lack of money to carry them on and certain people will go without their pay because the money has not been voted by parliament. I think we have now spent about 10 days on these supplementary estimates and should get on expeditiously with the business tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: On that point, Mr. Speaker, we have not spent anything like 10 days on these supplementary estimates—

Mr. Churchill: We have. We had five days in January on them.

Mr. Chevrier: —as the minister has said. In any event, I do not think it is up to the minister to lecture the house on the manner in which these estimates are going to be dealt with by the opposition. We will deal with them in the manner in which we feel they should be dealt with in the best interests of the country.

An hon. Member: Obstruction.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

Forest research branch—

635. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $80,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 13, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

INDUSTRY

SULPHUR CONVERTING CORPORATION, MONTREAL—INTEREST OR INVOLVEMENT OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister been asked by the president of the chamber of commerce of Beaumont, Quebec, to explain the presence of two of his colleagues and eight Progressive Conservative members of parliament from Quebec at a luncheon called to announce a steel complex for the district of Quebec, and is he aware of the statement of the mayor—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member completes his question I wonder under what administrative responsibility the Prime Minister would be asked to explain the presence of hon. members, even hon. members of the government, at a luncheon.

Mr. Chevrier: Since you bring this point to my attention Mr. Speaker, I would point out that yesterday I asked the Prime Minister a question in connection with this matter, which can be found at page 1695 of Hansard, and the Prime Minister's reply was:

> I do not know how the hon. gentleman, knowledgeable as he is, knows what knowledge four ministers of the crown had several months ago. All I can say is that there is no basis for any ascription of knowledge respecting this company to the government.

My reply was that the statement was made by the president of the corporation, and now this morning this appears in the Montreal Gazette—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I assume there is something in the paper to the effect that the mayor of Beaumont has addressed a communication, but I am not satisfied what administrative responsibility of the Prime Minister is involved in what is so far as I am informed —and I am subject to information on this matter—was a private luncheon, an invitation luncheon.

Mr. Chevrier: Would Your Honour allow me to complete my point?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I would certainly allow the hon. member to complete his point, but it seems to me he is addressing himself to something other than the point of order on whether it is a matter of public administration that is involved or whether it was a private luncheon party on invitation. It seems to me that it is just left undetermined in the newspapers. If the hon. member can assure me that he takes the responsibility for saying the ministers were appearing in a ministerial capacity involving the government, then I would permit him to go ahead.

Mr. Chevrier: If Your Honour would allow me to complete the question you will see this is covered by the statement I am trying to make. I am asking the Prime Minister whether he is aware of the statement of the mayor of Beaumont that the Secretary of State forecast last December 10 that a steel industry would be built in Lauzon, with business offices in Beaumont.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I still fail to see the connection with the luncheon party. If the hon. member has a question about the building of a steel plant in which the government is involved, perhaps he would ask that question, but I do not know that the representation of a mayor about attendance at the luncheon—

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Now we are going to get the full treatment. Here it is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to say that the government's big majority in not going to howl down the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for preserving the rights of this vigilant and active opposition party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And misguided.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The question put by the hon. member for Laurier to the Prime Minister had to do with an observation made by the Secretary of State, who is a member of the government of Canada. It may be that in announcing this proposed plan the Secretary of State had in mind certain accommodations and policies which the government of Canada was going to evolve in order to encourage this industry.

Mr. Churchill: What is your point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We do not know; that may have been involved. Surely the hon. member for Laurier is entitled to ask the Prime Minister if a statement made by one of his ministers in regard to a matter vitally affecting the economy of a particular area in Canada is in order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have no objection to such a question, but that is not what the hon. member for Laurier was asking.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have asked my question of the Prime Minister. I expect that he will give a reply.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the two of them cannot agree on what the question was, I am sure I am not going to reply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I think Your Honour will find that there was no difference in the question and my reaction to the question. The Prime Minister is mistaken—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Whether or not the Prime Minister was mistaken is not a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Just give up; it is a bad day.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

According to this morning's Gazette, Mr. Albert Patry, mayor of the city of Beaumont, stated that the Secretary of State announced at a dinner held in Beaumont last December that a new industry would be set up soon in Lauzon, with offices located in Beaumont. Has the minister any comment to make in this respect?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this question is put to me because I felt a while ago that it should be directed to me.

I remember somewhat vaguely of having mentioned that, according to information given to me, a plant would possibly be set up in the Lauzon area, with administrative services in the parish of Beaumont.

I expressed the hope that if this project was sound it would be carried out.

[Later:]

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

What part did the minister take in that affair of the Sulphur Converting Corporation of Montreal and what significance had his presence at the meeting in Quebec city?

Mr. Pigeon: Ask that of the deputy minister who encouraged that in Quebec.

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on my arrival in Quebec city I was advised that there was a reception. I went to the reception, I sat down and listened; I was rather surprised, I got up and I left.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that there seems to be serious doubt about the soundness of the project of the Sulphur Converting Corporation, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to warn the people of Canada against the danger of investing their money—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has misinformed himself with respect to the administrative responsibility of the federal government. The question as I heard it relates to the sale of securities, which is a matter of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Denis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as federal authorities and members of parliament are involved I believe it raises a question affecting the public interest, and I feel the federal government might be interested in the project. That is the idea underlying my question.

Mr. Speaker: What the hon. member says about public interest is quite true, but that does not make it a matter of federal jurisdiction. It is a question of law enforcement or the sale of securities, either of which comes under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Did the Minister of Labour take notice of a statement by Father Turgeon, parish priest of Lauzon, to the effect that the announcement of this project had brought large numbers of unemployed workers from surrounding districts to Lauzon, who now have to be looked after by the St. Vincent de Paul society? Does the minister propose any immediate measures to come to the assistance of this community?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): That is the first time I have heard about this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will you look into it?

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Is the minister aware of the fact that a deputy minister in the province of Quebec, encouraged by the minister of trade and industry, Hon. Mr. Rousseau, strongly supported that project of a plant, which was also approved by several former Liberal members of parliament in Ottawa?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am trying to be sympathetic toward these questions about the Sulphur-something corporation. Even if the Secretary of State is aware of the alleged fact, I am still not sure that it is a subject matter for a question at this point in our proceedings.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State concerning the matter which was brought up by questions from certain Liberal members.

Is the Secretary of State aware of the fact that the project in question originated in my constituency and was sponsored by two former Liberal candidates, one Liberal member and seven or eight Liberal organizers?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I rather think the last question comes in the same category as the one asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED STATEMENT BY B.C. PREMIER—LICENCES FOR DAM CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this rule-obeying group I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Does the minister wish to comment on the statement made in Victoria last night by our unpredictable Premier Bennett to the following effect:

> B.C. won't be bribed by Ottawa into returning Columbia river downstream power to the province. We don't need any of their money. We can finance them both by ourselves, thank you.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and everyone else that the government has no intention whatever of bribing anyone; and if, as the statement seems to indicate, Premier Bennett is not asking the federal government to provide money for some purpose, I think he must be about the only person in Canada who is not.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, a supplemental question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received an application from Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, chairman of the British Columbia power commission, for a licence or licences to build the High Arrow, Duncan lake and Mica creek dams in the Columbia river basin?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is one matter that the Minister of Finance does not handle; this comes to the Minister of Public Works. Applications have been received under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for permission to construct dams on Mica creek, Duncan river and Arrow lakes; they have just been received from the British Columbia power commission. These applications are now under review by the officials of the department.

Mr. Herridge: Another supplemental question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay East.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have now converted the supplementary question I had intended to ask the Minister of Public Works to a regular one. In view of the apparent cart before the horse procedure of Dr. Keenleyside in dealing with Columbia river matters, will the minister inform the house whether he has been informed that Mr. Paget, water controller for British Columbia, has not to date issued a licence to the British Columbia power commission for the building of the dams, application for which has been made to his department?

Mr. Walker: As I understand it, this esteemed gentleman is a provincial official of the British Columbia department of lands and forests, and the permits issued by him are a provincial matter. The province of British Columbia has not been in the habit of consulting me in connection with their purely provincial matters. I therefore apologize for not being able to give an answer to that question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. L. McFarlane (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence this question. Has the minister received a communication from the attorney general of the province of British Columbia requesting the assistance of the army in the East and West Kootenay areas for the Doukhobor problem?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I did receive a telegram from Mr. Bonner, the attorney general of British Columbia, the material part of which read:

> Would earnestly recommend Canadian army immediately station appropriate units in the East and West Kootenays for practical training in army's current domestic role.
> People in Kootenays and government of British Columbia would welcome federal co-operation of this nature as complementary to efforts of provincial and municipal enforcement agencies now fully engaged in this area.

Following receipt of this telegram I telephoned Mr. Bonner and pointed out to him that it was apparent that the reason he wished troops to be stationed in the Kootenays was that they might aid the civil power. I stated he should follow the regular procedure as laid down in the National Defence Act, sections 218-228. Section 219 in particular reads:

> The Canadian forces, or any unit or other element thereof, or any officer or man, with materiel, are liable to be called out for service in aid of the civil power, in any case in which a riot or disturbance of the peace requiring such service occurs, or is, in the opinion of an attorney general, considered as likely to occur, and that is beyond the powers of the civil authorities to suppress, prevent, or deal with.

This section and the others referred to place squarely on the attorney general of the province the responsibility for requisitioning military assistance if, in his opinion, it is required. I assured Mr. Bonner that if assistance was requisitioned in the manner laid down by law, it would be provided in a matter of hours. I further advised Mr. Bonner that in my opinion I had no authority under law to send in troops to assist the civil power unless they were called for in the circumstances as laid down in the National Defence Act.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. Does this in effect mean there has to be a state of martial law declared before the minister sends in troops?

Mr. Harkness: There is no such thing as a state of martial law, as I understand it. The National Defence Act is clear. If military assistance is required by the civil authorities, the procedure is clearly laid down; they request the nearest army commander for that assistance, and he is obligated under the National Defence Act to supply it.

[Mr. McFarlane.]

[Later:]

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that ever so many minority groups in Canada are deeply concerned about the irresponsible and reprehensible activities of the Sons of Freedom community in Canada, is the Prime Minister in a position to assure the house that the government will undertake and support no measures that will violate the basic spirit underlying our bill of rights?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman often indulges in adjectival exaggeration, and this is a further example. He must realize that all statutes of Canada are subject to the bill of rights.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SMUGGLING ACTIVITIES OF CANADIANS ON INTERNATIONAL COMMISSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement yesterday that offences committed outside of Canada are not subject to prosecution in Canada, could the Prime Minister inform the house whether the two members of the Department of External Affairs who are alleged to have engaged in improper activities in Indo-China continued to enjoy diplomatic immunity even after their offences were discovered?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): What I said yesterday had no reference to diplomatic immunity. The question arose whether the act of smuggling committed by civilian personnel in Indo-China constitutes an offence under any of the laws of Canada. None of the statutes which are relevant in this connection, namely the Criminal Code, the Narcotic Control Act and the Customs Act, applies to wrongful acts committed outside Canada. It is not a question of diplomatic immunity at all; it is simply the fact that civilian personnel stationed anywhere in the world who commit offences are not liable under Canadian law even though they are Canadians.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. Does this mean that if the offence is committed in another country, and they are not liable to punishment under Canadian law, they can commit offences without being punished for them providing they have diplomatic immunity?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a legal opinion, and there is ample precedent to say that it is not in order to seek the answer to a legal question on the orders of the day.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: I am in a curious mood today, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to ask the Prime Minister another question. Did the two employees of the Department of External Affairs who engaged in smuggling operations escape punishment in Indo-China by pleading and receiving diplomatic immunity?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is asking the same question in a different form. He is asking the Prime Minister for a legal opinion on the status of the two employees.

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Speaker. I am just asking for the facts concerning a certain situation.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member given notice of the question? It is perhaps a question that might go on the order paper, inasmuch as it asks for information of past events which may not be at hand.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. GEORGE'S, NFLD.—REPORTED CHANGE IN STATUS OF STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a protest from the Royal Canadian Legion at St. George's, Newfoundland, regarding a report that the Canadian National Railways station at St. George's is to be reduced to a flag station? If so, can the minister advise what action has been taken?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a letter from the secretary of the Royal Canadian Legion at St. George's inquiring about some rumours concerning a change in the status of the station at that point. I immediately transmitted a copy of that letter to the management of Canadian National Railways, and expect an answer very shortly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL PARKS

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister given any consideration to extending the winter works program in the national parks beyond the end of April?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the present winter works program in the national parks carries on to the end of April. I can assure the hon. member and the house that we have made the decision to extend the program to the end of May, which brings it into line with the municipal incentive program of my colleague the Minister of Labour.

Most of the winter works program of my department takes place in the national parks and it also includes the important camp site and picnic grounds programs. These programs, as hon. members will appreciate, are important to provide the necessary recreational facilities for the Canadian population and our growing tourist industry. I can assure the hon. gentleman and members of the house that the provincial governments have been advised to this effect.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF WIFE OF BRITISH GUIANA PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite certain how to put this question. However, I think I am doing it in the right way by saying this. Protocol being protocol I should like to express through you, sir, what I know is the happiness of all members of the House of Commons at seeing in the Speaker's gallery Mrs. Jagan, wife of the premier of British Guiana, who is on an unofficial visit to Canada. We hope she enjoys her stay here and her visit to the House of Commons.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is he now in a position to comply with the motion I introduced several weeks ago concerning correspondence exchanged between the Department of Transport, Quebecair officials and other persons?

Supply—Citizenship and Immigration

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the officials concerned to have these documents produced as soon as possible. As I told the hon. member the other day, the matter is not wholly under my jurisdiction, but I shall attend to it.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question? Is the minister aware that three letters at the most were exchanged between the parties—

An hon. Member: If you know, why do you ask?

Mr. Chevrier: —and could he see to it that this correspondence is tabled as soon as possible?

An hon. Member: You are being very inquisitive.

Mr. Dorion: I am glad to hear it. This will make things easier for me.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs branch—
Indian agencies—

618. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $136,000.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, last evening for a considerable length of time we were treated to some remarks by the hon. member for Niagara Falls which I must say, as minister, I found gerry-waring—excuse me, I mean very wearing on the credulity. The remarks which were made in two separate interventions in the debate by the hon. member occupied almost an hour and were filled with inaccuracies, innuendo and allegations. I should like to deal this afternoon for a short time with some of those allegations. I think I should refer, first of all, to the remarks of the hon. member as recorded on page 1728 of Hansard:

> —I have never before in my life seen such an obvious and barefaced collusion.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member probably knows more about collusion than about tenders and business practices, because the one tender submitted displays what I regard as the most flagrant and obvious example of barefaced padding of a contract that, in my business experience, I have ever encountered.

There were several remarks made by the hon. member with which I should like to deal, and the first of these has to do with the employment of one Mr. Paul Brett, who is now employed as a forester in the Indian affairs branch of my department. Mr. Brett, it is true, was in the employ of Mr. Johnson to whom the hon. member referred. This employment terminated on March 31, 1961. However, Mr. Brett had, a month or more previous to this time, made application for the position of forester with the department, under competition properly advertised by the civil service commission.

I am told that there were a dozen or more applicants for the position. He won the competition, taking the examination in the usual course under the civil service commission. As hon. members of this house are aware, in this case the department accepts the person who is selected by the civil service commission. Mr. Brett was then appointed to the staff of the Indian affairs branch. He took up his employment with the branch, not as the hon. member says on April 1, but on May 1. This is one of the inaccuracies which have been built into the story the hon. member produced for our edification last evening.

There are other matters with which I should like to deal as I come to them. For one thing, the hon. member made the allegation—I suppose that is too broad a term to use; made the statement—that Beaufort Industries did certain things. I find it very difficult, in jumping around through this speech, to discover which Beaufort company she is talking about, because I find there was a Beaufort Industries incorporated in 1958. I do not know if this company discontinued its activities, but it was taken over by Beaufort Holdings in January, 1962, a full month after tenders had been called for this timber. Then a new firm, Beaufort Industries, was incorporated on January 19, 1962. We have, therefore, Beaufort Industries No. 1, Beaufort Industries No. 2 and Beaufort Holdings. I presume we can assume that in the first part of her remarks, when she is building up her story, she is referring to Beaufort Industries No. 1. Then when she starts to talk about the ultimate tender which they submitted she is talking about Beaufort Industries No. 2, which was finally incorporated on January 19, 1962.

However, to return to her statement, I find she is reported on page 1725 of Hansard as saying:

> At this point I might say that Beaufort Industries Limited is a company of all Canadian directors and shareholders, located in Vancouver, and has been cutting timber for a long time in the Tsimpsean I.R. No. 2 reserve, in the reserve area, and cutting it very successfully.

Miss LaMarsh: I wonder if I might interrupt the minister. I had risen to make certain corrections in Hansard, but the hon. lady had started her statement. I had not said last evening they had cut timber in this reserve, but near it. If the minister wishes to make her statement prior to my being able to make those corrections, then I would like her to know she is referring to things that were inaccurately reported.

Mrs. Fairclough: I accept the correction, but I was about to declare that I know of no basis for the statement that Beaufort ever cut timber on the Tsimpsean reserve No. 2, and I might say further that the department has no record of any previous dealings with this company in respect of any Indian timber.

There are several other points to which I would like to refer. As reported on page 1727 of Hansard the hon. member said that the advertisement which was inserted in the newspapers calling for tenders had been changed to read "February 13", and that no notification was given to the Beaufort company. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have here two newspapers, the daily Colonist of December 22, in which the original notice calling for tenders was advertised, and the following day's edition, December 23, in which a revised notice appeared in the same paper extending the date. This was the only notice that was given to any tenderer and it was obviously well known to Beaufort Industries, as it was to the other companies which were interested in this tender; because in the intervening period between December 23 and January 19 representatives, or let me say a representative, of Beaufort Industries was in my department on several occasions and referred to the fact that the date had been extended.

I might direct attention further to the fact that had the original date been adhered to, up to that time Beaufort had not even received consent to their ultimate incorporation. Undoubtedly the extension of the date benefited them to a greater extent than anyone else. This extension was made in response to the suggestion of our officials in Vancouver, who had received representations from several persons who allegedly were interested in submitting tenders, drawing attention to the fact that one month was scarcely sufficient time for them to prepare and submit their tenders.

As recorded on both pages 1727 and 1729, the hon. member also referred to the fact that Beaufort had tendered on some 8,000 acres of timber which were not included in the tender of the successful tenderer, and the question was asked why we put up only 4,760 acres for tender and excluded the other 8,000 acres. The 4,760 acres contains 85 per cent of all the merchantable timber on the reserve, amounting to 160,500 hundreds of cubic feet. The 8,000 acres referred to is mostly marsh and rock and contains only about 15 per cent of all the merchantable timber, amounting to 24,000 hundreds of cubic feet.

Quite apart from the fact that this area was hardly worth logging on a commercial basis, it was considered that the timber on it could well be reserved for future logging operations by the Indians themselves, if and when they wished to do so. I might also say that in this submission presented by Beaufort, quite apart from the fact that it included these 8,000 acres, the tender contained a clause in their proposed contract which would allow them to withdraw from the extra 8,000 acres if the timber proved unsuitable for operation.

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps the hon. lady will admit on this point that it would be only with the department's permission?

Mrs. Fairclough: Why include it in the tender in the first place and then, as I said before, pad the tender price up to make it look like an attractive offer on the basis of something which they were subsequently to attempt to withdraw? It seems to me, talking about red herrings, this one is at least slightly pink.

Now, there was considerable discussion with reference to the construction of a road and some other matters that were included in the tender of Beaufort which were not stipulated in the call for tenders, and accordingly not quoted on, by the other tenderers.

Any company which engages in lumber operations must build roads to carry out its purposes. Of course one company may build a road in one direction and another company may build one in another direction, and if it turned out that the Indians would like to have a road built in a direction other than that which might have been indicated by another tenderer, then of course that would be taken into consideration.

I might say that I do not intend to pursue this matter because I believe it is one that should be discussed by someone who is familiar with the terrain which, as I understand it, is a very difficult part of the country stretching from the place where logging operations would take place to the head of the inlet. Whether or not a road in that particular locality would be of use to the Indians is a matter on which I am not qualified to judge. I understand that at present there are no vehicles there. In the long run there may be, but there are none at the moment and, as nearly as I can calculate by looking at the map, the road to be constructed would cover a distance of some 15 miles.

The hon. member also referred to what she called the stunning regularity with which Mr. Johnson's and Mr. Brett's names came up. I might say that she herself certainly made a point of repeating these two names throughout her tirade last evening, but she referred to Mr. Johnson as an employee of the department. On more than one occasion she used the phrases "when he left the department" and "a former employee." Mr. Chairman, Mr. Johnson was never an employee of the department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mrs. Fairclough: The firm of which he was a principal tendered along with some eight other firms in 1958 to provide a survey of certain forest potentials in British Columbia. He was the successful tenderer, as he had been when he was previously engaged by the department of Indian affairs under the former regime in 1956. At that time I understand there was no public call; it was just two firms which were asked to submit tenders, and Johnson's firm submitted the lower of the two quotations. I would suppose, Mr. Chairman, that since this company was engaged by the former government, that proves that their reputation and integrity is above reproach.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mrs. Fairclough: Consequently when they won the subsequent tender in 1958, in competition with seven others, I can find no particular reason to quarrel with this arrangement.

Another statement was made by the hon. member which is reported at page 1727 of Hansard. She said that Beaufort had been advised that it had won the contract as high tenderer. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not exactly the case. As a matter of fact when the tenders were received, as is usually the case the tenderers had representatives present, and at that time Beaufort were advised that it appeared they had submitted the high tender but that both tenders with their supporting documents would have to be examined before a decision could be made. This is just slightly different from the hon. member's version.

I must say in all honesty that throughout the remarks which were made there is just enough semblance to the true facts in many cases to make it very difficult to say "This is wrong, and this is right". This matter of whether or not they were told they had won is a very good example. The hon. member's words were, "They were told they had won the tender", whereas the actual words that were used were that they had obviously submitted the highest tender but that the various tenders had to be examined before a decision could be made. This is what makes it so very difficult to draw the line in all these allegations and statements which have been made.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member had quite a bit to say about a number of things. She said, for instance, that last autumn an offer was made in writing by Beaufort in the amount of $791,000, and she wanted to know why it was that this amount was so close to the successful tenderer's amount of $792,000. As a matter of fact no such tender in a specific dollar amount was made by Beaufort. Under date of August 11 they wrote a letter to the department and offered to purchase at $7 per thousand. Someone else has done the arithmetic which arrives at $791,000, but no such amount was mentioned then or subsequently by them as a dollar amount for the offer which was made.

The hon. member has also said that she wanted to know why it was that the tender call said it would not necessarily accept the highest or any bid. Mr. Chairman, anyone who has had a great deal of experience with tender calls knows that this is pretty standard form. It was, however, a form which the Beaufort company chose to ignore by sending in a submission on an entirely different basis and one which, as I have said before, served to pad their price to an almost unrecognizable degree.

Mr. Pickersgill: That means the Indians would get more.

Mrs. Fairclough: Not necessarily.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then what does the hon. lady mean by "pad the price"?

Mrs. Fairclough: I will tell you precisely what I mean by that before I finish. As a matter of fact I see no reason why I should not tell you right now—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is a good idea.

Mrs. Fairclough: —because if you add to the bid of Shoreline of $792,000 the 30 cents per 100 cubic feet which was offered for the training plan, you get $792,000 plus $48,150 or $840,150. They had not included this amount in their tender, but Beaufort did include the amount, and they did not include the amount at 30 cents per 100 cubic feet. They showed the cost of training at 50 cents per 100 cubic feet. They also included the 20 cents rental per acre—

Miss LaMarsh: Would the hon. lady confirm this point? The Shoreline bid was for $6,000 a year and the Beaufort bid was for a maximum of $20,000 a year, or $200,000. That is the difference between 30 cents and 50 cents.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am afraid I do not understand the hon. lady.

Miss LaMarsh: I am sure there is a difference between $60,000 and $200,000. The hon. lady is supposed to be an accountant.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, I was supposed to be, and that is why I get so confused with these legal statistics which seem to be so much at variance with those which are accepted common business practice. To go back to this matter of the evaluation of the two tenders, I have now given the committee the figure by Shoreline, with the training plan, of $840,150. If you take the bid of Beaufort, their stumpage amount is $631,950, and you add to that their estimate of the cost of their training plan, which is $80,250, and possibly the hon. member will realize that in putting in the $80,250 as against the $48,150 of Shoreline I have recognized the differential which she mentioned. Then you add to that the rental of 8,000 acres at 20 cents per acre which they submitted as a contract, amounting to $16,000 and you still only get $728,200 as compared with Shoreline's $840,150. As I said before, the rest is padding.

Miss LaMarsh: That is, the roads and planting are the padding; is that what the minister is saying?

Mrs. Fairclough: I will come to that, too. I draw to the hon. member's attention that I sat quietly last night and listened to her for nearly an hour. I made one or two small interventions which I thought were pertinent to the debate. I think perhaps she should contain her soul in patience until I finish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Miss LaMarsh: I shall try to do so.

An hon. Member: Take your medicine; it is free.

Mr. Chevrier: It is not very hard to take.

Mrs. Fairclough: It was also said that the contract for Shoreline was on a one year basis. Again this is wrong. The contract was on a 10 year basis. I fail to understand where this one year came into the matter, because the contract was exactly the same for both companies and each of them contracted for 10 years. So all this reference which creeps in here two or three times is wrong. As a matter of fact it must have been sold to the Indians too, because I see it is in their resolution which mentions the one year, whereas the actual term is 10 years.

The hon. member referred to the resolution which had been submitted by the chief of the band. I might say that this resolution did not come to me; it was sent to the Prime Minister, and I secured a copy of it. But apparently at the same time it was sent to the Prime Minister it was also sent to the hon. member, who in that event had it before I did. It seems to me that if action is expected the resolution should be sent to the head of the department concerned, but apparently this is a new system. In any event, of the first three items which are now asked for by the band, none were in the call for tenders.

Miss LaMarsh: Shame.

Mrs. Fairclough: It seems to me I heard the hon. member say "shame". Possibly I should point out to her that the officials of my department consulted with the chief and with the band before the original tender was put out, and the terms which the chief of the band required to be in the tender were placed in that tender. These other matters have been raised not only subsequent to the calling of the tenders but subsequent to the eventual consideration of the bids. In other words they are an afterthought.

I submit that a story has been very carefully built up here for the purpose of creating a false and distorted version of the facts. Unfortunately this false version appears to have sold to the Indians. The fact is that the general terms of the call for tenders were, as I said a moment ago, worked out with the members of the band council. They made no reference to the building of a road between Tuck inlet and Fort Simpson. The question of the road is therefore outside the terms of the tender. This having been said it should be added, I think, that whichever bidder is awarded the contract will be obliged at his own expense to construct a suitable network of logging roads in order to get the timber out of the area. I mentioned this earlier in my remarks this afternoon, and it is a fact well known to all foresters and logging people.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, at this point, but I must tell her that her time is expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: I see it is the wish of the committee that the hon. lady should continue.

Mrs. Fairclough: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I might as well do this all at once instead of in two parts.

This area cannot be logged in any other way, and the cost of logging roads should properly be regarded as part of the cost of operation, not as part of the price paid to the Indians. As a matter of fact, the remark was made in an offhand way by one forester who had taken a look at these tenders that if the Indians took the extra $160,000 which they would get from Shoreline they could build the road themselves.

The call for tenders did not include a requirement to replant the area which is to be cut, for the reason that the timber cruise report for the area in question stated that the area would regenerate its own forest cover by natural means, and that artificial reforestation was not necessary. I am told that the problem in this area, because of the heavy rainfall and so on, is to stop the trees from growing, not the replanting of them. It is true that replanting is engaged in in certain parts of the country and in connection with certain types of logging operations, but I do not propose to go into that matter now because I do not think I am any more of a forestry expert than the hon. member for Niagara Falls is.

There was a reference to the fact that the call for tenders included only 4,760 acres as against the extra 8,000 acres. I have already dealt with this, but I just might add that the Indians themselves were aware of that fact at the time the call for tenders was put out. The timber cruise report made it clear that there was very little marketable timber on the 8,000 acres and that this parcel should not be included in the call for tenders. I said this a few minutes ago but I repeat it now because this was a fact which was well known to the band members.

I might just make a brief reference to the concluding part of the resolution which was received from the band affirming the band council's refusal to accept any tender which did not conform to the four stipulations laid down. My only comment on this is that if these were to be essential features of any successful tender they certainly should have been stipulated in the call for tenders before it went out. We can hardly justify calling for tenders on the basis of one set of criteria and then awarding the contract on the basis of another set.

So in order to clear the air—because it certainly is well fogged up now—I should like to say that though the Indians were consulted on the details of the original call, they now appear to be dissatisfied with the terms on which that call was issued. As we know, they have now listed four conditions in their council resolution, three of which are new. The fourth does not apply. There is the term dealing with the requirement of a road from Tuck inlet to Fort Simpson; that dealing with reforestation which, I have said, is not considered necessary or even desirable in that area, and finally the extension of the area to cover 12,620 acres instead of 4,620 acres.

As I said yesterday in reply to a question on orders of the day, and as I repeated last evening, immediately I received word of dissatisfaction with the awarding of this tender, some ten days ago, I gave instructions to the department to have the commissioner in British Columbia visit the band in question to discuss the matter with the chief and his band members. I may add that in the meantime I have received conflicting reports from a number of people in British Columbia with regard to this matter. I have had two reports from Indians, some from people engaged in the forest industry, and others from persons otherwise interested. They do not all point to the same conclusion.

Therefore I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East, who said last night that he thought it would be a good idea to get this whole thing cleared up as speedily as possible. I think he is quite right; the issue is certainly well befogged now. So in view of this and in fairness to the Indians, who are after all the owners of the timber, we have no alternative in my view but to cancel the original call for tenders and the bids relating thereto and start all over.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is the best applause I have had from the opposition since I have been in this post.

Mr. Pickersgill: Remember when you cancelled your immigration regulations?

Mrs. Fairclough: This is what probably would have occurred in any event. I am still awaiting a report from the commissioner on his return from the reserve. As hon. members familiar with the area will know, this is a remote place. It is difficult to get into. The commissioner probably would have been there last week had conditions been suitable for travelling to that part of the country. He is there today, I understand, and I expect to have a report from him when he has ascertained the wishes of the Indians, and this time we had better get them in writing. We shall then, I expect, if the Indians wish it, issue another tender call with specific stipulations. The tenders which will then be received will be considered on the basis of the conditions set out by the Indians and incorporated in the tender call. If there is further padding I can assure the committee that we will have to slice it away once more in order to arrive at comparative values.

Nevertheless, as I said last evening, although this particular item is not properly included in the supplementary estimates which are before the committee for consideration, I am pleased to have had an opportunity to present to the committee as much information as is presently available. I admit this is probably not the whole story, and I do not think the whole story will be known until we receive the report from the commissioner on his return from the Tsimpsean reserve.

I do not think, though, that I need to apologize for the consideration which I have given to the affairs of the Indians. They have never lacked a sympathetic ear when they have come to me as bands, as associations or as individuals, and they never will lack a sympathetic ear as long as I hold this portfolio. I do not claim I am the only person in this chamber who is sympathetic toward the Indians or who is concerned with their welfare. I am sure that practically every hon. member is also concerned that the Indians should receive a square deal, and that is what we try at all times to provide for them.

This tender call has resulted in a flare up, and the whole issue is beclouded by charges and countercharges which I do not think are particularly good for the final resolution of the problem; nor are they good for the Indians themselves or for the trust which they must of necessity place in those who are attempting to administer their affairs if the best of conditions are to finally evolve for them and their children.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I roundly applaud the minister for her decision to cancel the contract as let and to call it again at the desire of the Indians. This is in keeping with the highest traditions not only of many things the minister has done but also with the traditions which are required of a member of the privy council and particularly a person responsible for the trust with respect to Indians.

Last evening and again this afternoon when the minister commenced her remarks I was somewhat startled by the vehemence with which she attacked the address I made last night. I explained last evening that I was raising this matter as one of urgency, although the minister indicated she did not wish it done. I felt it important to raise the matter because I felt there were a lot of facts that should be placed in the possession of the minister before this investigation concluded.

I rose at the beginning of this debate to attempt to correct some of my remarks as they appear in Hansard, and I should like to proceed to do that at this time. Some of them are erroneous, and I regret the fact that when I reached the debates office last evening it had closed.

At page 1725 of Hansard of March 12, in the left hand column, approximately half way down the page, in the paragraph beginning with the words "within a matter of two weeks" the following sentence appears:

> He suggested that negotiations be conducted directly with the superintendent and the bands and chiefs council—

That phrase, of course, should be "chiefs and band council".

In the right hand column on page 1725 about halfway down the page the reference to "Indian superintendent" should be "Indian commissioner".

In the lower right hand column on page 1725 the reference to Beaufort Industries Limited as a Vancouver company should be corrected to indicate that it is a Victoria company.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, there is a proper place and time in the proceedings of this house for an hon. member to make corrections. This is not the proper place for the hon. member to attempt to correct her remarks—

Mr. Pickersgill: She can make corrections at any time.

Mr. Broome: Just a second. Sit down and be quiet. Let someone else finish his remarks before you interrupt. The hon. lady should wait and make her corrections at the appropriate time. When orders of the day are called she should stand up and make corrections—

Mr. Chevrier: Don't be afraid; she will stand up.

Mr. Broome: I point out, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member has already had an opportunity to do that today.

The Chairman: I believe the corrections the hon. lady is making relate to the debate now proceeding, and since reference has already been made to some of these comments I shall permit her to proceed.

Miss LaMarsh: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The following is the phrase to which the minister referred. At the bottom of page 1725 in the right hand column I am reported as having said that the company has been cutting timber for a long time on the Tsimpsean reserve. Properly the word "reserve" should be dropped out because it was in the reserve area. While the minister indicated that the department is not aware of the company doing any work in the area, it did in fact recently complete a Masset operation in the Queen Charlottes, very close to this land. It was a very successful operation, well known in British Columbia forestry circles.

In the upper left hand column of page 1726 where I refer to Mr. MacGregor as the acting superintendent, the reference should be to acting commissioner.

In the lower right hand column of page 1726 I am reported erroneously as having said there was a call for tenders made on September 15, 1961. That should be "December" as is reported further along in the paragraph.

One final correction—

Mrs. Fairclough: Perhaps the hon. member would permit me to interject an observation at this point. I do not wish to interrupt her corrections, but with regard to the last correction she mentioned she said the call was sent out to Beaufort and to another company. This was not correct. The call was in the newspapers. It was not sent only to individual companies. It was a public advertisement.

Miss LaMarsh: With reference to that, the minister may be advised that I was informed that a call had been received through the mail. I was so informed yesterday by an official of the department. I was informed that it had been sent directly to individuals who had been writing the department and who were interested. I was informed there were individuals who got it through the mail.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is true, but it was a public call advertised in the press, as distinct from a call sent to specifically selected individuals or companies. As the hon. member has now said, it was sent to more than these two companies. That would be only common courtesy when companies had been making inquiries with respect to a given project. They would, of course, be notified if and when public tenders were called.

Miss LaMarsh: This was the point I made earlier, that they did in fact receive the call with a specific date by which tenders were to be in, on January 13 or January 16, and they were not notified by mail of the change. The change only appeared in the printed advertisement in the newspaper.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes. The change appeared in the printed advertisement in the paper; no one was notified.

Miss LaMarsh: One other correction. At page 1728 in the upper left hand column I am reported as having said:

> In fact it should be remembered that Mr. Johnson—and Mr. Brett had been associated with Mr. Johnson—

That should read:

> In fact it should be remembered that Mr. Brett—and Mr. Brett had been associated with Mr. Johnson—

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not understand that correction.

Miss LaMarsh: The statement which reads that Mr. Johnson—and then there are dashes —and Mr. Brett had been associated with Mr. Johnson should read that Mr. Brett—and then following the dashes—and Mr. Brett had been associated with Mr. Johnson, the chief forester of the Vancouver office.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

At page 1730 there are two substantial errors. In the right hand column at about the middle of the first solid paragraph I am recorded as having said:

> I would suggest to the minister that notwithstanding what I am advised by the department—

If I did in fact say that I was in error. It should read:

> According to what I have been advised by the department—

As it appears it completely reverses the sense of what I meant to say.

Further down in that column I am reported as having said:

> It was Beaufort that brought to the attention of the department a fact that anyone who obtained foreshore rights would in fact be giving the Indians access ultimately to the ocean.

The word "giving" in that sentence should be "denying". So much for the corrections.

There were also a number of suggestions by the minister to the effect that I had attempted to colour the evidence which I put before the house. There were her references, including that to the employment of Mr. Brett, who it appears now was employed a month later than I had indicated to the committee. The information about the date of his employment was supplied to me by an individual in the Indian affairs branch to whom I spoke yesterday just before coming into the house. If it is in error, I am sure that it is his innocent error and mine as well.

Mr. Broome: What was his name?

Miss LaMarsh: I do not think it is necessary for me to give it. I believe the minister knows who it is. There is no secrecy about it.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, I do not know.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a matter of no importance, in any event.

Miss LaMarsh: On the question of Beaufort's incorporation, may I say that I am not a solicitor for nor in any way associated with Beaufort. However, I had made inquiries with respect to this matter and I am informed that the company's solicitor believed that the company would not have sufficiently wide objects and therefore a reconstitution was made in the company in order to broaden its objects. At least in so far as I am concerned it appears to have no significant importance, and appears to be a matter on which the minister was grasping for straws in trying to answer the suggestions which I put forward last night.

As to the question of why 8,000 acres were excluded and only 5,000 acres were put in the offer, as I think I pointed out, in 1954 and 1956 the department saw fit to offer all of the land; and as the minister told us frankly this afternoon it was because of the cruise report which was prepared by Mr. Johnson's company for the department that only 5,000 acres were offered. I was told yesterday that it would appear ridiculous if the government were to offer the whole area. They now know they have someone who wishes to purchase the whole tract. It would seem to me that what they have been told by a number of individuals who are experienced in forestry is that if in fact all the timber is not offered at once, the Indians will never be able to sell it because it is not economic to go into such rough terrain to take it out, and it will just remain there.

Mr. Broome: Who are these experts?

Miss LaMarsh: The reference with respect to roads is, I think, an important matter, as it is obviously of great importance to the Indians. I have not visited this reserve. Perhaps the hon. lady has done so. However, it is apparent from the maps that it is just south of Alaska. Bad weather prevails much of the year. In fact the successful tenderer has indicated that there may be a time when he will not be able to carry on any operations up there. I am informed there have been at least some Indians who have died when travelling off the coast on the way to Prince Rupert, which is the northern settlement. This will give them a real safety factor, and is something which ought to be considered.

I do not for a moment suggest that Beaufort, in saying that it would spend up to half a million dollars in building such a road, is doing this out of sheer kindness of heart. It is a logging road. It is for the purpose of their operations, which they think it would make more efficient. But it would appear that it would be of great and lasting benefit to the Indians of the band. In the alternative, the road offered by Shoreline was a three mile road which it was alleged could be built for $50,000 and which comes in from the Big Bay area, right through into a stand of better grade timber.

Whether the minister thinks there is any difference between a $50,000 offer and a $500,000 offer, I do not know. However, the Indians appear to feel that there is some difference. I believe such a road would be something which the Indian affairs branch will never build itself because of the terriffic cost. I am informed that a number of individuals in the department, both here and on the west coast have repeatedly said that such a road could not be built, and yet the minister has just said that someone else has said that the extra $160,000 offered by Beaufort could be used by the Indians to build their own road. The department itself has said it could not be built. Mr. Beaufort has put engineers in and taken aerial photographs.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, that was not said at all.

Miss LaMarsh: The minister did not say this. I was told this by a representative of the department yesterday.

Mrs. Fairclough: No. If the hon. member will permit me to say so, I think what was said was what I said earlier, namely that it was difficult terrain and it would be difficult to build a road in that area. However, I do not think anyone at any time said that it could not be built.

Miss LaMarsh: That was the suggestion made to me yesterday. Again, with respect to replanting may I say this. The minister goes back to the cruise report, and I appreciate that this may be all the department has. But sight should not be lost of the fact that the cruise report was prepared by the Johnson company, that is the company which is owned by the man who was the successful tenderer under another corporate name. Of course it will cost him and every other timber man in the whole of the west a considerable amount of money if it became a standard practice to require replanting. Every timber man who went in to cut on Indian land or any other land then might be required to replant, and it would cost several million dollars a year. There is reason to say that no one who is in the lumber business on the west coast wants a requirement that there be replanting. This is an important offer as well from the point of view of employment of the Indians because, as is apparent, elderly people, those who are not particularly strong, women and children could be used in planting seedlings, and not just able bodied men.

There is another matter to which as yet no reference has been made. I refer to the number of people to be employed. The successful tenderer says that he will employ in the first year only 10 Indians, and that when he is fully going he will employ 20 Indians out of 32 men. The Beaufort plan indicated that they would employ about 100 Indians. That makes a considerable difference in the wages paid to and the skills learned by the Indians on the reserve.

Yesterday the minister said something else about which I meant to ask her last evening, but there was not time in which to do so. She said that before March 7, which was the date of the resolution, she had ordered an investigation. I do not think she favoured the committee by telling us the reason. This tender was opened on February 13. On February 21

Beaufort was advised by telegram that it was the lowest tenderer. From February 21 to March 7 nothing appears to have occurred.

Mrs. Fairclough: If I may answer the questions as we go along I think we might save time in the long run. Earlier in my remarks today I explained that matter, when I said that upon receipt of information to the effect that the Indians were not satisfied, I then ordered an investigation.

Miss LaMarsh: There is one other matter to which I wish to refer. The minister has said she is going to recall tenders. As I said before, I think this is an excellent idea. It will be to the satisfaction of the Indians, who are really the only people concerned or the only people with which this committee need concern itself. However, the minister made some slighting reference to my humble experience with tenders. I have had some experience at least as a municipal solicitor. I am well aware of the fact that there is almost always a provision to the effect that neither the highest nor any other tender is necessarily the successful one. Certainly in my remarks yesterday I pointed out that it was usual to have a clause providing that the department may refuse to accept one or the other or both. However, I suggest to the minister that if she wishes to avoid what she calls padding, certainly one of the most important things is also to avoid conditional tenders, that is tenders which are called and which are accepted should in fact be proper tenders which are unconditional. In my humble legal opinion, in any event, neither one of these tenders should have been accepted at any time, since they were both conditional.

Mrs. Fairclough: I agree with the hon. member on that point.

Miss LaMarsh: There is one other matter I should like to mention. I hesitate to try to lecture the minister, but the letter which was produced yesterday, and about which the minister made a most offensive suggestion that I might have removed something from the files of the department—

Mrs. Fairclough: I never said any such thing.

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps I am being oversensitive.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think I just asked if it was on the files.

Miss LaMarsh: When I was reading from a photostatic copy of the letter the minister asked, as reported on page 1725 of Hansard:

> May I ask the hon. member from what document she is reading?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

I told her from what I was reading and then the minister said:

> May I ask further if this is a document which was gleaned from the files of the department?

Mrs. Fairclough: That does not say it was removed.

Mr. Pickersgill: "Gleaning" is removing.

Miss LaMarsh: Of course no such thing happened at any time. However, the letter does indicate a rather shocking condition, Mr. Chairman, and that is that this man Johnson, on the letterhead of the company which was appointed as a consultant to the department—

Mrs. Fairclough: Under contract.

Miss LaMarsh: That is right; but on the same letterhead this Mr. Johnson offered, on May 30, to peddle this information. His work had been completed on March 31. If the minister has not seen this letter I shall be happy to send it across to her.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not dispute the right of the hon. member to produce this letter. My question was merely directed to ascertaining whether the letter was on the branch files and had not been drawn to my attention. This was my sole reason for asking the question. I do not have access to the files of individual companies. Of course if someone has seen fit to make this information available to the hon. member, she is quite right in bringing it forward if it supports her argument.

However, I do suggest that in my position I do not necessarily have control over all the industrial firms who may, at one time or another, have business with my department. I have not any particular spies out who are trying to find letters which may come from persons who at one time or another were under contract to this department and who subsequently pursued their activities with other industrial corporations.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I might say with respect to the 100 Indians that I never at any time saw this information given by letter, by word or in any proposition, from the Beaufort company. This is the first I have heard of any offer to employ 100 Indians.

Miss LaMarsh: There is something else about this letter. In my opinion it is rather shocking that anyone could be employed by a government department, get information and then go out and sell it. I know that some of the people with whom I have been talking on the west coast have gone to the Indian affairs branch on the west coast and have been told it is the Indians' information; it is not a public record. Here is a man who is getting paid more than $4,000 for this particular timber cruise—

Mrs. Fairclough: He tendered for it.

Miss LaMarsh: But he was paid out of public funds for it, and then he turns around and tries to sell that information. I should like to read this letter into the record so those on the west coast who may be interested may know what kind of man they are dealing with. This is on the letterhead of F. J. G. Johnson and Associates (Ltd.), with the same Howe street address, that is the same address as the company known as Shoreline. It is addressed to Westport Export Company, headed "Re Acquisition of Exportable Standing Timber", and reads as follows:

Dear Sirs:

Further to our meeting on May 29, 1961, I record herewith a proposed basis of co-operation that we hope will result in your company obtaining cutting rights on exportable timber stands.

We propose that you retain F. J. G. Johnson and Associates (Ltd.) on a minimum fee basis for the purpose of negotiations and field work.

We herewith submit a schedule of minimum professional fees.

	Day	Hour
Consultant (F. J. G. Johnson)	$75	$10
Supervisor or party chief (J. Cotter)	$50	$ 7

I do not know whether that is the same man as J. Cotten, who is with the Shoreline company.

	Day	Hour
Forester party chief	$45	$ 6
Cruiser	$35	$ 5
Technicians, typists, draughtsmen, etc.		$ 3

All disbursements at cost

On the successful completion of negotiations, an additional fee of 25 cents per Mbm, based on "acquisition" will be payable to our company within 14 days of the receipt by your company of official scale and royalty accounts, covering the timber acquired by us on your behalf.

We estimate that the total cost of professional services and disbursements will in no case exceed a maximum of 5 cents per Mbm, and with regard to the Tsimpsean I.R. No. 2 containing approximately 5,000 acres of merchantable timberlands with a net volume 11" D.B.H. ÷ of 114 million fbm, these costs could be expected to be in the neighbourhood of 1 cent per Mbm.

Bearing in mind your company's interest in Masset I.R. No. 1 and Yan I.R. No. 7, located on Masset inlet, Queen Charlotte islands, comprising a total of approximately 24 million fbm of standing timber, we suggest that we conduct negotiations directly with the superintendent, band chiefs and councils concerned. With regard to Tsimpsean I.R. No. 2 which has previously been advertised for sale, we suggest the regional office of the Department of Indian Affairs be approached for a direct sale, and failing this, that we apply for the timber to be put up for sale by sealed tender.

Every effort will be made to bring all negotiations to a speedy and successful conclusion, in order to keep initial outlay to a minimum.

Trusting we may be of service to you.

Yours truly,

F. J. G. Johnson & Associates, Ltd.

You will note that the letter is signed by Mr. Johnson. Now, he is selling information which he had obtained. I do not know whether he becomes a civil servant or whether there is any sort of secrecy imposed when one becames a consultant of a federal department. However, it is one of the most reprehensible and shocking breach of confidence I have ever seen. Here is someone who has been paid out of public funds and then tries to peddle the information elsewhere. This is the reason, I suppose, for the fact that in the lumber industry in both the United States and Canada it was being said all last summer that Johnson would wind up with this timber; when Johnson was trying to obtain United States financial support to help him exploit the Indians.

I am delighted that the minister has seen fit to let air into this matter; that she has seen fit to cause an investigation to be made, and that she has assured the house there will be a recall for tenders in compliance with the desire of the Indians. I would only ask that when such tenders are called they be unconditional tenders, and that the department be scrupulously careful in looking at those who are tendering to ascertain who they are, what their experience is and whether or not they have information, privileged information from departmental officials or otherwise.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, this is a most interesting document which the hon. member has read into the record. However, it does not alter the fact that there is no such thing as a direct scale arranged between a firm of consultants and the superintendent and the chiefs of the bands. Any such transaction must, of course, pass through head office, and it would normally be handled in the proper fashion. Surely the hon. member does not expect the department or the minister or the government or anyone else to decide what are proper business ethics and at what time information gained in the course of fulfilling one's contract with another department or a department of government, should or should not be used.

But in so far as the information being secret is concerned, I might tell her there is no secrecy about the information gained by the Johnson company in pursuance of its activities, which I reiterate it carried out under contract won from seven other tenderers. There is no secrecy about it at all. These findings were published and were public knowledge. Anyone can get this information, and since it is available to anyone I suppose the company itself would think it had a right to use this information. Certainly we have no way of policing the activities of these companies. I am not competent to judge whether or not this is a breach of business ethics, but in any event I would be pleased to see that the hon. member's views on the actions of the company in question are drawn to its attention.

Mr. McQuillan: I listened last night to the remarks of the hon. member for Niagara Falls, and I was shocked at the manner in which she endeavoured to smear the names of two respectable citizens in the city of Vancouver. She mentioned the name of one Thomas Ladner as a director of Shoreline Lumber Limited, and she went on to say that Mr. Ladner was "the son of one Leon J. Ladner"—

Miss LaMarsh: I did not say "J". I did not know that.

Mr. McQuillan: —whom she described as follows:

> —who is probably known to many of my hon. friends opposite as the chief fund raiser of the Conservative party in Vancouver.

Well, Mr. Chairman, he is not known to me as that. In the first place I want to point out to this house that Thomas Ladner is a respected lawyer in the city of Vancouver. He is a man who had a distinguished career in the navy in the last war. He was highly decorated, and he has served as a police commissioner in Vancouver. He is a man whose name I believe it worthy of me to clear of any imputation made against him in this house. Mr. Ladner telegraphed me this morning and said:

> I read this morning the report by Bruce Phillips of the Province Ottawa bureau of a charge allegedly made by Judy LaMarsh, M.P., concerning a company having the name of Shoreline Lumber Ltd., and advising that I am a director of that company. This is to advise you that neither I nor any member of my family ever had or will ever have any interest in this company. I hold my directorship in a purely professional capacity in the same manner as such qualifying directorships are held by me in dozens of other companies. I do not follow the business affairs of the company. No representation to any department of government in Ottawa was made on behalf of the Shoreline company by me, Mr. L. J. Ladner, Q.C., or any member of this firm.

I think that sets that record straight.

Now, as to the allegations of professional misconduct—and that is the only thing I can term them—made against Mr. F. J. G. Johnson, I shall not deal with them too fully. However, let me point out the fact that for many years Mr. Johnson has earned his living as a professional consultant forester in British Columbia. I might add that in British Columbia about 92 per cent of the forests are owned by the province. We have many professional foresters now practising in consultant capacities who previously worked for the British Columbia forest service. They have gone into private practice and, by virtue of the knowledge gained by them when working for the British Columbia forest service, they have been able to make quite a decent living. In some cases former members of the British Columbia forest service are now senior executives of large companies, and I do not think anyone would suggest for one minute that they should not make available to their companies the knowledge they gained of the forest resources of British Columbia when they were employed by the forestry service.

So far as these various bids are concerned, I shall not waste too much time dealing with them, as the minister has stated that new tenders will be called. But I have taken advantage of the minister's offer to review these bids, as did the hon. member for Niagara Falls, and I may say I have had quite a bit of experience in examining timber business sale tenders. Having done that I must emphatically tell the house that in my opinion the bid that would have given the greatest net return to the Indians from the sale of this timber was made by Shoreline Lumber Limited. That is my judgment based on what I can ascertain by looking at the tenders which the department was kind enough to show me. Their bid was $792,000 for the timber and the comparable bid of the Beaufort company, as nearly as I can analyse its complicated tender, amounts to $516,000. In other words there is a difference of $276,000 in net dollar return to the Indians.

Perhaps the Beaufort company did undertake to build a road to Tuck inlet which the Indians might think would be of some residual value to them, more so than the roads which the Shoreline company would build. However, I submit that for $276,000 the Beaufort company could afford to build many, many miles of road on that reserve and in that area. In fact no matter how I look at it, having examined the tenders I come to the conclusion that the Shoreline bid was a better bid for the Indians than the Beaufort bid.

Much has been said about the Beaufort company's training plan. Well, any company working on Indian reserve timber and which under the terms of its contract is required to employ as much Indian labour as possible, is going to be concerned about a job training program. In its own interest it will be concerned to see that those Indians working for it are well trained. As a matter of fact there is no reason to believe that the Beaufort company would have instituted a training plan that would have provided any more for the Indians than that offered by the Shoreline company.

So far as reforestation is concerned, perhaps I am a little ignorant about the coast of British Columbia. I only happen to have lived all my life there and to have logged in almost every area of it. I notice the statement has been made that reforestation is urgently required up there, or words to that effect. The government of British Columbia are very concerned about reforestation under the sustained yield policy. I do not believe they have ever planted a tree in the provincial forests along the coast north of Alert bay. There is no need for it; God and nature do the job much better than man can. The real problem of reforestation up there is that after a number of years the regrowth is so thick that what it actually requires is thinning. Therefore if the Beaufort company had really been sincere in their concern for the future of the forest on this reserve and the future welfare of the Indians, they might have left a few hundred thousand dollars to be paid to the Indians for thinning at some future date.

Miss LaMarsh: Is my hon. friend suggesting that these 8,000 acres, which on one hand we are told are just scrub, do not need replanting?

An hon. Member: No, they do not.

Mr. McQuillan: I doubt whether anyone, even the hon. member for Niagara Falls, could successfully grow trees on that so-called scrub area.

Miss LaMarsh: I am not about to try.

Mr. McQuillan: The soil conditions are such—

Mr. Starr: Don't underestimate her.

Mr. McQuillan: Mr. Chairman, I would remind the committee of the line in the old poem, "Only God can make a tree". The addition of this hypothetical sum for reforestation that the Beaufort company used was padding. There is no question about it; they padded up their bid. The figure of 60 cents per 100 cubic feet, or approximately $1 per thousand feet board measure, is just trying to kid the troops; it is trying to kid the Indians and the departmental officials, but I do not think the company was successful in doing that. I think in their negotiations with the Indians some representatives of this company have been speaking with a forked tongue. As far as the roads used for the actual logging operations are concerned, there is no reason to believe that the residual value of the roads left by one company will be any greater than the residual value of the roads left by another.

To come back to these 8,000 acres upon which the Beaumont company placed a value, from the best information that was available it apparently was not considered to be much of a forest area. The Beaufort company did not undertake to log it, as far as I can see. They asked to have the area included in the licence for which they were applying together with the other 4,000 acres. All they undertook to do was to pay an annual rental of 20 cents per acre on these 8,000 acres —

Miss LaMarsh: If the department approved.

Mr. McQuillan: I am sorry; I did not hear the hon. lady's interruption.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member ought to be honest—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Starr: Withdraw.

Miss LaMarsh: This particular clause says "if the department approves".

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

The Chairman: Order. I cannot hear three hon. members at once. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has the floor.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, the hon. lady said the hon. member should be honest. The hon. member knows and can say more about this subject in one minute than she will know in her whole life.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has the floor, and I will hear him.

Mr. McQuillan: Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. lady will not attempt to attach the stigma of dishonesty to me again.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I regret that remark. I do not at any time suggest that the hon. member is not honest. I believe he is. But I ask him to be fair at least in reference to this particular clause, because it is only with the approval of the department.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McQuillan: This company placed a fictitious value on their bid wherein they undertook to take over these 8,000 acres and pay an annual rental of 20 cents per acre per year until such time as they decided whether or not to take some timber off the area, if there was any commercial timber on it. If there was any commercial timber on it they assumed they would get it for the upset price they bid for the timber in the area that had been advertised.

I do not think the department would have been wise to agree to this sort of proposition, because they would have held that timber for 10 years under the terms of the contract, and at the end of 10 years, if they did not decide to log it, they would have left it as it was when they acquired the licence. If they did decide to log it they would have had the full benefit of the stumpage value of the 4,000 acres they acquired; and who knows, five years or three years later the timber on those 8,000 acres, while today it is not considered to be merchantable, might be worth twice as much per thousand board feet as the timber on the 4,000 acres now being considered. I have seen that situation occur many times in my experience on the coast of British Columbia.

A number of other remarks were made concerning this timber. It was suggested that this was going to provide easy access for the Indians to Prince Rupert. It is not quite as easy as it sounds, because they would have to travel across a neck of land and then leave their boats at the head of Tuck inlet, which I do not think they would choose to do. A great deal was made of the fact that they had to go out on stormy waters. The Indians have been going out on those stormy waters for generations, for thousands of years, and usually the only time they have suffered a mishap was when they had been to Prince Rupert and were on the way home.

A charge of collusion was made in this committee last evening. The hon. member made it plain that she was not charging collusion against the minister, but she implied collusion of the officials of the department with outside interests. It is very clear to me that the basis for the compaint the hon. member has been making is the fact that departmental officials refused to enter into collusion with the people for whom she is acting as spokesman in this chamber, in refusing to sell this timber on a direct sale basis. That seems to be the whole basis of this complaint, that the department refused to sell this timber to the Beaufort company as a direct sale. To my mind the term collusion could properly have been used if they had agreed to sell this timber as a direct sale to the Beaufort or any other company.

Miss LaMarsh: In all fairness, Mr. Chairman, I should like to repeat what I said last night—perhaps the hon. member did not listen—and I say it again today; that I am not acting for anybody. I have no connection with any of these companies. In my view the two bids should have been rejected and a new tender called for. That is still the position I take. There are only one or two questions I should like to ask to conclude the matter.

Mr. Winch: Would the hon. lady allow another hon. member to have something to say?

[Mr. McQuillan.]

Miss LaMarsh: I should like to ask the minister why it is necessary to have an export licence for such timber.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is not a matter which comes within the ambit of my activities. That is a matter for the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Winch: I fully realize we have spent some three and a half hours on this subject, but in view of the statement made this afternoon by the minister in charge of Indian affairs I should like to make a few comments.

First of all, I can assure the minister that we in this group are most happy that she has found herself in agreement with the proposition that we tried to promulgate in the space of only ten minutes last night when we submitted that this was such a serious question that it should be clarified and handled immediately in an appropriate manner. We are therefore very happy that the minister has adopted our point of view and informed the committee that in view of all the circumstances she has issued a cancellation order with regard to the entire situation. The old tenders will be cancelled, new ones will be drawn up, and these, I presume, will be in specific terms so that anyone who tenders in future will have to do so on the strict basis of the tender.

May I express regret, however, that the minister did not undertake to do something which I still consider to be essential. Even though she has announced the cancellation of everything that has been done in the past there is still an odour of the past which has to be cleared away. In order that this may be done I strongly believe that a much clearer explanation should be forthcoming as to the manner in which the Indians would have got greater ultimate benefit by the acceptance of the bid on the basis of which this tender was previously awarded. The minister spoke for almost an hour, but I can assure her it was difficult to pinpoint any part of her remarks which might have conveyed that information. How would the Indians have received greater benefit by the acceptance of the one tender as compared with the other? I still believe that this has not yet been made clear, despite all the minister has said. There is still a nasty smell there, and it has to be cleared away. I sincerely hope it will be.

The hon. member for Niagara Falls, when she rose to ask a question, probably had the same thing in mind as I had. I remember what the hon. lady had to say last night in her contribution to the discussion of this important subject. She said that on one of the tenders appeared the statement that the terms were subject to the obtaining of an export licence. That is matter which in no circumstances comes under the jurisdiction of the hon. lady. I cannot understand how any tender can be marked in that way, let alone be accepted by the department. That is matter which comes within the jurisdiction of a certain council in British Columbia and, I think, of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I do not remember the minister making any reference to this important aspect. Why should there be a tender containing that provision?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be allowed—

Mr. Winch: I shall be very brief, and the hon. lady can reply all at once. I do feel strongly that something has to be said here. It has not even been intimated so far, but I think it had better be said. There is rapidly increasing belief, based on a growing volume of information in the last 24 hours, that what has basically caused this turmoil, this problem, is a fight between two companies, the Beaufort Industries and the Shoreline Timber Company, and that behind it all is party patronage—one Liberal and the other Conservative.

Mrs. Fairclough: No Liberals at all involved.

Mr. Winch: One Liberal and one Conservative. This might just as well come out into the open. I do not know why it has not come out before, but I am going to say it. This is what is behind it all—the receiving of timber rights, the receiving of cutting rights which, in the final event, comes within the jurisdiction of a government agency. This might as well be said, and if the hon. member for Niagara Falls has not heard it or does not know it, then I do not believe it.

Miss LaMarsh: On a question of personal privilege, there has been some suggestion by the hon. member that he does not believe I have not heard such suggestions. I have, in fact; but as I assured the house last night there are no members of my party concerned with either of the companies as far as I am aware. As far as I am aware, the two individuals connected with the Beaufort Company are still at least nominal supporters of the hon. lady's party and not of mine, and I know of no individual involved in any way who is a Liberal.

Mr. Winch: I am surprised at the hon. member getting up in that way on a question of privilege. I said that this is the situation as it has come to my attention. I have such high respect for the hon. member for Niagara Falls as to believe she is not so naïve as to state what she just did.

Miss LaMarsh: Once again may I be permitted to reject the imputation which the hon. member is making. I say on my word of honour as a member of this committee, and as a member of the legal profession, that I know of no Liberals who are in any way involved. I ask the hon. member for Vancouver East to name any if he knows them.

Mr. Winch: No. I am now becoming even more confident of the correctness of the information which has come to my attention, in view of the fact that I have made no personal attack on the hon. lady who represents Niagara Falls. I have made no charges against her. I have not even said she has any knowledge of the situation. I have merely said that she must be a little naïve if she does not believe that in the circumstances this is what lies behind the situation. Well, that is the situation and it is coming more and more into the open. Perhaps, now, it will come still further into the open; so let us face it and let us hope that because of certain work and studies made by the hon. member for Niagara Falls more light will be thrown on this matter. I wish to heaven that I had the hon. lady's sources of information. Maybe I could do a better job in this house if I had, but companies do not make their papers available to me. I think the hon. lady has done a service by raising this question. I hope others to the best of their knowledge have been able to do the same. I will go this far. If the minister had not made the announcement she did at the conclusion of her hour long statement this afternoon I was going to urge the house to refer the entire matter in all its complexity to the joint committee on Indian affairs of the house and Senate. That is not now necessary because of the minister's statement.

I hope it will be made clear in the new tender that its detail, meaning, limits, operation and method of handling are to be free of political considerations so that no one can point a finger at anyone in the civil service charging that political activity occurred with respect to a matter affecting the Indians who come under the charge of the people of Canada through a department of government represented in the House of Commons by the hon. lady.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. member for his remarks. I must say I agree with him. I also agree that conditional clauses are not a good thing. I do not condone this and I am sorry it happened. I can assure the committee it will not happen in the future. Hon. members will realize, of course, that these calls are prepared and go out. They are not the type of detail that necessarily comes to the minister's desk. My intervention in this matter occurred only after protests were raised.

We shall try to make it clear to the Indians what the situation is so that they will understand the matter. I agree with the hon. gentleman that this is basically a fight between two companies. It has been attended by a great deal of, let us say, extracurricular activity. Lobbying methods, publicity methods, and so on, were employed, but that is the usual thing. We have had this before in other contracts. We try to iron out these things and as I mentioned before we always endeavour to get the best deal for the Indians.

With regard to the hon. member's charge of political considerations entering the question, I must plead innocence. Possibly I, too, am naïve but I did not even know who were the principals of these companies until the protests were lodged. I still do not know who the principals in the companies are. I know only the names that were mentioned in the debate last evening. I suppose it would be possible to find out by writing to the provincial secretary and asking who are the directors of the company but I do not think I would do that—

Mr. Winch: You can ask your own office in Vancouver.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have not had an opportunity to do that, of course, although if I wished to do so I could call the Vancouver office by long distance telephone. However, I would prefer to judge this thing on an objective basis and it is on that basis that I propose to take the action I indicated previously. I hope the final outcome will meet the satisfaction of hon. members of the committee, in the first instance, but that primarily it will be in the interests of the Indians.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before this matter terminates there are a couple of points I wish to raise. I do not wish to deal with anything that has happened but there are a couple of points that trouble me about what may happen notwithstanding the very wise course the minister has decided to take in this matter, and I commend her for taking it.

One point concerning which the minister did not enlighten us—and this was dealt with in the remarks of the hon. member for Niagara Falls—is the question of what the status of the department is vis-à-vis the Indians, whether there had been a surrender and, if so, what the nature of the surrender was, and if not, why not.

I was not here yesterday and have not had time since reading Hansard to examine the statute and see what the statutory provision is. Perhaps the minister could tell me immediately what it is. My recollection is that it would be possible to make a contract for one year without having a surrender but not for a longer period. However, that may not be the case.

Whatever the legal situation is it seems to me that before any attempt is made to make any contract with a new contractor a surrender should be made or, if a surrender is not necessary, a resolution should be adopted in very precise language. That language should be embodied in the tender call and strictly adhered to in the matter so that there would be no ground whatever for complaint or misunderstanding. I suggest to the minister that that be done before any attempt is made to call for tenders from anyone.

The second point I wish to make which in my opinion is also very important is that the minister cannot satisfy me and I do not think she can satisfy any member of the committee by saying that export permits are a matter for another department. The minister is a trustee for the Indians and she should not have asked for a tender before clearing up the matter of export permits in her capacity as trustee for the Indians. I do not know why export permits are necessary and I must say I was rather surprised to hear it. Surely timber is not a strategic commodity and surely it is not in short supply in Canada. There may be some quirk in the act or it may relate to some provincial regulation that the federal government is seeking to enforce although I doubt whether any provincial regulation would apply to an Indian reserve. I think the minister ought to clear up the matter and tell the committee what the situation is.

It is really perpetrating a fraud on the Indians and on the contractors to suggest that they can make contracts to cut timber for export until they know the terms and conditions under which it can be done. It is not good enough to say it is a matter for some other department when the minister ought to be dealing on behalf of the Indians with that other department to make sure that a contract of this nature can be carried out.

I am not seeking any answer from the minister now. What I am doing is recommending that before the matter is proceeded with further this question be completely cleared up and that it be indicated in the tender call that the timber can or cannot be exported, and by whoever is successful. If the Department of Trade and Commerce is going to be allowed, if it has the power, to discriminate against one tenderer as compared with another, that is a pretty state of affairs that ought to be cleared up before any transaction of this kind is undertaken. There were implications that there might be something in that which I hesitate to believe, but it is not good enough to brush it off. I know they do not act like it but hon. members opposite are supposed to be members of a government with collective responsibility. In this instance I suggest strongly to the hon. lady that she act like a member of the government and not like an independent power.

The third point is that I do not think anyone can feel very happy after listening to the letter read by the hon. lady for Niagara Falls. It is quite true, as the minister said, that when I was minister this firm was retained. It is also true that since the present minister took office this firm was also retained. I have no criticism of either of these things because there is nothing in connection with either of them to my knowledge that anyone could criticize, but it does seem to me to be extraordinary conduct for someone, immediately he has completed a contract, to provide information which other people seem to have been told was confidential information—

Mrs. Fairclough: Published information.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, if it was published information why did not the hon. lady correct something—

Mrs. Fairclough: I did. I already said that.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said that the information was published?

Mrs. Fairclough: I said the information was published. Perhaps I should not use the word "published". It is public information. It is available to anyone who asks for it and it is public knowledge that this information is available.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say I did not understand that from what the hon. lady said. If that is the case, of course, that quite alters the situation. However, I did not understand that from what I read of the debate last evening. I tried to listen attentively today. No doubt the hon. lady noticed that I was endeavouring to follow her remarks closely. I was really quite concerned about it. If the information is equally available to everyone, that alters the situation. However, it seems to me that it is still likely to create a bad impression for someone, the moment he fulfils a contract in a professional capacity, to be forming a company and bidding on this business on the basis of that previous experience. I do not say that if the information is equally available to others it is necessarily wrong.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell: I think the point made by the hon. member is a very important one. Does he make that last statement without qualifications, namely that this man in the course of his business—and I take it quite properly—having obtained certain information which is not confidential, is limited in his use of it? Is that what the hon. member is saying?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I am not saying that at all. What I am saying is this. There is apt to be a misunderstanding if a company is formed so quickly afterwards by someone who has had this kind of professional connection. I think the hon. member for Greenwood has a sense similar to my own in these matters. I would take it that he would prefer not to be associated with such a matter so soon after he had had this professional connection with the department. It is apt to give rise to the kind of thing that has arisen in this case. But what I think is certainly very dubious procedure if the letter that was read was an authentic letter, was for these gentlemen to go out and suggest that this firm could use its influence to get a contract for another company and get a percentage on it. I did not like that. I did not think that we had that sort of thing here. I have read about these people in another country. However, I did not like it at all and I did not think the hon. lady liked it either.

Mrs. Fairclough: No. I did not like it either, regardless of whether or not it was proper business procedure. But in any event, as I said a little while ago, he would not have gotten away with it because he could not have possibly made good his offer.

With regard to the matter of surrender may I say that, after all, this is a crop that is being taken off. It is not the surrender of land as land.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know that.

Mrs. Fairclough: However, the details of the contract will be presented to the band and efforts will be made to ensure that they understand the implications of any future tenders which are forthcoming.

With regard to export permits may I say that I think the hon. member has sufficient knowledge of governmental affairs to know that the Department of Trade and Commerce would hardly give an export permit to an unknown person for an unknown type of material. If my information is correct I think the line is drawn with regard to timber as to the type which it is expected to export. For instance, I think there may be some difficulty in some places in getting permits to export fir, but with regard to some other types of lumber the acquisition of an export permit is almost automatic. Again I am not sufficiently well versed in the affairs of export permits and the department's activities in this field to make a firm statement. However, I do not think this is a field in which the department can secure for a third party a permit to export X products in X quantities. Therefore, I really cannot agree with the hon. member there.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might point out that I do not regard the Indian affairs branch as exactly an unknown quantity. After all, the price that the minister can get—and that is what she is doing; she is acting as trustee for the Indians—for this timber is perhaps going to be dependant upon whether or not it can be exported. Therefore the minister as superintendent general and as trustee should find out from her colleague first whether or not export permits for this tract of timber in these circumstances will be available. On that fact would depend the kind of business transaction she could make. She is not like anybody else; she is not like the minister in any other department. She is a trustee in a very special sense. That is something of which I am sure she is well aware.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am quite willing to explore the proposition which has been put forward by the hon member. However, before I leave this debate—and I presume it is over now—I may say this to the hon. member who has just taken his seat and who expressed concern about whether or not the information was available to all parties. I refer him to page 1725 of Hansard—I have now looked the matter up—and the remarks of the hon. member for Niagara Falls. I think he will find that she said that the department, in letters of May 24 and June 25, gave Beaufort the same information as that contained in the letter which was read.

Miss LaMarsh: May I make one inquiry of the minister. If in fact, all of this information which F. G. J. Johnson and Associates Limited obtained is readily available, can she speculate why Mr. Johnson was of the opinion that it was saleable information?

Mrs. Fairclough: For all I know, he may have written the letter in response to an inquiry. I do not know what went on previously. I am not a mind reader. I would not indulge in speculation on this matter.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 618 carry?

Mr. Winch: I should like to discuss something further under this vote, Mr. Chairman. It is not on the same subject.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to private members business, in pursuance of standing order 15.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

COCHIN PIPE LINES LTD.

The house in committee on Bill No. S-6, to incorporate Cochin Pipe Lines Ltd.—Mr. Nugent—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Benidickson: I was a member of the committee that examined those who are interested in having this bill passed. I am not rising in order to take any objection to the passage of this particular bill. I have received no specific complaints from anybody or any indication that anybody should stand in the way of its passage. However, it was brought out that the applicants for this charter were reluctant to spend even $50,000 for the purposes of getting information as to the feasibility, as it was called, of their program, despite the fact that, having regard to the proposed share capital, we have in contemplation a $4 million company.

My information is to the effect that this is the first time the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines has been prepared to grant a charter before the applicants for the charter had taken the matter sufficiently seriously to invest a modest amount of their own money in a feasibility study of the project. I am informed that if that is to be the policy in the future, a precedent of some consequence may be established here.

The suggestion was made that now that we have a national energy board, parliamentary responsibility is practically removed. I cannot believe that is the intent of the statute or we would not be insisting that a parliamentary charter is required in connection with the pipe line business. It was also brought out that the circumstances are perhaps unusual this session. The applicants may have come to parliament without some of the advance work or preparation of feasibility studies that have been presented in the past because there may be an inclination to believe that we might not be here for very long. I think the committee was prepared to be generous, having regard to these circumstances.

Then I do point out that we have notice on the order paper today of a bill for the incorporation of another pipe line company. I believe the government should look at this matter. They amended the pipe line legislation, and I think we should be informed soon as to whether or not it is the wish of the government that henceforth it will be possible to obtain a charter for a pipe line company without the applicants having probed very deeply into the feasibility of the project; that they should come forward with practically no personal investment prior to the application for a charter. I am told that a charter of this kind, just assuming that the present applicants do not do anything else, has a considerable commercial value. If hon. members will look at the clauses of the bill they will see that, while we are told the intention is to build a particular pipe line from town A to town B, there is nothing in the bill to restrict the applicant to the building of a pipe line over that particular route.

While I am not proposing to oppose this particular application, in large measure because of the uncertainty of the length of this session, and while I have no animosity towards the applicants—I know none of them—and no one has approached me who has an interest in another pipe line to indicate that this pipe line application should be opposed. I do believe this question should be examined by the minister concerned. He should be very careful in the future as to whether or not people, without any feasibility studies and with practically no investment except legal fees, should be able to come to a parliamentary committee and obtain a charter, thus obtaining something with the substantial value connected with a charter of this kind. We should consider carefully whether or not they should be able to obtain this charter without restriction, and convey that to persons who are not referred to in the list of applicants for incorporation.

Mr. Winch: I should like to follow up the remarks made by the previous speaker. I have been told that a charter of this type has extraordinary commercial value. I have been told further that it is most unusual to have the House of Commons and Senate asked to give powers in such a bill without any particulars as to what is to be done once the pipe line bill is passed.

I recall that on the introduction of this bill certain statements were made by the sponsor. I draw attention of hon. members to the fact, as I gather the previous speaker did, that nowhere in the clauses of this bill are we told the specific purpose for which this bill is being enacted. In the past nine years we have incorporated quite a number of pipe line companies. If my memory is correct, in all of those bills there was at least some outline of what was going to be done, where the pipe line was going to function and for what purpose.

Mr. Benidickson: No, that is not so.

Mr. Winch: In most of them, I think you will find a specific statement of the purpose of the bill. You will find general powers, yes. I am referring particularly to the bills we have dealt with in the last two years. In this bill you will also find certain absolute powers. I know we should not refer to the clauses at the moment, but hon. members should look at the powers set forth in clause 6. This clause grants absolute powers not only for development, for operations, maintenance, control, leasing, mortgaging, hypothecating, and so on, but also powers of a provincial nature, an interprovincial nature and an international nature.

I say therefore that when we have a bill in which the particulars are not set forth, that is the building of a pipe line from town A to town B or whatever it is, we have a responsibility to ask the sponsor for the most complete information in connection with the bill. I think, too, we have a responsibility to ask the minister of the crown for his advice about passing such a generally all-powerful bill of the nature of the one before us.

Mr. Nugent: I wish to give the committee a little more information. Apparently the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, who was in the standing committee, found the evidence given was not such as to satisfy him on the feasibility of the project. With all due respect, I think that perhaps we did not give quite enough information about the people forming this company. Information was given that this will be a wholly owned subsidiary of the Bannister Construction Company Limited, which is a purely Canadian company. It is a very large company in the pipe line contracting business and has many years experience in the building of pipe lines throughout Canada, from Canada to outside countries, and so on. They have very competent engineers and economists. They are always studying this question of where and when a potential market for transporting oil or gas or petroleum products may arise, because that is the sort of thing they have to investigate in order to plan ahead for their own pipe line operations. I suggest that when these gentlemen come into the house and say that they see a potential market here, it is not quite fair to say there is no feasibility study at all and that there is an additional sum of $50,000 to $150,000 which they will have to spend after they are incorporated in order to justify what they believe now, by really examining the market and examining in detail all these things with which they have some experience and about which they have some reason for believing, are very feasible.

However, this question of whether they should have done this extra detailed feasibility study is complicated by one point that I do not think was brought out too clearly here, although it was before a Senate committee. In Canada there are in existence several pipe lines which have powers about the same as this one and which, having a dominion statute, could find it necessary to go before the energy board of a province, or the national energy board where it is between two provinces, and we would find such companies perhaps being empowered to do something that had never been contemplated when we first granted the acts to incorporate them.

Not only that, in this particular field certain of these gentlemen have a very good idea of potential market that may or may not be large enough to warrant starting construction now, but which they feel is going to be large enough very soon to require a pipe line and have the capacity to support a pipe line. They feel that since this is such a natural prospect there is nothing to stop anyone else now having a pipe line from taking a look at it and jumping to the national energy board to ask for permission to do this. In order to complete their move with the national energy board they have to be incorporated and it seems to me to be good planning on their part, once they are satisfied that there is the potential and that it is worth while going after, to get into a corporate position so that they would not be behind the eight ball if anyone else took up the idea once it became public.

I suggest, in order to be fair to these gentlemen who have seen the potential and are prepared to do this, we should allow them to get their corporate status so that they would not be in an unfair position with respect to anyone else who would want to seize on their idea and beat them out of it.

As to the particulars in this bill, we have not asked for a specific power to go from Hughenden, Alberta to Melville, Saskatchewan. The feasibility study might possibly extend the line a few miles past Melville. Since this is a new and growing industry there is every possibility that in years to come there will be a necessity or a need to extend the pipe line further, and I suggest it would be unduly restrictive on the company to come in and ask for a specific line from one point to another and then, following the feasibility study, have to come back to parliament to amend the bill so that it could change that again.

[Mr. Nugent.]

I suggest that the powers conferred by this bill are not out of line. I took the trouble to check the other statutes and, having done so, I found nothing in this one that was out of line with the general powers conferred on other pipe line companies, and I do not think it is so broad a power that it would be abused. I suggest there must be a certain amount of flexibility and I suggest to hon. members of the committee, in that this is a new sort of project in a new area where there is an increasing demand for propanes, butanes, and the like, that this company does need as much flexibility as is provided, and I hope hon. members can see it that way.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Provisional directors.

Mr. Benidickson: Members of the committee will recall that I asked counsel for the proposed company to what extent they had looked at precedents and to what extent this bill closely followed the pattern of previous pipe line bills, particularly recent pipe line bills. The hon. member for Vancouver East said that in relation to some previous bills he thought this one was open to criticism because it did not specify the route. I do not think that has been a customary practice in the incorporation of these companies.

However, if we do not have the feasibility study and if we do not have a particular route, as in the case of railroad licences, I would like to know why these companies come to parliament at all if we are simply to be a rubber stamp and take the attitude that the national energy board will look into this later. I think the minister should review the parent act to see whether we should take up our time in the House of Commons in this way when the pattern is the same as in previous bills dealing with routes "within or outside Canada" interprovincially or otherwise. I do not know why we should seek to deal with these matters whatsoever.

In connection with clause 2 I would raise this question for the committee. To what extent is it a departure from recent pipe line bills? I find a rather important one here, particularly important to those of us in the House of Commons who remember when the Conservative opposition had a great deal to say about "Canada first" in connection with pipe line activities. That was the cry right across the country in the 1957 and 1958 elections—protecting Canadians and protecting assets such as pipe lines for Canadians. They created a great horror around the country with respect to the word "export", but now this sponsor has indicated to us that the right to export is the same although we do not know over what route.

To me it seems significant that the last pipe line bill seeking incorporation of a company last session—although there may have been others and I have indicated I was not a member of the committee for some years—contained the following as clause 2, which became section 2 of the act of incorporation:

(1) The persons named in section 1 of this act shall be the first directors of the company.

I am referring to the Aurora Pipe Line Company, the act respecting which was assented to on July 13, 1961. Therefore it is one of the most recent pipe line measures passed by the house, and it has an additional subsection (2) in section 2 which reads:

All the directors of the company shall at all times be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada.

There is nothing of that kind in this bill. I had not looked at the precedents before going to the committee meeting but had relied on counsel for the company to point out to me in what way this particular bill differed in so far as some other recent parliamentary incorporations were concerned.

I just point this out to hon. members on the government side who talked so much about keeping these matters Canadian. Now they are apparently prepared to accept this form of incorporation which is in no way comparable to what was in the bill to which I refer.

Mr. Nugent: On that I would first point out that these are all Canadian citizens. It is all Canadian money. It is going to be a subsidiary of Bannister Construction Company, a company which has always had all Canadian directors. Perhaps they felt it was not necessary to put that clause in, not having any other plans. I wish that had been asked of the company's solicitor in the committee. I never thought to ask it, but I am sure that is the situation. These are Edmonton residents; they are Canadians; it is a Canadian company and intends to remain that way.

Mr. Benidickson: There is not anybody here so naïve as not to know it is possible to transfer shares from a Canadian to a non-resident. At any time it is possible for the shareholders to vote the election of directors, and regardless of what the present intention is, or regardless of the fact that at the moment the people seeking incorporation are all Canadians—I am not in any way questioning their good faith or anything like that—let us not overlook the fact that unless a clause of that kind is included there is nothing to prevent the incorporators selling their shares after the company is incorporated; there is nothing to prevent the directorate of the company being composed of non-Canadians. I am not insisting that they be Canadians, but I am pointing out that in days that I very well remember there was the hue and cry on the part of the people who form today's government that these pipe line companies were being transferred to foreigners and that we should be insisting on Canada first as I remember the slogan. I do not think in this kind of bill that principle is receiving the support necessary to protect the country in this way.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 6—Power to construct and operate pipe lines.

Mr. Benidickson: With regard to clause 6, Mr. Chairman, again when I refer to the precedent of the Aurora Pipe Line Company of last year I find they asked for extraprovincial and international pipe lines, but not interprovincial pipe lines. What is the significance of asking for interprovincial pipe lines in one bill and not in another?

Mr. Nugent: I think Aurora was designed to carry a line from Alberta into Montana strictly across an international boundary, whereas this pipe line is designed, in the first instance at least, to carry these products from the province of Alberta into the province of Saskatchewan. It may in the future go further, but that is why it is interprovincial at the present time.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, in connection with clause 6 (a) some legal counsel for whom I have a great deal of respect have said that this clause is much broader than had been possible in some previous pipe line bills. One of the points that was drawn to my attention was that paragraph (a) of this clause says that the rights will extend within or outside Canada to do such and such. It was pointed out to me that in some other bills it was specifically stated that the powers would be confined to certain geographical areas or to certain provinces.

Frankly, I was not very impressed with the fact that we are being unduly generous here when we do not refer to provinces, because the bill of last year to which I referred did, of course, mention some provincial boundaries. It practically took in the waterfront because it mentioned Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, British Columbia, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I do not think this is particularly significant; I think the main thing is whether or not we are going to grant these charters automatically without having very much information presented to us concerning the feasibility of these projects.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clauses 7 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MADELEINE FRANCOISE HANKOWSKI

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, perhaps orders Nos. 2 to 103 could stand today.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member suggesting that these orders stand without any direction as to printing them on the order paper?

Mr. McCleave: I think it would be convenient if they were held off this Thursday but restored next Tuesday and thereafter at the proper times.

Mr. Speaker: There is some economy involved and I am trying to estimate when the house may be ready to deal with these matters. If they stand off the order paper until Tuesday next, would that meet with the wish of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR APPEAL TO COURTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-21 to amend the Pension Act (judicial appeal).

He said: Mr. Speaker, my charge by the introduction of a private members' bill, now numbered C-21, is that the present members of the pension commission are not carrying out the intent of parliament and that the Pension Act as now constituted is, I believe, contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights.

The purpose of the bill, as set out in the explanatory notes, is to give an applicant for a pension under the Pension Act the right, where the pension commission or an appeal board has ruled against his or her entitlement, to have the decision reviewed by the courts, first on any question of law respecting the interpretation of the Pension Act, and second on those controversial issues of fact which must be weighed, as the courts are used to doing, in the knowledge of human conduct and intention. An ancillary purpose gives the commission itself the right to refer any question of law to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The bill applies to the Pension Act that principle of the rule of law that, to the degree most possible, the decisions of an administrative tribunal or commission which touch the person, property or rights of an individual should be subject to review by the courts.

The United Kingdom has applied this rule of law to as many of its boards, tribunals and commissions as possible in the tribunals and inquiries act, 1958. The British parliament found it was necessary to protect the rights of the individual by guaranteeing an appeal to the courts from arbitrary tribunal decisions. I would submit that a study of only a few decisions handed down by our present pension commission would convince the people of Canada that this branch of the department is in the hands of bureaucrats who circumvent the law because of their powers under section 65(3) of the Pension Act. Section 65(3) of this act states:

> Except as hereinafter otherwise provided every decision of an appeal board of the commission is final.

I submit that this section of the Pension Act conflicts with and is contradictory to the intention of the Canadian Bill of Rights, which to me means that every individual in Canada is entitled to the protection of the courts.

The introduction of this bill probably would not be necessary if I felt that the present members of the pension commission were capable or qualified to perform the duties expected of them by the past and present members of this house. It would seem that the present commission feels that it has the right, under the present Pension Act, to substitute the commissioner's views for the views of parliament.

It is obvious that the basic purpose of the statute is to protect service personnel against the risks to which by reason of their service they were, or are, exposed. There are two main principles which I believe the people of Canada through their members of parliament expected the commission to keep before them; first, that of basic fairness to the taxpayers of Canada, and second, justice to those who have served and are now serving in our forces.

I charge that the commission is not adhering to either of these principles and I would be quite prepared to prove my point in a court of law with evidence presently in my possession. A study of the speeches of ministers and members of parliament responsible for the implementation of this act would confirm that the pension commission in the interpretation of the various provisions of the act should do so with a view to extending the broadest and most liberal application, consistent with the intention and terms of the statute. In fact, such words have been uttered by our present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) as well as by others who held that portfolio before him.

I am sure the people of Canada feel there can be little argument against the nation's providing compensation to a man or his dependants for any disability or death which arises out of, or is caused by, the performance of his duties.

In order to give direction to the commission as to the intent of parliament, section 70 of the act was inserted in 1948. It is commonly called by veterans the benefit of doubt section, and reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act, on any application for pension, the applicant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, which means that it is not necessary for him to adduce conclusive proof of his right to the pension applied for, but the body adjudicating on the claim shall draw from all the circumstances of the case, the evidence adduced and medical opinions, all reasonable inferences and presumptions in favour of the applicant.

Ordinarily, one would assume that such a clause in the act could not be misinterpreted. It is very clear and broad and, as parliament intended, gives the administrative machinery the power to adjudicate claims with all the justice and fairness to which our service personnel are entitled. However the real test of any legislation is in its administration. In many instances the results of the administration under the present pension commission are a mockery of justice and an insult to the present and past members of this house who were charged with formulating the present Pension Act.

The effect of the present legislation has been to establish a tribunal so powerful that its members are a law unto themselves in regard to any application for pension from members of our armed forces. In this branch of the department, as in others, it is government by commission, not by the elected representatives of the people. It would appear the members of this tribunal are not concerned with the thoughts or intent of the members who drew up this act, otherwise they would have reviewed the committee minutes and Hansard when this act was passed and amended. The intended broadness of interpretation was expressed on those occasions by many speakers, including the ministers in charge of the department.

It would also appear that the members of the pension commission pay no attention to other aids under our statutes which would assist them with interpretation if there was any doubt in their minds. I refer now to section 15 of the Interpretation Act which applies to all our laws, with the exception of the criminal law, and which states:

> Every act, and every provision and enactment thereof, shall be deemed remedial whether its immediate purport is to direct the doing of anything that parliament deems to be for the public good, or to prevent or punish the doing of anything that seems contrary to the public good; and shall accordingly receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the act and of such provision or enactment, according to its true intent meaning and spirit.

This section of the Interpretation Act was inserted on the basis that the law as it existed perhaps did not do justice to some person, or group of persons. Therefore parliament gives the person or persons affected a right and a remedy.

A judge, I am informed, looks for the person whom the law was intended to benefit. In connection with the Pension Act, it would be a veteran or a veteran's dependants. In applying the law he gives the right and the remedy to these persons. A court gives to the words used by parliament a large, fair and liberal construction so as best to ensure the object of the act which, in the case of the Pension Act, is to give the veterans and their dependants rights and remedies which they did not have before the act was passed—in other words, justice.

The Pension Act as amended is a remedial statute. To illustrate how small and narrow the thinking of some of the members on the pension commission can be, I would refer hon. members to the evidence of the vice-chairman of the Canadian pension commission, as recorded on May 18, 1961, in the minutes of proceedings on veterans affairs. Referring to one case, the reason for the decision was as follows:

> He went across the street and delivered the message, stepped out of the door and was hit by a truck. If he had been hit going in the door, before he had delivered the message, he would have been pensionable; however, he was hit when he went out the door, and he was not pensionable.

In a communication from the chairman of the pension commission, I am informed that the commission in making its decisions is governed by certain guiding principles largely based on precedent. If the statement of the vice-chairman to the veterans affairs committee regarding the individual who was hit by a truck after he came out of the door is an example of a precedent used by the commission in establishing a ruling for other cases, we can understand why there is such widespread dissatisfaction with this method of adjudication, because the reason for the decision is ridiculous and asinine; it could only be dreamed up by very narrow-minded persons.

I further charge there is no consistency in the reasons for the decisions handed down by this board of bureaucrats. I refer once again to the additional remarks of the vice-chairman of the commission as recorded in the minutes I made reference to a few moments ago. As reported at the bottom of page 281, he states in part:

> However, if on the other hand he was warned to go on mess parade and then slips on the steps of the mess hall, since a mess parade is not obligatory . . . that is not a valid reason and if he was hurt, he would not be pensionable.

There are many cases on file where the decisions of the board are absolutely contrary to the information given to the members of the veterans affairs committee by the vice-chairman of the commission. I have the records of one case dated June 20, 1955, which in part state as follows:

> On leaving the mess hall, he tripped on a small obstruction on the landing in front of the mess hall door and fell down the exterior mess hall steps. The board found that the evidence established that the accident was sustained during service in the course of carrying out his duties and that the injury must be considered to have arisen out of, and to have been directly connected with, his service, within the meaning of section 13 (2).

Either this decision was wrong or the information given to the committee by the vice-chairman was wrong. The two statements are in direct contradiction to one another.

Bill No. C-21 is a bill to amend the Pension Act to provide the veteran and the serviceman and their dependants with an appeal to the courts from a decision of the pension commissioners on points of the interpretation of law. The bill also provides that the power given the board to define its own constituting act shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of Canada. In my opinion, a commission is the poorest judge of its own measure and particularly in this case where the members of the board have no specialized knowledge. There is a principle of British law that every member of the public has a right of access to the courts to determine his rights under the law. Let us see that our service personnel are granted this same privilege.

I am aware, I may say at this point, that the Royal Canadian Legion has, on occasion, not agreed with what I am saying today and that at its Edmonton convention held two years ago the Legion asked the dominion executive council to bring in a report on the desirability of establishing an appeal from the pension commission to an independent authority. The veterans welfare advisory committee decided that such a vote was not desirable for the reason—and I quote in part—that "The present legislation and procedure is basically sound". I suggest it is not basically sound, because it is contrary to the British theory of constitutional law which states that the subject always has a right of appeal to an independent judiciary body. Section 5 (5) of the Pension Act reads as follows:

> The commission shall determine any question of interpretation of this act and the decision of the commission on any such question is final.

The question I would ask at this point is: how is the executive of the Royal Canadian Legion going to force members of the pension commission to interpret the Pension Act in a basically sound manner, or in the way parliament intended in the first place?

The executive of the Legion in another part of their report make this statement:

> The pension commission interprets the benefit of doubt clause to mean that the veteran must create the doubt.

Surely the Canadian Legion does not agree with such an interpretation. In fact, a reference to their objection on this very point is made in each of their briefs dealing with section 70 of the Pension Act. I have three briefs here and in each they disagree with this interpretation of section 70 by the commission. Time does not permit me to place on the record extracts from the briefs.

I direct the attention of hon. members to words spoken by the present Prime Minister when he was the private hon. member for Prince Albert as reported at page 5895 of Hansard of July 12, 1956:

> —I believe that in such a case as this consideration should be given to the amendment of the Pension Act so far as interpretation of the law is concerned so that recourse to the courts will be available to any aggrieved person to ascertain in the courts whether or not that person comes within the ambit of the legal definitions provided in the Pension Act.

May I conclude my remarks on this measure by quoting a portion of a letter I have received:

> Our Canadian veterans and servicemen preferred, and still prefer, to die on their feet. Dead—their widows and fatherless children are required to live on their knees before the officials of the Canadian pension appeal board.

I solicit the support of all hon. members of the house and particularly veterans in the passing of this bill.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather lengthy bill considering that it is a private member's bill. While we may not agree with all the details set forth in it nevertheless I believe the general principle of the bill is sound and because at this stage we are concerned only with the principle I should like to indicate my support for the measure.

I cannot, however, go along with the sponsor of the bill in his remarks about the pension board. I feel we should debate this bill on its merits and not on the merits of the personnel comprising the board or their competence to administer this legislation.

I support the bill because I believe it is basically sound that every person should have the right to appeal to a court of justice if he has a grievance. Without that, as the hon. member said, we have government by commission.

My own experience with the pension board has been somewhat different from that outlined by the hon. member. Hon. gentlemen know there is one matter about which I have complained over and over again. But by and large my experience with the pension board is that they have gone all out wherever possible to give favourable consideration and to extend the benefit of doubt in cases I have brought to their attention. I think that is even more true of the present board than it has been in the past.

However, I feel we must all agree that there is difficulty when a body confines itself to the interpretation of just one set of laws. There is a tendency to become routine and mechanical in the judgment of different cases and to overlook the relationship between the law that body is administering and the greater body of law which might be related to it. The sponsor of the bill mentioned the relationship of the veterans charter to the Interpretation Act. That is certainly one consideration; but there are others. I feel there is a general spirit which pervades all the laws included in the veterans charter and that general spirit, I think, reflects the spirit of parliament itself. When there is a conflict between the letter and the spirit of any particular law I think that should be subjugated to the overriding spirit of the legislation as a whole.

Apart from that there is the overriding spirit of the British North America Act which is our constitution and certainly all our laws should be interpreted within that framework. The one exception to which I referred a while ago, a question which I have frequently raised in this house, is in relation to the interpretation that has been placed on veterans legislation with regard to Newfoundland veterans. The terms of union are part of the British North America Act and therefore part of our constitution. I feel that any interpretation of veterans legislation should be interpreted in the light of our constitution.

I believe the present legislation, worded as it is, is cast in language sufficiently broad to include Newfoundland veterans under the veterans charter, but the pension commission that existed at the time of confederation when this problem first arose chose to interpret it in a very different manner. Regardless of the fact that the definition of a veteran under the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Veterans Rehabilitation Act and the War Service Grants Act is broad enough to include a Newfoundland veteran the wording is not clear in the Pension Act. Although it could be interpreted as being broad enough to include Newfoundland veterans the pension commission chose not to interpret it as being sufficiently broad. Consequently Newfoundland veterans are treated as Canadians who served in the imperial forces rather than as Canadians who served in the Canadian forces.

I use that example to illustrate the point brought out by the sponsor of the bill that there is need for an independent authority to examine decisions from time to time. It is only human to make wrong judgments. Certainly every Canadian, especially now that we have a bill of rights should have an opportunity of taking his grievance before a court of law.

I do not intend to speak at length. Time is passing quickly and I know other hon. members wish to express their views. I support the general principle of the bill because I feel it is in line with the bill of rights and provides an additional safeguard for the veterans. It is one more step toward ensuring the welfare of our veterans. The principle of the bill is in line with the spirit of legislation we have already passed.

With respect to the charges that have been laid against the personnel of the pension commission I presume the minister will have something to say on their behalf.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I read this most interesting bill very carefully. I appreciate the hon. member's concern for the welfare of veterans and their dependants. I know his motives are lily white. It is evident the hon. member has given considerable thought to the problem and has spent considerable time in the preparation of the measure now before the house. The vigour of his remarks is further evidence of his deep concern for the matter and his quite unusual attack on the personnel of the Canadian pension commission is evidence of his strong feelings in the matter.

I might say that the principle and purpose of this bill have been discussed over a great number of years by veterans organizations and other people concerned with the welfare of the veterans and their dependants. The very same principle and purpose have also been discussed by trade unions all across Canada in reference to various workmen's compensation acts. It is natural for the subject repeatedly to arise and for persons to consider that there should be an appeal to the courts against a decision of the commission and of what the hon. member would term—and I can well understand his point of view—established bureaucracies. However, the veterans organizations throughout the years have studied this question.

I have had some experience with the Canadian Pension Act since 1939 as an active officer of the Royal Canadian Legion, as a member of this house and as a member of the veterans affairs committee. I have listened carefully to these arguments because they merit careful consideration whether they are in support of the principle for amendment to the Pension Act or to the various workmen's compensation acts across Canada. However, in every case to date the discussion has ended, as the hon. member has pointed out, in the organizations in question—and I also mention the labour organizations—rejecting the principle and purpose of the bill as not being in the best interests of the pensioner and dependants or, shall I say, of the person on compensation. They considered—and I am just repeating their views—that there was a greater hazard to these persons directly concerned in providing for an appeal to the courts than there was in improving the legislation. I must say this. While on occasions I have differed with the Canadian pension commission in their decisions, as I am sure have many others in this house, we must remember that the Canadian pension commission is a group of citizens who are all veterans, and who have been given the responsibility of administering the Canadian Pension Act. Without doubt, from our point of view, they err on occasions.

However, I was rather surprised to hear the usually genial and mellow member's caustic comments on this occasion. As I said, the commission members are all veterans and I am sure they have at heart the welfare of veterans. The chairman, as a matter of fact, is an appointee of the present government. I think he has rendered good service as chairman of the commission, as have other members of the commission throughout the years. We must remember that the decisions of the commission are in the main based on medical evidence and on hearings that are held and the various procedures under the Canadian Pension Act to which effect is given. As I said before, while on occasion without doubt we differ with them in their decisions, the members of the commission have no reason whatever to deny an applicant a pension on any personal ground. It is human to err. They are required to make their decisions on the basis of the evidence before them, and I am quite confident that they make their decisions according to their best judgment.

In my opinion, the remedy for the situation is this. I quite realize that improvements can be made in the Canadian Pension Act. In my opinion and, I believe, in that of the members whom I have the honour to represent in this distinguished corner of the house, the remedy is to amend the Canadian Pension Act so as to clarify certain sections and, in so doing, to remove a certain measure of ambiguity that exists at the present time, thereby strengthening the hands of the Canadian pension commission.

I think the hon. member has rendered a service by bringing to the attention of the house a bill highlighting this problem. I trust his bringing this matter to the attention of the house will cause the government to pay particular attention to the problem presented at this time and to bring in amendments that will clarify the Canadian Pension Act and thus will make the work of the Canadian pension commission less subject to criticism and easier for its members.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I strongly suggest that the hon. member send copies of his bill and copies of today's Hansard to the dominion officers of the various veterans organizations across Canada and that he also ask them to make recommendations with respect to amendments to the Canadian Pension Act in order to achieve the objective which I am sure is the desire of the hon. member who introduced the bill and of all other hon. members in this house.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private business having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs branch—Indian agencies—

618. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $136,000.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Winch: When we were about to rise at five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I asked that this particular item be not voted on at that time. I did so, sir, because—and I hope you will agree with me—I hate to disagree with the minister in certain statements she has made about whether or not we are in order on one aspect of the matters now being discussed. I would draw your attention to the fact we are now discussing vote 618 of the supplementary estimates. This vote is for $136,000 for Indian agencies, operation and maintenance.

If I could put it briefly, Mr. Chairman, it has always been my understanding that when a supplementary estimate deals with operation and maintenance of Indian agencies, we can then raise matters of policy upon which we would like to have information. On that understanding, therefore, that I am speaking only because of vote 618, there is a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in her capacity as the minister in charge of Indian affairs. I do so, Mr. Chairman, because it is of the utmost importance in every way that there should be established the finest possible relationship between the government in the operation of the Indian agencies and the Indian agencies in their relationships with our first Canadian citizens, whether they be on reservations or under treaty.

I would, therefore, under this supplementary vote like to ask the minister if she is in a position to give the committee any information relative to the most extraordinary letter that I believe was sent to all members of the House of Commons under date of February 23, 1962, from the Indian defense league of America. In this letter there are some remarkable statements made of a nature which I believe should be clarified and answered as soon as possible in order to maintain the best possible relationship between the government department, the Indian agencies in all the provinces and our first native Canadian citizens. May I, Mr. Chairman, just take a moment to quote from this letter:

> With due respect for the parliament of Canada, we express our opinion to the honourable members, concerning Indian affairs which was consistently evaded in the past by the administration. It is with sincere regret that I draw the attention of the house assembled, the fact that our all-Indian organization was not given the courtesy of appearing before the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Canadian Senate dealing with Indian affairs, thus ignoring our request. We were of the opinion that the august body was to receive representations from Indians organizations with the opportunity of supporting their briefs with oral testimony, supported by official record.

This is the introduction. As a matter of fact, as I went through this letter, sir, I was not quite certain as to whether or not the Six Nations assembly was declaring war on Canada. However, they do say this in the second paragraph of the letter, and this is important because, if my knowledge of history is correct, the Six Nations is a most important body in Canada and many years ago was important to Canada in fighting on behalf of Her Majesty at that time:

> We are aghast at the attitude of the department of Indian affairs. We have been shocked at the evasive replies on questions sent to the department concerning the obligation of protection of the Six Nations under unabrogated treaties with Great Britain.

I know, without going any farther, that the minister will understand why I raise this question. I am certain, Mr. Chairman, that the minister and the members of the committee realize I am taking this course because this kind of letter sent to members of parliament by our native Indians on a matter of this nature, added to the matter on which we spent four hours previously, should be answered as quickly as possible. I hope that under this supplementary vote which deals with Indian agencies, the minister will feel this is the occasion to make a real statement of government policy concerning the attitude of her department to Indian affairs and to answer such charges as these. This letter is sent over the name of the Indian defense league of America, in the name of the Six Nations confederacy, to all members of parliament. If the information is incorrect, then let the minister get up and explain in what way it is incorrect. If there is any way of bringing about a greater understanding, a better relationship, if she has some new policy in mind, surely this is the time to make a statement and not wait until the general estimates are before the committee.

Mrs. Fairclough: First of all, I should like to ask the hon. member, since he did not mention it, from what domicile is that letter? Where did it come from?

Mr. Winch: This is from the Indian defense league of America, home office, box 305, Niagara Falls, New York. According to this, it represents the Six Nations confederacy in the United States and Canada, and includes a letter sent to the hon. members of the joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate of Canada, on behalf of the confederacy.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the answer is simple. We appointed the committee and, as the hon. member knows, the committee undertook to hear representatives from the various Indian groups. I do not know of the Indian defence league, though I recognize the name of Mr. Antone. I have seen his name on letters from time to time. He is domiciled in the state of New York and it is true that the Six Nations Indians are on both sides of the border. If my memory serves me well the Caughnawagas did not make any representations, although they were invited to do so and they are a member of the confederation, but the Six Nations Indians at Brantford made two representations. One was made by the hereditary chiefs organization and the other by the elected council organization; so I think in so far as the Six Nations Indians within Canada are concerned, they were heard.

I do not know if that answers the hon. member's question or not, but further than that I would have to refer to the committee itself as offhand I do not recall all who were heard by the committee. However it is certain that an invitation would not go outside Canada to an organization which is an international organization.

Miss LaMarsh: I am somewhat familiar with this confederation as I have the honour to be an adopted daughter of the Mohawks of the Six Nations. I have some knowledge of this particular group since I addressed a meeting of them not too long ago. As the minister said, they are an international organization and they are particularly concerned with some treaties. I had also the honour to be a member of the joint committee for the past year, but not for the first two years.

At its meetings I raised some questions the answers to which rather stunned me, and perhaps the minister can tell me why such answers were given. I had been asked by the Indian defence league to inquire if there was a copy in existence of the treaties signed by John Graves Simcoe. I was informed that the branch did not have copies of these treaties. I inquired if a search had ever been made among the imperial records because they seemed to be so basic to the Indians' view of their rights. As I recall it the director said no research had been made among the imperial records for the originals of these treaties, and since they are so basic to what the Indians believe are their rights I wonder if the minister can advise us why this has not been done.

There is one thing with reference to the matter which we were discussing here this afternoon which my hon. friend from Vancouver mentioned earlier. That is the imputation that some individuals who represented my party were concerned in the matter. I may say that nothing could be further from the truth. Perhaps he and the minister may not know that one of the individuals who acted as agent for the Beaufort firm in Ottawa is a man from British Columbia whose name is Dean Finlayson, which name may mean more to him than to me.

Mr. Fisher: There are a number of questions I should like to put to the minister relating to Indian agencies and the Indians in my area, and I may say that the impetus to raise them at this time comes from several different sources. The minister will remember my asking her a question regarding some criticism made by Chief Crawford Adams, when several weeks ago he was quoted as saying that of the Indians in Canada those in the worst condition that he knows of are in the area north of Port Arthur.

Recently the gentleman from the other place who was honoured in being placed there by the Prime Minister because of his Indian blood, has been in a sense preaching to me, referring to the fact that it is very important I take a much keener interest in the Indians in my constituency because he feels that they are in a very poor and relatively unfortunate condition compared with most of the other Indians in this country. These are two things that have aroused my concern.

I might point out to hon. members who wonder why my interest might not have been higher, that there are somewhere between 3,000 and 5,000 Indians in my constituency. No one is quite sure about the number, and of the 2,500 estimated to have a vote in the coming election approximately 2,000 of them exist well north of the farthest railway line that bisects the constituency. Of these the largest group could only be reached by plane on a chartered flight of 385 or 390 miles from Port Arthur, which is beyond my finances, and the other large group could only be reached by flying in from Val d'Or to Winisk near Hudson's bay. Therefore my interest in most of those constituents, because they are spread out and it would be very costly to reach them, in a sense has to be from an office approach point of view. I would like to ask the minister to give me an analysis of what is being done for these Indians who are north of the C.N.R. tracks, especially Indians up from Lansdowne House, the Trout lake area and the Winisk area.

More specifically I want to deal with the whole question of elections. Hon. members will remember that recently in the Kenora by-election there was a considerable stirring up of candidates in the area over the Indian vote in that constituency and the Conservative candidate. This is something which I have brought up before with a certain amount of humour because I think the classic example was Lansdowne House. A few years ago in a provincial vote something like 130 votes went to the Conservatives, five to the Liberals, two to the communists and none to the C.C.F. candidate, and there were no spoiled ballots in this poll. It was agreed that only one or two of the people there could read or write. That is why I say it has a humourous connotation.

There is one poll in my constituency that even in his heyday the late C. D. Howe never won. It is a place called Ombabika. It is mostly Indians who vote there and we discovered that in the Lansdowne House case the white man who happened to have the most influence with the Indians was a Tory. As I say, the situation was random and humorous but I am wondering if this is going to be so in the next election because there will be so many more voters. I would like to know from the minister what plans she may have for instructing the Indians, to see that some program is carried on with these Indians in the north who really could not be reached by candidates, and to see whether some kind of fairer arrangement could be made in the future. I know hon. members will say, "Surely it is up to the party to put up scrutineers". I wonder how many political parties in Canada in a constituency association could afford to send scrutineers to polls that are 300 or 400 miles away from the centre of the riding. I wonder how many of them could afford the charter costs.

I understand that in Nova Scotia or Newfoundland very recently this challenge was put to the premier of Nova Scotia by the leader of the Conservative party, and the premier answered that he would rent an aeroplane to send them in—it was in connection with a by-election—and if the Conservatives could not afford to pay their share of the flight he would see that the Liberals picked up the charge for getting the—

Mrs. Fairclough: What province was that?

Mr. Fisher: This is in Newfoundland. There was a by-election going on, I believe, up in Labrador and evidently this became—

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member understands that the Indians in Newfoundland do not come under this department, does he not? This was included in the terms of confederation.

Mr. Benidickson: I understood they were all killed off in Newfoundland centuries ago.

Mr. Fisher: The point I am really making here is that even in Newfoundland the Conservatives find it very expensive to get scrutineers up to the Indians. I am wondering whether the minister and her officials have considered this whole question of the Indian vote in remote places and what steps can be taken to see that it is done efficiently and fairly and in the interests of all candidates.

The other point I want to raise with the minister is this. I raised it with her, she will remember, by letter. It is regarding the possibilities of Indians working on the pulp and paper operations in our region. The minister will remember that I sent her some criticisms and suggestions that were expressed by the lumber and saw mill workers union, which happens to have the contracts in most of the woods industry from the Manitoba border through to north of Sudbury. The minister's reply was to the effect that these suggestions and criticisms were going to be considered immediately. I appreciate this, but I would like to know from the minister just what steps have been taken in northwestern Ontario in recent years to give the Indians some kind of permanent work or a more permanent relationship than they have at the present time.

I am sure that hon. members will have noted not too long ago that a little girl of six or seven years of age was torn to death by dogs up in a small village in my constituency, at Auden. It so happens that the dogs which tore her to death, which trapped her after her father left her outside a Sunday school, were kept by Indians who lived not too far away from Auden. The situation of these Indians near Auden, in Ombabika, is a wonderful case in point of the failure of the pulp and paper industry in the woods to find a real place for these people and to fit them in or tie them in with some kind of economic basis.

Auden is a permanent camp of the Abitibi Power and Paper Company. It has been in operation for at least seven or eight years to my knowledge. Continuous attempts have been made by the company to use Indians wherever practical but only, as I understand it—and my information is from both the union and people who you might say are on the management side—with very limited success.

I wanted to use this as an example and compare it with the situation at Longlac, which is not too far away, where the use of Indians from the Longlac reserve has been more successful on the part of the Kimberly-Clark Corporation. I would like some kind of elaboration from the minister as to the steps that have been taken of a persistent kind—at least, I hope they have been persistent—to see if some kind of continuing relationship cannot be worked out with these paper companies and with the unions for the benefit of the Indians.

The union people—I must be frank—are very critical of the Indian service, perhaps more critical than the service deserves; but I can assure the minister that their idealism in this situation is of a very substantial kind. They would be willing to go out of their way to see that the Indians were given an opportunity to have regular work whatever the relationship of the Indian might be to the standard kind of seniority that happens to exist and is becoming more important in the woods and forests.

The last point I should like to raise with the minister stems from a letter I have received from the Indian chief at Mobert, Ontario, which is not too far from White River. The complaints I have received from the chief really deal with the ineffectiveness of welfare provisions during the winter. He has expressed concern to me over the fact that when an Indian is sick it is almost impossible to get him out to hospitalization because no one has any money and no emergency funds are available, and he has not, according to his letter, the authority to do anything about it.

His other complaint is that assistance is not forthcoming as easily as it should be to young men of the band who do not happen to be married. He feels that there is a calculated toughness on the part of the department with these young unmarried Indians, he thinks they are being treated far too harshly and the suggestion in correspondence to me is that this should be changed.

These are some of the problems of the Indians that I thought I should bring to the minister's attention. In terms of their importance, of course, I think an attempt to work out a relationship between the woods industry, the unions engaged in that industry and the Indian affairs branch to give the Indians a steadier basis of employment in the whole region from Sioux Lookout eastward to Hornepayne, and all the way down along the lake Superior periphery, would be most advantageous.

The question of the elections is something that we can all either get worked up or irate about, or we can even see it as something very funny, but I think most hon. members of the house will realize that in the next election we are trying an experiment, in the way that this is the first time in a national sense that Indians will have had the vote. I think all of us, no matter how we might like the votes of Indians to come to our particular party, will hope that the whole matter will run off very fairly. Given the situation that we have had in northwestern Ontario in the provincial elections, there are possibilities of our doubting this situation.

The final matter is really a general one and I should just like to repeat it. I would like some estimate from the minister as to the situation of the Indians whom Chief Telford Adams has said are in the worst condition of any Indians that he knows about in Canada, and whom the Indian gentleman in the other place has suggested to me need much more looking after than they are getting at the present time.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mrs. Fairclough: First of all, let me say that I did answer the hon. member's letters to me and I outlined to him the situation as far as I could discover it with reference to this section of the country. I told him at that time that although Chief Telford Adams had made these statements not only this year but last year in a general way, up to the present time we had nothing to substantiate those charges. There were only his statements which we had read in the papers. We received no protest from him by way of a letter, neither did we receive any protests from people from other parts of the country so we were somewhat at a loss to know how to proceed in the absence of anything more specific.

The people to whom the hon. member refers, are largely nomads. It is hard to find them in a given place at a given time and this complicates immeasurably the problem of their care and welfare. I must say I was interested to hear about the results of previous elections. It only goes to show that one does not have to be able to read and write in order to be intelligent. I may say, though, with respect to the taking of the vote, that no matter whether it is in an urban area or a rural area or even in a remote region of Canada, that is the responsibility of the chief electoral officer, and I am sure the worst thing I could do as a minister would be to interfere in any way with voting in an election, or attempt to influence the Indians in any way whatsoever.

Mr. Fisher: I did not suggest the minister should interfere but I should like to know what instructions, if any, are going out to her Indian agents with regard to this matter. I do not want to make charges in this committee in relation to this subject, but perhaps the minister will understand an assurance from me that I am certain I can explain to her why the vote is swung so strongly in some areas of the country. It has a direct relationship, in provincial elections, with the Indian agents. I should like to know what instructions are likely to be given out, and whether the agents are to be asked to go out of their way to see that in any places where they have any kind of advisory jurisdiction these things are run fairly. That is all.

Mrs. Fairclough: No instructions go out from my department, nor will any instructions go from my department with reference to Indians in relation to elections.

Mr. Baldwin: Something was said a little while ago by the hon. member for Vancouver East about appearances before the joint committee. I was a member of that committee for the three years during which it functioned.

We sat through many long and weary hours over that period and I am glad to say there was very little evidence of political bias or partisanship, though possibly it did creep in in the last year. However, with regard to the right of various groups and organizations to appear I should like to refer the hon. member and others in this committee to the preamble to the second and final report of the joint committee which was filed by the chairman last year. I am reading from the second paragraph which states:

> During the present session your committee completed its examination of Indian administration and thoroughly reviewed the Indian Act. Thirty five additional witnesses were heard this session. Since June, 1959, there have been 97 meetings and over 100 witnesses have been heard. In addition, included in the minutes of proceedings and evidence, as appendices thereto, are 80 written submissions received by your committee from Indian organizations and bands, provincial governments, church authorities and other organizations and groups interested in the welfare and advancement of the Indian Canadian.

My recollection is that a number of witnesses made not only one but two appearances. I had the honour to serve as vice-chairman of the committee last year and I presided at a number of meetings. We did decide at a meeting of a subcommittee on agenda and procedure to adopt the rule that where there had been one appearance there would not be another during the current year because we felt the time had come when a report should be written. With regard to the group mentioned by the hon. member, there was a discussion and in view of the fact that this particular group apparently had its headquarters outside this country, and because, as the minister has pointed out, the things they wished to say had largely been covered by previous briefs and submissions made by other groups during the course of our proceedings, we felt that no good purpose would be served by calling these people here to give evidence. Apart from that, every opportunity was given to every organization and group to make oral representations and, if they wished, to supplement them by written briefs. Those are the facts.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask the minister a question in connection with vote 618. I noted the statement made by the hon. lady yesterday in relation to economic development. That comes under vote 622. However, I should like to ask this question under vote 618.

I have taken a keen interest in Indian affairs for around 30 years. However, I do not maintain that I am a specialist on Indian affairs, so when I learned that this vote was likely to be discussed today I looked for additional advice and information. I had a talk with an hon. member in the other place. Naturally, that was Senator Gladstone who certainly must be regarded as an expert on Indian affairs. He told me that the native Indians do not want charity; they do not want to be a charge on the people of Canada. They want to be first class Canadian citizens. They want policies promulgated and put into action which will result in their being first class citizens whether on the reserves or elsewhere. One of the matters about which the hon. senator was good enough to advise me concerned the care of Indians in special circumstances—the word "charity" is not one I wish to use in this connection. I should like to link this subject with the statement made by the minister on economic development, but I shall have to deal with that subject under another vote. In view of the opinions expressed by Senator Gladstone, may I ask the minister to explain the basis upon which aid is given through the Indian agencies on these grounds of requirement and necessity? Does it differ in various parts of Canada or is there any general and basic policy? I would appreciate receiving that information. I shall leave the other aspects until we reach vote No. 622.

Mrs. Fairclough: Do I understand that the hon. member is now asking about welfare?

Mr. Winch: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the amounts as set out in votes Nos. 620 and 621 total $482,500 representing additional amounts required this year for welfare. Of this amount the sum of $21,000—but possibly I had better start with British Columbia and the Yukon—

Mr. Winch: I am sorry to interrupt the minister but I am not interested in the amounts. I wish to know the policy governing the granting of welfare.

Mrs. Fairclough: Generally speaking it is on the same basis as that adopted by the various municipalities. That is to say that although in most cases the Indian bands are not treated as municipalities we do have some Indian bands that are treated as municipalities. As I say, however, by and large they are not treated as municipalities. The welfare which is handled for them is handled pretty much on the same basis as that handled in municipalities in the various provinces. In some cases the bands themselves have advanced to the stage where their own band council handles the disposition of welfare within its band. This again varies all the way from the recommendations coming from the band council and the welfare being dispensed by the superintendent, right up to the whole of the revenue funds being in the hands of the band as they would be in any municipality and the band making its own budget and dispensing its own welfare to its own members, much as a municipal council would do in any municipality in Canada. That is a broad general description of the process followed. If the hon. member wished specific details about any one place I would have to find out which method of administration is in practice in a specific band.

Mr. Winch: I am disturbed and worried about what I am told concerning the way welfare is dispersed in British Columbia on some occasions. That is why I asked about the policy.

Mrs. Fairclough: Although I do not wish to prevent the hon. member from asking questions I might say in the part that is devoted to welfare in the supplementary estimates there is nothing for relief. That has already been taken care of. There may be some further amounts in the final supplementaries when they come up.

As I said a couple of days ago when I introduced these estimates, all of these moneys are for winter works of one kind or another. Some of it falls within welfare, some falls within the agencies division and some falls within economic development, and so on. In other words this is all for work.

Mr. Winch: I will not accept that. Vote No. 618 relates to Indian agencies, operation and administration. That covers the operation of the Indian affairs branch.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is perfectly true. I have no hesitation in answering this so far as I can. But I say the additional funds which are required are not required for the relief portion but for the works portion. However, I now have at hand a general summary of the basis upon which relief as such is dispensed.

The rates vary according to high cost areas or special circumstances. The standard rates are: for a single adult, $22; each additional adult or child over 12 years of age, $15; each child 12 years of age or under, $12. Hon. members will recall that this scale was raised about two years ago, I think it was.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister means this is the current rate?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, this is the current rate.

Mr. Winch: This is the current rate?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Winch: And the minister says that is in line with the payments under welfare?

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes. This is for food only. In addition to this, clothing and fuel and rental and so on are looked after. This is merely the food rate and it is in line with the welfare payments under the provincial authorities.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I had really only one point that would be specifically related to item 618, referring to the operation and maintenance of Indian agencies. We of course have a big population explosion in all areas where there are Indians. This is to be noticed particularly north of Red Lake in the constituency of Kenora-Rainy River. I was going to suggest with respect to agencies that a terrific amount of territory is given to the superintendent at Sioux Lookout. There is no regular air service or highway service connecting Sioux Lookout with Red Lake. I think that with the increased population which is fairly general Red Lake should be looked at as a place where a new Indian agency should be established.

This is all I normally would have said under item 618 but I find that quite a number of hon. members recognize that we have on the part of Indian agencies a rather wide range of supervision over Indian affairs of all kinds and they have referred to economic matters and welfare matters, if not the field of education. Perhaps if I tell the minister I intend to be brief she will allow me to make a few remarks in a general way without dealing with subsequent items in the estimates.

In my experience there is a very close connection between welfare, education and economic development. In fact, I find great difficulty in separating them.

With respect to welfare I was surprised to hear the minister generalize in reply to the hon. member for Vancouver East when she said that our scale of relief—although relief is not specifically before us now—was on a basis comparable to that adopted by the municipalities.

In the first instance, despite the fact that the minister says $22 a month for a single person makes provision only for food and that there are other disbursements from the department to such an individual, I think she made too broad a statement to satisfy members of the committee that all is well in connection with welfare for our Indian people.

The minister said a change had been made a couple of years ago in the scale of relief. I am interested in that because the last specific reference I have to the monthly relief available to a single person indicates that it was $22 a month and my letter is dated a little over two years ago. There was not very much additional assistance given to the individual to whom I have reference and although I will not name the individual I will indicate that the file number is 144-37-7. While others have enjoyed some increase in municipal and federal welfare benefits the rate of $22 by way of relief for a single person seems to be the same today as it was two years ago and I do not know for how long prior to February, 1960.

In very current correspondence of only two weeks ago from Sandy lake I got some information but I admit it is not in all respects conclusive because it does not indicate how many dependants are involved in each family. I shall therefore refer only to those instances where it is clear that we are dealing with an individual. I have here a reference to one of my constituents who, it is said, was separated from her husband and who was an old age pensioner. It is to the effect that for the last 12 months she received relief totalling $300. It is said that this was the maximum amount allowable under our regulations. Everyone will recognize the fact that this works out to about $25 a month. This woman is still on relief. I would not say that amount in any way is comparable to what is available to a single woman in a municipality.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I ask the hon. member this question. Did she not indicate what else she had besides the allowance for food? That is the food allowance only. She would also have fuel allowance and she would probably have clothing allowance if she needed it. However, it is true that would be the amount for food.

Mr. Benidickson: I am very much concerned about these matters. I have a great number of them although I have only a few noted. Another one for four months during the winter of 1961 received relief amounting to $168. Another one worked as a painter for the Hudson's Bay Company during the summer of 1961 and received relief totalling $256 for 4 months in the winter of 1961 and was paid $50 during part of January. He signified that he would rather work than accept relief. Presumably this is the ration of work for it, cut off at about $50 a month. Under the paternalism that exists in some places, even the work must be rationed.

We know that the Indians are today competing with the unemployed wherever they go; and, of course, even after our attempts at integration, they have had the competition of immigration and other factors in their economic life.

In connection with welfare I wish to say this. I assume that housing comes under welfare or does it come under the economic division? In any event, this area of which I speak has a substantial Indian population. Its geographical area is perhaps larger than the whole of the British Isles. I am told that this particular agency at Sioux Lookout has for the whole area only $42,000 to expend on housing. As hon. members well know, this amount will not go very far. I know that expenditures have increased substantially year by year. However, population in this ethnic group is increasing more rapidly than in any other ethnic group in Canada. In addition to that fact, we must recognize that they are very much behind other segments of the population with respect to advantages enjoyed. There must be some accelerated program. As we advance in the field of education we must advance in parallel fields. We must have greater expenditure in the welfare and the economic field for things such as housing. I was surprised the other day to read that up until 1960 a great number of Indians were assisted in connection with housing. The minister will refresh me if I am in error but I believe that 10,000 Indian families had been helped since 1948 in housing. But when I relate the matter to my own riding and find that only $42,000 was provided in the estimates last year for this purpose, I realize that it would not go very far. I assume that some of that money would go toward the saw mills and other aids that have been provided in this vast area. In connection with the revolving fund I would appreciate it if the minister would indicate—

Mrs. Fairclough: May I say that no money goes to the saw mills for housing unless it is to purchase lumber for use in the construction of houses. If that is what my hon. friend meant, it is true that we purchase lumber from the saw mills for use in construction. However, I draw to his attention the fact that since 1958, I think it was, the amount expended on housing has been more than doubled as compared with the amount expended in previous years. It used to be $1 million a year. It is now $2 million. I think the first supplementary estimate for housing was in the 1958-59 estimates. It has been $2 million a year since then. It is true enough that even $2 million spread over the length and breadth of Canada is not a tremendous amount. However, that is not the whole story. The Indians themselves help out wherever they can do so. If they are employed, they themselves contribute in cash. If they are unemployed, they contribute their own effort toward the erection of these houses. Up until this past year we have been able to erect these houses—and they are fairly reasonable houses—for approximately $2,500 cost to the department. Of course, there will be additional expenditures in time or effort by the Indians themselves. In some cases the band councils, if they have funds, would contribute. By and large I think the $2 million would swell to an amount in excess of $4 million in a given year for housing. However, I agree with the hon. member that possibly this amount does not go too far. Nevertheless it is a considerable item.

Mr. Benidickson: I am not criticizing the minister. There has been progress in so far as expenditures are concerned. However, we also have population growth and inflated costs of everything that is purchased today. By way of illustration may I say that in 1948 I believe we were spending about $5 million on education. That amount grew to $25 million in 1960, according to some of the evidence given before the Indian affairs committee. However, we must remember that enrolments in the schools went up in the same period from 23,000 to 40,000, plus the extra costs of doing these things and the better accommodation that is provided today than that which the architects would perhaps have provided in 1948 and so on. I am not criticizing. I simply wish to relate the expenditures on education of, I suppose, $28 million or $29 million this year, a rather small amount relatively, to those that are not young but who are adults and who are not economically really afloat in many ways, in my opinion. I question whether, in the entire appropriation of the minister's department, although it has increased, there is relatively a proper relationship between educational grants and economic and welfare grants. In connection with economic development I feel that there has been noticeable expansion. I compliment the officers of the department and the minister. This is not something that happened in the last four years. The minister will give credit to her predecessors. It is something that perhaps had its impetus after world war II when we had more contact with members of this population who had served so well in world war II and so on. However, I see some signs of advance in such things as wild rice harvesting. I commend the province of Ontario for making the wild rice crop the first prerogative of the Indian population in Ontario.

I should like to have some indication from the minister's economic advisers as to the selling arrangement in connection with wild rice. I hope that a very real advance has been made in preventing any freeloading on the Indians with respect to the wild rice crop, which is a very valuable one in our part of the country.

In so far as fishing is concerned, I know that is a delicate area for the department. The provinces have control of the commercial fishing licences, and I think an effort is being made to obtain more of these commercial licences for the Indians. I think the minister might report on the progress in this respect. I am not one who has hopes we will have the minister before us this session with her main estimates. I am concerned about some publicity that was given in my own area at the end of 1960 and also in 1961 to the effect that commercial fish dealers of the territory might, in combination, form some kind of fish filleting plant and in concert deal with the Indians. I wonder whether or not this plan has gone forward, or whether or not the plan of the Indians, under the guidance of the department, for selling their fish products under sealed bids is to be continued.

Then, in so far as the revolving fund for loans is concerned, what is the amount of the fund at the present time? I believe formerly it was $500,000. Is it now $1 million? What utilization is being made of that?

I am not going to frighten the minister by reminding her of my annual reference to the difficulties in making Red Lake a pilot plant for the integration of Indians who leave the reservations and go into the commercial life of the community. I simply show her again my ever-growing file of frustration and lack of co-operation between the municipal, provincial and federal governments. There are three related spheres here, education, welfare which involves housing, and of course economics, which involves the opportunity of the parent perhaps to put the child in a proper school with families of better economic background. I find that neither under this government nor the former government has there been any progress whatever in Red Lake.

Under the former administration, I believe the department had finally reached two significant points. One was that on education, as on housing, they would recognize what I call the bridge period, the period between residence on a reservation and arrival in an organized municipality in an attempt to integrate into the normal commercial life. In so far as education is concerned in Red Lake, I had been assured that, as a token of interest on the part of the federal government and without interference with the rights of the province in education, the federal government would pay 5 per cent of the costs of education. This was the normal contribution at that time in this area by the residents of the improvement districts.

Now, this scheme has not advanced. We have a public school and now we have a separate school. I agreed not to press to have the public school take certain Indian children with the expectation that a number of Indian children who needed education and were the children of nomadic parents, would then go into the separate school. The separate school asked me for a deferment. We have only four children in this separate school after all of this delay. The former minister of education, Mr. Dunlop, made speeches to the effect that, as provincial education minister, he felt that even the education of Indians, if they were off the reserve, must be the responsibility of the provinical department. But nothing has happened in this connection. What we are doing now is taking charity from the Amish missionary church of Pennsylvania. For three or four years I have been pointing out to the department that people down in the United States are being told that we are just about as far away as China and just about as deserving as China, in so far as Christian charity is concerned. It is a shame that in an organized municipality Canadian Indians must receive support from Pennsylvania. They have been receiving this support to the extent that 44 Indians have been enrolled in this school because they are not accepted in the separate school or the public school. In addition, provisions are made at this missionary school for lunches for these children, I suppose because in many cases the children cannot count on the parents being around to provide a meal at noonday.

I feel that the department has looked upon this plan with undue coolness. I say they should have another look at it. I would prefer, if this organization wants to do Christian missionary work, that they do so outside of the confines of the organized municipality. It is a shame upon us that these children have to be supported by United States charity in an area that has produced over the last ten years perhaps $100 million worth of gold. This government, following the pattern set by the previous government, probably gives in subsidies to the gold mines of Red Lake about three quarters of a million dollars a year. They are doing practically nothing for the Indian population that actually resides in the gold producing area. I say that my thought about the bridge period is something that should be followed up.

However, this plan has not been discarded because when I was in Red Lake last, just before Christmas, I found two senior officers of the Indian affairs branch visiting Red Lake. This event occurs every year and has continued for ten years. The department, therefore, has not washed its hands of responsibility because representatives are still going up there, from which an inference is drawn that some help is going to come from the department. I was bitterly disappointed to read only this morning that, in so far as housing is concerned, the premier had made a statement at Queen's Park to the effect that there are 12 new fields of housing help that are under study. One was help for Indians who require housing off the reservation.

I sympathize with the minister in this difficulty in trying to associate with the provinces with respect to the needs of people who we are not sure are going to stay off the reservations. The public looks upon them as Indians because they have been so recently associated with the reserves. The municipalities feel they are Indians, for a few years anyway, until they accept steady employment. The province is jealous of its responsibility in education and of course in housing and in health as well as welfare. The net result is that over ten years I feel we have fallen behind rather than gone ahead, especially if we are looking for Red Lake to be a pilot plant; and I think it could be a good pilot plant respecting integration.

In housing, as well as education for Indians at Red Lake, I say we have gone behind rather than ahead. Just before the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate left office as minister of citizenship and immigration I was told that the revolving fund regulations had been changed for the purpose of making it possible to make a loan to an Indian, even where the Indian had his house off the reservation. I am told that is not so and that I must go to the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation so far as my Indian constituents are concerned. How ridiculous can you be? Everybody knows the high standards of house construction that are necessary before an Indian can apply for a loan to Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation.

What we have there are shacks that should not be tolerated in any area anywhere near concentrated population. They have been condemned. I sent three reports to the minister, from Rev. Jay, from Dr. Morris and Dr. Langford, which were signed by anthropologists and other professional visitors to the community who say it is a disgrace in a community that has produced a couple of hundred million dollars worth of gold in the last number of years. This buck passing must come to an end.

I realize that the junior governments are equally difficult to deal with, but the Indians themselves are getting no help. If it were not for the charity of this American organization, the Amish church of Pennsylvania, we would have 44 students who would not be accepted in a fairly large and prosperous community of Ontario. I say that if there is not accommodation in the public school and if there is not accommodation in the separate school, as these are children of nomadic parents the department should do what it promised to do some years ago, and that is try and co-operate with the province in establishing a bridge on health, education and housing for a period of a few years, and not be so sticky about this question of "on reserve" and "off reserve".

Mrs. Fairclough: I have every sympathy with the views expressed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, but he himself has hit the nail right on the head when he talks about the responsibilities of the various levels of government. It is true that by and large this department's responsibility revolves around the Indians who are domiciled on reserves, but to extend housing aid to Indians not on reserves is a different problem and involves negotiations at various levels.

I should also tell the hon. member that the Red Lake problem is one that has been of continuing concern to the department. None of these Indians live on the reserve and most of them have been off it—

Mr. Benidickson: They live on and off it.

Mrs. Fairclough —for a long time, and it is a little difficult to know where the provincial authorities and the municipal authorities take over. I can assure him that this is a continuing problem for study by the department, but we do hope we shall be able to come up with the answers at least to the educational problem and such other problems as may be related thereto, in the not too distant future.

Speaking of northern Ontario in general I should draw attention to a press release which I issued under date of March 1, just two weeks ago, with respect to an agreement entered into by the minister of this department and the minister of lands and forests for the province of Ontario, having to do with the fur research program between the two levels of government, and which in turn sponsored the signing of this new agreement which is designed to improve the livelihood of persons in the remote, underdeveloped areas of northern Ontario.

The fur agreement, which was in effect before the new agreement, has been expanded to include all renewable resources including fish, wild crops and timber and it no longer includes ordinary supervision of the fur program which is now self-sustaining. This agreement is for a ten-year period and will help the people in northern areas who still depend on these natural resources for their livelihood. It is estimated it will affect the lives of some 24,000 Indians, as well as other inhabitants of the north.

This agreement, as stated in the release, deals with the development, management and harvesting of a number of resources and includes commercial fishing, that is sustained yield production, and fishing and hunting for domestic use. It includes sports fishing and assistance to guides for people hunting on reserves. It also includes wild berries, blueberries, the training of forest fire fighters and the processing and marketing of various products. The advisory committee is composed of five members, two from the federal government and three from the provincial government. That is a brief outline of what has been agreed to between the two levels of government.

I think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River asked me for these figures and I would advise him that in 1960-61, 1,225 houses were built at a cost of $3,841,519 of which $2 million came from fund resources, and Indian bands contributed some 43 per cent of that amount. Since 1958 the amount spent on housing has been in the region of $2 million per year, and although the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has given up hope of reaching the main estimates for this year, and I must say I do not agree with him, if he looks at them he will find this amount has been increased to $2,750,000 for the coming year.

Mr. Carter: Since my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River has introduced the subject of education I should like to ask the minister a few questions about the situation in the school at Doig, near Rose Prairie, British Columbia. From editorials and press reports published in the Alaskan Highway News and the Fort Nelson News it appears that a gentleman by the name of Simon Flynn was appointed to this school and arrived to take up his duties there some time in October.

He was not given very clear instructions as to the extent of his duties and responsibilities, or the kind of curriculum he was to teach. He was not told what provisions were made for school supplies and what arrangements were to be followed with respect to the health care of the pupils under his charge. Neither was he told about the chain of command if information was required on any of these matters.

When he opened the school he discovered only an average of 10 children attended and that there were a number of other children at some distance from the school who could not get to it because there was no road. He found the fuel and lighting arrangements were so poor that he was only able to teach on an average of about 10 days a month, about half of the regular school days. Apparently he complained about this to somebody and it got in the press. As a result of that he was told he was fired; the keys were taken from him and he packed up and prepared to depart. I think he went to Fort St. John. Then he was told that he was not fired. In the meantime a committee of the Fort St. John chamber of commerce, I think it was, headed by a person who was connected with the school board and who was probably the chairman of the school board, investigated those complaints which the teacher had made and found them to be substantially correct. Then of course the teacher was told that he had not been fired, but having been told that he was required to take an oath of secrecy.

I should like to ask the minister if she would enlighten the committee as to what exactly took place in the school, what exactly was the situation and why was this teacher required to take an oath of secrecy?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, this is another of those garbled up stories that gets bandied about. Perhaps I should start by saying that first of all the school was not on a reservation. To go back a little, these people moved from the reservation and gathered around this crossroads simply because there was a store there. They lived there for a while and finally, since they were Indians and had come from a reservation not too far away—if my memory serves me well, something like 10 miles away—the department did manage to make available a one-room schoolhouse. As the hon. member says, there were only about 10 children there; it was a very small community.

It is a little difficult to get teachers to go to these remote areas but finally this young man was recruited, I think by correspondence. He was a British subject but he was then living in the United States. He went up there. His stories of what he encountered are slightly exaggerated, according to the information I have received. It is true that there were some difficulties. For instance, a well was to have been dug, but because of the remoteness of the area the contractors who had undertaken to dig the well did not show up. He went into this school and he thought there were things he should have had that he did not have, but in the matter of school supplies he could have had them simply by applying to the school superintendent, which he did not do.

There were a number of matters of this nature. They culminated in his writing a letter to a newspaper complaining about the shortcomings with respect to this school. Most of them could have been supplied to him had he gone to the proper source, the superintendent, who would have received his representations and seen that he had the required equipment.

He was not dismissed at any time. He was told that he had to teach in accordance with the standards required by the school. Also, he was not asked to take an oath of secrecy. What he was asked to do was take the oath of allegiance which all civil servants are required to take. He was now a civil servant and he was asked to take the oath of allegiance, and this he refused to do.

The whole thing was pretty mixed up, but to cut a long story short, the store which was at the crossroads has now closed, so ostensibly the reason for the Indians congregating there has passed and we rather expect that they will go back to the reservation. When they do, proper accommodation will be available to them there.

However, the matter has been one of concern. As I said at the beginning, it is a story which has been badly garbled. We tried to handle it as best we could, but it is a very remote area and one in which all the facilities are not available. Although the department has done its best, I would admit that there is probably something to be desired in the accoutrements and the accommodation that is available at that very remote spot.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, the minister said it was not an oath of secrecy but the oath of allegiance that he was required to take. Was this standard procedure; did his predecessor have to take the oath of allegiance?

Mrs. Fairclough: His immediate predecessor was not a civil servant; he was only a part time teacher engaged until this man got there.

(Translation):

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, before the estimates we are now considering are passed, I should like to make a few remarks, particularly as regards the question raised a moment ago by the member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) in his opening remarks. As a matter of fact, he said that the Indian agency in his area covered a huge territory and, on that account, he felt justified to suggest that a new agency office be opened to look more closely after the welfare of the Indian population in that district through the construction of schools, and steps to improve the economic situation and the education standards in the various Indian bands in northern Ontario.

I should like to make a similar suggestion about northern Quebec. I would ask the minister to give consideration to the opening of a new Indian agency in the Chapais-Chibougamau area, where it would be easier to look after the Indians of the great lake Mistassini, Nemiscau, Rupert House and Eastmain on James bay, Waswanipi, in the northern section of my riding. The new agency could even cover the area further north as far as Fort George, Great Whale in the constituency of Saguenay, in Paint Hills, and particularly along the shore of Hudson's bay where most of the Indians in that district are established.

I understand that the work presently carried out at the Amos Indian agency, which covers most of that area, is excellent. New schools have already been built in various places, and I understand that others will be built, not to mention the additional welfare and assistance facilities for the Indians of great lake Mistassini. There are plans for the construction of a new day-school in Waswanipi, where the improvements I just mentioned will be found.

In my opinion, this territory is so wide that it is almost humanly impossible for a single agency to deal with all its problems. Moreover, with the mining development which has taken place in the Chapais-Chibougamau region in the last ten years or so, it is important that northern Indians be served from that locality.

In fact, a few years ago, local citizens formed a committee which, if I am not mistaken, is called the northern citizens' association. The committee is particularly interested in the future of the Indians in that part of the constituency of Chapleau. I feel that the establishment of a new agency is essential, because we must not forget that mining company officials are well-disposed towards the Indians. A few Indians are already working for some of the mines and other companies are hopeful of getting a greater number to work for them in the years to come.

And now, before I resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, I will simply refute an article which has perhaps already been discussed but which is so unfair that I feel compelled to talk about it because it deliberately overlooks the efforts of this government to increase the estimates for Indian education through the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

(Text):

I am referring to what I might call a silly, if not vicious, article which appeared in the magazine Saturday Night of March 3 last which mentioned that the main estimates, not including the present supplementary estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration with which we are now dealing had increased at a time when immigration had decreased. I believe it is unfair to say this. If hon. members look at the records they will find that the estimates of the Indian affairs branch have increased, votes which, of course, come under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. This government has tried to increase help for the Indians in the past four years, particularly in respect to education. I am sure this article is most unfair in saying that the estimates of the department have increased at a time when the number of immigrants have decreased. I feel it is our duty to look after the Indians of this country in a better way than in the past to make them first class citizens. I think the present government has understood this and has been taking action along these lines.

Mr. Carter: One final question about the Doig River Indians. Will the minister say what arrangements exist for the medical care of these people? If I remember correctly, one woman froze to death there in the absence of aid. In addition, a couple of children are reported to have died in circumstances in which medical care was not available. On one occasion a teacher took a school child, one of his pupils I think, to Fort St. John and then he had to transport the child back in his own car. Whatever arrangements exist do not seem to be functioning very well and I wonder if the minister could tell the committee what facilities exist in cases like these.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is not the responsibility of my department. That is a matter for the Department of National Health and Welfare and is not covered by this vote. I am not familiar with the particular cases to which the hon. member referred. In any event they come under the Department of National Health and Welfare, and perhaps the hon. member will bring this question up when the estimates of that department are presented.

Mr. Benidickson: I rise only to try and keep my conscience clear; I said I would not rise on the subsequent items.

I did not feel the minister had answered one or two points. She did say the bands look after their own welfare to a degree. I think there are some 600 bands. That plodding and brilliant reporter on Indian affairs, Mr. Arch Mackenzie, estimated, when he looked at this problem in 1960, that out of these 600 bands only a few had even a limited degree of self-government; their decisions were always subject to being overruled by higher authority.

On the subject of welfare, could the minister bring us up to date by telling us how many bands have reached the point where they can look after their own welfare on the lines suggested by the hon. lady? When I spoke about a recent speech of the premier of Ontario with regard to the ninth and twelfth points in his housing program, I did not have any of the details in my hand. But I want now to place this on record. I think it is getting some-what late. It may be a stopgap, but I think the minister will agree that after we have been talking for ten years about housing for Indians at Red Lake the time for action rather than for planning has certainly come. The premier says, as his ninth point, that the public housing program as it has been carried out up to now caters mainly to the needs of a larger organized municipality. We all agree on that.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am not clear where the hon. member is leading. Is this provincial—

Mr. Benidickson: I am back to Red Lake. I have indicated that there is a relationship between health, housing and economic opportunities.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, but whose point is this?

Mr. Benidickson: I am referring to a speech made last week by the premier of Ontario with respect to public housing. I want to pay him due respect, but the educational program has been a worry to us all for a long time. Housing has been a worry to us for a long time. The province says that when the Indians are off the reserves they are a provincial responsibility as far as education and housing are concerned. I say that the community does not regard them as being completely the responsibility of either a municipality or of the province in a normal way. The community still regards them as being to some extent nomadic and as to some extent the responsibility of the federal government. The federal government, both with respect to housing and with respect to education has assured me it would recognize this situation and recognize the desirability of there being a bridge period of a few years during which a contribution would be made federally to these Indians despite the fact that they were not living on reserves. This is a sincere observation—it is not really political—but I do not like it too well when the premier of Ontario says he has 12 new observations to make with respect to housing and one of them is to look at the housing needs of the Indians who have left reserves to work in the mines or in the mills. Not to do something, mind you, but to look. The department knows we have had Indians in Red Lake for ten years—Indians who have left the reserve to work in mines or mills—and I say the time has come, not to study the situation but to do something about it. I know the minister gets frustrated, too, because after all this is a domain over which the province of Ontario has jurisdiction, namely health, housing and education. However, I do not think the minister's reply was satisfactory with regard to this phase of the discussion.

As far as education is concerned, I omitted to say previously that I was concerned about truancy, particularly with respect to children whose parents earn their livelihood by fishing and trapping beyond the municipal boundaries. What co-operation is the minister getting from the province of Ontario in enforcing the truancy laws?

The minister did not reply to my observations in respect to the United States charitable institution. I would be satisfied if she would say she would have another look at this matter.

Then I referred to one of three or four reports of sociologists and anthropologists who have gone to this area because it stands out like a sore thumb. I referred to the observations and report of the Rev. Jay, a United Church student pastor who thoughtfully wrote a report on the situation there. He said a community of this kind needed, during the bridge period, as I call it, a representative of the federal department who would be a guidance officer for these people. Is it possible to provide such a service? The author definitely advocates, in addition, a hostel for the use of people who are in transit between a reserve and a civilized community.

Kenora, through the Presbyterian church, has a new institution of whose existence I am sure the minister is aware. I hope the hon. lady will regard it very carefully. As I understand the position, no contribution has been made to this hostel by the federal government. I think that probably a contribution should be made. I believe the church on its own has paid some $30,000 initially as part of a home missionary effort to acquire the property to provide for the needs of Indians in transit in and out of Kenora, some guidance, some comfort and some amenities, even basic amenities which are not provided on the main street of the town. This kind of thing, I think, should perhaps be encouraged to some extent by the department, knowing as we do that economic opportunities are not very good for this exploding population in the north. I would hope the minister would provide to some of these communities or to the churches aid for hostels. Hostels were high on the list in the report to which I referred.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that I had answered the hon. member but possibly I did not make myself clear with respect to the Amish school. I intended to include it in my reference to the whole matter being under consideration. I meant the whole matter of Red Lake, including the school, too.

We are very much interested in the hostel at Kenora. I think it is an excellent step in the right direction. Personally I am not too sure that this is a matter in which Indian affairs should participate. I would think there might be a better case made for participation by the citizenship department. However, this is again a matter which is being considered. We are watching it very closely. We think it is an excellent idea. Of course, the ultimate good will come when these people are accepted into normal accommodation and into the normal economic and social life of the community. I realize there is a transition period where it is a little difficult to know how to handle them and the hostel will undoubtedly do a good job.

Mr. Benidickson: It is so all-important, that is the point, and no money is being provided.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is right; it is extremely important. This is a fairly recent development. I wish to assure the hon. member that I am keenly aware of the situation in that area and the Red Lake area in particular is one we have been watching very carefully. Of course, we run into difficulty there as both the hon. member and I remarked earlier this evening in deciding who is responsible for people who have for ten years been off the reservation.

Mr. Benidickson: Well, even for two.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not know whether these people are living in houses and paying municipal taxes and so on. They are certainly earning their livelihood in their communities and to all intents and purposes they are citizens of the municipalities. However, these are simply offhand remarks and are not intended to be an answer to the hon. member's question. We have taken a note of the other items on which he remarked and I shall see that he receives an answer to the specific points I have been unable to answer in my remarks this evening.

Mr. Benidickson: I wish to make one other observation and I think there is some advantage in doing so. The minister will be aware that there was recently held in Winnipeg what I believe is called a metis conference. Will the minister confirm that I have properly designated it?

Mrs. Fairclough: If I am thinking of the same one it is called the greater Winnipeg council of social agencies or—

Mr. Benidickson: Welfare council?

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Mrs. Fairclough: —planning council or some such thing.

Mr. Benidickson: In Kenora, although not all people are interested in the problem of the integration of the Indians—and that is our difficulty—a sufficient number of people are interested that approximately 12 people at their own expense travelled 150 miles from Kenora to attend this conference in Winnipeg. Included among them were the recreational director, a couple of clergymen, an educator and a representative of the chamber of commerce. They attended the conference at their own expense. These people from Kenora are interested in the problem of trying to make the Indian welcome in the community. These are people that are farsighted enough to know that this is a problem that has to be dealt with.

Although 12 went to Winnipeg and profited from attending the conference those in Kenora who are interested in this matter are wondering whether it is possible to arrange in Kenora through the co-operation of the Indian affairs branch a conference which could be attended by responsible officials of the minister's department, chiefs of the bands that are contiguous to Kenora, and so on.

Mrs. Fairclough: Of course, the particular conference to which the hon. member refers was not organized by my department but wherever a conference is organized under whatever auspices and where the question of the welfare of Indians is the subject of discussion, on invitation from the sponsoring authorities we always do send representatives—

Mr. Benidickson: You send good representatives.

Mrs. Fairclough: —who are prepared to discuss the problems with which they may be confronted.

Mr. Benidickson: All the representatives of the minister's department are good.

Mr. Fisher: I did not receive an answer from the minister about Mobert, Ontario. I asked a question about complaints received from the chief about welfare provisions as established within the agency and his inability to get people who are sick to hospital because of lack of funds and the difficulty of getting welfare assistance for young unmarried Indian males.

Mrs. Fairclough: Again any matters affecting health come under the Department of National Health and Welfare. Was there any question apart from that of medical care?

Mr. Fisher: Well, whose responsibility is it? Where does the chief take his complaints when he finds that the provisions for welfare and health are not adequate? My own feeling is that he should not be taking them to his member of parliament. They should be taken to the Indian agent closest to him. I should like to know who is looking after the Mobert band.

Mrs. Fairclough: I will be very glad to look into it, Mr. Chairman. I am not familiar offhand with the particular problem that is raised. As I said, any matters affecting health come under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I should think the chief could take his problems to the Indian superintendent. I will be very glad to look into the matter and see what I can find out about it for the hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a small question to the minister on a matter I raised last year concerning the housing project for the dominion Abitibi band reserve north of Amos. I understand that last year an amount was voted for a road or street development. I wonder whether there are any new developments and whether in the item for construction and acquisition we are about to vote there is an amount included for this housing project?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid my officials have not come prepared with a breakdown of what is available on individual reserves. I can tell the hon. member that for the province of Quebec out of this total vote there is an amount of all purposes of $45,300 and $18,500 for agencies, but whether a part of that refers to what the hon. gentleman has just mentioned I could not say. However, I will look it up and let him know.

Mr. Benidickson: I think this will be my last question of the minister. In the last item to which I will not speak there is reference to education. The minister and I have been in correspondence. I pointed out that some of our senior Indian students were required to travel as far as 1,000 miles away from home if they wished to pursue their education at the high school level. In reply the minister reported to me that she had a plan for providing high school education for Indians at the lakehead. Has the plan progressed? Alternatively, could the minister tell me whether she thinks it would be cheaper, wiser and better to provide boarding allowances to high school students who might attend the local high schools in the communities nearest to them such as Fort Frances, Kenora or Sioux Lookout?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, of course we would like to have these students attend non-Indian schools. We think it is better in the long run to have the Indians take their education and particularly their high school education in integrated schools. But once more may I say that I do not have the head of our education branch here.

Mr. Benidickson: I know the minister will write me and explain the matter.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes. I will do that.

The Chairman: Shall vote 618 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: May I take just one second before the vote carries, Mr. Chairman. I must say that I am rising to defend the minister. I wanted to say that I agree with the minister in her view that the Ontario government is not assuming its responsibilities in the matter of the education of these Indians who are not living on reserves. I did my best when I was minister to try to persuade them that Indians were citizens like other Canadians and that if they chose to live in a province and not on a reserve it was the business of the province to provide education for them as it did for other people. I am glad the minister took the same position tonight. I was rather hoping that one by-product of having a government of the political complexion of the present one was that the minister might have more influence at Queen's Park than I had. However, I am sorry that she has been obliged to confess the fact that she has no more influence than I had. If we both express in this House of Commons this view that the Ontario government ought to treat Indians as they treat other citizens, perhaps our voices may reach even to Queen's Park.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Dunlop said he would do it.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the supplementary estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Technical and vocational training assistance—

636. To carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder—payments to the provinces—further amount required, $28,400,000.

The Chairman: Shall vote 636 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: I assume that the minister has something to say on this item.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, this item in the further supplementary estimates for $28,400,000 is to provide additional funds for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, to meet our anticipated commitments under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

A recent survey of the provinces indicated that claims made and to be submitted under the various programs provided for under the agreements for technical and vocational training assistance will now reach $75 million during the current fiscal year.

In the main estimates for 1961-62, the sum of $26,600,000 was provided: an additional $20 million was voted under item 534 of the supplementary estimates passed by the committee in September, 1961. This further sum of $28,400,000 is required to meet the claims expected as a result of the latest information we have now received from the provincial governments.

When we consider, Mr. Chairman, that federal payments for technical and vocational training during the past fiscal year, 1960-617, amounted in total to approximately $8,500,000, the committee will appreciate, I am sure, the rapid expansion which has taken place in the establishment of new training facilities under the new act.

Members of the committee will also appreciate from this large increase the major contribution which this government is making to meet the technical and vocational training needs across the country in co-operation with both provincial and local bodies.

Of the $75 million which I have mentioned, over $53 million will be paid this fiscal year for capital assistance to trade and vocational schools, technical institutions and vocational high schools or in other words to provide for training facilities.

Approval has been given so far under the agreements with the provinces for 245 projects. These cover the construction of 134 new schools, 80 major additions and 31 minor additions to existing schools. These new facilities will provide for over 90,000 additional student placements.

It is obvious from the widespread response that the provincial and local authorities share the federal government's conviction that vigorous action is required to improve the technical knowledge and skill of our Canadian labour force.

It is this tremendous demand for new training facilities which has necessitated introducing this further supplemental estimate to provide for $28,400,000, in addition to the $46,600,000 in our original estimates.

The estimated total expenditure on the new projects is in excess of $269 million, of which the federal government's share will be about $179 million.

Included in these projects are the construction of one new institute of technology, 18 new trade schools, five new combined trade schools and institutes of technology and some 114 new vocational high schools.

Over and above these new schools, alterations and additions will be made to five institutes of technology, 16 trade schools, two combined trade schools and institutes, 56 vocational high schools and 31 minor alterations.

The total number of projects to date, the estimated expenditure for these new facilities, and the additional student accommodation by provinces, are as follows. I have here a table that I would ask permission of the committee to be included in Hansard.

The Chairman: Has the minister leave to have printed in Hansard the table he has referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to is as follows:]

New Technical and Vocational Training Facilities

Estimated capital expenditures by provinces on projects approved up to Feb. 23, 1962

	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Yuk.	Can.
Number of projects	10	2	8	8	5	166	16	5	17	5	1	245
Total cost $(000,000)	15.4	*	4.1	2.7	10.9	188.6	4.2	1.9	28.8	12.0	.8	269.2
Federal share $(000,000)	11.5	*	3.1	1.8	5.0	124.4	3.1	.7	20.5	8.5	.6	179.2
Additional student accommodation (000)	3.	*	1.5	1.5	2.5	70.0	1.9	.6	8.9	2.9	.1	92.8

*The total to date is $8,968 of which the federal share is $6,725.

Mr. Starr: The federal government, as members of the committee know, is contributing 75 per cent of the cost of this new construction up to March 31, 1963.

The Chairman: Much as I dislike interrupting the hon. member, it is now ten o'clock.

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Starr: With the consent of the committee, may I say that I will take only about three minutes to complete my statement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: Go ahead.

The Chairman: Has the minister leave to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: It will contribute 50 per cent under our agreements with all of the ten provinces after this date.

This multi-million dollar federal-provincial program is a massive national effort to increase training facilities and programs. It has already far exceeded what we hoped would result when we introduced our training legislation to parliament in 1960.

The response of the provinces to our offer to pay 75 per cent of provincial expenditures for new training facilities until March 31, 1963, has been nothing short of remarkable. We had hoped to increase Canadian facilities by 50 per cent in a five year period, but it now appears that this goal will be met in less than half the time.

In addition to this expansion of training facilities, sparked by the new legislation, the agreements with the provincial governments provide assistance in various ways for the development and operation of training programs for both youth and adults. These programs include vocational high school training, technician training, trade and occupational training, training in industry, training of unemployed persons, training of disabled, training of technical and vocational teachers, vocational correspondence courses and student aid.

One of the main reasons for this program of greatly expanded assistance to technical and vocational training is the necessity for developing more highly skilled members of the labour force in response to automation and technological change.

The training programs now in operation are placing increased emphasis upon technical knowledge both of those now employed and for youth. Programs are also being promoted in industrial establishments to keep workers abreast of technological changes and to raise levels of basic skills.

Before closing, Mr. Chairman, I should like to explain briefly the composition of the item before us. By far the largest part of the total amount of $28,400,000 is required for capital assistance, namely, $24,550,000.

For technician training an amount of $3,341,300 is needed to provide for developments in this highly important area of training which were not foreseen when the original estimates were drawn up. The remaining amount of $508,700 is required, as explained in the estimates, to restore deductions made for anticipated lapses in the main estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister tomorrow, so that we can have these during the course of the discussion, put on Hansard by provinces the places, the cities or communities in which these trade and vocational schools and technical institutions have been constructed or have been approved by the department?

Mr. Starr: The table that I asked to have placed on Hansard as part of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, does show by provinces and the number of schools in each province, the cost of these schools in each province and the federal contribution. Now, I believe the hon. member says he would like to have a table showing where each school is located. I do not really know that we have that information, but in case he does wish only for that, that is fine. If he wishes anything more than that, I would appreciate it very much, so that we may be able to get all the information for him, if he would give us in writing what he wants.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not see what the minister's table contained, although as I looked at it from here it seemed to be a short one.

Mr. Starr: It is all there.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think the names of the schools are there.

Mr. Starr: I say write everything down that you want.

Mr. Pallett: That is not what the hon. gentleman asked for.

Mr. Pickersgill: The names of the places.

Mr. Pallett: The names of the places, not the names of the schools.

The Chairman: Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Chevrier: The committee allowed the minister some extra time beyond ten o'clock to conclude his statement.

Mr. Churchill: But it was not allowed for you.

Mr. Chevrier: If you want to stop me, that is all right.

The Chairman: I know the committee gave permission for the minister to conclude his statement. I do not believe the committee has given leave for the debate to be further continued. I hear voices calling it ten o'clock, and I therefore feel it is my duty—

Mr. Chevrier: I am asking you to allow me to ask an additional question.

The Chairman: In order to do so, I must put the question to the committee to ascertain if unanimous consent is given. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Mr. Winch: Ten o'clock.

The Chairman: It seems that unanimous consent is not given. Therefore, it being ten o'clock, I shall rise and report the several resolutions.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business will be for tomorrow and next day?

Mr. Churchill: I hope tomorrow we will be able to complete the supplementary estimates, Mr. Speaker; tomorrow will be the twelfth day so far this session. Last year on similar supplementary estimates the committee spent three days. If we are finished the supplementaries tomorrow, then I expect we will go on with the main estimates for the next fiscal year.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just bring to the attention of the house leader the fact that we have been on this group of supplmentary estimates, No. 3 for four days. We were on the further supplementary estimates, No. 2, to which the minister referred last night and lumped them with these, a period of six days. I do not consider both groups should be lumped together. They are separate groups of supplementary estimates, one of which was tabled earlier in the session and the other of which was tabled on February 8. The first group was tabled on January 24. From the information I have before me we have been only four days on the second group, supplementary estimates No. 3, five days counting today.

Mr. Churchill: And tomorrow will be the sixth day.

Mr. Hellyer: And the seventh day we shall rest.

Mr. Churchill: Out of 40 days of this session, 12 days have been on supplementary estimates, and we still have the final supplementaries.

It being nine minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs branch—

Indian agencies—

618. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $136,000.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BRASSARD (LAPOINTE)—SIMILARITY OF NAMES IN NEWSPAPER REPORTS

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege.

In certain newspapers of the province of Quebec, my name has been linked with the now famous luncheon which took place in Quebec city during the week end. I should like to say that, while I did not attend this luncheon, my colleague from Chicoutimi did. Despite the fact that our surnames are identical, newspapermen should be careful not to mistake what he does for what I do.

Mr. Vincent Brassard (Chicoutimi): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

I understood the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) to complain, a while ago, that his name was mistaken for mine in some week-end press reports.

I want to state that if such an error took place I had nothing to do with it and that I am not seeking any publicity. If the hon. member for Lapointe is looking for publicity, well, I am in no way responsible for it.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Second report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Cathers.

INDUSTRY

TENDER PROCEDURE RESPECTING GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES PURCHASED IN CANADA

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-76, respecting government purchase contracts (f.o.b. delivery).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Speaker, this bill will apply to government contracts for supplies to be purchased within Canada. Its purpose is to prevent discrimination against a tenderer due to his distance from the government supply depot or stockpiling point and the consequent additional freight charges the tenderer must add to his tender. In short, it takes away a built-in tariff enjoyed by companies in the central parts of Canada as opposed to those in the extremities.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION FOR CANADIAN PREFERENCE IN GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-77, to provide for a Canadian preference in government construction, purchase and service contracts.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Broome: This is the same bill that was introduced last session, and the title is self explanatory.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*TOLL REVENUE, JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE

Question No. 250—Mr. Fisher:

1. What percentage increase in toll revenue was there on the Jacques Cartier bridge in the period since the toll system was changed, by quarters?
2. What has been the total dollar difference between the revenue in this period and the immediately preceding period of the same length when the old toll system was in effect?
3. Given the increased earning powers of the bridge, what is the projected date when the debt of the bridge project as a whole would be wiped out?

Mr. Martini:

1. Automatic toll collection on the Jacques Cartier bridge commenced September 8, 1959, and the percentage increase in toll revenue, by quarters, compared with the previous year, since September 1959 was as follows:

Last quarter	1959	53 per cent
First quarter	1960	56 per cent
Second quarter	1960	64 per cent
Third quarter	1960	53 per cent
Last quarter	1960	11 per cent
First quarter	1961	7 per cent
Second quarter	1961	2 per cent
Third quarter	1961	1 per cent
Last quarter	1961	8 per cent

2. $2,703,155.

3. This part of the question necessitates an opinion as to the traffic in the future, and accordingly a definite answer cannot be given.

ST. JEAN MILITARY COLLEGE—CHIMNEY REPAIRS

Question No. 266—Mr. Dupuis:

1. Have any repairs been made to the chimneys of Le College Militaire Royal de St. Jean since June, 1960; and, if so, by whom were such repairs carried out?

2. Were tenders called; and, if so, what are the names of the tenderers and the amounts of the tenders?

Answer by: Mr. O'Hurley:

1. Yes. On July 13, 1961, a contract in the amount of $475 was awarded to Central Duct Work Reg'd., 197 St. James building, No. 102 College Militaire Royal de St. Jean.

2. Yes. The following firms were invited to tender:

Firms Invited	Amount Tendered
Central Duct Work Reg'd., St. Jean, P.Q.	$475
Paul Bisaillon, Iberville, P.Q.	778
The Singer Manufacturing Co., St. Jean, P.Q.	No quote.
J. Albert Morin, Iberville, P.Q.	No quote.

SABLE ISLAND WEST LIGHTHOUSE BEACON

Question No. 270—Mr. Morris:

1. Has an automatic daylight-controlled acetylene valve been installed for operation of the unattended acetylene beacon light at Sable island west lighthouse?

2. Does the valve extinguish the light during daylight hours?

3. Does it reignite each evening?

4. Is there an additional valve and control to monitor the main light at night?

5. Does failure of the main light cause the second valve to ignite an emergency light; and, if so, at what time interval?

6. How many failures have occurred in the system since it commenced operation, and to what was failure due?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

1. No.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. Answered by No. 1.

UNEMPLOYMENT—IMPACT OF AUTOMATION

Question No. 273—Mr. Caron:

1. Are any studies presently under way under federal auspices into the impact automation may have on unemployment; and, if so, which department or divisions of government are conducting such studies and have any publications been released on these studies to date?

2. Is it intended to publish the results of any such studies?

Answer by: Mr. Thrasher:

1 and 2. The Department of Labour, under its skilled manpower research program, has been conducting studies on the employment and manpower effects of technological change, including automation, since the summer of 1956. Studies published to date on this subject are as follows:

Report No. 2—Technological Changes and Skilled Manpower: Electrical and Electronics Industry and Heavy Machinery Industry (1957)

Report No. 3—Technological Changes and Skilled Manpower: The Household Appliance Industry (1958)

Report No. 8—Technological Changes and Skilled Manpower: The Automobile and Parts Manufacturing Industries (1960)

Report No. 9A—Technological Changes and Skilled Manpower: The Current Status of Electronic Data Processing in Canada (1960)

Report No. 9B—Technological Changes and Skilled Manpower: Electronic Data Processing Occupations in a Large Insurance Company (1961)

A comprehensive report, entitled "Technological Changes and Their Impact on Employment and Occupational", and based on the research findings, was presented to the special Senate committee on manpower and employment in February, 1961.

Last summer a substantial start was made on the manpower effects of technological change in the railway industry, when a special study was carried out covering railway operations in the Atlantic region. A report is now being prepared on the findings.

Plans are well advanced for a survey of a sample of computer users to determine the employment, occupational and organizational effects of office automation, for a second survey on the status electronic data processing in Canada, and for further studies in the railway industry.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 281—Mr. Herridge:

1. Who served as commissioners on the royal commission on publications?

2. How much did each receive, by name, in fees, salaries, expenses, etc.?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. (a) Mr. M. G. O'Leary, chairman, (b) Mr. C. P. Beaubien; (c) Mr. J. G. Johnston.

2. Name	Per Diem Fee	Expenses
(a) Mr. M. G. O'Leary	$13,650	$ 430
(b) Mr. C. P. Beaubien	9,975	960
(c) Mr. J. G. Johnston	9,450	1,410

*IMMIGRATION, 1961 AND 1962

Question No. 282—Mr. Badanai:

1. How many immigrants have been admitted to Canada, and from what countries, since the new immigration regulations went into effect on February 1, 1962, as announced by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

2. How many were admitted from all countries during the same period in 1961?

Mrs. Fairclough:

1. Statistics on the volume of migration to Canada are made available on a quarterly basis, and I must advise that I shall be unable to furnish the information requested in this question until some time next month. I might say, however, that the great majority of the immigrants who have been admitted to Canada since February 1, 1962, when the new regulations became effective, were undoubtedly processed abroad under the previous regulations.

2. During February, 1961, the number of immigrants admitted from all countries was 4,039.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

GARIBALDI PARK, B.C.

Motion No. 16—Mr. Winch:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia since January 1, 1960, relating to the establishment of Garibaldi park in British Columbia as a national park.

He said: I have been advised by the minister that there are no such documents as are asked for here. That being the case, I ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

EXPORT STRATEGIC LIST

Motion No. 18—Mr. McIlraith:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the strategic list referred to by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, page 708, Hansard, February 9, 1962.

Mr. Hees: Two weeks ago today my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, endeavoured to make a statement with reference to this motion, but the hon. member for Ottawa West was not satisfied with it and proceeded to confuse the issue still further by making a correction in his own statement the following day. The facts are as follows—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I had better read the motion. It is not debatable. The minister may, of course, indicate whether it is acceptable or not and explain briefly why he takes his position, but as I say this is not a debatable motion.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as recorded in Hansard of July 9, 1956, the then private hon. member for Eglinton who now has the honour to be Minister of Finance asked for a copy of certain lists which were controlled through the export permits branch. After explaining the difference between the various lists the then minister of trade and commerce, Right Hon. C. D. Howe, said:

Hon. members will appreciate that I cannot table secret and confidential information—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees:

—exchanged with certain NATO and other friendly countries covering control of the shipment of strategic goods.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister is violating the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I did not make myself clear when I spoke before, but it is not in order to introduce arguments in accepting or rejecting a motion for papers. It is not a debatable motion. It can be transferred under the rules for debate at another time. As objection is taken to the statement of the minister, which in my opinion goes beyond the practice, I would ask him to confine himself to a statement as to whether or not the motion is acceptable.

Mr. Hees: I have here, Mr. Speaker, the Canada Gazette statutory orders and regulations, 1962, which contain what I believe is what the hon. member has asked for and which, of course, it is possible for me to send over to him as I shall be very pleased to do; but the other strategic list known as the COCOM list is the one which was refused to this house five years ago by Mr. Howe. I am afraid I must also refuse to make it available because it is a privileged document and not allowed to be made public.

Mr. McIlraith: It is very clear from the reference in Hansard and from the question which incorporates the page reference in Hansard that the list I am referring to is the one referred to by the Minister of Trade and Commerce at page 708 of Hansard of February 9. That is not the COCOM list.

Mr. Hees: I shall be very glad to give the hon. member the Canada Gazette list which I have here in my hand.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to proceed with the motion as it stands?

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think the minister accepts the motion on the same basis, that it is the list which he volunteers to produce that is called for by this motion.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the document I am willing to make available to the hon. member was tabled in this house some time ago, and I am glad to let him have a copy of it. As I understand it I am not allowed, as Mr. Howe was not allowed on the occasion to which I referred, to table the COCOM list.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I cannot determine what the motion means. I shall put the motion, but I would ask that the minister indicate again whether or not he accepts it before I do.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall accept the motion as I have interpreted it.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the limitations expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

BUILDING TRADESMEN—WAGE RATES STATUS

Motion No. 21—Mr. Winch:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all orders, correspondence, telegrams, and other documents issued since January 1, 1961, by the Minister of Finance, treasury board, or others relative to wage rates status of building tradesmen, such as electricians, steam fitters, carpenters, plumbers, machinists, etc.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I say that since filing this question I have been in consultation with officials of the Department of Finance and particularly the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance on this matter, and I understand that an agreement has been reached under which certain information will be filed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the motion is quite broad in its terms. It asks for copies of all orders, correspondence, telegrams, and other documents issued since January 1, 1961 by the Minister of Finance or others relative to certain matters. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, communications between the treasury board and other departments or members of the public service are not producible. Interdepartmental correspondence is not producible and intradepartmental correspondence is not producible. But this would still leave open to production communications between those mentioned, the minister, treasury board and others in the public service, on the one hand, and persons outside the public service on the other, and on that basis the motion would be acceptable on the understanding that it is confined to that latter group of communications.

Mr. Winch: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that apparently there has been some misunderstanding. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance met with me upon two occasions, and he had one of his treasury officers meet with me. We reached an agreement as to what was to be filed. I would hope that perhaps what was agreed on will be the information filed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I have correctly stated what is the understanding both of the parliamentary secretary and those officers of the Department of Finance who discussed this matter with the hon. member. What would be properly producible would be correspondence between persons in the public service and persons outside of the public service on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member prepared to accept the motion subject to the reservations expressed by the minister?

Mr. Winch: On the understanding that I had with the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: A motion cannot be put on the basis of an understanding which is not contained in the motion. Shall the motion stand?

Mr. Winch: Did you say "stand", Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I asked whether the motion should stand in order to give the hon. member an opportunity to clarify it.

Mr. Winch: No, Mr. Speaker. As far as I am concerned it is completely clarified. I am certain I will get the information I require. I accept the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I shall then put the motion to the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I indicated that on a proper interpretation of what is producible, the motion is acceptable. However, it is not acceptable as to many of the things that are specified in the hon. member's motion. I regret to say that he has not made himself clear on this subject. If he has accepted the statement of interpretation, then the motion is acceptable.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but this is not fair. The parliamentary secretary saw me—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot permit a debate to go on. If the order is not clear it may be withdrawn.

Mr. Winch: I will accept it, knowing that I will get what I want.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member who proposes the order is not prepared to accept the limitation expressed by the minister here in the house, that is one thing. If he is prepared to do that, I shall put the motion on that basis.

Mr. Winch: I shall accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion, subject to the limitation expressed by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

ORDER IN COUNCIL P.C. 1961-1012

Motion No. 24—Mr. McIlraith:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of order in council P.C. 1961-1012 of July 13, 1961, referred to by the Minister of Agriculture on page 1247 of Hansard on February 26, 1962.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Harkness: Tabled herewith.

BREAKWATER-CAUSEWAY, PORT HOOD, N.S.

Motion No. 27—Mr. Caron (for Mr. Robichaud):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the government of Canada, or any agency thereof, and the government of Nova Scotia, or any agency thereof, since January 1, 1956, on the subject of the construction of a breakwater-causeway at Port Hood, Inverness county, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Walker: The motion is accepted subject to the usual reservations as to privileged and confidential documents, and also the consent of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member for Hull may present this motion on behalf of the hon. member for Gloucester?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATION OF HEAVY INDUSTRY UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. In view of the impressive indictment made by the Canadian labour congress this morning over the failure of the government to provide proper labour representation on government appointed public bodies, will the minister say what steps are being taken to provide for heavy industry union representation on the productivity council which is now in session in Kingston?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had paid any attention, which I am sure he has not, to the make-up of the productivity council I feel sure he would have noted that representatives of labour constitute a very sizeable part of the membership of the council. I also feel sure that as he spent considerable time in the meeting this morning he will have noted the compliments which the president of the Canadian Labour Congress paid to the Department of Trade and Commerce for having a representative of labour on every one of our trade missions going abroad.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who apparently sat all through the deliberations this morning as I did. Is he not aware that the director of the united automobile workers and the director of the steel workers have complained that the heavy industry unions are not properly represented on the productivity council, and does he not recognize that they are a very important segment of the trade union movement in Canada?

Mr. Hees: As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the national productivity council has been carrying on very effectively and well and doing a good job for Canada during the past year. If this matter was of such great concern to the hon. member, I am surprised that he did not rise in his place and express his concern a long time ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did.

Mr. Hees: Having worked with the council and having spent a lot of time with its members, I assure him I am convinced that we could not have five better members on that council representing labour than those we do have. They are all excellent men doing an excellent job.

Mr. Speaker: I note that the hon. member for Essex East has given notice of a question on the order paper. Does it cover the same ground?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker. The question on the order paper has some refinements that I did not think would be understood by the minister.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TAPE RECORDING OF HOUSE PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I know it is not customary and may be out of order to address a question to you on orders of the day; therefore I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has noted or knows of the report written by Norman Campbell of the parliamentary press gallery to the effect that, unknown to the great majority of the members of the House of Commons, the proceedings of the house are being tape recorded. I should like to ask—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a question which relates to administration, and it is not customary to ask such questions in the house. It has been the usual and invariable practice not to involve the Chair in matters which are controversial. If the hon. member would like information about the matter which is raised in the press report, all he has to do is come to the Speaker's office and he will receive full information on the subject.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, sir. I will put the matter in a different way. May I now raise a question of privilege affecting all members of the House of Commons?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interfere in any way with the hon. member's remarks, but in view of the fact that the question was directed to me I think I should have the opportunity to answer.

Mr. Winch: I have not explained the entire situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question was directed to me, and I would have to answer that I do not have the information he has referred to.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is not one which is properly addressed to any member of the government because it is not a matter of the administrative responsibility of the government. If hon. members are—well, I think perhaps I should not myself introduce any controversial note, and I will leave the matter there.

Mr. Winch: Will you allow me to raise a question of privilege that concerns all members of the House of Commons?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Winch: I rise on a matter of privilege, namely that it has now been made public that the reports of proceedings of this House of Commons are not just being conveyed or registered by the Hansard reporters, in that there is now, and has been for some time, an electronic control going down to a basement room beneath the House of Commons whereby everything said in the house is taken down by tape recorder. I would ask you, sir, why this is being done; because there is a very definite question as to the records of the House of Commons, going back in custom and tradition, and now in a room below us there is a tape recording being taken of what is said in this house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member will also add to his statement—will the hon. member resume his chair? He raises a prima facie question of privilege, providing what he alleges is being done without the authority of the house. If he will complete his case by saying that, I shall entertain a motion to deal with the matter.

Mr. Winch: Then, sir, I shall say this; that just a year, or approximately a year ago, it was decided by yourself—I believe through the medium of Hansard—to have an experiment made on tape recordings. You, sir, reported to the house and we had knowledge. There was no objection. Consent was given and, to the best of my knowledge and of yourself in particular, the experiment failed. At that time, a year ago, you yourself said that would be done, but I have no knowledge that at any time in this session we in the House of Commons were told that a new experiment was to take place and that there were going to be tape recordings made in addition to our Hansard report. Now, sir, I have no knowledge of that being announced in this house.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised a matter which he asserts involves the privilege of the house, and perhaps in certain circumstances the privilege of the house would be involved if, without their consent, a report were being made of the proceedings within the house, because obviously that is a matter within the control of the house. I think I will recognize the question as involving the privileges of the house, and if the hon. member wishes to propose a motion, as a result of what he alleges, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. Winch: To go a little bit further and debate this matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter is not debatable, now that I have found that it involves privilege, unless there is a motion before the house.

Mr. Benidickson: Let us desist from the use of these machines.

POWER

MEETING WITH PREMIERS RESPECTING NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether meetings between the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers on the power grid question have been definitely scheduled for March 19?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Meetings have been arranged between representatives of the government of Canada and of the provinces. Not all will be in attendance. I think all the provinces except Quebec will be sending representatives. I emphasize that no question of intrusion in any way into provincial jurisdiction over power within the provinces will be raised. The purpose of the meetings is to bring about, in a spirit of co-operation and consultation, developments that may in months or years ahead make it possible for power to be transmitted from one province to another in order to bring together within this nation the greatest possible power development at the lowest price.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to receive the Prime Minister's answer, but I would like to ask him a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister expect to have a private conference with Premier Bennett of British Columbia before, during, or after the national grid conference to discuss the Columbia treaty issues as between the governments, which conference has been proposed by Premier Bennett?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think two of the premiers are going to be present at this conference, Premier Bennett and Premier Roblin. The only arrangement for any meeting between representatives of the government of Canada and Premier Bennett is for one that is to take place over the week end between the Minister of Finance and the premier of British Columbia.

CIVIL DEFENCE

MANITOBA—REPORTED STATEMENT BY PREMIER RESPECTING SHELTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister whether he has any comment to make on the statement of Premier Roblin of Manitoba, who is reported by the Canadian Press of last night to have said he would not encourage the building of private shelters in Manitoba because of the lack of any clear-cut policy on the part of the federal government?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have not seen the report in question, and I therefore have no comment to make.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Reply tomorrow.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF CUBANS INTO U.S. VIA CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the minister any comment to make on the four Cubans who defected at Gander, Newfoundland, last week, who are now seeking entry into the United States, and who saw their first game of hockey in Newfoundland?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I do not know whether the game had anything to do with it, but the individuals in question received their United States visas and were supposed to leave from Montreal last evening. So far as I know they took their departure, but I have not had a final report.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I must apologize for being so troublesome, but there are a number of serious matters that concern my constituency. In view of the wish expressed by the representatives of the municipalities, the chambers of commerce, labour organizations and industry in the Kootenays that members of the permanent forces be stationed there for psychological reasons and for the protection of property, if the attorney general of British Columbia applies for these forces according to the method mentioned by the minister yesterday in this house, would the federal government supply them to perform this service?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a hypothetical question, not one based on an actual application. It is not customary to ask hypothetical questions of the ministry.

Mr. Herridge: Has the minister received any correspondence from the attorney general along these lines?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the only word I have had from the attorney general was a telegram to which I referred yesterday and the answer that I gave yesterday to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. McFarlane) which is also the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

AGRICULTURE

PAYMENTS AND ARREARS UNDER ADVANCE PAYMENT LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, this is a question addressed to the Acting Minister of Agriculture, and it is in three parts.

First, did the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture, item 611, contain any stipulation or reservation other than the limits of cultivated acreage and maximum payment? Second, did the Prairie Grain Advance Payment Act provide adequate safeguards for the collection of arrears? Third, on whose authority has an agency of the government undertaken to deduct from acreage payments arrears under the Prairie Grain Advance Payment Act?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check into these various acts which have been mentioned in order to give a completely accurate answer to the question, and I suggest it should be put on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

SULPHUR CONVERTING CORPORATION, MONTREAL —INTEREST OR INVOLVEMENT OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Yesterday, as reported at page 1734 of Hansard, I asked whether the minister had any statement to make about the statement of Father Turgeon, parish priest of Lauzon. The minister answered:

This is the first time I have heard about this matter.

Is the minister in a position to answer today?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to look up the reference that the hon. member brought to the attention of the house at that time.

Mr. Caron: I will send you a photostat copy of the reference.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister do it tomorrow?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO CONCILIATION PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. I asked the minister last week if he would advise the house at the first opportunity when he reached a decision with respect to the request of the non-operating railroad employees for the appointment of a conciliation board. Has the minister yet reached a decision with respect to this matter?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Clancy.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Technical and vocational training assistance—

636. To carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder—payments to the provinces—further amount required, $28,400,000.

The Chairman: Shall this vote carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, and for the benefit of the hon. member for Essex East, I made my statement last evening. However, last evening the hon. member for Laurier asked if I could compile for him a list of the names of the schools in each province by municipalities. We have done this, and I am prepared to table this list for the information of the committee. However, I would just like to point out that the table I included in yesterday's Hansard as shown on page 1778 shows the position as of February 23, 1962, whereas this compilation goes beyond that, to March 14, 1962. Therefore there are other schools that are not in the table. This does not affect the correctness of that table, but it is a more up to date compilation. I ask permission to table this document.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it the intention of the minister to have this list inserted in Hansard?

Mr. Starr: The list is about 20 or 25 pages.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that it is not a very large expenditure of the public money to have 25 pages printed, when we are spending $25 million, so the public would know where this money is being spent. I think the minister should either read the list or ask to have it printed in Hansard, whichever he prefers. We want the list for the information of all hon. members of the committee and for anyone else who is interested. Merely tabling it does not provide it for that purpose.

The Chairman: We are in committee at the present stage, and the committee has not the power to order this insertion in Hansard. Therefore the only way it could be handled would be for the minister to incorporate it in his speech. If he received the unanimous consent of the committee he can have it inserted as a part of his speech. It could be done in that way, or it could be read by the minister.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think that is a ridiculous request, because then the hon. member would not be able to get this information until Hansard is printed tomorrow, whereas I am prepared to table it now and if anyone needs any part of this information it is readily available during the discussion, if that was the purpose of asking for such a list.

Mr. Pickersgill: One sometimes asks, how ridiculous can ministers get.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe that this government, which has more than doubled the expenditures on information and publicity, has let a minister come into this chamber with only one copy of this document. The suggestion that if he gave one copy to Hansard no copies would be available to hon. members is really ridiculous. I suggest that the minister make one of the copies he has available to Hansard and have it inserted as part of his speech. We do not want him to read it, but we do want it in Hansard and we would just like to have it as an extension of what he has to say. We would also hope that from the dozens of extra copies that ought to have been prepared in view of the request made last evening by my hon. friend from Laurier, one or two would be made available to hon. members of the committee so that we can discuss it today.

Mr. Benidickson: There are extra copies in his office, surely.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am rather amazed that the minister has not placed this table on Hansard. First of all, last evening in the brief declaration which the minister now regards as a satisfactory statement he did indicate that he would place these figures on Hansard. He was requested to do so by the hon. member for Laurier, who asked, as reported at page 1779 of Hansard:

> Would the minister tomorrow, so that we can have these during the course of the discussion, put on Hansard by provinces the places, the cities or communities in which these trade and vocational schools and technical institutions have been constructed—

Then the minister said:

> The table that I asked to have placed on Hansard as part of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, does show by provinces—

And so on. Surely there should be no question about the minister doing this readily so that we may have an opportunity of ascertaining whether the government is properly fulfilling the objectives that it indicated when the program was introduced it was going to see would be effected.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say at this point, just to correct any wrong impression that may be left with the committee, that the federal government has no power to designate where these schools will be built. That is entirely within the jurisdiction of each provincial government. We only participate in the expenditure in connection with these schools. I make that point so that the impression the hon. member for Essex East tried so deviously to leave with the committee may be corrected.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not know why the minister is being so touchy today. No one suggested that there is any constitutional problem involved in the tabling of figures that will show the extent of moneys that are being paid—

Mr. Starr: I am prepared to table them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —by this government to assist the provinces in respect of matters that come under section 92 of the British North America Act. I can only conclude that the minister is touchy today because of the very strong, and I think on the whole justifiable, criticisms levelled at the administration this morning by the Canadian Labour Congress, particularly on the question of inadequate labour representation on public bodies. It is significant, too, that in the brief presented this morning by the labour congress mention was made—

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order. This has nothing to do with the item under discussion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is now indulging in a new form of procedural interpretation which is unique. The fact is that the program covered by the supplementary estimate is one of those programs which came under the review this morning when the labour congress—

Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, by implication. The government should realize that the program is not as satisfactory as the minister would seem to indicate. I have read the statement made last night by the minister in the closing hours of our sitting, and I regret to think that he feels that this was an adequate statement of what is degarded as one of the major devices now being employed in the long term to provide relief for the very serious unemployment which continues in this country.

It is regrettable that we should be discussing this particular problem at this moment without having before us the latest reported figures on unemployment. This is March 14. We received the last report on February 13, and the usual practice is for the dominion bureau of statistics and the Department of Labour to make available the latest unemployment figures month by month. More than a month, now—just over a month —has elapsed since the last figures were produced. One wonders—and I am not suggesting that this is necessarily so—whether the figures are not available today because of the representations which were made this morning by the largest body of labour in Canada and also, possibly, because we are now discussing a matter that has to do with the rehabilitation of the unemployed.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no question of privilege involved in this.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member now speaking has left the impression that the figures prepared by the dominion bureau of statistics on the employment and unemployment situation are being withheld.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Starr: Yes, it is. He says they are being withheld purposely because of the representations by the Canadian Labour Congress and because—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Starr: You have too much to say. You had better sit down. I have the floor now. You can push somebody else around, but you are not pushing me around. I know you would like to very much.

The Chairman: Order. Now I have the floor. I gave the floor to the Minister of Labour, who has brought up a matter of privilege, and I will hear him out on his question of privilege before any other problem is raised.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have risen on a point of order respecting the question of privilege.

Mr. Starr: I am speaking on a question of privilege, and I am not going to be bulldozed by anyone who does not observe the rules of the house.

An hon. Member: Cool down.

The Chairman: The minister has not finished speaking on the question of privilege.

Mr. Benidickson: Surely a point of order intervenes.

The Chairman: If there is a point of order which arises I will hear the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on the point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order is this—

Mr. Starr: A question of privilege has precedence over a point of order, even if the hon. member does not know it.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the rules.

The Chairman: I think that for the intelligence of the Chair and of the committee it would be well if the minister were to state briefly his question of privilege. Then if there is a point of order I will hear the hon. member on the point of order. But before any point of order can arise the minister must make his statement.

Mr. Starr: Because there have been these interruptions I want to repeat what I have said on my question of privilege. My point is that the hon. member for Essex East left the impression with me, and I am sure with the members of this committee, that the dominion bureau of statistics release on unemployment has been withheld because of the presentation of the Canadian Labour Congress representatives and because this supplementary estimate was coming up for discussion. I say that is wrong and false, and the hon. member knows it very well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order, and I submit in the most respectful way for the consideration of Your Honour that since I was rising on a point of order as to the propriety of the question of privilege I should have been heard immediately, because the point of order I was raising was that this was not a question of privilege and that the minister had said enough to demonstrate that fact.

As Your Honour is well aware, a question of privilege arises with respect to an individual member or to the house or to the committee, and not with respect to the thin skin of the government. What the hon. gentleman was seeking to do in the guise of a phony question of privilege was to reply to an argument put forward by the hon. member for Essex East before my hon. friend had completed it, an argument condemning the conduct of the government. If it is no longer to be competent for members of the committee on this side of the house to criticize the government without phony questions of privilege being raised and continued even when points of order are raised about them, although hon. members have a right to raise those points of order, we shall soon have no rights left in the opposition in this chamber.

Mr. Starr: To deal with the point of order, which is not a point of order, raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, may I say it was just pure nonsense and hot air as usual.

The Chairman: I believe the matter arose out of the desire of the minister to make a personal explanation, which is often treated as a matter of privilege, arising from a remark made by the hon. member for Essex East. The hon. gentleman has made his explanation and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has raised a point of order on the propriety of the question raised. I think now we should hear the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Pickersgill: I feel I must respectfully insist upon a proper judgement as to whether or not this kind of tactic—

An hon. Member: Boloney.

Mr. Pickersgill: —of raising so-called questions of privilege and interfering with the right of the opposition to present its case is to be tolerated in this committee. This is just a new form of closure.

The Chairman: I have ruled on the matter. Points of privilege and points of order can only be dealt with as they arise. Right now they have been settled, and if the hon. member for Essex East has not finished his remarks I will call on him to continue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am surprised that Your Honour should suggest that perhaps I had finished. It must have been apparent that I was just beginning. Now that I have the opportunity to take part in the discussion I will afford the Minister of Labour an occasion to develope that serenity which lends itself to a more objective form of debate. We all understand that the minister, at the present time, is touchy. He has obviously been irritated by what happened this morning. I hope he will calm himself and listen to a discussion of this matter—

An hon. Member: Get on with it.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask you—

The Chairman: I do not know what the hon. member wants to ask me, but I want to ask members of the committee to restrain their remarks and interjections so that whatever is being said can be heard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, having in mind some of the experiences we have had in the past two or three weeks during debates in this house, to take note of what is happening now.

It is evident that hon. gentlemen opposite do not like to have members of the official opposition examine their policies or criticize those policies and every time we undertake to make a statement of criticism there apparently is an organized claque sitting behind the ministry who make it impossible. I am simply suggesting with great respect to the Chair that it is the function of the Chair to see that this claque behind the ministry does not succeed.

The Chairman: Order. I think at this stage I should say a word. As the hon. member for Essex East knows very well and as I hope other hon. members know I have been attempting to restore order. I will ask all hon. members to co-operate so that we may proceed with the debate in an orderly fashion. That is all I have to say for now. If there are further interruptions I trust we shall be able to deal with them as they arise.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The matter we are now discussing, Mr. Chairman, is one of the greatest importance to this country because notwithstanding the extenuating circumstances and the explanations given by this government the fact is that we still face in Canada a very serious problem of unemployment more serious that that existing in any other country in the western world. That cannot be contradicted by the Minister of Labour.

The particular item now under discussion is one related to a mitigation of that problem. It deals with a program that should have been embarked upon a long time ago, certainly not later than—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): 1955.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the beginning of 1958 by this government.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): 1955.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course there was work being done along those lines then, but the problem has become serious particularly since the autumn of 1957.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): 1955.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since the fall of that year we have had more unemployment in Canada—

Mr. Flynn: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The minister is rising on a point of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

As usual, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is not confining himself to the item under consideration. We are called upon to vote an additional amount under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, and I ask you to consider the relevancy of the hon. member's remarks with regard to the supplementary estimate now before the house.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer you more particularly to page 738 of May's sixteenth edition which reads partly as follows:

(Text):

—but if the supplementary estimate is merely to provide additional funds of a relatively moderate amount required in the normal course of working of the services for which the original vote was demanded, only the reasons for the increase can be discussed and not the policy implied in the service which must be taken to have been settled by the original vote—

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, as usual the hon. member for Essex East is trying to go beyond the scope of this debate.

(Text):

The Chairman: Does the hon. member for Essex East wish to speak to the point of order?

(Translation):

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I feel the point of order raised by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is not well taken. I am surprised that the minister should rise on a point of order; indeed, as he presided over our discussions for nearly three years, I would have expected him to come up with something more worth while.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, if I may help the hon. member understand my point of order, I should like to point out to him that he was starting off on a general discussion of the employment and unemployment situation, which is not relevant to the item under consideration.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on the point of order which has twice been spoken to by a minister of the crown opposite. I would say this. I am astonished that even so inexperienced a minister as the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys should regard $28 million as an insignificant addition to a vote. We on this side of the house do not regard the spending of $28 million of the taxpayers' money as insignificant.

The Chairman: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the foundation, sir.

The Chairman: At this stage I feel I should rule on the point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, am I to be denied my argument on the point of order when the minister has spoken twice?

[Mr. Flynn.]

The Chairman: Order. I must remind the hon. member that I was on my feet. As far as the point of order is concerned I wish to point out that I feel the hon. member for Essex East in speaking to this item, which as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out is an important one was laying a foundation for his argument and so far I have not found that he has strayed too far from the subject matter, which is rather broad. I now ask the hon. member for Essex East to continue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I would be less than appreciative if I did not recognize the precise way that Your Honour has recognized how invalid was the interpretation of Your Honour's predecessor, the present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let the record show it. There is the claque again. They do not like it.

Mr. Pugh: Speak to the item.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Some of those who are resisting what I am now saying represent communities where thousands of people are out of work. If hon. gentlemen opposite persist I shall take each one of them by constituency and name them as being among those who, instead of making it difficult for us to speak about solutions for unemployment, should join with us in our objective discussion attempting to ascertain what should be done to correct a problem that is more serious in Canada than in any other industrial country in the western world.

Mr. Ricard: What did you do?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is all very well for the government—

Mr. Pallett: If the hon. member is to name members he might start with the hon. member for Leeds who is constantly interjecting.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member who now interrupts me, the whip of the Conservative party, is the last member in the house who should, because his constituency is one in which thousands of people are out of work as a result of the policies of this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Arrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Arrow, the Arrow; oh, precious memory. Fifteen thousand men overnight were let go as a result of the failure of this government to properly assess economic conditions relative to employment as they affected the situation at that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thrown out of work by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hellyer: Nothing is left of the Arrow but ashes and a bitter memory.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: I observe that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is rising.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I simply wished to ask the hon. member if he would permit a question. The hon. gentleman suggested he would take each constituency and deal with the unemployment problem there. I for one would be most grateful if the hon. member would give some concrete examples of how we might alleviate unemployment in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will give the hon. member a good answer immediately: change this government. I have other answers but I will not give them until I have concluded what I am now saying.

Mr. Nugent: My constituents will recognize the extent of the assistance the hon. member offers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The proposal that $28,400,000 additional moneys be voted by this house in respect of the government's technical and vocational training assistance program is one that is of course welcomed by everyone in this house. But the point is that when we are discussing this we ought to ascertain the extent to which the present program is meeting the problem. We ought to ascertain the extent to which the provincial governments which, as the minister probably said, have a constitutional responsibility in this matter are bearing their share and cooperating in a program which in the long term, and only in the long term, will have the effect of mitigating the serious unemployment problem.

In a speech he made on February 22, 1961 the minister recognized that the government embarked on this program somewhat tardily. The minister did not say so, but he might well have said that when it became apparent in the autumn of 1957 that unemployment was reaching abnormal and alarming proportions he would have done well to heed the warning of the leader of the opposition and several other hon. members in the Liberal party to the effect that some positive steps ought to be taken to accelerate this vocational training program. I myself placed on Hansard the statement made by the chairman of the vocational training council which advises the minister on this very program. In his report the chairman had pointed out that, according to the advice given by the unemployment insurance commission, there was every indication that 1958 and following years for an indefinite period were going to be difficult ones from the point of view of unemployment. He also pointed out that, such being the case, the government should make available funds with which to accelerate the program. We mentioned this matter on the floor of the House of Commons. At that time we were told by the Minister of Labour that the situation was not as serious as we had pictured it, that the government was doing everything it could in the matter of vocational training and that all was well. Indeed, the Minister of Finance, in his budget some few months later, denied that the problem even existed in proportions that required more than normal treatment.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was going with the snow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, they said it was going with the snow; and as the Prime Minister said, "No one will suffer as long as I am Prime Minister or as long as a Conservative government is in office". That was the tenor or the sense of this government's appreciation of the problem at that time. Yet, as I say, we find the Minister of Labour speaking in Ottawa on February 22 and saying that the program had been expanded impressively in Britain, in Germany and in France. The minister even said that Russia is making great strides in many fields but that Canada is lagging behind. Those are the words of the Minister of Labour on February 22, 1961. When we are examining how slowly this program is moving I think it is only right that we should point out that it would have moved much faster if it had been embarked on in this accelerated fashion much earlier than the government finally took action after the prodding—and that is a matter of record—of hon. members sitting here in the Liberal party. All that hon. gentlemen opposite have to do is to look at Hansard and they will see the kind of criticisms they make about our suggestion that one way of mitigating unemployment was by providing further training for the unemployed.

This afternoon the minister said that I was wrong in suggesting that the Canadian Labour Congress this morning had criticized the government. I have not had a chance to read the brief again but I am sure that my impression of the representations that were made this morning is accurate. But let there be no doubt about what labour thinks about the tardiness of this government in trying finally to do something about this problem along the lines that were recommended. I have before me a statement of Mr. Archer, the president of the Ontario Federation of Labour who, commenting on this problem, said this:

The training program for 1,400 unemployed, announced on Tuesday by Education Minister John Robarts, is too little and too late—

He said:

"I don't know why they didn't start this years ago when there was a chance of it having some effect,"—

As we know, this problem is related to actions taken by provincial governments because the federal government under this scheme—and for this we complimented the government at the time—is providing 75 per cent of the capital cost of technical and vocational training facilities up to March 31, 1963, and 50 per cent thereafter. I will say to the Minister of Labour that now is the time to recognize that this limitation is not satisfactory. We are just beginning to deal with this problem of providing vocational training to the unemployed and the unskilled. This date of March 31, 1963 should be advanced. We should now let the provinces know that we are prepared to pay at least 75 per cent of the capital cost of technical and vocational training for a longer period.

We are now being confronted with evidence of the tremendous effect of automation—much more in the last year than perhaps we have had in the last decade—when all over this country, as in the United States, there is evidence that the discoveries in the electronics industry in particular have brought about a massive movement toward automation the like of which we did not even anticipate a year ago. This is going to put more and more people out of work. The hon. gentleman—I refer to the Minister of Labour—who now indulges in what is perhaps an important conversation with the whip but which I am sure is not as important as that in which I am now engaging, should embark upon a program that will advance this limited date of March 31, 1963. We must really try to meet this problem of training in a manner away beyond anything that is now in existence and even away beyond the level designated by the hon. member for Trinity, who in a notable speech in this house five years ago stated—

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member but I wonder whether he would answer a question at this time, as I feel it is relevant to the point he is now making. The question I should like to ask is this. Would the incentive to the provinces be lost if they now knew that the date of March 31, 1963, was now going to be extended three or four years. I suggest that it is the incentive to take advantage of the offer that is making the buildings go up at the present time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Westmorland has put a serious question and he deserves a serious answer.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Nugent: I put a question and did not get a serious answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I gave the hon. member a serious answer but I am going to give the hon. member for Westmorland a more serious answer because he deserves one. I am sure that the argument in answer to that question may not satisfy the hon. gentleman and there may be something in what the hon. gentleman says. However, if one bears in mind what has been said by the ministers of education, what Premier Robarts said last week, and what was said by the Minister of Labour in the month of September anticipating the character of the problem that was unfolding, I think the real view is that there is no need of our acting like children in this matter with regard to the senior levels of government but that we must co-operatively recognize the problem that is before us. If we lose something by anticipation, I am sure we shall gain by providing an opportunity for both governments to plan for what is undoubtedly one of the serious problems in our modern industrial society.

I have said that in the last few months alone we have seen evidence of the growing seriousness of the problem of automation. First of all, may I say this about automation. The government has in the Department of Labour some studies that are under way through the economic research division of the department. But are we satisfied in this House of Commons with the evidence of these researches? We have been asking repeatedly when certain studies are going to be completed. Last year I asked I think four or five times when the studies on automation in the automobile industry were going to be completed. I understand that they are now completed. However, while the automobile industry is one of the vital ones in this context, it is only one of a number. This government is not giving any evidence of its appreciation of the character of this particular problem. I know there are some in this country who say that we are exaggerating unemployment. I hear that said all the time. When I talk with hon. gentlemen opposite privately they always say, "You overstate the problem". Perhaps they are sincere in that statement.

Mr. McGee: Right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I notice that some newspapers say the same thing about those of us in the Liberal opposition who harp on this matter. The hon. member for York-Scarborough says "right". He is another one who should not say that when there are thousands of unemployed in the constituency he represents. I say this is a vital problem. I spent last week end, as I spend many week ends, in my constituency having delegations of groups and individuals come to me looking for work.

An hon. Member: Oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone says "oh". Let him come there and I will show him what it means to have hundreds of men and women who have no work come to me all day Saturday and all day Sunday. Some have been out of work for over three years. This story is one that can be repeated all over the country.

It is all very well for some to say that we are exaggerating this problem. It is all very well for them to say that we are playing politics with this problem. I deny that. Let them go to Brockville where 1,100 people are out of work. This problem is serious and it is going to have to be dealt with by our government, by the government of any free society if we are going to maintain the character of our free society.

This is no laughing matter. I speak this way today because, notwithstanding the good intentions of the Minister of Labour, I feel that the government has not yet realized the seriousness of the problem and has not yet realized that the problem instead of diminishing is growing. To be able to say that now there are only 545,000 unemployed compared with about 600,000 a year ago is no answer to the problem. That does not meet the situation. These 545,000 people constitute over 8 per cent of the work force of the country. That is a mighty serious problem, and I ask the government to give us any indication that they have plans that are going to provide for improvement in this situation.

They may be able to show that in the month of May there will be fewer unemployed than in the previous month, possibly less than in the comparable month of the previous year, but that will not satisfy or convince those that are concerned about the problem that any real step is being taken to deal with it. I will admit, as I have long ago in the house, that this particular method of providing assistance will have its beneficial results in the future ten years from now, but it certainly is not helping us at the present time. That is one thing that we must bear in mind. Having in mind that limitation, I suggest to the minister that there are some considerations with regard to the program that he should take into account to make it more effective in becoming a successful and vital instrument to deal with the problem of unemployment at a particular period.

First of all, we should be able to have from the department figures as to the number of students receiving vocational training in Canada. The minister said that he has placed a table before us which will reveal the expenditures by provinces, but I have seen a statement by an official of the Department of Labour, which appeared in the Financial Post only two weeks ago, in which he said with regard to information as to numbers of students:

> —we just can't. We are working on it but it isn't like Britain where there is some central authority which controls the whole picture.

In other words, even at this late date we cannot get from the government statistics as to the numbers receiving this kind of training which would enable us to make a more effective assessment of the validity of the program. For instance, we find that Prince Edward Island was dissatisfied with the $48,000 that Ottawa was prepared to pay toward establishing and running vocational schools in that province. Why was it dissatisfied? The government of that province wanted $100,000. The minister in charge of the department there said that $100,000 was the minimum that would be required to do the kind of job which is needed in the present circumstances in Prince Edward Island. The Minister of Labour ought to be able to tell us from an assessment of the figures why the situation is of such a character in the province of Prince Edward Island.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has now expired.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will continue later.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Canadian people heartily welcomed the announced intention some time ago to render effective assistance in the field of vocational or technical education. According to the table that was placed on the record last night, I understand that the federal government's contribution either already paid or contemplated with regard to projects approved to date will cost the national treasury some $179 million. I believe that the extent of the aid is an indication that the country is demanding action in this regard. As our products face ever increasing competition in the markets of the world and as other nations are becoming industrialized and automation is entering our production lines with greater and greater intensity, the problem of giving the scientific and technical know-how to our people in adequate numbers must be met if we expect to continue to grow as an industrial nation and compete in the markets of the world.

Having welcomed the extent of the effort of the government in this field, at the same time I want to condemn the government for its irresponsibility in spending $179 million without ensuring that the taxpayer is going to receive real value for the tax dollars that I am sure he is most willing to make available for the professed intent of the measure. I should like to ask the government this question. What consultation has it had with organized labour and organized industry in Canada in order to determine the particular types of technical education that are required by the country today and, more particularly, that are likely to be required in our economy tomorrow? It is my belief that the government has done practically nothing. It has spent almost $180 million on plans with regard to something about which it has practically no knowledge.

I know the answer will likely be that education is a constitutional responsibility of the provincial governments. However, I cannot ignore the fact that the federal government is paying 75 per cent of the cost and that in many instances the type of training that is being given is completely obsolete. We do not want to spend $180 million of the taxpayers' money to help people to learn hobbies and in effect to be fooling around and wasting their time as well as the taxpayers' money. Of what use is it, for instance, to train people in the art of woodworking if the industry involved is a disappearing industry on the national scene?

If the minister would only look at some of the courses that the majority of these students are taking he would at least get a glimpse of what I am attempting to convey to him. The government says it has nothing to do with the type of courses that are being conducted. Should that be the case then I feel it also is wrong in asking for this amount of money. We are quite prepared to vote the money, but we insist it is high time this attitude of playing Santa Claus, so that people may get a new school, should come to an end. It is ridiculous.

To have a school you must have a curriculum that is designed by experienced people who know what they are doing. It should be a curriculum designed to meet the needs of the community. This is not being done. I know it may well be the responsibility of a provincial government but the provincial government only has to pay 25 per cent and, that being the case, who is not going to buy a dollar's worth of building for 25 cents?

Technical schools are now being built in places in Canada where there is no real need for them, yet in other communities where the need exists they are not being built. In addition there are many students in these technical schools who are taking courses that have very little relationship to any possible means of earning a livelihood for themselves.

[Mr. Regier.]

The educators of Canada have not been taken into the confidence of this government. There are many who are pretending to teach in these schools and who have no knowledge of the technique of being a teacher. They have practically no training whatsoever. The government should undertake a massive, crash program of training, and I know that the situation warrants a crash program. In the first place this government owes a responsibility to the taxpayers to engage in a massive teacher training program and to evolve a curriculum that will satisfy the needs of Canadian communities.

I also hope the minister can explain why it is that the province of Ontario is able to absorb two thirds of the money being contributed by all of Canada. How is it that the province of Ontario, upon very short notice, was able to have plans ready for 166 projects to cost a total of $188 million while the province of Quebec had only five projects prepared to cost $10.9 million, and the province of British Columbia also only had five projects prepared, to cost $12 million? Did this plan originate in the political mind of the premier of the province of Ontario and was it then conveyed to the federal authorities, so that by the time the federal authorities made the public announcement that province, which has 85 representatives in this house, mostly government supporters, was able to go full steam ahead? Or is it possible that the province of Ontario was unprepared and that a lot of these projects are being undertaken without any planning? How can a community refuse a $3 million new school towards the cost of which it is not being asked to contribute a penny? It naturally is not going to look a gift horse in the mouth.

In the way this program is being administered the government is not making its proper contribution towards resolving the problem of retraining our people for the new scientific day and age that is rapidly emerging on our scene. The government is being most irresponsible and reckless in its expenditure of the taxpayers' money. I certainly hope the minister can give the country an assurance that his government, which is paying 75 per cent of the cost, is also assuming some responsibility to ensure that the nation's interest is being served in this expenditure.

I have no particular quarrel with the new vocational school in Burnaby. I believe that eventually we shall resolve our problems there and I welcome this institution to Burnaby. We have some experience of technical education and I do not think the situation there is too bad in so far as courses are concerned. However, I do know that many of the courses, including some of those taught in Burnaby, are a ridiculous and fantastic waste of the taxpayers' money. For instance, one of the courses teaches students how to become exterior painters of buildings. Good heavens, we have thousands of painters unemployed all across the country. What is the use in spending the taxpayers' money in teaching more young men to become painters?

I would challenge all hon. members to obtain for themselves a list of the courses and a description of the courses being offered in the vast majority of these new institutions. I believe they will then realize these courses bear very little resemblance to the technological age we are now entering.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has made one of the most irresponsible speeches I have heard in the house since arriving here in 1957. The hon. member used the words "irresponsible and reckless" to describe this program. He said it was "ridiculous" and "a fantastic waste of the taxpayers' money". He slandered all the school boards and provincial departments of education across the land, up, down and sideways. The hon. member's colleagues in the next election are going to eat those words.

Mr. Regier: On a question of privilege, our school boards in British Columbia have nothing whatsoever to do with this program.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member has made the statement that the school boards in his constituency have nothing to do with the erection of schools under this program. I let that statement stand. The hon. members from his own province, who are familiar with the situation, will deal with that particular statement. If it is as relevant as any of the rest of the things he had to say then I do not place much stock in it.

The fact of the matter is that this particular program is one of the most effective efforts put forward by this government in the short term, medium term, and long term answer to the problem of unemployment, which is acknowledged as serious in this country today. I am pleased—perhaps pleased is not a sufficiently strong word—I am delighted that in my constituency total federal grants will approximate $4,741,000 under this grant, and the latest project concerned was made public yesterday being in connection with an extension to an existing high school in the town of Leaside.

The problem which this country is facing so far as unemployment is concerned and so far as the economy is concerned is directly related to this question of technical and vocational training. I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is aware of the report of the committee on manpower and unemployment and the statistics that were presented to that committee concerning the percentage of the persons unemployed in our economy who are untrained and unskilled workers. I am sure he is aware that the people anticipating the development of this country in the next few years have emphasized and re-emphasized the vital necessity of retraining unemployed workers to make sure that we do not fall into the same error in the future. This program which the hon. member has suggested is designed to produce people skilled in hobbies, people fooling around, which as I said before he described as "fantastic waste of the taxpayers' money" and that statement is patent nonsense. When I confront the candidate from his particular political party, whatever that may be by the time the next election rolls around, one of the first questions I shall ask him is whether he supports this statement. I am sure that in the constituency and municipality of Scarborough, where the board of education have brought forward plans and have recognized and appreciated the importance of this plan to the extent of requesting grants close to $5 million under the program, his running mate will not appreciate the view expressed by the hon. member in the committee today.

It is all very well and easy for anybody to say that this program has not come along quickly enough. Let us just consider, before I move into that area of discussion, what the effect of this building program will be and how many jobs will be created both on-site and off-site in the construction industry in the skilled and unskilled areas. This is something that surely cannot be overlooked.

It is all very well for those persons commenting about this program to say that this is too little and too late, which is the favourite expression of the hon. member for Essex East when he is talking out of one side of his mouth; and when he talks out of the other side of his mouth a little later on he complains, deplores, moans and groans about the extent of the deficit—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, will the honourable, learned and mature gentleman explain what he means when he says that I speak first out of one side of my mouth and then the other. If the hon. gentleman has in mind what I think he has, then I will be very happy to deal with him when I reply in a few moments.

Mr. McGee: The hon. gentleman has an opportunity to speak this afternoon and I am sure he will have an opportunity to reply in the future. When he does, I hope he will address himself to the question. He and his colleagues on the front benches over there have been complaining about too little and too late, and the size of the deficit. Which is it going to be? It has to be one way or the other.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a fair comment; not an exact one, but it is a fair comment and I understand now what the hon. gentleman was thinking about.

An hon. Member: What is the point of privilege?

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, to go back—

Mr. Pickersgill: He referred to the hon. gentleman personally.

Mr. McGee: To come back to the matter we were discussing—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are all very touchy on this question.

Mr. McGee: I gather from the remarks of the hon. member from Essex East that he concedes that he has been talking out of both sides of his mouth at the same time. I would like to discuss this question of vocational and technical training schools. In Scarborough some years ago the authorities embarked upon a program of what I think was the largest institution of its kind. I have reference here to the Cedarbrae high school. At the time, and I believe this was three years ago, there were remarks within the community and within the school board itself about whether this type of project should have been brought forward at that time. To the great credit of the school board they persisted, and finally this school was built. I offer this as an answer to those who say this is too little and too late. The public attitude in that particular area at that time was such that an appreciation of the extent, nature and character of the unemployment problem was not what it is today, and for that reason they were reluctant to proceed with the erection of this Cedarbrae vocational and regular high school.

It is fine for the hon. member to suggest that we should embark upon crash programs for retraining and giving the presently unemployed persons skills and further education. Yet in the township of Scarborough, in connection with which my hon. friend from Essex East, with the calm confidence of a great and inspiring source of statistical information known as the Martin bureau of statistics, announced to the house and the country that there were thousands of unemployed—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. McGee: Yet the board of education in Scarborough, recognizing the low educational qualifications of the majority of the unemployed persons within that municipality, set up a school. Special arrangements for space and teachers were made. I am subject to correction on this because I am speaking purely from memory, but I believe approximately 90 persons indicated a willingness to undertake this training. The program was brought forward, the space provided by the board of education and classes were announced. The classes were begun and—I am again subject to correction on this—out of the 90 persons who had expressed a specific willingness to participate in this program, the first class was greeted by 10 participants. I offer this simply to illustrate that it is not as simple as many of us would like to think it is to embark upon these programs to retrain and increase the educational standards and technical competence of our unemployed workers.

On the other hand to suggest, as the hon. member for Essex East and his cohorts on the front benches over there have suggested, that this is all too little and too late, and to go further into the realm of irresponsibility and call this an irresponsible and reckless waste of the taxpayers' money is, I suggest, a preposterous exaggeration which will be treated for what it is worth by the electorate of this country when the time comes. It is, in effect, an insult to the intelligence of the voters in this land.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member, before he resumes his seat, would care to explain how the curriculum in Toronto in this field of operation is related to the industrial needs of our nation.

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. member repeat that question?

Mr. Regier: How is the curriculum that is being taught in the hon. member's riding related to this question; in what manner is it related to the industrial needs of our nation?

Mr. McGee: I am not certain what the hon. member is leading up to. If he suggests, as I thought he was suggesting in his speech, that the federal government should proceed to impose a curriculum on a particular province, a particular area or a particular constituency, I am afraid he will not find much support for that proposition in my constituency.

Mr. Hellyer: You are groping.

Mr. Regier: Is the program related, in the schools of Toronto, to the industrial needs of our nation?

Mr. McGee: Of course, this is fundamental to the whole program, as I said. Perhaps I made too broad an assumption when I suggested that the hon. member had been reading the reports of the various committees and groups that have been inquiring into this broad question of employment.

This is fundamental to the program. I think something over 80 per cent of the unemployed persons in this country lack skills and educational qualifications. This is an attempt, a vigorous, aggressive and effective attempt to correct that situation in our economy by providing this series of grants, which have been accepted and enthusiastically endorsed by most of the areas concerned in this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the committee was very impressed with the last statement of the hon. member for York-Scarborough. He stated as well as anyone has in a long time the purpose behind this particular act. I wish it had been possible for the hon. gentleman to join with those of us in this party who urged this course on the government early in 1958.

If the hon. gentleman will look back in the records of debates in this house during that period he will find that the reaction of hon. gentlemen sitting behind the treasury benches was not so ably stated by the hon. gentleman just a few moments ago.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, may I interject here? Could I make a comment here, with the hon. gentleman's permission?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the hon. member mind making his comment at the end of my remarks, otherwise I shall find that my time is up. I was interrupted by the minister, and perhaps—

Mr. McGee: I extended this courtesy to the hon. gentleman. Surely he could respond?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it a question?

Mr. McGee: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, put the question. I am doing this because of the persuasive argument of the hon. member for York-Scarborough.

Mr. Pickersgill: The authority on the rules.

Mr. McGee: I have a private member's bill which is coming up tomorrow, I hope at five o'clock, and the suggestion made to me that I should go back through Hansard for the last five years to read the hon. member's speeches is equal to the most vicious form of corporal punishment—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member is being facetious now. I was paying him the compliment of being a serious-minded gentleman but he has gone back to the kindergarten.

This is a problem which, as I am sure the committee will realize, is a serious one. We say that in Canada we enjoy, along with the United States, the highest standard of living in the world. If we are to maintain that standard of living we will have to increase the level of enlightenment among our people, and this means through accelerated programs at all levels. All our citizens cannot go to university, although we should aim to expand our university population to a much greater extent than is now apparently possible having regard to the professorial skills available. But it becomes increasingly clear that in this technological age if we are to meet the problem of unemployment we must provide our artisans and manual workers with greatly increased opportunities for development. This will require an expanded program far beyond anything which the government yet contemplates. The Minister of Labour must recognize this. When we take into account, for instance, the number of young people between the ages of 15 and 19 in the last decade and note that there has been an increase in that group of 250,000, we can see how gigantic is this problem at the present time. But if we accept the anticipations of our statisticians, we face the probability that in the next five years there will be an increase of 500,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 19. This, in a country whose population has grown by some 4,000,000 since the end of the war, on top of the problem of unemployment percentagewise which now exists and which, it is calculated, will continue to exist unless our economy becomes much more buoyant, presents us with a challenging task.

What I am seeking to do is to impress on the government a realisation that good as this program is, it is not sufficient. I am not confident that the government is taking steps consistent with the need, as we feel it exists and will arise. We have had no statement from the minister as to what the government's objectives are. We are told, as I indicated a few minutes ago, that on March 31, 1963, the federal contribution of 75 per cent toward the capital cost of technical and vocational training will drop to 50 per cent, at a time when the program will have assumed much wider proportions than now. If the government had a broad objective, it would seem to me it would not impose that shut-off date. In any event, when we are discussing this item we should have from the minister a statement of what the objectives are.

I believe that at the present time there are some 29 schools with 10,000 students in Canada providing technical training, toward which the federal government is making a contribution. What are the plans for 1963?

The government has fixed that year as the shut-off date. It must have something in mind. Does it intend that by 1963 the number of schools will have doubled? I have seen two figures suggested. I have seen it suggested that the number of schools will have increased to 40 by 1963. I have seen elsewhere the suggestion made that the increase would amount to about half that number. What plan has the government in mind? Has it discussed this matter with the provincial governments or is this simply a case of the federal government giving out grants without rhyme or reason?

While I do not agree with everything the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said, there is a lot of merit in some of the things he had to say.

Mr. Spencer: Oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member says "Oh". He obviously has not been considering the subject matter carefully or he would not have made that observation. He is usually more perspicacious than that.

Mr. Spencer: What part of the speech did you agree with?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Ask a specific question and I shall be glad to give a specific answer. I said that some parts of the speech had merit. I do not agree with the main thesis.

But it is plain from the statement made by the minister that at the moment the government does not have any complete or basic plan. Has it had real consultations and discussions with the provinces? This is not a question of the federal government entering into fields denied it under the constitution. It is simply a question of the government taking steps to expend properly money voted by parliament. If the province of Ontario has a plan in mind, that plan must have been communicated to the Minister of Labour. How many more technicians schools does the province of Ontario intend to establish? Does the minister know this? Does the federal government know this? Are we simply faced again with another example of a lack of preparation of the government's program? This may not be the case, but I ask members of the committee to look at the statement made by the Minister of Labour last night and arrive at any other conclusion.

The minister had nothing to say about another aspect of this matter. There should be in this measure not only an imposed monopoly of duty on the two senior levels of government, particularly on the provinces. There is a responsibility on the part of industry. What has been done to promote a measure of co-operation between industry and the departments concerned in the two levels of government, engaged in providing for the training of all the groups concerned in this plan? Some statement should be forthcoming from the government with regard to this. What encouragement is the government giving to industry to associate itself with provincial departments of education, provincial departments of labour and the vocational training division of the federal department of labour? We do know of cases where large industries carry on, and have carried on, programs of training which have been valuable. My two colleagues who come from Essex county will support me in the statement that in the Ford Motor Company plant there has been a training school which has provided many hundreds of young men with valuable technical training for use in that industry in particular. Is this kind of thing continuing? Is any effort being made under this program to provide for the establishment of similar training facilities in other large industrial establishments as well as in schools which come under the jurisdiction of the provincial government? These and many other questions should be discussed by the Minister of Labour in asking us to approve this item, which of course we shall do—

Mr. Starr: Oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but we would do it with greater appreciation if we had from the minister a penetrating analysis of the problem, some indication that the government recognizes the seriousness of the situation.

I should like to have had from the minister particularly a statement about the situation in the automobile industry. When one thinks of what the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission said three years ago, that only one in ten of the unemployed of our country had a skill that qualified him for an existing job, one appreciates, of course, more readily than would otherwise be the case the seriousness of this problem.

How many automobile workers thrown out of work have the skills to enable them to take other jobs? How many of the coal workers in the maritime provinces—and there is a most serious situation—have been provided with the skills that would enable them to take jobs for which their present skills do not enable them to qualify? Are we not to address ourselves to this problem? Are we going to correct it? Surely the government cannot hope to convince the Canadian people that it has embarked on a vigorous program when we have from the minister no information whatever about these aspects.

I should like to know what the Minister of Labour has to say about a report showing the technological changes that have taken place in the automobile industry among auto workers engaged in direct production. This report was issued by the Department of Labour some time in the month of November, 1960. That study, carried out under the skilled manpower training research program, indicated that the number of employees engaged in direct production fell by 6 per cent between 1948 and 1958 although production increased by more than 36 per cent and total employment in the industry advanced by 7 per cent. Having in mind the number of men who were disengaged and thrown out of work, in the light of this very declaration of a body that worked under the minister, we are certainly entitled to ask what has been done to meet the problem. We are entitled to more information than that contained in the general terms used by the minister.

We are told in that report that employment of unskilled material handlers declined sharply and that there can be no doubt that these types of jobs are most susceptible to mechanization. That kind of declaration is to be found throughout the report. What is being done about it?

I wish to emphasize one other aspect of this problem. We find there are many workers who have offered to take advantage of the courses open to them through the provincial governments, as a result of the financial assistance now being provided under this act by the federal government. But a significant number of individuals, it has been found, have not the necessary elementary training to enable them to take courses that would give them the skills to carry on in certain lines of work. I suggest to the minister it is possible without violating the constitutional provisions of the British North America Act for the federal government to take cognizance of this fact. Have any provinces asked for financial assistance to enable them to provide the elementary training of reading and writing, let alone other subjects, to enable individuals to become qualified not for particular jobs but for courses of study that would enable them to acquire the necessary skills to accept employment. That is a situation that confronts a large percentage of our unemployed, particularly among new immigrants.

We had an example of that the other day in Toronto where the provincial government, because of the existence of the apprentice act, denied a course of training to two hundred Italians. The minister will remember there were some questions asked about this the other day. While we realize that this comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces, having in mind the contributions being made by the federal government it would be interesting to know what steps the Minister of Labour has taken to discuss this matter with the provincial authorities, not with a view to intervening in a jurisdiction that belongs to the provinces but with a view to ascertaining whether the position of the federal government could be placed before the provinces and with a view to reaching a satisfactory solution.

Within the last two weeks among the individuals who came to me asking for work were two who could have been given particular jobs, but they could not read or write.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the hon. gentleman laughing at that?

Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Flynn: Certainly not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the hon. gentleman deny that this situation exists? It would be interesting to know whether a member of the government of Canada is even aware of the problem.

Mr. Flynn: We are laughing at the hon. member's method of arguing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry if I do not have the hon. gentleman's talent.

Mr. Flynn: You have excessive talent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I assure the hon. gentleman that while I may lack in talent I do not lack in a desire to see something done about this problem.

The reason why the confidence of Canadians in this government is continually declining is that ministers of the government show an increasing indifference toward this problem. I do not say that the hon. gentleman himself is indifferent to them. After all he did not go to that luncheon the other day where they were trying to establish a factory which undoubtedly would have given employment to a number of people if it had been a bona fide transaction. However, the hon. gentleman has got me off the track.

Mr. Flynn: That is all too easily done.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman was nearly off the track because he almost accepted the invitation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My colleague says they almost got the hon. gentleman off the track because he almost accepted the invitation but I will not pursue that.

The Chairman: I urge the hon. member to get back on the track, and the track in this instance is the item now before us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was just discussing by way of happy digression circumstances which if bona fide would have provided considerable work to many people, and I would have hoped it would have been possible for these people to have the necessary skills to take on the jobs.

I simply say this to the Minister of Labour. I know he wishes this act to have the effect intended. No one denies the value of this act. After all, the act was placed on the statute books by a government other than the present one and—

Mr. Starr: That statement is not true.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —this government has added to its benefits.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member's earlier statement was not true.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says that statement is not true. The whole business of technical assistance was begun by a Liberal government.

Mr. Starr: There was no statute.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not talking about a statute.

Mr. Starr: That is what you said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am talking about the provision paid for out of moneys voted by this parliament on the recommendation of a Liberal government. I am not denying that the present government has substantially added to the framework of the concept of this kind of assistance. I am only saying that in the face of the serious problem of unemployment that confronts us, a problem which in its intensity continues to exist, the government ought to take more vigorous steps to give this program the effect which it should have in the future, some five or ten years from now.

We recognize that the immediate effect of what is being done is negligible. It could have had a greater effect earlier if these modifications had been provided. They were urged three years ago. Let us now have from the minister not the kind of statement we had last night but a substantial statement indicating that the government has an objective. How many individuals in the work force it is anticipated will receive training under this program? We are entitled to have this kind of statement from the minister. We are entitled to have from the minister a report on the automation studies which have been made by his department. Are these studies to be pigeon-holed or to be seen only by social research workers, years from now? Let us have an appreciation of what these studies reveal. Let us have some indication from the government of what steps it is taking to promote a co-operative endeavour in this field with industry as well as with the provincial governments.

This is a good measure. I am glad the minister is asking for added money with which to do this job. I hope that we shall have from the minister a report showing how wise the expenditure has been and what the government's program is so that we can judge its present effectiveness and the extent to which we may anticipate flowing from this program consequences that are not yet fully apparent.

Mr. Peters: I believe we all agree that the government acted wisely in preparing this legislation for the acceptance of the provinces. However, I wonder whether the government expected it was going to happen as fast as it actually happened. This legislation seems to me to raise many doubts about the particular method that we use in handling education in general and certainly in handling vocational education, by allowing the provinces to have a complete say in what is going to be done. Two things are being discussed by the members under this current estimate. One subject for discussion is those who are being retrained and who are out of a job or are displaced because of automation or because of curtailment and modernization of a particular industry; and as against that aspect one must consider the major portion of this vote which is going to build new vocational schools which are not going to apply to unemployed people or to adults at all but are going to apply to children.

It is perfectly true that a municipality in any area which has an opportunity to get a vocational school and which has been lacking one for a long time, is very happy to accept it and does not ask very many questions. I think the federal government has a responsibility to allow these people to ask the questions that they obviously have not been able to ask. In the province of Ontario in the recent leadership race for the premiership of the province, the former minister of education was successful. He campaigned to a large extent on the Robarts education plan for Ontario and he was successful in the leadership race. However, at no time did he completely indicate, to his supporters as reported in the convention or to the country in general, what his educational program was going to be. We in Ontario suffered for a long time under the little red school house policy of a previous minister of education. I am sure we welcomed any change in that type of policy. There is not much need to go into the argument about the little red school and the contention that you should not have an auditorium or a basement in the schools, and other things. When the opportunity was offered, I am sure it was accepted with great glee by those school boards who had been hoping for it for a long time.

My home town was fortunate to be one of the areas that received one of these new vocational schools. I should like to explain just what happened in this particular case, what is happening now and what we are faced with. I think this will explain why we believe the federal government should give some guidance on an over-all picture as this provision is not necessarily going to serve the need to the extent that I am sure this amount of money would if it were handled in another way.

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Certainly.

Mr. McGee: At this point in his remarks is he about to retreat from the position taken by the official critic in his party, namely that this program is irresponsible, reckless and a waste of the taxpayers' money?

Mr. Peters: May I say that in this party we are all experts and all specialists in whatever field we happen to be speaking about. I should like to indicate, if I have not conveyed them to him, probably the same fears that were expressed in another way by a member from another province. I refer to the problems raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

In our particular case the situation is this, and I should like to relate it to something that I understand. We have in our town a new school that will have six shops. I have a young boy, 12 years of age and he is in the entrance class. Recently a teacher-parent meeting was held. The reason for holding that meeting was to inform the parents what was going to happen and how they were going to decide whether children went into this new vocational school or whether they continued in the general high school. It was pointed out to them that there would be three choices with these three courses but the three choices were not available to anyone who was past grade 8. Those in grade 8 were the only ones who were going to be able to decide this matter. Anybody who was already taking a high school course was not going to be able to go into the vocational training provided in the new classrooms attached to the vocational training school. This means that in a particular case three people are asked to make a decision that is going to mean the vocation for the pupil for the rest of his educational years. He is going to be asked first whether he wants to go into the general course, which is I presume the old high school set-up; second, whether he would want to go into business and commercial training which also will be a four year course or whether he wants to go into a vocational training course. When questions were asked that teacher about who was going to give the guidance, it was pointed out that there was no guidance available, that there was not a qualified person available. Although this was a new school costing over a million dollars no guidance was available or would be available to help the teachers and the parents decide which area these pupils would be most qualified to pursue advantageously.

Does this mean that we are going to ask a 12 year old child to decide whether he wants to go into vocational training, take the general course or go into the business world? Is a 12 year old child going to make a decision or are the parents any better qualified to decide the matter? How many parents would like to see their sons become lawyers or doctors? How many of them would like to see them engaged in some field in which they may have more interest than the children have aptitudes. However, there is no guidance to assist in deciding this matter. There is none available in my particular area, although the federal government is donating close to three quarters of a million dollars to build this school. The teachers in this particular school—and I may say it is an advanced junior high school—have the opportunity of working with the pupils in only one class and therefore they may be in a slightly better position in which to judge the qualities and the aptitudes of the individual child than would be the teacher in one of the other schools in the rural area where they have seven or eight classes in the same school. How are these teachers in the rural area going to decide the aptitudes of their pupils and choose for them the vocations which the children will probably pursue for the rest of their lives? It is true that there will be a small amount of assistance through the high school guidance set-up they have at the present time, and they have offered this assistance.

But I suggest to the minister that he has a responsibility in this field to put into effect a program that will help with the training of guidance teachers and vocational and technical teachers in order to staff the new schools that we are now building. For this reason I believe there was irresponsibility in the whole program. In the case of my riding I know that the teacher now attached to the vocational section of the high school is not qualified to teach. In my opinion he has no qualifications at all that would qualify him for the teaching profession. He may have taken a six week summer course, but he was not particularly good in the field from which he came, which is very remotely allied to any of the courses he is being asked to teach now.

This is an instance where over the years we have had an opportunity to train vocational teachers, but now thousands are required in the province of Ontario and I ask hon. members where they are going to come from. I have been told that most of the vocational training teachers come from the Ryerson Institute in Toronto. This institute graduates about 1,000 technically trained people every year and of this number only eight or nine enter the teaching profession. We are going to need thousands and I wonder where they are going to come from.

Several weeks ago the hon. member for Peterborough was laughed at when he said that by making this large amount of money available to the provinces we may have done what the hon. member for York-Scarborough said. We may have helped to solve the employment problem in certain areas, but I wonder whether that is what the government had in mind when they made this large amount of money available. I believe that there was not enough planning. We know that the field of retraining is a separate field. We are going to have to take people no longer employed in certain industries and train them for some other field. I believe that this program has to be pursued separately and we have to get started on it immediately. It is important that we do so when we see people walking the streets whose needs would be served by retraining.

But that is not what the program we are now considering is doing. It is making provision for the building of vocational and technical schools that will be used to train new pupils, not to retrain those formerly employed in various industries. What are we going to need in the future so far as vocational training is concerned? Is it not true that the day of the sheet metal worker is nearly over? Is it not true that the woodworking industry has more skilled craftsmen for furniture and cabinet work than are needed? Is it not true that with regard to moulding and the allied foundry trades there are more skilled people available than can find jobs in those trades? Is it not true that what we are really looking for are people to operate I.B.M. machines, to operate and service computers, to operate and service the radar equipment now being used in steel mills and other factories, to work in the very complicated field of electronics, more use of which is being made all the time? Is it not in these fields that training is needed today?

If this is so, I would ask whether this type of program is going to produce the desired results. So far as Ontario is concerned, I know the answer is that it is not going to produce them. It cannot do so because we have not got the necessary teachers. Let me use an example from a highly skilled field of endeavour, the installing and servicing of automatic telephone exchanges. In northern Ontario the very progressive company concerned installed completely automatic telephone exchanges a number of years ago and they had to bring people from Great Britain to train some of our own people to do this highly technical work. It would seem to me that if one or two of these people from Great Britain had been put on the staff of a school in Ontario it would have made it possible to train enough people in a very limited time to provide all the technicians needed to instal all the automatic telephone exchanges that will be required.

It would not be wise for every little vocational school across the country to have a course in this type of work because it would have limited application, but would it not be better to have at least some of our vocational schools training people for this type of employment rather than embarking on a program of vocational training that has not started anywhere and is not going to end any place? I say it has not started anywhere simply because in the first place we have not got the teachers to get the plan under way and, second, it is not going anywhere because we have not made a survey of the national needs in the field of education and more particularly with regard to vocational and technical training. We have not taken the time to establish where this program is coming from and where it is going and unless we are willing to do that it seems to me it is a waste of money simply to erect these buildings.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough is quite happy about this plan, but I will make a bet with him that even in the schools in his riding, and I know there are more than in most ridings because he has more constituents than other members—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is five o'clock. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING BENEFITS FOR SEASONAL FARM LABOURERS

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that seasonal farm labourers would receive benefits similar to those paid at the present time to seasonal fishermen.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to present this motion to the house for its consideration. I may say this is not the first time during this parliament that I have proposed similar motions or made suggestions for the implementation of legislation to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act for the purpose of including farm labourers under the act. As a matter of fact, I mentioned this matter in my maiden speech.

Our agricultural industry in the west is becoming highly mechanized and it takes a skilful person to operate some of the implements and machinery on the farms. It is difficult to secure skilful farm labourers and there is a reason for this situation.

First of all, the farm labourer is a seasonal worker and in the fall, when all work is finished, he must seek employment elsewhere. In years gone past when winter employment was readily available the change-over was not so complicated and he did not suffer financial loss as a result of this, but now in many cases he is left unemployed and yet cannot obtain unemployment benefits or payments because he has not contributed to the unemployment insurance fund. Other seasonal workers such as fishermen are contributing to the unemployment insurance fund and are entitled to unemployment assistance. Why then is there this discrimination against the seasonal farm labourer?

I would like to bring the matter to the attention of the house and suggest that early consideration be given to the plight of the seasonal farm labourer. I noted with pleasure the remarks of the Minister of Labour to the effect that studies and research have been conducted by his department concerning the seasonal farm labourer and how to bring him under the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Such a measure would indeed be welcomed.

What was true in the past is true today in regard to farm labour and the need for unemployment insurance for seasonal farm labourers. In all fairness to the Minister of Labour and his department I would like to say that my representations to him on this matter of unemployment insurance for farm labourers have always received sympathetic consideration, and I would like to inform the house that this is not something new which has come about in the last few years.

The problem as to whether it is practicable to bring farm labour under the provisions of the unemployment insurance scheme is nothing new. It came before the Department of Agriculture as early as 1952. At that time an extensive survey was made by the unemployment insurance commission of the employment of farm labour in Canada, and this indicated the existence of a serious difficulty in adapting the unemployment insurance scheme to these workers. Some of these problems were:

1. The scattered nature of the workers and the distance of the location of the employers' establishments from local offices. This would create problems of inspection from the standpoint of collecting contributions and payment of benefit, particularly in determining whether persons were employed or unemployed.

2. The large amount of family employment, much of it unpaid.

3. Many farm operators had only one employee, a factor which would greatly increase the administrative cost of applying the scheme.

4. Determining the real remuneration of the employees, much of which is in kind rather than in cash wages.

5. The highly seasonal nature of most farming in Canada. This would place a heavy burden on the unemployment insurance fund unless some restrictions were placed on the payment of benefit in the off season, so as to limit this to workers who normally had attachment to employment in some form or other throughout most of the year.

All these were the findings of the 1952 unemployment insurance commission. However in 1956 coverage was extended to two kinds of specialized farming, namely, the production of poultry and poultry products, and the breeding and raising of race horses, saddle horses and light harness horses where these undertakings were carried on as specialized farms.

In January, 1959, an interdepartmental committee was established by the unemployment insurance commission to make a further survey of the possible coverage of farm labour. The committee included representatives of the Department of Agriculture, Department of Finance, department of insurance, dominion bureau of statistics and the privy council office, as well as the unemployment insurance commission.

In February, 1960, the interdepartmental committee submitted its report to the commission. It emphasized the fact that the problems were serious and it suggested certain possible schemes that might be applied and which, to some extent, would meet these problems although they could not wholly overcome them. The report was submitted to the Minister of Labour by the commission and he obtained the views of the Minister of Agriculture. The latter asked if consideration could be given to a voluntary scheme, as it was suggested to him by farm organizations, under which a farm operator could elect whether or not to cover his employees, rather than a scheme of universal compulsory coverage for all farm employees.

Accordingly the interdepartmental committee was requested by the commission to pursue this aspect of the matter. The committee made further surveys during the summer of 1960 but found great difficulty in arriving at even an approximate estimate of the cost of such a scheme, in view of the inadequate data. No conclusion had been reached by the interdepartmental committee when the Gill commission was appointed in July, 1961, to inquire into the whole operation of the unemployment insurance scheme. The Gill commission has not yet reported on the matter but undoubtedly this investigation will cover the question of whether it is practicable to include farm labour.

These in short are the findings of the different commissions which inquired into the problem during the last 10 years. What the findings of the Gill commission will be remain to be seen. However, the position of the seasonal farm labourer remains as before.

The position of a seasonal farm labourer is not much different from that of the seasonal fisherman, and I think there is a principle involved in this whole matter. The farm labourer is the only one in the entire Canadian labour force who is not entitled to unemployment insurance payments and it is my opinion that unless immediate steps are taken to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act the whole western mechanized farm industry will suffer severely.

From personal experience I know that farmers have sustained crop losses due to the shortage of skilled farm labourers. I also know incidents when, in desperation, a farmer had to entrust his expensive farm machinery to men who were not sufficiently familiar with this machinery to operate it efficiently, and this resulted in damage to the machinery.

Representation was also made to me by many farm labourers, who very reluctantly had to leave farms and seek employment in cities and towns where they could make contributions to the unemployment insurance scheme in the places where they were employed, something which they could not do on the farms. Many of these farm labourers would prefer to bring up their families in the country, where living expenses are much cheaper than in the cities.

In conclusion I would like to say this problem of providing unemployment insurance for farm labourers is a very serious one and, although as I mentioned previously the Gill commission report is not in, I would like to see serious consideration given to the motion before the house so that farm labourers may soon become entitled to the same benefits as fishermen who are also seasonally employed labourers.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I have never posed as one of the agricultural experts in our party, which now abounds in agricultural experts, but I am tempted to speak because of the analogy made by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). I emphasize the "Tisdale", which is another of the many bonds of a personal nature between the hon. gentleman and myself, and I think I can show that there will be a few more bonds when I have finished my speech. The hon. member is appealing, undoubtedly vainly, to his political friends who are now on the treasury benches to do what will be done by a Liberal government. I have in my hand a little leaflet that I will send to the hon. gentleman. It is called "A square deal for farmers" and it is just fresh off the press. He will find there this sentence:

> Unemployment insurance should be extended to as many farm workers as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is the official position of the party to which I belong. The hon. gentleman will remember that some years ago when he first came to this house and when he made a very moving speech in this house, which I will never forget, I reminded him that he made a very wise decision to come to Canada in 1929 when there was a Liberal government and we admitted immigrants, because if he had waited until a year later when his present day friends were in office, they would not have let him in. I remind the hon. member today that if he were supporting a government of the party that let him into Canada, he would be getting what he has urged upon the house.

Mr. Clancy: After 22 years.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman would have found that 22 years ago there would not have been many people in this country, many farmers or anyone else, who wanted unemployment insurance for farmers or fishermen. The reason, of course, is that it took a long time to overcome the opposition of friends of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house to establishing unemployment insurance at all. Mr. Duplessis held it up for years—

Mr. Pallett: The Conservative government brought in the unemployment insurance legislation for Canada and the Liberals took it to the judicial committee of the privy council to frustrate it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The chief whip for the government is getting more and more nervous as the date of the election approaches. We all understand this nervousness that he exhibits in the house these days, and we forgive him for it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pallett: Don't say the information is inaccurate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid there are too many agricultural experts who do not rise in their seats when they wish to speak. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has the floor. I know he does not object to an occasional interruption; in fact, he sometimes seems to invite them. But one at a time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for rising to my defence. I need it, and the opposition increasingly needs it in this house as the days go by. I will not pursue that line, but I come back to the point. The intervention of the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Clancy) reminds me that unemployment insurance was held up for several years by the hon. gentleman's friends in the province of Quebec, and it was only when Mr. Godbout came into office there that we were able to overcome the constitutional difficulty—

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I object to the hon. member's reference to the Quebec government as my friends. I have no interest in Quebec—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Clancy: I am. I object to the reference to my friends in Quebec. I have friends in Quebec, but I do not pretend to be—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is unduly sensitive, if he considers that a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman considers it offensive for me to say that members of the Union Nationale in Quebec are his friends, I hasten to withdraw that remark; or perhaps I could modify it and say "the friends of his friends." I think he could not object to that.

I was saying that when, after long and persistent efforts, the Liberal government was able to convince all the provinces—of which the government of Quebec was the last one, and that was only after Mr. Godbout came into office in 1939—to permit the constitutional change which was necessary to establish unemployment insurance, at that time there was no demand and no desire for unemployment insurance for farm labourers, either on the part of the farmers or on the part of the labourers. It was one of those things that would have been found, I think, almost universally unpopular at that time.

However, many things have changed in this country since 1940 and we do know—as I have no doubt the hon. member emphasized, and I do not need to reiterate it—that today, as a result of the steady extension of unemployment insurance to other groups in the country, particularly its extension to other kinds of seasonal workers, it is becoming increasingly difficult for our farmers, precisely because of this obstacle, to get and keep help. It is also very hard from the labourer's point of view to understand why he should not qualify for unemployment insurance stamps and a bush worker should. I must say that I find it very hard myself to explain that on any logical basis.

It does seem to me that we in this parliament should seek to do those things which will keep the economy in as even a balance as possible, and as far as possible satisfy the legitimate aspirations of those groups in the community which express them. There is no doubt that today the majority, judging from all the evidence I have been able to find, judging from the evidence of the organized farm movements, both the federation of agriculture and the farmers' union, now feel this to be desirable and indeed necessary for the efficient prosecution of the industry.

I recognize, and I have no doubt the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale also recognizes, that there are real difficulties in connection with the assimilation of seasonal workers generally to unemployment insurance. That matter is receiving the consideration of a commission of very distinguished persons at the present time. It is my conviction, sir,—and I think perhaps this is relevant to the motion because I am one of those people who believe one should talk about how these things are to be paid for at the same time as one talks about them—that in the case of seasonal workers there should be a further change in the unemployment insurance law so that seasonal benefits do not come out of the pool that is contributed to by those workers who are really contributing on an actuarial basis. I believe that some modifications require to be made in that way. I feel it is quite important to say that to indicate that one is proposing this addition of farm labourers with a sense of responsibility and without any desire to be unfair to those other contributors to unemployment insurance who over the years pay more into the fund than they draw out of it.

I am moved to speak about this because, as hon. members know, when I was a member of the government I had a good deal to do with the legislation which was enacted when my friends and I were in office to extend unemployment insurance to fishermen. That legislation has had a tremendous influence. Not only has it been of tremendous social value but it has been of very great economic value as well, and it would have been of much greater economic value if there had been full employment in this country in the last four years.

The reason why nearly all seasonal workers want to be included within the ambit of unemployment insurance and not under some other scheme is because they want to be able to get stamps for their seasonal work and then, if there is other work, to get other stamps to build up their benefits, instead of living in idleness in the off season. That is why they do not want some separate scheme for fishermen as some people have suggested, and no doubt as some people have suggested for farm labourers. They want to come within the ambit of the general scheme, in order to provide the greatest possible mobility of labour and the greatest cover, and particularly to protect themselves and not become a charge on the fund. It seems to me to be right and proper that if this is done it should be done within the scope of the Unemployment Insurance Act, but I think at the same time there should be modifications in that act to take account of the financial effect it would have on the fund.

I think that is really all I desire to say, except that I might allude in support of the observation I made when the question was asked: why was this not done when we were in office, to the fact that it was only at the very end of the period when my friends and I were on the treasury benches that there was any really strong support for this, and even then opinion was divided.

Mr. Benidickson: The farmers did not want to pay their part at that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) has suggested one of the reasons which may perhaps have accounted for the fact that there was not the same kind of general feeling about this that exists today. That, I am sure, is why hon. gentlemen opposite have not done it, because it is notorious that hon. gentlemen opposite are very anxious to do things which are universally popular though they are not often so anxious to tackle those problems which have to be tackled by a government, but where action does not always get universal approbation.

I have here a presentation to the Prime Minister and to members of the cabinet by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture dated February 7, 1962. There is a paragraph headed "Unemployment insurance for farm workers" which reads as follows:

> While we appreciate that the unemployment insurance program is now under study by a royal commission, nevertheless we feel we must bring to your attention that the very real need for a selective, if not a voluntary, program of unemployment insurance for farm workers is still unmet —a matter of considerable disappointment to those farmers who find that they are seriously disadvantaged by this situation. If a voluntary program for agriculture cannot be brought in, we would recommend early extension of compulsory coverage to those areas and/or groups of producers who have clearly indicated their desire and willingness to participate in such a program.

The national farmers union made a presentation to the government of Canada on January 31 of this year and they had this to say on the same subject. I am grateful to my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River for looking up these references for me.

> We reiterate our request for the early implementation of a program providing unemployment insurance for farm labour. The absence of insurance for farm workers is acting against the interests of farm employers by discouraging many skilled workers from seeking farm employment.

It is for the reasons I have given that I am happy to support the motion which has been moved by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) who is, of course—I would not deny it for a moment—possessed of a much more intimate knowledge of this problem than I am. But I think, perhaps, he would allow that I have a greater acquaintance with the problem of the fisherman with which he made an analogy. I feel that the farm workers, and the farmers, who would have to pay something for this, are just as entitled to consideration as the fishermen.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise to express the support of this group for the motion moved by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). We are witnessing a rather exciting evolution in party affairs in this house. I would judge from what has happened in recent days that the official opposition has now what might be termed a rotating spokesman for agriculture.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the hon. gentleman not believe in rotation?

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) held the position for some years unchallenged. Then we find that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is now the spokesman for agriculture. Last of all, possibly to the disillusionment of some other members of the party, we find the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate taking his turn as spokesman for agriculture on the part of the official opposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? Does he not think that an embarras de richesses is better than a void?

Mr. Herridge: I am only a humble backwoodsman and I do not understand the language used by the hon. gentleman.

An hon. Member: Neither does he.

Another hon. Member: Some rotate leaders, others their agriculture experts.

Mr. Herridge: I could not help making that observation, because I am always interested in watching the developments on our left and to our front. We support this motion wholeheartedly. It proposes an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act which has been urged for years by farmers' organizations across Canada, by the British Columbia fruit growers association, I know, as well as by other groups and by hon. members on all sides of this house, led on most occasions, I am modest enough to say, by the members of this group or their predecessors.

I was interested in the fervour with which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate approached this question. He displayed almost a missionary zeal. However, he was a member of the former government for some years and during that period, regardless of the way he has just played the situation down, there were numerous appeals from farm organizations, from other organizations and from individual members of this house asking the government to amend the act as suggested in this motion. I am very glad that an approaching election has suddenly convinced the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that something must be done about the matter. I can state from some personal experience and from the experience of farmer friends of mine in the district in which I live, the majority of whom officially are known as Conservatives, though they have a common sense approach to life when it comes to election time, that the present act is most unfair.

Naturally, workmen nowadays are looking for protection. They are looking for regular employment, unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and so on. I know of numerous instances where farmers wanted to hire men for clearing land, ditching, fencing or other similar work, but although there were persons available for work the demand for labour could not be filled because the men wanted to obtain employment in an industry or occupation covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act. They said they were very sorry to decline, and they gave as a reason their wish to seek employment in a situation where they could acquire stamps and the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act should they become unemployed.

I recognize the difficulties there are in applying the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act and the workmen's compensation acts to farmers generally where certain problems arise which do not occur in industry, where one finds men working together under supervision and where the services of accountants, bookkeepers and so on are available.

Some years ago we were interested in having the provisions of the workmen's compensation act applied to farmers in British Columbia, and the act was applied under certain conditions. Then, difficulties began to arise. I used to bring this to the notice of the provincial government and I discussed it with officials of the workmen's compensation board in British Columbia. I realize there have to be regulations drawn up to meet the farmers' situation. I was told by one of the commissioners—I am referring to workmen's compensation and this is to illustrate the difficulties which arise—that a farmer had made an application to the board in respect of an injury suffered as a result of being struck by a plough handle while turning into the end of a furrow. He received compensation over a considerable period of time because he had a deep wound. Some months later a neighbour spilled the beans and the board discovered that the cause of the accident was not as stated by the farmer in question. He went home one evening intoxicated and fell out of bed while in this condition and cut his posterior on a piece of bedroom china. I mention that to illustrate the difficulties that arise in these circumstances. Because of that the act was amended. Certain regulations were brought in as a result of that and other experiences.

As a fruit farmer and one closely associated with them I realize the difficulties of administration, but they can be overcome. Farm organizations are willing to admit the difficulties and have given them serious consideration throughout the years.

Under the workmen's compensation act of British Columbia the farmers can take advantage of the provisions of the legislation on a voluntary basis. I have taken advantage of the act myself. It was fortunate for one or two persons working for us that we were able to take advantage of the act.

This and the former government repeatedly express sympathy for the proposals put forward by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the national farm unions and the British Columbia fruit growers association. In fact a resolution of this type has been passed year after year by the latter organization but without effect. Fruit growers have a certain type of operation which requires quite heavy employment on a seasonal basis.

I remember the minister of agriculture in the former government who no doubt made a great contribution to agriculture in Canada talking about making a study and saying the government was sympathetic and would give the question serious consideration and so on, and members of this government have said the same thing.

We know that the Gill committee is studying amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I trust that the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Melfort-Tisdale-whatnot—I forget the rest of it—will cause the government to focus more attention on the problem. At present a certain injustice is suffered by the farmer.

Farming practice has changed during the years. Some aspects are similar to industrial operations. In other cases there is large seasonal employment on farms for harvesting purposes, particularly on the fruit and vegetable farms. This situation has remained unremedied throughout the years while other groups of seasonal workers have been able to obtain the insurance benefits of the act.

In view of the importance of agriculture generally and in view of the fact that I am sure everyone interested in the welfare of Canada is concerned about doing all that can be done fairly and properly to assist the Canadian farmer, the government should amend the act to provide for the coverage that has been requested. This is a disability particularly for farmers who are operating successfully and have large crops to harvest at certain times. In the opinion of this group the time is long overdue. The government should now remedy the injustice by accepting the amendments to the act proposed in this resolution, also suggested over the years in this house by hon. members representing all parties.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to congratulate the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale for his diligence in bringing forward this resolution at this time. It is a question that is receiving a lot of attention in the farming communities across Canada today and no doubt it will receive increasingly more attention in the future.

The resolution is in the following language:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that seasonal farm labourers would receive benefits similar to those paid at the present time to seasonal fishermen.

One of the reasons for the heightened interest in insurance in farm circles today is the changing conditions that are taking place on farms across Canada. Farm people presently are finding ito necessary to utilize larger machinery that costs considerable sums of money. It is necessary to have more highly qualified persons to operate this equipment. Many of the people who would normally be available to operate the machinery are engaged in other jobs and would be willing to accept part time employment of this type if in doing so their benefit period were increased. Unemployment insurance stamps however are not available for farm labour and so it is difficult for farmers to secure this type of labour.

I think that unemployment insurance will be a necessity before we can build up in Canada the type of labour that will be useful to farmers year after year. The revolution that is manifesting itself in the agricultural industry today has almost run its course. During the next several years we will experience to an increasing extent a necessity to build up a farm labour pool to take care of those specialized operations that are required to be performed on farms from time to time.

If Canadian fishermen are entitled to unemployment insurance surely farm labour is entitled to it when you consider that agriculture is the basic industry of Canada. Farm labour today requires not only a great deal of skill but judgment as well. You cannot put an unskilled man in charge of a tractor costing $8,000 or $10,000 with the heavy machinery sitting behind it. It requires a person of judgment who can devote close attention to the job he is doing.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in which he quoted from that volume of fiction which recently revealed that the Liberals have found the answer to a lot of things now that they are in the opposition. Many things have changed since 1940, the hon. gentleman said, and included in the changes is the change of government. The hon. gentleman said unemployment insurance should be extended to as many farm people as possible. I imagine there has been a Liberal policy for the last 22 years: To as many people as possible.

I was pleased to hear the hon. gentleman admit that the Gill committee was worth while, that it did a necessary job, and that it would assist in contributing to the solution of the problem we are now discussing.

I do not intend to take up the time of the house any longer. I commend this problem to the attention of the government. I know that it has received a great deal of attention during the last two or three years.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to join in congratulating the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale for introducing in the house this afternoon this motion with respect to bringing farm labour under the Unemployment Insurance Act. As was mentioned by my colleague who just took his seat and also, I think, by the hon. member for Kootenay West, it is interesting to see our friends in the Liberal party taking such a deep and rotating interest—as it was characterized—in the problems of farmers.

After listening to the quotations of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with reference to this new agricultural pamphlet that he so smilingly observed has been brought to the attention of the public just lately, it appears to me that it is more or less like a death-bed repentance that our Liberal friends have come to the front now in taking such a serious look or what they assert to be a serious look at the agriculture problem. I sincerely hope they will continue to do that. It is not going to be too long until they occur, and I think it is with nervousness and apprehension that they are looking forward to facing the democratic functions that will take place in Canada. I am sure that in the prairie west many people are going to consider not so much what they have done as what they have not done as far as agriculture is concerned when they come to mark their ballots.

This problem of unemployment insurance with respect to farm labour is a deep rooted one. It has stemmed in one instance particularly from the fact that we have unemployment insurance in Canada today, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Rosthern. As we find automation increasing in agriculture, we find the need for skilled labour to manipulate and handle these machines. As a result of this situation we wish to see to it that we have qualified people to put on this type of equipment. When we go into the labour market in western Canada now to ascertain whether labour is available to handle this equipment, we find that those people who are capable of doing so are fast disappearing from the scene owing to the fact that they have not been able to qualify for unemployment insurance. They have found themselves taking an interest in other walks of life. As a result we find the farm labour market being depleted in that respect. If we are going to maintain this basic industry of agriculture as we see it in Canada and keep abreast of the agrarian change that is taking place, we are going to be obliged to provide an adequate force of farm labour to assist presently established farmers in this great industry. I think it is high time that we saw to it that we included farm labour under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I know that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale in his very able presentation this afternoon gave some of the reasons why it has been a difficult problem. I think one of the basic problems lies within the farm population itself, who are desiring this implementation. About a year ago or possibly a year and a half ago I made it my business as a representative of a farm riding to make a survey of that particular area in order to get the opinion prevailing on this subject. I did this by writing to the reeves and councillors of the 25 municipalities lying within the boundaries of the federal constituency of Moose Mountain and asking them for their observations on this matter. I was rather amazed at the variety of opinions expressed. If this variety of opinions that were expressed by the farmers themselves is an indication of what the thinking is, it will create a certain amount of a problem in the minds of the Gill royal commission in coming up with a definite answer. In a great many cases I found that farmers with male members in the family, with sons coming along, were indifferent to bringing unemployment insurance into the farm labour picture. They felt that they had their own help developing and as a result they were not interested. On the contrary, somebody else who possibly had only daughters in the family, was very much interested in being able to go out into the farm labour market and procure assistance and therefore was very much interested in having this measure brought about. Others expressed the view that it should be done on a compulsory basis. Then again others expressed the view that it should be voluntary.

I could not find unanimity of opinion in this matter. As a result, I felt that a certain problem was being created for the officials that were considering this matter in order to come up with an answer. All in all, in summing it up, I felt that the time had come when legislation should be enacted in order to solve this problem. As has been pointed out, agriculture is one of the basic industries and it will remain one of our basic industries as time goes on. People are still considering agriculture as a way of life and a very important one. Some want to be on the private enterprise end of it and to be the owner and operator of a farm, whereas others wish to engage in farming operations by assisting as labourers in the farm scheme of things. If this class of people does not wish to take the responsibility of being independent or private enterprise operators of farms but still wishes to continue in that way of life, I feel that there should be some basic security presented by proper legislation to see to it that in times of seasonal unemployment they will be protected. I feel sure that the Gill royal commission will come up with the answer to this problem. I should like to conclude my remarks by saying that personally—and I think I am speaking on behalf of my constituents of Moose Mountain—I feel that they are definitely in favour of the motion brought in by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words on this particular motion which was introduced by my colleague and neighbour the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. I was rather amused when the hon. member for Kootenay West referred to the way in which rotation was taking place in the Liberal party in the matter of agricultural spokesmen. It rather reminded me of the description of a hula dancer: put a crop here and put a crop there and then you rotate the crops. Perhaps this is typical of the Liberal party. They have been used to passing the buck and perhaps they do not wish to take the responsibility for being spokesmen. However, other members have expressed reasons why this type of legislation should be introduced and why the government should make a careful study of it.

It has been mentioned that competent help has been hard to get. Often times we have been obliged to resort to very young labourers, some of them just fresh out of school, who have not been able to establish themselves. Many of these young people have a farm background. They know the farm way of life and would far rather have it than perhaps any other. However, because of insecurity in that type of employment they often drift off the farms into other employment which would provide them with some security in the event they were laid off. I know that in my own particular case I myself have been obliged to employ many of these people. Sometimes you get an experienced hand. You often find that where a man has been laid off because of some farmer having quit farming and no longer requiring him, he has to make a shift but in making that shift very often finds himself in a position in which he is obliged to resort to using the money he has been able to save over the years, if he is lucky enough to have any. However, this creates a particular problem.

I know that on many occasions, especially during the rush season, in the spring and fall, for example, many young girls have been employed in the fields driving tractors, combines, trucks and so on. Many women and older labourers have taken to the fields at times like this. I think this situation could be corrected if legislation like this could possibly be enacted.

It was mentioned by the hon. member for Rosthern that many farmers have been obliged to purchase expensive machinery as a result of the fact that they could not get help. For one thing they would then require less help. Another point is that the type of machinery they have purchased is very expensive. I can give many examples of what happened in my own case—but that is unnecessary—where you turn over expensive machinery to young, inexperienced help. Another problem that perhaps could be corrected if this type of legislation were enacted is this. The fact is that many farmers have had to pay higher wages as a result of many people no longer wishing to stay with or work on farms because of the insecurity in that field.

I should like to raise another point which I believe was mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Contractors working on the clearing of farmland find that when they hire a machine operator to clear the bush or to do brushing in preparation for cultivation, that man is not insurable. However, if the same contractor is doing work for the municipality, he is insurable. He may have two machines operating side by side, one on the farmer's property and the other on the road allowance. The man operating the machine on the road allowance is insurable and the man working on the farm is not although they are operating identical machines. They are doing the same type of work and are working just as hard but one man is insurable and the other man is not. This problem would be corrected by the introduction of such legislation.

There are cases one could cite. For instance, men who work on irrigation projects are insurable but others, as I said, are not. This is a problem that needs a little study in order to correct some of these inequities.

Having said that, I think I should point out some of the difficulties that exist in implementing legislation of this type. There are very few countries that have similar legislation in existence so we cannot make a study of their plans in order to incorporate them into ours. I think Great Britain was the first country to set up such a plan away back in 1911. However, even after having had such a plan in operation for some 35 years I understand that in one year there were some 30,000 inquiries as to how it could be made operative and applicable in certain cases. Although they have had 35 years experience they still have not been able to solve the problem.

I might also say that because of the scattered nature of farming one would run into difficulty. In many cases it would be difficult to ascertain whether or not a man was actually employed. I am merely pointing out these things to illustrate some of the difficulties that would be encountered if such legislation were introduced. Only if some of these problems can be ironed out will we be able to arrive at proper legislation.

Another point has to do with whether the employee is a member of the family. It is often difficult to determine what rate of pay a man receives if he is a member of the family. What kind of stamp would you provide for him? There are cases where room and board are provided and others where board alone is provided and the man provides his own room. There are other cases where the man receives only his wages with no room or board provided.

These are some of the things that have to be considered before a suitable arrangement can be worked out. I simply wish to mention these things and to point out that the matter is now under study. I hope that before long the Gill commission will be able to make some suitable recommendations.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to have considerably more time than I apparently will have in order to develop my speech on the resolution brought forward by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). I must say at once that when the hon. member introduces a private member's bill or resolution in the house one must pay very strict attention indeed because his record of success with regard to the proposals he has placed before parliament is practically unique. It is a great credit to him and to the government which has encouraged the active participation of the private members who support the government, unlike the days not too long ago when the trained seals flapped their flippers and kept solemnly quiet. A lot of people thought that things would be interesting after these trained seals were unleashed, but lo and behold, we find that not many of them have had anything to say in the interval.

I want to deal very quickly with the resolute, positive, forward looking alternative that the Liberal party is supplying according to this document referred to by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) where I find these words:

> The Liberal party has, for today's problems, the answers that are progressive, realistic and responsible.

One might have expected upon examining this document to find a clear, concise and aggressive statement of a practical, alternative policy. But what do we find? Nothing on this particular question. Let hon. members listen carefully to these words:

> Unemployment insurance should be extended to as many farm workers as possible.

Not "unemployment insurance will be extended". Oh, no; "should be extended". To how many or to what group of people? As many as possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: What more would you have than that?

Mr. McGee: Is this the same use of the word "possible" that occurred in 1919 when a certain late right hon. gentleman promised hospital insurance? Was that not supposed to come about as soon as possible? Are farm labourers going to have to wait for the same number of years between promise and fulfilment as the people of Canada generally had to wait with respect to hospital insurance? I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose you would allow me to congratulate the hon. member on his notable speech. I will instead do what you will allow me to do and ask the house leader if he can now give us a preview of the business that the government will bring before us for the rest of the week.

Mr. Churchill: There is a great deal of business I should like to bring before the house but we are still struggling with the supplementary estimates. I hope that notable progress will be made on the supplementary estimates tomorrow.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 15, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to call the attention of the house to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of Right Hon. John McEwen, deputy prime minister of the commonwealth of Australia. Mr. McEwen has been a most distinguished leader not only in his own country but throughout the commonwealth of nations, and in 1958 he headed the Australian delegation to the trade and economic conference in Montreal. He comes to us following a stay in Washington. He is discussing with members of the government matters of international interest, including in particular the implications of the common market, as the entry of the United Kingdom may affect not only our two nations but commonwealth trade relations as a whole. To him, and through him, I extend warmest good wishes.

We recall so well an address which was given in the days of war by the prime minister of Australia, Right Hon. Robert Menzies. It will always be remembered by those who were privileged to hear it. Speaking in this chamber with great eloquence, he filled us with determination and moved us to a realization of those values which were then at stake.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the Prime Minister in welcoming to our country Right Hon. Mr. McEwen, the deputy prime minister of Australia. Our relationship with this commonwealth country has been not only cordial but very close at the United Nations and all international meetings. I am sure that those of us who sit on this side of the house will not only be happy to welcome the deputy prime minister here but will also desire to wish him well in the deliberations that I am sure he will be entering upon with the government.

(Translation):

With the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add only this. Since the talks to be held will also have reference to the common market and, consequently, to the export trade which is of particular concern to all of us, we hope that they will be successful.

On behalf of members of the opposition, I extend our best wishes to the deputy prime minister of Australia.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, members of this group join with the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Laurier in extending a welcome to the deputy prime minister of Australia. We in this group have a high appreciation of the value of the commonwealth and the role it can play in international affairs. On that account we are particularly anxious on all occasions to extend a most hearty welcome to any representatives of the people from our fellow commonwealth countries.

I was interested to hear the reference made by the Prime Minister to the study of the question of the common market. I am sure this is a matter of mutual and serious concern to Canada and Australia. I trust that after the discussions which will take place in the next few days we will reach a common approach to this question as fellow members of the commonwealth who are concerned with developments in this respect.

TAPE RECORDING OF HOUSE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Speaker: If the house will give me leave I shall be glad to make a brief statement about experiments in reporting our proceedings by mechanical means, pursuant to the authority given by the house last April. My reason for suggesting what might be called a progress report is to remove doubts which may have been left in the minds of hon. members yesterday when the matter was raised, but not proceeded with, as a question of privilege. Is it agreed that I may make a brief statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members will refer to page 3963 of Hansard of April 25, 1961 or the Journals of that year at page 471, they will see the following:

> Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house—and I should first inform the house that I have already consulted the party leaders—I should like to ask for the approval of the house to carry out some experiments in reporting the proceedings of the house by using tape recording machines in conjunction with our sound amplification system. The purpose is to determine whether mechanical recording can usefully be used in combination with shorthand reporting, as is being done in some other jurisdictions, and to develop this information for the guidance of the committee on procedure and of the house itself. As I have said, nothing is contemplated other than experimental recordings. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Before the July adjournment some experiments with dictaphone machines were made in the English and French debates offices with the co-operation of the editors and certain members of the staff. These experiments were not reported last session to the committee on procedure because they were not considered conclusive and the committee itself had its hands full with other business.

To continue the experiments the assistance of the management analysis division of the civil service commission was requested. This request was initiated by the Clerk on October 5, 1961, and the terms of reference were as follows:

To survey the organization, methods and procedures of the English debates reporting branch with a view to making recommendations for their improvement.

Mr. A. M. Ervin was assigned to the work. He has undertaken a fairly broad study of reporting methods elsewhere as well as in our own house.

The recordings which are now going on began on Thursday, March 1 and continued to March 9. The second stage will begin on March 15 and will run until March 23 and conclude at that point. The method is to take ten minute sample recordings at intervals of approximately one hour during the daily sessions.

In all these experiments the belts or discs on which the proceedings are recorded have been closely guarded and put to no outside, ulterior or improper use. The belts and tapes from the first experiment have been destroyed, and those from Mr. Ervin's experiments will be turned over to the Speaker with his report. There has been nothing secret about the experiments other than to maintain the privacy of the records.

I think perhaps hon. members would like me to add that what we are doing should not be taken in any way as a reflection on our excellent reporting and editorial staff, but rather as an attempt at finding possible means of assisting them in their difficult duties.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, if I were in order I think I should like to say that we are grateful for this statement you have made. There might well have been some misunderstanding about the matter. After having looked at the statement which Your Honour was good enough to let some of us have, we should like to say that we think the statement which Your Honour has just made is of significant importance, as it affects the privileges and responsibilities of all of the members. We are wondering whether Your Honour would not look with favour on a meeting being called of the house leader and the other party leaders to consider this statement. Not only might it affect the rights and responsibilities of all of us but, from the mechanical aspect of this analysis, it might well gradually and eventually affect the rights of the Hansard reporters and those who have been carrying on so well, as Your Honour has just said.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East who, with his long experience, values the traditions and rights of parliament. This group appreciates your explanation this afternoon and urges that consideration be given to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Laurier.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I think the proper place for it to be discussed would be when the committee under your chairmanship meets, Mr. Speaker. I refer to the committee on rules and procedures.

BANK OF CANADA

REFERENCE OF REPORT OF GOVERNOR TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 13—The Minister of Finance—That the annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada, together with the statement of accounts, for the year ended the 31st of December, 1961, laid on the table on the 12th day of March, 1962, be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON LABOUR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the joint release of his department and the dominion bureau of statistics concerning the labour force in Canada is, as a rule, issued before the middle of the month, may I inquire whether the minister will be receiving those figures today and whether he will be in a position to table them so that we might have cognizance of them today?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if we look back over the years at the dates upon which the dominion bureau of statistics has issued a release on employment and unemployment, I think it will be found that there is a variation month by month and year by year, and that there is not any specified date. I think there is a difference of as much as eight or nine days in the dates of the issuance of this release. I do not know ahead of time when they are going to release it. I do not get the report any sooner than the hon. member, or any sooner than the report is available to him. The dominion bureau of statistics prepares this report along with the economics branch of the labour department, and we await it from month to month. I think the statement that ordinarily it does come out at the middle of the month is incorrect.

Mr. Chevrier: On that point, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have here the releases for the last three months, and they are all before the 15th with the exception of one.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member would be within his right in debating the question of the time of release, other than to ask a supplementary question if any arises. It has been indicated by the minister that the matter is not really one under his control.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PUNISHMENT FOR SMUGGLING BY MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. I trust he realizes that these questions are advanced in a spirit of co-operation to assist him to unveil this mystery and deal effectively with future situations.

In view of the report in the Globe and Mail of March 15 that soldiers caught smuggling in Indo-China late in 1961 were dealt with on the spot by their commanding officers, and apparently quite lightly; and since under the National Defence Act the maximum punishment that can be imposed by a commanding officer is three months' detention, could the Prime Minister inform the house why so lenient a view was taken of these deplorable crimes, and could he assure the house that all future proven cases of smuggling by members of the armed forces will be dealt with by courtmartial?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think this question should more properly have been addressed to me as Minister of National Defence. First of all I should like to say that I think the hon. member has a rather peculiar view of the administration of justice, in that the whole tenor of his question was along the line that any person suspected or accused of a particular crime is more or less automatically guilty and must be dealt with accordingly. When a man in the army is suspected of a particular crime—and the same thing applies in civil life—the first thing that has to be done is to secure sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case. On the basis of what the investigation discloses the man's commanding officer determines whether he should be dealt with summarily or whether he should be tried by courtmartial. It is not the function of the government to state that a particular case shall be dealt with by courtmartial. Is is for the law officers in the J.A.G.'s branch, the commanding officer and the commander of the command that the man happens to be in to determine the particular procedure to be followed. I can assure the hon. member and other hon. members that all due regard is being paid to the proper course that should be followed in the administration of justice in the army.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question arising out of that statement. Is it not a fact that the Minister of National Defence took exactly the same position as the hon. member has taken when the minister in his former capacity as minister of agriculture dealt in the same manner with one Mitchell, an employee of his department in Montreal? Does the minister not recall that?

Mr. Harkness: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it the hon. member for Laurier is referring to some matter of the past by way of argument rather than asking for information. As it has gone that far, perhaps the minister might want to comment.

Mr. Chevrier: He took exactly the same position he is complaining about.

Mr. Harkness: With regard to the particular case to which the hon. member refers, he is talking about one of his political henchmen who was caught contravening the rules and regulations of the department, abusing his position—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And never tried notwithstanding the bill of rights.

Mr. Harkness: —as a member of the staff of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Guilty by association.

Mr. Harkness: —and was dismissed as a result of those actions.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the statement which has been made by the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order. The statement made by the minister is not only inaccurate but also wholly untrue. It is untrue, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is perhaps the author of the difficulty by introducing a challenging, debating statement with respect to the former answer by way of a supplementary. Opinions have been expressed both ways. This is not an occasion upon which any conclusions can be taken by asking and answering questions. I suggest to the hon. member that it is not a point of order to rise and say that an answer given is not true.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege, then, because the question I put to the minister was a factual one and he proceeded to make a political statement.

Mr. Harkness: It was not a factual one.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to say now not only that the minister's statement is untrue but it is inaccurate because, first of all, this man was not a political organizer—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose if the hon. member wishes to challenge the statement made to the house by the minister as a matter of privilege he may do so, and I will give the minister an opportunity to answer.

Mr. Chevrier: I simply wish to say this. The person whose name has been mentioned was never a political organizer of mine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: He was never charged, as he should have been, but he was found guilty by the minister without being given the opportunity of a trial.

Mr. Benidickson: No bill of rights.

Mr. Harkness: I do not think any purpose would be served by my engaging in the same sort of childish activity as the hon. member for Laurier did in saying that statements are untrue. There is no question but that the statement he made is a highly biased one. He must have felt very badly about losing the services of this particular gentleman from his political organization.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: He has a better job today, sir.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

HOUSING

SARNIA—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PURCHASE OF PROPERTIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I should like to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Trinity last Friday. This is an answer not about angry waters but about blue waters. The hon. member for Trinity raised a question regarding the Blue Water redevelopment area at Sarnia, and then asked a supplementary question which I took as notice.

In answer to this question I would say that the city proposes to make the cleared land available for industrial use. While I am not aware of any agreement or understanding with the city of Sarnia that part of the land be made available to Polymer Corporation, it is quite possible that the city officials have held discussions with potential developers, including the Polymer Corporation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF FULL SIX-DAY BUDGET DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Finance, if in view of the fact that the budget will be brought in before Easter, so we are informed although not officially, he can assure the house we will be allowed the full six days of debate under our procedures before dissolution of parliament or before the Easter recess begins?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The hon. member began his question with an assertion. Anyone who can dream up an assertion of that kind I feel does not need any information from me on that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I take it I am right, and we will have the budget before Easter?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—REQUEST FOR TRAINING OF TROOPS IN KOOTENAY DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, and I might say that in presenting this question I am speaking for all parties in my constituency. In view of the report in today's Globe and Mail that Mr. Robert Bonner, attorney general of British Columbia, has expressed his disappointment at the refusal of the Minister of National Defence to send troops to the Kootenays unless the provincial government formally calls out the troops in aid of the civil power under the National Defence Act, would the minister inform the house whether he could, in the spirit of co-operation, review the training plans of the regular army troops of western command to determine if useful exercises, schemes and training could be carried out in the delightful Kootenay country during the next few months?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, having spent a few summer holidays in the Kootenay country I can vouch for the fact that it is quite delightful at that time of year. This is not that time of year and, generally speaking, to send troops in there would seriously interfere with their regular training and would impair their general efficiency.

However, the main point is this. There is no question whatever, in view of what the attorney general of British Columbia said and the reported statements in the Globe and Mail of this morning, I think it was, and other newspapers as to what various people living in that area have said—mayors of towns, and so on—that the real reason troops are wanted in the Kootenays is in aid of civil power. If troops are wanted and needed in the Kootenays in aid of civil power, then they should be secured in the regular manner as laid down by law.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AVAILABILITY OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION TO PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I regret that I did not have time to send him notice, but this matter was drawn to my attention by a telephone call just before the house opened.

An hon. Member: Oh, another telephone call.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): My question has to do with a rather disturbing report in yesterday's Journal which states that a tracing bureau operates seven days a week and 24 hours a day, and employs contacts in most of the country's major police departments, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the unemployment insurance commission, the Department of National Health and Welfare and several other government and private agencies.

My question is, would the minister launch an immediate investigation to ensure that confidential information gathered by some of these departments is not handed out to private investigators or anyone else?

(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the hon. member's question as notice and try to provide him with a reply as early as tomorrow morning.

(Text):

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION IN INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he advise the house whether British Columbia residents are yet receiving the benefits of last month's increases in the amounts his department is prepared to pay under the federal-provincial welfare programs?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, I have had no word from the hon. member's home province as to whether they are going to participate in this $10 increase.

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of National Health and Welfare inform the house whether there is any progress with—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): "In connection with".

Mr. Johnson: —in connection with—the hon. member is very good in English—the negotiations with the province of Quebec in this matter.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, Mr. Speaker, Quebec has not given any indication as to its intention.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I should like to direct the same question to the minister in connection with the province of Saskatchewan. Has the minister heard from the province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, Mr. Speaker. Saskatchewan makes the third and remaining province which has not given any indication.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he has received any word from the government of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I have indicated that Saskatchewan was the last of the three provinces, the other two being British Columbia and Quebec, which had not given any indication as to their intentions. I might add that all provinces which have signed agreements, except Newfoundland, have had their agreements dated back to February 1; and the agreement with Newfoundland, which I signed this morning commences April 1.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the minister a supplementary question as to whether he thinks the promotion of questions of this sort is calculated to promote harmony with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Order.

INDUSTRY

SULPHUR CONVERTING CORPORATION, MONTREAL—INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTER TO LUNCHEON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister receive an invitation to attend the luncheon last Saturday to launch a steel complex in Lauzon, which is in my constituency? If so, did he reply and what was the nature of his reply?

An hon. Member: It is none of your business.

Mr. Chevrier: Closure.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has not satisfied me that the question is a proper one. It seems to relate to the social engagements of an hon. member, which are not normally discussed on the orders of the day.

Mr. Bourget: I am asking that question of the Prime Minister and I think I deserve an answer—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bourget: —because after what has been said in the newspapers, and because I am the member representing that constituency, I think I am entitled—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Bourget: —to ask the Prime Minister, and it is in the public interest to know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the hon. member for Essex East on the point of order may I remind hon. members that questions asked before the orders of the day, like written questions, must relate to public matters. Rule 39 says:

> Questions may be placed on the order paper seeking information from ministers of the crown relating to public affairs; and from other members, relating to any bill, motion, or other public matter connected with the business of the house—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on this point may I bring to your attention the fact that this does relate to a public affair and to a public matter, since it concerns the construction of wharves and other matters of a federal nature within the area which my hon. friend represents in this house.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question related to the construction of public wharves, well and good; but the hon. member's question as I heard him put it was as to whether the Prime Minister had been invited to a luncheon party and whether he had accepted or refused. I cannot allow a question of that kind.

Mr. Bourget: If I may be permitted to add one word, the question I am asking the Prime Minister is put to him in his public capacity as Prime Minister of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bourget: I am the member concerned because this complex was supposed to be developed in my own constituency, and I am sure I am in order in asking the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Bourget: —if he received an invitation.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is repeating his original question, I must say I cannot agree with him; I cannot accept his view. It would be intolerable to have hon. members of the house asking each other about their private engagements on the orders of the day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: That, basically, is what it is. If there is another matter of public administration involved, surely the hon. member can ask a direct question about the matter of public administration.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the allegation has been made in the newspapers that public money was going to be spent on this particular project.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. That may or may not be the case, but that has been the public allegation, and surely an hon. member is within his rights to put to the head of the government of Canada a question asking whether or not this government proposed to spend any money on that project.

Mr. Speaker: I quite agree with the hon. member, but no such question has been asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bourget: May I then ask the Prime Minister whether any commitment has been made regarding the construction of wharves in my constituency in connection with that steel complex?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is in the negative completely and absolutely in so far as the government is concerned. May I also add that the kind of exhibition going on here today is time consuming.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It indicates the attitude of the opposition in endeavouring to waste time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: Sit down, Sir Wilfrid.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister in this house is no different than any other hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and he has no right to rise and make statements of that kind.

An hon. Member: Yes, he has.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If our questions are not in accord with the procedures of this house, it is up to Mr. Speaker to say so. The Prime Minister ought to attend to the job of being prime minister. He will have enough to do if he does that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thought you ruled certain irrelevant questions, certain impertinent questions, out of order, yet they persisted in the opposition. I am simply pointing out that the business of the house is being held up from day to day by this kind of attitude.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex East suggested that a matter of privilege arises from the Prime Minister's reply. The Prime Minister, after answering the question, adverted to the discussion about the question and the point of order which I myself had taken, which point had been discussed by a good many people. As for the suggestion that hon. members are exercising for improper motives their right to ask questions, I do agree that that is not a proper suggestion to be made. Hon. members must be credited with discharging their duties properly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I wonder if he could inform this house whether he was acting in his capacity as a member of the government when he accorded an interview to the president of Sulphur Converting Corporation as reported in the Gazette of March 15. Could the minister tell us exactly what transpired?

(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, when visitors wish to see me in my office, especially when accompanied by high officials of the provincial administration, I see no reason why I should not let them come in, and this in no way involves the minister's responsibility, and still less that of the cabinet.

[Later:]

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is the high provincial official he mentioned in his answer the former deputy minister of the provincial department of industry and commerce, under the previous administration? Also, is he that same person of whom the parliamentary correspondent of Le Devoir, here, in Ottawa, spoke with much verbosity in one of this week's issues of that paper?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what extent I have to answer this question. However, in order to satisfy the curiosity of the hon. member—who, in any case, ought to know something about that company which originated in his region—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I beg your pardon. It was in the Roberval constituency.

Mr. Dorion: —and through the efforts of his own friends—the gentleman referred to is Mr. Coderre, who remained in the Quebec government service, in the department of the Hon. Mr. Rousseau.

An hon. Member: He is a friend of the Union Nationale.

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State not aware of the fact that Mr. Louis Coderre is no longer deputy minister of the provincial department of industry and commerce and that he is still a friend of the Union Nationale?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member's question relate to industry and commerce in the province or in the federal government?

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SECOND NATIONAL MICROWAVE SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a completely innocent question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement of Mr. H. G. Young, chairman of the trans-Canada telephone system, that the announced Canadian National-Canadian Pacific national microwave system will be a duplicate facility, with no apparent requirement either for the public use or for defence, could the minister tell us if he was consulted by either the C.N.R. or Canadian Pacific before the project reached its present stage?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): What the hon. member is asking for involves the contents of a communication between the minister and a crown corporation, and it has always been my understanding that such communications are privileged and should not be placed before the house.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, then. Was the minister aware that the C.N.R. was entering into this $36 million program before it was announced?

Mr. Balcer: The budget of the C.N.R. and of Trans-Canada Air Lines will be before the committee of this house which deals with these matters. The hon. member, who is usually a very vocal member of that committee, will have every opportunity there to put all the questions he wishes.

Mr. Fisher: Just answer the question.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question. Has the government approved the capital expenditure of the C.N.R. in relation to its share of the cost of the system?

Mr. Balcer: An announcement was made jointly by the C.N.R. and Canadian Pacific with regard to this telecommunications corporation. It has been published in the papers. As far as the expenditures of the C.N.R. are concerned, they form part of the budget of the C.N.R. and after they have been approved this budget is then placed before a committee of this house. That is the procedure.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the Minister of National Defence a question. Was he consulted by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway in connection with this microwave expansion program, inasmuch as it might be of assistance in defence communications?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I do not recall having been consulted, but I should have to check in order to find whether that is the case or not.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the minister consider the building of a new microwave system essential to national defence?

Mr. Harkness: I think it will certainly improve the capacity to carry on and maintain communications in the event of this country being under attack.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INFORMATION RESPECTING SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Before the orders of the day are called I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Labour—if I might have the minister's attention—if I could ask the minister—the minister seems to be very much engaged.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I can hear the hon. member; I do not have to look at him.

Mr. Benidickson: Still in a bad temper after the labour congress visit yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the minister for his customary courtesy. I would now ask him whether in fact he tabled the list of technical schools which my hon. friend from Laurier asked him for on Tuesday night, because there seems to be no entry in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings indicating that that document was tabled. If it was not tabled, could the minister table it now so that another procedural question need not arise in committee?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I endeavoured to table that yesterday, but the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate thwarted that attempt. If the hon. member for Laurier still wishes me to table it I shall be glad to do so. I was prepared to do it yesterday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You said you would table it.

Mr. Chevrier: I understood from the minister yesterday that he would take that course, and I would appreciate it if he would do so now.

Mr. Starr: Yes. I will table it with the permission of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give permission for this document to be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Technical and vocational training assistance—

636. To carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder—payments to the provinces—further amount required, $28,400,000.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I wonder whether the hon. member, before he begins, would permit me to make certain observations concerning the supplementary estimates, which have now been before the committee of supply for some days. The further supplementary estimates No. 3, which are those we are now concerned with, were introduced some time ago and have already engaged the attention of the committee of supply on, I believe, six days, today being the seventh. There are altogether 61 items before us, only 22 of which have been discussed and passed thus far.

My colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs, leading the house, drew to the attention of the house on two occasions the serious consequences that were certain to result from delay in dealing with these important supplementary estimates. On March 8, as reported at page 1635 of Hansard, my colleague said:

> I had hoped that we would finish the supplementary estimates this week because we are spending more than the normal time on supplementaries, and there will still be final supplementaries coming before us during this month. But uncertain as to whether or not we will complete the supplementaries tomorrow, I cannot forecast the business for Monday and Tuesday.
> If we do not finish the supplementaries we might have to continue with them on Monday, because certain works will come to an end and people will be without pay unless we are able to get these supplementaries approved.

Again on March 12, as reported at page 1731 of Hansard, my colleague drew to the attention of the house the serious consequences of delay. He said on that occasion:

> —as I pointed out to the house last week, certain projects will have to be discontinued for lack of money to carry them on and certain people will go without their pay because the money has not been voted by parliament.

My colleague then asked that the house proceed on the following day as expeditiously as possible with its consideration of these estimates.

I have no wish to curtail or to suggest on the part of any hon. member the curtailment of any proper observation that he feels it is his duty to make with respect to any of these items, or any observations which he wishes to put before the committee which may affect his own decision or the decision of other hon. members in voting on any particular item, but I would be lacking in the performance of my duty if, in view of the long time which has already been devoted to only 22 of these items, I did not reinforce what was said by my colleague the leader of the house and bring to the attention of the committee the fact that we have reached the 15th day of March.

Mr. Hellyer: The Ides of March.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is normally the day when cheques are payable with respect to a number of the liabilities of the government. I must inform the committee that by reason of the fact that these supplementary estimates have not yet been disposed of, notwithstanding the warnings given to the house by my colleague some days ago, it will not be possible now to pay on their due date certain accounts of suppliers in various departments, and certain employees cannot receive their mid-March pay until supply is released.

In another case it has been necessary to stop payment on all non-pay list items in order to protect the mid-March monthly pay and allowances of the army. I would not be bringing this very serious matter to the attention of the committee as I do now if so many days had not already passed and if the matter had not already on two occasions been brought to the attention of the house by my colleague the leader of the house.

I repeat that I am not suggesting and under no circumstances will suggest curtailment on the part of any hon. member of anything he feels it is his duty to say, but there is such a thing as reasonable self-discipline in the house, there is such a thing as avoiding repetition—

An hon. Member: The minister should set an example.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and there is such a thing as adhering closely to the essential matters that are represented by each of these items. I therefore bring these serious facts to the attention of the committee in the hope that hon. members may find that they will have had reasonable opportunity to make their proper observations and it may be possible to have the supply passed and released for this necessary purpose.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much whether the remarks made by the Minister of Finance were in order. However, having allowed him to make the long statement he has just made I presume I should be entitled to reply and say to the minister that I am not too much impressed by the statement he makes, to the effect that he has no wish to curtail debate on the part of those who sit on this side of the house. The house leader on two occasions and the Minister of Finance on this third occasion have brought this matter to our attention. The only inference I can draw from the minister's statement is that he does wish in effect to curtail debate.

I have before me a list of the two supplementary groups of estimates tabled by the minister. The first is further supplementary estimates No. 2 tabled on January 24, 1962 and the second is further supplementary estimates No. 3, tabled on February 8, 1962. I understand from the house leader that there will be further supplementary estimates which are not yet before the house.

There is a limit to what the Minister of Finance can tell us, and there is a limit to the subjects upon which he can lecture us. If it is a fact, as we have some reason to believe, that parliament in the not too distant future is going to be dissolved, then surely before all the estimates are here we have a right to inquire to the full into the supplementary estimates.

As I said when Mr. Speaker was in the chair the day before yesterday, we may not be given the opportunity of discussing the main estimates at all. Since the Prime Minister, who is perfectly within his rights in doing so, chooses not only to keep unto himself his advice but also chooses not to make an announcement concerning these matters, surely we too, not knowing what the position is and not knowing whether the main estimates will be brought up for discussion or when further supplementary estimates No. 4 will be presented for discussion, have a perfect right to inquire into the matters that are before the committee.

Thus far we have spent six days discussing further supplementary estimates No. 3. That is not an abnormal length of time having regard to the circumstances under which this parliament sits—

Mr. Pickersgill: And the size of the estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: And, as my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate points out, this is not an abnormal length of time in view of the size of the estimates. Surely if we determine that on certain items we will spend more time than on others, that is our responsibility. Surely that is a decision we must take in the light of the items that are before us and in discharging our responsibilities to the country and our respective constituencies. If the Minister of Finance will give us the assurance that the main estimates will come before us for discussion before dissolution, it may well substantially alter the position taken by the opposition. We await with interest the statement the minister will make in regard to this matter.

I think that is only a fair and reasonable request, I feel we should be entitled to know whether or not all these estimates which we shall be asked to pass upon will be before us prior to dissolution of the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think it is quite obvious that the hon. member is talking about something entirely different. What I am addressing my observations to is supplementary estimates No. 3 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962. The hon. member is talking about the main estimates for the next fiscal year, which we have not yet reached. Surely his remarks have no bearing either upon this question or what is reasonable in relation to the consideration of the supplementary estimates for 1961-62. I simply renew the plea I made to all hon. members in relation to this matter, as I have some concern over people who are going to go without pay and over contractors who are not going to be paid.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister advise the house whether there is a list of further supplementary estimates No. 4 which will be brought before the house?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As my colleague the leader of the house said on March 8, as found at page 1635 of Hansard, there will be as usual the final supplementary estimates for this present fiscal year 1961-62. I shall be happy indeed to bring them forward just as soon as we can dispose of these supplementary estimates No. 3.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has not replied to the question I put to him. I asked whether or not, with regard to these additional further supplementary estimates and the main estimates, he will give us the assurance that these estimates will come before us prior to dissolution.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member says "these estimates". If he is speaking about the supplementary estimates for the present fiscal year, I can assure him that I shall be pleased to bring them forward just as soon as the house will have disposed of the supplementary estimates No. 3. I cannot go beyond that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are discussing the main estimates.

The Chairman: I just want to remind the committee at this time that the hon. member for Timiskaming has the floor. The Minister of Finance asked for permission to make a general observation with regard to the discussion of these estimates. He has made that observation. The hon. member for Laurier has replied on behalf of the official opposition. I think the questions should be dealt with as the items are studied. I therefore recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege. This is a matter which affects all hon. members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Including the Prime Minister, who should stay in the chamber.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sure we shall not object to the hon. member for Timiskaming having the floor after this matter has been disposed of. I think the Minister of Finance owes the house a duty and a responsibility to tell us whether or not we shall have an opportunity to discuss other estimates, anything beyond the estimates which he has tabled, prior to dissolution. That is something that is going to put an entirely different light on the whole discussion that is now going on with regard to supplementary estimates No. 3.

Mr. Churchill: May I just point out that the main estimates about which the hon. member is talking in referring to the estimates for the next fiscal year are already before the house in six departments, namely citizenship and immigration, justice, national health and welfare, northern affairs and national resources, public works, trade and commerce. Public works has been before the house on the main estimates for two days, so we are already into the main estimates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the question at all.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend from Essex East is quite right. That is not the question. I think the opposition is entitled to get from the government, either from the house leader or from the Minister of Finance, an assurance that before there is dissolution we shall have an opportunity of discussing the main estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: All of them.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, all of them; and an opportunity of discussing the other estimates that are before us now.

The Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: This has been a very interesting discussion, but in my opinion it has not been very fruitful. On behalf of this party I should like to add only one suggestion, namely that I hope it is not a prelude to the government using governor general's warrants.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before the hon. member continues, will he allow me to observe that the Minister of Finance who raised this matter has now left the chamber while this matter is still under discussion.

Mr. Churchill: A disgraceful statement.

An hon. Member: He is back.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They have brought him back.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Essex East has just made a statement—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I raised a question of privilege.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —which he put forward obviously with a view to drawing attention to the fact that I had departed from the chamber when the hon. member for Timiskaming began to speak on the next item. I had expected to leave the chamber. I am leaving for a very good reason, namely to attend a very important meeting with the deputy prime minister of Australia, for which meeting I am now 10 minutes late. That is the reason I left the chamber. It was not that there was anything uninteresting about the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming, and it certainly was not for the reasons assigned by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Contempt of parliament by the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: I must remind the committee that the hon. member for Timiskaming has the floor, and that I had recognized him.

Mr. Pickersgill: You apparently did not hear me, Mr. Chairman, because of the noise opposite. I was raising a point of order, and it is this. Your Honour tolerated a lecture by the Minister of Finance to this committee. In the course of that lecture he made reflections about the conduct of other hon. members of the committee, and raised certain points. He even threatened us with responsibility for the failure to pay public servants, and so on.

An hon. Member: Where is the point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely, Mr. Chairman, I will be permitted to explain my point of order.

An hon. Member: Take 20 minutes.

Another hon. Member: What is the point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask you to keep order?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: When in the committee it was agreed that something be raised that is irrelevant, it has been the custom that the debate should not be choked off as long as hon. members wished to debate the matter. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River rose in order to put to the Minister of Finance a very pertinent question, but he was not recognized. This debate initiated by the Minister of Finance has been terminated while hon. members still wished to discuss points which he raised. I suggest that this is a denial of the rights of the opposition that is intolerable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are surely entitled to know which estimates were made so badly last year that the minister is now running out of money, and to have disclosed the real amount of mismanagement that made it necessary for a threat to be made on the orders of the day.

The Chairman: Order. The Minister of Finance asked permission to make a general remark, which he made, and it was made by the leave of the committee. That remark was made and an adequate reply was given by the opposition. We are not here studying the rules of procedure of the House of Commons. The business before the committee is vote No. 636. I would ask all hon. members to co-operate with the Chair so that we may get down to the business that is now before the committee, namely vote No. 636. On that particular business, which is the only business the Chair can deal with at all, I have recognized the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, as a P.S. to this whole debate I would advise our civil servants to get down to the banks and cash their cheques just in case. Yesterday we were talking about the fact that in Ontario we seem to have gone into the construction of these vocational schools without arriving at firm plans as to how we are going to get the children into them, what the purpose of the training will be, and also what the end result will be with respect to the students going through these schools.

I was pointing out to the hon. member for York-Scarborough in particular—when he speaks again in this debate I should like to know whether he does not believe this is true—that it is my information that in his area it is the expectation that during the next four or five years many of the classrooms being built under this program will be high school classrooms because there will not be the vocational teachers or vocational students to put into those particular classrooms.

Mr. Pugh: Have you no faith in Canada?

Mr. Peters: Certainly we have faith in Canada, but we have very little faith that le bon Dieu or somebody else is going to decide this matter. We should do a little planning. We should make some preparations. In Ontario the minister of education who is going to be responsible for this program is also the premier. A person who listened to the debate yesterday from the gallery asked me last night if I had heard about Robart's program of robots in the classrooms. Maybe we are going to use robots for teaching purposes. Maybe this is the way it should be done, but I do not think this kind of program can be undertaken without a plan. We know that we have not the facilities in Ontario to train teachers; we have not the facilities to train guidance councillors, yet the vocational training program in Ontario is more than double what it formerly was.

Mr. McGee: Does the hon. member want an answer to his question right now?

Mr. Peters: I have a few more questions. It may also be that in Ontario we are going to make use of other systems of teaching. It might be wise if we gave consideration to the matter of teaching by television. It may be that the federal government will pioneer in this field and be of a great deal of assistance, particularly in those areas where the national government has a responsibility with regard to education, the vocational training field. It may be that the national government should decide now on the standards of training and the type of training that should be given in each of these vocational schools. Perhaps the government should set standards in order to give guidance to those provinces that have not had as much experience in this type of training as other provinces.

Before the program can really be called a vocational and technical training program I think there must also be established a set of qualifications for teachers on a national basis; because I am sure, as other Ontario members are, that in the vocational schools this year there are going to be many teachers with a very limited amount of training in the particular fields concerned. As I pointed out yesterday, this is a fact now in many of the small high schools that have vocational training programs. The people they are getting are receiving quite high salaries although they have very limited qualifications for training other people in these fields. This is true of most of the areas of which I am aware.

An hon. Member: What about the hon. member for Peterborough?

Mr. Peters: I am sure the hon. member will understand the difference between academic training and technical training. Some other members may not. They may not know it is very difficult to transform the one into the other and get the best results. I am sure the minister will be the first to accept my statement that the plan has grown out of all proportion, and that it was certainly not expected that it would be so widely accepted; but because it has been widely accepted additional assistance will have to be provided to make the plan successful.

The third field into which I think the federal government should go immediately has to do with the establishment of standards for career and guidance teachers and other counsellors. Some members can laugh about this if they want to, but it is going to be of vital importance. The parents of children entering technical, vocational or business schools today are vitally concerned about whether they have chosen the right occupation for their children. I can only speak for the province of Ontario where I think the situation has been made more difficult because the whole system is now being broken into three sections and students who now do not have to choose a career until they have graduated from high school are going to have to make a decision at a much earlier age.

Mr. Pallett: Would the hon. member permit a question? Has he not read the proposed program in detail?

Mr. Starr: Or the act?

Mr. Peters: I do not quite understand the hon. member.

Mr. Pallett: Has he not read either the act under which these estimates are required or the program that has been announced by the minister of education for Ontario? If he has, then his last statement cannot possibly stand up.

Mr. Peters: The parliamentary secretary should know that we are not discussing a bill but rather a supplementary estimate. He should also know that the province of Ontario has not finally determined its program. If they have, it has not been made known to northern Ontario. A parent-teacher meeting was held in one of the new vocational schools about a week ago and nobody was prepared to give any of the answers or I would not be raising the problem. I believe these things have not been settled. If the hon. member has knowledge that I do not have, then I would appreciate knowing where the teachers are going to come from.

Mr. Cathers: That is not our concern.

Mr. Peters: That is the whole point. You say it is not your concern, but it has got to be your concern. There is no point in buying a car and having no gasoline for it.

Mr. Cathers: You are out of order.

Mr. Peters: There we have this government all over again. We say that you do not really care, but you have to care or the plan will be unsuccessful, and you will be dealing with the lives of a whole generation of children in the process. Vocational training is vitally needed. It has been needed for 50 years. Maybe it was needed then more than now. I am not in a position to say because I am not in the counselling field. I do know that we just have not got the people available to staff these schools, and I say that the government should take the lead in assisting the provincial governments in this regard. There are people much better qualified than I who will be speaking on this matter, and you can question them.

The point is that we need further assistance. The minister is certainly to be congratulated for having initiated this plan. The fact is that it has met with greater acceptance than he expected would be the case. It is also important that we give leadership in the provision of qualified personnel to staff these schools. Maybe we will be able to use television for teaching. Maybe we could supply robot assistance. Maybe there are other forms of teaching we could supply that would fulfil the need. I think it is true that this year we are not going to have enough teachers for all the classrooms and shops in the schools that are being completed. I only ask that more consideration be given, not that there be any curtailment of the plan. We now know there are very great weaknesses in the field of education.

I believe that in the field of vocational and technical training the federal government has a responsibility. We want to see standards established for employment purposes from coast to coast. We want to see standards established for teaching proficiency from coast to coast. We want to see every assistance given, every modernization made, wherever it is possible. These things should be provided by the government to those provinces who want to take advantage of them.

Mr. McGee: In view of the questions of the hon. member for Timiskaming which were directed to me, I should like to reply. I should like also to express some disappointment that he did not offer me the bet which he started to offer me when he was cut off the other evening.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who is taking up the time now? Listen to what the Minister of Finance said to me.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member for Essex East is lecturing the committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not objecting, but just listen to what the Minister of Finance said. That is what I am pointing out.

Mr. McGee: As I was saying, before we were treated to another spontaneous lecture by the hon. member for Essex East—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Never mind the insults.

An hon. Member: Still out of order; still speaking from your seat.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why don't you try to speak from your head?

Mr. McGee: The hon. member for Timiskaming suggested there would not be a sufficient number of students in the township of Scarborough to fill the classrooms that are now being built under this program. I just want to say that I have more faith in the potential birth rate of York-Scarborough than he has.

Mr. Peters: I did not say there would not be enough students. I said that there would not be enough in the technical courses. There will be enough students.

Mr. McGee: I am replying to precisely that point. There has been a substantial and continuing increase, a natural rate of increase in my constituency, possibly the highest rate of increase in Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the hon. member have any control over that?

Mr. Peters: Quit bragging.

Mr. McGee: There is an increase in the number of young people with young families moving into this constituency. There have been over 100,000 move into the area since the 1957 election. I suggest to the hon. member that he is insulting the intelligence and smearing the integrity of the officials of the department of education who were responsible for making these recommendations. The criticism by the hon. member for Timiskaming amounts to this. He is saying, in effect, that this government is moving too fast, moving too aggressively, and that is an interesting contrast to the statements made by members of both his party and particular sections of the frontbenchers who usually speak from their seats. They say that we have done too little and are too late in our efforts to combat this continuing, long term problem in this country.

Mr. Benidickson: When we opened the discussion of supplementary estimates No. 3 this afternoon I endeavoured to take the first opportunity to reply to the observations that had been advanced by the Minister of Finance. We are now dealing with a very substantial item in respect of vocational training. The Chair recognized the Minister of Finance, who intervened to suggest that there were people in Canada who were going to be deprived of salaries, under this item and other items in the supplementary estimates, because parliament was not dealing expeditiously with these proposed expenditures. It was not possible for me to be recognized, although I attempted to obtain the recognition of the Chair while the Minister of Finance was in his seat. I feel that if I had been able to obtain recognition the hon. member for Timiskaming would have recogized that I was speaking to the point that was then under discussion, and he would have allowed me to continue.

I want to say that the responsibility in these matters is with the government and is always with the government. These supplementary estimates No. 3 were introduced on February 8, 1962 by the Minister of Finance. However, not until February 23 was this committee asked to deal with them. Then again, there was an adjournment of the debate on these matters. This is all within the leadership of the government. We were not again asked to deal with these matters until March 2 or 3, I believe.

In addition to that, and what I really rose to try to get information about, is the fact that the main estimates presented a year ago always contain what I call a kitty, something available to the Minister of Finance to prevent any failure in the payment of pressing obligations, particularly payments for personal services in the way of salaries. The main estimates for 1961-62 contain an item called "Contingencies and miscellaneous." Our government financial housekeepers should have been looking ahead rather than coming now and moaning that perhaps somebody is not going to get a pay cheque.

This is the third group of supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year. Further supplementary estimates No. 2 were introduced on January 24. Was there anything in them to replenish the so-called kitty to which I referred, and which is given to the Minister of Finance every year in his main estimates? Was there anything advanced by him after parliament assembled, in the further supplementary estimates No. 2, for the replenishing of another kitty, item No. 125, to supplement other votes subject to the approval of treasury board, for the payment of salaries, wages and other pay list expenses? There was not. There is nothing of that nature advanced in supplementary estimates No. 3.

I want to say that had there been, this would have been taken care of, because items for the Minister of Finance were given priority. I remind the committee that the supplementary estimates for the Minister of Finance were passed at the first opportunity for debate, on February 23. There was no item to replenish these votes. I should like, therefore, to ask the parliamentary secretary to tell me to what extent his opportunity to take care of the situation by means of these items has been completely lost. I refer to the votes that we passed, items 121 and 125 in the main estimates. I say it is completely erroneous to tell those who are looking to the government for payment for personal services, or for materials, that the opposition is to blame if they are not paid.

I repeat that the supplementary estimates were presented on February 8. The leader of the house did not introduce them for debate until February 23. We were given then only one day of debate and the next opportunity for debate, I think, was March 12. I say that no blame can accrue to the opposition in this respect.

I do want the Minister of Finance to indicate, without any derogation of our rights as an opposition—after all, there is a lot of money involved here—which of the items we have not yet passed involve payment for personal services which the minister is not already empowered to deal with under the general "kitty" items to which I have referred.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, it is with no apology that I take up the time of this committee to deal with this problem, because I do not think there is any piece of legislation, and certainly no estimate, which will have more effect and significance in the years ahead than the one we are dealing with this afternoon.

Hon. members know that this program comes under Bill No. C-49, which was introduced in the fall of last year. We all had great hopes for this program and we all supported the bill with a considerable amount of enthusiasm, although not without some serious misgivings. I am afraid those misgivings have proven to be justified.

If I may trace the history of this matter for a moment, this was a crash program, but it was a crash program in an area where crash programs are least successful, and I am afraid that the whole thing may come crashing down around us. We all know the pressure that was behind this program. In the fall of 1960 the unemployment crisis had reached tremendous heights and something had to be done. This was one of those great pieces of legislation put forward to solve and end our unemployment problem.

However, a second realization came along with it. This was as a result of studies that were made in certain areas in certain occupations, when we discovered that Canada had one of the worst trained work forces in the world. Indeed, over the last 10 or 15 years we had been importing our skilled labour and had failed rather miserably to create a society which would encourage young people to stay at school and become more skilled and more able to compete in the technical and vocational areas when their lack of skill was the cause of their being unemployed.

We brought those two facts together and then, of course, we made a rather amazing assumption. We assumed that the provision of facilities, the building of schools, shops, and so on would solve this problem. We assumed this was the deficiency with which we had to deal, that we had not built enough vocational schools at the secondary level, not enough trade schools at the post-secondary level, and certainly not enough technical institutions for a higher level of attainment. This was a reasonable assumption, but I do not think it is one that has ever been borne out by the facts.

Last May the information branch of Department of Labour passed around a publication which I am sure all hon. members have received. It contains a series of speeches on education, training and employment. It was published and distributed by the information branch of the Department of Labour in May, 1961. In this publication there is an address by Mr. D. E. Bridge, of the vocational training branch of the Department of Labour, which deals with this problem of facilities. I should like to quote the following extract:

> In Canada at the present time there are 24 institutions of technology providing post-high school technical training and five institutes that offer both post-high school technical and also trade courses. In addition to these schools, approximately 223 technical, vocational or composite high schools provide commercial, technical, trade or other occupational training programs.

A cursory glance at these statistics will show where the real deficiency was; not in the secondary school level but in the post-secondary trade school level. In the trade school level there were five institutions across the whole Dominion of Canada. This is the area where the 700,000 people who were unemployed last winter could have obtained some relief. These were the people who did not have necessary skills; these were the people who were working in areas where they required new skills, and schools of this type in which they would be able to bring up their qualifications. This was an area where I think even a cursory glance would show what facilities were required. Mr. Bridge goes on to say:

> At the post-high school technical training level, where requirements are developing rapidly, the shortage of training facilities is very acute.

I repeat, "very acute". He goes on to say:

> There is a need for facilities for an additional 15,000 persons in full time day classes at the trade occupational and post-high school technical level.

Of course we recognized that need. At no point does Mr. Bridge say that at the secondary school level there is any very acute shortage. The reason for my interest in this matter is because in my own experience I have travelled around various schools where there was no great shortage in the technical classes and sections of the schools or where students were unable to take vocational courses because of such a shortage. In many areas where I went I found they had vacancies. I am talking now about the secondary school level.

Let us look at Ontario for a moment. The problem of facilities I contend, is not at the secondary school level. The minister's report of September, 1960 stated that there were 61,049 people in vocational training—this, of course, includes commercial and various types of vocational training—at the secondary school level. I made inquiries and found that the total facilities in the province of Ontario were capable of accepting approximately 70,000 people. In other words there were sufficient facilities, as far as I could determine, at the secondary school level.

How fast is the need growing? I took the figures for the last three years and found that the need had grown by about one tenth each year. The buildings which have already been contructed, to say nothing of those contemplated by March, 1963, would raise the accommodation nearly 100 per cent from what it was when this bill was brought in. Once again I am talking about the secondary school level. Obviously one cannot help wondering whether these governments, especially the Ontario government, are not linking the development of secondary school training with reality. If they can get 75 cents for every dollar spent on this type of building, there is no reason why they should not take it. Whether they actually need it now or not.

There is no system of priority. We suggested when this bill was brought in that there should be a system of priority as to where the need was. Obviously it was in the post-secondary schools and in the trade schools. But where has all the money gone? We will look at the statistics on that question in just a moment.

Really what we have here is some kind of sewer view of education that was linked very closely to the N.H.A. legislation. It was suggested that we should build sewers and this would help put people to work, and it was felt that therefore if we built schools it would put people to work. The time limit was set for March, 1963 so we could build schools and other facilities whether or not we knew what we were doing. I suggest that one cannot relate the building of schools to a make work project; yet, as the minister said in reply to the hon. member for Timmins recently, the cut-off date of March 31 related to winter works. It is astounding to me that the long range future and employment of young people is being determined by winter works projects considerations. I think this will go down in the annals of education as one of the most fantastic, most misdirected programs ever conceived on the North American continent.

I read the debate on this bill with some amazement. At no time was it made clear exactly what the shortage was and where it was. I realize that the emphasis on keeping young people at school and the need for educational training in schools is important, and that with the growth of the population in this country we need more technical schools, but I say this is one of the most unbelievable hoaxes that has ever been perpetrated. This government does not know where the money is going or where it is coming from. This government has gone off on a wild spending spree which is unrelated entirely to where the real shortage is.

Mr. Bridge also says:

> Early last fall the Department of Labour was requested to gather information on a national basis concerning the requirements for training in all areas. Its officials were asked what facilities were available then, what new accommodation was required, what equipment and personnel were required to put the expanded program into operation.

I should like to read from the debate that took place on this program. Some rather interesting questions were asked in this connection. I can remember very well the afternoon when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate came into the house and asked some rather interesting questions. I should like to read from page 675 of Hansard for December 9, 1960.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure some survey of this was made before the legislation was produced and I would like the minister to tell us just what the capacity is in each province, how many people could be trained in the existing institutions that have already been provided and in each province, as well, what the department's estimate is of the deficiency. I ask that because I assume the department has made some kind of estimate of how many places for additional pupils are really required in order to do the much larger job which I completely agree with the minister needs to be done.

Then on page 676 appears the minister's answer:

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked about the present situation in vocational training schools in this country. I might say that I have had conferences, particularly with the province of Ontario, to see whether more of this training could be undertaken.

Boy, just look at the amount of money which is going to the province of Ontario now. The federal share amounts to more than $120 million. Quebec is getting $5 million and New Brunswick $1.8 million.

Mr. Pugh: Have you the figure for British Columbia?

Mr. Pitman: Yes, I have. It is $8 million. In Ontario it is $124 million.

Mr. Pugh: Are those actual expenditures?

Mr. Pitman: This is the table the minister gave—

Mr. Pugh: Expenditures to date?

Mr. Pitman: This is the estimated capital expenditure approved up to February 23, 1962.

Mr. Pugh: Those are commitments.

Mr. Pitman: That is right. Throughout history Ontario has been complaining about its money being used to help all the other provinces. All the provinces are educating Ontario now. "Particularly with the province of Ontario", the minister said. No wonder he should say that, when $125 million is being paid out of the money of this nation to Ontario and $5 million is going to the province of Quebec. To continue the quotation:

Their problem has been that all of their facilities have been filled to capacity.

I doubt that.

We have surveyed the other provinces of Canada—

I wonder why Ontario was picked out, especially when Premier Robarts came out and based practically all his campaign on a three stream system of education. But to continue—

We have surveyed the other provinces of Canada and we find their facilities are all filled to capacity and there is a waiting list.

I would question that also at the secondary level.

Almost as soon as the doors of new accommodation are opened it is immediately filled. Consequently we feel with respect to this matter and as a result of our survey that there has to be at least a 50 per cent increase in capacity throughout the country so far as this type of school is concerned.

Then the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate continued:

What I am really trying to find out is how many individuals can be engaged in training with the present facilities on any one day? It is hard for me to believe that the government, which has reached the conclusion that the capacity should be increased 50 per cent, does not know what the capacity is right now.

Then comes the answer of the minister:

In this respect I am advised that all we can do is to take the word of the provinces. They are the ones who advise us in respect of these matters and it is the provinces who say that they feel that a 50 per cent increase in present capacity is necessary over the coming years.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate continued:

Is the minister really telling us that his department does not know what the present capacity is in this country? When all is said and done—

Then he was interrupted by the minister, who said:

I do not want any misunderstanding; that is exactly what I told you.

Isn't this unbelievable? I will go on to another remark of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate:

I say I would not, as a minister of the crown, come into this parliament and ask that public money be spent out of the treasury of Canada merely because a provincial government said they would like more of something, unless they told me precisely what they had already so that when I asked the representatives of the people who are the trustees of the people for their money, for more money, I could tell them what existed already and not merely say, we have to take the word of the provinces.

Well, apparently that is the situation, and I cannot help wonder what this means. Somebody suggested that Premier Frost died politically of heartbreak because the promises made by the Prime Minister in Massey hall were not kept. I think he died politically of hysterics at the thought that he could take this government for everything it is worth. I think he must believe that they are the biggest group of suckers who ever landed here in Ottawa, because they can find a way to make this government pay for their education costs.

What does Premier Robarts say? He says "Cut down your education costs". I am reading from the Toronto daily Star of February 15:

> Premier John Robarts last night warned that municipalities must hold the line on education expenditures to keep municipal taxes at a reasonable level.

In other words he is saying "Boy, we have got something good. Now we will hold the line and we will stick the federal government for every cent we can." This expenditure has become a kind of transfer payment from the federal government to the department of education in Toronto. I think the department itself must go into hysterics every time they realize what this government is doing.

What the minister is saying in this debate is, we are concerned about unemployment and we have an idea that technical training can do some good. We are not sure that the government can do any good, but we can go on giving money out, not merely to the provinces, but to the municipalities, to see what will happen.

How is this money being spent? The minister says, as reported at page 1778 of Hansard, that it is to be spent as follows:

> Included in these projects are the construction of one new institute of technology, 18 new trade schools, five new combined trade schools and institutes of technology and some 114 new vocational high schools.
> Over and above these new schools, alterations and additions will be made to five institutes of technology, 16 trade schools, two combined trade schools and institutes, 56 vocational high schools and 31 minor alterations.

The money is going to the wrong places at the wrong times and for the wrong reasons. Obviously the provincial governments are going to accept this. Why would they not accept it?

Mr. McGee: Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Pitman: We shall vote it even if it bankrupts you. The history of the opposition in this parliament has been voting for little bits and drops in the bucket. That has been the entire activity going on in this part of the house. May I continue? I want to read a part of a speech by Mr. Bridge:

> The provinces were asked to estimate their needs and to suggest their possible expenditures for the next ten years. After considerable study of the needs of the ten provinces and a concentrated look in the crystal ball—

[Mr. Pitman.]

Boy, that was some crystal ball.

> —we came up with an estimated cost of some $190 million which I will admit startled us but apparently did not startle the cabinet. They decided to plan new legislation which would provide the type of training which we thought necessary for our own skilled manpower training program.

That was for the next ten years; $190 million. This was the result of the survey made by the Department of Labour. I point out that we are up to $269 million already. The hon. member for York-Scarborough said we were questioning the intelligence of the staff of the Minister of Labour. What does he say now?

Mr. McGee: That was not what I said.

Mr. Pitman: Well, I certainly understood that from the reference he made to the speech of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. In other words, according to the survey which was made before this bill was passed, a survey carried out when the department asked the provinces to survey their needs, the total of $190 million was considered a correct estimate of the needs for the next ten years. One year and three months later we have spent $269 million. Where does it end? Can there be any better proof that this government is being taken, that it has initiated a program which has simply gone wild? The government does not know where the money is really going, who is really spending it, or for what explicit reason.

I suppose the minister will take the attitude that the more money that is given away, the more successful the program is. If that is the criterion he could probably stand on the steps of the parliament buildings at Queen's Park and hand out $1,000 bills. That would be the most successful program the government could implement under that criterion. The question is how can we create a national training program, retrain the unemployed, raise the qualifications of those presently employed but soon to be unemployed, and provide a sensible, planned system.

We have not had a planned approach on the part of the government. Obviously the federal government has had no idea what the total effect would be. The provinces have already taken more money than it was expected they would take over the next ten years. That was some crystal ball. I think we can suggest that in this area Santa Claus is operating the government of Canada. There is going to be a terrible period of expansion. The local municipalities wonder how their budgets can possibly hold the line. Instead of adopting a planned and just approach there has been a scattered, helter skelter approach which I am afraid is not going to deal with the problem at all.

The school boards have no idea of the pattern of national employment. They do not know what the needs will be 10, 15 or 20 years from now. But they do understand one thing. If you can get a building and have the federal government contribute 75 per cent of the cost you should go ahead and get it, because if you do not need it now you may need it five or ten years from now and perhaps it would be a good thing after all. School boards have no idea of the best training that is needed.

Of course the tragedy of this situation is that we may be wasting a substantial portion of the money spent this way. Unlike defence, education has to be justified in terms of every dollar spent on it. That is true on the contemporary Canadian scene, and of course you cannot spend money twice. We may be stuck for 30 years with a system we planlessly threw together in the period between November 1960 and March 1963.

It is important to know what is going on in these schools. Some may say that is not a federal responsibility, but I say it is. The federal government approves every building that goes up under this program, and it approves of every plan.

Mr. Chambers: And the curriculum?

Mr. Pitman: You cannot conduct an art class in a woodworking shop.

Mr. Chambers: I think we wanted to know if the hon. member thought the federal government should establish the curriculum for the schools.

Mr. Pitman: I am not suggesting that. Let me place on the record a comment made by Dr. Claude Bissell, former president of Carleton University, when addressing the opening session of the Canadian conference on education in Montreal:

> Current demands for more vocational training in Canadian schools are about 20 years too late—

Perhaps one of the best known commentaries on the educational scene is J. Bascom St. John, who writes for the Toronto Globe and Mail. I invite hon. members opposite to listen to what he says:

> If anything is clear, even to Ontario politicians, it is that education is changing just as society is changing. This means that new approaches will have to be developed in school architecture to make possible the new trends in education. (That is why it is a national tragedy to spend $200 million, as Ontario is doing, on technical schools designed for educational programs that are already out of date.)

I suggest that in many cases this is a problem communities will face. They will have vocational training schools preparing people for employment opportunities that existed in the 1930's and 1940's. They will be training people for jobs of a nature for which there is a declining demand. The tragedy is that communities will be stuck with buildings that are out of date even before they are built.

Let me take an example. Last year I examined the woodworking program. I doubt that there is any job area that is less likely to expand or to be creative of employment than woodworking as it breaks down into cabinet making, pattern making, and so on. I do not know the experience of other hon. members, but my own experience this winter substantiates my belief. I have received a great many calls from unemployed carpenters this winter.

I am sorry to again use the Ontario school system as an example, but when you consider the money spent in the province in this field it is perhaps good to examine the record. In 1958 there were 111 graduates in all branches of woodwork. In 1959 the figure declined to 109 and in 1960 it dropped to 91. When I directed an inquiry to the department I was advised that 117 new wings or new buildings had been constructed in Ontario and there were 81 woodworking shops, approximately one for every student graduating in the craft. One director of education commented that we might as well establish a program under which we would give courses in fur trading, which would be just about as relevant to the situation. No time is spent in thinking, planning or in conducting research. We are just handing out money. There is no research project to determine the direction we should follow. I suggest we are erecting buildings which will be future monuments to our lack of foresight.

One cannot but wonder at the order in which things are being done.

I wish to read from the Toronto daily Star of February 28 an article entitled "Add $28 Million to Build Technical Schools—Ottawa". It reads in part as follows:

> Coupled with the building program is a report, soon to be released, surveying training requirements of industry across Canada and making recommendations as to what skills are most in demand.

Has this report been tabled? I have taken this comment from a news release. It continues:

> The two year study was undertaken by H. L. Shepherd, industrial relations supervisor of Canadian Westinghouse in Hamilton.

What a backward way to go about it. You put the buildings up and then have the survey. Of course the survey may reveal that the existing buildings do not meet the needs and that you cannot adapt the buildings to meet the needs revealed by the survey. A few millions should have been spent in research to find out where we are going; then the buildings could have been constructed. I suppose, however, that would not be politically expedient. I suggest that by 1963 there will be large numbers of brick piles to which cabinet ministers can point as they wander across the nation. The politicians are playing politics with the careers of our young people, and I am sure none of us condone this.

Let me quote from a news release issued by the Department of Labour on February 14, a statement attributed to the minister:

> Because of the recent increase in federal financial assistance to vocational training facilities there has been a great growth in the training capacity of schools in all provinces Mr. Starr said. He added that this will provide more pre-employment training and more capacity for training employed persons, with great advantage to the apprenticeship program.
> This expansion of training facilities is only the first phase of our work, Mr. Starr told the committee, which is made up of leading representatives from industry, the labour movement, and provincial departments of labour.

Surely the first phase should have been research to determine the needs. Can a more backward approach be imagined? I continue:

> The federal government is not satisfied just to see more schools being built, the minister stated. We are interested in the programs that will be provided in these schools and in industry. We want to see these new schools serve adequately the youth of our country, and industry.

In other words, you build the buildings, then find out what the needs are, and then set up the program. That is simply too ridiculous. What terrible consequences there will be as a result of this preposterous sequence. It may be discovered that we do not need some of the buildings, some may be located in the wrong places, some may be fitted for the wrong courses and of course, tragically, we will be stuck with them for 25 or 30 years. It is already too late, and the buildings will decide the programs.

The provisions of Bill No. C-49 offer assistance in the training of teachers, and I shall have more to say about that later. However, I cannot conceive of a more backward way of dealing with what I consider to be one of the most serious problems in the nation. Will the sequence here be that of putting up buildings, retraining teachers already trained, studying the needs and then deciding on the program? Again the sequence is backward. We are faced with the problem of bringing people up to the levels of skill and technical training demanded by the age in which we live. The Ontario department is faced with over 100 technical wings springing up everywhere. Where will they find the teachers?

As hon. members probably realize, vocational education divides into two distinct phases; the industrial arts, which is an important and significant area of teaching, as well as vocational training which is largely related to providing jobs. We recently received an interesting telegram from the chairman of the research council. This is what he says:

> Technical program in Ontario has caused displacement and discomfort for long established and professionally sound area of industrial arts. Research shows one hundred men seriously affected. Department not cooperating well to allow these to re-qualify but they take anybody from the trades. Details to follow. Sincerely feel with many others that program has gone overboard and is outdated.

What you have at this time—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry; I thought the hon. member had finished his sentence.

Mr. Pitman: We have industrial arts teachers who are doing important work in one area placed in another area where they themselves recognize they are not as qualified to teach trades training or vocational training as are those who have had several years trades experience, as it has been in the past. What you have are people less qualified in that sense when we need men more qualified in a certain way.

Mr. Hellyer: I listened to the hon. member for Peterborough with great interest. I think he has made a very thoughtful address and one which deserves serious study by this government. I will not attempt in any way to repeat the arguments he has put forward, as he has made the case very well.

An hon. Member: Does the hon. member agree with him?

Mr. Hellyer: As one of the people who several years ago suggested that the federal government embark on a training program, I am interested in the way in which it is being carried out. At that time at least some of us felt that the greatest need was in training and retraining for unemployed adults, that the need was greatest to provide skills for those adults who had not received skills in the process of their educational training and new skills for those who had been displaced owing to automation and other causes.

It was with this thought in mind that we felt that the federal government should embark on a massive training and retraining program for unemployed Canadian adults. I am sure that most people at that time did not in fact envisage that the program, when it was commenced, would be in major part federal aid to secondary education. I do not think that is what many people at least had in mind. I think what they had in mind was the federal responsibility to assist unemployed Canadian workers to gain the skills they needed in order to re-enter the Canadian labour force, to pull their full share in Canadian production and, as a consequence, to be entitled to their share of that production. It is fairly obvious that somewhere along the line the whole program has got quite a bit off course. Indeed there is considerable doubt as to the necessity of building new technical facilities at the high school level. This is the case that has been given us by the hon. member for Peterborough.

I note with considerable concern the opinions of two or three experienced teachers in Toronto trade schools who feel that to some extent at least they have not been fulfilling a useful function. Some of them consider that they have been little more than adult baby sitters for high school students who really do not know what they want to do, who cannot quite make the grade academically but yet who are too young to go out into the labour force. The hon. member for Peterborough has also said here that this is partly because of the curriculum and because the courses being offered are not those which are compatible with the technological age in which we live. Hence undoubtedly a review is required at the secondary school level by the individual departments of education across the country. But this has always been and is properly recognized as being within the competence of the provincial jurisdiction. The program on which we thought we were embarking was one for rehabilitation and retraining of members of the labour force who were not employed, for reasons beyond their control.

What has been the result in respect of this training at the adult level? I should like to put on the record a memorandum prepared by the Italian community promotion centre, 1683 Dundas West, Toronto 3. It is so good, Mr. Chairman, that I should like to put it on the record in full and I am quite prepared to take personal responsibility for the contents. The subject of this memorandum is "Ontario's Vocational Retraining Program". As they see it the problem is this:

> Under existing Ontario laws and practices it has become impossible for an adult to learn a designated trade unless he is prepared either to join the armed forces or unhappily becomes an inmate of a penal institution.

Then they carry on as follows under the heading "The Background":

> In November, 1961, in what was widely heralded as a serious effort to cope with the growing unemployment problem among immigrant workers, the Ontario department of education gave its approval to a program for the retraining of unemployed citizens under schedule five, which included a series of courses at the provincial institute of trades. The courses provided for 50 per cent academic training and the remaining time to be devoted to an orientation program by which the student would move from shop to shop spending approximately 100 hours in each and acquiring the basic skill in each of a number of trades.
> In December 1961, the prospective students were informed by letter of the opportunity to take the retraining courses. On January 5, 1962, 13 instructors were hired by the provincial institute of trades on a casual basis to carry out the programs but on the assumption that employment would be expected to continue for a period of six months if there was no shrinkage in attendance.
>
> On January 9, 1962, a battery of national employment service counsellors processed 225 applications for the upgrading classes.
>
> On January 10, 1962, the provincial institute of trades, where the courses were planned to take place, received instructions from the department of education that all practical work in the designated trades was to be eliminated.
> On January 10, 1962, at 4 p.m., 180 unemployed citizens with high hopes reported for training in anticipation that both theoretical and practical work would be available. They were informed that unexpected problems had arisen re: practical phase of the course and that for now the academic phase only would be given.
> On January 14, 1962, the Italian community promotion centre dispatched the following telegram to the Hon. John P. Robarts, prime minister of Ontario:
>
> "Italian community of Toronto deeply regrets reversal of the government's first decision to provide technical and academic training for Italian immigrants at the provincial institute of trades under schedule five.
>
> It is the sincere hope of the Italian community that the government will reconsider this regrettable action and immediately reinstate its first plan to provide for effective training under this scheme.
>
> F. Roca"
>
> On January 16, 1962, the following telegram in reply was received by our president: "In the absence of the Hon. John P. Robarts, prime minister of Ontario and minister of education, this will acknowledge the receipt of your telegram dated January 14, 1962. In your telegram you expressed regret on behalf of the Italian community regarding the decision which was reached with respect to a proposed training program at the provincial institute of trades. I can assure you that your communication will be brought to the attention of the prime minister on his return. C. W. Booth, Deputy Minister of Education."
> On January 16, 1962, bricklaying, plumbing, steamfitting and painting instructors were informed that their employment would terminate on Friday, January 19.
>
> On January 18, 1962, the timetable was reorganized and announcement was made that there was no shop work in the designated trades. Some practical work was provided in welding and in cabinet making, since these trades were not considered then designated. Classes operated from 4 p.m. to 11 p.m.
> On January 22, 1962, the department of education, apparently after consulting the director of the apprenticeship branch of the department of labour, discovered that any work in cabinet making was also unacceptable to the department of labour.
> On January 22, 1962, the provincial institute of trades was informed that cabinet making instructors would terminate their employment as of January 26, 1962, and that this phase of the program will cease.
> On January 26, 1962, the attendance of classes averaged 105 men of which: 28 men taking basic training in academic subjects only; 38 men taking academic subjects plus welding; 21 men taking blueprint reading plus academic subjects; 29 men taking for the last day cabinet making plus academic subjects.

On January 26, 1962, the following letter was received by Mr. F. Roca, past president of the Italian community promotion centre, from the prime minister, the Hon. John P. Robarts:

"Dear Mr. Roca:

Your telegram dated January 14, 1962, expressed regret on behalf of the Italian community regarding the decision which was reached with respect to a proposed training program at the provincial institute of trades. The matter of offering practical training in the building trades has been studied carefully and the conclusion has been reached that under the laws as they stand at present the Ontario department of education is not in a position to offer basic training for skilled development in the designated trades. The course has, therefore, been revised to include academic work related to the trades. It is our opinion that this revised course will be of value to the people whom you represent.

Yours sincerely,

John P. Robarts,
Prime Minister of Ontario and Minister of Education."

Some unanswered questions: In analysing these events, the following considerations have come to our attention:

1. Out of 180 applicants, 45 have spent four to ten years as tradesmen and had registered for the course to upgrade themselves. It is difficult for us to understand the basis on which unemployed tradesmen are denied this opportunity.

2. While the main purpose of the course is to upgrade these people academically, it is important to remember that these men are accustomed to manual work and that it is most difficult to get them to accept an educational program which excludes any opportunity to develop manual skills.

3. We have been diligently studying the apprenticeship act and regulations in order to learn what precise laws in Ontario would make it illegal for the department of education to offer training in basic skills in designated trades where there is no compulsory certification. If it is entirely permissible for anyone over 21 years of age to accept employment in any of the building trades, whether he has any training or not, why then is it illegal for the department of education to provide this much desired training?

4. We have been surprised to learn after careful investigation that Ontario is the only Canadian province where the apprenticeship act makes it impossible for a person over 21 to get training in a designated trade.

Summation:

It is our firm conviction that in watering down the progressive and comprehensive program it embarked upon last November the government has taken a retrograde step. We therefore call upon the members of the legislature to urge the government to alter its decision and return to its original policy. Failure to do so will, in our view, lead inevitably to a situation where thousands of new Canadians, who could by retraining very greatly enrich their own lives and thereby increase their value to the province of Ontario, will instead become spiritually disheartened and during frequent periods of unemployment an economic burden to the community. To permit this to happen would, in our opinion, be a denial of the dignity and rights which are the basis of the Ontario human rights code.

We hope that in reviewing the facts given above you will bear in mind that our organization, in pressing for the full reinstatement of the original plan, is motivated by one desire, to enable these new Canadian citizens to increase their knowledge and develop their skills so that they may make their maximum contribution to the development and progress of the land of their adoption. Above all, we hope that you will do your very utmost to bring about a speedy change in existing laws which now stand as a barrier to the government's previously announced retraining program.

We are confident that the members of the legislative assembly will share the concern felt by the members of our association in a situation where the well-being and future usefulness of many thousands of new Canadians is vitally affected. For that reason we felt obligated to provide you with some background material which will enable you to make a proper assessment of the problem and effect an early solution. It is our earnest hope that you will find the occasion to deal with this matter within your own parliamentary group or in the course of your legislative deliberations. If you desire further information the undersigned will be very happy to confer with you.

Respectfully submitted,

Adelsi Bulfoni, President.

Although this memorandum is oriented to new Canadians, it applies equally to all Canadians. They have the same problems. It applies equally to unemployed adults no matter what their origin who happen now to find themselves without employment and who wish to take advantage of their idleness to improve their chances to contribute gainfully to the country they love. This is the problem. This is what we are trying to face and yet this problem is being evaded by the government by reason of the administration it is giving to this act.

I have said that in respect of young people of high school age there is some real question whether further expenditure in this area is in their own best interests or whether, on the other hand, an expansion of the apprenticeship scheme would not be of greater benefit to them. I can say from my experience in hiring men, Mr. Chairman, that I have found that those who are best qualified and best able to go to work and do their assigned tasks well, without on the job training, are those who have gone through the apprenticeship system and those least qualified and least able to perform the duties assigned to them are those who in many cases have graduated from the secondary school system as it is now constituted.

This raises a very real and vital question. We are being asked to provide to the province of Ontario alone over $100 million. To do what? That is the question. To subsidize the building of secondary school facilities which are not in some cases in the best interests of the pupils themselves? Is that the purpose for which funds are being voted? Is it the intention of parliament that the great problem of unemployed adults is to be overlooked and ignored and that the impression is to be created that something is being done merely because a lot of money is being spent? Is this what we are being asked to believe?

There is a very real question, Mr. Chairman, as to the effectiveness of this plan to meet the purposes for which it was allegedly designed. This raises too, as I have said, by inference at least a question as to the competence of the authorities in some of the provinces, particularly in my own province of Ontario, to administer the plan wisely and make the maximum use of the funds for the purpose for which they were intended. Frankly, I have not too much faith in the Ontario administration.

Furthermore, it raises the larger question of the effectiveness of provincial jurisdiction in labour matters. The judicial committee of the privy council ascribed labour matters to the provinces under section 92 of the British North America Act relating to property and civil rights. One could ask, how can the federal government, which is responsible for maintaining full employment, which is responsible for maintaining economic growth in the country, fulfil this responsibility when it is frustrated by legislation such as that existing in the province of Ontario in respect of apprenticeship training. This is a very real question, Mr. Chairman, and one to which I think we will have to turn our attention. Can we in 1962 expect the federal government, with its responsibility in matters of money and finance, with its responsibility in respect of external trade, with its responsibility for over-all financing of major national projects, to achieve the goal of full production and full employment, the raising of the standard of living, and at the same time be hampered in achieving that goal by the archaic legislation that exists in the province of Ontario?

Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the government will consider this question. I hope that the government will reassess the purpose for which this act was introduced, the purpose for which the legislation was passed and the purpose for which funds have been and are now being voted by parliament, and try to relate them to the great problem which exists in the country. I hope that before the question is put, the minister will reassure the committee that he will reassess the problem and that he will try to relate it to a greater extent than he has been able to demonstrate thus far to the funds being voted that are going to help rehabilitate and retrain those Canadian workers who, through no fault of their own, are unable to find gainful employment.

Mr. Pitman: I believe that what the hon. member for Trinity has said should be given careful consideration by the government. I feel this is the problem, that we are doing everything in the wrong order. We are putting the money in the wrong places in terms of priority. Certainly, we need vocational schools. However, let us find out where we need them and for what job we need them. Let us find out what people we should train. It is because of the planless, chaotic, confused state we have under this government today that we are doing the most fantastic things imaginable. This government is spending $124 million out of a vote of $188 million in Ontario, and yet Ontario may very well not even qualify for its share because they have not spent enough days in training unemployed people.

With over 200,000 people unemployed last winter in Ontario, that government did not train enough people to permit the Ontario government to qualify. The only provinces in fear of not qualifying were Ontario and Quebec. Yet, you have this distorted priority. The people were not trained but were on the welfare rolls and the governments are putting money into vocational schools which in many areas, I say from experience, are not going to be fully utilized for perhaps ten years.

Mr. McGee: They will be training people so there will be no unskilled unemployed in the future.

Mr. Pitman: These schools are not even training people for the type of employment that will be available 10 or 20 years from now. Are we going to keep these unskilled unemployed for the next 20 years? Are they going to be the lost generation, the lost group of people, as a result of this government's policy? You can put it another way. Are these people going to remain unemployed and do nothing for the economy of this country for the next 20 years? I know people who have been unemployed for three years. The hon. member for Essex East said he has people who are coming to him every week end, and I expect other members have had the same experience. There has been no government directed program for retraining unemployed. There is an excellent editorial on this subject in the Toronto daily Star, and it reads in part:

> Toronto's retraining program for the unemployed has hardly begun, though it was supposed to be well under way by midsummer. Why?
> There is no lack of unemployed men and women —26,398 were asking the national employment service Toronto district office for jobs last week.

At the same time, there were 10,000 unfilled jobs in Toronto that these people could not take.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it is now five o'clock and it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house can proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

House in committee on Bill S-3, an act respecting the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada. (Without amendment)—Mr. Weichel.

Mr. Speaker: I notice there are four private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole. Is it agreed that, in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54, they be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-3, respecting The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Weichel.

Bill No. S-4, to incorporate Westmount Life Insurance Company—Mr. Webster.

Bill No. S-7, respecting Muttart Development Corporation Limited—Mr. Maloney.

Bill No. S-8, respecting Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Lafreniere.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH IMPOSITION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-22, to amend the Criminal Code (corporal punishment).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the origin of this bill, as most hon. members are probably aware by now, is the report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons made in 1956 on capital punishment, corporal punishment and lotteries.

The recommendations of the committee include the following:

The committee kept two considerations in mind throughout its inquiry into corporal punishment as a part of the sentence of the court. The first was whether it deters those subjected to it from further crime and, second, whether it deters the public generally to a greater extent than other methods of punishment. The evidence did not justify the view that it will exercise any special reformative or deterrent influence on individuals upon whom it is administered and, on the whole, it appears to have the contrary effect. The committee concluded that the existence of corporal punishment affords no unique deterrence to crime. Accordingly, the committee recommends that corporal punishment be abolished for any of the offences for which it is presently prescribed in the Criminal Code.

The committee, representing members of all parties of this house and the other place, came to this conclusion after a most careful, thoughtful and thorough examination, after hearing testimony from many sectors of our country and summoning informed and expert witnesses on this subject.

[The Chairman.]

The history of the movement to abolish corporal punishment here and in other countries is interesting because wherever it has been abolished, either within provincial jurisdiction—as it was recently in the province of Ontario—or within federal jurisdiction, as occurred in England, the abolition of this particular form of punishment has flown in the face of public opinion. In England approximately 75 per cent of the public disagreed with the action taken in abolishing corporal punishment.

I am confident that this is the situation in Canada today and has been for some years. I have seen no evidence—and I would be grateful if any hon. member who has encountered any evidence to the contrary would inform me of this—that this situation has changed materially since the report of the joint committee to which I referred a few moments ago.

I should like to refer to the experience in England. Last year I took the opportunity to place on the record excerpts from the report on corporal punishment handed down by the advisory council on the treatment of offenders. This advisory council was ordered by the home office in England. The report was presented to that parliament by the secretary of state for the home department by command of Her Majesty in November, 1960. The advisory council was formed as a result of increasing agitation within and without parliament in England concerning the increase in the incidence of crime in general and crimes of violence, in particular, and particularly strong pressure exerted from within the house of commons.

A substantial number of government members—that is, members of the Conservative party—in England had been making vociferous demands of the government to restore corporal punishment, which hon. members will recall had been abolished in that country some years before.

Last year I placed on the record the salient features of that report in connection with this measure. I would recommend the reading of the report to hon. members interested in this matter. In reviewing the salient features of the report last year I neglected to state that in the face of vociferous agitation within the Conservative party in the British house and abroad in the country the government accepted the report, flying in the face of approximately 75 per cent of public opinion to the contrary. Surely that was an act of courage on the part of that government and an example, in an enlightened way of not accepting public opinion. I neglected to include that salient fact in the summary of the British experience in my speech on second reading of this bill last year. It is my opinion that the feeling in Canada today among those who are concerned with this matter is that we would be prepared to abolish corporal punishment for the adult groups, having acknowledged the futility of taking a hardened criminal, lashing him to a post and proceeding to apply the penalty in the quaint and crude manner prescribed under the Criminal Code.

I mentioned the province of Ontario a few moments ago. Again, it is significant that the province of Ontario under the leadership of George Wardrope, the then minister responsible for reform institutions in Ontario, should have abolished corporal punishment in that province. This was an act of political courage, I suggest, particularly when one recalls—and I am subject to correction here —that this action was taken a few months before a general election in that province. One could argue that the gentleman was elected in spite of that action rather than because of it, but it is significant to me that this action, an enlightened as well as a courageous one, should have met with a wide measure of support, certainly on the editorial pages of newspapers in Ontario.

I should like to turn the attention of the house today to the specific problem of the juvenile delinquent because, as I said a few moments ago, it is my opinion that the country is prepared to abolish corporal punishment for the adult group but that there is a reluctance not only among members of this house but among members of the public at large to abolish corporal punishment of the juvenile delinquent.

I should like to quote from the original report to this house concerning this question of the juvenile delinquent. I should also like to quote from the United Kingdom report, because this subject, as I shall point out later, is receiving increasing attention and is under study at this time by a committee set up by the Minister of Justice on January 8 of this year to inquire into the whole question of juvenile delinquency. It is my hope and expectation that following this inquiry we shall come to a final conclusion on this matter and satisfy ourselves that corporal punishment has no effective application in the field of the treatment of juvenile delinquents, and then proceed to abolish corporal punishment and place the name of Canada among those of the nations which have reached a degree of enlightenment enabling them to remove a barbaric and punitive form of punishment.

In the report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, specific reference is made to the corporal punishment of young offenders. I quote:

> The committee gave special consideration to the problem of young offenders. Some of the arguments for extending the use of corporal punishment to young offenders as an effective deterrent against subsequent offences are reviewed in paragraph 13. The only suggestions made for increased use of corporal punishment were made by those who favoured its use for particular types of young offenders. The view was expressed that youths who had persisted, despite reasonable efforts at reform by probation and other methods, in offences against the person, property or public order, most commonly associated with street corner gangs, might be brought to their senses by the administration of corporal punishment. In this way, it was contended, they might be saved from a prison sentence which would probably lead to a confirmed criminal career.

Then the report continues:

> The committee cannot accept these views. The evidence presented to the committee indicated that the special provisions formerly made in the United Kingdom for the caning or birching of young offenders were not effective and were gradually abandoned, in practice, in favour of probation and other methods of treatment which were found to be much more effective. The United Kingdom departmental committee on corporal punishment (1938) recommended abolition of caning young offenders. This recommendation was carried into effect in 1948, by which time caning had become virtually obsolete as a method of treatment or punishment.
> Medical and psychiatric evidence presented to the committee suggested that little, if any, advantage would come from increased use of corporal punishment against young offenders. It was stated that such punishment would create an attitude of aggressive hostility in many cases which would militate against reform; and the experience of the juvenile and family court of Toronto with corporal punishment of juveniles supported this contention. The danger exists that any increased use of corporal punishment for young offenders might undermine and destroy the positive attempts made towards their reform and rehabilitation. It was also considered that the delay resulting from the necessity of allowing for a proper trial and appeal would destroy any good which an immediate application of corporal punishment might accomplish.

Finally, the report says:

> The committee does not believe that any convincing case was made for extending the use of corporal punishment to young offenders.

I would remind hon. members that this question of the street corner gang and the kid in the leather jacket is not new. Suggestions have been made that this problem is increasing, but the factors which are involved and which were considered by the committee have, I submit, not changed in any material way since the date of this report.

Now I should like to refer to the report made in 1960 in the United Kingdom where special attention was paid to this question of corporal punishment for juvenile offences. I quote:

> There seems to be a widespread feeling, based partly on these objections to the formalities of judicial corporal punishment and partly on those to the delay that must occur before the punishment is inflicted, that for young offenders the punishment should be either less formal or administered without waiting for the ordinary judicial processes. One suggestion put forward—

I might add, parenthetically, that this is a suggestion I have heard frequently from hon. members in private discussions on this subject.

—was that courts should have power to order young offenders to be caned by their parents, and another that the offenders should be handed over to their schools to be caned.

After mentioning that this particular point is discussed in another paragraph, the report goes on to say:

We do not see how either could be enforced. Another popular suggestion was that the police should be permitted to "cuff" or "spank" young offenders on the spot, or should take them to the police station to be caned immediately, and that they should be protected by law against the possible consequences of such actions.

Again, this is a popular opinion, a widely held view as to what might constitute a simple, quick and easy solution to this problem. Hon. members may recall several suggestions which have been put forward as to how these young punks can be treated. The report goes on:

Several of our older correspondents said that these practices were prevalent when they were young and that it was mainly because they themselves were dealt with summarily in such ways that they were better behaved in later life. We do not think, however, that such practices would now be found acceptable.

Then, discussing the reference which was made to the possibility of turning over young offenders to their parents for punishment, the report states in a later paragraph:

One suggestion that was put forward in relation to young offenders was that parents should be required to administer the penalty, if necessary under supervision, but this would clearly be impracticable, as well as objectionable in principle. A parent could not be required by law to chastise his child, nor could any sanction be imposed if he refused to do so.

Where the problem has come into sharp public focus, public opinion aroused and inquiry made into the question, we find once again that the thinking of experienced people in the field almost unanimously is that in England corporal punishment should not be restored and in Canada it should be abolished.

I mentioned earlier that the Minister of Justice has established a committee to implement a study of juvenile delinquency in Canada. I wish to read briefly from the terms of reference of the committee as contained in the press release of the Department of Justice dated January 8:

The committee will be charged with the responsibility of inquiring into and reporting upon the nature and extent of this problem in Canada and to make recommendations concerning steps which may be taken by the parliament and government of Canada to meet the problem. It will hold discussions throughout Canada with appropriate authorities who work in, or are familiar with the field of juvenile delinquency and invite written briefs from interested private organizations and members of the public.

The director of the main committee will be Allen J. MacLeod, Q.C., commissioner of penitentiaries, a man who I am sure is known to many hon. members of this house. I am certain Mr. MacLeod would not object if I mention here that this fulfils a strong personal ambition of his. I am sure he has discussed this with many hon. members. He feels that this is one of the vital areas of study that must be inquired into in an effort to understand and solve the problems that occur in later life, and those he has to deal with in his capacity as commisioner of penitentiaries. Mr. MacLeod is a man of outstanding reputation, ability and character and will do an excellent job in this capacity. He is to be assisted by a supervisory committee to be composed of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice whose sterling qualities I need not list because the reputation of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert speaks for itself, C. W. Harvison, commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Mr. T. George Street, Q.C., chairman of the national parole board, who are outstanding in their respective fields.

I would hope that the committee of inquiry in its meetings with various groups across Canada would address itself particularly to the problem of corporal punishment for the juvenile offender.

A frequent argument one hears with respect to the retention of corporal punishment is that advanced by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe in the debate last year to the effect that we do not want to go soft, that we do not want to spare the rod and spoil the child. However, I have personally spoken to people who held this view and who, when serving as members of committees of inquiry into the question, when confronted with the cold facts of the testimony of experienced people in the field reluctantly found themselves unable to maintain the position they had adopted when first confronted with the problem. Records of committees of inquiry may be examined to substantiate what I have said.

I will conclude quickly by urging that the committee headed by Mr. MacLeod address itself to this question. I expect that the recommendation they will make on the subject will concur with that made by the interparliamentary committee in Canada and with that made by the more recent committee in England, and that in the reasonably near future we can look forward to a time when corporal punishment will have been finally abolished in Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us is, on the whole, rather simple: it tends to abolish corporal punishment, as provided under sections 136, 138, 141, 142, 148, 218, 289, 586 and 641 of the Criminal Code.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) devoted a considerable part of his speech to attenuating that aspect of punishment and of the penalty provided by law.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at this point that I do not want to impute any motive to the hon. member not to make any unkind remarks because I know very well that he is acting in good faith and that he has strong feelings on that matter. However, I fail to see why we should waste the time of the house looking into a matter which only affects a few individuals among 18 million Canadians. Indeed, I think that, during the year 1961, corporal punishment did not affect more than five, six or seven individuals throughout Canada, and I certainly think that we are losing here of the true issue which we should meet, and in respect to which I shall say a few words later on.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough mentioned some paragraphs of the report submitted by the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. It is true that the members of that committee recommend that corporal punishment be abolished for offences in respect of which it is presently prescribed in the Criminal Code, but they seem to have based their views on the fact, and I quote their own words:

> —that in the last few years, the courts have rarely imposed corporal punishment.

I would refer the hon. member to page 43 of that report, and I am taking this opportunity of telling him that I was greatly impressed by the views on corporal punishment expressed by the attorneys general of the provinces, by police officers and certain law enforcement agencies. I should like to quote a sentence from section 11, page 43, of that report:

> The attorney generals of most provinces, the police, and other law enforcement agencies favoured the retention of corporal punishment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill seems, indeed, to raise an issue which only exists in the mind of the hon. member for York-Scarborough. I do not believe that this problem can be said to stir public opinion. Not at all. The latest statistics I have here refer to the year 1954. Out of 2,344 cases where corporal punishment might have been prescribed in Canada, it was imposed in only 14 cases, representing a percentage of 0.6.

I thought the hon. member for York-Scarborough would have supplied us with some recent statistics, perhaps for the years 1958-59, 1960 and 1961, and I am certain that the proportion would have been still lower than the one I just mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, we are then engaged in an academic discussion. The question is to determine whether corporal punishment operates as a deterrent of certain serious crimes. Personally, I fail to see any usefulness in this debate, and I shall tell you why.

While the joint committee recommends the abolition of corporal punishment, it seems to question whether such a recommendation would be accepted, and it even makes alternative recommendations which the hon. members will find on page 48 of the joint committee's report. I quote from beginning of section 29 of the report:

> In the event that the recommendation of this committee is not accepted, the committee makes the following alternative recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for some relaxation in the meting out of corporal punishment in the most serious offences for which it is presently prescribed in section 289 and following sections of the Criminal Code, such as rape or robbery.

The hon. member, in spite of all his comments and learned comparisons, has not succeeded in showing the committee whether or not corporal punishment is a deterrent to crime.

There is no comparative table in Canada, and I do not believe the hon. member could show us one. I wonder whether we should not, on the contrary, try and make the law and its enforcement still more severe.

In a neighbouring province—the one referred to, a moment ago, by the hon. member for York-Scarborough—a survey of organized crime is now in process. That survey—and I am not indulging here in party politics—whether it has been requested or not by the opposition, has indeed been decided upon under the pressure of public opinion, I am sure. That survey is now then in process in the neighbouring province, especially on account of a statement made by the chief of the royal mounted police, to the effect that organized crime and American underworld elements had infiltrated into Canada.

I submit very humbly that, in the circumstances, we should keep the provisions of the Criminal Code as they are at the present time. Besides such is the recommendation of the attorneys general in most provinces—who are experts on the subject—as well as most chiefs of police in Canada and all law enforcement agencies.

I prefer to all others the opinion expressed by all these people, who know the facts and who advocate that the law be strengthened.

Mr. Speaker, a provincial inquiry on organized crime will take place in the neighbouring province. I submit that such is not the solution to the serious situation in which Canada finds itself at this time. As far as I am concerned—it is my personal opinion—I think that a royal commission on organized crime in Canada should be instituted; it is needed, especially following the statement made by the chief of the mounted police.

In the circumstances, I submit that this bill does not deal with today's problems and is at the most of academic interest.

Until a royal commission on organized crime in Canada is instituted and a report submitted, I am in favour of the status quo with regard to the present provisions of the Criminal Code.

For those reasons, if the bill comes to a vote, I will vote against it.

(Text):

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for York-Scarborough has introduced this bill. I hope this matter will continue to come up for consideration until finally corporal punishment is abolished. If for one moment I could see any evidence that the lash or the paddle was a deterrent to crime, an aid to discipline or of any use in the majority of cases in transforming the antisocial attitude of juvenile delinquents and criminals, then I would be in favour of its retention. However, I have never come across any evidence to show that corporal punishment exercised through the paddle and the lash results in anything more than an addition to the antisocial attitude of those who receive corporal punishment. I am not speaking from an attitude of going soft or from an attitude of one who does not realize the seriousness of crime, and in particular of juvenile delinquency in this country. I am speaking from a long study of this matter. I had the privilege of being one of the members of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which gave a great deal of thought and study to this entire matter. On the basis of all that we could learn from the authorities, we were obliged to reach the conclusion that corporal punishment should be abolished.

I personally have visited a great many jails and penitentiaries in Canada. I have seen the lash and the paddle. I have seen the rooms in which they are used and I have had given to me explanations as to how they are administered. The fact that there is a great deal of severity in the application of them is proven by the fact that a doctor must be present at all times. I have seen the backs of men who have had the lash. I know that many of them, after receiving the lash, require to be hospitalized for a number of days. I say that is not a modern approach to the questions of penology and of reformation. Over the years I have spoken to a great many of the guards in our prisons and penitentiaries. In the prisons and penitentiaries themselves I have interviewed a great many of those who have received the lash and the paddle, either as a result of a judicial sentence or for purposes of discipline through the warden's court. In all these interviews, which were sometimes undertaken individually and sometimes with a group numbering as many as 20 at one time who had received the lash and the paddle, I can remember only two who ever said that it did them any good. The rest of them said that it made them more bitter. They said it made them feel aggressive against society and not more friendly to society.

It will be a long time, Mr. Speaker, before I forget one young man whom I interviewed. He told me that as a result of receiving the paddle he was driven by one ambition only, namely the ambition to kill the guard who gave that punishment to him. This young man years later told me himself that the first thing he did when he was released was to get a rifle and that he actually had that guard in the sights of that rifle when a companion of good sense stopped him. Someone may say, "All right, you have spoken to these men in the institutions and naturally they would express bitterness and an antisocial attitude, but what about the attitude of those who were once antisocial, who broke the law, were sentenced and received the lash or paddle?" We recognized that that was a logical question to ask. That is why the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons in 1956 made all the neccessary arrangements through the Y.M.C.A., the Salvation Army and other bodies for legal counsel to the committee to meet in confidence with a number of former inmates who are now prominent businessmen in this part of Canada. They were all interviewed in confidence and their names are not known. But what they had to say is known.

When all these men who were previously anti-social, who received the lash or paddle and who have now become adjusted to life were asked what their reaction was to corporal punishment and whether or not it did them any good, only one said that it did. All the rest said exactly what I was told by men in the institutions all across Canada, that it made them more bitter and more antisocial. It made them want to get back at society. It was not so much a case of the pain as it was of the shame. That may sound rather startling, but if you speak to those who have had the lash or the paddle nearly all of them will say that they would rather have the lash. The lash is more severe and far more painful but they would rather have it because they can stand it and they become heroes. On the other hand, to be tied down to a table and have their pants taken down and to be paddled as though they were little schoolboys when they are grown men brings about a sense of shame in most of them.

I want to repeat that as a result of everything that the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons was able to learn, as a result of all I have been able to read on the subject, as a result of all the interviews I have had with those in institutions who have been given such punishment and the information received from those who in the past were so punished but are now rehabilitated, I can only come to one conclusion, that corporal punishment is not a deterrent to further crime and is of no assistance so far as discipline is concerned, because there are far better ways to administer discipline. It does not aid in getting rid of antisocial behaviour. It just makes these people more bitter. Therefore, although such punishment is only imposed rarely now by judges as part of sentences, I say it would be a sign of maturity on our part to remove from the statute books those provisions having to do with the imposition of corporal punishment. For these reasons I am in favour of the principle of the bill.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) on his pertinacity in pursuing this matter and in presenting this particular bill. I must say I am somewhat surprised at the attitude taken by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets). As I understand his position, it was that unless we can have a colossal production, unless we can have an epic approach, unless we can deal with this matter on the grand scale, why should we worry about it at all? If we waited for conditions like that to deal with any of the multifarious problems that afflict us, I am afraid very little progress would be made in our human affairs.

This is bad legislation on our statute books and I think no better proof can be found than the statistical information which has been given to us. If I may refer again to the report which was referred to by other hon. members, we find that in 1930 there were 1,143 cases where corporal punishment might have been awarded and such punishment was actually awarded in 95 cases or 8.3 per cent. Next year the figure rose to 12.1 per cent. We come down to 1954—this information has already been given but I wish to put it on the record again—and we find that there were 2,344 cases where corporal punishment might have been awarded and that such punishment was only awarded in 14 cases. This indicates the trend that has been pursued. Surely there can be no better proof as to the futility of this particular form of punishment.

I have discussed this question with judges and magistrates whose duty it is to decide upon sentences. I may say it is one of the most difficult and onerous responsibilities that falls upon a judicial officer when, after having come to the conclusion that a certain person is guilty of a criminal offence, he is faced with the very important problem of deciding what the punishment is to be. These are men who have had great experience with regard to the imposition of sentences. There must be a very large measure of wisdom residing in them as a result of the performance of their duties over a great many years. If in their wisdom they have come to the conclusion, as manifested by these figures, that the awarding of corporal punishment is not a suitable or sensible punishment in respect of certain criminal offences, then surely that speaks for itself.

So far as corporal punishment is concerned, we stand in the company of such countries as the United Arab Republic, the Union of South Africa and one or two others. I understand that the state of Delaware is the only state in the United States to retain this form of punishment. For us to retain this barbaric punishment upon our statute books in such company as I have indicated is to me an indication that our position has not been carefully considered. With any punishment of this nature which is repugnant, which is so opposed to our concepts of humanity and to the norm of human behaviour, I suggest that the onus should rest upon those who urge the retention of the punishment to establish beyond any reasonable doubt that it serves an effective purpose. In my opinion this has not been done nor can it be done.

I should like to make this suggestion. There will be an inquiry by the committee which the Minister of Justice has announced, for which I must compliment him, and I suggest that consideration might be given, without actually repealing the legislation, to abolishing corporal punishment for a temporary period so that there will be some opportunity to observe the results. I think that a suitable period might well be during the time when this commission is making its inquiries.

I know there are others who want to speak on this subject. There is much more that I should like to say. This is a difficult question because we find it hard to disentangle the skeins of emotion and reason, of fact and fiction, when dealing with an emotional problem of this kind. I should like however to refer to a reasoned and rational exposition of the subject in a book entitled "The Gallows and the Lash?" written by Mr. W. T. McGrath, secretary of the delinquency and crime division of the Canadian welfare council. After a lengthy and quite learned exposition Mr. McGrath concludes by saying:

> Corporal punishment does not deter potential criminals and, far from reforming the individual who received it, instils a desire for revenge that retards treatment.
> Canada is practically the only civilized country that still retains corporal punishment as a sentence under its criminal law. A few other countries still retain the lash or the strap to enforce prison discipline, but the fact that the majority of civilized countries, including almost all that have advanced prison systems, get along without it, shows we do not need it. It may well become a substitute for more progressive means of dealing with the situation.
>
> Corporal punishment has fallen into disuse in Canada,—

This illustrates the point I sought to make before.

> —and is used so infrequently that in his planning no offender could seriously consider the risk of such a sentence.
>
> The lash and the strap should be abolished—

And to that, sir, I say amen.

Mr. Jack Wratten (Brantford): I have to speak as a result of one or two experiences I have had in connection with this subject. I associate myself with the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) who said that he would have to vote against this bill. If a vote came now, I would do the same.

I believe that corporal punishment is a deterrent to crime, and I believe this as a result of one or two experiences I have had. I listened with interest to the hon. member when he said that, in Ontario, they have taken the strap away from the magistrate. Certainly we know it has been taken away from the school principal and the teacher. I believe that is one of the reasons we have so much juvenile delinquency in our province today. There is no doubt in my mind but what hon. members in this house, at some time or other, were chastised, perhaps rightly so, and learned a good lesson, one that they did not forget. I should like to read part of an article that appeared in a newspaper the other day. I quote:

> One reason there are so many delinquents today is that their dads did not burn their britches behind them.

I think that quotation is applicable to this bill before us today. I should like to refer also, Mr. Speaker, to an article which appeared in the Toronto Star, the weekly magazine section, written by a chap who visited Kingston penitentiary. There is one paragraph I should like to read, and it is as follows:

> I also found—and surely this is strange—that whereas many men expressed regret for what they had done, they were primarily concerned with their misfortunes, their problems, their future. "The jailhouse conscience is like jelly," somebody said, and this seems to be true. For not one prisoner that I met showed any interest in or concern about the people he had robbed, cheated, beaten or killed. The one possible exception was a modern Robin Hood. "I never stole from a poor man," he said.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the abolition of corporal punishment is going to do as much good as we have heard some members say it would today, why has it had no effect on these men who have been incarcerated? It does not seem to have had much effect on them because, although they are in prison, they have not been subjected to corporal punishment.

I recall very vividly an incident that happened some years ago. A youngster who lived not too far from me got into trouble with a gang of boys who broke into a house. He was caught and taken to magistrate's court. I was with his father when the sentence was pronounced because the man was deaf and could not hear. The magistrate said, I can either put him on suspended sentence and have him report to a probation officer or I can have him strapped. Which do you prefer? I said to the father at the time, I think the best deal here is to let the boy have a good strapping; perhaps it will smarten him up quicker than anything else. This is what happened. They boy never got into any trouble afterwards. Today, he is a father of a family and is an exemplary citizen of Brantford.

They talk about corporal punishment not being a deterrent. Some two or three years ago, there was a murder committed by four young punks here in Ottawa. This is what Judge Allan B. Fraser had to say when he was talking to an association, and I quote from a newspaper article:

> Judge Allan B. Fraser said yesterday that corporal punishment was used in the case of one of the young defendants in a recent murder trial in Ottawa.
>
> The judge of the juvenile and family court of Ottawa and Carleton, speaking to the engineers' wives association, said that while the defendants were in jail awaiting trial "they were still pretty cocky".
> "Finally they used corporal punishment on one of them and it worked wonders."
>
> The warden of a jail is empowered to use corporal punishment on prisoners if it is thought necessary.
> Judge Fraser said he favoured corporal punishment "when all else fails".

"The boy came up and thanked the authorities afterwards", said the judge. "He said that if his parents had done the same thing earlier he wouldn't have been where he was."

This is just one incident, Mr. Speaker, that I think bears out the belief I have that corporal punishment is a deterrent to young people. I should like to refer to another article that appeared in the London Free Press, and which refers to a meeting of the law enforcement officers of Essex county. They came to the conclusion that the young criminals considered Essex county magistrates lenient and treated the suspended sentences they frequently hand out as a joke. The majority of law enforcement officers in the area are in favour of using the whip to deter young criminals.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Technical and vocational training assistance—

636. To carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder—payments to the provinces—further amount required, $28,400,000.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pitman: Before the recess, Mr. Chairman, I tried to indicate, although we do need technical and vocational training, what this program most needs. First of all we require to put these things in an order of priority. I tried to indicate that there has been no sensible, rational, planned order of priority whatsoever; that we are putting the money in the wrong place and using it in the wrong way.

One of the areas in which I think it is most unfortunate the way this program is being carried out is that of trained teachers. Surely the whole thing depends upon the kind of trained teachers we have. This is a tremendous problem, because when you have a poorly trained working force or a less skilled working force you have even fewer people from which to draw for the jobs which require skills. This, again, was put very well by Mr. Bridge in the speech included in the document to which I referred this afternoon. He says:

There is an urgent requirement for the development of vocational teacher training programs in Canada to provide both basic and advanced professional training for the growing numbers of teachers who will be required.

In this respect I would comment that surely this was one of the first things that should have been done. Once the needs have been determined, once the courses and the whole program had been determined we could have begun to train the teachers, and then perhaps we could have begun to put up the buildings. At the present time there is a serious shortage of adequately trained instructional staff; that is, before this program was even started there was a shortage, and with the building of additional facilities this shortage will become more serious. An estimated 1,000 to 1,500 additional, trained technical and vocational teachers will be required during the next ten year period. I can assure the committee that certainly they will need more than 1,000 or 1,500 now, with the number of buildings that have been put up during the last few months. I continue reading from this speech by Mr. Bridge.

The programs for training vocational teachers in Canada have never been well developed. The need does not justify a college for training vocational teachers in each province but there is ample need for at least four such training centres, one for the four western provinces, one in Ontario, one in Quebec, and one in the Atlantic provinces.

How much of this tremendous amount of money which we are putting aside for vocational education has been assigned to the training of people to put this program into effect? I would suggest it is a very, very minimal amount, and this has caused a tremendous amount of chaos and disruption in the teacher training programs in each of the provinces. This was not adequately prepared for, and these are the problems you get when you try to put crash programs into too many educational media. Mr. Bridge continues:

Provision should be made for these vocational teachers to advance to degree level in vocational education if they so desire.

There is also a shortage of supervisors and administrators for these programs.

In Bill No. C-49, which I am sure all hon. members have read, there is provision for the dominion government to pay half of the cost of training those who are going to be teachers, administrators and supervisors in this whole program. But there again we are doing the thing backwards; we have not laid enough emphasis on this area, and instead we have been subsidizing, virtually, the educational program in Ontario to a large extent. Mr. Bridge continues:

These persons usually come through the ranks of the vocational teaching staff but they require training which will prepare them for the responsibilities of directing programs and improving the standards of instruction.

The last thing I would like to say is that we have had no proper national approach to this problem. I say this with all humility, because this is a tremendous problem; it is a tremendously complex and complicated problem, but that does not mean we should throw up our hands and simply distribute money and let somebody else handle the problem who is in a far worse position to deal with it. I refer to the local municipal school boards. I say that in many cases we have disrupted the whole educational approach. There has been over the years, especially in my own province, a decision which means that people in the outlying areas who need vocational training shall be brought into the larger cities.

Hon. members who come from rural areas will say, "Good heavens; surely people who live in rural areas have the same right to vocational training as those who live in the urban areas". Certainly they do; but we cannot always give the best vocational training by putting up a school at their back door. The best way may very well be to bring those people by bus or various methods of transportation into an area where they can get a far greater diversity and higher level of training than if they simply put a school into a rural area.

Mr. Pallett: Oh, just move everybody into Toronto.

Mr. Pitman: Holy smoke, what an inane, silly remark from the parliamentary secretary, "Just move everybody into Toronto". Surely the parliamentary secretary has something better to do at this time than sit there and make a silly remark like that. Perhaps he should go out and have another fight with the Voice of Women.

Anyway, the rural school boards find themselves in this position. Some of them find they are at present sending their students into an urban school and they have to pay some percentage of the capital cost of the city school system. But what happens? The federal government comes along and says: "We will pay 75 per cent of the cost of the building" so you have virtually a free building. They can either pay some percentage of the capital cost of the schools in the urban area or they can have their own virtually free institution. This is like a misguided philanthropist who wanders into an African village, puts up a university and walks off and says, "This is wonderful; haven't I done a great deal for these people?" They do not define how they are going to find the people to man the university or how they are going to pay for it. That is not his problem. He simply walks off the scene. There are several examples which could be given of this kind of observation. I could use one which is not too far away, in the area of Pelham. The normal development of this area would be the enlargement of the Thorold-Fonthill high school which is on a quiet 30-mile road. But what happens? The county is putting up another high school on a 60-mile highway. How they are going to pay for this they do not know. The Robarts system is to keep costs down. There has been some discussion of this. It has been taken up in the press. I could draw the attention of the committee to an article in the Evening Tribune of January 23, 1962, in which one of the members of the board is reported to have stated:

We know how much a classroom costs but nobody seems to know what it costs to operate it.

That is a surprising statement and it is even more surprising that the chairman of the board should write in a letter to the Fonthill Herald on January 30:

As to the cost of operating the new school, no one knows at this time. We have good reason to believe that there will be additional grants, the only guide we might have would be our cost of vocational training at other schools compared with our cost of academic training at the same school.

As to having reason to believe there will be additional grants, hope springs eternal. I trust he has an indication that there are going to be some additional grants from the federal government because, believe me, they certainly will need them.

I should like to end my remarks with a number of constructive suggestions as to how we could salvage, I use that term advisedly, what we have been doing over the last two years. We know we have spent some $269 million, including the federal share—away over anything we had ever expected to spend in the next ten years. Now I think is the time to take a serious look at what we have been doing and the way we are going. I would be the first to admit that as long as we accept the belief that government responsibility has no concept of planning and looks upon the economy as a whole as a mass of wild horses going in every direction, it is going to be hard to plan an efficient training program for that kind of economy. I understand the difficulty that this creates. However, I think we could make more enlightened guesses than we have been making over the past year and a half. The first thing we should do is to put on the records of this house exactly what the needs were. Surely, we could get that information from the provinces, because we are paying enough; find out exactly what the facilities are in those provinces, and how they are being used at every school level. I think knowledge is the first thing we must have if we are going to plan this properly. We should have had it on the debate on the bill last fall but we did not, and now perhaps we should sit back and find out where we have gone and where we are going.

Second, we should take off the deadline. There is a difference between building schools and building sewers. There is a difference between sewage and students. There is no point in putting deadlines which force departments of education to go on at breakneck speed to do things because they have to get them up to get the money. Third, we should put the priority on expenditure in training those who are now unemployed. We should put up a system of education or, at least, trade schools to get these individuals retrained. Fourth, a great effort should be made to find out exactly where the work force is going. We cannot talk about this intelligently at the national level before we know this.

How are the boards of education in any province of Canada to be expected to provide education for the future if we do not know where the future is? That is a matter of some concern to me. Fifth, we should recognise that job retraining is a continuous process. I have found from my own experience that it is possible to put a school up, but more difficult to get the kids into the course. As long as we in Canada believe that every individual has a right to decide on the course he is going into, that is more difficult. I agree, and I believe we all agree, that we do not want to force them. We have to find some means of educating the parents to get their children to go into these courses. In my own experience we have had shops which have been three quarters full.

The technical teachers themselves are concerned about this program. They do not want to see some half-hearted program which is going to undermine all the efforts they have made to build up a prestige for technical education. We still think far too much in terms of academic education. We need a program of public advertising in the best sense to bring the advantage of this training to everyone likely to need it. I think, also, we have to decide on a system of sustaining grants to these institutions. It is not good enough to put up a building and leave a municipality with a great pile of ruins without deciding how they are going to be staffed adequately, how they are going to be equipped and how the equipment is going to be kept up to date.

I have suggested five or six things which perhaps could be done to salvage what we are doing now. If we do not do this, we are doomed. We shall have buildings unrelated to our employment needs. They may be training people for the wrong employment opportunities. We may have inadequate instruction; we may have courses completely irrelevant to the kind of work these people are doing; we may have a fragmentary vocational system in many parts of this country; we may have disillusioned it about technical education and it may take years to restore confidence. We may have thousands of unemployed, along with many thousands who realize that their skill are running out and that they would be virtually impossible to place in industry if new machines should make their present skills unnecessary.

This may sound pessimistic. I hope this government will make a full scale effort to recover the loss of ground that has taken place in the last few years.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to participate in this debate but after listening to the footle of the hon. member for Peterborough, which was subscribed to by the hon. member for Trinity, I feel that some of the erroneous statements that have been made should be corrected and that some indication should be given to these hon. gentlemen, particularly the hon. member for Peterborough who I understand is a pedagogue, of what is involved in the technical training educational system and the purpose of the participation in it by the federal government.

These estimates cover expenditures under technical and vocational training agreements with the provinces. The hon. members for Peterborough and Trinity seem to think the province of Ontario is not entitled to share in this program as the other provinces do. Their statements this afternoon appeared to express an objection to any benefits going to Ontario, and it is interesting to note—

Mr. Hellyer: Would my hon. friend permit a question? Is the hon. gentleman saying that the federal government now has jurisdiction over secondary education rather than the provinces?

Mr. Pallett: I suppose it is not very flattering to me but by his question the hon. gentleman indicates that he has not listened to or read any of the speeches I have made in this house on the subject of education. If the hon. gentleman would take the trouble to peruse the record he will find the answer to that question in clear terms.

Mr. Hellyer: Why not briefly and succinctly give it to me now?

Mr. Pallett: I shall resort to one syllable words if that is the wish of the hon. gentleman, so he may fully understand our position in that regard.

Mr. Chevrier: Send us a letter.

Mr. Pallett: We are dealing with technical and vocational training. I suggest that the hon. member for Trinity has no conception of what are the responsibilities of the federal government in relation to this type of education—if there are responsibilities—on the basis of what he said today with respect to the apprenticeship training program of Ontario, which has nothing to do with the federal government and is irrelevant to the item before us.

Mr. Hellyer: It certainly does.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. gentleman's statements also indicate his complete lack of knowledge of the training program that is being conducted under the act, through the operation of trade schools that are operating not only by day but also by night in the province of Ontario, and that are available to the unemployed workers of this country.

I was astounded at the lack of knowledge of this subject revealed by the comments of both hon. gentlemen. I was astonished at their failure to read newspapers, to visit these schools, to talk to people who know something about the programs and processes that are going on. Despite their lack of knowledge hon. gentlemen stood in this chamber and made statements that were far removed from the facts. If they were not innocent—I suppose that is the correct word—I would accuse them of being intentionally misleading, but I would not wish to go that far.

The hon. member for Peterborough suggests we have a grand plan. In a recent speech in this house I heard the hon. gentleman say that his theory is to move workers from spot to spot.

Mr. Pitman: Reference?

Mr. Pallett: I will give the hon. gentleman the reference if he wishes it.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pallett: I would be delighted.

Mr. Pitman: Does the hon. member realize that the Department of Labour has moved and is moving workers from area to area? Does the hon. gentleman know that is taking place under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour?

Mr. Pallett: There is quite a difference, Mr. Chairman. The workers the Department of Labour moves are those who request transfer from areas that are declared labour surplus areas. The hon. member in the speech he made, which I suspect he will have occasion to remember far into the future, said nothing about the voluntary movement of workers from area to area. He was speaking of compulsory movement, which is in line with socialistic thinking.

The hon. member spoke about a grand plan and said we in this chamber should anticipate what the state of the nation will be 40 years from now. No one anticipated ten years ago that a group of parliamentarians would adjourn to watch a trip around the world by Colonel Glenn in a space capsule; and yet that trip was delayed while a bolt holding the door was repaired by the skilled hands of a workman. That is what this program does; it puts skills in the hands of future workmen.

The hon. member for Peterborough made a categorical criticism of all boards of education across the country. He refuses to recognize that these are the people who correctly assess the needs and who have surveys made. He may not be familiar with this fact because probably he has not sought out the information—and I say this to the hon. member for Trinity as well—but in the metropolitan Toronto area, for instance, the following questions were put not to hundreds but to thousands of industries: If you had skilled workmen available today, how many would you hire? How many would you hire in five years? How many would you hire in ten? All this information is available to boards of education—

Mr. Pitman: Do you call that research?

Mr. Pallett: This information is gathered from those who will be employing and training these skilled workers. These are the people who comprise the strength of the free enterprise economy which, of course, the hon. member for Peterborough cannot understand. Part of the purpose of education is to fulfil the social needs of future society. This applies equally in the technical field.

Of course, the hon. member would not understand that consideration has been given to these questions by boards of education. Each area board of education or trustees first determines its own needs. Each area need is carefully checked by a high school inspector who is familiar with the locality. Of course this may not suit the hon. member who is a member of the teaching profession. By implication he is saying that the boards and inspectors themselves are not capable of doing what must be done, that they do not know what they are talking about, that they are making recommendations dishonestly. That is what he is saying. He indicates that they are not assessing properly the educational needs of the young people in their recommendations to the departments of education, that they are giving false service. That is what the hon. member said today.

Every sentence of criticism, every suggestion that the money is being taken for purposes other than that prescribed, is a condemnation not only of the provincial boards of education but also of the inspectors who approve the programs. And then the hon. member condemns every public servant of the provincial departments of education who approves the plans and the program and makes his submission to this government. This afternoon the hon. gentleman engaged in a blanket condemnation of the people engaged in the educational systems of every province and more particularly his own, and all his remarks were subscribed to and echoed by the hon. member for Trinity.

Mr. Hellyer: Those are your words not mine.

Mr. Pallett: Your speech is on Hansard.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, my speech is.

Mr. Pallett: The first words of the hon. member for Trinity were words complimentary to the hon. member for Peterborough on the speech he had made and on the accuracy of that speech.

Mr. Hellyer: It was certainly a lot better than yours.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Trinity to my way of thinking completely endorsed all the remarks made by the hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Hellyer: I am prepared to allow the people of the country to interpret my speech for themselves. They have learned to read, you know.

Mr. Pallett: And so we had the two of them, Mr. Chairman, and also some of the other socialists condemning every person who has anything to do with the educational systems in the provinces for accepting and carrying out this program.

Mr. Regier: Are there no teachers among the Tories?

Mr. Pallett: What did the hon. member say?

Mr. Regier: Is there not a teacher in the Conservative ranks who knows what he is talking about?

Mr. Pallett: I would point out to the hon. member that the Minister of National Defence was once a teacher, as was the Minister of Agriculture.

I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or rather, the Minister of Veterans Affairs was once a teacher.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did you say the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Pallett: I said the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Pickersgill: I ask, because that would strain our credulity.

Mr. Pallett: Other members of the government, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, were university professors.

In any event there is no monopoly of members of the teaching profession in the group which the hon. gentleman is a member. There are in this party those who are fully capable of playing an important part in the free enterprise system and of instilling in our young people a proper belief in the future of their country. That is why I suggest that the remarks of the hon. member for Peterborough dealing with the subject must be regarded as an indication of a complete misunderstanding of the program by a person who should have an understanding of it. He talks about the program in Ontario not providing the type of training that it should provide. Both he and the hon. member for Trinity indicated a complete lack of understanding of the Robarts system, if you like to call it that—

Mr. Hellyer: Oh, of course.

Mr. Pallett: —or of the three streams: the scientific technical and trade stream; the business and economics stream; and the arts and sciences stream. These are things which a teacher who is very soon going to be engaged in the full time occupation of teaching should be prepared to discuss in this chamber with some knowledge, rather than to criticize those people who are endeavouring to do important work in the provincial field in order to educate the young people of this country. The hon. member says, "What about the rural areas"? He objects to our giving, in co-operation with the provinces, the opportunity to these young people to—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Pallett: I can only go by what the hon. member says. If he says he is wrong, that is all right. If he wishes to take it all back, and if he will stand up in this chamber and will retract everything he said, I will sit down.

However, he will not do that. He says we are wrong in giving an opportunity to the people in the rural areas. He says that we are wrong in providing accommodation so that they may fit into a technological age. He would uproot them from their homes and transport them to one central place.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Pallett: This is, of course, the system the socialists like. They like to get them all under one roof so they can take them away and put them under their own influence. They like to get them away from their homes and centralize them. This is socialist thinking. To them it is not right that the rural communities can train their people at home for jobs of the future. The hon. member talks about decentralizing industry. I have heard him say this in this chamber. Yet today, with regard to the very thing that will help this come about by training people in all the areas of Canada, he is objecting. Let us get the hon. member to be consistent in what he says.

An hon. Member: You could not possibly do that.

Mr. Pallett: That may be so. It may not be possible to get him to be consistent.

This is a good program, Mr. Chairman. It is a program designed to train the young people of this country to take their position in the society of the future, as the people who are skilled in the administration of education in this country see it.

Mr. Peters: It is designed only to build schools and nothing more.

Mr. Pallett: My hon. friend, who says he is a great authority, does not know, for instance, that in Ontario today 300 teachers are being specially trained to take part in this program, with 300 about to be trained especially in this program.

Mr. Regier: A six weeks course.

Mr. Pallett: It is not a six weeks course. If the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam will stand up, if he is capable of doing so, and make his speech at the proper time, he will be allowed to do so. However, interruptions such as the one he has made are not only contrary to the rules but are also inaccurate. I should draw that fact to the hon. member's attention. It is not anything like a six weeks course to train the teachers. The people in this group to the left of you, Mr. Chairman, just do not know what is going on in this training program; yet they are the people who stand up and profess they do know. This is what prompted me to speak, Mr. Chairman, I did so in order that the committee would not have unchallenged before it first, statements condemning every educationist in the provinces, and more particularly in the province of Ontario; second, completely inaccurate statements as to the program of training for the teachers; and third, to show the attitude about the future of the country, trying to decry the young people, and by the criticism of this scheme, trying to keep the young people out of it.

The hon. member for Peterborough said there will not be enough people to fill these schools. From where is he getting the information? Surveys are conducted by the boards of education of this province, who make recommendations on the basis of questionnaires answered by the students in consultation with their parents. Oh, he looks surprised. He does not know this is happening. He just does not have any idea of this happening, namely that the recommendations of the board are made on the basis of questionnaires answered by the students in consultation with their parents. After all who makes the final decision as to the education? It is the students in consultation with the parents.

Mr. Peters: Before they go to high school?

Mr. Pallett: No, not before they go to high school; it is both before and after. Again, Mr. Chairman, the interruption indicates a complete misunderstanding. They have their choice of the three streams. They can get into one of the three streams. At the end of the first year they can go to whichever one they wish, without any loss of educational time. That is an advance program. Oh, the hon. member for Port Arthur laughs. I suppose it is the laugh of the cynic. It fits him very well, I think. In their cynicism they refuse to give credit to a good program and a sound one. It is, of course, one which they are incapable of comprehending because it contains some imagination and something that will actually benefit the young people of the country. They may criticize, Mr. Chairman, but let us see what their people at home say about their criticisms. That is the final test. I have never heard one person in the educational system and charged with the responsibility of administering education in any province criticize this measure.

Mr. Hellyer: They would probably not get very far if they did so.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Trinity speaks from his seat, probably indicating that he has more brains there. I think that all members may lay some claim to some knowledge about education in the provinces; and I have never heard one suggestion from a person in the educational system in a province criticizing this scheme.

Mr. Chevrier: I have listened carefully to what the chief whip has said, Mr. Chairman. He has spoken for nearly 30 minutes, although I am mindful of what we were told this afternoon by both the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Montgomery: Why don't you sit down then?

Mr. Chevrier: —and the house leader to the effect that we on this side of the house were holding up these estimates and that people were going to be unpaid because of the fact that these estimates were not going through.

Mr. Montgomery: That is very true.

Mr. Chevrier: Somebody said, "That is very true". If that is very true, then those who sit on the other side of the house certainly are not assisting in passing these estimates and in seeing that these people are being paid or are about to be paid. I am therefore getting curious, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to find out from the Minister of Labour if he can tell the committee whether the government has run out of money on this estimate. I think the house is entitled to know.

Mr. Starr: I will answer that now, Mr. Chairman. When we first put in an amount we could not properly anticipate what the exact amount would be, but now that many of these buildings are under construction and payments have to be made this is the amount required to carry on up until March 31.

Mr. Chevrier: That is exactly the point. I have asked a question but I have not received an answer.

An hon. Member: He said yes.

Mr. Chevrier: If that is the case, and I thank the member for that interjection, I think the house is entitled to know what is being held up. Where are the buildings that are being held up? Where have you had to stop construction? The house is entitled to know because after all the Minister of Finance made it quite clear that he did not want to curtail debate directly in any way, although by inference that is exactly what he was trying to do. He did not want to curtail debate but he wanted the house to know how some of these people were going to be affected both directly and indirectly.

These estimates have been held up for the last 30 minutes by the chief whip, and I think the house is entitled to know far more than the minister has told us. I submit with deference, sir, that the minister should answer the four questions I put on this item with regard to where and how the money is being held up.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister not going to answer?

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister not going to answer those questions?

Mr. Starr: I do not know what the member for Laurier means by the money being held up. This is an estimate on the part of the department as to the amount of money we will need up to March 31st to reimburse the provinces for expenditures they will have incurred up until that time, and nothing more. It is based on information we have been able to get from the provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a most ridiculous answer. What we were told by the Minister of Finance today was that people were not going to be paid if these estimates were not passed immediately. We want to know who is not going to be paid if this particular estimate does not pass. We do not really have much confidence in these broad statements of the Minister of Finance, and with very good reason. Ever since that affair last summer we know what value is to be placed on statements made by the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and everybody knows what I am referring to. We also know the kind of language that the Minister of Finance would have used about this matter, language that I would not use at all; but what I am saying is, let the minister tell us who is not being paid because the money in this item has not yet been voted. Who is it that is not being paid?

An hon. Member: The provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: What job is being held up? Let the minister answer that question or by his silence show that in this particular at any rate it was just another big bluff by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): A totally ridiculous speech, as usual.

Mr. Pickersgill: You asked for it. That great bluff comes in here—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman has done nothing else but bluff.

Mr. Chevrier: Don't you become like the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I can only provoke the parliamentary secretary into talking for another 30 minutes—

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I hope all these remarks are getting on the record. Perhaps the best way for me to begin my remarks on this item is to say that I received a letter last September from the minister informing me that a new vocational school was going to be built in Port Arthur and the contribution of the federal government was going to be approximately $1,700,000. It is a crash program and it is anticipated that the school will be ready this September. The federal government in effect will be putting up close to two thirds of the cost of the school, which will be around the $3 million mark, and the provincial government is putting up most of the rest.

It is said that you cannot vote against Santa Claus or you cannot kick Santa Claus in the face, and I realize that in trying to make an analysis based upon something in my own city I may stand in some danger of being misinterpreted or my views may be warped in much the same way that I felt the chief whip was twisting some of the views of the hon. member for Peterborough. However, I should like to offer some comments as a taxpayer in my own city, and as a teacher. As a matter of fact, I was offered a job in this school and it would be a good place to work.

I have taken an interest in the educational program in the city and I know something about it. I should like to emphasize that I have talked to the members of the board of education, the secretary of the board and the principals in the city, and as a taxpayer I am delighted that the city of Port Arthur through the board of education is getting what amounts to a $3 million high school without any capital outlay on the part of the taxpayers of the city of Port Arthur. I am delighted with it from that point of view. But I ask myself this question. How does this fit into a program of improving the technical qualifications of the students in my own area and, if this is part of a national plan, in the nation as a whole?

I understand that the school is going to have 61 classrooms. I know that there will be an electrical shop, a sheet metal shop, an automobile engineering shop and a woodworking shop. There will be general academic courses, business or commercial courses and courses in the shop or industrial subjects. I know that the school system in Port Arthur will experience difficulty in getting students to take the industrial and commercial courses because of the fact that the general course, from my understanding and following of the situation, has always tended to be and continues to be much more popular than industrial courses, and with very good reason, I think.

The hon. member for Peel indicated that one of the critics in this group was not aware of the statistics or the pattern with regard to what students were interested in. It is very hard to keep up to date with educational statistics in Ontario because the annual report is always 18 months to two years behind time. The latest one I have been able to get is 1958. However, 1958 is not too long ago, and here are the figures respecting the enrolment of pupils in secondary schools in Ontario by courses: General, 170,000; commercial, 29,000; industrial, 20,000; home economics, 465; art, 659; special industrial, 1,308. It is very obvious from these figures that in the province of Ontario there is a tremendous preponderance toward general courses, and in this regard I want to suggest that there are both poor and good reasons for this situation.

As a teacher one good reason I should like to suggest why the general course is much more efficacious for children in grades 9 to 12, children between the ages of 14 and 18, is that in those adolescent years it is extremely difficult to carry on any kind of effective trade training. I should like to illustrate that from my own experience. I started teaching school and doing library work in an academic high school and I thought teaching was a wonderful game. Discipline was not hard, the hours were regular and the students usually had their homework done. Through a couple of accidents of fate I found myself teaching for a few weeks in a school that had a number of industrial, business and commercial courses. Suddenly I found myself up against what the hon. member for Trinity referred to this afternoon. In effect I was a sort of high priced loud shouting baby sitter because the atmosphere of the composite school with a great many students taking industrial courses is not one of study. It is extremely difficult to develop an esprit de corps and a real concern with education in that kind of school. The hon. member for Peel may not believe me but I wish he would talk to some of his teacher friends about this matter. It is a very real problem. It is one of the reasons why in my own city so many parents do not want their children to go to schools offering industrial courses or to take industrial courses.

We had a situation in the city of Port Arthur, Mr. Chairman, where we had one academic high school and two composite schools. There were parents who went to the trouble of selling their homes in order to move 100 yards to be within the boundaries of an academic high school, so their children could take general courses rather than have to go to these composite schools. Now, I regret this attitude, and I still regret it in any community—this looking down upon technical training and vocational training. However, it is a very real problem which exists, and these figures from 1958 confirm it. From what I have seen of the mores of Ontario parents and children, it is not a regional attitude.

One change that has come on the scene has been the Robarts plan to which the hon. member referred. I am not going to sound off with any criticism of the Robarts plan, not because I do not have any views upon it. I am critical of it. I am critical of it for reasons that have already been indicated. I can perhaps give a most general criticism from a rather excellent study by James S. Coleman entitled, "The Adolescent Society". I want to stress one paragraph which I think is germane, in a very general way, to this problem. I quote:

> In sum, then, the general point is this: our adolescents today are cut off, probably more than ever before, from the adult society. They are still oriented toward fulfilling their parents' desires, but they look very much to their peers for approval as well. Consequently, our society has within its midst a set of small teen-age societies, which focus teen-age interests and atttitudes on things far removed from adult responsibilities, and which may develop standards that lead away from those goals established by the larger society.

Now, getting away from the sociological language, the author is saying, in effect, something with which I believe everyone can agree. We have created in North American society today, a teenage, adolescent world. These teenagers are finding it extremely difficult to accept adult responsibilities and attitudes, for example, towards job training. One of the consequences is the lack of success of technical and vocational programs for students in grades 9, 10 and 11. This is one of the main criticisms that has arisen of the so-called Robarts plan. Of course, one has always to acknowledge that most people thinking of educational programs are activated by the best intentions in the world. I feel that the Robarts plan will flounder on this very point unless it is postponed at least until ages 16 or 17 when you can begin to make some impression on the teenager or adolescent about gearing his educational program towards occupational goals beyond the school.

This argument may seem extremely theoretical to hon. members, but I assure them it is not. I have done enough supply teaching in the past few years, visited enough schools and enough teachers' rooms, talked to enough teachers, to realize that this is a very real, live problem. It underlines the tremendous technical and vocational training programs at the secondary school level. I expressed this concern when this measure was originally introduced. I recall at the time members telling me that surely this was a means of getting the federal government into the educational field; that this was tremendously worth while, and one could put aside one's worries to see how the program worked out.

I come back to being a taxpayer in the city of Port Arthur. I am delighted that our tax load is not going to be so heavy because we are going to get a 61-room high school which —I will argue this and I will insist upon it —is going to house a majority of students in general courses rather than technical or commercial courses. I am sure this will be the situation, knowing the statistics as I do and the attention in my home area. This would be fine if it were the real purpose of this program; but is the purpose of this program to ease the burden on our local school boards across this country? Judging by the statistics, particularly for Ontario, if this is the intention I can only feel that the school boards and taxpayers in Ontario have had a tremendous bonus. I wonder what would have happened if other provinces had answered the call, had been prepared for the call, had been spurred by the Robarts plan to take advantage of the plan in the same way as Ontario has? Our debt this coming year would be fantastic. Look at the figures. The federal share for Ontario is $124 million and for Quebec only $5 million. As hon. members from Quebec know, there are tremendous changes and increased expenses in the educational system of that province. However, Quebec only picks up $5 million under this plan, while Ontario gets $124 million.

Well, I have never been the kind of Canadian who could take great delight in seeing my particular part of the country get the lion's share and another part of the country go without. I made some inquiries from some people I know in the province of Quebec. I asked, why is it Quebec is only picking up $5 million and Ontario is getting in for $124 million? The obvious thing is to say that the Ontario government is on its toes, and the Quebec government is not on its toes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fisher: I think that is too simple an explanation. The explanation that I would give is that Quebec felt it could take advantage of this scheme only to this extent because it was taking money only for schools that were properly and completely technical training institutions, that is they did not offer general courses or anything like that. They were completely technical training institutions such as the Ryerson Institute and schools like that. This is what I really thought we were going to get out of this measure, Mr. Chairman. We have a tremendous need for this kind of program. However, I support the hon. member for Peterborough completely in his statement that at the moment we do not have this tremendous need for courses in woodworking, metal work, electrical work, automobile mechanics, and so on, for children of the ages of 14, 15 and 16. I believe this is where most of the money for Ontario is going, to provide the opportunity for schools offering general training.

Having said this about the situation, I think that we have to have an explanation from the minister of this fantastic, this tremendous gift or bonus or reward to Ontario from the federal treasury. The other provinces do not even come close to it. I wonder whether the minister would not acknowledge that in the response he has had to this program, particularly from Ontario, there has been a misjudgment. I wonder if he would not acknowledge that the deadline date of March 31, 1963, in itself, was a misjudgment? I should like to point out to the minister that he has been sent a copy of a report prepared in my part of the country on the advice of some of his own economists called, "Report by Northwestern Ontario Commission on Unemployment." Hon. members may be aware that our area is an easy one to study because we are isolated from all metropolitan centres. We are, in a sense, a microcosm of Canada that you can look at intensely, because we are not within the sphere of influence of any metropolitan area. This group of citizens, on the advice of the minister's economists, did this study and came up with some recommendations that I hope the minister is considering at the present time. I should like to put on the record a couple of the recommendations they made. They have just been going into this whole question of people coming into the labour force, training facilities and the school expansion that we have had. Among other things they want a regional advisory council, a regional economic conference, a resources inventory and a research oriented university. Then they come to this:

> The university should be capable of taking all our grade 13 students who can benefit from undergraduate study. Projections indicate there will be about 1,500 students from northwestern Ontario by 1966. Graduate research faculties will help industry to develop new methods and use untapped resources.

Then it goes on:

> Regional colleges of technology should be established to train people in the demand skills of the late twentieth century and increase the range of vocational, extension and night courses.
>
> Special courses should be organized to train people for jobs in potential developments so that developers in the area would be assured of properly trained, available personnel.

Then it continues:

> A vocational guidance and testing centre properly equipped and staffed by competent specialists should be established to fill a vital need in the region.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Those are recommendations of this group which indicate that they are concerned about the very problem this legislation is trying to meet. I suggest that this is primarily a problem in adult education or adult retraining, plus the establishment of technical institutions such as Ryerson on a much larger scale.

I regretted the tone of the remarks of the hon. member from Peel, because he seemed to suggest that people in our particular party were looking at the educational system very cynically. I would like to tell him that I worked for a few years in a technical institute that was taking people from grades 12 and 13 and first year university. This institute was giving courses for mining and forestry. I was always inspired by what took place with so many young fellows who came into that forestry school with very bad high school records. They took the technical course and began to come on. Then next they would be down in the university of Newfoundland or McGill or Toronto, going on to higher education; or if not, going out into the woods with an excellent job with security, and with a magnificent future. I have seen what effect a technical institute of this kind has on these young people.

I think there is not a school in Canada today that has had the success of Ryerson Institute of Technology in Toronto. That institute has made magnificent accomplishments in so many fields. But that is not what we are getting out of this money. We are not really getting this kind of response. What we are getting is secondary school classrooms in the main. I would like to see the focus go in this direction rather than in providing classroom space of the average secondary school kind, which is in the main what we are doing, which I think is perpetuating what has been an error in our vocational training since about 1913. If hon. members do not think this has been an error I would ask them to look at the Ontario statistics, where after 25 or 30 years of a vocational and technical training program we find that in 1958, 170,000 students were in the general course, only 29,000 in the commercial course and 20,000 in the industrial course.

We know that the goal of the general course is to eventually lead to university or technical institutes such as Ryerson. I would suggest that those figures are an indication that this program has gone off the rails and that something is very wrong with it. I think there is such a disparity here between what Ontario is getting and what the other provinces are getting that I would recommend to the minister that he should immediately call a conference of the ministers of education in this country.

Last week the hon. member for Peterborough and I went down to visit the Canadian conference of education that went on for a week in Montreal. It was a rather confusing place to be, because so many of the delegates were dissatisfied or up in the air with various things. Repeatedly we heard—or at least I heard, and I think he got the same impression from a different lot of people—that there is a tremendous feeling that it was time the federal government took the lead in these matters. All kinds of obsequious remarks were made about the attitude of Quebec, but the feeling was—and anyone who read the Montreal Star of last week, which covered this conference magnificently, will find this to be so—that the federal government should show greater leadership in this field by making a national office of education. Repeatedly this suggestion was put forward. I think this was mainly because our efforts in education are piecemeal, haphazard and not directed or co-ordinated in any overall way.

I suppose the rebuttal to this is that this kind of planned approach is socialistic. I would like to make the point that it was a most popular approach that I found at the Canadian conference of education, and I am not so optimistic—whatever my party may be—as to feel that most of those people who were talking that way considered themselves socialist, even though this was the view they were expressing at that conference.

I would suggest that when you get educators in responsible positions such as Dean Leddy, Max Swerdlow, Kurt Swinton and people like that all recommending federal leadership in this particular field, it underlines the point that a program such as this, wonderful as it may have been in conception, is probably well off the rails because of the very disparity of the figures released of what expenditures have gone where, and to what province.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to speak about a specific local situation that ties in with this. Two weeks ago I was in Elliot Lake speaking to a university women's group on the topic of education. Spontaneously from this rather large group in the community came the repeated suggestion—I can say to the Minister of Veterans Affairs that although I would not say they have forgiven him for the Whiteshell business, they are no longer talking about that—that Elliot Lake could possibly be used as a retraining centre. After all, having 600 or 700 empty houses there and institutional buildings that no longer have occupants or the occupancy of which has faded, why cannot the federal government approach this question with imagination and use Elliot Lake as a retraining centre for the very kind of thing that all the educators are saying we need in order to retrain our people?

I do not know whether it could come under this particular kind of program, but it certainly seems to me this is the kind of expenditure under this program that would do much more good than providing more classroom space. I know that at Elliot Lake the schools are magnificent. They are still building schools there despite the fact that the population is decreasing. The fact remains that at the present time they have not the equipment, the teachers or the facilities to do the kind of job that this group obviously feels Elliot Lake could do, and act as a bit of a lodestone or magnet. It could be a great example to the rest of the country if that were the first place to be set up under federal and provincial auspices, with regional support, to undertake a magnificent retraining program for those men aged, say between 18 and 35 who can be retrained in various specialized aspects of technology, or it could even be linked in with the mining and forest industries in more of a tradesmen kind of approach.

The surprising thing is that when you get out into communities such as Elliot Lake, North Bay, Sudbury, Port Arthur or Kenora you find that at the local level education is one of the most intensely interesting topics, and repeatedly the suggestion—as we heard from the Canadian conference of education—is that they want federal leadership and inspiration. It just seems to me that we cannot have it until this government and future governments decide that they are going to lead rather than introduce a program such as this which has become so unbalanced.

There is one final point I wish to make about these expenditures. I suppose the spending of any money may be good, and the spending of $269 millions in this field is wonderful in creating temporary employment. But when I look at these figures I come back to one of the great agencies which the federal government set up a number of years ago in education. That agency is the Canada Council. I realize so many people including members of both parties have criticized that $100 millions that went into the Canada Council. When we realise that $50 millions of that Canada Council money has gone into capital projects at various universities, when we realise that the Canada Council has been claiming repeatedly that it does not have enough income from the other $50 million to meet its scholarships and payments, we look at this other institution where the federal government is putting up in this period of a couple of years a total of $129 million and we wonder what kind of sensible apportionment has been given to federal moneys in the field of education.

Nobody would suggest there is any greater merit in putting money into universities as against technical institutes or trade schools, but surely something has gone out of whack here, when the Canada Council, the main federal agency in the field of the arts and the humanities has only the money that it has to operate on, and the head of it has complained very openly, almost bitterly, about the situation, and we are spending $179 million under this crash program.

I come back to where I started. As a taxpayer in Port Arthur and as someone interested in the schools there, I am delighted we have a new high school called the Dag Hammarskjold school, and that the taxpayer is only to have to staff it and carry it on because the funds came from other sources. But I am also a federal taxpayer, and I wonder whether there is any real justice in this kind of approach when Ontario, my own province, indeed, my own town, benefits so much in this regard and the rest of the country seems to go short. I really wonder about the justice and fairness of this program.

Mr. Brunsden: Will the hon. and academic member for Port Arthur permit a question? He talked a great deal about Ontario and ignored the fact that there are some other parts of Canada west of Ontario. May I ask him if he will drop the verbiage from his words and tell us bluntly whether or not he believes in the vocational training school program?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member has opened up another hour's debate. The vocational training program has its place, but I would suggest that before the ages of 16 and 17 its place is limited. I can point out, if the hon. member wants to come down to a pedagogical or educational philosophy point of view, that I believe learning to read, to write, to do arithmetic, and to know something about our society and about citizenship should be the core of the training of every child and adolescent until they begin to reach a stage where mentally and manually they are able to move to some kind of training which has links with an occupation. I suggest that this core of reading, writing and expression is important to everybody whether they are going to take technical or vocational training or not. I think, in a sense, the whole program of vocational and technical training in Canada has been an attempt to compromise between this goal and the idea of preparing young people to enter into a trade, and I would suggest to the hon. member who put the question that if he can show me that Alberta technical and vocational secondary schools are able to train people and send them into the labour force competent to work in their trades as craftsmen I would say I am completely wrong, but that certainly is not the situation in Ontario.

Mr. Brunsden: Never mind about Ontario. Let us talk about Canada.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member says "Let us talk about Canada". I think that Ontario represents a portion of the country, and I happen to have some relationship with its educational system. I am not trying to suggest to the hon. member that I think it has a better system than the other provinces. That is the kind of debatable thing that you can never really be sure of. I do know this, though, that as a result of this program there is no doubt about it Ontario is going to have a lot more nice big high schools than any other province in the country. I have only to refer the hon. member to the paragraph which appears on page 1778 of Hansard where he will see the scale. I am delighted that Alberta, his home province, has been able to take advantage of this to the degree it has and that it is getting a federal share of $20 million. But we can only reiterate our doubt that this program, about which we expressed some reservations when it was initiated, which, I think, shows there is a consistency in our approach as a party, has met with the success which the minister claims. I suggest that the hon. member take a look at the statistics. He will see that the scale of success is concentrated in the province of Ontario. I have given an example from my own constituency to indicate that right here it really is not meeting the growing need. The growing need is, surely, the technical training of young people from 17 to 22 and the retraining of those people in the work force who cannot get jobs now and are practically unemployable.

We have a very good unemployment insurance office in Port Arthur and a good one in Fort William. I think the officials who work there are as knowledgeable about the problems in the region as are any of our school teachers or our school principals or our inspectors. They have told me repeatedly how difficult it is to carry on a retraining program. Our board of education in Toronto is co-operative. It has found facilities. Women are taking classes in hairdressing and men have learned how to repair television sets. They have tried to find something flexible that will retrain people and give them a better chance of getting jobs; but in the main these programs are very short-range. They are ad hoc and very limited in the success they are having in meeting the problem. It seems to me the effort has to be along the lines suggested by the northwestern Ontario committee on employment. I think that one of the main things that has to be done is to establish these vocational guidance and testing centres not only in our region but right across the country.

I cannot take up the time of the committee any longer on this item. I certainly have had my share of the discussion. But I should like to appeal to the minister, whom I have always found to be fair, much as I disagree with his approach to certain aspects of his responsibilities, to immediately have a review of this program, to bring in all the education ministers from across the country. I should like to know, for example, what Mr. Paul Lajoie of Quebec feels about this program.

I should like him to give the minister an explanation as to why Quebec could take only that amount of money and Ontario could take so much more. I think this is a question that needs to be resolved and the minister can do it only by having that kind of review of the situation.

I know the minister can readily say that, this being such a popular program, this kind of approach is unnecessary. I know it is very popular in Port Arthur. As I said we are getting a $3 million high school without any capital costs devolving upon the taxpayers but I wonder whether that may not be the very reason why it is difficult in Ontario to obtain a really constructive analysis of what this program is doing. As I said earlier in my remarks, no one is going to kick Santa Claus in the face.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister about this program and about the relationship of the program to something that was said last night on television by the Prime Minister. In order to make my question intelligible I should like to read this paragraph from what the Prime Minister said. He said:

> Now, there's one problem that's causing me a great deal of concern and that's the men and women who are having to go in too early retirement—

I think there is a misprint here. I feel that should read, "who are having to go into early retirement". I continue:

> —some at 50, 55, up to 60, some younger. This is a very difficult problem to meet. And to do so will require the co-operation of the provinces, business and labour. And I'm having a full study made of this question, for I am determined that action must be taken to give hope to that body of men and women who find themselves retired at ages when they should expect many years of productive service ahead of them.

Now, I assume that that full study which the Prime Minister says is being made now is being carried on by the Department of Labour and I assume, of course, that it is largely retraining for people in these age groups—

Mr. Starr: The hon. member is doing too much assuming.

Mr. Pickersgill: —so that as the Prime Minister put it, and I thought very well—

Mr. Pallett: It was an excellent speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: —they could have many years of productive service ahead of them.

I am sure we would all like the minister to tell us about this study. We would like to know who in his department is carrying it on, how it is being carried on, how it is organized and how it fits into the vocational training program of the government.

I feel it was very opportune that the Prime Minister should have made this speech last night when the estimates of the department are before us. I thought it would have been even better if the minister when he brought the estimates before us had told us about this study and given us all the details so all of us could have talked about it. But now that the Prime Minister has told us this useful study is being made, would the minister tell us something more about it and particularly the lines it is following and the direction it is taking and who is carrying it out?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is doing a considerable amount of assuming on the basis of a speech made by the Prime Minister last evening. If the hon. gentleman wishes complete details I suggest to him that he ask the Prime Minister on the orders of the day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Chairman, the minister has been a member of this house for quite a while and by this time he ought to know about the rules of this house. Under the rules, as the minister should know, it would be a totally inappropriate question for the orders of the day.

If there is any such study going on at all surely the minister knows about it. If these people are to have many more years of productive service—the people who are being retired too early—they will only have those years of productive service because they have some kind of training and surely the training is going to be done under the aegis of the Department of Labour.

If what the minister is saying is that this is just so much hot air on the Prime Minister's part and that there is no such study at all and that he knows nothing about it, let him get up and say so; but if there is any substance in this, as I assumed there was in my innocence, because the Prime Minister had said it, let him tell us what part his department is having in this study, what members of his department are taking part in it and what the nature of the study is.

Mr. Chevrier: No answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: No answer, no study.

Mr. Deschatelets: Another bluff.

Mr. Pallett: Another speech.

Mr. Best: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to participate in this debate but when I entered the chamber this evening the hon. member for Peterborough had the floor. His comments were so fantastic that they aroused my interest and I feel compelled to reply to some of the fallacious remarks that emanated from that corner of the house this evening.

I feel that the hon. member for Peel in a capable fashion has put the record straight in clear and emphatic terms. The hon. gentleman delivered a hard-hitting and excellent speech.

The speech made by the hon. member for Port Arthur to which we have just listened was somewhat more temperate and perhaps more positive than that of his seatmate from Peterborough whose speech was one of the most completely negative utterances I have heard in this chamber for a long time. If one sought to attempt to destroy a scheme and pour cold water on a program, one could not have succeeded to a greater extent than did the hon. member. I must say I cannot think of an educational program at any level in Canada which is as significant as this concerted attack by the government.

In my own riding of Halton in Burlington, Oakville and Georgetown three technical wing additions to high schools have been approved for a total federal contribution of approximately $4 million and possibly there may be further interest on the part of other communities in the riding. This is partially a sudden or crash program, but in view of the arrogance of the previous Liberal administration with its intellectual wastelands and lost time—and the hon. member for Trinity who spoke earlier was a member of the former government—surely we have some catching up to do in this country and must get at this rather quickly.

The statistics used by the hon. member for Port Arthur were, I thought, somewhat erroneous. I do not have all the figures with me this evening. I will accept his figure of between $120 million to $125 million as representing the money going into Ontario under the scheme. He used the figure $20 million for Alberta. Calculations I made just now by asking my neighbours from that province, indicate that since Alberta has approximately only one fifth of the population of Ontario, on a per capita basis Alberta would receive very close to the contribution we are giving to Ontario. To say that nearly all the money is going into Ontario is completely inaccurate and if all the hon. members' statistics are as wrong as those presented this evening I think we can discount almost all the remaining remarks the hon. member made.

Nevertheless, it is interesting to examine the remarks made by three Ontario members, the hon. member for Trinity, the hon. member for Peterborough and the hon. member for Port Arthur. Do they really not wish Ontario to accept this money? Do they feel that the local boards of education and the provincial departments of education have no knowledge of this scheme and no basis on which to make decisions with respect to the program? The statements made by the three hon. gentlemen represent a significant denunciation of all our municipal boards of education and our provincial department of education—indeed of the teaching profession. I wonder whether those two hon. gentlemen who are members of the teaching profession could re-enter the profession today in view of some of the comments they have made. I really doubt that they could on the basis of the comments they have made about the school system and their colleagues in the profession.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought this was supposed to be a free country.

Mr. Best: Some interesting remarks were made at the conference on education at the recent conference in Montreal and one quotation used by the hon. member for Port Arthur referred to federal leadership and inspiration. I have heard those remarks applied to this program in my area. I have heard it said that this is an area in which we must move with some speed. I have heard the program characterized as being one of vision. I can think of no program in any educational field—primary, secondary, technical or at the university level—introduced by any municipal, provincial or federal government that compares with the present program.

I mentioned the figures for the province of Alberta. The per capita grants going into that province are comparable with those going to Ontario. The hon. member for Port Arthur talked about secondary schools. I happened to see the figures just here this afternoon and although I may be inaccurate here, I believe that near Edmonton there is one school which is receiving a total grant of something like $8 million under this program. This surely is a large specialized school which will give detailed vocational and technical training in some depth.

Ontario perhaps has been able to make some use of this plan with the new Robarts streaming technique. It seems, however, that many of the objections we have heard this afternoon and evening are based on a detailed analysis of municipal and provincial responsibilities. I do not say that this matter should not be discussed to some extent in this chamber; but surely we must rely on the municipalities and on the provinces in their wisdom to work out the details of these schemes within their provincial and municipal jurisdictions, the province of Quebec in a different manner from the province of Ontario. We are not a Conservative government here at Ottawa that wishes to dictate—as I think the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Peterborough and probably the near socialist member for Trinity would like to do—the educational programs and schemes of the provinces and municipalities. We do not intend to do that. We wish to grant under a general government and a general scheme, moneys to be used by the provinces and the municipalities according to their methods, and according to their best ways and means. This is our philosophy. If those sitting opposite disagree with it, that is their privilege. Again, I think this is a complete renunciation of local responsibility. It can only mean, as the hon. member for Peel pointed out, a complete lack of confidence on the part of the N.D.P. and the Liberals in the authority, integrity and ability of the local boards of education and provincial departments of education. I have talked to guidance teachers in high schools in my riding and to provincial inspectors around Ontario and I find that there is a whole hearted and warm acceptance of this scheme.

Some remarks were made by the hon. member for Peterborough about the retraining of vocational teachers. We know that this is going on. There are rush programs being carried out to retrain and and further train our present vocational teachers in order to bring them up to higher standards for these new classes and these new courses. This is going on. Undoubtedly new teachers will have to be recruited as well. That is being done and I am sure is realized by the provinces and municipalities in question.

I am told that the hon. member for Timiskaming in speaking this afternoon was guilty of a number of inaccuracies—I observe that he is at last listening now—with regard to students being obliged to decide in grade 8 to commit their lives to one course or another. Again I believe the hon. member for Peel has set out the true scheme. There is one year after which students may criss-cross to different courses; and, as I think perhaps has not been pointed out this evening, really none of these courses closes the door, upon graduation, to a variety of college or technical training thereafter. This is an encouraging thing. There are basic similarities between these courses. There is only a percentage—perhaps 20 per cent—of specialized training in the different courses. There are many subjects which will be common areas in the first three streams. This will not close doors or possibilities to any students to further their education and their training beyond the secondary school level.

I must admit that I was troubled at first by this seeming inflexibility of the scheme. However, on better acquaintance I now realize the tremendous flexibility it has, the great choice provided in the fact that students can go on from there to a variety of things after their secondary schooling.

The hon. member for Peterborough also said that we should be training, instead, the unemployed. Of course we are doing that. We are doing that in my riding. In the town of Oakville the province, the federal government and the municipality and the school board, as a matter of fact—that much decried school board about which we heard so much earlier this evening—have taken it upon themselves, on their own initiative, to cooperate seeing the opening made by our Minister of Labour here, through this provincial federal scheme, to retrain some of the unemployed in our area. This scheme is just starting to catch on. There is not perhaps a tremendous volume of students as yet but this is a very healthy sign in the training of the unemployed. We are trying to classify them and to train those who are most capable of receiving that training and to give them courses which will make them able to fit into a wider variety of jobs.

As I have said, hon. members opposite who have spoken this evening have raised problems which are largely provincial in nature. The basic conclusion to which we must come is that this is part of a concerted socialist bureaucratic attack on the problem of education in this country. I am not one who feels that our government in a variety of ways should not contribute to some extent to education. However, I am far from thinking that we at this level should control the curricula, the students, the methods of study and the training of teachers at the federal level. From some of the remarks made here this evening I can only conclude that this is the direction in which the New Democratic party would head. As was mentioned by the hon. member for Peel, I think that everybody would have to move to Ottawa. We would let all the little boards go and let the provincial departments go and we would have one glorified huge bureaucratic department of education here in Ottawa. I think that is just as ridiculous as it sounds. If they wish to vote against this program I think possibly we may see just what their objections are. However, the sort of negative remarks which we have heard this evening—

Mr. Peters: You sure have made some.

Mr. Best: Perhaps I was spared the misery of hearing the hon. member's remarks made this afternoon. I heard enough inaccuracies, I think, to be grateful that I was away from the chamber at that time.

Mr. Peters: It is too bad you were not away longer.

Mr. Best: I think the measure of support and reaction to this program is witnessed by the very applications which have come to the Prime Minister and to the federal government. This is the true measure of its success. I am sure that our major attack on this problem will mean a great increase in trained personnel, in employment in primary and secondary manufacturing in the years ahead. I wish to compliment the Minister of Labour and the government on what I think is one of the major keystones of the policy and practice of this administration.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, the $28 million vote that we are asked to approve affects what is known as joint plans. I therefore believe it would be unfortunate to let this opportunity go by without knowing exactly where the members stand on the question of joint plans, especially the members from the province of Quebec sitting behind the treasury benches.

Mr. Chairman, I would not have raised this point tonight if, while making two speeches in this house since the beginning of the present session, one during the debate on the speech from the throne and the other during the consideration of the first general estimates of the Department of Public Works, I had not been subjected to a barrage of questions from the Conservative members of the province of Quebec who, several times—and Hansard is there to prove it—asked me to state the stand of Liberal members on joint plans.

Well, Mr. Chairman, in order to dispel any ambiguity, I wish to take this opportunity afforded by consideration of this item to place on record the policy of the Liberal party as regards joint plans.

And I want to say that our policy, which was clearly stated on different occasions—

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Bourget: —when our leader—

The Chairman: Order. Does the minister want to speak on a point of order?

Mr. Flynn: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I submit that the point raised by the member for Levis is irrelevant.

It is not that I fear to follow him on this ground, but it is a waste of time to discuss matters that have nothing to do with the matter under discussion.

In this case, the act was passed by the house, the principle has been accepted, and it is now only a matter of asking the house for an additional amount. Therefore there is no need to reconsider the principle of the act. It is simply that, if the hon. member for Levis is allowed to continue his remarks to that effect, we will soon be getting into full scale, and completely irrelevant debate.

I think that such has been the case long enough today.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the point of order raised a few moments ago by the minister, I think we should point out two facts. First, the minister has said that the remarks made by the hon. member for Levis go beyond the limits of this debate; well, it should be remembered that the same question was discussed for about an hour or two. Consequently, if at that time the members were going beyond the limits of the debate, the hon. member for Levis has the right to do the same, because the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) was the first to bring up the point that the hon. member for Levis is now discussing.

As to the principle of the act, the minister is absolutely wrong when he says that a member is not allowed to discuss it now. But under vote 636 which is now before us, a member has the right to discuss the principle of the act. This seems clear to me. Consequently, I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member has the right to pursue his remarks since we have been discussing for two hours the principles of education in the province of Ontario. Therefore, the member has, a fortiori, the right to do as much as far as the province of Quebec is concerned.

Mr. Tremblay: Two wrongs don't make a right.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to add. The hon. member for Laurier said that we talked about it this afternoon.

I admit that part of the debate was beyond the scope of the vote under discussion. However, there was no mention of the principle of the act but rather of its application in the province of Ontario, which is quite different from the argument that the member for Levis wants to raise.

Second, the rule setting the limits of a debate is very well set forth on page 738 of May's sixteenth edition.

Once again, I do not want to prevent the member for Levis from discussing that matter. He already has had the opportunity to do so. If he wants to come back to it, it is his business; but I submit that we will move away for good from the vote under consideration.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put in a word or two on the point of order that has been raised by the minister of points of order. My point is this. The minister says that in our discussion in this committee of an additional vote under a law we cannot discuss the principle of the law. That is the most extraordinary attempt to limit freedom of speech that I think I have ever heard in the committee of supply. Surely we can point out that the principle of the law is working badly, as it obviously is when three quarters of all this money is being spent in one province. Surely we can point out that in the application of the principle the thing is not working out properly, and to lay a foundation for dealing with the application one has to recall what the principle is. That is precisely what the hon. member for Levis was doing.

(Translation):

The Chairman: The minister has obviously raised a very important question, that of the relevancy of the debate. I know that he is referring to May whom he has quoted in part yesterday. But a little further, on the same page, I read this:

(Text):

If the sum demanded by a supplementary estimate is of the same order of magnitude as the original estimate, the chairman has allowed questions of policy to be raised upon it which would have been in order if it had been an original estimate.

The first point is that this is an important amount that members are being asked to vote. The second point is that the discussion that has taken place on this item has ranged widely enough to cover the policy of the original law as well as the question of voting this additional amount. Third, with regard to the remarks upon which the hon. member for Levis was embarking I would point out that he was speaking about the principles of joint programs. This is a joint program and if he relates his remarks on joint programs generally to the joint program that is now under study, then to my mind he is fairly well within the realm of relevancy. I do not feel inclined to stop him at this stage although I would caution him that, as the minister has well pointed out, the rules of relevancy must be adhered to and he must correlate his remarks to the particular item.

(Translation):

Mr. Flynn: I agree with you, Mr. Chairman, but if we start a discussion of that kind in a few minutes, I would not want the hon. member for Laurier to blame us for delaying the passing of the estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: That is what you have been doing all evening.

Mr. Bourget: And this should not happen.

I wish to point out to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys that tonight, the chief whip of the Conservative party (Mr. Pallett) spoke for half an hour and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Best), for fifteen minutes.

Mr. Flynn: Half an hour between the two of them.

Mr. Bourget: Then, I do not think the Liberal opposition can be blamed for taking the floor too often on this matter since the Conservatives themselves took more time than we did. Mr. Chairman, I am not a lawyer, but my judgment tells me, and especially common sense, that it is logical for a member to express the attitude he intends to take concerning a credit as important as that of $28 million which is now put to us.

As I said at the beginning, I would not have raised the matter if, in the course of two speeches I gave in this house, I had not been submitted to a barrage of questions about joint programs.

So that there shall be no misunderstandings, I will put on record the policy of the Liberal party, which remains the same, not only in the province of Quebec, but throughout the country.

Well, that policy on joint plans is outlined in a pamphlet which we are distributing all over the country and which is entitled The Option Formula. I quote:

Although tax sharing is essential, other forms of co-operation between the provinces and Ottawa exist which will provide a better balanced development of Canada.

Such are the federal-provincial joint programs in the field of welfare, for example old-age assistance, pensions to the blind and the disabled—

As well as this project which is about technical and professional training.

—In that field, Ottawa must help develop, all over the country, such assistance programs; but if it remained indefinitely in that field, it would run the risk of creating, in the long run, administrative difficulties.

A new Liberal government, after having made arrangements with the provinces, will withdraw from those joint schemes which are now well established everywhere. At the time of its withdrawal, the federal government will confer on the provinces direct taxation powers and increase its equalization payments to a degree equivalent to the federal contribution to those programs.

Thus, the federal government will be able to suggest new joint programs if necessary. Yet, in view of applying further schemes, a new Liberal government will ensure that any province unwilling to take part in one or the other, would not suffer with regard to revenue. As the federal taxes will pay a new joint program, any province may have an option and receive from the federal government some financial compensation equal to what the province would have received if it had shared in the joint federal-provincial scheme.

Mr. Pigeon: You are repudiating the past.

The Chairman: Order. I indicated to the hon. member a moment ago that he could add a few references concerning joint plans to the premise of his argument, but I suggest it is not within the scope of this discussion to consider the details of this program nor the fiscal agreements which could be reached between the federal and provincial governments. I would therefore ask the hon. member to get back to the estimates which are now before us.

An hon. Member: You are repudiating the past.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I will abide by your suggestion. I do not want to belabor the point further, but I believe that it would be the right time, since we have with us tonight the senior minister of the province of Quebec and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys—

Mr. Balcer: Would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Bourget: If you will let me finish what I have to say, you will be able to ask me all the questions you wish. You asked questions when I spoke on two previous occasions. Besides, it is not up to the Liberals, who are in opposition, to reply; it is up to you, who are in power, to shoulder your responsibilities. I feel it is time for you to take a stand and to say what you think of joint programs.

[Mr. Bourget.]

Mr. Tremblay: Jokers.

Mr. Bourget: And especially the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) who—

Mr. Tremblay: Jokers, jokers.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: You are contradicting yourself.

Mr. Tremblay: Comedians.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member to address himself to the Chair in accordance with the rules of the house.

Mr. Bourget: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I feel hon. members opposite should stay quiet. I ask the ministers of the province of Quebec to say what they think about those joint plans, as well as the hon. member for Roberval whom—after his recent speeches in the province of Quebec—I am always surprised to see, not only on the government side, but also in this very house.

Mr. Tremblay: Comedians. You will be told in due time.

Mr. Bourget: I do intend, Mr. Chairman, to ask that a vote be taken for the adoption of this item.

Mr. Pigeon: Tell us about Mr. Bona Arsenault.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Tremblay: Tell us about Mr. Chevrier.

The Chairman: I would hope that hon. members interrupting from their seats will stop that so that the Chair as well as all hon. members may hear the remarks of the hon. member for Levis who has the floor.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Roberval will find it difficult.

Mr. Bourget: I thank you, Mr. Chairman, but I have completed my remarks and I hope we shall now have the opportunity to hear somebody from the province of Quebec say what he thinks of these joint programs.

Mr. Pigeon: Bona Arsenault is going to talk about them.

Mr. Tremblay: Tell us about Mr. Chevrier.

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, as I have a few remarks to make on this item I wonder if I might call it ten o'clock?

(Translation):

The Chairman: Order. I have already asked hon. members not to interrupt from their seats. I hope they will abide by the rules of the house since, otherwise, it will be impossible to give proper consideration to these estimates.

I recognize the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin).

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Timmins): As I say, the hour is rather late and I wonder if I might call it ten o'clock?

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what we will be doing tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we will press on with the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the house leader give some indication of what we will be doing next week, Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. Churchill: Everything will depend on the progress we make tomorrow, which I hope will be extensive.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 16, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

SAINT PATRICK'S DAY

MR. MCGRATH—GREETINGS TO MR. SPEAKER AND MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to ask the house to bear with me while I move the clock ahead 24 hours to wish you, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Irishmen in this house the top of the morning.

May I also on this, the eve of the feast day of the great patron saint of Ireland, on behalf of all Canadians and particularly on behalf of Irish Canadians, avail myself of the opportunity to raise the old Gaelic cry "Erin go bragh".

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East, I should like to say that members of this group for years have urged that fast time be established on a national basis but, of course, we trust that it will apply to all groups in Canada when it is established. However, we approve his supporting this principle openly in this house at this time. We also join with him in his recognition of March 17 as a great day for many of our Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that it has been unanimously agreed that we move the clock ahead 24 hours. I am not sure what effect that course will have on today's proceedings.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to join with the hon. member for St. John's East and all others in this house in wishing to those of Irish extraction our very best wishes on the eve of St. Patrick's day.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHEVRIER—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE RESPECTING PAYMENT OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rose on a question of privilege at about the same time as the hon. member for St. John's East, but Your Honour saw him first.

My question of privilege is one that affects the rights of all hon. members of this house. Yesterday the Minister of Finance made a statement which has been interpreted to mean that members of the opposition were preventing civil servants from being paid. One of the local radio stations headed its newscast this morning as follows:

> Will some civil servants not get paid? According to finance minister Fleming it's possible.

I am informed, sir, that a question directed to the central pay office produced the reply that no mid-March cheques for civil servants' pay had been held up. In other words, the minister yesterday sought by misleading information to curb debate in this house. Notwithstanding this—

Mr. Hellyer: False and misleading.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member referring to a statement made in the house yesterday?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: When statements of that kind are made in the house objection to them, if any is to be taken, should be taken at the time they are made.

Mr. Chevrier: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I invite the hon. member to hear me out. In the heated debates that take place it would be impossible to go back and correct all the infractions of the rules of the house that have been made during the course of the day. I think the hon. member will agree with me that if we follow that course we would never do the work of today but would spend our time on yesterday's affairs. So I suggest to the hon. member that he take other means of correcting what he says is misinformation.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I feel I should bring to your attention the fact that yesterday no one could have known that the statement made by the Minister of Finance was misleading. This was not known until today when the reference I cited was broadcast on a local radio station to the effect that it was possible that civil servants' pay cheques were being held up. When we made a check today we discovered that no mid-March cheques had been held up, despite what the minister said.

Mr. Speaker: Well, having gone that far—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Question of Privilege

Mr. Speaker: I should like to give the minister an opportunity to comment on the question of privilege which has been raised since it has been carried to the extent that it has.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member's point of order relates to hearing the Minister of Finance, I will hear him first.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is this. I quite agree with Your Honour that the minister should be allowed to speak. However, I also feel that my friend the hon. member for Laurier who has raised the point should be allowed to complete his sentence before the minister is allowed to reply.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated to the hon. member for Laurier that I thought the point was not properly taken at this time, but that he has made his point to the extent that I think it is only fair that the minister should be allowed to comment.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Particularly, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Laurier has used the expression "sought to mislead" and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), whether you heard him or not, just now used the expression "false and misleading" as applied to the statement I made. The hon. member apparently is not acquainted with the rules of this house. When I have made my statement to you, Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege I hope you will direct him, in accordance with the rules of the house, to withdraw his words.

My remark yesterday on this subject is to be found at page 1823 of Hansard, in the second column. This is what I said, and I was referring to March 15:

> This is normally the day when cheques are payable with respect to a number of the liabilities of the government. I must inform the committee that by reason of the fact that these supplementary estimates have not yet been disposed of, notwithstanding the warnings given to the house by my colleague some days ago, it will not be possible now to pay on their due date certain accounts of suppliers in various departments, and certain employees cannot receive their mid-March pay until supply is released.

That statement is correct, Mr. Speaker. The information given to the house this morning by the hon. member for Laurier is wrong. If there is anything misleading, it is the statement made by the hon. member for Laurier.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister has had ample opportunity now to comment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With respect, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that I have something further to say on this subject, and I think I am quite within my rights after language such as that which has been used this morning by those two hon. members with respect to the statement I made yesterday.

Mr. Chevrier: Who is in the chair?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say to the minister that I curtailed the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier, who raised the question of privilege originally. The reason it seemed proper that the minister should be allowed to comment was that the hon. member for Laurier had gone far enough to make a statement which required to be dealt with. However, unless the minister is raising a new point I suggest to him that in view of my restricting the hon. member for Laurier, the matter has now been satisfactorily disposed of. It should not have been raised at all.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EARLY RETIREMENT—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question suggested last evening by his colleague the Minister of Labour. Can the Prime Minister tell the house what officials are making the study of the question of early retirement, to which he referred in his television broadcast on Wednesday evening, March 14, and what minister is in charge of this study?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As the hon. gentleman knows, Mr. Speaker, the names of officials, should there be such officials, are not revealed in the house. I remember an occasion many years ago when a similar question was asked and that answer was given. Furthermore, as I stated on the television broadcast, I am having this whole matter looked into. Opinions are being secured from those who are knowledgeable on the subject, and when it is appropriate to bring the matter to the attention of the house it will be done.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask a supplementary question arising out of what the Prime Minister has said. Surely when public funds are being expended on a matter of this kind parliament should at least be entitled to know what minister is in charge of the study. That was the question I asked, and I wonder whether the Prime Minister would not reply to that part of the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there was no complication, except from the lips of the hon. gentleman, that public funds were being spent.

Mr. Hellyer: It is the minister in charge of mysticism.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO LETTER FROM PRESIDENT KENNEDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a letter from President Kennedy seeking an indication of Canadian government plans concerning ratification of the Columbia river treaty and suggesting that the United States government will seek alternative power sources for the Pacific northwest if ratification is not given soon?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister speaks to the Progressive Conservative association in Montreal this evening, is it his intention to announce—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Party meetings are not considered public administration, and to inquire in advance what a minister proposes to say at a party meeting seems to me to be going beyond the scope of either questions on the orders of the day or written questions.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AVAILABILITY OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION TO PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the question asked yesterday on the orders of the day by the hon. member for Timmins, which related to the divulging to private parties by employees of several government departments of information contained in the records of these government departments, was presumably directed to the Secretary of State in his capacity of dealing with questions involving more than one department. I assure the hon. member that this role of the Secretary of State is confined to questions and motions for papers which appear on the order paper and not to verbal questions raised on orders of the day. Since, further, I have no over-all responsibility for the security of information in departmental records, I suggest to the hon. member that he direct his inquiry to the ministers responsible for the departments concerned.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

FORT WILLIAM—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF ARMOURIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received a letter from Lieutenant Colonel L. T. Poulter urging the construction of an armoury in Fort William? If so, is the government giving favourable consideration to the establishment of armoury facilities in that city soon, or in the foreseeable future?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did receive such a letter two days ago. The hon. member will remember that he raised the matter of the provision of an armoury for Fort William when the estimates of the department were being considered, and we had considerable discussion. At that time I explained the general armoury situation in Canada and the fact that we more or less have a priority list, and informed him where Fort William stood on that list.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CANADAIR—PRODUCTION OF CL-41 JET TRAINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Has the government decided to order from Canadair a number of CL-41 jet trainers for the Royal Canadian Air Force? If the government has not reached a decision on this matter, in view of the impending layoffs at Canadair will the government make an early decision on it?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the only announcement on this program was made by the Minister of National Defence during the last session of parliament when he said the air force was considering the acquisition of the CL-41 trainer. Since that time negotiations have been going on with Canadair and other companies with regard to the manufacture of the engine required for this trainer. This program has not yet been approved in its entirety, but negotiations are continuing. I wish to state that we are looking seriously into the situation with regard to the work force at the Canadair plant, and if the CL-41 program goes ahead it will mean for some months or for a year or so work for not more than 1,000 men.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—REQUEST FOR TRAINING OF TROOPS IN KOOTENAY DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence based on a telegram I received since I appealed to him yesterday from Mr. T. A. McRae, of the Kootenay boundary citizens' committee. It reads as follows:

> Request you again call for troops in this area on a training basis. Do we have to have a hydro power plant destroyed before action taken.

In view of the concern felt, would the minister communicate with the attorney general of British Columbia to see if some satisfactory arrangements cannot be made?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I have nothing to add to the two answers I have already given with regard to this matter. The procedure is very plain. If troops are required, the attorney general has to requisition them. Until he does so, as I explained before, I have no legal authority so far as I can see to send troops, in effect, in aid of the civil power. The responsibility, therefore, is that of the attorney general if he considers troops are necessary to send a request for them.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO QUOTA POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I have a question for the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister bring the house up to date on the grain quota situation in western Canada? How many points are on open delivery quotas at this time?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Perhaps I could answer that question on behalf of the Acting Minister of Agriculture. A most remarkable change has taken place in the quota distribution, compared with other years. Of the 1,942 points at which grain is delivered, 92 per cent are now on the open delivery quota. This, I believe, is a record. By provinces it runs this way: Manitoba, 352 stations, all on open delivery quotas; Saskatchewan, 1,038 stations, of which 921 are on open delivery, 83 on a 7 bushels per specified acre quota, 27 stations on 6 bushels quota and 7 stations on a 5 bushel quota; in Alberta, 545 delivery points, of which 523 are on open delivery quota and 22 on a 7 bushel per specified acre quota. This is the remarkable record of government policy with regard to the sale of western grain.

REPORTED PROTESTS OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Did the minister receive representations from pilots on the St. Lawrence river and the seaway concerning a new formula whereby, according to this morning's Gazette, part of their salaries would pay for navigation aids?

If so, could the minister tell us what stand his department would take following those representations?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, officials of my department did consult the pilots' association to find out what their opinion was on this matter. They suggested that pilots attached to the Escoumains and St. John, N.B. stations might pay part of the special equipment which is to be supplied to them. They only wanted to know the views of the pilots' federation in this regard, and, as could be seen in this morning's newspapers, those views were not long in coming.

IMMIGRATION

WINNIPEG—REPORTED ASSURANCE TO CHINESE COMMUNITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in order to clear up a misunderstanding that apparently exists amongst the Chinese community in Winnipeg. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether he did give them any assurance last November, and if so what was the nature of the assurance?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I believe that the details of this question have been brought to the attention of the house on two previous occasions, by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and by the Minister of Justice. This whole question is one that is receiving the earnest attention of the government. All recognize that the Chinese are fine citizens, and our purpose is to assure in every way that they receive fairness and justice.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): As a supplementary question I would ask the Minister of Justice whether he thinks this whole matter could not be brought to an early termination.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): We have been bending our efforts in that direction since long before the hon. member made his suggestion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Pretty poor efforts.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Technical and vocational training assistance—

636. To carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder—payments to the provinces —further amount required, $28,400,000.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I listened very carefully to the debate which arose in connection with this item in the supplementary estimates and to the very excellent case that has been built by the hon. member for Peterborough and the hon. member for Port Arthur. Combined with the complete lack of answers by any spokesman for the government to the questions raised by these hon. members, their case underlines the fact that all the boo-boos this government has pulled over the last four years in its efforts to solve the problems of our society, this measure ranks as the biggest.

It would be interesting to try and analyse it a little bit in order to find out how the government got into this particular mess. To do so we would have to go back to 1957 and 1958 when the present government inherited the mess of 22 years of misrule by the Liberal government, not to mention the five years of worse misrule by the previous Conservative government. Among the many problems it had to face, possibly the most urgent was that of a steadily rising and steadily more consistent problem of unemployment.

For the first two years the government adopted two tried and true former solutions; first trying to ignore the problem and seeing if it would go away by itself, and the other being optimistic and hoping everything would turn out all right. It took two years for the government to realize that optimism and ignoring the issues were certainly no solution and so it started to look for some answers. It looked back through history but found no answer, because there never had been one under any previous Liberal or Conservative government. The only answers previously tried, were the two I have mentioned, optimism and ignoring the problem. They did not work any better now than they had in the past, and in fact did not work as well because there were two new problems involved, the automation problem and the fact that we did not have a world war come along to bail us out as we had always apparently been fortunate enough to have in the past.

Not being able to find any solutions in history, the government finally started looking for new solutions. As always, of course, when they look for new solutions they had to start listening to the members of this group. The trouble was, they only half listened. They heard members of this group get up time after time and point out the need of a retraining program for displaced employees and for the unemployed of this country, and the need for better training of our young people going into the work force. They listened to all this and thought "Maybe we should try that".

But they were then faced with a dilemma. How were they going to apply such a solution and save face? We had the picture of the Prime Minister going around the country mouthing talk about free enterprise, and on the other hand there was this democratic socialist measure which the government intended to adopt. How could they go about employing democratic socialist measures while at the same time preaching free enterprise?

I admit it is a difficult job, but they finally found what they thought to be a solution. They thought they could adopt the measures without using the methods. They thought they could use the ideas with no thought or planning or anything else of that kind. In fact they believed the solution was to put a free enterprise mask on their faces and try to carry out socialism behind their backs. That is how this government achieved this monstrosity that we face at the present time, the greatest of all the blunders they have made in the last five years. We find an expenditure of close to $200 million to build the wrong kind of schools in the wrong places for the wrong purposes to teach students we do not have through the services of teachers who do not exist. If any government has done anything more insane than that, I should like to know when it was.

The only conclusion I can come to is that this government lacks the courage and the honesty to carry on with the free enterprise they talk so much about, and lack the brains and intelligence to take democratic socialist measures and apply them properly. The result is—and I think this was pointed out very ably yesterday by the hon. member for Peterborough and the hon. member for Port Arthur—that consternation is spreading throughout the country and that we are amassing a colossal debt without anything to show for the money spent. Finally they will make this government and the country a laughing stock throughout the world whenever anyone of any intelligence looks at the solutions we are trying to apply to these problems.

(Translation):

Mr. Flynn: Last night, Mr. Chairman, in spite of the objection I raised to the effect that the matter he wished to discuss was irrelevant because it concerned the principle of the act and indeed a matter of a wider scope than that principle, the hon. member for Levis took the opportunity of that discussion to set out part of the Liberal platform and put questions to ministers and to members from the province of Quebec.

The hon. member for Levis managed to set before the house the Liberal party's attitude concerning joint schemes and here is what he quoted at page 1862 of Hansard, page 4 of the English translation:

> Although tax sharing is essential, other forms of co-operation between the provinces and Ottawa exist which will provide a better balanced development of Canada.
>
> Such are the federal-provincial joint programs in the field of welfare, for example old age assistance, pensions to the blind and the disabled—

A little further, the hon. member stated:

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

> A new Liberal government, after having made arrangements with the provinces, will withdraw from those joint schemes which are now well established everywhere. At the time of its withdrawal, the federal government will confer on the provinces direct taxation powers and increase its equalization payments to a degree equivalent to the federal contribution to those programs.

Mr. Chairman, I have already stressed that the statement made by the hon. member for Levis covered more than the principle of the legislation, that it dealt with a far reaching question which would best be discussed during a separate debate.

I would not want to follow the bad example set by the hon. member for Levis; consequently, I shall not enter upon an over-long discussion of the matter he raised. I think he will agree with me that the adoption of those supplementary estimates should not be unduly delayed, since they are urgent.

I merely wish to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Levis created the impression that the new formula of the Liberal party would apply to any joint program.

I say that the member for Levis is surely not speaking for the Liberal party when he makes that suggestion, because nobody will convince me that the Liberal party is ready to provide a compensatory formula for joint programs coming under federal jurisdiction.

These are joint programs that fall well within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament; there are some for which the responsibility can be shared and, finally, there are others to which some provinces object because they feel that those schemes deal with matters which are their sole responsibility.

Surely the hon. member for Levis will not tell me that his party has changed its policy to the extent of saying that it will apply a form of compensation to all the joint programs, whatever the problems of legislative jurisdiction they create.

For example—

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but could he specify which joint programs or plans he has in mind? I would ask him to be more specific so that we may understand each other.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, it is the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) who was not specific yesterday. I would suggest especially that he expressed a very general opinion on this bill. Now, does the hon. member for Levis mean to say that his alternative formula would apply to the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Bourget: Certainly.

Mr. Flynn: Indeed. That is precisely what I expected the hon. member for Levis to say, because when this bill was discussed in this house, he never offered any compensatory formula. He laughed at the Quebec government which was against it and he always emphasized that Quebec would lose millions through its own fault, but he has never suggested an alternative formula. This is a shameful turn-about.

Mr. Bourget: If the minister wants me to reply immediately, I am ready to do so.

Mr. Flynn: If the hon. member for Levis wishes to reply, he may do so, provided he does not make a new speech before I have finished mine.

Mr. Bourget: I will answer the minister right now because he knows full well that when our party was in power, that is until June 1957, we never had the opportunity of discussing that with the then Quebec premier. The minister knows that I am telling the truth. We never had an opportunity for such a discussion because Mr. Duplessis always refused to co-operate with the Liberal government of the time.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I do not have enough time to discuss that point but, whether he is right or wrong, the hon. member for Levis is not in a better position, since he states today that any province will be entitled to a compensatory formula, whereas in the past he took a take it or leave it attitude.

I have read the official report and the statements made by the hon. member for Levis. He is not going to come and tell me that his attitude was one of conciliation at that time. Never did he suggest that the government of which he was a member was willing to offer the province of Quebec some compensation in that field.

I said that there are programs which fall perfectly within the federal jurisdiction. I shall only say a word about the legislation concerned, since, irrelevant as that might be at this stage in our proceedings, its principle has been discussed. That act was passed by parliament last year because the federal government recognized its responsibilities in the employment field, employment being directly related to trade and economy. The measure was introduced with these considerations in mind.

Now, because technical training comes within the field of education, which is under provincial jurisdiction, the act provides for an agreement with those provinces which may wish to take advantage of it, precisely to organize this technical and vocational training. When the act was introduced last year, did the hon. member for Levis and his friends offer a compensation formula?

Mr. Tremblay: No.

Mr. Flynn: Did they suggest there should be one? Not at all.

Mr. Bourget: You are the ones who refused it.

Mr. Flynn: You repudiated your own past. From considerations of opportunism, the Liberal party, at their convention, adopted this formula, this compensation idea which is a complete reversal of the Liberal party philosophy, as formulated in Mr. Maurice Lamontagne's book on Canadian federalism. I suggest the hon. member for Levis read it again and he will see once again the tremendous turn-about he has made.

Mr. Bourget: You are past-masters in turn-about.

Mr. Flynn: Not at all. One last point. As far as we are concerned, when a province feels that some legislation affects what is its exclusive jurisdiction, we are ready to consider changes, and especially to bring in a compensation formula.

When the previous government initiated the university grants system, neither my hon. friend from Levis nor the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), nor any one of their colleagues said a word about compensation. Take it or leave it, they said. Indeed, as a result of that stand, the province of Quebec lost millions—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): We did not lose millions.

Mr. Flynn: —millions were lost until 1955. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) should check before he tries to contradict me. It is only later that the previous government decided that the amounts would remain in the custody of the Canadian universities foundation.

When we came to power, we recognized the claims of the province of Quebec and offered a compensation formula which the former administration had accepted and which the new administration of the province of Quebec —which is much closer to our hon. friends— has accepted again.

That was a practical attitude. It was not only wind and idle talk. Those were not meaningless and unrealistic formulas which could not apply under the present legislation. That is not what we offer. We keep both feet on the ground and we shall not imitate the political expediency of the Liberal party; we shall not follow them on that road.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to clear up that point for the time being, but if my hon. friend insists, I shall come back to it.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I think the moment would be well chosen for the minister to explain why, during the last election campaign, he and his friends kept on criticizing all joint plans and promising they would abolish them all, and why now, in spite of such statements, they have maintained them.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, during the last election campaign, I never said a word about abolishing joint plans. I could send my hon. friend the publicity pamphlets I had distributed in my constituency. What I did say was that our government was in favour of a return to maximum fiscal responsibility for the provinces. That is what we have achieved. My hon. friend is talking through his hat when he attributes to the Conservatives from the province of Quebec the attitude he has just described.

An hon. Member: We will prove the contrary to you.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words following the remarks made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn).

I think the people, especially the people of the province of Quebec, will be anxious to read the remarks he has just made. I find it strange that the government members from Quebec, including the minister, the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer), after four and a half years in power, should say to us today: the Liberals are to blame for the fact that these joint programs must continue to exist.

Well, I remember the stand taken by our opponents during the 1957 and 1958 electoral campaigns, and even before. I do not have here the statements made by the ministers, but I remember, among other things, that during a television broadcast the Minister of Transport, speaking about the joint programs and the trans-Canada highway in particular, said that they violated the autonomy of the provinces. I hope that the minister will not contradict me on that point.

Mr. Flynn: I am sorry, but I did not hear him.

[Mr. Flynn.]

Mr. Bourget: Well, the minister is not the whole party but he is well aware of the impression that was created; he knows that what has been said in the province of Quebec in 1957 and 1958 was to the effect that all these joint programs encroached upon the autonomy of the provinces. The minister may deny it, but I believe that the whole population of the province of Quebec admits it is true.

Well, once again, I say that during the elections of 1957 and 1958, you stated that you had found a means to put an end to those joint schemes. Yet, you have been in power for four and a half years, and have changed absolutely nothing. It is not up to the Liberal party to change the situation or legislation. You are the ones in power at this time, and you are responsible for the administration. Well, why don't you change those schemes?

What are you waiting for? Are you waiting to be defeated in the next general election? And that, indeed, is what will happen.

As far as we are concerned, Mr. Chairman, nobody can accuse us of having swerved from our course. Indeed, we have always expounded a policy—

Mr. Tremblay: Now, that is a good one—a very good one indeed.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I again hear the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay). I am told he will rise in a moment, and I hope he will be present—

Mr. Tremblay: Certainly.

Mr. Bourget: —when the question is put. I hope his colleagues from Quebec on the government benches and himself will not scurry out when the vote is taken. If they vote against that item, we will be able to see the division which now exists within the Conservative party. On the other hand, if they vote in favour of it, they will deny not only their past, but all the speeches they made against those joint programs.

Mr. Tremblay: Not at all.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I formally deny that, during the last election, the Conservative party in the province of Quebec as a whole adopted an attitude of complete opposition to the joint schemes, and it is, anyway, very easy to establish that many of those joint plans were accepted by the province of Quebec—

Mr. Bourget: Which plans?

Mr. Flynn: —and therefore it would have been completely inconsistent for us to oppose them, even from a tactical point of view.

Hon. members in the opposition should know that our main course during the last election was to relieve the provinces from the fiscal burden that had been placed upon them. I formally deny the statement just made by the hon. member for Levis.

Last year, we voted in favour of this act. We shall now vote for this item, and if anybody reverses his course it will not be on this side of the house, but on the side of my good friend, the hon. member for Levis.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, the only conclusion which can be drawn from this discussion is obviously that, due to the famous provincial autonomy of the Union Nationale, the province of Quebec lost hundreds of millions of dollars by re-electing the Union Nationale government, which has fortunately disappeared.

Mr. Flynn: You did not offer any compensation at that time.

Mr. Denis: You have repudiated what the Liberals had done—

Mr. Flynn: Not at all.

Mr. Denis: —from 1954 to 1957, and not only do you approve today what you repudiated at the time, but you go still further and vote twice.

Mr. Chairman, I notice that the hon. member for Roberval, having been expelled from this side of the house for being too noisy—

Mr. Flynn: Order.

The Chairman: Order. I do not believe that it is the responsibility of the hon. member for St. Denis to discuss the question of the distribution of seats in this house. His comments are not relevant to the present discussion. I would therefore ask him to stay on the item now before us.

Mr. Denis: I simply pointed out the fact that the hon. member for Roberval is now in a seat that is not his, and I did so in the interest of the hon. member to whom this seat was given, for I am convinced that he would not be too happy to be mistaken for the hon. member for Roberval.

Mr. Flynn: Order.

Mr. Caron: The hon. member for Roberval should also be called to order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for St. Denis has the floor, and I would ask the hon. members—

Mr. Caron: And also the hon. member for Roberval.

The Chairman: —not to interrupt him. I would moreover ask the hon. member for St. Denis to confine his remarks to the estimates now before us.

Mr. Caron: And especially the hon. member for Roberal. I suggest he should be named.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, we are now being asked to vote an additional sum of $28 million, and I would very much like to know from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) what proportion of this additional sum will be handed out to the province of Quebec.

If I understand correctly, the item deals with joint plans, and also with certain works concerning the construction of schools for technical and professional training, or for the teaching of certain trades which come under the purview of the federal government.

Thus I am asking the minister to tell the house if, as a result of this great project which is being promoted by Conservative ministers and members from Quebec at Lauzon, the Sulphur Converting Corporation proposes to look after the building of a technical school in that community—

Mr. Tremblay: Order.

Mr. Denis: —since, for the construction of these wharves which cover a distance of 30 miles, tradesmen, craftsmen and divers, will probably be needed, for the carrying out of federal works?

An hon. Member: You would have been an excellent one yourself.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I wonder how much money the province of Quebec will receive under this vote, for this project should give employment to more than 4,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec, and we shall probably need mechanics and mining experts and workers to build wharves, etc.

I also ask the minister if, in this increase we are asked to vote, an amount is provided for the construction of industrial arts and trades schools in the Lauzon and Levis areas so that, should this project become a reality, the province of Quebec will not be caught off guard but will be in a position to train skilled workers, experts who could successfully carry out the famous project of the Surphur Converting Corporation.

Mr. Tremblay: I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to get involved in a lengthy debate and try to answer the arguments put forward by some members opposite who indulge in too great a complacency. But some hon. members have tried to involve me in the discussion of a project which I feel did not, as was indicated by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn), called for an examination of the principle of the act, since we are now asked to vote an additional amount required so that this technical and vocational training program may be carried out as it should be.

I do not know that it is relevant to bring up the general principle of the act as well as the general economics of the act. It seems to me that this is simply a matter of finding out from the minister concerned to what extent and under what conditions those additional millions we are asked to vote would eventually be spent. However, the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget)—following the example of hon. members of the ex-C.C.F. party, now known in the province of Quebec and elsewhere as the New Democratic party—extended the debate and set out to examine the general principle of the act, bringing up the economics of all those measures. That is why I should like, for the information of the Liberal members, to make some remarks which I hope are as much in order as those of our excellent comedians opposite—I regret that this is not a parliamentary expression—I should rather say our very good friends opposite.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Levis challenged us last night to take a stand on that question of joint plans. I should like right now to calm his over-scrupulous conscience and put the facts before him.

As far as I am concerned, never have I stated that those joint plans should be abolished. I have never made such a statement but, in the election campaigns in which I had the pleasure to take part, I have been critical of the federal fiscal policy of the Liberal party. I have said and promised to my constituents that the Conservative party would throw off, as the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys said, the yoke under which the Liberal party had held the province of Quebec. That is our stand and it is in that light that I promised to insist in this house on the rights of the provinces. That is what we have done, I think, and as for results, the public will be in a position to assess them in due time and, I hope, in a very near future.

Mr. Bourget: So do we.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Levis challenged us to speak out on that question, but he did not do so with a view to enlightening this house in a positive and efficient way. He did not do so with a view to clearing up the confusion which his party has maintained, but simply in order to save face and with the clear intention of saving the Hon. Jean Lesage, who having previously been an anti-autonomist has now shifted to a verbal autonomy, and who would like to get us involved in a conflict which he has himself helped to bring about and maintain when he was the instigator of all those centralizing measures which the province of Quebec had to put up with and still has to put up with now.

The hon. member for Levis was very shrewd last night—that is as much as he can be—and in reading his pamphlet he gave us a foretaste of the odious propaganda of the Liberal party during the next general election.

He read us an advertising booklet in which his party states that it intends to give up joint programs. I understand that the advertising booklet he read last night mentioned that question of joint programs because Mr. Jean Lesage came here barely a few weeks after his election, draped in the cloak of autonomy, and said to whoever would listen to him that the province of Quebec wanted the federal government to withdraw from all the joint programs. That is why the members opposite are embarrassed today and must take a stand they always opposed when they were in power.

I challenge them to say the contrary, in particular I challenge them to ask Mr. Jean Lesage to claim now what he announced when he took part in the federal-provincial conference in 1960.

If Mr. Lesage has decided to withdraw from joint programs, he should say so, just like Mr. Duplessis used to tell the government in Ottawa what he considered to be an encroachment on the autonomy of the provinces.

Under those circumstances, we shall be extremely pleased to examine the concrete proposals made by Mr. Jean Lesage, but we hope that he won't turn about, as he did very recently in the matter of university grants. He had come here, all primed to the occasion, and he had requested much more than he is now claiming.

Mr. Chairman, coming back to my point about that article of the Liberal joint plan program, I would point out to the hon. member for Levis, who admitted his legal ignorance yesterday evening, that the article of his party's program is merely a diversionary measure designed to save face and minimize the embarrassment of Hon. Jean Lesage in Quebec.

This significant article reads as follows:

In this field, Ottawa must help set up such assistance programs throughout the country; however, the federal government should not remain in those programs indefinitely, because it would lead to administrative difficulties in the long run.

And further on:

Thus, the federal government could propose other joint programs if they should prove necessary.

This last paragraph is a cause of concern to me, because it seems obvious that the Liberal party, if it should unfortunately return to power, intends to set up other joint programs and disregards the views of the provinces in this matter.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, the hired thinker, the thinking master of the Leader of the Opposition expressed himself most clearly on this subject in his book "The Canadian Federalism". On page 254, I find this paragraph that I want to read into the official report.

Finally, the fight against recession requires a preliminary phase of preparation, especially when a program of public works is involved. You have to be prepared to prevent crises. Public investment projects are fully effective only when it is known beforehand what they will cover, when and how they will be carried out. Since the provinces are unable to finance such projects by themselves and since the federal government cannot take them over exclusively, the implementation of joint programs to prevent a recession calls for previous agreement between the various levels of government.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to pay close attention to the end of the paragraph which condemns the autonomist attitude of the province of Quebec. I should like to have the comments of the hon. member for Levis after I have finished reading the following:

Every time the federal government has tried to discuss such projects in the past, some provinces have refused to co-operate, with the result that we have no agreements at present and we are far from being properly protected against any crisis that may occur.

I would be most happy to see how the hon. member for Levis can reconcile these words with those expressed by Mr. Maurice Lamontagne, his leader's adviser. The hon. member insisted, last night, that taxation powers be returned to the provinces, a view which is not shared by Mr. Lamontagne. Here is what he said—

The Chairman: At this stage, I feel it is my duty to interrupt. Much as I want the hon. member to have every possible chance of answering questions which have been raised in this house, nevertheless, I do not think he should go farther away from the item before us. His observations should relate to this item and he should set aside references and comments not connected with it.

Mr. Tremblay: I thank you, Mr. Chairman. In compliance with your request, I am quite willing to deal, as much as possible, only with the matter we are now discussing.

I merely wish to insist on what the hon. member for Levis said concerning the return of taxation powers brought about by the withdrawal from the joint schemes he mentioned. Here is what Mr. Maurice Lamontagne had to say and which seems to illustrate the Liberal policy:

In a system marked by economic instability, the federal government cannot consider taxation only as a source of revenue: it becomes above all an economic control instrument towards stability.

The Chairman: It is precisely at that point that I intervened to ask the hon. member to abide by the rules I had laid down and I do hope he will do so.

Mr. Tremblay: I thank you. I now come back to the subject matter.

I was saying, at the beginning of my remarks, that the C.C.F. and Liberal members—

Mr. Denis: And the separatists.

Mr. Tremblay: —showed, yesterday evening, perfect unconstitutional collusion, in connection with this additional amount for the technical and professional training program, in criticizing education in various provinces, and in indicating that the federal government had certain responsibilities in the field of technical and vocational training programs. The federal government's responsibility is that which the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has defined a moment ago.

Before closing my remarks, I should like to come back to what the hon. member for Essex East said about the matter, which seems to me very ambiguous, and which is to be found on page 1801 of Hansard:

I suggest to the minister it is possible without violating the constitutional provisions of the British North America Act for the federal government to take cognizance of this fact.

Well, expressions such as those seem extremely ambiguous and appear to extend beyond what is strictly constitutional the responsibility of the federal government.

I repeat that I shall be very glad to hear the hon. member for Levis explain to us how he reconciles his attitude with regard to joint programs with that of Mr. Maurice Lamontagne and with the attitude adopted by his party for so many years, which finally brought about the constitutional crisis the Conservative party has tried to solve ever since it came to power.

In this connection, I would very much like to hear also from the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) who, I imagine, does not go so far as to share the opinion of his colleague from Hull (Mr. Caron), who considered that provincial jurisdiction in educational matters did not extend beyond elementary teaching.

I should like the hon. member for Lapointe to explain to us his exact attitude with regard to joint plans. I also should like him to tell us once and for all before the wave of Liberal demagogy swamps the province of Quebec, what attitude the Liberal party exactly did take in the past, what part of that attitude is today repudiated by the Liberal party and what the new principles and the new criteria of Liberal policy are in matters of constitutional relations.

That is what I should like to know, learn and hear from the very lips of those who promoted the constitutional disintegration of this country.

(Text):

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, the discussion on supplementary estimate No. 636 has been lengthy, interesting and upon occasion somewhat heated. I have not risen to speak on this item until now, so I hope I will be allowed to say a few words about it. One of the reasons I felt I wanted to speak was the continuation of remarks such as those made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. In discussing these supplementary estimates we are not discussing the constitutional issues revolving around education. These have been settled by the British North America Act.

Mr. Flynn: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: Nobody has challenged the constitutionality—

Mr. Flynn: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: Yes, as soon as I sit down you can ask all the questions you like.

We are interested in one thing only, and that is vote No. 636. Unfortunately, for some reason or other the debate on this estimate has evolved into a series of charges and countercharges and the trading of abuse, to some extent based on statements which are politically expedient or used as camouflage. If they have to be said at all, then they should be said on the hustings and not in the House of Commons. Vote 636, Mr. Chairman, is very definite, and is to carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and the agreements made thereunder. The further amount required is $28,400,000.

The first basic principle we have to accept is this. It is necessary and constitutional that, a further amount being required under an act previously passed, the government has come to us for that additional money. This is being done today. It is also a basic fact that we are now faced with a fait accompli. This money is already owing to the provinces or the municipalities or has been committed. I say, therefore, that this is a fait accompli because if this parliament does not vote this money then, if my memory is correct, those who sign the contracts on behalf of the government can be held legally responsible to pay the money. Let us not have all this talk about voting for or against the estimate before us. Certainly we can all agree on that, so let us not have any more talk about how you are going to vote. If you have been in parliament for any length of time, you know what you have to do.

This additional sum of $28 million is required to carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. We must then consider the question of the planning which has been done in connection with this expenditure, and properly so, and particularly how the purposes of the act are being carried out.

I do not know of anyone in this house, and certainly I do not know of anyone in our group in this corner, who is opposed to the principle of technical and vocational training. We have been speaking on the need for it for years. We completely support the principle, and we are glad the federal government has actually taken the position of offering to pay 75 cents of every dollar expended for capital equipment, construction and so on for vocational training.

However, surely this is the time for questions to be asked as to the planning that has taken place between the federal and provincial governments to ensure 100 per cent efficient use of these buildings, and to ensure the fulfilment of the purpose for which the act was originally passed. I believe these are very simple questions and they were clearly put, despite all the sham battle that was put up in an attempt to overcome what was said by the hon. member for Peterborough. The questions are there. Because we want to see these expenditures lead to efficient results, because the federal government has now accepted responsibility for almost $200 million of capital expenditure for construction and equipment, we feel that the government can tell us they are not just offering this as a gift from Santa Claus but have done some planning in co-operation with the provinces so they can tell us we are not going to have thousands of empty classrooms and dozens of beautiful schools.

Surely this has been done in co-operation with the provinces who have knowledge as to their jurisdiction in connection with both teachers and curriculum. We are asking what the minister knows, because by the time we have passed this item we will have voted $200 million. I know the provinces recommend, but surely the federal government examines what the provinces recommend in so far as teachers and the training of the students is concerned. Now, this is a series of simple questions. Why it has got beyond that and has gone through a number of speeches I completely fail to understand.

I said I was only going to speak for two or three minutes, and that is all I shall say. Will the minister, recognizing the interest of a great many hon. members in the construction of vocational and technical schools and technological institutes, and their interest in knowing this capital expenditure is being made on such a basis of federal-provincial understanding, knowledge and planning, ensure that the students will receive the training which our advancing system of technology requires, and that the teachers will be ready and available when the schools are opened? To me the entire issue is as simple as that.

I hope we can have some comment from the minister and that he will take these questions in the spirit in which they are asked. We are asking only reasonable questions, not political ones, because irrespective of party differences and differences in political philosophy we all agree in regard to education that everything should be done for the future of our children and that every dollar should be spent on a basis of a dollar return for a dollar spent.

Mr. Starr: I am glad we have come to the basic things for which this vote stands. So far as the questions asked by a number of hon. members who have participated in the debate are concerned, I would point out there is provision under the technical assistance training act for federal government participation up to 50 per cent of the financial cost of training teachers for the courses that will be undertaken in the schools being built under this program. This is something which certainly had to be, because schools are not of any use unless you plan to have proper teachers manning them and also proper administrative staffs. There is also provision in the act for 50 per cent participation in the cost of training of administrative staffs.

The provinces have undertaken a program which will accommodate up to 850 teachers per year. Broken down, the figures are British Columbia 50, Alberta 50, Manitoba 50, Ontario 400, Quebec 100 and New Brunswick 200.

Mr. Winch: Are they teachers of a vocational and technical nature?

Mr. Starr: I want to give further information which I think will answer that question. The University of Alberta has established a division of vocational teacher training in its faculty of education and New Brunswick, Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and British Columbia have all greatly expanded their facilities to meet the anticipated needs for teachers.

Technical and vocational teachers in Ontario are required to be (a) qualified journeymen in whatever trade may be necessary, (b) qualified technicians, and (c) graduate engineers. Each must have completed high school matriculation and each must have five years' experience in industry or occupational life, and must have professional training. In Ontario, in particular, there is a requirement of one year of such training.

These are the criteria that have been established, adopted and undertaken by the provincial governments to bring about the proper qualifications, and teacher quotas have been set based on the number of teachers needed. The provinces are pressing on with the training of these teachers. In Ontario 300 are presently undergoing such training and another 300 will start training as soon as the first group have finished their course.

Several questions have been asked and certain criticism has been directed at this program. For instance, it has been said that the training classes now being carried on would not meet the training needs of the day by virtue of the fact that training was being given in obsolete trades. Perhaps the committee is not aware of the fact that there are trade advisory committees for almost every school in the country and every program, and in addition there is an advisory committee in each province, each committee having representatives from both labour and management. There are also provincial selection committees who are responsible for making recommendations with regard to the training needs of the provinces in relation to the unemployed and disabled and the apprenticeship trades. There is representation on these committees from the national employment service acting in an advisory capacity, as well as from employer and labour organizations in most cases.

It has been stated that there was no consultation with labour and industry with regard to this training program. However, I would like to emphasize that this consultation is constantly maintained by virtue of the fact that there is representation not only at the local level but also at the provincial and national levels. During the past year the Department of Labour has also retained the services of a consultant from industry to assure that our approach to industrial training is in line with the needs of industry in Canada. The department has also worked very closely with various committees in the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and other labour and management groups, in order to assist us in ensuring that training programs are in line with industrial needs. I am sure the hon. member for Vancouver East will be interested to know that this consultant has crossed Canada several times, consulting with employers and other groups.

In addition to this we have a research program dealing with the impact of technological changes on manpower, and this is specifically designed to ensure that the development of our training programs is in line with the change in technological needs of the Canadian economy. We have all this research. We know where we are going in this respect and we are trying, as we go along, to find out what the needs will be in the days ahead so that we can plan to meet them, along with the provinces.

An accusation has been made that schools are being built where there is no need for them. If any hon. member of this committee knows where a school is being built where there is no need for it I would wish he would give us that information; because we are advised through these various committees, the provincial departments of education and the school boards that these schools are needed. Each and every school board is pressing this need, and I am certain that pressure is based on actual need as shown by research and after consultation with labour and management in each area. Certainly it has never been brought to our attention that there is no need for any of these schools that are being built.

When we approached the provinces at the beginning of this program we asked them to estimate their needs during the next five years in regard to facilities for this type of training. We compiled the information that the provinces gave us and found there would be a need for a 50 per cent increase in the next five years. That is fine, and we hope we will be able to provide these facilities in two and a half years instead of five years. That is all to the good, and is good planning.

We are told that technological changes in industry will be brought about at a more rapid rate. We realize by what was said by President Kennedy not too long ago that the United States expects technological displacement of the labour force from industry at the rate of 25,000 a week. The United States labour force is ten times as large as ours. If that is going to happen there, we can expect displacement at the rate of 2,500 a week as a result of these changes. If you are going to set up a family life you build yourself a house, and I think it is good that we should be planning for the need with which we shall be faced in the years to come.

We are not forcing this program on the provinces. We are asking them to ascertain their needs, and they do that through advisory committees which are at the local level, the provincial level and even the national level. All these people are represented on such bodies, and their views are taken into consideration. I wish to point out also that the provinces are paying 25 per cent of the capital cost of these new schools. Surely they have the immediate responsibility for determining the location of these schools. The charges which have been made imply that the provinces have been wasting the taxpayers' funds in determining the location of these training centres by putting these schools in areas where they are not needed.

I pointed out earlier that the teacher training program is an integral part of our technical and vocational training agreement with each and every province, and that the provinces are rapidly expanding their facilities and courses for teacher training to the extent of 850 teachers per year. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam made reference to classes for painters at Burnaby. He thought they were ridiculous and a waste of the taxpayers' money. I should like to tell him that these courses are offered as a part of the apprenticeship program of the province following the recommendations of both industry and organized labour, through an apprenticeship advisory committee of which they are members. Surely if there was no need of this training that advice would not have been put forward by these people who are vitally interested in these matters.

With regard to the suggestion that displaced coal workers in the maritime provinces have not been provided with the skills which would enable them to take up other work, I would say that at the present time there are many classes in a variety of occupations which are required by the economy. I can say categorically that every miner who wishes to take up such training has an opportunity to do so.

It has been brought to our attention during this debate that many workers among those who are employed lack the elementary training to enable them to take courses which would give them the skills to enter upon new employment. Some speakers inquired whether any province had asked for financial assistance to enable this type of training to be provided. I am sure the members of this committee will be happy to learn that courses of this kind for unemployed workers are in operation in most of the provinces, and we participate financially to help the provinces to upgrade the standard of these people so they can take part in further training. I do not think we should dovetail the two aspects of the program. This is a building program to provide the facilities we shall need in the future.

There is also the training of the unemployed under schedule 5, which is an entirely different program. This is a program in which we participate to the extent of 75 per cent of the cost of the training and equipment with respect to training courses established by the provinces in areas where they are needed. I know that in the city of Oshawa, for example, advantage has been taken of this program. When the first class for the training of unemployed was undertaken, some 80 people took part, and the result as reflected in the placement of these people was excellent, well over 60 per cent. All those who completed their training were placed in useful employment. Consequently another course was undertaken, and it is in progress now. This is due to initiative on the part of the province, and we as a federal government can only offer them an incentive to undertake such a program. This we are doing, and we note that this program is gathering impetus and momentum. We are glad that this is happening.

I do not know whether there is anything I can add to what I have said. I hope I have answered the questions which were in the minds of those who took part in this discussion. I do want to assure the committee that we feel this is a worth while program, and that the schools are most necessary to deal with the situation with which we shall be faced in the future. In my own experience and down to earth thinking on this matter I have seen the following situation time and time again. Young people in grades 9 and 10 leave an academic school because they may have an opportunity of getting jobs in industry at that time. However, after a year or possibly two years they find themselves unemployed, and it hits them very hard at that time that they do not possess the skills required to get jobs. They are reluctant to re-enter the school system because their classmates are probably two or three classes ahead of them. These facilities which are now being provided will enable them to re-enter the school system in order to learn a trade and equip themselves so as to fit into useful life again.

Anyone can enter a technical school and take a training course. It is fine and dandy for people to say that the technical institute in Toronto is a marvellous institute. So it is; but how can a person from Belleville attend that school? It is almost as expensive as going to a university. A student has to pay room and board to live in Toronto while attending the school. The facilities now being set up will provide similar opportunities in localities which can easily be reached by those in the area, and will bring about more of this kind of training.

Mr. Carter: I should like to ask the minister two questions arising out of the remarks he has just made. We all want this program to be successful, but I think it is evident to everyone that it can only be successful if it is properly integrated into the educational systems of the different provinces. We know that the systems vary from one province to another. The system in my own province is different from that which exists anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Starr: That is why there should not be federal direction.

Mr. Carter: Yes. If the minister would let me continue, I should like to say that the degree of integration in connection with this program will vary from one province to another. Take, for example, the supply of teachers. In my own province we have no facilities whatever for training teachers for technical or vocational schools. We have to secure these teachers from outside the province, probably from the mainland, from England or other countries. When they are brought in they might have to be paid salaries that are out of line with what is paid to the ordinary teacher. That, too, is going to create problems for the province.

The first question I wish to ask the minister is this. Have the minister and the department satisfied themselves that the plan for integration of this program into the various school systems in Canada is satisfactory and meets the requirements?

The background of my second question is this. In my own province additional accommodation is going to be provided for 3,000 students. Taking an average of 20 students to a class, there will be a requirement for 150 teachers, which represents a significant training program in itself. In Ontario the student accommodation will be increased to make provision for 70,000 students, which means there will be required at least 3,500 additional trained teachers.

In his statement the minister told us that in Ontario there are facilities for the training of only 300 teachers at a time. He went on to say that the qualifications require at least a year's training. If I understood the minister correctly this means that Ontario can train approximately 300 teachers a year to match the facilities that are going to be provided. Unless the training can be speeded up, Ontario will require 10 years to provide the additional teachers needed to match the increased accommodation that is going to be provided by the end of this year.

One of the problems arising out of this whole business is the responsibility of the federal government because we put a limitation on the period during which the provinces could benefit from the legislation. All these facilities have to be provided and in being by the end of this year. The provinces cannot afford to pass this up. Of course many cannot afford to take advantage of this opportunity, either, and are caught between the upper and nether millstones. They must try to adapt their finances and plans to accommodate this extra program. Some have telescoped into one year a plan that would probably have been spread over four or five years.

I wish to put these two questions to the minister. Has the minister satisfied himself that the provinces are able to integrate this program into the different systems, and is the department satisfied with respect to the ability of the provinces to train and acquire the additional teachers who will be required to carry out the expanded program and teach the additional number of students?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, in reply to both questions I would say yes. Elaborating on the second point, I would say that the date of termination applies only to the federal participation of 75 per cent up to March 31, 1963, and then there is a continuation of participation of up to 50 per cent after that date. The federal contribution of up to 50 per cent of the cost of training teachers carries on for as long as the legislation is on the books.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, it would be ungracious of me not to accept the kind invitation which the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) extended to me a short while ago. He asked what is my stand on the estimate now before us. In other words, he asked me to do what he himself did not do in the course of his remarks.

My stand on joint plans is very clear: it is the same as that of the leader of the Liberal party.

I should have liked to hear other Conservative members from the province of Quebec, the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer), the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), and especially the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson).

[Mr. Carter.]

The hon. member for Roberval has quoted an excerpt from Mr. Lamontagne's book on joint plans. I hope he understood perfectly that Mr. Lamontagne in that paragraph refers to depression and recession times. I think there is an important difference of meaning there. Perhaps the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) should read this paragraph. In my opinion the difference is important.

Mr. Flynn: I have read the whole book.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): That was the first comment I wanted to make. The second deals with the joint plans policy we adopted in 1961 and which is supported by Mr. Lamontagne.

This is one of the basic differences between the Conservative and the Liberal parties. We are not prisoners of the past and of outmoded formulas. The very name of our party indicates that we keep our eyes open, that we are looking forward and that we are trying to adjust ourselves to the present and to the future. This is one of the basic differences between the two parties.

The item discussed today is not the result of a new policy, because ever since 1951, the federal government has contributed financially to the construction of technical schools in this country. In fact if we go back a little, we from Quebec know that it was a few years before the previous government would accept that participation of the federal government and that, even when it had been accepted, some people kept on talking against those federal grants for the construction of technical schools.

Mr. Flynn: Are you talking about the Bilodeau-Rogers plan?

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I did not hear the hon. minister's question.

Mr. Flynn: Is the hon. member talking about the Bilodeau-Rogers plan?

Mr. Brassard: I am talking about the plan adopted in 1951, under which financial assistance was provided for the construction of technical schools.

Besides, such attitude is not new. The same thing happened in Quebec with the Colombo plan, the university grants and the trans-Canada highway. Yet, the Conservative members from Quebec came here and supported wholeheartedly an increase of the appropriations in that field, but they did not go back to the scarecrows they had spread about in the province of Quebec for some years.

Mr. Deschatelets: Shame.

Mr. Dupuis: Nonsense.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, in his long-winded speech, the hon. member for Roberval has misrepresented the statement made by the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) concerning joint programs.

If I understood him well, he stated that the hon. member for Levis had favoured doing away with the system of joint programs. Now, what my hon. friend from Levis said —the hon. member for Roberval knows French well enough to have understood—was that the next Liberal government would allow any province that wishes to do so to withdraw from joint programs without losing any advantage in the process.

Mr. Chairman, before I resume my seat, I should like to point out to the hon. member for Roberval and to all his colleagues from Quebec, who have expressed their views most vaguely, that we still do not know where they stand. Do they take the stand of the leader of Quebec's Union Nationale party or that of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker)?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I would not take any notice of what the hon. member for Lapointe has just said, but since he suggested that I had not expressed my opinion on the matter we are now discussing, I am compelled to put the record straight. The statement he made is false. I did say this: that there was no need to come to a decision at this stage, since we have already expressed our views on this matter. In so doing, I endorsed the statements made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn).

On the other hand, I put a very precise question to the hon. members of the opposition. I asked them to what extent they were repudiating the past stand of their party on joint schemes—

Mr. Deschatelets: He just told you.

Mr. Tremblay: —and according to what principle they were repudiating their past and exactly how they can reconcile their present stand with the one they adopted in the past when they were themselves the sponsors of those joint schemes.

I wish to put once more on record this statement of the hon. member for Laurier, formerly from another province—

An hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Tremblay: —which I quote from the Nouveau Journal of October 17, 1961:

> Hon. Lionel Chevrier stated last night that the Liberals in Ottawa were in favour of the progressive abolition, as requested by Mr. Lesage, of the joint federal-provincial programs such as old age assistance and disability pensions.

I am quoting that statement merely in order to address again to the members opposite the question which I asked them, and I would add this. As far as joint programs are concerned, do we find, as is the case for the "patronage" of their friend Mr. Lesage, some programs which are good and some which are bad? What are their principles and how can these gentlemen repudiate their past? I ask them to explain that to us.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not have risen to take any part in this discussion at all, Mr. Chairman, had it not been for the very important declaration of principle which, if I understood him correctly, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys made on behalf of the government today. I wish to be sure that I understand him correctly. I therefore wish to repeat what I understood him to say and to underline it so that we shall know where the government stands.

Last evening my hon. friend for Levis set out the position of the Liberal party with respect to the joint programs, and he challenged a member of the government to set out the position of the Conservative party and the position of the government which has the responsibility. After all, as long as we are in opposition all we can do is put forward a program which we will carry out when we come back into office. However, hon. gentlemen have the responsibility for carrying out these programs right now.

Today I understood the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to say something that has never been said before, to my knowledge, by any member of this administration. I understood the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to say that it was the policy of the government that if any provincial government approached them and indicated it did not wish to participate in one of these programs, they would consider giving that government compensation. If he did not say that, I wish he would tell me what he did say and I will allow him to interrupt me right now.

Mr. Flynn: When the hon. member reads Hansard I think he will find that is not what I said. I said that whenever a province objected to a joint program because it felt that it violated its autonomy or was beyond its legal capacity, we have shown in the past in connection with the university grants that we were prepared to adjust or to adopt a form of compensation. This is the attitude that I think this government has taken, and this is the interpretation that should be given to the attitude of this government, not that contained in wide, sweeping statements like the ones made by the hon. member for Levis, which mean nothing and which it is impossible to carry out.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys means anything by his words—and it almost appears that he does not mean anything—he has said exactly what I said.

Mr. Flynn: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: If he has not said it, of course, it is an example of the usual case with this government. They express themselves so badly that no one can understand what they say, just as was the case with the Minister of Finance who gave notice that certain people were not being paid and then when we inquired into the matter we found they were being paid.

Mr. Flynn: I will leave the hon. member with the last word.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is not going to get off with that statement. I am glad the minister wants to leave me with the last word. However, I would rather leave him with the last word, as the people of this country are entitled to know where the government stand.

The Chairman: Order. I think I shall have the last word and call it one o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the meantime I shall be able to get the minister's words.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your Honour will recall that when we adjourned for lunch I was trying to reconstruct in my mind and with the assistance of the minister, which assistance I will still welcome, precisely what was said about the rather obscure attitude of the present government with respect to these shared programs. About the only way in which I think I can do this is to do so by way of catechism, which the minister will understand, and see if I arrive at a correct interpretation; because I assure you, sir, that the last thing I want to do is to do any injustice to the minister who is zealous, young and inexperienced and who, unlike his colleagues in the government from the province of Quebec, actually seems to want to debate the issues before us, which is a refreshing change. I say that in all sincerity, sir, and without wishing to injure the minister by complimenting him.

I reflected during lunch time about something that had temporarily escaped me when I first spoke in the minute or two before lunch, and it seemed to me that I recollected that the minister had said that there were three kinds of joint programs. If I am wrong in anything I say I should like the minister to correct me because I am merely trying to get the basic facts straight. I think the minister said that there were certain kinds of joint programs that were within federal jurisdiction. I know we cannot debate that point now. I would love to debate it with the minister and I should like to ask him to name one, because I have had long experience in dealing with provincial governments in one capacity or another, as a bureaucrat and then as a politician, and I have never seen a provincial government yet that was ever willing to spend one plugged nickel on anything that was within federal jurisdiction. If there is any such joint program that is within federal jurisdiction, it has certainly escaped my eye. However, I think the minister said there were such programs and perhaps on some other occasion we can debate them. In any event, I think no one would suggest that the provinces should get compensation for the abandonment of any program that is exclusively within federal jurisdiction. That would be ridiculous.

I thought the minister then said that there were some programs that were really joint. They could only be in agriculture, in immigration or in old age pensions because under the British North America Act those are the only three fields in which parliament and the legislatures have concurrent jurisdiction. There are a few projects in the field of agriculture I know about, such as maritime marshland development and things of that sort, that presumably come under the legislative jurisdiction over agriculture, which this parliament shares with the provincial legislatures.

I have never known a province to show much enthusiasm with regard to doing very much about immigration, except to criticize it. Perhaps that statement is a little bit unfair. There was a period at the time of the refugee program when some of the provincial governments were very generous indeed: I do not want to make any unfair reflection on them. But that is a very restricted field and not the field about which I think we were talking.

With regard to the third type of program I want to be very careful to choose the right words and as far as possible words that lend themselves to easy translation from one official language to the other. I have reference to those programs that deal with fields of jurisdiction within the legislative competence of the provinces, and that is all that the hon. member for Levis, the hon. member for Lapointe and I have been talking about. Those are the only fields to which the program of the Liberal party has any reference, only those things that are exclusively within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Flynn: I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. Pickersgill: From the date it was inaugurated the trans-Canada highway was recognized to be competely within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Flynn: That is not what your friend said.

Mr. Pickersgill: The federal government undertook to assist financially, and that is all that we have ever done. Nobody has ever pretended that the highway itself would be owned by Canada. The highway is owned by the provinces. But the friends of the friends of the minister—I have to be very careful about this—

Mr. Flynn: When you go as far as that I think we both have the same friends.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no; I was referring to the Union Nationale, if I may put it plainly.

Mr. Flynn: The friend of the friend was Mr. Smallwood.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am using the word "friend" in the correct parliamentary sense of political friends, and I have never made any pretensions of being a political friend of anyone connected with the Union Nationale. One hon. gentleman over there objected. He considered it an insult for me to refer to them as his friends, but I take it that the minister does not. At any rate, it is a well known fact that Mr. Duplessis objected very strenuously to the trans-Canada highway and to a great many other joint programs as invasions of provincial rights. It is also well known to some of us who were here before the minister came to this parliament that the hon. member for Three Rivers also objected violently to these programs and voted against them in this house on many occasions. I noticed that the minister was very skilful and clever in his reply in talking about the election in 1958. In the election of 1958 the Conservatives were rather muted about this, but if it were not out of order we could easily document the main line taken in the election of 1957 and taken for a while afterwards by the hon. member for Three Rivers who is the leading spokesman for the Conservative party in Quebec in this house. That line was that these joint programs were an invasion of the provincial field.

It is very interesting to observe what is said in a little booklet called "Four Years of Action for Canada and Canadians" published by the Tory party. I do not know whether they published a French translation—

Mr. Flynn: They did.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but if they did it shows even greater effrontery because whereas they formerly said that these joint programs were an invasion of provincial rights they are now boasting that they have more than doubled them in four years. So if the Liberals were invading the provincial field—

Mr. Flynn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has been going very far indeed. As I said before to the hon. member for Levis, I do not mind discussing everything that the hon. member is now raising. However, he is going very far and I think he should restrict himself to the point with which he started.

Mr. Chevrier: He is answering you.

Mr. Flynn: I am willing to clarify any obscurity the hon. member may find in what I said. However, if he continues as he has been, I submit the debate will never end. We will not only be discussing joint programs, but the estimates of every other department. In this regard, I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I am discussing exclusively the point made by the minister. I am seeking to find out what the policy of the government is in respect of these joint programs. I had to eliminate all these things the minister created by devising three kinds of joint programs. One kind does not exist at all; the other kind has a very limited application, and we are discussing the only one that has real application.

I am sure the minister would not dare claim that the federal government could go into any province in this country and establish technical schools because that would be a clear invasion of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Flynn: I did not say that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not saying that the minister said that.

Mr. Flynn: You are clouding the issue.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman did more to cloud the issue than anyone else, but his cloudiness was moderate compared with the cloudiness of the hon. member for Roberval and not one member on this side sought to raise a point of order or to restrict the debate. It is only when an opposition member tries to speak that we have these constant points of order—

An hon. Member: Not at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and particularly by the retired chairman, who should make his retirement complete.

Mr. Flynn: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member know what closure in reverse might be? That is about what the hon. member has been doing.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member has asked me a question which is quite in order, and if the Chair would permit I should like to speak for about 40 minutes on closure. I would have a great deal to say. I know the Chair would not allow it, and I am not suggesting it. I say that the minister should realize he has retired from the chair now and is a minister of the crown. He has a very heavy responsibility of his own, so he should leave to the Chair the responsibilities of the Chair and we would make more progress.

I realize that the minister, who is not a stupid man—I concede that at once—is trying his best to get me off the point. I want to stay on the point because I want to find out, if I can, whether or not the minister was expressing the policy of the government this morning. Every time I attempt to define it, the minister says it is not that and then he gets up and says the same thing in exactly the same words. I should like to know if I have this correctly. As I understand it, the minister said—I am referring to the notes I made when he spoke before lunch—it is only when a provincial government feels the federal law affects its exclusive jurisdiction, and I am not sure I got his exact words, that the federal government would consider a formula for compensation. Is that it? Then, I suppose this is the policy of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister as well as the other members of the cabinet.

We had, under our constitution, until the present government came into office, the doctrine of collective responsibility. When a minister of the crown speaks in his place in the house, he is speaking for the government, so we are entitled to assume that is now the position of the Diefenbaker government. I use that term advisedly because the old terms are not in much favour any more with this government. In other words, sir, and I think even the minister will find it hard to declare this question irrelevant, that means that if Mr. Lesage comes to Ottawa and says, we feel that this federal law we are now discussing affects the exclusive jurisdiction of the province, the federal government is then ready to discuss compensation to the government of Quebec in substitution for this program. This is the plain meaning of what the minister has said, and the only meaning which can be attributed to it. I may say that was the precise position that was taken by Mr. Lesage in July, 1960, at the federal-provincial conference and was the precise position taken by the Liberal party at its national rally in January, 1961.

It is interesting to discover this degree of progress being made in the government since the minister joined it. Usually it takes about a generation for the Tory party to accept the position taken by the Liberal party, but it has only taken a little over a year this time. A year ago in January the Liberal party laid down this policy of compensation in the case of a province which wished to withdraw from a joint program. Today, on March 16, and this should be a red letter day, through the mouth of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys the Diefenbaker government has accepted that Liberal program as enunciated in January, 1961.

Now, that is the point, sir, and you will appreciate that it would have been very unfair to the government to leave this matter in any doubt. It was for this reason I sought to carry the minister along on each point and make sure he did not disagree with anything I said. I say this marks a great advance on the part of the government and I congratulate the minister for having moved his colleagues so far so fast. I just wonder if the Minister of Finance will not be in here before the day is out or on Monday at least, to repudiate what the minister has said.

(Translation):

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I will not speak very long because I know that my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate would like to have the last word, but it is obvious that I cannot leave his question unanswered in the official report.

He interpreted what I said rather well. I said that we had established, under the terms of the legislation concerning grants to universities, the principle of compensation in case a province should consider that a law enacted or a decision taken by the federal parliament violated its legislative jurisdiction. My learned friend can draw the conclusions he will from my remarks, but they stand.

Second, I will explain my thoughts to him a little more clearly by saying that our position is to allow the provinces to initiative all the programs that fall within their jurisdiction.

That is why we thought it was essential, first of all, to hand back to the provinces the fiscal capacity, and especially the fiscal responsibility which would allow them to get rid of the obligation to fulfil duties imposed upon them by the constitution. That was all I said.

Of course, the hon. member could lead me into other fields, and I shall gladly meet his challenge in those fields, when I have the time and when my taking the floor here is not too demanding on the house's time.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: There is just one word I should like to say in reply to the diversion created by the minister. I am not going back to my other point. The minister, who was so anxious to observe the rules a while ago, is now talking about the fiscal agreements. The minister knows, or ought to know, that so far as Quebec is concerned no change has been made whatever by this government in the juridical position. Quebec never had a tax agreement. Its taxing rights were never in any way limited, so this government has made no change in that respect whatever. All the words the Tory ministers and members may use will not alter the plain facts which are known to every objective person.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys? Is it not true that this morning—

An hon. Member: Go and consult your charter of Mr. Martineau.

Mr. Denis: Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that this morning, the Minister of Labour stated that out of the amount provided for under this item, a certain amount was earmarked for the training of technical and vocational school teachers? Therefore, that concerns education and since the minister states that education comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces, is it not true that the minister is now approving what he rejected in the good old days of the Union Nationale?

An hon. Member: Do not bother to answer that, it is not worth it.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, this refers to the training of technical school teachers, which comes under the province and is accepted by the government which is sympathetic to my hon. friend.

Mr. Denis: Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, as regards another joint program, unemployment insurance, that the minister is approving today what he was opposed when the Union Nationale party was in power?

Is it not true that, together with the Union Nationale and its supporters, he denied workers unemployment assistance, a fact which our Conservative friends today refuse to admit?

Mr. Bourget: I should like you to call the yeas and nays on the item now before us.

(Text):

Item agreed to: Yeas, 63; nays, nil.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. On two occasions, that is before lunch and again a while ago, the hon. member for Roberval said that the hon. member for Dollard should pay his debts in L'Abord à Plouffe. There is absolutely no truth in that statement and I publicly declare, in this house, that I have no debt whatever. I feel the hon. member should accept my word. Furthermore, insinuations such as these are not allowed in this assembly.

Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the question of privilege I have just raised, I ask the hon. member for Roberval to withdraw his words.

Mr. Dupuis: Certainly.

Mr. Rouleau: The insinuations made by the hon. member for Roberval reflect on a member of this house. I declare that I have no debts and I ask him to take back his words.

The Chairman: On the question of privilege, I suggest that the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) should have raised it when the statement was made.

Moreover, I am not sure whether the words that the hon. member takes exception to are on the record, but in any case, I think that the subject should be closed.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I appeal from your decision.

Mr. Caron: Report to the Speaker, that is the only procedure to follow.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Dollard, I do not believe that the decision of the committee chairman could be appealed unless a formal motion is introduced. I feel that the hon. member for Dollard will agree with this point of view.

(Text):

Mr. Bourget: Ask him to withdraw. It is simple. If he is a gentleman he will.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order raised by the hon. member, I think perhaps Your Honour did not appreciate that the remark to which my hon. friend took exception was made while the vote was being taken and it would be against the rules for the hon.

member—indeed it would be impossible for him to rise while the vote was being counted. He rose immediately afterwards and perhaps Your Honour did not observe that.

The Chairman: I did not hear the remarks alleged to have been made and I was under the impression these were remarks made in this morning's session.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, no.

The Chairman: As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has informed the house that the remarks have just been made, and as the hon. member for Roberval is here, I would like to hear the hon. member on that point. The hon. member for Roberval.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, could you tell me exactly what you expect of me?

The Chairman: The hon. member has no doubt heard the hon. member for Dollard rise on a question of privilege to say that the member for Roberval had made personal remarks. I would ask the hon. member for Roberval to explain in that connection.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I should really not want the people concerned to be deprived of the benefits they will derive from this excellent measure introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). Consequently, so as not to delay the proceedings of the house, I will just say that the hon. member who has risen on a question of privilege is most sensitive indeed and that he seems to be overimpressed by facts. However, if there was something offending for the hon. member during the verbal exchange which you did not hear, I am willing to withdraw what I said. Of course, that changes nothing in the situation.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I ask the hon. member for Roberval to withdraw his words without reservation. I have been in the house for the last nine years, and never, until now, have I heard a member speak thus of one of his colleagues, on whatever side of the house he was on. I would ask you, sir, to invite the hon. member for Roberval to withdraw his words without reservation, because the statement he made about me is completely false.

The Chairman: If I rightly understood, the hon. member for Roberval stated that if his words were of an offensive nature, he was withdrawing them.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Roberval said that this would in no way alter the situation, and I do not think that this is the right way to withdraw one's remarks.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, in order to close this discussion, I want to say that I make no reservation with regard to facts.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment insurance commission—

669. To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit to the unemployment insurance fund in the fiscal year 1962-63 sums not exceeding in the aggregate $25,000,000 on such terms and conditions as the governor in council determines, $25,000,000.

The Chairman: Shall vote 669 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir. Surely the minister is going to make a statement.

Mr. Starr: This item of $25,000,000 represents a loan to the unemployment insurance fund which will be taken up only in case of necessity between the end of May, when payments are at the accumulated peak, and the beginning of June when contributions once again begin to overtake payments. The officials of the unemployment insurance commission inform me that if economic conditions continue as they have for the past three months the fund will carry us over the critical period of the month of May.

However, this would not provide a safety margin in the event, for example, of heavy layoffs in some part of the country or, to take another example, the possibility of some regional unemployment arising from the effects of a labour dispute. Neither of these possibilities is envisaged at the present time. Nevertheless the officials feel it is wise to provide for such contingencies in order that no possibility may arise of a delay in payment of benefits for those who are entitled to have them.

At the end of January the balance in the fund was $135,877,305. The outgo from the fund for the payment of benefits is at the present time 17 per cent less than last year—another indication of the general economic improvement. The amount requested here in the form of a loan is, therefore, more in the nature of a safety measure to carry us over a critical period. If the money is not required, it will not be touched.

Mr. McMillan: I do not think the minister told us what is the actual condition of the fund at the present time. He said the outgo from the fund was 17 per cent less than last year but he did not say by how much it exceeded income.

For a considerable time the advisory committee of the unemployment insurance fund has been making reports to the government. Ever since 1959 the government could not help but be aware that this fund was being rapidly depleted and would soon become bankrupt. We constantly drew this situation to the attention of the government at the time, and the government promised to do something about it in the speech from the throne of November 1960. But they ended by doing nothing at all, and now they have to call on the treasury to put money into the fund and help to carry on. Perhaps I should not have said that the government has done nothing, because last year I remember there was an announcement that 44 sleuths, or detectives, had been appointed to watch this fund, particularly in Toronto and Montreal. Also, I heard the Prime Minister say on television that anyone who cheated this fund would either be put into jail or fined. That is the only contribution the government has made in respect of this fund since we heard the speech from the throne in November 1960. I think the minister should tell us how many prosecutions have occurred under the act. He should tell us, also, how many people have been put into jail as was threatened by the Prime Minister. He should tell us how much money has been recovered and how much it has cost to hire these 44 detectives.

I have read various reports of the advisory committee to the unemployment insurance fund. The one I have here is dated July 6, 1961 and it shows that in the fiscal year 1960-1961 the fund again experienced substantial losses. In the preceding fiscal year a total of $181 million was paid out; in other words, benefits had exceeded income by $181 million. At that time, as of June 30, there was only $184.6 million in the fund. Payments out of the fund had been exceeded only in the year 1958-59. Now we have had five years of heavy unemployment, and in each of those years the level of unemployment exceeded that which existed before 1957. In each year there has been a constant drain on this fund.

One indication of the level of employment and economic activity is the percentage of labour out of work and looking for work. The percentages are given here in table 1 of the report of the advisory committee of July 6, 1961. In January 1956, the percentage of unemployed stood at 5.6 of the labour force. It is important to notice that in the same year, or in four months of that year, unemployment fell to 1.7 per cent of the labour force. When we come to January, and to March of 1961, we see that unemployment has risen from 10.8 per cent to 11.3 per cent of the labour force. During 1960 it never once fell below 5 per cent of the labour force, and in the summer months of 1961 unemployment was still high. I think it is significant to note, as reported in some of these reports from the advisory committee, that in the last five years the civilian labour force has increased by 15 per cent while the increase in employment has only been at the rate of 8 per cent. When we bring up the question of unemployment in the house, the minister talks about the increase in the number of people who have found work. I would point out that this meagre increase is not even enough to look after the new people coming into the labour force; it only looks after about half of them. It does not look after any of the people who are referred to as being the hard core of unemployment.

An hon. Member: What did you do about it?

Mr. McMillan: We did not have them.

Many of these people are now receiving welfare payments. Moreover, we are exporting some of our unemployment. We know that in the last year more people have left Canada than have come to Canada. Among those leaving Canada are some highly trained professional people. The present bankrupt condition of the unemployment insurance fund indicates two things, first, that the government has not come to grips to any extent with this problem of unemployment. The depletion of the fund was highest in 1959 when it was $244 million. In 1960 it was down to $133 million, and then it began to climb again. Last year, as I have said, it amounted to $181 million. The other point which is evident is that the losses taken through bad investments in Canadian government bonds and other Canadian securities exceed the amount of this loan of $25 million. If the government had not had these investment losses it would not be calling for this vote of $25 million.

The Minister of Finance announced in the house last year, I believe, that he was taking over these securities into the Department of Finance. It is up to the minister now to tell us whether these securities were taken over at par or at their face value. We have a right to know whether the losses will be taken by the unemployment insurance fund or by the treasury. From the report of the advisory committee we know there will be definite losses. These losses according to the report, will vary from 8 per cent to 9 per cent from their face value because of the depressed value of these securities.

If the Minister of Finance continues to hold these bonds he cannot get more than an average of 3½ per cent for them and the minister cannot borrow money that cheaply. There will be a loss even if he holds them.

Many people who have exhausted these benefits have gone on direct welfare payments. The municipalities and provinces have had to assume further burdens as their share of these welfare payments. Not long ago I saw a newspaper article which indicated that the number of people in Ontario who were on welfare increased by between 14 and 19 per cent. I notice that the hon. member for Stormont is not here. He is always coming to the rescue of the Minister of Labour when we are talking about people being unemployed. It was indicated that in Cornwall the increase in the number of those on welfare was higher than in any other place in Ontario.

Mr. Pugh: Caused by the building of the seaway.

Mr. Chevrier: A lot you know about it.

Mr. McMillan: I do not know whether that is right but that appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail.

Mr. Chevrier: That is completely false.

Mr. Pickersgill: At least the seaway was built, unlike the Columbia.

Mr. McMillan: That was reported in the Globe and Mail two weeks ago. I do not know whether it is correct.

Mr. Pallett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member made reference to the fact that the hon. member for Stormont was not in the chamber. I appreciate that the hon. gentleman may not have seen the hon. member for Stormont sitting in his seat but perhaps he should correct that statement now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the hon. member for Stormont is capable of speaking for himself. If he is not, it is the first time.

An hon. Member: He just came in.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Stormont has been in his seat all the time. He has been conferring with a colleague. Open your eyes.

Mr. McMillan: What was that?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member said he has been in the house all the time but you just did not notice him.

Mr. McMillan: I am sorry. The hon. member was not in his seat when I looked a few moments ago.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): That is better.

Mr. McMillan: May I say I am sorry there are so many more people on welfare in Cornwall than in other parts of Ontario.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask the hon. member a question? I think if he were to ask his colleague and my predecessor he could tell him the reason for the number of unemployed people in Cornwall. It is due to the fact that the locks have been removed from a canal which for 120 years flowed by our door. There is just a blank wall now.

[Mr. McMillan.]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on the point my hon. friend has raised I feel I would be entitled to say that what the hon. member has stated is not only untrue but is inaccurate and wholly unfounded. As he well knows, or should know, the reason for the large unemployment figures is because this government has shown no interest in the unemployment problem—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): What about the harbour?

The Chairman: Order. We are now getting into a matter of debate. The floor belongs to the hon. member for Welland. I would ask him to continue.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member is allowed to make the statement he made by way of interrupting the hon. gentleman who was already speaking, surely I am entitled to give in reply the reason for the unemployment figures being so high in Cornwall—

The Chairman: Order. Here is the situation. The hon. member for Stormont asked leave to direct a question to the hon. member who has the floor. That hon. gentleman has not yet replied nor has the hon. member who has the floor continued in the course of his remarks. If the hon. member for Stormont or the hon. member for Laurier have remarks to make they may make them in due course but their remarks are in the nature of a debate and at the moment I cannot entertain them. I can listen only to the hon. member for Welland who has the floor.

Mr. Caron: On that point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Stormont in putting his question to the hon. gentleman who has the floor spoke about the former member for Stormont, and the present member for Laurier is a former member for Stormont.

The Chairman: Order. I said and I repeat that in my judgment this is a matter for debate. Every hon. member who feels implicated by any remarks made, and provided they are pertinent to the debate, will have ample opportunity to make his position clear. The floor belongs to the hon. member for Welland.

Mr. Caron: These interruptions and remarks should be stopped by the Chair.

The Chairman: That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. Caron: But with success only on one side.

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member for Hull would not wish to leave that remark on the record.

(Translation):

The Chairman: The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) has just accused the chairman of being partial. I am sure he made that remark in the heat of the discussion. Therefore, I shall give him the opportunity of changing the words he used.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, we have noticed that you often look on this side and seldom on the other side when interruptions are made. That is why I made that remark.

The Chairman: I insist that the hon. member unconditionally withdraw the words he just used.

Mr. Caron: The chairman is more strict for the members on this side of the house than he was for the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay).

The Chairman: I ask the hon. member for Hull to comply with the instruction that I am giving him with all due consideration. I am sure he agrees with me that no one should make such remarks to the chairman of this committee. I hope that he will take the opportunity I am offering him to withdraw unconditionally the remarks he has just made.

[Editor's note: The hon. member for Hull having given no reply.]

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member refuses to withdraw his remarks?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, it is most difficult for me to withdraw remarks which are known to be true.

The Chairman: Then, I must report to the Speaker.

Mr. Caron: Some remarks have been made from the other side of the house which should also be withdrawn.

The Chairman: I expect hon. members will refrain from further remarks until the arrival of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Flynn: Dirty fellow.

Mr. Caron: The minister has just made an ungracious remark about me and I would ask him to withdraw.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to have the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) withdraw the expression "dirty fellow" he just used concerning the member for Hull.

The Chairman: For the time being, this committee stands adjourned and it is not in order to continue this debate.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: He will not make the other side withdraw.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

While the committee of supply was considering the estimates of the Department of Labour the hon. member for Hull accused the Chair of displaying partiality in his ruling. He was invited to withdraw these remarks but persisted in his refusal to do so. I am therefore making the present report to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the report of the chairman of the committee which involves the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron). In consequence of the report it is my duty to call upon the hon. member for Hull to make such explanations as he wishes to make to the house and then to withdraw so that the house can deal with the matter.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept the consequences of my words, hoping that my action will ameliorate the situation in the committee of the house when we are sitting.

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the hon. member for Hull should withdraw while the house considers what action should be taken.

And Mr. Caron having withdrawn:

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question at this stage. Were the words of the hon. member for Hull fully reported in Hansard? Is the record clear so that we know exactly what was said?

Mr. Speaker: I can only consult with the chairman of the committee, or perhaps hon. members who sat in the committee would know. There was no interruption, I take it, in the reporting of the proceedings.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would have thought, sir, that it was not competent to the house to inquire what went on in the committee beyond the report that was made to the house by the chairman.

Mr. Churchill: That being the case, under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I have no other course than to move, seconded by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn):

That the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) be suspended from the house for the remainder of this day's sitting.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I desire to say something on this motion, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is not debatable. I must inform the hon. member for Laurier that this is not a debatable motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chevrier: No, no. We are against it.

An hon. Member: It is about time you woke up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Then I shall put the motion.

Mr. Chevrier: This is a shame.

[Mr. Speaker.]

And the house having resumed in committee:

Mr. McMillan: I am sorry to have had my remarks interrupted in the way in which they were. I did not mean to refer to Cornwall more than any other place that had a lot of unemployment and welfare because of the policies of this government. I know the hon. member for Stormont is very industrious and I believe his work here in this house should be directed towards overcoming that condition in his constituency, as we have been trying to do all along because of what we think has been the futility of the government's policy in overcoming unemployment.

Today we are asked to vote $25 million, and we are asked to vote it for two basic reasons. One is that for a long time the government did not admit that unemployment was a problem at all and, when they did, they did little or nothing to come to grips with it. The second reason is because of investment losses in the unemployment insurance fund.

The fiscal policies of the government could not be much better devised to cause high interest rates, stagnation in our economy, and unemployment. They could not be much better devised also to cause losses on securities held in that fund. They certainly depressed the value of bonds and other securities in the portfolio of the fund. Now the government try to evade responsibility for unemployment and for the investment losses in that fund, but they must take responsibility for both.

The unemployment insurance fund was built up to $928 million under the former government but this government have depleted practically all of it. The mere presence of the fund and the fact that this government could fall back on it to cushion the effect of unemployment has caused the government to take a laissez faire attitude towards many problems. In fact the government have just coasted along, depending on that money. I hate to think what would have happened if this fund had not been in existence. Undoubtedly the public would have been very vocal and the government would have long since started to snap out of their present lethargy.

The government have not been frank with hon. members regarding the unemployment insurance fund and I do not think the minister was frank today. He did not give us many figures at all. The advisory committee of the fund brought in a special report on October 27, 1960. The government kept that report for six weeks and then tabled it in the dying hours of the last day before we adjourned at Christmas time, in December, 1960.

The speech from the throne in November, 1960, indicated that the government would bring in some amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, and on various occasions in 1959, 1960 and 1961, we in the opposition warned the government about the serious situation in the unemployment insurance fund. We knew the losses they were taking because of bad investments and we also knew, and brought it to the attention of the government, that they were paying out much more than they were taking in. The government, however, did not have any ideas of their own to incorporate into amendments to restore the fund to a healthy state.

What have they done? They have appointed a royal commission to take the heat off, and they did just the same thing in connection with their fiscal and monetary policy when they appointed a royal commission. The composition of these two commissions, no matter how distinguished they may be, can only come up with one answer, one finding, and that is that you cannot spend more than you take in, unless you go broke. This is a basic truth which we have been bringing to the attention of the government ever since they came to power. Now they have two expensive royal commissions to tell them that truth.

The trouble with both royal commissions is that they are about three or four years too late. The funds have disappeared and they are called on to act as caretakers or advisers for bankrupt funds. The appointment of the royal commission in connection with this fund as well as other funds has just put off the day of reckoning, the day when the government have to account to the people for funds now bankrupt that were formerly healthy.

The Liberal government set up the unemployment insurance fund and saw it grow to a total of $928 million. To do that they did not have to appoint a royal commission, but this government want a royal commission to help them get back on the right track. However the government must look deeper than this fund. They must put people back to work and keep them at work.

There has been gross mismanagement of the fund. I know working people who have been paying into the fund ever since it came into existence nearly 20 years ago. They helped to build up the fund. Now they have to help replenish it through their taxes, and later they will have to pay higher contributions to put the fund in a healthy state again and make it solvent. I say the working people of Canada have been taken for a ride and I hope this $25 million will not be used in the coming election to help buy the electorate.

I know that before the last federal election it was much easier to qualify for benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act than it was afterwards, and I brought that up in the house. I also said in this chamber that I have heard of some people who were notified by one unemployment insurance office to go and get their cheques after they had been on a pension for some time. I take exception to this mismanagement of the fund. I do not think there should be any relaxation of the rules before an election. But, certainly it was much easier before the last election. Many people do say that it was much easier to qualify before the last election on March 28, 1958, than it was afterwards.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not know that the unemployment in Cornwall has been caused by difficulties in the textile industry, and that the efforts of this government to relieve that industry have been frustrated by the Liberal Senate? Does he not know that the other cause of unemployment is the fact that the seaway locks were constructed on the United States side of the river?

Mr. Pickersgill: Who has been in office for the last five years?

An hon. Member: No one.

Mr. Pickersgill: No one, as my hon. friend from Trinity says.

Mr. McMillan: I have heard of some of the actions taken by this government to help unemployment but I do not think they will help Cornwall or any other place in Canada. I do not know what has caused the present conditions in Cornwall, but the hon. member seems very active and I think he should get up in the house once in a while to try and influence his government in connection with unemployment. I have not heard him do that yet.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Does the hon. member not approve of the spending of more than $500,000 on a harbour in Cornwall to provide jobs, in replacement of those lost to the Americans? Does he not approve of the spending of more than $1.5 million on technical schools in Cornwall? Does he not regard that as desirable?

Mr. McMillan: I do not want to get into a debate with the hon. member from Stormont. I do not know how much has been spent on the harbour in Cornwall. But if you spend money on harbours you must also get the plants to locate there. I do not know whether they expect any new plants there or not. I do not know whether just building a harbour is the answer. They may never secure a new plant as far as I know.

Mr. Winch: If my memory is correct, it is only a few years ago that there was something in the neighbourhood of $900 million in the unemployment insurance fund. Now this fund has reached such a low ebb that the government finds it necessary to ask the House of Commons to authorize a loan of $25 million to be available should a contingency arise, such as an increase of unemployment in the next few months because of industrial disputes or because of heavy layoffs in certain areas.

This situation must lead one, of necessity, to one of two conclusions, or perhaps to both: first, that no solution has been found to the problem of unemployment; second, that changes are necessary in the Unemployment Insurance Act so as to place it on a more stable foundation. The necessity for this supplementary estimate which is before the committee at the present time demonstrates that the problem of unemployment has not been resolved, though this is also evident from a study of the monthly returns issued by the dominion bureau of statistics. I am not particularly interested in statistics. I cannot become excited by them because, to me, whether there are one million people unemployed or 100,000 unemployed there is still a serious problem to be tackled.

But the fact we must all try to remember is this: in the event of unemployment the only protection an unemployed person has, is either a reliance on unemployment insurance or reliance on welfare. It must also be recognized that reliance on either of these means of assistance does not produce much in the way of security; it means a bare subsistence. However, it is necessary that these two means of help be available so as to provide some protection for those who, unfortunately, become unemployed.

There is one phase of this question which interests me. If a person is not eligible for unemployment insurance and has to rely on welfare, he receives assistance which is financed jointly by the federal government and the provincial government. That help is paid out as required, and no loans are made to the welfare fund. The money is paid out because of the necessity that exists. When the farmers are in trouble because of crop failure or a drought we have such a situation as was witnessed this session when the house was asked to approve the spending of $43 million for the assistance of these farmers because of their economic situation. Everybody voted for it. That was not a loan to the farmers. That was an outright gift to them because of the difficulties in which they found themselves. I fail to understand the reason for the difference in policy in the two cases. A farmer who was in difficulties on account of drought last year cannot recoup his losses; his crops have been lost. An unemployed man cannot do so either; his employment has been lost. I cannot understand why there should be an outright gift in one case and a loan in the other.

There is no question that we have to build up the fund so that in the case of need the money is there to take care of the unemployed in accordance with the regulations of the act. However, I wish this was an outright grant to the fund, and therefore a grant to those who are unemployed, in the same way as we make grants to assist agricultural producers, not merely to the extent of $42 million, as we recently did, but to the extent of hundreds of millions. They are both workers in different phases of our economy.

First of all, of course, we must get down to tackling the problem of unemployment in all its aspects. But there is another matter which arises in this connection. After all the years during which we have been told that something was to be done to overhaul the Unemployment Insurance Act, surely the fact that this particular supplementary estimate is before us today demonstrates that the time has long passed when a complete study of the act should be undertaken with a view to a thorough overhaul of its provisions so as to place it on a sure and firm foundation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the reason we have to lend $25 million out of the treasury to the unemployment insurance fund is the fact, as the minister himself has indicated, that the fund must have enough money in it to meet its obligations until that season of the year arrives when the minister hopes and we all hope the intake into the fund will exceed the outgo, some time in the spring. It seems to me, as the hon. member for Welland said so well earlier this afternoon, that this is an evidence of the irresponsible and ostrichlike approach of this government to the whole problem of unemployment, it seems that we are faced with a confession by the government on March 16, 1962, when according to rumours the government is contemplating an appeal to the country, that they have let the fund get into this appalling mess and did not do anything about it.

It has been perfectly apparent to everyone in this country except the government that this situation was developing. As early as three years ago the government themselves mentioned in the speech from the throne—indeed they promised it before the election of 1958—that they would amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. The only amendment they made was to increase the contribution in a desperate effort to overcome the bleeding of the fund.

This government has pretended ever since they got into office that the amount of unemployment has been grossly exaggerated by other people, notably by the opposition, and that it was not really serious. Indeed they pretended that it was not any more serious than it was when the previous government was in office. But the best evidence of the blindness of the government and their utter refusal to face facts or reality is the fund itself, this fund which from 1942 to 1957 built up to the point where it contained at its peak, as my friend the hon. member for Welland pointed out, nearly $1 billion; I think $928 million was the figure to the nearest million.

All that except $100 million has been dissipated, and indeed the government is afraid it will all be dissipated and that the fund may require a loan. Therefore it is asking parliament to authorize this loan.

Now, at the very time this is happening in the house, what kind of picture is given to the country by the leader of the government? Surely one would have expected the Prime Minister speaking on "The Nation's Business" to face up to the problem and to put the facts before the people, to put the grimness and seriousness of the situation with respect to the fund before the population. But not a word was said of that nature in the broadcast the Prime Minister gave on Wednesday night at the very time this matter was before the house, when the minister's estimates were brought before us.

Listen to what the Prime Minister had to say about unemployment. He said:

> And I come to the employment situation. It's been better every month during the last six or seven months—

Not a suggestion that the period before the past six or seven months were the worst months since the thirties. Not a hint of that. Just:

> —It's been better every month during the last six or seven months.

As a matter of fact one cannot help but suspect that the Prime Minister had the assistance of the incomparable Minister of Public Works in the preparation of this extraordinary document.

An hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Pickersgill: No doubt it is true. I would suggest that they are eminently suited to one another.

Mr. Walker: I thank the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: And it serves them both right. The Prime Minister said, and I repeat:

> It's been better every month during the last six or seven months compared with the corresponding month in the previous year.

Mr. Walker: Is that not correct?

Mr. Pickersgill: I say, sir, that was the worst period since the thirties.

Mr. Cardiff: Doom and gloom.

Mr. Pickersgill: What more doom and gloom could you have than the minister's statement that he had exhausted $928 million and was having to ask the treasury to lend money to this fund after only four years of administration by this government. The real gloom and doom came with this government and it will not go as long as we have this government.

Mr. Walker: Turn off that record.

Mr. Pickersgill: No one can manage the affairs of the country when we have not a government; and we have had no government and no administration in Canada—just a collection of buck passers—ever since June 21, 1957. They have never faced a single problem.

Mr. Cardiff: Find a new approach. You have worn that one out.

Mr. Pickersgill: The people of Canada are going to have a new government just as soon as they are given a chance and the hon. gentleman who interrupts will be home in Huron county after that.

Mr. Cardiff: How much do you bet? How much money have you got?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should think after the earlier experience this afternoon hon. gentlemen would allow me to deal with the subject that is before us—

Mr. Walker: The seventy fifth playing of the same record.

Mr. Pickersgill: —without any assistance from that distinguished privy councillor the Minister of Public Works—

Mr. Walker: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —who has done so much to elevate the tone of public life in this country—

Mr. Walker: Thank you.

Mr. Pickersgill: —since he was elected to this parliament and who has the modesty to applaud himself.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): He does not recognize sarcasm.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to repeat these words:

It's been better every month during the last six or seven months compared with the corresponding month in the previous year.

Then the Prime Minister goes on:

Unemployment has been a serious problem not only in Canada but the United States.

The occupants of treasury benches did not say those things in the winter of 1955 when they were preaching calamity about unemployment.

Mr. Walker: Oh, stop it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, I recall those words of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. Hon. members will recall the day I read the speech made by the present Minister of Finance in 1954 about unemployment and he got up and asked why I did not tell the truth. He did not know I was merely reading his own words about a situation that was not very serious and applying it to a situation which it really did fit. I suggest that hon. gentlemen spend less time looking in the mirror and admiring themselves and a little more time looking about the country and seeing what the facts are in Canada.

Mr. Walker: You would not dare look in the mirror.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I do not waste my time looking in the mirror. I really try to pay some attention to the task I was elected to do and do not devote myself exclusively to self-congratulation—

Mr. Walker: You are on the verge of a breakdown.

Mr. Pickersgill: —which is the principal activity both of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works says the Prime Minister is the greatest parliamentarian we ever had here—

Mr. Walker: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and no doubt he believes it. But in his famous words about the statistics from the dominion bureau of statistics that Mr. Barkway produced the other evening; he may believe it but nobody else would.

I return to this document. The Prime Minister went on:

And Canada has always faced unemployment in the wintertime because of our stern conditions.

That, sir, is not in fact true. Canada has not always faced severe unemployment in the wintertime although there is a tendency for a certain amount of unemployment to develop in that season. Here is the Prime Minister giving a clear, honest and straightforward picture as he always does:

Unemployment rose to high levels on more than one occasion in the early 1950's.

That is typical. First he blames the Americans and then he tries to create the impression that the situation was bad in the days of the previous government.

Mr. Cardiff: Well, wasn't it?

Mr. Pickersgill: There was only one month, sir, in the whole post-war period until 1957—only one month—when the unemployment was as bad as it has been on the average since this government came into office at all seasons of the year, and yet this is the kind of picture the Prime Minister seeks to give the Canadian people, the kind of picture he presents of the nation's business, as it is now. I continue:

But the tremendous upsurge of the economy is providing more and more jobs.

I am sorry that we still have not the D.B.S. report in order to see how many more there were in February than there were in January. However, from the last figures we had one thing we know is this. The labour force of this country grew by only 13,000 in the year 1961, which means that more people left Canada to live elsewhere than came to Canada to live in that year and our own young people could not find jobs. That is what that terrible statistic means. It means that the country has ceased growing altogether. Those are the D.B.S. figures. I suppose everybody in the country except the Minister of Public Works would accept them. However, as I say, we get this kind of statement from the Prime Minister:

We've mitigated the effects of unemployment in a vast public works program.

May I say this. If they have mitigated the effect of unemployment, it is just appalling to think what it would have been if it had not been for the vast public works program as, notwithstanding this alleged mitigation, it has been at an intolerably high level during the whole period during which this government has been in office.

Then the Prime Minister continues—but really it is fruitless to read any more. It is of the same ilk, pretending that the facts are not there, refusing to face reality. However, he sends the Minister of Labour in here to face the reality; and the reality is that the minister has exhausted this fund, this $928 million which was accumulated. Why was it accumulated? It was accumulated because during the whole period from 1942 to 1957 there was virtually full employment. That is why the money was there. How did the money get there? It got there because the people who were employed paid their unemployment insurance premiums as did their employers. That is how the money got into the fund. Why is it gone? It is gone because people have been unemployed. Oh, maybe the minister lost a bit, or at least maybe others lost a bit for the minister—the Minister of Finance, mainly—by bad management of the fund. I will leave that question to the hon. member for Welland who understands these things better than I do. However, most of it is gone because people have been unemployed and it has been paid out to the unemployed. That is why this money is all gone—unless the minister or rather the commission has been paying out millions to people who were not unemployed; and I do not believe that for a moment.

Mr. Cardiff: We did not have two wars to boost our economy when we were in power.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I say this; if the hon. gentleman wishes to start a war in order to boost the economy, he will not find many other Canadians who are with him.

Mr. Cardiff: That is what boosted the economy.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is extraordinary, is it not, Mr. Chairman, how the Tories always have an excuse for their failures while the Liberals are not obliged to make excuses because, when there is a Liberal government, there are not the failures. That seems to be the difference, as the hon. gentleman has aptly illustrated through his helpful intervention. I hope he will make some more interventions as he is extremely helpful in them.

Mr. Walker: We are straightening out your mess.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, yes; that is another favourite theme of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Walker: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will tell the hon. gentleman about the mess.

Mr. Walker: All right.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was $928 million in the unemployment insurance fund and—

Mr. Walker: Louder.

Mr. Pickersgill: —there was about 140,000 unemployed when this government took office. The figure has never got down to that level since these gentlemen took their seats on the treasury benches. There was a surplus in the treasury. That was the mess.

Let us look at the situation now, Mr. Chairman. The situation that we find is this. One billion dollars have been dissipated from the unemployment insurance fund. Two billion dollars have been added to the national debt. We have the worst unemployment situation since the 30's. After five years in office the ministers are talking as though they could not do anything, as though they were helpless, as though they had no influence on events and as though, after five years in office, Mr. Howe, Mr. Harris and Mr. St. Laurent are still to blame for the fact that when these gentlemen took office the budget was balanced, the national debt was being paid off and there was virtually no unemployment and the fund was overflowing. That was the mess. If the Minister of Public Works has such a distorted vision—and I use the term advisedly—that this is what he regards as a mess, I would suggest that a great many of the people of Canada would be extremely glad to have that mess again compared with what we have now. However, that is not all.

Mr. Walker: Tell us about the hidden report.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, I will tell you about the hidden report. I suggest to the minister that he read the Winnipeg Free Press for this week with regard to the hidden report and he will not want ever to hear it mentioned again. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he just walk out of the chamber, go to the library and read it right now.

Mr. Walker: I wish to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman will hear me in good time. However, I am speaking about the unemployment insurance fund at the moment and I intend to continue doing so regardless of the assistance I get from the Minister of Public Works.

It would be bad enough, Mr. Chairman, if they had just bankrupted the fund. However, what do this incredible government do? They published a little booklet called, "Still More Action for Canada and Canadians". This is the latest edition of Tory propaganda. I just hope the people of Canada all read it and understand what it is really saying. I am going to read just one paragraph and here it is:

> The infamous Liberal "threshold clause" was removed from existing unemployment assistance legislation thereby extending benefits to all Canadians instead of those from only six provinces, as under the Liberals.

Whatever that incomprehensible sentence means I should not like to say, as I do not think anybody could make any sense out of it. Evidently some words were left out. However, the really important part is what follows:

> Federal contributions have been increased by more than 847.7 per cent—from $7.9 million in the last year under the Liberals to $75 million in 1961-62.

They are asking for $88 million this coming year. Then they are boasting about increasing this unemployment relief. Did you ever in your life hear of any government in any country in the world boast about increasing unemployment relief by 800 per cent?

Mr. Baldwin: It is my recollection of the rules that when a member reads from what appears to be a valuable public document, he should put the whole document on file.

Mr. Pickersgill: This subject has been discussed a good many times here, and Your Honour knows very well that no one is permitted to table documents in the house except members of the government. I hope the hon. member, who is a very courteous member of the house, will not seek to join some of the less courteous ones in attempting to interfere with the continuity of what I have to say. What I am saying is that, not content with bankrupting the unemployment insurance fund and coming here and asking for a loan, which perhaps is not big enough, incidentally—and I wish to ask the minister a question about that matter at the conclusion of my remarks —they boast that they have increased relief or welfare by 800 per cent. I have heard governments make some queer boasts, but the queerest boast of all is to have increased relief by 800 per cent. It seems to me that one paragraph alone in this document is enough to destroy this government in every part of this country. Here is their list of achievements: increasing unemployment relief by 800 per cent. We on this side of the house regard unemployment relief as a necessary evil, something that should be as little necessary as possible, not something to boast about and say how big you are getting it, or how much you are spending on relief. That gives you, as I say, Mr. Chairman, an idea of this "Through the Looking Glass" attitude of this extraordinary government of mirror vision. That is the only expression one can apply. The Prime Minister looks at himself in the mirror, perhaps not as often as the Minister of Public Works does, and they admire themselves and see there what they want to see.

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member will agree that these remarks are not pertinent to this item.

Mr. Chevrier: There is nothing the matter with them at all. I rise on a point of order. There was absolutely nothing the matter and nothing contrary to the rules of the house in what the hon. member had to say concerning the Minister of Public Works, certainly nothing to compare with what the Minister of Public Works has been saying repeatedly about those of us who sit on this side of the house. I say to you with deference that the hon. member has a perfect right to say what he has said. Surely the time has come in this house, Mr. Chairman, when we on this side ought to be able to say some things. After all, this afternoon we were given an example of nothing but complete obstruction on the part of hon. members on the other side of the house. All one has to do is to look at Hansard to see what happened last night. Those who sit on the other side of the house have continually interrupted every speech made from this side, the speech of the hon. member for Levis, and now the hon. member who has the floor is being interrupted because he makes passing reference to the Minister of Public Works, which I submit to you with deference is not contrary to the rules of the house.

Mr. Walker: What about the mirror?

The Chairman: Naturally the Chair deplores as much as anyone the interruptions that take place and I hope that there will be no more. There have been many interjections back and forth and I do not think it helps an intelligent study of this item. I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will want to restrict his remarks to this item as he is trying to do.

Mr. Pickersgill: My reference, sir, was primarily to the head of the government. I am one of those old fashioned people who believe that the head of a government is responsible for everything that government does. That is what we understand to be the situation under our British system. He has to take the responsibility for everything that is done by his colleagues whom he keeps in his cabinet, and I do not envy him, sir, particularly in some cases.

One of his colleagues is the Minister of Labour who has the misfortune to be saddled with the responsibility for this bankrupt fund. It seems to me that when I suggest that the Prime Minister is gazing in a mirror, and not facing facts, that is perfectly normal, valid criticism, and I may say that I did not think even this thin-skinned government was quite that thin-skinned. What I am saying, sir, is that the government refused to face the problem. That made it necessary for the government to ask for this loan for the unemployment insurance fund, and they certainly are not doing the things they said they would do about this problem. The only reason this vote is before us, the only reason this loan is being sought is unemployment, persistent unemployment at an intolerable level, a level so high that, notwithstanding the very marked improvement in business activity, the Minister of Labour cannot derive very much satisfaction from reading the leading editorial in the Financial Post this week, which is a very accurate and sober appraisal of the situation. Nor can it give the minister much satisfaction to hear what Mr. Macaulay, the minister of trade and industry or whatever it is—they change names in Toronto so often that it is hard to keep up with them—said the other day. He said that we have to have a million more jobs in this country in the next few years, and that is true because our population continues to grow, and employment is not growing with it. That is the problem.

Mr. Pallett: What was wrong with that statement?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a difficult problem. It is a problem that we on this side of the house are very anxious to co-operate in solving, if any solutions are offered; but this government refuses to offer solutions. It pretends that the problem does not exist. It is very difficult to co-operate with people who have to take the initiative but have no initiative to take, and do not know how to take an initiative. This is also, of course, completely out of accord with the pretensions of the government when it came into office with respect to this matter.

I want to say a word or two about those pretensions because they are very relevant. If the government had really done the things they promised we would not be asked to pass this vote now. Therefore what I am about to say is strictly relevant. We know that unemployment and, indeed, even employment were hardly mentioned at all by hon. gentlemen opposite five years ago when they were out of power and seeking office. They now pretend that unemployment then was a terrible problem and a terrible mess, but they were not bright enough to see it then. I have gone over the Prime Minister's utterances fairly frequently and I cannot find a reference to unemployment in any of them.

Mr. Walker: He did not have the hidden report.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before June 10, 1957 it is true that on one occasion, April 25, 1957, he did say in Toronto that full employment with the highest possible standard of living would be one of the primary objectives of his government. Sir, if that has continued to be one of their primary objectives, no government has ever fallen farther from the achievement of an objective than this government has because, as I say, employment-wise they have taken the country back to the days when we last had a Tory government in the 30's. Then; the Prime Minister told the premiers in November, 1957, that there was just a brief pause and not to worry about unemployment. He had then been in office for five months and that was his considered judgment given to the premiers at the federal-provincial conference. He told them it was just a pause, nothing serious. On December 10, 1957, the Minister of Labour went to Montreal and made a speech in which he said that all economists agreed that unemployment was not a bit serious and was going to go away in no time.

In 1958, when they finally had to face the facts during the election campaign, what did they tell the people? What kind of hopes did they hold out? Did they tell the people they were going to increase relief 800 per cent? Is that what the people were told? No; what they told them was that "no one will suffer from unemployment". There are many variations of this theme, sir, and since there has been a lot of dispute about it perhaps it would be as well if the record were set straight. In a telecast from Montreal on February 18, 1958, the Prime Minister said:

> As long as I am Prime Minister ... everything that can be done—everything without regard to limit—will be done to the end that no one will suffer.

"Everything without regard to limit". At Coxheath, Nova Scotia, on February 28 he said—

Mr. Pallett: What comes after the word "suffer" in that first quotation? You surely have not got the end of a sentence there.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have given the complete quotation and the hon. gentleman can look it up for himself. If he thinks there is anything wrong with it he can refute it. The Prime Minister was reported in the Montreal Star to have said in Coxheath, Nova Scotia, on February 28, 1958:

> No Canadian without work would suffer as long as I am Prime Minister regardless of whether we have deficit financing or not.

That was the second promise about "no one will suffer". Then, in a telecast from Toronto on March 4, 1958, he said:

> As long as I am Prime Minister this government will not rest while one Canadian remains out of work. No one will be allowed to suffer.

Then we all know the Prime Minister's favorite quotation. It is one that has reference to public works. He did make a reference once or twice to public works in connection with this matter, but only once or twice. Most of the time he made other statements that he does not seem to like to remember so well. In one reported speech at Prince Albert on February 14, 1958, he was quoted as adding after "no one will suffer" the words "so far as public works can meet the situation". If anyone dares to suggest that promise has been kept, "so far as public works can meet the situation"—

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Walker: Does my hon. friend not agree that the average expenditure under Liberal administrations from 1945 to 1957 was less than $90 million a year and our average has been $210 million a year? Does that not answer the question? In addition, 660,000 houses have been built.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has asked his question but perhaps he might save his speech until I have finished. The hon. gentleman is boasting that this government has spent more than the Liberal government. I will not argue with him. They have spent more on everything. They have put the country hopelessly into debt, but they have not corrected unemployment with public works and that is what was promised. That promise has not been kept. Neither has the promise been kept that everything, without regard to limit, would be done. Neither has the promise been kept that there would be no suffering regardless of deficit financing.

But there was an even more far reaching promise than that, sir, and it is very directly related to this vote. At Brantford on February 17, 1958, the Prime Minister said:

> The people who are unemployed will not be put in the false position of being put on relief.

Let me repeat that:

> The people who are unemployed will not be put in the false position of being put on relief.

The Chairman: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Chevrier: May I bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that the speech of the hon. gentleman was interrupted by points of order and in that case I submit to you, sir, he has the right to go on for another 30 minutes.

The Chairman: As I understand it, the hon. member only yielded the floor for points of order which do not constitute a ground for extending the time of the hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: He yielded the floor to the Minister of Public Works.

The Chairman: That is so, he yielded the floor, but it was on his own time that the question was answered.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have really reached the termination of my remarks, anyway. I just wanted to point out that, the Prime Minister having promised that no one would go on relief, the government now boasts about increasing relief by 800 per cent.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, I should like to add a few words to those of my colleagues concerning the $25 million which the government is about to grant to the unemployment insurance commission.

When, in 1958-59, we asked the government to admit that there was in fact an unemployment problem, we were accused then, as we have been again this afternoon, of being prophets of doom and gloom. Now, if we refer to the 1946-1957 period and determine the yearly average of the percentage of the labour force who were unemployed, we find that it did not exceed 3 per cent. I am speaking of the average per year. In June 1957, when we handed over the administration of this country to the present government, there were approximately 160,000 men and women without work. By early autumn, in that same year, there were already 225,000.

I do not wish to dwell on that question, but I would like to offer the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) a suggestion. Two years ago, while discussing the estimates of his department, I spoke about industrial mechanization. Our production methods are improving all the time. Some people say that automation only cuts down the number of jobs while others, on the contrary, claim that besides improving production methods, automation makes for new jobs which in many cases, are better paid.

It seems to me that efficiency in industry is today one of the main economic challenges of our time. Production is not everything. You must also dispose of your production. Since our domestic market, in many sectors, cannot consume all our national output, we must look for foreign outlets. We must then take into account the fact that we have to compete with other nations.

In their report number 8 on the advent of automation, the research services of the Department of Labour said that the impact of the technological advance on employment varies from one area to the other. Reference is made, for instance, to other jobs and to the ability of some peope to adapt themselves to other kinds of work. Reference is also made to collective bargaining and other factors.

Some people would resist automation. In my opinion, it is imperative that we adapt ourselves to the times in which we are living, and that we take the necessary steps to be able to do so. Even the most vocal advocates of industrial automation are showing some concern about the future of mankind, on account of that technological revolution now bursting upon the world, and in this country particularly.

I think we must be prepared to face a profound transitional period as well as a sort of industrial upheaval.

The deputy minister of public health in Ontario, Mr. James S. Band, said, not more than a year and a half ago, that within ten years four workers out of five would lose their jobs on account of industrial automation.

I think that from a human and social stand point, this is an almost tragic consequence.

The Canadian Labour Congress bulletin quoted also, in its February 1961 issue, the result of a study made by Mr. W. R. Dymond, director of economics and research, Department of Labour, and submitted to the Senate manpower committee.

It is a very short paragraph, but I should like to read it for the hon. members:

(Text):

In the ten years since 1949, production in the Canadian motor vehicle industry rose 49.8 per cent, while employment rose only 11 per cent. In the motor vehicle parts industry, production rose 19.7 per cent, and employment 6.8 per cent; in electrical apparatus and supplies, production rose 81.6 per cent and employment 40.6 per cent; in the machinery industry, production rose 33.7 per cent and employment 16.8 per cent; in household appliances, production rose 53.7 per cent and employment 19.3 per cent.

(Translation):

Even though the Minister of Labour created, within his department, a research division which studied and is still studying the impact of industrial automation, I would ask him to extend further this survey on automation.

He could ask for the opinions of representatives of management and labour, of universities, of provincial and municipal governments and agriculture, and set up a commission, even at this late date. That should have been done long ago.

I think that the committee which is now studying the question, with the best intentions in the world and the most qualified people, does not go far enough in its inquiry, apart from the fact that its staff is not large enough to do the job entrusted to it.

Social implications and effects of technological progress must be considered with the thought of what is to be man's part in that progress, and above all of what the impact of automation is likely to be on our social structure.

I know that the Minister of Labour is concerned with these questions but he seems to be the only one among his cabinet colleagues to consider this problem. He should ask people from industry to help him.

Since 1957, the government has often urged an improvement in relationships between employers and employees. This is a good opportunity to get together representatives from those two groups because both employers and employees are interested in that question. Canadians as a whole are particularly interested in that question.

A commission should be appointed to study the full impact of automation throughout the country, and I am sure that solutions will be submitted to it which—even if some are long term solutions—will contribute to eradicate or at least decrease to a great extent that social plague of unemployment which is a sore on our present system.

I already said on many occasions that I believe in free enterprise, but I also believe in the intervention of higher authorities whenever and wherever free enterprise cannot or does not wish to fulfil its duties.

Some companies may attach a little more importance to their profits than to their social role in the development of a country or its economy.

I urge the minister to consider those suggestions and I am looking forward to the day when, at last, concrete solutions will be found to unemployment.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if I could have the attention of the house to make a suggestion to the house leader, which I hope will be of a constructive nature. It is not my intention in anything I intend to say now to be critical, but I am mindful of the fact that there is some urgency about getting these supplementary estimates through the house. Again I repeat I do not want to be critical of those who have taken up the time of the house, because they have been from the other side of the house as well as from this side.

What I want to say is that we are not prepared to give up our right to criticize these very large supplementary estimates, particularly when we have no assurance that we shall have a chance to debate the main estimates for next year. However we are not anxious to contribute to hardship which might result if bills were not paid, and particularly if salaries and wages were not paid. Therefore, if the Minister of Finance will give us detailed particulars of the votes where real hardship might result we shall immediately consider them first, for our part, and deal with them quickly, and if the minister wants to go a step further and wishes to incorporate the urgent items in a special appropriation bill we shall facilitate that procedure; but we do not intend to submit to indirect pressure to restrict debate on expenditures in this free parliament.

I thought, Mr. Chairman, that it might be helpful if I rose a few minutes before five o'clock and made this suggestion. I understand it is not possible, in the two or three minutes that are left, to obtain a reply or an assurance from the minister, but from now until six o'clock I suppose there might well be that opportunity and I trust that the house leader will consider this suggestion in the light in which it has been made.

Mr. Churchill: Actions speak louder than words. If the present item we are on had been passed, then these remarks of the hon. member for Laurier might have been more appropriate under those circumstances. His so-called constructive suggestion will have to be examined. Hon. members on the opposite side of the house had an extensive experience on the treasury benches and they fully appreciate, without any spelling out or any further detailed information, what is meant when supplementary estimates are not passed expeditiously through the house.

Were they inexperienced, why then we might give some consideration to the suggestion that was put forward; but we are not dealing here with inexperienced people, and parliament has been in existence for so many years. If the hon. member will examine the record he will find that in the past it was customary to get supplementary estimates through the house in one, two, or at the outside three days, not spending as we have done already this session one third of the session on supplementary estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be allowed, there is a great deal in what the house leader has said in connection with the procedure that has been followed in the past concerning supplementary estimates, but the circumstances in the past and the circumstances in which we find ourselves in this parliament are entirely different and, as I said earlier, I did not want to introduce a contentious note in the debate. I wanted to offer what I thought was a constructive suggestion because I am firmly convinced that the circumstances as we find them now, and the hon. house leader knows what I am referring to, are entirely different from the ordinary and normal circumstances concerning the passage of supplementary estimates through the house. Therefore I can only reiterate the suggestion I have made.

Mr. Churchill: I can only add that 1957 was an election year and in the spring of that year we passed two groups of supplementary estimates in three days.

Mr. Pickersgill: And hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house in 1957 were informed precisely what the intentions of the government were. There was no question of playing games with the public business in that year.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Pallett: Perhaps we might carry this item now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly not.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock, so that the house may proceed to consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise and report a certain resolution and ask leave to sit later this day or next sitting day as the case may be.

Item stands.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills and private bills.

Mr. Churchill: I am prepared to stand numbers 1 to 9 if it is agreeable to the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) is prepared to go ahead with No. 10. Is that correct?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

BROADCASTING ACT

ISSUE OF LICENCES SUBJECT TO COMPLIANCE WITH BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved the second reading of Bill C-32, to amend the Broadcasting Act (human rights abuses remedied).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I must first of all express my appreciation of the nine hon. members with private bills preceding mine on the order paper who had them stood today and in so doing enabled me to proceed with a matter of very great importance to my constituents and which is important, so far as the principle is concerned, to all Canadians. I intend, Mr. Speaker, as is usual among members of this group, to strike a blow for freedom this evening, because it is obvious that legitimate free enterprise requires the benevolent surveillance of certain social democrats who have a sense of social responsibility.

I must outline the historical sequence of events which have caused me to introduce this bill. First of all, I was visited by the editor of the Kootenay Graphic News in November, I think, of 1960. He informed me that he had been in the habit of advertising the date of publication of his newspaper on radio station CKLN, Nelson, drawing attention to the date on which it was being placed on the news stands, but he had received a letter from Mr. A. R. Ramsden, the manager of that radio station, informing him he would no longer be permitted to use the services of the station. I intend to place that letter on record so that hon. members may have the facts.

Mr. M. Carlton
490 Baker Street
Nelson, B.C.

Dear Mr. Carlton:

We seem to be on the horns of dilemma these days, a dilemma which must be obvious to everyone. Now that your paper is establishing itself as a regular advertising media, seeking its business from the same customers as ourselves, it is not reasonable that we should be defeating ourselves by building up in any way the success of a business competitor. We therefore, are invoking section 7 of our contract. As of today's date we are serving you with ten days notice of cancellation of your advertising contract No. 726. I would further bring to your attention items 4 and 6 of the conditions of contract.

Yours sincerely,

A. R. Ramsden,
Manager.

I had a conversation with the editor of the Graphic News. The major owner of the News publishing company is a gentleman for whom I have a high regard. He served overseas with the 54th Kootenay battalion and I would be surprised if he agreed to this treatment of a veteran who is trying to establish himself after fighting in the last war for freedom.

The Nelson daily News and the radio station in question are both owned by the News Publishing Company Limited of 216 Baker street, Nelson, British Columbia. This company was incorporated on May 18, 1908 with an authorized capital of $200,000. The list of directors together with the shares they hold is as follows:

Shares	Name	Address
1326	Robert H. Green	Victoria
28	Cecil W. Ramsden	Nelson
96	Robert F. G. Green	Victoria
108	Gordon A. Green	Victoria
5	Robert W. Phipps	Victoria
100	Margaret G. Green	Victoria
12	George G. Green	Victoria
Shareholders only:
5	Francis E. Winston
2270	Robert Green

This news publishing company owns the Nelson daily News and radio station CKLN. Then, shortly after hearing from the editor of the Kootenay Graphic News I received visits from businessmen in Nelson who had become customers of the Graphic News. They complained that the Graphic News was being denied what they considered to be a right under the bill of rights, namely to advertise on a station which received its licence through an agency of the government, the board of broadcast governors. Other people mentioned the subject to me, and there was a good deal of discussion about it.

The same day I met the editor of the Nelson daily News, Cecil Ramsden, and told him what I thought of the matter. I dealt with him directly because I understand he is really the officer commanding all the interests of the news publishing company in Nelson. He agreed with the letter sent by the manager of the radio station and was of the opinion that they were justified, having had a monopoly in advertising for 60 years on Baker street, in preventing anyone else establishing themselves in the newspaper business by soliciting advertising from the same customers over CKLN.

I must say that the editor of the Kootenay Graphic News and his partners have been most successful and have received a lot of support from business people in Nelson. To indicate that sympathy and the objection to this monopolistic attitude on the part of the editor of the News Publishing Company, perhaps I might tell the house that in order to assist the Kootenay Graphic News some of these merchants, who also advertise on the radio station, are including a sentence or two at the end of their announcements such as: "You will see our advertisement in the Kootenay Graphic News next Wednesday", or Thursday, or what ever day it happens to be.

After talking with these people, I agreed to take the matter up with the Minister of Justice and with the chairman of the board of broadcast governors. I have done that. I discussed the matter with the chairman of the board of broadcast governors and he told me there was nothing in the act at present which would give him the power to prevent this practice. He said this was the first occasion on which such an action had been brought to his attention since he had become chairman of the board. Then I discussed the matter with the Minister of Justice. I raised it in the house and the minister later wrote to me and informed me to the following effect:

December 16, 1960

Herbert W. Herridge, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa

Dear Mr. Herridge:

Thank you for your letter of December 7, 1960, in connection with the policy of Radio Station CKLN in accepting advertising.

When you raised this matter in the house on November 18, 1960, it was brought to the attention of the director under the Combines Investigation Act. The director has considered the matter and has come to the conclusion that it does not fall within the Combines Investigation Act and that, accordingly, there is no basis for starting an inquiry under the act.

Yours sincerely,

E. D. Fulton

In addition, I have discussed this subject with representatives of the private radio stations across Canada who also informed me that this is the first occasion on which this sort of thing has been brought to their attention. They were concerned lest a practice of this sort might cause resentment and build up opposition to the private radio industry. I have had long conversations with several people on this question.

I must say that the editor of the Nelson daily News is really a nice little fellow, but he is a Conservative who does not understand the principles of the bill of rights. He has allowed his keen business instincts temporarily to overcome his sense of justice and his understanding of the principles of free enterprise, although when election time comes around he writes some strong editorials inviting the people of Kootenay West to support the representatives of the party that stands for free enterprise as against other persons, and so on. But this, I am sure, is a temporary aberration and I am sure he will see the light as a result of the discussion in the house and the correspondence he receives from other sources.

Naturally, the result of this has been that the hon. member for Kootenay West has received very little mention in the Nelson daily News since the introduction of this bill two years ago. As hon. members are aware I am mentioned on frequent occasions in the Ottawa Ontario, papers. I am infrequently mentioned in the Nelson daily News. For a long time I received hardly any mention at all. Until recently Your Honour did not consider certain unfortunate events in Kootenay West as a matter of urgent public importance. Constituents wrote and wired me expressing their indignation. I quickly explained Your Honour was interpreting the rule according to the book. I know you do consider affairs in Kootenay West are of urgent public importance.

Then I was stepped on in another direction. Since 1945 I have been in the habit of giving a weekly broadcast over the radio. Suddenly the manager of the radio station decided that I should be heard from only once a month from then on. An arrangement was suggested under which the hon. member for Kootenay East and I would alternate with others. The station now allows me use of the facilities twice a month. I appreciate the courtesy extended to me throughout the years so I can inform the people of Kootenay West objectively of the news and occurrences in this house. Now the hon. member for Kootenay East assists me in this. I thank him for relieving me on some occasions. But there is no Liberal in British Columbia. It was suggested that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate or the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River go on the station. However these are supposed to be local reports to the people of the area delivered by local members of parliament like the hon. members of Kootenay West and Kootenay East.

I have received many letters from constituents telling me that they look forward to my reports and many have said they miss my weekly broadcasts although they also find the reports of the hon. member for Kootenay East interesting and informative.

The interest in this bill is considerable. I have had requests from over 100 of my constituents for copies of Hansard containing the debate on this bill, which shows the sense of responsibility of the people I have the honour to represent. They are indignant at the transgression of the principles of the bill of rights and of responsible free enterprise.

I discussed this matter with a number of members of other parties and have yet to talk to a single member who does not support the purpose of this bill. I have discussed it with trade union members and have their support in this respect. I trust before the debate concludes I will have the support in principle of all hon. members because it is an important question. There is a great principle involved.

The matter was brought to the attention of the special committee on radio broadcasting when representatives of private broadcasters were present. I quote from page 120 of the minutes and proceedings of the committee for Monday, February 27, 1961. The hon. member for Peterborough introduced the matter as follows:

> Mr. Pitman: I would like to bring up a particular problem which has caused some amount of concern in the house. This is the problem of a station which is in a position very much like the one Mr. Jamieson was speaking about, where the station has virtually complete control, and where it refuses advertising for what is considered to be competitors.
> This happened at Nelson, British Columbia where a radio station refused to accept advertising of a competitor. Let me quote from this letter. This gentleman was starting a newspaper, and the radio station owned a newspaper as well.

That is not quite right. One company, the Nelson news publishing company, owns both CKLN and the paper. I will not quote from the letter. The hon. member for Peterborough went on to say:

> What we have here is a situation which, I think, is rather fantastic, where a radio station can refuse advertising of its competitor. How do you feel about that? Should there be a regulation?
>
> Mr. Brown: Are you directing your question to me?
>
> Mr. Pitman: Anyone at all is welcome to pick it up.

Mr. Jamieson: May I say that I believe this is extremely rare. I do not recall in ten or eleven years of being in the broadcasting business in Canada another incident comparable to this one.

We have a lot of unusual incidents in Kootenay West. Mr. Jamieson went on to say:

I believe that the board of broadcast governors has had this matter called to its attention, so I would not want to anticipate what the board's feelings are on this matter, because I do not know them.

I have discussed the matter with the chairman of the board of broadcast governors, taken the matter up with the Minister of Justice, had the matter drawn to the attention of the special committee on broadcasting and discussed it with several hon. members. I have fulfilled the promise I made to merchants and other citizens of Nelson and district. It is a complicated question in some respects and therefore I discussed it with competent legal authorities. After receiving their advice I spent considerable time getting the advice of persons in private radio and government agencies and then I introduced this bill.

This bill is to amend the Broadcasting Act (human rights abuses remedied). I like those terms. Reading from the explanatory notes of the bill:

Both the English common law and the French civil law recognize the doctrine that the right of the businessman or industrialist to do business only with persons of his choice is subject to restrictions based on reasons of good morals or public order: such is the case where the state takes exclusive control of a commercial field and grants a special privilege or licence in that field to the businessman or industrialist to sell, under monopoly or quasi-monopoly, to the public; the licensee then assumes definite obligations, including the obligation to sell to anyone who is ready to pay the regular price. See Christie v. York Corp., (1940) Supreme Court of Canada, p. 139.

Various other cases and authorities are referred to. I continue:

In the Christie case, Mr. Justice Davis said:

"If there is to be exclusion on the ground of colour or of race or of religious faith or on any other ground not already specifically provided for by the statute, it is for the legislature itself, in my view, to impose such limitations under the exclusive system of governmental control of the sale of liquor to the public which it has seen fit to enact."

The Canadian parliament, for public convenience, interest and necessity, has by the Radio Act allowed the crown to grant monopolies by licence to individuals and corporations to operate broadcasting stations for private gain. Under the common law and civil law, therefore, such stations must sell advertising time without discrimination. In 1960, parliament confirmed this law by statute. Section 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights applies to provide that the Radio Act and the Broadcasting Act shall not be so used as to violate the rights or freedoms of any citizen: e.g., freedom of speech or freedom of the press. Presumably, the governor in council might make regulations to control such excesses or the minister of transport arbitrarily remedy violations by revocation or suspension of licence. Transport shall revoke forthwith the licence of such licensee and shall notify the licensee of the revocation so made.

I mention the following as getting at the principle of the bill:

Clause 1—For clarity, and emphasis of notice to the licensee, this clause provides, generally, that a licence is conditional upon observance of the Canadian Bill of Rights; and, specifically, that there shall be no discrimination by a licensee in providing commercial services to competitor applicants —e.g., freedom of the press includes liberty of circulation and distribution, as well as publication— and liberty of circulation and distribution includes the right to compete for advertising space on a government licensed advertising media—without discrimination because the applicant competes in the newspaper field with the broadcasting monopolist. Subsection 6(a)(i) is an adaptation of provincial public utility anti-discrimination law.

That subsection of the bill is an adaptation of provincial public utility anti-discrimination law as taken from the statutes of British Columbia. The subsection has been included for a number of years to prevent discrimination and refusal of service, and so on and has proved successful and operates well.

Subsection 6(b) follows the procedure—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Herridge: In conclusion—

Mr. McGrath: Might I suggest that we allow the hon. gentleman a few more moments.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member indicates that he is about to conclude. Perhaps hon. members will give the hon. member a few minutes in which to do so.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: I appreciate that courtesy, which has become necessary because of my having to give such a long historical sequence before I came to my legal argument. Anyway, upon violation, the Minister of Transport revokes the licence. The licensee, has a right to appeal on any question of law to the exchequer court which may suspend the revocation until the appeal is determined. I have received good advice and discussed this matter with counsel and I believe this bill is fair to all concerned and will remedy the abuse of which I have complained. I trust that I shall receive support from members on both sides of the house in my efforts this afternoon to strike a blow for freedom in defence of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on second reading of this Bill No. C-32 may I say at the outset that I wish I could support the principle of it. However, I am afraid I cannot do so. Nevertheless, I am prepared to say that, without any reservation whatsoever I certainly support the hon. member for Kootenay West in what I consider a legitimate grievance. I think that it is most unfair—and it is certainly contrary to the laws of fair play—that the radio station in the hon. gentleman's constituency should deprive his constituents of the enjoyment of hearing the sage and wise utterances of the hon. member for Kootenay West more than once a month. In this regard, I think the hon. gentleman certainly has a legitimate grievance.

Mr. Herridge: May I say that I am now on twice a month.

Mr. McGrath: That is all to the good. I hope that before too long the hon. member will be on four times a month.

Mr. Herridge: A great many people hope the same thing.

Mr. McGrath: However, I question the course adopted by the hon. gentleman, who is most sincere in his intent, in that he should have deemed it necessary to bring in a bill in this regard. He does so under the premise of being a champion—I do not know whether or not he used that word but that was his implication—of legitimate free enterprise.

The right to advertise is basic in our free enterprise society and in our democracy. However, with respect to advertising as we know it in Canada—that is advertising using electronic means and advertising using the printed media—may I say that it is not a right. Advertising is not an end in itself as far as radio is concerned and as far as newspapers are concerned. It is merely a means to an end. Under our system of public and private broadcasting it is a means whereby a private broadcaster can accept fees in return for advertising which goes towards the cost of his programming and his transmission. Indeed, usually in the case of a private station these advertising fees more than cover the cost of programming, production and transmission, enabling the broadcaster to make a profit and hence to stay in business. However, as I say, it is not an end in itself. It is just a means to an end. In return for these services the broadcaster agrees that for the fee in question he will deliver the sales message of the sponsor or advertiser to the widest possible audience. That is where his contractual rights end, of course, saving professional ethics.

What the hon. gentleman is trying to do in this bill is, by means of an act of the parliament of Canada, to say to a broadcaster "You must accept every request you get for advertising". That seems to be the intent of the bill.

Mr. Herridge: No; only on grounds of competition.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. gentleman did not explain that part fully, but perhaps as I proceed he will correct me if I am wrong. What he has in mind is that where competitive media are concerned, he must accept advertising from all the media. Is that what the hon. gentleman is trying to say?

Mr. Herridge: Yes; he must not deny advertising just on grounds that the person is competitive, or the company.

Mr. McGrath: In my opinion, that is precisely the grounds upon which he should be entitled to refuse advertising. It seems to me to be absolutely ludicrous for a broadcaster to find himself in the position of being obliged to advertise a sales message of competitive media. In Canada newspaper advertising and electronic advertising are very competitive, as the hon. gentleman illustrated in his introductory remarks in referring to the two newspapers in his constituency, and the private broadcasting station. However, I believe that the bill is misconceived although the intent is good. I believe it to be redundant. In my humble opinion what he is trying to do is very clearly set out in the Broadcasting Act. I would refer the hon. gentleman to section 10 of part I of the Broadcasting Act wherein the objects and purposes of the board of broadcast governors are set out. Section 10 states as follows:

> 10. The board shall, for the purpose of ensuring the continued existence and efficient operation of a national broadcasting system and the provision of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service of a high standard that is basically Canadian in content and character, regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations, the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them and provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto.

Then the next section of the Broadcasting Act, namely section 11 deals with regulations. Subsection (1) (c) provides as follows:

> 11. (1) The board may make regulations for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this part, and in particular, but without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations, . . .
> (c) respecting the character of advertising and the amount of time that may be devoted to advertising;

Then in so far as appeal procedure is concerned, I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is more concerned with the fact that the newspaper to which he referred—I believe it was the Kootenay Graphic News—felt that it had a legitimate grievance. The hon. gentleman has stated that he checked with the various government agencies concerned and that it was evident that there was no other way for this newspaper to redress its grievance than by a statute of parliament. I do not believe that is the case, as there is a further provision in the Broadcasting Act. If the Kootenay Graphic News, in its grievance against radio station CKLN, wished to pursue the matter, it should follow the Canada Gazette, for under the Broadcasting Act radio station CKLN would be required after several years have elapsed to appeal to the board of broadcast governors for the renewal of its licence. A licence is not granted in perpetuity. I do not know what the time limit is but I believe it is a period of five years. When the radio station applied for renewal of its licence the newspaper referred to as having a grievance with respect to the station could appeal to the board of broadcast governors and state its case. The board would then decide if it had a legitimate grievance and would take this into account in the extension of the licence or the board, if it deemed it necessary to do so, could formulate regulations to guard against just such alleged abuses, which it is permitted to do under the powers in the act.

It seems to me that to provide for regulation by statute is a very dangerous practice because what you are really doing is depriving the radio station of the right to be discriminating in the advertising it accepts. In all fairness I do not think that a radio station should be expected to carry the sales message of its chief competitor. That is really the whole crux of the argument as I see it. However, apparently the Kootenay Graphic News and the hon. member for Kootenay West unfortunately do not see it this way. The hon. member referred to the proceedings of the broadcasting committee and the fact that his colleague, the hon. member for Peterborough, had raised this matter in that committee. I have been a member of that committee for the past several years, and while I do not recall that particular reference I am grateful to the hon. member for bringing it to my attention. In his reference to the proceedings of the broadcasting committee the hon. member referred to the fact that the witness, Mr. Jamieson, who is president of the Canadian association of broadcasters, said in answering the hon. member for Peterborough that in his opinion this was an extremely rare case. In other words, it does not usually happen.

Mr. Herridge: That is what the chairman of the board of broadcast governors said.

Mr. McGrath: That seems to me to be another very good reason why we should not regulate such a matter by statute. It seems to me that would be an extremely dangerous course to follow. I refer now to the proceedings of the broadcasting committee to which the hon. member referred, and I read part of what Mr. Jamieson said in reply to the hon. member for Peterborough:

> Again you would have to take the individual case and assess it on its merits. Let us suppose there were two television stations in a given market. Would the committee consider it reasonable that a station which was in difficulty, for instance, could move over to its competitor and run adds which say: "Don't you think this is a terrible program? Do not look at this. Switch over to our channel." This certainly would be refusing competitor advertising, and it is conceivable that it could happen.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member mind my explaining something?

Mr. McGrath: Not at all.

Mr. Herridge: The point here is that the competition is not to a great extent with the radio station. The competition is with the Nelson daily News because the Graphic News is taking advertising away from that paper. There is where the competition lies. The Nelson News Publishing Company is using its influence in CKLN to overcome that, if possible.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member has referred to a fact that I omitted mentioning, that the owners of the radio station are also the owners of the other competitive newspaper. To me that is another good reason why they should not accept advertising from the Kootenay Graphic News because they are already advertising the Nelson daily News. In our free society surely this man has a right to accept advertising contracts only from those sources he deems desirable. That is the crux of my argument. I submit with deference to the hon. member, to whom we enjoy listening and whose opinions we respect, that in this particular case I believe he would have been much more justified in bringing this matter before the house as a grievance. There is a period during our proceedings when the hon. member could have raised this matter as a grievance. He has brought it up on the orders of the day on several occasions and it has been brought up in the broadcasting committee.

I submit it would be a most dangerous practice for the house to consent of the passage of this legislation which would regulate advertising, because once you start to regulate advertising where do you stop? The next step is to regulate the sale of automobiles, for example. You could go to the most dangerous lengths and regulate the assimilation of news itself. For these reasons I cannot support the legislation.

(Translation):

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words with regard to the bill now before us.

I believe all hon. members are aware of the sense of justice and social sense which characterize the hon. member for Kootenay West. (Mr. Herridge), and I am not surprised to hear him take up the defence of anyone who seems to be victimized.

However, I was agreeably surprised to see him champion the cause of private enterprise, which he calls legitimate private enterprise. I commend him for this.

I also listened to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who stated that it would be most difficult to find a solution, by means of legislation, to the problem stated by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

I think that the hon. member for Kootenay West almost exhausted every means of finding some remedy for that problem in his riding, and I wonder whether this is not a case of abuse which comes very near to being a monopoly.

He stated that he had had some talk with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) and it seems that no steps have been taken to call to order the man who, it seems, proposes to control a certain geographical district.

I want to tell the hon. member for Kootenay West that I sympathize with him and that I am astonished he should have to remind the government which endowed us with the Canadian Bill of Rights, that there is still some part of this country were human rights are violated.

(Text):

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Kootenay West on presenting this bill. From listening to him I take it that briefly these are the facts. In this particular area there is a radio station, CKLN, and two newspapers. One newspaper and the radio station are owned by one company, the Nelson News Publishing Company Limited which the hon. member said was incorporated in 1908. I want to say at the outset that I certainly agree with the spirit of the bill; but the situation is a little different from ordinary free enterprise because a radio or television station secures its right to operate under a licence. Because of that fact these stations enjoy a monopoly in certain sections of the country.

I think I can safely say that whenever I have spoken in the house or outside it I have always stood for free enterprise and against any kind of monopoly, whether it is a state monopoly granted by licence or a capitalistic monopoly as in this case which is granted by licence by the government. A monopoly may also be a provincial monopoly such as we had in the province of Saskatchewan or a capitalistic monopoly such as this one created by a licence from some board.

Now, I want to say again that I agree with the spirit of the bill itself, and I would support the bill. However, there are two or three points I should like to bring to the attention of the house. I know that during the debate on second reading of a bill one does not refer to the sections, but I should like to deal with the spirit of clause 1(b) in which the draftsman has endeavoured to make the Canadian Bill of Rights apply to this bill. I feel that the Canadian Bill of Rights applies to all federal statutes. In so far as the bill of rights is concerned, it may be a good time to say that there are some people even judges and students of jurisprudence, who feel that some of our courts have not given the bill of rights the proper interpretation. This is a general feeling. I think if you read the debates with regard to the bill of rights, you will see it was intended that all federal statutes then on the books should be amended as well as those passed in the future, unless the statute said otherwise.

I should like to come back to a consideration of clause 1(b). I am certain the hon. member for Kootenay West has a legitimate complaint, not only because he could only speak on the radio once or twice a month but because this newspaper was not allowed to advertise over the radio. This would probably be a legitimate complaint. The hon. member read the letter in which the company stated the reason they were not advertising the other newspaper was that they were in the publishing business themselves and they did not want to advertise competition. If I may refer to clause 1(b), I find that the Minister of Justice, upon receiving any complaint, shall ascertain whether or not a licensee has breached in any particular the conditions set out in paragraph (a).

The first complaint that I have about the bill is that it gives too much power to the minister. I know that in this particular government we have a very fair Minister of Justice who has a sense of justice. This has been evident at any time we have heard him in debate. The fact is, though, that this clause gives the minister too much power. We may, at some time in Canada, have a minister of the wrong calibre who might exercise this right to take away the licence of a radio station. Then this bill would create a monopoly because if that happened the member for Kootenay West would not even be on the radio once a month. He would be off the radio because the station would be turned off.

Then, the Minister of Justice, after receiving the complaint may report to the Minister of Transport who can revoke the licence of the radio station.

It is true that in paragraph (d) the radio station may appeal to the exchequer court. As the hon. member for Kootenay West was saying, this was a legitimate complaint and if this bill had become law then station CKLN would have lost its licence because of its failure to advertise this newspaper. Let us suppose it was not a legitimate complaint or at least the radio station believed it was not a legitimate complaint. Then, the station has the right to appeal to the exchequer court. This is all very fine, but the person launching the appeal must pay a solicitor and pay the expenses of the appeal. Unless the court exercises a discretion, however, that licence has lapsed. Sometimes litigation can take from four to six weeks and sometimes judges reserve their decision so that the time may be considerably longer. This radio station might be off the air for a whole year and the hon. member for Kootenay West would not be heard by his constituents for a whole year. This would be particularly unfortunate if it were an election year.

However, under clause 1, paragraph (d) the court can exercise a discretion and allow the station to continue broadcasting. This is only a discretion and it might not be exercised. My first complaint with respect to the bill, therefore, is that it gives too much power to the minister. When you give power to a minister by legislation it really means you are giving power to some officer of the department to exercise a discretion. We often see how that discretion is exercised and sometimes it is not exercised judiciously. I would oppose the bill on that ground. There is also the fact that the radio station or television station would have to appeal then to the exchequer court at their own expense at a time when they may be off the air.

In so far as the bill of rights is concerned, I am happy to learn that the new leader of the N.D.P. group holds the bill of rights in such respect. This is one thing this government has done. The bill of rights has spelled out, for the first time, that we are to have freedom of the press. This is written right in the statute itself. I believe this provision illustrates the fact that the Conservative party and this government have always stood for freedom of expression. I recall that some years ago, and I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay West recalls this, the Social Credit party was elected to power in Alberta and they tried to control the press. They introduced a bill in the legislature which became law but was later declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court of Canada.

The hon. member for Kootenay West referred to Mr. Justice Davis of the Supreme Court of Canada, and cited his judgment to which reference is also made in the headnote of the bill itself. When the hon. member quoted Mr. Justice Davis with approval, he was really quoting from the dissenting judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court of Canada stated in that case very carefully that everyone has a right to decide what business he wants or what business he will reject. The effect of the judgment was to extend what has been the common law of the Anglo Saxons for many years into the field of law covering companies that operate by licence.

Then, I have to agree to some extent with the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Supposing a radio station did not want to advertise Hush magazine, or whatever it is called. Surely, they would have that right. Someone may come along and ask them to advertise "Lady Chatterley's Lover" and, although the Supreme Court of Canada has said it is all right for Canadians to read, perhaps the radio station would not want to lower its standards by advertising that kind of material. I do believe, therefore, that this would be a third ground for rejecting the bill. A person could make his motives look legitimate, convince an officer of the department that such was the case, and cause a station to lose its licence. In consequence, the station would have to appeal. Then the onus is on them to prove their innocence and that, of course, is contrary to our understanding of jurisprudence.

Again, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Kootenay West because I agree with the spirit of the bill. However, the way in which the bill has been drafted has caused me to raise the points I have raised and I believe it may cause more harm than good. In other words, you cannot cure an evil by enacting something worse.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in making a few remarks on this bill I should like to start out by saying that I agree with the principle that if any person or body has been granted a monopoly that monopoly must be used in a fair and equitable manner. This principle that I have stated must specifically apply to competitors of that monopoly; but this is a very difficult situation because if you have a monopoly, who are your competitors? I submit that you do not have any if you have a monopoly such as is set forth in this particular bill.

I know that the hon. member for Kootenay West foresaw this difficulty because he went a little further and defined what he felt a competitor to be, in that he used the words in the section, and I quote:

—for reason only that the person so applying carries on a business that competes with a business in which the licensee has an interest;

In other words it is not to apply against a competitor in the business of broadcasting, but a competitor in some other business which is not defined in the bill.

I realize that the hon. member has taken an injustice, as he sees it, and has built around it a bill which he is presenting to parliament. However I believe that the bill has been narrowed down to such a point that it is not in effect a general matter of legislation but is merely to cover a certain, specific situation, and that it would not properly apply to a lot of other situations that might arise. So I say it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to say what some other person might have as a business which would compete. For that reason I think the bill is deficient.

The next matter relates to the question that certain broadcasting stations, particularly radio stations, do not keep scripts of many of the news items and other programs which are broadcast over them. This is a shortcoming that has turned up on many occasions. If certain things are said, or are alleged to have been said in a broadcast, particularly matters relating to news, on a good many occasions you cannot get the script to determine exactly what was said. Therefore it becomes very difficult to find what reason may have been assigned for refusal to do any broadcast or carry any advertising.

Also I think it would be ineffective because of the difficulty in proving that a refusal to accept advertising arises only for the reason that the competitor has an interest in the business. We have seen a good many instances where it would be practically impossible to say or prove that the only reason a station refused to accept advertising was that the other competitor had an interest in a competing business.

In the first place, if the bill were enacted you would not have the situation which the hon. member has put forward, where a broadcasting station has admitted, or in effect has admitted, that this is the reason it refused to accept the advertising. It would be very difficult, almost impossible, to secure such an admission by a person who is about to have his licence suspended for that very reason. You could not reasonably expect an admission and if you do not have an admission you must have proof that such a refusal was for the sole reason which was given in the bill. Could such a situation be proven?

I would foresee that any person who did not wish to accept advertising from someone could think of a dozen good reasons why he should not do it. He might put forward the excuse that the time which was requested was not available. He might make charges for that type of advertising which would be unreasonable and which would prevent the prospective advertiser from placing his advertising.

I would suggest that a person who wanted to contravene the very narrow provisions of this bill would have no difficulty in doing so.

There has been some reference made in the bill to the Canadian Bill of Rights. Certainly the bill of rights, as enacted, has done a great deal to remove discrimination in matters of this nature. I see it is six o'clock.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: I hope the hon. member understands clearly that I was not complaining about a reduction of my radio time or newspaper space, but does the hon. member realize there is some political advantage in being recognized as the people's David against the Goliath of monopoly?

Mr. Aiken: I would be very pleased to give the hon. member an answer when we resume this debate.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire whether the house leader has had any opportunity of considering the suggestion I made at five o'clock?

Mr. Churchill: That will be considered over the week end. On Monday we propose going ahead with legislation. I shall name five items for consideration so that hon. members may be ready. The order in which I call them may be altered on Monday morning and, if so, I shall advise parties on the opposite side. The items are: the second reading of the Bill C-38, dealing with financial and statistical information, the resolution in the name of the Secretary of State dealing with the universal copyright convention, the resolution in my name dealing with the Veterans Land Act, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, and the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with crown corporations.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think I should bring it to the house leader's attention—and I am glad the Minister of Finance is here—that we are dealing on Monday with legislation and not with the supplementary estimates. If it is a fact, as the Minister of Finance told us repeatedly in this house, and as it was said—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a period for debate. The hon. member who leads the opposition is entitled to inquire about the business of the day but it appears to me that he is entering on a debate of what should be done.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order because I think this is of utmost importance. There are two points I would like to raise in connection with the matter. I do not know if Your Honour was in the chair when at five o'clock I made to the house leader what I thought, after serious consideration, was a reasonable suggestion. I understood consideration was going to be given to that between five and six o'clock and now we are told it will not be considered until the week end.

We were told yesterday and today that the supplementary estimates were of such an important nature, but we are not being asked to deal with these on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is entitled to inquire but not settle the order of government business.

Mr. Churchill: That is news to him.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not trying to settle government business and there has been no such suggestion from me or the opposition on our part, but I did put a plan or suggestion which apparently has not even been considered.

Mr. Churchill: With an ultimatum that it be considered by six o'clock. I said we shall consider it over the week end. We shall operate the business of this house and we do not need to take instruction from the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are making a rotten mess of it.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to allow the leader of the house to make that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should resume his seat. There will be opportunities to discuss the issues that are involved.

Mr. Chevrier: Closure.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I must declare—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order.

Mr. Speaker: Did some hon. member indicate an objection?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): While you are on your feet the hon. gentleman said "closure".

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, sir, I said "closure" but my remarks were not addressed to you. They are addressed to those two hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Eyewash.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

A—Department—

Technical and vocational training assistance—

636. To carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder—payments to the provinces—further amount required, $28,400,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 19, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHEVRIER—REFERENCE TO REPORTED SPEECH BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of a report in the Montreal Star of March 17, 1962 of a speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) reflecting on the conduct of members of the opposition in this house. I should like to read the following extract from that paper:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker in a Montreal address last night criticized delaying tactics which he said were holding up passage of important legislation.
>
> By needless debate of the government's supplementary estimates, he claimed, Liberal members were blocking "legislative enactments we wish to place on the country's statute books."
>
> The Prime Minister laid the blame on a "small group of Liberals in the house—"

That statement is not in accordance with the facts. For example on Thursday of last week, as Your Honour knows, after the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member need not refer to what happened in the house, as that is common knowledge, and furthermore that matter was disposed of at the time. If the hon. member sees a question of privilege affecting members in the remarks as reported, perhaps he could give me some authority or precedent for the proposition he makes.

Mr. Chevrier: First of all I should like to add another statement which substantiates what I have said. Then I shall be glad to give Your Honour some authority. The Prime Minister went on further to say this, and I quote his words:

> "Now," he declared, "we have been held up 14 days by fruitless talk designed to delay the country's affairs. I welcome full discussion but not mere repetition. I don't know the reason. I'll leave the answer to you."

That is an inaccurate statement, because they have not been held up for 14 days.

Then, sir, to come to the point which you raised and which affects the privileges of the opposition in this free parliament, it is this. When the Prime Minister seeks by statements outside the house, which are not supported by the facts, to restrict freedom of debate within the house—and according to the same press report that is what the Prime Minister was trying to do—I do not think the rules of the house permit the Prime Minister to make these reflections upon the members of the opposition, particularly having regard to the fact that the Minister of Finance indicated clearly that consideration of these estimates should be completed by the middle of the month, the Prime Minister himself said they should be completed by the end of the month, and the house leader said that they—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's discussion of the matter is, I think, ranging unnecessarily widely. The point he makes is that there is a breach of privilege if an hon. member makes statements outside of the house that are critical of the conduct of members in the house. I have no recollection that such an outside speech has been held in the past such as to raise a question of privilege, particularly where it was a general imputation against a group and not critical of an individual; nor is there anything in the report of the speech from which the hon. member has read to indicate that what was imputed to members of the opposition generally was something which would be morally improper or wrong.

There have been a good many instances in the house when members on both sides have accused those on the other side of blocking legislation, and that has not generally been held to be improper even when said in the house. Therefore unless the hon. member can find some precedent for the point he raises, it seems to me that he would have difficulty making out a case of infringement of the privileges of the house. Perhaps the party involved, the Prime Minister, would like to comment on the point raised.

Mr. Chevrier: May I complete my point? Your Honour has asked me to give you a precedent. I think a precedent has been established by Your Honour, because what in effect the Prime Minister was doing was repeating outside the house what Your Honour rebuked the Prime Minister for doing inside the house; because Your Honour—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member proceeds, may I say that in my view the circumstances there were quite different. What was objected to there was a remark made following an answer to a question, a remark made in the house that was related obviously to the conduct of the members who were then asking questions—

Mr. Chevrier: Concerning the business of the house.

Mr. Speaker: —and in my view that charge or imputation then made was not a proper one to be introduced into an answer to a question. If it had been a general observation that the opposition was employing tactics which were obstructing the procedure of the house I would not have found that objectionable because that has been done from time to time, and, although it is not desirable it is not something that has been regarded as a breach of privilege. Unless the hon. member has a further precedent, I consider that to be a distinguishable circumstance.

Mr. Chevrier: May I be allowed to give this additional precedent? The statement made by the Prime Minister outside the house was not factual; it was not in accordance with the facts.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I now give the facts? On supplementary estimates in—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the Prime Minister proceeds, may I indicate that what is before the house is a question of privilege, and I do not think the question of privilege is to be disposed of on a verification of the facts as to the circumstances which give rise to the question of privilege. The question of whether what the Prime Minister is alleged to have said actually was said is a fact that is relevant; and if it was said, whether it then raised any matter of privilege. I would not consider it appropriate to attempt to establish the fact of whether or not the opposition has been employing tactics which are delaying.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, you have allowed the hon. gentleman to make statements that are not in accordance with the facts, and I want to clarify the record so there will be no doubt.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Speak to the question of privilege. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think I have the floor now.

Mr. Speaker: If the point of order relates to what the Prime Minister is about to say I will hear it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, you have made a ruling that the right hon. gentleman may speak to this matter in so far as it involves a question of privilege. The right hon. gentleman now is about to ignore your ruling and is doing the very thing Your Honour said he should not do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows more about what the right hon. gentleman is about to say than I do, then. The Prime Minister is at liberty to deal with matters brought forward by the hon. member for Laurier. This is one of the basic rules of debate. The only matter about which I was cautioning the Prime Minister was not to become involved, as I thought he might be from his opening sentence, in an attempt to demonstrate factually what the conduct of the opposition has been.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Were I to rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, every time I saw a statement the opposition made outside of the house which was not in accordance with the facts, we would not get very much business done. I do not follow that course. However, in view of the statements made by the hon. gentleman, I think I will let the record answer him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order. The Prime Minister is now seeking to do what you said a few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker, he could not do.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I recall it, the hon. member for Laurier, in his statement, said that what the opposition was accused of was not true. It seems to me it would be improper to prevent the Prime Minister from replying.

Mr. Chevrier: Your Honour did not give me an opportunity to prove that what was said by the Prime Minister was untrue. I wanted to do that, but Your Honour interrupted me. Now Your Honour is giving the Prime Minister the right to put the facts on the record. I have facts here, and I think my facts are equally as accurate as those which the Prime Minister intends to produce.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Prime Minister proceeds, may I say this. In my opinion there is no question of privilege involved in the facts which have been brought forward by the hon. member for Laurier. However, certain statements have been made, and I think it is only proper that the Prime Minister should have the opportunity to controvert those statements. I would hope that he would keep himself within that category.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find great difficulty in putting these facts before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I think the point of order has been sufficiently dealt with, and the course should be to give the Prime Minister an opportunity to reply. He has not yet had an opportunity to say what he has to say.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the facts will speak for themselves, and that may be the reason for the points of order that are being raised so indiscriminately. In 1962 the number of days spent on supplementary estimates up to March 16 was 14. I now take a period of time while we were in opposition to set out a comparison in 1952-53, one day—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Prime Minister has misunderstood me, because if he continued in that vein he would really be debating the issue of whether or not the conduct of the opposition amounts to obstruction. I do not consider that that point is in issue. The question that was raised was whether there had been a breach of the privileges of the house in what the Prime Minister had said, to the effect that he is now endeavouring to substantiate. The substantiation of what the Prime Minister said would, to my mind, be irrelevant. It opens a debate on the conduct of the opposition rather than on a question of privilege. I had only given the Prime Minister the floor to comment as far as was necessary on the charges that were made by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know how I can answer the allegations without placing the facts before the house, and I simply want to point out certain facts, that in the period from 1952-53—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, you have ruled on the point; you have ruled that the Prime Minister cannot continue, and the Prime Minister continues to defy that ruling. He should be the first one in this house to obey your ruling.

Mr. Walker: You don't want the truth.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must at least allow enough latitude until the tenor of the Prime Minister's remarks is apparent. I had indicated to the Prime Minister that an attempt, by the introduction of other evidence, to demonstrate that what has happened amounts to delaying tactics was irrelevant. I think that is the correct view. The Prime Minister is at liberty to comment on what has taken place here in this house in this session, insofar as it has been raised by the hon. member for Laurier, but I would consider it improper to go beyond that to endeavour to establish, by comparison and debate, that fact which is not really at issue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how I can answer such an obviously transparent suggestion by the opposition that a question of privilege arises. I point out with great deference, that in the period of five years between 1952 and 1956, supplementary estimates took nine days.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Robichaud: Defying the Speaker again.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We must allow the hon. member reasonable latitude to make his point. He has to express his view.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The total number of days taken up on supplementary estimates was nine days, for five years.

Mr. Benidickson: Why not 1957?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I appreciate the position Your Honour is in, trying to accommodate both sides with a sense of fairness, but Your Honour has made a ruling and the Prime Minister has now twice, in my judgment, defied that ruling. If it is felt that there should be a discussion of this matter on the merits there is a procedure open to the house, and that is to allow both sides to discuss the merits of the question. But the Prime Minister, although he is the leader of the house, has now risen for the second time and each time he has risen he has defied your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the hon. member has some justification for his point, but I suggest to him that he is prejudging the issue. The Prime Minister must be given some latitude to deal with the matter in his own discretion. I have indicated the lines which I think are appropriate, and I am sure the house will give the Prime Minister an opportunity to comment, as he is entitled to do, on what was said by the hon. member for Laurier, without being unduly restrictive and sensitive. If I find that it goes beyond what I consider to be the appropriate course, I shall take the necessary steps.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On that, Mr. Speaker, I am simply pointing out that the hon. gentlemen's sensibilities are easily aroused. A statement has been made that I said something that apparently was unfair.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; untrue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What I did was simply point out that in a period of five years, when we were equally careful in examining estimates, we used up nine days on supplementary estimates, and so far 14 days have been used up by the opposition this session. I can only repeat, having read each and every line of what has been said, that it is very apparent that repetition is not foreign to the opposition. Over and over again they have said the same things. More than that I need not say.

Mr. Hellyer: Listen to the master calling.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Compared with what happened over that period of five years, what is happening in this session of parliament drives anyone who gives it consideration to a conclusion which I am prepared to accept.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether or not the hon. member for Kootenay West wishes to intervene on this point—

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If not, I will hear the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On what subject?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the merits now. We are going to have a debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said that he has been accused, by the statement which I raised on a question of privilege, that what he said in Montreal was unfair. That is not what I said; I said that the statement made by the Prime Minister was untrue, and I would like to prove that the statement he made was untrue, since he took time to deal with exactly the same thing by putting on the record some of the facts which he said he had.

We know very well what happened in this house on Thursday. On Thursday there was far more time taken up by hon. members on the other side of the house than there was by hon. members on this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Laurier will agree, and I am sure the house has come to the conclusion by this time, that we are engaged in a perfectly fruitless debate. The hon. member for Laurier did, as was his right, raise objection to what was said on the basis that it involved a matter of privilege. In my view it does not raise a breach of the privileges of the house. There has been some debate on both sides as to the merits of the accusation which, as I said, is not relevant. We can go on and have a first class debate on that issue, but it would be entirely irregular and out of order.

If the hon. member for Laurier has nothing further to add except to demonstrate the propriety of the conduct of the opposition, I suggest that he do it by letting us get on with the work of the house.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Chevrier: I have something more, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister has said that 14 days were taken up. That is not a fact. We have been dealing with further supplementary estimates No. 3 since the 8th day of March. That is seven days—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about group No. 2?

Mr. Chevrier: —and not 14 days, as the Prime Minister said. As we well know, we were told by the Minister of Finance, first, that these supplementary estimates No. 3 had to be passed and disposed of by March 15. We were then told by the Prime Minister in this speech in Montreal that they had to be completed by the end of the month.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Chevrier: Then the leader of the house felt they were of such little urgency that it was not necessary to go on with supplementary estimates today; he announced on Friday that we should go on with legislation. So that we have three degrees of urgency; that laid down by the Minister of Finance, which was very urgent; that laid down by the Prime Minister, which was less urgent, and that laid down by the leader of the house, which was that there was no urgency at all because we would go on with legislation on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the Minister of Finance. Those other hon. members who wish to speak might send notice to the Chair.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can contribute to the calm which reigns sometimes in this chamber.

Mr. Hellyer: You can do that best by not speaking.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What I said last week concerning the urgency of the disposal of the supplementary estimates then under discussion in committee of supply was absolutely correct, as I do not need to say. The carrying of those estimates to a decision is highly urgent. I pointed out the reasons that payments are being delayed because we have no authority to make them, payments to contractors and also payment of wages in certain cases.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not what you said the other day.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was the situation. The discussion of these estimates went on an additional day, an eighth day, last Friday, and one item had been passed in that period. In the eight days 22 items have been passed.

The 14 days that were referred to by the Prime Minister were six days spent on supplementary estimates No. 2 and now eight days spent on supplementary estimates No. 3, and of the latter we have so far carried in committee of supply only 22, a minority of them, and there are still many items to be carried.

I have indicated that there will be more estimates to be brought down, the final supplementary estimates for the year. What the Prime Minister referred to as estimates requiring to be passed by the end of the month are all those supplementary estimates including those which I hope to introduce a little later.

And as for the announcement made by my colleague the leader of the house last Friday, in all fairness the house well knows that the only reason the Minister of Veterans Affairs announced on that occasion that we would be taking legislation today instead of proceeding with the supplementary estimates is that he had simply come to the conclusion that it was hopeless to expect to get any of these estimates passed, and he was hopeful, then, that with a change—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member interrupts me when I am seeking to contribute to good will in the chamber.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is this—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but we have not disposed of the first question of privilege yet, and I cannot entertain a second one until this is disposed of.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I had nearly finished, Mr. Speaker. I hope the hon. member for Laurier realizes that I was speaking reasonably and trying to contribute to calm and good will in the house.

Mr. Benidickson: What a change.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The announcement made on Friday by my colleague the leader of the house did not subtract anything whatsoever from the urgency which the government attaches to these estimates and the urgency of the plea I made to the whole house in relation to the passage of those estimates when I made that plea last Thursday. It was simply that we had come to the point where we thought it was apparent we could not get any of the estimates passed, and my colleague thought that with a change of business for today there perhaps would be some sense of order and some sense of desire reestablished to proceed with the business of the house.

This is extremely urgent business, and it is becoming more and more urgent with the passage of each day. I simply renew the appeal I made to all parties in the house last Thursday.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I think we would be more impressed by what has been said by the Minister of Finance if he had taken some cognizance of the offer made by my friend the hon. member for Laurier, which will be found on page 1900 of Hansard of Friday, that if the minister would indicate in detail what those urgent items were the opposition would be prepared to deal with them immediately and facilitate an appropriation bill which would meet the immediate needs of the government without restricting the rights of the opposition, and that courteous offer has not even been replied to by the government.

Mr. Speaker: We will proceed with the business of the order paper, and when we reach the item "motions", if there is anything further to be said about the business of the house we will renew the discussion then.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES 1961-62

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1962, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

RAILWAY ACT

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUBMISSION RESPECTING SECTION 182

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 15—The Minister of Transport—The following proposed motion:—

That the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines be empowered to examine and inquire into a submission which has been addressed to the chairman of the committee by the national legislative committee, International Railway Brotherhoods, concerning the provisions of section 182 of the Railway Act and suggesting changes in the said section which would provide for the payment of compensation to employees affected by line abandonments; or by the closing or removal of any station or divisional point; or by the changing of operating centres or terminal points.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*C.N.R. BUS SERVICE, FORT-WILLIAM-LONGLAC

Question No. 218—Mr. Fisher:

1. Have any of the officials of the Canadian National Railways been negotiating with Greyhound bus lines or any other bus lines with a view to a sale, lease, or rent of the bus service presently being carried on by the C.N.R. between Fort William and Longlac, Ontario; and, (a) if not, is the railway giving any consideration to making any efforts to sell this bus route (b) if so, at what stage in the negotiations is the principle being held to by the C.N.R. that the security and pensions of the employees on this line are protected?

2. Does the C.N.R. consider that this bus service, alone and in unison with express and other truck service, is a profitable one?

3. Who has been carrying on negotiations?

4. Does the price for such a sale, and/or the equipment, have to pass the scrutiny of both the board of transport commissioners and the cabinet?

Mr. Martini: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Negotiations are in progress, and should a sale of the service take place the labour agreement under which the employees operate stipulates the rights of the employees in the particular circumstances.

2. The bus service was established in the first instance in substitution for train service thereby producing a less expensive operation.

3. Officers of the department of highway services.

4. No.

*CAMPBELLTON-CROSS POINT BRIDGE

Question No. 231—Mr. Robichaud:

1. What was the amount estimated by the Department of Public Works for the construction of the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge, including the approaches on the Quebec and New Brunswick sides of the said bridge?

2. To whom was the contract or contracts awarded, and at what price?

3. Has the work been completed, and what amount has been paid to date to the contractor or contractors?

4. Are there any claims outstanding from suppliers or others; and, if so, (a) what are the names of the claimants, and the amount claimed by each (b) what is the name of the contractor from whom such claims are outstanding (c) has the department been informed that one of the contractors on the said bridge had registered a subsidiary company or corporation within the province of New Brunswick; and, if so, what was the name of the said company or corporation, and who were the provisional directors?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I have the answer here, but since it is lengthy I wonder whether the hon. member and the house would be good enough to consent to having this answer printed in Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to is as follows:]

1. $4,339,000.

2. By federal government:

Ralph Sharpe, Campbellton, New Brunswick, $101,405.00.

Belle Construction Ltee, Isle Maligne, Quebec, $1,261,592.70.

Canadian Bridge division, Dominion Steel & Coal Corporation, Ltd., Walkerville, Ontario, $2,956,224.60.

L. D. Dimock, Campbellton, New Brunswick, $18,100.54.

By province of Quebec:

Quemont Construction Ltee, $410,602.00

Stanley C. McCallum, Gaspe, $26,735.

3. The work undertaken directly by the federal government has been completed. In agreement with the provinces of New Brunswick and Quebec, it has been decided to instal lighting, but this work has not yet been started.

Amounts paid to contractors to date are:

By federal government:

Ralph Sharpe, Campbellton, New Brunswick, $50,050.71.

Belle Construction Ltee, Isle Maligne, Quebec, $1,617,553.90.

Canadian Bridge division, Dominion Steel & Coal Corporation, Ltd., Walkerville, Ontario, $3,009,962.31.

L. D. Dimock, Campbellton, New Brunswick, $23,542.53.

By province of Quebec:

Quemont Construction Ltee, $425,520.16.

Stanley C. McCallum, Gaspe, $26,735.

4. No; there are no outstanding claims by contractors or suppliers against the department.

*SUBSIDY ON CORN IMPORTED INTO NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 271—Mr. Robichaud:

Has the Nova Scotia government made a request to the federal government for a subsidy to Nova Scotia farmers to help meet the cost of corn imported from the United States; and, if so, what decision, if any, has been rendered on this request?

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. No request has been received from the Nova Scotia government for a subsidy to Nova Scotia farmers to help meet the costs of corn imported from the United States. However, requests have been made by the Nova Scotia government and by others for measures to bring down the cost of feed grains to farmers in the maritime provinces, and this matter is under consideration.

MEASLES VACCINE

Question No. 276—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. What progress has been made by the Department of National Health and Welfare in the testing of measles vaccine?

2. Has any testing actually been done by the department; and, if not, when will the testing procedures commence?

Answer by: Mr. Monteith (Perth):

1. The virus laboratories of the department's laboratory of hygiene have prepared standard reagents and developed procedures for testing measles vaccines.

2. As mentioned above, the virus laboratories have developed the necessary laboratory testing procedures. However no application has been made by manufacturers of measles vaccines for a licence to distribute such vaccines in Canada and no such vaccines have been submitted to the department for testing. Although preliminary field trials in the United States, Canada and elsewhere have been carried out by various scientific groups and manufacturers, no measles vaccines have been licensed by any government and no such vaccines are commercially available as yet anywhere.

MINIMUM PAY RATES, FEDERAL CONTRACTS, EDMONTON-RED DEER

Question No. 278—Mr. Herridge:

What are the minimum rates of pay for the following categories of workmen employed on federal government contracts at Edmonton, Calgary, and Red Deer, Alberta; and when did each minimum rate enter into effect; bricklayers, insulators, millwrights, boilermakers (tanks), boilermakers (field), boilermakers (helpers), ironworkers (erection), ironworkers (rod men), electricians, operating engineers, operating engineers (road builders), labourers, sheetmetal workers, carpenters, plumbers and steam fitters?

Answer by: Mr. Thrasher:

The following is a list of the minimum wage rates, with the effective date indicated in brackets, approved for construction contracts at Edmonton, Calgary and Red Deer for those classifications which correspond to the classification titles used by this department:

	Edmonton	Calgary	Red Deer
Bricklayers	$2.90 (Apr. 19/61)	$2.90 (July 3/61)	$2.60 (Aug. 1/61)
Electricians	2.95 (Apr. 1/61)	2.90 (June 12/61)	2.50 (Aug. 1/61)
Labourers	1.90 (May 10/61)	1.90 (May 1/61)	1.40 (Sept. 1/60)
Sheet metal workers	2.85 (Oct. 1/60)	2.75 (Oct. 1/61)	2.55 (May 1/61)
Carpenters	2.65 (June 29/61)	2.65 (July 6/61)	2.35 (Sept. 15/61)
Plumbers and steamfitters	2.80 (Oct. 1/60)	2.75 (Apr. 1/61)	2.55 (May 1/61)

No rates have been established for millwrights, boilermakers (tank), boilermakers' helpers or operating engineers (road builders).

The other classifications in question are not designated in the same terms in Department of Labour records. The most closely comparable classifications and relevant information therefor are as follows:

	Edmonton	Calgary	Red Deer
Insulation mechanics	$2.30 (July 1/60)	$2.60 (Apr. 1/61)	$2.60 (Apr. 1/61)
Boilermakers on construction or erection	3.05 (Jan. 1/62)	3.05 (Jan. 1/62)	3.05 (Jan. 1/62)
Structural steel workers	2.83 (July 5/60)	2.83 (July 5/60)	2.83 (July 5/60)
Rodmen (reinforcing)	2.30 (June 12/61)	2.35 (July 1/61)	2.30 (Oct. 1/61)
Operators (draglines, cranes, shovels, etc.)	2.40 (Apr. 1/60)	2.40 (Apr. 1/60)	2.40 (Apr. 1/61)

D.E.W. LINE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Question No. 280—Mr. Herridge:

Are job opportunities available to Canadians on the D.E.W. line; and, if so, do officers of the unemployment insurance commission give information on these job opportunities to applicants on request, and accept applications for them?

Answer by: Mr. Thrasher:

Concerning recruitment of workers for D.E.W. line sites, job opportunities on these operations are available to Canadians and recruitment of workers is done through the facilities of N.E.S. local offices.

In this respect, however, vacancies are not distributed to all offices when it is known that applicants are available in certain areas. The availability of these applicants is determined from N.E.S. records and from results of previous recruitment.

In regard to vacancies which are in short supply, these are made known to all N.E.S. local offices, and information in respect to these opportunities is made available to applicants registered in these occupations and to others inquiring about employment prospects on D.E.W. line operations.

*USE OF MAILS FOR LOTTERIES AND POOLS

Question No. 283—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is the Post Office Department continuing its campaign to stamp out the use of the post for lottery and pool purposes?
2. If so, to what effect in 1961 in terms of investigations, refusals of mailing privileges, etc.?
3. Has the department noted that the Toronto evening papers print British football pool results and that one of them prints a "tip sheet" or forecast of probable winners?
4. If so, has the department any indication whether this newspaper service is for Canadians who play the British football pools through the mail?
5. Has the department any estimate of the amount of mail from Canada which gets through to Liverpool from Canadians playing the football pools?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the five parts of this question are as follows:

1. Since, under the provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada, the operation of lotteries or sport pools is illegal, the Post Office Department has no alternative but to take all possible steps with a view to preventing the use of the Canadian mails in any way, in connection with such illegal activities. The department is therefore continuing the same practices in this regard it has followed for an extended period.

2. During the calendar year 1961, letters warning of the prohibited use of the Canadian mails for lottery and sport pool purposes, were sent to 682 Canadian residents. During the same period, mailing facilities were withdrawn from 87 Canadian residents as a result of their having used the mails for lottery or sport pool purposes after having been warned of the prohibited use of the mails for such purposes. Seventy one of these prohibitory orders were subsequently cancelled during the calendar year 1961. During the same year, Canadian mailing facilities were also withdrawn from 1652 persons or firms in foreign countries who were found to be using the mails for lottery or sport pool purposes.

3, 4, and 5. No.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—DISBURSEMENTS AND REQUESTS

Question No. 284—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. What is the total amount of money dispensed by the medical research council since its inception?
2. What is the total amount of money requested by universities, individual researchers, and all other applicants from the medical research council since its inception?

Answer by: Mr. Churchill:

The medical research council was established on November 14, 1960. For the balance of the fiscal year 1960-61, the council assumed responsibility for discharging the financial commitments of the national research council's division of medical research which had been disbanded. In 1960-61, expenditure for medical research was $2,308,352.

During the fiscal year 1961-62, applications to the medical research council for research grants in various categories, personnel support in the form of postdoctorate fellowships and associateships, and special activities, totalled $4,600,390. Expenditures for the same period have been $3,300,000, the total amount available for the program.

Applications received to date for 1962-63 total $5,552,180. In anticipation of a budgetary allotment of $4,300,000 for the coming fiscal year, the medical research council, at recent meetings, has already given approval in principle to expenditures totalling $4,065,965. Further grants will be considered at meetings of the council in June and November, 1962.

*NATIONAL PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL—LABOUR REPRESENTATION

Question No. 285—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the Prime Minister received representations or complaints from George Burt, Canadian director of the United Auto Workers, to the effect that no representatives of the heavy industry unions were invited to attend the Kingston meeting of the national productivity council?
2. Did the Prime Minister receive complaints or representations from Murray Cotterill, public relations director of the United Steelworkers of America, to the effect that no representatives of the steelworkers union were invited to attend the Kingston meeting of the national productivity council?
3. Did the Prime Minister seek the assistance of the Canadian labour congress in selecting representatives of organized labour to attend the Kingston meeting of the national productivity council; and, if not, on what basis were the selections made?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answers are as follows:

1. I am informed that a search of the files has failed to produce such representations or those asked for in part 2.

3. The Kingston meeting of labour and management representatives to discuss labour-management co-operation and other aspects of productivity was sponsored by the national productivity council. The senior representatives of both management and organized labour asked to attend the meeting were chosen solely by the council and invitations were sent to a broad selection of both sides of industry. I am informed that in choosing the representatives of organized labour to be invited to attend the Kingston meeting, officials of the Canadian Labour Congress were consulted fully.

CONSUMER INDEBTEDNESS

Question No. 286—Mr. Matheson:

As of the last available date, what is: (a) the total consumer indebtedness of Canadians (b) the comparable figure in each of the last ten years (c) the annual rate change in consumer debt?

Answer by: Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

Questions

(a) As of December 31, 1961, finance company and retail dealer credit extended to consumers totalled $2,349 million. Chartered bank unsecured personal loans totalled $1,030 million. The total of these items was $3,379 million.

(b) Comparable figures in each of the last ten years are as follows (in $ million):

Year ending December 31	Finance co. and retail dealer credit extended to consumers	Chartered bank unsecured personal loans*	Total of these items
1952	1,073	242	1,315
1953	1,316	308	1,624
1954	1,392	352	1,744
1955	1,629	441	2,070
1956	1,910	435	2,345
1957	1,968	421	2,388
1958	2,030	553	2,583
1959	2,205	719	2,924
1960	2,337	857	3,194
1961	2,349	1,030	3,379

*Source: Bank of Canada.

(c) The annual rate of change in the totals of the above items was 10.5 per cent.

MORTGAGE INDEBTEDNESS

Question No. 287—Mr. Matheson:

What is the total mortgage indebtedness of the Canadian home owner as of the latest available date?

Answer by: Mr. Walker:

This figure is not available but it is estimated at the end of 1959 total mortgage indebtedness, including mortgage debt on non-residential property, on rental dwellings and on owner-occupied dwellings, amounted to $10.4 billion. Of this amount approximately one half is attributed to home ownership.

*JAMES COYNE—PENSION PAYMENTS

Question No. 288—Mr. Fisher:

Has Mr. James Coyne, a former governor of the Bank of Canada received any moneys, either on a regular basis or lump sum, from the contributory pension plan of the Bank of Canada; and, if so, how much and on what dates?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This answer I give on information from the Bank of Canada.

The Bank of Canada pension fund is a separate and distinct fund made up of past contributions by the staff and the bank, plus accrued earnings thereon. It is not the practice to disclose information regarding the details of payments made to individual retired employees out of the fund.

Mr. Hellyer: Since when?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am told always.

*BANK OF CANADA PENSION BY-LAW

Question No. 289—Mr. Fisher:

1. What further consideration has been given by the board of directors of the Bank of Canada regarding rule No. 17 of the bank's pension by-law which was suspended pending further consideration? (See Hansard, page 8979, Sept. 27, 1961).

2. Has any action been taken recently which would affect the pension position of Mr. James Coyne, a former governor?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer is as follows:

1. Not a matter of public record.

2. No.

*EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SMUGGLING BY MEMBERS OF COMMISSIONS

Question No. 291—Mr. Herridge:

1. Have any members of the Department of External Affairs engaged in smuggling while in Indo-China; and, if so, (a) what action has been taken against them (b) were they protected by diplomatic immunity while in Indo-China?

2. Whether or not they were formerly protected by diplomatic immunity, has consideration been given to returning these men to Indo-China so that they may be prosecuted in accordance with the laws of the country or countries concerned (Viet Nam, Laos, or Cambodia)?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer is as follows:

1.(a) Immediately upon receipt of information about improper activities on the part of certain members of the international supervisory commission staff, an investigation was instituted and the individuals concerned were brought back to Canada to be questioned by the appropriate authorities. Written confessions were obtained from them and they were suspended from the Department of External Affairs, pending final investigations and dismissal. Under Canadian law dismissal is the extent of the punishment which can be given in the case of these two men.

The Department of Justice and the Department of External Affairs have been considering the extension of extraterritorial jurisdiction over Canadian government employees abroad. Last summer the commission on uniformity of legislation, consisting of the assistant deputy attorneys general or senior solicitors of the provinces examined this proposal, and detailed legislation is now being prepared to amend the Criminal Code in this respect.

(b) There was no question of diplomatic immunity involved in the case of any of the Canadians, civilian or military, who were alleged to have been engaged in smuggling. These activities were discovered by the Canadian authorities and dealt with by them as expeditiously as possible. All those concerned were returned to Canada where a full scale investigation into the allegations made against them could be carried out.

The local authorities made no representations to the Canadian authorities concerning these allegations and therefore the question of their liability under the laws of another country has never been raised.

2. Answered by answer to 1(b).

SABLE ISLAND EAST BEACON LIGHT

Question No. 293—Mr. Morris:

1. Has an automatic daylight-controlled acetylene valve been installed for operation of the unattended acetylene beacon light at Sable island east lighthouse?
2. Does the valve extinguish the light during daylight hours?
3. Does it reignite each evening?
4. Is there an additional valve and control to monitor the main light at night?
5. Does failure of the main light cause the second valve to ignite an emergency light; and, if so, at what interval?
6. How many failures have occurred in the system since it commenced operation, and to what was failure due?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Yes.
4. Yes.
5. Yes; 2¼ minutes.
6. There was one failure of the east light because the department's supply vessel was delayed in reaching Sable island and replenishment of gas was thereby delayed. In this interval the stand-by acetylene light came into operation automatically.

HOUSING LOANS FOR FALL-OUT SHELTERS

Question No. 294—Mr. Pitman:

1. What has been the breakdown by provinces of successful applications under provisions for National Housing Act loans for new houses for allowances for fall-out shelters to January 31, 1962?
2. What has been the breakdown by provinces of loans for the construction of fall-out shelters under the home improvement loan provision of the National Housing Act?
3. How many of these successful applications have come from the Ottawa area?

Answer by: Mr. Walker:

1. Number of N.H.A. loans, for new houses, which included allowances for fall-out shelters, to January 31, 1962.

Newfoundland	1
Prince Edward Island	nil
Nova Scotia	nil
New Brunswick	1
Quebec	30
Ontario	13
Manitoba	2
Saskatchewan	1
Alberta	11
British Columbia	3
Canada	62

2. Number of N.H.A. home improvement loans for fall-out shelters, to January 31, 1962.

Newfoundland	nil
Prince Edward Island	nil
Nova Scotia	nil
New Brunswick	4
Quebec	17
Ontario	27
Manitoba	2
Saskatchewan	10
Alberta	18
British Columbia	16
Canada	94

3. Number of fall-out shelters in the Ottawa area included in items 1 and 2 above—5.

*BANK OF CANADA PENSION FUND

Question No. 298—Mr. Fisher:

1. What authority has the Minister of Finance or any other minister in the supervision of the pension fund of the Bank of Canada?
2. Has this authority been questioned in any way or been the subject of any discussion on the part of the government and/or the directors of the Bank of Canada; and, if so, to what effect?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer is as follows:

1. None.
2. Answered by 1.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the answers given to starred questions 289 and 298. I am not certain whether I should put a question or raise a matter of privilege. These starred questions were placed on the order paper to bring up to date information given last year by the Minister of Finance. Instead of raising a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would permit me to ask him a question. What distinction does he make between the information that he gave last year on the pension by-law and on the supervision of the pension fund and his answer today, in which he gave no information?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the case of the one question I was asked to give an answer concerning payments made to a particular retired employee of the bank. That was the question as I understood it. I referred the matter to the bank for information and I gave an answer on information received. The bank has never followed the policy of disclosing payments made to retired employees.

The hon. member will recall that last summer we were dealing with a particular pension by-law. If he is referring to question 289 concerning the by-law, I may say that again I have given the answer with which I was furnished. The hon. member may know that I had some information on that subject which I gave to the public last summer, to the effect that the board of governors of the bank at its meeting on July 22, 1961 decided to seek a legal opinion on the validity of the bank's pension by-law and in particular rule 17 of that by-law. On the same day the board adopted a resolution suspending rule 17 of the by-law pending further consideration by the board, and it is my information that that continues to be the position.

*DOMINION-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT RESPECTING HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 302—Mr. Racine:

Under the agreement entered into by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the provinces, does the power of initiative, with respect to the building of hospitals, as well as to the choice of sites therefor, rest with the federal department or with the provinces?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Federal financial assistance toward building of hospitals is provided under the hospital construction grant, which is one of the national health grants made available to the provinces.

Questions

The federal government does not take the initiative in connection with the choice of sites, as hospital planning in general comes within the area of provincial responsibility. Although the initial request for a new hospital usually comes from the local community concerned, the provinces generally seek to relate such requests to over-all needs.

*FEDERAL BUILDING, EAST BEAUCEVILLE

Question No. 303—Mr. Racine:

Has the Department of Public Works acquired a parcel of land in East Beauceville for the construction of a federal building; and, if so, what was the amount of the transaction, with whom was the transaction made, and on what date?

Mr. Walker: The answer is as follows:

1. Yes.
2. $16,000.
3. Lorenzo Mathieu.
4. Deed dated September 26, 1961.

*DOMINION-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT RESPECTING VOCATIONAL SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 306—Mr. Racine:

Under the agreement entered into with the provinces concerning technical and vocational training, does the power of initiative, with respect to the building of schools, as well as to the choice of sites therefor, rest with the federal government or with the provincial governments?

Mr. Thrasher: Under the technical and vocational training agreements entered into with the provinces, the power of initiative with respect to the building of schools, as well as to the choice of sites, rests with the provincial governments.

MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION, NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Question No. 307—Mr. Hellyer:

1. How many original motion pictures have been produced, by or for, the national film board in each of the last five years?
2. How many original motion pictures have been produced for the national film board by private Canadian producers in each of the last five years?

*CL-41 JET TRAINER—DESIGN DELAYS

Question No. 308—Mr. Herridge:

1. Has any communication been received from aircraft lodge 712 of the international association of machinists, Montreal, protesting design delays by the R.C.A.F. which prevent the production of the jet trainer CL-41?

2. If so, are there design delays and what is their cause; when is it expected that the CL-41 will go into production; and what answer has been made to aircraft lodge 712?

Mr. O'Hurley:

1. I received a delegation from this union on March 14, during the afternoon.

2. There are no design delays in this program. As for the last part of the question, I cannot say definitely one way or the other when this program will go ahead, as there is still approval to be obtained.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

LETTER FROM MARITIME RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 292—Mr. Fisher:

Has the government recently received a request from Mr. A. R. Buckler, 90 Park street, Kentville, N.S., as president of the maritime retired federal civil service association, seeking an adjustment in pensions to better meet the present cost of living; and, if so, what was the date of the request, the name of the minister who replied to it, and the substance of the reply?

MILITARY TRAINING EXPENDITURES IN MONTREAL CATHOLIC SCHOOLS

Question No. 309—Mr. Dupuis:

1. What amounts has the Department of National Defence paid during 1959, 1960, and 1961 for the military training of cadets and students (militia) attending the schools of the Catholic school board of Montreal?

2. What are the names of the officers (with addresses) being paid in each of these schools, and the amounts paid to each of them in each of the said years?

3. What amount has been paid to each of the following schools for the maintenance of uniforms, rifles, equipment, etc.:

(1) Chomedey de Maisonneuve, 1820 Morgan st., Montreal;

(2) Jean-Baptiste Meilleur, 2237 Fullum st., Montreal;

4. What amount has been paid to the officials of each of the said schools?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the house leader and ask what conclusion the minister came to with respect to the proposal which was made on behalf of the opposition at five o'clock on Friday evening, and which the minister undertook to consider over the week end?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The proposal made by the hon. member for Laurier was examined. The decision was reached to go ahead with the supplementary estimates in the order in which they stand in the book.

Mr. Chevrier: Having regard to the change of business as indicated by the minister's office to me this morning, namely a change to supplementary estimates from legislation which was announced on Friday, and which was to have been gone on with today, may I ask the house leader what made him change his mind with reference to the order of business?

Mr. Churchill: I agreed to consider over the week end the proposition which was put forward by the hon. member for Laurier at five minutes to five o'clock on Friday. He might have communicated with me earlier in the day with regard to the matter, but he threw it into the house then and issued an ultimatum to the effect that he had to have a decision by six o'clock. This ultimatum I refused to accept. Over the week end we decided to go ahead with the supplementary estimates as we are now doing.

Mr. Chevrier: I would appreciate it if the minister would answer my question.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER AND NATIONAL GRID—MEETING WITH B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance on a matter that is of national significance and is causing national curiosity. Has the minister met with the premier of British Columbia with respect to the Columbia river or the national grid, and has he anything to report to the house at this stage?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to inform the house that I had a meeting with Premier Bennett over the week end in order to discuss the Columbia river development. We had a two hour meeting. I think it was a very good meeting. It was a very friendly meeting.

Mr. Benidickson: That is a change.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not one of the federal ministers attending the dominion-provincial conference to discuss a national power grid in Canada. Premier Bennett is attending that meeting. I had the pleasure of meeting with all the delegates to that conference at noon today and had the pleasure of sitting beside Premier Bennett at luncheon. We hope to have a further discussion on this subject before Premier Bennett leaves this evening for Victoria.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question. From this are we to conclude that the Minister of Finance takes the view now that the premier of British Columbia has not bypassed the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice, and that he does not prefer his pen pal the Prime Minister?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If it comes to the matter of drawing conclusions, Mr. Speaker, I would think it is obvious that the conclusion to be drawn is that the hon. member for Essex East is just about as hopelessly wrong as usual.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there is any correspondence with the provincial governments regarding the electric grid conference which started today which has not been tabled, and if there is could the Prime Minister make it available to hon. members tomorrow?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I cannot give the hon. gentleman an answer off the cuff, but I will have the matter looked into and if there are any such letters they will be made available tomorrow.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—REQUEST FOR TRAINING OF TROOPS IN KOOTENAY DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has he received any further representations from the attorney general of British Columbia with respect to the transfer of troops for a particular purpose?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

POLICY RESPECTING CANADIAN BORROWING IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. First, on the basis of many press reports, including last week's lead article in the Financial Post, would the minister inform the house whether the governor of the Bank of Canada visited Toronto about ten days ago and with some design asked a number of prominent financial persons to meet him? Second, does the minister still deny, as he did when I asked him a question on March 12, that there has been any meaningful change in policy respecting the desirability of Canadian borrowings in the United States of America, since his sermons on this subject in budget speech advice on June 20, 1961 and in December of 1960?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, assuming that you regard this lengthy question as one that is proper on the orders of the day, let me begin by taking up the remark of the hon. member about sermons. I was not aware that I had been preaching any sermons on this subject but believe me, Mr. Speaker, if the time ever comes when I take to preaching sermons there is nobody who could better absorb them than the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

The answer I gave the hon. member on the occasion to which he has referred is quite correct. There has been no change in policy. After Mr. Rasminsky had taken over his duties last summer as governor of the bank he met with representatives of a number of leading investment houses in Canada and proposed to them that for the time being it would be desirable that they should not undertake financing in the United States market, with the opportunities that existed in Canada for that purpose. It was expected that this would be for a temporary period and, in the view of the governor, that period has now been concluded. All he did was to inform the financial houses that he would no longer ask them, as I am informed, to refrain from doing financing in the United States market if they thought it proper to do so, but he has not suggested to them that they should do so. He has not asked them to do so. He has not suggested that financing facilities or sources in Canada are not adequate. It is a matter for judgment on the part of these institutions. The request made last summer was for a period, and the view is that in all reasonableness that period has been long enough now.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Does this mean that the minister now feels there is no reason why the provinces should not go to New York for their borrowings if they wish to?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The position there is unchanged. The provinces are at liberty to go to New York if they choose to do so. Having regard to what I have said in certain budget speeches, I hope they will not overlook the warnings that were given there against the possible consequences of doing extensive borrowing outside Canada in a currency other than Canadian currency. It is a matter for decision on their part, but the warnings that were given continue.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

LYNDHURST, ONT.—REQUEST FOR NEW POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Would the Postmaster General give consideration to the approval of a new post office at Lyndhurst to replace the one recently burned there.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): That question, as the hon. member may know, would be more properly directed to the Minister of Public Works, who constructs post offices, and it should be put on the order paper in any event.

[Later:]

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister give consideration to the construction of a post office for Lyndhurst?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Will you write me a letter, please?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Unemployment insurance commission—

669. To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit to the unemployment insurance fund in the fiscal year 1962-63 sums not exceeding in the aggregate $25 million on such terms and conditions as the governor in council determines, $25,000,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister or his parliamentary assistant a question or two in connection with this item. First, what was the position of the fund at the end of February? As found at the bottom of the second column on page 1886 of Hansard for March 16, 1962, I note that the minister stated that at the end of January the balance in the fund was $135,877,305. What was the position at the end of February?

Mr. Thrasher: I will get that information for the hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: While the officials of the department are coming down, perhaps I could put another question I have in mind. Why is this an item in the supplementaries for the current fiscal year when this advance to the fund will be made, if required, only in the fiscal year 1962-63? Why not have this amount in the 1962-63 estimates? The other question which arises is this. Is this a device to reduce the anticipated budget for the fiscal year 1962-63? I wonder if the parliamentary secretary to the minister would be good enough to give me a reply to these two additional questions.

Mr. Thrasher: In bringing this item forward at this time I believe the minister felt we should have the money available in case some unforeseen circumstance should arise.

Mr. Chevrier: Is that why it is in these estimates rather than in the main estimates; because it will not be required until the estimates for 1962-63, will it?

Mr. Thrasher: It is not likely that it will be required, if it is going to be required at all, until that time. I believe the idea was to bring the item forward as soon as possible so the money would be available in the event of an emergency.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Chevrier: There is still an answer to come to my question, and I take it I will be getting that in due course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was not here on Friday because of preoccupation with constituency matters at home. I did not have an opportunity, therefore, to say something on this item which, as the house knows, has greatly interested me over the years. I have had an opportunity to read what was said in this debate. It is not necessary to traverse in detail the observations that have been made as to the reasons for the fund being in the perilous state in which we now find it, and as indicated by the fact that, the Minister of Finance proposes to extend credit to the fund in the amount of $25 million.

The parliamentary secretary has just observed that it may not be necessary to use even this amount of money. This surprises me because the fund now is down to the proportions that had been anticipated by the unemployment insurance advisory committee in its report tabled on March 3, 1961. I am going to suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he is unduly optimistic. I suggest to him that this amount of $25 million is not going to be sufficient, and that the unemployment insurance commission itself takes the view that the amount which the Minister of Finance proposes to extend is not sufficient.

When the parliamentary secretary has an opportunity to check this question I should like to know if it is not a fact that the unemployment insurance commission has asked for a much larger amount than $25 million. Undoubtedly what the unemployment insurance commission had in mind was the observation made in the report of the advisory committee for the year ending March 31, 1961. In the third paragraph on page 3 of that report we find this observation:

> The committee recommends, however, that the government guarantee the solvency of the fund until such time as amendments are made, and given effect to for restoring it to a sound basis, and that whatever sums are required for this purpose be provided for by way of grants. The urgency for such action is made apparent from statements made in paragraphs numbered 26 and 27 of the report of the assistant superintendent of insurance and the senior actuary.

I have not got the report of the assistant superintendent, but I understand that the assistant superintendent of insurance, and this was confirmed by the senior actuary, did point out to the unemployment insurance commission what the situation would likely be between the end of March, 1962 and the end of June of this year. I should like to know from the parliamentary secretary, at some point before this item passes, whether it is a fact the unemployment insurance commission itself has asked for a much larger amount than the $25 million which is being requested in this item.

I also wish to make the observation that I believe it is rather significant that the item before us is being piloted in the first instance by the Minister of Labour and now by his parliamentary secretary. I do not quarrel, of course, with the parliamentary secretary assuming that role. However, in other years has this item not been regarded as a financial item? Certainly when questions were put in this house to the Minister of Labour which had to do with the financing of the fund we were always referred by the Minister of Labour to the Minister of Finance. A perusal of our discussions on this item over four years confirms what I have said.

Now, what are we doing here? We are attempting, by way of a supplementary item, to bolster up a fund which at one time stood at almost $1 billion, a fund which is contributed to by the employers and workers of Canada and supported to a lesser extent by contributions made by the general taxpayers through the federal government. We are not doing this by way of a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act; we are doing this by way of an item in the supplementary estimates.

I do not rise to repeat the criticisms made by hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to this procedure. I do rise to point out how serious the situation is when a fund of almost $1 billion in 1957 has been reduced to the extent that it is now a little less than $100 million, and at one time was almost $50 million; and the Minister of Finance now finds it necessary to extend credit to that fund in the amount of $25 million.

I am informed by a reliable source, not a source in the government, that the unemployment insurance commission has asked for a much larger amount from the Minister of Finance. These potential beneficiaries of the fund, those who are contributors to the fund, have a right to know that this fund will always be in a liquid state. Let it not be forgotten that the fund was of the proportion of $1 billion because the money had been contributed not by the government of Canada but by two segments of Canadian taxpayers. We could find ourselves in a situation, particularly in the event of a general election, even more perilous than the one which we now face.

The manner in which the minister has dealt with this item does not explain why the fund is in a perilous situation. The minister has not denied that the fund has been reduced from $950 million to its present proportions because of the high case load of unemployed people in this country who, in the exercise of their contractual rights, have derived means of sustenance from the fund, thereby attesting, if anything by way of attesting was required, to the severe level of unemployment. Someone again says "gloom," but I say if there is anything which represents justification that we on this side have for complaining about the government's failure to cope with unemployment it is the fact that this fund, which stood at almost $1 billion when the government took office, has now been reduced to under $100 million, a year ago stood at about $50 million and, in the words of the advisory committee of the unemployment insurance commission, will continue to stand in a perilous state until the end of June of this year.

Why has this loss taken place? I have said it was because of unemployment, but it was also due to the bad investment policies of the investment committee arising out of the fiscal policies of the government, particularly the bond conversion scheme which imposed losses on the unemployment insurance fund due to the decision of both the investment committee and the Minister of Finance to compel the commission to invest its portfolio in the new bonds that were the product of the bond conversion scheme. It was also due to the denial by the Minister of Finance to the unemployment insurance commission of the opportunity to sell its securities in the open market at a time when those bonds would have been guaranteed par value because of government policy at that time.

When we are discussing this item introduced by the Minister of Finance to transfer $25 million to the unemployment insurance fund, we must not forget that this fund would be in an even more serious state had it not been that this government—I contend improperly—two years ago got $78 million from the workers and the employers by way of added contributions, imposed on the then existing rate of contributions. We complained about this at that time. The rate of contribution was increased from 25 to 55 per cent. There was no compensation given by way of an increase in the pattern of benefits to any segment of those who were potential beneficiaries under the fund. As I say, the fund would be in a more perilous state than it is now had it not been for contributions—not made by the government of Canada and not loans made by the government of Canada—but contributions improperly and unfairly imposed on Canadian workers and employers.

We all remember this. I say it was a misuse by this government of the trust fund in permitting that situation to arise. There was no obligation on the part of the workers and employers to bolster the fund under those conditions. That was a responsibility placed on them by the government of Canada—

Mr. Benidickson: And by pressure from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and by pressure from the Minister of Finance, as we know very well from his own admissions in this house. In other words, the workers and the employers were saddled with the responsibility of doing something that the government of Canada should have assumed. The government will not resort to this procedure to meet the present situation because of complaints made by the manufacturers association, the chamber of commerce, the labour congress and other bodies throughout the country, who agree that the policy of the government in that regard was unfair.

The government is dealing with this situation in a piecemeal way. We are not being asked to deal comprehensively with unemployment insurance. I would point out that the unemployment insurance advisory committee said, at page 3 of its report for March 31 last:

> The speech from the throne delivered at the opening of the most recent session of parliament on November 17, 1960, included an announcement of the intention of the government to place before parliament for approval, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act to safeguard the basic purpose of the act, to strengthen the fund and to correct abuses which have developed in practice.

We all looked forward then to the legislation that we were going to have placed before us, which would have dealt with the fund and with other substantial matters having to do with the administration of unemployment insurance. But what do we have? Instead of an act of parliament, as we were told and as Her Majesty's representative was caused to utter at the opening of parliament in 1960, we have had appointed by this government, when parliament was not in a position to question it, a royal commission to examine into the whole question of unemployment insurance. That commission is now engaged in hearing representations from various bodies. I simply want to say that again was another example of the way this government holds parliament in contempt.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone said "Nonsense". The leader of the house said "Nonsense", behind the curtain, but the fact is that as leader of the house he should confirm what I am saying. It was only after parliament had adjourned that the government displayed the courage to indicate the device it proposed to employ in trying to ascertain what should be done about the Unemployment Insurance Act.

That is the situation. I think we must now remind the government of the composition of that royal commission. I have no quarrel with the competence of the persons who are on that commission, but I join with the labour congress in complaining about the failure to have as a member of that commission someone who represents labour opinion and the labour point of view. After all, this is a royal commission designed to study an act to which the employers as well as the workers contribute. It seems to me it is desirable that the representatives of the trade unions and the representatives of the workers of this country should have someone on it.

Let it not be said that such a person would be a prejudiced party. We did not hesitate, and I think properly so, to appoint members of the medical profession on the royal commission examining into the proposal of medical care insurance. There are employers represented on the royal commission examining the Unemployment Insurance Act, but how this government can hope to justify the kind of remarks made by the Minister of Labour to the labour congress the other day about the way this government consults with labour on matters of interest to it, in the light of its refusal to have a representative of labour on this commission, is beyond me.

Here is what the labour congress said in this regard at page 44 of the brief presented to the government on March 14 last:

> Any illusions we still had concerning appropriate appointments were dispelled when you appointed the committee of inquiry into the Unemployment Insurance Act. Here is an act which by its very nature is of direct and immediate concern to over 4 million Canadian wage and salary earners. They and their employers contribute directly to the fund established under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The administration of the act is through a tripartite commission, including a commissioner representative of the employee interest. The act further prescribes the appointment of an unemployment insurance advisory committee, a national employment committee and regional and local employment committees on which organized labour is represented. Presumably here if anywhere organized labour should have been represented on the committee of inquiry. Yet there is not a single member of that committee, however qualified in every other respect, who can claim to represent the employee interest. This act of omission on your part drove home to us better than anything else the fact that the opinions of the Canadian Labour Congress and of organized labour in general are of little or no significance to you—

"You" meaning the government, of course:

> —in the determination of your policies. When we ventured to complain that there was no representative of organized labour on the committee of inquiry we were told in very peremptory language that there was no need for one and that to have included such a representative would have injected a sectional interest into the work of the committee. Presumably there is no sectional interest involved when the medical, dental and nursing professions are represented on the royal commission on health services. We cannot help but conclude that the failure to consult the congress for nominees to various commissions, boards and agencies and the appointments made without consultation (such as certain appointments to the national productivity council) indicate a deliberate policy of bypassing the congress wherever possible.

I am not rising here to defend the congress, but the congress of labour is the largest gathering of trade unionists in this country. It seems to me that the submission they have made about the failure of the government to include labour representation on the royal commission is sound. I hope that the government in whatever reply it seeks to give to this point will not say that the reason labour was not represented was that it did not want to have parties with an occupational interest represented on the commission. If that argument is made it will not stand water, because that very course was followed in some of the other appointments to the commission. The employer groups are represented certainly by some of the members of the commission, all of them able, good Canadians. Certainly the government has not hesitated to recognize occupational interest in the appointment of the royal commission on health services.

Mr. Chairman, there are two other points I would like to make based upon observations in the report of the advisory committee for the year ending March 31, 1961. I have asked the parliamentary secretary to tell us whether or not it is the case that the unemployment insurance commission feel that $25 million is not adequate and that it has asked for a much larger amount. If this is the case, why has the government not acceded to the request of the commission? That may be a question that can only be answered by the Minister of Finance, but he is not piloting this legislation. He has done it in other years, but for some reason or another what is a financial matter is now being turned over to the Department of Labour, unlike the practice in other years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Apparently the Department of National Defence, if we look to the treasury benches.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was looking at something a little more agreeable, and that was the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Benidickson: Only one cabinet minister is here; a good one, of course.

Mr. Chevrier: That is debatable.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance, in his budget statement to this house on June 20, 1961 announced, it will be remembered, that the entire portfolio of the unemployment insurance fund would in due course be taken over by the treasury at book values, and in exchange the fund would acquire interest bearing but non-marketable bonds which might be redeemed by the government as required on 30 days' notice. The direct government of Canada bonds held by the fund were to be cancelled, and the government guaranteed that the bonds would in due course be traded to the Bank of Canada in exchange for equivalent government bonds, which in turn would be cancelled.

I presume that this transaction has taken place, and I suspect that the course pursued by the Minister of Finance in that regard averted the loss to the fund of several millions of dollars during the fiscal year 1960-61. It would be interesting, however, to know whether that is the case. We should know from the government what have been the consequences. We are now discussing a means of replenishing the fund, and we should now know what is the consequence of the decision of the government to take over the entire portfolio of the unemployment insurance fund.

The fact is that that portfolio at no time ever suffered unmanageable loss until this government came into power and only after the bond conversion scheme was imposed on it by the debt management policy of the government of Canada at that time. But we should have a report with regard to the consequence of this policy in terms of saving of money, as the Minister of Finance indicated would be the consequence.

The advisory committee made a recommendation. They approved the government taking over the portfolio but suggested that the government should consider establishing a minimum rate of interest on these non-marketable bonds. Was that done? What was done about this recommendation? Was it considered by the Minister of Finance? If not, why not? Those are further questions that I would like to ask of the parliamentary secretary at this time. I am sure that the parliamentary secretary, who is replacing the Minister of Labour at this time, will not feel that I have taken undue advantage of him in asking some financial questions, but I believe these are important to the maintenance of the integrity of the fund itself.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I am a bit surprised that we have the opportunity to speak on this item today. Unfortunately, taking the house leader at his word the other day, I had occasion to cancel three rather important engagements in my constituency over the week end to prepare for another matter that was supposed to be taken up today. But apparently we should be wiser by now than to take the house leader's word for anything.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I think this is a statement which the hon. member will, on reflection, not want to have stand in that form. I think the word of the hon. member who is the house leader is extremely highly regarded. Also, saying that you cannot take the word of any hon. member I think is strictly against the rules.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I reiterate that because of the word of the house leader on Friday I had to cancel three important engagements in my riding to stay in Ottawa to prepare for the bill pertaining to corporations and trade unions. Some 10 minutes prior to the opening of the house today I was informed that we were not proceeding in that fashion but were going ahead with the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Benidickson: A slap-dash government.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I was hoping to hear some comment or withdrawal by the hon. member in regard to the imputation on the word of the house leader. I think the sentiments couched in the language that they are in should not be left on the record.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Out of deference to you Mr. Chairman, I shall make whatever—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —withdrawal is necessary under the circumstances.

We are dealing today with an item the purpose of which is to pump $25 million into the unemployment insurance fund, which is almost depleted. It is rather strange that with the shortages we have in Canada today in the fields of public housing, highway development, water and sewage facilities and other things, the unemployment insurance fund should go broke.

I certainly have no more sympathy for the previous Liberal administration than have hon. members opposite, but it is interesting to reflect that in the 15 year period from 1942 to 1957, when this country was under the mismanagement of the former Liberal government, the fund grew at an average rate of $9 million a month.

Mr. Benidickson: Prosperity in those days.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite a contrast.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Since this government has taken over, and in spite of a 33 per cent increase in premium rates on contributions to the fund, the fund has depreciated at the average rate of approximately $17 million a month during that 59 month period. We are now being asked to pump $25 million into the fund. At the rate that has prevailed since this government took over that amount will be adequate to last only six weeks, approximately a month and a half. Perhaps that will be long enough to see the government through another election. I wonder whether that is what they have in mind.

An important question to ask ourselves is this. What problems will $25 million solve? The Globe and Mail of May 10, 1961 carried an article entitled "Insurance or Relief" which warns the government against subsidizing the fund or abusing it, and points out that what is needed is reorganization. The first paragraph of the article reads:

> As the indicator on the unemployment insurance fund swings toward empty, opposition members have called upon the government to subsidize the operation. It is apparent that some action to stabilize the fund is necessary; but outright subsidization would merely perpetuate the evils which have brought it to its present precarious state. What is needed is reorganization.

Those are profound words, and the government should take them seriously to heart. It is clear that the original purpose of the fund is no longer adequate. The original purpose was to serve a rather narrow field. The fund was designed to provide minimum income between jobs. It was assumed at that time that the interval would be of short duration. Almost everyone realizes that is not the situation we have had to face in the last few years. It is true that the fund has been eroded to a certain extent by circumstances. The advent of automation and other things of that kind have had a serious effect on the fund. It is also true that the fund has been eroded by the weaknesses of the Liberal and the Conservative governments, which have been unable to resist exploiting the vote catching possibilities of the fund. So they have brought within the confines of the original idea behind the fund many groups that were not thought of at the time the fund was established, and have thus thrown it completely out of focus.

In any event it is recognized by everyone, except apparently by this government, that something more than the original design is needed now. What we now have is only a palliative for an old disease which is no longer the sickness from which the country is suffering. The fund as originally set up was only for short term unemployment or unemployment of a nature that was capable of rapid readjustment.

The original plan adequately covered unemployment of the type the fund was designed to meet. It was not designed for the 12 month period introduced by the present government. At the time that adjustment was made I asked what provision was being made for these extensions. There was none. The original idea did not embrace supplementary payments. All these things really amount to the government offering assistance as a form of welfare and charging it to the unemployment insurance fund. That is why we are getting into so much trouble at this time. That is why today we are faced with an item of $25 million representing an attempt on the part of the government to bolster the fund.

It is true that the fund has been subjected to abuses, some of which have been perpetrated by private individuals. Those are the abuses about which we hear so much. The government tries to create the impression across the country that that is all that is wrong with the fund; that someone here and there is chiselling, and some married women are receiving payments to which they are not entitled. I say there are greater abuses than those of private individuals.

Let me cite an example. In my constituency a couple of months ago a case was brought to my attention. A miner who had been employed in the local mines since 1923 suffered from bad health. This health declined to the stage at which he could not walk from his house to the road without pausing for breath. This man was fortunate in that he had served in the Canadian army for approximately five years and was eligible for what is known as the burnt out pension. Of course he was not really a burnt out veteran but a burnt out miner; but because there was no legislation by which he could obtain assistance in that capacity he was fortunate enough to be eligible for the burnt out pension as a veteran. We commenced an application for the pension. The individual was informed by a government official that before he could qualify he would have to use up all his unemployment insurance. What kind of nonsense is this? As soon as I heard about it I blistered the telephone wire; there was a quick about face, and the application went through for the burnt out pension. How often is this experience or a similar one repeated across the country?

I do not know why we have embarked on this game of self-delusion. I do not know why we think it is smart or adequate to believe that if we pay someone from another pocket, it really does not cost us anything. When we make payments out of the unemployment insurance fund, the burnt out pension fund or any other welfare fund it all has to come out of the same pocket eventually. It is about time we overhauled the whole social security field. It is time that we began to look at it honestly. It is time to call a spade a spade. We should not bring in items of $25 million such as this, which do not represent a solution to the problem and which only serve to delay the inevitable day of reckoning.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I am moved to say a few words on this item. It has come to my attention from many sources and directions that there are many holes and gaps existing under this legislation in respect of which this item is being introduced. I think the feeling on the part of many people in Canada is that the unemployment insurance scheme must be definitely revised.

In respect of this fund the government evinces a kind of schizophrenia in the sense that when the matter is discussed there seems to be great urgency, purpose and concern, but when it comes to taking action a means is found to avoid coming face to face with the problem, by some back door or back alley method. For example, in the throne speeches of 1959 and 1960 we were promised amendments to the legislation, and last year a four-man special committee was appointed to review the legislation. I have in my hand a newspaper clipping dated July 17, 1961 in which the announcement is made of the appointment of the special committee.

It states:

> Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, in announcing the formation of the committee, with powers of a royal commission to call witnesses, did not indicate when the committee would report, but said he wanted it to be at the earliest possible date.

So we are constantly given the feeling that this government is ready to move, is ready to do something.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It met eight months later.

Mr. Pitman: That is a piece of information with which I was not acquainted, namely that it met eight months later. However, the point is this. It appears that the government wishes to do something but for some unknown reason it does not do anything. Perhaps we should appoint a psychiatrist to the cabinet or something. For some reason they cannot seem to break through this thought barrier and do something about this problem. On July 1, 1961 the public accounts committee viewed with alarm the reduction in this fund. As has already been suggested by the hon. member for Essex East, the advisory committee of the unemployment insurance commission has suggested something being added to this fund for some time.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

It seems to me that there are three areas of responsibility here. There is the responsibility of the employer to contribute, there is the responsibility of the employee to contribute, and surely it is the responsibility of the government to see to it that the legislation is going in the right direction. Furthermore, it is the responsibility of the government to provide the kind of economic situation which will allow this particular piece of legislation to work properly. It always makes me smile when people say we cannot have the full employment society, that we cannot have the kind of economic growth which will produce it; and by full employment I mean maybe 3 per cent, 4 per cent or 5 per cent of the working force unemployed. Yet this piece of legislation was put through to work in a full employment society. That is the only kind of society in which it will work.

The reduction we have seen from $900 million plus to the figure at which it stands today, namely $100 million plus, indicates that very point, namely that we must have a full employment society for it to work. This legislation simply will not cover prolonged chronic unemployment. It will not cover extensive seasonal unemployment. When it was passed in 1940 it was simply meant to carry a worker from one job to another. Of course it was assumed that after the war there would necessarily need to be some transitional period in which this might happen and this fund would tide the worker over. We are making this legislation deal with a situation which has no relevancy whatsoever to the intention when the legislation was passed, and it has no relevancy whatsoever to the philosophy behind the legislation and no relevancy whatsoever to the kind of society in which we have been living under this government.

Surely the government has two alternatives. It must either gear the legislation to accommodate itself to the kind of economy in which this government is willing to operate, or it must change the economy and provide the growth which will allow the legislation to work. Those seem to be the only two alternatives. What do we have? We have continuing announcements of concern and of urgency but never any real action. This item we have before us simply outlines what I think is the schizophrenia of this government in not being able to jump the barrier, or to leap through the bulwarks which prevent them from taking this thing in hand.

The reason I am led to rise today is that I think this country demands an explanation as to what is wrong. I find workers who have a kind of inferiority complex because they are collecting unemployment insurance. There has been a feeling that it is a kind of charity, when in essence it is a form of social insurance. Until we get this thing reorganized I do not think the average worker is really going to have very much respect for this fund and for this particular way of dealing with unemployment. That is why I think it is most necessary, and I think it is an obligation upon this government, to do something in connection with this matter before it goes to the country. I do not think it can go to the people of Canada and justify what has happened to this fund over the last five years and what has happened to this economy without making at least one solid attempt to provide the kind of legislation which this country must have in this area.

I think it is a time to clarify the whole philosophy behind it. We get all tangled up because we are trying to deal with this legislation on an actuarial basis. It really is not insurance at all. We do not expect people to contribute what they expect to collect. It is not based on those principles. This is what has caused a great deal of confusion. I think this government has a responsibility to deal with this kind of confusion. I feel that we cannot raise the rates on those who are most likely to be unemployed, as would be done in an insurance aura. What you have to do is deal with it as a national problem. I think it is a matter of this government accepting responsibility for dealing with this problem, and at the same time recognizing that this has been part of the cost of unemployment, and a tremendous cost it has been.

I saw an article just last September to the effect that the unemployment insurance fund has paid out $3,250 million in unemployment insurance benefits—$3 billion in round figures—since it began 20 years ago. But let us look at the rise. In 1942 it paid out only $37 million. By last year, that is 1961, we paid $85 million in the one month of March. I think that is just fantastic; I refer to the rise that has taken place in what we pay out. I do not think this really is a payment which is related to economic growth or anything of which we can be very proud in this matter at all.

What I am concerned about is the fact that to a large extent we think that because we are not paying out unemployment insurance, because numbers are going off the unemployment insurance rolls, we have dealt with the problem. However, I am sure that all hon. members in this House of Commons know that there are many thousands who have exhausted their benefits completely. In the Goble and Mail of Wednesday, December 6, 1961, there is an article which states that the social welfare department in Quebec is now spending close to $6 million a month in helping workers who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits. If other hon. members have constituencies which are anything like mine, they will know that a great many of the men who last year were standing in front of the unemployment insurance office are now standing in front of the welfare office, and the welfare payments in the various provinces have been going up at a rate that has alarmed those who are, I might say, the least conservative of the people in provincial government circles.

I think some steps must be taken. There must be some great change before this parliament goes to the country. The Canadian Labour Congress has suggested that we should separate financing of the ordinary benefits from the seasonal benefits and that the seasonal benefits might very well be paid out of some kind of consolidated revenue fund.

Another problem, in my opinion, is the fact that monthly unemployment insurance payments, here again because they were geared to see a person over a few months, naturally are not very high. But now they are having to see people over many months and indeed years, and month by month what happens is that the individual finds that he is getting further and further behind, that his debts are rising. I think we need to take a very serious look at what the benefits should be in the kind of situation in which so many of our people find themselves. Indeed, one economist in the United States, for example, suggested that we should pay an amount equal to some fraction of the difference between workers' regular revenue or regular earnings and what his benefits should be, and that they should go up over the period in which he is unemployed. Today, of course, the average weekly benefit is some 30 per cent of the average weekly wage. How can an individual be a consumer and add anything to the economic well-being of the community under such a situation? Therefore I think we should look at this whole area of variable rates.

I am not going to take up any more of the time of the committee on this item, because essentially we are not dealing with the legislation. However, I think the fact that we are facing this item in the middle of March, with the possibility of this being the last session of this parliament, places a special obligation upon the government. I think we have to deal with this whole problem and do so in such a way that we can have the confidence of the workers and the employers; for after all these two groups in my opinion do have a responsibility and they have a right to expect that the government will accept its responsibility.

Mr. Robichaud: Before this item is carried I think the parliamentary secretary should reply to the questions which were asked him earlier by the hon. member for Essex East. I know he asked him what the balance was in the unemployment insurance fund at the end of February.

Mr. Chevrier: That was my question.

Mr. Robichaud: I wish to correct myself; it was the hon. member for Laurier. In addition, what was the number of claimants receiving benefits as at the end of February?

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to answer any questions at the conclusion of hon. members' remarks. The balance in the fund at the end of February was $104,618,000. Unfortunately the figures regarding applicants are not yet available for February.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before this item carries, Mr. Chairman, there are one or two observations I wish to make that I did not have the opportunity to make the other day. I said the other day that we would never have been asked to vote this $25 million if the government had shown any sense of responsibility or any appreciation of the fact that there was a problem to be solved. I was very much interested to hear the hon. member for Timmins trying desperately to support his party's favorite thesis that there is no difference between the way the Liberals managed this affair and the way the Tories have, but he made a pretty poor job of it because he had to admit that there was $928 million in the fund when this government took office. We have now been told that at the end of February last there was only $104 million, which I think dramatically demonstrates the difference.

I think the hon. member for Peterborough, who did not attempt to square the circle perhaps because he is a little wiser even though younger, put his finger on the point right away when he said this legislation was not designed for a period of prolonged and chronic unemployment. Rather it was designed for a period of full employment and, of course, that is what we had in this country up until 1957.

I think it might be useful to illustrate that it is not Liberal propaganda when I say that we had full employment up until 1957. I have in my hands the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference which met on the 25th of November, 1957. To that conference the Prime Minister gave an appraisal of the unemployment situation in Canada. Remember, sir, that this was a formal appraisal given to the premiers after this government had been in office for five months. They no longer had any excuse for not knowing the facts. Oh, I know they pretend—the Minister of Public Works in that helpful spirit he always shows in the house brought it up the other day—that the Liberals knew away back in March of 1957 that there was going to be heavy unemployment, but these bright gentlemen after five months on the treasury benches had no such idea. They were not bright enough to see the facts.

Here is the Prime Minister's formal opinion as to the state of unemployment in November, 1957, five months after this government took office. It has been put on the record before, but it is very relevant because it shows why we are in the situation we are in now. It shows the refusal of the government at any stage to treat the problem seriously. What the Prime Minister said to the premiers was not an off the cuff statement. I was present as a spectator at that conference, and I remember that the Prime Minister read from a document that had obviously been very carefully prepared in advance as his judgment of the unemployment situation in November of 1957. He said:

> I wish now to say a word or two on the question of unemployment. In many countries of the free world there has been a pause this year—

Mr. Pallett: Is that the dominion-provincial conference?

Mr. Pickersgill: In 1957. If the hon. member had done me the honour of listening he would have heard the reference when I first gave it.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member said 1957, but he did not indicate the document.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said I was going to refer to the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference of 1957 which began its sessions on the 25th of November, and that these words are from the opening address by the Prime Minister to the premiers. This was the first time the Prime Minister gave an official appraisal. He had been in office for five months then, and at that time he gave an official appraisal of the unemployment situation as he saw it after five months in office. This was the Prime Minister's judgment after having had five months to study the problem:

> I wish now to say a word or two on the question of unemployment. In many countries of the free world there has been a pause this year in the rapid pace of development and, as in 1954 and 1955, an increase in unemployment. You will remember in those years that while the percentage of unemployed in Canada in relationship to the number employed was much higher than it is today—

This is the Prime Minister saying that, not I.

> —that fact and those circumstances did not herald the beginning of depression. What actually happened was that there was a levelling off process which subsequently led to an even wider development and expansion program. When I say that, of course, I do not mean that prompt action must not be taken to meet what I believe to be a temporary situation this winter. This government has taken active measures to meet this short term situation and is taking additional ones.

After five months in office, after plenty of time to acquaint himself with all the information that was available, this was the considered judgment of the Prime Minister.

The other day the Minister of Public Works challenged me to say something about the hidden report. I am going to say something about it in relation to this matter, and what I am going to say is this. No one in this house believes that the Prime Minister had not already seen the hidden report when he made that statement. Certainly the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who was then minister of trade and commerce, would not say that he had not had that report drawn to his attention before the 25th of November, 1957. Therefore when the Prime Minister made the statement that this was a pause, that unemployment was less serious than it was in 1954 and 1955, that it was a temporary thing for that winter only, he made it in the light of the information that was available to him from all the files of the government including this so-called hidden report.

I think it is useful to have that perspective, because it has been the fashion for hon. gentlemen to say that they were too stupid—I am paraphrasing them—to see things for themselves that the Liberal government with its much greater foresight had foreseen months before. But the fact of the matter is that all the information that was available to the Liberal government was available to these gentlemen, and a great deal more; and the judgment of the Prime Minister in November of 1957 was that this was a pause and a levelling off from which we would rise to greater heights.

The fact is, of course, that this was the beginning of a recession, not a very deep recession but one which went on through 1958 and which the government claimed was over in 1959. They did not see that there were any chronic elements in it. They claimed it was over, and they have claimed it has been over two or three times since. In other words, they simply failed at any time to pay any attention to the facts.

These are not the only facts they ignore. They publish propaganda literature designed to impress the electorate which is filled with statements—there is only one word for it—that are patently false. Here is one, for example, from this little booklet to which I referred the other day in which the government boasted it had increased relief payments by 847 per cent. Just imagine any government in the world boasting that it had increased relief payments 847 per cent. What a topsy-turvy kind of government, to boast about increasing unemployment relief and then to say that unemployment is not serious. You know, it passes comprehension, sir.

Here is another statement from this booklet entitled "Still more action for Canada and Canadians":

For the first time,—

This was after this government had come into office.

—fishermen and other seasonal workers are included under its coverage.

This statement is false; it is completely and utterly false. So far as I am aware, there has not been a single seasonal worker put under unemployment insurance since the present government came into office. There has been no change in the unemployment insurance legislation since the present government came into office except an increase in the contributions by about 30 per cent. This is the only change they have made. The seasonal workers, rightly or wrongly—there are some people who condemn it—were included under the legislation by various changes in the years before the change of government. The fishermen were included in the spring of 1957 by an act of this parliament, an act which was praised by all parties in the house. The legislation came into effect on April 1, 1957, just about three months before hon. gentlemen went over to the treasury benches.

They had persistently and consistently made these false statements ever since. It is all of a piece with what they do, and whether it is deliberately false or whether it is done from ignorance, I do not know. I do not know which I would be prouder of if I were in the shoes of hon. gentlemen opposite. Do they want to boast that they are so ignorant they cannot produce the facts or are they deliberately trying to fool the people? There is no third possibility.

An hon. Member: You said that last year.

Mr. Pickersgill: And it deserves to be said again. It seems to me that either they are using a deliberate campaign of falsification to get the support of the public or they are so ignorant of the law they do not know what they are talking about.

In order to give you an idea of how ignorant they can be, and here I feel I must use the word "ignorant"—

Mr. Jones: Your language is certainly limited.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman will perhaps wish to say something when I have finished this quotation. I have here, from the Prime Minister's office, a copy of a document entitled, "Notes for a Speech by the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, P.C., Q.C., M.P., at a Meeting of the New Brunswick Progressive Conservative Association, Fredericton, N.B., October 21, 1961." What did the Prime Minister say in these notes that were given to the press? This was not something that was casually said off the cuff. These notes were given out for the guidance of the press in writing stories for the people of Canada. Here is what it says, and it staggers the imagination:

> Then there was unemployment insurance. We contended that the St. Laurent administration had failed to have unemployment insurance do the job it was intended to do. At that time, Canadians in only six of the ten provinces came under its provisions.

Here is the Prime Minister of Canada so ignorant of the law, so ignorant of the administration that he had been carrying on for over four years at that time—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would you repeat that?

Mr. Pickersgill: I certainly will repeat it. I thought it might be a misprint because it staggers the imagination.

> Then there was unemployment insurance. We contended that the St. Laurent administration had failed to have unemployment insurance do the job it was intended to do. At that time, Canadians in only six of the ten provinces came under its provisions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Amazing.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the kind of thing the Prime Minister goes about the country saying at political meetings. Of course, that statement is false, as every member in this house knows. It is completely and utterly false. I am not accusing the Prime Minister of having made it up. It was obviously made up in the boiler factory where the Prime Minister gets his speeches. All he does, apparently, is to use this stuff. He does not bother checking it. He does not bother to find out whether what he says is fact or, to use one of his favourite words, fiction.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is absolutely appalling—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Was the reference to unemployment insurance or to hospital insurance?

An hon. Member: He is referring to unemployment assistance.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is referring to unemployment insurance. I shall read on a bit if the hon. gentleman says it was unemployment assistance. If it was unemployment assistance, the Prime Minister is even more wrong. I quote:

> Today, its benefits are enjoyed by Canadians in all ten provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know hon. gentlemen do not like this revelation of what the Prime Minister is doing. They are trying to create a diversion. I quote:

> Today, its benefits are enjoyed by Canadians in all ten provinces.

The Prime Minister was elected to this house for the first time on March 26, 1940. He was here when the amendment was made to the British North America Act to place unemployment insurance under parliament. He was here when the act was put on the statute books. He knows quite well that from the day that act came into operation it applied to the whole of Canada and yet he goes down to Fredericton and has the gall to say that, at that time, when his government came into office, Canadians in only six of the ten provinces came under its provisions.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What is the text from which the hon. member is reading?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am reading from a release from the Prime Minister's office, the title of which I gave fully if the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to listen. These are notes for a speech by the Prime Minister at Fredericton, and I am not going to repeat the full title.

Mr. Pallett: There is no suggestion the speech was delivered in that form?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know whether or not it was. I do know this document was issued to the press by the Prime Minister's office. I know that this was one of the things the Prime Minister felt it was quite proper to use. He would not have put it in the notes and given them to the press if he did not.

When you go on and read the next paragraph, it is quite clear that he was referring to unemployment insurance.

> We said that its coverage should be extended. As a result of action we have taken, its benefits are now available for 52 instead of 36 weeks.

It is obviously unemployment insurance about which the right hon. gentleman was talking. This just illustrates that careless attitude with regard to public business that has characterized virtually everything this government has done. It is the same sort of thing that makes them say:

> For the first time, fishermen and other seasonal workers are included under its coverage.

Since this is party literature no one in the house accepts the authorship of it, and I can refer to that statement in the words of the Minister of Finance by saying, "That is a blatant lie." I want you to understand, Mr. Chairman, that is not the kind of language I use. I simply use the language of the distinguished Minister of Finance. Or is he the real Prime Minister?—we do not know. We have not known since Quebec. What we do know is that this gentleman is a leading member of the government that publishes this kind of false propaganda, intentionally or ignorantly—they can have their choice as to which particular adverb they wish to use—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And distributed by all Conservative members in this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Distributed undoubtedly largely at public expense to thousands of people all over the country, to mislead the Canadian people. This document is staggering. It is unbelievable that anyone who is Prime Minister should be so careless of his public utterances, so indifferent to what he was saying as to say that this act, until the present government came into office, had been in operation in only six provinces. It is incomprehensible, sir. I just cannot understand what they were thinking about.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Unemployment assistance, obviously.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the Prime Minister did not know any better, or he would not have circulated it when the speech writers produced this kind of thing for him. Make the most charitable interpretation you like of it. I could go on and find a lot more things in the document "The record speaks" which my hon. friend from Leeds has handed me, but since it relates to another statute I shall not use it at the moment, because I intend to deal with the act we are now considering.

I ask, when you have such appalling ignorance manifested, displayed, advertised by the Prime Minister, is it any wonder that nothing is being done about this legislation? Is it any wonder they have persisted, like ostriches, with the view that nothing needs to be done? After five years of watching this fund gradually melt away they still have no remedy. They have remitted it to a commission—

Mr. Henderson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: —and I agree with what the hon. member for Essex East said about the commission. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disturbance in the house. I hope it will subside as it has arisen in a kind of volcanic fashion, and with about as much benefit to the public generally.

An hon. Member: About as much benefit to the people in your riding as you are.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I was saying before I was interrupted, a government which has had so little knowledge of what is going on—

Mr. Pallett: You have said that many times.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have said it a number of times but I know that hon. gentlemen opposite, especially some of the more notorious ones from a certain province in this country, need to have things repeated a great many times before there is any penetration.

Mr. Pallett: That was Goebbels' philosophy too.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the hon. gentleman make any observation?

Mr. Pallett: I merely said that the repetition of such statements was Goebbels' philosophy.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. The repetition of false statements was Goebbels' philosophy. The repetition of truth was not. The repetition of false statements—this is a good example:

> For the first time, fishermen and other seasonal workers are included under its coverage.

—this is the kind of thing Goebbels said. I did not introduce this note into the debate, Mr. Chairman. It was the chief whip on the government side. I was attempting to put the truth on the record, the truth about this kind of false propaganda and I am very glad that the hon. gentleman should have seen fit, as the Minister of Finance has also done, to brand this kind of thing in the way it should be branded.

When a political party descends to this kind of thing, descends to deliberate, calculated, false statements which they do not think will be found out, such as this—

> For the first time, fishermen and other seasonal workers are included under its coverage.

—then I think it deserves to be described in the way that the chief whip has described the propagandists of his own party, using a word I would not use to describe them, but a word he has chosen to introduce into this debate.

Mr. Pallett: It describes your statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman says he is describing my statements, then I am sure Your Honour will ask him to withdraw such a statement about a member of the house. I have made no such statements about any hon. member of the house. I have made statements about these anonymous propagandists who are publishing this anonymous propaganda, but I am sure the chief whip does not intend to apply that word to any hon. member of the house. At least I hope he does not, if the hon. gentleman wants to suggest that any statement I have made is not true, then let him get up at once and say precisely what is untrue. If he can demonstrate it is untrue I shall withdraw it, as I have done on one or two occasions in this house when I inadvertently said things that were not strictly accurate. I think that has been my record in this house and I hope it always will be, because it seems to me we cannot have any decent management of our public affairs unless the words of members of parliament can be relied upon.

That is why I did not think for one minute, or suggest, that the Prime Minister deliberately did this. I do not think he did. I just say it is careless, but the fact that it is careless is inexcusable. Why are these speeches made? They are made to influence the public in deciding what government they should have in this country, and surely there is enough that is right to be said to influence the public without distortions and plain falsehoods being used for that purpose, as this statement is in this little blue booklet.

I have said these things because it seems to me that behind them is the attitude the government have taken about this whole problem. They have refused to admit that this was a serious problem, and that is why it continues to become more serious. A government that grappled with problems would have done something about it long ago, and that they have failed to do.

Mr. Carter: Before the minister replies to the questions that have been asked I should like to put one simple question regarding the administration of the fund. I understand that the act provides penalties when claimants do not meet the proper requirements, that is, if they leave their jobs voluntarily or if they lose their jobs for cause or various reasons. In determining the extent of these penalties does the person adjudicating a claim have discretion?

I ask this question because some very great discrepancies have come to my attention in parallel cases. In some cases where the infringement has been a minor one there has been very heavy disqualification, and in other cases where there was quite a strong infringement, which I think would merit a big disqualification, the disqualification period has been very short. I would like to know whether that sort of thing arises out of the act itself or out of the discretion of the person adjudicating a claim.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Thrasher: I see it is now seven minutes to five o'clock and I am hopeful the committee will see fit to pass this item before five o'clock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, we have some questions.

Mr. Thrasher: There were a few questions put to me, but first of all I would like to say that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate showed a great deal of concern about the truth. He was criticizing those whom he said were publishing false statements, and he said if he inadvertently made any statement that was not correct I should remind him of it. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that in his remarks he said the only change in this legislation had to do with increased contributions. In reply to the hon. gentleman I indicate that there were other changes increasing the benefit period to 52 weeks; there were amendments extending the seasonal benefit period, and there were changes in the regulations putting married women on the same basis as the other contributors to the fund.

Mr. Pickersgill: I readily acknowledge that the hon. gentleman is right about those things that he specified.

Mr. Churchill: And that you were wrong?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, some of those things were done by regulation.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, go the whole way.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. Look here, I certainly was not strictly right, that is quite true; but what I was referring to was the inclusion of any new groups, and I think I am right in that. However, I think the hon. gentleman is certainly right about the other points he raised.

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East asked whether it was a fact that the unemployment insurance commission sought a larger amount than the amount now before us. May I say to the hon. gentleman that I am not aware of any request on the part of the unemployment insurance commission for any larger amount than the amount now before us. I understand that there was discussion between the commission and officials of the Department of Finance and that this figure of $25 million was arrived at as one being proper for these purposes at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My information is that they asked for $75 million.

Mr. Thrasher: Unfortunately I do not have the same sources of information as the hon. gentleman; I get my advice from the officials of the department and the unemployment insurance commission. The hon. member for Essex East also asked about the government bonds that were exchanged for the bonds previously held by the unemployment insurance commission. May I say that I am not able to give him all the information he desires in this respect as I speak only for the Department of Labour and cannot speak for the Department of Finance. However, the exchange has been made; the government has exchanged new bonds for the old bonds on the basis of the book value of the old bonds, which would mean what the commission actually paid for those old bonds. The government pays interest on the new bonds and the interest rate, I understand, is established every six months based on current rates. I am not able to give the hon. member the exact formula that is used for arriving at this rate.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 669 carry?

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get a reply to the question I asked.

Mr. Thrasher: May I say to the hon. member that there is a maximum of six weeks. A man may be disqualified for a period up to six weeks, but if there are any mitigating circumstances the disqualification period may be less, in the discretion of the officer.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 669 carry?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I asked the parliamentary secretary what was the total number of claimants receiving benefit at the end of February.

Mr. Thrasher: I advised the hon. member at the time he asked his question that that information was not yet available.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the end of January? Would the hon. gentleman give us the latest figure that is available?

Mr. Churchill: Will you accept that in a letter and pass the item now?

Mr. Pickersgill: We will pass the item before five o'clock.

Mr. Thrasher: I do not have that information here but I will be glad to secure it for the hon. member.

Mr. Robichaud: I believe this information should have been available in this debate because it is quite relevant to the arguments which have been raised this afternoon. In reviewing the figures for the last few years I find that from January to February, 1960 the fund was reduced from $445 million to $408 million, a loss of $37 million, when we had 620,000 claimants receiving benefits. I have every reason to believe that the figure at this time is in the vicinity of 620,000 claimants receiving benefits. From January to February, 1961 the fund was reduced from $283 million to $240 million, a reduction of $43 million, with 672,000 claimants receiving benefits.

A few minutes ago the parliamentary secretary stated that the fund was reduced, from January to February, from $135 million to $104 million and he admitted that this last figure is only a tentative one. In view of past experience with the final figures—

Mr. Thrasher: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not say that was only a tentative one; I said that $104 million was the figure.

Mr. Robichaud: You can assure the committee that this is the final figure?

Mr. Thrasher: Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: Well, that is not according to past experience. Around this date in previous years the figure has been released, and I believe it was suggested that the figure would be in the vicinity of $3 million or $4 million lower than the figure quoted by the parliamentary secretary at this time. In view of those figures, with the months of March and April ahead we have every reason to believe that the amount of $25 million will not be enough to carry the unemployment insurance fund until the end of May, when the fund may start to increase if employment is sufficient to do it and if unemployment has decreased enough to permit an increase to the fund.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Canadian Army—

644. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $35 million.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 664 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Five o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN INDEMNITY OF MEMBERS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved:

That the government give immediate consideration to the need for increasing the income of members of parliament.

Request to Increase Members' Indemnity

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a most succinct resolution, I believe the shortest one on the order paper, and I will try to keep my remarks with regard to it as brief as possible. There is an old verse which goes back to the 1880's on this subject. I believe it goes something like this:

It is plain to be seen as you sit in the gallery,
That they agree on just one thing, and that is more salary.

I do not know whether such unanimity will be forthcoming here but I know this is a subject that interests every member of the house. Hon. members may remember that some three sessions ago I raised the matter one evening at a grievance time. The response from several hon. members of the house was favourable and the whole matter of more pay for members of parliament got rather wide publicity.

At that time I became very much aware that whatever those of us in the house might feel about more pay for members of parliament, there was a considerable body of feeling outside that felt we were either overpaid or we were well looked after. I thought I might put on the record two samples of this kind of point of view just to indicate in a sense what we are up against in this consideration. This letter was addressed to me from a Mrs. Brewer of Calgary, dated May 6, 1959. It was addressed to "Mr. Douglas Fisher and other backbenchers" and reads:

Enclosed find newspaper clipping that caused this letter. If you men cannot live on $10,000 a year, how do you expect the old age pensioners to live on $55 a month?

Yours very truly,

The other letter I should like to read to the house was a bit more extensive. It was sent to the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) who, with the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith), joined with me and in some way has given leadership in collecting data on the relative incomes of legislators in various parts of the world. This letter came from Ladysmith, British Columbia, dated January 18, 1960, from M. A. Alton, addressed to the hon. member for Winnipeg South, and reads:

Sir: The Victoria Colonist, Saturday, January 16, carried a news release as a memo coming from your desk regarding pay increases for members of the House of Commons.

I can't help but think that you and all members knew, when you offered for election, that the remuneration was so much and all the details. Yet last year Fisher from Ontario—Port Arthur area—immediately asked for a raise after election. To me, you and the rest just lack plain guts to include that item on your platform and electioneering program. The civil servants work 12 months in the year, while you characters reach Ottawa and try to find out how many sessions of parliament you can miss, as evidenced last year when the house was in session and only 38 members were present. Oh, yes, you will say that you were attending meetings elsewhere—which happens seldom. A record of those meets is kept also and it is very noticeable how many you attended—I think that you are overpaid now—

[Mr. Fisher.]

I shall leave out a section here because it becomes quite sulphurous about several of my colleagues in the house. It then picks up:

Further, I think you have a nerve suggesting that you are in a favorable position with an American Congressman—the States and their congressmen serve 170 million people and they work at it—as a member of parliament you might do actually 30 days work in a year—not a session—but a year. So I repeat—you and . . . and the like are overpaid.

I put those two on the record as typical of the kind of reaction that appears whenever the subject of more pay for members of parliament comes up for discussion. I do not wish to make this personal but there may be other hon. members who have had the same experience. I know that I have been confronted with the following reaction in my own constituency and region by both friends and enemies. My enemies say, "keep right on talking about more pay for members of parliament," and my friends say, "do not bring up the subject at all; it must be a form of death wish on your part to even touch on it."

I do not want any hon. member to conclude from that that I feel I am being either brave or foolish in bringing forward this resolution. The reason I brought it into the house this session is that I received some prodding. Before the session started I had the opportunity to speak to an informal meeting of civil servants—largely senior civil servants—in this town. When the discussion got around to the performance of members of parliament I was very surprised to discover that without exception the people there were unanimous in thinking that there had to be higher pay for members. One very senior man in the government said, "You are a bunch of mice up there on the hill to put up with the situation as it is. Not only are you mice but the leading people in the parties are, too, because I am convinced, as many of my colleagues are, that a great many able people in this country do not offer to run for parliament and in fact will not consider it because of the expenses and debts that can be involved." Because of that prodding I received that evening I thought it would be well to put this resolution for discussion before the house.

I must say that shortly after the resolution appeared on the order paper a news release went out through the Canadian Press and the invective began to fly again. I will not read any more of the letters that came to me but I will say I received a considerable volume of mail from right across the country and particularly from British Columbia. I must say to my colleagues from British Columbia that you somehow have managed to convince a lot of people out there that $10,000 is a lot of money for your services. I express that with amusement on my face, but there is obviously a serious foundation for this in British Columbia judging from my mail because it is very critical.

As a result of the latest resolution and some statistics and information circulated by the hon. member for Winnipeg South, we have noted that the press of this country is much more favourable this year than just two or three sessions ago to the idea of more pay for members of parliament. I do not wish to place evidence of this on the record but I can tell the house that in 1962 almost all newspapers in Canada have commented favourably. I have in my file extracts from almost all newspapers with fairly substantial circulation from every province of Canada expressing support of this idea.

Included with the support of the idea, of course, is a certain amount of criticism. I wish to place on record a brief portion of an editorial which appeared in the newspaper in my home city, the News-Chronicle of Port Arthur, issue of January 22, 1962:

> Everyone is aware that the ordinary member of parliament receives $10,000 a year for his services. Of this, $2,000 is a tax free expense allowance.
> To many who work for a great deal less than this over a full 12-month period it sounds like an awful lot of money.
>
> To a member of parliament it is a different story. Representing a place like Port Arthur which is so far from the seat of government entails a great deal of expense in travelling to and from the constituency and in maintaining accommodations in two cities for almost eight months of the year.
> Besides this, a politician who tries to do his job as well as possible has to do a lot of supplementary travel. There are many incidental expenses that also add up to a large slice of that $10,000.
>
> No politician can afford to be tight-fisted in his everyday dealings with people and with charities.
>
> There is an inequality involved too. Some members represent areas in and around Ottawa and still receive the same allowance although their expenses obviously are not going to be as high as those from more distant points. Often they are able to look after their businesses and their parliamentary duties without hurt to either.
> A reasonable sacrifice can be expected of anyone dedicated to serving his country. It is not necessary that a sacrifice be demanded, but that seems to be the tradition.

The editorial goes on to comment on the amount of money that should perhaps be added to both the expense allowance and the salary to make the position more attractive. I do not intend to quote much more, except to indicate that the newspapers in Quebec including the Nouveau Journal and Le Devoir in a recent series of articles I have seen have also indicated that in that province there is an increasing understanding that members of parliament to carry out their chores, for the position to attract good people, because of the lengthening sessions and the greater responsibilities that devolve upon members, should enjoy an increase.

Now, as to what that increase should be I cannot suggest with any assurance. I know that there will be criticism no matter what is suggested and no matter what action the government may take upon the suggestion, but it seems to me the government should accept this motion and that it should make arrangements to call together representatives of the three parties in this house in an effort to strike some sort of figure. Incidentally, at least the two opposition parties I understand both are on record through resolutions coming out of their conventions as advocating more pay for members of parliament.

After a figure has been struck then I think this parliament should introduce that measure, not to go into effect in relation to this parliament but in relation to the next. I also feel it is unfortunate that this was not done before we got as close to an election as we probably are. As I said, I think a higher stipend would have been an attraction to more people to enter the lists.

Within the last few weeks I have had the opportunity to interview the national organizers of the Liberal, Conservative and New Democratic parties. All in effect told me the same thing. I do not think I am being unfair in paraphrasing them. They have said there is considerable difficulty in getting candidates to try for the position of member of parliament and particularly young men in their thirties, forties and early fifties. They often find this quite discouraging. They are also aware that there is some discouragement among members of this House of Commons because of the way expenses have piled up.

In taking advantage of this opportunity to present my views I have not wanted to go into personal detail. I think any one among us who has a family could make a case for an increase by quoting figures of the costs involved. I also know it is very easy to point the finger of scorn at almost any of us, if anyone wanted to do this, in terms of our performance as individuals. But thinking of the institution, thinking not of us as members but of the members to come, we must make service in this chamber more attractive and less burdensome than it is for many hon. members at this time. When I was approached on the subject of the figure I suggested that, from my own experience, it should be approximately $3,000 more a year. Moreover, it could be added in the form of expenses, because there is no question that we spend far more than $2,000 on expenses. That amount would keep me personally from getting into debt.

I do not know what the experience of other members may be. I certainly know there are many members in this house who, through their vocations, their constituencies and their family situations, have greater burdens than I myself have. However, I am certainly much more aware now than I was when I entered political life of the financial demands made upon a member of parliament. I certainly know that there is only one way in which I and others like me can survive in politics at the present time, and that way is to find some other source of income, using what talents we may have. It seems to me this method might be arguable as a good thing but in the long run I cannot see it.

I think the situation today is that a member's primary responsibilities are to this chamber. For that reason I would hope that the members of all parties in the house would join with me in impressing this brief resolution upon the government, in the hope that they would do something with it this session in order to indicate that in the parliament to come, the one that succeeds this one, the members could count on a higher stipend.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. John Pallett (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as no one appears to be rising, and as I know that some members who have indicated interest in this matter are not able to be here today, I move that the debate be adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Pallett the debate was adjourned.

STUDY OF MEASURES TO LIMIT ELECTION CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate) moved:

That a special committee, consisting of sixteen members to be designated later, be appointed to consider and recommend means of assuring greater independence to members of parliament through more effective measures to limit and control expenditures in the campaigns for the election of members of the House of Commons, and that standing order 67(1) be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion I am now making is that a special committee of the house be set up. I considered rather carefully whether it should be a special committee or whether it should be the committee on privileges and elections. I may say quite frankly that if someone wished to move, by way of an amendment to my motion, that the matter be remitted to the committee on privileges and elections, I would have no objection. My experience with that committee in 1960, when we were considering the elections act, was that on the whole it was an excellent committee which, in view of the fact that we were considering the elections act, did its work in an extremely objective and non-partisan way most of the time. Oh, I will admit that there were times when we did not forget that we were party politicians. However, the atmosphere in that committee was as agreeable—and I am sure that many others who served on it can say the same thing—as that in any committee on which I have ever served in the House of Commons. At the time we were considering the elections act, both in the committee and in the debate on the act in the house, I made a few observations along the lines of those I am going to make today. I make my observations today, of course, with a great deal more confidence and, in a sense, with a good deal more authority than I made those of two years ago. The views which I expressed two years ago were just my own views. The views I am going to express today are views that have been formally accepted by the political party to which I belong as a part of its program for action when it is once more called upon by the people of this country to form a government.

It is very simple indeed to put to the house the proposition which I should like to have considered by this special committee and I do not need to take a great deal of the time of the house in order to do so as I should like to have other hon. members express their interest in this matter. I think the real debate and discussion should take place in the special committee itself where we could really get down to cases.

Stated briefly, the proposition relates to two things which are absolutely interconnected and interdependent. Of course, the first one could be done without the other but I doubt that it would ever be done effectively in that way. On the other hand, no responsible parliament would ever do the second one without doing the first. The first is the limitation of the total expenditures permitted both candidates and political parties in general elections and presumably also in by-elections. The second is the payment of the greater part of these expenditures—possibly all of them but certainly the greater part of them—out of the public treasury.

The first proposition I think would meet with almost universal acceptance as a desirable thing in itself. I do not think there are many people in this country who could honestly say they think it is a good idea to have unlimited money spent on election campaigns. However, there are many people who are dubious about the possibility of policing expenditures. Once you start in this field of prohibition, as everyone knows, difficulties are encountered. It is a very difficult field in which to legislate unless there is a really genuine consensus in the community in favour of prohibition. However, this would not really be complete prohibition. It would be a prohibition of only more than a certain amount of expenditures. What it would really be is temperance rather than prohibition. Of course, everybody is in favour of temperance.

It is true that in the elections act we defined things precisely and we made many changes in the definitions in this parliament in 1960. We defined carefully those things on which money cannot be spent by candidates. However, our constitution really takes little account of political parties. It does so in a few respects in the elections act, but not many. It is, of course, perfectly fruitless to limit the expenditures of individual candidates so long as party expenditures are not limited, in certain fields at any rate. I think this problem has become an urgent one. I think it is much more urgent than it ever was previously and that, with the advent of television, it is much more intractable than it ever was previously. We all know that television is extremely costly. We all know that some measure of use of television is essential if political parties are to compete with all the other demands upon the time and attention of the electorate. Perhaps it would be nicer if that were not so. Perhaps it would be nicer if there were such an ardent flame of patriotism burning in all our people that they would deny themselves all amusements and all other avocations to listen to politicians. But we all know they will not do so; we all know that we will not be listened to or looked at unless we compete with the other shows. With television this becomes increasingly difficult and also increasingly costly.

There is another aspect, of course, of this problem of limitation that is also very important. I think it is impossible to have voluntary limitation. If it were left entirely to the party managers right after each election when they are faced with the cold, hard facts of the bills they have to pay and the difficulties they have in paying them, I feel sure they might reach an agreement about how much they would do, but there would be no sanction to it and in the heat of an election campaign one would always have one's doubts. I frankly confess that in those circumstances I would not have enough faith in human nature to believe that it would really work. I think it is like disarmament. I think it has got to have a sanction and the sanction must be the sanction of the law. I believe of course, that if the right kind of penalties and the right kind of enforcement machinery are provided there will be such an enormous incentive to all political parties to abide by the law that in fact it will not be nearly as difficult to enforce as many people think.

A much more revolutionary idea of course, under our system of government is the idea that the expenditures or a large part of them should be paid out of the treasury. Why would anyone advocate that? Why would anyone suggest that this should be done instead of following the present system of raising voluntary, quasi voluntary or perhaps some involuntary contributions from certain sections of the community that want to support a political party or feel impelled for one reason or another to support a political party? In the days before 1900 political campaigns really did not cost very much. If the average candidate could raise a few hundred dollars he could buy a horse and buggy, get around his constituency and attend a few meetings. A free show was being put on and it was fairly easy to raise the necessary funds among the neighbours. But today we are all conscious of the fact that very large sums of money have to be raised for what are perfectly legitimate and proper expenditures and what would be, even with the most rigid limitation, perfectly proper, legitimate and, I think, necessary expenditures if we are to have an informed public exercising the franchise. I do not think anyone would argue seriously that, with the state of the world today, that is not a desirable objective.

Of course, it is easy to enunciate the general principle, but how would this principle be worked out in practice? I have no fixed views upon that. I would be glad to put a scheme forward at any time. I would be happy to put a scheme forward for discussion in the committee but I would not think that I had the final word on this any more, I am sure, than any other hon. member would. I think there are half a dozen ways in which this could be done and fortunately, of course, we are going to have some practical guidance in this matter. As hon. members know, there is a bill before the legislature of one of the provinces to do precisely what I am suggesting we in this house should merely study. There is an actual bill before the legislative assembly of Quebec at the present time having as its objectives what I am suggesting here. I am sure that bill will be changed before it is finally enacted and I am sure any scheme I might put forward in the committee would be changed.

But perhaps, sir, I should indicate the broad general lines on which I think this could be done practically. Basically the amount of money would be in proportion to the number of electors. If another reform which is mentioned in the speech from the throne actually does come about, the number of electors in each constituency, of course, is presumably going to be somewhat less uneven than at the present time. But it would be quite absurd to give someone who represented 18,000 people the same amount to spend as someone who represented 225,000, except perhaps in the Mackenzie River or Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador constituencies where someone representing a very small number of people would perhaps need to have more to cover the area effectively.

So I think two factors would have to be considered. The basic factor would be so many cents or dollars per elector with a division of that sum between the parties and the candidates on some prearranged formula. But I think we would also have to take account of these hinterland areas and there would have to be some special provision made so that candidates in those areas could in fact have the same reasonable access to the electors as candidates in more densely populated areas.

It also seems to me that there would be relatively little difficulty in doing this if there were only two political parties, but I would not argue for a minute, that there should be legislation for only two political parties. I agree with Mr. Stanley Knowles, who was once a very distinguished member of this house, that parliament functions best—I was rather surprised that Mr. Knowles should say this in his book—when there are only two parties; but while we may be approaching that state, though not exactly in the way Mr. Knowles expected us to approach it, we are not going to reach it very quickly. Certainly no member of my party that I have ever heard of, and I would hope no other member of the house, would ever suggest that we should try to limit the country legally to only two political parties. I believe that would be a restriction of liberty that would be quite un-British, if I may put it that way.

It seems to me that if the electors of a country feel they cannot express themselves properly or get representation within the scope of existing political parties they should, if self-government means anything, have the freedom if they want to, to elect people who do not belong to those parties or do not belong to any party. That means that some kind of equitable formula has to be devised in the case where there are third and fourth parties in order to make provision for these parties and also for their candidates. Candidates are much less difficult than parties, I agree, but I do not think this is an insuperable problem.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

There is another problem, of course, which exists perhaps more in some provinces than in others, but does exist. I refer to what might be called the nuisance candidate, the person who presents himself for election to advertise his business or just out of sheer exhibitionism, or is perhaps somewhat stimulated to do so because his name is exactly like the name of one of the other candidates and it is felt that if he is encouraged to offer himself as a candidate he may deform the results of the election. Of course, I think there are two things that ought to be done about that situation. One of them is that we should require more real electors to sign the candidates' papers and the deposit should be increased. I advocated this change in the committee on privileges and elections without success, though I think there was a lot of sympathy for the view I expressed.

It seems to me that these exhibitionists of one sort or another perform no useful function at all in our society. I certainly would not be in favour of giving them a free ride. I am sure a formula could be devised. I have suggested once or twice it should be 20 per cent of the total vote or 20 per cent of the vote of the successful candidate. I do not think there is anything sacrosanct about 20 per cent. All I say is that no candidate should have his expenses paid unless he gets what you might loosely call a respectable vote, and I would accept almost any definition of any reasonable man or woman as to what that might be. As I say, that is a difficulty. This procedure would certainly make it possible for someone who was an independent candidate, entirely independent of any political party, to represent, as we have seen members in previous parliaments do for long periods of time, important groups of people in this country. No one would want to see them excluded.

I realize that in a very brief explanation of this kind I cannot do any more than give a general idea of what I have in mind. There are just one or two words I have to say in defence of the idea that these expenditures should be paid out of the treasury. I have had some experience in these matters and, although I have never actually collected campaign funds I do not pretend I am entirely unaware of their existence. I am not one of those people who believe that most of the contributors to campaign funds of all parties, with the possible exception of one that is not represented in this house, and I do not mean the Social Credit party, contribute because they really want to further the party and not because of some advantage they are hoping to get for themselves. There are a lot of people who would not agree with that view.

There are many insinuations made about this matter to the effect that contributors to campaign funds really control the party. They are made, I think, by supporters of all parties, but never about their own party. I do not believe really that most of the contributors have that feeling. I am not sure that some of them do not feel they are going to get something out of it for themselves that is not necessarily in the public interest. My point is this: We all know that these expenditures are necessary. We all know that if we are going to have a parliament that is decently representative of the people, these expenses have to be made by candidates and parties. They are really part of the cost of self-government, just as much as the election machinery itself is. It seems to me it is like many of the things that used to be done long ago by charity that are now done by the social services. In this case, we are getting past the point where election campaign funds can be raised solely on a voluntary basis.

Surely, if self-government is worth having, it is worth all of us paying for. It would have this other and final advantage, sir. Every member elected to this parliament, if practically all his election expenses were paid out of the treasury, would undoubtedly have a greater feeling of independence of everyone except his own electors than, at any rate, seems to be the case at the present time. It would remove any suspicion, which is just as important in many ways in these public affairs as anything else, of any member being beholden to any individual or any group in any kind of way except the electorate of his constituency and the people of Canada generally. Well, I think, sir, I have exhausted my time and I have said really all that needs to be said.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I must first deal with one of the points raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) in relation to the committee on privileges and elections which sat in 1960 to revise the Canada Elections Act. I must say that I felt that was the most useful and non-controversial committee of which I have been a member in quite a number of years. It is true that we did not all agree on all the subjects that were brought up for discussion. There was, I believe a very definite effort on the part of every member of the committee to approach the problems of the Canada Elections Act in a non-controversial and non-partisan way. I do feel that the committee's work was well done, and this will show up when we next have the act before us.

I have been searching through the minutes of the committee in an effort to ascertain whether or not the hon. member did raise this particular point in the committee. I am afraid I still have not been able to find out whether or not he did. I rather think it was raised, but it was decided not to take any action on it.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member would like, I can clear that up. I think I raised it as a point of interest but not one that was before us at that time. I did the same thing in the house.

Mr. Aiken: I appreciate that remark, Mr. Speaker, because I was not sure. I was sure that we had not taken a vote on it.

By way of indicating the common approach to problems by members of that committee, I note that on page 41 of the minutes a motion is recorded as being put by the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) and seconded by myself, and agreed to. Farther along, on the same page, there is recorded a motion put by myself and seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa East. Then, I notice there was a motion moved by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). So, as I say, we did have co-operation in this committee.

I do want to say there is some merit in the resolution we are discussing. However, in view of the fact we so recently overhauled the elections act and we are now trying it out, perhaps we should not consider any large revision at this time. We all agree, I think, that we are very close to an election, and I think it is rather late in the day to be suggesting the government should put up some money for the forthcoming election. For that reason, I do not feel we can reasonably approve of this resolution at the moment.

One of the interesting things about this resolution, Mr. Speaker, is that it comes from a member of the official opposition and not from a member of another party. I noticed in going back over the record of Hansard for a number of years that the members of the C.C.F. party, up until this year, have been putting forward similar suggestions. They have been decrying the fact that the Liberal and Conservative parties were being supported by big business and were saying, in effect, that he who pays the piper calls the tune. I should like to refer to Hansard for July 22, 1958, where the hon. member for Skeena is recorded as saying:

> We all know, I am sure, of the Bible phrase, "Where your treasure lies there lies your heart also."

Then further on he says:

> I am not saying because they make these contributions that any particular party will perform some sort of skulduggery to ensure that legislation passed is in the interests of the people who make such contributions, but it naturally follows that the party concerned will look upon those who contribute to it as friends and that the legislation it passes will be drafted with this in mind.

Then he goes on:

The general public, in the long run, pays for every political contribution made, whether it be to the Tories or to the Liberals.

I notice that at that time he did not mention his own party.

Later in 1959, when discussing a very similar measure the hon. member for Port Arthur was dealing with the question of contributions to members by political parties and at page 5305 of Hansard of June 30, 1959, he is recorded as saying:

If a political party must count upon secret donations of various kinds I think the thought will always remain in the minds of many people that there are possibilities of undue influence.

We also have other examples of this kind of statement. In 1959, when speaking of the Canada Elections Act, the hon. member for Skeena as reported at page 1953 of Hansard said, and I paraphrase, that we are entitled to know what elements of society, if any, are attempting to subvert political parties. I just point this out to indicate this is an issue that has been pressed for a number of years by the hon. members of the C.C.F. party, that there should not be any contributions, or at least that contributions to party funds should be small. This principle was carried forward into a bill which was presented year after year, until last year. Now it has mysteriously lost favour with the members of the new party, presumably in view of the fact that they are planning and definitely working towards receipt of contributions through a check-off on union dues.

I just mention that in passing because it indicates that a great deal depends on where you sit in how you view these things. A great deal depends on whether you are the recipient of such contributions or whether you cannot get them.

I agree there should be some limitation on what is required by an hon. member to run an election, but if you start drawing a line where will it end? Where do you draw the line in terms of money figures? Every party has a different approach to every campaign in every riding. Every party has a different approach; and you cannot draw a rule for one candidate in a riding which would apply to another candidate in the same riding. If you tried to do that, instead of helping an hon. member you might be restricting him.

You may have an hon. member who has to contend with an opponent who is very well supplied with money. Maybe the money comes legally, maybe it comes illegally; maybe it is spent one way, maybe it is spent another way; but if large sums of money are being spent to defeat a candidate surely that candidate, if he can, will secure funds to spend an equal amount to hold his seat and try to defeat his opponent?

There is a great deal of merit in the suggestion that is put forward, but I say that for the two reasons I have mentioned, the first being that in such a situation you do not know where to draw the line and the second being that we are shortly approaching another federal election, this would not be a satisfactory time to deal with the matter.

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I should like to say a few words on this motion. First of all, may I set the mind of the previous speaker at rest. I do not think it is a very telling argument to suggest that because the party does not put forward a motion it has lost interest in this particular aspect of the problem. I can assure him that the group I am part of would stand by the words he quoted of the hon. member for Skeena and the contribution of the hon. member for Port Arthur. We would still suggest that secret contributions are not the best way of dealing with election expenses.

We still believe in the revelation of all the workings and the financial structures of parties. We still believe this as much as we did before, and therefore I can certainly lend my support to this particular motion. I think it is a good motion and I believe all of us can support it in the sense that it does not suggest any particular change. It simply suggests a consideration and a recommending of means to ensure greater independence to hon. members.

Although it is a little surprising to me that this motion has come forward, nevertheless I think it is perhaps rather interesting and symbolic that it has come forward on the day when elections to the supreme Soviet were announced in the news media. Of course we share popular opinion about this so-called facade of an election whereby people go to the polls to record a ballot for people who have already been hand-picked. It is not so much an election as a verification of candidates; but on the other hand I think we should be concerned that our western, democratic elections should not be in the form of dictatorship. They should not be in the form of dictatorship through news media or control of certain forms of changing opinion in the sense that money does not decide. It is knowledge, integrity, policies and ideas that should really motivate people in recording their votes.

I think we all recognize that an election can be the highest point in our system of democracy, or it can be the lowest point in that system. All of us are not so naïve and completely ignorant of some of the less respectable aspects of our elections, and I think that statement leaves no doubt in any mind as to what is meant by it. Someone has said that we have a parliamentary system which is a good system in spite of, rather than because of, the way we carry on our elections and I believe this is a matter of some concern to a great many people in Canada.

I notice there has been some concern shown over elections and election expenses in the public press, especially in the national magazines. Just last year Mr. James Scott, the former organizer of the Liberal party, wrote a series of articles in the Globe and Mail in which this problem was highlighted.

I do not think this is any time to argue about whose expenses are being gained in a certain way, or who is wrong. The point he made is that all parties should be concerned about this problem of expenses and I believe that the committee proposed would have the advantage of revelation. I do not think there is anything filthy or dirty it is going to reveal. Instead it is going to reveal something very realistic.

I well remember a preacher who once a year would give a sermon, what he called the gospel of gold. He gave this particular sermon every year because he did not want to confuse people with the idea that prayers keep the lights going and fill the furnace in the church. In effect what he was saying is that they had to have money to run a church, and we have to have money to run an election. I think a committee of this sort could put forward some very realistic points which would clear up the misconceptions of people who think that $8 million, $9 million, or $10 million suddenly drop from the heavens in an election year, and we spread this across the nation and elect our candidates. This is an unfortunate misconception which people have. I think it would help all of us in the sense that I am sure everyone of us would like to believe that our parties could be supported by—I am not going to argue this contention today—money coming from government sources. If this were the only money to be used I think this scheme would have some very great merit. Or if it were by contributions openly given by individuals, that would be fine.

I think all of us would like to see our parties run this way. Over the last couple of years there have been a number of articles written on this subject. I do not contend that they are true or false. One was written by Mr. Blair Fraser, and more recently one was written by Mr. Peter Newman, indicating where the money was coming from which went to major political parties, to the party that I represent and to the party which is not at this time in the house. In that article he indicated that large corporations were giving very large donations to the same party. Here again there was nothing dirty about it; he simply said that it was there, and really what they were doing was perhaps paying to establish the status quo, or perhaps they were being blackballed into paying for something they did not really want to pay for. However when we get down to it, you and I and every other taxpayer in the country really pays for the election.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member for Peterborough would permit a question.

Mr. Pitman: Certainly.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member has already made some comments with regard to how money is raised for elections. Perhaps I do not understand this, but would he deal with the manner in which the party he represents, the New Democratic party, was raising this money. Would he explain that to the house, because I have heard different versions and I may have the wrong understanding.

Mr. Pitman: I will be very glad to explain it to the hon. member. We have been allowing unions which wished to affiliate—locals, not the Canadian Labour Congress—to affiliate by democratic vote within their locals, and any member within the local who wishes to contribute five cents a month can contribute through the means which the union itself decides. This is the method that has been followed. It is completely open; there is nothing to hide about it. That is, as I understand it, what happens. Of course, all memberships of other political parties also collect their funds by this method; that is, by paid memberships to local constituency organizations. I do not think there is anything secret in this; it has been stated many times. To get back to the resolution here—

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit another question? Would he not agree that the answer he has just given the hon. member is only a partial one and it does not fully explain the situation in respect to local unions paying into the New Democratic party? I think the situation is in no way democratic, in that the members of the local unions who do not wish to pay into this political party must contract out. If it is democratic, why are not they contracting in?

Mr. Pitman: I think as far as party policy is concerned there is no intention of their contracting out. I think you will find that each local decides how it will be done. Perhaps the hon. member has a particular beef in his particular part of the country, but it has not come to my attention in my part of the country. Perhaps the hon. member knows more about it than I do in that particular area, but as far as I am concerned I have given the explanation as I understand it.

I come back to the motion again. I do not wish to delay this motion. We are dealing with a period of time when expenses for elections are rising at fantastic speed. The whole area of television and party gimmicks is almost leading parties to bankruptcy, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has suggested. I would very much support the setting up of this committee. I would support its attempts to bring witnesses to the committee to discover any other way in which our whole political electoral system could operate.

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the hour has become so advanced before I have been able to get the floor. This is a subject that I came here four years ago anxious to discuss, and I have not on any previous occasion been able to do so. I would like to say at once that what I take to be the nub of this resolution, to limit and control expenditures in the campaigns for the election of members to the House of Commons, has my complete support.

I have been involved in a number of elections and I can think of a number of instances where I would like to have seen efficient methods of controlling and limiting the expenditures in campaigns. As the hon. member who moved this motion has said, in the province of Quebec his party has now put forward a bill to amend the electoral act. I believe it is bill No. 51. I have not had the opportunity of reading that bill, but in my view it is amending an act that is already better than the federal one, and while I give whatever credit may be due to the committee that has amended our own act, in my view they did not go nearly far enough.

One of the methods of paying for election expenditures that I should like to see controlled was epitomized by a gentleman who worked for me in a by-election in 1954 and whose name I will give as Kelly because that was not his name. He became very indignant with me about the method by which I was running my campaign, because he said, "I voted seven times against you last year. Why don't you let me make it even this time?"

Mr. Speaker, he did not do it for nothing. This is the area into which I think we should look for the limiting and controlling of expenditures.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour for consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DIVORCE BILLS—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN CALLING ORDER

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, could I make a request of the house at this time. I think interesting progress is being made in the consideration of better methods of handling divorce bills and could I ask the leave of the house that those bills listed in my name not appear on the order paper this week.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house concur in the request of the hon. member of Halifax that divorce bills be not listed this week?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Canadian Army—

644. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $35 million.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, without explanation it might be thought that this vote and the succeeding one would mean that the estimated total expenditures for the Department of National Defence for the current fiscal year were being increased $66 million. This is not the fact. There has already been voted for the Department of National Defence $1,615,637,000. The expenditures for the present fiscal year are actually being estimated at $1,631,857,000, an increase of $16,220,000 over the appropriations already voted. However, because of deficiencies in the vote relating to army operation and maintenance and in the R.C.A.F. capital vote, although there are considerable amounts which would not be spent in other votes, they cannot be applied as far as these two votes are concerned. That is why it is necessary to request these further amounts as far as these two particular votes go.

I should like to make it very clear that the total estimated increase in expenditure is $16-odd million rather than $66 million as would appear from a casual look at the estimates. The vote under consideration, operation and maintenance for the army, chiefly is required to cover pay and allowances. It arises because of the fact that in August 1961 cabinet decisions were taken which authorized, as already announced to the house, an increase of approximately 10,600 men in the strength of the regular army in Canada. Second, the vote arises as a result of an increase of approximately 1,100 men in the strength of the Canadian army brigade in Europe. The third reason is a special militia training program for training up to 100,000 militia men during the winter of 1961-62, a program which is currently going forward. The fourth reason is the acceleration of various aspects of the national survival program.

Based on an army estimate made in September, which I have previously given to the house, the estimated cost of implementing these decisions is $37,742,000; but because of the surplus which exists in certain other items in this vote it is now estimated that a net addition of $35 million as provided for here is what is required, and that that will be sufficient to complete the expenditures under the army operation and maintenance vote for this present fiscal year.

The present primaries which require supplementary funds are shown on page 14 in the printed details and it will be noted that the major item is pay and allowances which requires $27,120,000 of the total amount required.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could say out of the $1,631,857,000 that he now estimates will be the total requirement for the department for the fiscal year ending March 31, what amount has been or will be spent for pay and allowances and maintenance and how much of that will have been spent for equipment by the year end.

Mr. Harkness: I would have to make that computation. I can obtain that information very shortly for the hon. member. I believe there are some officials in the gallery who will come down and provide me with that information in the course of a few minutes.

Mr. Hellyer: Another question in the meantime. Could the minister advise the committee what items were in surplus and from what items the funds were taken to make up the survival training course?

Mr. Harkness: As far as this particular vote is concerned there is a surplus in respect of professional and special services, corps of commissionaires and other services of $225,000. Also, under the item relating to telephones, telegrams and other communication services there is an amount of $902,000. Under the item dealing with materials and supplies, fuel for heating, cooking and power generating units there is an amount of $200,000. Under the item relating to medical and dental supplies there is an amount of $125,000. Under the item relating to repair and upkeep of equipment there is an amount of $453,000. Under the item relating to municipal and public utilities services there is an amount of $200,000.

Mr. Hellyer: What I cannot understand from this reply is where the $45 million is coming from which would be required if that amount was not being transferred from other budgetary expenditures.

Mr. Harkness: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I thought the hon. member wished to know where the surpluses were in this particular vote. As a result of the surpluses in this vote, instead of having to ask for $37-odd million we need only ask for $35-odd million.

As far as the over-all picture is concerned the surplus is chiefly in the navy and the army capital programs and in the vote relating to R.C.A.F. operation and maintenance. Those three votes constitute the great bulk of what we estimate will be surplus to what we thought we would require when the estimates were prepared well over a year ago.

Mr. Hellyer: When the minister refers to capital programs he is referring to equipment programs, is that correct?

Mr. Harkness: The acquisition of equipment, construction of buildings, acquisition of land, and so on.

Mr. Hellyer: Is it correct to say that the acquisition of new equipment has been reduced in order to make money available for pay and allowances and housekeeping?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Chairman, and we cannot transfer one from the other. That is why we are here asking for this vote at the present time. If we were able to transfer from the capital vote to the operation and maintenance vote what we would be asking for at the present time, instead of the $66 million that is provided between the two votes is $16 million.

Mr. Hellyer: That is correct, but of the total defence appropriation for the year the proportion which is now going to be spent for equipment is considerably reduced over that which was indicated last September, and the proportion which is being spent on pay and allowances and housekeeping is being materially increased. I wondered whether the minister could now indicate just what the strengths of the forces are and how close they are to the new ceilings which were authorized last fall.

Mr. Harkness: In regard to the first point I think I should make it clear again, Mr. Chairman, that the bulk of the shortfall, we will call it, which is now estimated, is in the three votes, namely in the operational maintenance vote which is not equipment for the R.C.A.F.; in the capital vote for the navy, and that is due to a considerable extent to slower deliveries, as far as naval vessels are concerned, than it was estimated would be the case; and finally in the capital vote as far as the army is concerned. A good deal of this or—perhaps I had better wait until I get the figures—a proportion of it at least is due to smaller spending on the acquisition of land and construction of buildings than we had estimated would take place.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask a question on vote 644. In the details on page 14 I note there is an item for food supplies. I should like to ask the minister whether he would mind giving the committee the understanding with regard to the supplying of food to the Canadian forces overseas. I understand that all the food supplies for our forces overseas come through British ordnance. I should like the minister to tell us whether there is any kind of understanding or agreement with British ordnance which supplies our troops as to the food in any respect whatsoever. I ask that question for this reason. In going through the ordnance depots of our military establishments last fall in France and Germany I must say that I was rather intrigued when I noted that the butter came from Belgium, the meat from Australia and New Zealand, the powdered eggs from Formosa, the canned vegetables and fruit from the United States, the canned salmon—horror of horrors—from within 50 miles of Vancouver it is true, but from Bellingham, Washington, U.S.A. Then, the cheddar cheese, of which we have a few million pounds in Ontario, came from South Africa. I could just keep on and go down the list.

However, in the ordnance plants you could see all this. When I thought of the hundreds of millions of dollars this House of Commons votes in subsidies for agriculture produce and of the need for markets; and when I thought of all our butter, the plight of our poultry producers and that of many of our growers, I just could not help wondering whether there were not some arrangements with the British ordnance supplying food for our troops as a result of which they might perhaps get some of the high quality production of Canada.

Mr. Harkness: As I think is well known, our army brigade group in Germany is on the British supply line. We draw all our supplies of food from the British base units line of supply and so on. They secure all their supplies, as I think the hon. member is aware, by what you might call competitive marketing in all of the markets of the world. Naturally, they get these supplies at the cheapest rates at which they can get them. This of course is one of the ways in which Britain has maintained herself as a trading nation for so long. For us to set up a separate supply line of our own would be a completely uneconomic proposition. We have not a sufficient number of troops to justify the whole supply set up which would be required and it would cost enormously more to try to supply our troops with Canadian food products in that way than it costs by taking supplies from Great Britain. As I stated before Great Britain buys in all parts of the world and at the cheapest prices. This lack of Canadian agriculture products in that British supply line is a reflection really of the fact that Canadian prices for agriculture products are higher than those in most other parts of the world, practically. The farmer here is getting higher prices for his butter, eggs, hogs and so on, by and large, than is the farmer any place else in the world. For that reason you find in the British supply line very little in the way of Canadian agriculture products.

Mr. Winch: All I saw was canned peas. That product was the only thing I could find.

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member went through the Maple Leaf service store he would find in it a good proportion of Canadian canned goods. That store, of course, is a non-public funds operation and the particular taste requirements of the Canadian personnel are taken into consideration in that store. You have a good range of Canadian products in the Maple Leaf service store, but in what we draw for general rations there is very little, for the reason I have indicated.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the minister now have the answer to the question in respect of the percentage of the total allocation for equipment?

Mr. Harkness: Yes. There is an estimated shortfall of $20.8 million in the air force operation and maintenance vote, a shortfall of $19.82 million in the navy capital vote and a shortfall of $5.8 million in the army capital vote. In D.R.B. there is a shortfall of $3.4 million. Then there are other smaller amounts. I gave the hon. member what the shortfall was in the particular vote we are considering.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister now say what the strength of the army was in September 1961 and what it is at the present time?

Mr. Harkness: My officials are just working out those figures for me and I have not obtained them yet.

Mr. Winch: This vote is the only place that I can ask this question. May I ask the minister to inform the house what the agreement is between his department, or the government, and the United States or NATO having regard to the fact that this year construction is to go ahead on the building of the ammunition dumps for nuclear warheads on the Canadian bases, with American guards, according to the information we have received. Can we have any information from the minister on that matter? I understand that construction is to be proceeded with this year.

Mr. Harkness: As far as the army brigade area in Germany is concerned, the hon. member has been there. He knows that these camps are placed close to German towns and in the German countryside, with a considerable amount of space between the different camps. In that area certain of these facilities are being built. Of course, none of this land belongs to Canada or anything like that.

Mr. Winch: Just at our bases?

Mr. Harkness: As far as I am aware, they are not being built actually where our barracks are, although they might be fairly close to them. I do not know the exact locations. However, my understanding is that they are not being built in the actual barrack areas that we are occupying.

Mr. Hellyer: Now that we are into this subject, will the minister tell the committee whether, in his opinion, it was a military necessity that Canada equip and send an Honest John missile battery to the brigade group in Europe?

Mr. Harkness: It was considered the wise and prudent course to follow. It certainly was in accordance with the requirements and desires of NATO supreme headquarters.

Mr. Hellyer: Is it not a fact that the Canadian brigade group will be fighting—if fighting occurs—with a larger unit, and that the larger unit includes certain elements of the British army which could supply nuclear reinforcements if necessary?

Mr. Harkness: There are various ways in which the army brigade group may be employed. In fact, a variety of plans exist, and in some cases they would be employed with units of the British army and in other cases not.

Mr. Winch: While we were visiting the camps, and I appreciate the courtesy we were shown, we were given to understand that in all probability the air force will have the CF-104 late this fall and the minister has also mentioned now one group which is trained in the use of the Honest John. Is this equipment being supplied? Are these men being trained without any official decision as to the ammunition to be used by these weapons?

Mr. Harkness: The S.S.M. battery, of course, has received quite a long period of training. A considerable number of men from that battery went to the United States to take courses there and then they came back and trained the remainder of the battery here in Canada. That training is continuing in Europe. The operation and possible employment of the battery are being integrated in the general brigade training which is now taking place.

Mr. Winch: Yes, but they are in Europe and they have this equipment. They are there for a certain purpose. Is there an understanding that they can make use of these weapons if the necessity arises or are they just sent over there with the weapons but no ammunition?

Mr. Harkness: They are over there, as I say, in order to be integrated into and carry on training with the brigade group and thus to be in a position if an emergency develops so that they could be employed.

Mr. Winch: In other words, actually what all these words mean is that they will be supplied with nuclear warheads or equipment? That decision has been reached?

Mr. Harkness: No, I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister said that in his opinion it was prudent that the Honest John battery should be there. Does he not then feel it is prudent that the weapons should be equipped with nuclear warheads so that the battery would be of some use if required? I am sure the minister is not trying to create the impression that our troops are there merely for training purposes, although that is part of their duties. They are there to resist aggression if required, and surely if nuclear weapons were to be used in order to resist aggression it would be necessary to have the warheads immediately available. Has a decision been made to use them under those circumstances?

Mr. Harkness: We consider the situation to be quite satisfactory as it is in view of the general situation in Europe at the present time.

Mr. Hellyer: Is there any agreement? Is there any commitment? When these forces are to be at the disposal of the NATO command, surely there must be some understanding or agreement, implied or otherwise, which is the basis for their being there. Would the minister explain to the committee what it is, because I think the committee is entitled to know, when it is being asked to vote funds?

Mr. Harkness: There are no funds being asked in this particular vote for the purpose just indicated and, as the hon. member well knows, the general situation with regard to nuclear arms as far as NATO is concerned is a matter which has been under discussion now for some considerable length of time and no agreement has yet been reached in that regard.

Mr. Hellyer: If I may deal with the second point first, if it is true that no agreement has been reached, how soon does the minister feel it is necessary that an agreement be reached? With regard to the other point, that no funds are being sought for the brigade group in Europe in this vote, surely the minister is not informing the committee that no part of these funds will be used for the pay and maintenance of army personnel serving overseas.

Mr. Harkness: That is not what I said. What I said was that none of the funds being asked for here are for nuclear weapons or anything along that line. This is a straight operation and maintenance vote and naturally some part of it would have to do with the pay of the some 220 odd members of the S.S.M. battery.

Mr. Hellyer: I think that is quite correct; but surely that is the reason that we are entitled to ask these questions. Why should we pay troops overseas to maintain a battery which is ineffective? The minister should tell us what plans he has for this particular unit. Does he intend to make it effective by providing it with warheads for its missiles or does he intend to leave it there in perpetuity and expect this committee to provide funds year after year for the maintenance of an ineffective and useless battery?

Mr. Winch: I wonder whether the minister would comment on what I understand to be the situation. My information is that since about the middle of last summer there has been a decided change in viewpoint among many of those who are in control of defence policy, including the supreme allied commander of the NATO forces and NATO headquarters itself. From all I have heard, and I have heard quite a bit from SHAPE and SACEUR, there is to be a concentration more than ever before on highly trained mobile forces with conventional weapons, and the NATO analysis of any possible conflict in Europe is that it would arise by the probing of conventional forces which would have to be met by highly mobile and highly trained conventional forces. In view of the fact that these are the opinions which have been expressed now for almost a year by the supreme allied commander and NATO headquarters in Europe, could I ask the minister if this is the field of defence activity that he envisages for the Canadian forces operating under NATO. If he agrees with these pronouncements and that analysis, then why do we have this Canadian rocket force in Europe?

Mr. Harkness: Contrary to the opinions expressed by the hon. member, there has been no basic change whatever as far as SACEUR's general plans and concepts are concerned. The NATO shield force, SACEUR has been saying for years, needed to be improved in strength and mobility, and his aim has been to have as highly mobile, flexible and strong forces as possible. In public speeches for several years past he has been urging all of the countries in NATO, who were behind in their commitments as far as his forces in Europe were concerned, to bring these forces up to what are known as the force goals. There has been no general change whatever in the concept that I am aware of. It remains essentially the same as it was. There has been an increase in the strength of the forces and in their mobility because of the fact that the United States has moved in considerable numbers of troops. The German army has also come along fairly rapidly in the last year or so and there are now more French troops than there were. This has all increased the general strength. Some of these troops have received a good deal of new equipment which has increased their mobility and their hitting power.

Mr. Winch: If that is correct, then all I have to say is that it certainly strikes me as being different from all the briefings that the Canadian delegation received when they were given the privilege of being briefed by Canadian, United States and West German officers. In particular, statements were made in public, not in camera, in Paris at the opening of the NATO parliamentary conference. There was no hesitation whatever in stating that stress should now be placed on highly mobile, highly trained brigade forces equipped with conventional weapons. I am certain that I can listen to what an officer says and understand it. This is not only what we received from military sources, but was the point of view expressed by the leaders of almost every delegation from the various countries represented at that conference. I do not think I am too far wrong in my expression of that view.

Mr. Harkness: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member has misinterpreted the briefings he received. As I said a few minutes ago, SACEUR and the NATO council for several years have been putting on the pressure for all countries to bring their forces in Europe, both conventional and other forces, up to strength. In the last year or two years, there has been a considerable increase in these forces. Therefore, SACEUR, the supreme commander in Europe, is not so completely dependant on nuclear weapons to stop any attack as he was two years ago. But this has always been the aim; there has been no basic change whatever.

Mr. Matheson: I share the views of the hon. member for Vancouver East, and I suggest that to some of us it is inescapable that there has been a major change. I should like to ask the minister if he would consider, for example, the article appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of January 22, 1962 carrying the headline, "United States Shifts Defence Policy." Now, let me touch on that defence policy for a minute. There was a statement made by secretary of defence Robert S. McNamara—

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We are dealing with a specific item here concerning the operation and maintenance expenses of the Canadian army. If we begin to talk about United States defence policy and defence policy in general, then I submit we are completely out of order. The debate should be confined to the item on which it started, the item which is under discussion.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I understand that we are debating the estimates for the Canadian army and it is in that that I am precisely interested. I point out to this committee that on January 19, 1962, one of the experts in the field, Robert S. McNamara, appeared before a Senate committee on the armed services on the fiscal years 1963-67 defence program and 1963 defence budget. At this time he announced major changes that affect us and affect our army.

One of the things that he said was that there has been a major defence—

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member would speak to the point of order first raised by the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to speak to the point of order. I should like to bring this to your attention. I say respectfully that the minister is completely out of order in making the suggestion he has. After all, what the member has a right to do is to say what the policy in the United States is and what the policy of the United States secretary is in so far as those policies affect Canada. This is what the hon. member for Leeds is trying to do. It may well be that the statements which he will make will be embarrassing to the minister in some respects. Of course, that is not our fault if that be the case. Surely, the hon. member is bringing other witnesses to his assistance, and that is done every day during discussion of the estimates. I submit to you, respectfully, the hon. member has a right to do what he is doing now.

Mr. Harkness: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would submit that a general debate on defence, so far as these estimates are concerned, has already taken place. What we are calling for is further sums for a particular purpose and the debate should be confined to what those particular sums are and the purposes for which they are being asked. There should be no revival of the general debate on defence which I maintain would be completely out of order.

As a matter of fact, if in the consideration of these estimates and all the other supplementary estimates, there is going to be a general policy debate on all the departments concerned, then it would rapidly become impossible to carry on the business of this parliament. Parliament would cease to be able to operate if, during the consideration of every supplementary estimate, a general policy debate took place. This is the sort of thing we have had here for the past 14 days. If this sort of thing is allowed to continue, then I submit it will destroy the usefulness of parliament. Parliament would not be able to operate under those circumstances.

Mr. Chevrier: I just want to bring to your attention the point which the Minister of National Defence has brought forward. Apparently the minister was not here the other day when a disposition was made of that point. We were discussing, under item 636, vocational training under the Department of Labour. One of the ministers, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, raised exactly the same point as the Minister of National Defence has raised in respect of this item. I think I am safe in saying that on the question of principle it was clearly determined, clearly decided, that on an item of this kind we had a right to discuss the question of principle, and the Chair so held.

We went on to discuss it because, not only did hon. members on the other side of the house introduce the debate, but it was continued by hon. members on this side of the house. It would be contrary to equity, in my opinion, if it were not possible to determine and discuss on a supplementary item the question of principle; and that is exactly what is being asked here.

Mr. Hellyer: May I speak to the point of order? If the minister thinks we are going to pass lightly the authorization for $60 million without going into the pros and cons and the use to which the money will be put, he is sadly mistaken. Just about every principle having to do with defence and defence policy or lack of defence policy on the part of this government is raised by these items. The discussion includes the training of people for national survival, and we have to find out what the relationship is between these people after they have finished their training and the Department of National Defence or whether, in fact, it is just a make work program to bring down the unemployment figures in this country. The item raises the question of nuclear and non-nuclear forces in Canada.

Mr. Harkness: It has nothing to do with that.

Mr. Hellyer: It certainly does have, because you have committed millions of dollars in these estimates for the acquisition of equipment which only reaches its maximum potential when armed with nuclear weapons; that is what you are asking this committee to do. You are asking us to go along with the drift of your department or your government. You want more funds for atomic carriers when you have not even made up your mind as to whether or not you are going to use them, and that is quite a bit of nerve on your part. You should listen very carefully to the debate and try to give a little additional information so that we have more light on the subject and we can judge intelligently as to whether or not these funds should be voted.

Mr. Chambers: May I refer you to citation 239 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, Mr. Chairman? It states:

> The whole management of a department may be discussed in a general way when the committee of supply is considering the first resolution of the estimates of that department which reads as follows: "General Administration"—

The Chairman: What page is that?

Mr. Chambers: Citation 239 on page 201, Mr. Chairman.

> If however the words "General Administration" cover all the expenses to be incurred during the year, as shown for instance, in the Post Office estimates, it is relevant then to criticize every phase of the department totally or in detail without evading standing order 59(2) which sets forth that speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

We considered the item of general administration for the Department of National Defence when the main estimates of the department were before the committee.

According to this citation and standing order 59(2), this not being the item of general administration but a particular item, it is not permitted, as I read the citation and the standing order, to enter into a general debate and the discussion must be strictly relevant to the items listed in the vote.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Laurier suggested that a ruling was made on this point just the other day. So that there will be no misunderstanding, Mr. Chairman, I would refer you to page 1792 of Hansard of March 14 in which your ruling was given at that time. You said at that time, with relation to a point of order raised by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, that the debate should be on the item listed and that the hon. member for Essex East, who was then speaking, was merely laying the foundation. There was no suggestion by you, Mr. Chairman, that this item of a particular nature enabled a broad policy discussion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Read the whole thing and you will see where you are wrong.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Essex East is supposed to be able to read.

Mr. Hellyer: The parliamentary secretary read the wrong citation. I would refer Your Honour to citation 240, at page 202, which I would like to read.

> Supplementary estimates, when treated as customary and as a matter of course, instead of being restricted to occasion of unforeseen contingencies, do more to destroy effectual parliamentary control than any other indirect method that could be devised. They are, however, for one service or another annually recurring necessities. They may be presented either: (I) for a further grant to a service already sanctioned and voted for, or (II) for a grant for a further occasion of expenditure arising where the estimates were presented: (a) for expenditure newly imposed on the executive by statute; (b) to such an unexpected emergency.
> It is extremely difficult to make a close forecast of the amount which will have to be provided.
> The introduction of supplementary estimates of any considerable amount is really a breach of contract between the government and parliament, for when this is done the budget statement is destroyed, and in effect a supplementary budget is set up.

I contend this is a breach of contract on the part of the government. These are substantial expenditures, $60 million on these two items alone for national defence. I contend that in effect a new supplementary budget is set up, and in accordance with the traditional practice of parliament, both in Westminster and this house, when a supplementary budget is set up debate is unlimited and can range through the whole course of policy relative to and related to the items under discussion.

The Chairman: There has been quite a bit of discussion on this point of order. I certainly admit it is an important point of order but to my mind the situation is well set out in May's sixteenth edition on page 738, which reads as follows:

> Debate on supplementary and excess grants is restricted to the particulars contained in the estimates on which those grants are sought, and to the application of the items which compose those grants; and the debate cannot touch the policy or the expenditure sanctioned, on other heads, by the estimate on which the original grant was obtained, except so far as such policy or expenditure is brought before the committee by the items contained in the supplementary or excess estimates.

The question that must be decided is: does the item before the committee raise the question of policy in regard to nuclear armament? Now we have under the main item of national defence, the vote that was passed, vote No. 232, departmental administration, which is the item under which the general policy of the department may be discussed. So far as discussion on supplementary estimates is concerned it must be restricted to the particular items covered by them, and the hon. member for Leeds has not yet explained to me how the matter that he is bringing before the committee is related to this item. Unless that relationship is established I feel that the discussion ranges outside the item, and therefore should not be taken up right at this particular instant.

Mr. Winch: May I have a word on that very point, Mr. Chairman. If you will just look over what you have referred to, that is vote 644, you will see under that "pay and allowances," "food supplies," and "travelling and removal expenses." It was stated by the minister that one of the reasons he had to bring in the supplementary estimates was because of the additional forces that have been sent overseas under the NATO command. Therefore if the money we are asked for now is due to the additional cost of sending these extra men over under NATO, surely the question of their equipment and role under NATO is a matter which is pertinent to this very supplementary vote.

The Chairman: I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East in so far as that goes, but I do not think the whole matter of nuclear policy is pertinent to the vote.

Mr. Winch: One gun is policy.

Mr. Matheson: In the pamphlet distributed by this department, called "Canadian Defence Policy, 1960," we have this statement:

> Therefore, we must not consider our defence effort in isolation but, rather, one should look at the general effectiveness of the defensive alliances—

I put it to you, Mr. Chairman, that one cannot sensibly and realistically consider any vote to our Canadian army as a vote to that army alone without thinking of where it fits in with these defensive allies. I put it to the committee that if a major change has in fact taken place in the official thinking of some of our chief allies on this matter then it is important, it is germane to the vote under discussion at the present time, that we consider what kind of army we are maintaining.

Some of us wonder how much of an overhead we have for four brigade groups and, in fact, the number of groups we have scattered in different places. I have been told that there are 13 headquarters and I would like the minister to tell us how many people are actually on headquarters staff. So far as I know there has not been an army list published since 1939, and it is incredibly difficult for us in the opposition to get any kind of answer from this department with respect to where troops are and what they are doing.

We understand the importance of security in these matters, but there are some other things that are also important. We are part of the NATO alliance. That means we have certain strong allies such as the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, West Germany and so on. We know that some of them are equipped to take on certain tasks, and our largest and most powerful ally, the United States, has come to some profound change in its thinking, a change which very definitely affects us. We also understand that there are no two countries going to do exactly the same thing in this NATO alliance, and it is meet and proper that they be different.

We have the nuclear power of the United States, United Kingdom and France, and we know that two of these countries have had certain relationships with other countries that were formerly colonies. That puts them in a special position with respect to so-called neutrals at the present time.

Mr. Harkness: On the point of order I raised previously I must direct your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the details of this vote which we are considering which are to be found at page 14.

You will see that they do not have any relationship to all these matters of general defence and foreign policy which he is attempting to debate. All that is dealt with here are civil salaries and wages, pay and allowances, professional and special services, travelling and removal expenses, exhibits, advertising, films, and so on, materials and supplies such as clothing and personal equipment, food supplies, and the repair and upkeep of buildings and works.

Those are the sort of things that we are dealing with. We are not dealing in any way with general defence policy and general foreign policy, which is what the hon. member is talking about. I maintain that discussion of that kind on these particular items is completely out of order and completely contrary to the rules.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question. Does the provision "pay and allowances $4 million" apply in part to Canadian forces serving under NATO?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well surely that answer should conclude this whole matter.

Mr. Harkness: That has got nothing to do with general defence policy or foreign policy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why not?

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order was determined at least two days ago. I tried to bring that to Your Honour's attention a moment ago. On vote No. 636, technical and vocational training, after there had been a discussion for a long period of time by those of us who sit on this side of the chamber on the question of education in the province of Ontario and in other provinces, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys rose to try and stop the hon. member for Levis discussing a matter which concerned the province of Quebec. He said exactly what the Minister of National Defence said just now, that on a question of principle it was too late to discuss these matters. I do not know whether or not Your Honour ruled on that occasion—I thought Your Honour had ruled—and we went on and discussed it afterwards for quite some time. So having decided, in effect, if not by a formal decision, that this could be done on another vote, surely it can be done on this vote. That is my respectful view.

Mr. Hellyer: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, surely the question of alternatives is relevant. The minister, for example, would not contend that the opposition has no right to suggest that some of the fat should be trimmed off the army; that perhaps we have too many headquarters, too many brass—

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Harkness: I am not suggesting anything of the kind.

Mr. Hellyer: —and that some of the money could be saved for some of our needed equipment for our fighting men. Surely the minister does not suggest that. If he does suggest that, he has changed so much from the time when he sat on this side of the chamber and before he moved to the other side of the chamber that he is scarcely recognizable. At that time he said he thought it was extremely pertinent to discuss the top heavy personnel of the army structure and ways in which the top fat could be trimmed off so that we could save money. With this in mind, I think the minister is quite out of order in suggesting that we do not have the right to discuss alternatives as to how the money should be spent.

The Chairman: Again I must remind the committee that we are not on item No. 1 of the department, general administration; we are on a subheading concerned with particular sums that are being used for particular purposes.

Mr. Pickersgill: For the army.

The Chairman: The rules of this house are quite explicit on that. Rule 59, subparagraph 2 deals with it. There are citations in Beauchesne, there is the quotation that I have given from May, and the hon. member for Laurier referred to the practice that was adhered to last week in this committee. In making my ruling then I did mention that I would caution the hon. member that——as the minister has well pointed out, the rules of relevancy must be adhered to and he must correlate his remarks to the particular item.

Mr. Chevrier: What page?

I allowed the debate as a premise to discussion on the item and I directed the discussion toward the item. I think the same ruling should apply again and that the hon. member who has the floor could correlate his remarks to the particular item in a manner that is precise and specific, and he should not embark on a discussion on general policy. That, I think, is the only ruling I can give in regard to the rules and the practice of this committee.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure I do not need to draw your attention to the importance of this item as a supplement to perhaps the largest item for the whole year in the main estimates. I refer to page 46 of the estimates of 1961-62 which concern the Canadian army operation and maintenance. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that you would not want to cut off any discussion that was supplementary to a parliamentary vote involving $359 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: Now being increased by 10 per cent.

Mr. Benidickson: This is a supplementary item increasing the amount of the vote by $35 million. I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that, unlike most items in the estimates, we have under the Canadian army in the main estimates only two items, but they total $420 million and here we are asked many, many months after we have observed government policy, to vote an additional amount of $35 million for the Canadian army.

Surely in a democracy, having regard to this percentage of our total demands on the taxpayers of this country, we are entitled to have a fairly wide discussion about expenditures particularly concerning the Canadian army. I am sure that in your fairness, Mr. Chairman, you would not deny that.

If one goes to the details on page 14 of the supplementary estimates No. 3 he will see the reason for the observations that I am making at this point. I say that there is nothing more important at this time, having regard to the concern on the part of the taxpayers that we are not doing our duty in scrutinizing some of these expenditures, than looking at these items when they involve vast expenditures amounting to $359 million in the main estimates and another $35 million in this supplementary estimate attached to the main estimate.

I say that having regard to that and looking at all the other smaller estimates in supplementary estimates No. 3, surely the tolerance of the Chair will be given to the committee to make sure that the taxpayers' rights are properly taken care of in this matter.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, on March 15, 1962 when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was speaking, the chairman made his ruling. I am reading from page 1861 of Hansard:

> —with regards to the remarks upon which the hon. member for Levis was embarking I would point out that he was speaking about the principles of joint programs. This is a joint program and if he relates his remarks on joint programs generally to the joint program that is now under study, then to my mind he is fairly well within the realm of relevancy. I do not feel inclined to stop him at this stage—

Mr. Pallett: Would the hon. member read the rest of the paragraph, to complete the ruling the chairman gave at the time. He would not want to leave it up in the air, half finished.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): He should finish the sentence anyway.

Mr. Pallett: He should finish the sentence at least.

Mr. Chevrier: His Honour has just read it.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, my time is limited and I would like to address myself to the operation and maintenance of the Canadian army particularly as it applies to a joint program with particular NATO nations when certain circumstances have materially altered since our last deliberation with respect to defence. I think it is proper and germane that we mention this when we have additional pay and allowances of $4 million, and further pay and allowances totalling $23,120,000 together with travelling and removal expenses of $1.5 million. Our Canadian army is obviously not an army by itself. We on this side of the house have tried over a period of months to elicit the facts about the army from hon. gentlemen opposite. We do not know much about it. There is much information known only to the minister and his parliamentary secretary and probably not to many others. I suspect that for the number of fighting troops there is a grossly overweighted headquarters. We do not understand why there are so many headquarters in our military establishment. We do not know all the facts nor can we find them out. Searching the parliamentary library we find ourselves limited, naturally, with respect to the literature published by the department although we have not been at war for several years on a large scale.

I put it to the Chair that there have been substantial changes of policy on the part of our principal allies, particularly the United States and the United Kingdom. These announcements have taken place particularly since January, 1962. These changes compel us to ask the committee to consider whether or not the expenses which at one time we were appropriating are now applicable. I ask the Minister of National Defence whether in light of the fact that our two most valued and trusted allies indicate the need for a substantially stepped up conventional army it is necessary in these circumstances that we review whether or not the expenditures in the direction of nuclear deterrents are proper and relevant.

Recently in the United States the statement was made that there must be greater emphasis than in the past given both by ourselves and our NATO allies to non-nuclear forces. Mr. McNamara speaking with the confidence of the president—and at a number of conferences President Kennedy has repeated virtually the same thing—

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is wrong with this?

Mr. Churchill: I will tell the hon. member for Essex East, who should be an upholder of parliamentary usage and custom rather than one who is tearing it down, what is wrong with it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is trying to impose closure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Harkness: My colleague is speaking on a point of order.

The Chairman: The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Essex East on a question of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the minister says that instead of joining in this chorus of what he calls destruction I should be an upholder of the rules of the house.

Mr. Jones: You certainly should.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman has given expression to an observation that he should be asked to withdraw. The minister said that I have engaged in a course of tearing down parliamentary usage and custom—

Mr. Harkness: And so you have.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of National Defence accuses me of this, too. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the people who are tearing down parliament are those who are sitting on the government side of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Trying to impose closure.

Mr. Benidickson: The taxpayers want to know how the money is spent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have heard an observation which we might have expected from the Minister of National Defence, but it is surprising to hear from the leader of the house who is supposed to guide us in procedural matters a statement to the effect that I have contributed to the tearing down of parliament. I ask you, Mr. Chairman to invite the hon. gentleman to withdraw that remark and in asking Your Honour to do that I would ask the minister to look at my record alongside his and see who is tearing down the parliamentary institution.

Mr. Churchill: All we have to do is look back at 1956, if you like.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister not be seated? Will the Chair not be allowed to say something?

[Mr. Churchill.]

The Chairman: I will now hear the Minister of Veterans Affairs on a point of order.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Essex East has become supersensitive over these expressions I will gladly withdraw that comment about tearing down the institution of parliament. But I would say that the hon. member is not contributing to the maintenance of the procedure of parliament and the usage and customs which prevail here.

My point of order is this. The hon. member who was just speaking on this item was wandering far afield. That is what is destructive of the consideration of the supplementary estimates. Although Your Honour has read—

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the debates of 1956. And you dare to get up and say that?

Mr. Jones: I truly hope you remember the debates of that year.

Mr. Churchill: I hope hon. members opposite will remember black Friday.

Mr. Pickersgill: We had black Friday last Friday, and you moved the motion.

Mr. Benidickson: Black Friday again.

The Chairman: Order. I think it would be interesting to hear the minister on the point of order, which is the only question before us at this time.

Mr. Churchill: I think it is important that we observe the rules. Only by doing so can the affairs of an institution like this be properly conducted. I believe it is important to record these words which are to be found at page 738 of May's sixteenth edition on parliamentary practice. They are to be found approximately three quarters of the way down the page:

> —if the supplementary estimate is merely to provide additional funds of a relatively moderate amount required in the normal course of working of the services for which the original vote was demanded, only the reasons for the increase can be discussed and not the policy implied in the service which must be taken to have been settled by the original vote—

It is just common sense on supplementary estimates to restrict our discussion to the matter which is concerned with that supplementary estimate and not to debate the general policy of the whole department. Otherwise we would spend our time here engaging three or four times during the course of a session in repetitious discussion of policy matters.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not if you had good estimating.

Mr. Churchill: I would request the Chair to invite the hon. member who was speaking to restrict himself to the supplementary estimate which is before us on the basis of this rule of procedure which I have read from May.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to reply to the leader of the house on the point of order. As I wrote down his remarks I believe he referred to a relatively moderate amount. We are dealing with an amount of $35 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Churchill: What percentage is that of the total vote?

Mr. Pickersgill: Ten per cent of the original estimate.

Mr. Benidickson: In disdain the Minister of Veterans Affairs who is leading the house asks what percentage is that of the total amount of $7.4 billion that the government is asking the taxpayers of this country to pay. I wish to remind him that the minister often chided one of his eminent Liberal predecessors, a man who vastly increased the economy of this country, for having said off the cuff, "what is a million compared with receiving another $10 million or $20 million out of it?" The minister disdained that. He says $35 million is a relatively moderate amount.

At page 15 of supplementary estimates No. 3 which are before us we see reference to pay and allowances for the army. Referring back to the current item in the main estimates for 1961-62 we find under the item relating to the Canadian army a tremendous amount appropriated for operation and maintenance and pay and allowances. I say we are entitled in this committee to deal with any operation of any employee who will be paid under this vote. The sum of $35 million is involved in this vote for pay and allowances of members of the army. I say we may discuss policy and have the right to say that certain people are not properly employed.

The Chairman: Before the hon. member for Leeds continues I would like to recall to hon. members that, after all, the rules are made for our guidance. I believe it was the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who recently said this is a free parliament. Our rules were made by a free parliament and they have been accepted. It is only by all members accepting the rules that intelligent discussion can take place and progress can be realized.

I believe there are 96 items listed in the supplementary estimates. I think all of us understand that if every item listed in the supplementary estimates were to give rise to a discussion of policy and general affairs we would not be devoting our time to the business for which this committee has been set up. I would therefore ask the hon. member for Leeds, who has tried to co-operate, to continue to correlate his remarks and not to get into the subject of broad policy. There is a distinction between broad defence policy, nuclear policy and so on and the more restricted interpretation of policy inasmuch as it applies to the pay and allowances of Canadian military personnel. I think that within that frame he can validly and completely discuss the item under consideration. I should very much like him to restrict his remarks.

Mr. Benidickson: What about the much misjudged civil defence?

Mr. Harkness: Go ahead and talk about that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. We cannot do that.

Mr. Matheson: The minister has referred to a relatively minor vote of $35 million. In my innocence I felt that with a population of eight and a half million, this is a relatively substantial item.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member means eighteen and a half million people.

Mr. Matheson: Yes, eighteen and a half million people. May I say that the really serious situation that we see is that Canada can spend in the wrong direction such large amounts that actually we lose for our army any flexibility, any opportunity to develop, change, expand or keep up with the times or actually fulfil this very special purpose which our NATO allies would assign to us if we had a government that could sit down and enunciate policy and be able to indicate where we would be able to fit in, maybe with the Norwegians, Danes and so on, for special conventional purposes. Obviously, from the remarks of the Chair, it is the wish of this committee that we not discuss policy at all.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Matheson: But when we take the position that we are paying about $1.6 billion for a gigantic shotgun blast that hits nothing and makes nobody happy we are concerned because our little army which could be vitally significant for the objects of the NATO alliance and indeed in other roles, perhaps under the United Nations and so on, is not fulfilling its purpose and function for which it is naturally best adapted.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Matheson: The hon. member has asked how do we know. We talk to military people also. We have talked to a number of military people. I am not going to mention some of the military people who would like to have some of these ideas passed out to the country and to this committee. We are trying to find out some facts from this minister. No one knows the facts. No one knows what army we have at all, where we are going or what its purpose is. No one knows at this stage whether we are prepared to do our job in the NATO alliance or whether we are unable to do it by virtue of other commitments. After all, we represent in this House of Commons a party that has had something to do with war. It was Laurier who took us into the South African war. It was King who took us into world war II.

An hon. Member: Give us something new.

Mr. Matheson: Those are facts that might well be remembered. Some of these comments which have come from the other side of the chamber and which suggest that the only loyalty in this country comes from the front benches of the government are not fitting and are not proper.

I wish to tell the hon. member that if he wishes to consider records, he can take a look at the record of our own leader who knows something about war. At 17 years of age in 1915 he served in three battle zones, namely Egypt, Gallipoli and the Balkans. He was not in university. He was doing what he has done all his life—serve Canada. We are just a little bit sick of this suggestion that we are not interested in defence, not concerned about the security of Canada and NATO which we had a real part in forming and which we intend to keep strong. In view of the fact that the Chair considers that any discussion of our policy or our military task is out of order, I will sit down. But I think many questions remain unanswered and we are upset about the matter. We are upset about the fact that these large votes come up for consideration without answers. We wonder what chance a young military man has by way of career. There are young military men in our army who are greatly concerned about the line of our defence policy. I could spend some time reading into the record what some of the junior officers of high training have been saying with respect to what kind of army we have. The Montreal Star of January 27 says this:

> There are a number of younger officers who think it should not—

I am sorry, but I think I had better start at the beginning.

> Whether the Canadian forces should have nuclear warheads has been fairly well debated by now on moral grounds. A parallel question has hardly been aired in public at all. It is whether the Canadian army should have them on practical grounds.
>
> There are a number of younger officers who think it should not, because they believe nuclear armament would produce the wrong kind of army for this country.
>
> With its limited population, Canada cannot, in peacetime, field a mass army. It has to produce a specialized force, highly trained for a limited number of functions.

[Mr. Matheson.]

We believe in an elite army. We want to have each and every dollar of the moneys that we have in Canada—in a time of depression, unemployment, and record debt—spent in a way that is going to produce an army of which we shall be proud. In the past we have misspent money and we know it. If it is possible for this government, at the snap of the fingers in a matter of a few days, to decide to scrap a project like the arrow, it is quite possible for them now to pursue a new course with respect perhaps to a wrong line of direction which has been established by some of the defence department. We have, for instance, people like Kissinger, Alastair Buchanan and people like them and some of our own people like John Gellner. What do they say? They say that for the number of troops we have in the field, we have too many at headquarters. They say that with the expenditures that we are voting for Bomarcs, we are not going to have available money with which to develop an elite army. These things we are interested in and that is why I wished to make these few comments.

The Chairman: Shall vote 644 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: Oh, no, Mr. Chairman. I am sure you would not expect the opposition not to continue its investigation into this matter. We can recall when hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the chamber were so greatly concerned over $1 million in relation to an item of $1,700 million that they fought a whole election campaign on it and used it to try to smear the reputation of one of the greatest Canadians who ever lived, namely the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe.

Surely we on this side of the chamber have a responsibility to look carefully into how $35 million should be spent. Also, Mr. Chairman, the matter has a relationship to policy. The whole policy of the Canadian army is actually affected by the whole expenditure of funds under this item. Recently at Edmonton the Prime Minister made this statement: Should war come we must have available the necessary instruments. In the context he was referring to nuclear warheads. I wonder whether the minister would explain what steps have been taken to implement the policy enunciated by the Prime Minister at that time: Should war come we must have the necessary instruments available.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, you have already ruled that a general debate on defence policy is not proper and not in order on this particular item. I therefore do not propose to get into a general discussion of defence policy. I should be very glad to answer any question in connection with any of these matters which are outlined in some detail in the details on page 14, and which, as I have indicated previously, deal entirely with salaries, pay and allowances. As a matter of fact, as I indicated previously, over $27 million of this $35 million is for pay and allowances. I do not think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was here when I made a brief statement at the start of this debate, and I think that perhaps I had better make the point again that the total additional amount of money which we are going to require for the Department of National Defence this year is $16 million, not $66 million as would appear from a casual glance at these estimates. We have a shortfall in various other items so that the total additional amount required is not $66 million but actually $16 million. As I say, I do not think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was here—

Mr. Benidickson: You want $35 million for a specific purpose.

Mr. Harkness: —when I dealt with that and explained it in detail. I also explained why we needed in this particular vote some $35 million more than was voted when the main estimates were put through. As I indicated in the house last September, we estimated at that time that to increase the strength of the army, to put into effect the various accelerated survival measures and to carry on the training of up to 100,000 men in the special militia training course we would require some $37 million extra. That was stated at that time. The actual amount required is $35 million because, as I have already explained in detail, there is a shortfall in some of the other items in this vote of some $2 million odd.

Mr. Hellyer: As I understand your ruling, Mr. Chairman, it is that under this item we may discuss anything having to do with the operation and maintenance of the Canadian army either in NATO or here at home. I wonder whether the minister would tell the house if it is the policy of the Canadian government that before we can accept nuclear warheads for our forces we must obtain them under sole Canadian control?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I have already said on three occasions that I am going to abide by your ruling and not get into a general discussion of nuclear weapons, nuclear policy and so on, which has absolutely nothing to do with this item.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, we have an item of over $23 million for pay and allowances. Although the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs do not seem to have ordinary cabinet solidarity so far as policy is concerned, can I get from the minister the assurance that if the committee passes this item no person in the army is going to be employed or paid or given an allowance under circumstances that would enable him to be familiar with nuclear weapons and their employment, if and when the confusion of the government is settled and these men are given some responsibility in this field? Are we assured that in 1961-62 we have not paid people who have been given some preliminary training in the use, if provided to them, of nuclear weapons, and can I be assured by the minister that in his forthcoming estimates we will not be obliged to debate this again, because expenditures are being made with the thought that there is the prospect that our army personnel may have to know something about such weapons and therefore parliament is being asked to expend money in the meantime for the purpose of giving them some advance training in this type of warfare?

Mr. Harkness: I have already dealt with this matter, and again I think the hon. member was not here when I did so.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I think we have come to a blank wall in this whole matter of nuclear weapons and possibly we might turn off in some other direction. I believe the minister will agree that a discussion of national survival would come within the limits of this vote.

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Pitman: Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with your permission I think I will move in this direction and see if we can discover something about the purpose and the future of this program.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And come back to the other question later.

Mr. Pitman: The hon. member for Essex East says that we will come back to the question later. I can assure all hon. members that we in this corner are just as concerned about the problem of nuclear weapons for Canadian forces in Europe as I am sure other hon. members are to the right and left of Mr. Speaker but, quite frankly, we have spent almost an hour and a half on that subject tonight and I do not think we have got very far. Therefore I think we might move away from that subject and come back to it later.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister denies us information which we should have.

Mr. Pitman: First I should like to congratulate the minister on the job that was done in connection with the national survival course. I am not going to congratulate him with respect to the purpose of the course particularly, but simply for the work which was done with some 50,000 to 75,000 men who have been given some survival training.

I assume that this course has given some work to a great many people who had no work. I am not at all sure what the over-all effect is going to be from the point of view of the purpose of the course. The first thing I am concerned about is the concept of the course. As the minister suggested, I believe it was to try to encourage people who have employment to take the course, and the expectation was that possibly business or industry or the area of employment in which the person worked would contribute something to the maintenance of the individual while he was taking the course. That was my understanding of the whole program as it came to fruition last fall.

I am not at all sure that very many people actually left their jobs. Possibly the minister can say just how many people fit into this particular box. How many took a six weeks leave of absence and were paid by their employers? I think this is important because it seems to me that the whole justification for paying these men on the basis of single recruits, as they were paid, was that the rest would be made up by the business institutions with which they were at that time employed.

If I may take the first survival course, I think the figures indicate to what extent this did not come about. The reason I am concerned about this matter is that I would certainly feel, as I am sure the government would feel, that any time a man signs up for any kind of government employment the government should surely assume its full responsibility to that individual. Many of these people were married and the majority were not in a position to receive additional income from employment. Of the 20,523 who started the first survival course 14,000 or nearly 75 per cent were unemployed. Some 10,000 of the 17,000 who finished were unemployed. There were 1,234 of those who started who were in receipt of welfare assistance and 828 of those who actually completed the course were in that category. Actually the situation was that some of them were making more money from welfare payments than they were from the national survival course.

To me this is a situation which should not be tolerated. In many cases it happened that because the course started shortly after the beginning of the month and their welfare payments covered part of the period in which they were actually on the survival course some of them did come out even, or a little better than even. But it seems to me that when the government takes over the life of a person for six weeks, they have a responsibility to that person.

Out of the 20,523 people on this course, 6,798, nearly 7,000, were married. About 4,406 of those who completed the course were married and a good many of them, I am convinced, were married and unemployed and on welfare. I think that this—

An hon. Member: I don't believe it.

Mr. Pitman: I am sorry; I did not hear that comment which came from the back of the chamber. I may say if you do not believe it, I am only quoting figures from a report which was sent to me by the Department of National Defence. I am sure you would believe the figures which came from your own sources.

Now, that is one problem. I do not want to go into that problem or the mess that occurred near the end, when the pay cheques came out and a great many people found they had not made as much money as they expected. I am sure the minister is sorry about that. A pamphlet was printed, which was later destroyed, at a cost of some $5,000—

Mr. Harkness: No.

Mr. Pitman: I stand corrected; I understood from a return I had that that was—

Mr. Harkness: That is the total cost.

Mr. Pitman: The total cost of the pamphlet? I understand the pamphlets were destroyed.

Mr. Harkness: No, quite a large portion of the pamphlets were put out.

Mr. Pitman: I am sorry, I am mistaken. I base that mistake upon a misreading of the return I received from the minister. It is unfortunate that something could not have been said to those men so that this thing would not have happened. So many of them were enthusiastic about that course right up to the last day, and I think it was very unfortunate.

There is a final matter about which I am concerned. I cannot feel that there is any real connection between these survival troops and the emergency measures organizations in these various areas. For example, one coordinator of an emergency measures organization did not have the names, addresses or any real concept of how these men were going to fit into his emergency measures organization.

Of the 17,000 men who completed the first course, some 6,857 have been recruited into the militia. Surely, if there is a nuclear attack, the militia are going to have a certain job to do. Will it not be different from the job of those people who were trained in survival? I cannot help but feel there has been no over-all picture conceived as to what these men are going to do, how they are going to fit into the whole pattern of our emergency measures organizations, the whole effort we have been directing towards some kind of planned approach towards survival. I feel there should be a clear idea of what these men are going to do. Here we have over one third of them who are actually in the militia and have gone there from this course. I am sure this course was not set up as a means of bringing men into the militia, and yet this is what has happened. I am sure this course was not set up as a means of getting people off the unemployment rolls—at least, that certainly was not the impression with which we were left. However, 75 per cent of the men who took the course were unemployed and the government failed to take this into account by providing a living wage for those who were married and on relief at the time they took the course. At least, they should have been able to survive themselves for the six weeks they took the course.

I have seen people who were on relief and married, who had nine children and had to try to keep those nine children on $40 a week. I do not believe any member in this house would believe that could take place. It is for this reason I think this is something that should be explained. I wish the minister would try to indicate whether or not this first survival course proceeded in a manner different from that which he expected and, instead of having married men with jobs who were receiving some kind of subsidy from their company, he found himself faced with the fact that 75 per cent of the men were unemployed and were being sent over from the welfare offices. Perhaps he could explain why the government has taken no steps to supplement the payments to these men who are now being subsidized by the various welfare departments in various parts of Canada. Surely, this is a matter of some concern to this committee.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member indicated at the start of his remarks, this has been a very successful program. I believe the people connected with it are of that opinion. The militia unit commanders and the members of the militia who have been concerned with carrying out this program in all parts of Canada I have visited have all expressed satisfaction with the calibre of the men who took this training, with the interest they took in the course, the progress they made and the skills which they attained. The hon. member seems to have some idea that the program was designed as a relief measure and so we should have taken into account the fact that some men would have large families—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: Was that the purpose?

Mr. Harkness: —and so provided funds to support them. The program was never designed as a scheme of this sort. The purpose of the scheme was set out quite clearly and definitely at the time it was undertaken, as was the amount of pay which would be received by the men taking the course. The rate of pay was set out as that of an army private plus the ordinary living out subsistence allowance of $65 per month. It was quite clear that that was all that was to be paid to anybody who took the course and that is what was paid.

In so far as the people who took the course are concerned, upwards of one third of the people who have enrolled in the course so far had jobs of some sort or another. A little over two thirds of the men did not have jobs at the time they enrolled. Now, I do not see why anybody should hold that against these men. The general purpose of the course, as I indicated at the time it was announced, was to produce as large a body of men as we practically could who were trained in survival skills. Of the men who have taken this course, a considerable number who were released from their normal employment by their employers, who in some cases were provincial or civic governments and in some cases private firms, for the express purpose of helping to organize survival methods in their organization, have been employed in that sort of activity since taking the course.

The hon. member asked what was happening to these people, how they were going to be used. Well, there are quite a number of them who are putting what they learned to use in that way. One of the purposes of the course and one of the hopes I expressed at that time was that a good proportion of the men who took the course would join the regular militia units. The hon. member seemed to indicate this was not the purpose of the course, but it was one of the purposes of the course to have as many of these people as possible join the regular militia units.

The reason for this hope was that survival operations are the responsibility of the army in Canada. The matter of rescuing people and so on is the direct responsibility of the army, both the regular army and the militia. The number of people in the regular militia units is not sufficient and has not been sufficient to properly carry out the rescue and survival operations with which they were charged.

We hoped, and our hope has been met, that a good proportion of the people who took these courses would become interested in these matters and would join the regular militia, whose primary duty at the present time is rescue and survival operations. This type of activity for which they have been trained they can carry on better in a militia unit than the regular army, and the more of them we can get the better our survival operation is going to be.

In fact I have been delighted with the very large proportion of men who have joined the regular militia units. From the first two courses there were about 14,000 men, quite a high proportion, and I hope there will be just as high a proportion from the course going on at the present time and from the final and fourth course. I trust that has possibly answered some of the questions which the hon. member has in mind.

As I indicated I regret very much that a mistake was made in this pamphlet, but the number of people misled by it was very small. The amount of money involved was around $10. To people who had to live entirely on this amount it might have loomed up as quite a large sum. I am not saying it would not be to them, but it is not a large sum which was involved and the number of people misled by this was very small indeed. Of course when the mistake was discovered the pamphlet was withdrawn and the remaining copies were destroyed. The total cost, rather than being the $5,000 suggested, was around $3,000.

Mr. Hellyer: I think the minister could help very much to clear up this matter if he would read to the committee the contractual arrangement which applies between the graduates of these classes and the Canadian army, once they have graduated.

Mr. Harkness: There is no contractual arrangement unless a man joins a regular militia unit and, as I have just indicated, a very fair proportion have done that.

Mr. Hellyer: What proportion?

Mr. Harkness: I think the number was 4,000 all told, who volunteered for the regular forces. Some 2,600 odd applied to join the regular forces and of these we have accepted 1,410. So we have had really a very good response from both those points of view to the six weeks' training that these men, who for the most part were young, undertook.

Mr. Hellyer: Is the minister advising the committee that there is no relationship presently existing between the army and the graduates, that there is no chain of command which provides the terms under which they will serve in their civil survival role once they have graduated? If not, what is the purpose? Is it just a school for unoccupied people, or what is the purpose for the expenditure of the money?

Mr. Harkness: I think I have explained what the purpose was but for some people it is very hard to come to grips with any explanation, particularly if they do not want to grasp it. It is quite evident that they cannot have any contractual arrangement. There was no idea that when a man joined for this special militia training he was going to be obligated to serve for any longer period than six weeks. That was part of his term of engagement.

Mr. Pitman: I thank the minister for the long explanation he has given. I must admit that $2 and $10 do not mean very much, but they did the week before Christmas. I want to come back to the problem of what happens to these people who do not join the militia. Is there any way they can be co-ordinated into civilian E.M.O. programs? Is there any way in which they can be directed into some area of activity being carried on in every community under these various E.M.O. co-ordinators throughout the country?

Mr. Harkness: This varies a great deal from one part of the country to another. A record is kept of the names of these people and it is made available to many of the civilian organizations dealing with the emergency measures organization. Of course the thing you have to keep in mind is that in the event of an attack on this country the military forces that exist would not be sufficient to form more than cadres or organizational centres, and they would have to pick up a large number of the civilian population if they were going to be able to carry on survival and rescue operations at the speed and to the extent that would be necessary. Therefore the larger the number of people in the general population you have trained in these survival methods the better will be your position. If we could have every civilian trained that would be ideal.

Miss LaMarsh: There is one thing I would like to inquire of the minister in regard to what he said very decisively about the unemployed taking these courses. I would like to inquire exactly how far in advance of the announcement of the first course was the plan conceived? I have reference to my own riding in Niagara where a very large armoury, admirably suited for such training, was sold off within a matter of three or four months before there was notice about training these troops. It was then necessary to take over an empty church from the Department of Public Works in order to have this training go on, which apparently indicates that the Department of National Defence did not plan ahead for any considerable period of time.

The other question I wish to raise, and unfortunately I do not have the reference with me but I have seen a number of comments in the press, is that officers in the survival exercise are unable to say exactly what would happen following a nuclear attack on Niagara Falls, which is one of those centres admitted by the Prime Minister in this house last fall to be a prime and primary target. If it were a primary target all its people, and certainly its survival group, would be completely destroyed; yet no arrangements have been made, as I read the press, for moving survival troops over destroyed highways from one centre to another.

I would ask the minister whether, in the interval from the first survival course, he has conceived any plan which would assist an area like Niagara Falls which would be largely decimated in the event of nuclear attack?

Mr. Harkness: First of all I am sorry to have to inform the hon. member that the department of defence does not postulate its policies on the armoury situation in Niagara Falls. In actual fact the armoury to which the hon. member referred was an old building, very expensive to maintain and not an economic building to keep in operation.

So far as rescue operations in Niagara Falls are concerned rescue columns would come from various places at a distance of anywhere up to 60 or 80 miles from Niagara Falls. There are quite definite plans in connection with bringing rescue columns into any particular area which has been hit.

Mr. Herridge: I want to raise a question that was put forward first by the hon. member for Trinity and then in another form by the hon. member for Peterborough. It has to do with the continuity of contact between the emergency measures people and the persons who have been trained. Although I do not know what percentage is involved it has been brought to my notice that among the persons who were trained there were quite a number of drifters, people who move from one place to another. They came into a city, took the course, and then went on again. I am told that there was quite a percentage of this type who certainly would lose all contact with the persons who had trained them, as against those resident in the district. Has the minister any idea of the percentage trained who were, shall we say, drifters or floaters and were not permanent residents of the district in which they were trained and available for service there?

Mr. Harkness: No, I have no record of that. I would merely point out to the hon. member that working under a voluntary system, as we do in this country, both for the regular forces and the militia forces, and this special militia force, we enlist people without regard to their race, religion, job, complexion or anything else along that line; as long as they meet the mental and physical requirements they are enlisted.

Mr. Herridge: On enlistment there was no requirement that the person who sought training was a resident of the district?

Mr. Harkness: No.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister can say whether he plans to carry on with this program next winter as well.

Mr. Harkness: This is a matter to which we are giving consideration, but no decision has yet been reached as to whether or not we will carry on with it next year.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking from memory, but as I recall it last September the Prime Minister used his usual superiority by announcing a major program over the head of the minister, and I think he said that 15,000 additional people would be recruited under the national defence program. I do not recall what the purpose was for this additional recruitment of 15,000 people, but I assume this vote has some relationship to it. How many of the 15,000 people that the Prime Minister spoke about in September, 1961, have been recruited, and what are their duties?

The minister passed me off when I spoke earlier by saying I had not been in the committee when he gave some information with respect to the relationship of this vote of $35 million to the training of people who might conceivably be engaged in nuclear training, or who might be engaged in the aspect of rescue and survival training that has been discussed recently. Could the minister break down, in these three aspects, how much of this vote relates to recruiting of 15,000 people under the defence program mentioned by the Prime Minister in September, how much relates to the rescue and survival program—which of course reduces expenditures in large part in connection with unemployment insurance payments—and how much involves people who may be wasting their time if the Secretary of State for External Affairs rather than the Minister of National Defence has his way and we do not need to know anything about nuclear weapons? Could we have a breakdown of these three categories?

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member will look at the details on page 14 he will find just such a breakdown as to the expenditures for the various purposes. He will see pay and allowances for the Canadian army, regular, $4 million. Then on the next page, still under the same vote but listed separately as pay and allowances for the Canadian army, militia —that is actually the special militia training program—the amount is $23,120,000. He will also see civil salaries and wages for the Canadian army, regular, $200,000. Then there are the rest of the items upon which the vote is based.

As far as the recruiting is concerned, since this program came into operation around September 1, up to March 12 we had increased the strength of the regular army—as the hon. member knows, people are leaving every week due to their having served their time, sickness and so on—by 4,338 all ranks. This figure is increasing, as a matter of fact, at a rate of about 600 a month and by the end of this current year—in other words, a period of approximately 18 months—we will have recruited at this rate up to the full strength that was authorized, which was an increase of 11,600 and some odd, I think, as far as the army was concerned.

Miss LaMarsh: Would the minister say what he is spending half a million dollars for to get another 11,000 men into the army?

Mr. Harkness: What is the question?

Miss LaMarsh: I am looking at page 14, to which the minister kindly referred us, and the item "exhibits, advertising, films, broadcasting and displays".

Mr. Harkness: I will be very glad to give a breakdown of that figure.

Mr. Benidickson: This is apart from the main estimates of last March.

Mr. Harkness: This $436,000 was for extra advertising. In order to secure the men for the special militia training program, $151,000; and to secure the increased enlistments in the Canadian army, regular, $285,000. I might say that with these increases the item is still considerably less than it was some five years ago.

Mr. Benidickson: Who was employed by the minister as his agent for this advertising?

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps the minister would tell us who is the advertising agent concerned in this figure of $151,000.

Mr. Harkness: I think we have three advertising agencies who do the work for national defence. Instead of giving it all to one person, as was the custom under the previous administration, we have shared this around so that more people get some of the business.

Mr. Chevrier: You cut the melon, in other words.

Miss LaMarsh: Now perhaps the minister will answer my question by telling me who the three are.

An hon. Member: Write her a letter.

Mr. Hellyer: We will give you until tomorrow to look up that information.

Mr. Harkness: I will get that information; I have not got it with me.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister might also tell us at the same time whether tenders were called.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Did you do that?

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, having regard to the fact that the supplementary estimates tabled today amount to $138 million, which added to those that are now under discussion make a total of close to—

Mr. Churchill: You are out of order, but go ahead.

Mr. Chevrier: I want to ask a question based on that, if I may—which added to those now under discussion amount to practically the total budget of Canada before the war, will this group of supplementary estimates No. 4 be taken continuously and considered after we have disposed of supplementary estimates No. 3?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, the ones tabled today would be the final supplementary estimates for this fiscal year.

Mr. Benidickson: Are you sure it is final?

Mr. Churchill: We will continue with the supplementary estimates tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

B—Unemployment insurance commission—

669. To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit to the unemployment insurance fund in the fiscal year 1962-63 sums not exceeding in the aggregate $25,000,000 on such terms and conditions as the governor in council determines, $25,000,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 20, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—IMPENDING VISIT BY U.K. LORD PRIVY SEAL

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that at the beginning of January the government was favoured with a visit from Right Hon. Edward Heath, Lord Privy Seal in the British government. That meeting afforded an opportunity for exchanges of views and gave the government the opportunity to receive from Mr. Heath an up to date account of the course of negotiations for the entry of Britain into the European common market. At that time it was agreed that further such meetings might be held from time to time. I am glad now to be able to inform the house that we look forward to a similar visit from Mr. Heath on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FISHER—PROTEST RESPECTING ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a question of privilege relating to the right of a member of parliament to receive answers to questions. My question of privilege relates to an answer given yesterday by the Minister of Finance, as found at page 1919 of Hansard, to the following question:

> Has Mr. James Coyne, a former governor of the Bank of Canada, received any moneys—

And so on. This was the minister's answer:

> This answer I give on information from the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada pension fund is a separate and distinct fund made up of past contributions by the staff and the bank, plus accrued earnings thereon.

This is the key sentence.

> It is not the practice to disclose information regarding the details of payments made to individual retired employees out of the fund.

I want to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Hansard of June 28, 1961, where it will be found that part 4 of question No. 423 reads as follows:

> 4. What was the lowest, highest, and average rate payable under the Bank of Canada pension plan: (a) previous to March 1, 1960; (b) since March 1, 1960?

To that question the Minister of Finance supplied the following answer:

> 4. (a) As at February, 1960, the lowest, $7.87 per month; the highest, $1,145.83 per month. That happens to be the pension of the former governor.

I will not go further with the answer to make my point that last year in answer to a question in this house the minister did provide information as to the pension that was actually being received by a former governor of the Bank of Canada. From his very phrasing he specified who it was and we know with no trouble at all that it was Mr. Graham Towers.

As the minister did that, I feel it is taking an unfair advantage of the house procedure to come into the house as the minister did yesterday and say that it is not the practice to disclose such information. I should like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider this particular matter, because if an answer on a particular subject is given at one time in a particular way, we should at least have this privilege on a subsequent occasion, and surely we deserve to have information in answer to a similar question given in the same way. Surely there should be a precedent established.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I think the hon. member has overlooked some very essential ingredients and facts in the situation to which he refers. The answer that I gave yesterday to question No. 288 is a correct answer. The question sought information concerning a former governor of the bank, Mr. James Coyne. The answer I gave, on information from the bank, was that it is not the practice to disclose information regarding the details of payments made to individual retired employees out of the fund; that, I am told, is the position.

The hon. member refers to what was said in the course of a debate last June, Mr. Speaker, when certain information was brought before the house concerning the ranges, the high and the low, of payments made to those on pension. This was an illustration of the range within which those payments run, a comparison of the payments available to the governor under rule 17 of a particular by-law as compared with the pension available to him prior to the adoption of that particular by-law by the board of governors, and a comparison of that to the lowest pension paid to a former employee of the bank who qualified for a pension. Those were the observations Mr. Speaker, and that was their relevancy on that occasion. This is not a precedent at all for either the seeking of the information the hon. member sought yesterday by question No. 288 or the observations which he has made this afternoon.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to draw your attention to the fact that it was not in debate that the answer was given. It was an answer to a formal question on the order paper, question No. 423, and the words contained in the answer given by the minister point out that the highest pension per month is the pension given to the former governor. The answer was quite explicit as to who got it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises as a point of privilege, I take it, the right of the house to consistency in the reasons which are given by the ministry in declining to answer. It is recognized by the house that certain answers may very properly be withheld from public disclosure in the house because it would be contrary to the public interest or contrary to a practice which has been established. The ministry from time to time declines to answer on these or similar grounds. Whether there is any obligation on the part of the ministry which amounts to a privilege or right of the house, I would much doubt. But it is a rather novel point, and I will consider it.

May I at this time refer the house to Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 153, citation 181:

> A minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal—

From that I take it that if the minister had declined to answer, there would have been no objection.

> —and insistence on an answer is out of order, no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such refusal. A member can put a question, but has no right to insist upon an answer.

I think from this citation it is fairly clear that rights do not arise. If a member is dissatisfied with the answer to his question, it is proper for him to comment upon that at the appropriate time in debate, but it does not go so far as to permit him to raise his objection as a question of privilege. However, as I say it is a novel point, and I shall give the matter some consideration in case it should arise again.

MR. CHEVRIER—ALLEGED INCOMPLETENESS OF RETURN TO ORDER FOR PAPERS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to raise a similar point concerning the production of papers. I moved on February 28 for the production of papers and correspondence between the Minister of Transport and the president of Quebecair and certain other persons concerning the granting of exclusive rights to Quebecair to operate between Seven Islands and Quebec.

On March 14 the Secretary of State tabled the correspondence that took place, following that motion. I have the correspondence before me and it ends on November 10, 1961, although the motion was passed and the papers deposited on March 14, 1962. Therefore I think that by the order of the house I am entitled to the correspondence between November 10, 1961 and the date on which the order was passed and the papers were tabled. The last letter clearly indicates that there has been further correspondence, and I would just like to read one sentence from it. It is a letter dated November 10, 1961, and reads as follows:

(Translation):

Dear Mr. Crevier:

> I am pleased to inform you that after a discussion with the chairman of the air transport board, I am in a position to tell you that the board will complete its economic survey of T.C.A. and Quebecair routes on the north shore of the St. Lawrence on Monday next, November 20—

(Text):

And this, sir:

(Translation):

> and will then be able to submit to you written proposals.

(Text):

It follows from this that written proposals must have been made between November 10 and the time the motion was passed here. Not only were they made but these written proposals appeared in the press, and I think I am entitled to get the correspondence which transpired between November 10 and the time the motion was passed.

The authority on which I base my submission is citation 213 of Beauchesne, at page 178, which reads as follows:

> If parties neglect to make returns in reasonable time, they are ordered to make them forthwith;

And this is the pertinent point:

> or so much of returns as has not been made.

My point is that so much of this return has not been made, namely the correspondence between November 10, 1961, and the time the motion was passed in this house, that it can be ordered to be made by this house, if Your Honour so rules. In view of that fact I submit with deference that I should be given the remainder of the correspondence on this file.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): If I may be allowed to speak on this matter, it is a fact that the hon. member did move a motion to have the correspondence between myself and the president of Quebecair—

Mr. Chevrier: And others.

Mr. Balcer: —and others tabled. Everything I have in my office that is not of a personal and confidential nature has been produced. I myself have investigated everything I have in my office, and if anything else is still in my possession it is because it is private and confidential. So far as the other agencies are concerned, including the air transport board, I shall be very pleased to investigate further, but I know my office and the officials of the department have made a very extensive study of the matter and have gone through all the files. I regret if I have a document which does not appear there, but I can assure the house that everything not of a personal and confidential nature has been tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member who feels the order of the house has not been sufficiently complied with would inform the minister of the specific documents which he says have not been produced. Then if he is not satisfied there is provision under our rules for a debatable motion to produce documents. This procedure gives a remedy for that matter which the hon. member for Laurier now raises.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED REDUCTION IN RATE OF INCREASE OF LABOUR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour based on today's release of the unemployment figures, which show that 583,000 Canadians are out of work—an alarming situation, of course. In the light of the labour force statistics given by the Department of Labour today, has the minister any explanation to offer for the fact that the Canadian labour force between February, 1962 and February, 1961 increased at less than half the rate of previous years?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question I want to bring to the hon. member's attention the report of the Senate committee on manpower, which recommended that in the next five years a million jobs would have to be provided. In this release we find that 196,000 new jobs have been provided throughout the year, so that by the month of February we have attained the number of new jobs required to reach that figure of 1 million jobs in five years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister had declined to answer my question, would he explain why it is that for every 100 Canadians at work, 10 are unemployed?

Mr. Hees: Now, now; don't choke.

Mr. Walker: That is a lie.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Public Works has said that is a lie.

Mr. Walker: And it is a lie.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Public Works has asserted that what I said is a lie. I say it is a true statement based on an examination of the minister's figures, and I ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If, as the hon. member asserts, such a statement was made I am sure the Minister of Labour would be the first one to correct it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, it was the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Starr: The percentage of those unemployed in the labour force is 9.1, so it is not one out of every ten.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the Minister of Public Works would wish to rise and deal with the accusation which has been made. Personally I did not hear what was said, but an hon. member in the house has accused the hon. member for Essex East of making an untrue statement, which would be contrary to good parliamentary practice.

Mr. Walker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to do that.

Mr. Pickersgill: To do what?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are not impressed by this evasion by the Minister of Public Works. He accused me of having told a lie in this house. Under our rules the hon. gentleman has the obligation of withdrawing this remark. You have asked him to do so. I would ask that he obey your ruling.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Minister of Labour's explanation obviously the hon. member for Essex East has made a statement which is untrue. If the appellation by which I described his statement offends the house, I will be very happy to withdraw it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That's better.

REPORTED WEST GERMAN RECRUITING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister or, in his absence, possibly to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of a report in today's Globe and Mail that in spite of an increased recruiting program West Germany still has a request for 45,400 foreign workers, will the government increase their efforts to solve Canada's unemployment problem before Germany starts recruiting in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is undoubtedly concerned with the problem which he is endeavouring to put forward, but it does not seem to me that it is a genuine search for information that prompted his question.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): On the point of order you have raised, Mr. Speaker, the report states that the regular sources of foreign labour have dried up in Italy due to the boom in that country, they have now turned to Spain, Greece and Turkey. As Canada is generally recognized to be underpopulated, I think it is not—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have an opportunity to say what his views are on that subject at the appropriate time.

POWER

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if either of the parliamentary secretaries to the Prime Minister is able to answer the question I put to the Prime Minister as to whether there was any correspondence which had not been tabled regarding the conference on the power grid which was held yesterday. The parliamentary secretaries no doubt know that the Prime Minister said if there was any such correspondence it would be tabled today. Could they comply with that undertaking?

Mr. John Pallett (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): I do not agree that the Prime Minister made the statement attributed to him by the hon. member, but the question will be taken as notice.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the parliamentary secretary endeavour to find out if there is any such correspondence, and provide it to the house as the Prime Minister promised?

Mr. Pallett: Again, I cannot agree to the correctness of what the hon. member has just stated, but I will take it as notice.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED CO-OPERATIVE ARRANGEMENT BETWEEN T.C.A. AND C.P.A.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask the Minister of Transport a question arising from the information on the Trans-Canada Air Lines deficit which was tabled yesterday. In view of the fact that a committee of this house will be examining the annual report of T.C.A., can the minister indicate before that occasion what consideration the government is giving to the rumour or the report of an amalgamation or co-operative arrangement between T.C.A. and Canadian Pacific Airlines?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I have nothing to add to what has been said in the past in this house.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Canadian Army—

644. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $35 million.

Mr. Forgie: I should like to refer to a short speech I made last September regarding the situation which prevails at Petawawa military camp. I told the minister at that time that I hoped he would investigate the matter to see whether some remedial action could be taken up there to lessen the suffering which is going on there because of the insufficiency of hospital facilities.

A question was asked on this subject the other day by the hon. member for Trinity, on the order paper, and the answer given was most evasive. There is plenty of evidence in Hansard and also in the minutes of the proceedings of the committee which dealt with the estimates of the Department of National Defence to warrant some assistance being given at Petawawa. I shall read some of this evidence to the committee. As reported in Hansard of 1959, volume V, page 5509, the committee of the whole was considering the following estimate:

230. Grants to the town of Oromocto, subject to the approval of treasury board, for municipal services including the maintenance and operation of schools and to promote the development of the town, $1,656,000.

At that time the former minister of national defence had this to say:

Oromocto is the dependants' town at Gagetown. It is where all the dependants of personnel and the married service personnel live. It is set up under a special agreement that was reached a few years ago. They have a town council. They are encouraged to organize their own services and grants are made by the government in order to maintain this small town for the purpose of looking after the dependants of our service people.

Then again, as I said last year, I have this letter from the then minister of national defence which I should like again to incorporate in Hansard. The letter dated August 17, 1960, is addressed to me at post office box 35, Pembroke, Ontario, and reads as follows:

> You will remember on a number of occasions you have spoken to me concerning the Pembroke Cottage hospital and the possibility of this department arranging financial assistance for the hospital. I have carried out a very thorough survey to see whether any assistance in this regard can be given this year but unfortunately, due to financial stringencies, we are unable to be of assistance at present. However, I am taking up the matter with treasury board in order to ascertain, if possible, whether some arrangement might not be made at a future time, perhaps next year.

In the estimates for 1961-62 you will see a reference to a hospital at Middleton, in Nova Scotia, for which $135,000 was subscribed by the Department of National Defence for the purpose of assisting, as I interpret it—the minister can correct me if I am wrong—in the construction of accommodation for dependants of the army. When I tell you that the population of Petawawa military camp at the present time is approximately 10,000 people made up of 6,300 dependants, surely it should appear obvious to everybody in this committee that something will have to be done with regard to hospitalization at Petawawa. The two hospitals in Pembroke are accepting from 20 per cent to 28 per cent of the patients from the Petawawa military camp.

Surely this is a business matter. It is just a matter of common sense and business. The business is to see what can be done most economically. To construct a hospital in that section of the country would cost $2½ million. To put them in the General hospital and the Cottage hospital in Pembroke would cost not more than $250,000.

My suggestion to the minister therefore is this. The officials of both hospitals are prepared to sit down with the senior officers with the Department of National Defence and the minister in order to ascertain whether something cannot be evolved which will satisfy the people of Petawawa military camp who at this time—and I mean this—consider themselves to be second class citizens. Something must be done up there for these 10,000 people. There is no economic assistance for a hospital there for 6,300 people. The situation is absolutely ridiculous. I suggest that a little bit of common sense be displayed. Let us get together with the government on the matter and find out whether some answer cannot be arrived at. Nobody from the Department of National Defence to my knowledge has been near the place for the last three years.

Mr. Harkness: There are, of course, a large number of requests by various municipalities for assistance as far as hospital construction is concerned directed to the Department of National Defence. We have looked into these matters with a great deal of care and have come to the conclusion that such assistance is justified only if the number of dependants coming into a community increases the total population of that community by more than 10 per cent over a period of five years.

It was under those circumstances that assistance was given as far as Middleton, Nova Scotia was concerned. Several other towns in Nova Scotia have also asked for this assistance, but we have not been able to give it because we did not think the increase justified it. As a matter of fact, all these places like to have a military camp established in order to get business out of it. Then they do not seem to think that the dependants of the people at the military camp should have the same service as other people in the community without paying extra for it.

I do not think this is an equitable way of looking at the matter. In the Pembroke area the situation is that the increase in military dependants population has not been 10 per cent during any five year period and thus, under the rule that we have been obliged to establish, the area does not qualify for a hospital assistance grant.

Mr. Forgie: May I ask the minister whether he has any figures given to him by the Department of National Defence with regard to the situation at Petawawa? Here are some figures that will prove to be interesting. The total estimated cost of the operation at Pembroke was $743,737 for 38 additional beds. That is the total estimated cost of the operation there, of which $100,693 will be paid from federal health grants, the province contributing $117,000. Thus it can be seen that the two senior levels of government are paying a smaller percentage of the total estimated cost in this case than they were in the case at Middleton.

The other question I should like to ask the minister is this. The government has set up Petawawa military camp. It is part of the army. The army is recruiting married couples. What is to happen to the children and the dependants? Where do they come in? Who is to look after them? What about their hospitalization? Is nothing to be done about the matter? Expenditures on hospital beds have increased 10 per cent in the last year from the estimate. Surely these are matters that can be mulled over and discussed in a sensible businesslike way in order to arrive at a solution that will mean something to the people of Petawawa.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the minister a question with relation to special training. I have to set it against the context of the area I represent. In the southwest corner of the constituency of Port Arthur, which represents about one third of the land area of Ontario, we have a city in which there has been a rather successful response with regard to this special training program. However, across the constituency to the north we have the main arterial routes of the country in the trans-Canada highway, the Canadian National Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway—the main transcontinental factors—plus the emergency and real air bases which form, as you might say, part of the spine of trans-Canada air transportation. I think we must assume that in any emergency measures program some consideration must be given to keeping this transportation system open.

I would ask the minister what provisions have gone into the planning of these courses in order to ensure that in the small transportation points across this, as you might say, spine of Canada, there are people who have training and background in emergency measures response. I would point out to him, for example, that we have six railway divisional points in the constituency, or eight if you wish to count subdivisional points. What arrangements have been made or what steps have been taken to encourage the employees of the two major railways who live in these places to have this training and in that way to make sure that in an emergency these centres will be able to respond?

I may tell him frankly that I raise the question because in going to these divisional points I find a certain interest in the course but a realization that from the financial point of view, very few of these employees are in a position to give up their work on their own and move say to Port Arthur, in most cases a distance of at least 150 miles, in order to take the training.

If the organization is to be effective, it seems to me that at those points which are important from the point of view of emergency transportation we should have people with training. It may be to the advantage of the lakehead cities that the 250 people who are being turned out from the course will assist the militia there in this development and will also be available in any emergency, but in terms of a real national emergency it seems to me that transportation is quite important, and I have seen nothing to indicate that the department has any plans in this regard.

I will repeat the question. Can the minister indicate to us just what steps have been taken to ensure that in those areas without armouries or militia training centres there will be people who have had this training?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to make it clear that I am not the minister responsible for emergency measures generally. That falls under the Prime Minister's office. I am responsible for the survival and rescue operations and communications, by which I mean wireless communication and so forth, and the warning system. The training of people in places such as those to which the hon. member has referred would come under the emergency measures organization.

As far as the special militia training program is concerned, we are only in a position, of course, to carry it on where armouries and people who can act as instructors and administrative personnel actually are available.

Mr. Fisher: I am not going to argue that the course has no validity and is not worth while, but if it has validity should it not be particularly worth while to the people who live in these places? I want to know what steps have been taken—the minister must surely be aware of them—to encourage people from these important but distant transportation centres to take the training.

I will be quite candid as to why I am asking. I tried to find out from the department through the minister's office and really found out nothing. The whole thing seems to be up in the air. When I say it is up in the air I mean the provision of these plans across the country. The whole emphasis seems to be merely upon getting bodies into these courses. Surely it dovetails into some kind of plan, and that is what I am curious about. Can I put the question this way. Am I to understand from the minister's response that there is no plan to provide some modicum of trained people in transportation centres across the country if these centres do not happen to have armoury or militia training facilities?

Mr. Harkness: I can only repeat that as far as the special militia training program carried on by the army is concerned there is no plan. As I indicated, the training has been carried on and can be carried on only where armouries exist and where personnel are available to carry on the courses. What the emergency measures people as such may have done in order to train people in such places, I do not know. I do know they have made an effort to get as many people trained in emergency measures activities as they possibly could in centres all across Canada.

Mr. Fisher: Do I take it, then, that these courses are really not so much courses in emergency measures training but are courses to provide recruits for the militia? The minister may think I am hairsplitting, but I have gone in and watched people taking the courses and it seemed to me that the courses, given their limitations in terms of length and intensity, are excellent. But it certainly did not strike me that the courses were intented to turn out well trained militia men. It seemed to me the purpose was to provide people with some knowledge of how to meet an emergency situation. Once you acknowledge that, surely the minister has some responsibility to see that this kind of trained personnel is in important places.

It would seem to me that this could be done by some form of encouragement or incentive to the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Department of Transport, for example, which operate important facilities in these transportation centres. I am not going to comment on the disappointment I feel at the minister's reply, but if this is a major effort, as the sum we are voting certainly indicates, I should like to know how it is going to pay off in relation to the emergency measures organization.

I will not sit down and wait for a reply, Mr. Chairman. From the tenor of the replies so far it does not seem to me that there will be much forthcoming, but I should like to go on to another point about which I should like to ask the minister a question. It relates to the provision to the present militia, of transport equipment to meet emergency situations. One of the things that is somewhat disturbing when you talk to people who are in the militia is the very real dearth of emergency equipment, especially transportation equipment. I am thinking not only of trucks but of such equipment as derricks, the kind of thing that can be made use of very quickly in an emergency. Are there any plans under way at the present time, particularly in relation to the money we are now being asked to vote, to provide a larger stockpile of this kind of transportation equipment at key points, or are there plans to take over the equipment of Ontario Hydro, Bell Telephone and other agencies? If there are plans to take over Hydro and Bell equipment, who will have the military authority to act under the present set-up?

Mr. Harkness: With respect to the first question, I think it is quite obvious that with a goal of 100,000 trained men under the present special militia training program it is not possible to train a considerable number of men in every town across Canada. As I indicated before, of necessity we had to carry on this training with the facilities where they existed, and the essential purpose of the training, of course, is to get as many people as possible trained in basic survival techniques and skills. It is quite evident we are not trying to train the whole population or a certain number of people in every town or city across the country, and we just could not set up courses in those places where armouries do not exist. We had no means of doing so. That is the situation as far as the first question is concerned.

With regard to equipment, by and large the militia units have as much equipment as they have men to make use of, look after and maintain. With the increase which is taking place in the militia units, some of them will get more equipment than they have had. It is no use giving a whole mass of equipment to a unit which has no means of making use of it or looking after it.

In the event of an emergency, of course, the plan is that the survival columns formed by militia companies or battalions or other units here or there would take civilian bulldozers, cranes and so on for use in their survival and rescue operations. Only by making use of civilian resources in equipment of this kind which exist all over the country could you possibly from a practical point of view secure sufficient equipment or have sufficient equipment scattered widely across the country to be made use of in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Fisher: In relation to the first question, as the minister knows there is a suspicion in the minds of many people, not only politicians in the opposition, that this emergency training program, whatever it may achieve in terms of supporting the militia, is to quite an extent a measure to meet the unemployment situation. If its real value is to provide a significant base of people throughout the country who know how to behave in an emergency and have some training for such an event, surely the minister must recognize that the limitation that you can only train at certain places where there are armouries is foolish in terms of a broad base. I am saying to him, why can you not bring people in from divisional centres such as Hornepayne, Sioux Lookout or the radar base at Armstrong, and have them take the training? What is the impediment to fitting them into this particular scheme? Suppose we have 800 people in Port Arthur and Fort William who are trained in survival work but there are none in these centres which are key centres of the dominion-wide transportation system?

The minister may recall that when Japan entered the last war there was a tremendous amount of sabotage, and immediately the transcontinental systems were guarded over their whole length for a limited time until the worry about sabotage was over. My point is that these national transportation systems are of key importance. One well placed bomb at Nipigon would tie up our road and rail facilities right across the country. The same thing applies to a number of places in the Canadian shield. This is an aspect of the emergency organization, and we need people at these points of responsibility. It seems to me it is obvious, it is key, it is short range, it is immediate, that you need these people. Pleased as we may be to have a nucleus in Port Arthur and Fort William, the real need in an emergency sense to knit the country together is out in these places.

We have had no indication from the minister that this goal is in the minds of the people who are planning this course. I may tell him that I know it is not, as a result of talking to the officers who were conducting the course. I repeat that I feel it was an excellent course. They have no indication that they are getting a wide response from the district. They certainly could not confirm for me that the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian National or Trans-Canada Air Lines were seizing the opportunity to get their personnel trained in these courses. I am not expecting an answer from the minister. I just wanted to sort of underline the weakness which seemed apparent to me in the scheme.

The last point upon which I should like to touch, Mr. Chairman, relates to our military forces in Europe. I should like to ask the minister what armoured carrier these forces have at the present time, or what armoured carrier is in the process of preparation for them. I am wondering particularly whether or not any of the British Saracen vehicles are being provided or are in use by our troops in Europe.

Mr. Harkness: In so far as the hon. member's point of view is concerned, I would agree with what seems to be the basis of the hon. member's contention. If everyone in Canada were trained in survival measures and emergency measures techniques generally, that would be the ideal situation. However, you cannot accomplish that purpose overnight. We made a start on it by attempting to train 100,000 people. Before starting to pick out some people from every town in the country and train them, I think the practical thing was to go ahead and train some people where the facilities for training existed.

In the second place, the hon. member talked about possible tie-ups of transportation and so forth. I feel the hon. member is confusing two completely different matters. There exists under the general emergency measures organization a transportation emergency set-up in which employees of the two railways as well as the trucking people have a part to play. Plans have been drawn up in order to ensure that transportation can be maintained in the country, and that where breaks occur they will be repaired quickly. In other words, that is a phase which does not come under my department at all. It is part of the general emergency measures organization activities.

Then the hon. member asked about the type of armoured carriers being used in Europe. At the present time we have some armoured cars for use of the brigade in Europe. The intention is, of course, to provide the brigade in Europe with the Bobcat, the new armoured personnel carrier, as soon as we get delivery of this vehicle.

Mr. Fisher: I have a question on the order paper for the Minister of Defence Production in relation to this vehicle. But having said this much, I wonder if the minister could indicate whether consideration was given to the Saracen which is, I understand, a British vehicle that parallels the Bobcat and which, I gather from British sources, is immensely successful. If not, was any attempt made to see whether or not the Bobcat could be provided for more forces in NATO than merely the Canadian?

Mr. Harkness: I am not familiar with the Saracen, but this I do know. There is nothing in the British army at the present time comparable to the Bobcat. The British are not as far along in the development of an armoured personnel carrier which will be somewhat comparable to the Bobcat as we are. They have had such a vehicle under development longer than we have. This is an amphibious tracked vehicle capable of going over terrain of every kind. There are, in several of the armies of Europe, armoured personnel carriers which are wheeled vehicles, but they possess the disadvantages of all wheeled vehicles in that they are road bound and of course they have no water barrier capabilities.

Mr. Fisher: On previous occasions, Mr. Chairman, the minister has indicated that these vehicles would be coming into use in the Canadian army. May I ask him, in relation to the general estimates of expenditure for the coming year, will any of the moneys be going for the actual provision in service of the Bobcat, or is it not likely to come into service until 1963?

Mr. Harkness: So far as this year which we are discussing is concerned, 1961-62, of course none will come into service. During the next year, 1962-63, the first 20 vehicles will have been completed and a start made on the run of 480 which we have on order.

Mr. Hellyer: Last evening we received an interesting confirmation. The minister confirmed to us that there was no continuing relationship between graduates of the civil survival training course and the armed forces of Canada. This raises the question as to why these public funds should be expended on their training, and whether in fact the training course was intended to be a survival training course or whether it was intended to be a combination recruiting campaign and unemployment relief measure. From the figures the minister gave us as to the success of the recruiting aspect of the course it would seem to have been a very expensive recruiting campaign, probably the most expensive that this country has ever undertaken. From the relationship that exists between the graduates and the armed forces of Canada, the minister has demonstrated that the course has been somewhat futile as well as the most expensive civil survival training that has ever been undertaken by Canada.

I think the minister's revelation points up also the lack of co-ordination between the armed forces of Canada and the emergency measures organization. This is not a new problem, but it is obviously a problem which has not been solved. The army is training people and returning them to civilian life. Once they are returned they have no responsibility to or direct connection with the emergency measures organization which is charged with certain aspects of national survival.

There is a great deal that the minister should explain in regard to this program. What he has told us so far seems to confirm the rumour which has been circulating that the first notice the Canadian army received of this program was when they read about it in the daily newspapers. Perhaps it is true that it was conceived in the Prime Minister's office as a measure to reduce the unemployment figures, which are published periodically in Canada, to a lower level during the year immediately preceding a general election. Is this the purpose? If so, the minister should advise the committee so that we can study it on its merits as primarily an unemployment relief measure. On the other hand, should the minister tell us it is part of our recruiting campaign then he should also inform us what the cost is per recruit, and whether this is the most effective method of recruiting new men for the armed forces.

If the minister really expects us to take him seriously when he suggests that these people are being trained for survival operations in the event of attack on this country, then he should explain how the government, if not his department, intend to co-ordinate their activities with this conglomeration of survival organizations which has been set up, in such a manner that there will be some continuing benefit to the Canadian taxpayers who have footed the bill.

I hope that before we go any further the minister will explain in much greater detail the purpose, the results and the benefits of this whole survival training course.

Mr. Harkness: The remarks of the hon. gentleman merely serve to demonstrate his complete divorcement from the realities and actualities of the situation so far as this training program and these matters generally are concerned. The program was not conceived in the Prime Minister's office. It was conceived in the department of defence, and all these statements that the hon. member made about the army not hearing of it until they read about it in the newspapers are on a par with other ridiculous statements which he is constantly making—

Mr. Hellyer: It was not my statement.

Mr. Harkness: It was a statement with no basis of fact whatsoever. The accusation that it was designed as an employment scheme is also quite incorrect. The scheme was designed as a means of securing the largest possible number of people trained in survival techniques in the shortest possible time which we could see was practical to achieve. After looking at the matter very carefully the army considered that they could train up to 25,000 people on one course, and that they could not train any more than that. We gave consideration to training 30,000 to 35,000 men on a course, but after looking into what the capabilities were so far as army accommodation and training staffs were concerned it was finally decided that 25,000 was the maximum number who could receive practical training at one time. That is why that particular number was decided.

So far as this idea of the army continuing some control over these men after they leave the courses is concerned, unless you have some type of conscription that is just not possible. When the members of the regular army complete their term of engagement the army has no further control over them. They go their way and enter civilian employment. The army has no continuing strings on those men, and the same applies to people who serve in regular militia units. Any time a man serving in a regular militia unit decides he does not want to serve any longer he turns in his uniform and the army generally has no further strings on him or control over him.

These people enlisted in the militia for a specific six weeks period and, just the same as any other regular militiamen who finish their period of service, when they finish that period of service the army has no means of asserting any control over them. This idea that there should be continuing control over them is just a fanciful myth of some sort which, under our system at the present time, cannot be implemented.

Mr. Hellyer: In the United Kingdom there are various classes of reserves, and the reserves there are subject to call-out under certain conditions. We had something similar in this country toward the end of the second world war, and following it. Surely it would not be unreasonable for men who are trained in civil survival to be listed as members of some class of reserve, or subject to call-up in case of national emergency. Perhaps the minister would explain why he is training men in civil survival, men who are going back to civilian life and who will not be members of any reserve or subject to any call.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member has referred to the situation in the United Kingdom. I would point out that in the United Kingdom they have had conscription. They still have it, as a matter of fact, although they are not conscripting any more people, but a considerable number of the people they have already conscripted are being retained in the armed forces for a further six months period beyond the term when they should be released; and as a concomitant of their conscription program they have a system of people having to serve in the reserves after being trained a certain length of time, and being subject to call-up. We have not got a system like that in this country. Therefore the situation in the United Kingdom is not comparable from that point of view and we have no means of keeping any strings on these people or on any militiaman once he decides to leave the militia.

Mr. Peters: I think the minister will agree that the plan has been successful to some extent, particularly among classes of people like veterinarians, doctors and professional people like that who took these courses as part of their own organizations and who went back to their own areas full of enthusiasm for the program. I have talked to some of them, and they lamented the fact that on a voluntary basis they cannot maintain liaison with the E.M.O. organization so that the training they got can be kept up to date. They undertook these six weeks courses at a sacrifice and very much at their own expense, because the amount of money they lost was certainly not compensated by the payments they got from the government.

I believe some organization should be provided for them. It does not have to be as military minded as the militia, but it could give them some leadership. As the minister is probably aware, there is no emergency measures organization in my area and many other areas of Canada. The heads of local organizations cannot be retained because, as the minister explained, the whole operation does not come under one department and surprisingly even gets into the hands of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

In my opinion it is not necessary to have any type of conscription, but there will be large numbers of trained people, particularly from municipal councils and the professional classes, who would wish to continue their contacts and would like to increase their understanding of the problem through correspondence, in order to keep up to date on the latest moves. The government could do something in this field in order to have close liaison with these people, and I believe it should make available some organization which would facilitate this type of further training. A six weeks course is very valuable as a beginning; it is very much of a beginner's course in the field of survival, but unless something further is done to follow up this training, and unless this organization is kept together and these people are made some use of, much of this training will have been wasted.

I agree with the minister that many of them would not want to go into the militia, where they would be under instruction to do this, but most of them have been impressed with the training they have received. The staff that was giving this training, particularly at Arnprior, were imbued with the desire to do something for somebody else in the field of survival. I think these people would volunteer quite readily to give up at least one or two nights a month to continue the organization, if we are going to build one.

I think frankly, and the minister can correct me if I am wrong, that this training has not led to our establishing an organization for national survival. This is not what this program has done. We are not taking advantage of it. I think it is only fair to the people who volunteered to take this course that the government should give some consideration to making available an organization which would allow them to continue the work which they felt they were beginning when they volunteered to take this type of training. I think the government should provide the vehicle whereby they can continue to serve their community in the capacities upon which they decided in line with the training they were given by the government.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, there are all kinds of organizations in existence at the moment which these men could join and carry on and make good use of the training they have received. There are the municipal emergency measures organizations in a large number of municipalities; there is the St. John's ambulance organization; there are the emergency firefighters organizations, and so on.

Mr. Hellyer: The Boy Scouts.

Mr. Harkness: There are a very considerable number of organizations which these people could join and make use of the training they have received. The idea of the dominion government starting to set up another special organization is just completely impractical.

Mr. Peters: The people who took these courses came in most cases from the organizations the minister named, and they are now looking for an over-all organization which will bring them all in together and give them some purpose in continuing whatever beginning they made in survival training. In northern Ontario, for instance, we are now establishing emergency medical depots, the stockpiling of medicines in various centres. This is also, I presume, going on throughout other parts of the country. We are building an organization, the emergency measures organization, but in my particular area we have not even been able to keep anybody as the head of this organization. You cannot co-ordinate; the organizations are not getting together. I think the training which the government has given these people is greater than the regional heads of the emergency measures organization have received.

I am sure these people want to continue. They were impressed with what they were taught. A number of them have come to me and said it is unfortunate that this whole training scheme is without a follow-up program so that some advantage could be gained from it. If a person is unemployed and only goes down and takes the training for six weeks of employment, that is one thing; but if people take time off from a job—and professional people lose a considerable amount of money by doing this—and have done it in a public service spirit, then I think the government has the obligation to do this.

I might ask the minister, what co-ordination is there in most areas in the stockpiling of supplies, and what is the relationship to the emergency transportation organizations that he mentioned, and those others? Who co-ordinates them; where is the head of it established; how is it broken down regionally; and does he not think that this could be organized so that it is all brought together and one organization is responsible for it?

It is well and good to talk about the emergency firefighters, the St. John's ambulance organization and the militia, because the militia is in no different position than the others, as far as I have been able to ascertain, when it comes to nuclear attack and the emergency that will arise as a result of that attack and the organization that will be demanded. They have not been given much more leadership in this field than have the other organizations.

I think the minister will agree that now is the time for us to co-ordinate all these things and go ahead in some direction. It may be that more is being done under the Department of Health and Welfare, but I will be very surprised if it is not eventually going to be a decision of the government that this will have to be co-ordinated under the Department of National Defence. This will be the only value that the Department of National Defence will have if there is a nuclear war. Their only value will be in the field of national survival. I would think that the only place where this could be co-ordinated would be under the minister's department, and I think the Canadian people are now looking to the government to decide what we are going to do with the training we have provided for 100,000 people, which the Prime Minister said was going to be extended to a great many more people than under just this one initial program.

I think the time has now come for the government to indicate that they are going to set up a co-ordination organization that will be able to handle all these various facets of survival and give leadership to the many, many people who have volunteered for these courses, at sacrifice to themselves, who are now looking for leadership and who, if they do not receive this leadership, will obviously be of the opinion that they have wasted their time.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I think I should observe that the hon. member is more than two years out of date in making this proposition of some co-ordinated survival measures organization. We did that some two years ago; it is set up in the Prime Minister's office. We have a very active emergency measures organization which has been co-ordinating the activities of all departments and the provinces for the past two years. I think everybody who is really actively concerned in this program and knows anything about it, particularly all the people concerned in the provinces, would be very ready to tell the hon. member that a very great deal of progress has been achieved during this past two year period, and the whole emergency measures set-up and organization is in such a far better state of health now than it was that there is just no comparison.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister not read the local newspapers? Does he not remember that it was only very recently that we had this difficulty in the city of Ottawa with the emergency measures co-ordinator? This also happened in the city of Toronto. It has happened in my area at least three times. It has happened in the Timmins area, and it has happened in every area with which I am familiar. While I am aware that on paper we may have this organization, it does not appear to me from reading the newspapers that we are really accomplishing this end. If when this course is given there is an indication that these people will be fitted into a niche in the emergency measures organization, I am quite sure they would avail themselves of that opportunity. It is because I do not think it is working, in a practical sense, in many areas that I think this training should be geared to that particular program.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister's reaction to the criticism that has been advanced about this operation and the suggestions that have been made confirm the suspicion in the minds of some of us that one aspect of survival which was in the minds of the government when they put this program into effect was the survival of the government itself.

In respect of the co-ordination of civil defence and survival measures, the minister says everything is fine, things are being co-ordinated beautifully; that we do not really know what is happening when we make these criticisms this afternoon. The minister would have a very difficult time substantiating that position from the evidence and the information we have received in the house about the way these survival courses have been carried on and the continuing value to survival work of those who have been trained in these courses. We have learned that only a minority of those who graduate from these courses sign up for either the regular forces or the militia, and therefore only with respect to that minority is there any assurance that the training which has been received will be of value to the population. I have not got the exact figures; I believe the minority is a substantial one, and I am not criticizing the quality of the training these people receive. Perhaps it has been most effective. But the minister says nothing can be done about those who have graduated and who do not join the forces. He says we can exercise no control over them. That may, of course, be right, but it does not answer the question. The minister says we have a wonderfully co-ordinated emergency measures organization. If that is the case, surely those in the government who are planning these survival courses should at least have taken steps to ensure that those who graduate from these courses, and who have acquired the experience and the skills which will be of such great value in the event of the awful tragedy of war, should somehow or other be made available for the purpose for which they were trained; at least to the extent that information about them would be sent to the local authorities and organizations which have been mentioned today. Surely it would not have been too difficult for those in charge of these courses to have got that information and made it available to those concerned—

Mr. Harkness: I said yesterday that this information is available.

Mr. Pearson: —and to have kept in touch with the people who have graduated from the courses to see that their services were of continuing benefit to the community. The government has apparently done nothing at all in this field.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member should have been here yesterday to hear my speech.

Mr. Churchill: He has been away for ten days.

Mr. Pearson: I read the minister's speech in Hansard, and that is one reason I am speaking this afternoon. The minister has not given in his speeches an answer to the points I am making. He has given us no assurance that those who graduate from these courses will be made available in an emergency to those who might need their services. No effort is being made to keep in touch with them once they graduate. Does the minister deny that? If he does, perhaps he will tell us what is being done to keep in touch with these people.

As is so often the case with this government, they prefer a one shot operation to something that is planned, or to something which has a continued value and benefit.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They like putting on a show.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, as my hon. friend from Essex East says, they are more concerned with putting on a show than with permanent results.

Mr. Churchill: Is that what you have been doing?

Mr. Pearson: Let the minister tell us what assurance we have that the majority of the graduates of these courses, who have been given this excellent training, will be available to give the population the benefit of that instruction should an emergency arise. Is there any way by which the emergency measures organization or any other government authority can get in touch with these people should they be required in an emergency? Does the government know anything about them once they have graduated from these courses, unless they join the military forces of Canada?

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member started out by saying he had suspicions in his mind about the purpose of the courses. I often think that is all he has in his mind, suspicions. As far as this point to which he and some other hon. members have been directing a lot of attention, namely that the government should keep these men under its thumb, that the government should conscript these men in some way—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Harkness: That is the whole argument the hon. member is making. He does not use the word "conscription" but that is the implication of everything he has been saying. Other hon. members have spoken on the same lines. As I have already pointed out, in this country we have no means of doing that. The names of these people, their addresses, their occupations and so forth are kept, and these are made available to the officials of the local emergency measures organization. Of course those who have taken courses are encouraged to join either the regular militia or the emergency measures organization or the St. John's ambulance corps or any other organization of that kind which is organized to give assistance in various ways in the event of an emergency. I submit there is really nothing further we can do under our present system to make use of these people. The argument advanced by the hon. member would lead to the conclusion that you should not train anybody unless you can keep him completely under your thumb and make sure you can get him the moment you want him.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Harkness: That is not the system of government under which we work.

Mr. Hellyer: You have no system. That is the trouble with your government.

Mr. Harkness: Now the hon. member for Trinity is starting to talk. Everyone realises that this scheme is a very successful scheme.

Mr. Chevrier: Read the press.

Mr. Harkness: I think nobody in this committee can go to the people who have been employed in carrying out this scheme and get any other story from them except that it has been extremely successful and that the men who have been turned out are of good calibre; that they have entered with interest and zest into the training, with the result that remarkable success has been achieved.

Of course the hon. member for Trinity decried this program when it was announced. He poured scorn on it and said it did not amount to anything, as is his practice with regard to anything this government does. He said it was going to be Harkness' broomstick army. Those words will come back to haunt him. They have already done so, as a matter of fact. The attempt on his part to discredit this scheme, as well as his hope that it would not be successful, have proved completely inaccurate, as have most of his utterances and statements. As I have said, the scheme has been extremely successful. The Leader of the Opposition made the point that only a small proportion of those who have been trained have gone into militia units. That again is inaccurate. Of the 39,000, I believe, who successfully completed the first two courses, 14,000 have gone into the regular militia—a very high proportion—and another 2,600, I think it was, volunteered for the regular forces. Some 1,400 of these have been accepted into the regular forces.

Mr. Churchill: Splendid.

Mr. Harkness: Thus it can be seen that a very high proportion of the people who have taken these courses are making definite use of them in the militia or in the regular army. In addition, a considerable number of people were given time off from employment to take these courses on the understanding that they would go back and set up emergency measures organizations in their own factories, offices and so forth. Those people are now engaged in that type of activity.

Mr. Pearson: The minister is now following his usual tactics; when he is unable to deal with the points which have been raised he misrepresents the position of those who have been making them. No one on this side of the committee suggested exercising control or conscription or anything of that nature over the graduates from these courses. That is a ridiculous interpretation of what we have said, and the minister knows it.

Mr. Harkness: There can be no other interpretation.

Mr. Pearson: Moreover, no one on this side has said anything reflecting in any way on the calibre of the men who are taking these courses or on the calibre of the instruction.

Mr. Churchill: You are in full retreat now.

Mr. Pearson: I said a few moments ago that only a minority of these graduates joined the forces, and the minister has confirmed that statement.

The minister has said that the names and addresses of the men are taken and that they are available to the municipalities and to the E.M.O. as well as to other organizations. They are available, but has the government taken any steps with regard to those graduates who do not join the forces, either regular or militia, to make sure that their names are brought to the attention of those organizations which might be able to use the expert services of these men in an emergency? Has the government made any effort whatever to keep in touch with these people after they have graduated? Has the government, for example, told them "If you change your address keep in touch, because we might be able to use your services in the future"? It is one thing to say that the names are available. I suppose the names and addresses of most people in this country are available if you want to hunt them up. Has the government taken any initiative in making arrangements so that the experience gained by the graduates of these courses who do not join the forces will be available to those who may need that experience, or do they just wash their hands of the whole affair once they leave the courses?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister tell us how many of these graduates have gone into the civil defence organization and how many have joined the St. John ambulance association? Has the minister those statistics?

Mr. Harkness: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That shows how serious the government is.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says "That shows how serious the situation is" or something along those lines.

[Mr. Pearson.]

When he was in charge of civil defence in this country he did practically nothing for a long period of several years. When the hon. member was the minister in charge of civil defence he did practically nothing. Now he makes implications along these lines.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not propose to get into an argument with the hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman, as he always comes out second best. I would simply say this. Assuming the validity of his argument, may I say this; and I am just assuming it. Of course we all know that when I was in charge of civil defence I could not possibly warrant the accusation which the minister has made against me. However, I am not on trial now. It is the minister who is on trial. What we wish to know is not what I did but what the Minister of National Defence is now doing. He has said that this organization has served not only its designated purpose but that its personnel is available to civil defence establishments in local areas, that it is open to voluntary organizations like the St. John ambulance association, which do much civil defence work. That is a statement by the minister. What we are asking is how many have gone into those organizations. Let us see whether there is anything in the statement the minister has made. If he cannot tell us, the only conclusion to which we can come is that the government has not had a follow-up system, that it does not know how many of these individuals who have received this training have gone into these various auxiliary organizations. If that is the situation, obviously the government is not doing its job.

Mr. Harkness: It is quite evident, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member is either talking about something about which he has no idea or that he is trying to make a case without having anything to substantiate it. Quite obviously I have not the roll of the St. John's ambulance association or of all these voluntary organizations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We had when we were in office.

Mr. Harkness: I therefore have no means of determining how many graduates of these special militia courses have gone into these organizations. I have no means whatever of knowing. If I tried to set up a means of doing that it would cost a very large amount of money, and the hon. member would be complaining that I was wasting the taxpayers' money on personnel who were not in fighting units.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: To deal with another subject which—

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder whether we might carry on this discussion for another three or four minutes and complete it before we turn to another matter.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor unless he yields to the hon. member.

Mr. Pitman: I will yield.

Mr. Hellyer: I should just like to say this. I listened in sorrow to the minister's pitiful remarks of a few moments ago. He has advised this committee that the graduates of this course will be of continuing service in respect of survival operations. Yet surely one of the prerequisites of survival operations is survival equipment. If there is no connection between the graduates and the army or the emergency measures organization, they have no access to equipment. If they have no equipment, how can they fulfil the function for which they were trained? This is fundamental to the argument. It does not matter how much training they have; if they have no equipment with which to work and if there is no chain of command, they are completely ineffective to fulfil a survival role, which is the role for which they have been trained.

What is required in this instance is some leadership. The minister and the government are not providing the leadership required. He has demonstrated again this afternoon that there is a mental block between the army and the emergency measures organization, that there is a cleavage of authority between them whereas they should be completely co-ordinated. He said the co-ordination is in the Prime Minister's office. He said that is where the co-ordination is taking place. The co-ordination that has taken place so far could then be characterized as a paper salad. It has been tossed and turned and no one really knows who is in charge in case of emergency. That is something the minister should tell us. He should also tell us whether the records of these graduates are stored in bomb proof shelters so that in the event of an attack the emergency measures organization will be able to find them and send them letters asking them to report, or communicate with them by whatever other means they would be called upon in case of emergency. These are pertinent questions on a very serious subject.

He says, of course, "If you go and talk to any of the people concerned with the course they will all tell you it has been a success". Perhaps most of them will do so, but perhaps some of them might be afraid to express what they really feel as, on a related subject, I hear that the minister was in Gimli recently and that he went around the base there asking civil servants and members of the armed forces how they were going to vote. I should ask the minister what right he has as a minister of the crown to do this. Second, perhaps this is the reason he expects that members of the armed forces and civil service would be disinclined—

Mr. Harkness: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Trinity has made a completely unfounded assertion for which he has absolutely no authority whatever. I have never on any station I have visited asked anybody how he was going to vote. As a matter of fact in an election campaign I have never asked anybody how he was going to vote. That is not the way in which I carry on electioneering. That is perhaps why I have been here a great deal longer than the hon. member for Trinity, and why I shall still be here a great deal longer than he will be. The hon. member is so naïve that apparently he thinks the way to electioneer in his own constituency or any place else is to go and ask John Jones how he is going to vote. I can tell him right now that is a great mistake. I can assure him and the committee that this assertion he has just made is completely false.

Mr. Hellyer: I am obliged to accept the minister's word. All I can say is that the person who passed the information to me was asked by the minister how he was going to vote.

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member has any information along that line I wish he would send it to me.

Mr. Hellyer: Then you would fire him.

Mr. Harkness: No.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister certainly would do so.

Mr. Harkness: I will get a sworn statement, as a matter of fact, that there is no truth whatever in that assertion.

Mr. Hellyer: And if I obtained a sworn statement from him, the minister would fire him.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Cathers: I rise on a point of order. I think the hon. member for Trinity should withdraw the statement he has made.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think the hon. member who has just interrupted knows the rules of the House of Commons. The rule is that if an hon. member makes a statement, what the other hon. member has to do is to accept it. The hon. member for Trinity has accepted the statement, and that is the end of it. The hon. member had better read the rules.

Mr. Harkness: He did not accept it. He repeated it. He repeated the falsehood.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister is obliged to accept the statement I made.

Mr. Harkness: I do not need to accept hearsay evidence such as that put forward by the hon. member for Trinity. I know of my own knowledge that this statement is an absolute falsehood. The hon. member should apologize for having made that statement in this chamber.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister gave us a good deal of hearsay evidence in this House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Under the responsibilities given the Canadian army comes the system of warning. Although I raised this matter previously, I feel that I cannot leave it on the present basis. I feel that there is something wrong with the system of warning that we are at present using. There are a great many sirens spread across this nation, and they have become something of a joke in many communities which I have visited. I do not know when the decision was taken to use this type of siren. I should like to have that information. I should like to know who produces these sirens, whether this type of siren is used in the United Kingdom or the United States, and the total cost of the siren system so far. I do know that these sirens do not have the confidence of a great many of the people who are working in the emergency measures organization.

At page 293 of Hansard for January 29, 1962 hon. members will find a question I asked with regard to siren failures during exercise Tocsin B last fall. Across this nation 53 of these sirens failed to sound at all and there were 70 partial failures. The centres involved were Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Belleville, Toronto, Fort William, Oshawa, Sault Ste. Marie, Windsor and Essex among others. All these areas were affected by siren failures.

I do not think those of which have sounded have ever been very successful, and the only procedure that has been adopted has been simply to throw in more sirens at a cost which I think is becoming almost unreasonable. The sirens have a high pitched tone which I think is extremely unfortunate. During the debate last year, on September 14, 1961 I asked the minister a question with regard to the testing of these sirens. His reply was that the only way in which you can get a test which will be valid in various parts of Peterborough or anywhere else is on outside audibility. Later he said that the only way in which you can get any sort of test which is standard or uniform is on outside audibility. I have here in my hand a form which was circulated in my city with regard to siren audibility.

Mr. Chambers: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to restrict the hon. member too much but there are no funds provided in this vote for the purchase of equipment and, specifically, no funds for the purchase of sirens.

Mr. Pitman: I am sure the parliamentary secretary will agree that this money for the Canadian army will be spent in part on the salaries of those who are maintaining these sirens. Perhaps we can go on. With regard to siren audibility, there was on that form a place for comment respecting both outside and inside audibility. I think this should be made very clear. It certainly was not made clear in the minister's remarks last year, when he indicated that the tests were made on the basis of outside audibility and that so far as inside audibility was concerned the sirens simply were not heard.

I have some indication that something is being done in this area with regard to some possible form of non-siren warning system. I express the sincere hope that something very important is taking place in this field, because to my way of thinking the sirens which have been bought are not very worth while. I can cite the opinions of several of my constituents who were overseas during the last war and who are familiar with sirens which certainly were loud enough almost to wake a person from the dead. They tell stories of hearing 10 or 15 different sirens turned on. This is certainly not true of the sirens we are using now.

I should like some information on why this type of siren was used. Are there any other countries using it? I should also like more information on what the alternatives are to this siren, and when we may expect an alternative warning device to be in use across the country.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, at the time of the last exercise we had over 500 sirens in operation. At the present time we have upward of 1,000 and by the end of July we will have something over 1,600 in operation. There is no question but that the number of sirens in operation at the time of the last exercise was not sufficient. As far as the size and power of the siren are concerned, the sirens are considerably bigger and more powerful than those which were in existence under the program formerly in the Department of National Health and Welfare and which we have been replacing with bigger and better sirens.

As to the matter of testing the intensity of the sound of a siren, by any scientific means at all this can only be done at various distances outside buildings, because inside buildings the amount of sound that will be heard depends altogether on the construction of the building, the part of the building in which people are and so on. There is no doubt that if these sirens are sounded in summertime when doors and windows are open they will be heard in practically all households when the program is completed in those areas where sirens are installed. In the wintertime, however, when windows and doors are closed and when a radio or television set is perhaps operating, there will be houses in which the sirens will not be heard.

This is just one of the facts of life. If you are going to have a complete warning system it is realized, as has been said many times, that you need some other type of device. Several such devices have been under investigation, particularly one known as NEAR. I have forgotten what the letters stand for, but it is a small black box which you plug into any power outlet. This system has been installed in the state of Michigan and in some other places in the United States. Stations have to be established in the power system so that when the warning is sounded it actuates the box which gives off quite a loud warning note. There is no question but that something along this line is the only complete answer to ensuring that people in all buildings and all rooms in various buildings will be warned.

Mr. Pitman: Can the minister indicate when there will be some hope of installing these new devices? I am sure he will admit that if there were 500 sirens in exercise Tocsin B and 53 failed and there was partial failure of 70 others, according to the return which I received, that means that over one fifth of them were not working properly. This seems to me a terribly high rate of failure.

Mr. Harkness: This whole matter is under very active study, of course, and we are starting to conduct an experimental survey as to the practicalities of the NEAR system from the point of view of possibly making use of it. That will be under way fairly soon. With respect to the number of sirens that failed, a large number of those failures were due to the fact that the telephone and other circuits by which the sirens were actuated were not properly connected. The thing had really just got under way and, as I think the hon. member realizes, any program of this sort will run into quite a few snags, but those snags are rapidly being ironed out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister say whether he knows if there is any foundation for the allegation that has been made in British Columbia that social assistance recipients, are, notwithstanding provincial policy, being forced to join the army's civil defence corps or lose their social allowances? This was raised by a member of the provincial legislature of British Columbia on February 27 last. Can the minister say whether he knows of any such cases, and if there are any what steps has the government taken to avoid this kind of thing?

Mr. Churchill: Who was the member? Was he a Liberal?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. One might well have expected it to be a Liberal, because a Liberal would always be on the job. In this case it was Mr. Randolph Harding, C.C.F. member for Kaslo-Slocan.

Mr. Harkness: As the hon. member knows, I have no means of having any knowledge of what is done by local welfare officials. All I know about anything along this line is the case at St. Boniface. I only know about that from what I read in the newspapers, which the hon. member also read. As far as we are concerned we have no responsibility for any action along that line, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister said not long ago that the Prime Minister was responsible for the co-ordination of emergency measures and of the emergency measures organization, no doubt, with the survival course results and all other aspects of this problem. The minister was quite satisfied with the co-ordination that had been worked out. He thought that everything would be all right.

I take it that in the event of the awful emergency against which we are preparing—and against which some of these preparations are not likely to be very effective in view of the kind of threat we face—the co-ordination of survival operations and all that kind of thing would be centred in the government emergency headquarters which are now being constructed. They are of a nature which would give security, I suppose, against fall-out and against blast from some explosions—of course nothing could give security against a direct hit from the latest kind of bomb or missile. If this is the centre for the co-ordination of these activities, how could that co-ordination be carried out by the Prime Minister, if the Prime Minister had responsibility at that time, if he is not going to be at the government emergency headquarters but, as he has stated, remains in his shelter at Sussex street?

Mr. Harkness: It is quite apparent that this has nothing to do with the estimates which are under consideration. This is a question which the hon. member should ask of the Prime Minister when the emergency measures organization is being discussed. The Department of National Defence is responsible for the rescue operations, for the warning systems, for the maintenance of emergency wireless and other communications of that kind and aid to the civil power. These things constitute our responsibility.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of what the minister has just said to the Leader of the Opposition, and in view of the great interest in these matters in the country, may I ask the minister if we are going to have an opportunity of discussing this matter within the course of the next month or so. I mean, it is all very well for the minister who is in charge of one phase of civil defence operations to say "I have nothing to do with shelters; I have nothing to do with whether or not the Prime Minister stays at No. 24 Sussex street in the event of an emergency or moves out". It is all very well for a minister to say that or for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has a responsibility in this field, to escape any responsibility for current discussions. However, this diffusion of authority makes it very difficult for us in this committee, and for the people in the country, to ascertain precisely what government policy is, what progress is being made.

For instance, there are some very important questions one would like to ask about the irritation experienced by the premier of Manitoba as a result of the lack of any clear policy on the part of the federal government. The premier of that province built a shelter for himself, but he has become frustrated. He has said that he is no longer going to spend even his idle moments in the shelter, so equivocal has the government become in its civil defence policy. Can the minister give us any indication of the opportunity we will have, before the dissolution of parliament, for instance, to discuss this matter? This is an important question in which the people of Canada are very interested at the moment. Can the minister give us some enlightenment as to how and when we might have the opportunity of eliciting some answers to some questions which the minister says are not his direct responsibility?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, all this is quite evidently completely out of order. Every department of the government, as the hon. member should know, has some responsibility now so far as civil defence measures are concerned, particularly so far as the operation of that particular department in an emergency is concerned. As I have said before, that is all co-ordinated by and comes under the control of the emergency measures organization which reports to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That only confirms what I have said.

Mr. Matheson: May I make a brief contribution to this discussion that has taken place. Frankly, at the beginning of this program I had grave doubts that it was possible to take men, many of them unemployed and many of them with no military training of any kind, and make soldiers of them in a short time. I know that in our community the Brockville Rifles undertook this task, and they did it superbly. I took occasion to inspect these groups. I knew something about the E.M.O. operation and the St. John's training, and I thought the co-operation was extremely successful.

The Leader of the Opposition has raised an important point; that is, how do we manage to preserve some sort of control over and communication with these people who have learned something of and who are now interested in this matter of survival? I put to the minister a suggestion that one of the most useful bodies in Canada is the St. John ambulance corps. I know the minister agrees with me in this because his department has done a great deal of work through St. John ambulance, as has the Department of National Health and Welfare. It seems to me that in Canada, as in perhaps no western country, we have skilled people with advanced training in staff work, in military operations and so on, who have devoted themselves to the cause of St. John ambulance particularly, and in recent months to E.M.O. operations. Probably some of these people in Toronto, in Winnipeg and across the country could give the minister's department a great deal of help in respect of this critical matter of co-ordinating these activities.

I suggest that right now the St. John's ambulance corps in Canada knows a great deal more about who should be called out and where they can be obtained than anyone else in the country, including any government department. I think there is nothing better we can do than to rely on this skill and experience that is available. When we are considering a problem of this kind, one question with which we are always faced is the question of security. There is never a problem of security with the people participating in St. John's ambulance work. It seems to me the minister would be dealing with many of his old confreres in the army, and he could benefit a lot from their judgment and experience in the co-ordination of these activities.

Mr. Harkness: We work very closely with the St. John's ambulance corps. As a matter of fact they have the names of all the graduates of the special militia training courses who have passed the first aid examinations. These names have been supplied to them. They have them, and I have no doubt they are making good use of them in respect of St. John's ambulance work.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Air Force—

645. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment—further amount required, $31,000,000.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister explain exactly what this money is being spent for, for the benefit of the committee?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, this particular vote is to make good an estimated net deficiency of $31 million in the cash required for capital expenditure purposes, particularly for aircraft and engines for the Royal Canadian Air Force. The principal item contributing to the deficiency is the CF-104 aircraft. In the main estimates $125 million was provided to meet the cash requirement in support of that program. It is now deemed likely that the actual expenditure will be upwards of $174 million. This estimate includes expenditure of $1¼ million for eight dual CF-104 trainers, procurement of which was authorized during the year and for which no expenditure during this year was anticipated. In other words, we are getting delivery more quickly than we anticipated would be the case.

Other items that contribute to the net deficiency are expenditures of $2 million on support equipment for the CF-101B aircraft, for which no provision had been made in the 1961-62 estimates, and also expenditures for the Yukon, the C-106, of $1.5 million. There were cash surpluses in other items so that the over-all deficiency by the end of March will be $31 million.

Mr. Hellyer: What was the figure the minister gave for the 101B?

Mr. Harkness: The forecast at the present time is for $174 million cash, whereas the estimates provided $125 million.

Mr. Hellyer: Pardon me, the 101?

Mr. Harkness: The 101 was $2 million.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister could advise the committee when the first CF-104's are going to the air division in Europe and if, when they arrive there, they will be armed with atomic missiles?

Mr. Harkness: We have no absolutely firm date on it but we anticipate it will probably be around March, 1963.

Mr. Winch: As the majority of this money is to make up a deficiency in the moneys requested for the purchase of the CF-104, will the minister tell us the fire control system of the CF-104 and what type of weapon equipment it carries?

Mr. Harkness: It is equipped to carry air to surface missiles. As the hon. gentleman knows, the aircraft is known as a strike-reconnaissance aircraft and is equipped to carry air to ground missiles which can, of course, be equipped with nuclear warheads.

Mr. Winch: Is it possible to equip those weapons with conventional warheads? Can the minister tell us that?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, anything along that line is possible, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Winch: That is interesting, Mr. Chairman. That is most interesting. All one has to do is read newspapers and magazines, or talk to the chief of the air staff of the Americans under NATO, as I have done in recent months, and he will explain the fire control of the 104. The fact of the matter is that this aircraft is not designed for conventional weapons, that no conventional weapons are available for it, and no conventional weapons are on the draft board for it.

In view of that information in scientific and technical magazines, in view of those remarks from the highest authorities both in production and in the United States air force, will the minister explain the remark he has just made?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the actual fact is that the Americans have already used this aircraft with conventional warheads.

An hon. Member: That is a knockout shot.

Mr. Winch: It is not the same aircraft.

Mr. Pearson: During the discussion on the army estimate the minister said that there is no use giving massive equipment to a unit which has no means of using it. We are now discussing aircraft and I am thinking particularly of the C-104 which will be the plane to be used—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—by eight of the 12 squadrons of the air division attached to the NATO forces in Europe. I do not know what the other four squadrons will use. Perhaps they will continue to use their present aircraft, but presumably eight of the 12 squadrons will have these new American C-104's.

The air division for some time past has been allocated a new role with the NATO forces in Europe. We have discussed that role more than once in this house, and we on this side took strong exception to the change of role from that which existed previously, to the new role of strike attack. However the government decided this was the correct role for the air division to perform with the NATO forces, and that is the role which Canada has undertaken. It is a most important one, of course, and it will need the best equipment for its performance.

I assume that when the government accepted this role for our air division in NATO they knew what it entailed, both in equipment and performance. I suppose in a sense it was a compliment to the R.C.A.F. that they were asked to discharge what would be a vital role in defence if an emergency arose. Perhaps they were picked because they were so well trained and were so efficient in their job. I am sure that was the case, but in any event in undertaking this role Canada has undertaken a very great responsibility indeed as part of the collective NATO forces.

Presumably when this role was accepted and undertaken the equipment that was required for that role was that which we have been talking about during the last few minutes, the C-104. Surely it was understood, in asking the Canadian government to undertake this role, and by the Canadian government in accepting it, this equipment was not effective for the role in question unless it had nuclear missiles, baby bombs, small bombs, as the commander of NATO called them. Surely that was decided to be necessary for the effective performance of this role. Yet the minister now tells us that no decision has been made as to whether the planes will be given this armament or not, and that they can use conventional weapons if necessary.

That is certainly not the impression which the NATO authorities have, and I doubt very much if that was the impression which the Canadian government had when they undertook this role and bought this aircraft for that role, knowing that its equipment is not really effective for the purpose it has unless it has this particular armament.

Where does that leave us? We have accepted a vital responsibility in the NATO defences in our NATO air division without having decided whether we are going to undertake that responsibility effectively or not. This afternoon the minister said that perhaps this aircraft will have conventional armaments, missiles with conventional warheads. I ask the minister if the Canadian air division in NATO can do this vital job in NATO if it is equipped with conventional warheads for this role of strike attack?

Mr. Churchill: What do you recommend yourself?

Mr. Hellyer: You will learn that in just a few months.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You will learn that in about four or five months.

Mr. Harkness: The Leader of the Opposition has been asking for information on what is a self-evident fact. It is quite clear to anybody I think, and does not need any argument, that any weapon system equipped with a nuclear warhead is going to be more effective than if it were equipped with a conventional warhead. This is a self-evident fact and does not need any discussion.

So far as the situation in NATO is concerned, as the Leader of the Opposition knows the provision of nuclear weapons to the NATO forces in Europe is a matter that has been under very active discussion in the NATO council and among the NATO countries for some considerable time past, and no decision has been arrived at as to what the future course is going to be in that regard.

So far as these particular planes are concerned, as I have indicated they will not be going over, or will not start to go over to the air division in Europe for a year, and therefore there is no need at the moment to be saying they are going to have a, b, c, or something else. I submit that it is the course of wisdom for us to wait in this regard until some definite decision has been arrived at in NATO as to the control of nuclear weapons by the NATO forces stationed in Europe.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, this argument that has just been put up by the minister is positively ridiculous. Surely he knows a lot better than he has just said, because anyone with any knowledge at all of this type of aircraft knows it is a matter, not of days or weeks but of months, and millions and millions of dollars in changing the fire control system of a strike reconnaissance aeroplane of the type of the CF-104. There is a major difference in the fire control system as between the use of a conventional warhead or a nuclear warhead.

We are not just hauling these things out of the air. I have not only seen the CF-104, but I have sat in it. I have seen them armed as the Americans now have them. It is armed with the Sidewinder; it carries six Sidewinders of two different types. I have spoken to the men right on the job, and they said that if there is any change in the fire control system it will take months to carry out any switchover. We are already buying them, and therefore the minister knows right now what kind of fire control system he is having installed on the CF-104. If he does not, we have no business in purchasing them and having them delivered.

I do not know just what the minister takes hon. members for. We are talking about a serious matter in a serious manner, and I wish the minister would consider the questions and the discussion in that light.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, all I can say in regard to that is that the CF-104 will be equipped to take eight different types of weapons.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, the point is simple. The Canadian government accepted the strike attack role. At the time the Canadian government accepted the strike attack role the Canadian government knew it was an atomic role. Now the question is, does it intend to fulfil its commitment to NATO, or does it not? We have a right to know now, because if the Canadian government has no intention of fulfilling its commitment to NATO then it should discontinue the expenditure on the CF-104 and appurtenances at once and we should not have a duplication of the cancellation of the Avro Arrow which happened after $400 million had been spent.

If, however, the government continues with the production of this aeroplane and appurtenances, the Canadian people have the right to assume that it is going to live up to its commitment to NATO and arm the aeroplanes with nuclear missiles. We want to know, because we are the representatives of the people who have to vote the moneys to buy the carriers which are to be used for carrying nuclear missiles, whether in fact the Canadian government intends to fulfil its commitment or whether since it originally made the commitment it has changed its mind for one reason or another and does not intend to fulfil its commitment.

If it has changed its mind since the original commitment was made, it is the duty of the minister, in his capacity as representative of the government on this occasion, to advise the committee the reasons why the Canadian government has changed its mind. Surely we are entitled to this basic, fundamental information before we continue increasing what was first a $125 million and is now to be a $174 million expenditure in one fiscal year.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one more question. I understand from reading the newspapers this morning that the Voodoo aircraft is now operational in Canada and has been transferred from some United States squadrons. As they have been transferred from United States squadrons and are now operational in Canada, could I ask the minister with what type of weapon the Voodoos in Canada have been equipped.

Mr. Harkness: They are equipped with the G.A.R. Falcon, with a conventional type of warhead. It is an air-to-air rocket and missile.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, is the minister not going to answer the questions which I raised and which were raised by the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Harkness: I do not believe that the hon. member for Trinity has raised any questions which require any further answer than has been given on numerous occasions in this house and outside of it. I think the position of the government in connection with nuclear weapons has been made abundantly clear and I see no use in continuing to repeat what has been said so frequently before.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister may see no use in continuing this discussion which is concerned, among other things, with the ultimate expenditure of something over $408 million, I think, on an air division in Europe, but we see some use in trying to get answers from the minister to questions which are very vitally important.

I think I am right in saying that the minister said a few moments ago that the first of these CF-104 aeroplanes would not be delivered to the air division in Europe until about a year from now. The decision to equip the air division with these aeroplanes was made some time ago and it is certainly, to say the least, unfortunate that it will be 1963 before the first aircraft is delivered. The minister also said that in respect of nuclear weapons the government is waiting for NATO to decide the control of nuclear weapons in the hands of NATO forces in Europe. But no decision is required in respect of the use of nuclear weapons by United States and United Kingdom forces in NATO, because they already have custody of those weapons.

I am perfectly certain in my own mind that if the United States high command had known that in 1962 the Canadian government would not have made up its mind as to whether it would permit the air division to perform effectively the role it has undertaken, the United States government would have said, "We will take on that role ourselves with one of our own air divisions".

The minister admitted again this afternoon that the weapons system in this aeroplane would be, to say the least, more effective with nuclear warheads than without them. If you are going to undertake a role of such vital importance, surely you are not going to undertake it with warheads which have not their maximum effectiveness. That is what we are doing. We have not made up our minds at all as to what warheads will be used; no decision has been made; no decision will be made until, presumably, the aircraft reaches Europe some time in the future. Meanwhile we tell NATO, "We will continue to discharge this role. We accept this honourable and dangerous responsibility, but we will tell you in due course whether or not we will be in a position to discharge it effectively". That is the position the government has taken in respect of this matter. Then if the decision is left until the squadrons are equipped in Europe, and if the decision should be against using nuclear weapons, the government will have to withdraw from that role. That would be a fine contribution to make to the defence of peace in western Europe. If the decision is taken that we must carry out this role in the most effective way possible, even if it requires the use of nuclear warheads in the weapons system of this aeroplane, then the airmen running these aeroplanes would have to begin to learn how to handle this new equipment, because no decision would have been made before. It is almost impossible to describe the ludicrousness of that position especially in relation to the seriousness of the matters with which we are dealing.

The Prime Minister is reported by the Canadian Press as having said in Edmonton on February 25:

> Should war come, are we going to arm Canadians with bows and arrows?

The only logical deduction one can make from the position the government is putting forward this afternoon is: if war comes we do not know what we shall arm Canadians with, because we have not made up our minds. Then the Prime Minister is reported to have gone on to say:

> Canada has interceptor aircraft which will be more effective with nuclear weapons.

Presumably he would make the observation—the minister made it this afternoon—that our air division will have aircraft which would be more effective when armed with nuclear weapons. Then he went on to say:

> The same applies to the two Bomarc bases built in this country.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Next, he is quoted as saying:

> Should war come we must have every necessary instrument. But we shall not decide until the emergency whether those instruments can be used or not.

That is the position the government is taking. Then, apparently in order to inject some reassurance into that kind of statement, the Prime Minister is reported to have added that he had read the recent report that nuclear warheads could be made available in half an hour to an hour and indicated there was some credence to be attached to that report. In other words, we are going ahead now to plan for missiles and aircraft on the basis that we shall decide later how we shall arm them; and if we decide to change the arms from ineffective arms to arms which are more effective, we can get the new ones in half an hour or an hour. That is the position the government is taking in respect of this vitally important question of equipment for the defence of peace. The best weapons must be available, but the best weapons, apparently, are not going to be available in this case. Second best will not be good enough, but we shall decide when the emergency develops what we are to do about it; we shall decide then whether the F-104 will be effective in carrying out the role allotted to it. We have got a year; the plane will not be over there for a year. Meanwhile, we allow the NATO command and the NATO forces to maintain the impression, which I am sure they have, that when the Canadian government undertakes a definite role it undertakes it sincerely and will do its best to carry it out in the most effective way. This means to the NATO high command the use of the F-104 with the kind of warhead which was meant for this role when it was undertaken a couple of years ago. I take it the minister will agree that it is a correct description of the situation to say that when this role was undertaken, and when it was decided to use the F-104 to discharge this role, it was assumed by this government and by the NATO authority that that role would be carried out effectively with the most effective weapons which would be available, carried by the most effective planes; and that this is the view the government is now taking with respect to this equipment.

Mr. Harkness: The Leader of the Opposition has again demonstrated the facility he had displayed during the last four years of seeming to be on all sides of this nuclear question. In 1958 he was urging the government to conclude an agreement and secure nuclear weapons immediately—

Mr. Pearson: That is not true.

Mr. Harkness: I have the quotations here.

Mr. Pearson: Then give us the proof.

Mr. Harkness: I have only a few minutes before five o'clock.

Two years later he was saying he had made a mistake and that we should not have nuclear weapons in any circumstances. Then, not long ago, he said we should not have them but that we should let the United States come in and have them in Canada.

Mr. Pearson: I did not say that. Quote that.

Mr. Harkness: The president of the national Liberal association out in Calgary said we should have nuclear weapons. Others in the Liberal party say that in no circumstances should we have them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is your position?

Mr. Harkness: In other words, they have now twisted themselves right round in a circle. Now they say that we have no position—

An hon. Member: But you are the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You take a position which is not that taken by the minister for external affairs.

Mr. Harkness: We have a position, and I am prepared to state it again very briefly. We have said, and we continue to say, that the attitude taken by the Leader of the Opposition, both in 1958, and now, when he wants us to answer yes or no to the question "Are you going to have nuclear weapons?" is completely unrealistic and is not the way to approach this problem. We have said that the only wise course, the only course of prudence, is to secure those weapon systems that are capable of carrying warheads and to train men in their use. We have secured those systems. We have secured the CF-104. We have secured the Honest John battery. These are weapon systems which are capable of taking nuclear warheads. We have trained people in their use and are still in the process of training people in their use as far as some of them are concerned. Thus, we are in a position, or will be in a position that, should an emergency develop, we would have weapons in the hands of our forces equal to those in the hands of the enemy they would be required to fight. The position the Leader of the Opposition and his cohorts are now taking, this demand that we should say at this moment what we are going to do, is not related to the facts as they exist at the present time. The opposition itself has no position with regard to this matter, yet they are trying to confuse Canadians with regard to the definite and reasonable position which we have adopted.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business as set out in standing order 15.

Item stands.

PRIVATE BILLS

EVANGELICAL MENNONITE MISSION CONFERENCE

Mr. G. R. Muir (Lisgar) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-5, to incorporate Evangelical Mennonite Mission Conference.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to obtain a charter for the Evangelical Mennonite Mission Conference which has been in existence for a period of four years as an unincorporated association. The objects of the corporation, as the bill states, are to promote, maintain, superintend and carry on, in accordance with the Christian faith, doctrines, constitution, acts and rulings of the corporation, any or all of the work of that body.

The bill allows the central administrative body of the association to administer the affairs of the conference and further coordinate the efforts of the 18 participating churches located in Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

The powers which the corporation is seeking are set out in clause 9(1) of the bill and are similar to those granted to other religious bodies from time to time. At present the total membership of this church is 1400. Four of the churches are located in and around Saskatoon. Eleven are in the area between Altona and Morden in Manitoba which is one of the two areas originally set aside in Manitoba by the administrative council for settlement by the Mennonite people in the early 1870's. Nearly all the members of this group can trace their ancestry back to the first settlers.

This corporate body will also facilitate the missionary work of the congregations comprising its membership and, by pooling resources, make the general work of the congregations concerned more effective.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

BROCK ACCEPTANCE COMPANY

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-9, to incorporate Brock Acceptance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it will no doubt be observed by the house that Bill No. S-9, is a very short bill asking for the incorporation under the Small Loans Act of a company to be known as the Brock Acceptance Company. The petitioners for incorporation are three business people all of whom reside in the city of Winnipeg. They will become the first shareholders of the company, together with such other persons as may wish to join with them.

The capital stock of the company is to be $250,000, of which $100,000 is to be subscribed before the provisional directors may call a general meeting of the shareholders. There is also a further provision that the company shall not commence business until $250,000 of the capital stock has been subscribed and $100,000 has been paid in on it.

The head office of the company is to be in the city of Winnipeg in the province of Manitoba. It is because incorporation is asked for pursuant to Part II of the Small Loans Act that this bill is in such short form. It follows the form set out in one of the schedules to the act. The powers and disabilities of the company are not set forth in the bill as they are fully set out in the Small Loans Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

GERAND ACCEPTANCE COMPANY

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-10, to incorporate Gerand Acceptance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, hon. members no doubt have noticed that Bill No. S-10 is practically identical in terms with the previous bill, namely Bill No. S-9 which just received second reading. The applicants for incorporation are also Winnipeg people and they will become the provisional directors of this company which is to have capital stock of $250,000, with a requirement that $100,000 must be subscribed before a general meeting of the shareholders is called. There is also a requirement that the company shall not commence business until $250,000 of the capital stock has been subscribed and $100,000 has been paid thereon. The head office of this company is also to be in the city of Winnipeg. The company is also incorporated under part II of the Small Loans Act, and the powers and disabilities are fully set out in the said act. Everything about this incorporation is idential with the incorporation under Bill No. S-9 except that the name of the company is different and that the petition for incorporation is by different people.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

[Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North).]

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

PROVISION FOR NATIONAL FLAG, ANTHEM AND INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-25, respecting the sovereignty of Canada.

He said:

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, on March 17 of last year, I had the opportunity of introducing a similar bill in this house. As you no doubt recall, it suffered the fate reserved to favourable measures which, in the end, are talked out by hon. members.

I described at that time the development and the reality of our national sovereignty, asking that it be expressed by external signs such as a distinctive national flag, a distinctive national anthem and a Canadian national sovereignty day.

I indicated that these three external signs would promote understanding between Canadians from coast to coast, show that Canadian patriotism is really alive and stir up a national dynamism likely to increase the efforts required for the development of our great country.

I insisted also upon the interpretation the term "distinctive Canadian", by pointing out that it was a question of giving our country a flag and anthem entirely different from any other foreign design or anthem, thereby eliminating the union jack and the fleur de lis.

According to surveys made by junior chambers of commerce in Canada and polls taken by several other organizations or individuals, more than 80 per cent of all Canadians now want such a distinctive national flag and such a distinctive national anthem.

A very small number of Canadians would like to see retained on the flag either the union jack or the fleur de lis.

But I sincerely believe that we must look toward the future. We must stop looking back at the past and we must go forward in the same direction, united under the same entirely Canadian banner.

We must put aside the fleur de lis that reminds us of France but means absolutely nothing to one third of the Canadian population which is made up of new Canadians from many countries of Europe and Asia.

The union jack should have the same fate, it should be discarded, since it is the flag of another country. If we do not have enough imagination or maturity to find our own symbols, then let us sink into mediocrity and revert to the inferior status of a colony.

The union jack, Mr. Speaker, while a magnificent flag, remains the national emblem of Great Britain, by virtue of a royal proclamation of January 1, 1801, and the red ensign, authorized in Great Britain by Queen Ann in 1707 and Queen Victoria in 1864, represents, according to section 72 of the merchant navy act, the national flag for any ship or vessel belonging to any British citizen.

Now, it is impossible even for the red ensign to remain a Canadian emblem, since we have ceased to be British subjects on January 1, 1947, when we became Canadian subjects under the Canadian Citizenship Act. That is why, on September 5, 1945, Mr. King and his colleagues passed an order in council establishing as temporary Canadian emblem the red ensign, until such time as parliament would decide otherwise. Now, the event of capital importance which should have led to a change in that situation, Mr. Speaker, was indeed the political emancipation which was made abundantly clear to every country in the world, when Canada created, in January 1947, the status of Canadian citizen.

Our progressive and actual sovereignty calls for a sovereign and united Canadian attitude. In 1919, Sir Robert Borden signed, on behalf of Canada, the Versailles peace treaty.

In 1923, Hon. Ernest Lapointe signed without the use of an intermediary in Washington our first trade agreement with a foreign country. On December 11, 1931, the Statute of Westminster granted us our sovereignty and independence.

Canadian Sovereignty

This statute marked an important and decisive step in our constitutional evolution. Its effects were felt both in the domestic and external fields.

On the domestic plane, this statute had six main effects, as follows:

Our governor is now appointed by the king on the advice of the prime minister of Canada. He only represents the king and his relations with the Canadian government are the same as those between the king and the imperial government.

The crown must now, by virtue of this agreement, sanction the acts of Canada only on the advice of the Canadian government.

Any act passed by the imperial parliament and in force in Canada can be abrogated to the extent that it applies to this country, except the Statute of Westminster and the various acts based on the British North America Act and the amendments thereto.

No imperial act passed after December 11, 1931 applies to Canada as part of her own legislation.

Canada's power to legislate on merchant navy matters is now legally unlimited.

Canada is free to abolish any appeal to the privy council, which has been done already.

As regards external affairs, here are the five main effects of that statute:

The parliament of Canada can now pass extra-territorial acts and has given that scope to the whole Canadian legislation.

Canada can be and is represented as she wishes in foreign courts. She can and does accredit her own ambassadors.

Canada can and does sign official treaties with foreign governments.

It is up to Canada, through some constitutional agreement, to decide whether she will be bound by a treaty in the negotiation of which she had had no part.

Finally, since the war, the constitutional evolution of Canada has been notable and efficient. A country does not grant nor confer to itself a sovereignty: it has to be recognized by other countries. Now, Canada has played the role of a nation, has exercised the rights and privileges attached to sovereignty, and the other nations have not questioned its right to play such a role. They have recognized that Canada has, in fact, that degree of independence which is necessary to sovereignty. They have sanctioned the fact that, in their eyes, Canada has been acting by and for itself.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that our country enjoys full sovereignty and that it acts, in the international field, as a distinct and personal entity.

That is why distinctive, personal and typically Canadian external signs are imperative. That is the essence of this bill.

I am not suggesting here any specific design nor any anthem in particular. I merely wish that hon. members make a decision on the principle of a distinctive Canadian flag and a distinctive Canadian anthem.

In a few years, we shall celebrate the centenary of confederation. At that time, we shall have to possess external signs of national sovereignty and political maturity; otherwise our hesitation and irresponsibility will prevent us from being abreast of our emancipation.

I therefore urge hon. members to limit their speeches and express themselves today through an unequivocal vote.

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, after reading and studying the bill proposed by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), some doubts come to our minds as to the mover's intentions. In fact, the bill makes three requests: a flag, a national anthem and a national independence day.

The hon. member for Sherbrooke, who is generally not too profuse, did not restrain himself this time and set his teeth to a three-decker which may very well choke him.

When considering the language of the bill, one wonders whether the hon. member does not want to reduce or camouflage his government's responsibility.

Section 3 of the bill reads as follows:

> It shall be the duty of the Canada Council to prepare or have prepared, after competition or otherwise, a design for a suitable distinctive national flag free of the emblem or emblems of any other country and to submit the same to the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada within one year of the coming into force of this act.

Mr. Speaker, this has already been done by a special committee. There are thousands of designs in the government's records. The most suitable of those designs should be selected and submitted directly to the government which is responsible for selecting a flag.

We have been talking about a distinctive national flag for a great many years. Mr. St. Laurent expressed his views quite clearly in the house on this matter. Even though this government has been in power for five years, we still do not have the opinion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on the distinctive national flag Canada should have.

An hon. Member: What did you do during the 22 years you were in power?

Mr. Boulanger: The Liberals were in power 22 years and there was some talk about a distinctive national flag; the prime minister of the day, right hon. Mr. Louis St. Laurent, did not hesitate to state his opinion on that point.

If the present Prime Minister is against a distinctive national flag, let him say so; if he does not want one, let him speak out.

Mr. Asselin: Are you also in favour of two flags?

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question?

Mr. Boulanger: You may ask your question when I am through. Mr. Speaker, section 6 of the bill reads as follows:

> The anthem mentioned in the previous section—

That is section 5 which reads:

> It shall be the duty of the Canada Council to select after competition a distinctive national anthem for Canada and to submit the same to the Senate and House of Commons of Canada within one year from the coming into force of this act.

In this section of the bill, the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) is proposing that the Canada Council write another national anthem. But we already have a national anthem which is recognized by every Canadian from coast to coast. I wonder why the hon. member for Sherbrooke insists on complicating matters.

I do not think that we can find one single member in this house who is opposed to "O Canada" as our national anthem. It has been sung for years all across Canada.

As for the section concerning a Canadian independence day, it seems to have been put there to ensure that the bill will not be passed.

Mr. Speaker, if this government does not have the authority to give us a distinctive flag and a distinctive national anthem, I wonder why it should be left to the Canada Council to make a choice.

The present government has repeatedly indicated that there are differences of opinion among its members. This has been demonstrated many times, especially as far as national defence is concerned. If a minister says one thing, another will say just the opposite.

As concerns the national anthem, as for the distinctive national flag, there is no agreement, since similar bills have been introduced for five years in a row, and nothing tangible has been achieved as yet.

The Liberal party has decided, as a matter of policy, that we shall have a distinctive national flag. We shall have a distinctive flag—

An hon. Member: Two.

Mr. Boulanger: —a distinctive national flag.

Mr. Pigeon: Six.

Mr. Boulanger: Hon. members opposite do not want to understand. Yet, our leader has explained the situation clearly and unequivocally. I wonder if they are not blinded by the Union Nationale screen.

Mr. Speaker, I should not like to delay passage of this bill. I know that other members wish to express their views on the subject. So I say that it is our hope that the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Sherbrooke will be accepted as a second best choice.

Besides, at the next session, with the Liberal government in power, we shall adopt a bill which will come into force the year after, as promised by our leader (Mr. Pearson).

An hon. Member: Two flags, two bills?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Allard: I want to direct a question to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. He pointed out several times that the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent had not been afraid to express his views on the matter of a Canadian flag. Would he kindly tell us what was the opinion of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent on the matter of a Canadian flag? What was it supposed to include?

Mr. Boulanger: I have already said it in this house. Perhaps I am not able to repeat word for word what Mr. St. Laurent said at the time but he did say that as long as the national flag is not a rallying sign, there would be no distinctive national flag.

And since we are talking about a distinctive national flag, I should like to add this: if Mr. St. Laurent, at the time, did not want to give Canada a distinctive national flag, why is it that the Conservatives who, during the 1957-58 campaign, kept promising, all over the province of Quebec, the adoption of a flag, did not fulfil their promise after having been in office for five years?

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I shall commend the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) for having submitted this bill, on which I want to make a few remarks.

In 1967, Canada will celebrate its centenary as a colony, and not as a sovereign state, unless the British North America Act is properly amended.

As a matter of fact, clause 56 of the British North America Act, stipulates that the parliament in London can disallow any act passed by the Canadian parliament. Therefore, there is some urgent need for Ottawa to approach the British parliament with a view to having that clause removed from our constitution.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, this is the first step towards an independent Canada, that is to say a country with a sovereign status.

Moreover, every Canadian is, at the same time, a British subject, a Canadian citizen and a citizen of the commonwealth.

Any Britisher is automatically a Canadian citizen.

Our country should pass some legislation conferring on every immigrant, from the British Isles or elsewhere, the rights ordinarily granted to immigrants. They should not have the right to exercise any public function before becoming Canadian citizens.

Before adopting a distinctive national flag, it is important for Canada to clearly establish its sovereign status.

We can talk of national independence when we are part of the commonwealth of the United Nations organization and of the North Atlantic alliance.

The word "dominion" should also be removed wherever found. As to the national anthem of this country, "O Canada" is now to my mind, officially recognized.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), has advocated having two flags: one for Sundays and one for week days. He also favours two national anthems, whereas the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), wants six flags.

Mr. Speaker, this indicates the confusion within the opposition.

The Leader of the Opposition advocates two flags and two national anthems, whereas Mr. Pickersgill wants six flags and probably six national anthems.

Mr. Speaker, the promise made by the Leader of the Opposition to give Canada two flags and two official anthems, characterizes very well the policy of his party which wants to divide the country in two and offer a flag and a national anthem to the English-speaking group, and another flag and another national anthem to the French-speaking group.

By this very fact, the opposition wants to destroy confederation and proclaim Quebec a state separate from the other provinces, another separate country.

Mr. Speaker, give me another example which can contribute more to national disunion, in other words, to the disintegration of confederation.

In closing my remarks, may I refer to an excellent article published in the newspaper Le Droit, on February 6, 1962, under the heading:

The impertinence of an M.P.

This is how it reads:

The great pre-electoral tide is evident. The tidal wave cannot yet be perceived. Nevertheless, the heavy foam which appears on the waters betrays the strong rising tide and the desperate efforts of boatmen to reach safe anchorage.

And the article continues as follows:

But everything points to the fact that impertinence will be carried to an extreme. Yes, our country, without a flag after centuries, would suddenly get two. This is truly exaggerating. We are being spoiled. Canadians have surely not lost anything for waiting—This is even better than advertisements about cats for the Congo and contributions for the widow of the unknown soldier. No, Mr. Pickersgill, a country does not grow richer with flags—

Please note the use of the plural.

—by the pair, like an individual buys shoes, snow-shoes or skis—A spare tire can be very useful, but such a precaution is out of place when choosing a national emblem. And, by an irony of fate, the member for Bonavista-Twillingate—

And this also applies to the Leader of the Opposition.

—belongs to a party which, although in power for a great number of years, has not been very prodigal with flags. Yesterday, what stinginess. Today, what generosity. And why not three, six, or a whole dozen of flags, for the different circumstances, just as there are handkerchiefs for colds and handkerchiefs for hired weepers?

And the article continues:

The problem which now exists is not very complicated. Canada needs a flag, not England, nor France nor Palestine. Our country is no longer a colony. There is no question of being disrespectful to the monarchy. Canada has its own queen. If it is ridiculous to give two flags to our country, it is all the more ridiculous to try to give a second flag to proud Albion which has had one for a long while now. How is it that French Canadians who have not forgotten their origin favour a distinctive flag? It is because their devotion to the motherland is not greater than their love for their country.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to quote an excerpt from that excellent article.

In closing my remarks, I wish to congratulate again the hon. member for Sherbrooke for his worthy proposal which gives an opportunity not only for free discussion in this house but also for the promotion of the cause of a distinctive national flag.

Besides, I should like to bring to the attention of this house the political confusion which is evident among the members of the opposition who sometimes support the adoption of two flags and two national anthems, while the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate wants six flags and also six official anthems.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I say without the slightest hesitation that the hon. member for Sherbrooke has contributed to this debate in a much more serious fashion than the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm at the outset condemned what the hon. member for Sherbrooke had said.

He said that if things go on as they are, Canada will be marking its centenary as a colony in 1967; the mere mention of that fact is ridiculous. Moreover, he spent his time talking first about two flags, then about six flags, stating that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) had favoured two flags.

It is evident to anyone who takes a serious look at the situation that the Leader of the Opposition spoke of one national flag; but he added that the union jack could be kept for those who wish to use it occasionally. Besides, we have seen and we still see every day in the province of Quebec, on our national day or in Corpus Christi processions, people who, after having been detached from France for more than 200 years, still display the blue, white and red flag of France, which is very decorative. That does not mean however that they are more French than Canadian. This simply means they still keep in their hearts a certain feeling for their old mother country.

I must say I have admired the speech of the hon. member for Sherbrooke. But I must disagree with my colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger), because I do not share all his views. I rather regret that purely political motives should have been included in this matter, as was done most particularly by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

I suggest that this matter should be dealt with objectively, as was done by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, whom I congratulate.

We can hold different views. We can claim that it should be up to the government to rule on the matter, especially since it has been under discussion for many years. But, on the other hand, I do not object to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke that we should ask a committee formed of persons having some particular knowledge of the arts, to choose among the thousands of designs which have been submitted to us, and which are still being continuously submitted to us, the one which best represents the aspirations of the whole of Canada.

As all hon. members probably did, I presume, I recently received some suggestions. These suggestions dealt with four acceptable flag designs. First, there was a distinctive national flag; a red flag with a gilded maple leaf and ten gilded bars representing the ten provinces; this would be the Canadian flag. There would also be a flag for the navy, a red maple leaf on a white field, with ten red bars representing the ten provinces of Canada. There would also be a flag for the Department of Transport, a gilded maple leaf on a blue field with ten gilded bars representing the ten provinces of Canada. Finally, there would be a flag for the merchant navy: a green maple leaf on a white field, with ten green bars representing the various provinces of Canada. Nobody can raise objections to those four proposals because they have a special meaning since they represent for Canada: the merchant marine, the Department of Transport and Canada's navy.

Those are suggestions that might be submitted to a committee having made studies and with special knowledge in the field of aesthetics.

This measure contains the interesting provision that the members of that committee must within a period of one year, report to parliament on their research and findings.

It must be kept in mind that the final decision rests with parliament or the government. I think that the suggestion should come from the government. The government should be the one to decide and submit a bill to parliament which, in turn, would finally adopt it.

Besides, I do not believe it is essential that the government submit such a bill. It can take a decision, as was done before in the case of the Canadian flag floating over our embassies, the red flag with a union jack in a corner and the arms of Canada. That was decided by order in council just the same as the Quebec provincial government adopted its own flag by order in council. It submitted a flag and said: This is the flag of the province of Quebec. That is what the government of that province has decided. That government took the responsibility. Whether you like it or not, it is the recognized flag of the province of Quebec.

In my opinion, this idea of referring the question to a committee such as the Canada Council for examination, is a good one and I am all for it.

I was interested in the historical account given by the hon. member for Sherbrooke. The signing of the treaty of Westminster in 1931 was the crowing achievement of a series of steps taken since 1760 towards the full independence of Canada. There was the Quebec Act, the constitutional regime, the Act of Union, confederation and finally, the Statute of Westminster.

We have seen that our heads of state had started to establish Canada's position long before that. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier was invited to Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee, in 1897, he made moves, over there, backed by General Smuts of South Africa, in favour of greater independence for the dominions within the commonwealth.

Then, in 1919, Sir Robert Borden, as Prime Minister, insisted, as the member for Sherbrooke said, that Canada be called upon to sign the Versailles peace treaty in its own name, because our troops had fought as a Canadian unit, not as part of the British forces.

In 1926, the Canadian people stood up against a governor general who intervened in the political affairs of our country and who was immediately recalled. From that moment, there was much talk about the treaty of Westminster. The Hon. Ernest Lapointe signed the fisheries agreement with the United States, but refused to do so in the presence of Great Britain's representative, thus indicating that Canada intended to become completely autonomous. Thereafter, from 1927 to 1930, the various dominions set up the basis for the Westminster treaty, which was signed on the 11th of December, 1931.

Therefore, I see no objection to the three projects being grouped in one, since they all tend to a full and complete autonomy for Canada.

That is why I commend the hon. member for Sherbrooke. I commend him for the moderation of his remarks. I think we should discuss those national matters in a non-partisan way. We should discuss them with the broadness of mind of Canadians who want to be Canadians.

We have no right to condemn the English-speaking Canadians who have not yet attained the same degree of national maturity as the French-speaking Canadians, because many of them still have relatives overseas—brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, grandfathers, grandmothers—and they still have in their heart some feeling for England.

But it should not be overlooked that the union jack is made up of three crosses: Saint George's cross, standing for England, Saint Andrew's cross, standing for Scotland, and Saint Patrick's cross, standing for Ireland. These three countries together form what we consider today not England but the United Kingdom. No, the union jack has no connection whatsoever with Canada.

We must respect the union jack because it is the emblem under which we enjoyed a great measure of protection. We must respect it in the same way as we, French-Canadians, respect the French flag, which represents something for us. However, to respect it does not mean to brandish it at every occasion as the sole guide to our conduct.

We must have a distinctive Canadian flag bearing neither the union jack nor the fleur-de-lis because the union jack represents England and the countries around it, while the fleur-de-lis is an old relic from France which can certainly be cast off. There has been talk about the national anthem. Last Sunday, following the victory of the Canadian team over the American team, the band started playing "O Canada". While listening to it, I was proud of the fact that, in other countries, "O Canada" was recognized as our national anthem. I admit that some people do not like "O Canada"; they may be right, because it is often badly sung and badly played. In fact, in some circles, it is often sung like a funeral dirge, when it should be possible to underline its real beauty. Among the bands that play it very well, the R.C.A.F. band and the governor general's band give it a vigorous and martial flavour that really represents this young country of ours. Played in such a way, "O Canada" is truly beautiful. In our schools, we should teach our children to sing "O Canada" with ardour, so that it may be a true demonstration of the Canadian spirit.

Mr. Speaker, I approve the bill because it sets a one-year deadline to the study of the question. If it were to prolong its study indefinitely, I would not support it. I find it acceptable and I am one of those who support it.

(Text):

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would clear up one point. The translation was not quite clear to me. I thought I heard him say that the union jack was made up of the flags of St. Andrew, St. George and St. Patrick, but I presume he would also wish to refer to St. David. We must not forget the Welsh.

Mr. Caron: I do not know whether the Welsh cross is on there. I know there are three crosses, St. Andrew, St. George and St. Patrick. Perhaps the Welsh cross is under one of these, but I have not seen it.

[Mr. Caron.]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I know that a number of hon. members wish to speak on Bill No. C-25, so what I have to say I will say in a very few short sentences. This bill calls for a distinctive Canadian flag. We in this group are 100 per cent in favour of a distinctive Canadian flag, and this is written right into our federal program. This bill calls for a Canadian national anthem. We are in favour of a Canadian national anthem and we think we have this in our present anthem "O, Canada". This bill calls for a national holiday. We are in favour of holidays, particularly a national holiday, but I think we can find a better, more appropriate and more favourable date for a holiday than December 11.

On those three principles, Mr. Speaker, I have told the house where we stand. I would like to add that I cannot see the necessity or the reason for the question of the anthem or the flag being referred by legislation to the Canada Council for a report to be made within one year after passage of this bill, if it does pass. Surely the question of the flag, the holiday and the anthem is the responsibility of government. It is their responsibility to take whatever steps are required and then, on the basis of their studies and the knowledge they acquire, make recommendations to the parliament of the day.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fitting that we do not leave this hour completely to our French-speaking colleagues because I believe that discussion on the flag and the anthem should be bilingual also. I was very much impressed by an article written by Mr. J. B. McGeachy in the Financial Post of March 10 last. He happened to be discussing the question of the flag and had this to say:

> Mackenzie King had a dream about it on the night of March 19-20, 1944. This significant fact is revealed in J. W. Pickersgill's book, "The Mackenzie King Record". In his diary for March 20 WLMK noted the contents of this dream. In it he saw the union jack as Britain's flag and the red ensign, with the union jack in the top corner and the Canadian shield in the fly, as Canada's flag.

That flag has been legalized by order in council, a legality which the union jack itself does not enjoy. The hon. member for Hull spoke about the flag of la belle province and said it had status because it was a legal flag, having been legalized by order in council. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a flag. The only trouble about it is that some people do not like it; but no matter what we did, some people would not like it.

We have heard a lot about the red ensign being a flag which should be flown only on ships. If we want to go back to the genesis of the union jack the word "jack" implies a maritime flag. All this is inconsequential, shall we say. The question is whether the people of Canada want what this bill says they should have. This bill is autocratic, arbitrary and dictatorial because it says in clause 3:

> It shall be the duty of the Canada Council to prepare or have prepared, after competition or otherwise, a design for a suitable distinctive national flag free of the emblem or emblems of any other country—

I say that is arbitrary and dictatorial. I myself stand for the red ensign as it is now, and I believe there are thousands who think as I do. It would be better in my opinion, if the hon. members who are promoting such bills as this would leave out the words they have introduced, and let us have a free choice. If the majority of the people of this country want the red ensign as it is now, they should have it. If the majority want a distinctive flag without any trace of the union jack on it, they should have it. But this bill says they cannot have a free choice. I have high regard for the background of both races—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Regnier) is raising a point of order.

Mr. Regnier: Is the hon. member in favour of a referendum on the flag question?

Mr. Broome: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is not a point of order. It is a question, and if I have any time left after I have finished hon. members can ask me all the questions they wish. But I say there is a much better way of approaching this question than the one suggested in this bill. We used to have Dominion day. It was inferred that was a sign of subjugation, so we changed it to Canada day, and now we have the suggestion that it be changed from the date of confederation to some other date pulled out of a hat. How stupid can this house be? I say it is time some of the other side was put on the record, and I am going to do it.

An hon. Member: For how long?

Mr. Broome: Until six o'clock.

I notice that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) states we are Canadian subjects—no longer British subjects but Canadian subjects. Well, the hon. member had better read his passport again. Certainly we are Canadian subjects through the citizenship act; but a Canadian subject is nevertheless a British subject. A British subject is not necessarily a Canadian subject, but a Canadian subject is a British subject, at the present time, anyway.

Personally I take a certain pride in the fact that people from many lands came over here and built this country. People from all the countries of Europe, besides some from Asia and Africa, are here today. But the people of the two great races which started this country, the French and the British, built the foundation upon which the rest have enjoyed the fruits of that work and progress. Now we are to throw all that out the window. We shall have a brain washing which will eliminate this background, eliminate these historic traditions and the memory of the wars in which Canadians have fought. We are to throw this down the sink. Well, not as far as I am concerned.

There was a committee of this house set up to consider the question of a distinctive Canadian flag. It was set up in March, 1944. About 2,500 designs were submitted—this, again, is according to Mr. McGeachy. In his article in the Financial Post he says:

> About 2,500 designs were submitted ("dreamed up" would be the right phrase) and all the nice patterns of maple leaves, buffaloes, beavers, Red Indians, fleur-de-lis and whatnot were carefully examined by the committee. Nothing came of its labours, but an order in council of 1945 authorized use of the red ensign as described above, on land as well as sea. Mackenzie King was a man who made his dreams come true.
> The position is, then, that officially Canada already has a national flag; and controversy arises because some people don't like it.

I submit to this house that that is enough of a problem. However, when that committee met, its choice of a flag was unanimous. That flag was the red ensign with a gold maple leaf in the fly. The choice was unanimous except for one member, Mr. Wilfred Lacroix, the former member for Montmorency. There was unanimity at the time except for the views of this one member, and so the matter was shelved.

Now this question comes up again. If the disagreement of one member could lead to the subject being shelved in 1944, the same situation could happen again. This is something that touches at the hearts, the roots and the traditions of the people of this country. Perhaps our new citizens from Germany have an equal right with those who would like to see something that reminds them of their homeland on our national flag. Perhaps our new citizens from Italy have a similar right.

I think it time we stopped talking like little Canadians. Look at the phrase in this bill which says: "This act may be cited as the National Sovereignty Act". Well, what fool says we have not been a sovereign nation for scores of years? But then, we used to have Dominion day, but we had to change that to Canada day. And even that is not good enough now; we shall have to call it independence day to show we have had to fight our way free from a presumed arbitrary dictatorship that held us—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour for private members' business has now expired and the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Royal Canadian Air Force—

645. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment—further amount required, $31,000,000.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, when I inadvertently make a mistake, I believe it is only right to correct it as soon as possible. In speaking this afternoon, I made mention of the Sidewinder weapon. I had the right weapon but I had the wrong plane. They are not on the CF-104.

Mr. Hellyer: This afternoon a number of questions were asked of the minister with respect to the commitment which has been undertaken by the government with regard to the air division overseas and its new strike attack role. Those questions as yet have been unanswered by the minister. I think we should give him an opportunity to answer them now.

Mr. Harkness: I think I answered all the questions that were asked, Mr. Chairman, and made all the comments which were necessary with regard to the remarks made in this regard.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

[Mr. Broome.]

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman. Can the minister say at what stations the F-104's will be stationed when they arrive in Europe.

Mr. Harkness: They will be stationed at the same air station as those at which the Sabres and 100's are at present stationed, namely Grostenquin and Marville in France, and Zweibrucken and Baden Soelinger in Germany.

Mr. Hellyer: As to Grostenquin and Marville, is there any agreement at the moment between the government of Canada and the government of France with respect to the storage on French soil of nuclear missiles in use in the F-104?

Mr. Harkness: This is reverting to the same matter with which I dealt previously this afternoon. As far as NATO is concerned no determination has been made with regard to the control of nuclear weapons. I therefore do not think there is any great purpose in discussing the matter.

Mr. Herridge: I have been most patient, Mr. Chairman. I have not taken part in any policy debate. However, I have a few things I wish to bring to the minister's attention which I think are completely in order and I wish to ask a few questions. I refer to a few matters that concern some of the defence personnel, particularly in the R.C.A.F. I mention one or two cases in order to illustrate several other cases of similar types that have been brought to my attention in these few matters that I wish to place before the minister now.

I had brought to my attention on several occasions the fact that people are of the opinion that there should be certain extra travelling allowances that would permit men to be reunited with their families under particular circumstances. To that end I just wish to quote briefly from a letter I received from one lady in this respect:

> Another thing which I would urge at this time is that men in the armed forces, whether they are commissioned or non-commissioned be given, at least once a year, a very substantial travelling allowance, for themselves and their families, to go home to their families anywhere in Canada. It is done in most countries and is all the more necessary in this huge country, where families are unable to see each other for several years, when, as in the navy, men are moved from one seaboard to the other every few years. It is completely beyond the means of most of those men to go "home" during that period. It is bad for everyone concerned.

Of course, the minister would understand that situation. I made inquiries at the time and the then minister was the present lieutenant governor of British Columbia. He went to some pains to inform me of the regulations. But since that time I have met two or three cases with regard to which it seemed to me the present regulations did not cover all the particular circumstances. In the services there are cases which I think would warrant some review of the travelling expense regulations at the present time. I urge the minister to give that matter consideration.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but as I read the item under consideration it is as follows: Item 645, "Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment". I am having difficulty in relating the hon. member's remarks to that particular item.

Mr. Herridge: I do not blame you a bit, Mr. Chairman. I thought we were on the first item.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman. It is quite apparent that when the government accepted the strike role for the air division there was no requirement for it to do so in the sense that it was not obliged to do this. It could have declined. In that event it could have left the performance of this duty to others such as, for example, the United States air force. However, the government did not decline the role. It accepted the role. It said that the Canadian air division will undertake the strike role on behalf of the NATO alliance. The reasons for that were fairly obvious. Our NATO allies felt that the air division was the best air division in Europe. It is indeed the best air division in Europe. It is the best trained. It has the best airmen. One of the reasons is, of course, that they are professional. They know what they are doing, and they know it well. Hence an experiment was to be performed whereby on the ground in Europe an air division was to be phased out of the air defence role and into the strike attack role.

This course naturally appealed to the air force. It appealed to the NATO commanders in Europe. The Canadian government was approached with respect to the proposition that Canada would undertake this very difficult and dangerous assignment. The Canadian government accepted the role. The Canadian government must have known at the time when it accepted the role that it involved the use of nuclear weapons, as this matter was implicit in the decision. If the Canadian government accepted this responsibility, knowing in advance that it involved a nuclear commitment, why is there now this indecision with respect to it? The minister, of course, is evading the issue when he says there is no decision with respect to NATO control. There was no decision with respect to NATO control at that time but there was the possibility of a joint arrangement with the United States. Indeed, it was this possibility of joint control with the United States that was referred to by the Prime Minister in this House of Commons when referring to the new role which was to be adopted by the R.C.A.F. and it was subsequently referred to by the former minister of national defence. Having this in mind, Mr. Chairman, surely we must now be assured by the government either that it intends to carry out tests and fulfil its commitment to NATO or that in the meantime it has changed its mind for one reason or another. Otherwise we cannot vote these funds intelligently.

Mr. Churchill: We are not expecting too much from you.

Mr. Hellyer: We cannot vote funds for weapons carriers which are only useful when armed with atomic missiles if the government has no intention to so equip them. Can we hear from the minister in this regard?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether he can assure the committee that the NATO command is satisfied that this particular strike attack role with these CF-104 planes can be carried out with conventional weapons?

Mr. Harkness: I have never discussed that with SACEUR, but I wonder why the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Trinity are trying to press this matter. They seem to be trying to give the impression that they would like to see the 104's in Europe equipped with nuclear weapons as fast as possible.

Mr. Hellyer: We would like the government to tell us what it proposes to do.

Mr. Harkness: They are trying to force a decision on that now, although the planes will not be over there for a year yet and in spite of the fact that on August 5, 1960, as found on pages 7610 and 7611 of Hansard, the Leader of the Opposition made a long speech in which he said with regard to the use of tactical weapons by NATO:

> I say in any event that Canada should categorically reject the proposition that her NATO forces should be equipped with nuclear weapons of any kind.

Now we have the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Trinity apparently arguing that unless we make an announcement now that we are going to equip the 104's with nuclear weapons, although they are not to be in Europe for a year yet, we are derelict in our duty. I find it very difficult to reconcile these positions.

Mr. Pearson: The minister, of course, as he did this afternoon, has thrown up a smoke-screen to conceal his own unwillingness or inability to reply to the question I have asked him. The question is a very simple one. I suggested to the minister that the Canadian government accepted a certain responsibility in the NATO forces to be discharged by a Canadian air division on the understanding that that responsibility would be discharged through the use of a particular kind of equipment and that the government is now welshing on that responsibility. It is not our duty on this side to tell the government what it should or should not do in this case. We will do that when we have a debate on policy. But we believe, and the minister can set our minds at ease if he wishes to do so, that it was the understanding of SACEUR that this particular strike attack responsibility when it was turned over to the R.C.A.F. air division would be discharged by the use of weapons which would be effective for that purpose and, as the minister himself said, the only weapons that would be effective for that purpose are CF-104's armed with nuclear warheads. If that is the case then the responsibility taken on by the Canadian air division was assumed so far as NATO is concerned under a misunderstanding, to say the least. Will the minister clear up that misunderstanding and say that there is no such understanding in the NATO high command over any particular kind of equipment that will be used and that they are quite satisfied to let the decision wait until an emergency develops with respect to whether the CF-104 will use nuclear weapons in its strike attack role? Are they perfectly happy about the delay in this decision?

Mr. Harkness: There is no misunderstanding whatever. This is now the fourth time that the Leader of the Opposition or the member for Trinity have made the same statement in almost the same terms. I have replied twice already and have stated what the position of the government is. I do not think I should take the time of the committee to make the same reply once more.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister objects to discussing the question of the air division because in his opinion the matter is not urgent until the sum total of $400 million or $500 million in hardware is sitting on the tarmacs in Europe. Under those circumstances let us consider for a moment the question of North American air defence. Some time ago the minister said that he agreed with the speech made in Toronto last summer by General Kuter in which he said in effect that it was essential that the F-101 to be acquired by the Royal Canadian Air Force be armed with a nuclear missile. Does the minister still agree with the expression of opinion by General Kuter at that time?

Mr. Harkness: I do not agree with the interpretation that the member for Trinity makes of that speech or of practically any other matter.

Mr. Hellyer: Then would the minister be good enough to give his own interpretation for the benefit of the committee?

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, a question has been asked of the Minister of National Defence and he has not answered.

Mr. Churchill: The floor has been given to the hon. member for Leeds.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I cannot take responsibility for the lack of an answer on the part of the minister. I saw the hon. member for Leeds and gave him the floor after an appropriate pause, and so he has the floor.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, a news story of February 13, 1962, tells us that the air force remains the biggest armed services spender and that construction of the CF-104 fighters at Canadair in Montreal remains the biggest single defence program. The story points out that it is estimated that the total cost of the CF-104's will be $450 million, of which $302 million will have been spent by March 31. Perhaps I am approaching the same question but in another way. I should like to read to the minister part of a report in the Globe and Mail of January 17, 1962 in which there is the following statement:

> It is known that the United States tried, but failed, to write into the Canada-U.S. agreement covering Canadian acquisition of the 66 U.S. Voodoos a clause stating that the planes would be armed as they were in the U.S.—with nuclear missiles.

The minister may answer later, but my first question to him is: Is this story true? Is it a fact that the United States tried but failed to write into the agreement a clause that Canada would acquire the nuclear missiles that render these planes useful weapons? Again, I quote from the Vancouver Sun of February 9, 1962. The headline is, "Canada, U.S. Not Speaking on Matters of Defence", and the article reads in part as follows:

> Canada and the United States apparently aren't on speaking terms over mutual defence matters . . . there had been no meeting of the Canada-U.S. joint defence committee since July, 1960—some 18 months before.

My question to the minister is: Is it a fact that for 18 months there has been no meeting of the Canada-United States joint defence committee?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I can relate his first quotation very readily to the item under consideration but I am having difficulty with his last quotation and I am concerned that the committee might wander into defence policy generally as opposed to staying very close to the item under consideration. I hope the hon. member will co-operate.

Mr. Matheson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Financial Post of November 4, 1961, had this to say:

> The other really vexing problem for NORAD—and particularly Canadian defence planners—lies in the question of nuclear warheads for Canadian forces . . . something that was always intended for both the CF-101B and the Bomarc.

The minister knows whether or not this statement in the Financial Post is correct. If it is not correct, we would appreciate being told. We read a good deal of other material along the same line. The Detroit News speaks of Canada's defence timidity and the Citizen has said that there cannot be respect for a government that cannot decide. The real problem is, have we made commitments of any character? Are there any secret treaties into which we have entered with our allies? We know of our recent friendliness with Castro. We know of our traditional friendliness with the United States. I should like some assurance from the minister that these allegations we find in the Vancouver Sun, the Globe and Mail, the Calgary Herald and the Financial Post are completely without substance.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, it has never been the custom for a minister to comment upon speculative stories or even more speculative editorials in various newspapers. I do not propose to start doing so now, particularly in view of the fact these matters have no relationship whatever to the item we are now considering.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps the minister would be prepared to comment on this press report. It deals with this question of the possibility of equipping the CF-104 for this role which it has been allotted in NATO, and the details of which we find difficulty in securing from the minister in so far as its equipment to perform that role is concerned. The minister says that we will make a decision later and we will have the necessary equipment to perform the role a year from now, or sooner if an emergency develops. He says this statement should be good enough for this committee. It is not good enough for NATO, though he will not admit that.

I put these words of the Prime Minister's on the record this afternoon, but they have a relationship to this particular aspect of the problem. The Prime Minister said in Edmonton on February 25 that there was a report to which some credence should be attached. The Prime Minister stated the nuclear warheads, if they were required, could be made available in half an hour or an hour. Will the minister explain how that could be done in respect of a decision to change the equipment of the CF-104?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, that has no relevance to the matter under discussion, either. It is again a matter upon which I do not think it would be proper for me to comment.

Mr. Pearson: What could be more relevant to this issue? The minister says that the government has not made up its mind as to how these planes are to be equipped to do the job, but the government will make up its mind in due course if an emergency should develop or at any time in the next year or so before the planes are delivered. A decision will have to be made, then, whether or not to use nuclear warheads on this particular plane. The Prime Minister gave a report that these warheads could be made available in an hour or a half an hour. Is that the case, and if so how could that be done? The minister says that this is not relevant to the problem at all.

Mr. Harkness: All I would say with regard to that is that the Prime Minister did not say this was the case. The newspaper report the Leader of the Opposition read stated the Prime Minister said there had been a report to that effect.

Mr. Pearson: Then the Prime Minister gave credence to that report in the statement he made about it. When the Prime Minister of this country gives credence to such an important statement as that, that nuclear weapons can be made available in an hour or a half an hour, we have a right to ask the minister some questions on that point. Perhaps the minister will tell us how this can be done.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Hellyer: Surely, before we are asked to vote the expenditures required in these circumstances, we should at least be extended the courtesy of being told in this committee what the Prime Minister has told the Progressive Conservatives of Alberta.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the minister would tell the committee whether or not, in his opinion, Canada is well defended by the Bomarc base at North Bay in its present state of readiness?

Mr. Harkness: Once more, Mr. Chairman, that has nothing to do with the vote under consideration. The hon. gentleman is merely trying to make a little trouble by asking questions of this kind.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister state his opinion in respect of the CF-101 and say if it would be a more effective defensive weapon for NORAD if it were armed with atomic missiles? This is a straightforward, honest question. Can we not get an honest answer?

Mr. Harkness: I would cite the rule of repetition, Mr. Chairman. I have already given an answer to that question at least five or six times this session.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, in Edmonton, in giving information to a Conservative meeting, a political meeting, the Prime Minister made certain very important and specific statements. Now, we are trying to find out in this committee of the House of Commons what is meant by those statements and the minister refuses to give such information to the House of Commons. The Prime Minister has said that this change could be made in one hour or half an hour. We ask the minister to elaborate on how that can be done, if it can be done or to deny the report and say it cannot be done.

Mr. Harkness: The Prime Minister never said any such thing.

Mr. Pearson: I will put on the record what he said. This article has appeared in four or five newspapers and it has not been denied. The statement was made some weeks ago at a press conference. The article from which I am quoting is a Canadian Press dispatch appearing in the Toronto Globe and Mail. A reporter had asked whether or not Canada could get nuclear warheads fast enough from the United States in the event of war if Canada did not already have them, and the article states:

> Mr. Diefenbaker stated he could not reply to that for security reasons. He added he had read a recent report that nuclear warheads could be made available in half an hour or an hour and indicated there was some credence in this report.

I ask the minister, in respect of this CF-104 or the Voodoo, how could that be done? I particularly ask the minister whether that could be done in the absence of a political agreement with the United States providing for joint control of these nuclear weapons, and I ask if that agreement could be made in an hour or half an hour?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: This is a very serious matter indeed. The newspapers, who took the Prime Minister at his word, produced these articles stating that it was, in fact, physically possible to transport nuclear warheads from wherever they may be in the United States to wherever they may be required in Canada, to install them and use them within something like a period of half an hour or an hour. The minister, for the sake of clarity in this situation, should advise the committee tonight that this is, in fact, nonsense, and that it cannot be done. We would ask that the minister now clarify the situation for us.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to read this vote again. It says:

> Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment—

This vote is for the Royal Canadian Air Force. Surely, the minister would admit that these objects about which we are talking, and for which we would be getting warheads, are major items of equipment. They have been purchased at great expense to the Canadian taxpayer and we are being asked to vote another $31 million; yet the minister refuses to tell us what he is going to do with this major equipment, or even what could be done with it. As the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, information has been given on this matter by the Prime Minister to the privileged circles of a Progressive Conservative association meeting in Edmonton. Surely this is an odd way for the Prime Minister to be restoring the rights of parliament about which he talked so much only five years ago.

I submit to you, sir, as a point of order, that the minister should not be allowed to shelter behind this kind of silence when he is here begging us to vote $31 million of the taxpayers' money, and yet he will not tell us how it is going to be used.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: No, no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise not to participate in the discussion that is going on but simply to make an observation. I find it very strange indeed that while our Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Geneva attending disarmament talks—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I cannot find that the comments of the hon. member for Yukon are related to the item under discussion.

Mr. Nielsen: I find it odd that the Leader of the Opposition and this group should be advocating arming Canadian aircraft with nuclear warheads under the existing circumstances taking place at Geneva.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; that is a complete 100 per cent misrepresentation of my position, and the hon. member knows it of course. You sir, have stated that it would be out of order in this particular discussion to have a general discussion of general defence policy. I hope that opportunity will come soon and then our policy will be made known. Meanwhile on this particular item for the purchase of these planes we have the right on this side of the house to find out from the government how these planes are going to be armed and equipped. We are attempting to do that, but without any success whatsoever.

Two years ago when this role was undertaken by the government—this we know perfectly well and so does the minister although he will not tell the committee—it was understood that this role required the use of nuclear weapons. That was understood in NATO. The minister talked that way when he himself was in Paris and we have lots of clippings to put on the record to that effect. We were also told two years ago when this role was undertaken that they were holding discussions with the United States, that these discussions would be required to bring about an agreement for the use of nuclear weapons by Canada. In fact we were told that these discussions had almost come to a conclusion. Now two years later we are told there were no such discussions, and we are also told by the minister that no decision has been reached and no decision is contemplated as to whether the Royal Canadian Air Force will be equipped to do the job it is set to do in NATO.

We objected to this role when it was first brought before the house. My hon. friend from Trinity said this was the wrong kind of job for the R.C.A.F. because it would require nuclear warheads. The government, against our advice, decided to purchase C-104's for that purpose and we objected to that. Now they will not tell us which kind of equipment is being given to the R.C.A.F. to discharge this very dangerous and responsible role, and when we try to find out from the government hon. gentlemen opposite get up and say we are advocating nuclear weapons for the Canadian forces. In actual fact we are trying to find out whether the government are in a position to give the R.C.A.F. any weapons at all to discharge its job.

The Prime Minister says, "Oh, yes, when the war comes we will have the ammunition, we will have the armaments, we can get them in an hour." That was one of the most preposterous statements made by any member of a government in this house. The minister knows it; everybody knows it; and the Prime Minister knows it, but he does not mind making it just the same. Yet when we give the minister a chance to make a statement and thus let him try to get the Prime Minister off the hook, he sits in silence. He was not so silent a year ago when he was talking about the desirability of nuclear weapons—

Mr. Slogan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, before the Leader of the Opposition goes into orbit I wonder if you could rule on the rule of relevancy in supplementary estimates, that it is necessary to limit the debate namely to the increase and it is not proper to discuss the original item. I have not been able to relate his remarks to the original item, much less the increase.

Mr. Habel: That is because you do not know what the original item was.

Mr. Pearson: You do not know what we are talking about.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Before I recognize the hon. member for Cochrane or the hon. member for Trinity, whoever rises first, I have not found that the contribution made by the Leader of the Opposition was out of order as far as he had gone up to this moment, and should he go out of order I would be very grateful to hon. members of the committee if they will raise that on a point of order, or indeed I shall raise it myself if I feel the same way.

Mr. Habel: While the hon. member for Yukon was speaking I inquired why we were asked to vote this money and I was told by the hon. member for Cariboo that it was none of our business. That is the way the government is really going—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: I think it might help the committee if we refreshed our memories a bit with respect to the background of statements made by the government on this very important matter. On February 20, 1959, at page 1223 of Hansard the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> The government is, therefore, examining with the United States government questions connected with the acquisition of nuclear warheads for Bomarc and other defensive weapons for use by the Canadian forces in Canada, and the storage of warheads in Canada . . .

We are confident that we shall be able to reach formal agreement with the United States on appropriate means to serve the common objective.

The question, Mr. Chairman, is whether these are still the common objectives or not? If they are, why is there such a delay in achieving them?

Then on March 10, 1959, as reported at page 1775 of Hansard, Mr. Diefenbaker answered a question about a New York Times story which stated that Canada and the United States had reached agreement in principle on the formula for joint control of nuclear weapons. On that occasion he said:

—The article appearing in the New York Times is inaccurate in a number of details. . . I would draw the attention of the house to the statement I made in this regard on February 20. I indicated then that it would be some time before nuclear weapons would and indeed could be available for use by Canadian forces.

Then on April 30, 1959, as reported at page 3180 of Hansard Mr. Diefenbaker again replied to a question as to whether agreement had been reached. The question had been asked by the Leader of the Opposition and in his reply the Prime Minister said:

I assure him that the whole subject will be dealt with very shortly—

I emphasize the Prime Minister's words "very shortly". That was in 1959. On July 2, 1959—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am again apologetic for interrupting the hon. member for Trinity, but I am trying to hold the committee very closely to the item under discussion this evening. I think we got off to a very good start and I do not want to be considered unfair to other hon. members who might want to get into more general policy and into international agreements and things of that nature. For that reason I feel I should rise and ask the co-operation of the hon. member.

Mr. Hellyer: Not at all, Mr. Chairman. I am sure that as you have done in the past when you were occupying the chair very fairly and forthrightly, you would agree when we are voting money for the acquisition of supersonic interceptors to be used for the defence of North America and the defence of this country, it is relevant to discuss whether or not they should be armed with nuclear devices, particularly when we have been told by members of the government that it was necessary for this to be done in order that they would reach their maximum potential, and when we have been told by the commander in chief of the North American air defence command that it was necessary. Indeed the minister in days gone by said he agreed with the commander in chief of the North American air defence command.

On July 22, 1959, the former minister of defence said with reference to the Prime Minister's statement of February 20, about——entering into a series of negotiations with the U.S. in order to arrange the details of the storing of and equipping our forces—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to rise again as I feel I made it clear without being too arbitrary in making a ruling—I do not want to necessarily have to do that—but I feel that matters of international agreement and so on come within the very broad scope of defence policy generally and indeed move into the area of external affairs. For that reason I feel out of fairness to other hon. members of the committee that unless I hold the hon. gentleman from Trinity closely to the item under consideration, the whole debate might reach into very broad areas of discussion and my job would be made all the more difficult if I allowed that to happen.

Mr. Hellyer: With the greatest deference, Mr. Chairman, surely it is not inappropriate nor can it be considered a matter of foreign affairs to discuss how aircraft to be stationed on Canadian soil, flown by Canadian airmen, are to be equipped. If this is not relevant, nothing is relevant.

An hon. Member: Not even you.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister advise the committee if the common objectives referred to by the Prime Minister in February, 1959 remain the common objectives of the two countries.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the common objectives of the two countries and of all the countries of the NATO alliance are to preserve peace and prevent aggression on the part of the communist world. Those remain the common objectives of all of us in the west.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister explain to the committee, then, why the United States would entertain an agreement under which it would supply Bomarc missiles to Canada, at what the government has described as a negligible cost, if they were merely to be stationed at North Bay on their launching pads without any warheads of any kind.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident that the hon. member for Trinity and the Leader of the Opposition have been trying to get me to make a statement yes or no—and these are the words they put the question in—on whether or not we are going to acquire nuclear warheads for certain weapons system which we have acquired. That question has been dealt with, and dealt with exhaustively, several times in the past. Hon. gentlemen opposite, and everybody in Canada who has paid any attention to this matter, know what that answer is. I have already given it twice or three times here today.

Mr. Hellyer: What is the answer?

Mr. Harkness: I have given it on numerous occasions in the past and I do not think I should be expected to give it time after time after time.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister advise the committee if it is his intention to obtain conventional warheads for the Bomarc missiles?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Hellyer: This is a serious question, Mr. Chairman, and the minister's refusal to answer this question is contempt of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: He is coming here and asking for millions of dollars to be expended and he refuses to give this committee the information to which it is entitled. We demand of him now to give us some answers, or else he will be called upon to reckon before the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the only contempt of parliament which is being exhibited here is on the part of the hon. member for Trinity and others on that side of the chamber who completely ignore the rule regarding repetition and go on making the same speeches and asking the same questions to which they have already had answers time after time after time.

Mr. McCleave: The same stupid questions.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister gets very angry—

Mr. Harkness: You are getting angry.

Mr. Pearson: —when we try to find out from him on what we are spending $31 million. We are asking him what kind of major equipment we are buying with this $31 million. We are asking him whether this major equipment can be made effective, whether it can be used. The minister said he has given the answer several times. The answer has been given, in so far as there is one, by the Prime Minister and ministers outside this house, and the only answers they give outside the house are, "When the emergency develops, if we get into war, then we will decide; we will do it then".

It takes 17 minutes for an intercontinental ballistic missile from Asia to reach North America. During those 17 minutes the minister will decide whether or not the Bomarc missile is to have a nuclear warhead. During those 17 minutes he has also to decide whether it is possible to get an agreement with the United States government to make possible the acquisition of nuclear warheads. He has got 17 minutes to do all that. We ask him how he is going to do it and he says, "We have given you the answers several times". The answer is one that makes the government, of course, ridiculous in this situation. They would be ridiculous if it were not such a serious situation.

We have millions of dollars being spent on the F-104; we have millions of dollars being spent on the 101; we have millions of dollars being spent on the Bomarc, and we are not being told how these weapons are to be used. All we are told is that a decision will be made in the future, perhaps when the emergency develops. That is the most absurd statement on defence policy ever made by any government in this house or outside this house. I cannot think of any stronger words to describe the absurdity of the policy than those the minister has used in years gone by, and not so very many years gone by—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: However—

Mr. Jones: Watch your voice.

An hon. Member: Don't get excited.

Mr. Pearson: However, that is the minister's position, "We will get that in an hour; we will get it in half an hour; we will get it in 17 minutes. Wait till the war starts and then we will decide whether we will give our weapons ammunition". That is the government's defence policy in 1962.

An hon. Member: What did you do in the last war?

Mr. Pearson: The Canadian war effort from 1939 to 1945 is not one that hon. gentlemen, who perhaps know very little about it, can criticize. We would be in a fine position, if we ever got into an emergency now, to go down to Washington and ask permission from Washington to get the ammunition that we bought off them. That is a fine and creditable position for the Canadian government to put this country in. When we give the minister a chance to explain this he says, "I have told you several times already". Perhaps it is just as well that he does not try to repeat it, because it does not get more impressive by repetition.

Let me ask the minister something about the continental defence squadrons. Would he tell the committee how many squadrons there are at present, whether they are all now equipped with the Voodoos, and what will be the function of these squadrons in the months ahead?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, all five of the 101-B squadrons are now formed. Three of them are in their ultimate locations and are in operational use; the other two are still undergoing training.

Mr. Pearson: Is that to be the extent of our continental defence—five Voodoo squadrons? That is the total strength?

Mr. Harkness: Plus two Bomarc squadrons.

Mr. Pearson: Two Bomarc squadrons and five Voodoo squadrons. Perhaps the minister will recall that a short time ago, on January 19, the secretary of defence of the United States, when talking to a congressional committee about continental defence and referring to SAGE, had this to say:

SAGE—

SAGE is the whole Bomarc, interceptors, continental defence complex:

SAGE, however, will continue to perform a very useful and important function in peacetime and in the pre-air battle period, primarily surveillance of our air space. In peacetime, we must still continue to check out intrusions of our air space and this SAGE already does quite well.

Would the minister agree with that interpretation of the function of continental defence at this time, so far as aircraft are concerned?

Mr. Harkness: I do not know what interpretation the hon. member means. I do not know whether or not he knows what SAGE means. The SAGE system, as a matter of fact, is a means of controlling interceptors, either Bomarc missiles or fighters, and directing them on to their targets, and so on. That is the essential purpose for which SAGE exists. What the hon. member means by interpretation, I do not know. I would not know unless I took a look at it very carefully.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister would explain this to the committee. If an alert were sounded at this moment—

Mr. Churchill: You would run.

Mr. Hellyer: —what would he do, minute by minute, to obtain the nuclear warheads necessary for the Bomarc missiles and putting them in their places at North Bay?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote No. 645 carry?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Hellyer: No, no. Surely, if the Prime Minister can refer to the possibility of obtaining weapons in half an hour the minister can extend us the courtesy of explaining just how this could be done. He should explain to the committee the mechanics by which this could be done if he expects us to take this statement seriously.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter of the greatest importance not only to this committee but to the country. One finds it difficult to believe that in the minds of some in this committee tonight there is a ready acceptance of the vital potential importance of this matter, when we note the reaction to observations made by members of the opposition on the part of those sitting on the ministerial benches and of those who sit behind the ministers.

We are discussing what is perhaps the most important question we have discussed in this chamber during the present session of parliament. Despite this, however, all we get from hon. gentlemen opposite is a resistance, by their interruptions, to observations which are made from this side of the committee. Hon. gentlemen may not agree with what we are saying but, surely, in a matter of this importance we have a right to be heard without these interruptions and disorderly interventions.

We are discussing the question of war and peace. The Prime Minister himself is the one who laid down the basis of this discussion. Let it be known to the people of Canada that if it is the wish of hon. gentlemen opposite that in the discussion of this matter we should be confronted with this kind of resistance—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Somebody said "nonsense". Listen to what the Prime Minister said, and see if that is nonsense. It is the basis of this discussion. As the Leader of the Opposition has reminded us, the Prime Minister said in Edmonton:

Should war come, are we going to arm Canadians with bows and arrows?

He was not talking about political war. He was talking about nuclear war involving the destruction of the civilization of the world, the destruction of Canadian men and women as well as our armed forces. That is what the Prime Minister was discussing, yet someone says "nonsense". The questions put to the Minister of National Defence by the Leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Trinity were intended to ascertain whether or not the statement of the Prime Minister could be implemented under current defence policy and given full effect.

There is no quarrel with the basic statement made by the Prime Minister—"Should war come, are we going to arm Canadians with bows and arrows?". The advent of war is something which we are all working against. Then the Prime Minister went on to say:

> Canada has 65 interceptor aircraft which would be more effective with nuclear weapons. The same applies to the two Bomarc anti-aircraft bases being built in this country.

Then, to show the solemnity of the situation he envisaged as being potential, and which he, along with every other civilized man and woman, hopes will never eventuate, he added:

> Should war come we must have available the necessary instrument.

That is the eventuality which we are now discussing. The Leader of the Opposition is not engaging at this moment in a discussion of Canada's policy with regard to nuclear weapons. We are not discussing whether or not there has been any conflict between the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to nuclear policy at this time. That is not the subject under discussion. The Prime Minister was talking about the eventuality of war, and in that context he affirmed his belief that our Canadian forces must have available the necessary instruments. And in the context of modern armament developments, the necessary instruments are nuclear weapons. Now, surely, we are entitled to demand from the Minister of National Defence before this item receives the sanction of parliament an answer to the question: how are we to have these necessary instruments made available to us? We asked this question of the minister because these are his estimates and because the Prime Minister is not here tonight to elucidate the statement which he made in this regard. But we have had no reply from the Minister of National Defence. The hon. gentleman keeps saying that this question has been put to him over and over again, and that he has given a reply over and over again. In fact, he has not answered the questions put to him by two hon. members on this side of the committee. He has walked out of this chamber even as this discussion has been going on, and is now standing behind the curtain when he should be in his place addressing himself to the question before us.

An hon. Member: Where were you last week?

Mr. Chambers: On a point of order, I think it should be pointed out that never has the hon. member for Essex East spoken for so short a time that an hon. member could not go behind the curtain for a few moments.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am glad we are having these interjections—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You are a stinker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —being made by the hard-working Minister of National Health and Welfare. Let them be placed on the record as an indication of the concern which members of this committee and of this government are displaying toward this vital question of possible nuclear war and the capacity of the Canadian armed forces to meet that kind of eventuality. Let these observations go on the record.

An hon. Member: Where were you last week?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say that the Prime Minister assumed the proper role of prime minister in indicating to the Canadian people what might eventuate and what he thought would likely happen. But in that case it is the responsibility of the government to anticipate what must be undertaken in order to protect the Canadian people against the catastrophe of nuclear war. He said:

> If war does come, we must have available the necessary instruments

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, you ruled some time ago that we should not have a general debate on defence. The hon. member for Essex East has been doing nothing else but attempting to carry on such a debate. He stated we are discussing the most important question that has been before the house this session. Well, the question which is before the committee is the provision of an increase in an estimate which has already been voted, an estimate to increase the money voted for the acquisition of certain engines, aeroplanes, spare parts and so on for the Royal Canadian Air Force. The hon. member for Essex East is attempting to convert this into a general discussion on nuclear weapons and their acquisition or otherwise—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not.

Mr. Harkness: —and in consequence I think he is out of order and should be called to account by the Chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word on the point of order which the minister has raised. The minister talks about this as being an addition to a vote already approved. What we are being asked to vote here is $31 million, which is an increase of nearly 14 per cent over the original vote. That is not an insignificant addition. My hon. friend from Essex East was discussing exclusively the subject of this vote, that is to say whether or not the aircraft which are to be built with this money are going to be armed in a certain fashion. The Prime Minister went to a Progressive Conservative association meeting since the vote—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was straying beyond the point of order raised by the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: May I have the ear of the members of the committee just for a moment. Obviously the difficulty of the Chair is in differentiating between what is proper for consideration under a narrow item such as this one by way of supplementary estimates as opposed to the broader discussion that is permissible under item No. 1 of the main estimates of any particular department.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would ask to be allowed to finish what I was saying. I am not going to make a ruling. I am only asking for the co-operation of members of the committee so that there is not an encroachment by one who is more skilful to the detriment of one of the other members of the committee. Out of respect for the hon. member for Essex East I rose only to make these few comments. I should be glad to hear the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who is also a very experienced member. However, I am only asking the committee in general and any particular member who has the floor to endeavour to make it as easy as possible for the Chair to differentiate between what is normal discussion on item No. 1 of departmental main estimates as opposed to what is discussed under the supplementary etimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope I may be permitted to complete what I was about to say as it is directly related to this matter. I say that since the main estimate was passed a very important statement has been made by the head of the government outside the house about this very item. That statement was not about any general defence policy but about this precise item and it was made outside the House of Commons. Yet in this forum of the Canadian people where both parties, the opposition and the government, are represented it is suggested by the Minister of National Defence, who is asking us to vote this money, that we must not discuss what the Prime Minister said outside the house about this particular item. He suggests that we must not discuss it in the House of Commons. A few years ago hon. gentlemen opposite including the Minister of National Defence, talked about closure. However, no closure that has ever been suggested in this House of Commons compares with what the minister is now suggesting on this particular item. If the Prime Minister can discuss this item outside of the House of Commons and give new information which was never given by the minister in the house, surely we are entitled to have an elucidation of that information by the responsible minister, if he has any responsibility here in the House of Commons.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have listened to what you have just said, Mr. Chairman; I am sure you will find that I have no intention of veering from the area of discussion which you think is proper at the moment.

We have had it established that the Prime Minister was visualizing what could happen in the event of a third world war in which nuclear weapons would be used. He suggested —and in my judgment quite properly—that the Canadian armed forces must be equipped with the best possible weapons. We are not talking about nuclear weapons in Canada in the context of the discussion represented by the division of opinion which prevails between the Minister of National Defence and his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This is not the issue now under discussion. We are simply asking the minister what steps the Prime Minister had in mind when he said we could obtain these weapons as readily as possible. Indeed, he said we could obtain them within a very short time, namely half an hour. We are entitled to an explanation from the minister. As we all know, nuclear weapons now in the control of the United States under the law of that country cannot escape the monopolistic custody of the government of that country or its agents. The question of joint control is a matter which Mr. Rusk said the other day is open to negotiation. That statement suggests that some arrangement could be made between the United States and Canada with regard to the matter of joint control. We are entitled to have from the Minister of National Defence some comment on this phase of the matter. Is that arrangement what is in contemplation? If that arrangement is in contemplation, when does the government propose to take steps to make available within half an hour, as the Prime Minister said, these weapons which he said were essential in order to endow our military forces with the best possible weapons?

Surely this a simple question which even the Minister of National Defence cannot seek to convince us he has not understood. I am sure that he has understood it. I am equally sure that it is his responsibility to tell us what the answer is. The minister is asking us to vote certain moneys. The minister is not a dictator. He may sometimes act as one, but he is not a dictator. He is a servant of the people. He is a servant of parliament. We have a right to elicit from him this information. He can sit in his seat and refuse to give it. He can look irritated. He can look offended. Those are the privileges of human beings sittings in this House of Commons. However, if he wishes to do his duty he has no right to refuse this information to parliament. If he persists in refusing to give answers to questions which have been asked by the Leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Trinity, then the hon. member for Trinity was justified in saying that the minister is treating this house with contempt. The minister stands in contempt of this house, and as a result he stands in contempt of the Canadian people. The minister has no other course open to him but to answer us or to say that on the grounds of strict security no responses can be given to these questions. That is not the position taken by the Prime Minister. However, if the minister says this, we shall be obliged to consider the position in which we find ourselves. However, that is not the defence that the minister offers. He simply refuses to say anything. That is the position in which we have been placed tonight as a result of this arrogant conduct on the part of this uncommunicative Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Essex East has followed the course which is almost invariably followed by him in this House of Commons, namely that of misinterpreting and misrepresenting newspaper stories and so forth. He has said repeatedly that the Prime Minister has stated that we could secure nuclear warheads in half an hour.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Harkness: The Prime Minister said nothing of the kind. The newspaper report read by the Leader of the Opposition made that matter abundantly clear. The newspaper report read by the Leader of the Opposition started out by saying that the Prime Minister said that for reasons of security he could not state what time would be required.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then he went on to say he gave credence to the report.

Mr. Harkness: No, he did not say that. He said there had been some reports along this line. The hon. member for Essex East by repeating time after time that the Prime Minister said we could get nuclear warheads in half an hour, has tried to convey the impression that he had said this and that these were statements of his in quotation marks in this newspaper report, and so on; whereas the very report read by the Leader of the Opposition disproved completely the statements which the hon. member for Essex East has been making.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman. If the minister believes, as he has told us, that the Prime Minister did not say what he is reported to have said, then in fairness to the committee he must tell us what the Prime Minister actually said.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Hellyer: The reason for that is quite obvious. Many newspapers from coast to coast gained the very impression which can easily be obtained by reading the newspaper report. In editorial comment in many newspapers there appears something like this. This one appeared in a paper not usually unfriendly to the present Conservative administration. I refer to the Timmins daily Press. It is entitled, "Thirty Minutes is Too Long", and reads as follows:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker has at last declared his government's policy on nuclear arms. And what a policy. In a speech in Edmonton at the week end he stated that if war broke out Canadian forces would be armed with nuclear weapons. So Canada will wait until an attack is launched before it even gets the means to fight back.
> Asked whether the weapons would arrive fast enough from the United States in the event of war, if Canada didn't already have them, Mr. Diefenbaker said he could not reply for security reasons. He stated, however, that nuclear warheads for Canada's 65 Voodoo interceptors and Bomarc missiles could be made available in 30 minutes or an hour.

This is not a fiction that the opposition is creating, Mr. Chairman. This is an impression which is widespread in the country and which has been reported in other newspapers. Many newspapers have written editorials about it, including many which are friendly to the government. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has so rightly stated, the Prime Minister has introduced a new policy and he has introduced it in the most unlikely of places, outside of the House of Commons in a speech to a Progressive Conservative association meeting in Edmonton.

We have the right to know how this policy was arrived at. We have the right to know whether it is feasible. We have the right to know by what means it may be implemented, and raises many questions which are pertinent to the vote now before us. For example, technical people who are familiar with these weapons, the F-101 and the Bomarc missile, have stated to us without any secrecy whatever that the possibility of getting nuclear warheads in 30 minutes to an hour is just absolute nonsense; and that is a direct quotation. If this is absolute nonsense, let us hear from the minister what the proposal actually is.

Also, Mr. Chairman, on the question of some agreement with the United States we were told by the previous minister in 1959—

Mr. Churchill: What has this to do with the item?

Mr. Hellyer: —that we are fast reaching the stage where an exchange of notes will be possible with the United States. Have we reached the stage where an exchange of notes is possible? Is it part of the new agreement that weapons stored in the United States will be carried to Canada once war has been announced? The minister should give the committee the benefit of his knowledge in this matter.

One can envisage what might happen. Mr. Khrushchev might telephone the President of the United States and say, "Mr. President, our missiles are on the way over. Will you phone John and tell him?" "Who?" "John." "Who?" "The Prime Minister of Canada. Will you telephone the Prime Minister of Canada and tell him that the war has started and it is time for him to go and get nuclear warheads that he alleges he needs for the defence of Canada?"

There have been those who have said that continental defence in the missile age is a myth, but the minister by inference at least in asking us to spend millions of dollars for continental defence still believes that it is a valid defence posture. If the minister believes it is a valid defence posture, he must believe that the weapons under his control should be armed in their most effective manner. He has told us in times gone by, we were told by the previous minister and we have been told by the Prime Minister as recently as a week or two ago in Edmonton that in order to accomplish this it is necessary for nuclear devices to be employed. Are we to obtain these nuclear devices for our continental defence or are we not? This is the question to which the minister must address himself because if he does not the whole concept of his expenditure in relation to continental defence is just absurd.

If the minister feels as strongly on this subject as we are led to believe he does, if within the cabinet he is in direct conflict with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and if the minister feels it is essential that these weapons should be equipped with nuclear warheads, he should resign from the cabinet and tell the Canadian people what his views really are. That is the honourable course for him to take. If he does not agree with this waffling policy being followed by the government, let him resign and say so and tell us the basis on which his resignation is to take effect.

An hon. Member: Headline hunter.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman. The minister cannot expect this item to carry without giving the committee some information with respect to the intention of the government in this very serious matter.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the speech just made by the member for Trinity indicates how far from this item the discussion has strayed. Members of the Liberal party have been going around in circles for the last hour and twenty minutes since we resumed this discussion at eight o'clock—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because of your intransigence.

Mr. Harkness: —attempting to carry on a general debate on defence and particularly in connection with the matter of the acquisition of nuclear weapons. I stated very plainly, clearly and simply that this was not a matter for debate at this time and that I did not propose to make any statement of government policy in connection with it. Members of the opposition know very well that this is a matter of general government policy—

Mr. Hellyer: It is much too general.

Mr. Harkness: —and that in discussing this particular item there is not going to be any announcement made of any change in government policy from that which has been stated and restated time after time for the past several months.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister has adopted his usual tactics of trying to evade a perfectly reasonable request for information on our part by saying that this item has nothing to do with our request for information. How many times do we have to read the item to him to make him understand that it calls for an expenditure of $31 million for major air equipment? Surely when we are spending this amount of money for major air equipment we have the right to try to find out whether or not that equipment can be used effectively. That is the issue, Mr. Chairman, but the minister says that has nothing to do with the question and that we are not going to talk about general defence policy or anything like that.

Our interest in this matter has been especially aroused by the fact that the Prime Minister has made statements outside the house which bear on the effectiveness or otherwise of the use of this equipment. It is perfectly certain that when the Prime Minister made his speech in Edmonton he was trying to explain a change of policy on the part of the government by which nuclear warheads would not be obtained at this time for the equipment we are talking about in the committee tonight. But to reassure people like the minister, who had said earlier that this equipment was of no value without such warheads, the Prime Minister went on to make a statement that there was a report that these nuclear warheads could be obtained within half an hour to an hour. This was a report which the Prime Minister referred to in his statement on policy to a Conservative meeting, a very important statement indeed and one which bears directly on this item.

Having made this supplementary statement about the report, he then went on to say there was some credence in this report. The word "credence" means there was some authenticity in the report. There was something in the report which made it believable. If this is the case, and the Prime Minister states that, have we not the right to ask the minister to tell us more about this statement than we have got from him so far?

If in fact this can be done, if in fact the Bomarc squadron at North Bay can be armed, if the government so decided to arm it, with nuclear warheads within an hour, that would be an entirely different situation and would have a very important bearing on our whole defence policy. If the F-101 Voodoos could be armed in that way in an hour that would make a big difference. But we know and the minister knows that this is one of the most absurd statements ever put on the record and we ask the minister to clear it up and to agree that it is an absurd statement.

The fact is, of course, that part of the money we are being asked to vote tonight will no doubt be spent on these Bomarc squadrons. These two squadrons occupy a pretty strategic place in the link of Bomarc squadrons across the continent. Presumably they were put where they are being put, in the Laurentians and at North Bay, to guard the entry into the continent, down through New York state and into the steel area of Pittsburgh and Detroit. If this Bomarc defence has any validity at all—and some of us doubt whether it has any validity at all—but if we are to take the government's position as stated that this is an important element in our defence, then those two squadrons right in the middle of that chain of defence are vital to that defence. They were put there by the Canadian government after consultation with the United States government. They are now there, but they cannot be used because the equipment for that purpose has no ammunition.

We are being asked to vote money for these missiles without knowing whether or not these missiles could be used in an emergency because the government will not make up its mind how they are to be armed. When we keep pressing the minister for information on this vital point, he keeps on saying we are not going to discuss policy tonight; he says to parliament, you have to vote the money and we will later on decide whether or not this equipment can be used. This is the position the government has asked us to accept tonight.

Mr. Churchill: Will you vote against it?

Mr. Pearson: That is a very bright question, indeed.

Mr. Churchill: Let us have a bright answer.

Mr. Pearson: That is a very bright question from the minister; it is his brightest intervention this evening. Will we vote against the estimate? All we are asking the government to tell us is what this estimate is for, and they refuse to do it.

The other element in this defence chain is the Voodoo squadrons. We are told there are to be five, but we are not to be told whether or not they are to be armed, as the government says they can only be effectively armed, with nuclear weapons. The minister has refused to give us information on that score. The Voodoo plane, which is now the equipment for this continental defence squadron, is a plane which is no longer being manufactured in the United States. It replaces the Canadian Arrow. We have a second hand United States plane replacing the Canadian Arrow, and we do not know how this second hand United States plane is going to be equipped.

An hon. Member: That is all you know about it.

Mr. Pearson: I ask the minister, then, is this plane which is now the backbone of our continental squadron, now under manufacture in the United States at all or has it been given up in so far as manufacture is concerned?

Mr. Harkness: The Leader of the Opposition started by directing my attention to this vote. I have directed his attention, and that of various other members, to it on several occasions during this debate. I wish that he would pay some attention to the vote. He has not requested any information in connection with it. Every question he has asked tonight has been in connection with nuclear weapons. This vote does not provide any money for any nuclear weapons whatever.

Mr. Churchill: The Leader of the Opposition wants nuclear weapons.

Mr. Harkness: He has been talking at considerable length about the Bomarc. This item does not ask for any funds for the Bomarc, none whatever. Now, I outlined what the vote was for when we started to debate the item.

Mr. Hellyer: Major equipment.

Mr. Harkness: I will repeat the purpose for which this money is being requested. It is to purchase real property, land and buildings, $50,000; aircraft and engines—this is for the CF-104—$47,200,000; ammunition and bombs —these are practice bombs—

Mr. Hellyer: Have you any other kind?

Mr. Pickersgill: Bows and arrows.

Mr. Harkness: —$1,261,000. Those are the items for which the money is being asked. These items total $49 million and some odd, but we have some offsetting items as I explained when we started this debate, because of the shortfall of some other items in this vote. The total amount required, therefore, is $31 million. There is not a single item here in connection with securing nuclear weapons in any shape or form. There is not anything here in connection with the Bomarc. These are all the matters about which the Leader of the Opposition and other members have been talking. They have deliberately refused to ask any questions about this vote. The Leader of the Opposition accused me of refusing to answer any questions. I have not refused to answer any questions about this item. I have not been asked any questions, except one or two by the hon. member for Trinity, about this item. All these questions have been in connection with the acquisition or non-acquisition of nuclear weapons, a subject which is not under discussion under this item and should not be under discussion under this item.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is the most preposterous proposition the minister has yet made. He told us that $47 million in this vote is to be spent on aircraft. Then, he says you have got to vote blind, you cannot ask a single question about how these aircraft are to be armed because none of this money is going to be spent on arms for them, except for practice bombs. In other words, to make some kind of homely comparison, it is like asking someone to buy a rifle and when he asks, "can we get ammunition for this rifle?" you say, that is none of your business; buy the rifle. You have no right to ask whether or not there will ever be any ammunition for it; buy the rifle.

An hon. Member: That is childish.

Mr. Pickersgill: Do not ask any questions about it. The minister said he was asked no questions, but my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition asked him if these planes were still being manufactured. He did not answer that question. I notice he started on a tirade when that question was asked because he obviously did not want to admit that this second hand plane that he and his friends decided to buy when they decided to destroy the best plane that has ever been made, was no longer being made or bought by the United States.

As a matter of fact, when the Prime Minister said at that Progressive Conservative meeting in Edmonton that our troops were not going to be armed with bows and arrows, we could reply by saying we are not so sure about the bows because that is apparently all the ammunition that is going to be purchased for these aircraft, but we know for sure they are never going to have any arrows because the government took good care to destroy them, and destroy them without a trace.

Now, sir, I do not pretend to know anything whatever about the details of defence. However, I do know that $47 million is an awful lot of money to be taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this country. I feel it is a most preposterous proposition to suggest that the opposition or the supporters of the government should not ask questions about this. After all, the supporters of the government have the same duty we have, if they were doing their duty, to inquire into these expenditures—

Mr. Flynn: We are doing our duty.

Mr. Pickersgill: No shouting by the junior minister can cover up the principle that all sides of this house are elected primarily to save the taxpayers' money. Hon. gentlemen who were elected with Tory majorities—

Mr. Pigeon: How about Mr. Howe?

Mr. Pickersgill: I never heard Mr. Howe refuse to give information in this house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Take your earplugs out.

Mr. Pickersgill: I never heard Mr. Claxton refuse; I never heard Mr. Campney refuse. As a matter of fact, when we were in office points of order were not raised by ministers about defence expenditures. Ministers answered questions and they kept on answering questions. They gave every bit of information except such bits of information as could not be given for security reasons.

Mr. Churchill: That is completely false.

Mr. Pickersgill: They certainly did not deny information. Of course, then we had a prime minister who did not make these irresponsible statements. Here, the Prime Minister goes out to Edmonton and makes a statement. For what purpose did he make that statement in Edmonton? He made that statement in Edmonton to create a certain impression in the public mind in this country. The impression he created, as the hon. member for Trinity showed when he read that editorial from the Timmins press, was that these armaments for these planes could be obtained in an hour or half an hour. This is what the Prime Minister sought to do. He said there were reports of this and—

An hon. Member: You were there?

Mr. Pickersgill: —he said credence could be given to them. The word credence means belief. In other words either the Prime Minister was acting with total irresponsibility in making that statement or he meant it to be believed. Which did he do? Was he trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian people, or did he mean that statement to be believed?

Mr. O'Hurley: Come back to the item.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are right on the item. What the Prime Minister was talking about was the armaments for these planes for which the minister is asking us to vote $47 million. That is what the Prime Minister was talking about; it was about this precise item. I know that it must be very embarrassing for the minister to have to choose between sitting there quietly or having to get up and say the Prime Minister was talking through his hat. That is the terrible alternative which the minister faces. He has to sit there silent or get up and tell us what the facts are, and that would mean he has to describe what the Prime Minister said as nonsense, as the Leader of the Opposition said earlier it was, and as the experts described it.

I think it is patent to anybody with any kind of experience that even if these weapons could be got in an hour it would take more than an hour to train men to use them. It is not only nonsense, it is irresponsible nonsense. It seems to me it is not only nonsense but much worse than that for the Prime Minister of this country, the leader of the house, to go to another place outside this house and make statements about the most fundamental of all our policies, the security of our people, and for the government to refuse to explain those statements in this house, to refuse to say what they really mean, to refuse to say what the position really is.

We are not asking the minister now whether he has made a decision about whether they are going to get nuclear weapons. We are asking him to tell us how quickly we can get them if we want them, and how quickly they could train the men to use them.

Before agreeing to buy these planes we should know how long it would take to get effective weapons for them. I shall not repeat what the Leader of the Opposition has already read, but I ask how long it would take to get them and whether they could be got legally at all at the present time—how long it would take and how long it would take for the men who are going to use them to be taught how to use them? Surely that is a most reasonable, simple and obvious question to ask before we vote $47 million to be spent on a plane made in another country, because this government saw fit not merely to destroy a plane but to destroy the whole complex by which it could be made in this country.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has displayed all his usual inaccuracies and lack of logic in the remarks he just made. He said this question was the most basic policy question facing the Canadian people, but just a little while ago he was arguing that all this talk was germane to this item; and as I pointed out this item has nothing to do with question of nuclear warheads.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has to do with getting the planes.

Mr. Harkness: There is one thing I must comment on. The hon. member said he did not know much about defence or defence matters. He certainly demonstrated this was the case. He proved it, by saying that in securing the 101 we secured an obsolete, second hand fighter, and so forth.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say that at all. I said it was a plane which is no longer being made.

Mr. Harkness: This is what you said, and somebody else over there mentioned the same thing. I would point out that this is the most up to date, two-seater, long range fighter in existence in any air force. It is the most up to date—

Mr. Pearson: It is no longer being made.

Mr. Harkness: It is the most up to date long range fighter plane in the United States or any other air force.

Mr. Hellyer: Thanks to the co-operation of the Canadian government in destroying the Arrow.

Mr. O'Hurley: Which you were going to destroy, yourself.

Mr. Harkness: It is so up to date that the capabilities of the plane are still on the secret list and have never been given out. Such a statement by the hon. gentleman from Bonavista-Twillingate indicates his lack of knowledge in regard to this matter, and he referred back to the greatest mistake ever made in defence ordering. This was to order and start putting into production the Arrow aircraft which cost this country a very large amount of money and which, if carried through, would have cost an enormous amount of money and would have resulted in practically cutting out all other defence expenditures, or bringing in a large increase in taxes. It was the worst mistake ever made in regard to securing defence equipment.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I did not hear the minister. Did the minister say this Voodoo plane is now being manufactured in the United States?

Mr. Harkness: It is not being manufactured at the present time.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what I said.

Mr. Harkness: As a matter of fact the planes we got came off the production line not so very long ago, and the fact that there are no further ones being manufactured now has nothing to do with the performance of this plane or whether it is up to date.

Mr. Pearson: The fact that the plane is not being manufactured at all at the moment shows that the Americans have given up on that plane, and that is the end of that plane so far as manufacture is concerned. The facts speak for themselves. It may be a first class plane, but it is not really a first class plane when the Americans have given up manufacturing it.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister say if there is anything included in this item for acquisition of manual control back up radars as an alternative means of controlling our air defence in the event that the majority of our SAGE installations have been wiped out?

Mr. Harkness: Not in this estimate.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: Before it does I wonder would the minister just tell us the reply to this question. Is he asking us to vote money for the F-101 not knowing whether it will ever be equipped with an atomic missile which in his opinion, as he stated earlier, it has to have if it is to reach its full potential?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman. Just give the minister a moment to reflect on the question.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: I have one more simple question. Is the minister asking us to vote funds for the acquisition of the F-104 without knowing whether it will ever be equipped with atomic missiles in order to perform the strike attack role for which the aircraft were originally purchased?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Pearson: Before it does, will the minister admit that these questions are relevant to the item under discussion?

Mr. Harkness: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: Just a minute. Would the minister say if there are any armaments being bought at the present time for the F-104?

Mr. Harkness: As the 104's have only begun to come off the production line and we are just setting up training facilities to train the crews to operate them. They will not be going into operation for a year and, as I said several times before, the matter of securing armaments for them is not an urgent matter at this time.

Mr. Hellyer: If the matter of securing armaments is not urgent surely the question of what kind of armaments will be secured is urgent because it affects the decision as to whether or not we should proceed with this expenditure?

Mr. Churchill: Vote against it.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister has cast aspersions on the decision to commence the construction of the Avro Arrow. He did this many times before. He did it on the west coast, in Victoria, when he was out there during a by-election. He has said that it was the greatest mistake Canada ever made, and so on, notwithstanding the fact that when the cancellation was made the Prime Minister had told the house that it was in complete good faith.

Mr. Pugh: What did Mr. Howe say?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The question of the cancellation of the Arrow came up by way of analogy previously. I hope that the committee will not get into a general debate on something that is already in the past.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I promise you that I shall not, but I just wanted to make this comparison. Here we are embarking upon another program and the total commitment involves at least half a billion dollars. If the minister and the government have no intention that these carriers shall ultimately fulfil the role for which they were being manufactured, then we are embarking upon another $500 million fiasco, and the time for us to be told is now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jones: He has admitted it.

An hon. Member: Don't correct Hansard on that one.

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman, I will not correct Hansard on that one. It was a fiasco because in cancelling it at the time that they did, and in the manner in which they did, this government did more damage to the industrial potential of this country than could be deliberately achieved by any government in a decade, and they know it; and the people have been scattered to the four corners of the earth and a whole generation of young Canadians have lost faith in their country as a result.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am only interrupting the hon. member again because I want to be fair, and I hope he will be fair to the Chair in not bringing in a subject that is not relevant to the item under consideration in little bits and pieces. Perhaps he could come back to the item and give his co-operation.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I am very sorry; I have no intention of embarking upon a debate on the Avro Arrow at this late stage even though I noticed that Your Honour did not interrupt the minister when he introduced it into the debate—

Mr. Harkness: It was the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who introduced it.

Mr. Hellyer: However, the question of comparison is a valid one. We are embarking upon a commitment of half billion dollars and we have no guarantee whatsoever by the government that the purpose of the expenditure will be as was represented at the time when we embarked upon it. This is a serious omission. Furthermore, if we carry the comparison to its ultimate, in purchasing this $500 million worth of aircraft and appurtenances we are diverting hundreds of millions of dollars which could be used for other purposes; which could be used for the Canadian army in the acquisition of the fire power and transport it needs; which could be used for transport aircraft; which could be used for fighter aircraft for air support of the ground troops; which could be used for many other things. These are the alternatives that we could turn our attention to if this money were available for other purposes.

In order to intelligently consider the alternatives we must know, and we should know, at this stage whether the government intends to proceed to the fulfilment of its obligations in respect to the strike role and arm the F-104 with atomic missiles, because without that information the committee is, if I may use this expression, flying blind.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a very simple question and I am sure he will be able to answer it. It is in connection with the manufacture of the F-104. The minister has said that no decision need be taken in regard to its weapons system; that can be done later; the first aeroplane has not yet been delivered; it has not been tested; it is not going to reach the air division—

Mr. Harkness: I did not say the first aeroplane had not been delivered.

Mr. Pearson: The minister said that the first aeroplane had not yet been delivered to the Canadian air division. Not a single aeroplane delivered, nor a decision taken to adopt this aeroplane until I do not know how long ago. In any event, would the minister answer this question. How can you manufacture, turn out and equip an aircraft without knowing what weapons system it is to have?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member had been here between half past four and five o'clock this afternoon he would have heard me say that this particular aircraft will have the capability of carrying eight different types of weapons.

Mr. Pearson: I was here between half past four and five o'clock and I did not hear the minister say that. But that does not answer my question. Are you going to equip an aeroplane for overseas service, knowing that it can have any one of eight different weapons system, and not decide which one you are going to use in the aeroplane?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite evident that you might use different ones at different times, depending on what particular purpose you have in mind.

Mr. Pearson: Oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, the minister was speaking about the superiority of the equipment which has been purchased under this estimate. I am looking at an article on defence published in Saturday Night of February 18, 1961, which says:

Recently, it has even indicated that it—

Referring to the government:

—might purchase a fighter in the United States, the McDonnell Voodoo, inferior in performance to what was expected of the Arrow . . . If the Voodoo was acquired, we would be back where we were at the beginning of 1959, with the only exception that the R.C.A.F. would be getting two American weapons systems for aerial defence instead of one Canadian.

Is the equipment the minister was speaking about the McDonnell Voodoo referred to in this old article of February 18, 1961?

Mr. Harkness: The F-101B is referred to as the Voodoo. Whether or not it is the McDonnell Voodoo, I do not know. The Voodoo is one of the names which has generally been applied to it. I have already stated the fact that it is the most up to date interceptor aeroplane of its type that exists.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 645 carry?

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, would you call a standing vote on this item.

Item agreed to: Yeas, 82; nays, 2.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the item carried.

Pensions and other benefits—

646. To provide that George Alvin Baycroft, a former employee of Her Majesty, shall, subject to such terms and conditions as the treasury board prescribes, be deemed to have been designated a contributor pursuant to paragraph (f) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Public Service Superannuation Act on the 1st day of October, 1957, $1.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting to say a word on this vote. I trust I am in order, because this item refers to pensions and other benefits and I want to refer to one or two items mentioned by the Auditor General in his report which was tabled at the end of March.

The report mentioned a 27 year old corporal who was fired as an "administrative nuisance" and granted a life pension worth $27,000. Then the auditor general mentioned that a 37 year old R.C.A.F. officer—

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not like to interrupt the hon. member but this particular vote has no general application. As is indicated, it is to provide a pension for a member of the department who inadvertently, because of the regulations that existed, did not get a pension. In other words, it is to correct a mistake and is to provide a pension for this gentleman who should have been designated by the governor in council to have been a contributor under the superannuation act but, due to an administrative oversight, this was not done. The omission was not discovered until after his retirement and consequently for superannuation purposes under the act his employment ceased on September 30, 1957, whereas in fact it continued until August 31, 1959. This administrative error reduced his public service by one year and eleven months, so that instead of getting the pension to which he was entitled he is receiving a pension of some $12 a month less than he should be getting. This action is taken to correct that administrative omission.

Mr. Herridge: If I am out of order, I will wait for the main estimates to deal with the question.

Item agreed to.

670. To authorize loans to be made in the current and subsequent fiscal years in respect of housing projects constructed, pursuant to an agreement with the Minister of National Defence, for occupancy by members of the Canadian forces; such loans to be at interest rates and in accordance with such terms and conditions as the governor in council prescribes—further amount required, $5,000,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister explain this vote?

Mr. Harkness: This is to provide for funds for the construction of housing on a loans basis. We are having constructed several housing projects in connection with which the Department of National Defence puts up the money or makes a loan to the entrepreneur to construct the houses. We agree to maintain occupancy for a certain length of time which varies from one project to another. We lend this money, and in return we have a guaranteed rate of rental which amounts in nearly all cases to approximately the same amount as is charged for permanent married quarters, a sum which varies according to the rank of the individual.

This is a means of getting these houses built without making a capital outlay as far as the department or the government are concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this an addition to the total vote, or is this money intended to be spent on some special project?

Mr. Harkness: It is just an addition. The sum of $22 millions has been authorized so far for this purpose. Housing projects already approved, and those approved in principle, amount to $26,254,000, so we need this extra amount in order to finance these various housing propositions which are urgently needed and in respect of which approval in principle has already been given.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, they have been approved on the assumption that parliament would grant this money, because this is March 20 and I presume this money cannot be used for anything in the new fiscal year. Or is this a continuing fund?

Mr. Harkness: Once the loan has been approved it can be made in the next fiscal year. These projects have been approved within the department and, I think, in most cases by treasury board; but before a number of them can be started there must be parliamentary approval of this extra amount.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one other point, and possibly I can get this cleared up. It may not be very important. Can the minister say whether if there were any loans approved after April 1 there would have to be a new vote for this purpose, or is this a continuing vote of money that could be used?

Mr. Harkness: This is a continuing vote. Although $22 million have already been approved for this purpose we are asking for a further $5 million. The amount which has been actually put out so far is only $9,784,000, but a further $16,470,000 has received treasury board approval. In some cases the projects have been started. In others approval has been given by the treasury board. In order to go ahead we need the extra money contained in this vote so as to increase the amount of the loans.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We now turn to the supplementary estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if you would take items 647 and 667 which are noncontroversial and which, perhaps, could be passed tonight. Then, tomorrow, we could come to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL, INCLUDING THE MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

647. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required. $298,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is the research council. Perhaps the minister could give us a word of explanation.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I would be glad to. This is to provide for the acceleration of certain construction by the national research council. There are really five items—the construction of a power line installation into the council's radio laboratory in Algonquin park, an air control plant installation at the laboratory on the Montreal road, acceleration of the vertical take-off and landing project, the erection of two-storey huts and the erection of a number of similar items of equipment by the national research council.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Miscellaneous payments—

667. To deem the election made by the late Emery Leduc on the 16th day of September, 1957 to be valid for all purposes of the Public Service Superannuation Act, notwithstanding that he was not medically examined as required by section 18 of the said act, and to authorize payment of benefits to his widow and children as if he had taken and passed the medical examination so required, $1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we have an explanation of this?

Mr. Churchill: This is something like the item which was just dealt with by the Minister of National Defence. It affects one individual. An error was made at the time he should have made an election with regard to his past departmental service. There was an omission in that procedure, and consequently his widow and children have been deprived of part of the superannuation allowances to which they would have been entitled had that election been correctly made. There was an error, inasmuch as the deceased did not at the proper time undergo a medical examination as required by section 18 (1) of the Public Service Superannuation Act. The action being taken now will result in a benefit to the widow and the children.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this being made retroactive to the date of the man's death?

Mr. Churchill: This is a return of the superannuation contributions rather than a continuing pension. Apparently the amount which was returned was inaccurate. As a result of this non-election the widow and children are entitled only to a refund of his contribution in the amount of $1,100.49.

Item agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the leader of the house could say whether there is any change in the program announced last night.

Mr. Churchill: I hope the opposition will announce a change in their method of procedure in the committee with regard to passing these estimates.

An hon. Member: Since when?

Mr. Churchill: Simply to speed things up. I know how co-operative they are.

I should like to correct a misapprehension which might arise from my announcement of the business last night. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Laurier, as reported in Hansard on page 1964, second column, having to do with the final supplementary estimates which were tabled yesterday—I think he intended to ask me if they would be taken immediately after the conclusion of these supplementary estimates—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that was his intention.

Mr. Churchill: But he did not use that phrase and I did not intend that my answer would imply that they would be taken immediately after these. We will carry on tomorrow starting with mines and technical surveys, item 637.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then we will carry on consecutively from there on?

Mr. Churchill: That is right.

It being four minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Canadian Army—

644. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $35,000,000.

Royal Canadian Air Force—

645. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment—further amount required, $31,000,000.

Pensions and other benefits—

646. To provide that George Alvin Baycroft, a former employee of Her Majesty, shall, subject to such terms and conditions as the treasury board prescribes, be deemed to have been designated a contributor pursuant to paragraph (f) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Public Service Superannuation Act on the 1st day of October, 1957, $1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 21, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa, March 21, 1962

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Friday, the 23rd March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,

Col. A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

UNITED NATIONS

TABLING OF CANADA'S REPLY TO INQUIRY RESPECTING SWEDISH RESOLUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has replied to the inquiry received from the secretary general of the United Nations relating to general assembly resolution No. 1664, XVI, commonly referred to as the Swedish resolution. The reply was contained in a note from the acting permanent representative of Canada to the United Nations to the United Nations secretary general, U Thant, and was delivered this morning. I should like now to have this communication tabled for the information of hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table the document to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ADOPTION OF METRIC SYSTEM OF MEASUREMENTS

Question No. 290—Mr. Badanai:

In view of considerable interest shown by Canadians favouring the adoption by Canada of the metric system of measurements instead of the English system, has the government given any consideration to the proposal, or has the government any intention of doing so?

Answer by: Mr. Morris:

The government is aware of the interest expressed from time to time in the adoption by Canada of the metric system of measurements in place of the inch/pound system. The proposal is of course met in part by the fact that metric is already a legal system in Canada and may be used by anyone who finds it beneficial so to do. At such time as it appears that the adoption of metric as the sole system would be advantageous to Canada as a whole, consideration would be given to such change.

*CANADIAN CAR CO.—PRODUCTION OF BOBCAT VEHICLE

Question No. 297—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the then minister of public works and the Minister of Defence Production meet a delegation from the lakehead in April 1959 (April 8 and 9) regarding the future of the Canadian Car Company plant in Fort William; and, if so, (a) did discussions take place regarding the possibility or probability of having an order placed at the plant in the future for the construction of an armoured fighting vehicle called the "Bobcat" (b) was any estimate given the delegation of an approximate time sequence in the development of the "Bobcat" and the initiation of firm tenders for its construction (c) what problems or difficulties have arisen since 1959 to throw awry such a schedule?

2. If not, is there any likelihood now of the government giving consideration to putting the "Bobcat" into full production and directing any of the production to the Fort William plant?

Mr. O'Hurley:

1. A meeting was held with a delegation from the lakehead in April, 1959 at which the future of the Canadian Car Company plant in Fort William was discussed.

(a) Yes.

(b) and (c) No realistic date could be given concerning volume production at this point as the Bobcat was still in the development stage. A prototype was completed in October of 1960 and following user trials it was decided to embark on a further product improvement phase.

2. When the current contract has been completed it is intended that competitive tenders will be invited for the volume requirement.

Questions

*SMUGGLING BY ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL IN INDO-CHINA

Question No. 300—Mr. Herridge:

1. Have any members of the armed forces of Canada been found guilty of smuggling gold and/or opium in, to or from Indo-China since 1954?
2. If so, (a) what are their names, ranks, and present military status (b) what was the charge or what were the charges on which each was found guilty (c) what was the punishment in each case?

Mr. Harkness: The answers are as follows:

1. Prior to 1961 no charges were laid against any members of the armed forces of Canada relating to alleged smuggling of gold and or opium in, to or from Indo-China. In late 1961 and in early 1962 three persons were charged and convicted summarily in Indo-China. Charges are pending against some other servicemen in respect of the 1961 incidents.

2. (a): Sgt. J. M. Champagne, Sgt. W. B. Gaebel and Cpl. A. J. Hill. (b) and (c): Each was convicted under section 118 of the National Defence Act, conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline. Each was sentenced to a fine of $100 and a severe reprimand and returned to Canada. Consideration is now being given to their compulsory release from the service.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, REVENUE RANGE $40,000-$60,000

Question No. 310—Mr. Benidickson:

1. At what localities has the government constructed or provided estimates for the construction of new public buildings to accommodate post offices where annual postal revenues prior thereto had been within the range $40,000 to $60,000 for the five fiscal years 1958-59 to 1962-63 inclusive?
2. What was the actual or anticipated capital cost for each such building (a) for land (b) for building and equipment?

Answer by: Mr. Walker:

1. Ottawa, postal station "E"; Richmond Hill, Ontario; Stoney Creek, Ontario; Roxboro (formerly St. Genevieve), Quebec.

2. (a) Cost of land:

Ottawa postal station "E"	$64,302
Richmond Hill, Ontario	40,000
Stoney Creek, Ontario	24,100
Roxboro (St. Genevieve), Quebec	17,500

(b) For building and equipment:

Ottawa postal station "E"—
contract cost	$301,441.13
lock boxes and fittings	755.00
	302,196.13
Richmond Hill, Ontario—
contract cost	171,118.12
lock boxes and fittings	1,400.00
	172,518.12
Stoney Creek, Ontario—
contract cost	79,632.85
lock boxes and fittings	212.00
	79,844.85
Roxboro (St. Genevieve), Quebec—1962-63 (estimate)	105,000

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN EMBASSY IN FRANCE—PERSONNEL

Question No. 275—Mr. Regier:

1. What are the names and positions held by each of the people attached to, or assigned to, work with our Canadian embassy in France since January 1, 1954?
2. What were the periods of such responsibilities given there to each such person?
3. Which of these people received promotions during said period of service, and what are the details of each of these promotions?
4. Which of these people are not now in the employ of the federal government, and what was the reason for termination of service in each case?

TRENT WATERWAY WATER FLOW

Question No. 295—Mr. Pitman:

What has been the volume of water passing through the Trent waterway at the nearest point to the city of Peterborough in each month, of each year, since 1950?

Mr. Martini: Tabled herewith.

APPLICATIONS FOR SUMMER EMPLOYMENT, COMPETITION 62-50

Question No. 296—Mr. Pitman:

1. How many applications were received for summer employment under competition 62-50 of the civil service commission?
2. Who were the successful candidates, and in which electoral districts are each resident?
3. Were any representations made on behalf of any of the successful candidates; and, if so, by whom?
4. What were the academic qualifications of each of the successful candidates?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

1952 ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL AND MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMITTEE REPORT

Motion No. 28—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the recommendations of the St. Lawrence ship channel and Montreal harbour committee (1950) report on the fourth item of terms of reference dated October 1, 1952.

Mr. Balcer: The document referred to in this motion is an interdepartmental document, and as it is the long established practice of the house that such interdepartmental documents are not tabled I would ask my hon. friend whether he would be willing to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Fisher: I understood from a conversation I had with someone in the department some months ago that the document had been revealed to the Americans in the preliminary negotiations regarding the seaway. It was for that reason I assumed that because it had been opened to them it would be available to the house. If the minister can assure me that it is strictly an interdepartmental document I shall be only too pleased to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Balcer: This motion is non-debatable, and I stand on what I said earlier.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to proceed with the motion?

Mr. Fisher: No.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ARGENTIA FERRY SERVICE

Motion No. 29—Mr. Pickersgill:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of any communication addressed to the premier of Newfoundland or any member of the government of Newfoundland by the Minister of Transport since January 1, 1962, regarding the proposed ferry service to Argentia, together with any replies thereto.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion, subject to the usual reservation as far as obtaining the agreement of the province is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

LAKEHEAD AIRPORT—IMPROVEMENT IN FACILITIES

Motion No. 30—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Transport and persons, other than Department of Transport officials, who have been in touch with him regarding improvements in facilities at the lakehead airport.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion, with the understanding, as agreed to by the mover, that the correspondence to be produced will date back to January 1, 1961.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

NEW POST OFFICE, LONGLAC, ONT.

Motion No. 31—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence of any kind between the Minister of Public Works and anyone interested in developing a new post office at Longlac, Ontario.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable, subject to the usual reservation of privileged and confidential correspondence.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the limitations expressed by the Minister of Public Works, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE, DRYDEN, ONT.

Motion No. 32—Mr. Benidickson:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence since January 1, 1960, of any kind between the Postmaster General and/or the Minister of Public Works and anyone interested in enlarging the post office at Dryden, Ontario, or relating to a proposal that the Dryden post office be relocated.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that there has been no correspondence with either of the departments, and in those circumstances would the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River wish to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Benidickson: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ECONOMIC FORECAST FOR CURRENT YEAR

Motion No. 33—Mr. Pickersgill:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the latest economic forecast prepared in the Department of Trade and Commerce in the series substituted for the Canadian Economic Outlook as described in Hansard for August 10, 1960 at page 7878.

Mr. Hees: Stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, since the minister is not prepared to proceed with this motion at once I would ask you to have it transferred to notices of motions, papers, so that it may be debated.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing orders this motion is transferred to the heading notices of motions, papers.

HALIFAX TELEVISION PROGRAM "YOUTH WANTS TO KNOW"

Motion No. 34—Mr. Pickersgill:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence since October 1, 1961, between the board of broadcast governors on the one hand and any other person on the other, respecting a program on television station CJCH-TV Halifax, entitled "Youth Wants to Know".

Mr. Nowlan: The motion is acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—APPROVAL BY HOUSE BEFORE RATIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister, in view of certain statements that have been made in recent days, whether he can give the house an assurance that the Columbia river development treaty with the United States will not be ratified until it has been discussed and approved in this house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is fully aware of the fact that ratification by this house is necessary.

Mr. Pearson: Ratification is an executive action.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked the Prime Minister if he could ascertain whether he had any correspondence with the provincial governments about the power grid that had not been tabled, and the hon. gentleman said he would look into the matter and table the correspondence if there were any.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did not say I would table it, I said I would make it available. However, I tabled it yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, in the Prime Minister's absence yesterday I put a question about this matter to either of his parliamentary secretaries, and they professed a most total ignorance about it. One sometimes wonders what they are paid their salaries for.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's point does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I say there is no reason for the hon. gentleman to show his ignorance, either.

[Later:]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order with respect to the documents which were tabled yesterday by the Prime Minister. I have in my hands Votes and Proceedings for yesterday which I have now looked at, since the Prime Minister drew attention to what he was pleased in his courteous way to call my ignorance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think that was factual.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I read the following from Votes and Proceedings for yesterday:

> The following papers having been deposited with the Clerk of the house were laid upon the table pursuant to standing order 40, namely:
>
> By Mr. Diefenbaker, a member of the Queen's privy council,—Exchange of correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and provincial premiers concerning the federal-provincial meeting of ministers on March 19, 1962, regarding the problems of the generation and transmission of electrical energy throughout Canada (national power grid).

I draw Your Honour's attention to standing order 40 which reads as follows:

> Any return, report or other paper required to be laid before the house in accordance with any act of parliament or in pursuance of any resolution or standing order of this house may be deposited with the Clerk of the house on any sitting day, and such return, report or other paper shall be deemed for all purposes to have been presented to or laid before the house.

This correspondence was not laid before the house pursuant to a return. It was not a report or other paper required to be laid before the house in accordance with any act of parliament. It was something that was asked for and that could only be tabled, as I have heard Your Honour ask so often, by leave of the house in the proper way on the orders of the day.

Mr. McIlraith: Following the proper procedure.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that we should not become slipshod about the observance of the rules of the house. Moreover, sir, I think I have a question of privilege. I had asked the Prime Minister in a very courteous way—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —to have this correspondence made available.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now adverting to an exchange which I suggest might be forgotten, as it does not raise a point of order. The point of order he raises is one that may properly be considered. I am advised by the Clerk that he took the responsibility of dealing with the documents in the way he did, exercising his discretion as to the category into which they fell. Apparently his view is not in accord with that of the hon. member, but that is the explanation of the treatment that the documents received.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would ask Your Honour to take the point under advisement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think the simplest way out would be to withdraw them altogether, and that would satisfy the hon. gentleman. The day before yesterday I agreed to do this and what I said is very clear. I said, as found on page 1923 of Hansard:

—I will have the matter looked into and if there are any such letters they will be made available tomorrow.

In my absence yesterday for part of the day the hon. gentleman raised the question, as found on page 1968 of Hansard. Because of my undertaking I filed the correspondence on my return. Trying to be courteous I now receive criticism from the hon. gentleman for it. I hope I will not do anything in the future that will allow him to speak of courtesy as discourtesy.

Mr. McIlraith: Just follow the rules and you will be in no trouble.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. gentleman kindly maintain silence.

Mr. McIlraith: No. Such arrogance from the Prime Minister.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NATIONAL GRID CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could direct a question to the Prime Minister and hope he is in a position to give me an answer. As a result of the conference, which is most important to Canada, concerning the national power grid, with which I am in complete agreement, is the Prime Minister in a position to give this house any information as to what will transpire should one of the provinces remain outside?

Mr. Speaker: I rather think the hon. member's question is not one that is the responsibility of the federal administration, as it relates to the absence from the conference of one of the provinces. If the hon. member is seeking a general opinion as to the effect of the absence of that province, I think that is a matter that would be more appropriately one for debate rather than for orders of the day.

Mr. Winch: I am not approaching it from that position, Mr. Speaker. I go along with the proposal of the Prime Minister for a national power grid across Canada. I am asking whether he can give any information as to the effect of a middle province remaining outside of the grid.

Mr. Speaker: I believe what I have said is an appropriate answer to the question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SYDNEY MINES, N.S.—WORKING CONDITIONS OF FREIGHT HANDLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the house whether he has received any representation from Hugh Bushne, regional secretary of Sydney Mines, Princess local union U.M.W. protesting against conditions affecting employees of the Northside freight handlers' association which are termed as "nothing short of scandalous".

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had not received this message before I left my office, but I will verify that with my staff.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a letter dated March 19 from His Worship the mayor of Trail, Mr. J. Palyga, stating that the city council urges that the federal and provincial governments establish a royal commission to explore all facets of the outbreaks of violence in the Kootenays attributed to a minority group? If so, could the Prime Minister inform the house whether he will give consideration to establishing this suggested royal commission, with a view to developing a policy which will provide for federal-provincial co-operation in the administration of a constructive and effective solution to this long standing problem?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have received a letter from the mayor dated March 19. In that letter he states:

My council has formulated a resolution regarding this situation which I shall be passing on to you, possibly tomorrow.

That resolution has not yet been received.

SONS OF FREEDOM—SUGGESTED SHARING OF LOSSES CAUSED BY TERRORISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister another question on a strictly non-partisan basis. Has the Prime Minister received a letter from Mr. T. A. McRae, chairman of the Kootenay and boundary citizen's committee on Doukhobor-Canadian affairs, a committee representative of all parties and upon which there are a number of respected and in some cases distinguished members of the Prime Minister's party, asking that, since the provincial and federal governments cannot agree on a plan to bring troops to the Kootenays, the federal and provincial governments share equally the financial losses of labour and management caused by acts of terrorism? If so, will the Prime Minister inform the house whether he is giving consideration to this request?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity yet to ascertain whether or not such a letter has been received. However, when it is an answer will be given to the hon. gentleman's question. I point out that in this question appear these words, "since the provincial and federal governments cannot agree on a plan to bring troops to the Kootenays". That statement does not represent the situation at all. The Canadian government can only make troops available provided there is compliance with the National Defence Act. We have expressed our views over and over again in letters to the mayor of Trail and to others indicating that we share the anxiety and concern over the outbreak of lawlessness on the part of the Sons of Freedom Doukhobors, and that when a request is made under the National Defence Act no delay will take place in providing the necessary troops requested by the attorney general.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain to the Prime Minister that I was using the language of the release.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not necessary to explain questions after they have been answered.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CL-41—PROPOSED SUBSTITUTION OF ENGINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Is the minister in a position to inform the house of the present situation arising from negotiations in which his department is concerned in relation to a possible change from a Pratt and Whitney engine to a C.G.E. engine to replace that formerly decided upon as suitable for the CL-41? If so, is a recommendation being prepared for the consideration of treasury board?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): The CL-41 jet trainer was equipped with a Pratt and Whitney engine. Bids were called for from the engine companies, and those bids have been forwarded to the Department of Defence Production where they are being studied at the present time; in fact there was a meeting this morning on the value and prices of the two engines. However, no decision has been reached, and no recommendation has been sent to treasury board to date.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. Could the minister inform the house when the recommendation is likely to be made to treasury board?

Mr. O'Hurley: As soon as the officials of treasury board, the Department of National Defence and the Department of Defence Production have finished their meetings and a proposition comes to my office, recommendations will be made to treasury board. I cannot say when that will be.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN WEST—REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY CREDIT

On the order of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, or in his absence to his parliamentary secretary. Because of the serious losses incurred as a result of the drought last summer, is it the intention of the government to provide for emergency credit in order to help the western farmers put in the crop this spring?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): These matters are under consideration.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question to put to the Minister of Agriculture and in his absence, I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Does the government intend to put before the house, before dissolution of parliament, farm legislation concerning the urgent problem facing the dairy industry?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): This matter, as the hon. member knows, has been the subject of a great deal of consultation with people in the dairy industry, and an announcement will be made in connection with it fairly soon.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR NUMBER OF CLAIMANTS RECEIVING BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of an undertaking given by his parliamentary secretary, as reported at page 1937 of Hansard, with respect to the latest figures for the number of claimants receiving unemployment insurance benefits. Is the minister in a position to provide us with this information?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to provide the information if the hon. member would put that question on the order paper.

Mr. Deschatelets: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I state that as reported at page 1937 of Hansard of March 19 the parliamentary secretary said:

> I do not have that information here but I will be glad to secure it for the hon. member.

The parliamentary secretary was replying to a question put to him by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I believe we are entitled to that information.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has not suggested that he will not supply the information. He has indicated that it is statistical and that he would prefer to have the question in writing.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister himself misunderstood what happened, because he was not present at the time of the exchange. During the course of the consideration of the estimates the minister's parliamentary secretary undertook to make this information available. I do not think an hon. member should be asked, after that undertaking, to go to the trouble and inconvenience of putting a question on the order paper. I am sure the parliamentary secretary would be only too glad to supply the information.

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, that question was put to me and I assured the hon. member that I would obtain that information for him. There has been no suggestion here that I would not.

Mr. Deschatelets: Before dissolution?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PEGGED RATE FOR DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising from an article appearing in the March 20, 1962 issue of the Globe and Mail entitled "Dollar in Wonderland". Is the minister giving any consideration to establishing a pegged rate?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered questions on this subject with regularity at this session, I think every other day. There is nothing new to say or announce on this subject. The house has been kept well informed on the very striking success of the government's policy in relation to the external value of the Canadian dollar.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—CONFERENCE OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position to inform the house with regard to any views or opinions he expressed at a meeting in Montreal as to the necessity of a conference of the prime ministers of the commonwealth nations relative to the entrance of the United Kingdom into the European common market? Is he in a position to give us any additional information beyond that contained in the press?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I stated was this, that the matter of the entry of the United Kingdom into the common market had such political and economic implications that before a final decision was made there should be a commonwealth prime ministers' conference. That view is one I hold very strongly, believing as I do in the strength of the commonwealth and its maintenance, and I hope that view will be shared by other members of the commonwealth.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister in Montreal, has he been in recent communication with the United Kingdom requesting a conference of the commonwealth prime ministers?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the hon. gentleman would not press that question at this time. The desire of the Canadian government is known, but the communications that pass between the prime ministers relative to questions that are under consideration are generally regarded as confidential until some decision is made thereon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR CONFERENCE OF PARTY LEADERS TO EXPEDITE PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister, and I do so with all deference. In recent days and weeks there has been a great deal of stumbling and fumbling—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question will he please ask it, instead of delivering himself of observations about what has happened in the last few weeks.

Mr. Winch: It is because of what has happened in the past few weeks that I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wish to ask him whether through the house leader there could be negotiations and discussions with the leaders of all parties so that we can proceed with the business of the house without the problems and the loss of time that have taken place in the past few weeks. Would the Prime Minister agree to a meeting among the leader of the house, the Leader of the Opposition and our leader with respect to the business of parliament?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I do not think any amount of consultation among those three would in any way solve the situation. After all—I am not speaking to the hon. gentleman, but to some members not too far removed—it is the hon. gentlemen directly opposite to whom that question might be directed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MINISTER'S SPEECH AT DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman consider making available to the house, as an appendix to Hansard, the very excellent speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs given this week in Geneva?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that it was a very excellent speech I am sure members of the house without regard to party will agree. It has received very general approval. If the house is prepared to accept the suggestion of the hon. member I will be pleased to accede to his wishes.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I think it would be a very good thing indeed to have this speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the disarmament conference appear in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this speech in question be printed as an appendix to Hansard today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that a copy will be supplied by the Prime Minister.

[Editor's note: For text of speech above referred to see appendix to Hansard for March 22, 1962.]

INDUSTRY

NEW BRUNSWICK—PERMISSION TO PUMP OUT MINE SHAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, who may take this question as notice if he is not prepared to reply. Can the minister advise the house if a decision has been reached by his department with regard to granting permission to Brunswick Mining and Smelting to proceed with the pumping of water from the mine shaft of the Brunswick mine, so this mining company can carry on with the operation of the mine?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I will provide an answer for the hon. member as soon as possible.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Administration services—

Departmental administration—

637. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $65,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we begin a discussion of this item I should like to say, since this is the first time the new minister has appeared before the house with his estimates, that we will treat him with the customary courtesy accorded a new minister. I think, sir, it would greatly facilitate that treatment if the minister could, in accordance with the rules in committee, occupy one of the front benches where he would be relatively accessible to the members of the opposition who are most likely to ask questions. Perhaps the minister could start by telling us why he needs this extra money so soon.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate for his kind words and the committee for its kind reception. This item, sir, is to cover the acquisition of common camping and field equipment required by all units of the department. This is required at this time because these estimates are connected with winter works, and they are to help with the winter works program.

If the house wants exact details, there is a sum of $24,000 to cover commonly used camp and field materials such as insecticides, batteries and other expendable items. There is another item of $21,000 to provide for the repair of commonly used field equipment such as outboard motors, canoes, radios and so on. The total of all items is $65,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister could tell us why repairs were needed. One can understand the need for new supplies, but surely the department could have anticipated how much they needed to spend on repairs. Were they especially hard on their equipment this past year?

Mr. Flynn: As I told the hon. member, the idea is to spend this money now to help with winter works.

(Translation):

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure if the question I wish to put to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) is relevant to this item.

May I be permitted, incidentally, to congratulate my university colleague on his appointment at the head of this department.

I was told that, last summer or fall, teams from his department had made surveys in the constituency of Megantic and more particularly in the parish of St. Antoine de Pontbriand. The minister is perhaps in a position—assuming that the information I am now asking is relevant to this item—to tell me why those teams have been in my constituency, how long they have remained there and what has been the cost of the work they have carried out there.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the question asked by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) is relevant to any of the items under discussion. It is quite possible that teams from my department have worked in the constituency of Megantic. I do not know what they have done there, but I would gladly give him the information, if he so desires, either in writing or otherwise.

Mr. Roberge: I should be grateful to the minister if he would kindly ask his departmental officials to answer my question in writing.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if we could have a little more quiet in the committee so that those of us who are interested in the estimates can follow the discussion.

The Chairman: I think it would be appreciated by all if more quiet were observed so that everyone could hear the discussion that is taking place.

Shall vote 637 carry?

Item agreed to.

Canadian hydrographic service—

639. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister if any part of this vote is for the construction of vessels?

Mr. Flynn: Yes, this supplementary estimate is required to provide for the replacement of three sounding launches. Two will be constructed on the west coast and one on the east coast.

Item agreed to.

Geological survey of Canada—

640. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $75,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a question I should like to ask on this item. Perhaps it will not be strictly relevant, and if it is not perhaps the minister could answer it later. Could he say whether the geological survey employs students in the summertime in connection with its activities, and if so how they are recruited?

Mr. Flynn: I do not know if that question comes under this vote, but I do know that my department employs students for survey parties during the summer. I understand most of them are recruited from the universities and are students who are studying geology and other sciences which are of some concern to my department.

Mr. Benidickson: This is a further amount required for geological surveys, and though the minister is new on the job I believe he will have had time to ascertain that in Ontario there is a large joint project in relation to aeroplane surveys in the vast area from the Manitoba boundary eastward into the riding of my friend the hon. member for Port Arthur. It was expected that as a result of that very great program, which I believe has been going on for two years, the minister's colleague, the minister of northern affairs, who administers the vote with respect to roads to resources, would find that in co-operation with the provincial authorities it would be possible to decide upon the construction of a very important road running north and south.

Having regard to the fact that this program has gone on for a couple of years, it is my understanding that by now we should have had some assessment of its results by the department of mines. I know the minister of northern affairs will be coming before us very soon with some estimates for his department, and I thought it would be helpful to have knowledge of the results achieved.

Two months ago I wrote to my friend the provincial minister of mines, who comes from northwestern Ontario, and asked if he could give me information as to the particular section in which it was likely that this major north-south road would be built. He told me he thought he would be able to do so in the very near future but I have not heard from him, although I did note that another very important set of maps has been published. I believe it was on March 10 when this important geological physical set of maps was made available to the public who are interested in this program. Could the minister indicate to us what particularly outstanding conclusions have been arrived at so far as there aeroplane mapping surveys are concerned?

Mr. Flynn: I am afraid I would not be able to give the hon. member a complete answer to his question. As I understand it he is asking whether the program of aero-magnetic surveys which is being conducted jointly by my department and the provinces involves a certain area which he has described. I could not tell him that off hand, but I do know this program is continuing. In fact new agreements have been signed, and there is a three year program being organized presently with all the provinces, except possibly one. I would not be able to tell him whether there is any definite result in the area he has mentioned, but I can inquire and let him know at another time.

Item agreed to.

Dominion observatories—

Dominion observatory, Ottawa and field stations—

641. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $60,450.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister tell us what this is about?

Mr. Flynn: This supplementary is required as follows:

[Mr. Benidickson.]

1. $2,600 for the construction of a cement pier and instrument shed for testing a proposed new site for the observatory in Gatineau park.

2. $8,000 for the relocation of a road at the dominion radio astrophysical observatory, White Lake, B.C.

3. $21,000 odd for the purpose of 1,650 25 foot poles for the construction of an interferometer array which will expand the scientific facilities of the dominion radio astrophysical observatory.

4. $28,400 for the construction of a seismograph vault at Port Hardy, B.C.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not blaming the minister for this, but if he will look at the detail as compared with the main item he will find it is exactly the same, and I think a lot of time would be saved if a lot more information were given in these details. Were that done we would not have to ask these questions.

Item agreed to.

General—

642. Polar continental shelf project—further amount required, $16,400.

Mr. Winch: Under this vote we are being asked to provide an additional amount of $16,400, and all the information we are given is "polar continental shelf project—further amount required." I maintain that although the amount is small the principle involved is one of the most important to come before the House of Commons. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that just a few days ago I had a motion on the order paper relative to the continental shelf, its sovereignty and its jurisdiction, and I made certain proposals to try to resolve the difficulty over sovereignty and the collection of leases and royalties.

As matters stand at present it is my understanding that because the polar continental shelf is circumscribed by Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Hudson bay, the federal government claims jurisdiction, and I think rightly so. It is due to the fact that the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and the Mackenzie area come only under the administration of councils—the Yukon council and the Northwest Territories council—that the federal government is claiming and taking jurisdiction.

Can the minister give us any indication what position the federal government will take in view of the possibility that the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories may become additional provinces in Canada, because that naturally leads into the entire question of sovereignty over the continental shelf? In addition to that, because of this vote and this vote alone I would like to ask the minister what leases have been issued by his department for the exploration of gas, oil or otherwise on the Yukon-Northwest Territories continental shelf. Also, following the issuance of these leases is exploration taking place; and if so can the minister give the committee any report on the results of those explorations?

Therefore basically, Mr. Chairman, my questions resolve themselves into two major points. As this is a request for additional money for the polar continental shelf project, can the minister inform us, up to the latest information which he has, what leases have been issued by the federal government on the polar continental shelf project; what is the extent to which leases have been issued; what has been the result up to date of exploration under the leases issued and, I repeat, in view of the fact that the federal government has not yet reached agreement with the maritime provinces on the sovereignty of the continental shelf, is any consideration being given to the position of the federal government under its present authority assuming sovereignty over the polar continental shelf in the eventuality of the Yukon and Northwest Territories becoming provinces of Canada?

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I would inform the hon. member that my department has no territorial jurisdiction, nor has it jurisdiction over the mines or other mineral resources. This polar continental shelf project is related only to the scientific investigation of the shelf.

With regard to the question of leases for oil or other minerals, this matter comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I am sure he has taken good note of the questions of the hon. member, which will have given him time to prepare the answers.

Mr. Winch: Then could I ask the minister this question. He has said that the vote we are being asked to approve concerns a scientific investigation. I imagine that means a photographic and geographic survey.

Mr. Flynn: It is an examination of the substructure of the polar shelf to see what resources may be under there; what is the composition of the shelf. It is not an air survey necessarily; it is also a testing of the soil, I understand, to determine what is under the polar shelf.

Mr. Winch: My understanding from what the minister has now said is this. We are now being asked to approve a very small amount of money, but the principle is very important. The minister's department is only interested in spending this money on scientific research?

Mr. Flynn: Yes.

Mr. Winch: Then whatever is found is turned over to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Mr. Flynn: This is correct, Mr. Chairman. In fact, this vote concerns only the erection of prefabricated buildings at the new base camp to be located at Mould Bay, Northwest Territories, and the installation of equipment in chartered aircraft.

I would repeat that my department has no territorial jurisdiction whatsoever over the Yukon or Northwest Territories or the polar shelf itself. Our job is merely scientific, collecting data which may be useful either to the department of my colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, or to the provincial governments.

Mr. Winch: Could I ask the minister just one more question. In view of the fact that this is the polar continental shelf project, further amount required, may I ask him how far north into the Arctic circle his department's scientific investigations are going.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I am not able to give an answer to my hon. friend right now, but I could ask my officials to prepare a reply on this question and forward it to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Winch: I asked that question because I am certain the minister and all hon. members have been very interested in reading, not only a number of newspaper reports but scientific reports on scientific investigations coming from the other side of the north pole down into what may be termed Canadian territory. Very well, I refer to the Russians coming down into this area. Only $16,400 is involved, but the principle is important. How far are we going in these scientific investigations? I gather that the minister does not know.

Mr. Flynn: The exact place we are at, geographically, I do not know; but if my memory serves me right there is some co-operation between Canada and Russia in this work.

Mr. Winch: The minister said there is some co-operation between Canada and Russia?

Mr. Flynn: Yes, there has been an exchange of data and information.

Mr. Winch: Thank you, sir; that is the very answer I was hoping I could finally arrive at, and now we have it. With regard to the scientific investigations in the most northern part of Canada, would the minister now be prepared to tell us, in view of his statement, what is the scientific co-operation between the U.S.S.R. and Canada on the polar shelf? The minister said just now that there is some co-operation. Would he be good enough to give us some indication of what the co-operation is.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I could qualify what I have said about this co-operation. I would say that generally co-operation in the scientific field is excellent with all countries, and in this respect I think Russia is no different from any other country when it is concerned with very peaceful purposes such as the one we are pursuing.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, apparently I misunderstood. Co-operation in connection with the geophysical year or anything else is one thing; but the minister has just said there is some co-operation between Canada and Russia on the northern part of our borders. Can he give any indication of what that co-operation is, on a scientific basis, on the continental shelf.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I have already told the hon. member that I am not in a position to go further than I have up to now. The hon. member appreciates that under this estimate we are not discussing this whole matter, because the principle was adopted when the main estimates were approved by the committee. I am not in a position at this time to go further than I have. I think it will be a proper question when the main estimates come before the committee or, as I suggested to the hon. member and if he agrees, I will have my officials prepare a written answer to his question and I will forward it to him as soon as I can.

The Chairman: Shall vote 642 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. The minister knows very well that in the absence of the hon. member for Laurier I could not possibly let this vote go by without at least a passing reference to an aircraft company named Autair, because the minister mentioned something about aircraft in explaining the item. Would the minister tell us whether there is any contract with this notorious company in connection with the work being done on the continental shelf.

Mr. Flynn: The only thing I can say is that I have no information that it has anything to do with the $16,400 mentioned in this item.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister surely knows whether they have a contract. They might carry the materials to build this building. They might have something to do with it. Can the minister say whether they have a contract at the present time?

Mr. Flynn: Do you mean in a field other than the one governed by this item?

Mr. Pickersgill: In the continental shelf program.

Mr. Flynn: I do not know. I would have to check. I am not in a position to give an answer now. I think this question was fully discussed last year. Perhaps a re-reading of Hansard when the main estimates were discussed would provide an answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: That might well be. But before the item passes—I do not want to delay it—may I express the hope, since we have a new minister, that the new minister is not as much associated with the past as some other ministers may have been. If he has any contracts to let for air services in the north may we hope that proper, competitive tenders will be called and that all competing companies will be allowed to compete for the business.

Mr. Flynn: I will give an assurance to the hon. member that my department will always proceed in this respect on the basis most economic for the department. But I am sure he will not quarrel with me if I do not go further at this time, because the whole system of asking for tenders in this field is not as simple as in other departments.

Mr. Pickersgill: We have found that out already.

Mr. Winch: I have one further request for information. Does the polar continental project include any work within the boundaries of Hudson bay?

Mr. Flynn: I would say it was further north. My understanding is that the polar shelf is further north than the contour of Hudson bay.

Mr. Winch: I raise this question because I think it is rather important. Canada has a greater area of the continental shelf than the United States, if one includes Hudson bay. Can the minister tell us whether any provision is included here for a study of the continental shelf in the Hudson bay area itself, because as I recall it Hudson bay is on the polar shelf under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Mr. Flynn: I would say no. I cannot guarantee that my answer is correct, but I would think that the polar shelf project here is related to an area which is further north than the Hudson bay area—Baffin island, and those areas. That is my understanding of the location of the work to be done in connection with this project. This does not mean that my department does not conduct scientific investigations in the Hudson bay area. I would have to ask. But it would not be in connection with this specific project.

Mr. Carter: Is this a survey project?

Mr. Flynn: It is a scientific investigation and, as I told the committee earlier, I understand this is a study of the substructure of the soil of the shelf.

Mr. Carter: It is more of a boring operation.

Mr. Flynn: A boring operation, I think. Yes.

Mr. Winch: I think this is a most important matter, so I ask the question: what is the relationship between this polar continental shelf project, involving scientific examination, and the granting of leases by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in respect of experimentation and exploration on the polar shelf? What is the relation between this project for scientific exploration and the leases which have been issued to oil and gas companies extending over millions of acres?

Mr. Flynn: I think the hon. member's question would be more properly answered by my colleague. As I said before, we collect data relating to what may be in the ground—minerals and other resources. This information is made available to the public generally. When somebody wants to obtain an exploration permit his request is directed to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. For this reason I think the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East would be better answered by my colleague.

Mr. Winch: Am I in order, then, in asking on this vote, which is a vote in connection with a scientific project on the polar continental shelf, whether the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources can tell us about the nature of the tie-in between the leases which are issued by his department and the scientific projects of the Ministry of Mines and Technical Surveys?

The Chairman: I think the minister has already given an answer. He has gone as far as he can in dealing with the matters under his own jurisdiction.

Mr. Winch: So I cannot ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to deal further with the question I have raised.

The Chairman: I think that would not be in order.

Mr. Carter: If this is a boring operation is it intended solely to obtain scientific knowledge of what is beneath the surface, or is it being carried out for commercial purposes?

Mr. Flynn: Would the hon. member clarify his use of the word "commercial".

Mr. Carter: I am trying to find out what the purpose of this project is. We are carrying out some borings on the polar shelf and I just want to find out whether we are doing this simply to accumulate scientific knowledge or whether we are trying to get knowledge that we can pass on for commercial exploitation later.

Mr. Flynn: The investigations are for general purposes. Of course, if they have any value for commercial purposes the information would eventually be used in this sense. The immediate purpose is to gather scientific data. When we know what is there, we may decide what to do with it. Eventually, maybe, there will be a commercial interest.

Mr. Winch: I intend to ask one more question. Can the minister tell us how far one must go up the coast before coming to what is called the polar continental shelf? Does this scientific investigation in any way include areas on the coast of Labrador?

Mr. Flynn: As I told the hon. member previously, I do not think this project will affect in any way the territory of the province of Quebec or of the province of Newfoundland. I would say it is on the islands north of the continental mainland.

Item agreed to.

B—Dominion coal board—

643. Payments in connection with movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council—further amount required, $4,800,000.

Mr. Robichaud: This is an item of $4,800,000 to provide for payments in connection with the movement of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council. Can the minister tell us how many tons of coal would be involved in connection with these payments and where the coal would be moved. Would it be moved to Ontario?

Mr. Flynn: The dominion coal board has requested the provision of $4,800,000 in the form of a supplementary estimate as follows: provision of an additional $1,928,000 to cover an increase in the estimated cost of moving Nova Scotia coal to market under the provisions of order in council PC 1961/484.

When the original estimate was made in late 1960, there was no reason to believe that the electric power situation in Ontario would require substantial operation of the thermal plants of the Ontario hydro. Early in the year, however, hydro came into the market for coal and placed a contract with Nova Scotia producers for 200,000 tons. This coal has been delivered during this fiscal year and assistance claimed under the provisions of the order quoted above. As I said, this additional movement has required the expenditure of $1,978,000.

Second, there is provision of $1,900,000 under authority of orders in council 1961-18 and 1961-762. This amount is the sum needed to provide for the losses incurred by the Dominion Coal Company and associated companies in maintaining three coal mines in operation beyond the time ordinarily required for closure. The extra expense arises out of the fact that the market could only take a certain amount of coal and to reduce the output to this figure required short time operation of all mines. Short time operation is expensive as all fixed charges continue without any financial return.

On January 9, 1961, my predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Comtois and the Minister of National Revenue issued a joint statement to the press, parliament being then not in session, advising that an agreement had been made to retain the following in operation: No. 4 colliery until May 31, 1961; Florence colliery until July 1, 1961; No. 16 colliery until August 12, 1961. Order in council P.C. 1961-18 was passed to authorize payment of assistance.

On May 10, 1961, Hon. Mr. Comtois made a further statement in parliament advising that the situation had deteriorated and that to prevent widespread unemployment it had been decided to provide assistance to maintain No. 16 colliery in operation until August 12, 1962. Order in council P.C. 1961-762 was passed to authorize this assistance. The sum of $1,900,000 is to cover the payments by the federal government during the fiscal year for this purpose.

Third, provision of an additional $900,000 to cover an increase in the amount of coking coal shipped for export to Japan under provision of order in council P.C. 1961-487. The original estimate of the amount of coal moving under this order was 500,000 tons. It later developed that this could be increased to 700,000 tons and authority granted to approve the increase. The 200,000 additional tons at $4.50 per ton make up the $900,000 requested.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister for the information he has given the committee on this item. I do not wish under this item to engage in a debate on all the problems of the coal industry but this is the first occasion on which we have had the opportunity to secure information from the minister on the actions expected to be taken by the government to prevent the closure of colliery No. 16, which is supposed to take place on August 12 as the minister has mentioned earlier.

The committee knows that after two years in office this government, not being able to find a solution to the problems of the coal industry, decided to appoint a royal commission. This commission known as the Rand commission made public its report in September, 1960. Realizing that it was a controversial report and that it was not acceptable to all phases of the industry the former minister of mines and technical surveys and the government decided to submit this report to an interdepartmental committee. I recall the words of the former minister when this report was passed to the interdepartmental committee when he said it had clear and definite instructions to study and prepare recommendations. We have waited a long time for the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee.

We are now aware that the government has had a report from the committee, and according to the commitment made to this house by the former minister I feel we have the right to ask the present minister to make known the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee.

I understand that earlier this session the house turned down a request to table this report but in view of the commitment made to this house by the former minister to make known the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee I believe this is a proper item to request this information and it is the first occasion the present minister has had to inform the house as to what those recommendations are. If those recommendations are acceptable parliament then will be in a position to study the matter and make its decision accordingly.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, are we discussing a budget item, a supplementary estimate or some previous political history which is of interest only to my hon. friend?

Mr. Robichaud: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, we are discussing an item of $4,800,000 to cover further payments for the movement of coal from Nova Scotia to other centres in Canada. I am not against it and never have been against it, but I feel in view of the large amount involved this committee has a right to know whether the department has other plans for the coal industry. We realize that the government is paying large amounts in the form of subsidies to keep the coal industry going but this is only a temporary measure. This is not a measure which gives satisfaction to the industry or which will provide it with an opportunity of becoming established on a permanent basis.

I feel we have a right to know from the minister what are the plans of the government. When I asked a question some time ago as to a report on the meeting held in Ottawa among representatives of the Nova Scotia government and the coal industry and representatives of the federal government the minister said, and I paraphrase only one sentence, "needless to say the government will consider these views in a most sympathetic manner and a decision will be taken as soon as possible."

I ask the minister now whether a decision has been taken and whether the decision that has been or will be taken is in line with the recommendation of the interdepartmental committee which was established for the very purpose of informing the government what should be done for the potential of the coal industry.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the hon. member for Gloucester has put together two problems and covered them with only one question. He has raised the problem of the general policy on coal and the problem of the closing of No. 16 colliery.

As to No. 16 colliery, I suppose the hon. member has the answer I gave him the other day to the effect that when a decision is taken by the government in connection with this special problem, which one should dissociate from the general problem of the Nova Scotia coal industry, an announcement will be made in due course.

As far as the general policy governing coal is concerned the hon. member knows what the present policy is. He has underlined the fact that we have the Rand report and that an interdepartmental committee has studied the conclusions of the Rand report. The hon. gentleman realizes that I am not in a position to tell him what are the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee. However, I can give him my assurance that the government is considering the whole problem and that it hopes to be able to make an announcement about general policy—I am not speaking with respect to No. 16 colliery but with respect to general policy—as soon as possible.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this item pass without first of all congratulating the new minister and also thanking him on behalf of the united mine workers of America, particularly in the Canmore area where the miners have had many thousands of hours of work since 1957 as a result of the shipment of coal from that area in the Crowsnest pass in Alberta to the new market in Japan. When the minister was giving the details on item 643 I noticed that he mentioned that arrangements have now been made for the purchase of a further 500,000 to 700,000 tons of coal.

Through the minister I also wish to express my appreciation to the members of the coal board. I also wish to thank the members of his department and of the Department of Trade and Commerce for making it possible to provide many hours of work in the Canmore area and other places in the Crowsnest pass.

I do not want to say any more because I do not wish to delay the estimates. However, I wish to express appreciation to the minister and the departments concerned on behalf of the members of the united mine workers at Drumheller who do not enjoy the Japanese market but who now have another opportunity through another enterprise that will provide them with a million dollar annual payroll. In the market for soft coal there is quite severe competition with petroleum and natural gas. Once again I wish to congratulate the minister and to ask him to thank the members of the coal board and his officers for making full employment possible in some areas of Bow River.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, the minister has told us that the purpose of this item is to prevent the lay-off of miners in a colliery in Nova Scotia. Is consideration being given to providing similar assistance to prevent the lay-off of miners at Bell island?

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much that the question of the hon. member has anything to do with the item under discussion, but if I may repeat what I said the other day, the Solicitor General, the Minister of Labour and myself received a delegation from Bell island for the purpose of discussing their problems. I may say that discussions are continuing in a search for any possible help and the utmost sympathy is being shown with regard to this very serious problem.

Mr. Carter: I have one more question. Has the government made any study of the feasibility of matching the coal from Nova Scotia with the iron ore at Bell island to make a smelter possible?

Mr. Flynn: I might answer yes. Every possible solution has been examined, but I am not in a position to report any conclusion to the hon. member.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question of the minister which I think is relevant at this time. I understand that a machine has been developed and constructed by the Foster Wheeler Company of Canada to experiment with new methods of burning Nova Scotia coal and recovering the by-products from the ash. I understand that Nova Scotia coal has a very high content of ash and sulphur and that this machine has been developed by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys to experiment with it and has now been installed, I believe, in a building in Ottawa. I should like to ask the minister whether it has been put into operation yet. Perhaps he is not aware of it. If not, perhaps he will take my question as notice and write to me about the matter. Before I resume my seat I should like to congratulate the new minister. I am sure he will be a great asset to our cabinet.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member for his kindness. I know that my department is constantly preoccupied with new methods of using coal and also the examination of inventions which might result in using more coal, but I am not aware of the specific experiment to which the hon. member has referred. I will be very happy to have my officials prepare information for him about it.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of very brief questions I should like to ask the minister. We have all followed his introduction to this department with interest. I may say that I think those who were associated with him as I was on a trip we shared some months ago found him a most charming companion and good host, and I am very pleased to see him elevated to the ministry.

I know, of course, that he comes from Quebec and is very much interested in any developments that take place there. For that reason I am prepared to ask him some questions about the Sulphur Converting Corporation and the plan that must exist within that company to use coal of various kinds. Specifically, was the minister approached by the officials of Sulphur Converting Corporation or was the dominion coal board approached with a view to using Nova Scotia coal at the project being considered by the company near Quebec city? Have tests been carried out in relation to this project that would indicate that Nova Scotia coal rather than United States coal would be suitable for the particular process planned by Sulphur Converting Corporation?

I see the minister shaking his head. I have been trying to follow in the Quebec press as well as I can the trials, tribulations, difficulties, statements, beliefs and opinions of Mr. Leclerc, and it certainly seems to me that a person who has ranged as widely as Mr. Leclerc has must have gone into the matter of the coal supply for this steel mill. For that reason I would appreciate it if the minister would let us know what relationships he or the dominion coal board, for which he is responsible, may have had with this particular company.

The other question I should like to ask also relates to Nova Scotia coal and involves the Welland canal and the tolls that are charged for using it. Has the coal board carried out a study to indicate what effect the Welland canal tolls have in making it the barrier that keeps Nova Scotia coal from reaching the lakehead and being used in the thermal plant there that has been established by Ontario hydro? I understand that this expenditure now under consideration is for the movement of coal. We approve of these payments very much, of course and, despite some unkind things the hon. member for Cape Breton South may have said about members of this party, whether or not he is aware of it we did support his attempts in the last 18 months to get Ontario hydro to take a more open approach to the use of Nova Scotia coal in the thermal plants in Ontario. If at all possible we would like to know whether this coal might not move all the way to the head of the lakes, especially under some kind of ballast arrangement. As the minister may know, a tremendous number of ships that go to the lakehead to load grain proceed there in ballast.

I gather that very recently some consideration has been given in relation to the St. Lawrence seaway to the effect that foreign ships coming in will be allowed to carry certain kinds of cargo as ballast without paying the normal duties. This indicated to me the possibility that ocean shipping moving up into the lakehead for grain may be persuaded, as a special arrangement, to move Nova Scotia coal up as some kind of ballast. This coal could be made available to thermal stations at the lakehead or the other places where coal is used. This plan may be fantastic, but it might be worth considering.

The other question I should like to ask the minister relates to the consideration, if any, that has been given to providing assistance to Saskatchewan lignite in order to move it into markets farther to the east than it has reached at the moment. As I understand it, because of the low cost of this coal, it is able to compete with the higher grades of coal, provided the transportation charges are not too high. I gather that the normal eastern fringe of its penetration, in a market sense, is around Winnipeg. Actually there have been tests carried out in paper mills east of Winnipeg and in northwestern Ontario. I wonder if any consideration is being given at the moment to extending the market for this particular fuel?

I am also primed to raise this question because of the discussion in Saskatchewan to the effect there is such a tremendous supply of lignite it could fit into thermal operations and would provide power for the national grid. Since this kind of long term projection is something that the Prime Minister and the government is preoccupied with at the moment, it would be interesting to hear how the dominion coal board may feel about Saskatchewan lignite as a power supply for thermal units for this projected national grid.

My questions, therefore, are concerned with the Sulphur Converting Corporation and its relationship to the dominion coal board and the minister; the question of Welland canal tolls and other arrangements that might be made to make Nova Scotia coal a deeper penetrator into the Ontario market, and the matter of lignite in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Flynn: In so far as the Sulphur Converting Corporation is concerned, Mr. Chairman—I do not know if that is the correct name—I can tell the hon. member for Port Arthur that neither my department nor the dominion coal board has been consulted or had anything to do with the project. The only connection the government had with the project was as pointed out by the Minister of Transport, to refer the company to the Canadian National and the national harbours board. So far as my department is concerned, the company has not consulted us at all in connection with the use of coal in this project. Now, I do not want to say anything else for fear I would seem to be giving approval to the soundness of the project. I do not know more than that. I have come too near to burning my fingers, and I do not want to try it again.

In so far as moving Nova Scotia coal to western Ontario is concerned, I am not able to give any specific answer to the hon. member. I may add, however, that Mr. Justice Rand expressed the view that the maintenance of a market in Ontario and Quebec should not be considered as something to be looked at for a very long period of years. However, I do not want the committee to draw any conclusion from that. I just want to indicate to the hon. member that it seems to me it would have been difficult for the dominion coal board to consider moving Nova Scotia coal even farther west than it goes at the moment.

The suggestion of the hon. member to ship coal by these ocean going vessels coming in ballast can be looked into. However, I am not too hopeful it would prove feasible. In so far as the Saskatchewan lignite is concerned, I may say that I have no knowledge that the dominion coal board or my department have made any study of its use along the lines suggested.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister if any part of this vote, either the additional sum or the original sum is used for subventions on coal within the maritime provinces, apart from those subsidies that are paid on coal for power purposes. In other words, are there any subventions paid for coal within the maritime provinces for any other purpose, and if so how much of the total item would it be?

Mr. Flynn: The answer is that the amounts which are used under the authority of orders in council 1961-18 and 1961-762, in connection with the maintenance and operation of No. 4 colliery, Florence colliery and No. 1 colliery which is scheduled to close on August 12, 1962, are payments made for coal used in the maritimes.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has nothing to do with the transportation of it?

Mr. Flynn: It has nothing to do with the movement of coal.

Mr. Pickersgill: Outside of these, what amounts are paid for moving coal from Nova Scotia to markets in Quebec and Ontario?

Mr. Flynn: As the hon. member knows the present policy is one of assisting the movement of coal to these Ontario and Quebec markets as I have indicated.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are also some subsidies paid, and this may not be done by the minister's department but by this crown company, in connection with the power program which is under his colleague. They are not in the minister's department?

Mr. Flynn: Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: The point I am trying to get out is that the dominion coal board pays no subventions on the movement of coal within the maritime provinces?

Mr. Flynn: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just wanted to be quite clear about that because that is not an answer we could ever get clearly from the minister's predecessor. It is rather interesting, you know, to read that in connection with something that was said on May 2, 1957 at Amherst, Nova Scotia by the present head of the government. At that time he said that the subventions on coal mentioned by the federal government are nothing more than subsidies which Nova Scotians already have to compete with the central provinces. The present Prime Minister went on to say, and I quote:

"What we want", he asserted, "is coal subventions within the province."

This statement is taken from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of May 3, 1957, and that is nearly five years ago. I am just wondering if the minister could indicate when that promise of the Prime Minister's is going to be carried out, and whether any part of the money to be voted in this fiscal year would be used to carry out that five year old promise, that what we want is coal subventions within the province.

Mr. MacEwan: I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and I noted he was back on the old story from the red book. The Prime Minister was in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, not long after that and he stated in the presence of myself and the new premier of Nova Scotia something to this effect: "You asked for subventions in the maritime provinces for power users, and you will have those subventions." Regardless of what the hon. member said, he mentioned the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act under which subventions are paid to industrial users who use power which is generated by coal. I would point out that this was brought forward by this government.

He may not think it means very much but I would tell him it means a great deal in my area. I put this on record in Hansard when a private member—I think it was the hon. member for Timiskaming—brought forward a private member's motion which suggested the national power grid. Certainly there are two mines in my area which are very much dependant on power produced in the Trenton thermo power plant, and subventions, are paid under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act to industrial users. Also under the act various transmission lines were constructed within the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and power has been sent over them from the plant in my area. This indeed has helped very much to assist the production of coal in the three mines in my area, Greenwood, Drummond and part of the production in the McBean seam.

These are the only three mines left in my area after the manner in which the former government did not assist the other mines which closed up during the 1950's. I know that the hon. member in speaking on this provision has said the Prime Minister referred to coal subventions within the province of Nova Scotia, within the maritimes, but that is merely a play on words by him.

Indeed at the meeting which the delegation from Cape Breton attended not so long ago various things were brought forward which were projected by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond, and others, including myself. There are a lot of things that could come forward and I am sure the government will give consideration to the subventions that could be paid to certain industrial plants which perhaps use their own power or use other types of fuel at the present time. I know consideration is being given to that by the federal government. Coal subvention in the maritimes is merely a play on words by the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. member, whom I might describe as unpaid parliamentary secretary, for his intervention on behalf of the minister. I may say the last thing I want to do—

Mr. MacEwan: I am just looking after my constituency. I am not looking for any glamour at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: We have what the hon. member publicized in 1957 and we would be glad to exhibit it to the house.

Mr. MacEwan: I am waiting for you, don't worry.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman does not boast about the manner—

Mr. MacEwan: I never boast about anything.

Mr. Pickersgill: I listened very attentively to what the hon. member had to say, and as he has always been a courteous member I am sure he will listen attentively to me. The last thing I want to do is disparage in any way the excellent program for the development of power in the maritime provinces, which was announced in Mr. Harris' budget speech in the spring of 1957 and was accepted in principle by the present premier of Nova Scotia and by the former premier of New Brunswick immediately after that budget was brought forward, and which was under discussion with these governments before the Diefenbaker government ever came into office.

We think that was a good program, although we do not think it was carried on as well as it might have been. We are glad it kept three mines open in the hon. gentleman's constituency, and he ought to be very grateful to Mr. Harris, Mr. Lesage and Mr. St. Laurent for what they did at that time. However I am talking about something else that the Prime Minister promised. The hon. gentleman said it was a play on words—

An hon. Member: On your part.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was a play on words no doubt on the part of the hon. gentleman's leader. He is a great one for playing on words as we all know. I have another quotation and I shall quote the Prime Minister's words as reported in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of June 3, 1957, in what the Prime Minister now calls the servile press, although he did not call them that in those days.

Speaking on maritime issues in the coal mining district of Minto, N.B., Mr. Diefenbaker said that——the Liberal government is not taking action to help the coal industry. There should be federal treasury aid towards the cost of freighting coal within the maritimes.

It is interesting to note that there is nothing there about subventions to power plants. That was five years ago and now I ask the minister who is in charge of the dominion coal board, is there any likelihood of that promise being kept before March 31, 1962?

Mr. Winch: I am not interested in any snarling between Liberals and Conservatives. I am not interested in any past red books or white papers. My interest is in this vote which has to deal with the matter of coal in Canada. I realize, as we all do, that the present minister has only been in his high office for a short period of time but he is the minister now in charge of technical surveys and coal. For that reason I ask him whether any action is being taken by himself or in his department to establish a national coal policy for Canada. The time is long past when that should have been done.

From Nova Scotia to British Columbia we have perhaps what I would describe as the greatest resources of coal anywhere in the world. We have all grades of coal from lignite to bituminous and anthracite. In other words, we have everything from soft coal to steam coal, but we are in the extraordinary situation that the Canadian taxpayers have to spend millions and millions of dollars a year on subsidizing the various aspects of the coal industry, either directly or by freight subsidies. To me that seems positively stupid because, as I say, we have all kinds of coal from lignite to anthracite, and in British Columbia we have billions of tons of anthracite which have never yet been opened up and developed. Yet we import millions of tons of coal each year from south of the border.

We import it right into Nova Scotia where we have our lignite coal mines. Ontario hydro imports it into Ontario, and we cannot do anything about that because it is a provincial matter. Polymer, a federally owned crown company, imports its coal from the United States.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if the hon. member would answer a question? I think what he is saying does not hold true in regard to sub-bituminous coal and soft domestic coal. There is sub-bituminous coal in Alberta which is being exported at the moment.

Mr. Winch: My hon. friend is very fortunate in his own particular riding, and thereabouts, in that they are now able to export their coal to Japan.

Mr. Woolliams: That is right.

Mr. Winch: It is the lignite; it is the soft coal.

Mr. Woolliams: It is the sub-bituminous.

Mr. Winch: I say we import millions of tons of coal into Canada. The federal government pays out millions of dollars annually to support the coal industry. If we take the situation as it exists across Canada, we have every type of coal that is known and which could be required. Surely we now need a national coal policy. That is all I ask.

Has the minister yet had time to give consideration to the entire coal situation from Nova Scotia to British Columbia with regard to imports and exports; and if not, is it a matter that the minister has under very serious consideration?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to congratulate the minister on the appointment to his present portfolio and wish him well in all he undertakes for the general advantage of our country. That is a safe statement.

From 1945 or 1946 up to about 1955 this house was informed from time to time of experiments in connection with a gas turbine, the purpose of which was to utilize large quantities of our coal. From time to time we were given glowing accounts of near success. I remember listening very carefully on a number of occasions to the reports on these experiments. Since 1955 there has been a sort of gap of silence and we have heard very little about this gas turbine and the experiments in relation thereto.

I mention this matter because the experiments were being conducted with a view to using coal, I think on locomotives, other engines and things of that sort. Is the minister in a position to bring the committee up to date on the latest developments and what progress is being made, or have the experiments been discontinued?

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I am not in a position to give an answer to the hon. member on these specific experiments. I have been informed that they have been discontinued, but I would rather check on this before giving him a definite answer. I could send him a letter on this matter. I am afraid I cannot say any more at the present time.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question I should like to ask the minister before this item is passed. Could the minister advise the committee whether his department or the dominion coal board have been in communication with the governments of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the purpose of establishing large turbo generating plants at the pithead; and if such communication has taken place, has any consideration been given to proceeding with these plants?

Mr. Flynn: I do not know of any recent communication. Since my appointment I have not received any request of the kind mentioned by the hon. member. I do not know whether there was any such request before my appointment or whether it is under consideration, but since my appointment no such request has been received.

Mr. Robichaud: The minister is aware that just recently the New Brunswick electric power commission decided to proceed with the construction of a thermal plant at Grand Lake, which will use at least 100,000 tons of coal a year. I think a good portion of the money that is now being spent on subsidies and grants would be spent much more profitably if it went to subsidizing the cost of electric power generated from coal in large generating plants at the pitheads. This would serve two purposes: it would absorb substantial quantities of coal and at the same time it would provide cheap power for new and existing industries in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Flynn: I would be pleased to ask the officials of the dominion coal board to consider the proposal of the hon. member. With regard to the gas turbine experiments—referring to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West—I am told that a complete report was published about a year ago and is available for general use. The conclusion was that the suggestion was not practical. I could probably obtain a copy of this report for the hon. member.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask one further question. I realize that we are not permitted to ask for information on what took place during an in camera meeting in connection with grid power. However, as we are discussing the matter of coal I would like to ask the minister whether because of his knowledge on a grid system he knows if any consideration is being given to this question. In the province of Saskatchewan—and I think I am safe in saying, in the province of Alberta also—there is enough lignite coal, if used for the production of power, to produce such a terrific horsepower that it could be tied into a grid system at approximately a rate of 2.7 to three mills for over 100 years. This is with the known resources of lignite coal in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Under this vote could I ask the minister whether that is in accordance with his knowledge, and whether it is being given any consideration in the matter of a power grid in Canada.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, under this vote I do not think the hon. member should ask me this question, but I am willing to ask for a report as to whether it has been considered. I am not aware that it has been specifically considered by my department.

Mr. Winch: Then I understand, sir, that if there is any report on the utilization of the lignite coal of Alberta and Saskatchewan for the production of power, the minister will make it available; and if not, the minister will have a study made of it?

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I did not say that I would have a study made of it. I said that if a study has been made, I will let the hon. member know what are the conclusions. However, I think the hon. member will agree with me that the difficulties in connection with coal in Canada are centred in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, mainly in Nova Scotia. I do not know of any specific problem in Saskatchewan. I would suggest that the use of coal in Saskatchewan would be a problem for the provincial government at this time. It may be that my department has examined the question which the hon. member has raised. If it has, I will be very pleased to let him know the conclusions that have been reached.

Mr. Winch: The estimates of the minister were referred to a few days ago and they could not be dealt with because he was attending the conference on the question of a national power grid. The question of coal is an important one. It covers this country from Nova Scotia to British Columbia, but it definitely ties in with coal of lignite nature in Saskatchewan and Alberta. My information is that millions of electrical horsepower are available by the utilization of lignite coal, for less than four mills.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I am not denying that the hon. member may be right. I would simply say that my understanding of the examination of the feasibility of a power grid was related to hydro resources. Perhaps in part this power could be provided by lignite coal, as suggested by the hon. member, but at the present time I am under the impression that the conference is considering the available hydro resources for the purposes of a national grid.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry. The minister has just said apparently, that the development of the grid power circuit is only to be based on hydro. It is not to be based on the capabilities, whether hydro or thermal—

Mr. Flynn: If the hon. member would allow me to interrupt him, I said this was my understanding now. Maybe he should keep his question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whose estimates are to follow mine and who is more directly concerned with this question. My department, as I pointed out, would probably make a study of a question like the one raised by the hon. member, but it would not establish policy with regard to a power grid.

Mr. Southam: First, I should like to join with those of my colleagues who have extended congratulations to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys on his appointment to his present high office. I have listened with a great deal of interest this afternoon to the discussion of these items so far as it relates to coal.

I should like to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that approximately 20 per cent of the coal in Canada is situated in the riding of Moose Mountain. Naturally, I have been interested in the comments which have been made. I feel that this recent conference between the federal government and the provinces with respect to a national power grid will be of great interest to the people of my riding. It has been pointed out this afternoon that the provincial governments have the primary responsibility for such an undertaking, but it is also our responsibility as a federal government, I think, to do everything we can to assist the coal industry. The lignite coal in my riding is already being developed for use in thermal generating plants and I think our provincial government has stated, in the course of the discussions of the last day or two, that it is willing to co-operate in a national power grid system.

I should like, now, to make a few brief remarks which, I agree, may not be entirely in order on this item. Nevertheless, if I could have the ear of the Chair, I would point out that the lignite coal industry is having a real problem in competing with other fuels, such as gas and oil, in my riding. The industry is doing its utmost to compete, and in the last few years there have been conversions from the old method of pit mining to surface mining, and new machinery has been brought in to make this change possible. In fact, one of the largest drag lines on the North American continent, called "Mr. Climax" is now working in Moose Mountain. As further assistance to subventions, it has been suggested that we might possibly have an amendment to the Coal Production Assistance Act so that when people in the lignite industry take advantage of this act and borrow certain sums of money, they would find the terms more favourable than they are at the present time. The act should be amended so that the present repayment on the basis of 30 cents a ton on wholesale costs at the pithead could be reduced to 10 cents, a figure which would be more realistic. I think this is a logical suggestion. Hard coal is worth roughly between $10 and $12 at the pithead while the lignite coal which is being mined in Moose Mountain is worth approximately $2 per ton. Therefore, repayment of a loan at the rate of 30 cents a ton under the Coal Production Assistance Act is really out of proportion and a figure of 10 cents a ton would be far more realistic.

I just thought I would like to bring that to the attention of the minister because there is no doubt that within his department there will be a discussion about the development of a national coal policy. I think the suggestion I have made should be given serious consideration in connection with such a policy.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

National parks branch—

National parks and historic sites and monuments—

648. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $2,500,000.

Mr. Robichaud: Can the minister give us the distribution of this fund of $2.5 million which I understand will be used mostly in the national parks? Can the hon. gentleman give the names of the parks and the amounts of money spent in each?

Mr. Dinsdale: The item before the committee is concerned entirely with the winter works projects on historic sites and in national parks. I shall be happy to answer the question asked by the hon. member if he will be satisfied with a general breakdown rather than a detailed breakdown. The amount to be spent on historic sites is $160,700. The further amounts to be spent on the parks themselves are as follows:

National parks trunk highways	$ 64,000
Banff park	290,700
Cape Breton Highlands park	218,500
Elk Island park	78,500
Fundy park	66,000
Jasper park	164,500
Kootenay park	183,500
Mount Revelstoke and Glacier parks	144,500
Point Pelee park	40,200
Prince Albert park	249,200
Prince Edward Island park	102,500
Riding Mountain park	320,000
St. Lawrence Islands park	4,000

Terra Nova park	198,000
Waterton Lakes park	92,000
Yoho park	123,200

Mr. Robichaud: Did I understand the minister to say that $249,000 were being spent at Prince Albert park?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, $249,200.

Mr. Robichaud: That is the largest amount being spent anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Dinsdale: No, that is not correct. More is being spent in Riding Mountain park.

Mr. Winch: This vote provides for national parks and historic sites and monuments; construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment. The further amount required is $2,500,000.

Under this vote I could make an emotional speech, a heartfelt speech and a reasonable speech. However, because I have spoken so often already, I am not going to do that. I intend to direct one question to the minister. In view of the representations which have been made to him and to the board by citizens and organizations in Vancouver, is he in a position to inform me what is the situation now with regard to the request we have been making for the last two years that New Brighton park should be recognized as a national historic site.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am happy to be able to inform the hon. member that certain proposals have been received from people in Vancouver interested in New Brighton park. I believe this is the Hastings townsite park. These proposals will be processed by the historic sites and monuments board when the board meets in May here in Ottawa.

Mr. Wratten: There are two or three projects that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. They concern places which are either in my riding or very close to it.

The first concerns the Bell homestead where Alexander Graham Bell conceived the idea of the telephone and where the first voices went over the wire. This building is situated on the banks of the Grand river. Due to the erosion of the bank it is necessary, or will be necessary in time, to move this building across the road in order to preserve it and keep it in proper condition.

In drawing this matter to the attention of the minister I express the hope that he will give it favourable consideration and assist us in our endeavour to retain this building as a national historic site. The federal government has recognized it through the erection of a cairn bearing a plaque, so I hope when the time comes to move the building the government will assist us to do it.

Another project to which I wish to direct the minister's attention is the Mohawk church, the first Protestant church to be erected in Upper Canada, now Ontario. On the week end I had the good fortune to visit the site with the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I was surprised to learn when we went to look over this historic building that it was closed because of a lack of funds with which to repair the heating system. This church was erected in 1785 for the Indians of the Six Nations who came down the Grand river to the fork in the river to worship at this church. Now, due to circumstances beyond their control, it is not open for want of the small sum required to repair the heating apparatus in the church. I believe it would be an excellent gesture on the part of the federal government to make a small grant to the church board to have the heating system repaired. I understand that the last time the building was renovated it was made possible through the generosity of a gentleman in Toronto.

A third project which is not in my own riding but in an adjacent one is the restoration of Chiefswood, the birthplace of the Canadian poetess, Pauline Johnson. The council of the Six Nations Indians, who have not very much money, have allocated $6,400 of their funds to commence this restoration project. They plan to restore the building to its original size. They will restore it to the condition it was in when Pauline Johnson lived there and they also have in mind plans for the erection of a real Indian village on the site to attract tourists to this district and show people how the Indians lived years ago.

If the Indians are willing out of their scanty funds to contribute this sum of money, surely we as a federal government can contribute some money toward the restoration of this building. The old alibi has been that the property must be crown property before the federal government will do anything. As I understand it, Indian property is held in trust by the crown. If it is already held in trust by the crown I fail to see why the federal government cannot take action.

I urge the minister to give this project serious consideration. In fact it would be better if he would consent to visit Brantford so he could see this historic site for himself. He would then have a better idea of what we have in mind.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I observe it is three or four minutes to five. I wish to deal with one question under this item. I wish to launch a full scale attack on the superintendent's administration of Revelstoke park when time is available. The question of historic sites for which we are voting $160,700 interests me. Will the minister inform the committee whether any of this vote is being used for the restoration of steamers on the Yukon river?

Mr. Dinsdale: No, Mr. Chairman. Nothing under this item is used for that purpose. The money voted under this item is used entirely for winter works.

Mr. Herridge: It is not for any project of that kind?

Mr. Dinsdale: No, it is exclusively our winter works program.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say something briefly that is quite relevant to winter works. I had some correspondence with the minister about the employment policy in the Terra Nova national park. I was rather disappointed that the minister to whose letter I admit I have not had time up to now to give a considered reply, because it was a long letter which I suspect the minister had a lot of help in writing, which I do not have—

Mr. Dinsdale: I did it all myself.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is straining my credulity. I am not saying I do not believe him but I do not think he expects me to believe him because I do not think he means his statement to be taken seriously.

The minister questioned something I had said about the attitude taken by his predecessor. Although I do not wish to waste any time over this I should like to put a brief reference on Hansard. I can give the minister a couple of the references at pages 3536 and 3558 of Hansard of August 14, 1958. I shall read the briefest reference to be found at page 3559 which is a follow up of the earlier references. As I said, I do not wish to take a lot of the time of the committee in raising this question. Although it is a local matter it is one of great importance in the locality.

I was addressing the minister's predecessor, the present Minister of Agriculture, with respect to special preferences in employment in the park and the following exchange occurred as recorded at page 3559:

> Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister would not mind my interrupting him. He does intend to carry out the policy of giving special preference to those people who made their living previously by cutting in the park, as he told Mr. Keough he would?
> Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes. I believe that was satisfactorily stated this afternoon.

The point I wish to make is that that assurance had been given by the minister's predecessors. I have looked up the earlier references and can summarize them much more quickly than I can place them on the record by quoting them. What had taken place before the present government came into office was largely verbal. I placed that statement on the record. That seems to have been the situation that was accepted by the minister's predecessor and it was well understood in the area.

I know the minister is anxious to do the right thing in this matter. I am not attempting to be at all contentious about this. I wish merely to point out that what I said had a basis in what happened right here in the house.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR GREATER FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN CO-OPERATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved:

> That a special committee of this house, the membership of which to be designated later, be appointed to study how greater assistance for education can be given by the government of Canada within the provisions of the British North America Act and in co-operation with the provinces.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it was about five years ago that this resolution was placed on the order paper and this is the first opportunity I have had to present it to the house. In presenting this resolution I realize that we may be treading on difficult ground perhaps because of the differences of opinion that surround the question of the role the federal government might play in the field of education. I should like to emphasize that this resolution primarily involves the setting up of a committee to study the problem of education within Canada and to make such recommendations as could be carried out within the terms of the British North America Act and in co-operation with the provinces.

Perhaps the most serious criticism of the resolution would be that this house is not the proper forum to set up a committee of this kind and that if such a committee were set up it should not consist of members of the house but of experts outside the house. All I can say is that I could not present a resolution which would set up a committee outside the house because it would involve the expenditure of money. As a private member I could not present such a resolution and I felt that in order to bring the matter before the house and to emphasize its importance it would be better to do so in this form.

From early history, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has been giving assistance to education. All parties can be given credit for recommending that the federal government give assistance to education. If hon. members wish to go into the history of such assistance I would refer them to the book written by J. C. Miller entitled "National Government and Education in Canada". It sets out how in the early days the federal government found it necessary to give assistance to agriculture through the provision of agricultural colleges and training. At that time the question did arise whether the federal government was intruding in the field of education but I think it was generally accepted that this was not the type of intrusion that was envisaged under the British North America Act. To give a basis, I should like to quote from the introductory part of chapter 1 of Mr. Miller's book where he states:

> Rarely, if ever, in the course of human history have relations between political systems and educational policies and procedures been as direct and intimate as they are today.

He states further:

> To sum up, government by the whole people best secures the two main objects of all governments—justice and hapiness; justice, because no man or class or group will be strong enough to wrong others; happiness, because each man, judging best what is for his own good, will have every chance of pursuing it. The principles of liberty and equality are justified by the results they yield.

I do not quarrel with the premise set out in the British North America Act. I believe that local administration and control of education should lie with the provinces. There is no serious suggestion anywhere in Canada that the rights of the provinces in the field of education should be encroached upon. However, I feel, as I will discuss a little later, that we have perhaps been placing too narrow an interpretation on the scope that the federal government can take in education. I am strongly of the view that if this country is to succeed we must take a broader view of this matter.

Quite often we have heard people speak in this house and outside it of the necessity of symbols of national unity such as a flag and an anthem, but we can have no outward signs or symbols of unity if we have no real sense of unity of purpose as Canadians and if there is no opportunity of exchange between cultures. We cannot build a nation if we proceed in ten separate channels ignoring each other.

Because of the various cultural groups now in our country it is essential that as Canadians we make a new appraisal of the situation to provide the opportunity of retaining the best of all cultures and developing a new culture in Canada which will provide an over-all link between all groups. That does not mean doing away with other cultures but providing an over-all link between the various groups within our country. Although our constitution recognizes that we have a bicultural country, we must also realize that since the last world war there are other large cultural groups in Canada and this we cannot afford to ignore. This should point up the real necessity of providing a common link, and this can be done through education.

We also speak of our great national resources and the great material wealth that could be developed in our country, but here again we need proper and more adequate training available for our people so that we can develop these resources. If we are to become a great nation we must think as a great nation. We must ask, what can be done within the terms of the British North America Act to promote this end. We cannot continue to live in the kind of world and society that we had in 1867 at the time of confederation. We cannot have our growth stunted by the shades of those days. If we are to survive we must grow in the world as it is today. We must meet the problems and challenges of today with all the modern thinking and machinery available. This is just common sense. The fact is that we have too many people who are living in the past with old prejudices and old concepts, and it is time we took a new and broader look.

We may ask, what are some of the general needs we can take a look at? There is the matter of research. There can be no complaint about assistance to universities for this purpose. This would not affect the rights of the provinces. Then there are vocational and technical training, where assistance is now being given, and scholarships. There is the provision of methods of co-ordination without interfering with the administrative responsibilities or cultural guarantees within the provinces.

The fact that it was necessary for public spirited citizens to sponsor the Canadian conference on education on two occasions in my opinion points up one of the symptoms and reasons why the time has come when the federal government must take a national look at education. These people across the country see the points that need to be co-ordinated. They see the difficulties of continuing separately in a provincial atmosphere at a time when we are trying to build a nation to take its place amongst the other nations of the world.

It may be well at this time to insert in the record the purposes of the conference as set out in a letter dated November 8, 1957 which was addressed to the members of the Senate and House of Commons. I quote:

> This conference might be said to represent a decision by educators and others interested in education to take their problems to the people of Canada. They hope to awaken a greater national consciousness of the urgent need for greater educational opportunity in Canada, and for the need to prevent wastage of so much of the nation's human resources. When we couple our educational needs in Canada with the sobering realization of Russian scientific advancement, brought home to every Canadian by the two satellites presently circling the earth, this conference has even greater significance than it had at the time it was conceived.

There has been, perhaps, a difference of opinion as to the success of the Canadian conference on education. However, I think it did bring before the Canadian people the differences in viewpoint in respect of education. I think it did bring home to the Canadian people the importance of education to our nation and the fact that it is a matter of national concern. It is also fair to point out that during the last conference in Quebec it became more apparent that there was a greater realization of the bicultural nature of our educational system as it was first conceived. This basic recognition will provide the opportunity for a greater understanding between the various systems as they are being developed.

The co-ordination of education in Canada has been, to a great extent, left to the Canadian educational association which is made up of the school trustees and leading officials in the field of education throughout all the provinces. This effort is being made on a co-operative basis within the limited resources the association has for carrying out this co-ordination.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the legality of being able to broaden out in this field of education in the future depends upon our interpretation of the British North America Act. Section 93 of the act reads:

> In and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:

Then, the act sets out four provisions, and they are as follows:

> (1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union:
> (2) All the powers, privileges, and duties at the union by law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the separate schools and school trustees of the Queen's Roman Catholic subjects shall be and the same are hereby extended to the dissentient schools of the Queen's Protestant and Roman Catholics in Quebec:

Then, paragraphs 3 and 4 set out provisions covering the right of appeal to the governor general in council if any of these sections are violated. I suggest that if we look at education in its historical setting, and examine the dictionary meaning of the word education, we would find that education has two meanings. First, it may mean the totality of experience and, second, the process of instruction. The first meaning is that used in the field of philosophy, whereas the second meaning is the one probably attributed to the word by ordinary people and the statute. If we are successful in arguing for the more restrictive meaning of the word, then it would appear that a fundamental element in education is the existence of a pupil and a teacher or, to put it another way, knowledge or experience being imparted from one person to another. In this case, the word would not include pure or applied research, which is the acquiring of knowledge not by one individual from another individual but rather from the facts or empirical reading.

If we look at the cases that have been decided by our courts, we find that in none of them have the courts actually defined the role of the federal government in education. I think it would be fair to say that at the time of confederation the word "education" had a restricted meaning and related to the manner of instruction. Now, with the broad meaning of education, the federal government would be quite justified in acting as a co-ordinator and giving assistance to education. I think it is important, at this stage in our history, that we broaden our viewpoint, grow up and mature, so to speak. Today there is a great need in the field of education for research in order to ascertain the skills and obtain the knowledge that would be necessary for the development of our country. This is a real problem because this is a country that is full of resources. If we are not capable of developing these resources ourselves, then those people in the world who are hungry for these resources are not going to sit idly by while we fail to take advantage of the things that we have.

I believe also that in this country we should make opportunities available for every young person who is qualified, and who wants an education, to obtain an education or the training necessary to take his place in society. The lack of money should not be a bar to an education. If we are to rise above our petty prejudices, above our narrow, petty politics and discontinue the unnatural divisions amongst our people, then we must think in terms of educational institutions which will help us to grow up nationally and internationally. This is the field in which the federal government can give leadership. I trust that for the sake of Canada, its future and its place in the world of today, we will broaden our view as to the place of the federal government in the field of education.

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, we are all in accord with the resolution which has been introduced by the hon. member for Davenport. It is a moderate and sensible resolution. I am sure other members will want to speak on it, so I will keep my remarks to a minimum.

As he has suggested, we in this house must concern ourselves more and more with the problem of education at the national level. The main problem, of course, is the fact, as hon. members realize, that this nation dwells under the British North America Act. We have a written constitution which provides that education shall be within the exclusive control of the various provinces.

In a sense, the fathers of confederation were wise. They realized that education should always be very closely related to the parents and that the parents, in the last resort, should have some control over the education which their youngsters were receiving. Yet on the other hand we realize today that this is a very different world. There are certainly no two ways about it: the education which was being dealt with at the conferences in Charlottetown and Quebec is not the education which we are dealing with today.

In 1867 education was regarded as being entirely arts training. It was reading and writing. At the higher levels it was philosophy and literature. Therefore education was entirely concerned with language and religion and therefore, because of the obvious necessity of confederation, education had to be placed within the bounds of provincial control.

Of course today we realize that education has many facets, that it is training in many different areas which have no relationship, or very little relationship, to either language or religion. It means training and education at different levels. Although no one in this house and no party would want to invade or in any way violate the sensibilities of those who are from the province of Quebec, I am sure all of us realize the necessity of taking a very important look at this matter and arriving at a redefinition of education as it relates to the British North America Act.

The second difference that we must consider in the way we look at education and the way the fathers of confederation looked at it, is that at that time education was a relatively simple and inexpensive matter. So far as the average community was concerned it simply involved building a little schoolhouse, getting a retired army officer to inhabit that school for a few months a year, buying a few books and providing a little bit of wood for the stove. That virtually amounted to the complete expenditure which education really meant to the taxpayers. In a sense it was undemocratic in that those who were more wealthy could send their children off to boarding school or overseas to get further education at a higher level.

Of course today we realize that expenditure on education is probably the most terrifying aspect in any budget, be it municipal or provincial. I am sure all of us coming from different constituencies realize the extent to which the cost of education is concerning those in other levels of government. In 1867 the fathers of confederation, in their wisdom, assigned the taxing powers for education to the various levels of government but now, with this tremendous springing out of education, this taxation problem is completely out of balance.

We must now consider that education involves not only monstrous expenditures but has fantastic implications. The whole problem of work force, employment and unemployment, productivity and our capability to compete with other nations which perhaps have more skilled labour forces, and the whole question of national prosperity, depend on what attention we give to the problem of education.

We have been trying to divide it from the exclusiveness of the British North America Act by various methods and I am sure all hon. members would conclude that this is not the best way of dealing with it. We know that the immigration branch does a great deal in the area of education, as does the Department of Agriculture and the Department of National Health and Welfare. Only last week we spent a great deal of time talking about the extent to which the Department of Labour is concerned with the problem of education.

One does not want to insert a problem of controversy here, but this is what I believe to be the primary problem, that we at the national level are having to give out money to be spent by others at other levels of government without having any control and without being able to give any direction or any purpose to the way in which this money is spent. We are unable to give any direction in terms of priority as to where we think the money should go, and this is the reason why often plans which are well recommended and are acceptable at the national level do not really do what we expect them to do when they reach the local level.

I shall quote from an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail, written by J. Bascom St. John, who is probably the best known writer on education that we have. It is headed "Interference by Ottawa", and I should like to read a few paragraphs from it:

> We are not objecting to the use of national revenues for the assistance and advancement of education. In the university field, the government's financial support is an obligation.
> It is another thing, however, when without consultation and without constitutional responsibility, the Ottawa government offers a huge sum—so large that Ontario alone may be given $75,000,000—

That is a very conservative estimate because we know already it is $124 million:

> —to build technical and trade schools throughout the country. If, with the Ontario government's share, which is another $25,000,000, the whole amount were to be spent, it would be equal to more than a third of all that has been spent on school building since the war, in this province.
> The effect of this gigantic financial pressure is to tip over the balance of the traditional educational program, and force it into a practical groove which hitherto the people of this province have not urgently wanted.

In other words, by spending money so often we may affect education when we do not want to. I shall conclude by reading other paragraphs:

> We are not opposed to dominion government participation in the financing of education. It is a matter of national necessity that more money be provided for education, and this source is the logical one. However, Ottawa should not pick and choose what education it will support, laying down specific terms which must be met before the money is forthcoming, as it is doing with these technical schools, and as the provincial government is letting it do.
>
> This is interference of the most blatant sort in the constitutional rights of the provinces in the field of education.

It goes on to say:

> They should reject the money on these terms. But, if for the sake of the future of the national economy, or the security of the country, or for any other good reason, the dominion government should participate in educational financing, it ought to do so in a proper, constitutional manner.
>
> There ought to be a legal contract between the dominion government and the provinces, and it ought to be framed so the provinces continue to control education.

That is important.

> However, it ought also to provide for national planning of education, co-ordination of policies and programs, establishment of broad aims and means.

I am sure that is what the hon. member who moved the motion hopes would happen, that we would be able to establish broad national aims, and set our aims to meet what we are trying to do.

This was certainly recognized at the Canadian conference on education, which the hon. member mentioned, at which there were several resolutions which indicated the necessity for a greater responsibility at the federal level.

In the Toronto daily Star of Wednesday, March 7, there is an article headed "Ottawa urged to set up department of education". It reads:

> Canada should have a federal department of education, two teachers said yesterday at the Canadian conference on education.
> Max Bedford, Saskatoon teachers college professor, said the nation could start with a national advisory committee to the federal cabinet, later work up to a ministry.

There is another headline "Ottawa 'must' pay part of costs of education". This is a Canadian Press dispatch and it reads:

> Constitution or no, the federal government must pay some of the costs of education.
> That was the obvious sentiment that emerged from the five day discussions of the second Canadian conference on education.

Dr. Penfield, who is very well known in this field, and who was the principal speaker at the conference, was quoted in an article headed "Penfield urges national forum for education"—

Mr. Brunsden: Never mind the headlines. Read the article. The headlines are written by people who don't know.

Mr. Pitman: I do not want to take up the time of the house in reading these articles as I realize there are other hon. members who wish to speak. I hope the motion now before the house will be passed. We must deal with the problem of education at the national level. We must gain a measure of efficiency in what I think it the most important resource that we have in this nation, the minds of our young people.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I think it is timely to have a discussion on a resolution of this type and I commend the hon. gentleman for proposing the resolution to the house. I suppose it is true that across this country people are generally aware that constitutionally and traditionally education has been the business of the provinces. However, I think we have reached the stage in this country when we must recognize the fact that, while education is the responsibility of the different provinces, there is at the same time a national aspect to it.

I hope the time will come when, even though education is under the control of the different provinces, we reach the point of being able to say that there is something Canadian about our own education. Over the years people in different countries have come to respect, for example, the educational system in Britain. There is something distinctly British about their system. In exactly the same way many of our medical men, for example, go to universities in Europe because these universities have a special importance in particular fields. I believe these universities have derived their importance from the national system of education in which they exist.

Therefore I say again that I hope the time will come when, even though education is the responsibility of the provinces, there will be something distinctly Canadian about our own education.

I support the idea of this committee and I believe there is a job for it to do. In the western world today I think education faces a greater challenge than it has ever faced. I do not think education has to take on a too practical line; I do not think it must be too practical in its aspect. I think it has a broader meaning than that. A knowledge and a sense of education at this time is very fundamental to our own survival. I am not going to delve into this problem too deeply, Mr. Speaker, but it is an interesting one to discuss and to realize the part that education can play in the survival of the western world.

While education is the responsibility of the provincial governments, I think in this country we have reached the time when it should become the responsibility of all levels of government and all people. We often hear the phrase, "Education is everybody's business". One could put up a pretty good argument in favour of that proposition; there is also an equally good argument against it. I believe that education is the business of everybody who has some particular interest in education. However, there are two sides to the question of education. There is the practice of education, and there is the plant and equipment required for the practice of education. If the federal government does not want to interfere in the practice of education and the different provinces are to have their own systems, then certainly the federal government could assist in providing the plant, materials and equipment required for the practice of education. Only by doing this can we bring education across this country in the various provinces up to some acceptable level.

I think democracy is an experiment; I think it is an experiment in faith; I think it is an experiment in the faith that free people are able to protect themselves and preserve their own way of life. I do not think we have proved this yet. But I think that if we can build within our own minds a respect for knowledge, a sense of learning and the feeling that an individual can be a part of the whole and can at the same time be different, then we have taken a considerable step forward toward preserving our own democracy.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Batten: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: Does the hon. member suggest by his remarks that this government has not played a part in building plants and equipment?

Mr. Batten: Mr. Speaker, I made no such suggestion. I suspect that my hon. friend is referring to moneys that were allocated a few days ago in this house, about which I do not suppose I am able to say very much. But if the hon. gentleman were to go back over the debates in this house over the years he would find there have been very, very few occasions when the question of vocational and technical training has come up in this chamber and it did not receive my fullest support.

I am not much interested in which government does what, but I am interested in the support of education. I am not much concerned about who gets the credit, but I am concerned about the results. Therefore I say to my hon. friend that if he has surmised from my remarks that I have not given the present government full credit for what they have done, I can assure him that I did not intend to do so. I can also assure him that I will continue to support vocational and technical education and any other form of education that we feel is required to help the young people of this country become good Canadians.

Mr. Brunsden: Thank you very much.

Mr. Batten: I think one big problem we have across this country is the question of equality of opportunity. In the different provinces we have different systems of education. I think it is fair to say that the system in some provinces may offer better opportunities to their young people than the system in others.

This would not be a very easy problem to solve. I think that if this committee were set up, as the proposer of this resolution has suggested, perhaps one of the things it could study would be what can be done to equalize opportunity across this country and how it can be done, while at the same time preserving those things in each provincial system of education which the people in that province think important.

For example, there are certain things in the educational system of Newfoundland which I would like to see preserved. There are some things in the system of education in Ontario and all the other provinces which the people of those provinces would like to preserve. At the same time there is a national thread through education which I think should be strengthened so as to give, as I said in the beginning, some national characteristic to our education.

I think one big job that needs to be done across this country is to give to our Canadian people—I do not know a good name for it, but offhand I would call it a sense of learning. After world war II I had the opportunity of dealing with a limited number of young people who came from countries in Europe. Without exception these people brought with them a sense of learning which, while I should not say it was greater than the Canadian student possessed—because at that time I did not know the Canadian student,—certainly was a more intense sense of learning than was found among Newfoundlanders. They had a greater respect for learning; they had a greater yearning to know these things, and they had a greater respect for those who did know.

I think one of the things we have to build up across this country is a sense of learning for its own sake. It has to be done by all forms of government; it has to be done by educational institutions, churches, organizations and everything else; it has to be done by the fathers and mothers. Until we can build across our own country this sense of learning we will never achieve what I hope we will achieve, that Canadian characteristic of education which is so really wanting in this country. I believe this committee could do a great deal to develop this sense of learning among our Canadian people.

Of course, in the higher fields of learning in the universities the federal government over the years has done a great deal to increase opportunities for Canadian students. In my opinion, as time goes on these opportunities will increase until we reach a point at which every young Canadian who has the brains and the ability to complete a university course successfully will have the opportunity of doing so. The federal government is playing its part in this field, and rightly so. Time was in my own province when we had no graduate university and the students had to go to universities in other provinces in order to get a university education. It is true they paid their fees, but even so they were taking advantage of an educational system provided by people living in a province other than their own. Even in that sense, education becomes national, and that is one of the reasons why four or five years ago I approved the action of the federal government in giving support to our universities in Canada. I say again, I hope we are still far below the peak of what will be given to our universities to enable young Canadians to have a chance of availing themselves of opportunities in these fields of higher learning.

I should like to ask the hon. member one question. In part of his remarks he referred to the composition of a committee. I did not hear exactly what he said. Did he say it should be composed of members of this chamber or of people outside?

Mr. Morton: Members of this chamber.

Mr. Batten: Thank you very much.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to suggest that a special committee be appointed to make precise, clear and constitutional proposals on the important matter of education.

We know that the federal government looks especially after naval and military schools and that its authority extends over territories coming under its jurisdiction, such as the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Moreover, we find that the federal government made possible certain cultural exchanges on an international level and applied itself to play a part in the field of scientific research, especially with regard to certain jurisdictions defined in section 91 of the British North America Act, such as national defence, civil defence and public health.

The federal government also provides technical assistance to the provinces regarding labour; the responsibility in this field was entrusted to the federal government.

As was pointed out by the mover of the motion under consideration, section 93 also provides an exception under which minorities in a province submitted to discrimination, may appeal to the governor in council who then makes a ruling. In case of non-compliance with this ruling, parliament may implement remedial legislation.

It follows from the list of points I have just given that the federal government may, under the powers conferred by section 91 of the British North America Act, legislate in that field by exception and in a limited way.

Many members have pointed out that the problems we are faced with in 1962, especially material and economic problems, are different from those of 1867. Indeed, that is the opinion I have expressed in this house, on several instances, when I stated that the B.N.A. Act should be amended because today's economic situation is not the same as that of 1867.

At that time, the fathers of confederation, the intellectuals and various groups of Canadians inserted in our constitution a very definite and fundamental section. It was for that reason that our compatriots from Lower Canada, namely the province of Quebec, agreed to join confederation; it was precisely because section 93 of the constitution provided that education would come under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to those exceptions pointed out previously, and to the interpretation which has been widened in all directions since, I would refer the house to a ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada, which I have already quoted here on June 22, 1961. It is a 1938 ruling, stating that the word "education", in section 93, must be interpreted in its wider sense.

The confusion which prevails at the moment has been brought about by the Ottawa Liberal government, which has governed the affairs of this country for 22 years and which, particularly after world war II, when it had to hand back to the provinces their taxation fields and powers, wanted to keep the upper hand on those powers, like some dictatorial paterfamilias in order to be able to distribute them wisely, it claimed, according to its own views.

Furthermore, having too much money at its disposal, it had to intervene in fields coming exclusively within provincial jurisdiction.

In my humble opinion, the problem is not hard to solve. The federal government should hand back to the provinces their taxation powers, so that they may be able to deal with those matters coming exclusively under their jurisdiction.

We have enough problems here in Ottawa both in the national and international field to keep our minds busy. Therefore, we should leave to the provinces the fields that belong to their exclusive jurisdiction.

That is the spirit in which this government has introduced a part of its legislation. In fact, it has amended a regulation concerning grants to universities in accordance with the intent of section 93 and more particularly as far as the province of Quebec is concerned—a province not like the others. Quebec has different culture and traditions of its own and wishes to join with the rest of the country while preserving its real and very distinct entity.

This is a very important problem for the citizens of the province of Quebec and whatever the government in power, whether it be the Union Nationale or the Liberal party, it must be settled to the satisfaction of all.

The present Quebec premier, who, while he was a federal cabinet member, managed to intervene in a field of provincial jurisdiction. Fallen now from the position he enjoyed at the federal level to settle down at the provincial level, as premier of my province, he has become the champion of the exclusive rights of the provinces, and would now like to destroy the idols which he himself contributed to erect.

We have a new fiscal formula. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the present government are preaching in favour of a decentralization effort, not a huge one, since, five years hence, the provinces will be handed back only 20 per cent of the taxes levied by the federal government. But just the same, it is a step in the right direction and that is why an editorialist of Le Devoir wrote that those provinces which really wish to recover their fiscal liberty should be glad of that formula, because they will find in it the spirit of the confederative pact.

I read recently in the newspapers that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier)—who, of course, belonged to the Liberal government, in power during 22 years—still advocates a formula which would allow more intrusion into an exclusively provincial field. This is what he said:

> If we are brought back into power, the Liberal party in Ottawa will grant 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 each to students across the country.

He explains that these scholarships would not be given directly by the federal government to the students, but through the Canadian universities foundation. That is a condemnable intrusion which surely goes against the spirit of the confederative pact, and especially against clause 93 of the constitution.

Instead of going back, instead of accepting a readjustment or of recognizing that the federal government has interfered where it had no business, the hon. member for Laurier continues to advocate an unconstitutional policy.

He may be surprised to note that this attitude is condemned by different newspapers admittedly sympathetic to the Liberals, in the province of Quebec. May I quote briefly in this regard the conclusions drawn in an article by Mr. Pierre-Paul Blais, editor of the newspaper La Tribune of Sherbrooke, on March 13, 1962:

> What cannot be accepted in the field of grants to universities is no more acceptable in the field of scholarships to students. This new plank in the Liberal party platform is a threat of federal intrusion in the field of education and a new encroachment upon the autonomy of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I think the principle of this resolution is excellent. At last, it tends to allow discussion in the field of education and federal jurisdiction, that is, the spirit of section 93, which will involve final adjustments that will allow our young Canadians to get a start in life with the best possible education.

(Text):

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Davenport for bringing this resolution before the house. It is not only needed but long overdue. Much has been said here about higher and lower education and all facets of education. In my travels across this country and in my experience in the field of education at all levels I see only a spirit of co-operation among all levels of government whether federal, provincial or municipal. I have never encountered any criticism of a suggestion of this kind.

In my experience the main reason for the introduction of a resolution of this nature is simply that we must have a basic standard. Reference is made to various standards on higher, medium or lower levels but certainly it is logical that we have a basic standard of education. Where it comes from and how it is arrived at are questions which in my opinion are beside the point. The adoption of this resolution could well be a stepping stone toward the realization of this necessary standard.

I wish to say a few words about one of the problems leading to the need of a basic standard for all Canadian students regardless of geographic and financial differences. In this day and age with communications and transportation as they are and with the demands and pressures of a fluctuating and mobile society it not infrequently happens that a student is moved from one part of a nation to another sometimes within the school year. Not just dozens or hundreds but literally thousands of students are affected. For this reason it is important that there be a basic standard.

I heard one hon. member say this afternoon that students should be close to their parents while attending school and I agree with that statement. That is an added reason for making provision in this field. Again I emphasize that there are thousands of students who should be close to their parents while receiving their education. A basic standard is needed.

I cannot agree with the suggestion concerning equalization which one hon. member advanced. I feel, however, there should be at least the basic standard so students do not lose out through transferring from one community to another. This resolution could well precipitate thinking at all levels of government. I see no difference of opinion on this subject among the parties represented in this house or among levels of government across the land.

Someone referred to Quebec a few moments ago. To me this is an outstanding example. I am thinking of a student who comes from a western province to attend university in Quebec. He was not qualified to enter university in a western province because he lacked certain marks in the French language, but in Quebec with a different standard he could attend university and complete his education. That illustration also serves to emphasize my contention that we must arrive at a basic standard of education for Canadian students regardless of financial or geographic differences.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should find out whether the house leader feels that the government is resolute enough to go on with the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Churchill: We are willing to face up to any situation. The supplementary estimates will be taken up tomorrow, commencing with those of the department of northern affairs.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest to the house leader that more progress would be made if he could somewhat restrain his own followers from taking so much time in debate.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
